One initiative which has (finally) taken off in the refugee camp here, for example, is a group based on the volunteer ethic of the Syrian "white helmets". A self-organising group of refugee volunteers that has taken charge of sanitation in the camp instead of waiting for the government to do something (and people getting sick in the meantime).

Malcolm wrote:

Which is why authoritarian governments generally take a poor view of NGOs. They challenge the authority of ineffective states. They also can inhibit the development of social apparatus. We see this in Haiti, where the Haitian government has basically ceded many of its responsibilities to various NGOs.

Your idea, like all stateless utopianism, sounds wonderful on paper, in practice, it cannot succeed beyond a local and limited scale.

As I pointed out, I live in New England, which is a strong history and cultural ethos of mutual aid, from barn-raising to you name it. But mutual aid is not going to put food on the table of everyone, guarantee their healthcare, educate their kids, train professionals, etc.

I'll stick to my original conclusion. There is no alternative to the present dominant, global economic system. I do not say this out of some allegiance to capitalism as an economic system, far from it, I just don't see any alternatives that can function alongside capitalism. The Marxist-Leninists tried this in the USSR and China, and their attempt failed utterly. Centrally-planned economies simply do not supply demand as well as regulated market economies.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 5th, 2020 at 1:22 AM

Title: Re: Origins of Vajrayana

Content:

yagmort said:

do you know of any academic research into Guru Rinpoche biography?

tingdzin said:

There is lots and lots, taking a variety of different approaches. It recently seems to have become a hot topic again, and a few books have been recently published on the subject, most of which I haven't seen, however. The earliest documentary evidence, from Dunhuang, seems to be a brief manuscript describing Guru Rinpoche's encounter with the obstructing spirits at the Asura Cave. Recently, scholars such as Mayer, Dalton, and Doney have been publishing on this subject. You might want to look at (Robert) Mayer's Tibetological blog for several articles, and his references for others. A usual approach is to differentiate between Kama and Terma biographies, although it's not easy or necessarily valid to draw conclusions from this differentiation.

As Terma said, though, if your faith in Guru Rinpoche or in the efficacy of the Nyingmapa practices is likely to be compromised by what academic researchers (some of whom are IMO dead wrong) write, you may be better off not dipping your toe into the water. A little knowledge is a dangerous thing.

Malcolm wrote:

I make a distinction between myth, legend, and history.

A historical character like Padmasambhava is interesting because of the way myth, legend, and history intersect in the traditions around him. He most certainly was a real person who visited Tibet for a period of time in the 8th century, during the decade between 770-780. His departure to Camara was also mentioned by Vajrāsana (c. mid-eleventh century) in the Supplication to the 84 Mahāsiddhas (grub thob brgyad cu rtsa bzhi'i gsol 'debs (D 3758))

དགེ་སློང་ལྷན་ཀྱིས་བྱས་ཀྱི་བསྟེན། རྫོ་ཐུབ་ཐེན་པོའི་ཁ་གཏོན་མཛད། །
པརྟ་ཀླ་ར་ཞེས་བྱ་བའི། ཁྲ་མ་དེ་ལ་བྱས་འཆམ་ལོ།

With the form of a bhikṣu, reliant on a consort
[the one who] suppressed the rakṣasas in the southwest
I prostrate to that guru called Padmakāra.

Now, it is very possible that Vajrāsana heard about the legend of Padmasambhava from Tibetans, and penned this verse influenced by that. But if this is actually an Indian tradition, this confirms three facts about Guru Rinpoche: one, he was a bhikṣu; two, he made use of consorts, even though maintaining the garb of an ordained person; three, he is reputed to have gone to the southwest to tame rakṣasas (indigenous people dwelling where?). It is also interesting to note that "rakṣasa" is also a poetic name for the southwest.

I have not seen any mention of the Supplication to the 84 Mahāsiddhas in the academic literature on the subject of Padmasambhava, so this source seems to have been overlooked by scholars researching the topic. So it is an interesting question, likely unanswerable, as to whether this brief verse impacted the Tibetan concepts of Guru Rinpoche or not.

However in my personal practice, I allow the mythic dimension of Guru Rinpoche to take precedence, since for me, that is where the juice is found.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 5th, 2020 at 2:24 AM

Title: Re: Nyasa

Content:

Grigoris said:

I am not asking for a long debate comparing Hindu and Buddhist tantra rituals, I am merely asking if the specific practice exists in Buddhist tantra.

Malcolm wrote:

No. It does not exist, other than touching forehead, throat, and heart center.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 5th, 2020 at 2:54 AM

Title: Re: Origins of Vajrayana

Content:

tingdzin said:

There is lots and lots, taking a variety of different approaches. It recently seems to have become a hot topic again, and a few books have been recently published on the subject, most of which I haven't seen, however. The earliest documentary evidence, from Dunhuang, seems to be a brief manuscript describing Guru Rinpoche's encounter with the obstructing spirits at the Asura Cave. Recently, scholars such as Mayer, Dalton, and Doney have been publishing on this subject. You might want to look at (Robert) Mayer's Tibetological blog for several articles, and his references for others. A usual approach is to differentiate between Kama and Terma biographies, although it's not easy or necessarily valid to draw conclusions from this differentiation.

As Terma said, though, if your faith in Guru Rinpoche or in the efficacy of the Nyingmapa practices is likely to be compromised by what academic researchers (some of whom are IMO dead wrong) write, you may be better off not dipping your toe into the water. A little knowledge is a dangerous thing.

Malcolm wrote:

I make a distinction between myth, legend, and history.

A historical character like Padmasambhava is interesting because of the way myth, legend, and history intersect in the traditions around him. He most certainly was a real person who visited Tibet for a period of time in the 8th century, during the decade between 770-780. His departure to Camara was also mentioned by Vajrāsana (c. mid-eleventh century) in the Supplication to the 84 Mahāsiddhas (grub thob brgyad cu rtsa bzhi'i gsol 'debs (D 3758))

དགེ་ལྷན་པ་ཀྱིས་ཕྱག་རྒྱ་བཞུགས། རྩོམ་སྒྲིག་པ་གཞིན་མཛད། །
བསྐྱེད་པ་ལེན་བྱ་བའི། ལྷ་མ་དེ་ལ་ཕྱག་འཚུལ་ལོ།

With the form of a bhikṣu, reliant on a consort

[the one who] suppressed the rakṣasas in the southwest
I prostrate to that guru
called Padmakāra.

Now, it is very possible that Vajrāsana heard about the legend of Padmasambhava from Tibetans, and penned this verse influenced by that. But if this is actually an Indian tradition, this confirms three facts about Guru Rinpoche: one, he was a bhiṣṣu; two, he made use of consorts, even though maintaining the garb of an ordained person; three, he is reputed to have gone to the southwest to tame rakṣasas (indigenous people dwelling where?). It is also interesting to note that "rakṣasa" is also a poetic name for the southwest.

I have not seen any mention of the Supplication to the 84 Mahāsiddhas in the academic literature on the subject of Padmasambhava, so this source seems to have been overlooked by scholars researching the topic. So it is an interesting question, likely unanswerable, as to whether this brief verse impacted the Tibetan concepts of Guru Rinpoche or not.

However in my personal practice, I allow the mythic dimension of Guru Rinpoche to take precedence, since for me, that is where the juice is found.

mandog said:

What is the distinction between Myth and Legend here? I think of the two as being roughly synonymous with the former holding more negative connotations and the latter holding more positive connotations.

Malcolm wrote:

Myths are totally beyond any ability to verify, often involving figures whose existence can never be verified empirically; whereas legends are about historical people, but can't really be backed up by any source.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 5th, 2020 at 3:16 AM

Title: Re: Renewable Energy

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

So a barter system. But a barter system will not scale to meet the daily needs of 8 billion people.

Grigoris said:

No, not a barter system. They inevitably lead to the development of currency, changing values by tweaking supply, etc...

Malcolm wrote:

We already have currency. Basing currency on real assets is an error that has been demonstrated in economic history again and again.

Credit preceded money, actually.

Grigoris said:

From each according to their ability, to each according to their needs.

Malcolm wrote:

And who decides that?

Grigoris said:

Phasing out of private ownership.

Collectivisation/socialisation of the means of production.

That sort of nonsense.

Malcolm wrote:

We tried that. It failed alongside capitalism.

Grigoris said:

Your idea, like all stateless utopianism, sounds wonderful on paper, in practice, it cannot succeed beyond a local and limited scale.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes it can. Via federalism. [/quote]

Ummmm...here is where the real inconsistencies in your thinking are exposed.
Federalism requires a state.

Grigoris said:

As I pointed out, I live in New England, which is a strong history and cultural ethos of mutual aid, from barn-raising to you name it. But mutual aid is not going to put food on the table of everyone, guarantee their healthcare, educate their kids, train professionals, etc.

Malcolm wrote:

Why not? I mean, we know Capitalism doesn't do it, so why shouldn't mutual aid be able to do it. [/quote]

I just don't think that you are going to convince 8 billion people to trust that other people have their best interests at heart.

Grigoris said:

Centrally-planned economies simply do not supply demand as well as regulated market economies.

A regulated market requires central planning.

Malcolm wrote:

Market regulation merely enforces what kinds of transactions are allowable, and what kind are not, without deciding who gets what, how, and when. In a crisis, Market regulation allows for limited central planning in times of severe economic crisis, but that's about it.

Anyway, you clearly believe in market economies and states since you explain that a) in a mutual aid economy currency will be developed, and b) you admit that states are necessary in order to scale up the benefits of mutual aid, via what you term "federalism," which is just another term for a "state."

Accept the pervasion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 5th, 2020 at 3:19 AM

Title: Re: Alan Wallace: Dzogchen, COVID-19 & the prophecy received by Dudjom Lingpa

Content:

heart said:

Buddhism is the only religion I ever had, thanks to my parents. I don't see anyone practice even shamata in monotheistic religions so you would have to invent something new even on that level.

/magnus loktibrada said:

You don't see because you choose not to see. Christianity has shamatha, mantra recitation as well as mindfulness-of-thoughts practices, and that's just the public stuff. I am sure hardcore practitioners in the cloisters are working with more advanced practices. [Edit]

If you want to know more, you can research Hesychasm as the starting point.

Malcolm wrote:

Different basis, different path, different result. That's all there is to it. You are clearly coming from a perennialist perspective, to which you are entitled, but the idea that all religions lead to the same goal is just silly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 5th, 2020 at 4:29 AM

Title: Re: Renewable Energy

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Ummmm...here is where the real inconsistencies in your thinking are exposed.

Federalism requires a state.

Grigoris said:

No.

Malcolm wrote:

"A rose by any other name would smell as sweet."

-- Shakespeare.

Grigoris said:

<https://www.google.com/search?q=anarchist+federalism&oq=anarchist+federalism&aqs=chrome..69i57j0.5167j0j7&sourceid=chrome&ie=UTF-8>

Malcolm wrote:

The arguments on this page are incoherent and self-contradictory.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 5th, 2020 at 4:38 AM

Title: Re: Alan Wallace: Dzogchen, COVID-19 & the prophecy received by Dudjom Lingpa

Content:

smcj said:

Different basis, different path, different result. That's all there is to it. You are clearly coming from a perennialist perspective, to which you are entitled, but the idea that all religions lead to the same goal is just silly.

The last chapter of the Uttaratantra talks about how Buddha Activity happens without any discernment or effort. It simply happens wherever and whenever the karma of sentient beings allows for it to happen. Just like the sun has no intentions to light up the room when you open the shades, the Buddha Nature manifests in a way that is appropriate for the karma of a certain time and place. There's absolutely no restriction on this activity as to affiliations. It is not a considered response to prescribed prayer, although I assume some prayer is usually in the mix of karma that allows the Activity to happen.

Malcolm wrote:

From this it does not follow that the paths of nonbuddhists lead out of samsara. In fact this idea is explicitly denied in all Buddha's teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 5th, 2020 at 5:19 AM

Title: Re: Alan Wallace: Dzogchen, COVID-19 & the prophecy received by Dudjom Lingpa

Content:

smcj said:

...meaning I don't think the others are as complete. However that's the same as saying Sakyamuni's teachings are the expression of Buddha Activity that best suits my karma. It is how things seem from my karmic ignorance. That's all. It's not as if I'm standing on "the other shore" as I say this.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a nice idea that all things beneficial are a result of buddha activity, but it is a pretty buddhist idea, unlikely to be shared by Muslims or Hindus.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 5th, 2020 at 5:24 AM

Title: Re: Alan Wallace: Dzogchen, COVID-19 & the prophecy received by Dudjom Lingpa

Content:

smcj said:

...meaning I don't think the others are as complete. However that's the same as saying Sakyamuni's teachings are the expression of Buddha Activity that best suits my karma. It is how things seem from my karmic ignorance. That's all. It's not as if I'm standing on "the other shore" as I say this.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a nice idea that all things beneficial are a result of buddha activity, but it is a pretty buddhist idea, unlikely to be shared by Muslims or Hindus.

smcj said:

We call it Buddha Activity.

Malcolm wrote:

The problem is that according to your definition, buddha activity is limited by karma. For Christians, etc., God's power has no limits. So they will never agree.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 5th, 2020 at 8:01 PM

Title: Re: Is there a pure classical Madhyamaka school in existence today?

Content:

Aemilius said:

Besides the Yogacarabhumi of Asanga there are two other works with that same name!

Etienne Lamotte writes in his History of Indian Buddhism, page 696 :

"Among the Indian masters who contributed to the formation of the Indo-Chinese school of Yoga or Dhyana, we should mention Samgha- raksa, Dharmatrata, Buddhasena and Buddhahadra. Samgharaksha was a native of Surashtra; he was born there in the second century A.D.; he was well-travelled and reached Gandhara where King Candana Kaniska made him his master. He composed, among other works, a Yogacarabhumi, at present known through two Chinese translations (T 607, made by An Shih Kao between 148 and 170; T 606, carried out by Dharmaraksa in 284). - Dharmatrata and Buddhasena seem to have taught in Kashmir around the beginning of the fifth century; Dharmatrata composed a Yogasamasanasutra, lost today; Buddhasena wrote a Yogacarabhumi which was translated into Chinese (T 618) by Buddhahadra in about 413."

This too suggests that the Buddhist school of Yoga or Yogacara was larger and earlier than the one identified with Asanga and Vasubandhu.

Malcolm wrote:

That is the not issue I had with your statement. The issue I had with your statement was that you are conflating shravakas called yogacarins with mahayanis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 5th, 2020 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: A More Precise Teaching on Emptiness?

Content:

tobes said:

Start with chapter 24, and do not go beyond it until your understanding develops.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't agree. The MMK is a dialogue that builds from the beginning. One needs to start at the beginning, and work chapter by chapter through each topic.

Before beginning the MMK, however, you need to have some familiarity with Abhidharma. Without understanding precisely what Nāgārjuna was critiquing, it is easy to get lost. The Siderits translation is probably the best right now.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 6th, 2020 at 4:27 AM

Title: Re: Lost texts

Content:

avatamsaka3 said:

I'll rephrase: Do we have any evidence suggesting they might be in a certain area, rather than another? I'm not familiar with the state of academic research on these kinds of texts.

Malcolm wrote:

The best place to find lost Sanskrit Manuscripts is a) the Library of Sakya, which has thousands of manuscripts that are just mouldering 2) Beijing, where whole libraries were carried after the Tibetan Diaspora.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 6th, 2020 at 12:38 PM

Title: Re: Stephen Batchelor

Content:

Grigoris said:

Of what value is practice without Right View? Somehow, I do not think that it is the first factor of the Eightfold Noble Path by chance.

Dan74 said:

That just brings us back to what is essential for practice to be Right Practice? Is someone with a materialist world view inherently incapable of this Right Practice? Or are there stages of practice and people with many obscurations and ignorance can still practice and relinquish them? Therefore the wrong views, such as materialism are also relinquished at some stage of the path?

Sunrise said:

Those are really good questions to think about.

For Right View, there is Mundane Right View and Superior Right View. Mundane Right View requires at least the acceptance of the law of karma. For Superior Right View, the wish to escape samsara is part of it.

Where does that place Secular Buddhists? Perhaps they have Mundane Right View?

Malcolm wrote:

Not even close.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 6th, 2020 at 7:19 PM

Title: Re: Plants Acquiring Sentience

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It's not what the Buddha taught.

ShantiM said:

Please excuse my ignorance and persistent inquiries about Master Hsuan Hua's teachings. I have had my doubts, and may have misunderstood what he's preaching, but looking to see if I can get this cleared. This time, assuming I understand it correctly, the teaching is about plants being sentient and are part of the rebirth cycle? There were actual anecdotes below in regards to this teaching. The Master himself also provides an explanation of this phenomenon mentioning that "Because the trees were old and they had experienced much, and because they had lived among people in the world, gradually they acquired the nature of humans. They had life-energy. After they had life-energy, then they acquired a little feeling.” and that “both those with and without feelings can accomplish the Way.”

http://www.drbachinese.org/online_reading/drba_others/memory1/life4b_english.htm

On October 23, a 1989-year-old camphor tree at Puji Monastery on Potola Mountain in Zhejiang Province, China, took refuge with the Venerable Master.

<http://www.advite.com/sf/assm/assm2-5.html> Plants want to take refuge too? In the courtyard of Universal Salvation Monastery on Potola Mountain of Zhejiang Province, a 1,989-year old camphor tree, through a person with spiritual power, requested to take refuge with a high monk in the United States, the Venerable Master Hsuan Hua. The tree was given the Three Refuges by proxy at Long Beach Monastery in south Los Angeles on October 23, 1994.

<http://www.dharmasite.net/HowBuddhismChangedMyLife.pdf>

Plants want to take refuge too?

In the courtyard of Universal Salvation Monastery on Potola Mountain of Zhejiang Province in China, a 1989 - year old camphor tree, through a person with spiritual power, requested to take refuge with the Venerable Master.

Long Beach Monastery, facing the Pacific Ocean, is the second Buddhist Way-place that the Master established in southern California, after Gold Wheel Monastery in Los Angeles. On October 23, 1994, the weather was ideal. At 8:00 am twenty-one Buddhist disciples who were preparing to shave their heads, along with 300 other Buddhists, participated in a bowing ceremony, which preceded the ceremony for entering monastic life.

Among the twenty-one people who resolved to leave the home life, four were male and seventeen, female. They came from Finland, Canada, the United States, China, Taiwan, Hong Kong, Singapore, Malaysia, and Vietnam. Their ages ranged from six to seventy-two.

Following the ceremony for entering monastic life, the transmission of the three refuges, five precepts, and ten novice precepts were held in the afternoon. During these ceremonies a special overseas call came from China to the Master. The Master's disciple, Upasaka Yang, related the following true account: When my father and I were visiting Potola Mountain, at Universal Salvation Monastery, we saw a camphor tree that was so huge it would have taken ten people hand-in-hand to encircle it. That tree spoke to me, saying it wanted to take refuge with the Venerable Master Hsuan Hua. I found this quite odd and asked the tree, “You’ve been in this monastery for so many years. Haven’t you met a true cultivator and taken refuge? Why do you want to take refuge with the Master?” The tree said that he had never met a real cultivator with whom he could take refuge, that the conditions had not ripened before, and that now he hoped to take refuge with the Master. I said, “Fine! Wait until I ask the Master. I’ll let you know.”

52

Page 52

A CAMPHOR TREE WAITS 1989 YEARS TO TAKE REFUGE

Later, I went back to my room and fell asleep, exhausted. When I woke up, I had forgotten all about this matter. I had neither told my father nor asked the Master about it. We were going to visit other monasteries in the afternoon. When we got downstairs, I turned around to talk to my father. All of a sudden, I sprained my neck. Fortunately, it did not break. I was immediately alert, "What did I do wrong?" Just as I was pondering, I turned around and saw the big camphor tree and instantly realized that I had forgotten to do what he had asked me to do. Just then, the tree said to me, "How could you be so careless and forget what I asked you to do?"

"I'm so sorry! My memory is very poor. Please don't be upset. I will ask the Master now." So I asked the Master for instruction.

The Master said, "Whether or no he becomes my disciple is not important, but he should diligently cultivate precepts, samadhi, and wisdom and put to rest greed, hatred, and delusion."

I relayed the message to the camphor tree and added, "As long as you can observe the Six Principles of the City of Ten Thousand Buddhas: no fighting, no greed, no seeking, no selfishness, no pursuit of self-benefit, and no lying, then even if you don't have the affinities to meet the Master, you will still be the Master's disciple. The tree promised to do as told. He further vowed to imitate Guanyin Bodhisattva in making the resolve to universally save living beings in the future. Right then, I saw the tree turn into a monk, kneeling on the ground with hands folded, and Guanyin Bodhisattva appeared above him and anointed the crown of his head with pure water from a vase. I was deeply touched. I reported this matter to the Master after we got home. The Master took it seriously and asked me to get more details about the tree. His name is Ren Neng (Humane and Able). I asked him what his method of cultivation was. He said he has been reciting the Heart Sutra and investigating the principles in that Sutra. However, since he lacked the guidance of a good teacher, he had not fully understood it.

53

HOW BUDDHISM CHANGED MY LIFE!

Since Upasika Yang is a sincere Buddhist who possesses the spiritual power to communicate with other species, the camphor tree made the request to take refuge with the Master through her. From now on the tree will receive guidance from a bright-eyed wise advisor. Upasika Yang asked the tree how he knew about the Master and why he wanted to take refuge with the Master. The tree said it was very simple: all living beings can hear the Master speaking Dharma. When the Master speaks the Dharma, all living beings throughout empty space and the Dharma Realm can see and hear the Master. However, people who are burdened by wealth, worldly things, fame, and desire for riches may look and listen, but they fail to see and hear. All other living beings are quietly cultivating, steeped in the sound of the Master's Dharma, nurturing their seeds of Bodhi. So the tree had been listening to the Master's Dharma for a long time.

http://chinabuddhismencyclopedia.com/en/index.php/The_Flower_Adornment_Sutra:_A_Commentary_by_the_Venerable_Master_Hsuan_Hua:_Chapter_Forty Today someone asked me if flowers are not sentient, how can they make sounds? This is a good question, so now I will explain it clearly. Trees and plants have no feeling. Although they are without feeling they do have a nature, the nature of life. What is the nature of life? It is the life-energy (jen) discussed in Confucianism. This life-energy is a nature, and this nature can be said to be the Way. It can also be called the mother of the ten thousand things. Do humans have life-energy? Of course they do. If they were without it, then they would not be called humans. If they were not called humans, then what would they be called? You can call them anything you wish. For a human to have life-energy means to be human, or to speak it more correctly, “to be of the Way.” The phrase “life-energy” was coined by Confucius, and all plants and trees possess it. How can you say that plants and trees have life-energy? In the spring their limbs, branches, and leaves grow, flowers blossom and fruits come forth. This is because they have the nature of life. Not only do they have the nature of life, all plants, flowers, and trees have a minute amount of knowledge. So someone asked me, “When you cut a flower it emits a sound which we cannot hear, but if you use scientific means, then it can be heard.” This is really common.

Why is it that plants and trees can make sounds? It is because they have a nature. This nature is not full, but only exists in a minute amount. For example, if a person were said to have one hundred pounds of nature, the flowers, plants, and trees by comparison, would not have even an ounce, but would have about as much as a hair. Now this is a comparison, so do not take it literally. Basically, plants, flowers, and trees do experience some kind of sensation. I have said this before.

In China, a camphor and ginkgo tree received the precepts. You ask, “How is it that they could take the precepts? Since they are not sentient, how is it that they can have the nature of humans and receive the precepts? This is too contradictory.”

This is not the least bit contradictory, because if you understood it, you would see it is very ordinary. Because the trees were old and they had experienced much, and because they had lived among people in the world, gradually they acquired the nature of humans. They had life-energy. After they had life-energy, then they acquired a little feeling. Because of this feeling, they wished to take the precepts. For a long time they did not realize how many improper things they had done, but after a while, they recognized their mistakes, took the precepts, and even thought about leaving the home-life. We should be aware of this point. Not only does he cross over sentient beings, but he also crosses over those without feelings. So it is said, “both those with and without feelings can accomplish the Way.” All of them can accomplish the Buddha’s Way. It is for this reason that he is called Universal Worthy; not only does he want to save people, but he also wants to cross over all flowers, plants, and trees. How can we not admire the vastness of his practices? At their best, most people are only aware of crossing over other people, crossing over other sentient beings, but Universal Worthy Bodhisattva even crosses over those without life, and so he is called Universal Worthy Bodhisattva.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 6th, 2020 at 7:27 PM

Title: Re: A More Precise Teaching on Emptiness?

Content:

Tenma said:

Where can one start out with Abhidharma then (especially for beginners)? Which text, commentary, etc.?

Grigoris said:

You could start with Glimpses of Abhidharma by Chogyam Trungpa.

tobes said:

It is very undernourished terrain, in terms of western translations/commentaries/publications etc. You can't just sit down and read Vasubandhu....unless you're Malcolm or have similar dispositions.

Alongside the Prajnaparamita, I really, deeply wish that the next generation of Dharma scholars, translators, publishers etc will make a big contribution in this area. At the moment we're all a bit stuck.

Malcolm wrote:

I didn't just sit down and read Vasubandhu...well I tried, but it did not work to well. So after Khenpo Migmar Tseten was stationed in the Boston, MA, area in 1989, I gave him a copy of Pruden's translation and asked him to teach it. He did so, for one year. He repeated that course two more times.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 7th, 2020 at 1:55 AM

Title: Re: Plants Acquiring Sentience

Content:

tkp67 said:

He specifically mentioned Hsuan Hua's teachings in an east Asian ...

Malcolm wrote:

So what? Just because some Chinese guy claims that plants are sentient, "because they are old," () does not mean that the Buddha taught this idea. Nowhere in the Agamas, the Sūtras, or the Tantras has the Buddha taught that plants are sentient or part of the cycle of rebirth. But if you wish to accept the authority of Hsuan Hua's crazy idea, please go ahead.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 7th, 2020 at 2:03 AM

Title: Re: A More Precise Teaching on Emptiness?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I didn't just sit down and read Vasubandhu...well I tried, but it did not work to well. So after Khenpo Migmar Tseten was stationed in the Boston, MA, area in 1989, I gave him a copy of Pruden's translation and asked him to teach it. He did so, for one year. He repeated that course two more times.

Grigoris said:

That's the four volume series of translations, correct?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 7th, 2020 at 4:55 AM

Title: Re: Plants Acquiring Sentience

Content:

Könchok Thrinley said:

I have seen this idea explained that plants acted as "houses" to various spirits, however the relationship between spirit and "house" are so loose that we cannot talk about the plants being sentient. Just like our houses are not sentient, despite us living in it.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that is what yakṣas are, in part, "spirits" that become attached to certain kinds of trees.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 7th, 2020 at 8:55 PM

Title: Re: Stephen Batchelor

Content:

Queequeg said:

Those having realized the deathless... I believe that number is quite higher.

boda said:

Who?

Malcolm wrote:

All arhats, etc., as well as Arya bodhisattvas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 7th, 2020 at 8:59 PM

Title: Re: Plants Acquiring Sentience

Content:

Ayu said:

I hope you respect this specific subforum and refrain from disparaging speech against other people's venerable teachers.

Please accept if other members disagree.

On my search I found at least one article about the specific role of trees in Buddha's life. It doesn't dare to talk about sentience though.

But if a plant is that important, it might imply a certain form of intelligence at least.

Wherever this originates. When the Buddha was born, he assumed his human, material form; when he attained enlightenment, he achieved a higher spiritual level; when he died, he shed his physical form and fully entered the spiritual realm. A tree was present at each of these moments, serving as an arboreal bridge between our material realm and enlightenment.

<https://www.buddhistdoor.net/features/the-tree-in-buddhist-symbolism-and-art>

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, but you won't find a single sutra where the Buddha discusses the rebirth of a plant's consciousness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 7th, 2020 at 10:41 PM

Title: Re: What possible reason could there be to study or practice Buddhism if arising and ceasing do not occur?

Content:

haha said:

For meaninglessness and flatly incorrectness, here are some remarks from MMK 24:

11a. A wrongly perceived emptiness ruins a person of meager intelligence.

13. Furthermore, if you were generate any obsession with regard to emptiness, the accompanying error is not ours. That [obsession] is not appropriate in the context of the empty.

15. You, attributing your own errors to us, are like one who has mounted his horse and confused about it.

18. We state that whatever is dependent arising, that is emptiness. That is dependent upon convention. That itself is the middle path.

37. For one who contradicts emptiness there would be nothing that ought to be done; activity would be uninitiated and an agent would be non-acting.

40. Whoever perceives dependent arising also perceives suffering, its arising, its ceasing and the path [leading to its ceasing].

Kalupahana, David J. (1996) Mulamadhyamakakarika of Nagarjuna

Malcolm wrote:

Oh man, this is really deprecated translation, It is very inaccurate and the translator has a real axe to grind. Better to cite the Sidrits' translation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 7th, 2020 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: What possible reason could there be to study or practice Buddhism if arising and ceasing do not occur?

Content:

Dgj said:

If no arising nor ceasing occur then the twelve links are meaningless, reduced to nonsense.

Astus said:

It should always be kept in mind that many of the Mahayana ideas developed from or against Sarvastivada doctrine. In this case, the Sarvastivada abhidharma teachings say that production/birth (jati), duration/staying (stithi), deterioration/death (jara), and impermanence (anityata) are characteristics (laksana) that are dharmas themselves, and dharmas are what have self-existence (svabhava), and it is the Sarvastivadin interpretation - or what its opponents, the Mahayanikas understood the Sarvastivadin teaching to be - that for instance Nagarjuna argues against when saying that arising, duration, etc., do not exist, i.e. not really, not on their own as unique entities.

Dgj said:

Okay! Thanks! So he wasn't saying:

Arising, duration and cessation absolutely never occur in any way, shape, form, nor under any circumstances, ever.

But rather:

Arising, duration and cessation of ultimate entities as incorrectly posited by the Sarvastivadins does not occur.

?

Malcolm wrote:

Arising, duration, and cessation are merely conventions we use to describe the appearance and disappearance of entities; but ultimately, "arising from causes and conditions" cannot be established as being anything other than a convention. For example, the MMK it is said, "Since arising, abiding, and cessation cannot be established, the compounded cannot be established. Since the compounded cannot be established, how can the uncompounded be established?"

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 8th, 2020 at 3:53 AM

Title: Re: Essential & Useful Reading on Abhidharma and Prajnaparamita/Madhyamaka

Content:

avatamsaka3 said:

Thanks, this is great. Could anyone comment on starting with Chim Jampalyang rather than Vasubandhu's original text?

Malcolm wrote:

Very difficult.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 8th, 2020 at 11:18 PM

Title: Re: Alan Wallace: Dzogchen, COVID-19 & the prophecy received by Dudjom Lingpa

Content:

Pero said:

Thank you for your translation but other than the misreading you mention I can't see a difference in meaning between two translations since the main point of both is that taking mind as the path does not lead to liberation.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is not that there is a huge difference in the translations, the point is the assumption Wallace draws from the text. The assumption he draws is this: it is absolutely necessary for beginners to take the impure mind as the path. But that is not what Dudjom Lingpa is saying at all. He is, characteristically, describing what certain people, people of inferior capacity (dbang po dman) must do, before they can enter the actual path of Dzogchen, which is taking pristine consciousness (ye shes) as the path.

Wallace's interest in śamatha predates his forays into Dzogchen by many years, which one can observe in his 1992 translation, Calming the Mind: Tibetan Buddhist Teachings on the Cultivation of Meditative Quiescence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 9th, 2020 at 12:01 AM

Title: Re: Plants Acquiring Sentience

Content:

Queequeg said:

My point is, what we think of as consciousness that we think makes us so different from plants, is, on closer analysis, not all that different from a plant turning toward light in many respects. What we think distinguishes us is a very narrow category of actions.

Malcolm wrote:

Consciousness distinguishes us from plants, rocks, and so on. Sentient beings have volition, thus, they possess karma. Plants have no consciousness, thus they do not possess karma.

The Buddha himself drew a clear distinction between sentience and non-sentience. For example, in the Ratnakaraṇḍa Sūtra, the Buddha says:

With respect that, while the cessation of ignorance may not occur in the past, future, or in the present, nevertheless, any improper thinking produces ignorance. On the other hand, if there is discerning thinking because of proper thinking, [ignorance] will not be produced. That absence of production is a total cessation, therefore, it is called "cessation of ignorance." In that case, proper thinking with respect to this body, which is produced from the four great elements, is as follows: This body is inert, discerned to appear like grass, trees, walls, and stones. Whatever is called mind, intellect, or consciousness is immaterial, cannot be shown, is unimpeded, cannot be cognized, and is like an illusion or a dream. [The mind, etc.,] cannot be perceived inside [the body], outside [it], or both.

Thus, drawing a conclusion that because plants exhibit the same kind of autonomic functions as an animal's body, and therefore plants must have consciousness too, is not a good argument to make for the sentience of plants. The Buddha treated the body itself as inert, insentient, and so on. This point is really brought home when you look at the Tibetan term for body, "lus," which means "leftover," in this case, the body (rūpa skandha) is left over when the five aggregates disintegrate at the moment of death.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 9th, 2020 at 12:14 AM

Title: Re: What possible reason could there be to study or practice Buddhism if arising and ceasing do not occur?

Content:

LastLegend said:

So the main purpose of Madhyamaka is a response towards antagonists and not pointing towards non-dual wisdom?

Malcolm wrote:

Nāgārjuna's purpose to clarify the Buddha's central teaching: dependent origination.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 9th, 2020 at 12:32 AM

Title: Re: Plants Acquiring Sentience

Content:

Queequeg said:

I could have written that more clearly. Yes, this.

Malcolm wrote:

While there are problems with Sino-Japanese concepts of self, as eloquently illustrated by the late Jungnok Park in his How Buddhism Acquired a Soul on the Way to China, the idea of all phenomena possessing buddhanature that we see frequently mentioned in Sino-Japanese Buddhism is not a problematic at all, if understood as Nāgārjuna states it in the MMK, "Whatever is the nature of the Tathāgata, that is the nature of the world. As the Tathāgata has no nature, the world has no nature."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 9th, 2020 at 2:27 AM

Title: Re: Plants Acquiring Sentience

Content:

Queequeg said:

I could have written that more clearly. Yes, this.

Malcolm wrote:

While there are problems with Sino-Japanese concepts of self, as eloquently illustrated by the late Jungnok Park in his How Buddhism Acquired a Soul on the Way to China, the idea of all phenomena possessing buddhanature that we see frequently mentioned in Sino-Japanese Buddhism is not a problematic at all, if understood as Nāgārjuna states it in the MMK, "Whatever is the nature of the Tathāgata, that is the nature of the world. As the Tathāgata has no nature, the world has no nature."

Queequeg said:

That's how I've taken these assertions of universal buddhanature - its the "positive" language of tathagatagarbha teachings. Emptiness is also the case. That said, I am aware that buddhanature is in some streams of thought tantamount to a soul - the true Atman some see in the Parinirvana Sutra, for instance (disregarding all that denial of such substance throughout the text).

Anyway. I'll check that Park out.

Malcolm wrote:

Pp. 223-224 summarize his whole argument very neatly.

The basic argument he makes is that while Indians relied upon both direct perception (which he calls empiricism, though he mistakenly claims that Indians reject direct perception with respect to perceiving emptiness, etc.) and inferential reasoning (which he simply calls "reasoning"), the Chinese, according to him, generally rejected inferential reasoning with respect to understanding ultimate truth.

He basically claims that differences in understanding in Indian Buddhism and Sino-Japanese Buddhism boil down to acceptance or rejection of ontological reductionism, with the Indians employing ontological reductionism as their principal approach, and Chinese Buddhists largely rejecting the ontological reductionism of the Indian Buddhist tradition in toto.

He also states in the book that Chinese Buddhists unwittingly imported an atman back in Buddhism because of the Daoist underpinnings of Chinese civilization, pinning a complex of arguments on this notion, which he defends through an interesting walk through translation theory, comparative analysis and review of Indian Buddhism with Buddhism as it was translated into Chinese and so on. It is a very interesting book.

Similar issues arise in Tibetan Buddhism too, where Tibetan scholars articulate arguments that would be outright rejected by their Indian forbears, based on how words translated into Tibetan are read by Tibetans, and their consequent assumptions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 9th, 2020 at 4:10 AM

Title: Re: Plants Acquiring Sentience

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

inferential reasoning...

He basically claims that differences in understanding in Indian Buddhism and Sino-Japanese Buddhism boil down to acceptance or rejection of ontological reductionism, with the Indians employing ontological reductionism as their principal approach, and Chinese Buddhists largely rejecting the ontological reductionism of the Indian Buddhist tradition in toto.

Queequeg said:

Can you give an example of inferential reasoning as found in Indian Buddhism? Just curious what sort of arguments this refers to.

Malcolm wrote:

the old smoke behind a hill indicates fire.

Queequeg said:

And examples ontological reductionism?

Malcolm wrote:

The five aggregates negate the idea that there is a whole. He uses this example specifically as an instance of ontological reductionism.

Queequeg said:

He also states in the book that Chinese Buddhists unwittingly imported an atman back in Buddhism because of the Daoist underpinnings of Chinese civilization, pinning a complex of arguments on this notion, which he defends through an interesting walk through translation theory, comparative analysis and review of Indian Buddhism with Buddhism as it was translated into Chinese and so on. It is a very interesting book. I recall reading medieval primary texts (in translation), can't remember if Chinese or Japanese, but they seemed to be aware that transmission was confused in the earlier centuries of Buddhism's introduction to China particularly because translations often relied on Daoist terminology, and also because the translators were self consciously presenting Buddhism as a contrast to Daoism. IIRC, the argument went that the encounter with Buddhism actually provoked Daoist thinking to become more sophisticated in response to Buddhism, surreptitiously adopting Buddhist ideas in the process - I think the language used was to accuse Daoists of stealing the ghee. I think the comments were made more generally as a way to praise Kumarajiva and his translations into Chinese, which the author argued was a correct transmission.

Malcolm wrote:

Park is making the argument that assumptions embedded in Chinese choices of equivalents were never actually corrected, despite attempts by Kumarajiva, and others such as Zhiyi, to do so. He points to instances which follow Zhiyi, etc. where Chinese translators were still using terms like shen and so on. You will want to read this book.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 9th, 2020 at 5:07 AM

Title: Re: Countdown to a race war?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

https://www.vice.com/en_us/article/y3zmj5/the-boogaloo-bois-are-bringing-their-ar-15s-and-civil-war-ideology-to-the-lockdown-protests

Unknown said:

The younger, shitposting face of the armed far-right — often called “boogaloo bois” — have been showing up at anti-lockdown protests across the U.S., toting AR-style rifles and wearing their trademark Hawaiian shirts and leis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 9th, 2020 at 10:54 AM

Title: Re: Plants Acquiring Sentience

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

All of what you say may be true, but I have run into Zen and Chan Buddhists whose views could be differentiated from atmavada if you had a crowbar. Indeed Reps' Zen Flesh, Zen Bones contains in its appendix a translation of a brief shaivaite tantra.

ItsRaining said:

The book while I haven't read the whole thing, seems to have a lot a problems in the later section on Chan Buddhism. He quotes Zongmi and Yanshou

Zongmi

[This true] nature is like space; it is not to be added to or reduced. There is no need to add [virtues]. Once one stops karmic action but fosters shen at every time and everywhere, the embryo of sainthood develops and manifests its natural mystery. This is true awakening, true practice and true realization.

The author says Zongmi can be read as either advocating for a self like some pre 5th century Buddhists or one that is more in line with post Zhiyi Buddhists that understand the more orthodox position on self but I don't since the former reading is possible if Zongmi's other works are cited.

Zongmi's own explanation of the "true nature" which in his commentary on the Awakening of Faith he clarifies is not a "self" but rather emptiness. Here's one section where he uses the Three Natures to explain the true nature. (True is also a way of saying Suchness since they are written the same way in Chinese) Since Zongmi explains the true nature to be emptiness and permanence is said to be non-changing as the emptiness doesn't arise or perish I'm not sure how it could be in line with the author's view on how Self is expained by earlier Buddhists.

Also, fostering shen is a stock phrase in Chinese that means to be at rest, the author didn't seem to mention this.

Why is the deluded nature said not to neither arise or perish? It is because there is no dharma to arise nor perish like the snake imputed on a rope. The dependent nature arises yet does not arise and perishes yet does not perish like the rope imputed on hemp. The perfected nature is the middle without the two kinds of dharmas previously mentioned like hemp with neither rope or snake imputed.... From leaving the previous attachments of self and dharmas this perfected is suchness so it is said to not be arising or perishing.....

So the Perfect Awakening state: the nature of extinction of the Tathagatas is without start or end. Hence the next line state: The nature of mind is neither arising or perishing and it neither arises in a previous moment nor perishes in the next and it permanent. This is the explanation on the non-change of the true mind.

Yanshou:

Being attached to illusory suffering, one seeks liberation; wishing for the [intellectual] capacity of saints, one attempts practice. However, all these are actions of the illusory self, i.e., discrimination by sensory consciousnesses. For this reason, when the Great Hero appeared [in this world], he showed only the correct tenet: destroying the illusory self, [he] revealed the gate towards the true self; rejecting sensory consciousness, [he] directed [living beings] to the way towards pure consciousness. The true self and pure consciousness are equality [as taught in the *Ratnakàrandaka-vyūha\]. By means of pure consciousness, one eliminates discrimination; [by means of] the true self, one is not attached to the senses. Since discrimination has gone, differences disappear by themselves; since there is no sensory attachment, equality appears by itself.¹⁹ In short, the concept of self in Chan Buddhism

The book says in Chan realising true nature or Buddha is the same as realising a real self that is the essence of mind and the agent of thought and creation here citing Yanshou, however, this is not what Yanshou or Zongmi previously defines essence of mind or Buddha Nature. Previously Zongmi defines the true nature as emptiness - a lack of arising and perishing in dharmas so it can be that this is a agent of mind. Unless the quality of not arising could think. Yanshou defines essence of mind the same way.

To say the essence of mind is a kataphatic explanation. Since all dharmas are without essence, this is the true nature of mind. Essence is therefore essencelessness, this is a apophatic explanation.

So Yanshou does not define nature of mind as something that can be said to be Self unless having a lack of svabhava is defined as self. In the Zong Jing Lu he rarely brings up the terms True Self or Shen the author seems to be cherry picking one paragraph from the whole text. He only brings it up since he was explaining on Buddhas teach according the attachments of the students so that he teaches no-self but also self at times, Yanshou then uses it creatively as descrbing the true mind since the Buddha used it to describe Nirvana.

Had Yanshou actually been concerned with a true self or shen he would have written about it in the other fascicles of the text but instead in the areas focusing on true nature, mind or "pure consiousness" he wrties about how it is empty, withou svabhava, fixed characeristics, etc

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 9th, 2020 at 11:01 AM

Title: Re: Vesak 2020

Content:

tobes said:

I always get confused by this. I know the Theravadins have a different date, a month earlier. I checked the FPMT calendar a while back, and they have it locked in for June. But it seems a lot of other Tibetan Buddhists are celebrating it today. What's the deal?

Malcolm wrote:

Vesak is the Theravadin holiday. Their calendar follows the Chinese lunar calendar, which is a month ahead of the Phuglug calendar in Tibet (the Tshur lug corresponds with the Chinese lunar year). The Phuglug is followed by everyone In Tibetan Buddhism but the Karma Kagyus. We call our holiday Saga Dawa, as the fourth month is called Vaisakha in Sanskrit.

Internationally, most Buddhists follow the Theravadin date.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 9th, 2020 at 11:26 PM

Title: Re: Historically, how did people deal with severely disabled babies? How did they interpret the karmic consequence?

Content:

Boomerang said:

If a baby had a disability that made independence impossible, for example severe mental retardation, how would Tibetans deal with it?

Malcolm wrote:

As kindly as possible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 9th, 2020 at 11:27 PM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

shanyin said:

What does emptiness have to do with meditation?

Viach said:

Emptiness is what arises from your practice of meditation, and not what you should meditate on.

LastLegend said:

We can also start with non-dual emptiness (what's already present).

Malcolm wrote:

"Nonduality" is just a meaningless slogan.

Emptiness is neither dual nor nondual, since it is something uncompounded. The notions of unity and multiplicity do not apply to emptiness, space, or cessation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 9th, 2020 at 11:30 PM

Title: Re: Alan Wallace: Dzogchen, COVID-19 & the prophecy received by Dudjom Lingpa

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Let's say you go somewhere there is no religious tradition, like an alien world with no history of any Faith. What are you going to talk about to explain Dzogchen? What would be the source of those words and actions?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, the natural thing would be to start with suffering, its cause, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 9th, 2020 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: Uploading the ego to the cloud

Content:

Kim O'Hara said:

I know, and that's basically where I came in, saying that we don't know enough to rule out the possibility of fully sentient AI.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure we do. Sentient beings are self-organizing. AI's can never be, because they are manufactured. Supposing a machine/network achieved sentience, it could not be called an "artificial intelligence" because its property of being sentient would be emergent, not fabricated.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 9th, 2020 at 11:51 PM

Title: Re: Plants Acquiring Sentience

Content:

Queequeg said:

Anyway. I'll check that Park out.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a very funny remark by Kumarajiva on Chinese translations, including his own, "[W]hen we translate Indian languages into Chinese, we lose the rhythm of the sentences. Although the overall meaning may be delivered, there is a great difference in literary flavor. It is like giving chewed food to others: the food not only loses its taste, but also makes them vomit." How Buddhism Acquired a Soul on the way To China, pp.5

That's pretty much how I feel about all Buddhist translations from any primary Dharma language into English, including mine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 9th, 2020 at 11:55 PM

Title: Re: Plants Acquiring Sentience

Content:

ItsRaining said:

Just a brief google says Paul Reps was a student of a Shaivite mystic, doesn't seem like a good representation of what more "orthodox" Zen is like.

Malcolm wrote:

Reps encountered Zen while he was stationed in Japan after WWII. His book was one of the very first book on Buddhism I ever read, apart from Three Pillars by Kapleau, as well as Meditation in Action (which contains the first Dzogchen text by Jigme Lingpa I ever read) and the Myth of Freedom by Trungpa. But frankly, in 1978, there were not a lot of books on Buddhism yet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 10th, 2020 at 12:10 AM

Title: Re: Plants Acquiring Sentience

Content:

tkp67 said:

It seems to me that this plant does not suffer from the delusion of a projected self

Malcolm wrote:

Generally, insentient things do not suffer, since they have no mind with which to experience pain.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 10th, 2020 at 12:12 AM

Title: Re: Plants Acquiring Sentience

Content:

haha said:

Current scientific understanding has shown that plants do communication through their roots.

Malcolm wrote:

Machines communicate through wires.

haha said:

They communicate about hostility and friendship. They do read the soil nature/information, etc.

Malcolm wrote:

As living beings, albeit, nonsentient, plants respond to the conditions present where they grow.

I have already provided a citation above where the Buddha defines plants as nonsentient.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 10th, 2020 at 12:27 AM

Title: Re: Plants Acquiring Sentience

Content:

tkp67 said:

It seems to me that this plant does not suffer from the delusion of a projected self

Malcolm wrote:

Generally, insentient things do not suffer, since they have no mind with which to experience pain.

tkp67 said:

generally, however not all insentient things are living and an essential part of the fabric of one's existence.

Malcolm wrote:

All insentient things, living or dead, lack consciousness, which is the point. The point is not whether they are essential for our own existence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 10th, 2020 at 1:01 AM

Title: Re: Countdown to a race war?

Content:

Tlalok said:

'd also say that America has been in a race war since at least 1861,

tingdzin said:

Fringe leftist hyperbole. If you think that America is engaged in a war, you have never been within anywhere near a real one.

Malcolm wrote:

In fairness, you should read Heather Cox Richardson's How the South Won the Civil War: While the North prevailed in the Civil War, ending slavery and giving the country a "new birth of freedom," Heather Cox Richardson argues in this provocative work that democracy's blood-soaked victory was ephemeral. The system that had sustained the defeated South moved westward and there established a foothold. It was a natural fit. Settlers from the East had for decades been pushing into the West, where the seizure of Mexican lands at the end of the Mexican-American War and treatment of Native Americans cemented racial hierarchies. The South and West equally depended on extractive industries-cotton in the former and mining, cattle, and oil in the latter-giving rise a new birth of white male oligarchy, despite the guarantees provided by the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments, and the economic opportunities afforded by expansion.

To reveal why this happened, How the South Won the Civil War traces the story of the American paradox, the competing claims of equality and subordination woven into the nation's fabric and identity. At the nation's founding, it was the Eastern "yeoman farmer" who galvanized and symbolized the American Revolution. After the Civil War, that mantle was assumed by the Western cowboy, singlehandedly defending his land against barbarians and savages as well as from a rapacious government. New states entered the Union in the late nineteenth century and western and southern leaders found yet more common ground. As resources and people streamed into the West during the New Deal and World War II, the region's influence grew. "Movement Conservatives," led by westerners Barry Goldwater, Richard Nixon, and Ronald Reagan, claimed to embody cowboy individualism and worked with Dixiecrats to embrace the ideology of the Confederacy.

Richardson's searing book seizes upon the soul of the country and its ongoing struggle to provide equal opportunity to all. Debunking the myth that the Civil War released the nation from the grip of oligarchy, expunging the sins of the Founding, it reveals how and why the Old South not only survived in the West, but thrived.

Richardson is a professor of American History at Boston University. She writes daily letters which are really amazing, to be perfectly honest.

<https://heathercoxrichardson.substack.com>.

And Democracy in Chains by Nancy Maclean:

Nancy MacLean is the William H. Chafe Professor of History and Public Policy at Duke University, and the award-winning author of several books. Her scholarship has received more than a dozen major prizes and awards, and has been supported by fellowships from the American Council of Learned Societies, the National Endowment for the Humanities, the National Humanities Center, the Russell Sage Foundation, and the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowships Foundation.

Her most recent book is Democracy in Chains: The Deep History of the Radical Right's Stealth Plan for America. Booklist called it "perhaps the best explanation to date of the roots of the political divide that threatens to irrevocably alter American government."

The Guardian said: "It's the missing chapter: a key to understanding the politics of the past half century."

A New York Times bestseller, Democracy in Chains was a finalist for the National Book Award, and the winner of the Los Angeles Times Book Award in Current Affairs, the Lannan Foundation Cultural Freedom Award, and the Lillian Smith Book Award. The Nation magazine named it the "Most Valuable Book" of the year.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 10th, 2020 at 1:39 AM

Title: Re: [Video] Walking Around Mt.Hiei-zan Enryaku-ji Temple (Kyoto, Japan)

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The place I realized I was a Buddhist, August, 1986.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 10th, 2020 at 3:46 AM

Title: Re: Historically, how did people deal with severely disabled babies? How did they interpret the karmic consequence?

Content:

LhakpaT said:

What?! Next, you're gonna tell me the Greeks didn't all fight in slow motion and kick ambassadors into wells either!

Grigoris said:

The only thing that is true in "300" is that all Greek men have six packs...

fat greek guy.jpg

Dan74 said:

I don't think a Dharma forum is an appropriate place to post semi-nude pictures of yourself. I mean you may be looking for love and that's fine, but is this really the right venue?

Malcolm wrote:

How can you call that man half-nude? I mean, look at the Jesus bling.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 10th, 2020 at 4:45 AM

Title: Re: Countdown to a race war?

Content:

Tlalok said:

The U.S. Army's definition of a Low-Intensity Conflict (LIC):

... a political-military confrontation between contending states or groups below conventional war and above the routine, peaceful competition among states. It frequently involves protracted struggles of competing principles and ideologies. Low-intensity conflict ranges from subversion to the use of the armed forces. is waged by a combination of means, employing political, economic, informational, and military instruments. Low-intensity conflicts are often localized, generally in the Third World, but contain regional and global security implications.

The situation of racial violence in the US absolutely meets this definition.

Also America is engaged in like 30 wars at any given moment lol, they're just terrible at it.

Malcolm wrote:

Under this definition, the President of the United States is waging a LIC against America.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 10th, 2020 at 8:57 AM

Title: Re: Countdown to a race war?

Content:

Wayfarer said:

It seems a stunt to me. Maybe it would be a real news item if shooting broke out.

Malcolm wrote:

It wasn't a stunt. I don't think you grok racial relations in the US.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 10th, 2020 at 11:28 PM

Title: Re: Countdown to a race war?

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Apparently you are not familiar with US history. It was the republicans that freed the slaves, and the democrats that started the civil war, the KKK and also attempted to ban blacks from having 2nd amendment rights. This was going on up until the 60's when they tried to shut down various civil rights movements.

Malcolm wrote:

First of all, it was only the Southern Democrats that led the secession. Among Northern Democrats there were two factions: War Democrats who supported Lincoln's military policies, and Copperheads, who opposed them. Already, during the formation of the Republican party in the 1850's, many Northern Democrats joined it. Not only this, but in 1864, the Republican Party and the War Democrats formed a Unionist Party, called the National Union Party, to re-elect Lincoln. It fell apart right after the Civil War when most Republicans abandoned it.

So, are we living in the era pre-1965 or post 1965? The reason I ask is that as far as I know, there was a realignment in the late 60's, causing racist Southern Democrats to switch their allegiance to the GOP, which in turn allowed Nixon to succeed in his election bid by using the so-called Southern Strategy. This of course means that now the GOP is the party with the most KKK in its DNA.

That being said, since the 1930's, Northern Democrats were the union party, liberal, and devoted to FDR's New Deal. Republicans on the other hand were the business party, and largely in opposition to the New Deal, and later, the Great Society.

The KKK was generally opposed to unions, especially integrated unions, and generally opposed the New Deal. Under FDR, the Democratic Congress passed the National Labor Relations Act in 1935. We can understand that Southern Democrats were generally opposed to the New Deal.

Prior to Reagan, there were conservatives in both parties, who formed what was known as the Conservative Coalition, which dominated Congress until the 1970's, and who opposed and undermined the New Deal as much as they were able.

Since Reagan, conservatives have largely moved into the GOP silo, while liberals have moved into the Democratic silo.

So, characterizing the modern Democratic and Republican Parties in terms of their pre-1965 and 1980 history is excessively misleading, since it is complicated, and cannot be simply quantified into two sections: Democrats = KKK; Republicans = 13th Amendment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 10th, 2020 at 11:42 PM

Title: Re: Alan Wallace: Dzogchen, COVID-19 & the prophecy received by Dudjom Lingpa

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

But I was talking about Dzogchen. Starts with Three Statements, no?

Malcolm wrote:

If I landed on an alien planet, where there was no knowledge of Buddhadharma, say somewhere like North Dakota, I would start where ChNN always started: suffering. That's just me, however. YMMV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 10th, 2020 at 11:44 PM

Title: Re: Jang-chog / Neydren

Content:

mandog said:

Are Jangchog and Neydren the same ritual?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 10th, 2020 at 11:56 PM

Title: Re: Vesak 2020

Content:

tobes said:

Yeah, so maybe it also about increasingly liminal boundaries between previously very disparate traditions...

Quite intentional perhaps, in many cases.

But basically: Vesak is usually May, Saka Dawa is usually June.

Malcolm wrote:

Unless you are following the Tshurlug system, in which case Saga Dawa is generally in May.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 11th, 2020 at 12:45 AM

Title: Re: Alan Wallace: Dzogchen, COVID-19 & the prophecy received by Dudjom Lingpa

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I would say we have gone way way way off topic...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 11th, 2020 at 12:54 AM

Title: Re: Countdown to a race war?

Content:

Minobu said:

Until america gets over it's never ending divide and conquer politics racism will always be.

The republicans don't like the Dems and the Dems as seen on this site seethe when it comes to republicans.

Malcolm wrote:

Not a Democrat, actually. However, the GOP is most dangerous and destructive political party on the planet right now, and have been for some decades.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 11th, 2020 at 12:59 AM

Title: Re: Countdown to a race war?

Content:

PeterC said:

He even opposed anti-lynching legislation when it was first suggested.

Malcolm wrote:

Speaking of lynchings, it still happens in Georgia:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 11th, 2020 at 4:56 AM

Title: Re: Countdown to a race war?

Content:

Minobu said:

To see Buddhists this uptight about the other political party is amusing to watch.

Tlalok said:

I rejoice that some people have the good fortune to see American politics as a kind of team sport, and not a constant battle with people that regard you as subhuman savages and relish stories of your brothers and sisters being murdered, violated, and humiliated. Must be great...

Malcolm wrote:

Minobu must be white.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 11th, 2020 at 9:59 PM

Title: Re: Plants Acquiring Sentience

Content:

jmlee369 said:

There are probably no records of beings taking birth as plants, however there are plenty of stories of beings taking birth as plant spirits.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. But this was never in dispute.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 11th, 2020 at 10:01 PM

Title: Re: Stephen Batchelor

Content:

PeterC said:

I personally think that the whole 'secular buddhism' idea is nonsensical and collapses quickly into ersatz psychotherapy. A bit like a high-end spa with a statue of the Buddha in the corner. But Batchelor does have a valid argument in his response to Wallace where he (sort of) says that it's possible to practice the Dharma without having taken a definite position of belief on certain questions. I think there's something in that, there are topics on which one can remain in doubt and still practice. Moreover reading Wallace criticizing Batchelor for projecting ideas onto the words of the Buddha...we are all on very thin ice when we start doing that, including Wallace himself.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, one can certainly practice the brahma viharas. One can certainly practice śamatha. Insight? Well, since we know already that the Buddha declared rebirth denial or doubt a wrong view, that does not really seem possible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 11th, 2020 at 10:12 PM

Title: Re: Uploading the ego to the cloud

Content:

Wayfarer said:

Bolds added. The crucial point is, the dhammas refer to 'experience' - they are elements of experience, not of an external or 'mind-independent' object, like the atoms of Greek philosophy.

Malcolm wrote:

Try telling that to the Sarvāstivādins and Sautrantikas. All these definitions are not predicated upon native definitions of the term "dharma," and none of the authorities cited for their translation equivalents using native definitions in formulating their equivalents.

The word "dharma" derives from "dhr̥," "to hold, to bear," and generally, among ten definitions of "dharma," the one relevant here is "bearer of characteristics."

So, in fact, when it comes to things like the constituents of the material aggregate, indeed, the five material objects of the five material senses are indeed held to be external or "mind-independent" objects. And, beyond the four elements, there is a further derivation of the elements into secondary or derived matter. This is all explained in the Dhātu chapter of the Kośabhaṣya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 11th, 2020 at 10:15 PM

Title: Re: Uploading the ego to the cloud

Content:

Wayfarer said:

Daniel Dennett's first book, Consciousness Explained, was commonly parodied - by other philosophers! - as 'Consciousness Ignored', or 'Consciousness Explained Away'.

Malcolm wrote:

How about, "Mansplaining Consciousness."?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 11th, 2020 at 10:55 PM

Title: Re: Stephen Batchelor

Content:

smcj said:

...the Buddha declared rebirth denial or doubt a wrong view..

The Buddha said doubt was wrong view? That mean conviction is a necessary prerequisite? Denial as wrong view I understand fully, but 'conviction' has multiple shades of gray. It seems problematic to require a certain shade of gray before you start.

Malcolm wrote:

"Conviction" aka faith, means you have to take someone else's word for it.

Buddhadharma recognizes three sources of authority, not merely one, as some modern interpreters of Buddhism maintain. What are the three? Direct perception, inference, and testimony of reliable witnesses. These days, many people interested in Buddhism have been misled to believe that only direct perception is a valid authority. However, this is actually the position of the Ancient Indian materialist school, the Carvaka/Lokayatis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 12th, 2020 at 12:33 AM

Title: Re: Stephen Batchelor

Content:

PeterC said:

I personally think that the whole 'secular buddhism' idea is nonsensical and collapses quickly into ersatz psychotherapy. A bit like a high-end spa with a statue of the Buddha in the corner. But Batchelor does have a valid argument in his response to Wallace where he (sort of) says that it's possible to practice the Dharma without having taken a definite position of belief on certain questions. I think there's something in that, there are topics on which one can remain in doubt and still practice. Moreover reading Wallace criticizing Batchelor for projecting ideas onto the words of the Buddha...we are all on very thin ice when we start doing that, including Wallace himself.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, one can certainly practice the brahma viharas. One can certainly practice śamatha. Insight? Well, since we know already that the Buddha declared rebirth denial or doubt a wrong view, that does not really seem possible.

PeterC said:

I'm giving him a small loophole and it's not what he's saying but: there are things in which we have at most inferential knowledge before we have developed abilities on the path of seeing. We can't know them in the sense of knowledge being justified true belief. Even if I believe in rebirth I can't assert that I know it.

Malcolm wrote:

This implicitly negates inference and testimony of unimpeachable witnesses as pramāṇas. Just sayin'.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 12th, 2020 at 3:38 AM

Title: Re: Alan Wallace: Dzogchen, COVID-19 & the prophecy received by Dudjom Lingpa

Content:

Pero said:

Why not? Plenty of people come to the teachings from other religious backgrounds.

Malcolm wrote:

So there is a causal link to praying to god and then getting direct introduction? How does that work? Basically Pero, if you go to receive Dzogchen teachings, you are an Ex-whatever. Oh, sure, you can maintain outward form of a Christian, etc., but if your view does not change, you will not realize the meaning.

Nemo said:

Lately I wonder if creator Gods are demons.

Malcolm wrote:

Gnostics certainly thought so.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 12th, 2020 at 3:41 AM

Title: Re: Renewable Energy

Content:

Aemilius said:

Oil that fries your burger can run your car

Malcolm wrote:

Diesel engines only.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 12th, 2020 at 9:39 AM

Title: Re: Stephen Batchelor

Content:

PeterC said:

I'm giving him a small loophole and it's not what he's saying but: there are things in which we have at most inferential knowledge before we have developed abilities on the path of seeing. We can't know them in the sense of knowledge being justified true belief. Even if I believe in rebirth I can't assert that I know it.

Malcolm wrote:

This implicitly negates inference and testimony of unimpeachable witnesses as pramāṇas. Just sayin'.

PeterC said:

Not really. Just recognizes that the modern definition of “knowledge” differs from the definition of valid inference at the time. One can say that one infers things without knowing them. Small point but a source of much confusion. I don't know, for instance, that the earth goes around the sun.

Malcolm wrote:

Only if you give in to the definition of truth which is derived from materialist schools.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 12th, 2020 at 9:48 AM

Title: Re: Uploading the ego to the cloud

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The word "dharma" derives from "dhr," "to hold, to bear," and generally, among ten definitions of "dharma," the one relevant here is "bearer of characteristics."

Wayfarer said:

So they are comparable to the 'substance and attribute' model of Aristotelian metaphysics? I had always been told that Buddhism eschewed such notions.

Malcolm wrote:

If you study Indian Abhidharma, you will discover that substance/attribute correspondence is a tenet of the Sarvastivadin school, the dominant Indian Buddhist school of metaphysics (Abhidharma).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 12th, 2020 at 10:11 AM

Title: Re: Uploading the ego to the cloud

Content:

Wayfarer said:

I have read a little about Sarvastivada - reality of past/present/future dharmas was how it was glossed to me.

But the broader point is this: that abhidharma arises from the analysis and contemplation of the constituents of experience. All of the steps of the 12-fold chain pertain to the elements of being or consciousness, do they not?

Malcolm wrote:

While it is the case that the Vibhanga, the most important Abhidhamma text, portrays dependent origination as being strictly a process of consciousness, Abhidharma presents dependent origination in cosmological terms, as well as experiential terms.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 12th, 2020 at 11:37 PM

Title: Re: Stephen Batchelor

Content:

PeterC said:

Yes. But it is dangerous to be too certain of one's conclusions in epistemology. As Russell said in his introduction to the Tractatus, "as one with a long experience of the difficulties of logic and of the deceptiveness of theories which seem irrefutable, I find myself unable to be sure of the rightness of a theory merely on the grounds that I cannot see any point on which it is wrong." I guess this is really my point. One can still live one's life and practice recognizing that there is a certain element of doubt.

Grigoris said:

If you want to relate to Buddhism as a philosophy/epistemology, yes. If you want to approach Buddhism as a means of true liberation from suffering, then doubt is a serious obstacle.

PeterC said:

I agree, eventually you have to overcome doubt, but I personally think the way to achieve that is through experience rather than reliance on authority or reasoning. But different people will view this differently

Edit - doubt isn't something you can simply tell people to discard ex ante. To do so would actually most likely cause them to doubt more: it's not particularly helpful to tell someone who doubts a point of doctrine that they just need to believe and then everything will make sense. In some cases you can gain understanding through practice, for instance in the four common preliminaries. But you can't make yourself believe something. You don't believe that the sun rises in the east and sets in the west because someone with a PhD has explained astrophysics to you. You believe it because you have observed this day after day and gained confidence that it is the case. Then when the astrophysicist comes and explains to you the mechanism by which eclipses happen, you find it easier to accept because you have gained confidence in another part of his general description of how objects in the solar system is arranged. That way you have gained confidence in the system and the explainer of the system. I know this isn't a great analogy but you see what I mean.

Malcolm wrote:

Bad analogy. The sun does not rise in the east and set in the west. The sun does not rise or set at all. Instead, the earth rotates on its axis, giving one the perception that the sun rises and sets. morning and evening. It does neither. Thus, this is an instance where direct perception alone is not sufficient as an authority.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 12th, 2020 at 11:44 PM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Nemo said:

If we are talking about failures then the possibility this was leaked from a lab in China doing gain of function experiments funded by America because it was too dangerous to do at home should be seriously considered. There is no proof it came from a seafood market near the Wuhan Institute of Virology in mid January and the CCP has been proven to have lied repeatedly to the point they have zero credibility. The circumstantial evidence for a leak is becoming quite significant.

Malcolm wrote:

Whatever the case may be, the horses have already left the barn.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 13th, 2020 at 12:40 AM

Title: Re: Uploading the ego to the cloud

Content:

Wayfarer said:

But it does remain the case that the Buddhist conception of dharmas is momentary - arising and ceasing in rapid succession, rather than as enduring substances, doesn't it? Because the point about atoms in that sense, is that they are, first of all, permanent and unceasing, and secondly, not created, which I think would conflict with core Buddhist principles.

Malcolm wrote:

"Atoms" are called paramanu in Sanskrit. They are the smallest forms of matter. There are a number of interesting arguments concerning their nature and function; but in general, in Sarvāstivāda, they are considered to be partless, irreducible, and momentary.

The notions of substance/characteristic is found in the various arguments we see about water and its characteristics, wetness, where wetness is conceived as the svabhāva of water, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 13th, 2020 at 12:43 AM

Title: Re: Stephen Batchelor

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Bad analogy. The sun does not rise in the east and set in the west. The sun does not rise or set at all. Instead, the earth rotates on its axis, giving one the perception that the sun rises and sets. morning and evening. It does neither. Thus, this is an instance where direct perception alone is not sufficient as an authority.

PeterC said:

True - bad example. What we consider as direct observation is a lot less reliable than we generally believe it to be.

And if we want to take things to the extreme skeptics' position - we could be brains in vats of chemicals in Alpha Centauri being manipulated by an evil alien. Though I've always found that argument a little unconvincing: the extreme skeptical position is irrefutable, but it's also pointless.

Malcolm wrote:

My point is simply this: materialists only accept direct perception as authoritative, much like the modern Secular Buddhists. But in Buddhadharma, there are three separate yet mutually dependent authorities: direct perception, inference, and testimony.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 13th, 2020 at 12:51 AM

Title: Re: Shingon: the Tibetan and Nichiren connection?

Content:

Meido said:

Also hope not to hijack this revived thread, but in skimming it I'm surprised to not yet see a clear refutation of the statement that "Shingon is the Japanese branch of Tibetan Buddhism," or of the idea that there was any Tibetan Buddhist connection to the formation of Nichiren's teachings.

I am hardly qualified to be the history police. But it bears repeating: the early esoteric teachings transmitted to Japan and preserved there today did not come from, or first pass through, Tibet.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, they were brought by Vajrabodhi and Amoghavajra to China directly from Southern India via the sea route in the late 7th and early 8th century, and it is quite likely that the influence of Chinese Buddhists at the court of the Tibetan King stimulated his interest in importing Mantrayāna to Tibet during the latter half of the 8th century. The main shrine at Samye was in fact devoted to Mahavairocana, the same Buddha called Dai Nichi Nyorai in Shingon, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 13th, 2020 at 4:26 AM

Title: Re: Stephen Batchelor

Content:

smcj said:

What we consider as direct observation is a lot less reliable than we generally believe it to be.

Hence the teachings on no-self and emptiness. The tetralemma tells us that our direct observations are completely deluded—including how we believe ourselves to be.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, no-- direct perceptions themselves are nonconceptual and generally, if one has health sense organs, nondeluded. The inferences drawn from direct perceptions can be mistaken, for example, mistaking mist for smoke and concluding there is a fire somewhere, or that the sun rises and sets, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 14th, 2020 at 11:21 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

tobes said:

I agree Nemo - neoliberalism is the cause. Interestingly, Australia, under a very conservative govt, basically jettisoned the whole neoliberal caper in one stroke. Doubled unemployment benefits and....well.....actually started governing. Haven't seen this since the 90's.

I'm sure it will return though.

Nemo said:

Ever the optimist. I'm not so sure. The last recessions were financial hiccups that trickled down to main street. Often a financial hiccup in a single country. This time main street has been decimated in every country on earth. This has never happened before. Generally it takes 6 to 18 months for the full extent of the damage to manifest. Many countries are over 20% unemployment today. In a year that could be 30%. There are no precedents or models for this kind of collapse. It's either socialism or barbarism and many neoliberals are already choosing socialism.

Malcolm wrote:

The only sensible choice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 14th, 2020 at 11:28 AM

Title: Re: Stephen Batchelor

Content:

smcj said:

Hence the teachings on no-self and emptiness. The tetralemma tells us that our direct observations are completely deluded—including how we believe ourselves to be.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, no-- direct perceptions themselves are nonconceptual and generally, if one has health sense organs, nondeluded. The inferences drawn from direct perceptions can be mistaken, for example, mistaking mist for smoke and concluding there is a fire somewhere, or that the sun rises and sets, etc.

smcj said:

The lotus flower symbolizes purity arising out of filth. The yuck and muck that symbolism is referring to is our present awareness, right?

Malcolm wrote:

No, I would put it differently. The “muck” is the state of afflictions, which is not inherent to the lotus, and yet is the basis on which the lotus grows and blossoms. as Garab Dorje puts it in one tantra, “ The fire of pristine consciousness burns the fuel of affliction.”

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 14th, 2020 at 11:35 PM

Title: Re: Question on role of samaya in multiple empowerments

Content:

tsultrimtarchin said:

Hello everybody!

Thank you so much to anyone who can help me with this question. This is a powerful doubt monster that has really been distracting me today.

Some history - Last year I took refuge with a lama and later did an Amithaba empowerment. There were very few requirements, but one was to try to recite the mantra, if nothing else, every day. I was in a pretty rough state during the time, and was mostly driven to do the practice through fear. As I came out of that state, I dropped the practice, as I associated it so strongly with my emotional state at that time.

Over the past few months, I have had the good fortune to connect with Green Tara practice, receive empowerment, and now do the Green Tara Sadhana practice I was taught everyday - with joyful enthusiasm! I received this from a different lama. Along with this, I practice vajra recitation as I was taught and objectless shamatha/nature of mind practice.

Today this doubt monster reared it's head while I was practicing my Green Tara sadhana - that I should be also fulfilling my requirement to do Amithaba. By taking refuge in Green Tara and practicing her Sadhana, as understand it, I am taking refuge in all the Buddhas and walking the path. But am I doing something wrong by not doing Amithaba as well? By approaching Green Tara with joyful enthusiasm, generating bodhicitta, and attempting to understand her and my practice from the absolute view, I hope this is enough. My practice of Amithaba was a little tainted by my mind state at the time and I'm a little afraid to bring it into my daily practice again. Any suggestions or thoughts here are welcome!

Malcolm wrote:

When reciting one mantra, one is reciting all mantras. One should have this confidence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 15th, 2020 at 1:02 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

shanyin said:

I have read Allan Carr's book. It didn't lead to myself quitting smoking or any progress on quitting smoking..

Sunrise said:

Sorry to hear that method didn't work for you. I really hope you find a method that works for you. Quitting smoking is really hard, but worth it a million times over. I found quitting smoking helps improve meditation as well, because smoking produces a subtle restlessness in the mind. Best of luck and never quit quitting.

Malcolm wrote:

Quitting smoking is easy. You just stop, throw away your cigs, and cease. That's what I did, 31 years ago. Cold turkey, no regrets, no trauma, no cravings, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 15th, 2020 at 5:49 AM

Title: Re: I'm on

Content:

Mirror said:

I have a question. Why are there fewer and fewer highly advanced yogis or dharma practitioners? Why aren't there any yogis like Tilopa, Naropa, Marpa, Milarepa, etc. ? Is it because hedonism and materialism or that people lack love and compassion or wisdom?

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, there never are that many in any given generation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 15th, 2020 at 10:31 PM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Wayfarer said:

I have been researching space travel, and I'm convinced it will never happen, certainly not in our lifetimes, in any meaningful way.

Malcolm wrote:

Elysium is a somewhat dumb movie, but it shows one a possible future. Hint, the rich lose.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 16th, 2020 at 2:35 AM

Title: Re: I'm on

Content:

avatamsaka3 said:

How would you know there are fewer? I'm not at all saying I'm one: I'm not. But the world is full of surprises.

Mirror said:

Traditional buddhist cultures are more and more materialist. Even Dzongsar Khyentse Rinpoche said, that in Bhutan young people are looking for happiness in a career and Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo said something like that about India. Japan, Thailand.... People choose rather comfort, than an ascetic way of life in monasteries. We can also see it in other religions. The faith of christians is weaker, than it was a few decades ago here in Europe. I was told by a Polish priest, that there are lesser people studying theology every year.

Malcolm wrote:

This is because the promise of religious salvation turned out to be a bogus lie, and Christian Theology is really just a house of cards.

In Dharma, the only person who can save you is yourself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 17th, 2020 at 3:51 AM

Title: Re: Counting mandala mudra offerings

Content:

pemachophel said:
climb-up,

So we're talking about the Yuthok Nyingthig ngondro? I've done that ngondro four times. First time I did it by the numbers. Other three times I did it by 7-day retreats. In all cases I offered a physical mandala. It never occurred to me to do it any other way.

Malcolm wrote:

Most people do not realize that the reason for the brevity of the Yuthog Nyinthig Ngondro is that it is written for busy doctors. It is not a short cut, like some people imagine. It is short, because the merit of practicing medicine is so great, doctors do not need to practice longer ngondros, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 17th, 2020 at 8:50 PM

Title: Re: Dzam Ling chi sang

Content:

Toenail said:

Always wondered what the history behind this holiday is. I know it is where offerings to local deities etc are made, but is this a 'new' holiday or is there some story etc behind it?

Malcolm wrote:

It is connected with Gesar. There is a Gesar ballad with this as a theme

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 17th, 2020 at 8:59 PM

Title: Re: Stephen Batchelor

Content:

PeterC said:

I don't deny the possibility of benevolent Christians. I have just encountered too many unpleasantly intolerant ones in many different countries, and the common thread is that they want you to change your practices and beliefs - completely consistent with their belief that you are going to hell and they have a duty to save you. This drives their organized political activities. These activities are very well documented in the US, less so elsewhere but they are socially malign wherever you encounter them.

I have never encountered a scientist, engineer, doctor etc who wanted to change my practices or beliefs, beyond the occasional casual conversation over drinks where they ask if I really get a lot out of visualizing myself with multiple heads and arms drinking blood from a skull cup. Which, to the uninitiated, is actually a pretty reasonable question.

I just think attacking the straw man of secular ideology is extremely Quixotic - in the true sense of the word. We've had centuries of organized religions persecuting non-believers. Why would we ever want to make common cause with them.

tobes said:

I don't think it's a strawman: secularism is definitely a rising force in many western-industrialised nations. And there is a kind of nascent power in it, of the kind where if you are of a more religious persuasion, you are considered irrational or stupid. I'm not particularly 'religious' but I have had countless experiences of secularist people trying to change my beliefs.

But like Wayfarer, I'm in Australia - it is clearly more secular than the US, the numbers shows this.

PeterC said:

I agree geography matters here.

But look at it this way. Are The Secularists trying to physically stop people going to medical procedures because they think those procedures contravene their beliefs? Are they lobbying legislatures trying to get business exempted from civil rights obligations due to their scientific beliefs? Are they protesting anime conventions because they disrespect physics? Are they condemning gay people to imprisonment or condoning their killing because homosexuality is contrary to accepted biological reproductive practices? Did they burn people at the stake for claiming that the earth was flat? Did they enslave religious people because they thought it would improve them?

I could go on but I'm sure you see my point. It is pretty absurd to claim oppression of religious people by secular viewpoints. Australia is for the most part a fairly rational society. However if you go to not just the US but large parts of Africa, the Middle East, Eastern Europe, bits of Latin America even, religious majorities imposing their views on others is a real and ongoing problem.

Malcolm wrote:

The East and West coast are largely secular, churches are empty or closing, etc. the Deep South and the Midwest are where Christians have a stronghold. I personally have no reason to spend time in places in America dominated by Christians/GOP. It might be hard to believe from someone who is not from here, but I have virtually no interaction with rabid Christians or Republicans. One benefit of living in Massachusetts. However, there are limited numbers of places I would live elsewhere in the US: Northern NM, HI, VT, CO, and CA, that's about it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 17th, 2020 at 10:32 PM

Title: Re: Stephen Batchelor

Content:

PeterC said:

What you can't escape, unfortunately, is the way that Christian interests (or interests sailing under that flag of convenience) influence federal legislation and jurisprudence. Hobby Lobby was just the beginning. And those people only believe in states' rights when it happens to be their states, their rights.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, New England is the source of American Democracy, however imperfect it may be. The reason the Bay Area, Portland, and Seattle are as liberal as they are has a great deal to do with the cultural connections of those cities to the East Coast. Come what may, New England will continue to observe our own traditions of direct and representative democracy. If the rest of the country become too insane, we will secede.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 17th, 2020 at 10:47 PM

Title: Re: Aaron Mate and Glenn Greenwald on Gen Flynn/Russian collusion

Content:

Queequeg said:

Yeah. TL;DW.

Watched enough to get the general gist. The whole thing (Russiagate) was stupid.

Which is too bad, because it overshadowed a real problem that needed to be addressed - Russian interference in the 2016 election.

Russians and Chinese probably looked at both sides of the political divide and thought, "What a bunch of morons."

Malcolm wrote:

Flynn was not arrested and charged with contacting a Russian. He was charged with lying to the FBI, to which he pled guilty. He didn't need to lie. High government officials can and should be held to a higher standard of conduct.

Lying to a federal agent is a felony. No sympathy for Flynn.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 18th, 2020 at 12:24 AM

Title: Re: Aaron Mate and Glenn Greenwald on Gen Flynn/Russian collusion

Content:

smcj said:

So yes, he was set up in a perjury trap.

Malcolm wrote:

Lying to the FBI is not perjury, but it is a felony.

The perjury aspect of this case begins when Flynn changes his story under oath, during his trial.

But there was no perjury trap.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 18th, 2020 at 12:25 AM

Title: Re: Aaron Mate and Glenn Greenwald on Gen Flynn/Russian collusion

Content:

Queequeg said:

I don't think Flynn knew he was an asset, if he was. Maybe he was an angle. Which made him a liability all the same.

The problem is not that Trump is some Manchurians.

Malcolm wrote:

Flynn was arrogant, and thought he could get away with lying to the FBI. He is not a very smart man.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 18th, 2020 at 12:35 AM

Title: Re: Dzam Ling chi sang

Content:

pemachophel said:

I was told it commemorates Guru Rinpoche's offering sang on top of Hepori and enrolling the spirits of Tibet as Dharma Protectors and Guardians.

Malcolm wrote:

Perhaps, all I know is that there is a long Gesar Ballad called Dzamling Chisang.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 18th, 2020 at 10:51 AM

Title: Re: Stephen Batchelor

Content:

PeterC said:

I think you're putting the Dharma in a completely anachronistic philosophical framework. Practice of the Dharma doesn't particularly need philosophy. Of course most serious practitioners spend a lot of time on philosophical questions, but they don't really have to. However if you want to ask what the Dharma thinks about 'secular values', you need to look at the question in the context of the Dharma as expounded by the Buddha and reflected in the canonical texts of your lineage. You don't need to read Kant to understand the Dharma, the Dharma has no interest in or relation to the European enlightenment, Christianity, etc. These topics have nothing to say that adds to the understanding needed to practice the Dharma, and by trying to relate the two to each other you enter the eponymous thicket of views, fetter of views etc. The question of whether one can hold 'secular values' independent of any non-empirically-observable beliefs is something in which that Dharma took very little interest. The Dharma of Sakyamuni did engage to some degree with the other dharmas of its day, and explained why they didn't, in its view, lead to liberation. But that's really all that it's concerned with: suffering, the ending of suffering, achieving liberation (expressed in different forms in the different vehicles). It doesn't need to care about anything else, really, except the basics of how to provide the conditions for practice, how to relate to society while you practice, but advice of that kind is mostly around how to do that in a way that minimizes disruption to your practice.

Malcolm wrote:

Bravo. Well done. And anyway, Buddhism accounts for ethics in the context of the ten natural nonvirtues, which it considers the core frame around which all secular and religious morals and ethics are constructed.

Most of these morals and ethics involve various interpretations of the constraints upon persons these ten natural nonvirtues impose upon our personal conduct.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 18th, 2020 at 8:53 PM

Title: Re: Stephen Batchelor

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

We seem to have slipped off topic here...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 18th, 2020 at 11:27 PM

Title: Re: Aaron Mate and Glenn Greenwald on Gen Flynn/Russian collusion

Content:

Fa Dao said:

I know they're quite long but did anyone here actually listen to the videos I posted?

Aaron Mate is a true blue Bernie supporter and Glenn Greenwald is about as old school liberal as they come...

Malcolm wrote:

The details of the Flynn case are extremely clear. He lied to the FBI. That in itself is a felony. He plead guilty to that charge. Then he changed his mind and perjured himself before a judge, under oath. These are the salient facts.

Mate and Greenwald's opinions don't really matter very much. Even if Russiagate were complete bollocks through and through, Flynn does not get a pass for lying, especially because he was appointed to a high office.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 18th, 2020 at 11:29 PM

Title: Re: Stephen Batchelor

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

We seem to have slipped off topic here...

Grigoris said:

I dunno man.

Seems to me that Batchelor is the mongoloid spawn of the same colonialist attempt to Protestantise Buddhism, that started in Sri Lanka and lead to the Theravada Buddhism we have all come to recognise. it.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but now we are talking about genocides, and so on. Its a little off-topic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 18th, 2020 at 11:35 PM

Title: Re: Karmic cause become gay

Content:

Norden said:

Hello guys

As far as I can tell Buddha never condemns gay people, Buddha taught us to have compassion to all living beings. But the question is, what is the karmic cause that makes someone become a gay? Thanks in advance.

Malcolm wrote:

According to Abdhidharmakoṣabhaśya, a bardo being with excess desire whose fetus becomes a male fetus during the third week of gestation will likely end up becoming pandaka; one can infer that a bardo being with excess anger whose fetus remains female will become a female pandaka.

According to Ayurveda and Tibetan Medicine, gender preference is largely a biological outcome resulting from a uniform quantity of male and female reproductive tissues at the moment of conception.

The question of pandakas is really only an issue for monastic ordination. It is not a moral issue, though, naturally, there are non-gender specific issues with oral sex and anal sex described in the teachings on sexual misconduct.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 18th, 2020 at 11:42 PM

Title: Re: Dzam Ling chi sang

Content:

pemachophel said:

I was told it commemorates Guru Rinpoche's offering sang on top of Hepori and enrolling the spirits of Tibet as Dharma Protectors and Guardians.

Malcolm wrote:

Perhaps, all I know is that there is a long Gesar Ballad called Dzamling Chisang.

Toenail said:

Do you have a link or something to the text? Can also be Tibetan.

Malcolm wrote:

An account supporting Pema Chopel's statement can be found here:

https://www.tbrc.org/#library_work_ViewByOutline-01GS577454CZ288083%7CW27932

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 18th, 2020 at 11:55 PM

Title: Re: LN Ngondro requirements

Content:

DechenDave said:

I received a surprise lung for the LN Ngondro During a weekend of teachings last year.

The guru yoga section of the sadhana the lama read from contained a self-generation of Vajrayogini: <https://www.lotsawahouse.org/tibetan-masters/dodrupchen-l/longchen-nyingtik>

Do I need a Vajrayogini empowerment to be able to do this?

As well, I have seen shorter LN Ngondro sadhanas which seem like they could be more suitable to daily practice. Does having received the lung for the sadhana I linked to enable one to select a shorter one or is a separate lung necessary?

Malcolm wrote:

In general, the empowerment in order to practice the outer and inner guru sadhanas of the Longchen Nyinthig is the called the Coronation of the Victor Empowerment. It is the empowerment for both the outer and inner guru sadhanas of LN. The secret and most secret guru sadhanas have their own empowerments.

Most people do not realize that the preliminary practices of the LN do not actually include the outer guru sadhana. The outer guru sadhana is combined with the ngondro text to make up what people now refer to as the LN Preliminaries.

So, there is in fact an empowerment for this outer guru sadhana, but it is not always given beforehand.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 18th, 2020 at 11:58 PM

Title: Re: Aaron Mate and Glenn Greenwald on Gen Flynn/Russian collusion

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Yeah..thats what I thought..you didnt listen to either of them. Its that type of thinking and clinging to that narrative that will get Trump reelected

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, no need. Flynn screwed himself without any help from the FBI. It is not a narrative, these are just the facts of the case laid out in the charges leveled against him and the ensuing trials. As always, it is the coverups that get these guys in trouble, not what they may or may not have done.

The narrative that is being pushed in public is the one that Trump has been railing about for nearly four years, that Flynn was treated "unfairly." That narrative is complete rubbish.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 19th, 2020 at 1:13 AM

Title: Re: Aaron Mate and Glenn Greenwald on Gen Flynn/Russian collusion

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Yeah..thats what I thought..you didnt listen to either of them. Its that type of thinking and clinging to that narrative that will get Trump reelected

Malcolm wrote:

BTW, no one ever accused Trump of collusion. Collusion is not a legal term outside of antitrust law. Just to remind you:

[A] listener called in to ask about the legal meaning of the word "collusion." Bharara and his two guests were quick to set the record straight; the term collusion, despite its frequent use, has no actual legal definition outside of antitrust law. Instead, Bharara raised a different question for his guests: If collusion has no legal meaning in the context of the Russia investigation, then “why has the word ... captured everyone’s attention?” What’s more, how did a word with no legal relevance to the case become so associated with the Trump-Russia allegations?

<https://www.lawfareblog.com/where-heck-did-term-collusion-come>

So you must forgive us for being underwhelmed by some journalists who lately, surprise, realize that collusion is a meaningless term when applied to “Russiagate.”

Trump and Manafort used the term first:

Mook did not use the word “collusion,” but the press, in reporting his comments, did. Within the hour, in an article timestamped at 9:55 a.m., the Washington Examiner reported that Paul Manafort and Donald Trump Jr. had responded to Mook’s allegations and “vigorously denied any kind of collusion between Trump Sr. and the Russian president.” (To be clear, Manafort denied “any ties” between Putin and the Trump campaign, and Donald Trump Jr. criticized Mook for “lie after lie.” Neither one of them mentioned “collusion.”) Ninety minutes later, at 11:27 a.m., ABC News repeated what it termed Mook’s “allegation of collusion between the campaign and Russia.” And three hours later, at approximately 12:35 p.m., Bernie Sanders’s campaign manager, Jeff Weaver, told CNN’s Jake Tapper, “If there was some kind of collusion between the Trump campaign and Russian intelligence or Russian hackers, that clearly has to be dealt with.”

Those of us with our wits about us never thought there was collusion or a conspiracy between the Trump campaign and the Russians.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 19th, 2020 at 1:20 AM

Title: Re: LN Ngondro requirements

Content:

heart said:

I never heard anyone teach you need a vajrayogini empowerment to do guru yoga, so who told you that you needed it?

/magnus

Grigoris said:

Did you read the opening post?

This discussion is in reference to the opening post.

heart said:

Yes, I did, there is no need for empowerment for self-visualisation in a guru yoga.

Malcolm wrote:

This is arguably false. If you gave not received empowerment or direct introduction, you have no guru at all.

But it is true that Nyingma and Kagyu Lamas give ngondro transmission to people who have not received either empowerment or direct introduction.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 19th, 2020 at 2:59 AM

Title: Re: Aaron Mate and Glenn Greenwald on Gen Flynn/Russian collusion

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This just in:

<https://talkingpointsmemo.com/news/flynn-gleeson-proposed-schedule?fbclid=IwAR3bo3fIA9jkDdwplI9wzc59vaKkbOMdzybJD1wHErvFKmHws3ZZNATSl8>

Unknown said:

Flynn had pleaded guilty in December 2017 to lying to the FBI earlier that year about his Russian contacts. But in recent months, Flynn has tried walk back that plea and push allegations of prosecutorial misconduct — with his former boss, President Trump, cheering on the effort. The Justice Department’s move last month to try to drop the case is believed to be unprecedented, given the multiple occasions Flynn previously affirmed his guilty plea in court.

In appointing Gleeson, Sullivan has also asked him to examine whether Flynn committed perjury.

Gleeson told Sullivan on Monday that he would like until June 10 to file his friend-of-the-court brief addressing the question of whether the court can deny the DOJ request to dismiss the case and if so, the legal standard for doing so.

Gleeson also said by then he’d lay out “any additional factual development I may need before finalizing my argument in opposition to the government’s motion in this case.”

Gleeson did not elaborate on what areas of the factual record he may like to look at, or whether it would include how top DOJ officials went about reversing course in the case.

Finally, Gleeson told Sullivan that by June 10 he could also address “whether, based on the record before the Court, it should order the defendant to show cause why he should not be held in criminal contempt for perjury.”

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 19th, 2020 at 3:01 AM

Title: Re: Aaron Mate and Glenn Greenwald on Gen Flynn/Russian collusion
Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Trump and Manafort used the term first:

Slight correction: the Washington Examiner used the phrase first.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 19th, 2020 at 10:24 PM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Dan74 said:

The danger I see is the ever shrinking window of actual human contact and technology becoming the master, rather than the servant.

Malcolm wrote:

We have been very promiscuous as a civilization. In fact, social isolation has been the norm for most of human history, where most people have lived in isolated bands, and strangers met with suspicion; precisely because of contagious diseases to which there was no immunity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 19th, 2020 at 10:27 PM

Title: Re: Sattvic/Yogic Diet Challenge

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Sunrise:

Contrary to your assumptions about yogic diets, you will frequently find in Tibetan yoga manuals recommendations to eat meat and also drink a little alcohol, and other nutritiously-dense foods, because these stimulate metabolism.

The kind of diet recommended in the advice you have posted here makes sense for a very hot climate. It does not make much sense for a very cold one. Context is everything.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 19th, 2020 at 10:29 PM

Title: Re: Validity of online empowerments

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

and how did people webcasting the wang actually received it? was there a simil to the Guruyogas of WWT?

i never saw such thing. maybe i'm wrong. could someone corroborate this? maybe i have more empowerments that i thought (laughs)

heart said:

Yes, kind of similar to the wwt transmission. Basically every deity retreat he did there was a donwang, Mandarava, Ayu Khandro's Singhmukha, Changchub Dorje's Shitro and so on. Donwang's is just a visualisation, then Rinpoche did tri-lung for the sadhana.

/magnus

javier.espinoza.t said:

mm i thought the wang component was actualy approached through DI.

how is that "Donwang's is just a visualisation"?

Malcolm wrote:

He means that there are no ritual implements, etc., used, like a vase, laying out a mandala, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 19th, 2020 at 10:57 PM

Title: Re: Validity of online empowerments

Content:

Toenail said:

The ritual implements, are they really essential?

Malcolm wrote:

It depends on the kind of empowerment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 19th, 2020 at 11:31 PM

Title: Re: Sattvic/Yogic Diet Challenge

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

...

Grigoris said:

When it comes to Ojas: Is this something that is found in particular food, or is it that particular food assists us in producing ojas (like iron and folic acid is helpful for producing blood)?

Malcolm wrote:

Ojas is actually not found in food, per se. It is the final product if you will, of the seven-fold process of metabolism described in Ayurveda/TM: nutriment (rasa)-->blood-->flesh-->fat-->bone-->marrow-->seminal precursor. The last tissue, seminal precursor is then divided: the pure part becomes ojas, is concentrated mainly in the heart region, but is evenly spread through the body; the impure part is discarded as reproductive tissue in both men and women (until menopause).

The more nutritionally dense one's food is, the more ojas is available, provided these metabolic pathways are functioning properly. Vegetarians can have an ojas enhancing diet, provided they eat enough foods that are "sweet" in taste and oily in quality. Bitter and astringent foods tend to be poor supporters of an ojas-enhancing diets. Ojas-enhancing diets tend to be anabolic. There are certain instances where one will want to engage in a cleanse, which is basically a kind of catabolic diet, as a preliminary to engaging in rasāyāna, which is the consumption of herbs and foods that anabolic in nature, but which do not have high levels of ama, undigested or improperly digested foods (think arterial plaque). The downside of meat, of course, is that it can result in a lot of ama. This is why, when eating meat, it is better to eat it stewed, rather than frilled or fried.

For vegetarians, a kind of date and milk drink is very good for building ojas in depleted people. This is an excellent recipe: <https://kripalu.org/resources/kripalu-recipe-immunity-building-ojas-milk>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 19th, 2020 at 11:36 PM

Title: Re: Validity of online empowerments

Content:

Toenail said:

They are often called branch empowerment etc. and the substances are often the same, like Vajra master initiation etc. Is it not enough to have received them once in a major empowerment in person?

Hi Malcolm,

not sure if you saw this edited part of my posting.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, as I said, it depends on the empowerment. If you want to receive a major empowerment, it is necessary to suffer through the endless repetitions, and so on.

That said, having received one, well, then unless you wish to receive another for some reason, there is no need.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, May 20th, 2020 at 1:38 AM
Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?
Content:

Grigoris said:
It is just a matter of time before the infection rate sky-rockets again. Especially in large urban centers.

Malcolm wrote:
Well, if we would just take down all those 5G antennas, the problem would be solved without the forced sterilizations posing as vaccines for a virus that does not exist....

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, May 20th, 2020 at 1:41 AM
Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?
Content:
krish5 said:
unless it all is politically based...

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, May 20th, 2020 at 3:00 AM
Title: Re: Rigzin Tsewang Norbu Vajrasattva
Content:
Toenail said:
Is there a translation of this text available in English?

Malcolm wrote:
Not that I am aware.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, May 20th, 2020 at 5:30 AM
Title: Re: Sattvic/Yogic Diet Challenge
Content:
Hermetic said:
Our friends like Malcolm think contrary to this.

Malcolm wrote:
I am a Doctor of Tibetan Medicine, and have studied Ayurveda extensively in India.

Do you have any idea how many different kinds of meat are described in such classics as the Charaka Samhita, etc.?

In addition to that, I have studied yoga and the Yoga Sutras with Srivatsa Ramaswami, the last remaining living disciple of Krishnamacarya. He made it very clear that in Yoga, the substance of one's diet is really of no importance at all. What is important is not to eat too much, so the body remains light. There is no mention of a "sattvic diet" in the Yoga Sutras. This idea comes from chapter 17 of the Bhagavad Gita (Feuerstein, Shambhala, 2011; pg. 291):

Foods [that] promotes life, [the factor of] lucidity, strength, health, joy, and delight, [and that are] savory, rich-in-oil, firm, and heart [-gladdening]—[these are] dear to the sattva-natured.

Foods [which are] pungent, sour, salty, hot, sharp, harsh, and burning—[these are] desired by the rajas-natured. [They] cause pain, grief, and disease.

And [food] which is spoiled, tasteless, putrid, stale, left-over, and unclean—[this] is food agreeable to the tamas-natured [individual].

You will notice here too an absence of mention of meat. Rather, the text focuses on qualities of food. Meat can be sattvic. It just depends on how it is prepared. Finally, most people cannot live on sattvic foods alone, but need some rajasic foods for various reasons.

Finally, my point is that Tibetan texts on yoga do not recommend that one avoid meat, on the contrary, they recommend that one eats some meat in order to build one's strength and immunity, given how harsh the Tibetan climate is.

Everything is relative, including diet. It is very stupid to base one's diet on religious idealism. You have no idea how many patients I have seen who have ruined their health following unhealthy vegetarian and vegan food regimens.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 21st, 2020 at 12:26 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

krish5 said:

I am very confused, more so than ever regarding the corona virus. My state re-opened pretty much everything, including pools, malls, and casinos. I know they have extra rules but still very concerned about this virus spreading more now, than ever. I am still pretty much staying in most of the time, except grocery shopping once a week and once or twice a week picking up food. But no matter how careful i am, i know am still at the mercy of this virus and people who might have it. I know the responsible thing to do is to keep this lifestyle up, of staying home, even though free to go out now, but it is not living really and i am becoming very lethargic and depressed staying home. So if this virus doesnt kill me, these other things will, the way it is going. I dont know if i am making sense, but can anyone who has more knowledge about this virus than me, give some advice, suggestions, how to go about living during a pandemic like this that doesnt seem to be going away. To balance trying to be safe and also to live some too, if that is possible. Thanks.

Malcolm wrote:

Wear a mask when you go into public. Wash your hands. Don't touch your face until you have washed your hands. Avoid the covidiot who think this is a "flu," "5G radiation," or who think that it can be prevented by ingesting or injecting bleach, UV light, taking Hydroxychloroquine, and other such covidioty.

If you are a practitioner of the Dharma, you need to reflect on the four thoughts, etc., devote yourself to practice. What else is there for a Dharma practitioner to do?

Cut down on watching cable news. Vote for Biden.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 21st, 2020 at 1:21 AM

Title: Re: LN Ngondro requirements

Content:

Grigoris said:

Why would contemplating the Four Thoughts be advanced?

Malcolm wrote:

Part of the shared preliminaries, so, suitable for beginners and advanced alike, Refuge and bodhicitta?

These are unshared refuge and bodhicitta, since there is also a guru jewel, in addition to the usual three.

Grigoris said:

Accumulating merit through mandala offerings?

Malcolm wrote:

Mandala offerings are strictly found in HYT, their source is the Guyasamaja, and are actually a branch of guru yoga proper. Sometimes, they are placed before Vajrasattva, but generally, in most ngondros, they come after.

Grigoris said:

Okay, maybe the Vajrasattva part, but even then there is (as you rightly pointed out) no self-visualisation, so even in terms of tantra it is pretty "low" on the scale. It is basically a purification practice to prepare one for Vajrayogini (for example), so...

Malcolm wrote:

Vajrasattva is from Yoga tantra. But the visualizations used in Ngondro (central channel, etc.) come from HYT.

Grigoris said:

So how, in your opinion, is it advanced?

Malcolm wrote:

One can realize the meaning of Dzogchen/Mahamudra through guru yoga alone. Not only is it advanced, it is the pinnacle of all practices. You don't really need anything else.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 21st, 2020 at 1:50 AM

Title: Re: LN Ngondro requirements

Content:

Varis said:

Sakyapas hit you with the mandala up front, it's the older way of doing things.

Malcolm wrote:

The reason why Sakyapas insist on empowerment first is that 1) it has to do with the Sakyapa theory, articulated by Jetsun Drakpa Gyaltsen, that there are two approaches to entering secret mantra: a gradual one for less fortunate students, which is consistent with the Kadampa/Kagyu/Gelug graduated approach (rim gyis pa); and the sudden approach (cig car ba) for more fortunate students, where one is given the ripening empowerment with little or no preparation. 2) It has to do with Sakya Pandita's assertion that one cannot be said to have a secret mantra guru without having received empowerment, and therefore, secret mantra practices like vajrasattva, mandala, and guru yoga are not appropriate for those who have not been ripened by empowerment. The Nyingmapas generally are more in accord with the Sakya POV, with some differences in terms of their understanding of direct introduction as a means of ripening, for Nyingmapas it is valid; but not for Sakyapas, who insist that direct introductions should only be given on the basis of having received a full major empowerment.

Varis said:

If we're being honest though, I think the Gelugpa approach of lam-rim prior to Vajrayana makes the most sense for westerners. Helps you develop a solid understanding of what this is all about.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't agree with this perspective. Vajrayāna first; life is short, time is passing, and we are living in time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 21st, 2020 at 2:07 AM

Title: Re: LN Ngondro requirements

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The reason why Sakyapas insist on empowerment first is that 1) it has to do with the Sakyapa theory, articulated by Jetsun Drakpa Gyaltsen, that there are two approaches to entering secret mantra: a gradual one for less fortunate students, which is consistent with the Kadampa/Kagyu/Gelug graduated approach (rim gyis pa); and the sudden approach (cig car ba) for more fortunate students, where one is given the ripening empowerment with little or no preparation. 2) It has to do with Sakya Pandita's assertion that one cannot be said to have a secret mantra guru without having received empowerment, and therefore, secret mantra practices like vajrasattva, mandala, and guru yoga are not appropriate for those who have not been ripened by empowerment. The Nyingmapas generally are more in accord with the Sakya POV, with some differences in terms of their understanding of direct introduction as a means of ripening, for Nyingmapas it is valid; but not for Sakyapas, who insist that direct introductions should only be given on the basis of having received a full major empowerment.

Varis said:

Very interesting. Thank you, Malcom.

Malcolm wrote:

I should also add, that I don't know anyone who ever managed to complete a ngondro without having, at some point during their ngondro, receiving a full empowerment or at least "a blessing" initiation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 21st, 2020 at 2:37 AM

Title: Re: Karmic cause become gay

Content:

Varis said:

It's become a joke among people of my generation (I'm in my 20s) that many women my age are bisexual. While it's obviously not objective, the fact that the joke has caught on like wildfire suggests something I think.

Malcolm wrote:

Then there is the LUG phenomena, i.e., lesbian until graduation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 22nd, 2020 at 12:41 AM

Title: Re: will the 5 lights always be there?

Content:

Sādhaka said:

All sentient beings with a connection to Mahāsandhi are said to attain eventual irreversible Buddhahood.

Every other sentient being is said to attain a level of Buddhahood by or at the end of each mahakalpa; however, they can still be ignorant at the beginning of the next mahakalpa.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is not really how it is. This is a difficult point in Dzogchen. However, basically, the point is that as there are infinite sentient beings, they do not all take rebirth in a given eon; so in every eon there are plenty of sentient beings to go around.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 22nd, 2020 at 2:03 AM

Title: Re: will the 5 lights always be there?

Content:

Sādhaka said:

Okay, well I don't feel the need to push the issue at the moment; but my first sentence is correct at least though right?

Malcolm wrote:

All sentient beings who make a connection with Dzogchen teachings will attain irreversible buddhahood, eventually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 22nd, 2020 at 2:57 AM

Title: Re: will the 5 lights always be there?

Content:

Sādhaka said:

Okay, well I don't feel the need to push the issue at the moment; but my first sentence is correct at least though right?

Malcolm wrote:

All sentient beings who make a connection with Dzogchen teachings will attain irreversible buddhahood, eventually.

Grigoris said:

Over an infinite quantity of time it essentially means that an infinite number of sentient beings will achieve Buddhahood, leaving an infinite number of afflicted sentient beings.

Malcolm wrote:

The actual teaching from the Sound Tantra states that at the end of this great eon, all sentient beings in this billion world system will attain buddhahood through Dzogchen teachings. The question is asked, "Where do the sentient beings of the next great eon come from, a) if all sentient beings in this world system attained buddhahood, and 2) without creating brand new sentient beings?" One answer is that not all sentient beings manifest and that there are an infinite number who are latent. The other more obvious answer, but not addressed by Longchenpa, is that there are infinite numbers of world systems, with infinite numbers of beings, and that those have no obstacle to being reborn in the billion world system that form after the next period of twenty void eons between great eons.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 22nd, 2020 at 3:01 AM

Title: Re: will the 5 lights always be there?

Content:

Artziebetter1 said:

I thought the Dzogchen view was that thru its teachings all sentients will achieve irreversible buddhahood one day?

Malcolm wrote:

In this world billion world system; but there are infinite world systems with infinite sentient beings. Even if this number is static, and there are statements by the Buddha to the effect that the sattvadhātu does not increase or decrease, i.e., grow larger or become smaller, an infinite set can contain an infinite number, which while being fixed, cannot be counted.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 22nd, 2020 at 4:48 AM

Title: Re: will the 5 lights always be there?

Content:

Artziebetter1 said:

I thought the Dzogchen view was that thru its teachings all sentients will achieve irreversible buddhahood one day?

Malcolm wrote:

In this world billion world system; but there are infinite world systems with infinite sentient beings. Even if this number is static, and there are statements by the Buddha to the effect that the sattvadhātu does not increase or decrease, i.e., grow larger or become smaller, an infinite set can contain an infinite number, which while being fixed, cannot be counted.

Artziebetter1 said:

Thanks malcolm.

So, saving beings in samsara is a eternal endeavor?

Malcolm wrote:

If you never go beyond time, yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 22nd, 2020 at 10:38 AM

Title: Re: will the 5 lights always be there?

Content:

Artziebetter1 said:

Thanks malcolm.

So, saving beings in samsara is a eternal endeavor?

Malcolm wrote:

If you never go beyond time, yes.

Artziebetter1 said:

the tathagatagarbha sutras say everyone will attain nirvana, but the avatamsaka sutra says that samsara is eternal. which one is upaya and which one is definitive?

Malcolm wrote:

Both are upaya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 22nd, 2020 at 10:48 PM

Title: Re: Shower of Blessings GY

Content:

pemachophel said:

Terma,

I say there is an empowerment for Shower of Blessings only because my Teacher, Lama Dawa, gave an empowerment for it. During that empowerment, He did not say that it was actually an empowerment taken from somewhere else, as sometimes also Lamas do. However, at the time, I did not think to ask more about the provenance of this particular empowerment. Sorry.

Malcolm wrote:

He either gave you the empowerment of Kongtrul's Seven-line Supplication Treasure, or Apam's Seven Line Supplication Treasure. My guess it was the latter, since this was widely promulgated by HH Dudjom Rinpoche, Jikdral Yeshe Dorje.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 12:00 AM

Title: Re: Stephen Batchelor

Content:

Wayfarer said:

Of course there are probably many better books on Madhyamika than Garfield's but in the context of the discussion, his interpretation is preferable to Batchelor's, because he takes seriously the aspirational aims of Buddhism and doesn't try to repurpose it as a secular philosophy. And as I mentioned there's a link to a series of his lectures on the site at the moment.

Malcolm wrote:

Garfield updated his translation of MMK with his translation of Tsongkhapa's commentary on the MMK. Therefore, it is better to refer to the latter than the former.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 1:03 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Nemo said:

But I don't really think Biden is electable.

Malcolm wrote:

The alternative is far worse.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 2:05 AM

Title: Re: Heartbreak

Content:

avatamsaka3 said:

I am wondering what the physical and subtle basis is for heartbreak. I remember earlier in my life when I was heartbroken it felt like there was a pain or stiffness or blockage in the center of my upper chest... For instance, in cases of divorce, rejection, loneliness, isolation & pain, do you all know of good ways to work with this feeling, perhaps on a subtle level? Perhaps one of the chakras is blocked or something. May all beings benefit!

Malcolm wrote:

Disturbed vata or rlung.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 2:08 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Grigoris said:

There are even people out there that believe that Trump's actions are going to cause him to fail to be re-elected...

Malcolm wrote:

The only hope that Trump has is an electoral college win. This is why he is promoting quarantine rebellions in swing states that went to the Dems in 2018. He is hoping he can get enough disgruntled lumpen proletariats to get him another win, since he knows quite well he can never win through the popular vote. However, Arizona is looking increasingly like it is going to flip. If it does flip, it severely curtails his path even to an electoral college win.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 2:10 AM

Title: Re: Three Dharmapala of Dudjom Tersar

Content:

Grigoris said:

Is there a specific empowerment that includes the three Dharmapala of the Dudjo Tersar: Ekadzati (Ralchigma), Rahula and Dorje Lekpa?

Or is it that each one is received sperately?

Is there even a specific empowerment for the worldly protector Rahula, or is he given as part of a particular Yidam/Dharmapala mandala?

Malcolm wrote:

Rahula is not a worldly protector. He is a "wisdom" protector. Ekajati, Rahula, and Dorje Lekpa can be practiced as yidams, provided one has the empowerment for this.

There are many different empowerments for all three of these deities. The standard one is the seven protector empowerment by Longchenpa found in the Rinchen Terzod.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 2:36 AM

Title: Re: Heartbreak

Content:

avatamsaka3 said:

OK, and the solution?

Malcolm wrote:

Vata pacifying diet and behavior.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 2:38 AM

Title: Re: What are the most minimalist or simplest forms or schools of Buddhism?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Do good. Avoid evil.

Malcolm wrote:

You forgot a line: Observe your mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 3:00 AM

Title: Re: Shower of Blessings GY

Content:

pemachophel said:

Loppon has jogged my memory. I believe the empowerment Lama Dawa gave was from Jamgon Kongtrul.

Malcolm wrote:

Makes sense too, since Mipham's White Lotus was inspired by the Kongtrul's terma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 4:09 AM

Title: Re: What are the most minimalist or simplest forms or schools of Buddhism?

Content:

Dgj said:

Consider this: to master a hua tou for example, which is not a complicated practice, people spend years working very hard. They attend retreats (hours upon hours of meditation for days). Even if that's all their teacher assigned them and told them not to read or study, it is intense and takes great effort, yet very simple to learn and do.

PadmaVonSamba said:

Yeah, but isn't it usually when they stop trying so hard, that's when they finally "get it" No?

Dgj said:

Not always. Hakuin tried his way to enlightenment, pushing incredibly hard all the way.

"Meditating With Koans" translated by JC Cleary is full of similar stories and is what Hakuin used as a guide.

Then there's the iron ball explanation:

It is like swallowing a red-hot iron ball. You try to vomit it out, but you can't." — Zen Master Wumen Great effort is part and parcel of koan study.

Malcolm wrote:

The simplest practice is one based on a gnosis free of proliferation, rather than all these other paths based on a mind possessing proliferation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 4:10 AM

Title: Re: Three Dharmapala of Dudjom Tersar

Content:

pemachophel said:

In the Dudjom Tersar, I believe there is an "entrustment" for Damchen Chitor, not an "empowerment." At least that's what Lama Dawa said when He was giving it. I've also received a number of Dudjom Tersar Protector practices, especially Ma Ekadzati, from Loppon Orgyen Tenzin (at Enrico's in Austria), and, if I remember correctly, these were simply bestowed as lungs.

Just checked my empowerment file and the one's bestowed by LOTR were all lungs.

Malcolm wrote:

A srog gtad is a kind of empowerment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 4:24 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Danny said:

Why the left who collectively consider themselves the most tolerant, when you scratch the surface actually the most intolerant?

Like the smell of your own farts too much?

Regards

Malcolm wrote:

"In order to maintain a tolerant society, the society must be intolerant of intolerance."

Karl Popper

For this reason right wing whinging about "tolerance" will fall on deaf ears, since the right wing is basically just a bunch of intolerant, racist, snowflake assholes. Not to mention the fact that right wing policies are actually harmful to the planet and the people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 4:47 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Danny said:

Why the left who collectively consider themselves the most tolerant, when you scratch the surface actually the most intolerant?
Like the smell of your own farts too much?

Regards

Dan74 said:

I am not American, but I know that whatever it is, generalising about people isn't helpful.

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, you don't live in America, so you really don't know the situation here and how bad it is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 4:55 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is the level of ignorance we are dealing with here.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 7:35 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Dan74 said:

I think you hit the nail on the head, Malcolm, when you said "ignorance." But from where I stand, it is understandable - a concerted propaganda and disinformation campaign has been run for years, and not only by Fox & Co. The web of lies that has been spun has gotten so thick that it is little wonder you are in the post-truth world and people just choose what they want to believe, completely disregarding (distrusting) the facts.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this shifts responsibility and deprives them of their personal responsibility. These people are willingly complying with evil, harmful policies. We are not in a post-truth world. Facts are still facts, even if 30 percent of the country willfully ignores them, even though they know they are lying. This is how all authoritarianism gets a foothold and spreads. The cult of Xi, Modi, Trump, Orban, Putin are all identical in this respect.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 7:47 AM

Title: Re: Renewable Energy

Content:

Kim O'Hara said:

Great work, Nemo, especially considering the climate you live in.

Kim

Malcolm wrote:

The problem on the NorthEast Of The US in general is that upgrades to older homes are prohibitively expensive, especially in rural areas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 8:52 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Danny said:

Indeed, cheerleading for political parties will do that to you. I've retired from politics for a few years now, politics used to be the art of the possible. I was elected twice to executive board of a Union with other 90,000 members world wide. Hardly qualifies me as a right winger. But what it does qualify me to opinion on is the dirty pool played on both sides of the argument.

Neither side has anybody's best interest at heart.

Regards

Malcolm wrote:

It's not about parties. I am not a Democrat, nor a Socialist, etc. it's about values. Right wing values suck much worse than even the most embarrassing PC over reaches.

40 years of Reaganism lead to this. And yes, the Pandemic in the US is precisely the fault of the GOP.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 9:57 AM

Title: Re: Ticks

Content:

avatamsaka3 said:

So I'm wondering: How did all these old yogis and forest meditators avoid ticks when meditating out in nature? Were there just less ticks back then? Were there just fewer tick-borne diseases? Or did they have the special tick repelling instructions?

Malcolm wrote:

When one reaches a certain level of samadhi, lice, ticks, etc., naturally leave the body.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 9:58 AM

Title: Re: Heartbreak

Content:

avatamsaka3 said:

I am truly asking on behalf of others. I know some may not believe that.

Any info on this diet and behavior then?

Malcolm wrote:

Google vasant lad, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 12:06 PM

Title: Re: Ticks

Content:

avatamsaka3 said:

When one reaches a certain level of samadhi, lice, ticks, etc., naturally leave the body.

What's that level? Where is this stated? Why does this happen?

Malcolm wrote:

When one reaches strong heat on the path of application.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 12:07 PM

Title: Re: Ticks

Content:

avatamsaka3 said:

So I'm wondering: How did all these old yogis and forest meditators avoid ticks when meditating out in nature? Were there just less ticks back then? Were there just fewer tick-borne diseases? Or did they have the special tick repelling instructions?

Malcolm wrote:

When one reaches a certain level of samadhi, lice, ticks, etc., naturally leave the body.

Tenma said:

I thought for yogis and ngakpas, the lice and ticks were dakinis and thus one reason not to cut hair?

Malcolm wrote:

Never heard that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 12:08 PM

Title: Re: Advice for Consultation with Guru

Content:

n8pee said:

I've not spoken to my root guru in seven years or so due to my travel and moving around the U.S. I've recently secured an audience via Zoom, which has been made available due to today's COVID crisis.

I have specific practice questions of course. But I feel this urge to let him know his impact on my life, as I've never had a significant private audience with him, but don't wish to make our time together about me and my perceptions. I first met with the lineage teachings nearly twenty years ago.

I am welcome to any advice about how best to utilize the guru's time. From my side he is Vajradhara, and has been the source of all blessings. How does one meaningfully communicate in this situation?

Malcolm wrote:

Remember that from his side he is a human being, no matter what you think.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Nemo said:

But I don't really think Biden is electable.

Malcolm wrote:

The alternative is far worse.

Nemo said:

Bernie would already be beating him. Instead the elites stuck you with this nag with one foot in the glue factory. The DNC seems to think that business as usual will suffice. The far left is a voter bloc now and without concrete concessions no one is showing up.

Malcolm wrote:

Let us hope you are wrong. Bernie is giving full throated support to Biden these days. Apart from the converted, everyone in America is tired of the Trump shit show.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 10:24 PM

Title: Re: Guru Padmasambhava ID Request

Content:

humble.student said:

I was given a picture of Guru P many years ago, the same as this one, and was wondering from which cycle of teachings it comes from.

Malcolm wrote:

It is from a cycle called Sampa Lhundrup, and specifically, this is the form of Guru Rinpoche for warding off Mongolian Hordes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 23rd, 2020 at 10:50 PM

Title: Re: Does the Bön tradition believe we have a self/soul?

Content:

GrapeLover said:

But the elements disperse at death etc and are just part of your conditioned existence.

Varis said:

The bLa lingers after death and acts like a sentient spirit AFAIK.

Malcolm wrote:

This is because among common people, there is an ambiguity between bla and consciousness. Barbara Gerke has perhaps one of the best summaries I've yet read:

The meaning of bla evolves from the notion of what could be rendered into English as 'subtle life essence',⁷ but is in fact more complex considering the internal and external manifestations of bla, as well as the shamanic and Buddhist historical influences that have shaped body concepts, perception and ritual practices in the Himalayan enclaves.

Tibetan-English dictionaries offer a variety of translations for bla.⁸

Apart from the literal meaning 'higher' or 'above', the most commonly adopted form of translation is 'soul'.⁹ I find the translation of bla as 'soul', especially in anthropological works, to be unsatisfactory for several reasons. Firstly, the notion of 'soul' is strongly rooted in Western religious thought and does not reflect the numerous cultural meanings that bla has acquired in Buddhist and non-Buddhist contexts among Himalayan communities. Secondly, 'soul loss' is an anthropological invention of the early 20th century that had appeared while studying the temporary absence of some unidentified life force among certain cultures.

¹⁰ Thirdly, bla has most commonly been translated as 'soul' probably because the European connotation of a subtle body that is capable of leaving the coarse body has survived most prominently in the Platonic notion of the 'psyche'.¹¹ Another viewpoint to be considered also is that the subtle body has been one of the hardest concepts in Buddhist and Hindu thought for Westerners to appreciate, perhaps because it implies a lack of separation between 'body' and 'mind', which Western science has had difficulty in accepting (Samuel 1993b: 237).

I am not suggesting here that bla is the same as the Indian Tantric concept of the subtle body, but only that a certain ethnocentrism within North American and European intellectual circles has led to a misunderstanding of the concepts of the body and its subtle physiologies found among other cultures, which in turn may have supported the translation of bla as 'soul'.

Gerke, Barbara. (2007). Engaging the subtle body: Re-approaching bla rituals in the Himalayas.

https://www.researchgate.net/publication/265186982_Engaging_the_subtle_body_Re-approaching_bla_rituals_in_the_Himalayas

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 24th, 2020 at 3:50 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Dan74 said:

Do public broadcasters have any significant influence on the US public opinion?

Malcolm wrote:

No, however, the cable news channels do have such influence. In particular, Fox News has an enormous influence on a certain subsection of the American public, older, racist (whether they admit it or not), white people who are afraid of the inevitable demographic shift that will inevitably make the US browner, blacker, and multilingual.

Roger Ailes was an evil genius.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 24th, 2020 at 3:53 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Danny said:

Well lets answer a question with a question,
Where do you go to get trusted news?

<https://www.thebalancesmb.com/what-is-propaganda-and-how-does-it-work-2295248>

Malcolm wrote:

By the same author:

Q: Is Breitbart News a credible news source for you? Why or why not?

No. True journalists have no agenda, with the opinion pages separated from news gathering.

Breitbart clearly has an agenda baked into their stories, which really aren't designed to inform, but to persuade.

The acid test of fairness is simple: fair, journalism-based newspapers and magazines will post stories that are critical of any public figure or elected official, and they'll save opinion for the oped pages. Biased outlets with only go after one side
<https://www.quora.com/profile/Guy-Bergstrom>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 24th, 2020 at 3:55 AM

Title: Re: Does the Bön tradition believe we have a self/soul?

Content:

Varis said:

I assume by common people you mean Tibetan/Himalayan folk beliefs, right?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 24th, 2020 at 4:22 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Danny said:

It's important not to get locked into information ghettos.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is what newspapers of record are for, etc. Not that they are perfect, they all make errors. But in general, the sales of advertising forced newspapers to strive for objectivity in reporting.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 24th, 2020 at 5:18 AM

Title: Re: Nihilistic view

Content:

Bundokji said:

...except that i don't see anything spiritual either in confirming or denying the self.

Grigoris said:
Good for you!

Anatman is one of the four defining characteristics (Four Dharma Seals) of a Dharma.

Any body of teaching that does not include Anatman cannot be Dharma.

So somebody out there obviously considers the discussion of whether there is a self or not, of vital spiritual significance.

Bundokji said:
Is anatman a denial of the self?

Malcolm wrote:
Of course. It is the negation of an absolute self, but not "the self" used as a name for the collection of aggregates.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, May 24th, 2020 at 5:54 AM
Title: Re: Nihilistic view
Content:

Bundokji said:
Is anatman a denial of the self?

Malcolm wrote:
Of course. It is the negation of an absolute self, but not "the self" used as a name for the collection of aggregates.

Bundokji said:
Would it be accurate to say that it is the negation of absolutism? or the dogmatic "ism" in worldly views regardless of it taking a negative or positive forms?

Malcolm wrote:
Anatman is the negation of an unconditioned, permanent, ultimate entity that moves from one temporary body to another. It is not the negation of "Sam," "Fred," or "Jane" used as a conventional designation for a collection of aggregates. Since the Buddha clearly states in many Mahāyāna sūtras, "all phenomena" are not self, and since everything is included there, including buddhahood, therefore, there are no phenomena that can be called a self, and since there are nothing outside of all phenomena, a "self," other than an arbitrary designation, does not exist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 25th, 2020 at 12:22 AM

Title: Re: Nihilistic view

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Anatman is the negation of an unconditioned, permanent, ultimate entity that moves from one temporary body to another. It is not the negation of "Sam," "Fred," or "Jane" used as a conventional designation for a collection of aggregates. Since the Buddha clearly states in many Mahāyāna sūtras, "all phenomena" are not self, and since everything is included there, including buddhahood, therefore, there are no phenomena that can be called a self, and since there are nothing outside of all phenomena, a "self," other than an arbitrary designation, does not exist.

Bundokji said:

Why negating an unconditioned, permanent, ultimate entity is more accurate than negating the "ism" in worldly views according to your understanding?

Malcolm wrote:

The "ism" being negated by the negation of an unconditioned, permanent, ultimate entity is "self-ism," aka atmavada, specifically, the atmavadin views of Vedanta.

Bundokji said:

For example, the Buddha might use what appears to be an eternalist or nihilist language when he teaches in certain contexts, so even eternalists and nihilists can be right once in a while akin to a broken clock. So why to bother negating the self whether absolute or otherwise?

Malcolm wrote:

Buddha never used the term "self" to refer to an unconditioned, permanent, ultimate entity. He also never asserted that there was no conventional "self," the subject of transactional discourse. So, it is very clear in the sutras that the Buddha negated an ultimate self and did not negate a conventional self.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 25th, 2020 at 12:39 AM

Title: Re: Nihilistic view

Content:

Grigoris said:

There is no utility in the metaphor, it does not correspond to Buddhist theories/doctrine of mind.

I think I made that clear from the beginning.

If you believe it does correspond, then the onus is on you to find a doctrinal source that supports it.

Caoimhghín said:

If course it doesn't. The Buddha teaches anātmā, not of the ātmā. If you want to find out what people are saying "the ātmā is," you have to leave Buddhism necessarily, because Buddhist people will only tell you what that "the ātmā isn't." As far as metaphors go, I think the Tree of Jīvātmā perfectly describes the naïvety of the mind who suggest such a brain homunculus lives in the branches of their mind. I think this because, as other posters have pointed out, the bird who does not eat is not like a "bird" in any way truly, and likely is an impossible being, i.e. one who only exists in story.

Of course, the intended function of the myth is to teach you about your wonderful shiny ātmā syzygy, the you who is always victorious and never humiliated, who is uninjured when you are injured, etc.

Grigoris said:

A Dharma brother of mine practiced in a Hindu tradition that used the analogy as the basis for their daily practice: Trying to maintain the position of a passive unintruding observer (atma) while watching themselves (jiva) act. At some point he felt he was losing his mind, that he had actually become two versions of himself.

Malcolm wrote:

The Hindu view in general is that there is a purusha who passively enjoys prakṛti and its transformations; the main disagreement is whether that purusha is one (Vedānta) or many (Sāṃkhya).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 25th, 2020 at 1:02 AM

Title: Re: Momentariness

Content:

Artziebetter1 said:

Does momentariness imply things coming out of nothing?if the cause ceases completely before the effect even begins to arise,how do effects arise?
there must be things beginning the arise as soon as its cause begins to dissapear,but then why call it momentary?

This doctrine is the hardest buddhist doctrine to wrap my head around since coming into buddhism,especially from a hindu backround.I've read shankara's Bhasya on the brahma sutras against momentariness or Kshanabhanagavada and I havent seen any alternative views wich could prove momentariness.

please explain it to me.

Malcolm wrote:

The Madhyamaka view is that causes and effects are neither the same nor different, because a cause and an effect cannot be temporally dislocated nor can they be simultaneous. Therefore, the only thing that can explain how cause and effect functions is that causes and effects are neither the same nor different, for example, ghee from milk, etc. Naturally, this is all strictly on a conventional level. Ultimately, arising from causes and conditions is just a convention. In ultimate truth, nothing ever arose from the beginning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 25th, 2020 at 1:39 AM

Title: Re: Nihilistic view

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Buddha never used the term "self" to refer to an unconditioned, permanent, ultimate entity. He also never asserted that there was no conventional "self," the subject of transactional discourse. So, it is very clear in the sutras that the Buddha negated an ultimate self and did not negate a conventional self.

Bundokji said:

The problem is that the Buddha's utterances are dharmas and both dharmas and sanskara are taught to be anatman.

Malcolm wrote:

You are conflating two different uses the term "dharma": the first refers to teachings; the second refers to discrete entities that bear characteristics. Your use of the term samskara, while found in some Vipassana circles, is really derived from Hinduism, unless you are referring to a) the second link in the chain of dependent origination or b) the saṃskara skandha, the aggregate of formations (caitya). Some people use the term samskaras to refer what in Buddhism would be called vasanas, or traces.

Bundokji said:

The issue of skillful means is justified by making that distinction between sanskara and dharmas when that distinction is not applicable to the lord Buddha as even his human actions cannot be driven by ignorance.

Malcolm wrote:

With respect to skillful means, this is a Mahāyāna concept.

Bundokji said:

The above has manifested itself in your answer appearing to be paradoxical. On the one hand, the Buddha never used the term self to refer to an unconditioned, permanent, ultimate entity, and on the other hand he negated it. How can he negates it without referring to it is a logical impossibility.

Malcolm wrote:

When I said the Buddha never used the term self to refer to an unconditioned, permanent, ultimate entity, I meant that he never affirmed such a proposed self.

This is really not difficult to understand, and is not a subtle point at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 25th, 2020 at 1:45 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Danny said:

All media views human activity as an entertainment to be sold. It views everything as a commodity, Including social change movements and culture.

Regards

Malcolm wrote:

Including crayons and pastels? What about oil paint? Latex? Acrylic?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 25th, 2020 at 1:48 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Minobu said:

When the day comes that you see others as just a person and it doesn't matter your ethnicity , or religion, or , culture, and why bother labeling , America will be more...like Canada .

Malcolm wrote:

Right, because there is no racism in Canada.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 25th, 2020 at 2:16 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Danny said:

All media views human activity as an entertainment to be sold. It views everything as a commodity, Including social change movements and culture.

Regards

Malcolm wrote:

Including crayons and pastels? What about oil paint? Latex? Acrylic?

Danny said:

Art as a medium is also a commodity, someone famously said all art is propaganda.

Regards

Malcolm wrote:

Art is only a commodity if it is sold as such. There is plenty of art that is not commodified.

Propaganda isn't art.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 25th, 2020 at 9:01 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Tlalok said:

Joe Biden is a white man in America.

White people are proud of the genocide of the indigenous people they called “savages” because the Native American holocaust was their “manifest destiny.” They have no trouble calling themselves the “founding fathers” of an economic superpower fueled by the bloody brows and calloused hands of enslaved Africans who occupied this continent centuries before the arrival of the men who enshrined white supremacy into the American ethos.

White people aren't inherently racist but America is.

In America, whiteness is bulletproof. It is a birthright, a vaccine and a deflector shield that has historically shielded white people from self-awareness and the recognition of anyone's humanity aside from their own. This country convinces housewives that they should spit in the face of schoolgirls and turns laymen into lynch mobs. That's what simply living in the cool breeze of American history will do to white people.

Because of how America is set up, if we somehow found the kindest, most compassionate white infant who ever took a breath of American air, that child would need every ounce of strength, humility and consciousness it could muster from its baby muscles to simply not be racist.

And it would fail.

Because it would still be a white baby in America.

From: <https://www.theroot.com/joe-biden-just-proved-why-he-must-have-a-black-woman-as-1843614180>

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, all of the countries with a history of colonial occupation around the world are racist, and are founded on the basis of a doctrine of Anglo-European cultural supremacy. Everyone knows that is true. Everyone.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 25th, 2020 at 11:34 PM

Title: Re: Interesting paper on some early Dzogchen texts

Content:

lelopa said:

she doesn't translate "rDo la gser zhun" as "written with gold on stone" that's good - but I wouldn't translate it as "Pure Golden Ore " either

Malcolm wrote:

Mipham glosses the title in this way:

[T]he intimate instruction of how to meditate is the treatise exemplified by a skilled smith smelting the element of gold in gold ore into liquid, meaning that it is actually extracted...

This leads to the title, "Smelting the Gold from Ore"

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 25th, 2020 at 11:46 PM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Danny said:

Plus any small business owners out there will tell you they want government out of their way and not an expanded plan to increase them as your silent partner.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because small businesses hate roads, bridges, electricity, telephones, and the US Post Office.

This anti-government rhetoric is extremely harmful. Reagan led directly to Trump.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 26th, 2020 at 12:03 AM

Title: Re: Nyingmapas who don't practice Dzogchen?

Content:

Varis said:

Hey everyone,

I was wondering if there are Nyingmapas who only practice HYT without Dzogchen? Or is the general consensus that if you have the karma to meet a Nyingmapa lama you probably have the superior capacity for Dzogchen?

Malcolm wrote:

There are Nyingmapas who mainly focus mahayoga and anuyoga. But the goal of all is Dzogchen, even if they are not practicing Dzogchen directly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 26th, 2020 at 12:04 AM

Title: Re: What are the most minimalist or simplest forms or schools of Buddhism?

Content:

Enryu84 said:

You can reach enlightenment without knowing anything, just by meditating.

Malcolm wrote:

Umm, no, this is completely false. This is not what the Buddha taught.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 26th, 2020 at 12:06 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, all of the countries with a history of colonial occupation around the world are racist, and are founded on the basis of a doctrine of Anglo-European cultural supremacy. Everyone knows that is true. Everyone.

Kim O'Hara said:

I wish everyone did know it, but there are some white people (here, and probably even in the US) who are simply oblivious to it. They are mostly poorly educated, mostly rural and regional, and mostly older, but there are plenty of them.

And most of them are decent enough people. They live their lives from day to day without much contact with non-white people and don't discriminate (or not much) when they come across them, but they simply never learned enough history in school and have never had to re-think what they learned in school.

Kim

Malcolm wrote:

No, they also know it. But they are willfully ignorant.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 26th, 2020 at 12:12 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

PeterC said:

He's a white US person in his 70s. Of course he's racist.

Malcolm wrote:

My mom is a white person in her eighties. She is not at all racist. Not even a tiny bit.

PeterC said:

If you put Sanders through the ideological purity test, you would also find him lacking.

Malcolm wrote:

Bernie left NYC, and moved to Vermont, which was a black population of 1% (9000 out of 900,000). In the last election, he was largely oblivious to issues of race, because his constituency, for all intents and purposes, is about as white as it gets in the US. But he learned his lesson.

PeterC said:

But what we can say with confidence is that he would do way more to help non-white people in the US than would trump. And since there aren't any other options out there, that's the question we have to ask on this, and many other topics.

Malcolm wrote:

At least Biden will hire competent people, rebuild the State Department, etc., and purge all the incompetent fools that Trump installed.

Basically, Trump has eviscerated the government. Our pandemic response is direct outcome of GOP policies.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 26th, 2020 at 1:09 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Minobu said:

Maybe that's the key.for me anyway..exposure to so many different cultures and interacting with so many different races that eventually you just become color blind..

Malcolm wrote:

"Color-blindness" also has its own problems, and can lead people to not accept the existence of, or diminish, incidents of racism towards people of color, etc., because supposedly we are "beyond racism." This was the narrative that Fox News pushed for years, i.e., that we live in a post-racial society. This is obviously false, as in the US, UK, Australia, and yes, even Canada, there is a rise in xenophobic sentiments across the board.

<https://www.aljazeera.com/news/2020/02/chinese-canadians-denounce-rising-xenophobia-tied-coronavirus-200202191216923.html>

<https://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/toronto/racism-coronavirus-canada-1.5449023>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 26th, 2020 at 1:37 AM

Title: Re: Nihilistic view

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You are conflating two different uses the term "dharma": the first refers to teachings; the second refers to discrete entities that bear characteristics. Your use of the term samskara, while found in some Vipassana circles, is really derived from Hinduism, unless you are referring to a) the second link in the chain of dependent origination or b) the saṃskara skandha, the aggregate of formations (caitya). Some people use the term samskaras to refer what in Buddhism would be called vasanas, or traces.

Bundokji said:

I was referring to sankharas (or samskara) being described as anicca and dukkha while dhammas being described as anatta.

Malcolm wrote:

Here, you mean "sankhata" in Pali, in all _conditioned_ phenomena are impermanent (annica).

Bundokji said:

Not affirming, at least in worldly logic, stops short of denying and often described as "suspending judgement" or simply remaining silent to allow the practitioner to find out for himself/herself. In the second part of the paragraph, you went on to explicitly state that he denied it. Anyway, maybe i was reading too much into your input.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, the Buddha both refused to affirm there was an ultimate self and he denied there was an ultimate self.

I suggest you review this sutta:

<https://www.accesstoinsight.org/tipitaka/dn/dn.01.0.bodh.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 26th, 2020 at 6:59 AM

Title: Re: Karmic consequence of having troubled relations with Gurus

Content:

treningday said:

Right now, I'm basically exiled. As in, not allowed to come to the center until I change my view. So this is what I need to fix but upon examining it and being very honest I don't think that there's anything very wrong. And I don't think a lama should require that of their student.

Malcolm wrote:

Personality cult. Avoid. Find a better guru.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 26th, 2020 at 10:48 PM

Title: Re: Nihilistic view

Content:

Bundokji said:

I was referring to sankharas (or samskara) being described as anicca and dukkha while dhammas being described as anatta.

Malcolm wrote:

Here, you mean "sankhata" in Pali, in all _conditioned_ phenomena are impermanent (annica).

Caoimhghín said:

The Pāli actually has saṃskārā: Sabbe saṅkhārā aniccā; sabbe dhammā anattā

All conditions are impermanent. All things are not-self.

(SN 22.90 Ven Sujāto translation)

It's also the same in Sanskrit: sarvasaṃskārā anityāḥ, sarvasaṃskārā duḥkhāḥ, sarvadharmā anātmānāḥ, śāntaṃ nirvāṇam

The Chinese similarly has 一切行無常, 一切法無我, which is identical to the Pāli. 行 is the operative word here, which translates "saṃskārā" rather than "saṃskṛta." "All conditioned phenomena are impermanent" would read 一切有為(法)無常.

It is, of course, true that all conditioned phenomena are impermanent regardless of the above.

Malcolm wrote:

Interesting, In Tibetan, a distinction is made by between [mngon par] 'du byas (saṃskṛta) and 'du byed (saṃskārā), with the former being reserved for "compounded phenomena," and the latter, found in the passages similar to what you describe, 'du byed thams cad mi rtag pa, is generally confined to discussions of the second link of dependent origination and the saṃskārā skandha.

My point is that in Mahāyāna, we do not generally talk about "saṃskārās" in the way

Bundokoji does.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 26th, 2020 at 11:26 PM

Title: Re: personality views

Content:

confusedlayman said:

Even if u know emptiness of everything, non self and impermanence.. is it possible to still have personality views?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is when your knowledge of absence of self and impermanence are still only intellectual. One has to realize these things, not merely understand them intellectually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 26th, 2020 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Rinchen Samphel said:

Rationalization: the thread.

Trump has already won, yet again, not because he is the most qualified person, but because the Dems can't stop shooting themselves in the foot and then blaming it on "white republicans" and their "racism and patriarchy".

Malcolm wrote:

The GOP is demonstrably racist and patriarchal.

Rinchen Samphel said:

Please, keep doing it and blaming the consequences of it on the other party and the majority of Americans, the evil white people.

Malcolm wrote:

White people are not evil, but they are blind to their privilege.

Rinchen Samphel said:

I'm sure that will secure the vote.... No wonder the Democratic party is so disconnected from the people, their own voting base is disconnected from reality because of repeating what the media propaganda machine says. Just so you all know, just because you repeat what some so-called "expert" says, doesn't mean you're intelligent or are exempt from your duty to actually research info outside of the CNN narrative.

Malcolm wrote:

Lazy.

Rinchen Samphel said:

Not to mention, this whole Biden controversy came from an interview with Charlamagne Tha God.... LOL, yeah, he sure knows what he is talking about. Mayonnaise.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, Joe screwed up, and apologized immediately.

Rinchen Samphel said:

Trump does, or says, something wrong

Dems: Facist, racist, hitler!

Malcolm wrote:

Trump definitely has fascist tendencies. The amount of ass-kissing and fawning he requires of his subordinates is embarrassing, something we are accustomed to seeing from weak leaders. He is a very weak leader, and if, as you say, he is going to return the WH house because of another electoral college win, the USA is doomed, and will never recover from another four years of this idiot and his cult.

Rinchen Samphel said:

Biden does and says something wrong

Dems thinking to themselves: "i know there is a way to justify this, its not actually racist..

Malcolm wrote:

What most Democrats are saying is that Biden spoke out of turn because he, like most white people in this country, are blind to their privilege. But again, Biden apologized immediately. Has Trump ever apologized for anything? No. Trump is not a decent person. Biden is a decent person. Take your pick.

Rinchen Samphel said:

and we shouldnt believe all women now, we only said that to hurt republicans, now it doesnt apply." And for that last thing said, dont post that bullshit article that says "believeallwomen" is a conservative trap. I was there, as where all of you back in 2017, we remember.

Malcolm wrote:

As far as Tara Reade goes, her story is not credible:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 27th, 2020 at 12:22 AM

Title: Re: Nyingmapas who don't practice Dzogchen?

Content:

Pero said:

I don't know about today due to the influence of Dzogchen teachings but I think some Nyingmapas in the past had to have done so. Each vehicle can be practiced on its own. Also for example, I remember there is a Dzogchen explanation to the Guhyagarba tantra and a Mahayoga explanation of it from the Zur clan.

Crazywisdom said:

The Guhyagarbha is really very amazing. Longchenpa provides explicit Dzogchen instructions and classifies it differently than Zur.

Malcolm wrote:

Nevertheless, it is still classified as a mahāyoga tantra by the Nyingmapas, despite Longchenpa's, Khenpo Jigphun's, and Khenpo Namdrol's very profound explanations of it. For example, it remains within the mahāyoga section of Nyingma Collection of Tantras in all its different recensions. And ChNN very clearly includes it within mahāyoga in the Precious Vase.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 27th, 2020 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: Nyingmapas who don't practice Dzogchen?

Content:

Varis said:

Hey everyone,

I was wondering if there are Nyingmapas who only practice HYT without Dzogchen? Or is the general consensus that if you have the karma to meet a Nyingmapa lama you probably have the superior capacity for Dzogchen?

Malcolm wrote:

There are Nyingmapas who mainly focus mahayoga and anuyoga. But the goal of all is Dzogchen, even if they are not practicing Dzogchen directly.

Crazywisdom said:

Some mantra practice is generally important to assist folks with activities.

Malcolm wrote:

There is, according to Mañjuśrimitra, both a direct and an indirect way to realize Atiyoga.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 27th, 2020 at 2:56 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

SonamTashi said:

I always find it strange when right-wingers claim liberals and actual leftists of only watching CNN when most (especially leftists) don't watch CNN at all. It seems like clear projection from people who are so dependent on Fox News.

Malcolm wrote:
Especially since MSNBC is further to the left.

And now this:

<https://abcnews.go.com/theview/video/rep-james-clyburn-defends-joe-biden-70887259>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 27th, 2020 at 3:39 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Queequeg said:

Anyway. I just shake my head and cast my vote for the person to replace the orange man.

Grigoris said:

That is what they are betting on...

Malcolm wrote:

Biden will be 1000% better than the orange guy. But whoever is president after Trump is going to have a hell of a job rebuilding the gvt.

But, it is looking increasingly likely that no matter who wins the WH, the Dems are poised to take 60 seats in Congress. This means they can override any veto and with a Democratic house, can pretty much pass any legislation they want, with or without presidential approval.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 27th, 2020 at 3:42 AM

Title: Blue Wave 2020?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is looking that way:

<https://fivethirtyeight.com/features/what-to-make-of-those-new-senate-polls-that-have-democrats-way-ahead/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 27th, 2020 at 3:48 AM

Title: Re: Zen's stand regarding 'The Absolute'

Content:

npr said:

If you can see the original Chinese text of Huang Po, and see what the original term that was translated to Absolute, was, that can be nice

Astus said:

What translation? Could you please give some references?

Queequeg said:

Blofeld

Malcolm wrote:

Antiquated to the point of uselessness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 27th, 2020 at 4:07 AM

Title: Re: Why did the Buddha choose not to live of Light?

Content:

Lucas Oliveira said:

Why did the Buddha choose not to live of Light?..

"Devas, on seeing me, said, 'Gotama the contemplative is dead.' Other devas said, 'He isn't dead, he's dying.' Others said, 'He's neither dead nor dying, he's an arahant, for this is the way arahants live.'

"I thought: 'Suppose I were to practice going altogether without food.' Then devas came to me and said, 'Dear sir, please don't practice going altogether without food. If you go altogether without food, we'll infuse divine nourishment in through your pores, and you will survive on that.' I thought, 'If I were to claim to be completely fasting while these devas are infusing divine nourishment in through my pores, I would be lying.' So I dismissed them, saying, 'Enough.'

<https://www.accesstoinight.org/tipitaka/mn/mn.036.than.html>

Malcolm wrote:

Your citation provides the answer:

I thought, 'If I were to claim to be completely fasting while these devas are infusing divine nourishment in through my pores, I would be lying.' So I dismissed them, saying, 'Enough.'

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 27th, 2020 at 5:06 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Könchok Thrinley said:

I mean the right wingers are already whipped into frenzy at this point. Just remember that few weeks ago in some states there were groups of people with assault weapons at their local congresses when the votes on opening up were happenng. I can't imagine how crazy they will go if the democrats actually override Trump. Mostly because Trump will throw a tantrum and feed it.

Malcolm wrote:

Nah, these clowns are weekend warriors, who are mainly dangerous to deer and to each other.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 27th, 2020 at 6:36 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Rinchen Samphel said:

Screw off, this is the most generalizing argument that overlooks the common struggles of the middle-class and marginalizes it based on race, rather than class.

Malcolm wrote:

Study some history. Race is class in America.

The struggles of white people in the US are nothing compared to the struggles of African Americans, Latinos, Native Americans and so on. The fact that you cannot acknowledge this is merely an illustration of your blindness to your own privilege.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 27th, 2020 at 6:39 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Biden will be 1000% better than the orange guy. But whoever is president after Trump is going to have a hell of a job rebuilding the gvt.

But, it is looking increasingly likely that no matter who wins the WH, the Dems are poised to take 60 seats in Congress. This means they can override any veto and with a Democratic House, can pretty much pass any legislation they want, with or without presidential approval.

Grigoris said:

To quote you from another thread:

Malcolm wrote:

Anything at this point is better than Trump.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 27th, 2020 at 1:00 PM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Rinchen Samphel said:

Screw off, this is the most generalizing argument that overlooks the common struggles of the middle-class and marginalizes it based on race, rather than class.

Malcolm wrote:

Study some history. Race is class in America.

The struggles of white people in the US are nothing compared to the struggles of African Americans, Latinos, Native Americans and so on. The fact that you cannot acknowledge this is merely an illustration of your blindness to your own privilege.

Rinchen Samphel said:

And here is this argument, "but look back 100 yrs ago!" We cant solve this problem by bringing upon black people the sufferings of their ancestors, which they themselves never experienced. Half of my family was in France until the 1900's and the other half was in the north, poor farmers, and my great grandfather died from drinking paint thinner during the depression. Never owned slaves or took part in that, they married native Americans, and got along with people just fine. Nobody's suffering is more important than anyone else's. Why should I have to pay for what I never did, 60 or 100+ years ago? Why should I have to pay for a "privilege" that I didn't ask for, or even fully believe in? Are we going to start pointing out "attractive-privilege"? You know attractive people typically have more confidence, a more healthy sex life, and acquire higher positions easier. Oooh, or what about "skill-privilege", some people just have a knack for carpentry, but we shouldn't let that overshadow this person over here who doesn't have the privilege of being more inclined towards that work. What about, I mean, I could go on. No one becomes a hero through being a victim, no one grows out of the mud through being a victim, and no one should have to pay for things they didn't do, just because of their skin color.

Malcolm wrote:

It doesn't matter, your ancestors were white, and their very ethnic background granted them privileges, legal and social, systematically denied to African Americans, etc. Whether you understand this or not, you, as a white male in the US, have inherited this privilege.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 27th, 2020 at 1:03 PM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Rinchen Samphel said:

Screw off, this is the most generalizing argument that overlooks the common struggles of the middle-class and marginalizes it based on race, rather than class.

Malcolm wrote:

Study some history. Race is class in America.

Rinchen Samphel said:

Look at the present, no its not.

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, it is. And the fact you don't see this means you are blind.

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/05/26/us/minneapolis-police-man-died.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 27th, 2020 at 8:59 PM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Rinchen Samphel said:

Blacks have committed 52 percent of crimes from the 80's to about 2010, though blacks make up 13 percent of the population. The stats are ugly, and thats why i cant support the BLM movement, if the black community actually cared about black lives, there be more work on why the above is true, why 70+ percent of black murders are done by other blacks. And this is just the stats, and if someone thinks is racist, well, ok. But why do black lives only matter when a white cop kills a black person? Im not saying its right, what i am saying is its easier to support BLM and get pissed at white cops than it is to confront the actual problem.

Grigoris said:

Seems you do not have an idea what "the actual problem" is.

Why don't you go research the link between race and poverty? For starters.

Rinchen Samphel said:

I have, hence why i have aquired the viewpoint i have.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, all on YouTube.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 27th, 2020 at 11:24 PM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Dan74 said:

There are kids born in affluent urbanite educated Black families who have tonnes more privilege than a white kid born to unemployed parents in a backwater trailer park after manufacturing went abroad to the applause of urban elites cheering globalisation.

Malcolm wrote:

You don't get it. You probably never will. And your argument is mistaken. "Kids born in affluent urbanite educated Black families" do not have and will never have more privilege in America than "a white kid born to unemployed parents in a backwater trailer park" unless there is a fundamental change in the attitudes of white people toward black people.

A white kid born to unemployed parents in a backwater trailer park will never have a cross burned in his front yard, etc., or be subject to the casual, thoughtless racism black people in the US experience daily, etc., not to mention the organized racism of the penal system in the US, or the economic racism affecting black small business owners and so on.

You don't get it, because you do not understand the social history of class and race in the US.

You don't get it, because you don't have an overtly racist president.

You don't get it, because you don't really understand just how deeply racism is embedded in American cultural life.

You don't get it, probably because you have not read deeply in American History.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 27th, 2020 at 11:25 PM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Yeah..sorry Rinchen..its true..Greg is not a liberal, hes a full on commie...

Malcolm wrote:

Greg is not a "commie," he is an anarchist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 28th, 2020 at 12:14 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Tlalok said:

White people don't have to worry about getting the Mozambique drill during every single interaction with police. That's an example of white privilege.

Malcolm wrote:

Precisely. I do not have worry about this:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 28th, 2020 at 1:06 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Grigoris said:

Since the McCarthyist era most Americans believe that anything left of Fascism is Communism.

Malcolm wrote:

These days many (ignorant) Americans have even convinced themselves that Fascism is itself a left-wing movement.

Grigoris said:

Crying shame really when you consider that the U$ had a healthy Anarchosyndicalist movement, with the Industrial Workers of the World (Wobblies) having over 150,000 members at it's peak.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup. And Eugene Debs, Bernie Sanders' inspiration, was one its founders. The IWW was the only non-racist, non-sexist union in America when it was founded.

Grigoris said:

But Americans, in general, suffer from a complete ignorance when it comes to their history anyway.

Malcolm wrote:

Seriously? George Washington did not cut down that cherry tree?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 28th, 2020 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

BTW, the Preamble to the IWW Constitution:

The working class and the employing class have nothing in common. There can be no peace so long as hunger and want are found among millions of the working people and the few, who make up the employing class, have all the good things of life.

Between these two classes a struggle must go on until the workers of the world organize as a class, take possession of the means of production, abolish the wage system, and live in harmony with the Earth.

We find that the centering of the management of industries into fewer and fewer hands makes the trade unions unable to cope with the ever growing power of the employing class. The trade unions foster a state of affairs which allows one set of workers to be pitted against another set of workers in the same industry, thereby helping defeat one another in wage wars. Moreover, the trade unions aid the employing class to mislead the workers into the belief that the working class have interests in common with their employers.

These conditions can be changed and the interest of the working class upheld only by an organization formed in such a way that all its members in any one industry, or in all industries if necessary, cease work whenever a strike or lockout is on in any department thereof, thus making an injury to one an injury to all.

Instead of the conservative motto, "A fair day's wage for a fair day's work," we must inscribe on our banner the revolutionary watchword, "Abolition of the wage system."

It is the historic mission of the working class to do away with capitalism. The army of production must be organized, not only for everyday struggle with capitalists, but also to carry on production when capitalism shall have been overthrown. By organizing industrially we are forming the structure of the new society within the shell of the old.
<https://archive.iww.org/culture/official/preamble/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 28th, 2020 at 1:24 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There's Only One Possible Conclusion: White America Likes Its Killer Cops:
George Floyd was murdered by Minneapolis police in broad daylight over Memorial Day weekend. We know he was murdered because video shows Floyd handcuffed and pinned under the knee of an officer who was crushing his throat into the pavement. Floyd could be heard telling the officer that he couldn't breathe. He could be heard telling the officer, "Don't kill me." Onlookers were heard begging the officer to stop killing the man.

The police didn't stop. The police are never going to voluntarily stop killing black and brown people. The killings will continue until the majority of white people in this country make the killings stop.

The police work for white people, and they know it. White people know it too. Deep down, white people know exactly who the police are supposed to “protect and serve,” and they damn well know it’s not black and brown people. We saw some video of that too, over the weekend. Amy Cooper was walking in Central Park with her dog. Her dog was off its leash, in violation of park rules and city ordinances. A bird watcher, Chris Cooper, who happens to be black, asked her to follow the rules. Instead of just putting her dog on a leash, Amy decided to use Chris’s race against him. She first threatened to call the cops, and then did just that, claiming that an “African American man” was “threatening” her in the park.

The very instant that Amy Cooper felt she needed the support of institutionalized racism to get her through her morning, she knew exactly where to find it. She knew exactly whom to call. Amy Cooper was the one in violation of the rules. Yet there she was, calling the cops. No doubt, it wouldn’t have even occurred to her to call them to the scene of her lawlessness if not for the way cops tend to harass, jail, and, yes, murder people who look like Chris Cooper. Or George Floyd. Or Eric Garner. Or Terrance Crutcher. Or Alton Sterling. Or Emantic Fitzgerald Bradford Jr. Or Amadou Diallo. When Amy Cooper threatened to call the cops, she was threatening to take a black man’s life. It’s a threat that only works because cops are so consistently willing to murder black and brown men. Amy Cooper was able to dial up 400 years of racial oppression and violence on her phone more easily than I am able to order a pizza.

It doesn’t have to be this way. It is entirely within the scope of white power in America to rein in its police. White people could elect mayors and prosecutors who are committed to police reform. White judges and juries could hold the police accountable for their crimes. White Republicans could challenge and eventually break the power of police unions just as easily as they break teachers’ unions or any labor union that stands in the way of rapacious capitalism. If a majority of white people decided, today, that racist policing should end, we’d start seeing changes to police forces by the middle of next week.

But white people do not stop their cops. A majority of them clearly want the cops to behave this way. They want the viciousness. They want the horror. Why? It’s not just that a majority of white America probably thinks Amy Cooper did the right thing in her specific situation; it’s that they think they will one day be in a situation where Amy’s actions are justified. One day they might be alone in a park around a strange black man, and what might happen then? Sure, Chris Cooper seems like a “nice” black person, but what if he wasn’t? What if he was a “mean” or “aggressive” black person, and you were just alone in the park, illegally walking your dog? Best to keep brutal, dangerous, and racist cops around, because, hey, you never know.

White people think they might one day be Amy Cooper and want to have somebody to call, just in case. They know they’ll never be Chris Cooper. Making a society that’s safe for Chris Cooper to bird watch while black just isn’t the most important thing to a majority of white America.

Oh, a bunch of white people will be performatively outraged and saddened by Amy Cooper’s behavior. They’ll gladly participate in her online dragging. But when it comes to neutering the police so that the Amy Coopers of the world don't have that kind of privilege and power over the Chris Coopers of the world, most of those white people will fall silent.

By the same token, white people will participate in the outrage over specific murders, like George Floyd's murder or Breonna Taylor's. They will join in calls to bring individual racists to account, like Amy Cooper or Gregory and Travis McMichael. But when it comes time to deal with institutional purveyors of racism, as opposed to individual bad actors, the outrage and support of the white community is not there. We see that disconnect on display now as police use coronavirus to threaten and harass black and brown people.

The Center for Constitutional Rights, the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, and the Legal Aid Society have joined an enforcement motion asking courts to investigate the New York Police Department's social distancing enforcement during the pandemic. The legal motion suggests that the NYPD is in violation of court orders imposed on the city after its unconstitutional stop-and-frisk program. The lawyers are asking for an immediate moratorium on NYPD enforcement of social distancing orders.

Since March, 81 percent of social distancing violations issued by the NYPD have been made against black or Latinx people. And those stats simply confirm what our eyes are already telling us. We've all seen the pictures of white people gathered in parks as police officers politely hand out masks, but no tickets, just as we've all seen videos, shot just a neighborhood away, showing black and brown people getting beaten and manhandled by the cops for allegedly violating social distancing protocols.

Anybody could have seen this coming. In fact, I wrote about how this would happen once the NYPD was empowered to enforce social distancing. I don't have a crystal ball. I'm not a wizard. I just know that cops cannot be trusted with the power they already have—and should never be given any more. Putting the NYPD in charge of enforcing social distancing was a decision that was so obviously going to lead to racially biased enforcement of the orders that one has to assume it was intentional.

Most black people know what happens when cops are given power, but we can't get 51 percent of white people to do anything about it. We can't get New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio, who centered his first mayoral campaign on his opposition to stop-and-frisk, to take a stand against the racist actions of his police force. We can't get the white people who are willing to gather in large crowds to enjoy a spring day to gather in a large crowd to protest at City Hall.

Why would they? White people are not ignorant and they're not blind. They see the racial bias in policing, and they know that bias benefits them. They know they're not going to catch a beatdown for not wearing a mask. They know they're not going to be choked to death on the street in broad daylight. They know that having racist police officers around gives them incredible power, and power makes people feel good even if they never use it. I've been in rooms where I've heard white people congratulate themselves for not calling the cops on some black person, as if declining the option to use terrorism against a black person was some kind of liberal bona fide.

Black people have tried, again and again, to end the horror of police brutality against us. We march, we protest, we educate, we vote. We teach our children a special set of rules. We produce art and literature and music documenting our pain. We start organizations and movements. And yet we can't achieve structural change in policing because a majority of white America always sets its will against us. White people in our own communities, our alleged "friends and neighbors," consistently vote and act in ways that empower the police and ignore their brutality against us.

White people could put their police dogs on a leash. But they won't. And more black and brown people will get mauled and killed until white people decide to do better. More black people will die like George Floyd, because most white people want to live like Amy Cooper.

<https://www.thenation.com/article/society/white-america-cops/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 28th, 2020 at 1:46 AM

Title: Re: Zen's stand regarding 'The Absolute'

Content:

Queequeg said:

Its what I see it in forums like this, that is just not appealing to me, and I sense some people use the aesthetic to paper over their own tentative understandings. That makes me wonder, what benefit such elliptical language/thought is supposed to do for someone who doesn't yet actually have genuine insight? It just looks like word play. Whatever floats your boat, but it seems immersing oneself in spontaneous word soups is not a particularly effective practice without a solid grasp of basics.

Meido said:

Well, I share your annoyance.

The kind of Zen talk that we often see aped in online forums is the encounter dialogue between masters and their disciples that can be found in many texts. These were not originally word soup, and did not occur among people who lacked an understanding of basics.

But the problem obviously is not that we have an over-abundance of Zen masters using true living words in that manner. It is that there are people with little or no Zen practice experience who read such things, are attracted by a style seemingly of iconoclastic freedom and mysterious spontaneity, and adopt it as an affectation.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, we used to have a word for this bank in the days of Punk Rock: poseurs.

And this behavior is silly, and makes Zen look ridiculous and trivial (it isn't).

People whacking each other with sticks on line and uttering mysterious profundities (aka gibberish) is just sad.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 28th, 2020 at 9:36 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Rinchen Samphel said:

At this point i just have to accept that you have been very privileged, and cant see how anyone else who is white cant have had a life different than yours.

Tlalok said:

Thing is bud, if all else was the same, and you were born black, you would have had a harder life than you do now. That's white priviledge.

Rinchen Samphel said:

Aight pal, you know me. In and out of jail, dui's, hospitals, homelessness, abusive father you would hit me till i pissed myself (but at least i had one right?!), dropped out of school when i was in my teens, yeah, typical white privilege. Thanks for catetorizing me based on my skin color, so un-racist of you. The reason why i have the views i do, is because sitting around being a victim wouldnt have put me in college (back in school for the first time in 10 years), wouldnt have gotten me a job as a union laborer, and thats a lot better than sitting around thinking my dad or bullies owe me something. Sitting around being a victim 24/7 wont get you a life, society wont change for you or anyone else, you will only die a victim who has nothing more than resentment.

Malcolm wrote:

It is interesting how people on the right always frame things in terms of victimology. You claim not to be a victim, and yet you wear victimized resentment as a badge of pride, not even noticing that if you were a black man with the same set of social conditions, it would have been much harder for you to pull yourself up, because the deck is that much more stacked against you. In other words, you claim not to be a victim, but you talk like a victim (which is common in the alt right and fellow travelers). And yet, when black people do get upset and protest and struggle against the obvious disadvantages they have, which frankly, are much more acute than what you've experienced in life, people like you marginalize their struggle against racist oppression as if it is just a fantasy. Well, it isn't a fantasy at all. You have never experienced racism, so you really don't know what it feels like. Unlike me, you have no members of your family that have experienced racism from white people, so you really have no clue, like the rest of the MAGA crew. And your lack of empathy is shameful in someone who pretends to be a Buddhist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 28th, 2020 at 7:54 PM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Dan74 said:

...

BTW, thank you for sharing your voice and your story here.

Ayu said:

Well, I'm sorry to say, I'm able to live without such misanthropic comments:

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=47&t=33709&p=533602#p533568>

How can anybody call it "nice" to see when a man is being killed? There obviously is something essentially wrong with rightist view.

Dan74 said:

Ayu, I took Richnen's comment differently.

The video was a horrible thing, I couldn't watch it, except just the start. I think Malcolm or someone said to him earlier that he must've learnt his stuff from YouTube videos and then "the other side" posts a youtube video. He said "nice video", in a dark humour sort of way. I don't for a moment believe that anyone here would find this 'nice' or applaud this. It is a turn of phrase. I wouldn't make much of it. How can one react to a video which appears to show a man being murdered by a law enforcement officer?

Malcolm wrote:

The source of that video was the Times.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 28th, 2020 at 7:55 PM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Tlalok said:

White people don't have to worry about getting the Mozambique drill during every single interaction with police. That's an example of white privilege.

Malcolm wrote:

Precisely. I do not have worry about this:

Rinchen Samphel said:

Nice YouTube vid

Malcolm wrote:

If you will look in the left hand corner, it's from the NYT.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 28th, 2020 at 8:32 PM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

DharmaN00b said:

A long time ago I was on probation and had one of those 'gotcha' moments. My officer mentioned that the white race are devils.

I was obviously in no position to object but it would have been very easy to have taken the comment personally. Clearly there are a number of consequences to sweeping the racist echo chamber under the rug, where plotting can take place.. as much, if not more, than giving people a platform to consciously (or otherwise) air their dirty laundry in public.

People in hard situations are going to cheat... sometimes sneaky and others a bit 'on the nose'

Dan74 said:

This is such an important point that in the English speaking countries (at least in Australia, IME) goes unheard. We are all human and one of the greatest gifts is to be able to share and converse freely. So if I have fears and neuroses (who doesn't) I should not live in PC fear of blurting out something stupid. We all do. And hopefully we learn from it.

Malcolm wrote:

When common decency is referred to as PC speech, one knows one is in the presence of bigots.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 28th, 2020 at 8:34 PM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Dan74 said:

To an extent I agree. But to me, no matter how egregious the views, that's not a deal-breaker. On the one hand, actions speak a lot louder than words. And on the other as long as the other person is prepared to share and listen, then I am prepared to engage in a respectful manner.

As a little kiddo, I grew up in the Ukrainian hinterland where anti-Semitism of the most virulent kind was normal. My parents taught me to be grateful to people for not being anti-Semitic and hold them in high regard (kinda in Uncle Tom fashion). My mother was especially subjected to it because she looks quite Mediterranean. Then even in Australia, two Russian colleagues were racist with one regularly making nasty anti-Semitic remarks and jokes in my presence. But when it came to crunch, he actually was very helpful and decent to me. People are funny like that.

Malcolm wrote:

My grandfather on my mothers side, who lived in the Detroit area, was very racist against blacks as a group, and very kind to his black employees. But the latter does not remove the injury of the former.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 28th, 2020 at 11:45 PM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Dan74 said:

Who is doing the excusing or not excusing? Do you have that moral high ground, Malcolm? I don't. We can say that it's not OK. That's fine. I can teach my kids that certain kind of language and jokes are not OK (and I do). But at the end of the day, human beings are mixed bags with messy contradictory characters. What I find to be more valuable is to hear out people's stories and begin to understand how it is for them.

Malcolm wrote:

Hi Dan:

What I understand is that the United States, Australia, New Zealand, and Canada were all founded on the principles of white supremacy. The preamble of the Constitution of the United States begins "We the people of the United States..." but the people did not include women, African slaves, Native Americans, and still do not.

I also understand that conservatism is a political philosophy which is predicated on white supremacy and always has been:

"According to Burke's code, slaves of impeccable manners and behaviour should have a right to buy their freedom at "rates to be fixed by two Justices of the Peace", though he fails to suggest where they might find the money. A renowned advocate of individual liberty, Burke nevertheless thought that despite being committed slave owners, the "people of the southern (American) colonies are much more strongly.... attached to liberty than those to the northward"[14]. In his fascinating "Counter History of Liberalism" Domenico Losurdo describes Burke as "the tutelary deity of the slaveholding South"."

<https://www.opendemocracy.net/en/opendemocracyuk/edmund-burke-unspoken-villainy/>

With respect to Burke's heir, principle among them William S. Buckley:

"In its earliest days, National Review defended Southern segregation in euphemistic terms. Buckley published articles by highbrow segregationists praising the conservative South as a check on liberalism. In perhaps its most infamous editorial, National Review asked whether whites should dominate in the South. Its "sobering answer"? Yes.

<https://www.washingtonpost.com/outlook/2018/10/05/conservatives-self-delusion-race/>

Of course, Buckley, being an intelligent man (someone with whom my mother, an arch-liberal if there ever was one, civil rights activist, first-wave feminist, etc. was in fact friends, and someone whom I met as a toddler, though I have no memory of it) changed his position to the present, absurd idea of "color-blindness" common in conservative circles these days:

Colorblindness served conservative purposes. It allowed not only conservative writers but politicians like Barry Goldwater to oppose civil rights legislation from a "race-neutral" standpoint, in line with broad American values. They could always point to a higher principle than racism — whether constitutional or otherwise — to explain their opposition to black demands for equality...William Rickenbacker, another editor, argued that the magazine was best when it "bravely" said "the things everyone knows." These "givens" included that "white people and Negroes do not actively seek each other's company" and that "the bastardy rate" among blacks threatened "their claim that as a race they are ready to hold up their end of the social and legal structure of this country." He demurred that this wasn't a moral claim, merely a demographic one.

The strategies outlined at this meeting — legal colorblindness, law and order, free market dogmas and frankness about racial "realities" — were the go-to approaches for National Review and the burgeoning conservative intellectual movement for discussing race.

This last sentence remains the conservative and GOP approach to these issues. But what are they predicated on? Why of course, Edmund Burke once again:

Good order is the foundation of all good things. To be enabled to acquire, the people, without being servile, must be tractable and obedient. The magistrate must have his reverence, the laws their authority. The body of the people must not find the principles of natural subordination by art rooted out of their minds. They must respect that property of which they cannot partake. They must labor to obtain what by labor can be obtained; and when they find, as they commonly do, the success disproportioned to the endeavour, they must be taught their consolation in the final proportions of eternal justice. Of this consolation, whoever deprives them deadens their industry and strikes at the root of all acquisition as of all conservation. He that does this is the cruel oppressor, the merciless enemy of the poor and wretched, at the same time that by his wicked speculations he exposes the fruits of successful industry and the accumulations of fortune to the plunder of the negligent, the disappointed, and the unprosperous.

<https://socialsciences.mcmaster.ca/econ/ugcm/3ll3/burke/revfrance.pdf>

A perfect example of blaming poor people merely for being poor, as well a clear indictment of the principle of social welfare as a depredation upon the very people social welfare is intended to assist. Here we find the nascent seed of Reagan's welfare queen, and our own Rinchen Samphel's racist rant about black people (admirably rebutted by PeterC), which we can easily read above.

Conservatism is predicated on a Calvinist notion that success is a result of divine providence, and to be successful in spite of meager beginnings is a sign that one has been blessed by providence. Burke is not revolutionary here, since he embraces this principle very clearly. If you are rich, you deserve it, since it was afforded to you by God, and if you are poor, well, behave and you might go to heaven. It is no wonder that Christianity and conservatism go hand in hand.

There is a danger that Buddhists can succumb to the same kind of theistic thinking with respect to karma. I know of racist Tibetan teachers who assert that black people are black because of their negative karma. Of course, such thinking is ridiculous and immoral.

And this is the point: some views are immoral. What kinds of views? Views that claim that some people are intrinsically better than others because of race, creed, gender, or sexual preference. Equally immoral are views that diminish the very real, global harm of modern capitalism, which is predicated and built upon white supremacy. In the US, this history is visible everywhere.

While the framers of the US Constitution were themselves advocates of white supremacy, the language of the constitution permitted slow progress in overcoming the US's own twin original sins: genocide and slavery. But these stains on our national history have not been completely erased. We still have much to do, and it is a process of centuries, not decades. And it seems we always take two steps backward for every step forward we take. The fact that unarmed black men are murdered daily in the United States and that native women are exploited as sex workers in man camps, etc., and regularly raped and murdered by white men is appalling. Native people are more likely to suffering violent crimes (70 percent of all incidents) at the hands of white men than blacks and white men. Federally recognized tribes do not have jurisdiction over over non-Indian perpetrators, even for crimes committed on reservations. So you can see, racism in the US is still a huge problem, and I have little sympathy for white people who claim they have no privilege in our society.

White privilege was granted to poor whites as long ago as the 1705 Virginia Slave Codes, which formed the basis of the laws against "miscegenation," etc., and made it illegal for anyone other than white Christians to purchase Christian white slaves. Following this, other laws were passed in order to grant privileges to landless whites to ensure their fidelity to the wealthy white colonial authorities in the South. The act largely favors indentured servants, which imposed a time limit on obligatory service if they were christian in their native country, apart from Turks and Moors who could prove they were not slaves in England or any other Christian country. All other non-christian peoples brought to this country were automatically considered slaves in Virginia.

https://www.encyclopediavirginia.org/_An_act_concerning_Servants_and_Slaves_1705

So, Dan, I think you really do not understand what we mean by "white privilege" in the United States. I think you are lacking context, and therefore, you make uninformed pronouncements such as:

Dan74 said:

To me the notion of privilege based on colour is a ham-fisted approach to redress past injustice and present inequality.

Malcolm wrote:

So just to make it plain for you: "white privilege" means the privilege all white people in the US experience, no matter how poor or disadvantaged they may seem, because of our deep history of codes, laws, and local ordinances that systematically elevate the rights and opportunities of white people at the expense of blacks and native peoples in the United States. That's what white privilege is, and that is what it means.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 28th, 2020 at 11:53 PM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Agreed! It has become far too commonplace to call somebody a racist, fascist, leftist, nazi, etc etc when one doesn't agree with someone else's views and doesn't even really know the person. The moment the name calling starts, reasoned conversation goes out the window and the person shuts down to any real fact based discussion thereby further entrenching them in their viewpoint. Consequently you end up with tribes at each other's throats..not good for any society in any country. No society can sustain that for any length of time and hope to survive. What's wrong with a little common civility and in some cases simply agreeing to disagree?

Norwegian said:

People however are fascists, far right-wing, and so on if they adhere to certain ideas, hold certain views, and partake in or support certain actions. It's very simple really.

And the idea of "agreeing to disagree" when it comes to matters like human rights, racism, oppression, sexism, protection of the environment, animals, and so on, is laughable. A sort of "there's good people on both sides" take, where one can maturely shake hands and say "Let's agree to disagree" over these issues. Absolutely no. People who are racist and put forth racist views and actions, are a threat to the safety and stability of society. Likewise with people who treat the environment in a destructive manner. And so on. They and the harm they cause should be dealt with.

Dan74 said:

This makes perfect sense.

But what if your own kids express fascist views?

Malcolm wrote:

If you cannot convince them they are deeply mistaken, disown them.

Dan74 said:

If a colleague, who up until now seemed to be a really decent and reasonable fellow, come out with something shocking? Do you slam them down? Or do you hear them out?

Malcolm wrote:

You explain to them how incorrect they are being, and if they refuse to listen, you shun them.

Dan74 said:

You might find out that behind those views is a horrible experience one had never really managed to process. Or perhaps a simple inherited bigotry one never really gave much thought to. There are just so many possibilities.

Malcolm wrote:

Bigotry through inheritance is not excusable. If someone said to you, "Oh, I am anti-semitic because my grandfather was a Nazi," you do not tolerate this.

Dan74 said:

One of my colleagues is black, born and raised here in Switzerland and she has some amazing stories, ranging from nasty to facepalm. Once one of her kids came home from kinder looking a bit serious. So after some quizzing, he told her that they had a clown come and the clown, when needing a member of the audience, called out to him as 'the chocolate-coloured kid in the back'. As the only black kid in the group, he was made understandably uncomfortable and she tried to speak with the kinder staff and the clown and explain how that felt. She didn't raise a ruckus and demand that the clown be fired, she just wanted to tell her story. Mind you, she grew up in much more racist times in what was a 99.99% white city. That of course colours not only the way you are seen but the way you see how you are being seen.. It's tricky. The clown was not being a bigot. He was simply clueless. And that why sharing stories is important.

Malcolm wrote:

Her experience, whatever it may be, does not come from growing up black, latino, native, or asian in America, where there is history of slavery, Jim Crow laws, etc., laws against immigration, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 12:08 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Dan74 said:

My sense is that when the situation is already so toxic and the passions are running hot, what one needs is cool heads. Mandelas and MLK's not Malcolm X's and Faroukhans.

Malcolm wrote:

Mandela was jailed for terrorism. He fought an active armed struggle against Apartheid in SA, he was a communist revolutionary who relied on Che Gueverra's principles of guerilla warfare. He was not a "cooler" head. He was a principal founder of the armed wing of the ANC, uMkhonto we Sizwe (MK), because he decided that nonviolence that had been advocated previously was not working:

Secondly, we felt that without sabotage there would be no way open to the African people to succeed in their struggle against the principle of white supremacy. All lawful modes of expressing opposition to this principle had been closed by legislation, and we were placed in a position in which we had either to accept a permanent state of inferiority, or to defy the Government. We chose to defy the Government. We first broke the law in a way which avoided any recourse to violence; when this form was legislated against, and when the Government resorted to a show of force to crush opposition to its policies, only then did we decide to answer violence with violence.

http://db.nelsonmandela.org/speeches/pub_view.asp?pg=item&ItemID=NMS010

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 12:15 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Dan74 said:

So their full slogan was "I can breath thanks to NYPD", rather than "I can breath (because I am white)."

Malcolm wrote:

The police in the United States are the principle defenders of our white supremacist order. These two statements amount to the same damn thing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 12:24 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

And now this:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 12:54 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Tiago Simões said:

This use of metaphor just proves that the American right wing is obsessed with death and killing. Just a death cult.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, hence the fetishization of guns.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 1:02 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Dan74 said:

We are all human and one of the greatest gifts is to be able to share and converse freely. So if I have fears and neuroses (who doesn't) I should not live in PC fear of blurting out something stupid. We all do. And hopefully we learn from it.

DharmaN00b said:

Yes, this works very well in an academic setting where we're not supposed to think anything. In the example I presented maybe there was some fishing going on.. probably not the best context to draw any conclusions at all... and if in doubt stop digging. In any case this thread blew up! yikes

Malcolm wrote:

That tends to happen when people defend the indefensible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Dan74 said:

Perhaps just like the generational poverty afflicting the black communities and driving many to crime, we can start to consider the generational problems with the culture and the roles of law enforcement driving so many to victimise members of society least able to defend themselves.

Malcolm wrote:

What you don't get here is that the generational poverty of black people has been _systematically imposed_ upon them since the failure of Reconstruction, this is but one of the more obvious examples:

The Tulsa race massacre (also called the Tulsa race riot, the Greenwood Massacre, or the Black Wall Street Massacre) of 1921 took place on May 31 and June 1, 1921, when mobs of white residents attacked black residents and businesses of the Greenwood District in Tulsa, Oklahoma. It has been called "the single worst incident of racial violence in American history." The attack, carried out on the ground and from private aircraft, destroyed more than 35 square blocks of the district – at that time the wealthiest black community in the United States, known as "Black Wall Street".

.....

About 10,000 black people were left homeless, and property damage amounted to more than $1.5 million in real estate and $750,000 in personal property (equivalent to $32.25 million in 2019).

Many survivors left Tulsa. Black and white residents who stayed in the city were silent for decades about the terror, violence, and losses of this event. The massacre was largely omitted from local, state, and national histories.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Tulsa_race_massacre

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 1:33 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

'There's an African American man threatening my life.' Amy Cooper

"In this country, American means white. Everybody else has to hyphenate." Toni Morrison

"I can't breath." Eric Garner, George Floyd, ???

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 1:38 AM

Title: Re: Zen's stand regarding 'The Absolute'

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is no absolute, so how can Zen have a standpoint regarding it?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 1:46 AM

Title: Re: Abhidharma for Dummies, er... Yogis

Content:

Matt J said:

Any good, pithy resources on Abhidharma? Short and practical rather than long and in-depth.

Grigoris said:

Glimpses of Abhidharma by Chogyam Trungpa.

It is a decent enough gateway text.

Malcolm wrote:
Yeah, I don't agree.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 2:42 AM
Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist
Content:
Dan74 said:

I know about Mandela's early background. His legacy was, however, disavowal of violence and reconciliation.

Malcolm wrote:
Mandela never disavowed violence. In 1990, in Atlanta, at a ceremony to honor MLK, Mandela declared, ""Unlike you, we are still under the grip of white supremacy. Non-violence is a good policy when conditions permit. There are also times when conditions do not permit."

Apart from the fact that he really did not understand what it was like to be black in America, we can see that his position on violence was not merely a simple advocacy of nonviolence. And frankly, neither was Gandhi's.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 2:51 AM
Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist
Content:
Grigoris said:
I would also recommend you read https://www.pegc.us/archive/Articles/eco_ur-fascism.pdf...

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, everything Ecco describes there, describes Trump to the letter.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 2:55 AM
Title: Re: Why did the Buddha choose not to live of Light?
Content:
cjdevries said:
I am looking at Autobiography of a Yogi by Paramahansa Yogananda. He describes Giri Bala, the saint who lived on ether, air, and sun through a yogic technique given to her by a holy man at age 12. She never ate again after age 12 years and 4 months. She said this wasn't designed for everyone; not everyone was meant to go without food and water. Yogananda asked her why we couldn't teach the yogic technique to everyone and have everyone live off air and sun and she replied something like: that's not the way God wants it. Everyday people are supposed to eat. She seemed to imply that this technique was only for ripe practitioners.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, fakirs always have an excuse for everything.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 3:16 AM

Title: Re: Zen's stand regarding 'The Absolute'

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is no absolute, so how can Zen have a standpoint regarding it?

npr said:

Negating it is also a stand.

Malcolm wrote:

No, for example, when my bank account is empty, and I describe it as such, this is not a stand, this is just a fact.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 3:19 AM

Title: Re: Zen's stand regarding 'The Absolute'

Content:

npr said:

Negating it is also a stand.

Queequeg said:

You can't negate something that isn't there in the first place.

If I say "there is no such thing as the horns of a rabbit", all I'm really saying is the horns of a rabbit do not arise.

But addressing Malcolm's comment, I think this comment is remarking on the title of the thread without regard for the discussion that followed.

Malcolm wrote:

It doesn't really have to. There is no absolute. If there were an absolute, it would have to be an absolute of being or nonbeing. Negating the absolute is not a commentary on whether the "absolute" is being or nonbeing. Neither predicate applies. So there is no absolute. Since the relative truth cannot be established, the ultimate truth cannot be established. In the end, there is nothing left to say. Hence Vimalakirti's answer.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 5:30 AM

Title: Re: King Gesar - Dharmapala

Content:

Könchok Thrinley said:

Hi,

lately I have been introduced to and gotten lung for the practice of King Gesar as a dharmapala. And quite frankly I don't know much about him and there does not seem to be much on the internet about him (especially when one ignores the shambhala as a source). When did King Gesar first appear as a dharmapala? I know that Mipham discovered a sadhana for him. Is he seen as a standard dharmapala? Was King Gesar even real? I just find it a bit strange that this quite violent warrior from a popular folktale is considered an emanation of Guru Padmasambhava and a dharmapala.

Malcolm wrote:

The first evidence we have of Gesar at all is in a text called Lang Poti Seru (roughly 1450), which sites Gesar in the late 10th to early 12th century as a local chieftain in the Ling region of Eastern Tibet.

The modern day tradition of Gesar as a dharmapāla begins with an 18th century tertön, Lha Rig Chen po's Gesar, the King of Vajra Life.

Mipham's terma of Gesar, which is based on the above, has Gesar as guru, yidam, and dharmapāla, as does Khenpo Jikphun's Gesar cycle. I don't know about Namkhai Drime's Gesar cycle. Mipham's cycle is very rich with many texts for divination, Sang, Lungta, etc.

Gesar is very important, for example, the Horse Race ballad conceals a presentation of the Dzogchen path, based on the commentary of Mipham.

Personally, I am quite comfortable with the ambiguity of Gesar. People do not hesitate to propitiate Achi, they also should not hesitate to propitiate Gesar. It can bring nothing but benefit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 5:32 AM

Title: Re: Why did the Buddha choose not to live of Light?

Content:

cjdevries said:

Giri Bala apparently ate way too much food. After she married, her mother in law teased her about it. She resolved that she was going to live without food, so she prayed to God, please send me a guru who will help me to live without food. One day her guru materialized to her and said he was moved by her request. He taught her a kriya technique, which involved mantra and a rather difficult breathing exercise. She said the breathing exercise was more difficult than the average person could do. "No medicine or magic is involved; nothing beyond the kria."

Malcolm wrote:
As I said above.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 5:33 AM
Title: Re: Abhidharma for Dummies, er... Yogis
Content:
Matt J said:

I appreciate the responses. Abhidharma has been my weakness, even when I was doing a lot of Theravada retreats. I've been a bit inspired by people who read the Bible in 90 days. If you do that, it is only 12 pages a day. I thought I should do something like that. What sort of long, often boring, but necessary text can I break up into bite sized chunks? Abhidharma! But then I thought, well, more concepts is the last thing I need, and you can get lost for days in that stuff.

Looks like the focus is on Mipham. I do have the 4 volumes. I often pull them from the shelf, determined to read them only to put them back. Perhaps in conjunction with some of the commentaries, plus my current aspiration to gain a more developed view of the experience of grasping, I can digest them.

Mind is Buddhist Psychology is good--- simple, not too complicated, a bit more in depth.

Feel free to keep the recommendations coming, I'm sure I'm not the only one who will find this thread useful.

Malcolm wrote:
Avoid the debates, focus on the descriptive material.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 5:34 AM
Title: Re: Abhidharma for Dummies, er... Yogis
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Yeah, I don't agree.

Grigoris said:
Can you think of a simpler introduction?

I can't.

Malcolm wrote:
I think it is very inaccurate and misleading.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 8:32 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The Tulsa race massacre (also called the Tulsa race riot, the Greenwood Massacre, or the Black Wall Street Massacre) of 1921 took place on May 31 and June 1, 1921, when mobs of white residents attacked black residents and businesses of the Greenwood District in Tulsa, Oklahoma. It has been called "the single worst incident of racial violence in American history." The attack, carried out on the ground and from private aircraft, destroyed more than 35 square blocks of the district – at that time the wealthiest black community in the United States, known as "Black Wall Street".

PeterC said:

One might say, bombing black neighborhoods? That was 1921, a long time ago. But how about 1985, then?

https://en.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/MOVE#1985_bombing

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 8:53 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Kim O'Hara said:

This is circulating on social media. I thought I would share it here for those who haven't seen it. Some of you may even like to share it further.

Kim

Malcolm wrote:

Done.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 10:17 AM

Title: Re: Zen's stand regarding 'The Absolute'

Content:

Queequeg said:

But addressing Malcolm's comment, I think this comment is remarking on the title of the thread without regard for the discussion that followed.

Malcolm wrote:

It doesn't really have to. There is no absolute. If there were an absolute, it would have to be an absolute of being or nonbeing. Negating the absolute is not a commentary on whether the "absolute" is being or nonbeing. Neither predicate applies. So there is no absolute. Since the relative truth cannot be established, the ultimate truth cannot be established. In the end, there is nothing left to say. Hence Vimalakirti's answer.

Queequeg said:

Sure, but in the context of this thread, it was a question about what Huang po, in translation, meant by "Absolute". At the penultimate point, there is an "Absolute Truth". At the ultimate, we sit around without anything to say to each other.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. The original question was simply:

What is Zen's stand regarding 'The Absolute' ?

Is the 'One Mind' considered as The Absolute ? Oneness with the Buddha is Oneness with the Absolute? or is it that Everything is Emptiness of self-being ?

If the reply applies to all Mahayana sects, kindly indicate

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 11:33 PM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Minobu said:

and thank the gods and enlightened ones that when we read it today after being inspired by these words "We the people of the United States..." it includes women, African slaves, Native Americans,

Malcolm wrote:

The point is, Minobu, that the preamble to the constitution still does not include women (ERA anyone?), African Americans (see Thirteenth), and native people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

PeterC said:

I suspect our friend Rinchen Samphel has checked out at this point, given the tone of the discussion.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, he has been rightfully chided for spewing racist views. Maybe he will be more comfortable over on Dharmawheel Alt right a.k.a Dharmawheel Engaged, with "Seth Rich" and Nicholas Woods.

PeterC said:

However we do need to understand where some white people are coming from when they say they dislike movements like BLM, and it's not always because they have racial bias, it can be due to the experience of their lives. There are a lot of predominantly white communities in the US which are very poor and not particularly pleasant places to live.

Malcolm wrote:

As you know, no one ever got pulled over just because they were a good ol' boy.

PeterC said:

I don't know where RS lives / has lived or what it's like there. But you often come across white folks from places like, say, Kentucky who will look at the BLM movement and think - how bad can it really be for them? Worse than for me? Why do they need special treatment? It's important to understand why people might think this. Sure, they're not black, but societal injustice isn't a competition, the fact that other people suffer doesn't negate your suffering. The poor white communities in the US actually have a lot in common with poor black or hispanic communities, in that often the same policies perpetuate the lack of economic opportunity in each - the failure of the education system, the healthcare poverty trap, and so on.

Malcolm wrote:

Nevertheless, most of the complaints are from former Jim Crow states where white people "lost" their special privileges. And they continue to vote their racism in the form of supporting the GOP, even if the same economic policies that harm blacks and latinos harm their own communities. They don't care since they hate minorities more than they love themselves and their families.

PeterC said:

The US media and education system make it very difficult to really understand the history of racial inequality in the country. We can't take it for granted that people will recognize these issues and its important to explain them objectively and reasonably.

Malcolm wrote:

Ummmm, it is have been 50 years since the civil rights movement? Everyone knows who MLK is. Everyone knows what racism is. Come on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 29th, 2020 at 11:44 PM

Title: Re: Seven line prayer

Content:

Nita-ooi said:

This might be a dumb question, but do i need an empowerment to recite the seven line prayer of Guru Rinpoche?

Malcolm wrote:

Not a dumb question. The is you do not need an empowerment to recite this. Please do. Dedicate the merit. Save the planet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 12:12 AM

Title: Re: Zen's stand regarding 'The Absolute'

Content:

Queequeg said:

Anyway, doesn't matter.

As an exercise for my own edification, to connect Absolute Truth to the nullity of the Absolute and connect Malcolm's comment...

On close examination, Absolute Truth itself is a convention that is empty for the same reason that all conventions are empty. This is the so-called, emptiness of emptiness. Can this even be called a view because "the view" would be a dependent dharma, and where subject and object and all the other dharmas are established as empty, there is nothing but Vimalakirti's silence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 12:16 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Minobu said:

and thank the gods and enlightened ones that when we read it today after being inspired by these words "We the people of the United States..." it includes women, African slaves, Native Americans,

Malcolm wrote:

The point is, Minobu, that the preamble to the constitution still does not include women (ERA anyone?), African Americans (see Thirteenth), and native people.

Minobu said:

yes indeed and very astute of you to elucidate this aspect of where we were as a human race at the forming of the Constitution and the freedom America brought to the world....

but i can't help but look at it from a evolutionary process and what exactly brought these enlightened thoughts to paper.

Because of the words written back then.../we have this very thread happening today...Blacks and Native , and women can vote now, Blacks are no longer legal chattel , still slaves metaphorically , but free slave...

So what do you think Malcolm am i some kinda Buddhist nut job that sees your revolution as inspired evolution...

.....

but back to you Constitution...the words like Dharma Teachings..has an effect in our development

Malcolm wrote:

Words of the Declaration of Independence come to mind:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness."

Then people who are systematically disadvantaged look around and said to themselves, "Why the hell is it that only white people get to pursue Life, Liberty, and Happiness...especially since their life, liberty, and happiness is through their exploitation of us?"

Ideas are powerful things.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 12:37 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The US media and education system make it very difficult to really understand the history of racial inequality in the country. We can't take it for granted that people will recognize these issues and its important to explain them objectively and reasonably. Ummmm, it is have been 50 years since the civil rights movement? Everyone knows who MLK is. Everyone knows what racism is. Come on.

PeterC said:

They know that MLK existed, was black and was a civil rights leader. I wouldn't assume their knowledge goes that much deeper. And as this thread shows, people know what the word 'racism' means, but that's quite different from understanding the reality of it today.

I wouldn't assume too much.

Malcolm wrote:

I guess I hold people to a higher standard of decency, and when they are found wanting, I am not particularly kind to them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 1:16 AM

Title: Re: is Biden subconsciously racist

Content:

PeterC said:

They know that MLK existed, was black and was a civil rights leader. I wouldn't assume their knowledge goes that much deeper. And as this thread shows, people know what the word 'racism' means, but that's quite different from understanding the reality of it today.

I wouldn't assume too much.

Malcolm wrote:

I guess I hold people to a higher standard of decency, and when they are found wanting, I am not particularly kind to them.

PeterC said:

I have found that in general, if you hold low expectations of people, you are less likely to be disappointed. The more time goes by, the less I find myself expecting of people.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, I don't have high expectations of people at all. Quite the contrary; but I am not at all tolerant of the intolerant, and less so, the older I become.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 1:26 AM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

Danny said:

I guess it depends on if you view Dzogchen through the lens of the Buddhist sciences, and like the approaches and compartmental stages and empowerments and so on. That's fine. Maybe it's teased out over the centuries as the orthodox way and it's somewhere inherent within and effort is required. I don't know, and not really sure at this point if I'm all that interested.

Malcolm wrote:

When one understands Dzogchen as the basis, then these qualms vanish. Some people need a gradual introduction; others do not. But the measure of the practitioner, whether they use a gradual approach or a nongradual approach, is how often they are distracted from their primordial state a.k.a the basis or not, and thus, how much they are dominated by mind and its attendant karma and afflictions or not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 3:45 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

DNS said:

<https://www.cnn.com/2020/05/29/us/minneapolis-george-floyd-friday/index.html>

The police officer who cut off the airway to Mr. Floyd is charged with only 3rd degree murder.

I'm not an attorney, but from what I know from studying some law, First Degree is for pre-meditated murder; Second Degree is for voluntary manslaughter; and Third Degree is for involuntary manslaughter like accidents.

It sounds like it should have been Second Degree murder.

Malcolm wrote:

Charges can always be elevated. Often, in this kind of case, this is the easiest charge to get an immediate warrant for.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 3:52 AM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

Danny said:

Could we make distinction though between garab dorjes introduction and later padmasambhava mahayoga instructions as non gradual vs gradual Dzogchen?

Malcolm wrote:

No, we cannot. In fact, the Three Phrases are part of the Vima Nyinthig, and typically would only be given after someone had received the four Nyinthig empowerments.

There is a useful distinction in the Mutig Trengwa and the Rig pa Rang shar Tantras: they basically state there are (1) the empowerment of pristine consciousness for those who understand and (2) the empowerment of colored powders for those who do not understand. The latter tantra further specifies that there are additional empowerments for the former kind of person: (1) the empowerment of the appearances of a sentient being, (2) the empowerment of the mental focus of a meditator, and (3) the twenty-one introductions.

Khenpo Ngachung specifies that the four Nyinthig empowerments are basically an elaborated form of the fourth empowerment.

The 18 sems sde empowerments are the empowerments of the mental focus of a meditator. The various direct introductions one sees used these days are variations on number 2. It is important to understand this point to avoid the fault of claiming that in Dzogchen no formal empowerment is needed. The Rangshar states in chapter 8: "The faults of not obtaining the empowerment are as follows: In the bardo one is alarmed, panicked, exhausted, impeded, and one can also lose consciousness.

"While one has not yet left the body of traces, migrating beings will not see one as worthy of respect. One's merit will be small, one's life short, one's enjoyments of living will be few, one will be powerless, and many obstacles will occur. Nothing will be accomplished. Those are the faults of not obtaining the empowerment for the conduct of secret mantra. A yogin of secret mantra conduct must first obtain empowerment. If empowerment is not obtained, not even the Buddha will be able to turn the wheel on the stage of a tathāgata. If the wheel cannot be turned, then the nirmāṇakāya will not be able to benefit migrating beings with compassion. Therefore, the empowerment of the conduct of secret mantra must be obtained."

Therefore, we can understand that the meaning of direct introductions, etc., are the same in meaning as the fourth empowerment, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 4:00 AM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

When one understands Dzogchen as the basis, then these qualms vanish. Some people need a gradual introduction; others do not.

Danny said:

Agree, my understanding is simply recognizing the basis, semde would be parallel with mahamudra,

Malcolm wrote:

Sems sde does not have a complete path since it is devoid of the teachings of the secret and unsurpassed secret cycle of man ngag sde. That means that sems sde only has an intellectual presentation of the basis. One cannot confirm vidyā in direct perception on the basis of sems sde instruction, one can only confirm the reality of the mind.

However, for someone who has received these instructions, the whole of Dzogchen can even be discerned in mahāyoga tantras such as the Guhyagarbha, Hevajra, and so on, but not without them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 4:22 AM

Title: Re: Zen's stand regarding 'The Absolute'

Content:

LastLegend said:

It's personal preference has nothing to do with who is right.

Queequeg said:

Intelligibility is a reasonably objective standard. But sure.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, at least tpk67 has a company.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 4:53 AM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

Danny said:

Cheers, I'm unaware of anything other than the lore of mahayoga tantras revealed at Shitavana by dakini karmendrani in relation to padmasambhava. I get your point about the powdered mandala etc but as part of the path of transformation, bskyed rim and rdzogs rim.

Malcolm wrote:

It refers to the colored powdered mandalas of elaborate and unelaborate empowerments of Dzogchen Nyinthig; the unelaborate and very unelaborate empowerments do not have such mandalas.

Danny said:

Maybe Anuyoga as a non gradual extension of mahayoga, that's not clear.

Malcolm wrote:

The empowerments referred to here are Dzogchen empowerments, not the empowerments of the eight lower yanas, however, the empowerments from mahāyoga or anuyoga can stand in for the elaborate empowerment, but not the unelaborate empowerment.

Dzogchen is a complete systems that unifies all the teachings of the nine yānas into one yāna, so nothing is excluded. People have gained the wrong impression because of an over-emphasis on an apophatic approach. And because, frankly, there are many people selling Dzogchen teachings who do not have the qualifications to give these empowerments, which means they are not qualified to give Dzogchen teachings.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 4:58 AM

Title: Re: Zen's stand regarding 'The Absolute'

Content:

Queequeg said:

I kid.

jake said:

I had a conversation with a 5yr old that was just like that!

Malcolm wrote:

98 percent of all twitter conversations are like that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 5:01 AM

Title: Re: Abhidharmakosabhasyam Book Club

Content:

Queequeg said:

Jake and I have been discussing our interest in studying the Abhidharmakosabhasyam of Vasubandhu (the "Kosa") recently and thought we might give it a shot as a book club here on DW. Seeing that others might have an interest, and hoping to capitalize on the collection of learned members here who might be able to offer input from time to time, we thought it might make for a fruitful effort.

We're going to have it here in the Discovering Mahayana Buddhism subforum so that the thread can be fully moderated, meaning, posts will require approval before they appear in public. We hope that this will keep the discussion focused and maintain a level of quality.

It is a big work, running to four volumes in the English translation (from the French by Poussin). We'll try to keep a certain pace, but this will of course depend on the participants. If it loses steam, well, we'll only have ourselves to blame. We're also anticipating this as an open ended study, so we have no set schedule.

So, with that, how about it Wheelers?

Malcolm wrote:

You only really to study chapters 1-6, which cover suffering (1-2), the cause of suffering (3-4), and the cessation of suffering (5-6). You don't really need to study the path (7-8) since we do not practice this path. So the last two chapters are academic only.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 5:32 AM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

Danny said:

I guess the fault that the basis is intellectually understood as this and that would mean one has not recognized the mind, and remedies would still apply?

Regards

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. It means one is still in mind, judgements, and discrimination. The basis needs to be experienced in two ways: the reality of the mind has to be confirmed and vidyā needs to be confirmed in a direct perception. Statement one is about the first confirmation, statement two is about the second.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 5:33 AM

Title: Re: Abhidharmakosabhasyam Book Club

Content:

Queequeg said:

Thanks, M. That's the kind of input we were hoping for.

In terms of the path - is that because its the Sarvastivadin path that is described there?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, hinayāna path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 5:39 AM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

People have gained the wrong impression because of an over-emphasis on an apophatic approach.

M

Danny said:

Just pick you up on this point. Dzogchen existed long before nyigma schools, admittedly an origin story wrapped in myth with perhaps a few written key sentences here and there. If however within a framework and system, one can make an argument Where it only works within that framework or system, and again there exists definitions and categories of different types of awakening, thinking of Gampopas lam rim approach to mahamudra etc, much different from Ganges mahamudra of Tilo and Naro for example which was less intellectual and more raw, it's hardly a surprise this wrong impression you speak of wouldn't exist in regards to Dzogchen.

Regards

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen was always a part of secret mantra, and always depended on empowerments for entry. Garab Dorje is involved in more than just Dzogchen tantras, he is the fountainhead of Yamantaka practices and other deity systems.

There is an 11th century Indian text that identifies Shri Simha has part of a school which de-emphasized the need for creation stage. So we have independent confirmation that Dzogchen, or what became Dzogchen, definitely existed in 8th century India.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 5:42 AM

Title: Re: Abhidharmakosabhasyam Book Club

Content:

Queequeg said:

Jake and I have been discussing our interest in studying the Abhidharmakosabhasyam of Vasubandhu (the "Kosa") recently and thought we might give it a shot as a book club here on DW. Seeing that others might have an interest, and hoping to capitalize on the collection of learned members here who might be able to offer input from time to time, we thought it might make for a fruitful effort.

We're going to have it here in the Discovering Mahayana Buddhism subforum so that the thread can be fully moderated, meaning, posts will require approval before they appear in public. We hope that this will keep the discussion focused and maintain a level of quality.

It is a big work, running to four volumes in the English translation (from the French by Poussin). We'll try to keep a certain pace, but this will of course depend on the participants. If it loses steam, well, we'll only have ourselves to blame. We're also anticipating this as an open ended study, so we have no set schedule.

So, with that, how about it Wheelers?

Malcolm wrote:

You only really to study chapters 1-6, which cover suffering (1-2), the cause of suffering (3-4), and the cessation of suffering (5-6). You don't really need to study the path (7-8) since we do not practice this path. So the last two chapters are academic only.

Grigoris said:

Geez, I wish I knew this before I ordered all four volumes!

Hopefully will be here soon!

Malcolm wrote:

Well, vol. 4 has the most excellent "refutation of the pugala" chapter, chapter 9.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 6:09 AM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Sems sde does not have a complete path since it is devoid of the teachings of the secret and unsurpassed secret cycle of man ngag sde.

florin said:

Yeah. Complete nonsense. Misleading people much ?

Your late teacher says the following:

“In substance, these three phases(The three series) correspond to three aspects of the Dzogchen teaching: "understanding" (rtogs pa), "stabilizing" (brtan pa), and "integrating" (bsre ba). One should not think, however, that the practice of Dzogchen must necessarily start with Semde and end with Mennagde; total realization can also be achieved by practicing only one of the three series, inasmuch as each of them is a path complete in itself. It is simply a matter of understanding which aspect receives greater emphasis in one series rather than another and knowing how to embark on the path that will be most beneficial in terms of one's capacity.”

Malcolm wrote:

Elsewhere, Norbu Rinpoche has emphasized the fact that sems sde cannot be practice in absence of the two stages; so it is a question of capacity, as he indicates. He also said at the Yangti retreat, that people should not remain stuck in klong sde, that they need to move on.

ChNN said lots of things and it is easy to cherry pick this and that.

But the man ngag sde tantras and commentaries are very clear that there are many adherents of sems sde are following a path of mind rather than ye shes. ChNN has also pointed out that no one obtains rainbow body through sems sde alone. So, I stand by my statements.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 8:50 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

#BLM #FTP

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 8:57 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Queequeg said:

An article recounting the time line. <https://www.nytimes.com/2020/05/29/us/derek-chauvin-george-floyd-worked-together.html>

The defense will likely argue this was the proper protocol under the training regimen Minneapolis police are required to follow.

Its not going to be an easy conviction.

As for the connection working at the same club - it appears they didn't cross paths.

Malcolm wrote:

The cop lies.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 9:06 AM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It's much simpler than this: if, when you hear the teachings for the first time, you are immediately free of afflictions, permanently, then you are a nongradualist. If you still experience affliction following introduction, etc., you are a gradualist.

fckw said:

Also, may I kindly point you to a <https://wisdomexperience.org/product/buddhahood-life/> whose title might be of relevance in this context.

Grigoris said:

I was hoping that t was a link to a hardcore porno mag, that would have been of more concrete benefit for my instant liberation.

fckw said:

Nah, that would be against forum rules. But I'm sure you can find something using duckduckgo.com. As for your "No True Scotsman" informal logic fallacy, ràsanach, to say the least.

So, you don't take Vimalamitra seriously. That's your own choice again. I did not write that book, Vima did. You can ask Malcolm to get an interpretation of the title, I did not invent it neither.

But to point out the confusion here. There exist 2 common and subsequent pitfalls that you can spot nearly all practitioner fall into. The first one happens relatively early along the path. The second one happens much later on along the path.

The first mistake happens, when a practitioner for the first time gains deeper insights through practice. Typically, this is the moment when unresolved narcissistic tendencies surface. The practitioner walks around with pride and thinks to him- or herself that enlightenment has now be reached. After all, how could the (non-) "experience" be deceiving? This mistake is so gross, it's relatively easy to spot. Some practitioners stop there and it takes years to get rid of it. They walk around and claim that "no practice is necessary". It's typically the moment when your Zen-masters would send you to do a lot of physical work in order to rid yourself of your pride or simply hit you with a stick. The resulting experience that even basic suffering in front of the hard work or shame of having been beaten with a stick has not been eradicated serves often as a kind reminder that enlightenment might not be so easy to gain, after all, despite some initial success along the path. In the best case, this results in a more humble attitude and helps the person to get out of the pitfall of grandiosity.

The second mistake happens much later along the path. It consists of a very subtle clinging to the idea that "it just cannot be so simple". Buddhanature must be somehow "hard to get". After all, years of practice and a lot of work were necessary to get to the stage where one is. It turns out, behind this wrong view is still some narcissistic tendency, although it's much more subtle than the one in the first stage. This is the place where people typically get stuck with the idea that practice must be kept up forever and ever, because there is really a huge amount of karma to get rid of, and after all, all the great masters were going through a lot of work. (At least, according to the stories.) The narcissistic tendency here is, after all, the pride in one's own unworthiness of really and fully having buddhahood at one's own core (figuratively speaking, because in fact, it's the other way round: the all-ground comes first, then the rest follows). So, it implies that the person keeps clinging to his/her own identification 1) with a self as a practitioner and 2) attributed ideas of "not enlightened", "Buddhist practitioner", "must study hard" to this self. These are thus 2 identifications at the same time, the self and its attributions. This is the pride people take in not being a buddha. In other words, the pride they take in claiming to be an "ordinary buddhist practitioner" instead, which equates to: "someone who is more special than everyone else who is not even a practitioner of such an important endeavor as buddhist practice and therefore even more lost than myself". It implies the person is fixated upon a persona ("buddhist practitioner") rather than letting go of this self-definition.

The biggest irony though lies in the fact that such practitioners, when confronted with their refusal to change their view and get out of this much more subtle pitfall, will point one to the mistake #1 as described above. In their confusion they are unable to distinguish between the two types of mistakes or two types of narcissism which are however of an entirely different nature. As they cannot perceive their own mistake of type #2 they mistakenly believe that other practitioners automatically must speak from POV of mistake #1. They interpret the words of people who already got out of pitfall #2 always from the POV of pitfall #1, which is a confusion or a misinterpretation.

Ken Wilber (yuck...) probably would call this a "pre-/trans-fallacy" of some sort. To provide an example from a different tradition: When e.g. Jesus Christ says "I and the Father are one" (short for: "I am God, and God is me") then this obviously does not mean the same as when John Doe says "I am God". Criticizing JC for taking the view of your average John Doe is however missing the point. So, if Vimalamitra says: Buddhahood in this life is possible then criticizing me for simply repeating his words is missing the point in the same way.

To complicate matters even more: although dzogchen takes the view of taking the result onto the path, nowhere does dzogchen state that no practice is required. This is again the same pre-/trans-fallacy at work. Just because someone has taken the dzogchen view of taking the result onto the path does not mean the person has realized everything there is to realize. Taking the dzogchen view is a means of practicing, not a statement of realization. Misunderstanding this point leads to all sorts of confusion, as we can see here in this thread. A practitioner on the level of Vimalamitra who does not commit to mistake #1 nor #2 will hardly talk of the need for formal practice anymore. After all, the identification with mistake #2 has dropped away also. That's why dzogchen is sometimes said to be "effortless".

Yet, as a response to such a statement, typically a person who still is subject to mistake #2 will reject the position that dzogchen is "effortless"! How could anyone claim that practice is "effortless"? Surely the person must be either lazy or deluded, how else could it be? But such a person's position, as I've shown above, is still subject to mistake #2. The person clings to a subtle belief of "unworthiness of actually being a buddha". Once the mistake has been put aside, a person freed of both mistake #1 and #2 will actually neither insist that the practice is hard nor that it is effortless. Instead, the person will simply continue practicing and stating either this or that depending on whichever context is current and whichever audience is present. For both "hard" and "effortless" are just ideas, fixations (negatively spoken), or, to take a more enlightened perspective, such words are just "skillful means" applied as deemed appropriate. They are not ultimate realities. In the same way the whole idea of a gradual path of practice is not an ultimate reality. How could buddhahood be either gradual or sudden or always-already-the-case or any other concept that our minds may produce? Again, these are just ideas, and it's necessary to drop them. Vimalamitra does address practitioners who are trapped in pitfall #2 - not pitfall #1! - in order to help them out of their trap, stating that "buddhahood in this life is possible" and hence implying that the person should finally accept the dzogchen view of practicing if s/he has not done so yet and drop the narcissism of clinging to the idea of not being worthy of already being a buddha. It's a teaching device to help people along the path, not a statement of ultimate reality.

So: I could equally say that dzogchen is a hard practice that takes a lot of time, i.e. many lifetimes. Or I could say that it's effortless. Or I could even say it's your present state, so don't look further. Honestly, I don't care personally. (Except that I care so much that I just spent like 45 minutes or so on keeping correcting this post to make sure it's not misunderstood in any possible way.) But insisting that it's ONLY one and NOT equally the other (or neither, for that matter), that's clearly a mistake.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 9:16 AM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

fckw said:

If you hold on to the dzogchen doctrine, then it can be done in a lifetime.

Grigoris said:

Quite a persistent delusion this one. Pretty common among Westerners, since they do not believe in countless lifetimes before this one.

fckw said:

While in my previous post I still had taken the view of a gradual path for the sake of speaking in the same context as your argument, if you are serious about dzogchen then you should be trying to take a view of taking the result as the path. In other words, if you keep on insisting on holding on to a view of a gradual path then - according to the view you have taken - you are a practitioner of one of the many gradual vehicles by definition, but not of dzogchen. So, you have to make a choice here.

Also, may I kindly point you to a <https://wisdomexperience.org/product/buddhahood-life/> whose title might be of relevance in this context.

Malcolm wrote:

No, if you are a dzogchen practitioner you understand that the state of dzogchen is beyond cause and result and you cultivate that knowledge, integrating in that state as much as possible. But continuing in that knowledge is cultivating a direct perception as Javier very correctly points out.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 9:30 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Queequeg said:

To be clear, I'm not trying to minimize the outrageous conduct of these police officers or minimize Mr. Floyd's lost life.

I'm just sharing how this lawyer sizes the case up.

Police need to be trained better at restraining people. There was no need for Mr. Chauvin to keep his knee on Mr. Floyd's neck once he was subdued. He was cuffed, face down, unarmed and there were at least four officers there who could have held him down without choking him to death until more backup arrived.

I don't recommend watching the footage, but what is so distressing to me, that makes me feel angry and hopeless, is the banality of this killing. Its truly horrific.

Malcolm wrote:

There was no need to arrest this man at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 9:30 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The cop lies.

Queequeg said:

The sky is blue.

What did he lie about?

Malcolm wrote:

Knowing George Floyd. This was personal. 1st degree murder.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 9:42 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Knowing George Floyd. This was personal. 1st degree murder.

Queequeg said:

What are you basing this assertion on? I don't think he has made a statement. The owner of the nightclub remarked that they both worked there but on different nights.

I'm not ruling it out, but on what we have so far, premeditation and intent are not going to be proven.

Malcolm wrote:

Dude, all you have to do is look at the smug expression on Chauvin's face to see it was personal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 9:54 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Queequeg said:

What are you basing this assertion on? I don't think he has made a statement. The owner of the nightclub remarked that they both worked there but on different nights.

I'm not ruling it out, but on what we have so far, premeditation and intent are not going to be proven.

Malcolm wrote:

Dude, all you have to do is look at the smug expression on Chauvin's face to see it was personal.

Queequeg said:

Intent and premeditation is something wholly different. He's depraved. He's indifferent to Mr. Floyd's life. He's a POS. Premeditation and intent are incredibly difficult elements to establish, especially in a chance encounter like this. They will never get a conviction on the charge. Maybe some more information shakes out that changes my analysis, but as much as I hate to say it, we can't just convict people for being lousy human beings.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't have any proof, but I know it's true. In this case, Occam's Razor.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 9:56 AM

Title: Re: personality views

Content:

confusedlayman said:

Even if u know emptiness of everything, non self and impermanence.. is it possible to still have personality views?

Lazy Lubber said:

"u" cannot know emptiness...

Malcolm wrote:

You haven't even a single clue.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 9:56 AM

Title: Re: Abhidharmakosabhasyam Book Club

Content:

Grigoris said:

Geez, I wish I knew this before I ordered all four volumes!

Hopefully will be here soon!

Malcolm wrote:

Well, vol. 4 has the most excellent "refutation of the pugala" chapter, chapter 9.

Kunzang Tobgyal said:

Is the Poussin translation the one you recommended Malcolm?

Malcolm wrote:

It's has its issues, but it is the easiest to obtain.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 10:03 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

PeterC said:

Two observations.

1. One of the reasons police in the US act so irresponsibly is that the qualified immunity jurisprudence has got completely out of control. The conditions necessary to secure a conviction are increasingly challenging - essentially you need a precedent where a policeman has been convicted for doing exactly the same thing. Reuter's is running a campaign against this, has done some very good reporting on it, and there are several members of SCOTUS who are keen to tear the whole system up, including Thomas who has written several times that it has absolutely no legal basis at all.

<https://www.reuters.com/investigates/special-report/usa-police-immunity-opposition/>

Queequeg said:

I'm not familiar with qualified immunity but did a quick search. This is a defense against a civil claim of a violation of civil rights? Its a federal defense? It would not be a defense on the murder charge, would it?

Malcolm wrote:

It's memo 618 for the police, and yes, even for murder. Laura Coates explained it all very clearly on CNN.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 10:31 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:
PeterC said:
Two observations.

1. One of the reasons police in the US act so irresponsibly is that the qualified immunity jurisprudence has got completely out of control. The conditions necessary to secure a conviction are increasingly challenging - essentially you need a precedent where a policeman has been convicted for doing exactly the same thing. Reuter's is running a campaign against this, has done some very good reporting on it, and there are several members of SCOTUS who are keen to tear the whole system up, including Thomas who has written several times that it has absolutely no legal basis at all.

<https://www.reuters.com/investigates/special-report/usa-police-immunity-opposition/>

Queequeg said:
I'm not familiar with qualified immunity but did a quick search. This is a defense against a civil claim of a violation of civil rights? Its a federal defense? It would not be a defense on the murder charge, would it?

PeterC said:
It is absolutely a defence against a murder charge. It is the legal bedrock of police misconduct. The worst part is the 'established precedent' part of the two-pronged test. Courts have previously found that a policeman is not liable for murdering someone in their home because there is not an on-point precedent where a court has previously found it impermissible for police to murder someone in their home (as opposed to, say, in their car on on the street).

This sounds crazy, but it's a fair statement of how the jurisprudence works.

<https://www.scotusblog.com/2019/11/symposium-so-what-exactly-are-the-parties-still-fighting-about-in-nysrpa-v-city-of-new-york/>

<https://slate.com/news-and-politics/2020/05/george-floyd-supreme-court-police-qualified-immunity.html>

<https://reason.com/2020/05/11/how-supreme-court-doctrine-protects-cops-who-kill-or-otherwise-use-excessive-force/>

<https://www.unlawfulshield.com/2019/10/supreme-court-may-be-preparing-to-consider-several-major-cases-on-qualified-immunity/>

This, followed closely by so-called "civil forfeiture" (where the police steal your assets and you have to prove their innocence to get them back) is probably the most evil legal doctrine currently in force in the US.

Malcolm wrote:
This all represents a failure of moderates to effectively govern. The only rational response to the nascent authoritarianism in this country is a broad-based left wing revolt against the status quo on every issue from civil rights and justice reform, banking, to energy and climate change, immigration, militarism, etc., take your pick.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 10:34 AM

Title: Re: personality views

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You haven't even a single clue.

Lazy Lubber said:

What "u"? What "you"?

Malcolm wrote:

Don't be an idiot.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 10:51 AM

Title: Re: emptiness of everything (subject and object) is cure for everything?

Content:

Grigoris said:

If emptiness was the cure then all phenomena (including all beings), due to the fact that they lack inherent nature, would be liberated. But they are not.

spike said:

Buddha nature is the inherent nature which exists in all beings.

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, but that really doesn't mean much. All fire is hot, so what? Buddhanature is just a religious fetish. Like God.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 11:37 AM

Title: Re: Multicolored Garuda

Content:

Toenail said:

Does this practice of Dzogchen Community come from Kalachakra?

Malcolm wrote:

I don't recall ChNN ever giving this practice. But generally yes, it is an activity form of Kalachakra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 11:39 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Rinchen Samphel said:

Stuff is starting to get a little scary. If anyone on this site lives in the cities affected, or choose to join the protests (which I don't think many would recommend), please be as safe as you can. CNN headquarters has been damaged by this as well, just saw a video of people breaking the windows, throwing flash bombs, tear gas, all sorts of stuff. There is a possibility this could unfold in other parts of the country as well. In my state we had a black man recently killed by a cop, and protests were happening here, so far nothing related to this though. Like I said, stay safe, stay updated on what's going on in your city too. Don't want to accidentally end up in the middle of a protest.

Malcolm wrote:

Prophetic words from Dr. King: "Certain conditions continue to exist in our society, which must be condemned as vigorously as we condemn riots. But in the final analysis, a riot is the language of the unheard. And what is it that America has failed to hear? It has failed to hear that the plight of the Negro poor has worsened over the last few years. It has failed to hear that the promises of freedom and justice have not been met. And it has failed to hear that large segments of white society are more concerned about tranquility and the status quo than about justice, equality and humanity. And so in a real sense our nation's summers of riots are caused by our nation's winters of delay. And as long as America postpones justice, we stand in the position of having these recurrences of violence and riots over and over again. Social justice and progress are the absolute guarantors of riot prevention"

#BLM #FTP

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 12:02 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Queequeg said:

OK, so I did a little more reading on this. I'm not an expert by any means, but I understand it a little better.

Qualified Immunity is a defense against a so-called Section 1983 claim. After the reconstruction amendments were passed, Congress realized they needed a mechanism for their enforcement because it was unlikely that local or state governments would do so. So they created a private, civil claim by which a person could bring a lawsuit, essentially in tort, against officials who violate a person's federal civil rights.

A tort is a private claim, meaning it is a claim that belongs to an injured individual against another party who caused that injury. In the case of 1983 claims, the injury is a violation of civil rights caused by a government official.

1983 claims are civil claims. Civil claims are different than criminal charges. The most obvious difference is that in a civil case a person can seek monetary (money) or equitable (compulsion of certain acts or refraining from acts by a defendant) awards. Criminal charges are brought by the state and most often involve questions of someone's liberty ie. whether they go to prison or not.

There are certain kinds of immunity that apply to officials in criminal cases, but this travesty of qualified immunity is not a defense to a criminal murder charge. It could be a defense to a civil claim for damages under 1983 where the claim concerns the violation of the right not to be killed by the police, for instance.

When I learned about civil forfeiture it blew my mind - IIRC a person can have their property taken by the government just for being charged with a crime - they don't even have to be convicted. Its insane.

Malcolm wrote:
Memo 618.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 12:13 PM
Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...
Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The 18 sems sde empowerments are the empowerments of the mental focus of a meditator. The various direct introductions one sees used these days are variations on number 2. it is important to understand this point to avoid the fault of claiming that in Dzogchen no formal empowerment is needed. The Rangshar states in chapter 8: "The faults of not obtaining the empowerment are as follows: In the bardo one is alarmed, panicked, exhausted, impeded, and one can also lose consciousness.

"While one has not yet left the body of traces, migrating beings will not see one as worthy of respect. One's merit will be small, one's life short, one's enjoyments of living will be few, one will be powerless, and many obstacles will occur. Nothing will be accomplished. Those are the faults of not obtaining the empowerment for the conduct of secret mantra. A yogin of secret mantra conduct must first obtain empowerment. If empowerment is not obtained, not even the Buddha will be able to turn the wheel on the stage of a tathāgata. If the wheel cannot be turned, then the nirmāṇakāya will not be able to benefit migrating beings with compassion. Therefore, the empowerment of the conduct of secret mantra must be obtained.”

Therefore, we can understand that the meaning of direct introductions, etc., are the same in meaning as the fourth empowerment, etc.

Danny said:

How do we understand what you posted and what's in the semde kunbyed rgyalpo tantra (although some argue that it is not a tantra because it lacks the 10 subjects or qualities) but.....

The non view, meditation, conduct, samaya, initiation, mandala etc of semde?

I'm not following the assertion that empowerments are essential.

Also fault of not obtaining seems out of context, does the quote refer to doubts of having received "something", again this seems like taking the mind as the path.

Thanks

Regards

Malcolm wrote:

Kun byed rgyal po in its entirety is a sustained argument about the nature of the basis, bodhicitta; not the path, rig pa. This why it negates the ten qualifications of the path, since they don't apply to the basis. Further, the kun byed rgyal po is not the root tantra of the Great Perfection. That distinction belongs to the Sound Tantra, which makes observations similar to the Rangshar, which is the fundamental explanatory tantra of the Great Perfection.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 8:08 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Rinchen Samphel said:

The only thing that worries me is if the National Guard is deployed, which is possible if these riots get too violent and police are unable to keep it confined. I'd hate to see more lives lost because of protesting a life lost. Im all about the freedom to assemble and free speech, but I get worried when it shows signs of turning violent. Its now happening in my city too.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, cops get to be violent with impunity, but protestors are supposed to be calm and civil. Give me a break.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 8:10 PM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

↑ said:

. That distinction belongs to the Sound Tantra, which makes observations similar to the Rangshar, which is the fundamental explanatory tantra of the Great Perfection.

Danny said:

That would be composed by manjushrimitra and explanatory tantra by the amazing longchenpa?

If memory serves.

Regards

Malcolm wrote:

No, they are both teachings of Garab Dorje.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 8:16 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Queequeg said:

I can't find anything except references to a tv show I don't watch. From what I can glean, it sounds like a conspiracy theory. Illuminati stuff.

Malcolm wrote:

You should watch it. It is very funny.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 8:43 PM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

Danny said:

That would be composed by manjushrimitra and explanatory tantra by the amazing longchenpa?

If memory serves.

Regards

Malcolm wrote:

No, they are both teachings of Garab Dorje.

Danny said:

I knew the source was garab dorje, but the authorship of the tantra 10th - 14th century?

Malcolm wrote:

The 17 tantras are early eleventh century termas, ca. 1030.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 8:54 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Rinchen Samphel said:

The only thing that worries me is if the National Guard is deployed, which is possible if these riots get too violent and police are unable to keep it confined. I'd hate to see more lives lost because of protesting a life lost. Im all about the freedom to assemble and free speech, but I get worried when it shows signs of turning violent. Its now happening in my city too.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, cops get to be violent with impunity, but protestors are supposed to be calm and civil. Give me a break.

Fa Dao said:

Bro..seriously...you need to take a step back and take a breath. Starting to sound like you are condoning the violence, looting and rioting as well as blaming all LEO"s for the actions of a few bad apples. Look at it like this..how would it be if all Buddhists were held responsible for the actions of a few Buddhist teachers who have sexually assaulted some of their students? Look man, I get it....this whole thing has really gotten to you..but sometimes its good to take a step back and clear your head a bit...know what I mean? No judgement here..we all have our demons to deal with, right?

Malcolm wrote:

"Certain conditions continue to exist in our society, which must be condemned as vigorously as we condemn riots. But in the final analysis, a riot is the language of the unheard. And what is it that America has failed to hear? It has failed to hear that the plight of the Negro poor has worsened over the last few years. It has failed to hear that the promises of freedom and justice have not been met. And it has failed to hear that large segments of white society are more concerned about tranquility and the status quo than about justice, equality and humanity. And so in a real sense our nation's summers of riots are caused by our nation's winters of delay. And as long as America postpones justice, we stand in the position of having these recurrences of violence and riots over and over again. Social justice and progress are the absolute guarantors of riot prevention" MLK

Nothing has changed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 10:06 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Dan74 said:

I'd be very interested to hear what you and other Americans who are passionate about this think is the way forward. What measures should be taken to bring about this positive peace that MLK spoke of? I mean the obvious think is a change of culture in the police force, but I mean on a deeper level.

Malcolm wrote:

When there is justice, there will be peace, and not until.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 10:14 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Fa Dao said:

blaming all LEO"s for the actions of a few bad apples.

mandog said:

I don't really agree. While it may be the case that there are many good cops, there are systemic problems with how policing is done in the United States in general. It is not accurate to describe these systemic problems as "the actions of a few bad apples".

Fa Dao said:

Naw bro..I think there is a very vocal minority on the far right and far left that needs to be addressed. The MSM stokes the shit and sensationalizes a few bad apples making everybody believe that things are worse over the entire country than what they really are. I think the majority of people in the US are just like anybody else in the world..want a good life, family, job, security, freedom etc. Im not saying that things are perfect here..it is samsara after all...just that things are not as bad as the MSM et al would have everybody believe.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, because the news is not supposed to be reported. Get real man. The "media" is not stoking this. Racist cops are stoking this. How? By lynching black men in public with impunity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 10:19 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Tlalok said:

White people care more about the destruction of property than they do about black lives.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but it has been that way colonial times. Here is a timeline of laws concerning slaves, etc.:

https://www.shsu.edu/~jll004/vabeachcourse_spring09/bacons_rebellion/slavelawincolonialvirginiatimeline.pdf

This one stands out, which seems very similar to the reasoning PeterC mentioned about conditional immunity:

1669: Virginia law enacted: An act about the casual killing of slaves.

WHEREAS the only law in force for the punishment of refractory servants (a) resisting their master, mistress or overseer cannot be inflicted upon negroes, nor the obstinacy of many of them by other than violent means suppressed, Be it enacted and declared by this grand assembly, if any slave resist his master (or other by his masters order correcting him) and by the extremity of the correction should chance to die, that his death shall not be accounted felony, but the master (or that other person appointed by the master to punish him) be acquitted from molestation, since it cannot be presumed that premeditated malice (which alone makes murder felony) should induce any man to destroy his own estate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 10:35 PM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

Danny said:

I knew the source was Garab Dorje, but the authorship of the tantra 10th - 14th century?

Malcolm wrote:

The 17 tantras are early eleventh century terms, ca. 1030.

Danny said:

Right, so we can say that there's 3 streams of Dzogchen, Indian (mahasanti), a mix of later Tibetan Shang shung/ indo/Persian influence, and pure Tibetan bon/Buddhist terma traditions.

Have I got that ballpark understanding?

Regards

Malcolm wrote:

While certainly one can find pre-Buddhist Tibetan myths woven into various Buddhist mahayoga, anuyoga, and atiyoga tantras of the ancient tradition, the influence of Iranian religion on the actual doctrinal content of Dzogchen teachings is minimal at best. The reverse cannot be said of the Bon tradition, where the influence of Indian religion on Bon is overwhelming.

I personally do not believe there is any evidence at all which indicates the ZZNG is pre-Buddhist. This does not mean I discount the teachings of the ZZNG, since they are very interesting and more or less the same in meaning as the Buddhist Dzogchen teachings, using similar language, concepts, anatomy and so on. But the borrowings from the Buddhist tradition are very obvious and cannot be ignored.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 11:37 PM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

Danny said:

Sure, there is even Mongolian influence with introduction of Gyalpo dorje legpa,

Malcolm wrote:

Dorje Legpa is not a rgyal po, he is a ma sang, one of the seven ma sang brothers, not Mongolian at all.

Danny said:

possibly it has always been present as a unbroken transmission, of an earlier tradition than Buddhist?

Malcolm wrote:

If you accept Bon claims, sure. I don't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

Danny said:

it would stand since we don't discount the effectiveness of the different streams of Dzogchen into Tibet,

Malcolm wrote:

There are only two streams of Dzogchen transmission in Tibet: kama and terma. On the Buddhist side of things, so-called sems sde and klong sde are kama, long lineage. On the terma side of things, there is man ngag sde, the pinnacle of which is the 17 tantras.

In Bon, on the "kama" side of things there is ZZNG, everything else is terma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 11:42 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

justsit said:

...said the middle class white man.

Minobu said:

I don't think this sort of thing is helping..

back to what i have been trying to say for weeks now...

until you stop seeing people as either black or white...the knot never gets undone.

everytime a statement like above is voiced...the knot gets tighter.

Biden had an opportunity to speak out about his own subconscious racism and it wasn't on his or his handlers radar even..

It's like Mara is having a field day...

Tlalok said:

Black people have been begging white people to do this for centuries. White people generally cannot, and will not ever let themselves see black people as other human beings, their entire ego, culture and system of government is predicated on treating black and brown people like cattle. It's where disagree with the quote from Dr. King that Malcom posted, a riot isn't the language of the unheard, it's the language of the ignored.

Malcolm wrote:

Unheard is ignored.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 30th, 2020 at 11:44 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Minobu said:

until you stop seeing people as either black or white...the knot never gets undone.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry man, but this is so wrong under the present circumstances in the US.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 1:02 AM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

Danny said:

I ment pehar not legpa.

Malcolm wrote:

Pehar Gyalpo's origins are far from certain. However, in general, based on traditional accounts, we can understand he first resided in Bengal, later moved to Bhata Hor (the Central Asian Uighur Turks of the Orkhon Uighur Empire (745 – 840)), and thence to Samye. It is important to keep in mind that the Uighur Turks were a) enemies of the Tibetans in the 7-9th centuries, and b) followed Tengrism, Buddhism and Manichaeism, with the last being the official religion of the Bhata Hor from 762 onwards.

A popular tale, which my own teacher told me, was that when Guru Rinpoche was involved in taming the spirits of Tibet, there was a young monk in the audience at Samye who asked Guru Rinpoche what frightened him most. Guru Rinpoche replied "sdig pa." (misdeeds). The next day, Guru Rinpoche encountered a massive scorpion (sdig pa, same spelling, different meaning), at which Guru Rinpoche manifested as the wrathful guru, Guru Drakpo, seized the scorpion by its tail, and threatened to smash its head with his vajra. Given that the Tibetans were at war with the Uighur Turks at this time, this could also be interpreted as symbol of Tibetan martial prowess in Central Asia. But given how little we actually know about

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 1:50 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Minobu said:

I don't think this sort of thing is helping..

back to what i have been trying to say for weeks now...

until you stop seeing people as either black or white...the knot never gets undone.

everytime a statement like above is voiced...the knot gets tighter.

Biden had an opportunity to speak out about his own subconscious racism and it wasn't on his or his handlers radar even..

It's like Mara is having a field day...

Queequeg said:

Its too far gone for kumbaya.

Minobu said:

this whole it all stems from colonial thinking white supremacy conquer the world and give them Jesus thing is passe..

The point malcolm made is true ...BUT!!!! then came the American Revolution and the Constitution and the Bill of Rights and the whole paradigm...

this changed the world paradigm....

Malcolm wrote:

It changed the world for white Americans. It hasn't done much for the rest of the world, quite frankly or minorities in our country.

American freedom for white people has come because America has been kneeling on the neck of the world since WWII. Just look at the long string of fascist dictators we have supported since WWII. Look at the number of struggles for freedom American foreign policy has thrown under the bus since then.

When considering our history in the 19th century, look at the illegal territory grab we made in the aftermath of the Mexican-American war. First, we illegally annexed Texas in 1845, a total Putin move. Then we illegally occupied Santa Fe de Nuevo México after provoking a war with Mexican Troops and forcing them to attack us. We also invaded Alta California and Baja. We even invaded Central Mexico and for a time, captured Mexico City. We basically bought off the Mexican government in the Treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo for $15 million, and assumed control of the Mexican Cession, supplemented in 1852 by the Gadsden Purchase of S. Arizona, etc. Speaking of James Gadsden, he was also instrumental in the expulsion of the Seminole Tribe in 1823. His grandfather, Christopher Gadsden, was the designer of the Gadsden Flag.

Then came the Spanish-American War, where we took over Puerto Rico, Guam and the Philippines. This led to the Philippine-American war. You might recall Trump retelling, with relish, about how Pershing engaged in mass murder of Muslims in the Philippines, having them shot with bullets soaked in pig's blood. It is a false story of course, but it just shows how much of a bigot and a racist that Trump is.

And of course, we do not even need to mention the incredible cruelty with which we have and still do treat native people. America's history is woven in the blood and tears of slavery, genocide, and oppression in the name of White Supremacy. To not understand this is to not understand America.

So, while I applaud you for your enthusiasm, the story of American Democracy is much darker than it appears on the surface, sorry to say.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 2:35 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Rinchen Samphel said:

The only thing that worries me is if the National Guard is deployed, which is possible if these riots get too violent and police are unable to keep it confined. I'd hate to see more lives lost because of protesting a life lost. I'm all about the freedom to assemble and free speech, but I get worried when it shows signs of turning violent. It's now happening in my city too.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, cops get to be violent with impunity, but protestors are supposed to be calm and civil. Give me a break.

Rinchen Samphel said:

Yeah, that's exactly what I said.... get off your moral high horse so you can adequately perceive what I am saying: I HOPE NO LIVES ARE LOST. Enough have been lost, the last thing we need are more black lives lost for the sake of protesting black lives already lost. How does that mean cops get to be violent, I don't agree with what the cop did to George Floyd, I don't agree with what happened to Arbery, I don't agree with the black man being killed in my city a couple weeks ago who was found with 15 BULLETS in him. Do I have to completely explain myself like this every time to prevent you from projecting ideas on what I am saying? Give yourself a break, maybe another 1 year break from this site. You just can't seem to handle there are other people with other views.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not projecting anything onto you at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 2:39 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Rinchen Samphel said:

How does that mean cops get to be violent...

Malcolm wrote:

The police systematically place their own safety over the safety of others. This is why they kill so many people extrajudicially, and get away with it. All they have to do is say, "I was afraid for my life." Try that as a civilian as see how far that gets you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 2:42 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Tlalok said:

The cops aren't corrupt, they're doing exactly what they're supposed to, enforce white supremacy.

The system is working fine, its supposed to do this.

Rinchen Samphel said:

So thats not corrupt to you? You are sayings people who decide to become a cop and "enforce" white supremacy arnt corrupt? Or are you just trying to score some points with Malcolm by making such a claim with no substance?

Malcolm wrote:

He is saying that whoever works for a corrupt system is corrupted.

Dr. West describing the failure of "black faces in high places," as he puts it:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 2:44 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Rinchen Samphel said:

How does that mean cops get to be violent...

Malcolm wrote:

The police systematically place their own safety over the safety of others. This is why they kill so many people extrajudicially, and get away with it. All they have to do is say, "I was afraid for my life." Try that as a civilian as see how far that gets you.

Rinchen Samphel said:

Your point is not made, given within the context of what i said. You must be reading something i am not (projecting? Oh shoot, nevermind, we already cleared that up)

Malcolm wrote:

Not every response to you needs to address the point you specifically would like to make, which was, that you hope, quite sincerely I imagine, that more people will not be injured in the days of unrest to come.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 2:49 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Rinchen Samphel said:

So thats not corrupt to you? You are sayings people who decide to become a cop and "enforce" white supremacy arnt corrupt? Or are you just trying to score some points with Malcolm by making such a claim with no substance?

Tlalok said:

America is a white supremacist country. America's police are there to enforce white supremacy. Killing, maiming, and imprisoning black people is what they're supposed to do.

Rinchen Samphel said:

Oh yeah, thats why there are no whites, hispanics, etc. anywhere to be found in jail. Because they arnt black, and no cops care about crime. Man, dont worry about even calling 911 (unless, its against someone being black, or else theh wont come.)

Malcolm wrote:

In April of 2019, there were 475,900 blacks in US prisons, 436,500 whites, and 336,500 "Hispanics" in US prisons. Blacks are 12% of the population, Hispanics are 16% percent of the population, and whites are 64% of the population. That means there are six times as many blacks in US prisons than there are whites per 100,000, and double the rate for Hispanics. This article, by the way, has the hopeful title: "The gap between the number of blacks and whites in prison is shrinking":

<https://www.pewresearch.org/fact-tank/2019/04/30/shrinking-gap-between-number-of-blacks-and-whites-in-prison/>

So figure it out. Think there is no justification for claiming that America is a white supremacist country now?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 2:55 AM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dorje Legpa is not a rgyal po, he is a ma sang, one of the seven ma sang brothers, not Mongolian at all.

cloudburst said:

Isn't it true that some traditions regard Dorje legpa as an enlightened being, others as a worldly entity? Some Nyingma traditions hold DL to be an enlightened protector, no?

Malcolm wrote:

Dorleg is a wisdom protector. Beyond samsara.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 3:06 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Nemo said:

Even the CCP has given up on the wet market lie now.

<https://nationalpost.com/news/world/covid-19-chinas-cdc-says-wuhan-wet-market-was-site-of-superspreader-incident-but-not-outbreaks-source/amp>

My track record on Covid predictions is pretty good. Better than any official source. Here is what I think happened.

In 2011 F16, a universal antibody (temporary cure) for all 16 influenza A strains, was discovered. The parent of all influenza A strains was the Spanish Flu. Zoonotic diseases are rare and incredibly dangerous. American interests hired a hot shot virologist in Wuhan to do research much too dangerous to be allowed within the United States. She was to secure multiple SARS type coronaviruses, perform gain of function testing in the lab and then develop a universal antibody for SARS, MERS, etc just like F16. This could theoretically be worth billions of dollars. GoF testing began in the Wuhan Institute of Virology in 2019. A postdoc got infected because discipline was getting lax at the lab. Because it was kept secret it escaped early containment and the Chinese military took over the institute. The military tried to cover up the cover up leading to the entire world getting infected.

Malcolm wrote:

But your theory does not account for this, which is from the Daily Mail report the National Star report is based upon:

The 'patient zero' - the first person to actually contract COVID-19 in Wuhan - has not been confirmed but authorities believe it may have been a 55-year-old man from Hubei province infected on November 17.

<https://www.dailymail.co.uk/sciencetech/article-8369085/Wuhan-wet-market-NOT-origin-coronavirus-pandemic.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 4:51 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Nemo said:

Even the CCP has given up on the wet market lie now.

<https://nationalpost.com/news/world/covid-19-chinas-cdc-says-wuhan-wet-market-was-site-of-superspreader-incident-but-not-outbreaks-source/amp>

My track record on Covid predictions is pretty good. Better than any official source. Here is what I think happened.

In 2011 F16, a universal antibody(temporary cure) for all 16 influenza A strains, was discovered. The parent of all influenza A strains was the Spanish Flu. Zoonotic diseases are rare and incredibly dangerous. American interests hired a hot shot virologist in Wuhan to do research much too dangerous to be allowed within the United States. She was to secure multiple SARS type coronaviruses, perform gain of function testing in the lab and then develop a universal antibody for SARS, MERS, etc just like F16. This could theoretically be worth billions dollars. GoF testing began in the Wuhan Institute of virology in 2019. A postdoc got infected because discipline was getting lax at the lab. Because it was kept secret it escaped early containment and the Chinese military took over the institute. The military tried to cover up the cover up leading to the entire world getting infected.

Malcolm wrote:

But your theory does not account for this, which is from the Daily Mail report the National Star report is based upon:

The 'patient zero' - the first person to actually contract COVID-19 in Wuhan - has not been confirmed but authorities believe it may have been a 55-year-old man from Hubei province infected on November 17.

<https://www.dailymail.co.uk/sciencetech/article-8369085/Wuhan-wet-market-NOT-origin-coronavirus-pandemic.html>

Nemo said:

Actually it does. As I posted earlier. The window is Oct 6 to 11th.

https://www.documentcloud.org/documents/6884792-MACE-E-PAI-COVID-19-ANALYSIS-

Redacted.html?fbclid=IwAR21EkFOEEpu8RmtGvjD0fwD5hpS2l5Z8pOTSdQfHlsGxBjzdavkfN8FicU

Malcolm wrote:

There is no information about where he was infected. He was not a lab worker at the Wuhan lab.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 5:04 AM

Title: Re: Zen's stand regarding 'The Absolute'

Content:

Wayfarer said:

within the domain of discourse of comparative religion, 'the absolute' has a meaning, but that doesn't make it easy to define.

Astus said:

The question at hand is about "Zen's stand regarding 'The Absolute'", and as the term itself was taken from Blofeld's translation, it turned out that Huangbo's records did not actually name anything "The Absolute", but it's rather the translator's choice to render various common Buddhist terms as such. So it's not just that there is no absolute, nobody has even mentioned it before Blofeld.

Wayfarer said:

I think 'the absolute' is not a bad candidate for translation of 'the unconditioned' (as used in, for instance, the translations in Sutta Central.) After all, nothing can be 'partially unconditioned'.

Malcolm wrote:

Uncompounded dharms are nonexistent by definition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 7:06 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Minobu, We won the war of 1812. We also inherited Britain's former world dominance, cause nukes.

So, while I applaud you for your enthusiasm, the story of American Democracy is much darker than it appears on the surface, sorry to say.

Minobu said:

Yeah well they make damn good movies....

Look at Britain, She drew up all the lines on the planet including yours after you lost the war of 1812.

Then she gives everyone independence but everywhere She drew a line like British Occupied Iraq. Instead of dividing amongst the Sunu Shite and the Kurds...

No no no , mister put em all together ,and make trillions cause they hate each other...we can sell arms , police them, invade them, and re-give them their independence....IT's Kenner It's Fun!!!! Kids...

Look at India, first up make Pakistan and Bangladesh one country and give Kashmir to India...mwuuuuahahahahaha ...

Britain invented the Opium Trade....Yankee Traders got in on it neer end...but hey figured out how to use the money from drugs to fund a plethora of wars and sell arms..... All of the European wars excluding WWII were a con amongst the aristocracy .

So yeah you can go on about this game...

But out of the muddy swamp the Lotus rises above it and Blossoms.

Thats what your forefathers were...friggin Lotus Blossoms from what ever it is that causes an immune system to develop.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 7:14 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Nemo said:

Actually it does. As I posted earlier. The window is Oct 6 to 11th.

https://www.documentcloud.org/documents/6884792-MACE-E-PAI-COVID-19-ANALYSIS-

Redacted.html?fbclid=IwAR21EkFOEEpu8RmtGvjD0fwD5hpS2l5Z8pOTSdQfHIsGxBjzdavkfN8FlcU

Malcolm wrote:

There is no information about where he was infected. He was not a lab worker at the Wuhan lab.

Nemo said:

Serious shit went down at the WIV in early October. The entire area was locked down. A postdoc disappeared and she was scubbed from the website. I think she is patient zero. I can dig it all up if you are curious.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, always curious.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 7:53 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If the police joined the protestors, like the police chief of Santa Cruz did today, there would be no violence. But as long as the police are seen as symbols of oppression by the black community and act oppressively, which they do, there will never be an end to this.

Rinchen Samphel said:

The only thing that worries me is if the National Guard is deployed, which is possible if these riots get too violent and police are unable to keep it confined. I'd hate to see more lives lost because of protesting a life lost. Im all about the freedom to assemble and free speech, but I get worried when it shows signs of turning violent. Its now happening in my city too.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, cops get to be violent with impunity, but protestors are supposed to be calm and civil. Give me a break.

Fa Dao said:

Bro..seriously...you need to take a step back and take a breath. Starting to sound like you are condoning the violence, looting and rioting as well as blaming all LEO"s for the actions of a few bad apples. Look at it like this..how would it be if all Buddhists were held responsible for the actions of a few Buddhist teachers who have sexually assaulted some of their students? Look man, I get it....this whole thing has really gotten to you..but sometimes its good to take a step back and clear your head a bit...know what I mean? No judgement here..we all have our demons to deal with, right?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 8:30 AM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

Danny said:

it would stand since we don't discount the effectiveness of the different streams of Dzogchen into Tibet,

Malcolm wrote:

There are only two streams of Dzogchen transmission in Tibet: kama and terma. On the Buddhist side of things, so-called sems sde and klong sde are kama, long lineage. On the terma side of things, there is man ngag sde, the pinnacle of which is the 17 tantras.

In Bon, on the "kama" side of things there is ZZNG, everything else is terma.

Fa Dao said:

Where does the Longde Tantra King of the Infinite Expanse/klong chen rab byams rgyal po'i rgyud fit into this schema? Any idea as to its history etc?

Malcolm wrote:

You should Sten Anspal's paper on klong sde, it's about the only literature out there on klong sde.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 8:57 AM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Where does the Longde Tantra King of the Infinite Expanse/klong chen rab byams rgyal po'i rgyud fit into this schema? Any idea as to its history etc?

Malcolm wrote:

You should Sten Anspal's paper on klong sde, it's about the only literature out there on klong sde.

Fa Dao said:

Ive had that for quite a while...was just hoping there might be something more out there and figured if there was you would know about it....

Malcolm wrote:

Eventually I will publish something.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 9:00 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Tlalok said:

White people generally cannot, and will not ever let themselves see black people as other human beings, their entire ego, culture and system of government is predicated on treating black and brown people like cattle.

Manjushri said:

Sorry for the intrusion, but if I may ask, do you genuinely, literally believe this? I must say I find this post a bit baffling (and perhaps even a tad racist or at least prejudiced?), but I'm interested in learning the fundament that supports it.

I come from a European country that has a dark history of colonialism, exploitation and slavery. However, I have studied abroad for some years and travelled through most of Europe (and other places around the globe), and I must say that neither in my homeland nor abroad, in the thousands of people that have entered (and left) my life, I have ever met anyone with those views or similar ones. I wonder what makes one expound an incredibly controversial statement like that with such certainty?

Malcolm wrote:

Living in America is not the same thing as visiting. Our systematic racism is just as obvious as that of Britain, etc. You just have to see it for what it is. In particular, our president does not see black and brown people as human, unless they are kissing his ass. And he regularly posts shit from white supremacists.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 9:58 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You just can't make this up:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 10:05 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Living in America is not the same thing as visiting. Our systematic racism is just as obvious as that of Britain, etc. You just have to see it for what it is.

Manjushri said:

I studied (and therefore lived) in Britan, England to be more precise, for three years. Not once did I come across an instance of racism, nor did I meet individuals with intolerant or xenophobic views. In fact, I was pleasantly surprised to find how welcoming and sympathetic, kind and interested people were towards the others, independent of their skin colour, language or culture. Hence why the post above has taken me aback.

DharmaN00b said:

Sounds like you got hoovered into the foreign student areas where the whole local economy is catered for that. The town where I live gets a lot of funding and support from Chinese students although there's a heavy multicultural mix with a high proportion of first second and third generation Pakistani Bangladeshi and Indian.

Whether you travelled further afield, from the intellectual sectors I don't know, but in general the trouble is more in poor areas and not easy to say racist elements involved or not. You may have been aware of extremist cells here too. By that I mean fundies, or groups like the EDL or Britain First. They tend to clash once in while.

EDIT: just saw QQ's post.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, it's pretty easy. In rural America you will run across plenty of white people who have no clue how to deal with black people because their innate goodness has been corrupted by a culture that encourages generational racism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 10:08 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Manjushri said:

...

I come from a European country that has a dark history of colonialism, exploitation and slavery. However, I have studied abroad for some years and travelled through most of Europe (and other places around the globe), and I must say that neither in my homeland nor abroad, in the thousands of people that have entered (and left) my life, I have ever met anyone with those views or similar ones. I wonder what makes one expound an incredibly controversial statement like that with such certainty?

justsit said:

Just curious - how much of the time you spent in the US involved discussion of the American civil war and its enduring legacy? Or the Civil Rights movement of the 1960's?

Manjushri said:

I didn't spend much time at the US to be honest, and I may have only standard knowledge or not be aware of the profound complexity of the themes you mentioned in detail, but that's not really the point, is it? I acknowledged from the beginning the history of exploitation and prejudice from colonial powers (and the USA) and their peoples in past times. What I find a bit confusing is the assertion that white people in general are racist, which certainly doesn't conform with my perception or experience which I described above.

Malcolm wrote:

Europeans also have white privilege, man, just look at your countries and their ghettos.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 10:11 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Manjushri said:

I studied (and therefore lived) in Britain, England to be more precise, for three years. Not once did I come across an instance of racism, nor did I meet individuals with intolerant or xenophobic views. In fact, I was pleasantly surprised to find how welcoming and sympathetic, kind and interested people were towards the others, independent of their skin colour, language or culture. Hence why the post above has taken me aback.

Queequeg said:

I don't know what your exact experience was, but in my experience, when studying abroad, you're in an enlightened bubble. You're not working and interacting on a daily basis with people, and don't often have occasion to meet and interact with regular people. You probably never end up in the marginalized parts of town. The experience you do have outside of the school bubble will be shallow and passing. It's a nice, extended bit of tourism. You don't actually live in those places.

Manjushri said:

Well, perhaps to an extent, but I can tell you that during those three years I held three different jobs, one at a Poundland shop, another at a hospital and another at a Sports Direct shop. As you may guess, all these three workplaces provide plenty of various experiences and allow one to come across all sorts of personalities and social types of all ages. I also befriended people of all strata and visited, dined and slept in homes in the outskirts and "less fancy" parts of the city I lived in.

The only less pleasant experience I had was when walking back home after a night out, me and a couple of passersby had to take refuge in a kebab shop because a fight broke out on the street between two groups of young people. Don't know if it was a "turf brawl" or whatever, but it was an altercation between Middle-Eastern looking young lads that went sour out of the blue.

Malcolm wrote:

Dude, Europe is white privilege central. Merkel knows this, which is why she is such a kind-hearted person, even if her austerity policies are a product of technocratic blindness. And, I've met many racist and anti-Semitic Europeans. Alternative for Germany, the French National Front, Orban's Hungary, etc., all prove this. The E.U. has also failed. You Judy don't know it yet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 10:15 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Europeans also have white privilege, man, just look at your countries and their ghettos. Dude, Europe is white privilege central. Merkel knows this, which is why she is such a kind-hearted person, even if her austerity policies are a product of technocratic blindness.

Manjushri said:

Not really sure what you mean by that or how does that tie into the idea of white people being generally racist. Perhaps you will be kind enough to elaborate?

Malcolm wrote:

Study your own history again, and then factor in the fact that Western Europe has not come to grips with its own racist past. The people of all the former Colonial European powers, England, France, Spain, etc., live in countries that remain bastions of white privilege.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 10:31 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Manjushri said:

Not really sure what you mean by that or how does that tie into the idea of white people being generally racist. Perhaps you will be kind enough to elaborate?

Malcolm wrote:

Study your own history again, and then factor in the fact that Europe has not come to grips with its own racist past.

Manjushri said:

The history of the Continent has been studied thoroughly and is perfectly acknowledged in my first post, as you saw.

I nonetheless still fail to see how exploitation and colonialism in the past can act as a proof for a supposed general mindset in the world today.

PS: Perhaps you are conflating two arguments? My gripe was from the beginning, I repeat, with the bewildering assertion that "white people in general are racist".

Malcolm wrote:

Western Europeans have been the major exploiter of the world's resources since 1492 and remain so to this day. That is the very definition of privilege. That exploitation is based on a doctrine of white supremacy, and continues to this day as a function of such beliefs. The very laws that protect minorities in Western European dominated countries are proof of that this is so. If systematic racism was not endemic in all Western European dominated countries, these laws would not be needed.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 10:46 AM
Title: Re: George Floyd Protests
Content:

Manjushri said:

Not really sure what you mean by that or how does that tie into the idea of white people being generally racist. Perhaps you will be kind enough to elaborate?

Malcolm wrote:

Study your own history again, and then factor in the fact that Europe has not come to grips with its own racist past.

Manjushri said:

The history of the Continent has been studied thoroughly and is perfectly acknowledged in my first post, as you saw.

I nonetheless still fail to see how exploitation and colonialism in the past can act as a proof for a supposed general mindset in the world today.

PS: Perhaps you are conflating two arguments? My gripe was from the beginning, I repeat, with the bewildering assertion that "white people in general are racist".

Malcolm wrote:

Not all suffering is suffering connected with sensations. Not all racism is connected with thoughts and intentions. Societies can be racist, and to the extent one does not recognize and object to it, one is participating in it.

Objecting to this thesis automatically makes one racist, because the facts are too obvious to refute.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 10:49 AM
Title: Re: George Floyd Protests
Content:

Manjushri said:

The history of the Continent has been studied thoroughly and is perfectly acknowledged in my first post, as you saw.

I nonetheless still fail to see how exploitation and colonialism in the past can act as a proof for a supposed general mindset in the world today.

PS: Perhaps you are conflating two arguments? My gripe was from the beginning, I repeat, with the bewildering assertion that "white people in general are racist".

Malcolm wrote:

Europeans have been the major exploiter of the world's resources since 1492 and remain so to this day. That is the very definition of privilege. That exploitation is based on a doctrine of white supremacy, and still is a function of such beliefs, the very laws to protect minorities in European dominated countries are proof of this. If systematic racism was not endemic in all European dominated countries, these laws would not be needed.

Manjushri said:

I understand what you wrote, I agree with you and think it's revolting. I just simply don't see how that proves the assertion that the generality of white people is racist.

People may live in a privileged country whose actual condition derived from despoiling other nations in the past. People may even live in a country that as of today still drains and exploits other countries by the hands of a greedy, unscrupulous, despicable government that acts behind an apparently innocent façade or through private megacompanies and despotic oligarchs. Still, this in no way says or proves anything concerning the thoughts, views and principles of the actual people that live in the country.

Malcolm wrote:

See my immediate reply.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 11:34 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Manjushri said:

The history of the Continent has been studied thoroughly and is perfectly acknowledged in my first post, as you saw.

I nonetheless still fail to see how exploitation and colonialism in the past can act as a proof for a supposed general mindset in the world today.

PS: Perhaps you are conflating two arguments? My gripe was from the beginning, I repeat, with the bewildering assertion that "white people in general are racist".

Malcolm wrote:

Not all suffering is suffering connected with sensations. Not all racism is connected with thoughts and intentions. Societies can be racist, and to the extent one does not recognize and object to it, one is participating in it.

Objecting to this thesis automatically makes one racist, because the facts are too obvious to refute.

Manjushri said:

Not recognizing and not objecting to racism sure makes one an enabler of it at the very least, quite probably a racist indeed.

But do most white people not recognize and object to racism? The argument still stands, for in no way does one see a generality of white people condoning racism or rejecting it once in sight.

Malcolm wrote:

White people in the US, England, France, Germany, etc., ignore racism they witness everyday.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 12:03 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Rinchen Samphel said:

These riots, i fear, could have a "backfire" effect. In my city, there are fires everywhere, hotels full of bullet holes, trashed and destroyed restaurants. On the news here, people just came on and said this isnt progressing the cause, and could be having the opposite effect. A lot of business owners around here are very liberal, and they are getting upset all of their stuff is destroyed. Many are black business owners telling people to stop. They just had the chance to re-open their doors, only for destruction.

So, i have the ask, genuinely, how is this progressing the cause? How will destroying businessess, restaurants (many of which are owned by blacks who worked hard to be successful), causing fires in streets, people are injured here, etc. How does this get the police off of anyones back, or keep them from wrongfully killing minorities? Do you think this will backfire and people will say "forget the cause, its not about that now, its just pure destruction"?

Also, does no one care about covid now? These large groups wont help the situation. So, what about that? Do we just ignore the pandemic we are in the middle of? Many people, including the governor of NY, said that going out could equal the death of someone else, so is that irrelevant now?

The black community is already more heavily affected by the virus too, so this cant help that situation.

Malcolm wrote:

These are all valid questions. But I would submit to you that this is happening in every major city in the nation, all at once. This means that this is an explosion of national rage at a racist system. Also, there are millions of people out of work, especially people 18-30, (and unemployment is especially high among minorities right now), who constitute the majority of protestors. Right wing agitators have been stirring shit up everywhere. Of course Barr has tried to paint this as all antifa violence, but that is a lie. That's not to say there has been not been leftist mayhem as well. Most of the looting is done by poor people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 12:07 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Rinchen Samphel said:

One of the shootings is deadly.

Saw your post Malcolm, i'll be right back.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, seven people were shot last night in Louisville as well.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 12:11 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Rinchen Samphel said:

One of the shootings is deadly.

Saw your post Malcolm, i'll be right back.

It doesnt feel like there are good intentions out here, just feels like young people turned on by the chaos. When tear gas was thrown earlier, people were running and smiling.

Malcolm wrote:

Rage is rage. When poor whites and blacks rioted together in the 17th century, they passed the first slave laws. Laws shutting down rights to assembly are coming to a neighborhood near you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 12:12 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Rinchen Samphel said:
One of the shootings is deadly.

Saw your post Malcolm, i'll be right back.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, seven people were shot last night in Louisville as well.

Rinchen Samphel said:
Was it people shooting each other, or were officers involved? The shootings here did not have cops involved, thank god. If that happens, i think all hell will break loose.

Malcolm wrote:
People shooting others. Not police shootings.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 7:32 PM
Title: Re: George Floyd Protests
Content:

Toenail said:
Europeans are not collectively racist. Racism is the belief that one race is superior to another because of their distinctive features. Prejudice etc is not racism. I am not defending racism or prejudice etc, but to declare guilty a whole group of people - whites or Europeans etc - is wrong. Curb your emotions, Malcolm, and stay overseas with your stirring.

Malcolm wrote:
Like Americans, Western Europeans enjoy the spoils of five hundred years of colonial exploitation. Systematic racism is not an emotion or a feeling of hate, it is the systemic denial of opportunity to minorities. Brexit is racist. Orban's Hungary is racist. The treatment of migrant workers in Spain is racist. The treatment of Turks in Germany...Algerians in a France...migrants in Italy...etc.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 7:34 PM
Title: Re: George Floyd Protests
Content:

Manjushri said:
find it curious that you mentioned the Gypsies which unfortunately are a group of people that you perhaps may not know, but make a conscious effort to detach themselves from the society in which they're inserted and welcomed. I can tell you that in my country, Gypsies receive a very generous social support paycheck, own "businesses" yet have tax exemptions, freely make use of all social benefits and services as anyone should, yet fail to abide by social standards by behaving in a privileged manner and even discriminating against other people.

Malcolm wrote:

Beautiful example of racism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 7:37 PM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

Danny said:

Was reading an interesting text about preliminaries and D.I. I took from the commentary that if one completes the preliminaries successfully that in itself is a form of D.I. Since the mind would have been grasped and the natural state will arise and recognized, without need of an introduction. It didn't mention this was in regards to capacity, superior, inferior etc, but still is a gradual approach, still a subtle unification of the two disciplines of maha and Anuyoga. I don't think it is appropriate to discuss the ability to self cut through that subtle condition but.... You know it's there, and would still need the transmission from a guru, so it kind of negates itself. Still interesting commentary. I'm wondering if this is a wrong view, a wrong approach, and am a little perplexed as to why this would be considered authentic introduction to Ati yoga. Is not my understanding, but always interesting concepts of "self liberation" or "self deception". Is a fine line I guess.

Regards

Malcolm wrote:

If you have received introduction, then you have a basis to work with such practices. If you don't, well you don't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 8:44 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Manjushri said:

find it curious that you mentioned the Gypsies which unfortunately are a group of people that you perhaps may not know, but make a conscious effort to detach themselves from the society in which they're inserted and welcomed. I can tell you that in my country, Gypsies receive a very generous social support paycheck, own "businesses" yet have tax exemptions, freely make use of all social benefits and services as anyone should, yet fail to abide by social standards by behaving in a privileged manner and even discriminating against other people.

Malcolm wrote:
Beautiful example of racism.

Manjushri said:
Explaining why a group of people which has been (and still is) the subject of systematic attempts at integration that unfortunately didn't succeed is racist?

The point is that, despite the governmental and societal willingness to integrate such group, the fact that it failed isn't due to racism. I don't think that it is that hard to grasp.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, it is. The precise, same arguments have been used in the United States to oppress native Americans and black people. The same arguments are used by the Chinese against Tibetan nomads. Trust me, I have heard Europeans, who would be shocked that they could be any other welcoming and open-minded, hatefully bitch about the Roma for years. And still have not addressed the fact that Western European civilization (in which I include the Anglosphere) has seized an outlandish share of the world's resources for hundreds of years. It has also engaged in brutal oppression and genocides in Asia, Africa, the Americas, etc., for hundreds of years as well. We are a part of it. We need to recognize this fact and own it.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 10:00 PM
Title: Re: George Floyd Protests
Content:

Manjushri said:
I don't know how well are you acquainted with Gypsies, so you may not know, but they are culturally very rich and unique, proud people. Like all people, they can be extremely friendly, fun and joyful. However, their cultural idiosyncrasies unfortunately are bound to clash with some Western values. A very strong patriarchal system, early and forced marriages, unwillingness to allow higher education studies, unwillingness to allow marriages outside their social group, whether forcefully imposed by family or taken as granted as traditional principles with long history, all of these have the tendency to create some friction within the Western societies in which they live in. In many cases this explains their isolationist behavior which is not rooted in racism. Hope this clarified any possible misunderstandings.

Malcolm wrote:
They are nomads. They don't live according to your social rules. Why should they? One of the functions of the Schengen zone was to allow free movement between European nations. Of course, in a pandemic

We have Roma in the US as well, over a million. There is also racism, or antiziganism as it is called, against them here, of course.

<https://www.newsweek.com/tucker-carlson-fox-news-gypsies-trump-immigration-640004>

https://www.mediamatters.org/tucker-carlson/conservative-media-outlets-stoke-fears-gypsies-are-coming-america-and-defecating?redirect_source=/research/2017/07/18/conservative-media-outlets-stoke-fears-gypsies-are-coming-america-and-defecating-streets/217302

Anyway, while there are racist Europeans in all European countries, I've met many, questions of white privilege I generally confine to the old colonial powers because the majority of the wealthy of these nations has been stolen from other places.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 10:26 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Manjushri said:

I don't know how well are you acquainted with Gypsies, so you may not know, but they are culturally very rich and unique, proud people. Like all people, they can be extremely friendly, fun and joyful. However, their cultural idiosyncrasies unfortunately are bound to clash with some Western values. A very strong patriarchal system, early and forced marriages, unwillingness to allow higher educations studies, unwillingness to allow marriages outside their social group, whether forcefully imposed by family or taken as granted as traditional principles with long history, all of these have the tendency to create some friction within the Western societies in which they live in. In many cases this explains their isolationist behavior which is not rooted in racism. Hope this clarified any possible misunderstandings.

Malcolm wrote:

They are nomads. They don't live according to your rules. Why should they?

Tiago Simões said:

To be fair most modern roma aren't nomadic.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I am aware. They are like Tibetan nomads in this respect too. Nomads only live in black tents in the summer. They usually have family ties to settled agricultural communities.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 10:28 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Tlalok said:

They're not gunning down (as many) black people in the streets, but they're still hideously racist societies.

Malcolm wrote:

They are mainly freaked out about Muslims. Nice play Putin.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 10:30 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

They might let in pattern evidence.

Malcolm wrote:

Laura Coates (a former federal prosecutor on CNN) opined that pattern evidence is hard to prove in these cases, because the patterns have to match precisely, which is the usual defense of these cops, that pattern evidence can't be shown. She was saying that standard which had to be met was absurdly high in these cases.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 10:33 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Queequeg said:

You're assuming too much at this point about prior interactions and that a jury would interpret that video the way you do.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said before, it is impossible these two men did not know each other. They worked in the same nightclub.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 10:34 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

DNS said:

<https://www.cnn.com/2020/05/29/us/minneapolis-george-floyd-friday/index.html>

The police officer who cut off the airway to Mr. Floyd is charged with only 3rd degree murder.

I'm not an attorney, but from what I know from studying some law, First Degree is for pre-meditated murder; Second Degree is for voluntary manslaughter; and Third Degree is for involuntary manslaughter like accidents.

It sounds like it should have been Second Degree murder.

Malcolm wrote:

Charges can always be elevated. Often, in this kind of case, this is the easiest charge to get an immediate warrant for.

Crazywisdom said:

This video is one of the worst ever seen. They can get any warrant they want. No judge is going to refuse to sign...

Malcolm wrote:

Maybe, but Laura Coates also made this point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 10:45 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Minobu said:

what kind of police force has other officers hanging around and not enforcing the law , and putting a blind eye to murder in broad daylight.

what kinda cops were those that never reported what was happening till iphone coverage comes out..actually still kept their mouths shut.

fire the whole lot and bring in new ones..not going to happen we got bad cops up here and it's the same deal...

Up here the cops are the only public service that consistently gets away with murder and brutality..

A policeman shot and killed a kid on an empty street car holding a pocket knife....he got like 6 months or something..

I got strangled at 3 AM for walking home ...told that i was not wanted on their streets and i was not even known in police anything..

the guy strangled me cause i did not answer my name fast enough...i woke up the next day with the full imprint of his hand on my neck.

i'm white and he looked like something out of Bum Fck Alberta ..

Malcolm wrote:

Are you French Canadian? The reason I ask is that one of the most racist books I ever read was Anne of Greene Gables.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 10:53 PM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dorje Legpa is not a rgyal po, he is a ma sang, one of the seven ma sang brothers, not Mongolian at all.

cloudburst said:

Isn't it true that some traditions regard Dorje legpa as an enlightened being, others and a worldly entity? Some Nyingma traditions hold DL to be an enlightened protector, no?

Crazywisdom said:

I like Dorje Legpa as sort of the patron saint of pro gamblers which is what I am now.

Malcolm wrote:

The Ma sang are credited with inventing Pagchen, the "Great Game," a sort of Tibetan version of dominoes, popular in the Dzogchen Community. I played the Boss a couple of times. It was intense. He yelled at me once because he could not read my face, "Don't be indifferent" he said. He liked to win, and when he did not win, he would get very annoyed.

<http://web.archive.org/web/20081205061947/http://www.ssi-austria.at/bagchen-regeln.htm>

<https://www.pagat.com/tile/cdom/bagchen.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 11:02 PM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

Fa Dao said:

I've had that for quite a while...was just hoping there might be something more out there and figured if there was you would know about it....

Malcolm wrote:

Eventually I will publish something.

Fa Dao said:

Hopefully sooner rather than later...neither of us is getting any younger, right? Would be nice if you could focus on actual practice texts/commentary related to Vajra Bridge. IMO Semde doesn't have enough in the way of actual practice that leads to Rainbow body and Upadesa is too advanced for most people..myself included. Longde on the other hand strikes a nice balance that most people can get something from it.....

Malcolm wrote:

The Longsal Longde commentary has absolutely everything you need to know in order to practice successfully.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 11:11 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

They might let in pattern evidence.

Malcolm wrote:

Laura Coates (a former federal prosecutor on CNN) opined that pattern evidence is hard to prove in these cases, because the patterns have to match precisely, which is the usual defense of these cops, that pattern evidence can't be shown. She was saying that standard which had to be met was absurdly high in these cases.

Queequeg said:

That's because it has to be a pattern.

The issue is that each situation is unique, and if you're trying to establish that, for instance, a cop has violent tendencies, you have to rule out the possibility that this cop just happens, by chance, to find themselves in violent confrontations over the course of a 20 year career. So for instance, and this is just imaginary for illustrative purposes, in year three of his career, he responds to a domestic violence call and confronts a psychotic man, and using a choke hold to subdue him while grappling. In year 11, he uses a choke hold to get an assailant off a fellow cop. And now something like this. A 20 year career, and we have these three incidents. Is that a pattern? No.

Now, say, he has a stack of complaints against him, of all sorts, of excessive force. Now we might be getting somewhere, but that evidence might well be limited. Prosecutor might not be allowed to present more than the vaguest evidence because the defendant should be tried for this alleged crime, not his record. Did the cop in this instance, have the intent to murder Mr. Floyd? Its not clear that past incidents will offer any real insight and instead just raise the prejudice against him for his character.

Malice aforethought is really hard to establish for these and a host of reasons.

Practically speaking, each of those prior incidents would basically have to be tried to establish that they fit a pattern applicable here. Its just too tenuous to present to a jury and presents too much possible prejudice.

If this were a civilian defendant, if things are done by the book, such evidence would not be admissible there either. Consider a defendant who has a rap sheet five pages long for a bunch of petty crimes, and then he's accused of felony murder (homicide while committing a separate felony like armed robbery). The prosecutor is going to want to present that record because they want to paint the guy as a bad guy. Is that fair for the defendant? Maybe there's the argument that he could flip that evidence, saying, "I'm a petty thief. I shop lift, and steal car radios. I have a drug problem. I don't do armed robbery." Too much prejudice, and if the judge is fair, they would agree.

Malcolm wrote:

I understand the issue. In most cases the police are granted immunity for what would otherwise be crimes, as long as they are committed in the commission of their duty. Simple example, speeding 100 miles an hour down a highway to respond to a call, accidentally running an old lady off the road. Anyone else would go to jail. Just a day's work for the police.

Last night a cop in NYC flashed the white power sign and sniggered:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 11:18 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Then there was this, which is being spun by the right wing media as an assault on an innocent white guy...but not so.

It apparently has to be viewed on twitter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 11:29 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Has to be seen to be believed:

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, May 31st, 2020 at 11:41 PM
Title: Re: George Floyd
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Last night a cop in NYC flashed the white power sign and sniggered:

Queequeg said:
That guy needs to be fired, now. But at least he offers confirmation of what people are saying about NYPD.

Malcolm wrote:
You can find several videos of NYC cops flashing white power signs at protestors. Here is another:

In MN, you see this:

A lot of fascists in these crowds.

M

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, June 1st, 2020 at 12:28 AM
Title: Re: George Floyd
Content:
Grigoris said:
101198789_10158246477519793_5261699829431533568_n.jpg

Malcolm wrote:
Correct. All these "moderates" are quoting MLK incorrectly, in exactly the way MLK said that white moderates were the most harmful to civil rights:

First, I must confess that over the past few years I have been gravely disappointed with the white moderate. I have almost reached the regrettable conclusion that the Negro's great stumbling block in his stride toward freedom is not the White Citizen's Council-er or the Ku Klux Klanner, but the white moderate, who is more devoted to "order" than to justice; who prefers a negative peace which is the absence of tension to a positive peace which is the presence of justice; who constantly says: "I agree with you in the goal you seek, but I cannot agree with your methods of direct action"; who paternalistically believes he can set the timetable for another man's freedom; who lives by a mythical concept of time and who constantly advises the Negro to wait for a "more convenient season." Shallow understanding from people of good will is more frustrating than absolute misunderstanding from people of ill will. Lukewarm acceptance is much more bewildering than outright rejection.

http://okra.stanford.edu/transcription/document_images/undecided/630416-019.pdf

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 1st, 2020 at 12:32 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<https://slate.com/news-and-politics/2020/05/george-floyd-protests-police-violence.html>:

Police Erupt in Violence Nationwide

The ongoing protests following the killing of George Floyd were caught up in violence again on Saturday, as police all over the country tear-gassed protesters, drove vehicles through crowds, opened fire with nonlethal rounds on journalists or people on their own property, and in at least one instance, pushed over an elderly man who was walking away with a cane. Here are some of the ways law enforcement officers escalated the national unrest.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 1st, 2020 at 6:25 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

They are nomads. They don't live according to your social rules. Why should they?

Manjushri said:

I don't don't think I said that they should, at any point at all. I merely referred some reasons why integration has not succeed yet.

I have never been disrespectful to you during this whole conversation and honestly don't see the reason for such bellicose replies and accusations that you have branded me, but I wish you peace and welfare nonetheless.

I hope only that people understand that asserting gross generalizations do not work at any level in problem solving when it comes to such issues. Saying that "white people are generally racist, even if they don't openly display it", in my head sounds similar to the xenophobic discourse of the anti-pluralism bigots that say that "in general all muslims are fundamentalists or extremists that only appear moderate on the surface". I believe that if the system is to be changed by addressing the issues in public discussion, a different kind of discourse (i.e. more nuanced/balanced), is of the utmost importance.

Malcolm wrote:

I haven't accused you of anything. But I do think you don't see your own privilege and fail to see how as a privileged white person your very position in the world, like mine, depends on a set of economic relations that are racist and exploitative. And the rise of nationalist sentiment in Europe is most definitely racist. That's just a fact.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 1st, 2020 at 9:13 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

One of the more tone deaf posts you've made.

http://okra.stanford.edu/transcription/document_images/undecided/630416-019.pdf

Queequeg said:

Letter from a Birmingham Jail - that link to the actual document. Very neat.

One of the greatest documents in US history setting out what it ought to mean to be American.

Dan74 said:

It is a beautiful letter and like all writings it can and does get misapplied and misinterpreted. Sadly it seems, it's become something of a rallying cry of a blowhard with no actual interest in addressing root causes, but plenty of fire for vilifying all who don't dance to the same tune. An automatic response trotted out to anyone who calls for understanding of 'the other side', in the spirit of The Art of War that exhorts us to know our enemy. In the battlefield of ideas, to try to actually understand where 'the other side' is coming from is now seen as a weakness, while slogging some dickhead with a white pride banner in the head, a badge of honour. This is not how wars are won. And not to mention the very basic humanist understanding of the banality of evil and that nothing that is human can possibly be alien to any of us. And when one starts talking about the systemic oppression of groups other than the people of colour, then one truly belongs in the basket of deplorables. It has just become so black-and-white, hasn't it? The battle lines have been drawn, take your place in the trenches and fire!

It appears that the great US of A is hellbent on fighting wars. On drugs, on terrorism, on racism, the martial mentality is too hard to overcome. Identify the enemy and shoot. Works in Rambo movies..

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 1st, 2020 at 9:22 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

One of the more tone deaf posts you made.

Dan74 said:

It is a beautiful letter and like all writings it can and does get misapplied and misinterpreted. Sadly it seems, it's become something of a rallying cry of a blowhard with no actual interest in addressing root causes, but plenty of fire for vilifying all who don't dance to the same tune. An automatic response trotted out to anyone who calls for understanding of 'the other side', in the spirit of The Art of War that exhorts us to know our enemy. In the battlefield of ideas, to try to actually understand where 'the other side' is coming from is now seen as a weakness, while slogging some dickhead with a white pride banner in the head, a badge of honour. This is not how wars are won. And not to mention the very basic humanist understanding of the banality of evil and that nothing that is human can possibly be alien to any of us. And when one starts talking about the systemic oppression of groups other than the people of colour, then one truly belongs in the basket of deplorables. It has just become so black-and-white, hasn't it? The battle lines have been drawn, take your place in the trenches and fire!

It appears that the great US of A is hellbent on fighting wars. On drugs, on terrorism, on racism, the martial mentality is too hard to overcome. Identify the enemy and shoot. Works in Rambo movies..

And who appointed you the arbiter of tone, Malcolm?

There is one thing that you don't lack and that's a sense of conviction. Like being sure that it was premeditated because 'you had a feeling'. Regardless of your noble motives, disregard for facts makes one a zealot. And zealotry is not going to bring about a healing of your divided community.

Malcolm wrote:

I never said that Floyd's murder was premeditated. I said that it is impossible the two men did not know each other. So, you ought to get your facts straight.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 1st, 2020 at 9:35 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Queequeg said:

Dan, yeah. There's just so much wrong with your comments even as I get your overall point.

I really don't think you (in Europe/Aus) can ever really understand what is happening here if you have not lived here and breathed it.

Malcolm wrote:

The “why can’t we all just get along” refrain is pretty weak.

The police have been initiating violence against peaceful protestors for a week.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 1st, 2020 at 10:24 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Queequeg said:

Dan, yeah. There's just so much wrong with your comments even as I get your overall point.

I really don't think you (in Europe/Aus) can ever really understand what is happening here if you have not lived here and breathed it.

Malcolm wrote:

The “why can’t we all just get along” refrain is pretty weak.

Dan74 said:

If that's all that's all you reduce it to, then it is. Kinda self-confirming reasoning like all strawmen.

Malcolm wrote:

Its the white moderate response King was talking about.

Dan74 said:

Dig into your own privilege as a well-educated middle-class urbanite, dig into your assumptions, look around. The proletariat is on the other side. How did that happen?

Malcolm wrote:

Dan, one, I am not an urbanite. I live in the country, surrounded by cornfields, in the poorest county in Massachusetts amid failed farms, which are a result of GOP changes in the 1970's to Roosevelt-era farm policies. Two, as a white person living in America, I understand my privilege far better than you.

Dan74 said:

The tragic thing for me to see is not just the brutality by the so-called law enforcement, but that rather than directing the anger at those who foster and fan the divisions in your society between all the oppressed communities, whether due to colour, geography, bank account or profession, people are still fighting each other, rather than uniting and changing the system that exploits them, treats them like commodity and sows poisonous hatred between them.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, that is why we are trying get the GOP out of power, because they have become the party of racial hatred and fear, led by a racist president and a cabinet of racist white men. And in fact, these protests are not all blacks. There are equal numbers of young whites, blacks, and latinos protesting, and bravely suffering violent provocations and attacks by the police. It is not the protestors who started the violence in Minneapolis, it was the police. Here is an eyewitness account by a member of the Minneapolis City Council: In Minneapolis, businesses have been burned and looted and the National Guard has been called in to help restore order. But a member of the City Council, Jeremiah Ellison, summed up the situation this way: The police started it.

“No one was looting anything in the first night of this protest, no one was lighting anything on fire on the first night of this protest, and yet the response from the police was incredibly brutal,” he said. “The original provocation to street violence was from our officers.”

On the day after Mr. Floyd died, Mr. Ellison gathered with others at the site where Mr. Floyd was detained and walked with them to a nearby police precinct, he said. The crowd was relatively peaceful, he said, but the officers sprayed tear gas. Once the marchers reached the precinct, tensions grew, but in Mr. Ellison’s view the police overreacted.

“One of the city’s employees has just murdered someone in the most brutal fashion,” he said, “and for you to then pretend like you’re the victim and you’re under siege, to fire mace and tear gas and rubber bullets in response to water bottles being thrown — you have at that point 100 percent antagonized the situation.”

And we have seen this in city after city, where the police attack peaceful protestors, and then of course you have seen the aftermath of the violence. Combine this with a inept pandemic response by an incompetent, racist president, throwing millions of out of work, and you have a lot of people who do not know where their next check is going to come from. But all the GOP gives a shit about is making sure that capitalists who exploit people for wages have their property protected.

What you don't understand is that Trump removed dissent decrees imposed by the Holder Justice department all over the country. This is why the police love Trump. He caters to their worst instincts.

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/05/29/us/politics/justice-department-civil-rights-george-floyd.html>

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/05/31/us/police-tactics-floyd-protests.html?action=click&module=Spotlight&pgtype=Homepage>

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, June 1st, 2020 at 10:26 PM
Title: Re: George Floyd
Content:

tkp67 said:
sad state of affairs

Malcolm wrote:
No evidence that these people breaking the window are "Antifa." Sorry, this is just a bunch of right-wing bullshit.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 1:01 AM
Title: Re: George Floyd
Content:

tkp67 said:
sad state of affairs

Malcolm wrote:
No evidence that these people breaking the window are "Antifa." Sorry, this is just a bunch of right-wing bullshit.

tkp67 said:
Who said they are antifa?

Malcolm wrote:
Did you actually read the retweet you posted?

"Protestors begging Antifa to stop. Their protests have been hijacked."

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 1:04 AM
Title: Re: George Floyd
Content:

Bundokji said:
I try to refrain from commenting on the riots in the US due to my lack of knowledge of how bad or legitimate racial tension in the US is. However, the
It is not easy to understand how the death of George Floyd ignited all this chaos! What would have happened if he did not die? another normal day i guess?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, when there is a drought, all it takes is a spark to start a prairie fire.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 1:24 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Queequeg said:

If you knew this place, then this would be easy to understand.

If it was not Mr. Floyd, it would have been another black man killed by the police in some depraved way and caught on film. Maybe next week, or next month, or next year. This is why this is so outrageous. This is why people are so angry. Because we can be 100% certain that some black man will be killed by police officers acting without regard for him as a human being in the near future. This is daily life in America.

Bundokji said:

As you said, i don't know, so if you are a US citizen, you are a more reliable source of information than myself.

But i still think that if racism is so systematic in the US, surely there have been other reported incidents. I am trying to think of other contributing factors. Just earlier today, i read on the BBC how the streets are filled with protestors after weeks of lockdown. It occurred to me that possibly lockdown stress might have had an influence on people's behavior this time, among other things.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it means that people have free time to make known their grievances, when at other times, they could not get time off of work to hit the streets. Can you imagine going to your boss at Taco Bell or Walmart and saying, "I need tomorrow off to protest another murder of a black person by a member of the police"? Your boss would laugh in your face and tell you that you have a choice, report to work or be fired. This happens with voting too. People are forced to choose between working and voting all the time in the US, not to mention to systematic voter suppression, which even Trump admits is so effective that without it no Republican would ever hold office in the US again:

"The things they had in there were crazy. They had things, levels of voting that if you'd ever agreed to it, you'd never have a Republican elected in this country again."

Donald Trump, March 30th, 2020, Fox and Friends interview.

And this has been going on for 40 years, and more:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 1:57 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

clw_uk said:

Antifa and white supremacists are both equally awful. Anyone caught rioting, be they left wing or right wing, should be arrested and prosecuted.

Malcolm wrote:

Definitely not. Antifa saved your ass in WWII. Without Antifa, you'd be speaking German.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 2:52 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

clw_uk said:

Antifa and white supremacists are both equally awful.

Queequeg said:

No they are not.

clw_uk said:

Yes, they are. It's even worse with antifa because it sounds like a positive thing, Anti-Fascism. Of course, it ends in hell just the same when you are of an authoritarian and totalitarian mindset and are judge, jury an executioner all in one at the same time. It then becomes easy to simply label an enemy as "fascist". Once you have done that, it becomes acceptable to crush them. It's why a Tory like me has had rape and death threats from antifa in the past. It's even in the history. Antifa in the Weimar Republic spent a lot of its time fighting the Iron Front who, unsurprisingly, they classed as "fascist".

Malcolm wrote:

Antifaschistische Aktion came into being in July, 1932. Six months later, during the Machtergreifung when the Nazis took power, the Iron Front, Antifaschistische Aktion, etc. all went underground. Antifaschistische Aktion spent most of its time fighting Nazis.

In any case, the KDP had its shots called by Moscow, and if you accept Dan's thesis that success against the Nazis was a result of the Red Army defeating Hitler on the Eastern front, you still would be speaking German if it was not for Antifa.

The American Antifa is generally anarchist in orientation, not Stalinist, like the KDP prior to WWII. It is not the same organization as Antifaschistische Aktion, even though they may have borrowed the flag. Antifa in the US have also borrowed the three arrows logo of the Iron Front.

I don't know about Antifa in Britain, but in the US, they played a significant role in fighting the Alt-right and protecting people during Charlottesville:

CORNEL WEST: The anti-fascists, and then, crucial, the anarchists, because they saved our lives, actually. We would have been completely crushed, and I'll never forget that. Meaning what? Meaning that you had the police holding back, on the one hand, so we couldn't even get arrested. We were there to get arrested. We couldn't get arrested, because the police had pulled back, and just allowing fellow citizens to go at each other, you see, and with all of the consequences that would follow therefrom.

So, in that sense, you know, I think what we're really seeing, though, Sister Amy, is the American empire in decay, with the rule of big money, with massive militarism, facilitated by the scapegoating of the most vulnerable, of immigrants, Muslims, Jews, Arabs, gay, lesbians, trans and bisexuals, and black folk. The white supremacy was so intense. I've never seen that kind of hatred in my life. We stood there, and nine units went by, and looking right in our eyes. And they're cussing me out, and so forth and so on. They're lucky I didn't lose my holy ghost, to tell you the truth, because I wanted to start swinging myself. I'm a Christian, but not a pacifist, you know. But I held back. But that kind of hatred—but that is just the theater. It's big money. It's big military. And it's the way in which this capitalist civilization is leading us toward unbelievable darkness and bleakness. And the beautiful thing is the fightback. It was a beautiful thing to see all the people coming back. But they had more fascists than anarchists, more fascists than fightback.

https://www.democracynow.org/2017/8/14/cornel_west_rev_toni_blackmon_clergy

There is also a tendency to conflate Black Bloc with Antifa. Black Bloc is a protest strategy, not an ideology. They are not the same. Right now, Antifa has become the Right's boogiemán. It is nonsense of course. These days, any time there is looting or property damage as a consequence of a riot caused by police violence, the instinct of the Right is immediately label this as Antifa violence. That is nonsense, for example the retweet that was posted from a Trump cultist above.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 2:55 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Toenail said:

Malcolm, the situation of blacks in the US is different than the situation of turks in Germany. Please, you are over simplifying things. I am sympathizing much with black people in America, especially the disadvantaged and also I am seeing systemic racism, with appointed judges etc. The situation in Germany is different. You'd better think more differentiated and rational. You are emotional. Emotions are bad masters, that's why we meditate.

Malcolm wrote:

The historical conditions that led to the presence of Turkish workers in Germany (worker deficits in a burgeoning industrial economy, and so on) are different. But I know Turkish people from Germany, and they do complain about being treated as second class citizens by white Germans. And, son, I am not emotional. I am clear. Got it?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 3:12 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

clw_uk said:

That doesn't answer my question. If the leftist person subscribes to socialism, marxist communism, ancom or any other purely anti-capitalist ideology which aims to supplant capitalism with some form of post-capitalist economic system then yes, they are totalitarians.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, it always boils down to money and class preservation, the planet be damned. Market economies do not have to be "capitalist."

Capitalism is not merely an economic system; it is also a system of power relations which depend on owners of capital having more power than those who are forced to sell their labor well below market value. That power is backed up by the State, which according to Conservative ideology, should do nothing more than provide security for markets, property, and national borders (read Nozick's "State, Anarchy, and Utopia" for a detailed intellectual blueprint for how this all works), but little or nothing in terms of environmental, health, and social protection, with the wan hope that the all-knowing market will sort it all out.

clw_uk said:

However even then, at least in the UK, Conservatives don't go around bashing leftists.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh dude, get real. You most certainly do. For example:

I used to be a Communist for 10 years before I did a complete 180 and adopted a near Thatcherite outlook, so i've seen vitriol from both sides aimed at me for different reasons. The worst i've ever experienced has come from socialists/communists/antifa types. In fact its from my time moving in communist movements as to why im so anti-antifa now. I know how they think. I know that for them the ends will always justify the means, and I know how easily it is for them to completely "other" someone else. To class them as "the enemy", as "the fascist" that needs to be destroyed, when in reality the person just thinks differently to them.

Donald Trump is a fascist. He needs to go. His followers are fascists. They need to be shutdown. Hard.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 3:33 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

Where do you stand when antifa classes conservatives as fascist?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, since you like to cite historical examples, in the 1930's, Conservatives in Britain were largely supportive of fascism in Europe, until they finally understood that Hitler was bent on invading England.

After the war, conservatives founded groups such as Chesterton's League of Empire Loyalists. The remnants of Chesterton's so-called League of Empire Loyalists, a group whose members were predominantly Tories (formed in 1954) eventually merged with British National Party to form the National Front.

Then there is the Monday Club.

So the answer to your question is that with respect to Conservatives, they may not be fascists necessarily, but there sure are a lot of fellow travelers on the right these days ({Putin lovers, etc.}), just as there were in Conservative circles in the 1930's. If you have not read it, you need to read "Fellow Travellers of the Right: British Enthusiasts for Naz Germany, 1933-9" where we find out extent to which Conservatives in England were sympathetic to fascism (but only on the Continent, of course):

<https://www.amazon.com/Fellow-Travellers-Right-Enthusiasts-Paperbacks/dp/0192851160>.

So, there is a lot of justification for the charge that conservatives often sympathize with fascists.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 3:38 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

Malcolm

Yup, it always boils down to money and class preservation, the planet be damned. Market economies do not have to be "capitalist."

Of course not. A barter system is a market economy. An inferior market economy.

Malcolm wrote:

That is not the only option.

Ceisiwr said:

Yeah, i got out of this cult a long time ago. In the UK, no one is "forced to sell their labour well below market value".

Malcolm wrote:

Oh they definitely are. It is even worse here in the US.

Ceisiwr said:

Are you going to trot out the pathetic labour theory of value for us now?

Malcolm wrote:

You mean the one codified and advanced by Adam Smith? No, there are more modern ways of understanding the complexities of labor's relation to capital and markets, etc. I am not a Marxist, not by any stretch. Marx is outdated, 19th century pseudo-science.

Ceisiwr said:

Also, Trump, whatever his faults, is not a Fascist. Even if he were, he can't do anything about it due to your constitution.

Malcolm wrote:

He most certainly is. The American Constitution is hanging on by a thread. Four more years of that guy, there won't be a constitution.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 3:58 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

We can already see above from Malcolm how easily it descends into "I dislike this persons politics, therefore they are fascist. This means i am justified in crushing them".

People have no right to suppress the human rights of another human being, even if their politics is distasteful. Of course, given what i've seen, i doubt many of you here would agree with troublesome concepts such as negative human rights. If you do agree then you should be anti-antifa.

Malcolm wrote:

I have no interest in crushing anyone. But there used to be time in this country when someone who even breathed far-right ideologies would be shutdown hard by everyone. Trump's rhetoric has unleashed them. And now the racists and fascists feel very emboldened. And Trump is advocating for intensified police brutality: "It's a movement, and if you don't put it down, it will get worse and worse..." Donald Trump, June 1st, 2020. <https://www.nytimes.com/2020/06/01/us/politics/trump-governors.html> Basically, the president has declared war on the people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 4:10 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

So do explain how a worker is forced to sell his labour below market value. The price of labour is determined by the market forces of supply and demand.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is false.

<https://www.businessinsider.com/supply-and-demand-model-of-labour-markets-is-fundamentally-broken-2018-6>

<https://www.businessinsider.com/category/inequality-in-britain>

<https://www.bloomberg.com/view/articles/2018-04-05/supply-and-demand-does-a-poor-job-of-explaining-depressed-wages>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 4:14 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

Once again a poor example. True, to be a conservative is to not want things to change. Naturally this can mean an opposition to demographic change. Such opposition isn't inherently Fascist. Of course some go even further and fully switch to being Fascist.

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, it pretty much is. Opposition to demographic change is predicated on nationalism. Nationalism is fascism. Period.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 4:15 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

So do explain how a worker is forced to sell his labour below market value. The price of labour is determined by the market forces of supply and demand.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is false.

<https://www.businessinsider.com/supply-and-demand-model-of-labour-markets-is-fundamentally-broken-2018-6>

<https://www.businessinsider.com/category/inequality-in-britain>

<https://www.bloomberg.com/view/articles/2018-04-05/supply-and-demand-does-a-poor-job-of-explaining-depressed-wages>

Ceisiwr said:

That does not show that workers are paid less than their market value.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. actually it does.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 4:17 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

Are we Theravadins then justified in burning all of your sutras, defrocking all of the Mahayana and Vajrayana monks and nuns, closing all of your monasteries and enforcing the teaching of The Way of the Elders as being the only acceptable form of Buddhism?

Malcolm wrote:

You already did that. Shri Lanka, Burma, Thailand, Cambodia, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 4:18 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

Once again a poor example. True, to be a conservative is to not want things to change. Naturally this can mean an opposition to demographic change. Such opposition isn't inherently Fascist. Of course some go even further and fully switch to being Fascist.

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, it pretty much is. Opposition to demographic change is predicated on nationalism. Nationalism is fascism. Period.

Ceisiwr said:

Nationalism and Fascism are not the same thing, unless the SNP are Fascist now?

Malcolm wrote:

There is only a Scottish National Party because Scotland is a occupied country. My ancestors were pushed off our land during the Clearings. British racism towards Highland Scots is an old history.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 4:22 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

Nationalism and Fascism are not the same thing, unless the SNP are Fascist now?

Malcolm wrote:

There is only a Scottish National Party because Scotland is a occupied country. My ancestors were pushed off our land during the Clearings.

Ceisiwr said:

So, not all forms of Nationalism are Fascist.

Malcolm wrote:

SNP is not a nationalist party, per se. They have the name "national" because they are an independence party. The Scots are all communists, or didn't you get that memo?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 4:24 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Dan74 said:

Ceisiwr, I do agree with you characterisation of many on the Left as intolerant and too quick to adopt "with us or against us" and abuse labels like racist and fascist (in the English-speaking world).

Your going on about Socialism as totalitarian doesn't really make sense to me. Germany had a number of socialist Chancellors, like Willie Brandt and Sweden had Olaf Palme. Socialism essentially prioritises workers owning the means of production and can be implemented in a variety of way, most of which don't need to resort to totalitarianism or even a big government. So for instance, workers owning shares of the factory they work at and actually receiving dividends. Increases productivity and empowers the workers to actually make decisions. Public companies, Unions, etc are hallmarks of Socialism, why mix it with totalitarianism?

Ceisiwr said:

That is social-democracy, which is managed and regulated capitalism. That is not socialism, which aims to replace capitalism.

Malcolm wrote:

Capitalism needs to be replaced. It has been destroying the planet and its people since 1492.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 4:26 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

Yes. actually it does.

No, it shows that there is a gap between productivity and wages. Wages themselves are still set by the market forces of supply and demand. Productivity increases can lead to higher wages than can rise above the market price, but the base wage itself is set by supply and demand. Your tweet does not show that workers in the US are paid less than market value.

Malcolm wrote:

You clearly did not read any of the articles, but focused instead on the tweet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 4:28 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Dan74 said:

Ceisiwr, I do agree with your characterisation of many on the Left as intolerant and too quick to adopt "with us or against us" and abuse labels like racist and fascist (in the English-speaking world).

Your going on about Socialism as totalitarian doesn't really make sense to me. Germany had a number of socialist Chancellors, like Willie Brandt and Sweden had Olaf Palme. Socialism essentially prioritises workers owning the means of production and can be implemented in a variety of ways, most of which don't need to resort to totalitarianism or even a big government. So for instance, workers owning shares of the factory they work at and actually receiving dividends. Increases productivity and empowers the workers to actually make decisions. Public companies, Unions, etc are hallmarks of Socialism, why mix it with totalitarianism?

You can see the current form of capitalism fail in so many ways, from the destruction of the environment, to boom-bust cycles, to the race to the bottom on taxes. Any clear-thinking person must see that a change is desperately needed.

Ceisiwr said:

Many of the former socialist countries had appalling environmental records. Short of anprim I don't see how replacing capitalism with an inferior economic system will help the environment.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is true, because they were in a world economy dominated by capitalism and they felt they needed to hasten their industrial development to catch up. For example, China. India, while not a communist country, also has willingly damaged its environment in order to keep up in the world Capitalist economy. Capitalism is destroying our environment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 4:29 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

No, it shows that there is a gap between productivity and wages. Wages themselves are still set by the market forces of supply and demand. Productivity increases can lead to higher wages than can rise above the market price, but the base wage itself is set by supply and demand. Your tweet does not show that workers in the US are paid less than market value.

Malcolm wrote:

You clearly did not read any of the articles, but focused instead on the tweet.

Ceisiwr said:

I don't need to read it. I'm well aware of the productivity gap in the US and elsewhere.

Malcolm wrote:

well, go back to DWT, dude, because if you can't spend give 5 minutes to reading an article that deconstructs your thesis, what is the point of talking to you?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 4:35 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

I don't need to read it. I'm well aware of the productivity gap in the US and elsewhere.

Malcolm wrote:

well, go back to DWT, dude, because if you can't spend five minutes reading an article that deconstructs your thesis, what is the point of talking to you?

Ceisiwr said:

I already countered your nonsense. The wages are still set by supply and demand. Issues with productivity and pay do not change that fact.

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually all you did was make an assertion that you have countered my assertion, which means you haven't shown anything.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 4:37 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

Many of the former socialist countries had appalling environmental records. Short of anprim I don't see how replacing capitalism with an inferior economic system will help the environment.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is true, because they were in a world economy dominated by capitalism and they felt they needed to hasten their industrial development to catch up. For example, China. India, while not a communist country, also has willingly damaged its environment in order to keep up in the world Capitalist economy. Capitalism is destroying our environment.

Ceisiwr said:

Lmao! Spoken like a true ideologue. Even when socialism fails, its really capitalism's fault.

Malcolm wrote:

No, Marxist-Leninism in the USSR failed all by itself. But the conditions for its failure were predicated on the fact that it was competing in a Capitalist system as a state capitalist entity. China has not failed in this way, despite a similar ideology, because they got a hand up from Nixon, and then a neoliberal boost from Clinton.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 4:40 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

That doesn't answer my question. If the leftist person subscribes to socialism, marxist communism, ancom or any other purely anti-capitalist ideology which aims to supplant capitalism with some form of post-capitalist economic system then yes, they are totalitarians.

Grigoris said:

Nope, that is just BS.

Ceisiwr said:

Do explain how replacing liberal democracy and capitalism, the two most wonderful of systems, is not totalitarian?

Malcolm wrote:

Liberal democracy is just fine. Its utility has been severely damaged by irrational conservative policies like austerity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 5:04 AM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

cloudburst said:

Isn't it true that some traditions regard Dorje legpa as an enlightened being, others as a worldly entity? Some Nyingma traditions hold DL to be an enlightened protector, no?

Malcolm wrote:

Dorleg is a wisdom protector. Beyond samsara.

cloudburst said:

This is a surprising answer, not what I expected at all.

Most sources seem to indicate he is a worldly protector, even Terma sources.

Like other important Nyingma protectors, there is a wealth of treasure literature on Dorje Lekpa's (Skt. Vajra Sadhu) origins and characteristics, much of it contradictory. However, the following essay will attempt to collate the various myths of Dorje Lekpa, based on the terma sources quoted in the 1734 "Biographies of the Ocean of Oath-Bound Protectors," written by Lelung Zhepe Dorje (1697-1740).

He definitely seems to have the form/proportions/ traditional iconography of a gyalpo is it the Karma Kagyu who regard him as a worldly protector? Do you know anything about what I am talking about?

Malcolm wrote:

He is not a rgyalpo. Sometimes he is referred to as the king of the bstan, like in this passage a terma tantra of four armed Mahakala:

Emanation of Padma Heruka,
the king of the Tsan with magic power,
the one who divided heaven and earth in the west,
the empowerment is conferred upon Vajrasadhu.

Lhalhung describes him as having three aspects, jñāna Vajrasadhu in the presence of Vairocana in Akaniṣṭha; samaya Vajrasadhu in the presences of Vajrapani on Potala; and "puruṣa Vajrasadhu in Tibet, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 5:06 AM

Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

I like Dorje Legpa as sort of the patron saint of pro gamblers which is what I am now.

Malcolm wrote:

The Ma sang are credited with inventing Pagchen, the "Great Game," a sort of Tibetan version of dominoes, popular in the Dzogchen Community. I played the Boss a couple of times. It was intense. He yelled at me once because he could not read my face, "Don't be indifferent" he said. He liked to win, and when he did not win, he would get very annoyed.

<http://web.archive.org/web/20081205061947/http://www.ssi-austria.at/bagchen-regeln.htm>

<https://www.pagat.com/tile/cdom/bagchen.html>

Crazywisdom said:

Sounds fun. Do you wager in this game? I am partial to Texas Holdem.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it is fun to play (about as fun as watching paint dry to watch). And yes, it is a gambling game and to win, requires skill.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 5:24 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

It failed because the system collapsed under the weight of its own inefficiencies. The USSR, as with all Communist states, saw growth in the initial years due to extensive growth. Eventually, however, there are only so many new factories you can build. What led to its eventual demise was its inability to develop intensive growth. That, as well as the stifling political climate and other inadequacies of the planned economy led to its downfall. Even if the USSR was not competing with the West it still would have faced these problems, for they are inherent flaws.

Malcolm wrote:

Were it not for the fact that it was competing with the West, it would have lasted considerably longer. For example, the reason why Earl Butz changed our agricultural system in the early 70's was to make our wheat so cheap that formerly competitive Soviet wheat could not find a market. Of course, it also destroyed the small dairy industry in the US at the same time, but who cares right? By these and other means, the US drove the economy of the USSR under. We simply wielded greater economic power than they did. That, combined with a corrupt government, did them in. China, which had largely the same kind of government, saw the writing on the wall, and decided that the best way forward was to have an authoritarian state combined with a limited market economy, which is what they have now. Consumerism to keep the masses distracted and unable to address the corruption which is at all levels of Chinese governance, from top to bottom. So it is not as simple as saying Marxist-Leninism failed because of its inherent flaws. China is a Marxist-Leninist state, and it has not failed yet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 5:37 AM

Title: Re: Abhidharmakosabhasya Book Club

Content:

Grigoris said:

So how are we going to structure this?

Malcolm wrote:

I would start with the dhātu chapter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 6:04 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<https://gizmodo.com/report-over-100-militant-groups-have-been-promoting-se-1843051231>

Unknown said:

The report suggests this isn't just casual dabbling in violent fantasies. The groups have uploaded CIA handbooks, military manuals, and the bomb assembly manual "The Anarchist Cookbook." One 133-page-plus planning document reviewed by the TTP reportedly identifies strongholds like "national guard depots, police stations, and factories that produce munitions" as "very solid targets" and proposes taking out rail lines and ports to "sabotage shipments." The TTP found that one Arkansas fan of several boogaloo pages was arrested earlier this month after allegedly livestreaming a hunt to kill a police officer on Facebook Live.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 6:13 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 6:38 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The police just attacked peaceful protestors with batons, shields, flash bangs, and gas outside the White House on National TV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 6:43 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Now attacking crowd with rubber bullets and mounted police as well as gas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 6:46 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Now trump is talking about how he is going to keep peaceful protestors safe at the same time he is attacking peaceful protesters with police.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 6:51 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Now trump is threatening to violate the posse comitatus act.

https://en.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/Posse_Comitatus_Act

Trump is making his fascist move.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 8:09 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Now trump is threatening to violate the posse comitatus act.

https://en.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/Posse_Comitatus_Act

Trump is making his fascist move.

PeterC said:

The insurrection act of 1807 provides a pretty big loophole, and has been used in recent history.

But yes, troops on the street isn't going to help him in November.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it does, but that depends on state government failure. He is using this to bypass state governments.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 8:50 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

tkp67 said:

It might be note worthy that all regions have local accessible public access radio available over the internet.

I tuned into a public broadcast in Minnesota the other day that gave priority to local black leaders who were informed, educated with reasonable and poignant explanations with suggestion for reform.

When you hear the minds of the community directly without the bias of mass media it puts them so much closer and the pollution of media agenda further away.

tl:dr of the last broadcast was that over policing of minorities is an centuries old income stream. If we look to the militarization of the police it looks like tax dollars get put into the military for plundering and then decommissioned military equipment is resold to the police at a premium through gains from forfeitures.

The govt has quite the hustle. Same as it ever was, reminds me of when I was working IT in the aerospace industry.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and then there is the privatized prison scam. I've been watching the mind of the country for a week now. And the people are pissed. The only media putting a spin on things is the trump controlled state media, aka Fox News.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 9:15 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Neofascist in spades. What he says is a complete lie.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 10:24 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

PeterC said:

https://twitter.com/bad_takes/status/1267594813710446593

He had the church site cleared of protestors with tear gas and rubber bullets before he went there for this peculiar photo-op with a bible.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, it was awful. He had the protesters cleared at the same time he was telling the country he was protecting the protesters. The church thing was something.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 6:47 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

tobes said:

Thanks for taking the time here Peter C. There is virtually nothing here that I disagree with. I'll take an insider's perspective on the relation between these race riots and the recent polarization of political views over mine (which is not only very distant, but also very uninformed) - it looks very connected from here, but perhaps that is a false perception.

I suppose I have inferred this because it seems like every particular issue is playing out in exactly the same intractable way. i.e. even 'should we go into lockdown or not?' basically followed this tribal logic.

Be clear though, I am not suggesting that two opposing sides are normatively or morally equal - in this case for example, I think the moral-political balance falls almost entirely on the side of the protesters. It is more a question of: 'how do we stop this slide into complete breakdown, with all of the consequences that will follow?'

Don't Americans need to be really thinking about this question? It seems like everyone has more or less given up; it's a fait accompli. The cookies will fall where they fall, blood will flow where it flows. Am I being too pessimistic here? What's the way out that doesn't involve the complete destruction of the other?

Dan74 said:

FWIW, I have a very similar impression. The entrenched partisanship, the striking dearth of civic discourse and the seeming absence of a common project..

Manjushri said:

Me too. It would make one hopeful to witness a bit more awareness of the potential catastrophe that may befall the community and country as a whole, based on the lack of dialogue and extreme antagonism between the two sides, without any compassion for the additional innocents dragged in the process, without any seeming attempt of resolution that lacks the risk of falling into full-scale bloodshed. It really is heart-breaking to see a community divided with a bottomless pit separating the two sides and the threat of blind and ruthless violence that takes over guilty and innocent indiscriminately.

Malcolm wrote:

All this "community divided" hand wringing is nonsense. There is a fascist in the White House, and if one does not see this one is either blind or one is complicit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 6:53 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Wayfarer said:

I can't help but think that the US riots will be exploited by the Orange Emperor. You can see he's itching to declare martial law and start shooting with real bullets. I don't think he'll be allowed to do it, but the longer the riots go on, the more mileage he will get on a 'tough on criminals' act that plays to the fears and insecurities of the electorate. It would be a vastly different matter if all the protests were peaceful, but the vision of stores being ransacked and people running off into the night with stolen goods only plays into the Law & Order storyline.

Malcolm wrote:

The protests were peaceful, until the police start attacking protesters on the first night. They've been peaceful everyday, and the police have violently attacked civilians everyday.

The looting, while regrettable, is totally understandable, and on balance, isn't that big a deal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 7:09 PM

Title: Re: Abhidharmakosabhasyam Book Club

Content:

Grigoris said:

Yes, I am interested.

When do we start?

jake said:

I will commit to reading up to the start of Chapter 1 (pg. 54 book, 122 pdf) of the Pruden translation by 14th Sunday.

Grigoris said:

The introduction is 60 pages and seems to just be an outline of the content. Is it worth the effort? Personally I think we should dive into the text. Maybe take Malcolm's advice or start from page 1 of the actual text?

Malcolm wrote:

The intro provides historical material mainly. Better to dive in.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 7:16 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

PeterC said:

https://twitter.com/bad_takes/status/1267594813710446593

He had the church site cleared of protestors with tear gas and rubber bullets before he went there for this peculiar photo-op with a bible.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, it was awful. He had the protestors cleared at the same time he was telling the country he was protecting the protestors. The church thing was something.

Minobu said:

no friggin way...thats wack .

can't be..if it is really not some bull shit...he can't possibly come back from something like that...if ain't true...this gives his people more ammo...

now show me please where he really had the place lit up with rubber bullets to clear out what exactly a church...what was in the church... i;m friggin dreaming man its a nightmare..

Malcolm wrote:

The church had a fire in the basement The night before. It is directly across from Lafayette park.

Protesters Dispersed With Tear Gas So Trump Could Pose at Church

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/06/01/us/politics/trump-st-johns-church-bible.html>

Minobu said:

WASHINGTON — People who gathered outside the White House to protest police brutality spent Monday waving signs and screaming for justice. They watched as police officers and National Guard units flooded Lafayette Square, delivering on a threat made by President Trump. And just before the city's 7 p.m. curfew went into effect, they were hit with flash-bang explosions and doused with tear gas.

It was because the president, who spent part of the weekend in a secure bunker as protests roiled, wanted to have his picture taken holding a Bible at a battered church just beyond the gates.

That church, St. John's — the so-called Church of the Presidents because every one since James Madison has attended — had been briefly set ablaze as the protests devolved on Sunday evening. After Mr. Trump's aides spent much of Monday expressing outrage over the burning of a place of worship, Hope Hicks, a presidential adviser, eventually hatched a plan with others at the White House to have the president walk over to the building, according to an official familiar with the events.

As Mr. Trump delivered a speech in the Rose Garden vowing to send the military to states where governors could not bring rioting under control but calling himself “an ally of all peaceful protesters,” the sound of explosions and the yells of demonstrators could be heard. After receiving repeated warnings to disperse before the city's curfew, the crowd was tear-gassed.

Mr. Trump began his walk to the church at 7:01 p.m. for a photo session that lasted about 17 minutes. On his way over, after protesters had been driven from the park, he was trailed by a group of aides, including Attorney General William P. Barr. Mr. Barr had strolled to the edge of the police line to observe the crowd in the minutes before the tear-gassing began.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 9:08 PM

Title: US Government declares America is a Battlespace

Content:

Unknown said:

"I think the sooner that you mass and dominate the battlespace, the quicker this dissipates and we can get back to the right normal," Esper said during the call, an audio excerpt of which was published by The Washington Post. "We need to dominate the battlespace."

Malcolm wrote:

https://www.washingtonpost.com/national-security/defense-secretary-pledges-pentagon-support-to-help-dominate-the-battlespace-amid-unrest/2020/06/01/7c5b4630-a449-11ea-8681-7d471bf20207_story.html

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 9:47 PM

Title: Re: US Government declares America is a Battlespace

Content:

PeterC said:

I'm trying to think of when the armed forces were last deployed on American soil - not the armed forces, the regular army, and not in an exercise. Hawaii in WWII? But even then it was deployed against a foreign invading enemy. This isn't something you can come back from.

Malcolm wrote:

Hurricane Hugo and the 92 riots in LA. Context here:

https://www.everycrsreport.com/files/20060814_RS22266_c6617a8c1fc8c51828f9ab4d4a42de8366358c24.pdf:

It discusses all the relevant laws and their past interpretation, though all bets are off with this guy and his flunky, William Barr.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 9:49 PM

Title: Re: Death in the family

Content:

tobes said:

Hello Dharmawheel community - my partner's father is about to pass away. As far as I can tell, all looks peaceful and auspicious, but if anyone can include him in their daily prayers/practices for the next few weeks I would be appreciative. His name is Noel. I think Guru Rinpoche is especially good for him, but whatever you usually do is great.

Malcolm wrote:

Sing song of the vajra to him, quietly, of course.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 10:58 PM
Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...
Content:

cloudburst said:

This is a surprising answer, not what I expected at all.

Most sources seem to indicate he is a worldly protector, even Terma sources.

He definitely seems to have the form/proportions/ traditional iconography of a gyalpo is it the Karma Kagyu who regard him as a wordly protector? Do you know anything about what I am talking about?

Malcolm wrote:

He is not a rgyalpo. Sometimes he is referred to as the king of the bstan, like in this passage a terma tantra of four armed Mahakala:

Emanation of Padma Heruka,
the king of the Tsan with magic power,
the one who divided heaven and earth in the west,
the empowerment is conferred upon Vajrasadhu.

Lhalhung describes him as having three aspects, jñāna Vajrasadhu in the presence of Vairocana in Akaniśtha; samaya Vajrasadhu in the presences of Vajrapani on Potala; and "puruṣa Vajrasadhu in Tibet, etc.

cloudburst said:

Thank you.

Do you know anything about how he is viewed by various schools?

Malcolm wrote:

Have not done a survey.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 11:00 PM
Title: Re: After Recognition of Nature of Mind...
Content:

Malcolm wrote:

He is not a rgyalpo. Sometimes he is referred to as the king of the bstan, like in this passage a terma tantra of four armed Mahakala:

Emanation of Padma Heruka,
the king of the Tsan with magic power,
the one who divided heaven and earth in the west,
the empowerment is conferred upon Vajrasadhu.

Lhalhung describes him as having three aspects, jñāna Vajrasadhu in the presence of Vairocana in Akaniśtha; samaya Vajrasadhu in the presences of Vajrapani on Potala; and "puruṣa Vajrasadhu in Tibet, etc.

cloudburst said:

Thank you.

Do you know anything about how he is viewed by various schools?

For example, what about Sakya? Jeff Watt says

"Dorje Legpa: a worldly deity, special for the 'Treasure' Tradition of the Nyingma. He typically holds a vajra scepter and a heart, riding atop either a lion or a goat."

how to explain the common appellation "Damchen" Dorje Legpa?

thanks

Malcolm wrote:

Skyes bu Dorje Legpa appears as a worldly deity tamed by Guru Rinpoche as a display.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 11:28 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 2nd, 2020 at 11:35 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

DNS said:

(Not sure if this has already been mentioned or not):

What started the whole event and the killing was a store employee calling the police on George Floyd because he tried to pay for items with a counterfeit $20 bill. I would guess about 99.99% of people who have a counterfeit bill don't even know that it is counterfeit and received it in change from some other store or place. I have received numerous counterfeit bills over the course of my life so far. I never for a moment thought about calling the police on them.

And then of course this is not to excuse the actions of the police involved, but the police should never even have been called.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this has been mentioned. But it is good to mention it again.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 1:08 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

krish5 said:

"The looting, while regrettable, is totally understandable, and on balance, isn't that big a deal."

I totally disagree. It is more than regrettable, it is violence, it is wrong, there are karmic consequences. It is hurting lots of people, causing much suffering, it is indeed a big deal!

Malcolm wrote:

Looting harms property, which, for the most part, is insured. Property can be restored, lives cannot.

krish5 said:

Many black small businesses have been destroyed or heavily damaged by the looting and they won't be able to re-open without go fund me pages which are already popping up on Facebook I see, etc.

Malcolm wrote:

Great, so they will be able to rebuild, eventually. Even some of them are sympathetic with looting. They live in their own communities, so they know how hard it is for some people. And, a lot of the violence against property is being done by far-right agitators, boogaloo bois and so on. It is not "Antifa."

krish5 said:

There is a difference between peaceful protests and looting, rioting, anarchy!

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and peaceful protests are what has been happening, apart from police violence against protestors. Looting is not part of the protests.

krish5 said:

To accept looting and say it is understandable, and isn't a big deal, IMO, is being just as much the problem as any of this.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a question of accept/reject. It's happening, and it is a result of systematic social and economic repression. When people are kept in a state of poverty through systemic racism, this is the result. You can, from a position of privilege, express your dismay, but we live in a world where the very wealthy, people like Trump, loot the world, everyday. Just take a look around you. How do you think modern capitalism functions? It certainly does not function through honesty and hard work. It functions through deep international power differentials which allow corporations to loot the world with impunity.

krish5 said:

Correct me if i am wrong, but in Buddhist teachings, any violence and stealing and hurting other sentient beings is wrong and hurtful and has negative consequences. Would the Buddha stand by and support looting and say it is no big deal?

Malcolm wrote:

These people are not Buddhists, so for them, the Buddha's point of view is quite irrelevant. Their karma is their karma, not my karma.

Basically, what we see is that police brutality is being brought bear against many thousands of people all across the country who are not involved in looting, using crimes against property as an excuse. So I am not that sympathetic with Gucci, etc., luxury stores that cater to white elites. Looting is a frustrated response to police violence. It may not be pretty, it may not be skillful, but it is entirely understandable, given the circumstances.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 1:10 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Minobu said:

I don't get that whole independent autopsy showing something different than the official autopsy.

Malcolm wrote:

The former is not subject to politics in the same way the latter is. But they both concluded that George Floyd was a victim of a homicide. The differences between the two reports will doubtless be subjected to examination during the trials.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 1:33 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

krish5 said:

This is not a true statement about protests all peaceful, i have seen protesters do things to cops too, they are not all innocent.

Malcolm wrote:

Like what? Throw water bottles at them? Coffee? In this round of things, rock throwing has always been presaged by the police using teargas. Sometimes the tear gas canisters and flash bangs are thrown back at the police.

krish5 said:

I am speaking here of Buddhist principles. This not a general forum or FB, this is a Buddhist forum.

We are supposed to have higher ideals and standards. We are supposed to be aware of the karmic consequences of our actions.

Malcolm wrote:

These are not my actions, nor yours.

krish5 said:

Years ago i heard a Tibetan Buddhist speak and he told about when the Chinese invaded Tibet. He had tears in his eyes telling about his own Father, who got a gun and was shooting and killing the Chinese. With tears, he said "My Father probably went to Hell for this." We prayed for him and all the rituals, but killing and violence like this, is just wrong, even under the circumstances.

Malcolm wrote:

I have two gurus, both pretty famous. Both of them were freedom fighters who were imprisoned by the Chinese for many years. One of them used to write a wrathful syllable on his bullets in order to deliver the consciousness of his targets into the dharmadhātu. I had another guru, also pretty famous, he ran away. To be, they are all buddhas.

krish5 said:

a little one sided to me, what you guys are presenting, like the protests are all peaceful and all the cops are violent, that is just not accurate or truthful.

Malcolm wrote:

All of the violence in the past several days has been initiated by the police shooting tear gas, rubber bullets, pepper rounds, and using pepper spray on peaceful, nonviolent protestors. The looters are not protestors, as mentioned above.

You see, where I live, a mostly white rural community in Western MA, the police are peace officers (just to be clear, I did not always live here, I lived for many years in the Boston area, where there were lots of different people). But the police in many urban areas often behave like they are a part of an occupying army (think Boston, NYC, etc.). Most of them do not live in the areas they patrol. They do not know the people they are supposed to be serving. The police have been increasingly militarized over the past thirty years and more. When there are peaceful protests, they show up in APC's, wearing heavy armor and weapons to face off against unarmed protestors, and regularly use excessive force. They act like forces of repression in these instances because they are being used as forces of repression. They are not protecting me. They are not protecting you. They are not protecting the protestors. They are violating people's civil rights.

There are also police who have done the right thing, like in Camden NJ, where the police joined the marchers, and other places, where they have taken a knee, or otherwise, showed their support for the protestors.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 1:48 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Required reading:

<https://daily.jstor.org/institutionalized-racism-a-syllabus/>

Unknown said:

Institutionalized Racism: A Syllabus

How can we help students understand George Floyd's death in the context of institutionalized racism?

The United States has seen escalating protests over the past week, following the death of George Floyd while in custody of the Minneapolis police. Educators everywhere are asking how can we help students understand that this was not an isolated, tragic incident perpetrated by a few bad individuals, but part of a broader pattern of institutionalized racism. Institutional racism—a term coined by Stokely Carmichael (later known as Kwame Ture) and Charles V. Hamilton in their 1967 book Black Power: The Politics of Liberation in America—is what connects George Floyd and Ahmaud Arbery with Philando Castile, Eric Garner, Emmett Till, and the thousands of other people of color who have been killed because they were black in America.

This context seems vital for discussions both inside and outside the classroom. The following articles, published over the course of JSTOR Daily's five years try to provide such context. We will be updating this page with more stories and are working to acquire a reading list about institutionalized racism in the near future. (Note: Some readers may find some of the stories in this syllabus or the photos used to illustrate them disturbing. Teachers may wish to use caution in assigning them to students.)

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 4:31 AM

Title: Re: Sakya view about Dorje Legpa

Content:

cloudburst said:

Hello Sakya peeps

Can anybody report on what they have been told about Dorje Legpa? In particular, do your teachers regard him as a Oath-bound, worldly deity, or as an enlightened protector? I'm informally polling different schools' views on the matter.

many thanks!

Malcolm wrote:

Dorleg is not among the Sakya protectors.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 5:17 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

https://www.vice.com/en_us/article/dyzva7/a-white-man-from-illinois-allegedly-brought-bombs-to-start-a-riot-at-the-minneapolis-george-floyd-protest

And now this:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 8:12 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

PeterC said:

GWB may have led a fairly awful administration but he was not a bad person. He and Obama have displayed far more leadership in the past few days than has the sitting president.

Malcolm wrote:

A corpse demonstrates more leadership than the sitting president.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 9:22 AM

Title: Re: Sakya view about Dorje Legpa

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I have also never read an opinion about it. For context, in Sakya Mahakala is an oath bound protector, he is also regarded as beyond samsara. The name “oath bound” is not a reliable indicator of the status of a given dharmapala—they are all oath bound.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 9:53 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 10:04 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

https://www.nbcnews.com/news/us-news/state-minnesota-files-civil-rights-charge-against-minneapolis-police-department-n1222476?cid=sm_npd_nn_fb_ma

Unknown said:

State of Minnesota files civil rights charge against Minneapolis Police Department
The inquiry, stemming from the death of George Floyd, will be designed to root out "systemic racism that is generations deep," Gov. Tim Walz told reporters.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 11:15 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

https://www.vice.com/en_us/article/m7jvq8/white-supremacist-group-identity-evropa-posed-as-antifa-on-twitter-and-called-for-looting-and-violence

Unknown said:

A white supremacist group linked to deadly right-wing violence in Charlottesville in 2017 used a fake Twitter account to pose as “Antifa” and incite violence during the current wave of protests against police brutality.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 6:57 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Toenail said:

Isn't it better to send the army in? Is this equal to martial law? I am asking seriously. The situation gets way out of hand, the police is not trained and very unprofessional. Soldiers probably will have better trigger control, can handle these situations better, are more respected by the communities, because the relationship is not poisoned by past experiences etc. Also, many civilians now are taking damage. In Chicago a race war between Latino and Black Gangs started and in Latino neighbourhoods there are many reports of Latino Gang member shooting indiscriminately black people. They pulled out a pregnant woman in Little Village and killed her in front of her husband. These things are all on video and can be found on the internet.

Malcolm wrote:

Soldiers, generally speaking are not properly trained in police work, including crowd control. There is no race war between Blacks and Latinos, tension is not a "race war."
<https://www.chicagotribune.com/lifestyles/ct-life-chicago-latino-neighborhoods-gangs-floyd-protests-20200603-dsui2w2dabdy7cgxxkbz7a3c3q-story.html>

As far as a woman being shot in Little Village, I am failing to find any news story of this. There was a woman shot in this place on March 25th, who died a few days later, and a pregnant woman was murdered there last May, but as far as I can tell this is not an accurate report.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 6:58 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Toenail said:

Isn't it better to send the army in? Is this equal to martial law? I am asking seriously. The situation gets way out of hand, the police is not trained and very unprofessional. Soldiers probably will have better trigger control, can handle these situations better, are more respected by the communities, because the relationship is not poisoned by past experiences etc. Also, many civilians now are taking damage. In Chicago a race war between Latino and Black Gangs started and in Latino neighbourhoods there are many reports of Latino Gang member shooting indiscriminately black people. They pulled out a pregnant woman in Little Village and killed her in front of her husband. These things are all on video and can be found on the internet.

Tiago Simões said:

Soldiers aren't trained for crowd control.

PeterC said:

Neither are police, frankly. I would prefer soldiers - real soldiers, not national guard, and not contractors - they have more discipline and training on use of weapons. But when you're at the point of using military-level force to subdue a civilian population, the government has failed. Right now there are protests in every state in the country.

Malcolm wrote:

The election of Trump has inexorably led to a failure of government. As far as soldiers policing American streets, no way. Opposed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 7:03 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

bubbajohn said:

Is that an authentic Hilterian image?

<https://www.snopes.com/fact-check/hitler-holding-bible/>

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is a manipulated image. Anyone can see that easily. The tiny hand in the Hitler image is photoshopped from the trump photo.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 7:25 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

PeterC said:

Neither are police, frankly. I would prefer soldiers - real soldiers, not national guard, and not contractors - they have more discipline and training on use of weapons. But when you're at the point of using military-level force to subdue a civilian population, the government has failed. Right now there are protests in every state in the country.

Malcolm wrote:

The election of Trump has inexorably led to a failure of government. As far as soldiers policing American streets, no way. Opposed.

PeterC said:

It's that or having the police get out all their military toys and kill more people. Neither is a good outcome but fewer people will die if the army do it.

Malcolm wrote:

No, I don't agree. Not with this guy in the White House.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 7:30 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Strongly agree with Nemo.

Nemo said:

I did get a real kick out of the burnt police station. 1 down 19,478 to go.

DNS said:

Not sure if you're being facetious or if you're serious. If serious, who would you call if your family was being attacked by a home invasion? (and there was no escape route)

Nemo said:

Sounds centrist but OK.

I am a soldier trained for CQB. Police have significantly less training than I do. I am trained almost exclusively in using lethal force. I guess I would call on the Buddhas to make me merciful. Not that it would ever be an issue. Where I live I am more likely to be hit by lightning and orders of magnitude more likely to be killed by a cow. You don't seem to understand what police are for. In that situation to have an officer arrive 20 minutes too late with a pencil and notebook would not be particularly helpful.

Police were not designed to protect the public. They were designed to protect property. It is obvious from their actions that their main job is to protect capitalism. I didn't see many Wall Street criminals go to jail now or in 2008 did you? But black men go to jail for such crimes as standing on the street or not having money. Police brutality is inherent in capitalism and capitalism cannot exist without violence.

To quote black activist Boots Riley; "You cannot have full employment under Capitalism.

Capitalism must have a certain percentage of unemployed ppl to exist.

When unemployment rates lower past a certain point- u see WSJournal, FTimes, etc worry because it means that wages go up- & stock values go down- in real time There must be an army of unemployed workers so that bosses can keep wages low by threatening workers with the idea of being replaced. The bigger that army is- the workers supposed "competition"- the lower the wages are.

And the point is to keep wages as low as they can f there was full employment, workers could tell the boss "I want $75 an hour or I'm out" and the boss couldnt replace them. Theyd have to give in to demands of workers without much organizing needed Businesses must make more money each year than the last- so this wouldnt work.

So, Capitalism needs an army of unemployed workers in order to exist.

What do you call an army of unemployed workers?

You call them hungry. They need to eat.

And they don't have a job, because Capitalism needs them to be unemployed and desperate.

That army of unemployed workers isn't going to just let themselves or their families starve and be homeless.

They are going to go into illegal business.

Hell- even many folks with legal jobs that don't pay enough will need to do this for supplemental income.

Il business- legal and illegal- uses violence to regulate itself

If a hotel next2 offices of Twitter decided to make a golf course thru twitter offices,

@Jack

wld say "no, I have a deed"

The deed only matters cuz there are men w guns- the police- who will physically enforce it

During prohibition, when liquor was illegal

U rob the liquor dude- gangsters come after u

U rob the liquor dude now- the police come after u

20 yrs ago when weed was illegal

U rob the weed dude- his friends come after u

Now u rob the weed dude- the police come after u

Same shit illegal business doesn't have the police or the courts on to regulate it like legal business does.

"You can't go to court and say "your honor, I was supposed to be buying a whole kilo of cocaine- clearly this is half baking soda. I demand restitution!"

There's no zoning board to complain to

"This block is only zoned for one cocaine vendor, if this guy wants to vend cocaine in the same area, he's gonna have to get a special permit. That is, unless he can agree to stick to vending heroin."

So illegal business practitioners have to regulate business themselves. As you see with police and legal business- regulating business takes physical force and violence. You can't have business without violence.

You can't have business w/o violence, and you can't have unemployment w/o illegal business, and you can't have capitalism without unemployment.

Therefore, you can't have capitalism without poverty, unemployment, so-called "crime", and violence.

But- how does the ruling class tell the whole working class- who, in the US, is largely White- that their poverty and low wages is something that is built into the economic system? That the wealth of the Bezoses and Bloombergs of the world RELY on their poverty?

They don't.

They teach the working class- thru media conglomerates they own (news & entertainment)- that low wages, poverty, and violence that grows out of that is due to the bad decisions of the impoverished.

That the poverty they experience is something that can be fixed by unlearning

(the Bezos and Bloomborgs of the world don't have to personally edit or produce it to put this out- they just hire the editors and writers who don't challenge this view. Not hard- many of them come from similar backgrounds and/or training/education and therefore political view)

But how do they GET AWAY with telling the WHOLE working class that their low wages and poverty is built in to capitalism- without the working class deciding to get rid of the ruling class?

They don't.

They point to Black people and other people of color and say to the white working class: "look at those savages. They're violent, their culture is lacking what they need to thrive in this system, they don't work hard, they have a weaker family structure than white ppl, etc etc"

"that is poverty- and Black people and other POC are in poverty because of their own doing, when in actuality capitalism works fine and is where you can get RICH if you do it right"

"here watch CSI:frak, it'll prove it to you"

They bolster the lie: "Black neighborhoods have more crime and violence than White neighborhoods"

Only if u lump the Bel Airs in w White working class

Studies show: if u compare Black communities to white communities of the SAME INCOME LEVEL, crime & violence levels r the same

And that way they get the white working class to say "I'm not like them at all- I'm morally upstanding. If I do have some financial problems, it's cause of the couple little adjustments I need to make. Not the economic system. At least I'm not them."

and that's when you get white ppl in families who make $22k a year calling themselves MIDDLE CLASS and aligning themselves w the ruling class.

And this is not just Trump supporters. Look at Elon Musk's twitter and you'll find a gang of ppl kissing his ass, many w very little $

But now that poverty and the "crime" and violence that comes from it has been defined as a personal problem, and furthermore- racistly defined as one derived from the culture of the community that it is supposedly happening in more-

If police are supposed to actually want to "fight crime", then they would go to the source of the "crime". This would be the ruling class. This would be the billionaires who cause the low wages and poverty and "crime" that, as I show above, is necessitated by their actions.

We've seen enough CSI:frak to know that they are always supposedly going for the guy at the top. the guy that is the ringleader of said crime.

If cops were in it to stop "crime" and the violence that comes from it, they wldn't be cops, they would be revolutionary organizers

Because the source of the crime isn't in the Black communities other POC communities, or even White working class communities- the source of the crime is on 5th ave, in Bel Air, and silicon valley.

But, since the racist ideas about Black people and other POC- as I laid out above- are necessitated by capitalism, the job of the police in the Black community is functionally one of a combatant against the community.

It doesn't matter, how nice the cop is in their personal life, or what basketball team they coach on the weekend, or even what their conscious intentions are-the job of police is simply- at best- to lock up folks for being involved in their own survival in an economic system that dictates- and thrives off the fact- they are in poverty.

And their ARE other crimes that aren't directly to do with a direct crime of economic survival, but even many of those are the outgrowth of the culture that comes from whatever the local industry is. Fishing villages sing fishing songs.

The only way for cops to feel like they are doing the right thing- the only way for them to function in their job- is for them to subscribe to racist notions of violence, crime, and poverty- even if the cop themselves is Black or POC.

If want to stop these things, we have to get rid of capitalism.

A mvmnt that understands that also understands where our power lies."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 8:32 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

PeterC said:

GWB may have led a fairly awful administration but he was not a bad person. He and Obama have displayed far more leadership in the past few days than has the sitting president.

Grigoris said:

Ummmm, wasn't GWB a war criminal? I seem to remember him being one.

Malcolm wrote:

By any rational measure.

Grigoris said:

Kind of makes you realise how screwed American politics really is.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because slavery.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 8:46 PM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<https://arstechnica.com/science/2020/06/sars-cov-2-looks-like-a-hybrid-of-viruses-from-two-different-species/>

Unknown said:

One of the longest-running questions about this pandemic is a simple one: where did it come from? How did a virus that had seemingly never infected a human before make a sudden appearance in our species, equipped with what it needed to sweep from China through the globe in a matter of months?

Analysis of the virus's genome was ambiguous. Some analyses placed its origin within the local bat population. Others highlighted similarities to pangolins, which might have been brought to the area by the wildlife trade. Less evidence-based ideas included an escape from a research lab or a misplaced bioweapon. Now, a US-based research team has done a detailed analysis of a large collection of viral genomes, and it finds that evolution pieced together the virus from multiple parts—most from bats, but with a key contribution from pangolins.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 8:59 PM

Title: Re: Monastic Academy

Content:

Wayfarer said:

Members might be interested in this site.

<https://www.monasticacademy.com/>

Malcolm wrote:

From the times yesterday:

A Latter-Day Rip Van Winkle Emerges, Blinking, Into the Post-Virus World

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/06/02/us/coronavirus-meditation.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 9:02 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Corrosive Effects of Tear Gas Could Intensify Coronavirus Pandemic

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/06/03/us/tear-gas-risks-protests-coronavirus.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 9:17 PM

Title: Re: What is the application of practicing nagarjuna middle way in real life?

Content:

confusedlayman said:

If someone reads and want to apply nagarjuna middle way discourse in real life, how would he do? will he know that all things have no position and simple dont have clinging or no intentional action? what is the real application in terms of experience ? pls use conventional language and words to say so i can grasp whats the truth

Malcolm wrote:

Practice Mahayana. Aryadeva's 400 verses and Shantideva's Bodhicaryavatara are essentially manuals on how to practice Mahayana from a madhyamaka perspective.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 9:22 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Use of tear gas classified as a war crime under Geneva convention:

That kind of treatment often causes permanent damage, or worse, as in the case of 37 Egyptian prisoners killed by police who fired US-bought CS gas into a locked police truck. As in the cases of the women in Bahrain and elsewhere who have miscarried after getting splashed with CS for the crime of protest. The Geneva Convention identifies all forms of tear gas as chemical weapons, and bars their use in times of war.

<https://www.motherjones.com/politics/2020/06/trump-dc-protest-tear-gas-park-police/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 9:33 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 9:33 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Use of tear gas classified as a war crime under Geneva convention:

That kind of treatment often causes permanent damage, or worse, as in the case of 37 Egyptian prisoners killed by police who fired US-bought CS gas into a locked police truck. As in the cases of the women in Bahrain and elsewhere who have miscarried after getting splashed with CS for the crime of protest. The Geneva Convention identifies all forms of tear gas as chemical weapons, and bars their use in times of war.

<https://www.motherjones.com/politics/2020/06/trump-dc-protest-tear-gas-park-police/>

Dan74 said:

"in times of war"

Malcolm wrote:

Right, so something banned in times of war is ok to use on civilians during peacetime? Is that how I am to understand your response?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 9:36 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

https://www.washingtonpost.com/national-security/cia-veterans-who-monitored-crackdowns-abroad-see-troubling-parallels-in-trump-handling-of-protests/2020/06/02/7ab210b8-a4f6-11ea-bb20-ebf0921f3bbd_story.html

Unknown said:

The scenes have been disturbingly familiar to CIA analysts accustomed to monitoring scenes of societal unraveling abroad — the massing of protesters, the ensuing crackdowns and the awkwardly staged displays of strength by a leader determined to project authority.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 9:55 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 9:55 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Dan74 said:

"in times of war"

Malcolm wrote:

Right, so something banned in times of war is ok to use on civilians during peacetime?
Is that how I am to understand your response?

Dan74 said:

From an interview with Jamil Dakwar, director of the human rights program with the American Civil Liberties Union:

<https://www.pri.org/stories/2019-07-31/tear-gas-has-been-banned-warfare-why-do-police-still-use-it>

[T]he Geneva Convention bans the use of tear gas from war. Why is that not mandated for civilians?

It really goes back to the Chemical Weapons Convention. At the time when it was negotiated in the 1990s, there was a lot of pressure to ban chemical weapons and they were used by law enforcement. That obviously got pushback from many countries who said, "Well, we can't really give up this weapon because if we don't use tear gas we will have to resort to more lethal weapons." The compromise that was reached was to leave that option open for using tear gas or riot control agents in law enforcement and only in law enforcement.

Malcolm wrote:

Not a good excuse.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 9:58 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Grigoris said:

CS is really nasty (speaking from experience), even in an open space with a moderate wind it is still pretty damn awful.

Malcolm wrote:

Pepper spray is no better.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, June 3rd, 2020 at 10:05 PM
Title: Re: George Floyd
Content:

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 1:18 AM
Title: Re: George Floyd Protests
Content:
DNS said:

I am sure you have seen or heard on the news of them [the police] responding to assaults, armed robberies, attempted murders, shootings, etc?

Malcolm wrote:

They do not do this very well in black and latino neighborhoods, where they generally behave like an occupying army, rather than peace officers. However, they do this quite well in wealthy neighborhoods with lots of white people, who have money to afford such protection.

BTW, assaults against persons are crimes against property, since our bodies are property. It is just that in America, the property of whites, including their bodies, is more highly valued than the property of blacks, latinos, and native people.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 2:11 AM
Title: Re: George Floyd
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/06/03/us/politics/trump-protests.html>

Unknown said:

WASHINGTON — President Trump on Wednesday first denied and then acknowledged that he had gone to a secure bunker in the White House as protesters demonstrated nearby but said he went there for an “inspection,” not because of concerns over his safety.

“Well, it was a false report,” Mr. Trump said during an interview with Brian Kilmeade of Fox News Radio, who had asked if he had been brought to the bunker along with his family as protests continued.

But then Mr. Trump reversed himself, and said he had gone to the bunker. But did not say when he went or with whom. “I wasn’t down — I went down during the day, and I was there for a tiny little short period of time, and it was much more for an inspection, there was no problem during the day.”

Mr. Trump added that he had be there “two, two and a half” times before because he had “done different things” related to inspecting the bunker.

The president’s account was contradicted by a person with firsthand knowledge who told The New York Times in a report published Sunday that on Friday night, Secret Service agents nervous for his safety abruptly rushed him to an underground bunker used in the past during terrorist attacks.

A second official familiar with the events said the agents acted after the White House’s security status was changed to “red” amid the protests, a warning of a heightened threat. Officials said the president was never really in danger, but that he and his family were rattled by the sometimes violent protests near the White House.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 3:08 AM

Title: Re: Visualization and Space

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Apropos of "setting the mood."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 3:25 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Dan74 said:

There is hardly a word of a concrete proposal.

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, there are many concrete proposals, which, in this country are systematically blocked by the Right. But in order to understand what these proposals are, you have to understand what systemic racism is:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 4:57 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

What nonsensical drivel. The police are not enemy combatants...

Malcolm wrote:

Not in white neighborhoods in the US. In black and latino neighborhoods, it is an entirely different story.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 5:12 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

Socialism being totally devoid of violence of course. Oh, wait. Leave people alone and you will get capitalism. As for brutality, that is a sad fact of human existence. Its not surprising really, seeing as how we are apes.

Malcolm wrote:

Which socialism did you have in mind? There are quite a variety to choose from. But as is usual, blinkered conservatives conflate all socialism with Marxist-Leninism.

The peoples of the Americas and Australia were "left alone." They never came up with "capitalism." Ditto for India, China, Africa, etc.

Modern capitalism grew out of the colonial expansion of sea-faring nations of Western Europe following 1492, along with its attendant necessity, slavery. Modern capitalism is founded on genocide and slavery. It could not have possibly arisen without it. When you plant a tree in poisoned soil, your yield will be poisoned fruit. Specifically, modern Capitalism is an Anglo-American development, which again, was cultivated in the soil of white supremacy, slavery, exploitation, and genocide. Just ask my highland ancestors. You can go to Nova Scotia and hear recordings of people who experienced and recalled the genocidal behavior of the British Empire during the clearances.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 5:14 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

Grigoris

Nope. By being against the rioting mob i am not pro police brutality.

Norwegian said:

Are you aware that countless innocent and peaceful protesters across the US, women and men, have been violently attacked by police? With tear gas, rubber bullets, batons, and so on. These are not rioters in any way imaginable. And yet they have been attacked, beaten, shot at, gassed, etc. For no reason other than the fact that the police that does this - across the US - are seemingly high and buzzing on power abuse.

You seem to willfully ignore this.

Ceisiwr said:

Tear gas, rubber bullets and batons are used in order for the police to protect themselves and for crowd dispersal.

Malcolm wrote:

Bullshit.

Ceisiwr said:

It becomes police brutality when they unjustifiably use these means, such as hemming in a crowd and tear gassing them when they have no chance to disperse or beating someone to a pulp.

Malcolm wrote:

For example, Lafayette Park.

BTW, from the point of view of the American Right, Britain is a socialist hellhole.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 5:16 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

I would like to see the EU collapse.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course you would.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 5:37 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

I wouldn't say so, since you can be racist and still be tolerant. The map showed levels of racist prejudice, not intolerance. Is the west grossly racially intolerant, or intolerant in general? I don't think it is.

Bundokji said:

Racist prejudice would not matter unless somehow associated with intolerance. Conflating racism with lack of tolerance is what liberals accuse conservatives of most often. As an exemption, leftists would often describe themselves as "race conscious" hence identity politics is emphasized in their rhetoric, but they would not call themselves racist.

Malcolm wrote:
Identity politics is a right wing trip.

You people need to read John Rawls, A Theory of Justice.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 9:20 AM
Title: Re: George Floyd Protests
Content:
Ceisiwr said:

Which socialism did you have in mind? There are quite a variety to choose from. But as is usual, blinkered conservatives conflate all socialism with Marxist-Leninism. Having been a Communist for 10 years im quite familiar with all of the different flavours. Any system which seeks to supplant capitalism will have to use force and violence, since individuals are not just going to hand over their property. You will also have to stop people like me from coming to power and privatising again. I read your eco-anarchist link last night. None of that can be achieved without force.

Malcolm wrote:
You suffer from a serious lack of understanding of the environmental consequences of industrial capitalism. There are no market-based solutions to climate change.

Ceisiwr said:
The peoples of the Americas and Australia were "left alone." They never came up with "capitalism." Ditto for India, China, Africa, etc.
No, we gave it to them.

Malcolm wrote:
Which demonstrates that your thesis is not true. And we did not "give" capitalism to the world, we imposed it upon the world by force of arms and tsunamis of blood in the interest of profit by importing slave labor to create commodities for European markets, returning nothing at all in terms of culture and benefits to the countries we've pillaged.

Ceisiwr said:
Still, for the most part if you leave people alone then eventually people will trade their surplus on an open market. Profit will be sought and gained. Its not much from there to re-investing in the business to make more money. You just need to wait for someone to have the idea.

Malcolm wrote:
Trade does not necessarily = capitalism.

Ceisiwr said:
Of course, if you have an oppressive system like Feudalism then it becomes harder to get to capitalism from merchant trading. Hence my point, leave the traders be and you will get industry (which is a good thing).

Malcolm wrote:

I am surprised you fall for this Marxist canard.

Ceisiwr said:

Modern capitalism grew out of the colonial expansion of sea-faring nations of Western Europe following 1492, along with its attendant necessity, slavery. Modern capitalism is founded on genocide and slavery. It could not have possibly arisen without it. When you plant a tree in poisoned soil, your yield will be poisoned fruit. Specifically, modern Capitalism is an Anglo-American development, which again, was cultivated in the soil of white supremacy, slavery, exploitation, and genocide.

Slavery and colonialism had its part to play in how we ended up with capitalism today, although its not the whole story. However, as I said, without force if people are left alone to freely associate and trade then eventually it will develop. Its merely an extension of market trading after all. If the conditions were better and he caught on to the idea, Anathapindika could have become a fine capitalist being the rich banker that he was.

Malcolm wrote:

But you cannot give a single instance where capitalism established itself without force. Without force and the threat of violence, capital markets of the kind which characterize modern capitalism cannot function at all, especially if people are “left to themselves.” Modern capitalism functions through the suppression of markets, not through a so-called “free market.” For example, Monsanto.

It may surprise you to learn that I have indeed read Hayek, and I agree with his thesis that the central planning which characterizes certain kinds of authoritarian socialism is inefficient. I disagree with the conclusion that many people draw from this, however, capitalism is the only alternative or even most desirable alternative to such an undesirable economic system, since it clearly isn't, given that its history is just as bloody, ecologically harmful, and nonvirtuous as political systems grounded in the pseudoscience of dialectical materialism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 9:35 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

I wouldn't call it wise.

tobes said:

Yes and Mattis is hardly some radical lefty:

<https://www.theatlantic.com/politics/archive/2020/06/james-mattis-denounces-trump-protests-militarization/612640/>

I wonder though, how much popular support does Trump have on this? Is it really 35+%??

tkp67 said:

If not more. It is an incredible dynamic and I know a number of very intelligent, virtuous and compassionate people who still stand by him even after loss to the virus.

A mind need only a tiny tether to cast a whole swath of good aside.

This is why I do my best to respect Trumpers and appeal to how they carry themselves because those with virtue would never do the same things he does. When I appeal to that aspect in that manner there isn't much dialog but empty stares and bouts of silence.

Some things make us grasp harder, which makes reason more difficult to permeate.

Addressing the mindset while appeal to the conscious is tricky but not impossible.

Malcolm wrote:

All the trumpsters I know have called Obama the N word in my presence. In Massachusetts. There are no virtuous trumpsters. All of the people who voted for trump, who have any shred of decency, realized they erred and will choose differently. Other wise they own all the havoc he has wreaked upon this nation and the world.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 9:38 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Tiago Simões said:

I might disagree, I never had Trump in my estimation. But I think we can all agree that Trumps reaction to this has been a joke, to say the least.

Ceisiwr said:

I wouldn't call it wise.

tobes said:

Yes and Mattis is hardly some radical lefty:

<https://www.theatlantic.com/politics/archive/2020/06/james-mattis-denounces-trump-protests-militarization/612640/>

I wonder though, how much popular support does Trump have on this? Is it really 35+%??

Malcolm wrote:

Read it and weep:

https://projects.fivethirtyeight.com/trump-approval-ratings/?ex_cid=rrpromo

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 9:50 AM

Title: The next crisis, right around the corner...

Content:

Unknown said:

"When the $600-a-week unemployment insurance runs out at the end of July, most people expect tremendous displacement risk," says Andrew Jakabovics with the affordable housing nonprofit Enterprise Community Partners. "Evictions are likely to go through the roof."

And with eviction moratoriums expiring in parts of the country, he says action is needed right away to help people who can't pay the rent as the pandemic drags on.

Meanwhile, as with many other aspects of the coronavirus outbreak, there are disparities along socioeconomic and racial lines. Panameño says her group did a national survey to see who was having trouble paying their bills after the pandemic struck.

"Twenty-five percent of Latinos had already fallen behind with their payments," she says. "Twenty-eight percent of African Americans had fallen behind. That compares to 12% of whites that had fallen behind."

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.npr.org/2020/06/03/867856602/millions-of-americans-skipping-payments-as-tidal-wave-of-defaults-and-evictions->

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 9:53 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Nemo said:

, it could be natural. But if so you should also check your trash for winning lotto tickets. There is no proof it is natural.

Malcolm wrote:

You know quite well you cannot prove a negative. So why go there?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 9:56 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

mikenz66 said:

Trump doesn't actually have the authority to do most of the things he's ranting about...

Malcolm wrote:

he doesn't rant about things he can do, he smugly does them, and the optics are always really embarrassing for him, because he is such a little bitch.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 9:59 AM

Title: Re: Multicolored Garuda

Content:

Danny said:

Garuda and kalachakra, I think some connection with Panchen Lama.

Regards

Malcolm wrote:

Maybe, the origin is Naropa via Sakya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 10:01 AM

Title: Re: Abhidharmakosabhasyam Book Club

Content:

PeterC said:

...

Grigoris said:

Well, that's it then. PeterC leads the first reading.

PeterC said:

Could I get an extension on my homework? Happy to do the second but the next ten days for me are going to be very busy at work, I can do the reading but I doubt I can write the book report in time

Malcolm wrote:

The main point here is not to understand the meaning of the term abhidharma here, the main is to understand the meaning of prajna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 10:27 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

Still, I have a feeling that Trump will win the next election.

Malcolm wrote:

If so, only through corruption. Also, he has turned the military leadership against him with his latest stunt. The military in the US is mostly republican. If they turn, well, no way he gets re-elected. Also, it is pretty much another blue wave, even before covid, and now this. So, we will see at the polls.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 11:18 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Queequeg said:

Wow. Finally, someone has spoken up. I hope others take the cue and follow suit.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, he openly admitted that trump is a fascist bastard.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 11:22 AM

Title: Re: Multicolored Garuda

Content:

Danny said:

Garuda and kalachakra, I think some connection with Panchen Lama.

Regards

Malcolm wrote:

Maybe, the origin is Naropa via Sakya.

Danny said:

Well technically it would be Shakyamuni appearing as kalachakra at Dhanyakataka as requested by King Suchandra. But I wasn't there so can't really say.

Regards

Malcolm wrote:

The sadhana comes from Naropa via Sakya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 11:28 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Queequeg said:

Basically called him a Nazi.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup. Old school Antifa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 11:31 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Minobu said:

yeah well how scary is this

<https://www.theatlantic.com/politics/archive/2020/06/trumps-biblical-spectacle-outside-st-johns-church/612529/>

Christians applaud in glee over Trump's holding up the Bible against lawlessness and racism ..

we is frigged...i mean I thought he could not come back from this.....

Malcolm wrote:

Christian Fascism is the new black on the right. Those bastards need to be shut down hard too. Democracy depends on it. Otherwise we are looking at some variation of the Handmaid's Tale.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 11:41 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Minobu said:

Christians applaud in glee over Trump's holding up the Bible against lawlessness and racism ..

Queequeg said:

Last stand. They have nothing to do but go down with him. They're in the wilderness once he's out.

Minobu said:

last stand..lol.so friggin true...i see now why all the angst online here about what christianity means in America....

Malcolm wrote:

It's not angst, you have good Christians like the bishop of Washington. She is quite excellent. Then you have Falwell and the rest of the Christian Fascists, who are every bit as bad as the Taliban.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 11:42 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Minobu said:

yeah well how scary is this

<https://www.theatlantic.com/politics/archive/2020/06/trumps-biblical-spectacle-outside-st-johns-church/612529/>

Christians applaud in glee over Trump's holding up the Bible against lawlessness and racism ..

we is frigged...i mean I thought he could not come back from this.....

Malcolm wrote:

Christian Fascism is the new black on the right. Those bastards need to be shut down hard too. Democracy depends on it. Otherwise we are looking at some variation of the Handmaid's Tale.

Minobu said:

I think you already have it...

Malcolm wrote:

If trump is re-elected, expect a refugee bump from the US.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 11:47 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Minobu said:

.someone on CBC said 60 million of these vote Trump no matter what...

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, 37 percent of electorate voted in the Nazis too. But GOP wins depend very specifically on voter suppression, so expect to see a lot of it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 12:09 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

krish5 said:

Type in Youtube this, if you want to hear a different perspective from a very intelligent, law abiding concerned Black Woman:

Candace Owens - I DO NOT support George Floyd and I refuse to see him as a martyr! It is a 18 minute video she posted today and it is powerful!

I will not respond to any comments or put downs, just sharing this in case there is any Buddhists out there who want to hear a more balanced, intelligent perspective to this whole madness going on. Be well.

Malcolm wrote:

Who gives a flying frak what she thinks? She wasn't lynched by four racist cops in cold blood in broad daylight. If you don't understand that George Floyd was lynched, you are an idiot.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 12:20 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If trump is re-elected, expect a refugee bump from the US.

mikenz66 said:

Ha. That's what Joan Baez said when she played in my city in New Zealand during the last election - of course as an intro to Woody Guthrie's song "Deportee".

Arlo Guthrie and Hoyt Axton:

Mike

Malcolm wrote:

And it happened, NZ passed laws to prevent it, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 7:56 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Dan74 said:

(is this how people actually talk? I just know it from Battlestar Galactica..)

To expand on it a little, do you mean specifically the poverty, the violence and the brutality of law enforcement? I tried earlier to come up with some lame suggestions to improve the communities and people's chances to do something meaningful with their lives. But one of the things that strikes me is that for every thousand words of condemnation of this or that, of righteous anger, etc etc there is hardly a word of a concrete proposal.

Queequeg said:

It's how the forum editing software makes us sound. Lol

A big part of the anger is because there are no pithy remedies. A being in hell takes eons to escape because the improvements are only incremental. We have 400 and more years of bad karma to dig out of. We've made eons of karma that brought us here now. Many of the solutions to make a difference are incremental and generational. But patience is in short supply in the face of such inequality and injustice, especially in a place like the US where the inequality is flaunted and explicitly built on exploitation and cruelty. That's what Chauvin's smug face spoke in that video. He had no fear of consequences no matter what happened.

Even if we implemented all of those reforms in Malcolm's video to fix institutional racism, they would need to be energetically sustained for generations to have the effect we need. But we have to start where we are and all we can look forward to is fixing them.

Dan74 said:

I suspect if the energy and the anger of the protests were poured into concrete proposals, like securing equal funding for schools, as the video suggests, it could succeed. Other than that, they mostly seem to act as a massive pressure relief valve - make us feel like we are doing something, while nothing continues to be done.

Malcolm wrote:

The protests are a result of 45 years of frustration that the US has made very little concrete progress in fixing these issues, largely due to GOP intransigence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 8:01 PM

Title: Re: Multicolored Garuda

Content:

Danny said:

Something like Chilupa who gives it to nadapada (naropa) who gives it to Atisha and so on, the condensed version, not the long form which I think is non existent, which was what the kings of shambala used as a sort of political great society experiment.

Something like that?

Regards

Malcolm wrote:

No, I'll have look at the lineage again, but from Naropa to Sachen, it has the same lineage as Yogini, being one of the Sakya Thirteen Golden Dharnas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 8:03 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

And it happened, NZ passed laws to prevent it, actually.

mikenz66 said:

I'm not sure exactly what you're referring to, but I do agree that our immigration system is a frustrating mess at present (which I've had to deal with in various ways).

Unless you're a Peter Thiel, of course:

<https://www.nzherald.co.nz/indepth/national/how-peter-thiel-got-new-zealand-citizenship/>

But perhaps this is getting off topic...

Mike

Malcolm wrote:

Lots of wealthy tech overlords purchased property in NZ, right after trump was elected, until policies were changed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 8:37 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

Me not directly experiencing it does not mean that rioting is ok, or that attacking the police is ok. Just like police brutality it is wrong. If you want to apologise for such violence you can, but it's probably best to stop calling yourself a Buddhist if you do.

Malcolm wrote:

You have been systematically apologizing for police violence, better stop calling yourself "Buddhist."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 9:23 PM

Title: Re: Multicolored Garuda

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

it has the same lineage as Yogini, being one of the Sakya Thirteen Golden Dharnas.

Danny said:

Question, the yogini lineage in later times amongst the kadam becomes a topic of political conversation?

Malcolm wrote:

The Naro Khacho tradition was heavily modified by Phabongkha Dechen Nyingpo in the early 20th century, after he received it from a Sakya master, Zimog Tulku. His modifications sparked some criticism.

With respect to Vajragaruda, the lineage is Vajradhara, Jñānaḍākinī, Naropa, the Phaimthing brothers, Logkya Lotsawa Sherab Tsek, Mal Lotsawa Lodo Drakpa, Sachen Kunga Nyungpo, etc. The same lineage as Naro Khachod, in fact.

The associated instructions of this cycle are quite extensive, roughly thirty folios or so.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 10:36 PM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

Fa Dao said:

So CNR has said that "...but through this integration of the nature of mind and the nature of existence (semnyid and Chonyid), the light body manifests"

So how and why does this work?

Malcolm wrote:

You need to receive more complete teachings on dzogchen to understand this point. It should not really be discussed on a forum in public.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 11:26 PM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

Fa Dao said:

So CNR has said that "...but through this integration of the nature of mind and the nature of existence (semnyid and Chonyid), the light body manifests"

So how and why does this work?

Malcolm wrote:

You need to receive more complete teachings on dzogchen to understand this point. It should not really be discussed on a forum in public.

Fa Dao said:

oh ok..so the Longde teachings from Rinpoche aren't complete enough? You said in another post that they were complete..but hey, if its one of those things that is not to be discussed at all then cool..no prob

Malcolm wrote:

Longde is a complete method, that does not mean it is a complete explanation. The explanation you are looking for is in Upadesha level tantras, in thogal. Longde is a bridge between semsde and managde.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 4th, 2020 at 11:41 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Matt J said:

I think Paul Krugman summarized it pithily:

How did we get here? The core story of U.S. politics over the past four decades is that wealthy elites weaponized white racism to gain political power, which they used to pursue policies that enriched the already wealthy at workers' expense.

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/06/01/opinion/trump-george-floyd-police-brutality.html>

I don't think it is intransigence, I think it is intentional. The GOP doesn't want progress--- or at least, until the number of minorities who vote imperil their political opportunities (reduced of course via gerrymandering, barriers to voting, etc.).

Malcolm wrote:

The protests are a result of 45 years of frustration that the US has made very little concrete progress in fixing these issues, largely due to GOP intransigence.

Their intransigence is a function of their intent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 12:08 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Queequeg said:

There's a lot of experimentation going on trying to figure out how to counter inequality in education.

Grigoris said:

A national department of education that funds schools equally? Why don't they try that solution? Seems to work just about everywhere else in the world.

In Greece teachers are public servants and have the ability to apply to work in specific schools (near their home towns or urban centers) only after they have spent a certain amount of time working in schools in remote rural areas and islands. They are offered bonuses/incentives to work in remote areas.

Malcolm wrote:

Because GOP, they do not want educated voters, or people to believe in evolution, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 12:16 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

jake said:

Again, please stay on topic. The issue at hand is George Floyd Protests. If you wish to discuss global economics/world systems theory/capitalism/etc. please take it to another thread.

Malcolm wrote:

They are related. Systematic racism which lead to the death of Floyd is connected to these other issues.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 12:38 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

Me not directly experiencing it does not mean that rioting is ok, or that attacking the police is ok. Just like police brutality it is wrong. If you want to apologise for such violence you can, but it's probably best to stop calling yourself a Buddhist if you do.

Malcolm wrote:

You have been systematically apologizing for police violence, better stop calling yourself "Buddhist."

Ceisiwr said:

I have not been apologising for police violence. I have been condemning violence on all sides.

Malcolm wrote:

This is an apology for police violence: "Tear gas, rubber bullets and batons are used in order for the police to protect themselves and for crowd dispersal."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 12:40 AM

Title: Re: US Government declares America is a Battlespace

Content:

Nemo said:

Trump is pretty good compared to most of the bozos you put in charge.

Malcolm wrote:

Um, no. Worst president ever.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 2:35 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

I have not been apologising for police violence. I have been condemning violence on all sides.

Malcolm wrote:

This is an apology for police violence: "Tear gas, rubber bullets and batons are used in order for the police to protect themselves and for crowd dispersal."

Ceisiwr said:

As I said previously, there is some justification for self defence. Tear gas is pretty standard for crowd control, which is the job of the police. Better to control the crowd than to let it become a violent destructive mob, or an even worse one. Its a shame that you literally can't tell the difference.

Malcolm wrote:

You claim to be against violence, and allow that the police are permitted to use it in self-defense, and in the same breath, deny the same privilege of self-defense to protestors. So basically, you are asserting only the police have a right to self-defense, meaning only the police have the right to use violence. Thus, you are apologizing for police violence by renaming it "self-defense and crowd dispersal."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 2:37 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

The "associated fallout of that" has been rioters destroying private property. That is completely unacceptable behaviour. Law and order must be maintained.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that's what priviledge white people always say when the consequences of their racist policies bite them around the ankles.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 2:50 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

Hello Johnny Dangerous

It's a bigger deal than the black men dying at the hands of police, filling up the prisons etc., over a large period of years? Your priorities are interesting.

I've already stated that police brutality is wrong and that the US has a particular problem with it. None of that justifies rioting.

Malcolm wrote:

We disagree. Sometimes a riot is exactly what is needed.

Ceisiwr said:

Is rioting and property destruction wrong? Sure.

Well this is refreshing.

Malcolm wrote:

Not necessarily. It depends on how much oppression one has had to bear.

Ceisiwr said:

Here in the UK its extremely minimal. How we get it better than the US, i don't know.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.elle.com/uk/life-and-culture/a32742001/marcia-rigg-anti-racism/>

Ceisiwr said:

'All I could think about was Sean, because that's exactly what they did to him.'

Marcia Rigg's first thought when she watched that video of a white police officer kneeling on George Floyd's neck while he cried out, 'I can't breathe', was of her late brother Sean Rigg.

There were immediate parallels.

Firstly, both men were black, Sean was 40 and George Floyd, 46. In 2008, Sean also died after being restrained by police officers in the prone position – face down with pressure applied to the back and neck – for seven minutes. Though an Independent Police Complaints Commission (IPCC) report said officers acted 'reasonably and proportionately', two years later, a Coroner's court determined that they used 'unnecessary' and 'unsuitable force', which 'more than minimally' contributed to the curtailing of his life. Sean's death was recorded as a cardiac arrest, with the coroners also adding in partial positional asphyxia.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2020/jun/04/systemic-racism-police-brutality-british-problems-black-lives-matter>

Ceisiwr said:

Though the numbers of deaths following police contact are thankfully not as bad in the UK as in the US, we should be anything but complacent when it comes to our own structural problems with racism or policing. Institutional racism exists at every level of our criminal justice system, from who gets stopped and searched, to who gets arrested, to who gets charged, to who gets convicted.

Malcolm wrote:

Like father, like son. For the most part, the British Empire has exported its brutality to other nations, like Ireland, Scotland, Burma, India, the Americas, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 2:53 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Dan74 said:

It's ironic that the US, billed as the land of opportunity, has some of the most insidious structures in place designed to maintain existing classes and impede social mobility.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not ironic, it is by design, thanks to the GOP.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 3:16 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

Well for the developing world the wages might seem low to us, but for them it's a good thing. Earning £5 a day is better than earning £2 a day, which is better than earning £0 a day.

Malcolm wrote:

This assumes that wages are always "good."

For example, after NAFTA was passed, and the US dumped cheap corn on the Mexican Market, 50,000 small farmers were forced out of business. They were forced to leave their land and move to the cities to find jobs. Where they had formerly been self-reliant, and had minimal needs from the cash economy, now they were unable to provide for themselves, and abandoned maize cultivation to find work in Mexico City, etc. This led to massive overcrowding as well as a huge influx of men looking for work in the US, "illegally." Eventually, by working in the US, these small farmers were able to send money home and did a great deal to restore the local economies of Mexico. But the small farms in the meantime are finished, and along with them, many hundreds of landraces of maize. Now of course, the appetite for avocado toast has led to the rise of two things: illegal avocado cartels and destruction of monarch butterfly habitats in the old growth forests of Michoacán, which is the only state in Mexico allowed to export avocados to the US.

Once again, we see here how capitalism, far from encouraging free markets, actually is a force of market suppression. Amazon is a perfect example of what happens when antitrust laws are not observed. Amazon and Walmart are two of the main forces of market suppression in the world.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 3:25 AM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

Fa Dao said:

oh ok..so the Longde teachings from Rinpoche aren't complete enough? You said in another post that they were complete..but hey, if its one of those things that is not to be discussed at all then cool..no prob

Malcolm wrote:

Longde is a complete method, that does not mean it is a complete explanation. The explanation you are looking for is in Upadesha level tantras, in thogal. Longde is a bridge between semsde and managde.

Fa Dao said:

ahhh...ok..thank you...sorry..I still dont know what can be asked/talked about and what cant..my Teacher is gone...there is, as far as I know, no one else out there that teaches Longde the way he did...He also said that Longde was a bridge to rainbow body... Is it possible that with continued practice many of the answers will become known through practice? or is that just wishful thinking?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because Longde is a bridge to thogal.

Wishful thinking. You live near a very qualified Dzogchen master, Tulku Sangngak. I suggest you seek teachings from him.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 3:27 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Norwegian said:

More apples, feeling the need to shoot at a black couple, for absolutely no reason at all:

Malcolm wrote:

Or as the old Crisis song has it:

Don't rebel,
you won't get thanked,
you'll just get run over by a tank.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 3:42 AM

Title: Re: Biden Sharpton ticket

Content:

DNS said:

Biden has already said it will be a woman. My guess is it will be a woman-of-color, probably Kamala Harris.

Malcolm wrote:

Would prefer Val Demmings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 4:28 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Minobu said:

the girl got sprayed too and she was just standing there as well.

Norwegian said:

"Freedom of speech" doesn't exist in the US. Talk and you get assaulted. Especially if you're black.

Malcolm wrote:

This is what White Supremacy looks like.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 4:38 AM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You can't unsee that...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 4:50 AM

Title: Re: US Government declares America is a Battlespace

Content:

Nemo said:

Trump is pretty good compared to most of the bozos you put in charge.

Malcolm wrote:

Um, no. Worst president ever.

Nemo said:

Pinochet, the Shah of Iran, Hugo Banzer, the house of Saud, Manuel Noriega, etc, etc
He's pretty average really.

Malcolm wrote:

I was referring to American Presidents.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 5:04 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

Within free trade the most inefficient business goes out of business, as it should, thus making the economy more efficient.

Malcolm wrote:

"Free" trade isn't free. It's a rigged game. There is no efficiency in nature. This is one of the reasons why capitalism is an unnatural growth on the planet and should excised like a cancer. Unfortunately, while I can understand a bit of violent rebellion now and again, I am not particularly fond of violent revolutions. We are stuck with capitalism present, but not because it is the best or most ideal of economic systems.

Ceisiwr said:

I'm amazed that you seem to think that there would be no destruction of habitat under socialism. Some destruction of habitat is going to happen wherever humans settle.

Malcolm wrote:

I've addressed this already. Industrialism, the means of production that Marxist-Leninists wanted to seize, is itself toxic. One of the main faults of Marx's thinking is the view he held that capitalism was progressive. It isn't.

So it is not surprising that the former Soviet bloc countries were heavily polluted, just as England, the US and other nations with extensive heavy industry were polluted. That's what happens when you burn too many hydrocarbons in too short a period of time, and randomly dump toxic shit all over the place.

When one observes that 50% of the animal life on the planet has declined since the publication of Silent Spring, one really has to wonder at such statements as, "Some destruction of habitat is going to happen wherever humans settle."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 5:06 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

I actually said that the US...also has a socialist problem too.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, there are not enough of them. But that is changing:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 5:19 AM

Title: Re: Soto zen and problem of satori

Content:

LastLegend said:

Your expectation is very high for modern degenerative age where world is wretched with bad karma. Satori is not easy in any tradition. There is a rare one in a billion who has reached the Wisdom level of Buddhas. You might have an Arahant and possibly a Bodhisattva here and there.

Malcolm wrote:

You are too skeptical.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 7:38 AM

Title: Re: Drew Brees and controversy, what do Buddhists think about this

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The right wing fetish for the flag is childish. Moreover, the national anthem lionizes slavery:

And where is that band who so vauntingly swore,
That the havoc of war and the battle's confusion
A home and a Country should leave us no more?
Their blood has wash'd out their foul footsteps' pollution.
No refuge could save the hireling and slave
From the terror of flight or the gloom of the grave,
And the star-spangled banner in triumph doth wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.
I stopped saying the pledge of allegiance in 1970, in third grade.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 8:27 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

Johnny Dangerous

The people engaging in this behavior are a minority of protestors.

Indeed and they should rightly be condemned. Thuggish behaviour is totally unacceptable.

Once again you want to address this, but apparently think that generational decades of racist violence is either equivalent, or even less important. If that weren't the case you wouldn't keep bringing this up, because you'd have different priorities here. I don't think they are equivalent. One is obviously worse than the other, but both are morally reprehensible.

I don't care.

Splendid!

A "socialist problem"? Aren't you in the UK? We don't and have never even had a labor party, much less a socialist party. What a cockamamie statement.

I do indeed. I actually live in Cymru (Wales), where we have had a Welsh Labour government at every welsh election since 1999. Leftism permeates our society in many ways, not all of it good. Actual socialism has been on the rise here too. The growth of anti-capitalist and anti-liberal (in the UK sense) sentiment is rife both here and in the US. The growth of the acceptance of totalitarian ideas is concerning.

I'm not apologizing, I'm just properly contextualizing it next to generations of black communities subject to violence and severe economic repression, which you aren't, for reasons which seem fairly obvious - you think they are somehow equivalent, or that "law and order" in this context is more important than systemic racism and violence. Makes your values clear at least.

The rule of law and the maintenance of order is of paramount importance, providing those laws do not violate basic human rights. When enough people start to think that mob action and vigilantism (such as with the dangerously deluded Antifa rabble) is acceptable then things become dangerous. It must not be given an inch.

Malcolm wrote:

Law and order without justice is neither lawful nor orderly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 9:05 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

The rule of law and the maintenance of order is of paramount importance, providing those laws do not violate basic human rights. When enough people start to think that mob action and vigilantism (such as with the dangerously deluded Antifa rabble) is acceptable then things become dangerous. It must not be given an inch.

Malcolm wrote:

As Nelson Mandela put it In 1990, "Nonviolence is a good policy when conditions permit, but sometimes conditions do not permit."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 9:11 AM

Title: Re: US Government declares America is a Battlespace

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Um, no. Worst president ever.

Nemo said:

Pinochet, the Shah of Iran, Hugo Banzer, the house of Saud, Manuel Noriega, etc, etc
He's pretty average really.

Grigoris said:

They were all Amerikan (backed) "presidents" too.

Malcolm wrote:

That was his point, but it was it wasn't clear.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 10:11 AM

Title: Re: Drew Brees and controversy, what do Buddhists think about this

Content:

krish5 said:

"I wouldn't be surprised if he's also a Trumper."

I dont want to make this about Trump. But have to ask, does it matter if he voted for Trump or not, likes him or not? What does his political beliefs have to do whether he is a good decent human being or not?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, voting for Trump was an error, to vote for him again, absolutely immoral.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 10:12 AM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

Fa Dao said:

ok guys..I hear you..thanks

Malcolm wrote:

He will insist you do a ngondro.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 8:48 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Modus.Ponens said:

101667756_10220249018912461_7064554214973767680_o.jpg

Malcolm wrote:

This not what BLM is protesting. You table is distorted.

Modus.Ponens said:

Blacks made up 12% of the population. However, from 2015 – 2019 they accounted for 26.4% of those that were killed by police under all circumstances. In other words, Blacks were the victims of the lethal use of force by police at nearly twice their rate in the general population. Whites make up the majority of victims of police use of lethal force (50.3%) from 2015 – 2019,

Malcolm wrote:

<https://thesocietypages.org/toolbox/police-killing-of-blacks/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 10:02 PM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

Fa Dao said:

ok guys..I hear you..thanks

Malcolm wrote:

He will insist you do a ngondro.

Fa Dao said:

I know..thats one of the reasons why I haven't gone there before...I have met many Teachers in the past almost 40 years...Norbu is the one that always made sense to me...the way he taught I just got it...ya know what I mean?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. The problem with Dzogchen Community at present is there is no one who is giving transmissions of such things as thogal and yangti inside the community. There are only SMS teachers who continue to give instructions for transmissions they have already received.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 10:06 PM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

Fa Dao said:

and I should add that I am just too damn old, tired, and brain damaged to start off from square one....btw, I wasnt asking about actual techniques/practices, I was just trying to wrap my head around the process, the theoretical side...oh well

Malcolm wrote:

You already have enough to do with practicing rushan, etc. These are the preliminary practices for thogal and the enhancement practices for trekcho. Further, while the four visions do occur in longde, Longde texts do not explain the theoretical side. So you should make effort to listen to Lama Chonam's lung of the Tshog don mdzod. That text as the complete theoretical foundation you are looking for. When Norbu Rinpoche gave transmission, he did not just give transmission for one series of Dzogchen or another. He gave a unified transmission. But the instructions for all three series need to be sought out separately. And in the case of Longde, also the Ngondzog Gyalpo empowerment is required.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 10:09 PM
Title: Re: Rainbow body questions
Content:

PSM said:

Yes, it can be. I've seen it on this site (not this thread) with certain individuals seeming to use it as a hammer on those with legit questions. As if 99% of people wouldn't ask their teacher such questions if they could.

Malcolm wrote:

Frequently, while the questions are legitimate, the forum for answering them [i.e. here] is not suitable, nor is it necessarily appropriate to answer those questions at all, if someone does not have the right qualifications.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 10:13 PM
Title: Re: Rainbow body questions
Content:

fckw said:

But when I hear especially people in their retirement part of life asking questions and receiving stereotype answers then I really wonder whether the answer "go and find teacher" is still appropriate. Those people don't have 30 years left for practice. And who are we to judge whether a specific person would or would not profit from an actual explanation of some subtle points?

Malcolm wrote:

It is appropriate. Why? Well, because this is an open forum, and such questions need to be answered in a private setting with a qualified teacher.

This is not a proper forum for discussing the intimate details of Dzogchen teachings. So we don't.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 10:16 PM
Title: Re: Rainbow body questions
Content:

Norwegian said:

Except Dzogchen is open to anybody who has an interest in it.

fckw said:

Well - did the author of the question in this thread get an answer other than "go ask teacher"? And did he manage to "go ask teacher"? You are really just juggling with cool words that don't mean so much in actual practical terms.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, because these things need to be heard at the feet of a teacher, not read on a bulletin board.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 10:24 PM

Title: Re: Drew Brees and controversy, what do Buddhists think about this

Content:

krish5 said:

"I wouldn't be surprised if he's also a Trumper."

I dont want to make this about Trump. But have to ask, does it matter if he voted for Trump or not, likes him or not? What does his political beliefs have to do whether he is a good decent human being or not?

This is where i get confused, i see a lot of put downs of Trump on here and saying you cannot be a Buddhist and like Trump, or something like that.

Malcolm wrote:

Supporting corrupt leaders is not consistent with Buddhist values. Trump is corrupt. Therefore, supporting Trump is not consistent with Buddhist values.

krish5 said:

Even some black people vote for and support Trump. It has nothing to do with any skin color, any religion, everyone has their reasons for voting as they do and that is their right.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, some black people did, to their short-term advantage and long term disadvantage. It was just the same in Vichy France, where some French people supported a collaborationist leader.

krish5 said:

i am giving the guy the benefit of the doubt on this.

Malcolm wrote:

He is just another white guy who has not properly studied the history of this nation, and does not understand that the Star Spangled Banner is a racist poem.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 5th, 2020 at 10:26 PM

Title: Re: US Government declares America is a Battlespace

Content:

Grigoris said:

"We have no legal rights as prisoners, only as citizens.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, because 13 amendment, which enshrined carceral slavery into law.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 1:07 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Queequeg said:

Better trained than their maids and gardeners,

Malcolm wrote:

Ahem, no you are not. You are just trained in different things.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 1:20 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Dan74 said:

QQ, what makes you think that the 'overclass' is an especially nasty bunch of people?

Malcolm wrote:

Most of them support the GOP.

Dan74 said:

From what I've seen, the US rich are the best philanthropists in the world. A bunch of them argue for higher taxes and more programs for the poor. I recall a few years back, there was a concerted push from the US billionaires for lifting people out of poverty, building up a bigger middle class, etc.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, frankly, there are not that many billionaires in the US, 630 to be exact, with a net worth of $3.4 trillion. But it is the millionaires that are problem, 14 million to be exact, 11% of all households.

Dan74 said:

So is it the 'overclass' or a particular slice of it that happens to be better organised and to wield outsized influence? Koch, Murdoch, Thiel, etc?

Malcolm wrote:

The GOP is organized around money, guns, and religion, in that order. They have a simpler message than Democrats, etc., i.e. "Get yours first" followed by "Screw your tired, your poor, your huddled masses yearning to breathe free" which is why Steven Miller dismissed the sonnet written by Emma Lazarus that was added to the base of the Statue of Liberty.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 1:57 AM

Title: America's Fascist Collapse

Content:

Unknown said:

Remember how his advisors advanced the ideas of ethnic cleansing and purification? How he began his campaign by calling immigrants and refugees “vermin” and “animals”? Blaming them for the economic woes of the average American, who suddenly found themselves downwardly mobile, poor, and desperate? Trump blamed a certain hated minority — Latinos, mostly, but also blacks and Muslims and Jews — a demagogue scapegoating them for all a nation’s problems, from poverty to social disintegration to hopelessness to a lack of good jobs to crime. Just like Hitler had in the 1930s to Jews, too. Yes, really. Ask your Jewish friends. 99.9% of them will agree. That was fascism.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://eand.co/this-is-americas-fascist-collapse-c830c1d2271a>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 1:59 AM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

Fa Dao said:

As an aside, I did receive the Yeshe Lama transmission from another Teacher but feel more connected to the Longde...it makes sense to me....

Malcolm wrote:

If you have received Yeshe Lama than you have received all the instructions you need in this life.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 2:06 AM

Title: Re: Drew Brees and controversy, what do Buddhists think about this

Content:

krish5 said:

And now i see what they are allowing to Drew Brees, and i think it is wrong, he is entitled to his opinion. We are losing many rights in this country, including Freedom of Speech. Even Burgess is seeing this and has the courage to speak up.

Malcolm wrote:

Freedom of speech does not mean that when we say some dumb shit, we are immune to criticism. All it means is that we can say some dumb shit without being put in jail for it. It does not mean that other people are not allowed to publicly castigate us for the dumb shit we might have said. It's a risk we take especially when we are public figures.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 3:05 AM

Title: Re: Drew Brees and controversy, what do Buddhists think about this

Content:

krish5 said:

Good point Malcolm, but finally some people are starting to stick up for Brees and say he received undue, unfair, overkill criticism for what he said.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and free speech also means that other people can say dumb shit in defense of the dumb shit one says.

As far as sports go, I prefer tennis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 3:06 AM

Title: Re: Drew Brees and controversy, what do Buddhists think about this

Content:

krish5 said:

Good point Malcolm, but finally some people are starting to stick up for Brees and say he received undue, unfair, overkill criticism for what he said.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and free speech also means that other people can say dumb shit in defense of the dumb shit one says.

As far as sports go, I prefer tennis.

On DWE I also use my own name. I don't believe in internet anonymity. I think it is harmful.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 3:19 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Modus.Ponens said:

If black lives truly matter for progressives, they have to stop ignoring unpleasant realities so that there can be effective solutions to improve and save black lives. Unfortunately, what I frequently see is that progressives think that the narrative and the ideology are more important than black lives.

Queequeg said:

What are you talking about?

This is one of the stupider talking points Fox must be circulating these days (I'm guessing, because I haven't hate watched recently, but I've seen/heard more or less the same stupid thing from other Fox new watchers and I doubt that you guys have the brain cells to think this one up yourselves), lulling their audience in their racism while giving them the comfort of thinking they're not really racist, but that its progressives who are really the racist ones.

Malcolm wrote:

And now this:

<https://www.propublica.org/article/new-trump-appointee-to-foreign-aid-agency-has-denounced-liberal-democracy-and-our-homo-empire>

Queequeg said:

A new Trump appointee to the United States' foreign aid agency has a history of online posts denouncing liberal democracy and has said that the country is in the clutches of a "homo-empire" that pushes a "tyrannical LGBT agenda."

In one post, Merritt Corrigan, who recently took up a position as deputy White House liaison at the U.S. Agency for International Development, wrote: "Liberal democracy is little more than a front for the war being waged against us by those who fundamentally despise not only our way of life, but life itself."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 3:35 AM

Title: Re: Drew Brees and controversy, what do Buddhists think about this

Content:

krish5 said:

And now i see what they are allowing to Drew Brees, and i think it is wrong, he is entitled to his opinion. We are losing many rights in this country, including Freedom of Speech. Even Burgess is seeing this and has the courage to speak up.

Queequeg said:

Dude, you didn't know who Brees was before he became a martyr for Laura Ingraham. You have no idea who Burgess Owen is other than he was featured on Fox as a talking head offering an opinion in support of Brees. You want to talk about free speech in the NFL? Let's talk about Colin Kaepernick getting black listed.

What Fox is making a big deal about is a twitter uproar. Its pathetic. Its the kind of story assigned to interns - "Here, watch your twitter feed and come up with a story. We need a 5 minute segment tonight between the My Pillow and metamucil commercials."

As I said, Brees is clueless. I hope he gets educated. He's paid to chuck a football, which he's very good at, not give informed political opinions.

P.S. - Buddha was a revolutionary, he went against the stream, the current, what people believed at his time. He questioned all, doubted all, did not accept God or a permanent self/atman. It took great courage on his part to speak what he saw and felt, even though it went against the norm. Never forget that Buddha himself was a true revolutionary, revolted against the whole system and beliefs of his time. He challenged all. Buddha was beyond labels like "revolutionary". Please don't put a beret on Gautama and call him Che.

Buddha taught liberation. He did not question all, doubt all. He examined his mind and saw it clearly, liberating himself.

You don't know Buddhist teachings very well at all.

Malcolm wrote:

Not only that, but this business of standing for the national anthem in Football is a relatively recent thing:

2009: NFL players began standing on the field for the national anthem before the start of primetime games. Before this, players would stay in their locker rooms except during the Super Bowl and after 9/11.

2015: Senators John McCain and Jeff Flake released a report revealing that the Department of Defense had spent $6.8 million between 2012 and 2015 on what the senators called "paid patriotism" events before professional sports games, including American flag displays, honoring of military members, reenlistment ceremonies, etc. The DoD justified the money paid to 50 professional sports teams by calling it part of their recruiting strategy. However, many teams had these ceremonies without compensation from the military, and there was nothing found in the contracts that mandated that players stand during the anthem.

The question is, is marketed patriotism patriotism or just a way to convince dumbass kids with little common sense and less education to join up?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 3:36 AM

Title: Re: America's Fascist Collapse

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

I escaped the place. I cannot defend it. I was a lit major and we read Eli Weisel and others. 20 years of adulthood having this fascist descent just get worse and worse. As a lawyer I heard powerful people say and do outright fascism de verdate. I read Trungpa say his guru advised there is no defending Tibet and to escape. That moment I knew it was time to go.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, but you went from pan to fire: Bolsinaro is just as much a fascist as Trump.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 4:07 AM

Title: Re: Drew Brees and controversy, what do Buddhists think about this

Content:

krish5 said:

p.s. - Another football player in hot water.

<https://billswire.usatoday.com/2020/06/04/buffalo-bills-work-with-jake-fromm-teammates-tredavious-white/>

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because he said something idiotic in private, and was outed. What a prick.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 4:46 AM

Title: Re: Drew Brees and controversy, what do Buddhists think about this

Content:

Steel said:

"Drew's original statement, I thought, was insensitive. It was very insensitive, especially during this time. But I thought the negative reaction from every talking head on television and some of his teammates was overkill. I never heard a bad word about Drew Brees in my life. He made a mistake. But we've gotten to the point in society where everybody on social media thinks they are God, judge and jury. Drew Brees made a mistake," Barkley said on TNT.

Malcolm wrote:

And we would not be discussing it at all if someone had not asked us what we thought about it, and is now quite upset at the response they've elicited:

krish5 said:

I already had to do the same thing, in a thread i am on, they accuse you of all kinds of things. I dont know what is going on with this forum, a Buddhist forum where even some of the moderators are coming hard at posters and lacking in right speech imo. I already brought it up to the head guy a few days ago and then to another moderator and also am experiencing this myself. I dont mind criticism myself and laugh at most of these silly immature responses, but it is still not right and not in the spirit of Buddhism and what a Buddhist forum should be like.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 4:51 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

krish5 said:

Modus, you didnt do anything wrong

Malcolm wrote:

No one said he/she did anything wrong. They are expressing their vehement disagreement with his/her understanding of the issues.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 4:58 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Nicholas2727 said:

I have heard that that Mahayana school says it will take 3 incalculable eons before someone reaches Buddhahood, although the Vajrayana school says someone can achieve Buddhahood in this lifetime. If both schools focus is on becoming a Buddha, why would one choose Mahayana (The much slower school) versus Vajrayana

Malcolm wrote:

First of all, Vajrayāna is Mahāyāna. The principle difference between common Mahāyāna and Uncommon Mahāyāna Secret Mantra is methodology. However, these distinctions are Indian. East Asian Buddhists have a whole different scheme that was arrived at in China and Japan, not India. That does not mean they are ipso facto invalid. Another issue is that Indian Mahāyāna survives only in Tibetan Buddhism, where it is taught for theory, but not for practice. For practice, Tibetan Buddhists teach various types of Vajrayāna practice.

Indian Mahāyāna is not really taught in Chinese Buddhism. The Chinese Buddhists have developed an independent understanding of Mahāyāna which is very distinct from Indian Mahāyāna. Nevertheless, there are certain fundamental commonalities since all Mahāyāna traditions are based on Mahāyāna sūtras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 5:06 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

krish5 said:

What is the point of using words like "Idiot" "Prick" "Vehement" "Dont know what you are talking about" "You are not a good Buddhist" Etc These words or phrases kill conversations imo.

Malcolm wrote:

Sometimes conversations deserve to die.

For someone who recently claimed to be an advocate of free speech, it looks an awful lot like you want to control the parameters of what free speech is. Either you are for free speech, or you are not. If you are, then you really have to accept that people are going to use words that you don't like, for example, prick, idiot, vehement, and so on. You are free to engage in discussions or not, it is your choice. Your notion that someone is chasing someone away is erroneous. I am not a moderator, so I have no way to prevent anyone from saying anything.

Since we are in a Mahāyāna forum, you have to understand that intention is more important than actions. Vows are not rules, they are training guidelines. Harsh speech is not necessarily nonvirtuous speech. It all depends on context.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 5:12 AM

Title: Re: Drew Brees and controversy, what do Buddhists think about this

Content:

krish5 said:

And once i joined in, i said the heck with it and let my guard down and shared honestly and freely.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and complained about the responses you garnered here. Sometimes I complain about responses I garner here. That's what the report button is for.

Now, this conversation verges on meta-discussion, which is against TOS.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 5:29 AM

Title: Mayor of DC renames street BLM Plaza

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Too awesome:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 7:53 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

krish5 said:

Modus, you didnt do anything wrong

Malcolm wrote:

No one said he/she did anything wrong. They are expressing their vehement disagreement with his/her understanding of the issues.

Modus.Ponens said:

Which dovetails nicely into my criticism of progressives. They are aiding the rise of true fascism by removing the sting of these insults. Or by engaging in "antifascist" action consisting of destroying and burning things. Or by defining people as oppressors and victims (tantamount to evil and good) based on unchosen identity instead of actions.

Malcolm wrote:

Your caricature of Antifa is false, as is your caricature of progressives. You would do well to read Mark Bray's book. Is Antifa illiberal? Definitely. Fascism should be shutdown hard. Mattis compared this administration to Hitler. Wake the f#%k up.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 9:57 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Listen man, when even the most conservative generals in the US are calling out the Trump Administration for fascist behavior, beginning with Trump's own former secretary of defense and White House chief of staff, your economic theory faith commitments, pearl clutching about property damage, numbers, and statistics are meaningless, Wake the f#%k up.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 10:09 AM

Title: Re: Garab Dorje Three Points

Content:

AJP said:

Can Dzogchen be said to be anything other than Garab Dorje's Three Points?

Ultimately?

Malcolm wrote:

The three phrases are just a bare outline of the basis, path, and result. If one is extremely intelligent, they maybe sufficient. But obviously they were not sufficient because if they were, Dzogchen literature would not be one of the major literary traditions of Tibetan Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 10:32 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The point this person fails to realize that in the United States, after the native population, black people have suffered the most state sponsored violence. The reason native people are not rising up is that white people, us, systematically eliminated them. The only white Americans free of this history are immigrants who arrived here after 1900. But special credit can be laid at the feet of the diaspora of confederates during Reconstruction as well as Federal Troops who hunted down native people in US occupied territories.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 11:12 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Our history is more complicated than NZ's. There are way more stakeholders in this discussion.

mikenz66 said:

Yes, this is exactly what the left have been arguing for, isn't it? We have the same problem here, with Māori people locked up a lot more than whites and often for marijuana offences, and the same cycles of poverty that are not well-enough addressed by the welfare system or the education system.

But some on the right argue against these things as "preferential treatment"....

Actually, I do think that some of the American progressive rhetoric has the appearance of focusing too much on the past than the future. But maybe that's because no one really ever said "sorry" yet. That happened here decades ago, and has even eventually happened in Australia, though some time after this photo was taken 20 years ago...

Mike

Yes, I agree. In a small country (half the population of NYC) with basically one level of government it's much easier to make certain changes. But don't forget that around the time when the US was fighting a civil war, the Māori people here were waging a guerrilla conflict against the British Empire's army over illegal land acquisitions. And all kinds of bad stuff happened in Australia, of course...

Mike

Malcolm wrote:

I understand. The accumulation of too much centralized power, whether it is political, social, or economic, is inimical to the self determination, happiness, and well being of all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 6th, 2020 at 7:48 PM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

Danny said:

That's Dzogchen viewed through a vajrayana practitioners conditioning. But Dzogchen is not a vajrayana transformation path.

yagmort said:

very well may be.. nonetheless let's say it is mandatory in Dudjom Tersar to finish several ngöndros before you can be introduced to Neluk Rangjung. Malcolm mentioned earlier about Tulku Sangngak as well.. so do you know of any teachers who are ok if you don't do ngöndro?

Danny said:

My friend, accumulating the two merits in vajrayana is part of the path of transformation, I just said Dzogchen is not that. All integrated actions, conduct etc in Dzogchen are perfected as they are when one remains in state of contemplation. It is the most important thing. Everything else is secondary. Sorry but I'm not here to supplant your teachers wishes, nor to instruct on Dzogchen. So I'm doing a forum white wash broad strokes reply, and that's where I'll end my contribution, if any. It's not my responsibility.

Regards

Malcolm wrote:

The two accumulations are also gathered dzogchen, just differently.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 12:33 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Modus.Ponens said:

The system is no longer racist. There are some racists who work for the system, but that does not mean the system is racist. They are bugs, not features of the system. Unless you want to go as far as some Antifa people and call black cops traitors and Ns.

Malcolm wrote:

The system is still racist: example, the Thirteenth Amendment, immigration laws and practices, etc.

The system is still sexist: example, failure to pass the ERA.

The system is still classist: example, bailing out banks and corporations, etc.

The system is still exploitative: example, discrimination against immigrant workers, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 12:36 AM

Title: Re: Advice for Consultation with Guru

Content:

smcj said:

Remember that from his side he is a human being, no matter what you think.

“A human being” can mean a deluded sentient being, a fully enlightened being, or anything in between. In some extraordinary cases, “human” need not mean limited.

Malcolm wrote:

I meant ordinary human being.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 12:38 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Dan74 said:

Welfare is indeed a tricky thing and places which had extensive welfare programs show handouts can disempower people, foster low self-esteem and apathy.

Malcolm wrote:

Bullshit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 1:25 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Dan74 said:

Welfare is indeed a tricky thing and places which had extensive welfare programs show handouts can disempower people, foster low self-esteem and apathy.

Malcolm wrote:

Bullshit.

Sādhaka said:

It depends on if said welfare is accompanied by good life advice.

Does the government ever share via news networks and so on, advice on how to live well? Such as eat organic, have a good workout regimen, cut out sugar and carbs to some degree, meditate, do occasional fasting routines, etc.?

Malcolm wrote:
Michelle did.

Sādhaka said:
Sometimes, but not very often nor effectively.

Malcolm wrote:
The GOP is deep f#$king denial about all this.

Sādhaka said:
Therefore many (not all, as there are always exceptions) welfare recipients are eating monsanto garbage, walking around in walmart in pajamas with their cigarette packs in-between their boobs (I'm sure you've seen the image I'm referring to, unless maybe you live in Manhattan or similar) buying cheap plastic crap made in communist china. Basically "useless eaters".

Malcolm wrote:
Ummm...implicit bias there? Walmart suppresses local markets everywhere they move in, exploiting poor people and because they refuse to employ people full time, the fed and state governments pick up their bills for the health care of their workers and so on.

Sādhaka said:
The government apparently doesn't care about people's health, and seems to want people unhealthy & hooked on big-pharma drugs; and people think that they care soooo much about us that they have us "social distancing" and wearing masks?

Malcolm wrote:
The problem again and again, is GOP science denial and catering to the moneyed class.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 1:26 AM
Title: Re: America's Fascist Collapse
Content:

Minobu said:
As time went on i thought he was just all about screwing every nation that America ever did business with...i did not expect this..

Malcolm wrote:
I hate to say I told you so...but I told you so.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 1:32 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Modus.Ponens said:

That's not true. You haven't provided a reason why we should allow riots that do no good other than we have to respect the anger of the rioters. I understand the anger, but I don't respect it to the point of supporting riots because they're counterproductive. And you have not explained why the system itself is racist.

Malcolm wrote:

This riot thing is really quite overstated. Yes, some business were damaged, but that's what insurance is for.

The looting happened because the police have their priorities wrong. They turned out in force against protestors, leaving business districts unprotected. The looting is a result of poor policing, it is not the fault of protesters.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 1:42 AM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

fckw said:

I have never really heard teachers talk openly about topics such as the question asked even to advanced students. The common pattern seems to be: teacher visits place XYZ for a retreat. There gives empowerment, direct introduction, a text is being explained. In astonishingly few cases the teacher also gives you concrete meditation instructions including an explanation of the expected effects. If you are lucky, you get a 10 minutes interview slot in a 2 week retreat with the teacher. After 2 weeks the teacher travels further.

So: Unless you are doing a 3 years retreat or similar, or unless you are able to read old Tibetan, getting answers to questions such as the one above is not really offered by anyone.

Now, maybe that's even a good thing, I don't want to judge it. There are good reasons why certain things are rarely openly discussed. But telling others to "go and seek a good teacher" is, in my view, more or less same as telling people off. Name me one teacher who, when a foreign person shows up and asks about details of menngagde teachings, will openly explain things to that person. Why should s/he? The person could be mad, could want to publish stuff on the internet etc. You don't know him/her, so rather be careful. This means: No, "go ask a teacher" will not get you any further in most cases.

And not everyone has the energy or the money left to travel to exotic places to find another teacher to ask.

Crazywisdom said:

Prayer of Samamntabhadra more or less will get you the basics. Not secret. Comes down to our elements are emotions and emotions are lights.

Malcolm wrote:

The Aspiration of Great Power, chapter 19 of the Explanatory Tantra of the Transcendent State of Samantabhadra, is a liberation through hearing text. But it's still secret, in so far as it is not proper to explain to people without transmission.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 4:44 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Modus.Ponens said:

That's not true. You haven't provided a reason why we should allow riots that do no good other than we have to respect the anger of the rioters. I understand the anger, but I don't respect it to the point of supporting riots because they're counterproductive. And you have not explained why the system itself is racist.

Malcolm wrote:

This riot thing is really quite overstated. Yes, some business were damaged, but that's what insurance is for.

The looting happened because the police have their priorities wrong. They turned out in force against protestors, leaving business districts unprotected. The looting is a result of poor policing, it is not the fault of protestors.

Modus.Ponens said:

Even if I agreed with what you said, what about the people who died?

Malcolm wrote:

The fact that some people have engaged in murderous behavior during the protests is not a sufficient reason for the protests to be stopped.

The vast majority of the violence is being perpetrated by the police.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 8:25 AM

Title: Re: Mayor of DC renames street BLM Plaza

Content:

krish5 said:

Each to their own, I prefer a street named "All lives matter"

Malcolm wrote:

Typical trumpian response. You are rotting your brain on Fox News.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 8:27 AM

Title: Re: Mayor of DC renames street BLM Plaza

Content:

krish5 said:

"yeah i can see why it's deemed racist....it only came into any sort of conversation since the ascension of Black Lives Matter."

I have been using this phrase, "All lives matter" for many years now and it has no connection to me to any other movement or reaction. It is just common sense, is rational, logical, sane. To separate humanity into black or white, christian or buddhist, capitalist or communist, that is the problem, this division, we are all ONE! That phrase is definitely anything but racist! It brings us together, does not separate or exclude in the least. It even includes insects, animals, trees, everything that is alive.

Malcolm wrote:

Your response is rooted in racism and privilege. When you accept that fact you will understand that no lives matter until black lives matter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 8:32 AM

Title: Re: Drew Brees and controversy, what do Buddhists think about this

Content:

krish5 said:

Brees should have stood to his convictions and not given in to mob mentality. I dont blame him though, it would take guts to go against this stream.

I agree with Donald Trumps take on it: "I am a big fan of Drew Brees. I think he's truly one of the greatest quarterbacks, but he should not have taken back his original stance on honoring our magnificent American Flag. OLD GLORY is to be revered, cherished, and flown high..."

Thank God there is still Fox News that is sticking up for peoples rights, like Drew Brees. I watched a great short clip the other day with Tucker Carlson and Burgess Owens, and he said, it is this kind of mob mentality that will ensure that Trump wins again.

Malcolm wrote:

Dude, you are supporting racists. Honestly, f#$k off to wherever you came from. Wanker. Your patriotism is supported on 400 years of slavery and genocide. It's privileged motherf#@ckers like you that are the problem with this country.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 8:43 AM

Title: Re: Mayor of DC renames street BLM Plaza

Content:

krish5 said:

"Typical trumpian response. You are rotting your brain on Fox News."

I ask in all sincerity, you dont think Fox has any newsworthy, correct information? The one i watched and liked the last few nights was with Tucker Carlson.

Malcolm wrote:

Tucker.Carlson.is.a.racist.white.supremicist.motherf#@cker.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 8:47 AM

Title: Re: Mayor of DC renames street BLM Plaza

Content:

krish5 said:

"Tucker.Carlson.is.a.racist.white.supremicist"

I am not saying he is not, i dont know, i dont know him. But he had on the other night, a black man, Burgess Owens, who condemned what they did to Drew Brees. He seemed to get along with and agree with Tucker. What am i missing here?

Malcolm wrote:

You have no shame at all. And you should be deeply ashamed of yourself for giving such people even a smidgeon of an iota or credibility.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 8:48 AM

Title: Re: Drew Brees and controversy, what do Buddhists think about this

Content:

krish5 said:

" It's privileged motherf#@ckers like you that are the problem with this country."

Thats exactly what they said to Drew Brees!

Malcolm wrote:

And he agreed, duh. Why don't you?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 8:56 AM

Title: Re: Drew Brees and controversy, what do Buddhists think about this

Content:

krish5 said:

If i see the error of my ways, see i am the problem, of course, i will admit it and change. That is what any sane person would do.

Malcolm wrote:

Apparently he is sane. I have doubts about you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 8:58 AM

Title: Re: Mayor of DC renames street BLM Plaza

Content:

krish5 said:

"You have no shame at all. And you should be deeply ashamed of yourself for giving such people even a smidgeon of an iota or credibility."

You didnt answer me, but that is fine. I see you arent interested in a sincere, serious discussion. It is best you probably just ignore my posts from now on.

I strongly disagree with what you said and even though i am not of the right, although at this point so sickened by the left, that i might lean that way. I am open to what they have to say and where truth is said, whatever form it comes in, i stand by it, with truth.

Malcolm wrote:

You wouldn't know the truth if it f#@kin ran you over dude, as far as I can tell. And you can totally forget about me ignoring your posts. That's not happening.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 9:12 AM

Title: Re: Mayor of DC renames street BLM Plaza

Content:

krish5 said:

I just looked up, Tucker Carlson, he worked for years at CNN, and then at MSNBC before joining Fox. I see nothing wrong with him.

And then i looked up Burgess Owens. The guy makes perfect sense to me, i dont get your hostility and lack of openness to these people.

You probably dont like Candace Owens either, who is making a hell of a lot of sense to me and millions of others.

Malcolm wrote:

Just pathetic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 9:28 AM

Title: Re: Mayor of DC renames street BLM Plaza

Content:

krish5 said:

If i am ignorant and not understanding these things, that is one thing, but you arent helping me to see any different. If you are going to talk to me, talk to me, dont just answer in dismissive tones. How can i learn or change my ways, if i dont know any better. I listen to them and see truth. I asked about Candance Owens, Burgess Owens, etc i would like to know from your experience if they have any value or not, if they are telling the truth or not, etc?

Malcolm wrote:

All I can tell you is that you need to educate yourself. Tell me. Who is most recent black intellectual whose works you've read? How about a native historian writing from a native perspective? When's the last time you read a peer-reviewed tome on economics of historical import? Or a book concerned with issues of justice? How about a book concerning the Pre-Colombian era, or a book about the agricultural history of the United States? Huh? Well? Waiting.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 9:55 AM

Title: Re: Mayor of DC renames street BLM Plaza

Content:

krish5 said:

Malcolm, because i like you, i will answer you. But please answer me in return regarding Candace Owens, if possible, so i can get a idea what you think of her or anyone else on here, i am interested, btw.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't know her, so I cannot comment on her personality, so like and dislike does not enter into it. But I thought her comment about George Floyd was extremely tone deaf, and catered to white racism.

krish5 said:

I am not a very educated man, formally. Surprise, surprise People have used this against me before. So, you are correct, i have not read any of the books or literature you have mentioned. I mostly stick to reading Buddhism and other spiritual teachings and material. I am not well informed on politics, current events, history, etc. But, i intuit and sense and feel things easily. So i just know things easily. I can be misled however, at times, by my heart, feeling, but overall it has steered me well in life.

Malcolm wrote:

It is our obligation, as members of a Democracy, to educate ourselves about these worldly things.

Lynchings happen in this country because someone just knows in their heart that some black person, Latino, or native person did something wrong, even if there is no evidence for it. Donald Trump has lead this country into chaos, because like you, he does not read anything-other than praise of himself, of course- and just Intuits, senses, and feels things easily (more than the generals, scientists, and doctors). Forgive me for not being very sympathetic to such an approach to life if it isn't predicated on some cognitive handicap, such as dyslexia. And even here, this is quite superable, so is not really an adequate excuse for being poorly informed.

If you want someone like me to take someone like you seriously, you are going to have to show that your spirituality isn't just some f@#king bullshit, romantic, escapist fantasy. Maybe a little more reading and a little less football and Fox News is in order.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 10:02 AM

Title: Re: Mayor of DC renames street BLM Plaza

Content:

krish5 said:

Thank you Dear Malcolm, for your sincere reply and sharing. I get what you are suggesting and it is fair and reasonable. Thanks again.

p.s. - for whatever it is worth, a family member of mine participated in a protest march yesterday, she supports "Black Lives Matter". So not everyone in my family is a Fox News, Trumpian

Malcolm wrote:

You should hang out with that family member more.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 10:46 AM

Title: Re: summer retreat at palyul

Content:

pema tsultrim said:

I do not believe there is a mantra accumulation prerequisite.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, there is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 10:58 PM

Title: Re: Abhidharmakosabhasyam Book Club

Content:

Queequeg said:

Sorry - I saw the page numbers in the 200s and got confused. Was meaning to look at the text (Pruden) and figure out what you were proposing. Now I understand. So Greg is proposing Chapter One - from the intro up through the Rupa Skandha section.

In Pruden that's pp. 55-66.

That seems reasonable. I'd hesitate to go more than that because I imagine there is a lot to unpack even in just those few pages.

Aside - that section of the text in Pruden is much shorter than the Sangpo translation. Makes me curious about all those notes in there. Feeling like this might have to be moved up the wishlist.

Malcolm wrote:

People really need to integrate what Vasubandhu has to say about prajñā. So by way of topics for reflection:

What is the distinction between non-afflicted ignorance and afflictive ignorance?

Why does this matter?

Reflect on the meaning of prajñā.

What is the distinction between pure and impure prajñā?

Why can impure dharmas only be extinguished by prajñā?

The first three verses should be well anchored before continuing on to verse four. These three verses should serve as the basis for further discussion before moving on to verse 4, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 11:01 PM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

Könchok Thrinley said:

Oh, wow. Did it help?

Kunzang Tobgyal said:

It gave me a really solid grounding in shamatha and vipashyana, which definitely helped in all practices afterwards. Also, just in and of themselves, shamatha and vipashyana are powerful methods for understanding the functioning of one's mind.

Simon E. said:

This.

I don't want to be all "in my day blah blah blah" but it is a fact that not so long ago many, probably most, Lamas insisted on a basic groundwork in shamatha and vipashyana before considering further teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but back in the day, lamas were not teachings Dzogchen general. The serious teaching of Dzogchen in the West begins with Chogyal Namkhai Norbu, in 1976. He prepared students by teaching them Yantra Yoga first.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 11:06 PM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

yagmort said:

that is all true, but i think it is up to westerners to change their lifestyle so it can allow them to have more quality time with a teacher. i've seen western guys who completed 3 years retreat in india or nepal, so it's not impossible. i perceive vajrayana/dzogchen as a very demanding undertaking, personally i don't believe in liberation in slippers.. how far can you get with a few hours of practice a day at most, while your mind is busy with mundane things the rest of a day?

Malcolm wrote:

That really depends on what you think practice entails. If you think it entails reciting lots of texts and mantras all day long, well, reciting lots of mantras and texts all day long is demanding. But that is not the essence of Dzogchen practice.

yagmort said:

i can not vote for others but my impression is that a buddhist westerner has to find a way to be a full-time practitioner. if it's not possible because of family or other responsibilities there is only so much you can do and seeing your teacher everyday not gonna change your chances for liberation that much.

Malcolm wrote:

If one understands how to integrate, one can practice all day long in any circumstance. It is all just a matter of understanding how to integrate. For example, there is no limit to the number of times one can practice guru yoga in a day, whether one is wearing, slippers, shoes, or sandals.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 11:10 PM

Title: Re: Abhidharmakosabhasyam Book Club

Content:

Queequeg said:

Aside - that section of the text in Pruden is much shorter than the Sangpo translation.

Makes me curious about all those notes in there. Feeling like this might have to be moved up the wishlist.

jake said:

Sangpo has essentially three introductions before starting the text which adds to it's length. The Kosa proper doesn't begin until page 203 in the Sangpo. I've been reading Pruden but started on Sangpo last night, still adjusting to the text as it uses a lot of fonts, etc. so the layout is a bit odd for me at present.

Queequeg said:

Its seems sangpo takes 25 pages to translated what is 10 pages in Pruden. I'm guessing Sangpo uses footnotes, whereas Pruden uses endnotes, as being part of it? Are Sangpo's footnotes worth it? Footnotes are often where you find the juicy stuff.

Malcolm wrote:

The footnotes are largely a distraction to the text. They are relevant mainly for scholars, but not practitioners.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 11:12 PM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

In India, creation stage was ngondro. also Vimalamitra was written to do a lot of rushen. Rushen is real yoga. fricken great dharma very simple

PeterC said:

Never said it wasn't. But its always interesting how resistant people are when a lama wants them to do a few prostrations and mandala offering. Feels like they feel it's beneath them.

Crazywisdom said:

And I will add that by my logic, what makes the most sense is a traditional empowerment and mantra practice for development and yoga instructions and meditation to advance.

Malcolm wrote:

We all have to decide for ourselves what kind of a path we are going to follow. No one can decide that for us, not even our gurus.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 7th, 2020 at 11:43 PM

Title: Re: Mamo'i Khrugkong and Digshag

Content:

cjdevries said:

Does anyone know about the Mamo'i Khrugkong [confession] ceremony? If so, what does this entail?

Also, What is the Digshag ceremony and what does that entail?

Malcolm wrote:

Confession of misdeeds is basic to the seven limb prayer arrangement, it is limb two. Of course, there are many long prayers concerning this as well.

Mamo khrug kong, literally, "appeasing the disturbed mothers," is an apology to the mamos for disturbing the world with careless behavior, such as practitioners not keeping their samayas, human activities of polluting the world, fighting wars, etc., all actions that harm and disturb the world and its beings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 12:00 AM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

...But that is not the essence of Dzogchen practice.

...

It is all just a matter of understanding how to integrate...

yagmort said:

sure, i merely shared my current opinion, however deluded/immature it may be. but i also keep in mind examples of many masters, including Chatral Rinpoche, Dudjom Rinpoche or Dilgo Khyentse Rinpoche, all of whom done long retreats. i assume that matter of understanding how to integrate does require some secluded time dedicated to practice? otherwise why would so many dzogchen masters stay in retreats, some of them with decades under their belt?

Malcolm wrote:

We do not live in a largely cash-free agrarian society where practitioners are allowed to live for years without working. We live in a capitalist society where most people's main māra is named "Bill." Moreover, there are plenty examples in Tibet of ordinary people, hidden dzogchen practitioners, who attained rainbow body, while working regular jobs, etc. By placing too much emphasis on famous masters, we miss the point that it is very possible to integrate practice into our lives and achieve the supreme result without spending years in some cave. But some people like caves.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 12:40 AM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

We do not live in a largely cash-free agrarian society where practitioners are allowed to live for years without working. We live in a capitalist society where most people's main māra is named "Bill." Moreover, there are plenty examples in Tibet of ordinary people, hidden dzogchen practitioners, who attained rainbow body, while working regular jobs, etc...

yagmort said:

i am not arguing here. my view is very limited. i wonder though how is it possible to achieve liberation, a rainbow body even, without liberating from this mara "Bill"? perhaps i am holding to Kropotkin anarchism somewhere deep inside, but i do perceive this capitalist society as counter conducive anything spiritual. so even without buddhist goals i'd rather have Henry Thoreau Walden lifestyle.

Malcolm wrote:

You do realize he had dinner several times a week at the Emerson's house, which was about a mile and a half walk from his cabin; which itself, as luck would have it, is about three hundred feet from the railroad, even then?

yagmort said:

anyway, i am happy to know about hidden dzogchen practitioners, who attained rainbow body, while working regular jobs. could you please tell me some names? i'd like to learn more, that's inspiring.

Malcolm wrote:

Most people who achieve realization from Dzogchen do so in the bardo of dharmatā. Only the best of best obtain rainbow body in this life or have small rainbow body.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 12:47 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Dan74 said:

Who actually practices Sutrayana, as understood by the Tibetan Buddhists?

Könchok Thrinley said:

Those who do not follow tantric teachings and methods. Zennies, theravadins, purelanders, etc.

Dan74 said:

Zennies certainly don't believe themselves to be practicing sutrayana - see Meido Roshi's many replies on this. Edit: on a quick search, here's is one relevant example: <https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=48&t=29208>

From Bodhidharma's "beyond words and letters...", to the many unique methods, to continue to claim that Zen is sutrayana is just sectarian polemics. Unless, of course by sutrayana, one defines anything other than tantra. Then it's ok.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it's isn't sectarian polemics at all. There are many upadesá lineages in common Mahāyāna, Chan/Zen is one of those.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 12:49 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Dan74 said:

Who actually practices Sutrayana, as understood by the Tibetan Buddhists?

Könchok Thrinley said:

Those who do not follow tantric teachings and methods. Zennies, theravadins, purelanders, etc.

Astus said:

Sutrayana, as understood in Tibetan Buddhism, exists only in Tibetan Buddhism, and as such, only Tibetan Buddhists could be sutrayana followers, as it is their view of Mahayana. Those who do not subscribe to the Tibetan interpretation of sutrayana naturally cannot follow it either.

Malcolm wrote:

That definition is an Indian Buddhist definition, not Tibetan.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 12:52 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

Yeah, Shingon has it too.

It's kind of like if Tendai practitioners went around insisting that everyone not practicing Tendai Buddhism was on one of the 40-something preparatory bhūmis. No one else believes in 50+ bhūmis. No one else practices "on" those bhūmis.

jake said:

Shingon has what?

Caoimhghín said:

A division between esoteric and non-esoteric aspects of practice. The terms I see used in translation by Tibetans often are "common" and "uncommon."

Malcolm wrote:

Can also be translated as "shared" [sādhāraṇa, thun mong] and "unshared" [asādhāraṇa, thun mong ma yin].

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 12:56 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

FromTheEarth said:

But I just feel the underlying authenticity thesis/implication is always troubling me, whether it is meant to say only the Theravada is the genuine, authentic Buddhism, or the Tibetan tradition is, while both apparently underwent many changes and adaptations.

Malcolm wrote:

No, that is not the point. Of course Tibetans, like the Chinese, have doctrinal concerns removed from what Indian Mahāyāna Buddhists cared about. But the main difference between Tibetan and Chinese Buddhist exegesis is a concern for how well a given position might comport with Indian masters, while the same cannot be generally found to be a concern with Sino-Japanese Buddhist exegesis in general, barring Xuantsang.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 12:59 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

As Buddhists we are taught to obey the law of the land, even if that law is discriminatory...

Malcolm wrote:

Nonsense.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 1:01 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Modus.Ponens said:

That's a fair objection, even if I don't totally agree with it. But then we have to return to the key question: what are the ideological borders between center left and far left?

Malcolm wrote:

You'll have to ask the people making up these distinctions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 1:39 AM

Title: Re: Abhidharmakosabhasyam Book Club

Content:

Queequeg said:

It seems sangpo takes 25 pages to translate what is 10 pages in Pruden. I'm guessing Sangpo uses footnotes, whereas Pruden uses endnotes, as being part of it? Are Sangpo's footnotes worth it? Footnotes are often where you find the juicy stuff.

Malcolm wrote:

The footnotes are largely a distraction to the text. They are relevant mainly for scholars, but not practitioners.

Queequeg said:

You might find yourself leaned on as an interactive footnote generator. よろしくおねがいいたします。

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 1:47 AM

Title: Re: Claim: Buddha Shakyamuni was a student/emanation of Bon Buddha?

Content:

mitsuk said:

No, obviously not. Bon's narrative about its existence in pre-dynastic and dynastic Tibet is a fantasy elaborated backwards in order to compete (on historical, philosophical, and doctrinal grounds, etc.) with the Nyingma and the newer schools.

Bellezza's paper is here :

http://himalaya.socanth.cam.ac.uk/collections/journals/ret/pdf/ret_29_07.pdf

See also on TBRC : <https://www.tbrc.org/#!rid=W8LS66509>.

Malcolm wrote:

On a whim, I recently purchased Ermakov's book. I was appalled at a) how poorly it was manufactured b) how messily organized it was, and c) how replete it was with discredited theories about an arctic ancestral homeland for Indo-Europeans, etc. I am amazed that he was ever given any credit in the academy at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 2:09 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

It doesn't need to be some intentional conspiracy (I don't think it is), but it is definitely real.

Malcolm wrote:

That sort of depends on where you live. North Carolina? Most def. WA? Probably not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 2:12 AM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

yagmort said:

that is all true, but i think it is up to westerners to change their lifestyle so it can allow them to have more quality time with a teacher. i've seen western guys who completed 3 years retreat in india or nepal, so it's not impossible. i perceive vajrayana/dzogchen as a very demanding undertaking, personally i don't believe in liberation in slippers.. how far can you get with a few hours of practice a day at most, while your mind is busy with mundane things the rest of a day?

Malcolm wrote:

That really depends on what you think practice entails. If you think it entails reciting lots of texts and mantras all day long, well, reciting lots of mantras and texts all day long is demanding. But that is not the essence of Dzogchen practice.

yagmort said:

i can not vote for others but my impression is that a buddhist westerner has to find a way to be a full-time practitioner. if it's not possible because of family or other responsibilities there is only so much you can do and seeing your teacher everyday not gonna change your chances for liberation that much.

Malcolm wrote:

If one understands how to integrate, one can practice all day long in any circumstance.

It is all just a matter of understanding how to integrate. For example, there is no limit to the number of times one can practice guru yoga in a day, whether one is wearing, slippers, shoes, or sandals.

heart said:

I completely fine with the need to integrate, however I don't see why you can't do that while "reciting lots of texts and mantras all day long"?

Malcolm wrote:

If you like reciting lots of texts and mantras, all day long, that is fine. That was not not my point though. The main point is to go to the essence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 2:27 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Modus.Ponens said:

That's a fair objection, even if I don't totally agree with it. But then we have to return to the key question: what are the ideological borders between center left and far left?

Malcolm wrote:

You'll have to ask the people making up these distinctions.

Modus.Ponens said:

Is Maoism as acceptable as social democracy or as social liberalism?

Malcolm wrote:

Maoism is illiberal and antidemocratic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 2:32 AM

Title: Re: Claim: Buddha Shakyamuni was a student/emanation of Bon Buddha?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I am amazed that he was ever given any credit in the academy at all.

mutsum said:

Interesting. Who is giving him credit? I'm curious, as I try to read, to the best of my abilities, whatever academic work is published on Bon, and I've not seen Ermakov quoted anywhere by the "big names" (Karmay, Blondeau, Kvaerne, and al.) in Bon so far. His approach is outdated, looks like pre-1960s "oriental studies" and his lack of knowledge of classical tibetan is a big problem...not to mention that he does not read cursive (when 95% of Bon texts are in cursive...).

Malcolm wrote:

Supposedly he was mentored by Charles Ramble, according to his own account:
"I then went on to study Tibetan at Oxford University with Prof. Charles Ramble (2009-2010) becoming his research assistant and, as well as having articles published in both English and Russian, has been invited to lecture in Oxford, London, St. Petersburg, Vilnius, Cagliari, Budapest etc. In 2011 I was invited to speak at 'Bon, Shangshung, and Early Tibet' conference where I delivered a paper 'Bön as a multifaceted phenomenon: looking beyond Tibet to the cultural and religious traditions of Eurasia' which since has been published as a multimedia presentation on Foundation for the Preservation of Yungdrung Bön's website and can also be watched in the Video section of this Author Page.

You have to read Ramble's blurb to believe it:

Many writers have sought to establish a link between the Bön religion of Tibet and the shamanic traditions of Siberia. These attempts are largely unsystematic and piecemeal, and the results have been unconvincing. This remarkable book is the most thorough attempt to date to explore these connections. On the basis of wide-ranging scholarship as well as a long and close association with the most eminent exponents of the traditions he explores, the author presents the richness of Tibetan Bön and Buryatian Bø Murgel, discerning beneath the distinctive features of these systems a matrix of beliefs and practices in which they have their origins. Written from an "emic" perspective of sympathy with the tenets of Bön and Bø Murgel, this fascinating and provocative book is sure to stimulate interest and debate concerning the religious heritage of Inner Asia.'

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 2:48 AM

Title: Re: summer retreat at palyul

Content:

pema tsultrim said:

I do not believe there is a mantra accumulation prerequisite.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, there is.

pema tsultrim said:

Malcolm, do you mean that there is a mantra accumulation requirement as a part of the Namcho tsa lung instructions, or that one must complete before one will be allowed to receive the Namcho Tsa Lung instructions in the Palyul NY or Namdroling 40 day retreat? If the latter, are you referring to the accumulation of Om Mani Peme Hung from the Avaloiteshvara in the Six Realms sadhana?

Malcolm wrote:

Generally, as I understood it at the time, you have to complete Trowa Roza beforehand.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 2:54 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 2:58 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 3:01 AM

Title: Re: summer retreat at palyul

Content:

pema tsultrim said:

Malcom, do you mean that there is a mantra accumulation requirement as a part of the Namcho tsa lung instructions, or that one must complete before one will be allowed to receive the Namcho Tsa Lung instructions in the Palyul NY or Namdroling 40 day retreat? If the latter, are you referring to the accumulation of Om Mani Peme Hung from the Avaloiteshvara in the Six Realms sadhana?

Malcolm wrote:

Generally, as I understood it at the time, you have to complete Trowa Roza beforehand.

pema tsultrim said:

Thanks for clarifying, Malcom. Is it okay if I ask when and where you were able to receive those precious teachings?

Malcolm wrote:

I didn't, but I was there in the first year retreat with Penor Rinpoche. I was unable to return, for various reasons. Obstacles.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 3:03 AM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

heart said:

I personally feel that it is a lot easier to integrate and go to the essence while doing recitation.

Malcolm wrote:

Ok. But you can't be reciting complicated sadhana at work, etc. So you need different methods such as guru yoga, just to mention one, and so on. That is the point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 3:04 AM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

Könchok Thrinley said:

Many people find the bit more step by step approach bit better. Reciting lots of texts and mantras can open the door to just integrating for many of us.

Malcolm wrote:

Many people do not know there are other approaches which accomplish the same things more effectively, and can be done no matter what other things they are doing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 3:06 AM

Title: Re: Claim: Buddha Shakyamuni was a student/emanation of Bon Buddha?

Content:

mutsumi said:

OK, thanks for that. It's really surprising to read Ramble's blurb as he is generally better informed (and imo quite good at what he does).

Malcolm wrote:

On another note, I am sure you have read some of Daniel Bernoulli's work. Really excellent, I have to say.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 3:46 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That definition is an Indian Buddhist definition, not Tibetan.

Astus said:

Originally might be so, but even there postulated only by Tantrikas, however, currently it exists only in Tibetan Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, if it is originally so, then it is in Indian Buddhist definition still.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 3:47 AM
Title: Re: George Floyd Protests
Content:

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 4:56 AM
Title: Re: George Floyd Protests
Content:

Modus.Ponens said:
Because the far left is incompatible with constitutional democracy. And given that constitutional democracy is better than any other society, past or present, I'm not willing to give an inch further to the far left.

Caoimhghín said:
Then that will just be a self-fulfilling prophecy, and you will never liberate yourself from your paranoia about the "far left." Fact of the matter is that you're maybe talking to perhaps two people here who could be considered far left, and neither of them is far left enough for it to compromise their commitment to democracy. Has Malcolm or Grigoris ever suggested someone go personally kill Donald Trump? No. That would be the real extreme left, the extreme left that the FBI and CIA deal with. What people have suggested is that Donald Trump ought be voted out and that those who support them cannot self-reflect enough to recognize that their own views are infected with racism.

What you seem to be doing is arguing from a deeply entrenched unmoving position, and repeating the same slogans from the safety of that position, i.e. "Far Left is incompatible with constitutional democracy." Because you don't seem to be too interested in communicating, I think that what you might actually be doing is virtue-signalling to your right-wing companions on DhammaWheel and DWE.

Malcolm wrote:
I rate very heavily in the left libertarian scale here:

<https://www.politicalcompass.org/>

Curious about where old Modus would rate.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 4:58 AM
Title: Re: summer retreat at palyul
Content:
conebeckham said:

Trowo Roza=a form of Gyalwa Gyamtso?

Malcolm wrote:

Wrathful Corpse eater? Somehow I don't think so.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 10:01 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Disarm them as well.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 10:08 AM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

...You do realize he had dinner several times a week at the Emerson's house, which was about a mile and a half walk from his cabin; which itself, as luck would have it, is about three hundred feet from the railroad, even then?...

yagmort said:

yep i do. that was years ago, but if i remember correctly he states these things in the book, so its obvious to a reader that Walden was not an experiment in social isolation.

Malcolm wrote:

Most people who achieve realization from Dzogchen do so in the bardo of dharmatā. Only the best of best obtain rainbow body in this life or have small rainbow body.

yagmort said:

i see. well, you mentioned there were plenty of hidden dzogchen practitioners in tibet, who attained rainbow body while working regular jobs specifically, so i thought you got some names. i would really like to know names, if that is possible. perhaps a short biography, i always find namthars very inspiring.

Malcolm wrote:

There have been, ChNN mentions this more than once.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 10:24 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Modus.Ponens said:

I can't find that specific result at the moment, but it's roughly the same: half downwards, a bit to the left.

Caoimhghín said:

I'm not sure what you mean here. Sorry. IMO, it's not the same result you should be trying to find, but rather the same quiz. Did you take it? Malcolm had a link to it in the post where he showed his results.

We could also compare specific answers to specific questions on it, or even share our answers. It might be germane to the conversation. I'm doing the quiz myself at present.

Modus.Ponens said:

Yes. I do the test that Malcolm linked about once a year. And I consistently get similar results. Half way/a third downwards. And somewhat to the left. I tried to find the result, but only found this one.

Malcolm wrote:

I am illiberal about the destruction of the environment because we have only one planet, and biodiversity must be preserved. I am not into identity politics at all. I do however detest police violence targeted at minorities due to both explicit and implicit policies implemented by police departments. For example, Standing Rock. I also take our history of racism and genocide into consideration when evaluating present events.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 10:54 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Queequeg said:

The argument goes - the Police do too much that they are not trained for, and can't be practically trained for. Those functions should be segregated out to other civil servants who are trained to handle them. For instance - homeless interventions: the police should not be wasting their time with what is essentially social work. This should be handled by social workers specifically trained and equipped, and the resources and protocols to deal with individuals who are homeless. There's a host of things police do that really could be done by others.

DNS said:

Reducing the funding is one thing, but I see several people and demonstrators calling for abolishing them altogether. How would that even work? People need to be able to call police for home invasions, burglaries, robberies, domestic violence, etc. Who would they call? Not everyone is armed or trained in CQC or tae-kwon-do or marksmanship to be able to defend themselves.

Malcolm wrote:
Don't worry, we'll figure it out.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 7:25 PM
Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Disarm them as well.

DNS said:
What if they are responding to a mass shooting event?

Tasers are good (and should be used instead in many incidents), but they have a very short range (about 20 feet or so max) and are difficult to reload quickly.

Malcolm wrote:
Mass shooting events are pretty rare, though they get a lot of press. As I Said, we'll figure it out, because our approach to public safety isn't insuring public safety, but rather the opposite.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 7:27 PM
Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police
Content:
Dan74 said:

I think every major city that I've visited had a lot of armed police on the streets in central areas at least. This was usually brought in in response to a spate in violent crime and had popular support. Do folks here believe having less police patrolling the cities or disarming them won't have an appreciable effect on violent crime?

Melbourne is positively awash with cops. A left-wing government has not reduced Victoria's police presence, AFAIK.

TBH, I would not want to be a cop in the US right now. I suspect most of them actually serve their communities well, do really tough work for little pay and are now looked upon as the enemy. Seems to me what is needed is not to punish all the cops, but a really good look at the culture, policing priorities, developing closer relations with the communities, etc practical measures, not symbolic ones.

Malcolm wrote:
When I visited London, I only saw armed policeman around parliament. Otherwise, all the police were unarmed.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 7:31 PM
Title: Re: George Floyd Protests
Content:

Tiago Simões said:
Where has the far left been plaquing?

Grigoris said:
He means that Antifa is to blame for everything wrong in this world.

Middle Class white guys will inevitably believe that Fascism is preferable to revolutionary change, because they think that if they keep their head down, blend in with the crowd and "mind their own business", chances are they will come through it unscathed and with most of their wealth and power intact.

That is what this guy thought too.

Martin Niemöller.jpg

Like many others he found out (the hard way) that he was wrong.

But this is not an option for Black people, Latinos, LGBT people, etc...

Modus fails to understand this (of course).

Modus.Ponens said:
I would have been exterminated by the nazis because of my "identity".

How privileged do you think I really am? Why do you think white people inevitably prefer fascism? How much are you assuming about my character based on my skin color? Do you know what that's called?

Malcolm wrote:
The evidence for Greg's assertion is pretty overwhelming.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 8:05 PM
Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?
Content:
FromTheEarth said:

But I just feel the underlying authenticity thesis/implication is always troubling me, whether it is meant to say only the Theravada is the genuine, authentic Buddhism, or the Tibetan tradition is, while both apparently underwent many changes and adaptations.

Malcolm wrote:

No, that is not the point. Of course Tibetans, like the Chinese, have doctrinal concerns removed from what Indian Mahāyāna Buddhists cared about. But the main difference between Tibetan and Chinese Buddhist exegesis is a concern for how well a given position might comport with Indian masters, while the same cannot be generally found to be a concern with Sino-Japanese Buddhist exegesis in general, barring Xuantsang.

FromTheEarth said:

Well, this actually leads back to the previous point I made, which is that Indian Mahayana is not equivalent to, say, a scholastic part of it, represented by the so-called "Indian masters" and their works, while such group of masters seems also highly selective. I would be happy to accept a statement such like the Tibetans were more concerned with "how well a given position might comport with" certain Indian masters they favored or happened to be more popular; while a fairly informed picture of ancient Indian Mahayana, even just the intellectual, scholastic dimension of it, must include a proper presentation of Yogacara and some other branches, whose existence again seems better to be found in the East Asian canons and traditions.

Also, I would like to argue, whomever you may have in mind when referring to the "Indian masters," a large of number of them should be dated later than the founders of several dominant Chinese Buddhist schools (here I limit these schools to the doctrine-based such as Tiantai, Huayan, Sanlun etc., for Chan/Zen and Pureland masters seemed less interested in doing comprehensive exegetical work). To my knowledge, except for Huayan, all other doctrinally-oriented schools as such fit the description of caring about how their interpretations "comport with Indian masters" at their disposal (you would find abundant reference to Nagarjuna, Asanga, and Vasubandhu's works in Zhiyi's and Jizang's works), as did the Tibetans. And, one may argue, the Chinese Buddhist scholars tried even harder to make their positions aligned with sutras and other Indian commentaries of a less doctrinally-dense genre, i.e., upadeśa texts. And, any reasonable conception of ancient Indian Mahayana must include those texts also.

Malcolm wrote:

It's definitely true that the snapshot of Indian Buddhism that Tibetans took was later than the largely Central-Asian filtered Buddhism which had the most influence on Chinese Buddhism. But, for example, Zhiyi's interpretation of the four siddhantas owes nothing observable to Indian Buddhism, nor his fivefold division of Buddhist texts, etc. I personally think part of the reason for this difference between the two is that Chinese Buddhism suffered a severe setback in 845, when it was nearly completely purged from China, as did Tibetan Buddhism, with the assassination of Langdarma in 841. And the greatest flowering of Chinese Buddhist thought took place after the fall of the Guptas in 495. This 250 year period is arguably the high point in Classical Chinese Buddhism. At the same time, Indian Buddhism was on institutionally shaky ground, recovering from the invasion of the white Huns and under increasing pressure from hostile Hindu Kings; and during the last 100 years of this period, Central Asian Buddhism was being encroached upon by Muslims. By the 11th century, Buddhist text translation into Chinese was increasingly rare.

I would say that while Zhiyi certainly took inspiration from Indian sources, his exegetical methodology is unique, more like Huayen than Sanlun, for example.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 8:15 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Dan74 said:

I think every major city that I've visited had a lot of armed police on the streets in central areas at least. This was usually brought in in response to a spate in violent crime and had popular support. Do folks here believe having less police patrolling the cities or disarming them won't have an appreciable effect on violent crime?

Melbourne is positively awash with cops. A left-wing government has not reduced Victoria's police presence, AFAIK.

TBH, I would not want to be a cop in the US right now. I suspect most of them actually serve their communities well, do really tough work for little pay and are now looked upon as the enemy. Seems to me what is needed is not to punish all the cops, but a really good look at the culture, policing priorities, developing closer relations with the communities, etc practical measures, not symbolic ones.

Malcolm wrote:

When I visited London, I only saw armed policeman around parliament. Otherwise, all the police were unarmed.

Manjushri said:

I can say by my own experience that armed policemen is pretty common in England at least. Specially around transport stations, large streets and markets, but I've seen them pretty much everywhere, just doing regular patrol.

Malcolm wrote:

Transport cops in England are an exception. But in general, most police in England are unarmed. Most policeman in England do not want to carry guns.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Police_use_of_firearms_in_the_United_Kingdom

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 8:17 PM

Title: Re: Abhidharmakosabhasyam Book Club

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

What is the distinction between non-afflicted ignorance and afflictive ignorance?

Grigoris said:

Wait, what? Non-afflicted ignorance? Is that even a thing? Isn't ignorance to basic affliction which others arise from?

Or do you mean like ignorance of calculus (for example), as opposed to ignorance of the Four Noble Truths?

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, there is a lot more up to unpack in the first three verses than one might realize.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 9:56 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Modus.Ponens said:

No, I'm just opposing the far left...

Malcolm wrote:

You and Don Quixote.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 11:09 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

tkp67 said:

In the EA tradition there seems to be a reverence for perfection in accordance to time and place. As impermanence would have it teachings themselves are rightfully subject to the same. As our nature would have it this canon of teachings has a cause (shakyamuni) and an effect (all of us). As I understand it the EA tradition is about the recognition of all beings within that chain of dependency that brought the teachings from cause to effect and their timely perfection.

In my ordinary mortal mind I see everything represented here still have a related dependency.

Malcolm wrote:

I have no idea what you are trying to say.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 11:24 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

tkp67 said:

In the EA tradition there seems to be a reverence for perfection in accordance to time and place. As impermanence would have it teachings themselves are rightfully subject to the same. As our nature would have it this canon of teachings has a cause (shakyamuni) and an effect (all of us). As I understand it the EA tradition is about the recognition of all beings within that chain of dependency that brought the teachings from cause to effect and their timely perfection.

In my ordinary mortal mind I see everything represented here still have a related dependency.

Malcolm wrote:

I have no idea what you are trying to say.

tkp67 said:

It happens.

Malcolm wrote:

Mostly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 8th, 2020 at 11:25 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

tkp67 said:

The only way to change it is to disrupt the existing corruption and help all involved repurposed for a more harmonious populous. Because this is such a dense varied place this will have to occur on many levels. It is not beyond our capacity.

PeterC said:

And what would that look like, specifically?

Malcolm wrote:

You had to ask, didn't you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 12:31 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

PeterC said:

And what would that look like, specifically?

Malcolm wrote:

Disarm, dismantle, reframe "policing" as public safety, retrain the retrainable, fire the rest. Decriminalize all drugs.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 12:43 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd Protests

Content:

Tiago Simões said:

Where has the far left been plaquing?

I'm still waiting... Are they hiding under my bed?

Modus.Ponens said:

Left wing identitarianism has been plaguing our societies for almost a decade now. If we count radical feminism, it's been for a much longer time, since notorious radical feminists have been advocating for the extermination of men, total or partial, or advocating that men should be kept in detention camps. Or advocating for less abominable things like defining every sex act as rape and thus every man as a rapist.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh for lord's sake. This is all deliberate hyperbole on the part of people like the late Andrea Dworkin...I grew up around radical lesbian feminists because my mom was a second wave feminist back in the early 70's, and sure, some of them were and are separatists. So what?

Modus.Ponens said:

In the 2010s people have been getting cancelled for transgressions against the politically correct identitarian dogma, whether the transgressions are real or imagined. There are thousands of cases like this.

Malcolm wrote:

You don't help your case with hyperbolic exaggerations.

Modus.Ponens said:

Even a Nobel laureate has been fired, without being heard by his University, despite the fact that the accusations distorted the facts beyond recognition.

Malcolm wrote:

Who and why?

Modus.Ponens said:

One Netflix higher up was fired because he said in a meeting that people at Netflix shouldn't say the word N..... to refer to black people. Since he said the actual word in his admonition he was fired.

Malcolm wrote:

The man had a history of using the word in inappropriate situations to black people. It happened more than once. In a word: clueless. Hence, fired.

Modus.Ponens said:

Even a black janitor, who was being repeatedly called N by a black student was fired for telling the student he shouldn't use the word N.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that was stupid, because of a poorly written school policy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 12:53 AM

Title: Re: Abhidharmakosabhasyam Book Club

Content:

Queequeg said:

Malcolm, to be clear - is it your suggestion that we reign in our first reading and stick with the general introduction, taking the time to unpack as much as we can? This would be, as originally proposed, pp. 55-58 in Pruden.

Malcolm wrote:

I am suggesting that one really takes the time to unpack the meaning of the first three verses. An entire commentary could be written on them alone.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 12:58 AM

Title: Re: Abhidharmakosabhasyam Book Club

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

What is the distinction between non-afflicted ignorance and afflictive ignorance?

Grigoris said:

Wait, what? Non-afflicted ignorance? Is that even a thing? Isn't ignorance to basic affliction which others arise from?

Or do you mean like ignorance of calculus (for example), as opposed to ignorance of the Four Noble Truths?

Malcolm wrote:

Non-afflictive ignorance, as the treatise states, is the ignorance experienced by śrāvaka arhats and pratyekabuddhas. They are liberated, but they are not omniscient about the entire path to buddhahood. Their lack of omniscience however, that is, their nonafflictive ignorance, is not a cause for them to take rebirth in samsara.

The first verse's commentary is an indication that perhaps Vasubandhu was a Mahāyāni from the beginning, or had already begun to embrace Mahāyāna by the time he wrote the commentary to the root verses.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 12:59 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

tkp67 said:

Have you ever told a cop you are familiar with chain of command and internal affairs and they change their tune?

Malcolm wrote:

I try to avoid encountering the police as much as possible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 3:00 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Bristollad said:

Just to add an interesting point: in the traditional Tibetan narrative, Shakyamuni Buddha is said to have not entered the Vajrayana path until he was a bodhisattva on the 10th Bhumi.

Caoimhghín said:

Of course. That's where Tantra starts, isn't it? "You fuse the path with the result," is the usual slogan.

Malcolm wrote:

This also in an Indian narrative. Not Tibetan.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 3:06 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

I'm suggesting that the rhetoric of tantric empowerment is that it is often described as starting with the abhiṣeka of the Buddhas of the ten directions that Mahāyāna practitioners are generally believed to receive at the 10th bhūmi and that the maṇḍala wherein it takes place is the akaniṣṭha ghanavyūha. I could be wrong though.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, the principle is certainly embraced, but the point is that empowerment is a special method taught by the Buddha for causing someone to ascend through the ten or 13 bhumis in the course of a single empowerment. If they fail to do that, then there is sadhana practices.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 6:19 AM

Title: Re: Ngagpa-facial hair?

Content:

KonchogUrgyenNyima said:

Does anyone know if there are any hard and fast rules about facial hair in terms of ngagpa teachings and practices? Thanks so much in advance for your time!

Malcolm wrote:

Shave or don't shave, its up to you. It only covers hair on the head, not facial hair, pubic hair, or body hair.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 6:21 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 6:30 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 6:31 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Crosspost:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 9:57 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Crosspost:

tkp67 said:

I believe those are guardsmen.

Malcolm wrote:

No, cops.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 10:05 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

This is too idealistic for me, especially the suggestion that community services and social workers are going to be replacing police. Working for CPS, we do not detain children without law enforcement present, for good reason. People generally aren't happy to be told their children need to be removed from their care. They get volatile. They get assaultive. You can't usually wait a month or two and reason with an abusive parent, unless you don't mind having possible blood on your hands. Dealing with people who will abuse a child, whether sexually, physically or emotionally, etc who may or may not be under the influence of substances and who may or may not have untreated mental health, is high risk. And guess what, most of them think they were doing just fine until the social worker came and ruined their life, they don't need help (so they say)...

Overall people need services not "punishment," but a lot of people will not do the right thing or services by some call to their higher self, they need wrathful means to get them there. I say this all because me and my coworkers often rely on the support of law enforcement when we have to open that door, talk to that irate parent, and defuse a potentially violent situation at 3am. Btw, I'm a social worker because I believe in people's ability to change and in social justice. I just don't think defunding the police is the right way to change things.

Malcolm wrote:

Defunding the police does not mean completely removing security professionals from communities or as adjuncts social service workers. It means completely reframing what we understand the role of security professionals to be.

In many places the police presently are the only social services there are. And they are not properly trained for many of the demands placed upon them. On the other hand, they are often funded at levels social service workers cannot even imagine unless they are actively reading the budgets for their own communities.

It means reframing the whole idea of community security so that the police cease behaving like an occupying force in black and brown communities. Compton, CA and Camden, NJ, provide a good model. Hopefully Minneapolis will follow this course.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 10:16 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It's definitely true that the snapshot of Indian Buddhism that Tibetans took was later than the largely Central-Asian filtered Buddhism which had the most influence on Chinese Buddhism. But, for example, Zi yi's interpretation of the four siddhantas owes nothing observable to Indian Buddhism, nor his fivefold division of Buddhist texts, etc. I personally think part of the reason for this difference between the two is that Chinese Buddhism suffered a severe setback in 845, when it was nearly completely purged from China, as did Tibetan Buddhism, with the assassination of Langdarma in 841. And the greatest flowering of Chinese Buddhist thought took place after the fall of the Guptas in 495. This 250 year period is arguably the high point in Classical Chinese Buddhism. At the same time, Indian Buddhism was on institutionally shaky ground, recovering from the invasion of the white Huns and under increasing pressure from hostile Hindu Kings; and during the last 100 years of this period, Central Asian Buddhism was being encroached upon by Muslims. By the 11th century, Buddhist text translation into Chinese was increasingly rare.

I would say that while Zhiyi certainly took inspiration from Indian sources, his exegetical methodology is unique, more like Huayen than Sanlun, for example.

FromTheEarth said:

I agree with the last point about methodology as there has never been a ground for proper Buddhist scholasticism in China, and the Chinese commentators struggled to put through their systems eventually (and more eagerly than their Tibetan colleagues when it comes to the problems arising from sutras). But first, let me just defend Zhiyi from the two specific ones you mentioned. Though modern scholars doubt the authorship of Mahāprajñāpāramitopadeśa, that commentary was traditionally attributed to Nagarjuna. Caoimhghín has suggested this above; but it seems clear that Zhiyi's talk about the four siddhantas was directly derived from this commentary.

Malcolm wrote:

I have no reason to doubt Zhi Yi's sincere faith in the Mahāprajñāpāramitopadeśa. There is zero chance that Nagarjuna composed this text, however. So my point still stands.

FromTheEarth said:

Regarding the fivefold divisions, the specific way he divided the scriptures was surely his own. But the idea that Buddha's teachings contained several stages was a common theme in Mahayana scriptures; and that there was a somehow fivefold structure, a gradual development from Agama sutras to Mahayana sutras then to Prajna sutras then to the Mahaparinirvana sutra, has solid textual basis in the Mahaparinirvana Sutra (scroll 14).

Malcolm wrote:

Indian Buddhists were completely unimpressed with Sutric Descriptions of different schemes and divisions of the sutras into time periods of the Buddha's life. They betray very little interest in such claims. But Chinese Buddhists were very interested in such schemes, in trying to make sense of this foreign religion. The Tibetan Buddhist ideas about the three turnings [rejected in Sakya, however] too are entirely dependent on Chinese Yogacara, not the Yogacarabhumi, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 10:35 AM

Title: Re: How has being a Buddhist changed you?

Content:

krish5 said:

"It certainly does not mean that Buddha was saying that some people can gain liberation through Advaita; others Christianity, and so on."

You dont have to answer, but if you want to, do you think Buddhism is the only path, the only way to liberation?

Malcolm wrote:

Of course, just as the Buddha himself said.

krish5 said:

61. And the Blessed One spoke, saying: "In whatsoever Dhamma and Discipline, Subhadda, there is not found the Noble Eightfold Path, neither is there found a true ascetic of the first, second, third, or fourth degree of saintliness. But in whatsoever Dhamma and Discipline there is found the Noble Eightfold Path, there is found a true ascetic of the first, second, third, and fourth degrees of saintliness.[54] Now in this Dhamma and Discipline, Subhadda, is found the Noble Eightfold Path; and in it alone are also found true ascetics of the first, second, third, and fourth degrees of saintliness. Devoid of true ascetics are the systems of other teachers. But if, Subhadda, the bhikkhus live righteously, the world will not be destitute of arahats.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 11:31 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Indian Buddhists were completely unimpressed with Sutric Descriptions of different schemes and divisions of the sutras into time periods of the Buddha's life. They betray very little interest in such claims. But Chinese Buddhists were very interested in such schemes, in trying to make sense of this foreign religion. The Tibetan Buddhist ideas about the three turnings [rejected in Sakya, however] too are entirely dependent on Chinese Yogacara, not the Yogacarabhumi, etc.

FromTheEarth said:

If I am not bothering you (otherwise please feel free to ignore me), this, the first sentence above, again is a very strong claim.

We do not have much literature which reliably described how ordinary ancient Indian Buddhists practiced Buddhism. However, the production of the Mahayana sutras (from a secular scholarship point of view), and their dissemination, must indicate the "authors"/copiers/audience's strong interest in the major themes therewithin. Maybe some of those themes have less representation in the more prominent Buddhist scholars' works, which dominated the high-end, intellectual discourse. However, I won't doubt that, when they became circulated among ancient Indian Buddhists, some of those Mahayana sutras were often used to defend the authority of Mahayana, help figure out the relation between the Sravakayana doctrines and the revolutionary new ones, clarify the apparent contradictions among different teachings, etc. And those sutras (usually in a more accessible genre full of allegories and stories) formed the framework within which many, both monastic and lay, comprehended the Buddhadharma. (One example is that not many ancient Indian Buddhist scholars composed text on tathagatagarbha or spoke of it very positively, in stark contrast with, say, the abundance of sutras that highlighted such theme. The latter should be indicative of the larger audience's interest due to the theme's soteriological significance).

My contention throughout has been that when you refer to "Indian Buddhists" and say they had little interest in A, B, and C, it should be clearly distinguished whether you mean most ancient Indian Buddhists or the scholars whose works survived today. A scholarly plausible view (just like when you challenged the traditional narrative of the authorship of the Mahāprajñāpāramitopadeśa) should press one toward the second option.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a bulletin board, not an academic forum. I do apologize, but I really do not have time to flesh out my opinions for you in the kind of detail you deserve. So you will just have to accept my broad strokes for what they are, broad strokes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 12:18 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

DNS said:

Abolishing the police would have the opposite of its intended effects. It would not help the poor and disadvantaged communities. The rich and wealthy would just hire private security guards and companies. Many of them already do that. Just look at some "exclusive" neighborhoods, many with guard gated entrances that lead you to additional interior gated areas and then there are roving patrols, bicycle patrols, foot patrols, all privately funded from their HOA funds. The poor communities cannot afford this and would be left without any security.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that “policing” these communities isn’t working; it isn’t reducing crime; and it isn’t meeting the needs of these communities, in fact it inflicts harm, fatal and otherwise, on them with very distressing regularity. The levels of police brutality we have seen in recent days show that the police themselves are a self-conscious entity, seeking to preserve and enlarge its power in our society to all of our detriment. This must end. There is no justification at all for the militarization of the police force, a lack of enforced federal standards for peacetime officer training, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 8:35 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<https://apple.news/AAfMcrCJFR4qTlBKR9JqO5A>

Unknown said:

Camden, New Jersey, may be the closest thing to a case study they can get.

The city, home to a population about 17% of Minneapolis' size, dissolved its police department in 2012 and replaced it with an entirely new one after corruption rendered the existing agency unfixable.

Before its police reforms, Camden was routinely named one of the most violent cities in the US.

Now, seven years after the old department was booted, the city's crime has dropped by close to half. Officers host outdoor parties for residents and knock on doors to introduce themselves. It's a radically different Camden than it was even a decade ago. Here's how they did it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 8:36 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I have no reason to doubt Zhi Yi's sincere faith in the Mahāprajñāpāramitopadeśa. There is zero chance that Nagarjuna composed this text, however. So my point still stands.

Anders said:

Are you also disputing that the work is Indian, and/or somehow not representative of Indian Madhyamika at its time of writing?

Malcolm wrote:

I am disputing its authorship.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 8:38 PM

Title: Re: Ngagpa-facial hair?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Shave or don't shave, its up to you. It only covers hair on the head, not facial hair, pubic hair, or body hair.

Losal Samten said:

Any advice on sideburns, where headhair and beard meet/mingle?

Malcolm wrote:

Sideburns are not considered head hair.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 8:40 PM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

heart said:

I think that is a very strange opinion because there are no namthars like that. I dare you to change my mind.

/magnus

javier.espinoza.t said:

like what, dealing with obstacles?

heart said:

No, please name one namthar that tells us about how to integrate in our modern society or any society for that matter?

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

The namthar of ChNN, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 9:48 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 9:49 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Norwegian said:

This is sheer insanity:

Malcolm wrote:

It is some Russian bullshit he saw.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 10:12 PM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

jake said:

So how would y'all translate: "tathatā?"

Malcolm wrote:

Well "tatha" means:

tathA ind. (%{tA7-thA}, correlative of %{ya4-thA} Pa1n2. 5-3, 26; g. %{cA7di} Ka1s3. and Gan2ar.) in that manner, so, thus (the correlative standing in the preceding or in the subsequent clause, e.g. %{yathA@priyaM}, %{tathA7stu}, ` " as is agreeable, so let it be "; %{tathA@prayatnam@AtiSThed@yathA7tmAnaM@na@pIDayet}, ` " he should so make effort as that he may not injure himself. " Mn. vii, 68; %{tathA@tathA-yathA}, so much that VP. iv; also correlative of %{iva} Mn. iii, 181 R. i, 4, 12; of %{yena} Katha1s. iii, 18; of %{yAdRza} Mn. i, 42; used in forms of adjuration e.g. %{yathA7ham@anyaM@na@cintaye@tathA7yam@patatAM@kSudraH@parA7suH}, ` " as surely as I do not think on any other man, so surely let this wretch fall dead " Nal. xi, 36) RV. &c.; yes, so be it, so it shall be (particle of assent, agreement, or promise; generally followed by %{iti}) AV. iii, 4, 5 S3Br. AitBr. &c. (%{tathe7ty@uktvA}, having said ` " so be it " or ` " yes " Nal. &c.); so also, in like manner (e.g. %{sukhaM@seved@duHkhaM@tathA}, ` " let him make use of prosperity and also adversity ") Mn. MBh. &c.; = %{tathA@hi} Nal. xix, 25 tathAtA means: f. true state of things, true nature Vajracch. 17.

It is strictly a Buddhist term.

So, suchness, thatness, etc, are ok.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 10:18 PM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

tobes said:

It has usually been used as a synonym for emptiness. I think the translators were attempting to convey the inexpressibility/inconceivability of shunyata. i.e. to avoid using a term which turns emptiness into a thing.

I actually think it works in conveying this sense of ineffability - better than emptiness or voidness does.

But they're all crap, at the end of the day.

Simon E. said:

Yes, none are worth dying on a hill for. As so often the real answer in my view is to internalise the shades of meaning in the original Sanskrit or Tibetan or in this case Japanese, by seeing them used in a variety of contexts. Not to attempt word for word translations. No one for example attempts to translate Bodhicitta by one single word of a modern European language yet we persist with other terms which are just as nuanced.

tobes said:

Agree. Actually I was called away while I was writing that last post, and I wanted to add: shunyata, karma, maha-karuna....we're at the stage where they're best off left alone.

One English term that really works well though: dependent co-origination/arising.

Malcolm wrote:

"Emptiness" is perfectly fine for śūnyatā, which after all, means zero in Indian mathematics. The implication is that compounded and un-compounded phenomena are hollow, devoid of substance, insubstantial, evanescent, illusory, etc.

Karma depends on context, when referring to the doctrine, best left as karma; but when it can be translated as action, it should be. Karuna has the same semantic range as compassion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 10:39 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 10:45 PM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

Simon E. said:

Well, I would qualify that somewhat. Karuna does have a similar semantic range to compassion. But the quality of Karuna is always by association paired with Upeksha, thus avoiding a sentimental over identification with the object of compassion..

Malcolm wrote:

But actually, in the common meaning of the word karuna, it just means compassion. The association with upeksha is a Buddhist context.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 10:53 PM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

heart said:

No, please name one namthar that tells us about how to integrate in our modern society or any society for that matter?

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

The namthar of ChNN, etc.

heart said:

That would be the only one.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

You wouldn't count Trungpa? Dungsey Thrinly Norbu? HHDL? Come on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 11:03 PM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

heart said:

That would be the only one.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

You wouldn't count Trungpa? Dungsey Thrinly Norbu? HHDL? Come on.

heart said:

Not really namthars, right?

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

"Namthar" is not a book, Magnus, it is a life.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 11:05 PM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

heart said:

If Dharma gets to integrated witch society it will become a waste of time.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a really sad statement.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 9th, 2020 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 12:09 AM

Title: W.H.O. Walks Back Claim That Asymptomatic Transmission is Rare

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/06/09/world/coronavirus-updates.html>

Unknown said:

A top expert at the World Health Organization on Tuesday walked back her earlier assertion that transmission of the coronavirus by people who do not have symptoms is "very rare."

Dr. Maria Van Kerkhove, who made the original comment at a W.H.O. briefing on Monday, said that it was based on just two or three studies and that it was a "misunderstanding" to say asymptomatic transmission is rare globally.

“I was just responding to a question, I wasn’t stating a policy of W.H.O. or anything like that,” she said.

Dr. Van Kerkhove said that the estimates of transmission from people without symptoms come primarily from models, which may not provide an accurate representation. “That’s a big open question, and that remains an open question,” she said.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 12:20 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

rose said:

<https://mediabiasfactcheck.com/mother-jones/>

Malcolm wrote:

From this link:

A factual search reveals that Mother Jones has not failed a fact check.

Overall, we rate Mother Jones strongly Left-Center biased based on story selection that moderately favors the left and High for factual reporting due to thorough sourcing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 12:29 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

rose said:

...video...

Grigoris said:

This is becoming a common tactic with the police here too. During the demonstrations against the building of a new detention center for refugees here on the island, the riot police attacked the demonstrators and as they pushed them back they vandalised the parked cars of the demonstrators parked at the side of the road: smashing windshields, slashing tyres, kicking in the panels...

But how is it even possible to doubt what is being shown in the video?

Malcolm wrote:

Trump will gaslight his followers and they will believe it.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 12:55 AM
Title: Re: Rainbow body questions
Content:

heart said:
Good point. From the view of society Dharma is a waste of time. If Dharma gets to integrated with society it will become a waste of time.

/magnus

javier.espinoza.t said:
stopping isn't in the table. i'm talking of integrating oneself into society, not integrating dharma into society.

heart said:
you are already totally integrated in society.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:
No, actually, most people in society are not integrated at all. That's the point.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 1:23 AM
Title: Re: Rainbow body questions
Content:

heart said:
you are already totally integrated in society.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:
No, actually, most people in society are not integrated at all. That's the point.

heart said:
I am not sure what you mean with integrated at this point.

Malcolm wrote:
ChNN talks about integration. The more integrated one is, the less problems one has. If does not matter if one is in a cave or a bazaar.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 1:25 AM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

this is the most difficult point, ime, in ChNN's style of practicing dzogchen.

if i recall correctly, one should be completely integrated in society.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, one should be like a hidden yogi. Practicing, not drawing attention to oneself, etc., working a regular job, etc., etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 1:39 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Full video:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 2:34 AM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

this is the most difficult point, ime, in ChNN's style of practicing dzogchen.

if i recall correctly, one should be completely integrated in society.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, one should be like a hidden yogi. Practicing, not drawing attention to oneself, etc., working a regular job, etc., etc.

heart said:

I have done that for 35 years,

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Well, what are you fussing about then? Bored at work?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 2:51 AM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

heart said:

I have done that for 35 years,

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Well, what are you fussing about then? Bored at work?

heart said:

Oh yeah.

/magnus

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 3:19 AM

Title: Re: W.H.O. Walks Back Claim That Asymptomatic Transmission is Rare

Content:

Könchok Thrinley said:

Quite frankly I think W.H.O. kinda blew this pandemic.

Malcolm wrote:

So did the CDC. And we know why.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 4:14 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

This is too idealistic for me, especially the suggestion that community services and social workers are going to be replacing police. Working for CPS, we do not detain children without law enforcement present, for good reason. People generally aren't happy to be told their children need to be removed from their care. They get volatile. They get assaultive. You can't usually wait a month or two and reason with an abusive parent, unless you don't mind having possible blood on your hands. Dealing with people who will abuse a child, whether sexually, physically or emotionally, etc who may or may not be under the influence of substances and who may or may not have untreated mental health, is high risk. And guess what, most of them think they were doing just fine until the social worker came and ruined their life, they don't need help (so they say)...

Overall people need services not "punishment," but a lot of people will not do the right thing or services by some call to their higher self, they need wrathful means to get them there. I say this all because me and my coworkers often rely on the support of law enforcement when we have to open that door, talk to that irate parent, and defuse a potentially violent situation at 3am. Btw, I'm a social worker because I believe in people's ability to change and in social justice. I just don't think defunding the police is the right way to change things.

Malcolm wrote:

Defunding the police does not mean completely removing security professionals from communities or as adjuncts social service workers. It means completely reframing what we understand the role of security professionals to be.

In many places the police presently are the only social services there are. And they are not properly trained for many of the demands placed upon them. On the other hand, they are often funded at levels social service workers cannot even imagine unless they are actively reading the budgets for their own communities.

It means reframing the whole idea of community security so that the police cease behaving like an occupying force in black and brown communities. Compton, CA and Camden, NJ, provide a good model. Hopefully Minneapolis will follow this course.

TharpaChodron said:

I'm all for some reframing, retraining and more education for LE. The community policing idea seems a bit uncertain though. Like when it comes to domestic violence. The Hmong community have been doing community policing unofficially for years, leading to women's voices and abuse being silenced by elders, underreported, fear of community shaming. Maybe having an outside arbiter provides anonymity and safety for victims sometimes. I do like the idea of having police go out with community service/social workers in joint responses.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not talking about community policing as commonly understood. But I am talking about completely redefining what "policing" means: In cities, increasing urbanization rendered the night-watch system completely useless as communities got too big. The first publicly funded, organized police force with officers on duty full-time was created in Boston in 1838. Boston was a large shipping commercial center, and businesses had been hiring people to protect their property and safeguard the transport of goods from the port of Boston to other places, says Potter. These merchants came up with a way to save money by transferring to the cost of maintaining a police force to citizens by arguing that it was for the "collective good."

In the South, however, the economics that drove the creation of police forces were centered not on the protection of shipping interests but on the preservation of the slavery system. Some of the primary policing institutions there were the slave patrols tasked with chasing down runaways and preventing slave revolts, Potter says; the first formal slave patrol had been created in the Carolina colonies in 1704. During the Civil War, the military became the primary form of law enforcement in the South, but during Reconstruction, many local sheriffs functioned in a way analogous to the earlier slave patrols, enforcing segregation and the disenfranchisement of freed slaves.

...

For example, businessmen in the late 19th century had both connections to politicians and an image of the kinds of people most likely to go on strike and disrupt their workforce. So it's no coincidence that by the late 1880s, all major U.S. cities had police forces. Fears of labor-union organizers and of large waves of Catholic, Irish, Italian, German, and Eastern European immigrants, who looked and acted differently from the people who had dominated cities before, drove the call for the preservation of law and order, or at least the version of it promoted by dominant interests. For example, people who drank at taverns rather than at home were seen as "dangerous" people by others, but they might have pointed out other factors such as how living in a smaller home makes drinking in a tavern more appealing. (The irony of this logic, Potter points out, is that the businessmen who maintained this belief were often the ones who profited off of the commercial sale of alcohol in public places.)

<https://time.com/4779112/police-history-origins/>

What we can see from this is that business externalized the cost of protecting their goods and slaves onto communities. We can see from the above that the job of the police in the US has always to protect the interests of capitalists first and foremost. That must end.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 8:52 AM

Title: Re: W.H.O. Walks Back Claim That Asymptomatic Transmission is Rare

Content:

Kim O'Hara said:

The NYT seems to be using the story to attack the WHO, which may or may not surprise you.

Also, the facts are too complicated for most journalists, so the NYT is reporting the politics instead.

The WHO was not "Walking Back its Claim" but trying to clarify a complicated issue. If you want a less biased and more informative version of the same story, try (our) ABC:

Key points:

Contract tracing in some countries has found the spread of coronavirus by asymptomatic people is rare

Singapore health officials have suggested half of the country's cases were symptomless

The lack of spread by asymptomatic people could be because they do not cough and sneeze as much

The spread of coronavirus by those who do not show any symptoms appears to be "very rare", says a World Health Organization official.

Data from countries with advanced contact tracing measures seem to show the highly contagious virus is not being spread by those who are asymptomatic, according to WHO epidemiologist Maria van Kerkhove.

"It is very rare, and much of that is not published in the literature," Dr van Kerkhove said. ...

"We have a number of reports from countries who are doing very detailed contact tracing," Dr van Kerkhove told a WHO media briefing overnight.

"They are following asymptomatic cases, following contacts and not finding secondary transmission."

<https://www.abc.net.au/news/2020-06-09/coronavirus-spread-by-asymptomatic-people-rare-no-symptoms-who/12336346>

As for the WHO in general ... most of the criticism comes from people you wouldn't trust to run a kindergarten bus service.

Kim

Malcolm wrote:

I am not critical of the WHO, there is an enormous that we do not understand about this disease.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 9:35 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

I'm suggesting that the rhetoric of tantric empowerment is that it is often described as starting with the abhiṣeka of the Buddhas of the ten directions that Mahāyāna practitioners are generally believed to receive at the 10th bhūmi and that the maṇḍala wherein it takes place is the akaniṣṭha ghanavyūha. I could be wrong though.

Bristollad said:

But just because "it is often described as starting with the abhiṣeka of the Buddhas of the ten directions that Mahāyāna practitioners are generally believed to receive at the 10th bhūmi" doesn't mean that a tantric practitioner is necessarily a bodhisattva on the 10th bhūmi. If that were the case, the rhetoric of tantra being a swifter path wouldn't make much sense - one would have already completed 3 countless aeons of merit gathering the same as the Perfection vehicle.

Caoimhghín said:

"Is often described" was simply me being humble. I can take it back if it caused confusion.

So we're dealing with different assignments of the "tathāgatabhūmi," which as I understand some Tantrikas place at an "11th" station, 10th-stage bhūmikas being merely bodhisattvas. So when I say "the abhiṣeka of the Buddhas of the ten directions that Mahāyāna practitioners [...] receive at the 10th bhūmi" I am talking about what you might consider the 11th bhūmi. We can just discard this "specific enumeration of bhūmi" business as well, since it's causing problems. 11th, 10th aside, we're talking "samyaksaṃbuddhatva," and that's what's important, "(complete) Buddhahood-in-this-life," not "the irreversible grounds," not "śrāvakabuddhatva," etc. Otherwise, Vajrayāna just a free-for-all redefining of terms from Mahāyāna. And yes, I'm fully aware that there are contingency plans for when practitioners receive this abhiṣeka and it's evident that nothing important has really happened and no realization has accompanied their empowerment. The point is, if you need your sadhāna to facilitate your accumulations, then you never actually received the abhiṣeka of the Buddhas of the ten directions in the first place. They don't hand those out to just anyone.

jmlee369 said:

I thought the 52 stages scheme was from the Bodhisattva keyūra mūla karma sūtra? The Avatamsaka Sutra itself teaches the 40 something stages, Fazang also adapted the Keyura sutra's scheme, and then there's the Shurangama's 57 stages?.

Caoimhghín said:

50+ bhūmi schemata show up in Shugendō and Daoist-Buddhist hybrid scriptures as well. I've never read the Keyūrasūtra, and I can't find that much about it. I certainly wouldn't want to call it apocryphal, not knowing that for sure, but it wouldn't surprise me. Talking about the Śūraṅgama, do you mean the Indian Śūraṅgamasamādhisūtra or the Chinese Śūraṅgama?

The Buddhāvataṃsaka supposedly lays out the 52 bodhisattva stages, but then once you get to its nested Daśabhūmikasūtra, there are only 10. I've never read the bulk of the Buddhāvataṃsaka. It's just too massive. Supposedly, chapters 15, 21, 22, 25, and 26 lay out grounds 1-40 in successive enumerations of ten bhūmis. I think the Indian tradition was that all of these lists of 10 bhūmis are the same 10 bhūmis, but I'm not actually sure there, so I'd need to read a bit. Am I going to be jumped on for daring to admit that I'm not sure of something? We'll find out next time on DharmaWheel!

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, there are only ten bodhisattva bhumis. No more and no less. There are also the five paths. No more and no less. There are anywhere from 1 to 11 stages of buddhahood, depending on system.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 7:40 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 7:51 PM

Title: Re: How has being a Buddhist changed you?

Content:

krish5 said:

"It certainly does not mean that Buddha was saying that some people can gain liberation through Advaita; others Christianity, and so on."

You dont have to answer, but if you want to, do you think Buddhism is the only path, the only way to liberation?

Malcolm wrote:

Of course, just as the Buddha himself said.

krish5 said:

61. And the Blessed One spoke, saying: "In whatsoever Dhamma and Discipline, Subhadda, there is not found the Noble Eightfold Path, neither is there found a true ascetic of the first, second, third, or fourth degree of saintliness. But in whatsoever Dhamma and Discipline there is found the Noble Eightfold Path, there is found a true ascetic of the first, second, third, and fourth degrees of saintliness.[54] Now in this Dhamma and Discipline, Subhadda, is found the Noble Eightfold Path; and in it alone are also found true ascetics of the first, second, third, and fourth degrees of saintliness. Devoid of true ascetics are the systems of other teachers. But if, Subhadda, the bhikkhus live righteously, the world will not be destitute of arahats.

My only question is, what do you say about HHDL and His Eminence Professor Samdhong Rinpoche saying that Buddhism is not the only path, only religion. They both even encourage those of other religions to stick with their own religions, instead of becoming Buddhists, if they can. Take what is useful, helpful from Buddhism, but you can still practice your own religion. Only if one is really interested in Buddhism and investigated it and want to become a Buddhist, would they say it is okay. Otherwise stick with your own religion. They also relate religions to different foods, some prefer this taste (particular religion) over that taste (another religion).

Malcolm wrote:

Advising people not to convert is not an endorsement of the idea that what is meant by liberation in Buddhism is shared with other faiths.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 8:06 PM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

tobes said:

Yes, I really mean maha -karuna. Adding the prefix 'great' to ordinary compassion doesn't cut it for me, because I think we're really trying to describe something incredibly vast and profound.

Compassion per se has too much Christian and western moral philosophy baggage. As Simon E points out, it often implies something very partial, affective and sentimental. Something like Hume's notion of sympathy.

Most of this I'm plagiarizing from DKR; I think he's right.

Another one to leave alone: prajna. Even just for aesthetic reasons - it is so beautiful and so perfect in the Sanskrit.

Malcolm wrote:

Wisdom serves just fine for prajna, which no one pronounces correctly anyway (it's pragnya). Great compassion is also just fine, unless it is a name, for example, four-armed Avalokiteshvara is Mahakarunika.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 8:08 PM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

An entirely new English language vocabulary could be created for words that only apply in a buddhist context:

“Interessenceless”

“Mindfulnessness”

“Polysingular”

...after all, PALI was not a vernacular language when it was used to record the Buddha's words.

Malcolm wrote:

However the Buddha insisted that his teaching be communicated in local vernaculars.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 10:03 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Indian Buddhists were completely unimpressed with Sutric Descriptions of different schemes and divisions of the sutras into time periods of the Buddha's life. They betray very little interest in such claims.

FromTheEarth said:

If I am not bothering you (otherwise please feel free to ignore me), this, the first sentence above, again is a very strong claim...A scholarly plausible view (just like when you challenged the traditional narrative of the authorship of the Mahāprajñāpāramitopadeśa) should press one toward the second option.

Malcolm wrote:

If you examine the available literature in Tibetan translation on the subject, we find that for example, Asanga, Vasubandhu, Sthiramati, etc., devote virtually no time at all to explicating the distinction between the three turnings of the wheel, which itself is given a single passage in the Sandhinirmocana Sūtra. And Maitreyanatha seems to dismiss the idea of the three turnings being successive in the first pages of the Sūtra-lamkāra.

By contrast, Won-ch'uk, a disciple of Xuantsang, by contrast treats the theme extensively in his three volume Āryagambhīrasaṃdhinirmocanasūtraṭīkā ((D 4016).

Of the Indian authors represented in the bstan 'gyur, where they give chronologies of the teachings, they tend to do so principally in commentaries on the tantras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

PeterC said:

This is a nice illustration of why we need to bust the police unions

Queequeg said:

Holy shit. What a bunch of clueless whiners.

These people should know well why they're hated. They should be welcoming a thorough house cleaning to get rid of their bad apples.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, bad trees produce bad apples, so I heard someone say.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 10:07 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Says it all:

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/06/09/nyregion/james-demarco-franklinville-george-floyd-protest.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Fa Dao said:

And a compelling interview of Bob Woodson:

https://www.theepochtimes.com/the-dangers-of-vilifying-all-police-former-civil-rights-activist-bob-woodson_3382028.html

Malcolm wrote:

Seriously dude, the epoch times?

Fa Dao said:

"Overall, we rate The Epoch Times borderline Questionable and Right Biased based on editorial positions that consistently favor the right. We also rate them factually Mixed due to the publication of pseudoscience and the promotion of pro-Trump propaganda and conspiracy theories as well as failed fact checks."

Malcolm wrote:

<https://mediabiasfactcheck.com/the-epoch-times/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 10th, 2020 at 11:49 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Fa Dao said:

And a compelling interview of Bob Woodson:

https://www.theepochtimes.com/the-dangers-of-vilifying-all-police-former-civil-rights-activist-bob-woodson_3382028.html

Malcolm wrote:

Seriously dude, the epoch times?

Fa Dao said:

"Overall, we rate The Epoch Times borderline Questionable and Right Biased based on editorial positions that consistently favor the right. We also rate them factually Mixed due to the publication of pseudoscience and the promotion of pro-Trump propaganda and conspiracy theories as well as failed fact checks."

Malcolm wrote:

<https://mediabiasfactcheck.com/the-epoch-times/>

Fa Dao said:

Its an interview of Bob Woodson, one of the greats of the civil rights movement..I really doubt they were holding a gun to his head to make him say what he did. That you responded so quickly shows you didnt even hear what he had to say...both him and Bernie are calling for more common sense

Malcolm wrote:

I know who Bob Woodson is. His center's board of directors has seven white men, one black man, and one asian.

I would not call him one of the "greats" of the civil rights movement, but here is a review of his contributions during the 1970's:

<https://www.themarshallproject.org/2015/02/25/the-missed-opportunity-of-robert-woodson>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 12:22 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Queequeg said:

We're ticking up towards a First Degree Murder charge.

https://www.cbsnews.com/news/george-floyd-derek-chauvin-nightclub-bumped-heads/?fbclid=IwAR2qOYNgp0UUIMVCpJx_sskfnluMol5rL_i0ekNGd4F0TOjP8WCHyFpVGYQ

Malcolm wrote:

See, I TOLD you it was impossible the two men did not know each other.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 12:38 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Queequeg said:

We're ticking up towards a First Degree Murder charge.

https://www.cbsnews.com/news/george-floyd-derek-chauvin-nightclub-bumped-heads/?fbclid=IwAR2qOYNgp0UUIMVCpJx_sskfnluMol5rL_i0ekNGd4F0TOjP8WCHyFpVGYQ

Malcolm wrote:

See, I TOLD you it was impossible the two men did not know each other.

Queequeg said:

When you wrote that, it was speculation. Now we have at least one witness who suggests that they did know each other. Not much detail and not clear what their interactions were, if any. More investigation is necessary.

Malcolm wrote:

Speculation for you, maybe. Not me. The thing that first tipped my spidey sense was the familiarity with which Chauvin addressed Floyd as "tough guy."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 12:58 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 3:18 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Speculation for you, maybe. Not me. The thing that first tipped my spidey sense was the familiarity with which Chauvin addressed Floyd as "tough guy."

Queequeg said:

Maybe. We'll see how good your spidey senses are. We might have documentation of a siddhi!

The club employee stated that Floyd was the one who handed the paychecks to Chauvin, who blamed Floyd for supposedly being underpaid.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://talkingpointsmemo.com/news/floyd-chauvin-argued-working-together-club-ex-coworker>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 5:23 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Well its about f---king time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 8:36 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

krish5 said:

I went out to lunch today, and took my right wing, supposedly racist beliefs with me. There was a black guy working there and we struck up a conversation. I was friendly and all, and found out we are both from the same city. Anyways, we talked for like 10 minutes and he said he cannot wait for this coronavirus stuff to be over, so things can get back to normal. He then brought up the protests (George Floyd) and said i hope they dont spread the coronavirus even more. Here i was in a public place and talking with a black man, and i am not racist and never thought twice about it, but now given the current situation and how quickly people will react or judge you for what you say, i was surprised he himself brought up the protests. As a good decent human being that i am, i spoke honestly and from my heart and told him what i felt about the possible spread of the virus right now. I said it is not the time to be out there protesting in the thousands during a pandemic. He listened to me and there was no conflict. We both were allowed to say whatever we wanted and listened to each other. There was no racism on either end, as far as i can tell. It is a shame that so much of this has turned into a racial thing, when it is not, imo. Just wanted to share this story with you, about my positive pleasant experience today.

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, I mean it's just too bad a racist murder got turned into a racial thing. Go figure, huh?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 9:46 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

krish5 said:

Native Americans should be included in the conversation i feel.

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, virtue signaling with native people now? Whom white people have murdered and are still murdering in one of the largest and most prolonged genocides in history, which continues to this day?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 9:48 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

krish5 said:

To Malcolm, you are supposed to be interested in the struggles of Native Americans i think you said.

Malcolm wrote:

That's the genocide that I keep referring to. Slavery and genocide: the father and mother of America.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 9:56 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

krish5 said:

"That's the genocide that I keep referring to. Slavery and genocide: the father and mother of America."

Malcolm, we are on the same side. We are both fighting the same fight, in different ways!

Malcolm wrote:

I know what side I am on. I really am not sure about you, because you keep citing known sources of total, complete, unqualified, utterly racist bullshit. And this is not something which can be chalked up to a reasonable difference of opinion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 9:59 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

krish5 said:

To Johnny, i dont want to make this personal about me. But i can tell you that the Native Americans i was with, told me i was part of the tribe, it is in the heart, not biological. They quoted the Hopi about this. They look into a persons heart and they know. But not everyone in the tribe accepts this, and some want only biological full Native Americans only. But enough of this personal, my heart is one with the Native Americans, that is all.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh for f---'s sake. Quoting the Hopi? Do you even have one single f---ing clue left?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 10:05 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

krish5 said:

"That's the genocide that I keep referring to. Slavery and genocide: the father and mother of America."

Malcolm, we are on the same side. We are both fighting the same fight, in different ways!

Malcolm wrote:

Check your privilege, dude. You will never be a native person, with their experience. To even suggest you ever could is totally wrong. You were not raised on a reservation, denied schooling in your own language, I could go on and on. You have no idea what it is like to grow up as a black person, a native person, a Latin person, or an Asian person. You and I are white motherf---ers. Don't ever forget that. Don't pretend you belong to a culture you don't belong to. You are a guest, not a member. I never forget that with Tibetans, even for one second. And I know a lot of Tibetans, read their language, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 10:27 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

krish5 said:

"You and I are white motherf---ers. Don't ever forget that."

Yes, i hear you in your latest post. So just because we are white, does that mean we are privileged and part of the problem?

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, if we don't recognize our privilege and take responsibility for it, than we are definitely part of the problem.

krish5 said:

Are me and you personally responsible for this mess?

Malcolm wrote:

We are beneficiaries of a system of inequality and injustice. I think you can figure it out from there.

krish5 said:

Did we carry on this genocide or did our ancestors? What is Malcolms part in this, by the fact of his whiteness? This is the core of the issue, i think.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said above, " We are beneficiaries of a system of inequality and injustice."

That is what having "white privilege" means.

What else does a rational person need know?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 10:41 AM

Title: Re: Rainbow body questions

Content:

yagmort said:

sure, i merely shared my current opinion, however deluded/immature it may be. but i also keep in mind examples of many masters, including Chatral Rinpoche, Dudjom Rinpoche or Dilgo Khyentse Rinpoche, all of whom done long retreats. i assume that matter of understanding how to integrate does require some secluded time dedicated to practice? otherwise why would so many dzogchen masters stay in retreats, some of them with decades under their belt?

Malcolm wrote:

We do not live in a largely cash-free agrarian society where practitioners are allowed to live for years without working. We live in a capitalist society where most people's main m̄ara is named "Bill." Moreover, there are plenty examples in Tibet of ordinary people, hidden dzogchen practitioners, who attained rainbow body, while working regular jobs, etc. By placing too much emphasis on famous masters, we miss the point that it is very possible to integrate practice into our lives and achieve the supreme result without spending years in some cave. But some people like caves.

Sennin said:

This is a very important point. We have to work with circumstances and realize our fantasies of what practice are supposed to look like are obstacles.

Malcolm wrote:

Totally.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 10:56 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

krish5 said:

Johnny, i agree about the privileges about being white. However, i am looking at a lot of this stuff from a Buddhist perspective. Samsara is suffering, whether rich or poor, white or black, christian or jew, healthy or unhealthy, good looking or ugly, etc Even for the richest most good looking healthy white person there is suffering too.

Now with that said, i am not against working on fixing injustices in this world. We are all on the same page i feel, me, you, Malcolm, etc.

Malcolm wrote:

From a Buddhist point of view, we look at all of this from a multi lifetime perspective, positive and negative karma of infinite sentient beings working itself out, without error. But since we are not omniscient, and therefore cannot assign specific causation, wherever we see true inequality and injustice, we say something about it.

But quite frankly, giving any credence at all to the opinions of racist frat boys like Tucker

Carlson? Sorry man, that is never going to happen. Fox News is poisonous and addictive, like cigarettes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 11:03 AM

Title: Re: Greetings and Introduction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Oh dear. Well for starters there is no soul and no ex nihilo creation in Buddhism. First causes are absolutely negated. Most importantly, there is no possibility of salvation by another. Rebirth and karma are the main existential issues. Welcome. Enjoy. Good luck.

Mr. Cole said:

Hey guys,

I recently became a member of one of the sister websites of this one, but I'm not sure if all, or even any, of the members of the other chat room are members of this one, so I will simply repost my introduction from that chat room here:

Hello everyone!

My name is Cole. This is literally my first day on this forum. Actually, this is the first time I've ever been on a forum like this. My social media life is kinda basic, but, ya know, nothing like being a 20-something-year-old Boomer!

Anyways, a little background about myself: I'm from the United States. I am currently pursuing my M.A. in theology, and a few years back graduated with my B.A. in theology as well. As you can probably tell from this, my area of expertise is theology, particularly Christian theology, and, more specifically Catholic theology (the denomination I am a member of), though, because I have spent a lot of time studying the Church Fathers and the Medieval Scholastics (think, in the Western Christian tradition, people like St. Thomas Aquinas, St. Anselm, St. Bonaventure, etc.), and these guys make use of a lot of philosophy, I do study philosophy as a sort of secondary area of interest.

For me, studying Catholic theology, and Christian theology more generally, is really the epitome of a passion for me. It lies at the crossroads of my personal/spiritual interests (more specifically my relationship with God, which is really the center of my sense of personal identity) and my intellectual/academic/professional interests. Yet, the academic that I am, if I could do nothing but study every known religion, I would. It's not that I am doubting my Catholic faith, or am necessarily convinced of the merits of Buddhist thought; rather, let me put it like this: if intellectual gluttony were a thing, I would have it bad. ANYTHING concerning philosophy and theology is fair game for me. The biggest issue for me is choosing just one area of expertise. I'll admit that my knowledge of Buddhism is somewhat limited, and, as someone thinking from mostly a Western standpoint, I frequently make a lot of category errors when trying to speak of Buddhism. Nonetheless, I have a list of books and articles on Buddhism a mile long I want to read, and I'm always looking for more suggestions.

But what really put me over the edge was how a friend of mine is a Buddhist. He too takes an interest in theology and philosophy, and we frequently get in a lot of debates and discussions on religion and philosophy. When we hung out the other day, he recommended this website. I'm not sure if he is a member or just visits it from time to time, but he said there were a lot of interesting discussions on here, particularly from a lot of people with a deep knowledge of both Western and Buddhist thought, who often compared the two or were good at providing critiques of Western thought from a Buddhist perspective. I have a lot of questions on Buddhism, and so thought I'd join.

Thus, in a word, thanks for having me aboard. Have a great day!

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 11:55 AM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

tobes said:

Yes, I really mean maha -karuna. Adding the prefix 'great' to ordinary compassion doesn't cut it for me, because I think we're really trying to describe something incredibly vast and profound.

Compassion per se has too much Christian and western moral philosophy baggage. As Simon E points out, it often implies something very partial, affective and sentimental. Something like Hume's notion of sympathy.

Most of this I'm plagiarizing from DKR; I think he's right.

Another one to leave alone: prajna. Even just for aesthetic reasons - it is so beautiful and so perfect in the Sanskrit.

Malcolm wrote:

Wisdom serves just fine for prajna, which no one pronounces correctly anyway (it's pragnya). Great compassion is also just fine, unless it is a name, for example, four-armed Avalokiteshvara is Mahakarunika.

tobes said:

I don't think so. "Wisdom" is incredibly vague with a lot of Aristotelian baggage that gets mixed into theism + new agey crap. If we must choose something, I prefer the dry and unappealing 'special insight'. But there's so much going on with prajna, it is best left alone.

Malcolm wrote:

No, not really, not definitionally. Wisdom and prajna are both alike in that they are accumulated, for example, "the accumulated wisdom of the years..." and so on. I could go on but there is no need.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 11:57 AM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

SteRo said:

Fine. Let's agree that we disagree.

PadmaVonSamba said:

"Suchness" doesn't actually make any sense as a word in English. It's an invented word, a relatively new term made up by Buddhists to express a concept for which no word exists in the English Language. There are all sorts of words in languages that don't exactly translate into English, or into other languages. Translation is always a bit clumsy that way.

Manjushri said:

I might be wrong, since I read Heidegger and Husserl mostly in my native language, but I could have sworn that "suchness" is a term that has been used by some translators in the English language on works by these two philosophers?

Malcolm wrote:

"Suchness" is a term coined by Conze, who was German. It's surprisingly accurate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 8:08 PM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

tobes said:

I don't think so. "Wisdom" is incredibly vague with a lot of Aristotelian baggage that gets mixed into theism + new agey crap. If we must choose something, I prefer the dry and unappealing 'special insight'. But there's so much going on with prajna, it is best left alone.

Malcolm wrote:

No, not really, not definitionally. Wisdom and prajna are both alike in that they are accumulated, for example, “the accumulated wisdom of the years...” and so on. I could go on but there is no need.

tobes said:

Perhaps, in the conventional parlance. Your description still sounds a lot like the ancient Greek phronesis, which like other terms theoria and sophia all imply logos/reason. I think prajna entails these, but also, something far more direct/meditative - which is why some have been tempted to use gnosis.

Malcolm wrote:

Gnosis is best used for jnana. You seem to forget that there are three prajnas, born of hearing, reflection, and meditation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 10:30 PM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

Simon E. said:

“Gnosis” is hardly the vernacular Malcolm. Not where i’m from...

Malcolm wrote:

Neither is primordial wisdom, transcendent wisdom, pristine consciousness, pristine awareness or other glosses on ye shes/jñāna...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 10:31 PM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

“Suchness” is a term coined by Conze, who was German. It’s surprisingly accurate.

Minobu said:

I'm trying to find your meaning of suchness in the thread.

can you restate what suchness means please.

Malcolm wrote:
tatha means "that" or "such."

tā is a Sanskrit particle which indicates nature or essence, like śūnyatā, emptiness, etc.

Hence, we derived suchness, which sounds a little better than "thatness"

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, June 11th, 2020 at 10:35 PM
Title: Re: America's Fascist Collapse
Content:
Queequeg said:
Oh, and Trump is scheduled to have a rally in https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Tulsa_race_massacre on <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Juneteenth>. The dog whistle is deafening.

Malcolm wrote:
Tulsa, OK, May 31-- June 1st, 1921.

We need to have a major event next year, mourning the 100th anniversary of the Tulsa Massacre.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, June 12th, 2020 at 12:33 AM
Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?
Content:

Danny said:
Right, I think it's important that we understand medias playbook that's being rolled out over the pandemic reporting. It's become less and less science based and increasingly more partisan hackery. During this pandemic we've seen a shift from lockdown orders, to open embrace of defiance of authoritative orders. Team freedom when it was citizens concerned with government over reach into private citizens lives was condemned. Yet now the same medi decrying white nationalists during protests, are praising recent protests and riots as for the greater good, pandemic lockdown be damned. Do as we say, not as we do.

Malcolm wrote:
Well, no. What you say here is not accurate. All the news sources I frequent (NYT, etc.) repeatedly discuss the fact that the protests are going to cause massive spikes in covid-19 infection rates around the country. They will be hitting the hospitals this week.

As for the shifting factscape, this is a novel virus that has never before infected humans. We have barely had time for a comprehensive study about how much damage this virus can cause, how it does so, etc. Science does not keep up with events. It can't.

Danny said:

Get the politics out of directing science policy, and back to how that neutral science discipline directs the political policy.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, tell that to the GOP, the main deniers of climate change, covid, you name it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 12th, 2020 at 2:45 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Danny said:

I typed a refutation, then deleted. Wondering where the penchant and contrarian arguments of both left and right leaves space for the common sense and reasonable quiet centered majority?

Malcolm wrote:

Its pretty simple. Trump is an incompetent fool; he did not act, as a result of his inaction, more than 200K people will have died in the US by Sept. As long as there is no vaccine, and people are not socially distancing, taking correct measures to prevent infections, etc., we are looking at 25k deaths a month for the foreseeable future.

Assuming we don't get our shit together, covid-19 will take a million lives in the US before it is all over.

Climate change, habitat destruction, etc., is nothing to be MOR about. For example, one of the root causes of the explosion of Lyme disease is that when the passenger pigeons were all slaughtered, this caused an explosion in the white-foot mouse population, since the seeds that have previously mostly been consumed by the pigeons were not consumed by mice, in addition to increasing pressure on forests in the NE through suburban developments.

Shit is getting worse and worse. Common sense indicates it is sensible to get louder and louder about this shit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 12th, 2020 at 2:46 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Danny said:
Remind me what denier is code for?

Malcolm wrote:
Dumb motherf---ers.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, June 12th, 2020 at 2:59 AM
Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?
Content:
Danny said:
Does that mean you've lost the argument?

Malcolm wrote:
???

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, June 12th, 2020 at 3:01 AM
Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?
Content:
Dan74 said:
People have been screaming about it long enough. Hasn't done much good.

Malcolm wrote:
Well, this what unconditional support for global capitalism gets you:

So, better keep screaming.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, June 12th, 2020 at 3:30 AM
Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?
Content:
Dan74 said:
People have been screaming about it long enough. Hasn't done much good.

Malcolm wrote:
Well, this what unconditional support for global capitalism gets you:

So, better keep screaming.

Danny said:

In terms of the environment, I'm open minded about that, I have academic background in planetary sciences and can review technical papers. What your saying is a consensus brought about by Delphi techniques in steering committees. I know how that works having spent many hours in them, it's unfortunate that the science gets lost in the agendas.

Regards

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, I don't buy your spin.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 12th, 2020 at 4:55 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Danny said:

this would still be a massive mess.

Malcolm wrote:

Speculative.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 12th, 2020 at 5:05 AM

Title: Murdoch on 2020 election

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

"Two sources said Rupert Murdoch has recently told people that he believes Trump is going to lose in November. "Rupert thinks Trump is going to crash and burn. It's a clear-eyed assessment, just based on just looking at the news," said a person who has spoken with Murdoch about the election."

<https://www.vanityfair.com/news/2020/06/scoop-sean-hannity-and-ainsley-earhardt-are-the-first-couple-of-fox>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 12th, 2020 at 9:00 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Sādhaka said:

I've got no major horse in this race.

I mean I'm not an big fan of the popo, profiling people for no good reason, nor the enforcing of samsaric corporate legalities/codes/statutes/etc.

Therefore in this particular case the left seems to be more in the right. At the same time all this current uproar seems to be less grassroots and more astroturf, but that kind of goes for everything nowadays....

Malcolm wrote:
It's a groundswell.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 12th, 2020 at 10:05 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Sādhaka said:

It could be. Or the whole thing could be a setup. Who knows. This is why I try not to get very involved in politics anymore.

Malcolm wrote:
Well, it sure isn't Soros, despite the febrile imaginations of some.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 12th, 2020 at 10:08 PM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Danny said:

Poverty is generational. Over the years I always had in the back of my mind a phrase that I assumed was just a expression, a term coined by and a justification of the political class that there exists two states, the warfare state and the welfare state, and that's just how it is. Now if you apply that and look at governance in which ever flavor you wish to adhere too, it's pretty accurate. To govern or rule, whether your a dictator, a despot, a king or a prime minister, a president etc, whichever fancy title of nobility you like, you need three spheres of control to rule. You need the money supply (treasury), you need the sword (military), and you need the faith (church). Missing any of those three aspects and your cooked. So if you look at the current conditions around you, apply those three to anybody in control and see if they truly are in control.

Malcolm wrote:
You also need brains, a deficit of which exists in the Trump Administration.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 12th, 2020 at 10:10 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

Whether each enumeration of 10 bhūmis (or non-bhūmi "stages") are descriptions of the same ranks of 10 bhūmis or not, all description of these "stages" are buddhavaṇana.

Malcolm wrote:

They are, most definitely, descriptions of various qualities that belong to the ten bhumis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 12th, 2020 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you examine the available literature in Tibetan translation on the subject, we find that for example, Asaṅga, Vasubandhu, Sthiramati, etc., devote virtually no time at all to explicating the distinction between the three turnings of the wheel, which itself is given a single passage in the Saṃdhinirmocana Sūtra. And Maitreya-nātha seems to dismiss the idea of the three turnings being successive in the first pages of the Sūtra-lamkāra.

By contrast, Won-ch'uk, a disciple of Xuāntsang, by contrast treats the theme extensively in his three volume Ārya-gaṃbhīra-saṃdhinirmocana-sūtra-ṭīkā ((D 4016).

Of the Indian authors represented in the bstan 'gyur, where they give chronologies of the teachings, they tend to do so principally in commentaries on the tantras.

FromTheEarth said:

Very interesting—raised and mostly immersed in the East Asian tradition, I have not noticed this before. Surely the idea of a classification of Buddha's teachings should have other sources (some early Chinese classification systems do not have this chronological model at all). For instance, ideas as the distinction between definitive and provisional teachings, and that the Buddha addressed different audience differently, both of which seem to be more common themes in sūtras and should have traces in treatises such as Mahāyāna-saṃgraha. Still, the fact you pointed out is indeed eye-opening.

Malcolm wrote:

The distinctions between provisional and definitive teachings have two major sources: Akṣayamatī-nirdeśa Sūtra, and the Saṃdhinirmocana. Madhyamakās follow the former while Yogācārinś follow the latter. The Indian Madhyamaka approach is that if it is about emptiness, absence of identity, etc., it is definitive, everything else is provisional. The Saṃdhinirmocana seems to assert that its own class of sūtras are definitive because they purport to resolve controversies over the meaning of the Prajñāpāramitā sūtra and so on.

In Tibet, the tathāgatagarbha sūtras are either provisional or definitive depending on how they are interpreted, and how closely one follows Candrakīrti, who clearly follows the Lanka in regarding tathagātagarbha as an expedient teaching. Despite some pushback by some Tibetan interpreters of Yogacāra, Candra's presentation of Madhyamaka is universally regarded as the definitive expression of Madhyamaka in Tibet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 12th, 2020 at 10:23 PM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

tobes said:

Prajna is so so distinctively Buddhist.

Malcolm wrote:

Hindus might object to this idea. They use the term prajñā as well.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 12th, 2020 at 10:37 PM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

tobes said:

Perhaps, in the conventional parlance. Your description still sounds a lot like the ancient Greek phronesis, which like other terms theoria and sophia all imply logos/reason. I think prajna entails these, but also, something far more direct/meditative - which is why some have been tempted to use gnosis.

Malcolm wrote:

Gnosis is best used for jnana. You seem to forget that there are three prajnas, born of hearing, reflection, and meditation.

tobes said:

No that was my point - " I think prajna entails these but also, something far more direct/meditative." No other referent, in Greek, Latin or English comes close to covering all three.

Malcolm wrote:

There is the wisdom derived from hearing; the wisdom derived from reflection, and the wisdom derived from meditation. AFAIC, wisdom is the best English term for prajñā. As a professional translator of Buddhist texts, who does nothing but sit around and think about these issues all day long, I am pretty sure wisdom is the best equivalent for prajñā in general.

If you follow how Vasubandhu defines prajñā, it is primarily the faculty of analytical discernment. It is also one of the ten neutral mental factors.

It appears you are using the term in one of its Mahāyāna senses, i.e., the sixth perfection, prajñāpāramitā, transcendent wisdom. But there wouldn't be any need for a perfection of wisdom if wisdom is "something far more direct/meditative." I still think you are conflating prajñā with jñāna, since the latter, unlike prajñā, is in fact direct intuition in the philosophical sense of the term, where as prajñā is principally analytical.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 12th, 2020 at 10:38 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Sādhaka said:

It could be. Or the whole thing could be a setup. Who knows. This is why I try not to get very involved in politics anymore.

PeterC said:

In most cases the simplest explanation is usually the best one. Police got caught on camera callously killing yet another person. Society was already in a bad mood after months of being locked up and years of incompetent corrupt government, and decided they weren't having it anymore. Sometimes conspiracy theories explain things best, but I don't think we need to resort to them to explain this one.

Malcolm wrote:

Come on, you know Soros has all those millions of protestors on his payroll.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 13th, 2020 at 12:43 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Danny said:

It might seem basic, but was wondering where's the dignity in all these issues, whether it's about a living wage, about police abuse, about foreign policy, the environment, wars, economy, covid situation etc.
where's the dignity?

Malcolm wrote:

What does dignity have to do with it? Dignity is not much use when you are being exploited, beaten down, choked from pollution, recruited to fight in capitalist wars, laid off, and sick from a novel virus, which does very unpredictable damage to the human body.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 13th, 2020 at 1:37 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Danny said:

Everything. Or did you think your elected officials fell out of the sky? You allowed that with informed consent regardless of your political affiliation left or right or third party.

Malcolm wrote:

No one asked for my consent. And I did not grant it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 13th, 2020 at 3:35 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Danny said:

Everything. Or did you think your elected officials fell out of the sky? You allowed that with informed consent regardless of your political affiliation left or right or third party.

Malcolm wrote:

No one asked for my consent. And I did not grant it.

Danny said:

Then you cannot complain, and must be content.

Regards

Malcolm wrote:

Umm, no. I sure as hell can complain, especially since no one asked for my consent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 13th, 2020 at 3:39 AM

Title: Re: CHAZ - Seattle's Free Cap Hill movement, city, nation?

Content:

DNS said:

The right wing media is portraying it as a separatist movement of thugs. The left wing media is portraying it as a demonstration. Which is it, in your view?

Malcolm wrote:

People trying to figure some shit out.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 13th, 2020 at 3:54 AM

Title: Obelisk of Wokeness

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 13th, 2020 at 3:58 AM

Title: Re: Obelisk of Wokeness

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 13th, 2020 at 6:44 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Mutation Allows Coronavirus to Infect More Cells, Study Finds. Scientists Urge Caution.

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/06/12/science/coronavirus-mutation-genetics-spike.html>

Unknown said:

Now, scientists have shown — at least in the tightly controlled environment of a laboratory cell culture — that viruses carrying that particular mutation infect more cells and are more resilient than those without it.

Geneticists cautioned against drawing conclusions about whether the variant, which has been circulating widely since February, spreads more easily in humans. There is no evidence that it is more deadly or harmful, and differences seen in a cell culture do not necessarily mean it is more contagious, they said.

But the new study, which has not yet been peer reviewed, does show that this mutation appears to change the biological function of the virus, experts said. The insight could be a crucial first step in understanding how the mutation behaves at a biomolecular level.

Researchers at Scripps Research, Florida, found that the mutation, known as D614G, stabilized the virus's spike proteins, which protrude from the viral surface and give the coronavirus its name. The number of functional and intact spikes on each viral particle was about five times higher because of this mutation, they found.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 13th, 2020 at 6:47 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

krish5 said:

I dont know what is going on, but wanted to share this latest news about them knowing each other:

<https://thehill.com/regulation/court-battles/502312-nightclub-employee-backtracks-on-claim-george-floyd-and-derek>

Malcolm wrote:

Not really buying the walk back...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 13th, 2020 at 2:06 PM

Title: Re: Minneapolis Mayor - horrible how they treated him

Content:

krish5 said:

This has been bothering me for a few days now and have to ask Mahayana Buddhists, how they can support this? These so called "peaceful protests" that in my mind are filled with violence inwardly, anger, racism towards whites, foul language, vulgarity, etc. Watch the video of this incident, with the Mayor of their city. Blacks and Whites and who else here show no respect or civility towards him and even swear at him and give him the middle finger. If they dont get their way, they have no use for him and treat him worse than a animal. I was so turned off by these protests here and by the actions and behavior of the leaders speaking and the participants here. I cannot condone or support these kind of protests in any way and have nothing spiritual or peaceful about them. I will not participate in any of their protests! All of those people there should be ashamed of themselves and there were kids there, they are sending a good message to their kids, not! So again, how do Mahayana Buddhists not see the harmful behavior of many at these protests? It is mind boggling to me.

<https://www.foxnews.com/politics/minneapolis-mayor-protest-defund-police>

p.s. - This is why i dont go to so called peaceful protests, because they are not peaceful or coming from love or understanding imo. Also, whether you agree with this Mayor or not, he deserved to be treated with more respect than what they gave him, which was zero, none. The Mayor of Chicago, would not tolerate this kind of being talked to, both are Democrats as far as i know. So we are not even talking about right wingers here but mayors of the left.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't know where this idea comes from that elected officials deserve to be treated with respect when they are failing in their job. They serve us. That's the point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 13th, 2020 at 8:14 PM

Title: Re: Minneapolis Mayor - horrible how they treated him

Content:

krish5 said:

This has been bothering me for a few days now and have to ask Mahayana Buddhists, how they can support this? These so called "peaceful protests" that in my mind are filled with violence inwardly, anger, racism towards whites, foul language, vulgarity, etc. Watch the video of this incident, with the Mayor of their city. Blacks and Whites and who else here show no respect or civility towards him and even swear at him and give him the middle finger. If they dont get their way, they have no use for him and treat him worse than a animal. I was so turned off by these protests here and by the actions and behavior of the leaders speaking and the participants here. I cannot condone or support these kind of protests in any way and have nothing spiritual or peaceful about them. I will not participate in any of their protests! All of those people there should be ashamed of themselves and there were kids there, they are sending a good message to their kids, not! So again, how do Mahayana Buddhists not see the harmful behavior of many at these protests? It is mind boggling to me.

<https://www.foxnews.com/politics/minneapolis-mayor-protest-defund-police>

p.s. - This is why i dont go to so called peaceful protests, because they are not peaceful or coming from love or understanding imo. Also, whether you agree with this Mayor or not, he deserved to be treated with more respect than what they gave him, which was zero, none. The Mayor of Chicago, would not tolerate this kind of being talked to, both are Democrats as far as i know. So we are not even talking about right wingers here but mayors of the left.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't know where this idea comes from that elected officials deserve to be treated with respect when they are failing in their job. They serve us. That's the point.

krish5 said:

So if i am understanding you correctly, you see nothing wrong with how they treated him at that protest?

Malcolm wrote:

They informed him that as an elected official, he was responsible for carrying out the will of the people, and if he does not listen, the people have the right to remove him. No one threatened him with harm, they just told him very clearly that he would be facing an electoral battle If they did not like his decisions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 13th, 2020 at 8:20 PM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is the wisdom derived from hearing; the wisdom derived from reflection, and the wisdom derived from meditation. AFAIC, wisdom is the best English term for prajñā. As a professional translator of Buddhist texts, who does nothing but sit around and think about these issues all day long, I am pretty sure wisdom is the best equivalent for prajñā in general.

If you follow how Vasubandhu defines prajñā, it is primarily the faculty of analytical discernment. It is also one of the ten neutral mental factors.

It appears you are using the term in one of its Mahāyāna senses, i.e., the sixth perfection, prajñāpāramitā, transcendent wisdom. But there wouldn't be any need for a perfection of wisdom if wisdom is "something far more direct/meditative." I still think you are conflating prajñā with jñāna, since the latter, unlike prajñā, is in fact direct intuition in the philosophical sense of the term, where as prajñā is principally analytical.

White Sakura said:

If you translate prajna as wisdom, prajnaparamita as transcendent wisdom, then how to you translate jnana? Non-dual wisdom?

But cannot Jnana also be translated as transcendent wisdom?

Dr. Berzin translates the sixth perfection as "discriminating awareness, wisdom"

<https://studybuddhism.com/en/tibetan-buddhism/path-to-enlightenment/love-compassion/overview-of-the-six-perfections-six-paramitas>

Which sounds very different from "transcendent wisdom" to me.

At least I would like to understand, in your system, how you translate jnana if using "transcendent wisdom" for the sixth perfection.

To be honest, it occurs to me that it is not possible to find the perfectly fitting English translations for single terms. Which shows it is best to use the Sankrit words.

Malcolm wrote:

I answered above: gnosis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 13th, 2020 at 8:55 PM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I answered above: gnosis.

White Sakura said:

I don't think that is an English word.

I reminds me in an unpleasant way to Rudolph Steiner who used it a lot and is well known in Europe...and used it with whatever different meaning.

For me it does not help, then it is better to just write: Jnana or Yeshe.

Non-dual wisdom. Understandable, proper English, no reminder to crazy Steiner.

Malcolm wrote:

Gnosis is indeed an English word.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 13th, 2020 at 8:58 PM

Title: Re: Minneapolis Mayor - horrible how they treated him

Content:

Dan74 said:

I feel sad for the Mayor and the protests may well be wrong on this, but it does come with the territory being a politician. I don't really see what the outrage is about.

I mean of course one can argue that these protesters' demands are unreasonable. He came to speak to them and they were not happy with his message. This is democracy. As one poster said, they may have wasted an opportunity to have a dialogue with the mayor and achieved nothing except alienating him and providing fodder for the conservative outrage. Yeah...well...

Do I think this is the way to go? No. But it's not really something to clutch pearls about either.

Malcolm wrote:

As we have seen by now, the slightest pretext serves for conservative outrage. Biggest bunch of snowflakes ever.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 13th, 2020 at 11:48 PM

Title: Re: CHAZ - Seattle's Free Cap Hill movement, city, nation?

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Im sorry man but no...there is no police presence whatsoever in the East police precinct or in the area at all, they have renamed the area the "Capital Hill Autonomous Zone ", they have blocked off 7-10 city blocks, and have posted a list of demands...this is WAY beyond a simple protest..

Johnny Dangerous said:

"Protest" does not mean "comfortable thing where no one interrupts your daily life with their grievances".

Right wingers threaten violence and take over public spaces constantly, and stuff that involves far greater direct physical threat.. but I've never seen you post about that, weird.

I am sure there is something to criticize there if you look hard enough and feel like discrediting anything to do with this movement. Me, I'm just happy to see white people and conservatives who have never cared much about the inequities of the justice system, police brutality etc. getting all uncomfortable. Your protest against their protest just proves the need for their protest, from my point of view.

No reports of violence going on, unlike the crowds of people like the Proud Boys etc. who have showed up at protests to threaten people, run over people and all kinds of ugliness. Funnily enough the same people complaining about this didn't care about those things.

<https://www.usatoday.com/story/news/nation/2020/06/12/seattle-protest-chaz-capitol-hill-autonomous-zone-police-free/3173968001/>

This is USA Today, not exactly some radical left source.

Part of the lead up to this was police repeatedly using tear gas against non violent protestors.

Fa Dao said:

Yeah..I dont think so..nice try though. First off, I have been a democrat for 40 years. I was in protests for various causes when you were in diapers. You can be for the constitutional right to protest and still be against what is going on in Seattle and elsewhere...violent protest and taking over police stations/sections of cities is never acceptable regardless if it is from the supposed "right" or "left"...you are a highly intelligent young man and usually give logical and rational arguments...this isnt one of them.

Malcolm wrote:

1) the police respond to peaceful protests with violence constantly, and have done so for decades. What we have seeing are police riots, not riots by protestors.

2) yes, you don't have to agree with anything. Not required.

3) the police are not a sacred institution.

4) the police need to be accountable for their actions, just like every other citizen, they do not deserve special treatment or privileges to commit acts of violence against innocent civilians.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 13th, 2020 at 11:51 PM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Gnosis is indeed an English word.

White Sakura said:

It is also a German word according to online dictionaries. Nevertheless when I read a Buddhist book where it was used, I got, what it meant, after I found out it means "jnana".

So it is a German word that I needed a definition for. And needed the word to be translated from German to Sanskrit to understand it.

I understood here in the thread that an English-speaker felt the same.

And just saying, the dictionary gives for the English-term: "gnosis" in German also "Gnosis" and: "Gotteserkenntnis". Gott means God. I really think people feel whatever when they read it. Maybe somethink like: "Knowing god..." If they have read Steiner, they feel it theosophic.....

I do not want to argue with you, I just thought it might be of interest for you. And I would not have written it if an English speaker had not written he thinks it is not an English word.

Malcolm wrote:

Words do not have immutable meanings. It just so happens that gnosis is the closest linguistic cognate to jnana in English.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 14th, 2020 at 12:30 AM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

tkp67 said:

Dave Chappelle posted a "comedy" special called 8:46 on youtube.

Pretty frank and poignant talk about how this became the straw that broke the camel's back.

Norwegian said:

Well worth watching.

Grigoris said:

I don't know if anybody could say it better than he does in the video.

Malcolm wrote:

One of the smartest men in America.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 14th, 2020 at 1:24 AM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

White Sakura said:

It is a German word! How strange...and:

In French: "la gnose". In Italian: "la gnosi". GNOS.. in all European Languages.

Maybe it is rather a Latin word than an English word which just happens to be the same in German??? Ok you will argue: It just derived from Latin and is now a normal English word and who cares for silly German?

But I feel it as Latin, not as English or German.

Do you all feel it as English? It might be different from my feeling.

And then I think, if it comes from Latin, it must have something to do with Christian Religion.

Malcolm wrote:

Gnosis is an English word. It has nothing to do with "feelings." Look it up.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 14th, 2020 at 1:54 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, We Mean Literally Abolish the Police

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/06/12/opinion/sunday/floyd-abolish-defund-police.html>

Unknown said:

Congressional Democrats want to make it easier to identify and prosecute police misconduct; Joe Biden wants to give police departments $300 million. But efforts to solve police violence through liberal reforms like these have failed for nearly a century.

Enough. We can't reform the police. The only way to diminish police violence is to reduce contact between the public and the police.

There is not a single era in United States history in which the police were not a force of violence against black people. Policing in the South emerged from the slave patrols in the 1700 and 1800s that caught and returned runaway slaves. In the North, the first municipal police departments in the mid-1800s helped quash labor strikes and riots against the rich. Everywhere, they have suppressed marginalized populations to protect the status quo.

So when you see a police officer pressing his knee into a black man's neck until he dies, that's the logical result of policing in America. When a police officer brutalizes a black person, he is doing what he sees as his job.

Now two weeks of nationwide protests have led some to call for defunding the police, while others argue that doing so would make us less safe.

The first thing to point out is that police officers don't do what you think they do. They spend most of their time responding to noise complaints, issuing parking and traffic citations, and dealing with other noncriminal issues. We've been taught to think they "catch the bad guys; they chase the bank robbers; they find the serial killers," said Alex Vitale, the coordinator of the Policing and Social Justice Project at Brooklyn College, in an interview with Jacobin. But this is "a big myth," he said. "The vast majority of police officers make one felony arrest a year. If they make two, they're cop of the month."

We can't simply change their job descriptions to focus on the worst of the worst criminals. That's not what they are set up to do.

Second, a "safe" world is not one in which the police keep black and other marginalized people in check through threats of arrest, incarceration, violence and death.

I've been advocating the abolition of the police for years. Regardless of your view on police power — whether you want to get rid of the police or simply to make them less violent — here's an immediate demand we can all make: Cut the number of police in half and cut their budget in half. Fewer police officers equals fewer opportunities for them to brutalize and kill people. The idea is gaining traction in Minneapolis, Dallas, Los Angeles and other cities.

History is instructive, not because it offers us a blueprint for how to act in the present but because it can help us ask better questions for the future.

The Lexow Committee undertook the first major investigation into police misconduct in New York City in 1894. At the time, the most common complaint against the police was about "clubbing" — "the routine bludgeoning of citizens by patrolmen armed with nightsticks or blackjacks," as the historian Marilyn Johnson has written.

The Wickersham Commission, convened to study the criminal justice system and examine the problem of Prohibition enforcement, offered a scathing indictment in 1931, including evidence of brutal interrogation strategies. It put the blame on a lack of professionalism among the police.

After the 1967 urban uprisings, the Kerner Commission found that "police actions were 'final' incidents before the outbreak of violence in 12 of the 24 surveyed disorders." Its report listed a now-familiar set of recommendations, like working to build "community support for law enforcement” and reviewing police operations “in the ghetto, to ensure proper conduct by police officers.”

These commissions didn’t stop the violence; they just served as a kind of counterinsurgent function each time police violence led to protests. Calls for similar reforms were trotted out in response to the brutal police beating of Rodney King in 1991 and the rebellion that followed, and again after the killings of Michael Brown and Eric Garner. The final report of the Obama administration’s President’s Task Force on 21st Century Policing resulted in procedural tweaks like implicit-bias training, police-community listening sessions, slight alterations of use-of-force policies and systems to identify potentially problematic officers early on.

But even a member of the task force, Tracey Meares, noted in 2017, “policing as we know it must be abolished before it can be transformed.”

The philosophy undergirding these reforms is that more rules will mean less violence. But police officers break rules all the time. Look what has happened over the past few weeks — police officers slashing tires, shoving old men on camera, and arresting and injuring journalists and protesters. These officers are not worried about repercussions any more than Daniel Pantaleo, the former New York City police officer whose chokehold led to Eric Garner’s death; he waved to a camera filming the incident. He knew that the police union would back him up and he was right. He stayed on the job for five more years.

Minneapolis had instituted many of these “best practices” but failed to remove Derek Chauvin from the force despite 17 misconduct complaints over nearly two decades, culminating in the entire world watching as he knelt on George Floyd’s neck for almost nine minutes.

Why on earth would we think the same reforms would work now? We need to change our demands. The surest way of reducing police violence is to reduce the power of the police, by cutting budgets and the number of officers.

But don’t get me wrong. We are not abandoning our communities to violence. We don’t want to just close police departments. We want to make them obsolete.

We should redirect the billions that now go to police departments toward providing health care, housing, education and good jobs. If we did this, there would be less need for the police in the first place.

We can build other ways of responding to harms in our society. Trained “community care workers” could do mental-health checks if someone needs help. Towns could use restorative-justice models instead of throwing people in prison.

What about rape? The current approach hasn’t ended it. In fact most rapists never see the inside of a courtroom. Two-thirds of people who experience sexual violence never report it to anyone. Those who file police reports are often dissatisfied with the response. Additionally, police officers themselves commit sexual assault alarmingly often. A study in 2010 found that sexual misconduct was the second most frequently reported form of police misconduct. In 2015, The Buffalo News found that an officer was caught for sexual misconduct every five days.

When people, especially white people, consider a world without the police, they envision a society as violent as our current one, merely without law enforcement — and they shudder. As a society, we have been so indoctrinated with the idea that we solve problems by policing and caging people that many cannot imagine anything other than prisons and the police as solutions to violence and harm.

People like me who want to abolish prisons and police, however, have a vision of a different society, built on cooperation instead of individualism, on mutual aid instead of self-preservation. What would the country look like if it had billions of extra dollars to spend on housing, food and education for all? This change in society wouldn't happen immediately, but the protests show that many people are ready to embrace a different vision of safety and justice.

When the streets calm and people suggest once again that we hire more black police officers or create more civilian review boards, I hope that we remember all the times those efforts have failed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 14th, 2020 at 3:13 AM

Title: Re: CHAZ - Seattle's Free Cap Hill movement, city, nation?

Content:

Grigoris said:

Could be considered an act of self-defence.

If the police have withdrawn, then why should citizens not arm themselves and protect their neighbourhoods?

They have a Right to do so, if I am not mistaken?

Gyurme Kundrol said:

They do. The seething hypocrisy is ironic though. For 20 years pro second amendment people have heard the same rhetoric over and over, that you dont need to carry a gun everywhere, you can just call the police, that nobody needs an AR15. People who are conservative on 2nd amendment rights have repeatedly pointed out that no, the police cant be relied on, its up to you to protect yourself. That actually sometimes an AR15 is precisely what you will need. What do you know, they were actually right!

Malcolm wrote:

No one needs an semi-auto AR 15, not the police, not civilians. No one. The number of successful defenses against assailants with a personal weapon is quite low, while the number of people convicted of assault with deadly weapons and murders are comparatively high.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 14th, 2020 at 3:57 AM

Title: Re: CHAZ - Seattle's Free Cap Hill movement, city, nation?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No one needs an semi-auto AR 15, not the police, not civilians. No one. The number of successful defenses against assailants with a personal weapon is quite low, while the number of people convicted of assault with deadly weapons and murders are comparatively high.

Gyurme Kundrol said:

True, but if you look at gun stats across the board, rifles are much safer than pistols. 65% of gun deaths are from pistols, only 5-10% from rifles. Most mass shootings also are pistols. Of rifles, the AR15 is actually really far down on the list as many rifle deaths are hunting incidents or the person used a hunting rifle for whatever reason. For a casual gun owner who wants to protect their home, a rifle is a better choice and safer for everyone involved. Contrary to what people say, the actual ballistics of an AR15 vs. a pistol shows the pistols are more deadly, pistols do huge amounts of damage to whoever they hit and are more likely to travel through people/objects/walls and strike innocents. You are also more likely to miss with a pistol. This is due to the effect of high velocity rifle rounds "tumbling" after they hit a target, losing a lot of power and momentum, vs a pistol whose rounds dont have this effect.

Malcolm wrote:

No, you are quite mistaken on this point. 222 rifles, which is effectively what an AR 15s are, have a much heavier charge and slug, and are much more damaging than pistol wounds. Just ask any surgeon who works in an ER. You are not talking to someone ignorant of weapons handling.

It is true that pistols are much less accurate, especially in the hands of people who lack specific firearms training for pistols. Even in the hands of trained law enforcement, pistols are very inaccurate. They have much less powerful rounds and actually do far less damage, according to surgeons.

Gyurme Kundrol said:

On the other hand you can look into incidents where people are for example robbed by 3 or more people at a time, all armed, and successfully defended themselves because they were armed.

Malcolm wrote:

This rarely happens in real life, but in the movies, well, quite a lot.

Gyurme Kundrol said:

Then there are many cases where people were not armed and they are simply executed, and I don't see how it's better to be executed than to have a gun and defend yourself. Often these cases of violent robbery are not in the inner city, they are in rural areas where there are less people so nobody is going to hear the commotion or see anything happening.

Malcolm wrote:

Now yer just making shit up.

Gyurme Kundrol said:

I wish we lived in a world where I felt I never would need a gun for anything, but I just can't rationalize it to myself. There are other reasons the AR15 is safer too. For a civilian in a situation like that, you are going to have a HUGE adrenaline dump. It's hard enough to shoot a pistol accurately while calm and focused, it's 10x harder when you are scared and violently shaking. A rifle is much more stable in that sense, and the 30 round capacity means you can afford to miss some shots without running out of ammo right away and being gunned down.

Malcolm wrote:

You do realize that these 30 round magazines jam regularly? Especially during a rapid rate of fire?

Gyurme Kundrol said:

Serious question here though: From a Dharma perspective is there a good reason to not be prepared for that possible scenario?

Malcolm wrote:

Rifles, and guns in general, need regular maintenance and cleaning. It's time consuming, easily neglected. Plus, one needs to spend regular time at a range. Shooting is a skill that needs to be maintained.

AR 15 style rifles are not particularly well made, and are not very accurate in general. They are also of little use in close quarters. Most shootings by civilians happen when people are standing within 25 feet of each other. Even with a rifle, most people miss their targets.

Most people are not capable of shooting another human being unless trained to, or in a state of panic. And panic is the enemy of accurate shooting.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 14th, 2020 at 4:46 AM

Title: Re: CHAZ - Seattle's Free Cap Hill movement, city, nation?

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Oh and BTW:

<https://www.seattletimes.com/seattle-news/politics/fox-news-runs-digitally-altered-images-in-coverage-of-seattles-protests-capitol-hill-autonomous-zone/>

Don't talk your silly stuff about Seattle when ya don't even live near, and your only information source is Fox News.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, are we surprised? This is what fascists do.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 14th, 2020 at 4:47 AM

Title: Re: CHAZ - Seattle's Free Cap Hill movement, city, nation?

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Oh and BTW:

<https://www.seattletimes.com/seattle-news/politics/fox-news-runs-digitally-altered-images-in-coverage-of-seattles-protests-capitol-hill-autonomous-zone/>

Don't talk your silly stuff about Seattle when ya don't even live near, and your only information source is Fox News.

Gyurme Kundrol said:

Yes those images are absurd. They are based on an unedited photo from when CHAZ first started, his face mask was not green before the edit IIRC.

Heres a more recent unedited one: https://upnewsinfo.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/06/1591908434_41_Trump-says-domestic-terrorists-have-taken-over-Seattle-and-demands.jpg

You also know absolutely nothing about me or my political views, so stop making assumptions. I dont watch Fox News at all, and think most media in general is terrible. Im 100% in support of the protests, BLM, and am a progressive democrat who has always voted blue.

Malcolm wrote:

Leftist boogaloo bois in that photo. Not terribly reassuring.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 14th, 2020 at 5:09 AM

Title: Re: CHAZ - Seattle's Free Cap Hill movement, city, nation?

Content:

Gyurme Kundrol said:

Yes those images are absurd. They are based on an unedited photo from when CHAZ first started, his face mask was not green before the edit IIRC.

Heres a more recent unedited one: https://upnewsinfo.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/06/1591908434_41_Trump-says-domestic-terrorists-have-taken-over-Seattle-and-demands.jpg

You also know absolutely nothing about me or my political views, so stop making assumptions. I dont watch Fox News at all, and think most media in general is terrible. Im 100% in support of the protests, BLM, and am a progressive democrat who has always voted blue.

Malcolm wrote:

Leftist boogaloo bois in that photo. Not terribly reassuring.

Gyurme Kundrol said:

I think the boogaloo stuff is stupid.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 14th, 2020 at 6:55 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

If we end the war on drugs it will drastically reduce the need for police presence across the board. That and greatly increasing the public funding for social services and programs would make police work a specialized function.

One thing that comes up for me here: People don't realize (probably due to media, among other things) that even in America, random violent crime is just not as common as it seems. On the other hand, things like domestic violence and drug overdose are giant problems, for which police have no solution at all, but often end up being the first line of response for.

Not holding my breath on changes, but at least now there is more awareness.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 14th, 2020 at 7:02 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Also our economic disenfranchisement of poor communities (and especially Black and brown ones, but all poor communities really) actually perpetuates some of the the problems police most commonly show up for, and of course their inappropriateness to the job usually makes said problems worse, not better.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup. Just look at the show Cops.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 14th, 2020 at 7:21 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Also our economic disenfranchisement of poor communities (and especially Black and brown ones, but all poor communities really) actually perpetuates some of the the problems police most commonly show up for, and of course their inappropriateness to the job usually makes said problems worse, not better.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup. Just look at the show Cops.

Johnny Dangerous said:

That show is the lowest of the low.

<https://www.stitcher.com/podcast/missing-richard-simmons/running-from-cops-headlong-season-3>

This is a whole podcast series on it, it's excellent.

Malcolm wrote:

Good thing that show was just cancelled.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 15th, 2020 at 12:11 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Grigoris said:

But all of them heroes.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, other than Reno 911.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 15th, 2020 at 12:53 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Grigoris said:

But all of them heroes.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, other than Reno 911.

Grigoris said:

Even shows about "bad" cops is propaganda in support of cops.

"The only thing worse than being talked about is not being talked about." Oscar Wilde

Malcolm wrote:

You might change your mind if you watched it. But it is true that's police shows are the most popular shows in US.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 15th, 2020 at 12:55 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Grigoris said:

I still cannot believe you went from Obama to Trump.

Malcolm wrote:

Me either, but in retrospect it laid to rest the fantasy our country had resolved its race issues.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 15th, 2020 at 12:57 AM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

White Sakura said:

Keith Dowman, by the way, uses "gnosis" for Rigpa...

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and I back translate the term to vidya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 15th, 2020 at 1:55 AM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

White Sakura said:

Keith Dowman, by the way, uses "gnosis" for Rigpa...

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and I back translate the term to vidya.

White Sakura said:

And... is it ok for you if I have other opinions than you even if I am nobody? And honestly tell you that.. the translation of the eye of the Storm is very helpful even if I can only read the further translation to German.

But that WORD...

And now: You use it for Rigpa and for Yeshe/Jnana....

Malcolm wrote:

I do not use gnosis for rig pa/vidya. Question, have you actually received dzogchen teachings from anyone?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 15th, 2020 at 2:28 AM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I do not use gnosis for rig pa/vidya. Question, have you actually received dzogchen teachings from anyone?

White Sakura said:

So I misunderstood you. I thought you wanted to say you are Mr. Dowman. I recieved "only" Mahamudra teachings from a high Dzogchen and Mahamudra Master.

Malcolm wrote:

Then you have no business reading dzogchen books, and your opinions don't matter at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 15th, 2020 at 3:28 AM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

White Sakura said:
But I do not agree regarding the word: "gnosis".

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, we heard you the first time.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, June 15th, 2020 at 4:08 AM
Title: Re: My Spiritual Pet Peeve
Content:
Könchok Thrinley said:
Do you have spiritual pet peeves?

Malcolm wrote:
Religion in general. Biggest con in history, run by shameless grifters.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, June 15th, 2020 at 4:52 AM
Title: Re: My Spiritual Pet Peeve
Content:
Simon E. said:
The whole Eckhart Tolle industry grinds my gears a little.

Malcolm wrote:
See above.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, June 15th, 2020 at 5:33 AM
Title: Re: Is this an accurate summation of tantra?
Content:
Yeshe Dorje said:
I was recently told that
'Tantra is all about using a variety of deity forms, mostly from Hinduism, in order to embody their archetypes'

I would be grateful if some of you would evaluate this statement for me. There are very few Buddhists where I live so I am happy to be able to engage with them when I can. However I have recently become unsure about the level of understanding of the person that made the statement. Help in evaluating the statement will hopefully give me some clarity on the ways in which I engage with him.
Thank you very much

Malcolm wrote:
Well, this is totally wrong. Tantra just means "continuum." When applied to a book, it means something “manual.”

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 15th, 2020 at 5:44 AM

Title: Re: Trouble with visualization and recitation at same time

Content:

Firesign90 said:

Hello. I am new to Buddhism in practice. I try to visualize white light radiating from the heart center or while practicing White Tara where wisdom rainbow light rays continuously stream out from her heart and then light rays return back to Whit Tara who blesses you. I also either can only focus on the recitations or the visualizations, not both. I also cannot visualize myself, if that makes sense.

I just am at a standstill and cannot get very far with the visualizations. Any tips to help me with this would be very appreciated. Thank you.

Malcolm wrote:

You need to discuss this with your teacher.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 15th, 2020 at 8:15 PM

Title: Re: abiding in suchness

Content:

White Sakura said:

So I misunderstood you. I thought you wanted to say you are Mr. Dowman. I recieved "only" Mahamudra teachings from a high Dzogchen and Mahamudra Master.

Malcolm wrote:

Then you have no business reading dzogchen books, and your opinions don't matter at all.

Crazywisdom said:

Didnt you say anyone buy your books?

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually, they all have a disclaimer in the forward specifying who those translations for. I can not prevent anyone from buying them, but people who have not received dzogchen transmission and instruction should not read them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 15th, 2020 at 8:24 PM

Title: Re: Interview with Co-Founder of Esalen

Content:

PeterC said:

I hear that these days they serve avocado on organic sourdough toast to burnt-out venture capitalists and "entrepreneurs".

Malcolm wrote:

It was shut down after the landslides that cutoff Big Sur for a year, and sold to a tech overlord, who turned it into a business retreat for Silicon Valley types.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 15th, 2020 at 8:26 PM

Title: Re: Zen's stand regarding 'The Absolute'

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

"The absolute" is likely "the ultimate" referring to "the ultimate truth," likely according to Venerable Nāgārjuna, but also likely according to whichever other "ultimate truth" they consider the "ultimate" versus the conventional.

PeterC said:

So eight pages into the discussion, we're at the stage of saying what the main object of the discussion likely refers to

Malcolm wrote:

Typical Dharmawheel.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 15th, 2020 at 11:13 PM

Title: Re: Yumka Dechen Gyalmo

Content:

Lhasa said:

Is she one of the 21 Taras?

Malcolm wrote:

No. She is Yeshe Tsogyal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 15th, 2020 at 11:14 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Grigoris said:

https://www.vice.com/en_au/article/5dzg7k/moria-refugee-camp-violence-attacks?fbclid=IwAR3uqxtD0qfugp2LxlQinSw4_FeTkCEUQubHVl7sZJDTT8SHMT_oNqLVqkA

BLM supporter speaks out after carrying counter-protester to safety

Photo of Patrick Hutchinson coming to the man's aid went viral after Saturday's protests
2183.jpg

Fa Dao said:

Nice!! This is the direction we all need to be focusing on..

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, in general it is usually the left coming to the aid of right wing dickheads when they are in danger of having their asses kicked. The reverse never happens.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 15th, 2020 at 11:23 PM

Title: Re: Is this an accurate summation of tantra?

Content:

Lingpupa said:

Malcolm's comment may not be "incorrect", but clearly ignores all the connotations that must be considered if you want any appreciation of what tantra means in the Buddhist context, or indeed in almost any context.

Malcolm wrote:

The standard definition provided by everyone:

Guhyasamāja Uttaratantra states:

"A tantra is a 'continuum,'
that continuum changes into three aspects;
distinguished by basis,
its nature and inalienability.
The aspect of nature is the cause,
the basis is "method",
likewise, inalienability is the result;
these three summarize the meaning of tantra."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 15th, 2020 at 11:29 PM

Title: Re: Hope for attainment in this life.what are my options?

Content:

Simon E. said:

It really is extraordinary.

Someone on the forum says that they have no realisations..me for example. And immediately this is viewed with suspicion. It must be a ploy, or a bid for attention or an inverse statement of superiority (?!). Or it means that I am not really a practitioner.

Malcolm wrote:

I mean, it is so obvious that you are lying, trying to egotistically conceal your realization by virtue signaling how much of a lowly schmuck you are. I mean, it does not take much internet clairvoyance at all to see that you, an advanced practitioner, have a vested interest in concealing your qualities, because you have egotistical investment in faux humility.

Simon E. said:

(Now the latter might be true..)

The fact that I have said that I do not seek realisations is simply brushed aside.

The fact that I see discussion of attainment as examples of what my first teacher called spiritual materialism is counted as naught.

I can only think that idea of working for a lifetime to simply integrate what has been given freely, with no interest in Siddhis or displays is somehow threatening to some people. Why that should be I have no idea.

Malcolm wrote:

Because this just the sort of virtue signaling all advanced (read old as f--k) Buddhist practitioners on somewhat obsolete Buddhism internet forums do, not to mention you are probably a pinko, a social justice warrior, and wear socks with your sandals (hippie).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 16th, 2020 at 12:26 AM

Title: Re: Is this an accurate summation of tantra?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The standard definition provided by everyone:

Guhyasamāja Uttaratantra states:

"A tantra is a 'continuum,'
that continuum changes into three aspects;
distinguished by basis,
its nature and inalienability.
The aspect of nature is the cause,
the basis is "method",
likewise, inalienability is the result;
these three summarize the meaning of tantra."

Lingpupa said:

But there is a difficulty here, surely - a "missing piece" if you will. Not to dispute your definition, of course, but definitions rarely, if ever, encompass the full meaning of a term, especially not the connotations of a richly loaded, culturally significant term. As a translator, you will of course know that only too well. And this (highly didactic) definition does not remotely touch on many of the topics raised by the word "tantra", does it?

Malcolm wrote:

It covers everything relevant to a discussion of Buddhist tantra. This is the reason why virtually all Indian and Tibetan authors use this verse as their launching point for a discussion of what "tantra" means.

So, when the inquirer asks, well, what does "continuum" mean here, it means that a "tantra" encompasses the basis, the path, and the result predicated on one's person's continuum, the nature of their mind. Then there are some books that describe these three things.

Lingpupa said:

How does your definition help them? How does it help them distinguish between art or liturgy that is more or less tantric and loosely similar artefacts that are not? How does it help them distinguish between fake, rip-off "tantra" (see most of what you'll find under that search) and genuine tantra such as you or I may perhaps know a little of?

Malcolm wrote:

It helps them to understand that, from a Buddhist perspective, perhaps the popularized notion of Tantra is not an accurate portrayal of the subject. I generally find that the most straightforward explanations are the most useful for dispelling misconceptions people may hold. Hence my answer.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 16th, 2020 at 12:29 AM

Title: Re: Hope for attainment in this life.what are my options?

Content:

Simon E. said:

Alas Malcolm all true..even down to the socks and sandals. Well during lockdown anyway....

Malcolm wrote:

Well, I will call your no realization and and raise you negative realization.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 16th, 2020 at 12:30 AM

Title: Re: Hope for attainment in this life.what are my options?

Content:

Könchok Thrinley said:

Since we are turning into "realization collectors forum" I would like add that I do have a collection and for sure it is bigger than yours.

Now siddhi collections aside. I would suggest the use of "signs" of practice rather than "realizations". Why? Because how many of us have actually gone to retreats for months/years and did our best to truly "realize" a practice (whatever that means)? However, signs just like smoke appear when there is the source. And there are many of those and the most profound ones are not flying or being really flexible. It is just that we are less annoying.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, on internet forums, mist is frequently misidentified as smoke, meaning there is no fire behind that hill. You know what they say, empty buckets make the most noise.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 16th, 2020 at 5:24 AM

Title: Re: Is this an accurate summation of tantra?

Content:

Yeshe Dorje said:

I've noticed that some people follow a non-Buddhist Weltanschauung and try to fit their Buddhist practise into that. Not saying this is the case here, just something I've observed. It's something I've been thinking about a lot lately, because it rubs me the wrong way, rightly or wrongly, and I am not sure why exactly.

Malcolm wrote:

He has from time to time expressed an interest in, perhaps even an affiliation with, western Magick. I know even less about Magick than I do about Buddhism, nevertheless I suspect he may be conflating aspects of the two practices. In fact he gave me the definition in question when I asked him whether, if he was involved with Magick, he had considered how this might relate to his refuge commitments. He seemed to be unaware of what these commitments even entailed. My hope is that he may come across this thread and consider resetting his practice (There is no chance he would listen to me directly).

[/quote]

We cannot condition others. So, let it go.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 16th, 2020 at 10:18 PM

Title: Re: Murdoch on 2020 election

Content:

Knotty Veneer said:

Do you think Fox and WSJ will start being more critical of Trump if it looks like he's going to lose.

BTW, I hear a lot of people saying that they think he's done for this time. I wish I had their confidence. Trump will pull every dirty trick he can to rig this election if he thinks he's in trouble. Without Murdoch though, he'll be seriously hampered.

Johnny Dangerous said:

The fact that a moldy doily will be the Democratic candidate doesn't help much either.

Malcolm wrote:

Hey, we are all voting the the moldy doily. Otherwise...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 16th, 2020 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: Genealogy of Ngondro

Content:

Donny said:

Does anyone has some tips on teachings an/or historical/scholarly works that deal with of the genealogy of the four preliminary practices that are now used in most itbetan lineages?

What was the cultural context? How were students/practitioners preparing for their practice before ngondro got established? How did they get codified etc.?

Any tip is appreciated

Malcolm wrote:

Ngondro comes from India. In India, anuttarayoga tantra ngondro consisted principally of Vajrasattva, Mandala offerings, and Guru Yoga, and the latter was generally incorporated into one's daily sadhana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 16th, 2020 at 11:24 PM

Title: Re: Leaving Buddhism

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

As they say, there are "84,000 paths". There are different schools and traditions, and ultimately it comes down to each individual.

Malcolm wrote:

This simply means that Vinaya has 21,000 teachings as an antidote to desire, Sūtra has 21,000 teachings as an antidote to anger, Abhidharma has 21,000 teachings as an antidote to ignorance, and there are an additional 21,000 teachings of mixed nature as an antidote to mixed afflictions.

The various Buddhist schools and traditions within Buddhism, apart from ordination lineages, are essentially Abhidharma schools. Also Secret Mantra in general is included in Abhidharma.

This expression does not include nonbuddhist paths and traditions, through many people mistaken think so. All the nonbuddhist schools are included in eternalism and annihilationism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 12:13 AM

Title: Re: Gorsuch revisited

Content:

Queequeg said:

I didn't mean just the Supreme Court - I was referring to the entire Federal Court System.

Along with the rest of the federal government, we will miss it when it is irreparably hobbled.

But yes, the common law system in general is also a great human achievement. It will likely survive the disintegration of the the American federal system.

Malcolm wrote:

Providing people can still read...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 12:50 AM

Title: Re: Is this an accurate summation of tantra?

Content:

climb-up said:

Archetypes and deities maybe part of the process, but you can use those things in ritual and meditation and not have it be tantra.

I don't know what folks will think, but my working definition is that tantra is a technology of guruyoga, meant to achieve the state of the guru (or, more properly, to realize that our nature is not in any way different from the guru, who's nature is not in anyway different from the Buddhas of the three times).

Any practice we do must be transmitted to us, otherwise whatever we're doing, it isn't tantra.

Any deity that we practice or accomplish might involve some archetypal energies and relative siddhis and all sorts of cool sh!t, but the essence of deityyoga is not to beomce the deity or contact it's powers, but to do the deity practice given by the Lama to recognize that the deity is a representation of our own true nature from the beginning.

...I don't think any of this is wrong, but I don't know what folks will think of it as a definition of what tantra "is."

But, even if my definition is not great; tantra is far more than just deity yoga. There are many practices that do not fall under the banner of deity yoga, even though of course that's big.

Malcolm wrote:

All of these things, creation, completion, guru yoga, etc., fall under the heading of the method part of tantra. The definition provided above is comprehensive and leaves nothing out, since it concisely covers the basis, the path, and the result.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 1:09 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.motherjones.com/politics/2020/06/american-indian-movement-patrol-defund-police-minneapolis/>

Unknown said:

Late one night at the end of May, as spray paint, fires, and looting reigned across Minneapolis, an Indigenous hip-hop artist named Tall Paul was roving the streets in a truck, looking for looters and arsonists. "It looked like that movie The Purge," he says. "It was lawless." Days before, Paul had joined the American Indian Movement Patrol, a group of Native Americans volunteering to maintain neighborhood safety and protect key buildings from destruction amid the rebellion.

Paul and the other volunteers on shift were on their way to check on the offices of the Leech Lake Band of Ojibwe when they saw four white teenagers looting a nearby liquor store. They stopped their truck and three of the teens fled, while Paul's group caught up with the fourth. Soon his buddies returned, and all were made to lie on the ground so they couldn't run away, then give their names and wait for a parent to come pick them up. The teens had driven 90 miles from suburban Wisconsin to take advantage of the chaos.

...

Though the current political moment focuses on violence against Black communities, police killings of Natives have long gone overlooked, in part because some departments don't identify or track Indigenous victims. A CNN analysis of data from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention found that Native Americans were slightly more likely than Black people to die at the hands of law enforcement between 1999 and 2015, though the rates are often neck-and-neck—and deeply intertwined.

In 2011, Derek Chauvin, the officer who killed George Floyd, was involved in the shooting of an Alaska Native named Leroy Martinez. (A witness claimed Martinez had surrendered his gun and had his hands in the air when he was shot.) Recognizing their common experience of police brutality, Native youth stood shoulder-to-shoulder with Black protesters throughout this year's Minneapolis uprising.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 2:19 AM

Title: Re: Is this an accurate summation of tantra?

Content:

climb-up said:

Archetypes and deities maybe part of the process, but you can use those things in ritual and meditation and not have it be tantra.

I don't know what folks will think, but my working definition is that tantra is a technology of guruyoga, meant to achieve the state of the guru (or, more properly, to realize that our nature is not in any way different from the guru, who's nature is not in anyway different from the Buddhas of the three times).

Any practice we do must be transmitted to us, otherwise whatever we're doing, it isn't tantra.

Any deity that we practice or accomplish might involve some archetypal energies and relative siddhis and all sorts of cool sh!t, but the essence of deityyoga is not to become the deity or contact it's powers, but to do the deity practice given by the Lama to recognize that the deity is a representation of our own true nature from the beginning.

...I don't think any of this is wrong, but I don't know what folks will think of it as a definition of what tantra "is."

But, even if my definition is not great; tantra is far more than just deity yoga. There are many practices that do not fall under the banner of deity yoga, even though of course that's big.

Malcolm wrote:

All of these things, creation, completion, guru yoga, etc., fall under the heading of the method part of tantra. The definition provided above is comprehensive and leaves nothing out, since it concisely covers the basis, the path, and the result.

climb-up said:

Ah, I see. I was thinking only in terms of the practice and methods, good point.

I think your definition above of tantra is continuum is probably completely encompassing, but it seems like the title of traditional text wherein those of highest capacity can read it and fully understand the meaning by that alone, but those of us with less capacity need a little more elaboration and explication.

EDIT: I had missed your guhyasamaja quote, sorry. That is more comprehensive, but still needs clarification (IMO) for those of us with lesser capacities.

Malcolm wrote:

Simply put, "tantra" refers to the nature of the mind, the methods we employ to discover it, and the result of putting those methods into practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 2:46 AM

Title: Re: Repairing 5 lay vows

Content:

Toenail said:

Once one has broken a lay vow, is it lost forever in this life or can it be restored? I don't mean damaged, I mean broken.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it can be restored through the simple act of confession. This is what the Sūtra of Three Heaps is four. If someone is a Vajrayāna practitioner, the refuge vows are restored by reciting the seven limb prayer.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 2:57 AM

Title: Re: Genealogy of Ngondro

Content:

Donny said:

Does anyone has some tips on teachings an/or historical/scholarly works that deal with of the genealogy of the four preliminary practices that are now used in most itbetan lineages?

What was the cultural context? How were students/practitioners preparing for their practice before ngondro got established? How did they get codified etc.?

Any tip is appreciated

Malcolm wrote:

Ngondro comes from India. In India, anuttarayoga tantra ngondro consisted principally of Vajrasattva, Mandala offerings, and Guru Yoga, and the latter was generally incorporated into one's daily sadhana.

Crazywisdom said:

Says who?

Malcolm wrote:

The Indian commentaries on the sadhanas that derive from that class of tantras, Guhyasamaja, etc. Then of course there are Dzogchen tantras like the Klong gsal tantra, which has entire chapters on the separate ngondro practices, refuge through guru yoga, and beyond.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 3:00 AM

Title: Re: Repairing 5 lay vows

Content:

Toenail said:

Is there a time expiration or so to restore them? Once one is broken, just that one is lost, no? In order to take Bodhisattva Vows and Tantric vows, does one have to take all of the 5 lay vows first or are some like 1 or 2 enough? If one has taken all of them before, is it possible to give one of them back?

Malcolm wrote:

In order to receive the higher vows, the lower vows are required. But after being taken, one set of vows can be broken, without it necessarily impacting the others, apart from aspirational bodhicitta. If that is lost, everything is lost.

As far as the five upasaka vows go, one can choose to follow whichever vow one feels one can hold, beginning with not killing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 3:50 AM

Title: Re: Repairing 5 lay vows

Content:

Toenail said:

Thank you.

Did i understood correctly, one has to take all of the upasaka vows in order to take the higher sets of vows?

Malcolm wrote:

well, you do in the beginning of and empowerment, but after receiving, you decide which one's you can keep.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 5:09 AM

Title: Re: Murdoch on 2020 election

Content:

Nemo said:

Yay Team Biden. You get a bag of President instead of a flaming bag of President.

Just have the damn revolution already. It's not like you live in a democracy. Dems treat you like hostages. You are in an abusive relationship. Take back the power and make some demands. 2 weeks of rioting did more than voting Democrat for 20 years.

Malcolm wrote:

that kind of revolution will benefit the fascists.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 9:03 AM

Title: Re: Murdoch on 2020 election

Content:

Nemo said:

Yay Team Biden. You get a bag of President instead of a flaming bag of President.

Just have the damn revolution already. It's not like you live in a democracy. Dems treat you like hostages. You are in an abusive relationship. Take back the power and make some demands. 2 weeks of rioting did more than voting Democrat for 20 years.

Malcolm wrote:

that kind of revolution will benefit the fascists.

Nemo said:

Not revolting helps them as well. The status quo created Trump. If you don't revolt soon it will be too late.

Malcolm wrote:

Biden will be elected, America will go back to sleep.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 8:56 PM

Title: Re: Murdoch on 2020 election

Content:

Dan74 said:

To a lot of Trump supporters, he was the revolution. If he stays on, more and more of them will realise that it has been one giant confidence trick and the Washington Swamp has simply been rebranded as Trump Wetlands. If he loses, they will energise and against the lacklustre Biden presidency, deliver someone actually dangerous, a true fascist, rather than simply an entitled old narcissist with an attention span of a goldfish and enough street-smarts to ride the fascist wave into office.

Malcolm wrote:

Still not a good reason to vote for four more years of total chaos.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 8:59 PM

Title: Re: Is there a musical transmission in Dudjom Tersar Tröma Nakmo?

Content:

Adamantine said:

I'd like to add that two Dudjom lineage holders living in the West who are accessible and have the full capacity for sharing these transmissions and melodies that I am aware of are Khandro Kunzang Dechen Chodron based in the USA and Lama Tenzin Samphel based in France.

Malcolm wrote:
You forgot Sangye Khandro.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 9:02 PM

Title: Re: George Floyd

Content:

Grigoris said:

https://www.politico.com/news/magazine/2020/06/15/dont-listen-to-fox-heres-whats-really-going-on-in-seattles-protest-zone-

321507?fbclid=IwAR3XUrRbzO8SzMFr2PFXsiMirMi6D9nJYhNP5XhizprzyRTiqw1vXVmF5MI

Don't Listen to Fox. Here's What's Really Going On in Seattle's Protest Zone.

What's happening in these four blocks that shook the world is indeed an occupation, but it looks nothing like the "totalitarian takeover" touted on the conservative network.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, it looks like Occupy Wallsteet, only bigger.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 10:16 PM

Title: Re: Murdoch on 2020 election

Content:

Dan74 said:

To a lot of Trump supporters, he was the revolution. If he stays on, more and more of them will realise that it has been one giant confidence trick and the Washington Swamp has simply been rebranded as Trump Wetlands. If he loses, they will energise and against the lacklustre Biden presidency, deliver someone actually dangerous, a true fascist, rather than simply an entitled old narcissist with an attention span of a goldfish and enough street-smarts to ride the fascist wave into office.

Malcolm wrote:

Still not a good reason to vote for four more years of total chaos.

Dan74 said:

No, I couldn't bring myself to vote for him, had I been a US citizen. As to what is the lesser evil in the long term, who can tell...

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a lesser evil sort of thing. Biden will have to cope with a energized left and a pissed-off right (but when is the right anything but pissed off?). If the polls are to be trusted (and these days, that is a huge IF), we are looking at a Dem full house. Biden could go down as a generational president, like FDR, etc., but only if he thinks about the post-millennial generation and the future, given the amount of problems we have in the world today generated by the rampant environmental destruction from capitalism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 10:36 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

PeterC said:

If you want to do a procedural / situational drama, it's a convenient setting. What's a bit annoying is how it creates a public mythology of What Police Do which is completely detached from what they actually do. The Wire was realistic in that it focused on the incompetence and politics in the police. Rarely do you see television focusing on the other unpleasant aspects of it.

Queequeg said:

Well, real cop work doesn't make for such great drama.

Malcolm wrote:

The other problem is that police departments regularly exclude people who are intelligent, because they are afraid intelligent people will not like the boredom of being a patrolman. There was a case in Boston where a guy was basically refused a job with the Boston Police department because his scores were too high and he did too well at police academy.

Everyone I know from high school who became a cop was either a bully or a quiet sociopath.

Which brings up another point -- psych evaluations and epidemiological studies on police violence as well as gun violence in general—— both of which the CDC (now being run by a quack) is forbidden by law from studying.

And weed, got to stop arresting black and brown people for weed-- need to legalize it, and decriminalize all drugs. The militarization of the police is directly linked to war on drugs, which we never were going to win (which everyone always knew).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 10:46 PM

Title: Re: A Fundamental Practice?

Content:

Ayu said:

Meditation on emptiness is practiced in Vajrayana.

Queequeg said:

Is it really meditation on emptiness though? I stand by my comments about making emptiness an object is mistaken and impossible.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a common criticism of the Gelugpa approach from Sakyapas, Kagyupas, and Nyingmapas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 10:47 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You might change your mind if you watched it. But it is true that's police shows are the most popular shows in US.

Sādhaka said:

Like I said earlier in this thread, I've no idea if this is whole thing is an setup or not; but I could never stand all those cop, hospital, & crime shows on tv all the time. I always saw them as the epitome of sheeple entertainment.

tkp67 said:

IMHO reality tv "stuck" and became a very attractive model for producers because no writers, no actors, no unions, etc means far lower costs.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and they led to Donald Trump.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 10:49 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Norwegian said:

The system needs to change in the US, raise the level of qualification, change their tasks, let them actually embody the "protect and serve" ideal, instead of being the opposite.

Malcolm wrote:

"Protect and serve" never meant the community. It instead has always meant protect and serve capitalist interests.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 10:58 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

tkp67 said:

IMHO reality tv "stuck" and became a very attractive model for producers because no writers, no actors, no unions, etc means far lower costs.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and they led to Donald Trump.

tkp67 said:

Collective, cooperative ignorance driven by the desire known as greed starring as the man behind the curtain and Trump chooses to be star of the show.

The lack of shame is not comprehensible for me on a personal level. I can understand desire for power, wealth and even the greed. The psychopathic capacity to not give !$*# is beyond me.

Thankfully.

Malcolm wrote:

It was a fluke. The man only won by 77k votes, and would not have won if not for Comey.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 11:07 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Queequeg said:

Drug addiction would need to then be treated as a medical condition.

Malcolm wrote:

There will always be a portion of the population that prefers to be medicated, self and otherwise. Much of the problem is that we have super-opiates like fentanyl, and the even stronger carfentinil, which are sold as junk or mixed with it, causing a lot of deaths. Heroin addiction by itself is a very manageable, as long as dope is easy to get and not too expensive. In fact, the withdrawals symptoms of heroin never killed anyone, unlike alcohol detox, barbiturate withdrawal, etc.

Cocaine is also super-bad news, as is meth, but efforts to curb these drugs clearly are not working. So, decriminalize them too.

Then there is the Marijuana maintenance plan for alcoholics...

And to the person who will object that this is a Buddhist website and what about the fifth precept...we are not necessarily talking about Buddhists here, and even that is flexible. No one is required to follow the fifth precept.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 11:54 PM

Title: Re: Genealogy of Ngondro

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Says who?

Malcolm wrote:

The Indian commentaries on the sadhanas that derive from that class of tantras, Guhyasamaja, etc. Then of course there are Dzogchen tantras like the Klong gsal tantra, which has entire chapters on the separate ngondro practices, refuge through guru yoga, and beyond.

Crazywisdom said:

IIRC Kalachakra discusses these preliminaries as well.

Malcolm wrote:

Most certainly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 17th, 2020 at 11:59 PM

Title: Re: Murdoch on 2020 election

Content:

Dan74 said:

No, I couldn't bring myself to vote for him, had I been a US citizen. As to what is the lesser evil in the long term, who can tell...

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a lesser evil sort of thing. Biden will have to cope with a energized left and a pissed-off right (but when is the right anything but pissed off?). If the polls are to be trusted (and these days, that is a huge IF), we are looking at a Dem full house. Biden could go down as a generational president, like FDR, etc., but only if he thinks about the post-millennial generation and the future, given the amount of problems we have in the world today generated by the rampant environmental destruction from capitalism.

Dan74 said:

Every now and then, a leader offers surprises (think Gorbachev). Is Joe Biden such a leader? One can only hope..

Malcolm wrote:

I have no idea, and less expectation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 18th, 2020 at 12:00 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

tkp67 said:

Collective, cooperative ignorance driven by the desire known as greed starring as the man behind the curtain and Trump chooses to be star of the show.

The lack of shame is not comprehensible for me on a personal level. I can understand desire for power, wealth and even the greed. The psychopathic capacity to not give !$*# is beyond me.

Thankfully.

Malcolm wrote:

It was a fluke. The man only won by 77k votes, and would not have won if not for Comey.

tkp67 said:

TBH I think it was a perfect storm of voter apathy and manipulation enabled by real time connectivity. The latter is exponentially more entrenched into our beings, senses and all as time passes.

Facebook isn't even 20 years old yet.

Remember military put most tech on the map years after it discovered it so there is a segment of society that is well poised to exploit changes for geopolitical motivations.

Everything is happening so fast but seems so natural, quite intoxicating to many.

Malcolm wrote:

Comey. If that man had not done his October Surprise, well, HRC would be looking at her second term in a landslide.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 18th, 2020 at 12:24 AM

Title: Re: A Fundamental Practice?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is a common criticism of the Gelugpa approach from Sakyapas, Kagyupas, and Nyingmapas.

Queequeg said:

Oh. I didn't mean to step into that. LOL

Ayu said:

And I didn't know about that. I thought 'Now I say something nobody can argue.'
Well, that's how things are running here.

For me, meditating on emptiness doesn't feel to be impossible.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, that is what polemical debate is for: questioning our assumptions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 18th, 2020 at 1:01 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Queequeg said:

Anyway, bringing this back to the discussion above - I think there's more to the whole Cop show entertainment. Its cops, but its also robbers - cops and robbers, good guys and bad guys.

Malcolm wrote:

I got busted once for tagging. The cop who arrested us then went into a long spiel about how, when he was a kid, he used to be a numbers runner in the South End of Boston.

Then of course, in Northampton, MA, in 1977, the police were breaking into stores and answering their own calls.

Cops and robbers indeed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 18th, 2020 at 3:57 AM

Title: Re: Pilgrimage to Bodhgaya

Content:

avatamsaka3 said:

OK, thanks.

Malcolm wrote:

Tibetans lost track of Bodhgaya after the 13th century, and after some time, until the late nineteenth century, were making pilgrimages to places in Assam that they (erroneously) identified as Magadha. Toni Huber has written an entire book on this subject.

Bodhgaya was completely lost to all Buddhists, other than the Burmese, until it was "rediscovered" in the late 19th century. After that, Tibetans began to visit the site.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 18th, 2020 at 4:16 AM

Title: Re: Interview with Co-Founder of Esalen

Content:

Wayfarer said:

There's nothing in the coverage I've read about Esalen being sold, although there's plenty of stories about it catering to the Silicon Valley technorati.

I've only ever read a couple of articles by Jeffrey Kipal. Information about his book on Esalen is https://www.google.com/search?q=esalen+america+and+the+religion+of+no+religion&rlz=1C9BKJA_enAU721AU730&oq=religion+of+no+religion+&aqs=chrome.2.69i57j0l2.5816j0j7&hl=en-GB&sourceid=chrome-mobile&ie=UTF-8.

Malcolm wrote:

I was misinformed. It was not sold, but in 2017 they hired a new executive director, who changed their direction.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 18th, 2020 at 5:38 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 18th, 2020 at 10:16 PM

Title: Re: The Wire and other TV/Movies - From After the Protests

Content:

tobes said:

The Wire is so good. It just completely nails so much, so well.

Although interestingly I read a (minor) critique by David Harvey who did a lot of his political-anthropological work in Baltimore whilst also being involved in various political projects. His critique was: things did get better (through action). i.e. The Wire is a touch too pessimistic about the possibility of progress.

Malcolm wrote:

The pessimism of The Wire is justified. Baltimore is still a mess.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 18th, 2020 at 10:23 PM

Title: Re: A Fundamental Practice?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Is it really meditation on emptiness though? I stand by my comments about making emptiness an object is mistaken and impossible.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a common criticism of the Gelugpa approach from Sakyapas, Kagyupas, and Nyingmapas.

cloudburst said:

From the conventional point of view, it is appropriate to say that the meditative equipoise of superiors takes emptiness as an object, at least according to Gelugpas and Nyingmapas.

Malcolm wrote:

Which Nyingmapa?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 18th, 2020 at 10:24 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Queequeg said:

I'm not entirely on board with Willink's arguments...

Malcolm wrote:

He lost me at his garbled attempt to defend chokeholds.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 18th, 2020 at 10:29 PM

Title: Re: Yantra Yoga

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Lungsang is like # 3 or 4 in the sequence on the dvd, if I recall. This is why I am asking, can one just do the Lunsang...

Malcolm wrote:

The eight movements can be practiced by themselves. In fact, Fabio has said many times, the eight movements and prāṇayāma are all one needs.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 18th, 2020 at 10:30 PM

Title: Re: Murdoch on 2020 election

Content:

PeterC said:

It's really simple. Biden could be a geriatric monkey with dementia, but he'd still have a less corrupt and more effective administration than Trump...Unfortunately we will have to keep reminding people of that right up to the day itself.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 18th, 2020 at 10:44 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Queequeg said:

I'm not entirely on board with Willink's arguments...

Malcolm wrote:

He lost me at his garbled attempt to defend chokeholds.

PeterC said:

I would trust him to apply them safely as he has a lifetime of training and a black belt in jujitsu. But that's very different from saying you could safely train every policeman in the country to apply them just as safely. And applied incorrectly they will lead to brain damage and death.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, his defense of them was garbled. His approach too would simply increase police militarization.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 12:11 AM

Title: Re: A Fundamental Practice?

Content:

cloudburst said:

From the conventional point of view, it is appropriate to say that the meditative equipoise of superiors takes emptiness as an object, at least according to Gelugpas and Nyingmapas.

Malcolm wrote:

Which Nyingmapa?

cloudburst said:

Patrul, Mipham

Malcolm wrote:

Source?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 12:18 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I have no words:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 1:27 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, his defense of them was garbled. His approach too would simply increase police militarization.

Grigoris said:

Jocko is a hyper-masculine, might-is-right, you-against-the-rest-of-the-world meathead that thinks that Navy Seal Training is the height of culture. Rogan is a steroid-addicted pothead, ex-UFC announcer, that gets the majority of the information for his podcasts from Google searches.

You would have to be seriously deluded to expect to get nuanced and intelligent analysis from the meeting of those two minds.

You would be better off looking to Jordan Peterson for life coaching tips, and that says a lot.

Malcolm wrote:

I never watch Joe Rogan. Never heard of the other guy until that video.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 2:08 AM

Title: Re: When reading a Tantra

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

Hi,

i would like to ask ¿is the reading of Tantra is like the reading of Sutra? in particular ¿is it is good to pronounce it?

Secrecy demands the question.

usually i read and pronounce alone in my room.

cheers!

Malcolm wrote:

Silent reading is relatively modern phenomena.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 2:18 AM

Title: Re: A Fundamental Practice?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Source?

cloudburst said:

The Wisdom Chapter: Jamgon Mipham's commentary on the ninth Chapter of the Way of the Bodhisattva\

From the conventional point of view, we can say that the meditative equipoise of the Aryas is the subject and the Dharmadhātu is the object. And it is on such a basis that the Dharmadhātu can be considered an object of knowledge. It is quite acceptable to speak in such terms

Malcolm wrote:

This does not mean one is taking emptiness as a conceptual object. One is not meditating on the concept "this is the dharmadhātu" or "this is emptiness."

cloudburst said:

Now, when it is said that the Dharmata or the ultimate nature is not an object of knowledge, this means that since the dharmata transcends all conceptual constructs, it is not conceivable.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, dharmatā is not a conceptual object. One does not meditate on the concept, "this is dharmatā."

cloudburst said:

Now, if the ultimate is not even the object of an Arya's mind, it would make no sense that it is through focusing on the ultimate that all the qualities of elimination and realization occur. If it is not cognized by the meditation of Aryas, this meditation ceases to be the subject that cognizes the Dharmadhatu.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, but this is not a meditation on a concept, "this is emptiness."

The fault of which Gorampa, as well as Mipham etc., accuse Gelugpas is the assertion that it is appropriate to meditate on a conceptualized emptiness below the path of seeing.

Thus, your assertion that this Nyingmapa holds that it is proper to meditate on emptiness as a conceptual object is mistaken.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 2:24 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I have no words:

Grigoris said:

Somebody give that cop a donut! Quickly!

Caoimhghín said:

Actually, Grigoris, if you'd bother to think things through and do some basic research, you would find that she was coming off a night shift, and they would have been serving breakfast, and McDonald's doesn't have doughnuts on its breakfast menu, let alone their lunch menu, fool! This fundamental lack concern about the facts of the case and unwillingness to engage in even the barest of efforts to inform yourself means that now I can't trust you, and anything you have to say about race and class is now suspect, and I can continue to advocate any conservative bullshit that comes to my mind and not concern myself with engaging with any responses from you.

Malcolm wrote:

But Greg did not say that McDonald's served donuts, he merely recommended she be handed one, as fast as possible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 2:38 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

But Greg did not say that McDonald's served donuts, he merely recommended she be handed one, as fast as possible.

Caoimhghín said:

And you don't think that it was the McDonald's staff, those poor working-class waifs, that were being ordered, rhetorically as it may be, to give her a doughnut?

Malcolm wrote:

Um, no...

Caoimhghín said:

Greg as a typical liberal gave us so little context to his statements that we could also call them careless, stereotyping, and potentially libellous. He needs to be careful when he speaks, because if that's what it meant, it was so careless it verged on chauvinist.

Malcolm wrote:

Greg isn't a liberal, no matter how you define the term.

Caoimhghín said:

I'm committed to this.

Malcolm wrote:

We all have our cross to bear.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 3:06 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

Ah, now you, Malcolm, in your liberal hubris, claim to define terms for us from your ivory tower we've no evidence you live in. Keep your crosses to bear, for Jesus has no place in the hearts of Buddhists with right libertarian view.

Right view is right view.

Malcolm wrote:

No, I said you couldn't define greg as a liberal, however you define the term. The proper ironic response is to castigated me for defining greg without his permission.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 3:12 AM

Title: Re: Practice question

Content:

Rick said:

Now that we're talking about practice, might as well ask:

What is the goal of practice?

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on your motivation. But, simply put, it's purpose is 1) freedom, eradicating the traces that cause birth in samsara 2) and omniscience, the state that characterizes buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 3:24 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Dan74 said:

I have no idea wtf you are about, C. I see no reason to ridicule her. She says so herself that she is filled with anxiety and too nervous to take a meal, even though she is hungry. I don't know what she's been through and don't find people's mental health struggles funny.

Or blonde female cops are good fodder for whatever nastiness we need to project right now? Is that it??

Caoimhghín said:

This video is being used for political purposes. Now you've made me drop my sock-puppet. Alas. And it was my favourite.

Dan74 said:

Yeah, clicking on twitter, it looks like it was. Basically this woman, who is clearly struggling, was pleading for some understanding for the cops and what she is getting is ridicule. Might lead her to the same kind of place that your aunt was in. And we, Dharma practitioners, rejoice in that..?

Malcolm wrote:

The woman is a racist. She had absolutely no reason to suspect that her food was being tampered with.

The anxiety she feels from doing her job is nothing like the anxiety black, brown, and native people in this country experience just going to the store. Your privilege is showing again, Dan. XYZ.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 3:32 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

tkp67 said:

Seeing things empty in all directions and times still leaves plenty of meat on the bones of banal conversation regardless of how flowery the verbiage. For example. That cop video is a perfect example of an ignorant sentient being who is unaware of their own ignorance. Underneath that she is pure. Yes she appears shallow but that is a reflection the realms she is trapped in.

Yes we can make the case from either side of her distress, as a companion or as an antagonist but this is still just the view of a person adhering to the paradigm of their own mind's creation. Perfect for evaluation from any realm but most productive from the perspective of buddhist realms (if we get past the samaric ones).

Both cops and poor minorities are pitted against each other in this oligarchy's game of thrones.

Malcolm wrote:

The difference is that the cops are the instruments of the oligarchs.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 4:00 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

We don't need to get personal. What's with this sudden Dan-hating?

I'm finished being sarcastic. This post isn't.

Norwegian said:

Dan is complaining that we aren't compassionate enough towards her. And I think that is a misplaced complaint. That is all. I think it's out of place to say something like this, considering everything that is going on right now.

Caoimhghín said:

Fair enough. Maybe this is just a cultural difference then. Here, where I am, to call out why we might needn't be compassionate toward her is a fine business, but once we name names, it's personal.

Also, we need be compassionate towards her, but for the right reasons.

Malcolm wrote:

No one said we should not be compassionate towards her. Compassion and sympathy are two different things.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 4:01 AM

Title: Re: Practice question

Content:

Rick said:

Now that we're talking about practice, might as well ask:

What is the goal of practice?

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on your motivation. But, simply put, it's purpose is 1) freedom, eradicating the traces that cause birth in samsara 2) and omniscience, the state that characterizes buddhahood.

Rick said:

The goal of practice is enlightenment? And without practice, enlightenment is not in the cards, no matter how deep one's understanding?

Malcolm wrote:

Some people wake up through pure understanding, with no practice at all.

Other people have to make a little more effort.

But what is the purpose of waking up? It's purpose is 1) freedom, eradicating the traces that cause birth in samsara 2) and omniscience, the state that characterizes buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 4:02 AM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche prayers that may be recited without Oral Transmission?

Content:

The Mantra Mongoose said:

Hey Guys,

Recently, I've been drawn to Guru Rinpoche and different prayers to him. In particular the seven line prayer has been one of them due to it being talked about on the forum. I ended up memorizing the seven lined prayer and would like to memorize other prayers to Guru Rinpoche, but i wanted to know which prayers would be ok for a individual without transmission to recite? I would like to eventually receive transmission for all these prayers, but currently due to personal circumstance i may have to wait a while.

For example, is this prayer by Rigdzin Jigme Lingpa ok for everyone to recite if they wanted? i find it to be one of the most beautiful prayers I've seen and really would like to start reciting it if its ok. To Make the Tears Fall.pdf

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, of course you may.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 6:58 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

That video is freaking hilarious. I can't believe a serious discussion even ensued over it.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I thought so. And yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 6:58 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No one said we should not be compassionate towards her. Compassion and sympathy are two different things.

Caoimhghín said:

Tbh, I know these terms as synonyms. How do you know them?

Malcolm wrote:

Compassion, karuna, is the wish that another person be free of suffering and its causes; sympathy is a feeling of commiseration with another.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 10:01 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

PeterC said:

It's the "both sides" rhetorical tactic. "Look, people on our side are suffering too!

Perhaps your side has gone too far! We all need to calm down and be reasonable!"

What passes for public discourse these days is asinine. The guards at Auschwitz suffered. Doesn't mean they're the first people in Auschwitz we should be concerned about if we happened to turn up there with an army.

Johnny Dangerous said:

I'm really flabbergasted that anyone went to any length to defend the woman in this video. Seriously, "I don't feel safe about my Muffin because some McRuffian might spit in it".

How is there any kind of "debate" to be had about this?

tkp67 said:

Read the title Johnny

This isn't about her it is about apathy to police who are human and a small percentage represent active racism. Many are simply apathetic to racism which is a fabric of western society.

Malcolm wrote:

Apathy towards racism is racism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 10:43 AM

Title: Re: A Fundamental Practice?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The fault of which Gorampa, as well as Mipham etc., accuse Gelugpas is the assertion that it is appropriate to meditate on a conceptualized emptiness below the path of seeing.

cloudburst said:

This discussion on the table was your claim that "making emptiness an object is impossible" was a common criticism of the Gelugpa approach.

I gave an example with clear citations from a prominent Nyingmapa who explains that, with reference to Aryas, "It is quite acceptable to speak in such terms," meaning that there is no fault in discussing emptiness as an object.

so your claim that the fault being discussed is "that it is appropriate to meditate on a conceptualized emptiness below the path of seeing " is actually a red herring, although it could be an interesting conversation in itself.

I'll start ... Below the path of seeing, all meditation on emptiness is conceptual, by definition.

Malcolm wrote:

Thus, your assertion that this Nyingmapa holds that it is proper to meditate on emptiness as a conceptual object is mistaken.

cloudburst said:

my assertion was that said Nyingmapa holds that

Cloudburst said:

From the conventional point of view, it is appropriate to say that the meditative equipoise of superiors takes emptiness as an object

cloudburst said:

which is exactly what he says

Mipham said:

From the conventional point of view, we can say that the meditative equipoise of the Aryas is the subject and the Dharmadhatu is the object.... It is quite acceptable to speak in such terms

Malcolm wrote:

You fail to understand the issue. Read Giorampa, then reread Mipham, especially on this point. You will see their position is the same.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 10:44 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

tkp67 said:

Read the title Johnny

This isn't about her it is about apathy to police who are human and a small percentage represent active racism. Many are simply apathetic to racism which is a fabric of western society.

Malcolm wrote:

Apathy towards racism is racism.

tkp67 said:

Is is passive not active and is a different level of ignorance. These people will fall in line with the lowest common denominator but they won't set the bar that low themselves.

Malcolm wrote:

It's still racism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 9:49 PM

Title: Re: Bernie 2020

Content:

Fa Dao said:

It was the DNC and Hillary that screwed Bernie in 2016, and again the DNC in 2020..Trump, for once, had nothing to do with it

Malcolm wrote:

Nah, the DNC didn't screw Sanders this time, he just didn't get the votes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 10:39 PM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.tiktok.com/@joegotti96/video/6821575139763834118>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 10:56 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

You can get upset about this portrayal of her, but (for instance) black people (and especially poor young black men who fill the jails and prisons) face far worse portrayals in social media and other media all the time. This lady being made fun of for her cringey moment is small potatoes, and honestly is a good portrait of privilege, both in terms of the racial angle and the cop one. I don't wanna dwell on it, but I have to admit it is funny to me. This person needs to wake the F up.

Manjushri said:

Personally, to make fun of one person while suffering is a bit unseemly. One may argue she might be deluded or childish in regards to her groundless conjecture as a source for her anxiety. Still, I find it distasteful to ridicule her to this extent. Children and mental patients often suffer due to imaginary subjects, but not many people would find it reasonable to ridicule them, I suppose. Wouldn't it be a more effective pedagogical and humane approach to dispel their ignorance by attempting to guide them through with compassion?

Malcolm wrote:

She is neither a child nor a patient in psychiatric hospital. She is a heavily-armed LEO having a meltdown over an egg sandwich she chose not to wait for. Right now, in the US, the police are not very popular because they engage in a lot of explicitly racist violence or are summoned by other racist white people to prosecute their racism with the power of the state. However, Officer McMuffin's anxiety is nothing compared to this: Clarice Middleton shook with fear as she stood on the sidewalk outside a Wells Fargo branch in Atlanta one December morning in 2018. Moments earlier, she had tried to cash a $200 check, only to be accused of fraud by three branch employees, who then called 911.

Ms. Middleton, who is black, remembers thinking: "I don't want to die."

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/06/18/business/banks-black-customers-racism.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 11:00 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

DharmaN00b said:

^ ^ good post.

My friend and I used to have so much fun and laughter. Now whenever I see him we just end up getting hammered and talking politics.

It never ends well. We rarely see each other anymore.

On here you never know anyone's background. Sometimes they've had a stressful day, and everyone is stressed at the moment. It is hard to stay grounded

Malcolm wrote:

These times are not much fun for anybody.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 11:22 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

She is neither a child nor a patient in psychiatric hospital. She is a heavily-armed LEO having a meltdown over an egg sandwich she chose not to wait for.

Manjushri said:

She is a sentient being suffering due to ignorance and regardless of her clothing, skin colour or work branch, she deserves compassion.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but not necessarily sympathy, as I explained above. And frankly, you are here bordering on the racist slogan, "all lives matter." Not surprising, considering you deny that there is systemic racism in Europe.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 11:28 PM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche prayers that may be recited without Oral Transmission?

Content:

The Mantra Mongoose said:

Thanks Malcom,

are there any other prayers to Guru Rinpoche you would recommend? Im currently also looking at the prayer in seven chapters with refuge, bodichitta cultivation, and the seven branch prayer that is associated with it. It has a forward facing visualization of Guru Rinpoche, and im not sure if i would be permitted to practice it without instruction. I'm really just trying to find were the cut off line is as i dont want to practice or pray anything frivolously without knowing if there are any empowerments needed, commitments or vows that are expected to be followed.

With me not haveing a really firm foundation in Tibetan Buddhism or a guru i would rather be studious about these things without throwing caution to the wind, and merely practiceing whaever sparks my fancy. I remember reading your posts regarding initiations that engaging in certain practises without empowerment will only burn through merit being worst than useless because of not being properly brought into the mandala of a practice with its empowerments. So i guess i would rather be safe then sorry hence the caution lol.

Malcolm wrote:

Barchey lamsel, the six line version. Three Kaya Guru know as Lama Kusum, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 19th, 2020 at 11:59 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Manjushri said:

She is a sentient being suffering due to ignorance and regardless of her clothing, skin colour or work branch, she deserves compassion.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but not necessarily sympathy, as I explained above. And frankly, you are here bordering on the racist slogan, "all lives matter." Not surprising, considering you deny that there is systemic racism in Europe.

Manjushri said:

Interesting. So I guess Bodhicitta is now a borderline racist concept. Guess that's the natural extension of a black and white weltanschauung. Not surprising, considering you already previously labelled my concern with all beings as "hand-wringing".

Malcolm wrote:

Kumbaya "bodhicitta" can certainly be construed as racist, if it equivocates the anxiety of a white police officer who melts down over an egg sandwich she will never eat with the anxiety of a black women who fears she is going to be shot when three white bank employees accuse her of fraud and call 911, so yeah.

In any case, compassion and bodhicitta are not the same thing.

Moreover, this "black and white weltanschauung" assumes the notion of color-blindness, which is equally racist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 12:01 AM

Title: Re: Bernie 2020

Content:

Fa Dao said:

It was the DNC and Hillary that screwed Bernie in 2016, and again the DNC in 2020..Trump, for once, had nothing to do with it

Malcolm wrote:

Nah, the DNC didn't screw Sanders this time, he just didn't get the votes.

Fa Dao said:

Maybe not this time but definitely in 2016..at a time when he was the only one who could have beat Trump.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, he got screwed.

Fa Dao said:

There was no way Hillary was going to win...

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, she would have won, but for Comey. And she did in fact win the popular vote, which means that 4 million more people voted for her than Herr Trump.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 12:02 AM

Title: Re: A Fundamental Practice?

Content:

cloudburst said:

Not much of an argument, to be honest.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't have time to type things out that you can easily read.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 12:35 AM

Title: Get a clew

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.quickanddirtytips.com/education/grammar/clue-or-clew>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 1:05 AM

Title: Re: Practice question

Content:

Rick said:

Translating "'eradicating the traces that cause birth in samsara'" to "removing the causes of perpetual dissatisfaction" is clear and afaik correct.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is not what that means.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 1:05 AM

Title: Re: Practice question

Content:

Rick said:

If I might continue this a bit ...

How would you translate 'eradicating the traces that cause birth in samsara' into non-Buddhist terms? Or can't that be done, does it have no meaning outside of the Buddhist context?

Same for 'omniscience.'

Malcolm wrote:

Can't be done.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 1:06 AM

Title: Re: Practice question

Content:

Rick said:

But I still don't get what 'omniscient' means. At first I thought it meant all-knowing, like God. And "able to react appropriately and spontaneously to each and every event" might be a description of what an omniscient person can do, but it doesn't say much about what omniscient actually means. What does an omniscient Buddha know: the true nature of reality, the vector of each particle-wave, all events in all locations in all times?

Malcolm wrote:

Fundamentally, omniscience in the Buddhist context means knowing everything there is to know about all paths of liberation of śrāvaka arhats, pratyekabuddhas, and buddhas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Grigoris said:

Pandering to her self-centred sense of entitlement is not going to help her either. It will just reinforce her already awful behaviour.

When I go to a restaurant I don't have to worry about getting an extra serving of McMucus in my sandwich...

Malcolm wrote:

She didn't either.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 1:16 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Kumbaya "bodhicitta" can certainly be construed as racist.

Manjushri said:

No true scotsman.

Malcolm wrote:

Um no. You are misapplying the fallacy here.

In any case, compassion and bodhicitta are not the same thing.

Straw man.

Another fallacy misapplied.

Moreover, this "black and white weltanschauung" assumes the notion of color-blindness, which is equally racist.

You said it, not me.
I don't pretend to be color-blind, never have.

May the pain of every living creature
Be completely cleared away.
Yup, but Officer McMuffin still does not have my sympathy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 1:26 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Grigoris said:

Pandering to her self-centred sense of entitlement is not going to help her either. It will just reinforce her already awful behaviour.

When I go to a restaurant I don't have to worry about getting an extra serving of McMucus in my sandwich...

Malcolm wrote:
She didn't either.

Grigoris said:

I didn't say she did, but she was certainly WORRIED that she did.

Malcolm wrote:

She was, but if she thought about for a half-second, she would realize that McDonald's employees these days are surveilled at work.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 1:32 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist intentional communities and communes

Content:

Shotenzenjin said:

I spent some time in various anarchist and anarcho-communist and anarcho-primativist communes in my time.

I'm curious if any buddhsit intentional communities or communes exist for lay practitioners?

If not then I'd like to have a discussion regarding planning and forming one.

Malcolm wrote:

It only works if people share the same practices. Dzogchen Community is by and large a nonresidential intentional community.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 1:36 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

She was, but if she thought about for a half-second, she would realize that McDonald's employees these days are surveilled at work.

Grigoris said:

We always were, 24/7 and that was back in the early '90's.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 1:57 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Manjushri said:

No true scotsman.

Malcolm wrote:

Um no. You are misapplying the fallacy here.

Manjushri said:

If it's kumbaya bodhicitta, it's not true bodhicitta.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, you are misapplying the fallacy.

Straw man.

Another fallacy misapplied.

Knocked down a misconstrued version of the argument. Never claimed it was the same thing, one implies the other.

No, you didn't knock down anything. You just misapplied another fallacy.

Then who's colour blind?

No one, actually. When people stop being racist, then at that point we can talk about going beyond skin color, but as long as black and brown people are met with gross racism in America and Europe, well...tell it to them:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 2:53 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, you are misapplying the fallacy.

Manjushri said:

A: Saying all lives matter is racist.

B: Bodhicitta says all lives matter and are worthy of compassion.

A: That's not true bodhicitta, that's kumbaya bodhicitta.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, you are misapplying the fallacy. You apparently do not understand the connotation of what "all lives matter" as a response to "black lives matter" entails. If you did, you wouldn't bother with the silly syllogism, which is deformed anyway. It should be:

A: The statement "all lives matter" is racist.

B: Bodhicitta states "all lives matter."

A: Bodhicitta is racist.

No, you didn't knock down anything. You just misapplied another fallacy.

Sigh... I was talking about you, not me.

Not my fault you misapplied the fallacy.

No one said there's no racism in Europe. It's simply not systemic. Obviously there is racism, hence the absurd and baffling rise of many despicable far-right parties.

Sadly, you are blind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 3:26 AM

Title: Re: practice withouth empowerment

Content:

RisingSunnyata said:

Hey guys, past few weeks i have been quite frightened with the idea permanently breaking my connection with vajrayana because of what i did. I have done a practice around 5 or 6 times of which i thought i had the empowerment and permission, but then discovered that i do not have it. Now i'm afraid i cannot practice vajrayana anymore and will go to Vajra Hell. I dont have a Vajrasattva empowerment, so i cant recite the 100 syllable mantra. Besides that, is there anyway that i cant ammend this?

Malcolm wrote:

Um, we all make mistakes. You realized you erred. relax, carry on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 3:32 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Manjushri said:

No one said there's no racism in Europe. It's simply not systemic.

Malcolm wrote:

Apparently the EU does not agree with you:

<https://fra.europa.eu/en/publication/2018/being-black-eu>

Manjushri said:

Racial discrimination and harassment are commonplace. Experiences with racist violence vary greatly across countries, but reach as high as 14 %. Discriminatory profiling by the police, too, is a common reality. Hurdles to inclusion are multi-faceted, with many respondents facing discrimination during their job search and when looking for housing.

Malcolm wrote:

This is precisely what systemic racism is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 3:58 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

...

Manjushri said:

Malcolm, repeating the same thing over and over again does not make it true. Re-read the previous messages, eventually it will come to you.

Malcolm wrote:

When people are not listening, then one must repeat oneself. You decided to take up cause of Officer McMuffin. You decided that her suffering was equivalent to the suffering of George Floyd, etc. I am just telling you it isn't.

Manjushri said:

Black lives matter indeed, I do agree with it. All sentient beings matter.

Malcolm wrote:

But in American and Europe, demonstrably, black lives do not matter as much as white lives.

Manjushri said:

Also, I didn't formulate a syllogism, I merely transcribed our assertions to a plainer dialogue between two speakers A and B.

Malcolm wrote:

Don't be so dishonest. Of course you formulated a syllogism.

Manjushri said:

I'm blind in your eyes. You are blind in mine. Amusingly enough, the results of our political compasses are practically identical.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't pretend that in Western Europe and America there isn't systemic racism. You pretend that Europe has overcome systemic racism. You are completely wrong. Our political compass will never be anywhere near identical as long as you insist there is no systemic racism in Europe. For as long as you insist there is no systemic racism in Europe, you are part of the problem.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 4:45 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Manjushri said:

I thought that systemic racism meant that racism was formally constituted in the laws, rules and guidelines of governments, companies and organizations. Perhaps this definition is incorrect and is the source of misunderstanding?

Malcolm wrote:

If this is what you thought, then I forgive you for your misunderstanding. Systemic a.k.a Structural Racism:

A system in which public policies, institutional practices, cultural representations, and other norms work in various, often reinforcing ways to perpetuate racial group inequity. It identifies dimensions of our history and culture that have allowed privileges associated with "whiteness" and disadvantages associated with "color" to endure and adapt over time. Structural racism is not something that a few people or institutions choose to practice. Instead it has been a feature of the social, economic and political systems in which we all exist.

<https://www.aspeninstitute.org/blog-posts/structural-racism-definition/>

Brexit, for example, is predicated on the structural or systemic racism which permeates UK culture.

One does not have to be racist to be a participant in systemic racism, one merely has to be a beneficiary of it. Western Europe and America are structurally racist due to the very workings of colonialism, capitalism, and imperialism, and all the benefits we as white people have gained from this historical set of circumstances.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 5:20 AM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche prayers that may be recited without Oral Transmission?

Content:

The Mantra Mongoose said:

Beautiful! Thank you

I'm glad you like it, and thank you everyone for your suggestions. I'll take a look at some of the other prayers that were posted. One last question about a group of prayers called "Le'u Dünma" along with The General Visualization for Prayers to Guru Rinpoche by Jamyang Khyentse Wangpo. Is this group of prayers with its visualization as a whole permitted for anyone to use or is there an empowerment needed? I'm more interested in the general visualization as it seems most prayers are ok as previously stated. I wasn't as clear in my last post about them so I wanted to link them here.

the visualization and cycle of prayers:Le'u Dünma Collection – LotsawaHouse.pdf

Malcolm wrote:

Generally, if you can get the lung, it is better, but these are standard prayers and you don't necessarily need a lung. The Seven Chapter prayer does not have an empowerment per se, but there is a section of it that does, the Sampa Lhundrupma, nevertheless, to recite this one does not need the lung, necessarily. But if you can get the lung, it is a little better.

However, for the JKW practice appended to this, you would need the lung for that. But it is easy to get.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 6:41 AM

Title: Re: Bernie 2020

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Maybe not this time but definitely in 2016..at a time when he was the only one who could have beat Trump. There was no way Hillary was going to win...she was the poster child for everything Bernie had railed against for 30+years..the majority of the country had simply had enough of establishment politics and partially for that reason Trump won. At the time Bernie wanted to limit illegal immigration to keep wages from sinking and spend money on the infrastructure to create good paying jobs...so did Trump..that and that he got screwed by Hillary and the DNC was why a small % of Bernie voters voted Trump

PeterC said:

Trump won the electoral college due to a margin of fewer than a hundred thousand votes in three counties, and lost the popular vote conclusively. That was after the help of James Comey reopening a federal investigation into Clinton during the election as a publicity stunt. Yes Clinton was the wrong candidate, Sanders would have won. But It's wrong to believe that Clinton was doomed. She had a very good chance of winning.

Fa Dao said:

Naw man..he won 306 to 232 electoral votes..thats not a slim margin..this is a democratic republic, the popular vote doesnt matter..she knew that going in..to cry foul afterwards is just sour grapes...there was a whole lot of old school liberal working class democrats just like me who simply couldnt vote for her...and it was Bernie who woke a lot of us up to the fact that she was the poster child for establishment corrupt politics

Malcolm wrote:

Which means a lot of people by proxy elected this rabid clown, including you, because you all allowed irrational bias to get the better of your common sense, and allowed someone who was in no way qualified to be president to be elected president. What the 2016 election proved is that are a lot racist and sexist people in this country whose thinking is unclear. The argument that Bernie exposed DNC corruption is nonsense. No one who has been paying attention was up under any illusion that the party nomination process is not rigged from the start, in general. But I guess people got tired of winning under Obama's policies, and decided to back a total loser, DJT.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 6:51 AM

Title: Re: Giving Up Masturbation

Content:

krish5 said:

Thank you for your input. So basically most are saying the positives of sex/masturbation, in moderation, outweighs celibacy and abstinence for non monastics like myself.

Sādhaka said:

I wouldn't frame it: "sex/masturbation" though. Two totally different ballgames (pun not originally intended, but I'll roll with it).

Many things that the NoFap movement says about porn and how it divorces the mind & body from reality, are true. Not to put any sanctimonious moral judgement on it, it's just that it seems that the science shows how pmo (porn masturbation orgasm) has little to no benefit.

For example, from what I've read studies have shown that masturbation does not increase testosterone, whereas actual sex does increase testosterone in men.

krish5 said:

Thank you. This is a embarrassing thread, and just trying to keep it sounding somewhat normal, natural, lol. Porn is not healthy, agreed.

Malcolm wrote:

IDK, compared to Philosophy in the Bedroom or 120 Days of Sodom by De Sade, or Story of the Eye by Bataille, today's porn is pretty vanilla. If anything, it is not content that is problematical, but the lack of regulation as well as the kind of exploitation that women suffer in the Porn industry that is an issue.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 7:00 AM

Title: Re: Giving Up Masturbation

Content:

Wayfarer said:

And also if traditional Buddhists speak up against liberal moral views, it doesn't necessarily go well for them.

Malcolm wrote:

.

But we see again and again, people who claim to be against porn, abortion, drugs, and so on, are total hypocrites.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 8:28 AM

Title: Re: Giving Up Masturbation

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Then of course there is the "hand" mudra in Vajrayana practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 8:40 AM

Title: Re: Bernie 2020

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Naw man..he won 306 to 232 electoral votes..thats not a slim margin..this is a democratic republic, the popular vote doesnt matter..she knew that going in..to cry foul afterwards is just sour grapes...there was a whole lot of old school liberal working class democrats just like me who simply couldnt vote for her...and it was Bernie who woke a lot of us up to the fact that she was the poster child for establishment corrupt politics

Malcolm wrote:

Which means a lot of people by proxy elected this rabid clown, including you, because you all allowed irrational bias to get the better of your common sense, and allowed someone who was in no way qualified to be president to be elected president. What the 2016 election proved is that there are a lot of racist and sexist people in this country whose thinking is unclear. The argument that Bernie exposed DNC corruption is nonsense. No one who has been paying attention was up under any illusion that the party nomination process is not rigged from the start, in general. But I guess people got tired of winning under Obama's policies, and decided to back a total loser, DJT.

Fa Dao said:

Oh I see..so instead of the DNC learning its lesson from the last time we were asked to "hold our nose" and vote for Hillary they give us Biden as a response...seriously?? Screw that!! I will probably be sitting this one out as well until they give us someone we can stand behind and not be embarrassed by..Biden is Hillary lite with dementia...

Malcolm wrote:

This kind of thinking is precisely the same sort of thinking that elected Trump last time. Emotional, and not based in a cold, rational, assessment of the facts before us. But it's a free country and I cannot tell you what to do when you vote. But I can sure hold you responsible if you make a poor choice. The stakes are different, and have been for some time, which is why I was telling all of you Trump is fascist way back in 2015.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 8:49 AM

Title: Re: Bernie 2020

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

And I would rather have a Completely-demented Biden as president than the shitshow we have in office today. If you don't agree, well, what can I say. May be it boils down to the fact that you like guns and I would cancel the second amendment because it's obsolete and harmful.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 8:58 AM

Title: Re: Giving Up Masturbation

Content:

Wayfarer said:

I respect your scholarship but I don't agree at all with your libertarian social views, nor do I think they should be conflated.

Malcolm wrote:

Um...that should be libertine, not libertarian. Obscenity laws crashed and burned on Naked Lunch, as they should have.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 9:23 AM

Title: Re: Bernie 2020

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

And I would rather have a Completely-demented Biden as president than the shitshow we have in office today. If you don't agree, well, what can I say. May be it boils down to the fact that you like guns and I would cancel the second amendment because it's obsolete and harmful.

Fa Dao said:

I dont like guns anymore than I like a hammer or screwdriver..a useful tool..nothing more, nothing less...easy to be antigun when you live in a rural setting..especially useful now that the national conversation has come to defunding the police...go live in Baltimore, NYC, or L.A. for a couple of years then get back to me....so, respectfully agree to disagree..

Malcolm wrote:

I lived in Boston for years, never felt like I needed a gun once. Not even in Roxbury, Dorchester, East Boston or any high crime area of Boston. I didn't spend my entire life in the country. And no, it's not cause the police in Boston were super effective.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 9:35 AM

Title: Re: Bernie 2020

Content:

Fa Dao said:

I dont like guns anymore than I like a hammer or screwdriver..a useful tool..nothing more, nothing less...easy to be antigun when you live in a rural setting..especially useful now that the national conversation has come to defunding the police...go live in Baltimore, NYC, or L.A. for a couple of years then get back to me....so, respectfully agree to disagree..

Malcolm wrote:

I lived in Boston for years, never felt like I needed a gun once. Not even in Roxbury, Dorchester, East Boston or any high crime area of Boston. I didn't spend my entire life in the country. And no, it's not cause the police in Boston were super effective.

Fa Dao said:

And thats one of the great things about the US..you can choose to not have one or to have one...the problem comes in when you try to make that choice for others..I firmly believe the US Constitution and Bill of Rights are the greatest political achievements mankind has had thus far...you obviously dont...and thats ok too..as I said...we can agree to disagree...

Malcolm wrote:

The constitution is amendable. Amendments can be withdrawn. Like Prohibition. The Bill of Rights themselves have been amended. The constitution is a mutable document, and it's structure allows, with some difficulty, it to be changed to meet modern challenges.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 9:42 AM

Title: Re: Giving Up Masturbation

Content:

Wayfarer said:

Whatever

Malcolm wrote:

You seem to think Buddhist morality is commensurate with some Victorian sensibility about love, passion, and so on. Well, no, it's just not that way. One of Buddha's most important disciples was a "working girl."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 20th, 2020 at 10:37 PM

Title: Re: Bernie 2020

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Naw man..he won 306 to 232 electoral votes..thats not a slim margin..this is a democratic republic, the popular vote doesnt matter..she knew that going in..to cry foul afterwards is just sour grapes...there was a whole lot of old school liberal working class democrats just like me who simply couldnt vote for her...and it was Bernie who woke a lot of us up to the fact that she was the poster child for establishment corrupt politics

PeterC said:

You don't really understand how the electoral college works, do you?

Fa Dao said:

Which part? the part where it takes 270 to win? The part where the founding fathers decided against a purely democratic society to keep the mob from controlling everything by using the popular vote? The part where each state has an equal say in the presidential election? The part where if we did try to go to the popular vote that California and NY would control all future presidential elections? I didnt like it either...but it was over 3 years ago..Trump won, Hillary lost..get over it and move on

Malcolm wrote:

The electoral college ensures that states with low, mostly rural populations have more influence in national elections than states with large, mostly urban populations. It is, as others here have pointed out, an institution rooted in slavery, like so much else in the US.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 21st, 2020 at 1:17 AM

Title: Re: Giving Up Masturbation

Content:

Wayfarer said:

Well, please explain to me, how the performance of sexual acts for an audience for the purposes of attracting either attention or money is not a violation of the precept of 'avoiding sexual misconduct'? How is it not?

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha nowhere mentions sex work as sexual misconduct. Independent, unmarried people are free to do as they wish. If people are in polyamorous relationships, they are also free, since it is all consensual.

As I pointed out, Āmrapālī was one of the Buddha's direct disciples, and he gave several teachings at her place while she was still working as a courtesan.

And, it is held in the Candamahārośana Tantra that the farm girl who restored the Buddha to health with rice milk was in fact his consort.

And in general, in Vajrayāna, sexual activity is taken into the path, not renounced or avoided. So yes, even porn stars can be good Buddhists if they choose.

Porn is like booze: every one watches it, everyone enjoys it in some form or another, and everyone complains it is "bad."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 21st, 2020 at 1:28 AM

Title: Black in America by David Gamble Jr.

Content:

Unknown said:

I grew up in Reno, Nevada.

In third grade a boy confidently tells me and my brother that his mom said black people cannot swim because our muscles are different than those of white people.

In middle school, standing among a group of white classmates talking video games, I am the only black child. One classmate expresses surprise that my family has enough money to afford a PlayStation.

In high school, I am the only black kid among a group of friends. When sharing drinks in my presence they frequently tell each other not to “niggerlip” the bottles. Even though I object, they continue to use the phrase.

In high school, my brother is at a teen house party that gets broken up by police, a common occurrence. The kids at the party scatter, also a common occurrence. My brother, the only black child in attendance, is the only one on whom a police officer draws a firearm to get him to stop running away. He is 14.

In high school, a group of my white friends frequently sneak on to the outdoor basketball courts at an athletic club to play. They can usually play for hours, including with club members. On the two occasions I attend, club members complain and we are ejected from the club within minutes.

In high school, I am excited about black history month and am talking to a friend about black inventors. My friend snorts and says, “Black people have never invented anything.”

In high school, as graduation approaches, many of my white friends tell me that I am lucky. They tell me that due to my skin color, I will get into any college I want.

I remain in Reno for college.

During college an employer keeps food for employees in the break room refrigerator. One morning I decided to have microwaveable chicken wings for breakfast. The employer tells me I might not want to eat that for breakfast with my skin color. The employer immediately apologizes.

In college I am standing in a group of white friends on campus. A white acquaintance of one of my friends approaches to chat. The acquaintance tells a story about something that frustrated him and then reels off a series of expletives ending with the word, “nigger.” None of my friends corrects him.

In college I visit an antique shop in Auburn, California with my girlfriend, who is white, and her parents. The shopkeeper follows me around the store whistling loudly as I browse, until we leave.

I move to San Diego, California for law school.

In law school, during a discussion in my criminal law class, a white classmate suggests that police officers should take a suspect’s race into account when determining whether there is reasonable suspicion to believe that an individual is committing a crime.

The weekend of my law school graduation my family comes to San Diego. I go to the mall with my brother and sister and visit the Burberry store. Two different employees follow us around the store – never speaking to us – until we leave.

After law school, I return to Reno.

A co-worker jokingly calls me “King David” upon seeing me each day. I joke that I’m not treated like a king. The co-worker then begins to call me “Slave David” each time we encounter one another. When I ask the co-worker to stop because it is hurtful, I am told by my co-worker that this is a problem that I have in my head.

I attend a pub crawl with friends. We end up at a party in a hotel suite in downtown Reno. I am greeted by a white man at the door who loudly expresses surprise that I am an “educated negro” upon hearing me speak.

I walk a friend who is a white woman from a restaurant to her car because it is night time. As we stand by the car chatting, a police officer pulls up and shines a light on us, asking if everything is okay. Once my friend confirms, the officer drives away. I tell her that he was worried about her, she teasingly says, “Oh yeah, because you’re so scary.” Later, I tell another white friend I felt racially profiled by the officer. My friend shrugs and says, “I don’t know man, that’s a stretch.”

A white friend tells me that white voters have become upset at black people because of black people’s liberal use of food welfare benefits. When I point out that more whites than blacks receive welfare benefits in the U.S., my friend expresses confusion at how that could be the case.

I leave a downtown restaurant with my wife. As we walk along the river a homeless man appears to be having a schizophrenic episode, engaging auditory hallucinations. Upon seeing me, he becomes lucid and begins to shout the word “nigger” over and over.

I discover that one of my clients does not want me to represent him as his Public Defender because he does not want a black attorney. I am given the option to withdraw as counsel. I do not.

Last year, I am at a barbecue chatting with a white acquaintance who asks if I have ever experienced racism. When I say it is a nearly daily occurrence, the acquaintance retorts, without missing a beat, “Bullshit.”

Two months ago. I am driving to lunch with the black teen I mentor. At a red light a white woman crosses the street. As I begin to drive, she turns around and screams at us, “Fk you fing nigger!”

Before any of these instances, my family of origin moved to Reno, Nevada from Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania in 1984.

My mother recently told me that when I was a very young child my parents hired a company to remove a tree from our front lawn. Two white men showed up and removed the tree. One of them carved a swastika into the stump. My father had to confront him and ask him to remove it.

Before that, my now 93 -year-old grandfather served in the Army National Guard and was stationed in the U.S. south. Despite being active duty, he was not allowed to eat in restaurants due to “whites only” signage. He had to wait for fellow Guardsmen to bring him food outside.

Not long before that, my family were slaves, owned by Americans of English and Irish descent, which is why – despite being primarily of African descent – I have an English last name.

This is my experience of being black in America. To be black in America is to be told over and over that you are not good enough, that you do not belong, that you are genetically unfit, that your physical presence is undesirable, and that everything about you – right down to your lips – is wrong. It is absolutely true that everyone experiences hardships in life, but the psychological weight of being told both explicitly and implicitly, on a daily basis, that your very existence is objectionable can at times feel unbearable.

And despite this experience, I still love my country, my state, and my city. Despite my experience, I would not choose to be anything other than a black American. The history of black people in this country is one of struggle and triumph. Our people were brought to this country as slaves and against all odds, in the face of seemingly insurmountable obstacles, have made our mark. Through slavery, poll taxes, literacy tests, redlining, and black codes we have persevered. Through the unspeakable horrors of mass lynchings; the Tuskegee syphilis experiments; and the massacres at Tulsa and Rosewood, we have persevered.

Bass Reeves, Dovey Johnson Roundtree, Sarah Boone, Oscar Micheaux, Shirley Chisholm, Dorie Miller, Susie King Taylor, Georgia Gilmore, Octavius Catto, Jack Johnson, Garrett Morgan, James W.C. Pennington. These are just a handful of extraordinary and oft forgotten black Americans who helped to mold and preserve the American Dream. These individuals and their accomplishments should not be regarded as “black history,” but rather as American history.

I am an American of privilege, which makes me an African American of great privilege. I am an attorney. I live in a safe neighborhood. My children do not worry about their next meal. I can afford child care. My family can afford personal vehicles. If my children become sick, I can take them to the doctor. If I am this privileged, and these have been my experiences, primarily in my own hometown, often with friends and acquaintances who are fond of me, and of whom I remain fond even now; just imagine what daily life must be like for a black person in this country who does not enjoy my level of privilege.

The protests in the streets of America are certainly about the killing of George Floyd, but not just about George Floyd. They are about countless black men, women, and children for whom the punishment did not fit the crime – if indeed there was a crime at all. We live in a country where, in order to recall what life under Jim Crow felt like, many white Americans must pick up a history book. Meanwhile, many black Americans need only pick up a telephone, and call their parents.

When we as people of color share our experiences, we are not doing so to score political points, “play the race card,” get sympathy, assign blame, or to make you feel bad about yourself. We are asking you for help. We are asking you to join us in the ongoing fight against racism in our country, because we cannot do it alone. It will take Americans of every stripe to eradicate racism from American society.

I am now asking for your help. Please seek truth and knowledge. When sharing information, please check your sources and make sure that they are reliable. Try to place what is happening today into a historical context. Read about systemic racism and anti-racism. When your friends of color tell you that racism is real and affecting their lives, believe them and then, if you can, do something about it.

My children are likely to attend the same middle school and high school that I did. It is my great hope for them that those around them have the knowledge, compassion, and guidance to know better than to daily deluge them with words that make them doubt their intelligence, their beauty, and their worth as human beings based only on the color of their skin; and instead judge them by the content of their character.

It is for all of the above reasons, and so many more that we proudly say #blacklivesmatter

Malcolm wrote:
<https://www.facebook.com/davidjgamblejr>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 21st, 2020 at 1:48 AM

Title: Re: A Fundamental Practice?

Content:

Ayu said:

Well, I was just saying... But no trouble. Carry on, if your opinion is that important to you.

Queequeg said:

Sorry, Ayu, this is one of those situations where its on you to explain this. My opinion only matters to me so long as it makes sense to me. I've defined, in a way that I think is pretty clear, what I mean. If you're attached to the phrasing that your school promulgates, despite it meaning something else, well... the devil is in the details.

Telling a newbie, "Meditate on emptiness", when you're actually talking about "meditating without an object", then I'm the one who's bad for pointing out the apparent inconsistency between these phrases?

Malcolm wrote:

In the Gelug school, meditation on emptiness is an analytical meditation which begins by searching for the inherent existence of a given thing. It is part of the vipaśyanā phase of their system. When this absence of inherent existence, aka emptiness, is discovered conceptually, the practitioner is supposed to cultivate this emptiness conceptually. One of the famed sequences of this sort of analytical meditation, as it is termed in Gelug, is the seven-fold deconstruction of a cart.

The Gelugpas make a very big deal over what Tsongkhapa termed, "identifying the object of negation." This involved identifying both a subtle as well as a coarse object of negation. The object of negation Tsongkhapa favored is the so-called subtle object of negation, inherent existence. The other object of negation is called the coarse objection of negation, existence, and so on, the so-called four extremes. Tsongkhapa does not like this approach, because he feels it involves an over-negation, and can harm conventional truth, and so on.

So when Gelugpas say they are meditating on emptiness, what they mean is that they are meditating on "the nonexistence of the true existence, which is the emptiness of inherent existence." This is also what it means for Gelugpas to say that it is proper to meditate on emptiness as a conceptual object, because they hold that this conceptualized emptiness, the absence of inherent existence, is functional simulacrum of the emptiness which is realized in an ārya's equipoise and leads to that realization when properly meditated upon.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 21st, 2020 at 3:04 AM

Title: Re: Giving Up Masturbation

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

everyone enjoys it in some form or another."

mirrormind said:

I quit porn when I could not bear anymore to see the empty eyes and the blank stare of the women involved. This realisation was very effective for me. Every once in a while I am tempted again, but each time it has the same effect on me. Compassion is definitely stronger than lust.

Malcolm wrote:

There are all kinds of porn, not all of it is found at Pornhub. These days, some people have turned making it into full time hobby. Like anything, it cannot be reduced to one monolithic entity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 21st, 2020 at 3:46 AM

Title: Re: Giving Up Masturbation

Content:

Tiago Simões said:

There are plenty of modern female porn directors who dedicate themselves to making ethical porn. Like Malcolm said, not all porn is the same.

Pornography is a cinematic art, and as such, actors might be abused and exploited, just like in any other cinematic industry. The standards of ethical treatment vary. It's important to evaluate the content you consume, If you are going to consume it. Make sure the platform you are using as a high standards, make sure the actors are well paid and not exploited.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, not all porn is cinematic either. You have porn novels, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 21st, 2020 at 6:21 AM

Title: Re: Giving Up Masturbation

Content:

Wayfarer said:

That vajrayana Buddhism was brought into a discussion about masturbation and pornography as a justification seems very sad to me.

Malcolm wrote:

Perhaps Vajrayana is more realistic about the human condition than renunciation-oriented forms of Buddhism. it's origin story, after all, involved an Indian king with 500 wives whom he was obligated to service, so the Buddha taught him a method where he would not have to abandon sense objects, but rather, employ them on the path.

“The fire of gnosis will not burn without the fuel of afflictions” — Garab Dorje.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 21st, 2020 at 6:25 AM

Title: Re: Giving Up Masturbation

Content:

Wayfarer said:

I think maybe this is the wrong forum for me, I am going to ask the mods to terminate my account for once and for all.

Malcolm wrote:

Don't be silly. There is certainly no reason for that. But, you are free.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 21st, 2020 at 6:53 AM

Title: Re: A Fundamental Practice?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

they hold that this conceptualized emptiness, the absence of inherent existence, is functional simulacrum of the emptiness which is realized in an ārya's equipoise and leads to that realization when properly meditated upon.

cloudburst said:

that's true. Even Mipham calls this the approximate or notational ultimate, depending on whose translation you like. For him it is not the REAL ultimate, but a "gateway to it."

I think same for the Dzogchen crowd and everyone else, but there are terminological disputes here.

Malcolm wrote:

Leaving aside your other comments for now, this is your error: you are claiming that the linguistically-formulated ultimate is an object of meditation for Nyingmapas. This is entirely false. A linguistically-formulated ultimate is not the ultimate free of proliferation to be realized, nor is it a proper object of meditation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 21st, 2020 at 7:57 AM

Title: Re: Bernie 2020

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Which part? the part where it takes 270 to win? The part where the founding fathers decided against a purely democratic society to keep the mob from controlling everything by using the popular vote? The part where each state has an equal say in the presidential election? The part where if we did try to go to the popular vote that California and NY would control all future presidential elections? I didnt like it either...but it was over 3 years ago..Trump won, Hillary lost..get over it and move on

Malcolm wrote:

The electoral college ensures that states with low, mostly rural populations have more influence in national elections than states with large, mostly urban populations. It is, as others here have pointed out, an institution rooted in slavery, like so much else in the US.

Fa Dao said:

So then you think its fair to take away any say in how our govt operates from all the people in rural areas and small towns across the US?

And here I was thinking that it was based on the founding fathers study of the ancient Greek ideas of a republic vs a pure democracy as found in the federalist papers and elsewhere in their writings and letters..

And of course I'm sure that if CA and NY were both predominantly red states you and all the others calling for the end of the electoral college would still be on board with that...

Malcolm wrote:

The founders were not infallible men, for example, writing into the the constitution that negro slaves counted as 3/5ths of a person for census counts, which of course skewed the number of legislative seats in the South. Madison points out that the thinking behind the EC was predicated precisely on the condition of Slavery in the South:

There was one difficulty however of a serious nature attending an immediate choice by the people. The right of suffrage was much more diffusive in the Northern than the Southern States; and the latter could have no influence in the election on the score of Negroes. The substitution of electors obviated this difficulty and seemed on the whole to be liable to the fewest objections.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/United_States_Electoral_College#Original_plan

All in all, a poor solution to accomodate the moral iniquity of Slavery in the Southern states. So forgive me if I insist that the electoral college is both obsolete and harmful to the Republic.

The fact that the last two Administrations who were elected solely on the basis of the electoral college were the two administrations most damaging to the US and our stature in the world should not even be necessary to mention.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 21st, 2020 at 10:13 AM

Title: Re: Sunyata and Nihilism

Content:

tkp67 said:

Compassion is taught before emptiness for a reason.

Malcolm wrote:

Not necessarily.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 21st, 2020 at 10:28 AM

Title: Re: Sunyata and Nihilism

Content:

tkp67 said:

Compassion is taught before emptiness for a reason.

Malcolm wrote:

Not necessarily.

tkp67 said:

Please my dear friend please tell me how this contribution is relevant? It escapes me.

Malcolm wrote:
Compassion does not have the power to liberate.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, June 21st, 2020 at 12:10 PM
Title: Re: Sunyata and Nihilism
Content:

tkp67 said:
Please my dear friend please tell me how this contribution is relevant? It escapes me.

Malcolm wrote:
Compassion does not have the power to liberate.

tkp67 said:
This isn't a thread about liberation via compassion. It is a thread about sunyata and nihilism.

.....

A tremendous amount of effort to put boundaries around the inclusion of compassion in a talk about Sunyata. I don't understand the benefit of that intention.

Malcolm wrote:
You made some claim about compassion as prerequisite to understanding emptiness in order forestall some imagined deviation into nihilism. Since recognizing the emptiness of phenomena is seeing reality, it is impossible that compassion will not arise, since one will automatically want all other sentient beings to see the same thing.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, June 23rd, 2020 at 1:43 AM
Title: Re: What is the link between Karuna and Yeshe
Content:

White Sakura said:
Karuna, is that the compassion that appears naturally if Yeshe (non-dual wisdom) is realized? Or is it called maha-karuna then?

What is the link between karuna and yeshe? Can they be seen as two facets of the same?

And in the six paramitas, is karuna implied in the paramita of wisdom?

Malcolm wrote:

Great compassion arises because the buddhas know that sentient beings are deluded concerning self, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 23rd, 2020 at 2:12 AM

Title: Re: Sunyata and Nihilism

Content:

tkp67 said:

The personification of my generalizations is not a phenomenon I control.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, you might rein in your generalizations a bit, you are able to control that, and thereby, mitigate responses to them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 23rd, 2020 at 2:13 AM

Title: Re: Vajrasattva Question(s)

Content:

Ayu said:

Depends on the empowerment. There's Vajrasattva in Kriya Tantra (I think) and Anuttarayoga Tantra as well.

Malcolm wrote:

Yoga tantra, not Kriya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 23rd, 2020 at 2:17 AM

Title: Re: Consciousness question

Content:

Rick said:

Per Buddhism (rather than, say, Vedanta): Consciousness arises together with a conscious'd object. Sensory consciousness (ear, touch, etc.) arises with a sensed object. Right?

What happens to sensory consciousness when there is no object to sense?

Malcolm wrote:

It doesn't arise. But there are six senses, not only five, and so there is never a time when consciousness is actually free from an object.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 23rd, 2020 at 2:18 AM

Title: Re: Consciousness question

Content:

Rick said:

Is proof offered that sensory consciousness doesn't go dormant and 'scan' continuously for the next sensory object to appear?

Grigoris said:

Theravada Abhidhamma talks about the Bhavanga Citta, (life continuum consciousness) which fills the "gaps" between sensory experiences.

Rick said:

Thanks, Grigoris, I was hoping that one of you Abhidharma scholars were going to chime in, this seems like a question very well-suited for the Abhidharma. So we live like we see movies, by tweening together a sequence of frames that follow in close succession to each other. Does ear consciousness exist in those gaps between the frames?

Malcolm wrote:

There are no gaps because causes and effects are neither same nor are they different.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 23rd, 2020 at 2:27 AM

Title: Re: Sunyata and Nihilism

Content:

tkp67 said:

The personification of my generalizations is not a phenomenon I control.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, you might rein in your generalizations a bit, you are able to control that, and thereby, mitigate responses to them.

tkp67 said:

I can act on this succinctly as it is a simple request. I do not understand it at all. That is, why generalizations would be considered negative.

Malcolm wrote:

Because they do not cover all cases, including exceptions, and people will fault you for not covering the exceptions. For example, if I generalize from my Tibetan Buddhist tradition, other people are likely to object.

For example, I often generalize that that Sino-Japanese Buddhism, apart from Shingon, is sūtra-based Buddhism. This is met with some dismay from Zen people, who, predictably, hotly deny that sūtras are not important in Zen, etc., etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 23rd, 2020 at 3:23 AM

Title: Re: Kilung life release

Content:

cjdevries said:

I found the Mahakaruna Foundation, which offers the service of saving a yak from slaughter for only $92, which is much less than Kilung's service

http://www.mahakaruna.org/Yak_Saving_Lives.html

Malcolm wrote:

Are we bargain shopping for merit now?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 23rd, 2020 at 5:41 AM

Title: Re: Sunyata and Nihilism

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

Tantra is not my vehicle, and I think that's fine as long as I respect Tantra, and I actually do respect Tantra. Tantra makes some very extreme, and IMO likely hyperbolic, claims about itself and its liberative techniques, and Tantrikas have a lot of faith in their teachers. I've never met a teacher, Tantrika or not, that inspired such conviction in me. Perhaps this is discernment in me or perhaps this is excess of skepticism. The latter is very likely. The problem is, when I imagine myself believing similar things, having similar convictions regarding specific points of tantric methods, I can only imagine myself engaged in vainglory, and this is because of the grand and very profound claims of Tantra. Fusing the path with the result is a very audacious claim, regardless of if it is true or not that such a thing can even be done.

Malcolm wrote:

Even more audacious is asserting a path beyond cause and result, Atiyoga. But you cannot arrive at this intellectually. You need a guru.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 23rd, 2020 at 5:43 AM

Title: Re: Kilung life release

Content:

cjdevries said:

I found the Mahakaruna Foundation, which offers the service of saving a yak from slaughter for only $92, which is much less than Kilung's service

http://www.mahakaruna.org/Yak_Saving_Lives.html

Malcolm wrote:

Are we bargain shopping for merit now?

Grigoris said:

For $92 a yak he can save 17 yaks for the price of one yak with the other organisation.

That is 17 times more merit for the same price. A bargain if I ever saw one (and lots more happy yaks).

Malcolm wrote:

More likely it will be releasing the same yak 17 times.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 23rd, 2020 at 6:12 AM

Title: Re: Ichinen Sanzen/Mahavairocana /Gohonzon/?Rigpa?

Content:

Queequeg said:

In the Lotus schools, Mahavairocana is an avatar of Tathagata Prabhutaratna (Many Treasures / Taho)

Malcolm wrote:

It is a different Mahāvairocana, also known in Indian sources as Vairocana Jñānasagara (ocean of gnosis). This has nothing to do with the maṇḍalas in Shingon and Tendai. Our world system is located in the palm of his hand. All universes are located in his body. Sometimes this Buddha is referred to as the mahāsambhogakāya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 23rd, 2020 at 9:47 AM

Title: Re: Ichinen Sanzen/Mahavairocana /Gohonzon/?Rigpa?

Content:

Queequeg said:

In the Lotus schools, Mahavairocana is an avatar of Tathagata Prabhutaratna (Many Treasures / Taho)

Malcolm wrote:

It is a different Mahāvairocana, also known in Indian sources as Vairocana Jñānasagara (ocean of gnosis). This has nothing to do with the maṇḍalas in Shingon and Tendai. Our world system is located in the palm of his hand. All universes are located in his body. Sometimes this Buddha is referred to as the mahāsambhogakāya.

Caoimhghín said:

There is a certain Vairocana identified with an ocean in the Brahmajalasutra and Buddhavatamsaka, but he also has a "great" attached to his name.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 23rd, 2020 at 10:28 AM

Title: Re: Kilung life release

Content:

florin said:

If you want to perform life release go to a petshop. There you can find live crickets and worms for cheap. Life is life.

Norwegian said:

Lots of pet shops in places where crickets don't normally exist, carry crickets (and likewise for other fish, insects, and so on.) So one shouldn't release animals that don't naturally exist in a habitat/the environment. Life release is a horrible practice when done wrong.

Simon E. said:

And almost invariably it will be done wrong. The chances of releasing the various creatures into an environment which will sustain the sudden influx without them starving and or causing environmental damage is remote.

It's a terrible practice, aimed at providing a feel good factor for those that indulge in it at the expense of even more suffering for the sentient beings who are pawns in this game.

Malcolm wrote:

It can be a sort of mindless act of piety. Anyway, Tibetans eat way more sheep than yaks.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 23rd, 2020 at 11:52 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

SilenceMonkey said:

This "sutrayana" thing projected onto zen by tibetans is pretty strange. As I understand it, when Tibetans talk about sutrayana they are referring to using sutra and shastra to arrive at some intellectual/philosophical understanding of emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

Your understanding is incomplete.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 23rd, 2020 at 9:53 PM

Title: Re: Kilung life release

Content:

PeterC said:

Does anyone have personal experience with either of these organizations?

I like the idea of ransoming a yak. Yaks are nice animals. The world needs more yaks.

Malcolm wrote:

However, as I mentioned, Tibetans eat way more mutton than yak meat.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 23rd, 2020 at 9:58 PM

Title: Re: Sunyata and Nihilism

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Nagarjuna was a Tantrika.

Malcolm wrote:

Not the author of the MMK. There isn't slightest evidence for Vajrayāna prior to the mid 7th century.

There was an author also named Nāgārjuna, the founder of the Ārya lineage of Guhyasamaja, but this person certainly lived no earlier than late 8th-early 9th century.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 23rd, 2020 at 9:59 PM

Title: Re: Sunyata and Nihilism

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

No surprise Tantra has incorporated various sectarian Mahayanika perspectives into it?

No surprise Tantra imitates other schools in its claims as highest? These things work both ways.

Varis said:

You misunderstand me, I'm saying that some schools of Mahayana incorporated Vajrayana because they were congruent in thought.

Malcolm wrote:

Vajrayāna was from the beginning a late Mahāyāna movement (7th century CE onward). This is why it is termed "Uncommon-Mahāyāna Secret Mantra."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 23rd, 2020 at 10:21 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Varis said:

You're attempting to fit Ch'an into a Tibetan model that it's not meant for. Ch'an offers Buddhahood in this body, in one lifetime, and naturally integrates the sense pleasures. This does not fit the sutric path.

Malcolm wrote:

Bodhidharma was associated with the Lanka Sūtra. Chan is a sutra-based tradition. This does not mean that it necessarily predicated itself on a specific text, but it is upadeśa tradition of sūtric Mahāyāna. The difference between Chan and the kind of late common Mahāyāna we find in Tibetan Buddhism is that Chan is based on definitive Mahāyāna sūtras, whereas, the gradualism that gained political ascendance during the Imperial period was based on provisional sūtras.

VAn Schaik's Tibetan Zen has a very interesting discussion of the overlap between Vajrayāna and Chan in Dunhuang.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 23rd, 2020 at 11:31 PM

Title: Re: Consciousness question

Content:

Rick said:

Okay, consciousness and the object conscious'd arise together. To whom or what does the object appear?

A goose flies over a lake and its image is reflected in the water. To whom or what does this image appear? Who or what sees it?

Malcolm wrote:

Still searching for that elusive atman. Don't you have better things to do with your time than continuing to search for something that does not exist?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 23rd, 2020 at 11:39 PM

Title: Re: Im getting close to understanding anatman but still have some objections

Content:

Grigoris said:

The most obvious example would be the difference between Mahayana and Theravada traditions about the definition of "enlightenment".

Malcolm wrote:

A term neither tradition in fact uses. [Hint, the back translation of "enlightenment" will never be "bodhi."]

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 23rd, 2020 at 11:45 PM

Title: Re: Im getting close to understanding anatman but still have some objections

Content:

smcj said:

...one of the simplest refutations ive seen of a static cause giving rise to a dynamic effect is that its impossible as cause and effect cannot be dissimilar.
In other words "static cause" an oxymoron, right?

Malcolm wrote:

Not to theists. The Aristotelian term would be "first cause" in the Merriam-Webster's definition: "the self-created ultimate source of all being."

This sort of causation is explicitly negated in Buddhadharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 12:00 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

The key distinction is many methods involving the body to generate bliss and make clear the wisdom. Sutras have only samatha-vipassanma. That's just the way it is.

Astus said:

Bliss (sukha) is present in the first three dhyanas, but eventually the yogi lets go of that too in the fourth. As for the "many methods", could you specifically name some others not related to the one method of candali? Also, generation and completion stage practices fit under the categories of samatha and vipasyana.

Malcolm wrote:

Astus: this is grouping of creation and completion stages under the rubric of śamatha and vipaśyanā is a kind of Lam rim politics. However, it does not correspond to the actual structure of the two stages. For example, all creation stage practices begin with dissolution into śūnyatā, which of course is based on having insight into emptiness as a prerequisite.

There are many methods related to mantra recitation, maṇḍala offerings, guru yoga, samaya, mudras, homavidhi and so on, nāḍis, vāyus, bindus, cakras, postural yogas, prāṇāyāma, abhiṣeka as introduction to the path, rather than sign of attaining the result, and so on. You will find none of these methods mentioned in sūtra, apart from the term "mantra," maṇḍala, and abhiṣeka in very limited contexts.

Also the bliss mentioned in the dhyānas, one of the five mental factors associated with the first dhyāna, etc., is not the bliss being referred to in Vajrayāna texts. This bliss here being referred to is physical bliss of the sense organs.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 12:19 AM

Title: Re: Consciousness question

Content:

Rick said:

Okay, consciousness and the object consciousness'd arise together. To whom or what does the object appear?

A goose flies over a lake and its image is reflected in the water. To whom or what does this image appear? Who or what sees it?

Grigoris said:

The sensory consciousness.

Rick said:

I can't get me noggin around consciousness being the subject to which things appear. It's so ... impersonal!

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that's the point. No person, self, living being, agent, etc.

Rick said:

Who or what perceives (i.e. interprets, makes sense of, reacts to) the appearances consciousness sees?

Malcolm wrote:

The habit of I-making which has no basis of designation among the five aggregates, and is therefore, simply a false, though deeply entrenched, habituation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 12:22 AM

Title: Re: Im getting close to understanding anatman but still have some objections

Content:

Artziebetter1 said:

further objection to the kaula/kashmir shaiva viewpoint:something static cannot be a cause giving rise to anything,if it gives rise to something it cannot be said to be static,one,unchanging etc and if a static thing could be a cause,its effect would be static and unchanging aswell,as a cause cannot be dissimilar to a effect.

Malcolm wrote:

What you have basically run up against is the difference between Samkhya, which influences all Indian non-buddhist thinking one way or another, and the Buddhist Abhidharma, which influences as all Buddhist discourse, one way or another.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 12:35 AM

Title: Re: Consciousness question

Content:

Rick said:

As for atman/brahman, I flip back and forth between thinking it's a fairy tale and thinking Sankara and his buddies nailed it.

Malcolm wrote:

They didn't, but that's ok. Basically, having watched you flail with this issue for some years now, my unsolicited advice is that you give it a rest.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 12:44 AM

Title: Re: Sunyata and Nihilism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Vajrayāna was from the beginning a late Mahāyāna movement (7th century CE onward). This is why it is termed "Uncommon-Mahāyāna Secret Mantra."

Varis said:

I know, as I stated in another post Vajrayana pretty obviously builds on concepts and practices found in common Mahayana. I'm just separating them for the point of discussion. My point being is it's too easy to see how some, like Tientai or Ch'an schools, would adopt Vajrayana practices as a part of their repertoire.

Malcolm wrote:

They adopted some methods from lower tantra, because in Sino-Japanese Buddhism the distinction between "sūtras" and "tantras" was not so marked, other than in Shingon.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 12:51 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Astus: this is grouping of creation and completion stages under the rubric of śamatha and vipaśyanā is a kind of Lam rim politics.

Astus said:

Might be so, but such a summary of the so called sutrayana could be called a rough generalisation as well, and quite often the two are practised as one.

Malcolm wrote:

It's simply an inaccurate characterization, just like equating father, mother, and nondual tantra with mahāyoga, anuyoga, and atiyoga.

Astus said:

There are many methods related to mantra recitation, maṇḍala offerings, guru yoga, samaya, mudras, homavidhi and so on, nāḍis, vāyus, bindus, cakras, postural yogas, prāṇāyāma, abhiṣeka as introduction to the path, rather than sign of attaining the result, and so on. You will find none of these methods mentioned in sūtra, apart from the term "mantra," maṇḍala, and abhiṣeka in very limited contexts.

Are they all methods to generate bliss? As for the presence of manifold methods in vajrayana, no doubt about that. At the same time, even to prepare for samatha there are various methods in sutrayana too, not to mention all the others. For instance, in <https://ymba.org/books/taming-monkey-mind-guide-pure-land-practice> there are 48 methods just for buddha-recollection.

Malcolm wrote:

Sonam Tsemo's reply this objection from General Presentation of the Divisions of Tantra: Second, "equivalent in many methods": although it may be true that many methods are explained in Pāramitāyāna, those paths are not given up in Secret Mantra, but the methods of supreme siddhi and common siddhis in Secret Mantra are added to those, and because of the inconceivable methods, the two stages, recitation, fire pūjas, and so on, it is superior.

In other words, common Mahāyāna has many methods. However, in addition to those methods are many unshared or uncommon methods which are not found in sūtra. So by definition, Secret Mantra has more methods. And no, they are not just methods for generating bliss.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 1:24 AM

Title: Re: Kosa Reading Group ii c: Introduction by Poussin

Content:

PeterC said:

I am looking forward to starting on chapter 1 properly after that academic prelude.

Malcolm wrote:

You should keep in mind that these translators never practiced Abhidharma. And yes, it is a practice text.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 1:38 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Astus said:

A that's why I asked if there are many methods to generate bliss, or simply many methods among which some may use bliss.

Malcolm wrote:

The latter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 2:09 AM

Title: Re: Kosa Reading Group ii c: Introduction by Poussin

Content:

PeterC said:

I am looking forward to starting on chapter 1 properly after that academic prelude.

Malcolm wrote:

You should keep in mind that these translators never practiced Abhidharma. And yes, it is a practice text.

Grigoris said:

This is much more explicit in Theravada Abhidhamma as the texts are even labeled as such: Visuddhimagga (Path of Purification), Vimuttimaggā (Path of Freedom), Patisambhidamaggā (Path of Discrimination).

They are a step-by-step outline of what how to get there and what to expect along the way.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct. Unfortunately, Abhidhamma (and the manuals developed around it like the ones you list above) developed outside the mainlines of development of Indian Buddhism, and therefore have no value in understanding Mahāyāna and Vajrayāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 2:30 AM

Title: Re: Im getting close to understanding anatman but still have some objections

Content:

smcj said:

Hmmm...wonder where I've heard that before...?

Malcolm wrote:

Not in any Buddhist text.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 2:34 AM

Title: Re: Im getting close to understanding anatman but still have some objections

Content:

smcj said:

I don't see an equivalence between "first" and "static". Nothing says "first" does not include "dynamic".

Malcolm wrote:

A first cause is necessarily static since it cannot change. "Dynamic" by definition means "changing": MW has, "marked by usually continuous and productive activity or change." Anything that is active is changing, anything that changes is impermanent, dependent, and cannot be a cause of itself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 2:45 AM

Title: Re: Im getting close to understanding anatman but still have some objections

Content:

smcj said:

Hmmm...wonder where I've heard that before...?

Not in any Buddhist text.

Not taking the bait. There are better things in life to do.

Malcolm wrote:

That's because you can't produce a sūtra passage which says this; though certainly in the tantras you can find passages which _seem_ to say things like this; but they cannot be taken literally, nor are they meant to be taken literally. Well, because, tantras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 3:00 AM

Title: Re: Kosa Reading Group ii c: Introduction by Poussin

Content:

Grigoris said:

This is much more explicit in Theravada Abhidhamma as the texts are even labeled as such: Visuddhimagga (Path of Purification), Vimuttimagga (Path of Freedom), Patisambhidamagga (Path of Discrimination).

They are a step-by-step outline of what how to get there and what to expect along the way.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct. Unfortunately, Abhidhamma (and the manuals developed around it like the ones you list above) developed outside the mainlines of development of Indian Buddhism, and therefore have no value in understanding Mahāyāna and Vajrayāna.

Grigoris said:

I wouldn't say they have "no value". There are many important insights and explanations that are applicable in the Mahayana and Vajrayana too.

Yes, the paths differ, but some of the landmarks are similar.

Malcolm wrote:

I have read extensively in Abhidhamma. While interesting, it never had any value for me in reading Mahāyāna and Vajrayāna texts. The Kośabhaṣyaṃ however sits on my desk, where it has sat, consulted almost daily, for thirty years. YMMV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 3:35 AM

Title: Re: Im getting close to understanding anatman but still have some objections

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That's because you can't produce a sūtra passage which says this; though certainly in the tantras you can find passages which seem to say things like this; but they cannot be taken literally, nor are they meant to be taken literally. Well, because, tantras.

smcj said:

Okay, so the tantras do say it, but they don't mean it.

Got it.

Malcolm wrote:

Some tantras make such statements, but they are not literal statements, they are interpretable statements, defined as such in the tantras themselves, as well as their commentarial literature.

But you will never find such statements in the sūtras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 3:40 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Bodhidharma was associated with the Lanka Sūtra. Chan is a sutra-based tradition. This does not mean that it necessarily predicated itself on a specific text, but it is upadeśa tradition of sūtric Mahāyāna. The difference between Chan and the kind of late common Mahāyāna we find in Tibetan Buddhism is that Chan is based on definitive Mahāyāna sūtras, whereas, the gradualism that gained political ascendance during the Imperial period was based on provisional sūtras.

VAn Schaik's Tibetan Zen has a very interesting discussion of the overlap between Vajrayāna and Chan in Dunhuang.

Varis said:

I can't argue that it has a sutric basis, but isn't sutrayana as Tibetans understand it the gradualist form of Mahayana? To lump Ch'an under this label seems unfair.

Malcolm wrote:

Not necessarily.

Varis said:

Of course a lot of this is ignoring how Ch'an practitioners conceive of Ch'an in relation to the sutras.

Malcolm wrote:

I am basing my point of view on Tibetans who were very educated in Chan, such as Nubchen Sangye Yeshe, and so on.

Varis said:

It often feels like these arguments about Ch'an v. Vajrayana originate in the fact that Ch'an offers many of the same benefits Vajrayana claims to offer exclusively. Namely, Buddhahood in a single lifetime, the integration of daily life and the sense pleasures, etc. Although I'll admit that Vajrayana has many more methods, particularly when it comes to the intermediate state.

Malcolm wrote:

Where does Chan promise Buddhahood in one lifetime? Where does Chan utilize pleasures of the senses as an explicit practice tradition? Citations please.

Chan originates in India during the final phase of the Gupta empire. We do not find Vajrayāna claims in Indian Buddhist texts prior to the fall of the Gupta empire.

Zen exhibits rhetorical borrowing from Shingon and Tendai Esoteric Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 3:54 AM

Title: Re: Im getting close to understanding anatman but still have some objections

Content:

smcj said:

Some tantras make such statements, but they are not literal statements, they are interpretable statements, defined as such in the tantras themselves, as well as their commentarial literature.

But you will never find such statements in the sūtras.

Actually this point is off topic. The more pertinent and interesting point is how the individual is understood in terms of no-self.

The Ultimate is remote. The individual is immediate.

Malcolm wrote:

Umm, it is precisely on topic, since it addresses the issue of first causes, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 4:19 AM

Title: Re: Im getting close to understanding anatman but still have some objections

Content:

smcj said:

Actually this point is off topic. The more pertinent and interesting point is how the individual is understood in terms of no-self.

The Ultimate is remote. The individual is immediate.

Umm, it is precisely on topic, since it addresses the issue of first causes, etc.

So your explanation of anatman proceeding from first cause goes.....how?

Malcolm wrote:

You clearly are not paying attention to the thread of the conversation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 4:20 AM

Title: Re: Ichinen Sanzen/Mahavairocana /Gohonzon/?Rigpa?

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

There is a certain Vairocana identified with an ocean in the Brahmajalasutra and Buddhavatamsaka, but he also has a "great" attached to his name.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct.

Caoimhghín said:

Well, then you might have to perhaps modify what you said concerning Tendai. Shingon might still have these two separate, but AFAIK Tendai does not and associates the Vairocana of Avira etc., and of their mandalas, with this figure.

Malcolm wrote:

I never claimed that they did. Indeed, I pointed out they were not the same.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 4:30 AM

Title: Re: Ichinen Sanzen/Mahavairocana /Gohonzon/?Rigpa?

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

Well, then you might have to perhaps modify what you said concerning Tendai. Shingon might still have these two separate, but AFAIK Tendai does not and associates the Vairocana of Avira etc., and of their mandalas, with this figure.

Malcolm wrote:

I never claimed that they did. Indeed, I pointed out they were not the same.

Caoimhghín said:

"Does not" have them separate, I meant. The "this figure" was the sutric Vairocana.

Malcolm wrote:

I clarified above that Vairocanajñānasagara was not the figure in the mandala mentioned by QQ.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 4:46 AM

Title: Re: Im getting close to understanding anatman but still have some objections

Content:

Artziebetter1 said:

I find Madhyamika logic to be impervious to any attack

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is because Mādhyamikas take no position.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 5:17 AM

Title: Re: The life of the true Buddha, Nichiren Daishonin

Content:

Shotenzenjin said:

A wonderful presentation.

<https://nstny.org/new-page-1>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 5:20 AM

Title: Re: Ichinen Sanzen/Mahavairocana /Gohonzon/?Rigpa?

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

"Does not" have them separate, I meant. The "this figure" was the sutric Vairocana.

Malcolm wrote:

I clarified above that Vairocanajñānasagara was not the figure in the mandala mentioned by QQ.

Caoimhghín said:

Yes, that's why I have to find the quote from the Tendai venerable I remember that implies that his understanding of the figure in the mandala is that which you call Vairocanajñānasagara, the sutric Vairocana-figure. But until I find this, we can assume no such quote exists. Even if such a quote did exist, it is also always possible the speaker was confused.

Malcolm wrote:

Essentially, the Shingon position of Dai Niichi Nyorai as dharmakāya is the same as the Nyingmapa presentation of the adibuddha Samantabhadra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 6:23 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Where does Chan promise Buddhahood in one lifetime? Where does Chan utilize pleasures of the senses as an explicit practice tradition? Citations please.

Varis said:

You're right, it does not promise anything.

Malcolm wrote:

Stop making repeated claims which you, by your own admission, cannot support.

Varis said:

But Ch'an does teach Buddhahood is possible in this body.

Malcolm wrote:

Thus, it is no different than common Mahāyāna.

Varis said:

Explicitly, no, but it's implicit in hua tou practices. As I understand it from the Ganhwa Seon tradition, the hwadu is to be maintained 24/7 regardless of what activity the person is engaged in, and for laypeople that would mean sex too.

Malcolm wrote:

Thus it is no different than common Mahāyāna. For example, the Bodhisattva Dharmodgata partied with 60,000 women without every parting from one-pointed samadhi on prajñāpāramitā.

But partying with women is not a method in common Mahāyāna, and Dharmodgata was quite beyond the affliction of desire already.

Varis said:

Is this not an implicit integration of sense pleasures? Not the same as how Vajrayana integrates sense pleasures into practice, but it's integration nonetheless.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is not what i would consider "integration." But that's just me. YMMV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 7:37 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Stop making repeated claims which you, by your own admission, cannot support.

Varis said:

I learn by arguing and being proven wrong, that's one of my flaws.

Now excuse me while I investigate about the party-hound Bodhisattva.

Malcolm wrote:

PP 8000

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 9:39 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Stop making repeated claims which you, by your own admission, cannot support.

Varis said:

I learn by arguing and being proven wrong, that's one of my flaws.

Malcolm wrote:

I didn't prove you wrong; all I proved is that you can't support your assertion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 10:05 AM

Title: Re: Consciousness question

Content:

Rick said:

I can't get me noggin around consciousness being the subject to which things appear.

It's so ... impersonal!

Who or what perceives (i.e. interprets, makes sense of, reacts to) the appearances consciousness sees?

Simon E. said:

If it helps, the first time I really got the implications of this teaching I had a kind of vertigo ..Far from some kind of blissful or peaceful state I went into aversion to it. It was like looking over a high cliff into a deep chasm.

Later I was describing this to (name drop alert) Ajahn Amaro the Dzogchen practising Forest Sangha Abbott and he got very excited and showed me a book he had been studying that day which contained a multi syllabled term for the panic one feels on getting a glimpse of Shunyata.

The real work of integrating that glimpse then begins.

Rick said:

I sometimes play dumber than I am (hard as that might be to imagine) because I like to revisit the fundamentals o'er and o'er again. I got my first nontrivial glimpse of emptiness several years back, from a book written by the Dalai Lama. It was revelatory. But rather than judging the emptiness view to be 'right' and working at assimilating it fully ... I filed it away in my internal library of views, at or near the top for sure, and return to it (pretty much daily) as a precious treasure.

My reaction btw to getting a glimpse of sunyata was: Why of course, makes total sense, I've known this since I was a kid, how could anyone not see the world this way?

Malcolm wrote:

The study of tenet systems should reduce your concepts. Not increase them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 10:16 AM

Title: Re: The Bee Gathering Nectar From Many Flowers vs The Musk Deer Hunter

Content:

mandog said:

What is the the difference between the bee that gathers nectar from many flowers and the musk deer hunter that kills many deer?

Malcolm wrote:

Respect.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 10:46 AM

Title: Re: The Bee Gathering Nectar From Many Flowers vs The Musk Deer Hunter

Content:

mandog said:

Sometimes I worry I am type 2 instead of type 1.

Malcolm wrote:

Than you should fix that. You should always ask yourself if you are interested in teacher or the teaching. If your interest in the latter is greater than the former, don't go.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 10:51 AM

Title: Re: Is this an accurate summation of tantra?

Content:

fckw said:

What many Buddhist practitioners don't know is that quite many Buddhist (and non-Buddhist) tantric manuals contain lots and lots of "folk magic".

Varis said:

It's not correct to define the magical rituals in the tantras as folk magic. It's the opposite. Folk magic would be things Tibetans or Indians pass on orally in their homes and villages, outside of the purview of orthodox Tibetan Buddhist and Hindu religious institutions. The action rituals of the Buddhist tantras are supposed to be used for the benefit of all sentient beings, folk magic is not.

Malcolm wrote:

It's possible your differentiation between folk magic and "sanctioned" magic is a bit dated.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 11:45 AM

Title: Re: Is this an accurate summation of tantra?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It's possible your differentiation between folk magic and "sanctioned" magic is a bit dated.

Varis said:

Folk magic influences religiously sanctioned magic and vice versa. So it is in reality more gray, but differentiating between the two is useful.

Although I'll add that some cultures don't have such distinctions at all.

Malcolm wrote:

That distinction does not really exist in Tibetan or Indian society. It's a western construct.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 8:37 PM

Title: Re: The Bee Gathering Nectar From Many Flowers vs The Musk Deer Hunter

Content:

Toenail said:

And what about a great interest in the teacher and not about the particular teaching at the event (that is: no intention to practice it) ?

Malcolm wrote:

Then don't go.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 8:44 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Varis said:

It often feels like these arguments about Ch'an v. Vajrayana originate in the fact that Ch'an offers many of the same benefits Vajrayana claims to offer exclusively. Namely, Buddhahood in a single lifetime, the integration of daily life and the sense pleasures, etc. Although I'll admit that Vajrayana has many more methods, particularly when it comes to the intermediate state.

Malcolm wrote:

Where does Chan promise Buddhahood in one lifetime?

Astus said:

The most famous is the Platform Sutra that advocates for "sudden enlightenment" that is a hallmark of Chan teachings. Just look at how Huineng begins:

Malcolm wrote:

These quotes are not promises.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 8:48 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

These are not sutras from Buddha. They are pith instructions from lineage masters. We can talk about where Bodhidharma got those.

Astus said:

The question was "Where does Chan promise Buddhahood in one lifetime?", and the quotes are from generally accepted Chan classics.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, they all speak of the possibility of buddhahood in a single life, but have no method of ensuring the same.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 10:13 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

These quotes are not promises.

Astus said:

They described the method of sudden enlightenment that is equal to buddhahood. But if you want something in the format of a promise...

Malcolm wrote:

Again, this is theory, not method, rhetorical.

Yes, they all speak of the possibility of buddhahood in a single life, but have no method of ensuring the same.

The method to see the nature of mind is explained again and again, and when the nature is seen, that is attaining enlightenment.

'To practice in every moment of thought is called the true nature. To be enlightened to this Dharma is the Dharma of prajñā, to cultivate this practice is the practice of prajñā. To not cultivate this is to be an ordinary [unenlightened] person. To cultivate this in a single moment of thought is to be equivalent to the Buddha in one's own body.'

(Platform Sutra, ch 2, BDK ed, p 30)

Again, what is the practice method? What distinguishes this from prajñāpāramitā?

Again, the point is that Chan is a sūtric tradition. It proposes no methods not found in a hundred Mahāyāna sūtras. Sūtra and tantra are distinguished by method: both the method of introducing the path and the method of practice.

Also, "enlightenment" is a stupid word to use in a Buddhist context. I cannot understand why people persist in using it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 10:19 PM

Title: Re: Consciousness question

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The study of tenet systems should reduce your concepts. Not increase them.

Rick said:

What would I be without my beloved concepts?

Malcolm wrote:

Awakened.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 10:39 PM

Title: Who is Mahavairocana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Mod Note: This has been split from the <https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=59&t=25526> thread in the Nichiren sub-forum. The discussion of Mahavairocana has different aspects from a Nichiren perspective and from a more general Mahayana perspective. The discussion was a little bit mixed up so splitting has been messy. Please refer to the original thread for some interesting issues that were raised that may be of interest from a general Mahayana perspective, but please discuss these general issues here rather than in the Nichiren sub thread.

-QQ

Caoimhghín said:

the sūtras are actually a little bit incoherent, it seems, as to precisely what Vairocana is. For instance, the dharmakāya is featureless, yet Vairocana is presented with the features of a saṃbhogakāya.

Queequeg said:

Not necessarily. The Trikaya teaching emerged after the composition of the main body of Mahayana sutras. We might say that trikaya teaching was distilled from the sutras, in the way that abhidharma is distilled from the sutras. Identifying dharma and sambhoga kayas and identifying them with different names, however derived (purposefully, mistakenly) is reasonable. The fact that they are directly associated makes sense.

Malcolm wrote:

In Indian literature, the Trikāya doctrine emerges out of the sūtras associated with the Yogacāra school. The doctrine seems to have been formalized by Maitreyanātha and Asanga.

In pre-Yogacāra Buddhism, there were only two kāyas: dharmakāya and rūpakāya.

In pre-Madhyamaka/PP Buddhism, there was only one kāya mentioned, dharmakāya, that referred to collected words of the Buddha.

The reason there is so much confusion about the three kāyas is that most Buddhists have a revelatory view of the sūtras, assuming eternal doxologies.

But if you study the sūtras layer by layer, looking for terms in texts, checking the dates of translations in the Chinese Canon, and so on, you can arrive at a pretty accurate picture of the sedimentary layers of Classical Indian Mahāyāna, which then went on to inspire Buddhists in Central Asian, China, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 10:45 PM

Title: Re: Ichinen Sanzen/Mahavairocana /Gohonzon/?Rigpa?

Content:

tkp67 said:

This is important from a sense of dependent origin (recognizing all who are effected by original cause) and to establish one mind as taught in the lotus sutra.

Malcolm wrote:

Dependent origination does not permit "original causation." "Original causation" is nondependent causation by definition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 10:55 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

the dharma practiced by tantrikas is oriented to the stubborn ones, those who became too passionate to understand by means of the renunciation way.

Bristollad said:

Tsongkhapa disagrees.

Some say, "Mantra was propounded for the sake of taming desirous trainees, and the Perfection Vehicle for the sake of training trainees free from desire; therefore, meditative cultivation of a path without abandoning desire or of a path that abandons desire is the reason dividing the Great Vehicle into two vehicles."

About this let me explain: If the Great Vehicle were divided into two vehicles because among the trainees of these two vehicles there are those who cultivate the path without having abandoned desire and those who cultivate a path abandoning desire, then since both vehicles have both, this feature cannot distinguish the vehicles:

- because there are many householder Bodhisattvas who have entered the path of the Perfection Vehicle but have not abandoned impure deeds, and there are also many skilled in method who out of great altruism act impurely, as in the case of the Brahmin Khyiu Karma (khyi'u skar ma / khye'u skar ma)
- and because among the trainees of the Mantra Vehicle there also are many who have abandoned attachment to the attributes of the desire realm; otherwise, there would be the fault that one could not be freed from the desires of the desire realm until Buddhahood, or the fault that, having attained Buddhahood, one would still not have abandoned the desires of the desire realm.

(Great Exposition of Secret Mantra, Volume I: Tantra in Tibet, 2016 edition)

Malcolm wrote:

However, Sonam Tsemo, who achieved the body of light in front of 40 students, clearly states in his General Explanation of Tantra Divisions:

First, the reason for a categorization into two paths: In general, because all Dharmas are taught for the purpose of the person who the basis to be tamed, there are two classes to be tamed. Also in general, for those of little affliction, and in particular, since they can give up the tormenting attachment to desire, it is said that the Pāramitāyāna is intended for those of dull faculties who wish awakening. However, in general, for some people afflictions are strong, and in particular, they cannot give up the tormenting attachment to desire, Secret Mantra was taught intending those of sharp faculties who wished unsurpassed awakening.

So, one has a choice of whose opinion to follow.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 10:58 PM

Title: Re: The Bee Gathering Nectar From Many Flowers vs The Musk Deer Hunter

Content:

mandog said:

Great, that is very well put advice. I will follow it.

Malcolm wrote:

It arises out of observing myself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 10:59 PM

Title: Re: Ichinen Sanzen/Mahavairocana /Gohonzon/?Rigpa?

Content:

tkp67 said:

This is important from a sense of dependent origin (recognizing all who are effected by original cause) and to establish one mind as taught in the lotus sutra.

Malcolm wrote:

Dependent origination does not permit "original causation." "Original causation" is nondependent causation by definition.

tkp67 said:

So all of his teachings don't represent a point where that one cause is central for all beings in this world system?

Malcolm wrote:

There is no such thing as single causation. Even Śākyamuni Buddha started out as an ordinary sentient being.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 11:30 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

I still do not see a method. Cultivate what? Prajna? So how is that done?

Malcolm wrote:

Again, what is the practice method?

Astus said:

'What is nonthought? If in seeing all the dharmas, the mind is not defiled or attached, this is nonthought. [The mind's] functioning pervades all locations, yet it is not attached to all the locations. Just purify the fundamental mind, causing the six consciousnesses to emerge from the six [sensory] gates, [causing one to be] without defilement or heterogeneity within the six types of sensory data (literally, the "six dusts"), autonomous in the coming and going [of mental phenomena], one's penetrating function without stagnation. This is the samādhi of prajñā, the autonomous emancipation. This is called the practice of nonthought.'

(Platform Sutra, ch 2, BDK ed, p 33-34)

Malcolm wrote:

So, your method is simply to rest in the direct perception of the six senses? How is this different than the direct perception of a harrier or a rabbit?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 24th, 2020 at 11:37 PM

Title: Re: Ichinen Sanzen/Mahavairocana /Gohonzon/?Rigpa?

Content:

tkp67 said:

So all of his teachings don't represent a point where that one cause is central for all beings in this world system?

Malcolm wrote:

There is no such thing as single causation. Even Śākyamuni Buddha started out as an ordinary sentient being.

tkp67 said:

The cause and effect of his enlightenment in this world system had a start as an ordinary human. So then it is wrong to assume he had a start in this world system? That this start is where all traditions here have a commonality. A real world commonality? None of this claim interdependent origin.

Malcolm wrote:

Śākyamuni's path to buddhahood started in the hell realms. Further, there will be 1001 Buddhas in this Bhadrakalpa. Śākyamuni is the fourth. So, we have 997 to go.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 12:32 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

What distinguishes this from prajñāpāramitā?

Astus said:

It is prajnaparamita.

'Good friends, 'mahāprajñāpāramitā' is the most honored, the supreme, the primary. It is without abiding [in the present], without going [into the past], and without coming [from the future]. It is from this that all the buddhas of the three periods of time emerge. One should use this great wisdom to destroy the enervating defilements of the afflictions of the five skandhas. Those who cultivate in this fashion will definitely accomplish the enlightenment of buddhahood, transforming the three poisons into morality, meditation, and wisdom.'

(Platform Sutra, ch 2, BDK ed, p 30)

Again, the point is that Chan is a sūtric tradition. It proposes no methods not found in a hundred Mahāyāna sūtras.

I did not debate that.

Malcolm wrote:

So we are agreed then. Chan is a sutric tradition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 12:49 AM

Title: Re: Ichinen Sanzen/Mahavairocana /Gohonzon/?Rigpa?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

But if you study the sūtras layer by layer, looking for terms in texts, checking the dates of translations in the Chinese Canon, and so on, you can arrive at a pretty accurate picture of the sedimentary layers of Classical Indian Mahāyāna, which then went on to inspire Buddhists in Central Asian, China, and so on.

Minobu said:

So like they are myths...and we believe the Buddha is behind the production of the Myth , so as to it's becoming a vehicle towards liberation ?

Malcolm wrote:

Everyone has to answer that question for themselves.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 12:59 AM

Title: Re: Ichinen Sanzen/Mahavairocana /Gohonzon/?Rigpa?

Content:

tkp67 said:

How can all buddha be recognized equally from a mortal perspective when mortality in and of it self is provisional?

I though this was a reason for the lotus, to remove that ignorance.

I have to consider I am way off base here.

Malcolm wrote:

All buddhas have the same realization, the dharmakāya. This means the source of all teachings of the buddhas can be considered to have a single source, buddhahood. But since there are infinite buddhas, there are infinite causes and conditions which leads to their buddhahood. Those infinite causes and conditions make it possible for them to teach infinite sentient beings in all dimensions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 1:31 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

So we are agreed then. Chan is a sutric tradition.

Astus said:

As Hyujeong summarised:

'The transmission of the mind by the World Honored One at three sites is the gist of Seon; what was spoken by him over his lifetime is the gate of Doctrine. Therefore it is said, "Seon is the Buddha mind; Doctrine is the Buddha word."' (Seonga gwigam, §5, in Collected Works of Korean Buddhism, vol 3, p 58)

Malcolm wrote:

Still a sutric tradition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 1:46 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

So, your method is simply to rest in the direct perception of the six senses? How is this different than the direct perception of a harrier or a rabbit?

Astus said:

'yet it is not attached to all the locations', 'without defilement or heterogeneity', 'penetrating function without stagnation' is/are the difference.

Or in <https://ymba.org/books/entering- tao-sudden-enlightenment/treatise-entering- tao-sudden-enlightenment>:

'Q: What does "not dwelling anywhere or on anything" mean?

A: Not to dwell anywhere or on anything means not to dwell on good or evil, existence or non-existence, within or without or on the middle, nor on concentration nor dispersion, and neither to dwell on the void nor on the non-void. This is the meaning of "not dwelling anywhere or on anything". Just this alone is real abiding. This stage of achievement is also the non-abiding Mind, and the non-abiding Mind is the Buddha Mind.'

...

'In summary, if no thought about these three time periods arises, then the three time periods do not exist. If a thought of moving arises, do not follow it; and the thought of moving will vanish. If a thought of dwelling arises, do not follow it; and the thought of dwelling will vanish. However, grasping at the thought of non-dwelling is abiding in non-dwelling. On the other hand, if you understand clearly that your mind does not abide anywhere whatsoever that is abiding, then you are neither abiding nor not abiding anywhere. If you understand clearly that your mind does not abide anywhere at all, then you are clearly seeing your Original Mind, which is also referred to as "clearly seeing the nature of seeing." Just this Mind, that abides nowhere at all, is the Mind of Buddha and the Mind of liberation, the Mind of Bodhi and the Mind of the Uncreate.'

Malcolm wrote:

Still just prajñāpāramitā. A very fine sūtra too.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 1:47 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

So, your method is simply to rest in the direct perception of the six senses? How is this different than the direct perception of a harrier or a rabbit?

Astus said:

'yet it is not attached to all the locations', 'without defilement or heterogeneity',

'penetrating function without stagnation' is/are the difference.

Or in <https://ymba.org/books/entering-tao-sudden-enlightenment/treatise-entering-tao-sudden-enlightenment>:

'Q: What does "not dwelling anywhere or on anything" mean?

A: Not to dwell anywhere or on anything means not to dwell on good or evil, existence or non-existence, within or without or on the middle, nor on concentration nor dispersion, and neither to dwell on the void nor on the non-void. This is the meaning of "not dwelling anywhere or on anything". Just this alone is real abiding. This stage of achievement is also the non-abiding Mind, and the non-abiding Mind is the Buddha Mind.'

...

'In summary, if no thought about these three time periods arises, then the three time periods do not exist. If a thought of moving arises, do not follow it; and the thought of moving will vanish. If a thought of dwelling arises, do not follow it; and the thought of dwelling will vanish. However, grasping at the thought of non-dwelling is abiding in non-dwelling. On the other hand, if you understand clearly that your mind does not abide anywhere whatsoever that is abiding, then you are neither abiding nor not abiding anywhere. If you understand clearly that your mind does not abide anywhere at all, then you are clearly seeing your Original Mind, which is also referred to as "clearly seeing the nature of seeing." Just this Mind, that abides nowhere at all, is the Mind of Buddha and the Mind of liberation, the Mind of Bodhi and the Mind of the Uncreate.'

White Sakura said:

Do you see an essential difference here to what is taught in Vajrayana? I mean, not in the Tantric teachings with visualization of course...

Malcolm wrote:

The difference between sūtra and tantra is not the words as much as the method of being introduced to the path and how one practices, the path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 2:03 AM

Title: Re: Kosa Reading Group ii c: Introduction by Poussin

Content:

Grigoris said:

The Patthanuddesa Dipani was also really informative in it's break down and analysis of how causes and conditions work.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but it won't help you at all when you come to the six causes and four conditions discussed later in the Indriya chapter, chapter 2.

This is important, because the six causes and four conditions are treated in Mahāyāna sūtra and tantras, as well as in such diverse literatures as Tibetan Medicine and even explanations of delusion of sentient beings in Dzogchen teachings.

So, as I said, I never found Pali Abhidhamma tradition of any use in understanding Mahāyāna texts, despite its obvious value as a important intellectual tradition in Buddhism as a whole.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 2:04 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Still a sutric tradition.

Astus said:

Indeed. The Buddha's mind and the Buddha's words cannot be in disharmony.

Malcolm wrote:

Still just prajñāpāramitā.

Astus said:

Sure it is. There is no claim to the contrary.

Malcolm wrote:

Then, people should just give it a rest when Tibetan Buddhists assign Chan to sūtra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 3:16 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Then, people should just give it a rest when Tibetan Buddhists assign Chan to sūtra.

Astus said:

I think it's less about whether it is sutra based or not, and more about how tantra is posited as superior.

Malcolm wrote:

It's baked in. Chan, like all other sūtra traditions, lacks direct introduction. This is why Nubchen assigns Chan to a position inferior to Mahāyoga, while at the same time, elevating it above the gradualist approach of Kamalashila, and extensively cites Bodhidharma and more than 40 Tang Chan masters, to show how it is that Chan is superior to the gradualist approach of Kamalashila.

We also know that concurrently in India, there was a sutric sudden awakening approach that owed nothing to Chan, memorialized in a text by Vimalamitra called The Meaning of Nonconceptual Meditation, the Sudden Approach (cig car 'jug pa rnam par mi rtog pa'i bsgom don). Unsurprisingly, the first text is cited in defense of this is the Lanka Sūtra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 4:39 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It's baked in. Chan, like all other sūtra traditions, lacks direct introduction.

Dan74 said:

Pointing out is an integral part of what a Zen teacher does. I am not in a position to compare this to Dzogchen or Mahamudra. Are you, Malcolm?

I am not sure how much time Astus has spent with Zen teachers. My understanding is that he is essentially a scholar and a sole practitioner, so not really representative of Zen. Neither am I, btw.

In order to get a balanced view on this subject, one needs either a Zen teacher or a competent student. Failing that, people can search for old posts by such.

As it stands it seems to be a no contest. One that's been played before.

Crazywisdom said:

The Drikung lineage teaches Bodhiharma had a vajrayana lineage, hence the pointing out by a teacher thing, but it was mostly lost, and it is a broken lineage.

Malcolm wrote:

This is because some Tibetans conflate Bodhidharma with Padampa Sangye.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 6:32 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Chan, like all other sūtra traditions, lacks direct introduction.

Astus said:

Do you mean that there are no empowerments in sutra? Still, since the nature of mind is directly perceived in the sutrayana, the goal of the empowerments is achieved there too, so, as you noted before, it is the method that is different.

Malcolm wrote:

No one ever disputed the goal of all the Buddha's teachings was to perceive the nature of the mind, and this realizing this was bodhi.

What I am claiming is that there is no direct introduction in sūtra. In sūtra, the nature of the mind, to use your term, is the result of the path, whether gradual or not, not the basis. In sūtra, one does not start at the nature of the mind because it is never directly introduced and no methods are provided for such an introduction. In Vajrayāna, the gnosis pointed out in the beginning is the basis for the path, whether that path again is gradual, as in the case of the eight lower yānas; or nongradual, as in Atiyoga (though to be fair, in Atiyoga it is explained that buddhahood through

Astus said:

But if we talk of Chan, the very meaning of sudden awakening is not going through stages using various skilful means to eventually attain realisation, but obtaining it directly.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct. This is acknowledged. But as above, you are describing this in terms of a result to obtain through a cause. A result is a result, whether obtained gradually or suddenly, and it is obtained from a cause, whether gradually or suddenly, whether through a process of gathering the two accumulations over eons or a sudden flash of intuition. Then of course, even if one has this sudden flash of intuition, without the guidance of teacher one will not be able to ascertain whether this gradual attainment or sudden intuition is the real deal. In this respect, there is no difference between Vajrayāna in general and Chan. Both systems depend on a teacher. The principle difference is that in the case of the former, the interested student is first introduced to their own state by the teacher; in the case of the latter, the teacher confirms for the student they indeed have had a proper intuition of the nature of the mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 6:35 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

The Drikung lineage teaches Bodhiharma had a vajrayana lineage, hence the pointing out by a teacher thing, but it was mostly lost, and it is a broken lineage.

Malcolm wrote:

This is because some Tibetans conflate Bodhidharma with Padampa Sangye.

Crazywisdom said:

The research was done by HH Chetsang R. He is some Tibetan.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but he uses exclusively Tibetan historical accounts, which are none too reliable past the 11th century.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 7:13 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Meido said:

To be honest, I actually think no Zen practitioner really cares much if Zen is called sutric or not, or how other traditions categorize its approach. Why should they?

Malcolm wrote:

They shouldn't.

Meido said:

Zen is clear as to its own relationship with the sutras as well as its method. For example: If you study the sutra teachings, you easily get stuck in the traces of the teachings. How then can you slough off your old body? ... Our patriarchal Zen school does not depend on the traces of the teachings [the sutras], but has a special meaning: energy, free and unobstructed, responding in accord with the situation, that is what it is about. ... Nowadays there is much talk about the sublime and the profound, or conversely criticism of the Two Vehicles, belittling their authority. [Students of] the partial, the round, the exoteric and the exoteric schools contend with each other, yet they have not even accomplished the confirmation of the Two Vehicles, let alone that of the Bodhisattva Vehicle. And as for the One Buddha Vehicle, how could they conceive of it even in their dreams? What use to them then are the partial, round, exoteric, and esoteric [teachings]? ... None of this applies to our patriarchal school, which surpasses expedient means. When by bitter interviews and painful training at last the principle is attained, the then Buddhadharma of the exoteric and esoteric schools appears directly before the eyes.

[Torei, Shumon Mujintoron]

Malcolm wrote:

These considerations are not disputed.

Meido said:

Regarding actual method,

"energy, free and unobstructed, responding in accord with the situation" refers to the direct pointing activity of the teacher, which encompasses not only various transmitted methods for this purpose but also (in fact, mainly) the general effect on the student's conditions of the teachers ba [proximity, field], the function of which is described in terms of, and dependent upon, kiai [energetic quality and intensity] and joriki [samadhi power]. Related to this are various physical manifestations of realization described in oral instruction that mark a qualified teacher, and which impact the ability of the student to catch certain things. If we are discussing post-kensho practice, these things remain important since the teacher must be able to manifest an embodied fruition of various practices that the student takes up.

Malcolm wrote:

I have no reason to doubt that these things are important in the Rinzai Zen tradition.

Meido said:

"bitter interviews" refers to the core method of Zen, i.e. sanzen [face to face encounter with the teacher].

"painful training" refers to the post-kensho path. Hakuin and Torei unpack this pretty clearly with reference to Tozan's 5 ranks, with explanation of what realization of the 4 wisdoms/3 bodies within this body and life means in Zen practice, describing the practice after recognition of one's nature for which the secret 3-year [minimum] practices of hokkyo zanmai and hen sho ego zanmai are the main points, etc.

Malcolm wrote:

In other words, Chan/Zen is causal path.

Meido said:

But you can't practice only from those writings: they are meant to be taken up in the sanzen room with one's teacher, who can manifest the fruition-states of the practices.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure.

Meido said:

Of course many other methods supporting all this exist. In Rinzai practice the core thing is tanden soku, i.e. the method of sealing the breath power in the lower abdomen through a physical usage of the anal sphincter, pelvic floor, and diaphragm, retaining that for longer and longer periods until it becomes constant and subtle. There are various reasons for this, and Hakuin writes about it quite a bit (though again, without giving complete practice details).

Malcolm wrote:

In Vajrayāna, this is called 'jam rlung (gentle breath), and it means maintaining this "seal" as you put it, constantly. There are more forceful methods, but this is considered to be essential for all practice in all traditions. These kinds of prāṇāyāma practices are written about extensively in Vajrayāna. They are of consummate importance.

Hakuin lived in late 17th century and early 18th century. I would not be surprised at all if Indian methods of prāṇāyāma had spread widely in Chinese and Japanese monasteries by this time, either from Tibetan sources or even Shingon (which is), or even Taoist sources, since Japanese medicine is largely Taoist in nature.

Meido said:

See how that all needed to be unpacked? I mean, if someone is really interested in method, I can talk a lot about it. But most of the details regarding what one actually does in genuine Zen practice remain solely in the realm of kuden (oral instruction). Zen is just not a tradition that is big on explicit written practice instruction.

Malcolm wrote:

This is also the case with Vajrayāna—but these things were written down because people forget them.

Meido said:

It is ironic, but at this point I think it is easier for anyone to research details of, for example, various HYT practices than it is to find accurate information RE what actually passes between teacher and student in a sanzen room.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but of course you will readily understand that without oral explanation the written instructions are incomplete. The written instructions are for reference.

Meido said:

FWIW sutras were never much used as a reference in my experience except for just a few passages that, along with many Zen writings, were accompanied by additional verbal explanation (in sanzen, during teisho) explaining some specific practice application. For example, a passage from the Vimalakirti sutra pointing out a use of the body that has utility.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, this is understandable. The Tibetan description of sūtra vs. tantra, sudden/gradual has less to do with the textual traditions than it does method of entry.

Meido said:

So at the end of the day, is it all sutric or not? No problem to me to say so. It's not tantric, so call it sutric, or non-tantric upadesha, or whatever one likes that best fit the categories that one accepts. But the only important point to me is the oral instructions from one's teacher in whom one has great faith, which clarify the Zen writings and transmit practice details. It's hard to talk much about Zen in any useful manner without having those (though certainly common enough - even among some Zen folks).

Malcolm wrote:

I agree, which is why I rarely discuss Chan or Zen.

But when people make statements wondering what all the fuss is about, it is useful to consider the perspectives of Tibetans, like Nubchen, who trained in Tang-era Chan as well as Vajrayāna during the late 8th and the 9th century, both in Tibet, as well as the fertile and ecumenical environment of Dunhuang. While the Chan they encountered is certainly not the same as the Post-Song era school of Rinzai to which you belong, they are related and so their accounts are of interest to those who wish to understand the overall differences, claims. and counterclaims, made by its various adherents.

Anyway, thanks for your input, always valued.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 7:21 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In sūtra, the nature of the mind, to use your term, is the result of the path, whether gradual or not, not the basis. In sūtra, one does not start at the nature of the mind because it is never directly introduced and no methods are provided for such an introduction.

SilenceMonkey said:

I'm not so sure that the mind's emptiness nature isn't the basis for practice. Many ch'an masters emphasize ch'an as a practice of sitting in the buddha nature. I've heard told that Ch'an masters of old were more able practice ch'an without a method or path, although these days it must be used in tandem with a method to focus the mind.

Malcolm wrote:

There are some similarities between Chan rhetoric and Dzogchen rhetoric. But the important difference identified by Nubchen is direct introduction. All the people I have met, who have done extensive Zen practice (quite a few who have gone through koan practice under Maizumi Roshi and others), agree that direct introduction as practiced in Vajrayāna does not exist in Zen. Apart from having done a weekend sit with the now-disgraced Eido Roshi when I was 16, I have no personal experience with Zen, and I am sure any Zen master would kick me out for being lazy, obstreperous, and arrogant.

Another important distinction is that in sūtra based system, there is no explanation of what is termed lhun grub, sometimes is translated as spontaneous presence, self-perfected, and so on, but these English translation do not really get at the meaning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 9:12 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There are some similarities between Chan rhetoric and Dzogchen rhetoric. But the important difference identified by Nubchen is direct introduction.

SilenceMonkey said:

Interesting... So you're saying that any system without direct introduction is "sutra"?

Malcolm wrote:

By definition.

SilenceMonkey said:

But the essence is in the master's instructions, and in often wordless interactions between master and disciple.

Malcolm wrote:

Thus feature does not distinguish Chan/zen as unique among common Mahayana schools. Buddhism in general is an oral tradition. Texts exist merely to supplement that oral tradition. One cannot learn Dharma from books, but of course one can learn about Buddhism from books. Dharma and Buddhism however are not the same thing.

SilenceMonkey said:

Ch'an might call this naturalness 自然 or abiding in non-abiding 住而不住... or just awareness 覺知. I don't see why there wouldn't be parallel experiences in ch'an or zen. Anyway I'm with you, the language doesn't capture subtle and wordless experience.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, this principle is not explained in sutras. It's not even explained clearly in Mahayoga and Anuyoga. Where Dzogchen, Zen, and the perfection of wisdom meet is in the original purity of all phenomena. But the similarities end there.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 9:26 AM

Title: Re: The Bee Gathering Nectar From Many Flowers vs The Musk Deer Hunter

Content:

mandog said:

You understand that the person in this story was lying to his gurus in order to trick them into giving him a practice that he was then likely going to use to harm sentient beings?

Cinnabar said:

I get the story.

The part I don't get is the inequality that one should not see a teacher unless one's interest in the teacher exceeds that in the teaching.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, this is my experience. YMMV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 9:29 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

How do you all feel about this? I'm just curious. Do we have a popcorn emoji?

<https://nypost.com/2020/06/13/protester-in-seattles-chaz-demands-white-people-give-out-cash/>

Johnny Dangerous said:

It's like Occupy, a spontaneous demonstration turning into a long term civil disobedience thing that aims at creating something new. Will it succeed? No, I'm sure it won't, but there's a seed of something there, as well as a lot of dumbass stuff.

So like anything it's a mixed bag, I won't throw it out entirely though, utopian dreamers are needed for a better future, among other things:

Ursula K. LeGuin said:

"We live in capitalism. Its power seems inescapable. So did the divine right of kings. Any human power can be resisted and changed by human beings. Resistance and change often begin in art, and very often in our art, the art of words."

Johnny Dangerous said:

As far as the reparations thing, I'm sure there are people saying all kinds of stuff all over the CHAZ, it's probably half people just ranting. This story in particular got picked up for a reason, because it has the dual purpose of further de-legitimizing CHAZ -and- stroking racial animus.

Malcolm wrote:

CHAZ was a media-hyped moment of hysteria. There is not now, nor was there ever, a CHAZ.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 9:33 AM

Title: Re: Kosa Reading Group ii b: Introduction by Poussin

Content:

PeterC said:

It shouldn't be controversial that animals can create and exhaust karma. It's difficult to achieve the merit for a human birth in the animal realm - which implies of course that it's possible. Higher animals demonstrate social activity, adherence to codes of behavior, in the case of elephants even something close to funerary rites.

The question is whether the offences of immediate retribution function in the same way in the animal realm. Does vipaka function in the same way? Do the offences have such serious consequences because in part a human should understand how serious they are - and can an animal be expected to understand that too? Can all animals?

Malcolm wrote:

Animal karma is weaker because their discrimination, memory, etc. is much weaker, and thus their ability to generate various karmas is more limited. But we are way ahead of ourselves here. These issues are not discussed until well into chapter 4.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 10:07 AM

Title: Re: The Bee Gathering Nectar From Many Flowers vs The Musk Deer Hunter

Content:

Cinnabar said:

I get the story.

The part I don't get is the inequality that one should not see a teacher unless one's interest in the teacher exceeds that in the teaching.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, this is my experience. YMMV.

Cinnabar said:

Is there a fault in my experience of meeting a teacher I didn't know for a teaching I really could not contextualize... driven, by what, I really have no idea, certainly not "interest", which requires knowledge... and practicing and studying with him for 20 years now?

Seems there are other connections to teachers beyond "interest".

An inexplicable pull, a draw. An attraction. Just karmically being compelled, like a voice in one's head: I need to be there, no matter what, not sure even what it is, who he is, just need to be there...

Malcolm wrote:

I was responding to a specific question posed in a precise way.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 10:58 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

It's like Occupy, a spontaneous demonstration turning into a long term civil disobedience thing that aims at creating something new. Will it succeed? No, I'm sure it won't, but there's a seed of something there, as well as a lot of dumbass stuff.

So like anything it's a mixed bag, I won't throw it out entirely though, utopian dreamers are needed for a better future, among other things:

As far as the reparations thing, I'm sure there are people saying all kinds of stuff all over the CHAZ, it's probably half people just ranting. This story in particular got picked up for a reason, because it has the dual purpose of further de-legitimizing CHAZ -and- stroking racial animus.

Malcolm wrote:

CHAZ was a media-hyped moment of hysteria. There is not now, nor was there ever, a CHAZ.

Johnny Dangerous said:

It actually existed. No one here batted an eye about it really, it was minor and part of the overall protest thing. I do think things like that deserve credit, despite usually being a bit naive, it is people generally trying new methods of organization. It's not lasting, but it's something and I think gives people a faint glimpse of different possibilities.

Malcolm wrote:

Raz Simone maintains that the media got all hyped about a cardboard sign someone put up, and ran with it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 11:04 AM

Title: Re: Bernie 2020

Content:

Sādhaka said:

And Malcolm X was no fan of democrats.

Malcolm wrote:

That was pre-Nixon. From Nixon onward, the Dixiecrat racists began to bail on the Democrats, and joined the GOP. This has been immortalized as Nixon's Southern Strategy. But Nixon himself was a racist old bitch.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 11:11 AM

Title: Re: Bernie 2020

Content:

Sādhaka said:

Nixon was full of it for sure, based on what little I've read.

In any case, I do not think that Malcolm X ever supported democrats.

In fact, it seems that he was assassinated only days after he criticized them.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, by the Nation of Islam. They'd been trying to kill him for some time.

MLK delegitimized racist violence through his nonviolent approach, hence he was murdered by white racists. Malcolm X, on the other hand, legitimized white violence through his militancy, so white supremacists had more to gain by keeping him alive than killing him.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 8:39 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Bristollad said:

Yes, Tsongkhapa disagrees with Sonam Tsemo's position explicitly.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, so one has a choice of opinion to follow. I follow Sonam Tsomo on this point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 8:43 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Astus said:

Could you be more specific about what you mean here by direct introduction?

Malcolm wrote:

No. If you want to find out what direct introduction is, you need to go meet a teacher of dzogchen, or receive a major empowerment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 8:48 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

The research was done by HH Chetsang R. He is some Tibetan.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but he uses exclusively Tibetan historical accounts, which are none too reliable past the 11th century.

Crazywisdom said:

The Americans are not a lineage yet. Vajrayana is taught in a lineage. Chan clearly has features of Vajrayana. A Vajrayana lineage might know more about that than some Americans.

Malcolm wrote:

Chan clearly has features of a lineage transmission, but not a Vajrayana lineage. In any case, much of what I have written above was taught by Norbu Rinpoche. So, you can choose to follow Chetsang Rinpoche's research; I'll stick to my root guru's research.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 9:55 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Queequeg said:

ChNNR's teacher's gar sounded pretty utopian.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and when the Chinese rolled into that village they just renamed it, since they could not find any kulaks or aristocrats to murder.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 11:31 PM

Title: Re: Non-conceptual

Content:

avatamsaka3 said:

What does it mean to have a "direct, non-conceptual view of emptiness"? How can this non-conceptual characteristic be described? And which classical sources describe this view as the goal?

Malcolm wrote:

It means that one's mind has become completely free of all proliferation.

As for the second question, too many to mention.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 25th, 2020 at 11:32 PM

Title: Re: Arhats as imperfect

Content:

avatamsaka3 said:

Where did the idea come from that "arhats still have subtle obstacles". For instance, it is said that they have a "very subtle self-centeredness".

Malcolm wrote:
Sutras like the Lankāvatāra, etc.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, June 26th, 2020 at 1:07 AM
Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?
Content:

Meido said:
We do see people like Hakuin describing internal cultivation in terms of Sino-Japanese medical theory and so on, but that just speaks to the tools at hand in his day.

Malcolm wrote:
Occam's razor.

Meido said:
No idea when concern with these things entered into Chan circles. If we are to believe that the episode partly recorded in Mumonkan case 40 actually occurred, then that means late 8th/early 9th century:

Malcolm wrote:
If you have had a chance to read Van Schaik's book, Tibetan Zen, it is pretty clear that there were Chan Buddhists in Dun Huang who were interested in the Vajayāna systems that were being promulgated in Tibet. What is equally interesting to note, is that they were pretty clear on the differences between the two systems and did not seek to conflate them.

The term "direction introduction" is a term that was coined by Namkhai Norbu Rinpoche as a translation of "rang ngo thog du sprad." As a translation, the term really only translates "thog tu sprad." "Rang ngo" literally means "one's face." Sprad pa means "to introduce" in the sense of meeting (sprod) face to face (ngo). So whose state or face is one being introduced to? One's face (rang ngo).

In Kagyu Mahāmudra, the term ngo sprod, usually translated in their texts as "pointing out" is used. While the term ngo sprod is used in all schools for introduction, not all introductions are the same. Some are very gradual, like Karma Kagyu Mahāmudra. Others, like Dzogchen direct introduction, or literally Introducing one's own state (literally "face") are sudden. But also these kinds of sudden direct introductions also exist in Mahāmudra, since Mahāmudra, like Dzogchen, is a path of self-liberation (rang grol). Mahamudra is often introduced more gradually than Dzogchen in general, but it is actually a cig car ba, or sudden entry path like Dzogchen, and like Dzogchen, can be introduced immediately. Really, the main difference between Mahāmudra and Dzogchen is that the former is based on the tantras and dohas of the 9th and 10th century mahāsiddhas, and Dzogchen is based on the tantras and dohas of 7th and 8th century mahāsiddhas. I suppose some would like to argue that Chan is based in the teachings of a 5th century mahāsiddha, Bodhidharma.

Just a note about your experience with Tulku Orgyen—in general, this kind of introduction is the basis of the path. In Dzogchen teachings, one starts there. The experience discovered in that introduction is taken as the basis, upon which the student then works with the teacher to gain confidence in the experience of the introduction. Though Dzogchen is a part of secret mantra, early Nyingmapa authors like Rongzom make it extremely clear that those who did not understand or grasp the introduction right away may practice either mantra practices or regular śamatha and vipaśyanā combined with Dzogchen view. This is known in Dzogchen teachings as the indirect path.

Further, having received introduction, one is then permitted to use various methods to stabilize one's experience of introduction. But the key point is that in order to begin the Dzogchen path, or even general secret mantra, one must receive direct introduction in the beginning.

Thus, upon receiving direct introduction, one is then authorized to engage in many practices which are used to stabilize the experience of the introduction; and in fact serve as a means where the student then becomes responsible for directly encountering their own state (rang ngo thog du sprad). So, while direct introduction is the entry way into the path of Dzogchen teachings and some people get it right away (but such people are rare as stars in the daytime), if the average person does not cultivate the experience of direct introduction somewhat systematically, then Dzogchen remains something like a fantasy.

When we come to regular secret mantra, in Path and Result system of the Sakyapa, before one can even begin to meditate on the so-called creation stage, one is to meditate on what is known as the view of the inseparability of samsara and nirvana. Without going into detail, the point is that one is using the experience of the introduction during the four empowerments as the basis for cultivating the view of the inseparability of samsara and nirvana. This view is not an intellectual view, but is the recognition and equipoise in a moment of unfabricated consciousness, sometimes referred to as "ordinary mind" (tha mal gyi shes pa). Then, having stabilized the view of the inseparability of samsara and nirvana, one is considered qualified to move onto creation and completion stage practices. Parallel to this is the pervasive practice of guru yoga, which is also predicated in the direct introduction found in major empowerments or alternately, in Dzogchen direct introductions. Here, the point is fundamentally the same, the recognition and equipoise in a moment of unfabricated consciousness. Preliminary even to these practices, in the Sakya system one is supposed to practice quite a bit of yantra yoga and prāṇāyāma before even beginning to meditate the view of the inseparability of samsara and nirvana, though this approach is seldom followed in modern times.

One important point we should not overlook is that this "ordinary mind" is really the same point being addressed in Dzogchen trekchö, the view of the inseparability of samsara and nirvana, mahāmudra, and so on. The basis for cultivating this ordinary mind is nothing other than some kind of introduction where the teacher uses specific experiences to guide to student to encounter their own state. Such experience of introduction is absolutely crucial, because even if the student did not grasp the introduction at the time it was given, they were guided in this experience and this experience (which could be either physical bliss, clarity, or nonconceptuality) is used as the springboard for students to encounter their own state directly. Very intelligent people, like Mañjuśrimitra, Śrī Simha, etc., can understand the meaning of Dzogchen merely through symbols. Knowledge about this kind of Dzogchen transmission is preserved mainly in the teachings called the Vajra Bridge, connected with the so-called "space series."

Thus, as far as I know, based on what people who have trained in Rinzai Zen in Japan for many years during the 1960's and who have also practiced in Gelug, Sakya, and Kagyu, and Nyingma, this system of direct introduction does not exist in modern Zen. But is possible their training was not very complete.

It also did not exist in the 9th century, when Nubchen Sangye Yeshe wrote his Illuminating the Eye of Samadhi (bsam gtan mig sgron), where he systematically goes through gradualism, sudden entry (Chan), Mahāyoga, and Dzogchen. This is why I have been saying that Chan/Zen is sutric, not because I think sūtra is bad or inferior, but because the method of entry in sūtra and tantra are quite different, and the method of entry of the latter is not found in the former. Not only do we have direct introduction in Tibetan Vajrayāna, but this system exists in the highest levels of Shingon, where I have been informed, the final abhiṣeka rite one undergoes in one's training is called the "formless abhiṣeka." We also have the example our Matylda, who asserted some years ago on this forum, that in Soto Zen, at the higher levels of training in Japan, there are also Mikkyo rites which are not shared outside the inner circles of the highest ranks of Shingon priests, which she related were the highest teachings in that school. The presence of such methods in Rinzai would not surprise me in the least. But the key point here, with respect to Shingon and Soto, is that these methods are drawn from the tantras, not sūtra.

The lack of documentation of such methods in Soto and Rinzai, apart from anecdotal accounts from you and Matylda tend to confirm my teacher, Namkhai Norbu Rinpoche's opinion, which is that modern Zen has been very influenced by Vajrayāna Buddhism. He even went to so far once as to opine that he thought that Zen had been directly influenced by Dzogchen teachings. For example, we have a Tibetan Dzogchen master, Aro Yeshe Jungney, who lived at the end of the tenth century and into the 11th, who is said to have combined the teachings of Hashang Mohoyen with Dzogchen, though it is not completely certain he interacted with any Chinese teachers directly. On the other hand, even though it is claimed in late historical documents that Chan Buddhism was exiled from Tibet, the reality of it is that disciples of Chan Buddhist masters in Tibet very likely continued to practice Chan alongside Vajrayāna until Chan was really brought into disrepute in 11th century polemical writings like the Testament of Ba, which is one of the sources for the Samye Debate. And we have the Chan sayings of a few Tibetan Chan masters preserved in Nubchen's text.

However, I am pretty certain that such methods were not present in Tang Dynasty Chan prior to arrival of Esoteric Buddhism to China in the mid 8th century, at the same time Vajrayāna Buddhism was being transmitted to Tibet.

Unfortunately, in Tibetan Buddhism, empowerments and so on have become so rote and routine, teachers often do not make this point about direct introduction clear to their students, and the Gelugpas, following Sakya Pandita, even reject the system of direct introduction all together as a sufficient introduction to Vajrayāna.

So, these are the reasons why I say what I said about Chan etc., above, and I also recognize that nothing human beings do remains fixed and static, as much as we pretend that Dharma teachings are "brought down from the mountain" like the ten commandments or the Quran, never to be altered or questioned.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 26th, 2020 at 1:48 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

The quality level of this experiment was not high, I don't think, and only made national news because it's good fodder for the culture wars.

Malcolm wrote:

Which are sputtering, since Biden is not a good candidate to try and wage a culture against. He's white, he is not leftist, and unlike Trump, he is a lawyer and actually understands the Constitution and the law in general.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 26th, 2020 at 1:49 AM

Title: Re: Non-conceptual

Content:

avatamsaka3 said:

free of all proliferation

What does this mean?

Malcolm wrote:

It means that one has no conceptual proliferation concerning the existence or nonexistence of things.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 26th, 2020 at 3:43 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Grigoris said:

Modern Anarchists unfortunately tend to be more life-stylists than political/social actors. I blame the early punk movement (and it's commercialisation) for this.

Malcolm wrote:

Ahhh...the sounds of my youth:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 26th, 2020 at 3:47 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

And who can forget:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 26th, 2020 at 4:21 AM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

While this is Fox News' notion of anarchy, it remains a great song:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 26th, 2020 at 9:58 PM

Title: Re: Genuine advice sought.

Content:

Matt J said:

I would not relegate experience to some second class status. Official "authority" is no indication of experience or realization. And experience is often taught to be the bridge between intellectual understanding and permanent realization.

Malcolm wrote:

Experiences are mind; mind is relative.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 26th, 2020 at 11:06 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Sādhaka said:

The point is, that in Vajrayana & Dzogchen you work with the body.

If one is a practitioner of Vajrayana or Dzogchen, you can at least ward off Vajra hell with daily Hundred-Syllable recitations and so on; however for something to really “happen” in this lifetime, you need the methods for working with the body somehow (the details of which are of course not up for public discussion).

As Malcolm said:

Malcolm wrote:

...Then, having stabilized the view of the inseparability of samsara and nirvana, one is considered qualified to move onto creation and completion stage practices. Parallel to this is the pervasive practice of guru yoga, which is also predicated in the direct introduction found in major empowerments or alternately, in Dzogchen direct introductions. Here, the point is fundamentally the same, the recognition and equipoise in a moment of unfabricated consciousness. Preliminary even to these practices, in the Sakya system one is supposed to practice quite a bit of yantra yoga and prāṇāyāma before even beginning to meditate the view of the inseparability of samsara and nirvana, though this approach is seldom followed in modern times.

Damn, I was writing a long addendum to this, but somehow, a mis-stroke on the keyboard blew it all away.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 26th, 2020 at 11:16 PM

Title: Re: What is Buddhahood?

Content:

bcol01 said:

How would you describe it to someone who isn't familiar with Buddhism?

Malcolm wrote:

It is a state where one is free from all afflictions and possess all knowledge relevant to how to obtain freedom.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 26th, 2020 at 11:43 PM

Title: Re: Longchenpa's View on Alcohol?

Content:

EmptyLightfulness said:

I have been thinking that Longchenpa always praised alcohol. But I read in somewhere that he gave up alcohol in his later years, is this true or not? Thanks.

"From Longchenpa's final testament, Immaculate Light:

As alcohol and lovers are the source of afflictive emotions,

Abandon the mind that craves and obsesses over them.

Emulating the way of the sages,"

Malcolm wrote:

Not advice for himself, but his immediate students.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 26th, 2020 at 11:45 PM

Title: Re: What is Buddhahood?

Content:

bcol01 said:

When you "achieve" Buddhahood, is it temporary?

How do you know you have achieve it?

Malcolm wrote:

If you are in doubt, you are not awakened. But some deluded people think they are awakened, when they are not. Other deluded people come up with intellectual tricks to explain why their deluded activity is awakened, etc. There are many pitfalls.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 26th, 2020 at 11:54 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Sādhaka said:

Very frustrating.

Well, I don't expect you to do it all over.

I would just ask you if I've said anything wrong in my above post....

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, I was just writing some clarification, in order to forestall the inevitable "we use the body for practice too" response.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 27th, 2020 at 12:14 AM

Title: Re: Longchenpa's View on Alcohol?

Content:

Sādhaka said:

I remember seeing a post to the effect that his praise of alcohol was supposedly satire....

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it satirized all the people who drank secretly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 27th, 2020 at 4:51 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Sādhaka said:

Very frustrating.

Well, I don't expect you to do it all over.

I would just ask you if I've said anything wrong in my above post....

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, I was just writing some clarification, in order to forestall the inevitable "we use the body for practice too" response.

Caoimhghín said:

I won't lie, but I did have a response to that effect. I try to give tantra the benefit of the doubt though. "We use the body for practice" is a difficult statement because it is so vague.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, my post was meant to address any ambiguities about what this means.

Caoimhghín said:

Most practice, generally speaking, is embodied. "We use the passions for practice" seems more like a tantric slogan, but that is as a non-tantrika outsider looking in.

Is "We use the body for practice" a slogan because of Vajrayāna's preoccupation with āyurveda and working with the subtle body? In that case, "We use the subtle body for practice" might be more accurate.

Malcolm wrote:

There is really no such thing as a "subtle body." This term is a western term.

Everything in the body is made of the five elements, there is nothing in the body that is not composed from the five elements.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 27th, 2020 at 5:45 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Meido said:

Of course Zen - like Japanese mikkyo (Shingon, Tendai, Shugen) - lacks the same understanding of channels and chakras that developed in later vajrayana.

Malcolm wrote:

To put it succinctly, the reason we have four empowerments in HYT is that we have what are called the four mandalas: the nāḍis, nāḍī syllables, bindu, and vāyu.

The dependent origination of the human body begins with the ālayavijñāna mounted upon what is known as the "great prāṇavāyu" merging with the reproductive material of a male and a female. The mind is not differentiable from the vāyu (aka winds or airs) in any meaningful way. Thus, the newly formed zygote is shaped through the internal movement of vāyu/mind and its movement forms nāḍis in the body, which are in the form of syllables, filled with bindus, that are propelled by vāyu over the process of human gestation.

The shape of our body, our perception of the world, our thoughts, afflictive disposition and so on is largely governed by this anatomy. So, to recap: based on conception there is the mandala of vāyu; based on the reproductive material of the parents, there is the mandala of bindu. Based on the formation of knots (grantha) in the nāḍis, there are syllables. And finally, based on the full development of the human body there is the external structure of the nāḍī system, which one should understand as the arteries, blood vessels, and nervous system in the human body. These nāḍis contain the other three elements, the syllables, bindus, and vāyus. The four empowerments are the purifier of the basis purification, these four mandalas. If we fail to attain buddhahood during the empowerment, then we have the method of practicing sadhanas with the creation and completion stage. The creation stage has two parts: the outer creation stage and the inner creation stage. The outer creation stage purifies afflictions of our bardo experiences, conceptions, gestations and deaths from beginningless lifetime, and all the activities of daily life, eating, sleeping, wearing clothes, sex, etc. The inner creation acts as a purifier for the four mandalas described above. However, creation stage is not sufficient for buddhahood, though it is sufficient for awakening on the impure bhumis. For buddhahood, one needs to practice the completion stage practices with its prāṇāyāma practices, sexual yogas [which frankly are a lot of work and not really that erotic], etc., because the creation stage is largely a conceptual samadhi framework, unifying appearance and emptiness, while the completion stage is what takes one beyond mind with nonconceptual samadhi of clarity and emptiness, bliss and emptiness, and great bliss and emptiness, also known as the connate. The completion stage is how one enters the state called saḥajajñāna or mahāmudra.

Cakras in the body are places where arteries, nerves, and blood vessels all work together to produce various major functions in the body: the brain for example is understood to govern sense cognition, hence it is called the mahasukha cakra, the cakra of great bliss. The throat cakra governs speech, swallowing, and so on, hence it is called the sambogacakra. The heart cakra governs consciousness and circulation, hence it is called the dharmacakra; the navel cakra governs metabolism and the development of the body, hence it is called the nirmanacakra, and there is another mahāsukha cakra in the genital region that governs reproduction.

The crown cakra represents the nirmāṇkāya and is the basis for its realization; the throat cakra represents the sambhogakāya and is the basis for its realization. The heart cakra represents the dharmakāya and governs its realization. The navel cakra represents the svabhavakāya, and governs its realization. The four empowerments condition these four cakras and plant the seed of the four kāyas in them.

The knots formed in the nāḍīs because of our karma and affliction govern how we perceive the world. For example, there is a nāḍī in the body, which, if one's vāyu gets "stuck" there, will cause one to experience the world as a preta experiences the world. The idea here is that all of our experience of the six lokas is actually predicated on our bodies and how it is formed. Therefore, the way to prevent rebirth in the six lokas is to purify all causes for rebirth in the six lokas through understanding the dependent origination of the body.

All of our beginningless past-life saṃsāric experience is actually stored in our present physical form, which is the expression of traces of karma and affliction. Therefore, the Buddha has taught us that the fastest way to eliminate all karma and affliction as well as its traces is to use the body as our method. Not only that, but through the use of physical bliss, and various types of prāṇāyāma, one can rapidly induce profound samādhis that in sūtric contexts take not only years to develop but lifetimes, because the process of advancing on the paths and stages over many lifetimes corresponds to a bodhisattva taking birth in more and more refined bodies until such bodhisattvas cease taking birth in upper half of the desire realm at all after the eighth bhūmi is realized. This process of constant rebirth is bypassed in Vajrayāna, because in Vajrayāna one works directly with the dependent origination of the body inwardly, not outwardly. It is for this reason that Vajrayāna asserts its superior ability to lead a superior practitioner to full buddhahood, characterized as freedom and omniscience, within a single lifetime. Rather than predicating its practice on renunciation; Vajrayāna predicates its approach on transformation; therefore, Vajrayāna practitioners do not need to abandon using meat, alcohol, sexual activity, etc., as they must in common Mahāyāna. These activities are all transformed in the context of the sadhana practice. The process of attaining buddhahood is based on the increasingly subtle states of samādhi which are cultivated in each of the completion stage practices, which are connected with the process of straightening the knots of the nāḍīs, then purifying the bindus, and finally, working with the vāyu mandala in the end. The samādhi associated with these three stages of completion practice are increasingly more subtle. While a consort, whether physical or visualized, is not necessary for the first of these three phases, in many Vajrayāna systems it is argued that one is needed for the final two phases of completion stage practice if one is to attain buddhahood in this life. Also the consort has to be the same level of practitioner as oneself. For example, an unawakened bodhisattva cannot have an awakened consort, and vice versa. Some Vajrayāna systems however claim that such a consort is not needed at all. So there are some arguments about this issue.

Thus, the whole point of this kind of HYT practice, to put it plainly, is to reverse dependent origination of the body/mind complex in toto through practices that are directly based on the anatomy of the human body, understood through how it develops in the process of gestation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 27th, 2020 at 5:50 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

I won't lie, but I did have a response to that effect. I try to give tantra the benefit of the doubt though. "We use the body for practice" is a difficult statement because it is so vague.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, my post was meant to address any ambiguities about what this means.

Caoimhghín said:

Most practice, generally speaking, is embodied. "We use the passions for practice" seems more like a tantric slogan, but that is as a non-tantrika outsider looking in.

Is "We use the body for practice" a slogan because of Vajrayāna's preoccupation with āyurveda and working with the subtle body? In that case, "We use the subtle body for practice" might be more accurate.

Malcolm wrote:

There is really no such thing as a "subtle body." This term is a western term.

Everything in the body is made of the five elements, there is nothing in the body that is not composed from the five elements.

Caoimhghín said:

When people speak of the gandharva as a body of "subtle form" one acquires in the antarabhava, is "subtle" a Westernism or are they translating something?

Malcolm wrote:

The body of a gandharva is principally formed of vāyu/mind. It is a so called "mental body." But even the body of a bardo being is made of five elements; because all of the elements contain the other elements.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 27th, 2020 at 5:55 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Astus said:

But if this does not happen, we can ensure that we are reborn in a pure realm. We are therefore advised to aspire for a rebirth in Sukhavati.'[/i]

Malcolm wrote:

The easiest way to get into the pure lands is to receive complete Dzogchen teachings, understand them, and then fail to practice them. No prayers necessary.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 27th, 2020 at 6:08 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

When people speak of the gandharva as a body of "subtle form" one acquires in the antarabhava, is "subtle" a Westernism or are they translating something?

Malcolm wrote:

The body of a gandharva is principally formed of vāyu/mind. It is a so called "mental body." But even the body of a bardo being is made of five elements; because all of the elements contain the other elements.

Caoimhghín said:

So I take it that mind is your fifth element when you say this, not akash.

What is akash in your tradition, to the degree that the answer is exoteric?

Malcolm wrote:

Space is the fifth element.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 27th, 2020 at 8:01 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

So I take it that mind is your fifth element when you say this, not akash.

What is akash in your tradition, to the degree that the answer is exoteric?

Malcolm wrote:

Space is the fifth element.

Caoimhghín said:

Okay. Well, you've got to be slower with me in particular then. When you said "because all of the elements contain the other elements," you were counting mind, right? That is how the "mind-made" gandharva can contain the other elements, I presumed.

I am familiar with a six-element system: earth, water, fire, air, space, mind.

Malcolm wrote:

No, I was only counting the five elements, space through earth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 27th, 2020 at 9:14 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

All of our beginningless past-life samsaric experience is actually stored in our present physical form, which is the expression of traces of karma and affliction.

Astus said:

Actually stored as physical elements, or some version of avijnapti-rupa, or is it more like there is a correlation between the alayavijnana and the body?

Malcolm wrote:

As kinks and knots in our channels.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 27th, 2020 at 9:15 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The easiest way to get into the pure lands is to receive complete Dzogchen teachings, understand them, and then fail to practice them. No prayers necessary.

Astus said:

Why would it be easier to learn and understand complete (what counts as complete?) Dzogchen teachings, instead of reciting Amitabha's name right now? Also, how can Dzogchen studies result in birth in Sukhavati, what is the cause for that?

Malcolm wrote:

You will have to go and learn dzogchen teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 27th, 2020 at 10:32 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Buddha recollection will not result in Buddhahood in one life. Yoga does.

Astus said:

Do you mean anybody who did yoga - whatever that means - once for ten minutes attains buddhahood in this life? Or if one does yoga very well for thirty years, buddhahood is guaranteed to happen then? Because those who faithfully recite the name of Amitabha even just ten times are guaranteed to be born in Sukhavati, and once there, buddhahood is guaranteed as well, no fall back possible. So although one may practise yoga throughout one's life, unless buddhahood was actually attained, one should still aim to be born in Sukhavati.

As Thrangu Rinpoche says in chapter 12 of Luminous Clarity:

'To be reborn in most of the great pure realms, one needs an immeasurable store of merit. There is an exception to this, however, which is the pure realm of Sukhavati. Although it is hard to get in to an authentic pure realm, it is easy to be born into the realm of Sukhavati because of the aspiration of the Buddha Amitabha. So Karma Chagme advises us to make the intense aspiration to achieve rebirth in Sukhavati because if we are not born in a pure realm, then we might be reborn in one of the higher realms within samsara, which is still samsara. So we wish to achieve awakening through the practice of the generation and completion stages and the practice of Mahamudra and Dzogchen. But if this does not happen, we can ensure that we are reborn in a pure realm. We are therefore advised to aspire for a rebirth in Sukhavati.'

Crazywisdom said:

Pure lands are said to be 500 super long times or so. I mean the yoga of two stages, yoga of rushen, etc. It is done as a teacher explains.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, when taking birth in the pure lands, there is no guarantee one will take rebirth in an open lotus. And even then, it takes thousands upon thousands of human years (I figured it out once and reported the length of time somewhere in this board) to attain awakening. By contrast, Dzogchen teachings promise that if one takes birth in the pure lands as a result of having encountered and understood Dzogchen teachings, full awakening, buddhahood, will happen there in as little as 500 human years.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 27th, 2020 at 10:38 PM

Title: Re: Ichinen Sanzen/Mahavairocana /Gohonzon/?Rigpa?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Nembutsu is actually one of the oldest Buddhist practices, and is not necessarily connected to Amida Buddha. Its merely a contemplation on the buddha, whichever buddha one focuses on. I consider Daimoku and nembutsu practice. I don't know if others would agree.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it is called Buddha anusmṛti, recollection of the Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 27th, 2020 at 10:42 PM

Title: Re: Ichinen Sanzen/Mahavairocana /Gohonzon/?Rigpa?

Content:

tkp67 said:

How can all buddha be recognized equally from a mortal perspective when mortality in and of it self is provisional?

I though this was a reason for the lotus, to remove that ignorance.

I have to consider I am way off base here.

Malcolm wrote:

All buddhas have the same realization, the dharmakāya. This means the source of all teachings of the buddhas can be considered to have a single source, buddhahood. But since there are infinite buddhas, there are infinite causes and conditions which leads to their buddhahood. Those infinite causes and conditions make it possible for them to teach infinite sentient beings in all dimensions.

Minobu said:

but They all are teaching the same thing , right /

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddhas all speak a single vajra word, which is heard differently by sentient beings of differing inclinations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 27th, 2020 at 10:46 PM

Title: Re: Who is Mahavairocana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In pre-Yogacāra Buddhism, there were only two kāyas: dharmakāya and rūpakāya.

In pre-Madhyamaka/PP Buddhism, there was only one kāya mentioned, dharmakāya, that referred to collected words of the Buddha.

Caoimhghín said:

I'm in a bit of disagreement with you here. PP Buddhism has two bodies: dharma and form, the same you give for "pre-Yogacara." These two bodies are in śrāvaka literature as well, in the suttas and āgamas.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, PP Buddhism has two kāyas.

There is no mention in the agamas and so on of any kāya other than dharmakāya. The notion of the rūpakāya as a thing is Mahāyāna in inception. Yes, of course the Buddha has a physical body, but when there is a reference to the dharmakāya in pre Mahāyāna literature, kāya is equivalent to skandha, i.e., dharmakāya = all the dharmaskandhas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 27th, 2020 at 10:49 PM

Title: Re: Who is Mahavairocana?

Content:

johnnarundel said:

I included this in the last forum, so I apologize if this is repetitive. But, since it is titled "Who is Mahavairocana?" I thought this dictionary entry explaining both would be helpful and relevant.

"Dictionary of Buddhist Terms and Concepts"

Vairocana [毘盧遮那]

A Buddha who appears in the Kegon, Bommo, and Dainichi sutras. The Kegon Sutra in particular describes his pure land, the Lotus Treasury World. A great image of Vairocana made of gold was erected at Todaiji Temple in Nara as a result of a vow made by Emperor Shomu in 743. It was consecrated in 752. The Shingon Sect equates Vairocana with its central deity, Mahavairocana. The Shingon teaching regards the entire universe as a manifestation of this Buddha. See Also Dainichi.

Dainichi [大日如来]: (Skt. Mahavairocana)

The Buddha worshiped in esoteric teaching. Often referred to as Dainichi Nyorai (Mahavairocana Tathagata). This Buddha is mentioned in the Dainichi and Kongocho Sutras. He is regarded as the Buddha in the Dharma Body or Property of the Law (Jap hosshin, Skt. Dharma-kaya) aspect who personifies the unchanging truth of all phenomena and is the source from which all other Buddha and Bodhisattvas spring. The esoteric teaching holds that Dainichi is always expounding the Law in this universe and that the common mortal can fuse his life with this Buddha through the practice of the three mysteries. Dainichi has two aspects, the Dainichi of the womb world who represents the fundamental truth of the universe, and the Dainichi of the Diamond World who represents wisdom. These two are fundamentally one. The Tendai and Shingon forms of esotericism differ in their interpretations of Dainichi. The former holds that Dainichi is the Property of the Law aspect, and Shakyamuni, the property of action aspect, of the same Buddha, while the latter maintains that they are two entirely distinct Buddhas.

The Shingon teaching regards the entire universe as a manifestation of this Buddha

Minobu said:

So does Malcolm accept we are in the Palm of MahaVairocana

Malcolm wrote:

In Dzogchen teachings and Vajrayāna in general, we understand the five elements themselves to be tathāgatas. We understand the universe itself is the body of a Buddha. The reason we do not see this is that are we are temporally obscured.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 27th, 2020 at 11:05 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

LastLegend said:

To crazywisdom,

Let's not pretend that there isn't bad thought about superiority versus inferiority back and forth for decades and we still rock it this boat like it's liberation. But Dharma travels around and returns.

Malcolm wrote:

Superior and inferior are relative. For someone who has no faith in Dzogchen, it is not a superior teaching. For someone who has no faith in Vajrayāna, it is not a superior teaching. For someone who has no faith in Chan, it is not a superior teaching. For someone who has no faith in the gradual Mahāyāna path, it is not a superior teaching. For someone who has no faith in pratyekabuddhayāna, it is not a superior teaching. For someone who has no faith in srāvakayāna, it is not a superior teaching. For someone who has no faith in Vedanta, etc., it is not a superior teaching, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 27th, 2020 at 11:32 PM

Title: Re: Statue of Buddha in bedroom

Content:

pemachophel said:

If one has taken refuge in the Three Jewels, then it's inappropriate to have sex in front of an image of the Buddha. I'm pretty sure it's classified as one of the sexual misconducts.

GrapeLover said:

Just for interest, noting to confirm that Kangyur Rinpoche does include it as sexual misconduct in his commentary to Treasury of Precious Qualities

Malcolm wrote:

Good thing we have an option on whether we follow that precept or not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 28th, 2020 at 12:15 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Pure lands are said to be 500 super long times or so. I mean the yoga of two stages, yoga of rushen, etc. It is done as a teacher explains.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, when taking birth in the pure lands, there is no guarantee one will take rebirth in an open lotus. And even then, it takes thousands upon thousands of human years (I figured it out once and reported the length of time somewhere in this board) to attain awakening. By contrast, Dzogchen teachings promise that if one takes birth in the pure lands as a result of having encountered and understood Dzogchen teachings, full awakening, buddhahood, will happen there in as little as 500 human years.

Astus said:

There are some calculations and explanations given on how and why birth in Sukhavati is the fastest way <https://purelanders.com/2011/12/10/the-fastest-way-to-buddhahood-is-via-birth-in-pure-land/>. To that it might be added that all teachings are available there, and the realm is ideal to perfect them.

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, it is really is not a quick path to full buddhahood unless you are born as someone of grade 1, according to the scheme you present. And this 500 human year period applies even to those who have committed the five misdeeds of immediate retribution, etc. By contrast, according to your scheme as presented, buddhahood in Sukhavati for such people takes 12 mahākalpas (720 minor kalpas), or twelve billion ninety-six million human years. So yeah, Sukhavati is a slow path according to Sūtrayāna norms and a human perspective.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 28th, 2020 at 12:48 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

climb-up said:

I thought I had asked this a long time ago, but I searched and am thinking that I mis-remembered.

Does anyone know if there was any relationship and/or interaction between ChNN and Taoist martial arts teacher Bruce Kumar Frantzis?

On the back of two Frantzis' books there is an endorsement by ChNN. I know that sometimes publishers just try to get authors to endorse other authors books, but I haven't really seen ChNNs endorsements on anyone else's books so...

Frantzis is, apparently, authorized to teach Dzogchen, even though he publicly teaches Taoist 'water method' meditation. Perhaps they met in that capacity?

Malcolm wrote:

I met Frantzis once, in 1992, at the first ChNN retreat I attended. I have no idea if he was "authorized:" to teach Dzogchen (people make too big a deal out of this idea, which is mostly politics). But I can verify that he is someone who took teachings from ChNN. I don't recall seeing him in 1993, and I don't recall seeing him in retreats in Western Ma, Italy, or Tenerife. That does not mean he did not attend retreats in other places where I was absent. Some of ChNN's students from the '80s faded away in the early nineties, found other teachers more to their liking, etc. ChNN taught over 600 retreats during his lifetime. The only person who has at all of them was ChNN.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 28th, 2020 at 1:06 AM

Title: Re: Are Zen teachers awakened?

Content:

Dan74 said:

everyone who deserved the name 'Zen teacher'

Astus said:

Zen teacher, as in anyone who somebody called a Zen teacher, or anyone who received such a title from an organisation, or what version do you mean?

clyde said:

Since I asked the question, I meant Zen teachers who have been authorized.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, how can you be sure the person who authorized a Zen teacher is qualified to do so. You are putting a lot of burden on a very tenuous chain of authority.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 28th, 2020 at 1:15 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

climb-up said:

He doesn't claim to be authorized by ChNN (THAT would not be believable) but by Lama Wangdor, whom I don't know.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, that explains it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 28th, 2020 at 1:18 AM

Title: Re: In between Taoism and Buddhism

Content:

PeterC said:

That's why I would be very cautious of anyone saying what Taoism is or maintains unless they're doing so from a solid academic understanding of the daoist canon, which is a massive and complex corpus.

Malcolm wrote:
And 99% of it is still in Chinese.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, June 28th, 2020 at 1:35 AM
Title: Re: Are Zen teachers awakened?
Content:
Matylda said:

True awakening is extremely difficult today in zen. Compare to it, it is extremely easy to become a zen teacher or even a zen master.

Malcolm wrote:
It is very difficult to find a genuinely awakened teacher in any tradition these days. We live in degenerate times.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, June 28th, 2020 at 1:36 AM
Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu
Content:

climb-up said:
He doesn't claim to be authorized by ChNN (THAT would not be believable) but by Lama Wangdor, whom I don't know.

Malcolm wrote:
Well, that explains it.

climb-up said:
Does it? How so?
Was Lama Wangdor free with his authorizations, and/or political with his appointments?

Malcolm wrote:
It explains who he claims authority from to teach.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, June 28th, 2020 at 5:55 AM
Title: Re: Are Zen teachers awakened?
Content:
clyde said:
they have had some direct realization.

Astus said:

Direct realisation of what? BTW, I think most people who stick with the Dharma do so because they find it beneficial. Whether that benefit is of mundane or transcendent nature is another issue.

clyde said:

“seeing one’s true nature”

Malcolm wrote:

What's that?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 28th, 2020 at 6:23 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Toenail said:

Malcolm, what do you mean by understanding the teachings? Knowledge of the natural state? As in: 'you get it', when you are receiving DI?

Malcolm wrote:

As in, you comprehend the direct perception of dharmatā and you know what that means.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 28th, 2020 at 6:27 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Pure lands are said to be 500 super long times or so. I mean the yoga of two stages, yoga of rushen, etc. It is done as a teacher explains.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, when taking birth in the pure lands, there is no guarantee one will take rebirth in an open lotus. And even then, it takes thousands upon thousands of human years (I figured it out once and reported the length of time somewhere in this board) to attain awakening. By contrast, Dzogchen teachings promise that if one takes birth in the pure lands as a result of having encountered and understood Dzogchen teachings, full awakening, buddhahood, will happen there in as little as 500 human years.

Crazywisdom said:

Who wants to sit on a Lotus for 500 years? Lets just get the job done.

Malcolm wrote:

Most practitioners (99.999) will not attain rainbow body. A small number will achieve buddhahood at the time of death, most will attain buddhahood in the bardo of dharatā, and the remainder will have to take rebirth in the natural nirmanakāya buddhahood. This is all laid out fairly straight forwardly in the Self-Arisen Vidyā Tantra, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 28th, 2020 at 6:32 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

LastLegend said:

To crazywisdom,

Let's not pretend that there isn't bad thought about superiority versus inferiority back and forth for decades and we still rock it this boat like it's liberation. But Dharma travels around and returns.

Malcolm wrote:

Superior and inferior are relative. For someone who has no faith in Dzogchen, it is not a superior teaching. For someone who has no faith in Vajrayāna, it is not a superior teaching. For someone who has no faith in Chan, it is not a superior teaching. For someone who has no faith in the gradual Mahāyāna path, it is not a superior teaching. For someone who has no faith in pratyekabuddhayāna, it is not a superior teaching. For someone who has no faith in sāvakayāna, it is not a superior teaching. For someone who has no faith in Vedānta, etc., it is not a superior teaching, and so on.

Crazywisdom said:

I do not put much into faith. I need to experience results and then I can believe other reasonable claims made.

Malcolm wrote:

By "faith" I mean adhimokṣa, translated into Tibetan as "mos pa," which means confidence, interest, aspiration, faith, and so on. It is the first of the five indriyas, along with diligence, mindfulness, wisdom, and samādhi.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 28th, 2020 at 7:59 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Steel said:

According to Shinran one attains buddhahood instantaneously upon rebirth in sukhavati. It is both the easiest and fastest path in all of Dharma.

Malcolm wrote:

Shinran was wrong. His assertion cannot be defended either through citation or through reasoning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 28th, 2020 at 8:11 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Shinran was wrong. His assertion cannot be defended either thorough citation or through reasoning.

Astus said:

Not wrong, if it is understood that the various grades of the practitioners is valid from the human perspective but not in Sukhavati.

'In the Pure Recompensed Land produced by the great vow, there is no distinction of grades and stages. In an instantaneous thought-moment one quickly realizes highest, perfect, true enlightenment. Hence, we say "crosswise transcendence.'
(<http://web.mit.edu/stclair/www/horai/kgss-c.htm>, BDK ed: p 123)

'Those who wish to be born in the Pure Land are originally divided into nine classes, but [after they have been born there] there are no differences, just as the waters of the Tzu River and the Sheng River become of one taste [upon entering the sea]. How can we conceive of this?'
(<http://web.mit.edu/stclair/www/horai/kgss-e.htm>, BDK ed: p 172)

'If the single thought of joy and gratitude is awakened in us,
We shall realize nirvana without severing our blind passions.
When ordinary people and sages as well as those who commit the [five] grave offenses and abusers of the [Right] Dharma are taken into the Vow,
They become one in spiritual attainment, just as many rivers become of one taste upon entering the sea.'
(<http://web.mit.edu/stclair/www/horai/kgss-b.htm>, BDK ed: p 76)

Malcolm wrote:

None of these assertions are reasonable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 28th, 2020 at 8:13 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, it is really is not a quick path to full buddhahood unless you are born as someone of grade 1, according to the scheme you present. And this 500 human year period applies even to those who have committed the five misdeeds of immediate retribution, etc. By contrast, according to your scheme as presented, buddhahood in Sukhavati for such people takes 12 mahākālpas (720 minor kalpas), or twelve billion ninety-six million human years. So yeah, Sukhavati is a slow path according to Sūtrayāna norms and a human perspective.

Astus said:

From an ordinary human perspective it might seem slow, but from the individual's perspective even those of the worst character spend only 12 days enclosed in a lotus (and even there there is no suffering). Furthermore, if we accept that there are teachings that can liberate in this human life, it is so much easier to accomplish the same in Sukhavati.

Malcolm wrote:

It is still a slow path. Millions upon millions of years.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 28th, 2020 at 10:55 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

GrapeLover said:

With respect to time, I tend to think of this excerpt from the Vimalakirti Sutra:

“The bodhisattva who lives in the inconceivable liberation, for the sake of disciplining those living beings who are disciplined through immeasurable periods of evolution, can make the passing of a week seem like the passing of an eon, and he can make the passing of an eon seem like the passing of a week for those who are disciplined through a short period of evolution. The living beings who are disciplined through an immeasurable period of evolution actually perceive a week to be the passing of an eon, and those disciplined by a short period of evolution actually perceive an eon to be the passing of a week.”

It seems like if there's anywhere that you'd be under the very direct influence of Buddhas and bodhisattvas dwelling in the inconceivable liberation then it would be a Pure Land. So it seems to me that as much time will seem to pass as suits the individual to be developed. The “actual” time that has passed in the meantime would seem to be immaterial.

Malcolm wrote:

There are two points. The first point is whether or not there is a guarantee of immediate rebirth in Sukhavati. Some people assert there is, some people assert there is not. The text of the vows pretty much excludes those who have committed any of the five karmas of immediate retribution, despite Shinran's assertions. "Thinking of Amitabha ten times" is also pretty vague.

Beyond this, there is the fact that Tibetan Buddhists such as myself only read the the smaller Sukhavativyuha. This does not mean that the large sūtra is invalid, it was just never translated into Tibetan, and thus, plays no part in Tibetan Buddhist understandings of Sukhavati. Moreover, the large sūtra extolls the benefits of practicing virtue in this life above that of practicing in Sukhavati:

If you strictly observe the precepts of abstinence with upright thought and mindfulness even for a day and a night, the merit acquired will surpass that of practicing good in the land of Amitāyus for a hundred years. The reason is that in that buddha land of effortless spontaneity all the inhabitants do good without committing even a hair's breadth of evil. If in this world you do good for ten days and nights, the merit acquired will surpass that of practicing good in the buddha lands of other directions for a thousand years.

Three Pure Land Sūtras, BDK, pp. 55

As for those stuck in lotus flowers:

The Buddha said to Maitreya, "Those beings born within the lotus buds are like that.

Because of their doubt of the Buddha's wisdom they have been born in palaces.

Although they receive no punishment or ill treatment even for a single moment, they must pass five hundred years there without being able to see the Three Treasures, make offerings to the Buddha, or cultivate a store of virtue. This is distressing to them. Though there are other pleasures, they do not enjoy living there.

Three Pure Land Sūtras, BDK, pp. 59

In general, the sutra itself offers a carrot and stick approach. Sukhavati is the carrot; but you cannot get there without being a good Dharma practitioner, practicing the path of renunciation. Not only this, but the small sūtra makes it clear that this devotional practice should occur in the week before one's death, hence the reason why most Pure Land practice in Tibetan Buddhism is taken up at the end of a person's life. And finally, as stated above, the merit of Dharma practice in this Sahaloka far surpasses the merit of Dharma practice in Sukhavati.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 28th, 2020 at 11:22 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Russell said:

I am personally sure it is an authentic endorsement from ChNN, having been a student of both for 20 years. If you are not sure then why not ask the International Gakyil or SSI to clarify. Many students of Bruce Frantzis were also students of ChNN and asked ChNN questions about how to integrate the two teachings for example so this may be how ChNN became familiar with Bruce Frantzis's teachings (which are not neo-Taoism, they are in the lineage of Lao Tzu's Water method or old Taoism).

Very occasionally Bruce Frantzis does teach Dzogchen, once that I know of and attended myself. Also as far as I know Lama Wangdor was not endorsing teachers for political reasons. The three I know all have relaxed, informal and spontaneous styles of teachings but are all serious committed teachers successfully helping many people. For those of you who very much like polite, formal, very structured philosophical styles these teachers are probably not for you.

Malcolm wrote:

Frantzis' notion of Universal Consciousness however is definitely not consistent with Dzogchen teachings on any level.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 28th, 2020 at 11:29 PM

Title: Re: What to Recite at Graveyards?

Content:

PeterC said:

If in doubt, Sang offerings are good things to do in general. If you're concerned about pretas there are specific water offerings you can do for them. I don't have transmission of those but they should be easy to come by.

Malcolm wrote:

Jvalamukha torma. It does not require transmission.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 28th, 2020 at 11:29 PM

Title: Re: Read an article on "mind-blind" (Aphantasia) today

Content:

tobes said:

Yes, I'm sure.

Grigoris said:

How can you be sure? How can you know what (or how) somebody else is seeing?

Quick answer: You can't.

Malcolm wrote:

The old qualia trick.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 12:41 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Russell said:

Well I could never follow the Buddhist criticism of Taoism on this site since the Taoist teachings I have do talk about and introduce you to emptiness not as a fixed nothing, but the empty infinite potential of the individual and eventually much later on how this integrates or becomes one with the emptiness of all and everything (aka universal consciousness).

Malcolm wrote:

Not sure you can equate Taoist nonbeing (wu) with śūnyāta.

However, it is unclear from the term "universal consciousness" when contrasted with "individual consciousness" that Frantzis is not proposing some kind of brahmin.

Anyway, Dzogchen teachings very clearly negate the kind of nondual consciousness proposed by Hindus such as Shankara, etc. I don't see how Frantzis is saying something any different than Advaita, on this score, based on what he states in his second book.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 1:53 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Russell said:

I read those books long ago, but probably you are right, from those words it could be interpreted that way. The only published source I know where Frantzis gets more philosophical is an audio course on the Tao Te Ching, this is going to be published as a book so I think there you will see these terms defined more precisely and related to emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

Can Frantzis read Classical Chinese fluently? I mean, would you take teachings on Dzogchen seriously from anyone who could not read classical Tibetan fluently and had not been trained in how to read ancient Dzogchen tantras?

I sure wouldn't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 2:29 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Minobu said:

Malcolm correct me if i'm wrong.

You did the three year three month three day completion stage tantra in tibet...At least thats what i recall Namdrol saying on E-Sangha.

At the time that was the end all and be all ...so is that vajrayana ?

Now it's Dzogchen is the fastest but you got to wait till ya die .

so whats up with this.

Completion stage Tantra on the back burner or did you just discard the whole idea.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I did a three year retreat. Not in tibet, however, but in Western Mass. I was already practicing Dzogchen at that time.

I never said you have to wait until you die to achieve awakening. Full awakening, buddhahood, is a different story. You and I are not going to attain buddhahood in this lifetime. But can we attain awakening in this lifetime? Of course we can.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 2:47 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Minobu said:

Malcolm correct me if i'm wrong.

You did the three year three month three day completion stage tantra in tibet...At least thats what i recall Namdrol saying on E-Sangha.

At the time that was the end all and be all ...so is that vajrayana ?

Now it's Dzogchen is the fastest but you got to wait till ya die .

so whats up with this.

Completion stage Tantra on the back burner or did you just discard the whole idea.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I did a three year retreat. Not in tibet, however, but in Western Mass. I was already practicing Dzogchen at that time.

I never said you have to wait until you die to achieve awakening. Full awakening, buddhahood, is a different story. You and I are not going to attain buddhahood in this lifetime. But can we attain awakening in this lifetime? Of course we can.

Minobu said:

thanks ...i get what you mean now..

so whats the diff btw awakening and buddhahood...are you saying certain realizations are open for us to experience but full blown Buddhahood is another story..

Malcolm wrote:

In Mahayāna, buddhahood is another name for omniscience. Bodhi, awakening, means the realization of emptiness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 2:51 AM

Title: Re: Are Zen teachers awakened?

Content:

Astus said:

Actually, that passage reads: 'Future buddhas and past buddhas transmit the mind by mind not relying on written words.' (「前佛後佛以心傳心。不立文字。」 (CBETA 2020.Q1, T48, no. 2009, p. 373b13-14)). And then of course the text (written word) goes on to talk of (define) what mind is.

Malcolm wrote:

Makes for good google translate poetry:

"Before and after the Buddha passed the heart with the heart. No writing."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 2:53 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Russell said:

To reply to your further edit. I don't know, I assumed that that would be possible and there were some stories like this, where people with the right karmic connection can successfully learn dzogchen from illiterate even senile (most of the time) masters?

Malcolm wrote:

I was expressing my personal reservations, considering how much crap is out there passing for "dzogchen teachings."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 4:12 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Minobu said:

thanks ...i get what you mean now..

so whats the diff btw awakening and buddhahood...are you saying certain realizations are open for us to experience but full blown Buddhahood is another story..

Malcolm wrote:

In Mahayāna, buddhahood is another name for omniscience. Bodhi, awakening, means the realization of emptiness.

Caoimhghín said:

But isn't that merely the first bhūmi?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Caoimhghín said:

Don't you at least have to get to 7/8 to be called awakened to any degree?

Malcolm wrote:
No.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 4:17 AM
Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu
Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Taoist yoga really requires very little to no scholarly or philosophical knowledge to practice. It's not taught the way Buddhist methods are at all, and even native Chinese speakers who write authoritative books on it tend to teach it without a lot of reliance on written sources, in my experience. It is not a scholarly tradition in the manner of Buddhadharma, or at least the scholarly tradition seems more optional.

Further, some teachers say that the academizing of it came after the fact, and that the original Taoist "yogis" were anything but scholars. For instance, Tai Chi certainly did not come from the Tai Chi classics nor the volumes and volumes of esoteric literature surrounding it, that all came much later.

As far as the actual religious/philosophical content, it's pretty essentialist in my experience. The worldview of Taosim sort of precludes the notion of Samsara, in my opinion. It's interesting and I think does intersect in places with some Buddhist teachings, but it's clearly a different worldview, and the ultimate goal of the yogic method itself of creating a "shen baby" really differs from Buddhist methods. You could find parallels with Phowa etc., but it's its own deal.

Malcolm wrote:
I have seen a lot of real bullshit that passes for "taoist energy work." For example, David Verdesi.

ChNN never once, that I can recall, proposed that people should go learn Qigong, etc.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 4:37 AM
Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?
Content:

Caoimhghín said:
But isn't that merely the first bhūmi?

Malcolm wrote:
Yes.

Caoimhghín said:

Don't you at least have to get to 7/8 to be called awakened to any degree?

Malcolm wrote:

No.

Caoimhghín said:

I guess that's the difference there. On what basis do you call all bhūmikas "awakened?"

Malcolm wrote:

All bodhisattvas on the bhumis are āryas. Bodhisattvas on the paths of accumulations and application are not āryas. Since the former have realized emptiness in a direct perception, they are āryas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 5:13 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Beyond this, there is the fact that Tibetan Buddhists such as myself only read the the smaller Sukhavativyuha. This does not mean that the large sūtra is invalid, it was just never translated into Tibetan, and thus, plays no part in Tibetan Buddhist understandings of Sukhavati.

Losal Samten said:

Interesting; any idea why it slipped past both the old and new school translators?

Malcolm wrote:

Perhaps it went out of print in India.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 7:47 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Russell said:

I always felt ChNN was aware of what Frantzis was doing since many of his students went to ChNN also. I don't recall any specific mention, but ChNN for sure encouraged us to use methods from other traditions, Buddhist or not, if they were useful and not be limited.

I know people who asked ChNN about how to combine Frantzis's teachings with Dzogchen and they were very happy with the answers they got and continue practising both together decades later.

Malcolm wrote:

The Boss never conditioned anyone. On the other hand, this did not mean he necessarily went along with people's ideas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 7:49 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Yes, well there's a lot of real bullshit out there that passes for Dzogchen too.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed. This is why I question people who claim to be Dzogchen teachers when they do not have any knowledge of Tibetan at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 7:52 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In general, the sutra itself offers a carrot and stick approach. Sukhavati is the carrot; but you cannot get there without being a good Dharma practitioner, practicing the path of renunciation. Not only this, but the small sūtra makes it clear that this devotional practice should occur in the week before one's death, hence the reason why most Pure Land practice in Tibetan Buddhism is taken up at the end of a person's life. And finally, as stated above, the merit of Dharma practice in this Sahaloka far surpasses the merit of Dharma practice in Sukhavati.

Steel said:

Renunciation isn't a requirement for birth in sukhavati. Shinran himself was married and had seven children, and he taught the path to everyone including warriors, hunters, butchers, and prostitutes. This can all be backed by the 18th Vow.

Malcolm wrote:

The 18th vow is not a guarantee one will take rebirth in Sukhavati. Even if it were, the same sūtra states:

"Although they receive no punishment or ill treatment even for a single moment, they must pass five hundred years there without being able to see the Three Treasures, make offerings to the Buddha, or cultivate a store of virtue. This is distressing to them. Though there are other pleasures, they do not enjoy living there."

It is just not a quick path. Accept it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 8:08 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

I guess that's the difference there. On what basis do you call all bhūmikas "awakened?"

Malcolm wrote:

All bodhisattvas on the bhumis are āryas. Bodhisattvas on the paths of accumulations and application are not āryas. Since the former have realized emptiness in a direct perception, they are āryas.

Caoimhghín said:

So by your logic, all stream-entrants are awakened as well. Stream-entrants are significantly beneath Arhats. I thought the stream-entrant only makes contact once with nirvāṇa as a mental object, and doesn't abide in it with life substratum.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, they have all tasted nirvana and thus are aryas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 8:10 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

I agree it's complex, but it does strike me as odd that the once-returner with his partial awakening as an unripened wisdom that only completely fruits later would be less awakened than the stream-entrant with his seven lifetimes until arhatva. Of course, bodhisattva stream-entry does not result in seven lifetimes until arhatva.

Arguably one of the reasons why the stream-entrant is called a stream-entrant is because he has merely "entered the stream" to awakening. His seven lifetimes, or dare we say his three aeons, are the consequence of that entrance then, at least seven to make it up the stream to "the other shore" in the case of the path as the Buddha outlined it to the śrāvakas.

Malcolm wrote:

Why are you bothering to litigate something which is a simple matter of definition?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 8:12 PM

Title: Re: Who is Mahavairocana?

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

I'm in a bit of disagreement with you here. PP Buddhism has two bodies: dharma and form, the same you give for "pre-Yogacara." These two bodies are in śrāvaka literature as well, in the suttas and āgamas.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, PP Buddhism has two kāyas.

There is no mention in the agamas and so on of any kāya other than dharmakāya. The notion of the rūpakāya as a thing is Mahāyāna in inception. Yes, of course the Buddha has a physical body, but when there is a reference to the dharmakāya in pre Mahāyāna literature, kāya is equivalent to skandha, i.e., dharmakāya = all the dharmaskandhas.

Caoimhghín said:

You're right, actually.

Malcolm wrote:

It happens with surprising regularity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 8:15 PM

Title: Re: How awakened are bodhisattva stream-entrants?

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

This brings up another issue: why are only bodhisattvas of a certain bhūmi or higher mahāsattvas (and this bhūmi is not usually given as the first)? Similarly, take the Heart Sutra for example, which depicts Avalokiteśvara gaining insight into emptiness. He is also depicted as perfecting wisdom-perfection (prajñāpāramitā) in that sūtra, so is he at the first bhūmi, a bodhisattva stream-entrant, or is this entrance into the eighth bhūmi, which is more likely? How does the śrāvaka stream-entrant differ in his realization from the bodhisattva stream-entrant other than the former theoretically missing the foundations of bodhicitta?

Astus said:

It depends on whom you ask, as there are various views about sravakas (and bodhisattvas) in different Mahayana works. What separates the four noble persons on the sravaka path is not in their attainment of insight into the four noble truths, but how much of the fetters they have removed permanently.

Caoimhghín said:

And there is no furthering of wisdom or insight accompanied by the loosening of these fetters? I'm not a śrāvaka literature expert. It strikes me as there is a furthering of insight and a gradual deepening of wisdom in the way that the bodhisattva path is described as the bodhisattva progresses.

Are there any wisdoms that an arhat has that a stream-entrant lacks? I suppose that would answer the question.

Malcolm wrote:

The Heart Sutra does not show Avalokiteshvara gaining insight into emptiness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 8:18 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Steel said:

Renunciation isn't a requirement for birth in sukhavati. Shinran himself was married and had seven children, and he taught the path to everyone including warriors, hunters, butchers, and prostitutes. This can all be backed by the 18th Vow.

Malcolm wrote:

The 18th vow is not a guarantee one will take rebirth in Sukhavati. Even if it were, the same sūtra states:

"Although they receive no punishment or ill treatment even for a single moment, they must pass five hundred years there without being able to see the Three Treasures, make offerings to the Buddha, or cultivate a store of virtue. This is distressing to them. Though there are other pleasures, they do not enjoy living there.

It is just not a quick path. Accept it.

Steel said:

I'll side with Shinran and Rennyo on these matters. Thanks.

Malcolm wrote:

You are free. I've read everything written by Shinran. I don't accept other power at all. It contradicts the very foundational principles of Buddhadharma, namely, that we are all personally responsible for our own liberation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 9:56 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

GrapeLover said:

And you started your response with “When an interested student does not understand the teachings of Dzogchen, this is the fault of the teacher”, which I (perhaps erroneously) took as implying that they actually were given a Dzogchen teaching through these words.

Malcolm wrote:

Telling people to recite Om Amideva Hrih is not introducing people to Dzogchen teachings. It is assuming, incorrectly, that one can estimate other people's capacity.

GrapeLover said:

Although there is the essential point of transmission, I feel like the Shin view of Other Power is trying to communicate the same principle as was verbally expressed.

Malcolm wrote:

Reciting Nembutsu, like reciting Namu Myoreng Kyo, is a virtuous activity, most certainly. Having faith in Amitabha has benefit. But arguing that sūtrayāna practices such as Pure Land practice, etc., are quick paths to buddhahood is erroneous and cannot be supported on the basis of their own fundamental texts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 10:05 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Minobu said:

So like on the way to Buddhahood after you get the emptiness thing down pat... what about one's Karma..

I thought no buddha , only the Catholic Church can eradicate karma...ok the catholic church is sarcasm , they went from money and burlap bags to hail mary's ...but Getting rid of Karma is no easy feat...

i don't think any intellectual endeavour can eradicate Karma..

So all these numbers up in pure land and all ...is it like a jail get out of free card ...like go there and it disappears and in 500 years or what ever you are a Buddha free of Karma. I don't mean to be obtuse but Karma is the key...and I do not believe there are any get out of jail cards floating around..

This was something I needed Malcolm to answer. I'm trying to understand things from his paradigm , instead of a Nichiren Shonin perspective.
It's important for me.

I don't fully understand the different time periods , like some are born from lotus and others take 500 years in the pure land..which isn't really that important to me...just accept it eh...im ok with stuff like that...

So how do you expiate Karma ?

How do you enter a pure land with karma ..

You say if you practice Dzogchen and realize emptiness>>>are you talking Sunyata emptiness or that emptiness that is used to describe something other than sunyata...i recall this cropping up a few years ago...

after that you die and go to pure land....what happens to the Karma ...You don't end up here in samsara without gazillion years of karma to work out...yes //no...

Malcolm wrote:

Only the most average of Dzogchen practitioners take birth in the natural nirmanakāya buddhafiels. They have left samsara behind forever.

IN order to understand the different grades of rebirth in Sukhavati, you would have to read the long Sukhavati sūtra. However, as I pointed out above, that sūtra is not read in Tibetan Buddhism.

Realizing emptiness in Dzogchen means realizing the original purity of all phenomena, in common with the perfection of wisdom sūtras, etc., and the naturally perfect nature of all phenomena. Like Chan and Zen, paths and stages as described in the sūtras are pretty irrelevant in Dzogchen teachings.They exist, but only to cater to a conventional understandings of the notion of "progress."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 10:49 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Realizing emptiness in Dzogchen means realizing the original purity of all phenomena, in common with the perfection of wisdom sūtras, etc., and the naturally perfect nature of all phenomena. Like Chan and Zen, paths and stages as described in the sūtras are pretty irrelevant in Dzogchen teachings.They exist, but only to cater to a conventional understandings of the notion of "progress."

Minobu said:

ok so the emptiness is not about sunyata , it's a Dzogchen realization , i guess one has to receive initiation in order to study...

Malcolm wrote:

It is about śūnyatā. But our nature is only not only śūnyatā. Our nature also possess infinite potential which is naturally perfected.

Minobu said:

Dzogchen seems to be a completely different approach to Buddhahood...

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Minobu said:

What I don't get is you don't really explain how karma seems to be overridden...or discharged ...

Lord Sakyamuni endured samsaric existence for like an eternity to rid His Karma...

Malcolm wrote:

We have a different understanding of the person of Śākyamuni Buddha. Our understanding is that nirmanakāya Śākyamuni Buddha is an emanation of sambhogakāya Vajradhara. Vajradhara is an emanation of the dharmakāya Samantabhadra.

In Dzogchen, we consider that Śākyamuni Buddha to be one of the twelve teachers of Dzogchen, unique from other buddhas in that the twelve teachers of Dzogchen possess 108 deeds ($12 * 9$), not merely the standard twelve that are referenced in the conventional sutrayāna.

Minobu said:

He travelled through Samsara as a common mortal....for eternities ...

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, there was a person who experienced suffering in samsara until they trained under a buddha and realized buddahood personally. This person's realization is the basis for the realization of the 1001 buddhas of the fortunate eon.

Minobu said:

So if He would have encountered Dzogchen he would not have had to go through all this...???

But i guess His Karma did not allow for it..????

Karma malcolm , i'm hung up on this...please show me how Dzogchen erases Karma..

Malcolm wrote:

Even karma is originally pure. So is ignorance, and all states of samsara.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 10:52 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Astus said:

Malcolm may step in of course, but let me add this as a quick reply here. While dzogchen (any others) has a unique presentation and methods, it does not essentially diverge in its understanding from what is there to be done, that is, the elimination of defilements and obscurations, the realisation of the twofold emptiness, and so on.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, Dzogchen seeks to address the same existential questions as all other Buddhist traditions.

Astus said:

What I don't get is you don't really explain how karma seems to be overridden...or discharged ...

Again, while dzogchen has its own take on common Buddhist doctrines, it matches the basic teachings regarding dependent origination, how from ignorance comes suffering, and when ignorance is eliminated, there is no more samsara.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is correct.

Astus said:

Lord Sakyamuni endured samsaric existence for like an eternity to rid His Karma... That version describes how merit needs to be accumulated over a long period of time. Such a view is "obsolete" in light of the view of buddha-nature.

Malcolm wrote:

Not really-- hence the various metaphors about paupers using rocks that hide wishfulfilling jewels as pillows, who die without recognizing they have been in possession of such a jewel the entire time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 11:33 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Not really-- hence the various metaphors about paupers using rocks that hide wishfulfilling jewels as pillows, who die without recognizing they have been in possession of such a jewel the entire time.

Astus said:

'In the expository, causal vehicle of the paramitas, the sugatagarbha or buddha-nature is considered to be present in the minds of beings only as a seed. When this is fully developed through circumstantial conditions— in other words, the two accumulations (of merit and wisdom) — buddhahood is attained. And since the cause comes first and its result after, one speaks in this case of a causal vehicle. By contrast, the Mantrayana, the vehicle of mantra, proclaims that all beings are by nature endowed with the sugatagarbha, wherein all enlightened qualities are spontaneously present.'
(Treasury of Precious Qualities, vol 2, p 86)

Unlike the above description of sutrayana, in Chan, Tiantai, and Huayan buddha-nature is understood to be already complete with the buddha qualities, as already noted in http://www.thezensite.com/ZenTeachings/Translations/Awakening_of_faith.html:

'Next, Suchness has two aspects if predicated in words. One is that it is truly empty (sunya), for this aspect can, in the final sense, reveal what is real. The other is that it is truly nonempty (a-sunya), for its essence itself is endowed with undefiled and excellent qualities.'

Malcolm wrote:

That does not matter. Let's say you have a house, and in your house is a million dollars. If you never discover the million dollars or it is never shown to you, you will have a million dollars and never know it. Likewise, unless those buddha qualities are discovered by you in a direct perception, or pointed out to you, even if you have them, they are of no use to you.

As far as Dzogchen view goes, such qualities exist in the form of potential only. The analogy Longchenpa uses is that even though you may not need to gather the two accumulations ultimately in order to possess the kāyas and wisdoms, practicing the two accumulations is like polishing a dirty gem. One is not really adding anything new, but instead one is revealing what is already there, but hidden from ordinary sight.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 11:43 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

He travelled through Samsara as a common mortal....for eternities ...

Yes, there was a person who experienced suffering in samsara until they trained under a buddha and realized buddhahood personally. This person's realization is the basis for the realization of the 1001 buddhas of the fortunate eon.

GrapeLover said:

I am interested in this point—I've never really properly reconciled the fact that Buddhas are emanations with the jatakas etc (eg, can there be a meaningful personal link between the last life of a bodhisattva and the following nirmanakaya? As the Buddha's mind is dharmakaya wherein there is no distinction between Buddhas, what does it mean for them to say “in one of my past lives”?)

Who is the person and Buddha in question here? Is it something quite ‘high-level’ like a figure attaining Buddhahood under Samantabhadra and emanating all the Buddhas of this eon?

Thanks for putting so much into this thread.

Malcolm wrote:

According to the Lo rgyus chen mo found in the Vima sNying thig, there was a person who trained under three nirmanakāya buddhas in three successive incarnations in the previous mahākalpa, and attained buddhahood himself. During the 20 void eons, this buddha remained latent since there was no manifest physical universe, etc. When the physical universe again manifested at the beginning of this mahākalpa, this buddha's dharmakāya manifested the sambhogakāya, etc., and also the first nirmankāya buddha of the first eon, Ngangwa Dampa, who taught the Sound Tantras as well as the remainder of the 17 tantras.

Buddhas may have the same realization, but their omniscience is such that they can distinguish between the different mind streams that led to their common realization. For example, if we are seated at the Met, looking at Monet's lily pond, we are all looking at the same painting, even though we arrived at different times from different places, and left to go to different destinations. We can understand the realizations of the buddhas just like that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 29th, 2020 at 11:50 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Minobu said:

ok so like in order to understand what you are doing in Dzogchen , you need to understand who Lord Sakyamuni actually is... what we thought was Lord Sakyamuni...of lets say Lotus Buddhism , or theravada Buddhism, you know , the guy came ...his life was theatre...he actually attained enlightenment long ago not under the tree...maybe theravadins don;t believe that ...

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, hence the name of the Buddha's life story sūtra, Lalitavistara Sūtra, the Extensive Play.

Minobu said:

But Dzogchen gives us an entirely different view of what we thought Lord Buddha Sakyamuni was...and is...

and then take it from there...

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but it does not really contradict other Mahāyāna sentiments, it merely builds on them.

Minobu said:

also to settle my Karmic issue...

you say if i realize Sunyata then Karma is no longer a factor as a hindrance to Buddhahood...

Malcolm wrote:

karma is an obscuration, it can only be removed by realizing and practicing dharmatā.

Minobu said:

and yet the story of Lord Nagarjuna having some guy kill him in order to expiate the last karmic bond , in His case some ant he killed long ago...

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and supposedly his head and body are inching towards each other and so on.

Minobu said:

also it seems there is a lot of undoing Buddhist thought we always took for granted in order to actually practice True Dzogchen...

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen is just another approach to Buddhadharma. I think it is the most effective for this degenerate age because it is grounded in secret mantra and a specific view of the human body and how that is employed in practice, but all Mahāyāna schools claim their approach is the most effective for Mappo, the degenerate age.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 30th, 2020 at 12:08 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

LastLegend said:

The issue here isn't that other power is not possible...

Malcolm wrote:

It is pretty impossible. The Buddha said:

Misdeeds cannot be washed away with water, suffering cannot be removed with the hand,

I cannot hand you liberation,
but I can show the path.

Shinran's decision to abdicate responsibility for his own liberation is in direct contradiction to this maxim.

After all, since the Buddha invited us to critique his teachings, why should any dharma teaching, including Dzogchen, be immune from critique?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 30th, 2020 at 12:33 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Könchok Thrinley said:

Isn't the whole thing around "other power" more of a skillful means? To open up buddhadharma to new sort of people.

Also if other power does not work how does one then get to the Sukhavati?

Malcolm wrote:

You have to want to go to Sukhavati.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 30th, 2020 at 1:00 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Minobu said:

you scolded someone for reading Dzogchen books without the initiation and i agree with you on this very important rule.

Malcolm wrote:

One of the features of secret mantra, which perhaps Nichiren did not like much (even though he was clearly quite adept at secret mantra practice as it exists in Tendai Mikkyo) is that its Japanese expression is clearly elitist, expensive, and requires a prodigious amount of education in mandala theory, mudra practice, and so on. But this is perhaps a reflection of how secret mantra was practiced in India during the late 7th and 8th centuries. In Tibet too, during the same period, secret mantra was very elitist, expensive, and so on. It was practiced basically the same way it was practiced in Japan.

However, because Tibet is closer to India, the more populist expression of secret mantra in the HYT also made inroads, and of course, Dzogchen and later Mahāmudra, is part of that movement.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 30th, 2020 at 1:22 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Minobu said:

you scolded someone for reading Dzogchen books without the initiation and i agree with you on this very important rule.

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen texts require some expertise to understand in a proper way. A literal reading of them is often inaccurate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 30th, 2020 at 1:24 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Likewise, unless those buddha qualities are discovered by you in a direct perception, or pointed out to you, even if you have them, they are of no use to you.

Astus said:

<https://www.nichirenlibrary.org/en/dic/Content/D/92> is one of the main Zen slogans. It can result in buddhahood exactly because there is no need to gather anything more.

Malcolm wrote:

It could, but it usually doesn't, 99.999 percent of the time. In any case, buddhahood cannot be realized with slogans.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 30th, 2020 at 1:52 AM

Title: Re: Moon-reflection-analogy and the other similes

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

It is one of the deepest things.

White Sakura said:

I agree. Now the text was delayed to Sutra Studies.

I think it is also of the greatest importance for tantra. Because the tantric Yidams shall not be visualized as inherently existing objects. So it is important to remind myself all the time that they are emptiness-appearance, like the moon reflected in water.

Malcolm wrote:

I prefer the rainbow analogy for that, personally.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 30th, 2020 at 2:48 AM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

I agree it's complex, but it does strike me as odd that the once-returner with his partial awakening as an unripened wisdom that only completely fruits later would be less awakened than the stream-entrant with his seven lifetimes until arhatva. Of course, bodhisattva stream-entry does not result in seven lifetimes until arhatva.

Arguably one of the reasons why the stream-entrant is called a stream-entrant is because he has merely "entered the stream" to awakening. His seven lifetimes, or dare we say his three aeons, are the consequence of that entrance then, at least seven to make it up the stream to "the other shore" in the case of the path as the Buddha outlined it to the śrāvakas.

Malcolm wrote:

Why are you bothering to litigate something which is a simple matter of definition?

Caoimhghín said:

It's just a matter of in-person Buddhism disagreeing with on-internet Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

Āryas possess bodhi, whether it is the inferior bodhi of ārya śrāvakas or the superior bodhi of ārya bodhisattvas.

There is bodhi, and there there is samyaksambodhi.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 30th, 2020 at 5:18 AM

Title: Re: Article on Taimitsu

Content:

Queequeg said:

https://www.academia.edu/17615179/_Taimitsu_The_Esoteric_Buddhism_of_the_Tendai_School_in_Esoteric_Buddhism_and_the_Tantras_in_East_Asia_Charles_Orzech_general_ed._Leiden_Brill_2011_pp._744-767?email_work_card=view-paper

This may be of interest to folks.

Malcolm wrote:

You might find this book useful for context:

Chinese Esoteric Buddhism, G.C. Goble CUP, 2019.

Amoghavajra was a contemporary of Padmasambhava. All these tantric madmen irrevocably changed the course of Buddhadharma in Asia.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 30th, 2020 at 10:19 PM

Title: Re: Dharma protectors

Content:

bhava said:

Hello, in general there are several terms for guardians of the teachings or dharma protectors - chos skyong, srung ma, dam can, bka' srung, bstan srung etc generally divided into enlightened, worldly and half-worldly, having their respective activities of protecting teachings and practitioners. Is there a clear, comprehensive and trustworthy text in english describing these things in detail? Common one is Nebesky-Wojkiewicz Oracles and Demons of Tibet, however I thought of a more traditional source. Thank you, in dharma, bh.

Grigoris said:

Check out this site for starters.

I do not know of any single book describing dharmapala.

Malcolm wrote:

Nebesky-Wojkiewicz Oracles and Demons of Tibet.

It is about the only resource out there in English. Beyond that, there are some papers you can find on this or that individual guardian.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 30th, 2020 at 10:41 PM

Title: Re: Why choose Mahayana over Vajrayana?

Content:

Astus said:

But I quite like Chekawa's collection...

Malcolm wrote:

Useful, but not definitive.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 30th, 2020 at 10:47 PM

Title: Re: Words, characters, syllables & liberation

Content:

Astus said:

akṣaram udāharati (Tib.: yi ger brjod pa), that is "spoken characters".

Malcolm wrote:

Expressed in syllables.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 1st, 2020 at 12:13 AM

Title: Re: Are Zen teachers awakened?

Content:

Astus said:

akṣaram udāharati (Tib.: yi ger brjod pa), that is "spoken characters".

Malcolm wrote:

Expressed in syllables.

Just to add a note, a syllable is different than a "character."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 1st, 2020 at 2:20 AM

Title: Re: Words, characters, syllables & liberation

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Just to add a note, a syllable is different than a "character."

Astus said:

It was meant as an approximation of the Chinese translation.

Malcolm wrote:

You gave the Sanskrit and the Tibetan. There are no "characters" in either language.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 1st, 2020 at 5:04 AM

Title: Re: Are Zen teachers awakened?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You gave the Sanskrit and the Tibetan. There are no "characters" in either language.

Astus said:

It was intended as further reference to clarify what was translated as "letters" in <https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?p=541014#p541014>. The Vimalakirti Sutra has 言說文字 that consists of "spoken" (yanshou 言說) and "character" (wenzi 文字), and the latter is "literature/writing" (wen 文) plus "letter/character/word" (zi 字). This was simply translated as "letter" in the quote. Furthermore, in the quote from Kukai's work "letter" is a translation for zi 字, what Giebel renders as "sign" (in <https://www.bdkamerica.org/book/shingon-texts>, p 85). But clearly there is a difference here, as the Vimalakirti Sutra actually talks of speech, while Kukai really means writing.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed, but a syllable is neither a letter nor a character.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 1st, 2020 at 9:50 PM

Title: Re: Words, characters, syllables & liberation

Content:

humble.student said:

Syllables are neither letters nor characters, but characters 字 are indeed syllables...

Caoimhghín said:

They can actually be both. This is a syllable: ཐོ. It is also a letter and a character.

Malcolm wrote:

Akṣara means unalterable, as you know, and refers to a unit of sound.

We translate this term as "syllable" as a convention, because a syllable is a unit of pronunciation.

The written character for an akṣara is incidental, and can take any form, such as A, H, ཨ, etc.

When we see a phrase like "akṣaram udāharati (Tib.: yi ger brjod pa)" we have to understand we are talking about units of speech, not units of writing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 2nd, 2020 at 12:18 AM

Title: Re: Meditation techniques in each tradition

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

As the question is phrased in somewhat general terms,

It's probably accurate enough to describe dzogchen and mahamudra as simply allowing the mind to rest in awareness...

Malcolm wrote:

Probably not. One does not allow one's mind to rest in a mental factor in either tradition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 2nd, 2020 at 2:10 AM

Title: Re: Meditation techniques in each tradition

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

As the question is phrased in somewhat general terms,
It's probably accurate enough to describe dzogchen and mahamudra as simply allowing the mind to rest in awareness...

Malcolm wrote:

Probably not. One does not allow one's mind to rest in a mental factor in either tradition.

PadmaVonSamba said:

So, you are saying, 'simply rest' with no awareness?

...because in many examples (none of which I can cite at the moment) Thrangu Rinpoche explains the practice of mahamudra as simply allowing the mind to rest naturally.

That's either gotta include or exclude awareness.

I'm going with the inclusion of awareness, otherwise there is no experience of it, which would be pointless.

Anyway, as I suggested, that description is probably accurate enough, reflecting the degree of specificity used in the opening post describing other types of meditation.
Sure, one could delve into infinite and perhaps contradictory fine points in any of them.
But, it works.

Malcolm wrote:

We are not resting in awareness, we are resting in the natural state of the mind, clarity and emptiness. We use mindfulness and awareness in tandem to sustain resting in the nature of the mind. We are aware of something in Dzogchen and Mahamudra, that is, a moment of unfabricated consciousness. But we are not resting in awareness per se.
Mindfulness (dran pa) and awareness (shes bzhin) are two mental factors that always function together. If one is aware, one is mindful, if one is mindful, one is aware. Clarity on the other hand is not a mental factor, it is part of the nature of the mind, just as one aspect of the nature of water is wetness. But it is the nature of the mind is not only clarity, it is also empty, just as limpidity is also an aspect of the nature of water.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 2nd, 2020 at 2:39 AM

Title: Re: Are Zen teachers awakened?

Content:

clyde said:

A reminder, this was the question asked of Zen students:

Matylda said:

Indeed

But then right from the beginning it is an invalid question.

how 'student' may know if a teacher is or is not awakened??? if he knows, he/she does not need any teacher at all, since possess enough wisdom to go on his/her own.

If one does not know, then there is no way for such person to discern if a teacher, or teachers or whoever is or is not awakened.

What I observed in the West is, that if people like a certain teacher then they do believe he has some special quality or wisdom or is enlightened etc. but once they stop to like the teacher, then exactly the same person is told to be unenlightened and in possession of bad qualities.

So if you ask such question I guess that mostly answer will relate to confused human minds of likes and dislikes. And it has nothing to do with the notion of a zen teacher and his awakening.

Dan74 said:

But haven't you made such judgments yourself here? Didn't you say that you had not met any Western Zen teacher who was awakened, or have I misunderstood? Or you don't class yourself as 'a student'?

Malcolm wrote:

Matylda is Japanese, raised in a traditional Soto family, who has, over many years, offered us authentic insights into how things operate in Japan. She has for many years expressed deep skepticism about Zen in Western countries.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 2nd, 2020 at 6:49 AM

Title: Re: How exactly does karma "purification" work?

Content:

NateLeo said:

Hey all,

So recently I've tried to start a dhyana regimen, and I've noticed:

When i do this, i have vivid dreams that are usually really negative: im in situations where im getting harassed, attacked, etc. even recently something unusually bad happened in my "waking" life. These things never happened when i was just goin thru life like anybody, so i got curious..

Now I've done research, and I've seen articles about samatha-dhyana being a purification method, but also a wide array of things as well that purify (nembutsu, vajrasattva, etc)

And now i want to know: with all these wide arrays of methods, what is the fundamental thing about them that purifies or transforms bad karma? and What does this fundamental thing do to the mind?

Malcolm wrote:

Karma is not something real, so it can be purified.

If it were real, then we would all be screwed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 2nd, 2020 at 10:27 PM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

PeterC said:

At this point I don't think it's a great idea to be taking medical advice from anyone in the US on this. Most of the countries that have the outbreak under control had a treatment protocol months ago - as part of a coordinated treatment strategy, not the cottage industry we have in the US - and have had much lower case-based mortality. I'm not going to give medical advice but if I wanted an idea of which drugs to take I would look at what they're doing.

Malcolm wrote:

There are no drugs that are really that effective in treating Covid about which we have evidence-based knowledge.

One of my good friends is the chief nurse at Boston Medical Center. Because they prepared early, and retrained the staff in January in how to properly put on and take off PPE, they have had almost no staff infections. Quarantine, masks social distancing, remain, at this point, the most effective measures for dealing with this infection.

What we lack in the US is effective contact tracing due to the fact that the man running the CDC, Redfield, is an incompetent GOP stooge in an incompetent GOP administration, with a significant population in the US that actually thinks this is no big deal, and a president that defunded our resources in China that could have alerted us. In short, we are screwed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 2nd, 2020 at 10:33 PM

Title: Re: Meditation techniques in each tradition

Content:

LastLegend said:

I am confused I don't know which is which anymore. It seems like it's all the same?

Astus said:

One evening, after a Dharma talk at the Boston Dharmadhatu, a student said to Seung Sahn Soen-sa, "At a recent seminar on Zen and Tantra, Chogyam Trungpa Rinpoche compared Zen to black and white and tantra to color. What do you think of this?"

...

Soen-sa said, ... "When you are thinking, your mind and my mind are different. When you are not thinking, your mind and my mind are the same. Now tell me - when you are not thinking, is there color? Is there black and white? Not thinking, your mind is empty mind. Empty minds means cutting off all speech and words. Is there color then?"

(Dropping Ashes on the Buddha, p 79)

Malcolm wrote:

This is not a very good answer. This kind of idea, the cessation of thinking, just results in more samsara.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 2nd, 2020 at 10:36 PM

Title: Re: Abhidharmakosabhasyam Book Club

Content:

jake said:

For those of you with the Sangpo edition perhaps someone could help me? I'll admit that I'm far from skilled in this more serious study and have been really struggling to understand the notations in Sangpo.

On page 333, in Note 49. He writes:

For the doctrinal perspective sasrava-anasrava in regard to the eighteen elements (dhatu), see i. 31cd. For a discussion of the three fluxes, see v. 35-36; for an explanation of the term asrava, see v. 40.

What on earth/where on earth is: i. 31cd or v. 35-36? or v. 40?

Malcolm wrote:

1.31 = chapter one, verse 31, lines 3 and 4; v.35-36 means chapter five (in volume three), verses 35-36. etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 3rd, 2020 at 12:33 AM

Title: Ch. 1, Ver. 1: Exposition of the Elements (Dhatunirdesa); Homage; Qualities for the benefit of the Buddha Himself

Content:

Grigoris said:

By omniscience I am talking about "knowing everything". Clearly if one sees reality one will know the truth of reality, but is this the same with knowing how many hairs I have on my (slowly balding) head?

Malcolm wrote:

No, the Buddha could know that if he chose, but that is not really what omniscience here intends.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 3rd, 2020 at 12:33 AM

Title: Ch. 1, Ver. 1: Exposition of the Elements (Dhatunirdesa); Homage; Qualities for the benefit of the Buddha Himself

Content:

Grigoris said:

4. Seems to refer to a lack of omniscience.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and when you get a bit further, all knowable things really just means compounded and uncompounded phenomena included in various schemes of the skandhas, āyatanas, and dhātus.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 3rd, 2020 at 1:42 AM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, Ver. 2: Exposition of the Elements (Dhatunirdesa); Three types of Abhidharma

Content:

Grigoris said:

Abhidharma in the absolute sense: pure understanding Understanding (prajna), is the discernment of factors [dharmapravicaya].

Pravicaya is the Sanskrit term for discernment and refers to the ability to distinguish pure from impure, material from immaterial, etc... 2b. [The Abhidharma] is also any understanding and the Treatise which make one obtain stainless understanding.

...the impure (sasrava) understanding, whether it is

i. innate or natural or acquired at birth

ii-iv. derived from an effort, i.e., from listening, reflection, cultivation

By innate I imagine it is referring to it being a consequence of past effort. I assume this as it is talking about impure understanding and thus cannot be referring to some sort of internal stainless basis/quality.

We also clearly see here that prajna (unafflicted knowledge) is also based on personal effort and study the Treatise also makes one obtain the pure understanding...

Thus studying the text... Etymological explanation of dharma and abhi-dharma [Etymologically,] dharma signifies: that which upholds or sustains (dharana) its own characteristic or a particular inherent characteristic (svalaksana).

The Abhidharma is called abhi-dharma because it is directed...

1. toward the supreme factor [paramarthadharma], namely, Nirvana

2. toward the characteristics of the factors [dharmalaksana], namely, (i) the particular inherent characteristics or specific characteristics [svalaksana] and (ii) the common characteristics [samanyalaksana].

Okay. WTF? Is he saying that dependently arisen objects have inherent characteristics?

Malcolm wrote:

In this literature, intrinsic characteristics are real and ultimate, the example given later is the wetness, coolness and limpidity of water. Generic characteristics are not real, being imputations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 3rd, 2020 at 1:56 AM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, Ver. 2: Exposition of the Elements (Dhatunirdesa); Three types of Abhidharma

Content:

Grigoris said:

Okay. WTF? Is he saying that dependently arisen objects have inherent characteristics?

jake said:

There is a long end note on this from page 322-324 that I had to read a couple times. But I understood the "inherent characteristics" to be those characteristics that are indivisible from the entity itself. The example given is the color (sorry, colour) blue, this is unique to that dharma. Blue also belongs to a group of dharmas that share a common characteristic, in this case they can be seen.

I'm not sure I follow the "dependently arise objects have inherent characteristics" question.

Grigoris said:

And yet science shows us that if you do not have the corresponding rods and cones (sensory apparatus of the eye) then blue is not blue for you.

So how can it be an inherent characteristic when it is dependently arisen?

Malcolm wrote:

"Inherent" is really the wrong word here. "Intrinsic" is a little better. In this case, a blue entity possesses the physical properties to reflect blue light, whether one can see it or not. That entity dependently arises in possession of that property. While that entity exists, one of its intrinsic characteristics is to reflect blue light. Intrinsic characteristics do not conflict with dependent origination in Sarvastivada and Sautrantika tenets.

Also "ultimate" in Abhidharma simply means the cognition left over after one has smashed or analyzed something as far as one can go.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 3rd, 2020 at 2:11 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

PeterC said:

At this point I don't think it's a great idea to be taking medical advice from anyone in the US on this. Most of the countries that have the outbreak under control had a treatment protocol months ago - as part of a coordinated treatment strategy, not the cottage industry we have in the US - and have had much lower case-based mortality. I'm not going to give medical advice but if I wanted an idea of which drugs to take I would look at what they're doing.

Malcolm wrote:

There are no drugs that are really that effective in treating Covid about which we have evidence-based knowledge.

PeterC said:

There's a lot more work to do on the research, sure, but the opinion of the Thai, Korean, HK and Chinese hospitals coordinating treatment protocols is that they've got protocols that they're happy with.

Malcolm wrote:

There is still no drug that seems to dent this thing. Their protocols focus on symptom relief. That's great, but not a solution.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 3rd, 2020 at 3:54 AM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, Ver. 4-6: Exposition of the Elements (Dhatunirdesa); Discernment of the Factors (Dharma)

Content:

Grigoris said:

Twofold Classification of Factors: Impure (Sasrava) and Pure (Anasrava)

The conditioned factors, with the exception of the (noble) path, are impure; they are impure because the fluxes adhere to or grow concordantly in them [samanuserate].

So while defiled consciousness can contact the factors of the Noble Path, it cannot be purified by them, nor can it defile the path factors?

Malcolm wrote:

All this is saying is that all compounded phenomena are defiled apart from path phenomena. They are abandoned, not purified. This is discussed in more detail in chapter 2, when we get to the twenty-two Indriyas.

Grigoris said:

If space is not "turned away" by an object does that mean that space continues to exist independent of the fact of the presence (or absence) of an object?

Malcolm wrote:

It just means that space permeates everything.

Grigoris said:

Cessation due to deliberation (pratisarṃkhyanirodha); 63 F 8-9

6ab. Cessation due to deliberation is disconnection [from the impure factors], each disconnection taken separately...

...If it were otherwise, if the cessation due to deliberation were single, a person who has obtained, i.e., realized, the cessation of the defilements [klesanirodha] which are abandoned by insight into the truth of unsatisfactoriness would have obtained or actualized at the same time the cessation of the defilements which are abandoned by insight [darsana] into the other truths and by cultivation [bhavana], [i.e., the cessation of all the defilements (sarvaklesa)]. It would be futile [vaiyarthya] then for the practitioners to cultivate the part of the (noble) path which counteracts these [remaining] defilements.

Interesting. Does that mean that one has to eradicate each defilement separately (which, according to different classification systems number from 3 to 108), that it is not enough to just strike at the ignorance underlying all of them?

Malcolm wrote:

According to this system, there are nine categories of afflictions to remove, from strong-strong to weak-weak. The strong-strong afflictions in stream enterer and so on, now latent, have to be removed gradually through analysis. This is largely the subject matter of chapter 6.

Grigoris said:

an example of this is the non-arising of visual consciousness due to the absence of visual stimuli.

But would this mean that being in a comatose state, for example, is akin to cessation?

Malcolm wrote:

Non analytical cessation is simply the absence of a cause which can bear a result, for example, a burnt seed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 3rd, 2020 at 4:30 AM

Title: Re: Meditation techniques in each tradition

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is not a very good answer. This kind of idea, the cessation of thinking, just results in more samsara.

Astus said:

That is right, aiming for and grasping at a thoughtless state at best takes one to a heavenly birth. But that was not the intended message, at least from my side. Rather that while there are methodical differences, when it comes to not conceptualising what is experienced, there are no distinctions that can be made.

Malcolm wrote:

That is not what the citation says.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 3rd, 2020 at 5:26 AM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, Ver. 4-6: Exposition of the Elements (Dhatunirdesa); Discernment of the Factors (Dharma)

Content:

Grigoris said:

So while defiled consciousness can contact the factors of the Noble Path, it cannot be purified by them, nor can it defile the path factors?

Malcolm wrote:

All this is saying is that all compounded phenomena are defiled apart from path phenomena. They are abandoned, not purified. This is discussed in more detail in chapter 2, when we get to the twenty-two Indriyas.

Queequeg said:

I got the sense that the defilements do not adhere to the path precisely because the path is what defeats the defilements. Is that off base?

Malcolm wrote:

Path phenomena are the 8 indriyas of nirvana, faith, mindfulness, diligence, wisdom, and samadhi, etc. Or the thirty-seven factors conducive to awakening: the four foundations of mindfulness, the four true abandonments, the four magical abilities, the five powers, five strengths, the seven factors that lead to awakening and the eight-fold path.

Queequeg said:

Maybe related or not - in Theravada, I think this is why they need to posit a connecting consciousness - to connect two moments of mind when there is no input coming in from the six senses.

Malcolm wrote:

Non-analytical cessation is just the simple absence of a cause. Analytical cessation is cessation due to wisdom. The cause of the bhavanga consciousness is consciousness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 3rd, 2020 at 5:28 AM

Title: Re: Meditation techniques in each tradition

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That is not what the citation says.

Astus said:

Right, it's not a full story, I just thought it fitting on the issue of comparison. Here's an extension on empty mind.

'True emptiness is before thinking. Before thinking is just like this. So life is only life; death is only death. You must not be attached to names and forms. It is like a clear mirror. In a clear mirror, all is nothing; there is only the clear mirror. Red comes, the mirror is red. Yellow comes, there is yellow. A woman comes, there is a woman. A man comes, there is a man. Death comes, there is death. Life comes, there is life. But all of these do not exist. The mirror does not hold on to anything. There is only the coming and the going. This is before thinking: all things are just as they are. The name for this mind is original pure mind.'

(Dropping Ashes on the Buddha, p 90)

Malcolm wrote:

This is still just referring to a mind devoid of concepts. So, it still does not escape the criticism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 3rd, 2020 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: Are Zen teachers awakened?

Content:

Matt J said:

Actually, what PeterC is saying isn't sectarian, but rather a response (in my mind anyway) to Western exceptionalism.

What we (as the West in general, not any particular poster) are saying is that what takes decades in Asian countries (which have incorporated dharma into their national culture) can easily be accomplished in the West in one's spare time, without tremendous sacrifice, and produce an equivalent degree of realization and teaching quality.

seeker242 said:

Which I think is ridiculous assumption really because several of the western laypeople teachers I have met have been practicing for 40 years and have done practices like 100 day solo retreats, etc, etc. To characterize this as "in one's spare time, without tremendous sacrifice" is a gross mischaracterization.

Malcolm wrote:

A 100 day solo retreat is not very long.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 3rd, 2020 at 10:24 PM

Title: Re: Are Zen teachers awakened?

Content:

seeker242 said:

Which I think is ridiculous assumption really because several of the western laypeople teachers I have met have been practicing for 40 years and have done practices like 100 day solo retreats, etc, etc. To characterize this as "in one's spare time, without tremendous sacrifice" is a gross mischaracterization.

Malcolm wrote:

A 100 day solo retreat is not very long.

seeker242 said:

Is 40 years long?

Malcolm wrote:

Depends, some people's 40 years are longer than others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 3rd, 2020 at 10:32 PM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, Ver. 7: Exposition of the Elements (Dhatunirdesa); Discernment of the Factors (Dharma)

Content:

Grigoris said:

Extensive exposition of the conditioned factors (samskrta)

the conditioned factors are the fivefold aggregates:

material form, etc.

The skandha. Etymological meaning of samskrta

"that which has been made (krta) by causes or conditions [pratyaya] co-existing in assemblage (sametya, sambhuya)".

So far, so good. "that which has been made ... ", also applies (1) to future factors, (2) to present factors, as well as (3) to past factors; in fact, a factor (dharma) does not change its nature or type [jatiyatvat] by changing its time period.

Really? So what happens when ice (solid) becomes water (liquid) and then evaporates as steam (gas)? Is there not a change in type?

Malcolm wrote:

Later, when the discussion of "partless atoms" comes up, you will see that atoms are irreducible. However, states of matter such as solids, liquids, and gasses depend on the balance of the four elements in material entities and the environment. In other words, one has ice when it is cold, and when it is very hot, water evaporates into a gas.

But the atoms themselves, according to Abhidharma typology of the Sarvastivadins do not undergo change or alteration. The Sautrantikas, you will see, reject the notion of partless atoms because they have also claimed to have sides, etc. It is important to keep in mind that the root verses present a version of Sarvastivadin doctrine, that of the Vaibhāsikas. The commentaries mainly critique these positions from the Sautrantika position.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 3rd, 2020 at 10:42 PM

Title: Re: Are Zen teachers awakened?

Content:

seeker242 said:

Is 40 years long?

Malcolm wrote:

Depends, some people's 40 years are longer than others.

seeker242 said:

The length isn't relevant. It was an example of the intensity of practicing.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that was the point of my pointing out that some people's 40 years are longer than others. On the other hand, effort does not lead to awakening.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 3rd, 2020 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: Are Zen teachers awakened?

Content:

PeterC said:

...so then I don't need to respond in detail to your other points, because if you reject the lineage view of a continuous transmission, you've also discarded the premise that transmission implies qualification as a teacher, surely? You said supra:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, Astus rejects utterly the notion of transmission, he always has. He thinks Dharma can be learned from books.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 3rd, 2020 at 11:05 PM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, Ver. 7: Exposition of the Elements (Dhatunirdesa); Discernment of the Factors (Dharma)

Content:

Queequeg said:

Malcolm, as we approach this text from a Mahayana perspective...

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, it is important NOT to approach this text from a Mahāyāna point of view.

One should attempt to emulate the ancient Indian masters, Buddhist and Hindu, approaching a text from its own point of view while learning it, and save the higher tenet system critiques for later.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 3rd, 2020 at 11:07 PM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, Ver. 7: Exposition of the Elements (Dhatunirdesa); Discernment of the Factors (Dharma)

Content:

Queequeg said:

Malcolm, as we approach this text from a Mahayana perspective, what should our disposition be toward the irreducible dharmas in the Sarvasitvadin view?

Also, is it possible to give us a quick and dirty comparison of Sarvastivadin, Vaibhasika, and Sautrantika views, and how we as Mahayanis should approach them?

Malcolm wrote:

The four tenet systems can be reduced to these four axioms:

atoms moments mind emptiness.

These is the barest essence of the four tenet systems in ascending order.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 3rd, 2020 at 11:09 PM

Title: Re: Are Zen teachers awakened?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, Astus rejects utterly the notion of transmission, he always has. He thinks Dharma can be learned from books.

Astus said:

Dharma transmission in Zen is not about one person teaching another, but one person authorising another after that other has already mastered everything that had to be mastered.

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty sure Meido would not agree.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 4th, 2020 at 2:06 AM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, Ver. 7: Exposition of the Elements (Dhatunirdesa); Discernment of the Factors (Dharma)

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Later, when the discussion of "partless atoms" comes up, you will see that atoms are irreducible.

Grigoris said:

I thought this concept was found only in Abhidhamma.

I believe that this is a slippery slope. If you can have an irreducible physical particle on which all physical objects rely, then why can you not have an irreducible mind element (an atman) on which all consciousness relies?

Malcolm wrote:

Western Sarvastivadins (Gandharis) subscribed to an inexpressible person theory (pudgalavādin). This is rejected by Vaibhasikas (Kashmiris).

Partless particles are rejected by Sautrantikas. They favor partless moments as irreducible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 4th, 2020 at 2:09 AM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, Ver. 7: Exposition of the Elements (Dhatunirdesa); Discernment of the Factors (Dharma)

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Later, when the discussion of "partless atoms" comes up, you will see that atoms are irreducible.

Grigoris said:

I thought this concept was found only in Abhidhamma.

I believe that this is a slippery slope. If you can have an irreducible physical particle on which all physical objects rely, then why can you not have an irreducible mind element

(an atman) on which all consciousness relies?

Queequeg said:

I think for the same reason that you can't have atman in Abhidhamma - All 5 skandha are needed for a being to arise, and 4 of them are aspects of mind. Remove one, and there is no being. Which of the skandha would be that irreducible mind element?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, there are Buddhist pudgalavādins, those who assert an inexpressible self that is neither the same nor different than aggregates. They were once the largest school in India.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 4th, 2020 at 2:28 AM

Title: Re: Starting with meditation: my case - Any suggestions?

Content:

Jon N said:

Hello dear forum.

After some years of studying Eastern and Buddhist thought in university and on my free time, I decided to approach a Sangha to receive teachings. Since I felt Tibetan Buddhism attracted me more, I decided to approach a Karma Kagyu center close to where I live. Sadly, right now, because of the coronavirus, they only teach online. Luckily, however, they had just started the Lojong lessons so I have been attending them online for 2 weeks now. The Lama asked us to meditate for one hour every day. Since this is the beginning of Lojong, and of meditation for many of us, she suggested that we should just try to relax in meditation position for one hour. However, I have found this extremely difficult. I have tried to do it with some relaxing music but it keeps being difficult. It is difficult for my eyes to look at the same place for a long time so I keep moving them. I try just to relax, but usually I manage to be relaxed only the first 10-15 minutes of the session. The rest of the hour is very hard. I have tried to shorten it for 40 minutes but it keeps being difficult. I try not to refuse my thoughts, but just try to be more or less comfortably relaxed, but I keep getting anxious and find it difficult to just be seated without doing nothing. The Lama said it can be difficult since a part of us doesn't want to meditate, and that we should keep trying until our mind gets used to it.

Do you guys have some tips/advice to give to me? I guess starting to meditate is difficult for most of the people, so I try not to be desperate about it. However, little by little I would like to see some progress. I have read for years about Buddhism and I feel it may be my path, but its not the same to read about it than to actually practice it, so even if I try not to desperate I can't help but be worried that because of finding meditation too difficult I might not be able to follow the path.

Thanks a lot for your time,

Jon

Malcolm wrote:

It'll pass. Just stick with it. Once you feel distracted look around, stretch, standup, then sit down and do it again. Short sessions, many times.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 4th, 2020 at 2:30 AM

Title: Re: Whats the most important concept to start with to atleast get Stream Entry?

Content:

NateLeo said:

So i want to know: what exactly is the first, most fundamental concept i need to realize first if i atleast want to reach the first stage of awakening in this life?

Malcolm wrote:

Find a teacher who can show you your real nature.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 4th, 2020 at 2:53 AM

Title: Re: Meditation techniques in each tradition

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is still just referring to a mind devoid of concepts. So, it still does not escape the criticism.

Astus said:

Not really the same. There are things, but there is no attachment to them. It's possible to match it with there being no longer the concept of self that puts concepts into a samsaric frame. A little more on "just as they are":

"At 360° all things are just as they are; the truth is just like this. 'Like this' means that there is no attachment to anything. This point is exactly the same as the zero point: we arrive where we began, where we have always been. The difference is that 0° is attachment thinking, while 360° is no-attachment thinking."

(Dropping Ashes on the Buddha, p 7)

Malcolm wrote:

So according to the definition above, this zero attachment thinking is not true emptiness, since it is thinking.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 4th, 2020 at 9:49 AM

Title: Re: Are Zen teachers awakened?

Content:

avatamsaka3 said:

It is rather simple, but difficult to apprehend perhaps.
Then why don't you explain it?

Matylda said:
I just did it.

Malcolm wrote:
If I am ever in Japan, I'm inviting You to dinner at your favorite restaurant.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, July 4th, 2020 at 10:32 AM
Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, Ver. 7: Exposition of the Elements (Dhatunirdesa); Discernment of the Factors (Dharma)
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Well, there are Buddhist pudgalavādins, those who assert an inexpressible self that is neither the same nor different than aggregates. They were once the largest school in India.

Queequeg said:
Not to digress too far, but, how did they explain the continuity between death and rebirth? And what happened to them?

Malcolm wrote:
We refuted the shit out of them.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, July 4th, 2020 at 10:00 PM
Title: Re: Whats the most important concept to start with to atleast get Stream Entry?
Content:
SteRo said:
Stream Entry is a sravaka concept.

Grigoris said:
No it is not. The first bhumi is the Mahayana equivalent of Sravakayana stream entry.

Malcolm wrote:
Greg is correct.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, July 4th, 2020 at 10:02 PM
Title: Re: Whats the most important concept to start with to atleast get Stream Entry?
Content:

NateLeo said:

So i want to know: what exactly is the first, most fundamental concept i need to realize first if i atleast want to reach the first stage of awakening in this life?

Thanks again!

SteRo said:

Stream Entry is a sravaka concept. The most fundamental concepts in that context are self-identity views, attachment to rites and rituals and doubt - these have to be abandoned.

Malcolm wrote:

The same three fetters are abandoned on the first bhumi, hence first stage bodhisattvas are Mahayana stream entrants.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 4th, 2020 at 10:10 PM

Title: Re: Are Zen teachers awakened?

Content:

Matylda said:

I just did it.

Malcolm wrote:

If I am ever in Japan, I'm inviting You to dinner at your favorite restaurant.

Matylda said:

but you cannot afford it

Malcolm wrote:

Don't be so sure.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 4th, 2020 at 10:12 PM

Title: Re: Ngondro Practice

Content:

RafaelCoutinho said:

Hello!

So I want to start my Ngondro Practice soon, what items should I buy? I already, have a bell and a vajra, a damaru, a mala, and these things. But I don't have a Mandala, should I buy one?

Thank you!

Malcolm wrote:
Eventually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 5th, 2020 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: Whats the most important concept to start with to atleast get Stream Entry?

Content:

Aemilius said:

...

In entering the stream therein is found no dharma or concept of "entering the stream".

SteRo said:

it's like jumping from one patch of space in space to next patch of space in space.

Nothing is entered. nothing left behind, so only sravakas enter from one illusion into another.

Malcolm wrote:

Facile, at best. The old "It's all emptiness dude" retort.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 5th, 2020 at 9:06 AM

Title: Re: How awakened are bodhisattva stream-entrants?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The answer, according to Candrakīrti, is that their realization of emptiness is the same, in so far as they both realize the absence of inherent existence.

Caoimhghín said:

Awkwardly split from

<https://dharma.wheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=39&t=33826&p=541115#p541104>

The topic has another question hidden in it: How does the śrāvaka stream-entrant differ in his realization from the bodhisattva stream-entrant other than the former theoretically missing the foundations of bodhicitta?

So by your logic, all stream-entrants are awakened as well. Stream-entrants are significantly beneath Arhats. I thought the stream-entrant only makes contact once with nirvāṇa as a mental object, and doesn't abide in it with life substratum.

Aemilius said:

Stream entrants are Aryas, the first stage of it. I wonder where has all the knowledge about them disappeared?

ārya-saṃgha (Sanskrit, noble community). The community of the āryas or those 'noble persons' (ārya-pudgala) who have attained the supermundane path (ārya-mārga). This is the Saṃgha referred to in the formula of the three refuges (triśaraṇa), and is distinct from the broader Buddhist community including laymen and laywomen.

Source

:

A Dictionary of Buddhism, Oxford University Press, 2003, 2004 (which is available in electronic version from answer.com)

ārya-pudgala (Sanskrit; Pāli, ariya-puggala). A 'noble person', one who is at any stage of the Noble Path (ārya-mārga). There are four such persons, namely the stream-winner (śrotāpanna), the once-returner (sakṛdāgāmin), the non-returner (anāgāmin) and the Arhat. According to an alternative sevenfold grouping found in Pāli sources individuals enter the Noble Path in different ways according to their personal disposition. In terms of this the noble disciples are classified as: (1) one who follows in faith (saddhā-anusārin); (2) one liberated by faith (saddhā-vimutta); (3) one who witnesses with the body (kāya-sakkhi); (4) one liberated both ways (ubhato-bhāga-vimutta); (5) one who follows in the Dharma (dhamma-anusārin); (6) one who has attained to vision (diṭṭhippatta); (7) one liberated by insight (paññā-vimutta). Thus the Noble Path may be attained through faith (as with the first), or through an intellectual grasp of the teachings (as with the fifth). One may also enter it and reach fruition on the basis of both (as with the fourth).

There is quite a lot in the Abhidharma about this under various headings, like the Eight noble persons (arya pudgala) etc...

Caoimhghín said:

I'm aware that they are the first persons of the path, but I'm not sure if those who are less than Arhats count as "awakened" without any significant caveats. The once-returner, for instance, is not necessarily awakened, but will be in the future. He only has a partial awakening. It would be odd for a stream-entrant to have superior realization than the once-returner yet to once return.

Aemilius said:

The classification is at first quite simple, and then more and more evolved and complex, in the Sutras and Abhidharma.

A stream entrant has maximum 7 rebirths left before Arhatship. These seven can take place in different ways, so we get more different stream entrants. 1. The stream entrants can be faith followers or wisdom followers, or a yogic type (body witness) this exists but is interpreted differently or it is simply "forgotten". One can also change type in the course of the seven or less births.

2. Are only births on Earth (or Jambudvīpa) counted, or are births in other realms, on other continents or other planets equally valid ?? Etc...

You can compare the Aryas with the systems of Nobility and Aristocrats, that have existed in many many parts of the world:

<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Nobility>

Caoimhghín said:

I agree it's complex, but it does strike me as odd that the once-returner with his partial awakening as an unripened wisdom that only completely fruits later would be less awakened than the stream-entrant with his seven lifetimes until arhatva. Of course, bodhisattva stream-entry does not result in seven lifetimes until arhatva.

Arguably one of the reasons why the stream-entrant is called a stream-entrant is because he has merely "entered the stream" to awakening. His seven lifetimes, or dare we say his three aeons, are the consequence of that entrance then, at least seven to make it up the stream to "the other shore" in the case of the path as the Buddha outlined it to the śrāvakas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 5th, 2020 at 9:34 PM

Title: Re: Basis for vipaka being individual

Content:

GrapeLover said:

Hi there,

Though there is some variation between schools, it is typically taught that the consequences/vipaka of karma ripen on the individual that generated that karma alone.

What I do not really understand is that, as far as I know, it is the volition aggregate that generates karma, but other aggregates are involved in experiencing the vipaka (eg the body can become diseased). As the aggregates are merely strongly interdependent rather than being "the same thing" even on a conventional level, and interdependence extends beyond the aggregates, what is the basis for the "overflow" effect of vipaka being limited to the individual?

Malcolm wrote:

Mind streams are individual, that's all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 5th, 2020 at 9:35 PM

Title: Re: Basis for vipaka being individual

Content:

GrapeLover said:

It's often said that the individual who produces certain karma is the (only) one who will experience the consequence of that karma ripening.

White Sakura said:

That is the teaching on the level of the relative truth.

Do not mix it with teachings that analyze the self and that come to the conclusion that there is no inherently existing self.

GrapeLover said:

Yeah, I'm basically looking to contrast this with the Kegon/Huayan view, which essentially holds that karmic effects do extend beyond the individual, even relatively.

Malcolm wrote:

This is an incorrect view of karma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 5th, 2020 at 9:36 PM

Title: Re: Prostrations as a stand alone practice

Content:

Könchok Thrinley said:

Are prostrations a stand alone practice?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 5th, 2020 at 9:38 PM

Title: Re: Abhidharmakosabhasyam Book Club

Content:

Queequeg said:

Yep. We have no schedule so let's take it as slow as we need. There will probably be sections that don't need to much discuy and some will need a lot.

Awesome job so far, Greg.

Malcolm wrote:

It would be wise to avoid some of the debates, and aim principally at grasping the Sarvastivada view, and Sautrantika critique.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 5th, 2020 at 9:41 PM

Title: Re: Are Zen teachers awakened?

Content:

reiun said:

Especially under the circumstance when the student is in the room with the teacher, and the student passes Mu and has that "bottom drops out" moment,

Matylda said:

this drama does not happen anymore, bottom dropping out - it comes from very old texts of Chinese masters who came over to Japan in Kamakura era. today it is much less dramatic, since the power of practice is very weak in comparison with the oldies. Today it is enough to have just some intuition and there is another koan to go. we forgot that zen practice is for complete liberation, and there are many signs of it. and the gaze is locked, then we can talk about another kind of senseless. no. this would be another pitfall reiu said:

Your opinion is misinformed and contradicted by direct contemporary experiences.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 6th, 2020 at 12:40 AM

Title: Re: Basis for vipaka being individual

Content:

GrapeLover said:

Hi there,

Though there is some variation between schools, it is typically taught that the consequences/vipaka of karma ripen on the individual that generated that karma alone.

What I do not really understand is that, as far as I know, it is the volition aggregate that generates karma, but other aggregates are involved in experiencing the vipaka (eg the body can become diseased). As the aggregates are merely strongly interdependent rather than being "the same thing" even on a conventional level, and interdependence extends beyond the aggregates, what is the basis for the "overflow" effect of vipaka being limited to the individual?

Malcolm wrote:

Mind streams are individual, that's all.

GrapeLover said:

That is fair enough. How is the mindstream held to affect the body, in terms of eg developing a disease at some point due to a karmic seed? It seems like the body would have to be "inside" the mindstream and everything else outside it, in order for individual mindstreams to explain things fully.

Malcolm wrote:

The body and mind are inseparable, like a flower and its scent.

GrapeLover said:

What I basically mean is that (sorry for the silly analogy)—if I clap my hands outside and it can't be heard a mile away, that is because the 'force' of the clap isn't sufficient, even though there is interconnection between the two areas and the clap can be heard to some extent for a fair distance. This AFAIK would be a broad parallel to a Kegon-style illustration of effects resonating out, but being stronger at the 'epicentre'.

On the other hand, if I clapped in a soundproof chamber and it couldn't be heard outside, this is basically because there isn't even interconnection or the potential for the sound to travel outside at all. If this is like how mindstreams are, then the body would seem to need to be "inside" the chamber of the mindstream in order for karma to affect it, while other phenomena are outside.

Malcolm wrote:

I think you have not properly studied the doctrine of karma. See chapter 4, Abhidharmakośabhaṣya.

Karma is not simple cause and effect, though it is often misrepresented this way. Karma is moral cause and effect, which determines happy and unhappy states of existence.

In Abhidharmakośabhaṣya, simple cause and effect are presented first in the section on the six causes and four conditions described in chapter 2. Then comes dependent origination, chapter 3; and after that karma and its results, chapter 4.

Your example is an instance of simple cause and effect, but this is not karmic cause and effect. For example, one of the reasons I never found Huayen and Tiantai particularly profound with all their talk of interpenetration, mutuality and so on, is that this is already covered in the Sarvāstivādin kāraṇa-hetu. This means that all things are automatically the cause of all other things apart from themselves.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 6th, 2020 at 12:46 AM

Title: Re: Are all phenomena equally empty in Madhyamaka?

Content:

akuppa said:

My problem is that it seems from a Madhyamaka point of view belief that a Self exists is equally wrong as belief that the consciousness aggregate arises and ceases based on causes and conditions (the dhamma theory). So the early Buddhist schools are just as misguided as non-Buddhists?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, from the Madhyamaka perspective, the idea that a real consciousness arises and falls based on real causes and conditions is an error. Consciousness itself cannot be a pāramārtha dharma because it is compounded, impermanent, empty, and not truly established.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 6th, 2020 at 12:48 AM

Title: Re: Are all phenomena equally empty in Madhyamaka?

Content:

akuppa said:

Yes, historical Madhyamaka does not directly critique Theravada Abhidhamma as far as I know.

Malcolm wrote:

It critiques as least one Vibhajyavādin theory of karma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 6th, 2020 at 12:50 AM

Title: Re: Abhidharmakosabhasyam Book Club

Content:

Queequeg said:

Yep. We have no schedule so let's take it as slow as we need. There will probably be sections that don't need to much discuy and some will need a lot.

Awesome job so far, Greg.

Malcolm wrote:

It would be wise to avoid some of the debates, and aim principally at grasping the Sarvastivada view, and Sautrantika critique.

Queequeg said:

I think that's where we'll lean on you to put up the guardrails and keep the discussion on track.

Malcolm wrote:

One thing that is a little confusing for some, is that Vasubandhu seems to let the Sarvastivadins win some of the time, though not often.

I personally think Vasubandhu was always a Mahāyāni.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 6th, 2020 at 1:29 AM

Title: Re: Basis for vipaka being individual

Content:

GrapeLover said:

Apologies; I didn't mean to imply that the clap and its sound were actually karmic cause and effect. I just meant to try and metaphorically illustrate the Kegon view of a karmic net through which effects can 'resonate' (similar to a sound wave resonating through air) versus a mindstream from which karmic effects cannot escape (like a sound wave failing to escape a chamber).

Malcolm wrote:

Karmic effects only ripen on the continuum that performed the action. There is no means by which it can cause some sort of resonance. For example, I shoot a man. Of course that action affects that man, but let's say he survives, my nonvirtuous act does not ripen on him. It will only ripen on me in the future. It is possible that my motivation for shooting this person is based on a past interaction with this man, but showing such relationships is beyond the range of ordinary mortals. We can only deal with this life's virtues and nonvirtues which govern our karma and its results in the next life.

GrapeLover said:

In the latter case, it seemed to imply that the body must be within the mindstream, as karma vipaka can physically affect it but is held not to be capable of affecting other phenomena.

Malcolm wrote:

The body is not "held" within the mindstream; one's continuum includes both mind and body. A karma is initiated by the mind and carried out by the body in the form of physical and speech acts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 6th, 2020 at 1:41 AM

Title: Re: Are all phenomena equally empty in Madhyamaka?

Content:

akuppa said:

My problem is that it seems from a Madhyamaka point of view belief that a Self exists is equally wrong as belief that the consciousness aggregate arises and ceases based on causes and conditions (the dhamma theory). So the early Buddhist schools are just as misguided as non-Buddhists?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, from the Madhyamaka perspective, the idea that a real consciousness arises and falls based on real causes and conditions is an error. Consciousness itself cannot be a pāramārtha dharma because it is compounded, impermanent, empty, and not truly established.

Astus said:

In the various discussions of the two truths.

'The conventional has two aspects: one that is mistaken and one that is correct. The former is twofold: the moon [reflected on] water and the conceptions of bad doctrines. Something that is pleasing only as long as it is not examined, which arises and ceases to exist'

(Entry into the Two Realities by Atisa, in Jewels of the Middle Way, p 119)

akuppa said:

So from the Madhyamaka pov it is more correct to say that consciousness arises and ceases than to say a self exists. If both are empty, how can this be the case? What kind of logic is used to assert this?

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is not more correct to say consciousness arises or ceases than a labelled self, a since consciousness is also a conventional label, like the label "self." Prior to analysis there is both a self, akuppa, and a consciousness. After analysis one will find neither self nor consciousness, beyond the designations "akuppa" and "consciousness." For example, take a car as a metaphor for "self". A car cannot be found in any part, all of its parts, or separate from its parts. Likewise, as self cannot be found in any aggregates, all of the aggregates, or apart from the aggregates. Likewise, consciousness cannot be found in the sense organ nor the sense object, both, or separate from them. The mind is also made of parts, and cannot be found in one of them, all of them, or separate from them.

Functionally speaking, we can say there is a self, because when I say "akuppa go there!" You will respond to this directive by saying yes or no. This means that "self" is functional. It is efficient. Whatever is functional corresponds with relative truth. If I said to you, "Malcolm go there!" you would respond, "I am not Malcolm." So calling you "malcolm" is not functional and therefore cannot be considered to be relatively true. Consciousness is a relative truth, as long as it performs its functions, then we can say "there is a consciousness." But when we analyze consciousness, we cannot find it outside of the conventions we use for an appearance we label "mind."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 6th, 2020 at 2:15 AM

Title: Re: Basis for vipaka being individual

Content:

GrapeLover said:

Apologies; I didn't mean to imply that the clap and its sound were actually karmic cause and effect. I just meant to try and metaphorically illustrate the Keron view of a karmic net through which effects can 'resonate' (similar to a sound wave resonating through air) versus a mindstream from which karmic effects cannot escape (like a sound wave failing to escape a chamber).

Malcolm wrote:

Karmic effects only ripen on the continuum that performed the action. There is no means by which it can cause some sort of resonance. For example, I shoot a man. Of course that action affects that man, but let's say he survives, my nonvirtuous act does not ripen on him. It will only ripen on me in the future. It is possible that my motivation for shooting this person is based on a past interaction with this man, but showing such relationships is beyond the range of ordinary mortals. We can only deal with this life's virtues and nonvirtues which govern our karma and its results in the next life.

GrapeLover said:

In the latter case, it seemed to imply that the body must be within the mindstream, as karma vipaka can physically affect it but is held not to be capable of affecting other phenomena.

Malcolm wrote:

The body is not "held" within the mindstream; one's continuum includes both mind and body. A karma is initiated by the mind and carried out by the body in the form of physical and speech acts.

GrapeLover said:

Thanks a lot for putting the time in to explain.

I think my sticking point is along the lines of—for instance, breaking samaya is held to harm one's vajra siblings due to the strength of the interdependence of having been empowered into the same mandala.

Malcolm wrote:

No, there is no basis for this idea. The idea is that it harms the guru.

GrapeLover said:

I basically feel like, to some weak and minuscule degree, such interdependence must be kind of all-pervasive among beings, in terms of all beings having been your mother etc. So I guess I'm thinking along those lines, basically, like the unknowable relationships you mention.

Malcolm wrote:

That is based on mano a mano interactions over countless lifetimes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 6th, 2020 at 6:59 PM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, Ver. 9: Threefold Classification of the Factors

Content:

Grigoris said:

Matter or material form is (1-5) the five sense-faculties, (6-10) the five object-referents [or object-fields of the five sense-faculties], arid (11) the non-informative.

So matter/material form is the five sense organs (eyes, ears, tongue, body and nose) and their objects (visual, aural, gustatory, bodily and olfactory sensations). It seems though that "indriya" does not refer just to the physical sense organs, but to the related sense consciousness as well, to the process of sensing.

As for 11. The endnote says:

The SA.IV.Glossary.520 describes them as follows:

avijnapti-rupa: Non-informative matter. This is a special type of matter (rupa) which constitutes a non-informative action (avijnapti-karma). It is non-resistant and invisible, and comes into existence in dependence on the force of a volition (cetana), an informative action and a set of great elements (mahabhuta). It is a special type of derived matter (upadaya-rupa) which is not comprised of atoms (paramanu).

avijnapti-karma: Non-informative action. Unlike an informative action (vijnapti karma) which informs us of the mental state of the doer, this is a karmic force which, once projected by a bodily or vocal action (karma), continues to exist as a series invisibly; hence, non-informative.

Clear as mud, right?

Malcolm wrote:

Avijnapti is created by taking vows. The discussion of it is pursued at length in the karma chapter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 6th, 2020 at 8:55 PM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, Ver. 9: Threefold Classification of the Factors

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Avijnapti is created by taking vows. The discussion of it is pursued at length in the karma chapter.

The non-informative (avijnapti);

11. [Vaibhīṣika:] - Even in a person whose thought is distracted, or who is [for a certain time] without thought, there exists a serial continuity, good or bad, in reliance upon the fundamental material elements: that, indeed, is what is called non-informative.

Grigoris said:

How does this differ from the bhavanga citta of the Abhidhamma?

How can this be a wholesome or unwholesome mind state, if there is no attention (and thus no motivation) involved?

Malcolm wrote:

It's a kind of matter, not mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 6th, 2020 at 8:57 PM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, Ver. 9: Threefold Classification of the Factors

Content:

Grigoris said:

Difference between the elementary substance earth & earth, etc.; 178 F 23-24

What is the difference between the elementary substance earth [prthivfdhiitu] and earth [prthivf], between the elementary substance water [abdhiitu] and water [ap], etc?

13. In common usage [lokasa.,,jiiii], the word earth signifies [actually] color and shape; the same for [the common usage of the words]

water and fire, [i.e., they signify actually color and shape]. [The common usage of the word] wind [signifies] either the elementary substance wind, or else, color and shape.

So when referring to Mahabhuta we are talking about qualities, but in common usage we are referring to something describing a particular colour and shape.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because the elements themselves are composed of all four elements.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 6th, 2020 at 9:13 PM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, Ver. 9: Threefold Classification of the Factors

Content:

Grigoris said:

[Answer:] - Without a doubt, the monad is free from rupana; but a single material form as a monad (paramanurupa) never exists in an isolated state [prthak]; 186

[however,] in the state of a composite (samghatastha), i.e., being in aggregation, it is susceptible to deterioration and to offering resistance.

Wait on. Is the monad subject to deterioration is it the composite that breaks down into monads?

[

Malcolm wrote:

It is saying that composites formed of atoms are susceptible to breaking down.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 7th, 2020 at 12:32 AM

Title: Re: Are Zen teachers awakened?

Content:

reiun said:

If you understood the experience of passing Mu, the traditional first koan in a course of koan study, you could never say such a thing.

Matyllda said:

First i base my opinions on my own work when I had to interpret for foreigners second it comes from my own questions to teachers and monks whom I could ask and got the clear answer third, the critique of modern koan study, lack of samadhi power and kensho experience is made also by contemporary rinzai teachers in Japan, who express their concern about the level of zazen practice so I think that the source is reliable and I have no doubt about what they say

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 7th, 2020 at 1:44 AM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, Ver. 3: Exposition of the Elements (Dhatunirdesa); Three types of Abhidharma

Content:

Grigoris said:

So are all practices merely for the sake of perfecting discernment?

Queequeg said:

That's what it seems to say. Discerning the factors, relieves the defilements. Relieving the defilements releases people from samsara.

The echo of the 4NT is there.

PeterC said:

Is it saying that all practices lead to this; or is it saying that any practices aside from the discernment of the factors, though they may be helpful at a relative level, do not lead to liberation? By implication - that one could achieve liberation purely through intellectual analysis?

Malcolm wrote:

The question of practices for liberation are taken up in vol. 3, chapter 6, The Path. We are light years from that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 7th, 2020 at 6:21 AM

Title: Re: Are Zen teachers awakened?

Content:

seeker242 said:

to claim that a person who has reached the 8th or 9th Bhumi, or the equivalent or whatever other scale that is used, to claim that that person would not be worthy of being called a zen master, or to claim that this would still somehow still be unsatisfactory, I just don't see how that is reasonable.

Astus said:

There is no such claim. The claim is that Zen transmits the very mind of the Buddha, that members of the lineage are on the same level of awakening as the Buddha himself.

seeker242 said:

Yes there is such a claim. If the original claim is "that members of the lineage are on the same level of awakening as the Buddha himself" that is no different than saying "9th bhumi still just isn't good enough" since 9th bhumi, is by definition, not the same as Buddha himself.

Malcolm wrote:

Neither is the 10th, since the stage of buddhahood is the 11th, in sūtrayāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 7th, 2020 at 6:44 AM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, Ver. 9: Threefold Classification of the Factors

Content:

Grigoris said:

Here is another point that I forgot: One of the types of tangibles is coldness.

How does this differ from the role of the Mahabhuta Fire? Surely this determines temperature and not some seperate tangible?

Malcolm wrote:

Absence of the fire element feels cold. Absence of the earth element results in hunger and lightness. Absence of the water element results in thirst, etc. It is not hard to suss out.

And you are jumping ahead. This is all in verse 10.

Think of all of this as a filing cabinet. You will gradually have all this filled in, but not all at once.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 7th, 2020 at 9:36 AM

Title: Re: Kanye West announces POTUS run

Content:

tkp67 said:

John I am suggesting moderation in terms of separatist conditioning in our country is right view.

The forces seeking polarity are so pervasive it is assumed that anything but is still a reasonable position.

I am willing to make the argument that a number of humanitarian teachings not just buddhism promote good will and compassion as a foundation not as conditional and any time that is deviated from it is wrong view.

I am not suggest anyone is holding these views even if their statements are interpreted that way. That is the point of clarity here.

PeterC said:

I also don't understand what you're arguing for. It is anything but clarity.

If you could you simplify it to practical questions like: who should we vote for? What policies should we support? - then we might be able to have a conversation.

I don't like the way you use terms like "middle way", "reasonable position" etc. as if there's some natural law that makes compromise the best choice. If someone wants to kill people, and another person doesn't, the compromise position of "let's just kill a few people" isn't better than either of those "polarities". Some ideas are simply right or wrong.

Malcolm wrote:

But imagine if he were elected...DC as a James Turrell light installation ...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 7th, 2020 at 9:38 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

thepea said:

White House declares 99% of cases are harmless, perhaps health care is aware of this so only swabbing severe symptomatic people properly.

Make sure numbers stay up but also hospitalizations numbers as well.

Fear fear fear.

PeterC said:

If you're listening to the white house's advice on this, or indeed on anything, you are a fool.

Malcolm wrote:

Seconded.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 7th, 2020 at 9:42 AM

Title: Re: Academic books on Mahayana thought

Content:

Jon N said:

Hello all.

First, I didn't know if this topic was more appropriate for this forum or for the academic discussion forum. Since what I'm asking might interest newcomers to Buddhism (I'm more or less one of them) I decided to post here. Feel free to move this topic to the academic forum or any other forum if you think it belongs there.

I would like to study the history of Mahayana and Vajrayana thought. This means books that cover the history of Buddhist thought from Madhyamaka to Yogacara and Vajrayana Buddhism. I'm interested in covering from Nagarjuna to Tsongkhapa especially, but I wouldn't mind to learn the development of Tibetan Buddhism up until the Rimé movement or even the XXth century. I am currently following the Karma Kagyu lineage, so if there are books that include the development of Buddhist thought from Nagarjuna up to the Karma Kagyu (including schools that pre-date the Kagyu but are part of its lineage, like the Kadampa), that would be perfect. But a general perspective on Tibetan Buddhism would be appreciated. I also don't mind if chapters about East Asian Buddhism like Tiantai or Chan are included, as long as Tibetan Buddhism is well covered.

I already know and have read "Mahayana Buddhism: The Doctrinal Foundations" by Paul Williams. It is very similar to what I'm looking for, but I would like to get deeper into the different authors and masters than this book does.

I'm not expecting to find a single book covering all of this in depth, so if you can suggest me several books, each for a different school/period, that would be ok.

Lastly, I don't mind to read "popular" or divulgative books, but what I am looking for right now is academic books similar to those by Paul Williams. I majored in philosophy and I'm used to get deep into the ideas.

Thanks a lot for your attention, best wishes to all and I hope someone can come up with some good book recommendations!

Malcolm wrote:

https://www.amazon.com/gp/product/B008D30MMW/ref=dbs_a_def_rwt_hsch_vapi_tkin_p1_i0

https://www.amazon.com/Tibetan-Renaissance-Tantric-Buddhism-Rebirth-ebook/dp/B008D2TOE0/ref=sr_1_3?

dchild=1&qid=1594086108&refinements=p_27%3ARonald+Davidson&s=digital-text&sr=1-3&text=Ronald+Davidson

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 7th, 2020 at 7:09 PM

Title: Re: Kanye West announces POTUS run

Content:

PeterC said:

I also don't understand what you're arguing for. It is anything but clarity.

If you could you simplify it to practical questions like: who should we vote for? What policies should we support? - then we might be able to have a conversation.

I don't like the way you use terms like "middle way", "reasonable position" etc. as if there's some natural law that makes compromise the best choice. If someone wants to kill people, and another person doesn't, the compromise position of "let's just kill a few people" isn't better than either of those "polarities". Some ideas are simply right or wrong.

Malcolm wrote:

But imagine if he were elected...DC as a James Turrell light installation ...

PeterC said:

I'll settle for the biden/trump/west presidential debate. That will be a moment for the history books. The schizophrenic rapper and sneaker designer will be the most articulate and richest person on the stage.

Malcolm wrote:

Touché.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 7th, 2020 at 7:10 PM

Title: Re: Kanye West announces POTUS run

Content:

Dan74 said:

I can't speak for tkp67, but there is a radical middle ground that is very rarely taken. And that's the rejection that one must necessarily align oneself with this side or that. Admitting that both sides lie and behave dishonourably, which does not equate to moral equivalence (before one jumps to that conclusion). That both sides have been playing the people for a long time. That jumping to conclusions, broad-brushing and striving to demolish one's opponent should give place to listening and finding a common ground to build upon.

One of the reasons that Trump won, it seems to me, was the duplicitous way both sides have played the public for years. Instead of addressing entrenched poverty, lack of basic services (like the healthcare), real inequities and deep systemic suffering, they threw the masses the culture war issues to fight over. Transgender bathrooms. Wedge issues. Divide and conquer.

Trump capitalised on that with his three-pronged platform of anti-corruption (drain the swamp), bring back the jobs and yes, the culture wars, including the best part - xenophobia, white insecurity and disenfranchisement by a large section of voters.

People take the bait and the Machine trundles on. People like Bernie or Andrew Yang who focus on real issues, don't make it, because it is not about that. That a politician or his/her program have a visceral appeal should be a cause of alarm. Instead in the US, it seems to be a prerequisite. Because it is basically showbiz.

It's an obvious thing to say I take it, but being a good campaigner and being a good administrator have precious little to do with one another. They are almost opposites.

It seems to me that your entire system needs a thorough overhaul. From the divisive press to the nonsense campaign. But it has to start with education. With kids learning critical thinking at schools. Logical fallacies. Evidence-based reasoning. Emotional and psychological manipulation. Mass hysteria. Holding those driving the public discourse accountable for what they say. Truly. A lie and you should hang your head in shame. Yes, bring back shame.

Malcolm wrote:

Um no, Trump lost by 4 million votes. He won the electoral college by a fluke.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 7th, 2020 at 7:14 PM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, Ver. 9: Threefold Classification of the Factors

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Absence of the fire element feels cold. Absence of the earth element results in hunger and lightness. Absence of the water element results in thirst, etc. It is not hard to suss out.

Grigoris said:

That is what I thought. Which is why I am asking: Why reference a seperate specific physical factor for the task?

Malcolm wrote:

These are the sense objects of the body indriya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 7th, 2020 at 7:16 PM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Mahayana arose at the same time as Hinayana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 8th, 2020 at 12:31 AM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Mahayana arose at the same time as Hinayana.

Astus said:

That is a bit ambiguous. For instance, the term hinayana is used by mahayana in order to distinguish itself, and since these terms depend on each other, like low and high, they cannot exist separately.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, hence, they arose at the same time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 8th, 2020 at 12:34 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Dan74 said:

And no way in the US 99% of the cases are harmless. No, that's just wrong. If I had to make a wild stab in the dark guess, I'd say 60-75% are harmless.

Malcolm wrote:

That is definitely a stone thrown in the dark. We do not know.

And of course today, it is coming out that immunity to covid may be temporary, which bodes quite ill for controlling this illness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 8th, 2020 at 4:54 AM

Title: Re: Kanye West announces POTUS run

Content:

DharmaN00b said:

In other words people have lost all trust in politicians and news. They're taking the piss, so we're now in a position where the only reliable source of information are the comedians...

Malcolm wrote:

Well, no. Newspapers of record are still reliable sources of information. They practice journalism, which is something that comedians do not practice. Just because there are many fools out there who rely on "News Corporation" for their news, well...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 8th, 2020 at 4:55 AM

Title: Re: Kanye West announces POTUS run

Content:

Dan74 said:

QQ, I don't think you've really understood what I tried to say. I will have to go and scratch my head a bit to see why I am failing to communicate.

Queequeg said:

How about summarizing your point in one sentence?

Dan74 said:

If you focus on what truly matters, there is a great deal of common ground among the people right across society. Don't let the bastards fool you!

Malcolm wrote:

I focus on what truly matters, and there is a huge gulf between myself and anyone who, at this point, is willing to vote for Trump.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 8th, 2020 at 5:01 AM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Astus said:

That is a bit ambiguous. For instance, the term hinayana is used by mahayana in order to distinguish itself, and since these terms depend on each other, like low and high, they cannot exist separately.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, hence, they arose at the same time.

Minobu said:

So like i thought the Buddha taught out loud stuff we termed theradavia . then the Mahayana was instructed to various people through the means of Dharmakaya stuff.

Malcolm wrote:

No, that is not what I mean. According to Mahāyāna tradition, the Mahāyāna Sūtra were collected by Mañjuśrī and Samantabhadra. Ānanda's secret identity is Samantabhadra Bodhisattva.

Mahāyāna teachings arose at the same time as Hinayāna teachings, but because no one could understand them, they were cached away. This is the traditional point of view.

Of course, if people wish to believe whatever text critical scholars are saying today (and that will change tomorrow), they are welcome to it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 8th, 2020 at 5:06 AM

Title: Re: in defense

Content:

clyde said:

There's the criticism that Western Zen and Western Zen teachers aren't as good (awakened, skillful, etc.) as the "good ole' days" in the East and that these are the "Dharma-ending days", etc.

Malcolm wrote:

That was stated by Matylda, a Japanese woman raised in a Soto Zen family, and a translator who has translated for many Zen teachers in Japan. Not only does she think that Zen in West is 99% bunk, she thinks Japanese Zen is in late stage senescence. However, she hardly sounds happy about it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 8th, 2020 at 5:10 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Dan74 said:

And no way in the US 99% of the cases are harmless. No, that's just wrong. If I had to make a wild stab in the dark guess, I'd say 60-75% are harmless.

Malcolm wrote:

That is definitely a stone thrown in the dark. We do not know.

And of course today, it is coming out that immunity to covid may be temporary, which bodes quite ill for controlling this illness.

Pero said:

Actually as far as I can remember several random studies in the EU showed that the majority (95%+) of the cases are asymptomatic. In my country it was around 97%. This reduces the mortality rate a lot. Not sure it matters much though due to the seemingly high infectiousness. 5% is a lot of people when we're possibly talking about billions of people.

But it is also questionable if the disease is harmless if you don't have any symptoms. I remember reading that there were lung changes detectable by x-ray even in asymptomatic people.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, there are two kinds of "asymptomatic:" Presymptomatic and truly asymptomatic.

And since covid immunity wears off, so it seems, people can be reinfected, and we do not know the consequences for reinfected people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 8th, 2020 at 7:18 AM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Minobu said:

So like i thought the Buddha taught out loud stuff we termed theradavia .
then the Mahayana was instructed to various people through the means of Dharmakaya stuff.

Malcolm wrote:

No, that is not what I mean. According to Mahāyāna tradition, the Mahāyāna Sūtra were collected by Mañjuśrī and Samantabhadra. Ānanda's secret identity is Samantabhadra Bodhisattva.

Mahāyāna teachings arose at the same time as Hinayāna teachings, but because no one could understand them, they were cached away. This is the traditional point of view.

Of course, if people wish to believe whatever text critical scholars are saying today (and that will change tomorrow), they are welcome to it.

Minobu said:

ok but when you say this No, that is not what I mean. According to Mahāyāna tradition, the Mahāyāna Sūtra were collected by Mañjuśrī and Samantabhadra. Ānanda's secret identity is Samantabhadra Bodhisattva.

Are these not Dharmakaya mythology characters?

or do you have archaeological or what ever stuff like records that these people wandered around our earth..like 2500 years ago?

Which is where I was at in these quotes.

Malcolm wrote:

We don't even have actual evidence that the Buddha is a historical person.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 8th, 2020 at 7:35 AM

Title: Re: What was the reason behind the development of new vehicles?

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

We should also add that the whole thing about dharma seals is also from much later

Grigoris said:

You love to make statements without providing evidence for their veracity, don't you?

Fortyeightvows said:

Well, it is true and everyone who has studied the agamas know it.

Even the english wikipedia page says it and cites everyone's favorite Thich Naht Hahn! the Dharma Seals were all introduced after Gautama Buddha died https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Four_Dharma_Seals

Malcolm wrote:

No, this mistaken, the seals are given in different orders in Mahayana sutras, but they are present, I'll give you a list tomorrow or next day.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 8th, 2020 at 6:51 PM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Bristollad said:

how do you choose the features that identify an "early" text. Material arranged in such a way as to be easy to recite and memorise does not make it an early text, it only makes it material arranged to be easy to recite and memorise.

Astus said:

That is not the only criteria, however, it is accepted by all that the teachings were recorded in writing only later, so it is one of the signals, but, again, not the only one.

Malcolm wrote:

Text criticism is basically scholastic wanking. It really doesn't prove anything. Guesswork at best, downright erroneous at worst.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 8th, 2020 at 7:02 PM

Title: Re: What was the reason behind the development of new vehicles?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, this mistaken, the seals are given in different orders in Mahayana sutras, but they are present, I'll give you a list tomorrow or next day.

Fortyeightvows said:

Sure in the Mahayana sutras, definitely, I have no doubt.

But can you find it in any of the early texts, like the agamas or nikayas ?

Malcolm wrote:

Agamas and nikayas are not early, and Mahayana is not late.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 8th, 2020 at 7:24 PM

Title: Re: in defense

Content:

Dan74 said:

it stems from the distrust of a tradition that deemphasises Mahayana dogma (note, I did not say 'dismisses').

Malcolm wrote:

This is mainly a western no-nothing trip. Any brief exploration of Dogen, Hakuin, etc., reveals that theses masters were deeply knowledgeable in sutra, and even "esoteric" Buddhism, and emphasized a combination of scriptural knowledge combined with practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 8th, 2020 at 7:29 PM

Title: Re: What was the reason behind the development of new vehicles?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Agamas and nikayas are not early, and Mahayana is not late.

bridif1 said:

Forgive my insistence on this, but when we evaluate the earliness or lateness of a text, what are we analyzing?

Its date of writing? The date of the events referred to in the texts? The date of the beginning of the oral transmission of the teaching? The date of some posterior modifications?

When you say Agamas and Nikayas are not early, what are you stating exactly?

Malcolm wrote:

Evaluating the lateness or earliness of a text is like measuring the length of the horns on rabbits.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 8th, 2020 at 9:54 PM

Title: Re: What was the reason behind the development of new vehicles?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Evaluating the lateness or earliness of a text is like measuring the length of the horns on rabbits.

bridif1 said:

So you don't any utility and validity coming from textual criticism?

If that's the case, nothing I could say would stand as a valid argument.

Malcolm wrote:

Dharma cannot be found in text criticism. It involves a tremendous amount of conjecture and speculation, which is all proliferation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 8th, 2020 at 10:28 PM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It really doesn't prove anything.

Astus said:

When sravakas are depicted as people holding views that are found in texts clearly later than the agamas, then on what basis is it reasonable to assume that such a work is earlier than those that contain the views mentioned?

Would you take, for instance, that such stanzas like these were uttered as true prophecies?

'From the Mahāsāṃghika school

Will seven schools separate,

And from the Sthaviravāda eleven.

These are the twenty schools.

These eighteen and the original two

All derive from the Mahayana.

Neither correct nor incorrect,

I say that these will arise in the future'

(The Sutra of Mañjuśrī's Questions, BDK ed, p 99)

Or that there was talk of Vaibhasikas before the existence of the Mahavibhasa?

'Then instruct upon the Vaibhasya doctrine and after that the Sutranta doctrine. Then instruct upon the Yogacara doctrine followed by the Madhyamaka doctrine. After teaching all the practices of mantra, then commence with the instruction on the Hevajra practice.'

(The Concealed Essence of the Hevajra Tantra, p 273)

Malcolm wrote:

How is this exercise in conjecture about the date of these texts useful to a mahayani or a Vajrayani? This is only of interest to non-practitioners.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 8th, 2020 at 11:46 PM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Bundokji said:

It is early to know what countries have adopted better policies than others, but Sweden's policy of "sustainability" (which i personally like) is often linked to being prepared for the long term fight with the pandemic, acknowledging uncertainty in time and taking into account the health implications of strict health measures on the general population.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/07/07/business/sweden-economy-coronavirus.html>

Bundokji said:

This is what has happened: Not only have thousands more people died than in neighboring countries that imposed lockdowns, but Sweden's economy has fared little better.

"They literally gained nothing," said Jacob F. Kirkegaard, a senior fellow at the Peterson Institute for International Economics in Washington. "It's a self-inflicted wound, and they have no economic gains."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 8th, 2020 at 11:56 PM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

How is this exercise in conjecture about the date of these texts useful to a mahayani or a Vajrayani? This is only of interest to non-practitioners.

Astus said:

Aren't practitioners invested in the matter of studying authentic Dharma? The authenticity of a teaching is commonly decided based on its provenance, and only secondarily by its content.

Malcolm wrote:

The authenticity of a teaching is decided on the basis of its content, not its supposed provenance, determined by some historiographical criteria, which is at best arbitrary and a product of the perceptions of common people.

What you are basically proposing is that the authenticity of a given Dharma text or teaching is to be determined on the basis of the contaminated perceptions of common people rather than the uncontaminated insight of āryas. Thus, practitioners invested in the matter of studying Dharma should follow the latter rather than the former.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 8th, 2020 at 11:58 PM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Bundokji said:

We should...keep our minds open and not make conclusions? How will that help anyone make actual decisions on public health?

There are different ways of dealing with uncertainty, i hope i am not stating the obvious? What might look now as a good policy might turn out to be as not the best one and vice versa.

I'm sorry but what you're saying is incoherent.

I did not make any incoherent statements. On the contrary, your style of communicating seems to be accusatory.

PeterC said:

It is - I'm accusing you of being a fool. My reasons are above.

I don't want people to die unnecessarily. That is more important right now than being polite.

Malcolm wrote:

Seconded.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 9th, 2020 at 12:06 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Bundokji said:

Earlier today, Trump tweeted that the death rate from Coronavirus is down tenfold. I am certain that many would disagree, but does anyone know how he came up with this? what kind of statistics and assumptions he was relying on?

Malcolm wrote:
He pulled it directly out of his ass.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, July 9th, 2020 at 12:16 AM
Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?
Content:
Dan74 said:
How is being polite going to be detrimental to saving lives?

Malcolm wrote:
Because when people are being fools about Covid, they will likely behave in ways that put others in mortal danger, such as not wearing masks, refusing to socially isolate, and so on.

One infected person in Wuhan resulted in 4800 infections.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, July 9th, 2020 at 12:18 AM
Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?
Content:
Johnny Dangerous said:
Trump is an idiot, but lockdowns aren't sustainable either, we are in a terrible situation.

Malcolm wrote:
It would be sustainable if our gvt. actually behaved responsibly.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, July 9th, 2020 at 12:22 AM
Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?
Content:

Bundokji said:
It is early to know what countries have adopted better policies than others, but Sweden's policy of "sustainability" (which i personally like) is often linked to being prepared for the long term fight with the pandemic, acknowledging uncertainty in time and taking into account the health implications of strict health measures on the general population.

Malcolm wrote:
<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/07/07/business/sweden-economy-coronavirus.html>

Bundokji said:

This is what has happened: Not only have thousands more people died than in neighboring countries that imposed lockdowns, but Sweden's economy has fared little better.

"They literally gained nothing," said Jacob F. Kirkegaard, a senior fellow at the Peterson Institute for International Economics in Washington. "It's a self-inflicted wound, and they have no economic gains."

Hi Malcolm.

In his recent exchange with the WHO, Sweden's chief epidemiologist Anders Tegnell indicated that it's too early to make conclusions.

Malcolm wrote:

He is a fool too.

Bundokji said:

Do you have any objections about their rationale rather than citing news articles?

Malcolm wrote:

Death rates.

Bundokji said:

More generally, strict lockdowns does not equate success. We have cases of countries that imposed strict lockdowns and failed due to other factors, and we have examples of the opposite.

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually we don't.

The solution to success in this pandemic is very simple: testing + quarantine + contact tracing. All countries who followed this recipe, such as Taiwan, New Zealand, and so on, are doing fine. Those who failed in any one of these three pillars of pandemic control are not doing very well.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 9th, 2020 at 5:53 AM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Grigoris said:

And who gets to decide what is authentic Dharma? Historians?

Astus said:

"Without approval and without scorn, but carefully studying the sentences word by word, one should trace them in the Discourses and verify them by the Discipline. If they are neither traceable in the Discourses nor verifiable by the Discipline, one must conclude thus: 'Certainly, this is not the Blessed One's utterance; this has been misunderstood by that bhikkhu — or by that community, or by those elders, or by that elder.' In that way, bhikkhus, you should reject it. But if the sentences concerned are traceable in the Discourses and verifiable by the Discipline, then one must conclude thus: 'Certainly, this is the Blessed One's utterance; this has been well understood by that bhikkhu — or by that community, or by those elders, or by that elder.'" (<https://www.accesstoinight.org/tipitaka/dn/dn.16.1-6.vaji.html>)

Malcolm wrote:

This is valid only if one supposes that the shravaka canons are the standard by one judges what constitutes buddhavacana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 9th, 2020 at 8:57 PM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is valid only if one supposes that the shravaka canons are the standard by one judges what constitutes buddhavacana.

Astus said:

Not necessarily. For instance, if one accepts a Vaipulya Pitaka and a Dharani Pitaka as parts of the Buddha's words, then they serve as a basis of measuring anything questionable.

Malcolm wrote:

And if one accepts the Vidyādhara piṭaka???

In sum, to address your fear of contradictions, the Buddha's higher teachings regularly conflict with the Buddha's lower teachings, and this is determined by content alone, and not provenance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 9th, 2020 at 9:02 PM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Grigoris said:

Some of the skillful qualities cultivated in tantric system are directly at odds with basic tenets in the Sravakayana.

Astus said:

Skilful qualities (kusala dharma) are those that are free from craving, anger, and delusion (see: <https://accesstoinight.org/tipitaka/mn/mn.009.ntbb.html#kusala>).

What is it that Vajrayana considers skilful that is rooted in the three poisons?

Malcolm wrote:

The distinction generally drawn is between renunciation (three lower vehicles) and transformation (kriya tantra to anuyoga). In Vajrayāna, through skillful means:

"That by which fools are bound, by that same thing the wise are liberated."

--Saraha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 10th, 2020 at 1:42 AM

Title: Re: Kanye West announces POTUS run

Content:

Queequeg said:

It would be pretty amazing to see Kanye pull out a wad of $100s and make it rain over the stage to demonstrate he is a legit billionaire compared to Trump's shabby posturing.

PeterC said:

Exactly. Then perhaps he can go on to compare his fidelity to Kim Kardashian to Trump's affairs. A rapper doesn't cheat on his wife but the president of the US cheats on all his wives, including while they're pregnant.

Malcolm wrote:

Revise that to "especially while they're pregnant."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 10th, 2020 at 1:47 AM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Astus said:

I don't really see those conflicts, but I guess that is already another conflict.

Malcolm wrote:

For example, Śrāvaka bhikṣus cannot handle gold, but may eat meat. Mahāyāna bhikṣus may handle gold, but may not eat meat. Vajrayāna bhikṣu may both handle gold and eat meat. There are many such contradictions because "the Buddha's higher teachings regularly conflict with the Buddha's lower teachings."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 10th, 2020 at 1:54 AM

Title: Re: What was the reason behind the development of new vehicles?

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Man, can I boil this question down again and ask:

In Buddhist terms, what exactly is the soteriological relevance of "Early Buddhism" as it's envisioned by it's proponents? People have alluded to differences in meditative practice, I'd be really curious to hear more on that.

bridif1 said:

Apparently (from what some portion of the scholar community seems to indicate), the historical Buddha taught how to stop dukkha and the cycle of rebirth, and from this simplified, there doesn't seem to exist much difference between EB and Mahayana schools.

Malcolm wrote:

The existential question Hinayāna and Mahāyāna dharma aim to resolve is the same.

bridif1 said:

The divergence becomes evident when we look the figure of the one reaching the goal: for EB, the figure of highest praise, outside from the Buddha, is the Arahant, because the fulfilled the ideal set by the Teacher. The bodhisattva ideal and the emphasis in aiming for Buddhahood instead of arahantship seem to come from a later period of doctrinal development.

Malcolm wrote:

No, if it were, the Buddha would have been content to be a pratyekabuddha.

bridif1 said:

What I wanted to understand were the historical reasons behind those developments, and I thought a Mahayana forum could be a good place for asking for Mahayana history.

Malcolm wrote:

Some people will be inclined to give you an emic response, others an etic response.

bridif1 said:

On the differences on meditative practices:

I don't know almosy anything about method of meditation in Mahayana schools, so there's little I could say about it. Where I see the differences, both in appearence and in general structure, is in some modern Theravada and secular meditation techniques when being compared to what it is described as "jhana" in EBTs. There are some essays, books and studies on the matter of the historical development of the understanding of what is Samma Samadhi and on the assessment of the differences between early and current buddhist views on SS. I'm currently reading "Reexamining Jhana: Towards a Critical Reconstruction of Early Buddhist Soteriology", by Grzegorz Polak, in which he postulates his hypotheses based on his own and multiple previous studies, and by looking into other texts from non-buddhist schools and comparing such texts with what it seems to be the early or no-so-later strata of texts in the Pali Canon. These differences, as far as I'm studying them, seem to be absolutely relevant for the path; it is not merely an academic matter (at least not for me).

Malcolm wrote:

The thirty-seven bodhipakṣadharmas are the same in both systems. The difference is solely motivation. Also in both systems, the cultivation of the dhyānas above the first lead to traces that have to be eradicated on the path seeing. Therefore, the higher seven dhyānas should only be cultivated by āryas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 10th, 2020 at 1:59 AM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Astus said:

Even if such distinctions were accepted, the end result would still be the same liberation. Appearances are selfless, empty, buddhas, or self-liberated - it's either one is lost in clinging or not.

'It is said that all the learned and accomplished masters of India and Tibet had the same realization and there is not a single master who claims that the realization of the main part of practice is anything other than nonfixation.'

(Naturally Liberating Whatever You Meet: Instructions to Guide You on the Profound Path by Khenpo Gangshar, in Vivid Awareness, p 227)

Malcolm wrote:

There are two ways to be free of grasping: regarding all things as impure and rejecting them as such (Hinayāna and common Mahāyāna), and regarding all things as pure and accepting them as such. The latter method is more rapid, but requires special methods, so that it is not merely an intellectual posture.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 10th, 2020 at 2:03 AM

Title: Re: Ability to Control the Weather

Content:

yagmort said:

[Mod note: This quote was taken from this old thread:

<https://dharma wheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=39&t=26392#p404144>]

Malcolm wrote:

...Kunzang Dechen Lingpa had this ability. Ngagpa Rinpoche was able to stop monsoon rains, droughts, and so on.

yagmort said:

are these abilities connected to Thröma Nakmo practice, or it's just a coincidence ?

Malcolm wrote:

There is a method for controlling Nāgās for making rain in several practices systems, but my guru, the late Ngakpa Yeshe Dorje, maintained that his ability to control the weather was inherited from one of his ancestors, who has a siddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 10th, 2020 at 2:04 AM

Title: Re: Waiting time to cremate after passing away?

Content:

uncrase said:

My dad passed away and one of the wishes he has conveyed to my mom was related to that he did not want his body to be disturbed and/or cremated for a specific amount of time after death. We think it was one week.

She does not recall the details and what exactly it was based on, but it came from his philosophical / meditative / spiritual nature - not extreme, just loosely something he was into.

This came up for example when he was considering donating his body to science, from which he backed out because it would mean his body would need to be opened and disturbed already a few days after passing away.

Does anyone have any clues what religious or spiritual stream this relates to, or it may have been come from?

We're not sure how much of this was his own making, and/or religious "rule" or thought it was based on?

Any input would be very much appreciated

Malcolm wrote:

Three days.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 10th, 2020 at 6:14 AM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Astus said:

I don't think any path promotes accepting or rejecting as the way to go. Rather, to be free of grasping, one needs to see things as they actually are.

Malcolm wrote:

This is consistent with the path of renunciation, including Khenchen's comment.

But in Vajrayāna, we do not give up the basis, that is, the five objects of desire. Loppön Sonam Tsemo states in his General Presentation of the Divisions of Tantra:

First, the basis, as explained before, is the five desire objects. Those are the basis itself, but if it is the objects themselves, how are they to be given up? Since most people are totally fettered, how are [they] able to give up [the basis]?

[The basis] is not to be given up. The Vajrapañjara Tantra states:

Created by passion, the worldly shall be liberated by the same passion.

And the Śrī Guhyasamāja:

The passionate desiring wisdom always rely on the five desire objects.

Now then, if one asks “Won’t there be bondage because of objects?” Those without a method will be bound, i.e., like common beings. If one possesses a method, liberation is assisted by those [objects] themselves. For example, like poison, or like fire. Therefore, objects do not intrinsically create bondage. Bondage is created by the deceived concepts that depend on those [objects].

For that reason, since one is liberated because of having given up the intrinsic cause of bondage [i.e. deceived concepts,] the objects which [earlier] became the condition of that [bondage] [now] become the condition of liberation.

As such, the Śrī Hevajra-tantra states:

The savage actions of people bring bondage by this and that;
If one possesses the method, by just those [actions] one shall be liberated from the bondage of becoming.

How does this in fact work? Again with respect to the creation stage:

The first is having understood the object and subject of who and what appears as oneself as the sole deity, sensual pleasures are mentioned in the Śrī Guhyasamāja:

All the desired pleasures are what one serves with desire;

make offerings to oneself and others with the yoga of oneself as the deity.

It is also mentioned in the same way elsewhere. That reduces and then dispels the ordinary concepts of those interested [in desire objects]...Since that is so, the cause of bondage is concepts of the ordinary. If that is a consciousness of a deity, since the ordinary ceases, everything will be given up respectively.

With respect to the completion stage:

Second, skill in means of the completion stage is the arising of nonconceptual samadhi dependent on any suitable method, and because of that, the objects change their aspect, and can be enjoyed.

As such, the Continuation of the Guhyasamāja Tantra states:

The form of aggregates, elements and gateway arising from method and wisdom are definitely applied in mantra with the yoga of the completion stage.

In that way, the cause of bondage is conceptuality. Since non-conceptual samadhi removes conceptuality, all bonds will be respectively released.

Finally, with respect to how liberation actually occurs in Vajrayāna:

Third, the way one is liberated from that [bondage]: as before, in general the cause of bondage is just conceptuality, and in particular, concepts of the ordinary because the afflictions, etc., arise respectively depending upon that. That being so, if the intrinsic nature of that cause is dispelled by the two methods [above], since the aspect of the objects has changed, again one can depend on objects since they have been transformed into assisting antidotes. As such, The Hevajra Tantra states:

Since the poison has been eliminated by purification, these objects to be relied upon are reliable.

The problem of liberation is not to be quickly resolved by renunciation of the five objects of desire, rather, it is to be quickly resolved by relinquishing the ordinary conceptuality about the five objects of desire that is the root of all attachment and aversion. Sonam Tsemo argues:

Also it is said that the Pāramitāyāna is intended for those of dull faculties who wish awakening: in general, those of little affliction, and in particular, for those who are able to give up the tormenting attachment to desire.

Also Secret Mantra was taught intending those of sharp faculties who wished unsurpassed awakening: in general, for some people whose afflictions are strong, and in particular, who cannot give up the tormenting attachment to desire.

As such, if Secret Mantra is taught for those more afflicted, if it is asked “Won’t Secret Mantra not be superior since those with great affliction are inferior?” A person is not inferior because his afflictions are great. One who cannot rely on antidotes is inferior. Even though his afflictions are greater, since [afflictions] are destroyed, the method is better. As the Sūtrālamkāra states:

Possessing great methods, afflictions become the limbs of awakening;
samsara’s nature is peace,
therefore, the sons of the victores are inconceivable.

For example, if there is nothing other than a small fire (the antidote) it will not be able to utilize a large amount of firewood (the object to abandon). If the fire is larger (the antidote), likewise a large amount of firewood (the object to abandon) will assist the blazing fire.

So, in Vajrayāna practice, since in the age sentient beings are laden with much greater affliction than in ages past, we pile on the desire objects so that the fire of gnosis will blaze more brightly, through the use of skillful methods. Therefore he adds:

The Yoginīsañcaryam states:

Further, when in a later time,
in the last age siddhi cannot be obtained...
...having understood this Dharma as such,
all that one intends will be completed.

Therefore, followers of the Pāramitāyāna do not accomplish [awakening] in this degenerate age, but followers of Secret Mantra do accomplish [awakening] in this degenerate age. The Herukābhyadaya also states:

If one upholds Śrī Heruka,
There will be accomplishment in the decadent age.

Since that is so, it is reasonable to enter Secret Mantra exactly in the present time.

With respect to Dzogchen teachings too, Garab Dorje states:
Without fuel of affliction, how can the fire of gnosis burn?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 10th, 2020 at 7:20 PM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Astus said:

But then, I don't see the sutras teaching anything else. Seeing things as they are is to see that appearances are insubstantial, that they are actually ungraspable and inconceivable. When that is clear, there is no basis for clinging. How are then the sutras saying anything different?

Malcolm wrote:

The question that must be posed then is: how does sutra transform ordinary conceptuality? Seeing appearances as insubstantial does not transform them into pure phenomena that maybe be readily enjoyed by the practitioner.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 10th, 2020 at 9:51 PM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Astus said:

Not necessarily. For instance, if one accepts a Vaipulya Pitaka and a Dharani Pitaka as parts of the Buddha's words, then they serve as a basis of measuring anything questionable.

Malcolm wrote:

And if one accepts the Vidyādhara piṭaka???

In sum, to address your fear of contradictions, the Buddha's higher teachings regularly conflict with the Buddha's lower teachings, and this is determined by content alone, and not provenance.

Aemilius said:

And if one accepts the revelations received by Madam Blavatsky or by Billy Meier, or by a person accepted in the Buddha at the Gas Pump, for example.

Are they determined by the content alone?

I don't have that experience.

Some people in the DW are allergic to names of these persons or others like them. After which no rational discussion is possible.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and Madame Blavatsky, etc., are found to be wanting.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 10th, 2020 at 9:52 PM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Astus said:

How are then the sutras saying anything different?

Crazywisdom said:

These are just ideas about awakened state not the way to practice it. How can one distinguish a conceptual emptiness from the actual luminosity with these sentences? Methods with body speech and mind hone in on and make clear what Buddha is really talking about. Does not rule out one can be awakened from sutras if one has that merit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 10th, 2020 at 10:50 PM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The question that must be posed then is: how does sutra transform ordinary conceptuality? Seeing appearances as insubstantial does not transform them into pure phenomena that maybe be readily enjoyed by the practitioner.

Astus said:

If by seeing them as insubstantial you mean a conceptual label, sure, that doesn't help that much. But that is a known mistake. However, if it is actually seeing their emptiness, in other words, not falling into extreme concepts about them, then that is no different from what is taught in Vajrayana about how to take appearances as/on the path. On the fourth Dharma of Gampopa, where both the Sutrayana and Vajrayana approaches are mentioned,

Malcolm wrote:

I suspect you might try this gambit, so checkmate.

The difference is not view nor the goal, Buddhahood, the difference is in method, the intelligence of the trainee, and so on. For this reason Triptakamālā states:

Although the goal is the same, since it is unconfused, with many methods, not difficult,
and mastered by those of sharp faculties,
Mantrayāna is superior.

Sonam Tsemo comments:

Now then, first, the goal is that same in that there is no difference in what is to be realized, the dharmadhātu, suchness; and the result to be obtained, Buddhahood, and the method of obtaining it, bodhicittz. But it is superior because of the four methods which cause those to arise in one's continuum:

- 1) There is no confusion concerning the view to be realized.
- 2) Many methods to accomplish the result.
- 3) Awakening is accomplished with ease because there is no difficulty.
- 4) Since the result is accomplished rapidly, faculties are "sharp".

And:

Secret Mantra is superior because the wisdom which arises in the mind at the time of the descent of gnosis, or third empowerment and so forth, is freedom from proliferation realized directly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 11th, 2020 at 12:04 AM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

LastLegend said:

The issue here is views are often grasped by consciousness. Once wisdom is directly discerned, I don't think people should go back to the old grasping way of views. It's about using this wisdom to go further. How? That depends on traditions. But if see this wisdom as the way, then it should be the foundation. It might be individual and cultural that East Asian culture favors 'simple' methods within that wisdom. Maybe. Might not be true to Japan Tantric.

Malcolm wrote:

Simple is not necessarily rapid. It all depends on how much you desire omniscience in order to benefit other sentient beings. Without entering Vajrayāna, one cannot possibly attain full awakening in less than 20 eons, should one be an ordinary sentient beings. Even extraordinary beings like Śākyamuni Buddha, from the point of the perception of ordinary beings, endeavored for three incalculable eons on the path until attaining full awakening under the bodhitree on the bodhimaṇḍa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 11th, 2020 at 1:13 AM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

LastLegend said:

1) how is full awakening defined? as a complete Buddha or total samadhi of emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

Samyaksambodhi.

LastLegend said:

2) a controversial question and only my opinion we can disagree here: how many on the forum have attained the actually attained full awakening? There is no way to know. It remains my opinion that's not many.

Malcolm wrote:

Zero. Buddhas don't hang on internet forums.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 11th, 2020 at 1:18 AM

Title: Re: Gorsuch revisited

Content:

Queequeg said:

The relation between the tribes and the US Federal government is interesting. The tribes have some sort of weird semi-sovereignty within the United States. I recall reading that one of the Iroquois nations - maybe Mohawks? - had declared war on Germany and Japan at the outset of WWII so that they could maintain a claim to sovereignty while also letting tribe members serve in the US Military. This sovereignty has in recent decades been used to open casinos and sell cigarettes and gas, tax free, but its encouraging to see the tribes getting a little more of their sovereignty back.

I haven't read the details of these decisions, but going on your descriptions - I can't understand how a state's rights argument applies to the tribes.

Anyways... I hope Trump dies in prison. It will be interesting to see which Russian gangsters have been his backstops and lenders over the years.

PeterC said:

The federal courts' jurisprudence on tribes is, frankly, a mess, and SCOTUS was the worst offender in that respect. There is apparently a joke amongst lawyers working in tribal law that the real canon of tribal law is: the Indians always lose in the end.

Basically the senior judges in the federal appellate courts and the supreme court understand the interplay of state and federal law but simply do not understand where tribes fit in. Since most of the cases involve a conflict between state law and tribal law, they generally give the decision to the states. It's been a constant source of frustration for tribes over the decades.

Malcolm wrote:

And BTW, a link to the master's thesis of the designer of this tee shirt:

https://repository.arizona.edu/bitstream/handle/10150/555854/azu_etd_13699_sip1_m.pdf?sequence=1&isAllowed=y

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 11th, 2020 at 2:24 AM

Title: Re: "practice in daily life"

Content:

clyde said:

Elsewhere, Meido posted this:

Meido said:

In the modern era there is an increasingly common conceit (not just in Zen) that "practice in daily life" means that one can adjust practice to fit one's life, instead of adjusting one's life to fit practice. There is also a common conceit that one need not practice a lot.

clyde said:

What does “practice in daily life” mean?

I don’t know what Meido meant by “adjusting one’s life to fit practice.”

Malcolm wrote:

It means fitting the Dharma into one's life, rather than fitting one's life into Dharma. The latter is a desiderata, the former is dilettantism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 11th, 2020 at 2:26 AM

Title: Re: Why is there no section about Mahayana Monastic life?

Content:

Grigoris said:

Because they do not receive the respect they deserve.

Malcolm wrote:

Their clothes might deserve respect, but not necessarily the people in the clothes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 11th, 2020 at 2:27 AM

Title: Re: Why is there no section about Mahayana Monastic life?

Content:

Queequeg said:

As much as we might benefit from monastics participating here... I would not want them sullied with our off color humor. I'd like to promote their purity, not defile them by dragging them into it.

Malcolm wrote:

Mud, lotus. If they are real śrāmeneras, they will flourish, not be stained.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 11th, 2020 at 6:04 AM

Title: Re: Why is there no section about Mahayana Monastic life?

Content:

Grigoris said:

Because they do not receive the respect they deserve.

Malcolm wrote:

Their clothes might deserve respect, but not necessarily the people in the clothes.

Grigoris said:

You of all people know how difficult it is to uphold the monastic precepts, anybody capable of doing so deserves a degree of respect.

Malcolm wrote:

That's actually my point. Most people in robes, whether Tibetan or Western, are complete failures when it comes to maintaining their vows. Hence my comment about respecting the clothes, but not necessarily the person.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 11th, 2020 at 6:08 AM

Title: Re: Lay people studying vinaya

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

I was actually going to ask this on this site later on, but now this thread started I will ask now, because I think it is relevant to if there is a forum about monastic life.

I grew up having heard that lay people shouldn't study vinaya.

But now that I'm an adult I discover that so much commonly known information comes from the vinaya. And one lay teacher of mine said it's fine for lay people to study the vinaya and that there is no rule against it.

So my questions,

Is there really a rule, like a written rule, about lay people studying vinaya?

Bristollad said:

All three geshes I've received Vinaya teachings from have said that such is the rule. During sojong (the fortnightly repairing of vows), even the novices aren't allowed to attend or listen to the fully ordained section. One of the geshes though did allow novices who were soon to take full ordination to read the vows of the fully ordained in preparation. However, the study and discussion of them still had to wait until after full ordination. There seems to be a lot more of the Theravadin material available in translation than from the Mulasarvastivadin Vinaya (followed by the Tibetan traditions). I don't know about the Dharmagupta Vinaya material. There are two books from the Dalai Lama on the vows of the novice, and on the vows of the fully-ordained. In the front of the novices' book, it says it is restricted to those who have received novice ordination. The other book for fully-ordained has a similar notice restricting it to those who are fully ordained.

Malcolm wrote:

Just a strategy to keep upasakas, etc., ignorant. It's bullshit. Vinaya was compiled long after after the Buddha's passing, This is why there are so many different ones, with different rules, rites, and so on, and most of the vinaya rules were instituted by the Buddha because lay people complained about this or that bhiksu's behavior. Thus Vinaya should be studied by Upasakas to keep the Shramaneras honest.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 11th, 2020 at 6:16 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

PeterC said:

Important to remember that the coronavirus is just the appetizer, there are multiple main courses to come. For instance:

<https://www.scmp.com/news/china/diplomacy/article/3092563/chinese-embassy-warns-deadly-unknown-pneumonia-kazakhstan> The Chinese embassy in Kazakhstan has warned of a deadly "unknown pneumonia" after the former Soviet republic reported a spike in pneumonia cases since June.

"The death rate of this disease is much higher than the novel coronavirus. The country's health departments are conducting comparative research into the pneumonia virus, but have yet to identify the virus," the embassy said in a warning to Chinese citizens in the country. ...

"The Chinese embassy in Kazakhstan reminds Chinese nationals here to be aware of the situation and step up prevention to lower the infection risks," the embassy statement said.

Malcolm wrote:

Mamos. There is a new variant of H1N1 too.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 11th, 2020 at 6:17 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

SteRo said:

The US behave like a developing country. Shame on the US.

Malcolm wrote:

No one behaves like anything and there is no country to be developed, and no US.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 11th, 2020 at 6:20 AM

Title: Re: Claim: Buddha Shakyamuni was a student/emanation of Bon Buddha?

Content:

tingdzin said:

I think Ramble was just being provocative or polite with his blurb, or both. Ermakov's magnum opus (now about 20 years old) has a lot of interesting and valuable information on Siberian shamans that he gained first-hand, but the work as a whole is not very scholarly and is never cited by Tibet scholars. Still, as an exercise in showing how weak the received assumptions on Bon/Buddhist relationships are (the "authoritative" account that has been repeatedly relied on by Tibetan scholars is a tissue of falsehoods), the work is worth reading if you have a lot of time and take it with a shakerfull of salt.

Malcolm wrote:

Which one did you have in mind? Classical or modern?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 11th, 2020 at 6:51 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Kim O'Hara said:

Here's a longish piece about how Melbourne, our second-largest city at about 5 million people, got hit with a second wave of cases.

The take-home message is that "suppression" (keeping case numbers low) is always going to be likely to fail, meaning that "elimination" plus hard border controls looks increasingly likely to be the only path back to some kind of normality.

<https://www.abc.net.au/news/2020-07-11/fuel-spark-victoria-response-virus-public-health-bushfire/12443982>

Kim

Johnny Dangerous said:

I'm more convinced that Covid is not going away, normality isn't going to return I'm afraid.

Malcolm wrote:

If we can kill smallpox, we can kill Covid, it merely requires international cooperation. But that won't happen until DOTUS is voted out.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 11th, 2020 at 9:14 AM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Even extraordinary beings like Śākyamuni Buddha, from the point of the perception of ordinary beings, endeavored for three incalculable eons on the path until attaining full awakening under the bodhitree on the bodhimaṇḍa.

Minobu said:

and yet after being asked about that three times Lord Sakyamuni replied it was in fact a long time ago when He first attained Buddhahood..

In the Lotus Sutra it gives this incredible math on the time period.

So apparently it was all just theatre under the Bodhi Tree.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it adds up to three incalculable eons.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 11th, 2020 at 9:17 AM

Title: Re: "practice in daily life"

Content:

Clyde said:

Substituting “fitting” for “adjusting” doesn’t make the meaning any clearer. Perhaps you could elaborate on what you mean. How would that apply to everyday activities for lay practitioners?

Malcolm wrote:

It means bringing everything into the path and employing everything as the path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 11th, 2020 at 7:44 PM

Title: Re: Why is there no section about Mahayana Monastic life?

Content:

Grigoris said:

But is it our job to judge their behaviour...?

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, since that is one of the reasons the Buddha began to institute all these rules. If he had lived to be a 100, there would have been a thousand rules, not merely 250+-.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 11th, 2020 at 10:46 PM

Title: Re: Why is there no section about Mahayana Monastic life?

Content:

Queequeg said:

But, to add to the main point, one of the reasons the Buddha gave for the promulgation of the rules was to make a good impression on the lay community.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 11th, 2020 at 10:50 PM

Title: Re: emptiness is pure

Content:

akuppa said:

In non-Mahayana "mainstream" (for lack of a better word) Buddhism, phenomena are not pure, they are conditioned, suffering and non-self. This is the meaning of emptiness and dependent origination there.

But in Mahayana emptiness is unconditioned, phenomena are unborn and non-arising (epithets of Nibbana in mainstream sources). This is why they are said to be pure.

How far off am I in my understanding here?

Malcolm wrote:

In common Mahāyāna, like Hinayāna schools, relatively speaking, phenomena, other than path dharmas, are still compounded, suffering, and not-self, and hence impure. Their ultimate nature, emptiness, is pure.

In uncommon Mahāyāna Secret Mantra, phenomena are rendered pure through special methods which change our attitude towards phenomena.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 11th, 2020 at 10:53 PM

Title: Re: emptiness is pure

Content:

Queequeg said:

...mainstream...

Malcolm wrote:

This term, when used by the EBT crew, invokes the idea that the "eighteen schools," who supposedly regarded the agamas and the nikayas as the only authentic buddhavacana, was the dominant form of Buddhism in India. Of course, the largest of these schools were the Pudgalavādins, who also advocated the notion of inexpressible self, neither the same as nor different from the aggregates.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 12th, 2020 at 2:31 AM

Title: Re: emptiness is pure

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In common Mahāyāna, like Hinayāna schools, relatively speaking, phenomena, other than path dharmas, are still compounded, suffering, and not-self, and hence impure. Their ultimate nature, emptiness, is pure.

In uncommon Mahāyāna Secret Mantra, phenomena are rendered pure through special methods which change our attitude towards phenomena.

akuppa said:

How can something be impure if its ultimate nature is pure?

Malcolm wrote:

That's the point. However, we still regard phenomena as impure and so on. That's why we bathe and wash our clothes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 12th, 2020 at 2:48 AM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The difference is not view nor the goal, Buddhahood, the difference is in method, the intelligence of the trainee, and so on.

Astus said:

And that difference in method is the question. You have kindly provided <https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?p=542802#p542802> of Vajrayana methods, where it was made clear that the difference proposed was how it's not the five objects of desires that are given up but 'the ordinary conceptuality about the five objects of desire that is the root of all attachment and aversion'. To that I <https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?p=542869#p542869> that it is no different from what is done in Sutrayana.

Malcolm wrote:

Then you've misunderstood what "ordinary conceptuality" means. What does it mean? It means to conceive the five buddhas, the five mothers, the male and female bodhisattvas as skandhas, elements, sense organs and sense objects.

Astus said:

So, how is there a difference in method, when the method of Vajrayana is to eliminate ordinary concepts instead of objects, and so it is with Sutrayana too?

Malcolm wrote:

The sūtras do not teach that the five skandhas, five elements, sense organs, sense objects and so on, are, their real nature, the mandala of the five buddhas, five mothers, etc.

Astus said:

Secret Mantra is superior because the wisdom which arises in the mind at the time of the descent of gnosis, or third empowerment and so forth, is freedom from proliferation realized directly.

That is an answer then to have wisdom available from the start, although the third empowerment is said to be only an example, and the fourth is the actual realisation that is the level of Dzogchen (Treasury of Precious Qualities, vol 2, p 130-132) and Mahamudra (e.g. The Treasury of Knowledge, vol 6, p 231-233; further elaborated in Mahamudra and Related Instructions, p 485-490).

Malcolm wrote:

It is not certain that the gnosis of the descent of the gnosis being or the gnosis demonstrated during the experience of third and fourth empowerment is only an example wisdom. That depends very much on the trainee. But there is no method of inducing either an example gnosis or a realized gnosis in any sūtra tradition as the entrance to the path. Why? In sūtra, abhiṣeka is reserved for tenth stage bodhisattvas in the second half the tenth bhūmī, as indicated by the Avatamsaka, Lankāvatāra, and other sūtras.

Astus said:

The verbal instruction to directly see the nature of mind is found in both the Vajrayana and the Sutrayana (Mahamudra the Moonlight, p 181), so if there is a methodical difference, it is related to the example wisdom, but not the real one.

Malcolm wrote:

Incorrect. The methodical difference is related to both kinds of gnosis, not merely the first, since in ordinary persons, the second arises from the first.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 12th, 2020 at 2:54 AM

Title: Re: Open Letter from intellectuals lamenting racism and intolerance

Content:

Queequeg said:

the sense that America must live up to its place as the City on a Hill...

Malcolm wrote:

Bad metaphor rooted in colonial white supremacy:

John Winthrop's City upon a Hill, 1630

Now the onely way to avoyde this shipwracke and to provide for our posterity is to followe the Counsell of Micah, to doe Justly, to love mercy, to walke humbly with our God, for this end, wee must be knitt together in this worke as one man, wee must entertaine each other in brotherly Affection, wee must be willing to abridge our selves of our superfluities, for the supply of others necessities, wee must uphold a familiar Commerce together in all meekenes, gentlenes, patience and liberallity, wee must delight in eache other, make others Conditions our owne rejoyce together, mourne together, labour, and suffer together, allwayes haveing before our eyes our Commission and Community in the worke, our Community as members of the same body, soe shall wee keepe the unitie of the spirit in the bond of peace, the Lord will be our God and delight to dwell among us, as his owne people and will commaund a blessing upon us in all our wayes, soe that wee shall see much more of his wisdom power goodnes and truthe then formerly wee have beene acquainted with, wee shall finde that the God of Israell is among us, when tenn of us shall be able to resist a thousand of our enemies, when hee shall make us a prayse and glory, that men shall say of succeeding plantacions: the lord make it like that of New England: for wee must Consider that wee shall be as a Citty upon a Hill, the eies of all people are uppon us; soe that if wee shall deale falsely with our god in this worke wee have undertaken and soe cause him to withdrawe his present help from us, wee shall be made a story and a byword through the world, wee shall open the mouthes of enemies to speake evill of the wayes of god and all professours for Gods sake; wee shall shame the faces of many of gods worthy servants, and cause their prayers to be turned into Cursses upon us till wee be consumed out of the good land whether wee are going: And to shutt upp this discourse with that exhortacion of Moses that faithfull servant of the Lord in his last farewell to Israell Deut. 30. Beloved there is now sett before us life, and good, deathe and evill in that wee are Commaunded this day to love the Lord our God, and to love one another to walke in his wayes and to keepe his Commaundements and his Ordinance, and his lawes, and the Articles of our Covenant with him that wee may live and be multiplyed, and that the Lord our God may blesse us in the land whether wee goe to possesse it: But if our heartes shall turne away soe that wee will not obey, but shall be seduced and worshipp other Gods our pleasures, and proffitts, and serve them, it is propounded unto us this day, wee shall surely perishe out of the good Land whether wee passe over this vast Sea to possesse it;

Therefore lett us choose life,

that wee, and our Seede,

may live; by obeyeing his voyce, and cleaveing to him, for hee is our life, and our prosperity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 12th, 2020 at 2:58 AM

Title: Re: Open Letter from intellectuals lamenting racism and intolerance

Content:

Queequeg said:

Who knows - maybe environmental devastation will be the future that makes the Left and Right fight we see now irrelevant...

Malcolm wrote:

The true left is the environmental left. The rest is just marxist and post-marxist bullshit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 12th, 2020 at 3:00 AM

Title: Re: emptiness is pure

Content:

akuppa said:

How can something be impure if its ultimate nature is pure?

Malcolm wrote:

That's the point. However, we still regard phenomena as impure and so on. That's why we bathe and wash our clothes.

akuppa said:

Ok, but why is what is empty called pure? Surely it is beyond ideas of purity and impurity.

The Heart Sutra:

Listen Sariputra,
all phenomena bear the mark of Emptiness;
their true nature is the nature of no Birth no Death,
no Being no Non-being,
no Defilement no Purity,
no Increasing no Decreasing.

Malcolm wrote:

Because emptiness is beyond defilement and purification, the Perfection of Wisdom sūtras term emptiness "originally pure" or "pure from the start."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 12th, 2020 at 3:31 AM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

“Malcolm” said:

The Yoginīsañcaryam states:

Further, when in a later time,
in the last age siddhi cannot be obtained...
...having understood this Dharma as such,
all that one intends will be completed.

Sādhaka said:

Are you implying here that this text is saying that in the Kali Yuga, we’ll be unlikely to attain relative Siddhi’s, but that if we stick to our Vajrayana practice (despite our capacity (or lack thereof)) we will be guaranteed liberation shortly before, during, or after our physical death in this lifetime?

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is saying that any siddhis, whether common or supreme, can only be realized through secret mantra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 12th, 2020 at 6:58 AM

Title: Re: emptiness is pure

Content:

akuppa said:

Ok, but why is what is empty called pure? Surely it is beyond ideas of purity and impurity.
The Heart Sutra:

Listen Sariputra,
all phenomena bear the mark of Emptiness;
their true nature is the nature of
no Birth no Death,
no Being no Non-being,
no Defilement no Purity,
no Increasing no Decreasing.

Malcolm wrote:

Because emptiness is beyond defilement and purification, the Perfection of Wisdom sūtras term emptiness "originally pure" or "pure from the start."

Minobu said:

what exactly are you on about malcolm? you are trying to define emptiness as a thing ...a pure mind philosophical argument of what mind is...oh it's emptiness... No malcolm...

talk about mind and pure Rigpa states and such but don't say empty is pure ...or empty can't be impure cause it's pure...

Malcolm wrote:

Would you like a quote from the Buddha on this point? Correct emptiness is not a thing, which is another reason it is pure. All things are pure because all things are empty. Even emptiness is empty, therefore it is also pure from the beginning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 12th, 2020 at 7:18 PM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

PeterC said:

If you somehow equate these people to Vasubandhu, or equate consideration of their work to debate over whether a sutra is authoritative - then you really need to regain some sense of proportion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 12th, 2020 at 7:30 PM

Title: Re: Why is there no section about Mahayana Monastic life?

Content:

Chanh Dao said:

I don't think that Mahayana having married monks is an issue at all.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not an issue, since it is not permitted.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 12th, 2020 at 9:16 PM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Astus said:

The Fivefold Mahamudra is a teaching of the Drikungpas coming from Jigten Sumgon.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is actually a teaching that comes from Phagmo Drupa, and as such, is also found extensively taught and practiced in Drukpa Kagyu as well.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 12th, 2020 at 9:39 PM

Title: Re: emptiness is pure

Content:

Minobu said:

empty is not called pure.

Malcolm wrote:

The Samadhirāja Sūtra states:

Youth, bodhisattva mahāsattvas know well that all phenomena are insubstantial, devoid of inherent existence, devoid of signs, devoid of characteristics, nonarising, unceasing, devoid of syllables, empty, peace from the beginning, and utterly pure by nature.

The Perfection of Wisdom in 8000 Lines:

Since inner emptiness is utterly pure, up the utter purity of the emptiness of the inherent existence of the absence of entities, omniscience is utterly pure.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 12th, 2020 at 9:53 PM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Then you've misunderstood what "ordinary conceptuality" means. What does it mean?

It means to conceive the five buddhas, the five mothers, the male and female bodhisattvas as skandhas, elements, sense organs and sense objects.

Astus said:

Then instead of me <https://dharma.wheel.net/viewtopic.php?p=542869#p542869> it, let's be more specific. For instance, what is perceiving Vairocana in/as the sound of a doorbell? How is it something other than the standard 'form is emptiness, emptiness is form'?

Malcolm wrote:

Are your concepts about a buddha is pure or impure? If they are impure, what would be the point of Buddhānusmṛti? In sūtra there is no antidotal method of conceiving the appearance of things as pure which are typically conceived by ordinary sentient being as impure. Emptiness, in sūtra, is provided as cure for this, in terms of nature, but not in terms of appearance. Vajrayāna address both nature and appearance; sūtra only addresses nature, not appearance.

Astus said:

The sūtras do not teach that the five skandhas, five elements, sense organs, sense objects and so on, are, their real nature, the mandala of the five buddhas, five mothers, etc.

The sutras teach the indivisibility of the two truths, and its realisation. Vajrayana may put that into a practice of visualising buddhas, but the point is still to get rid of grasping at phenomena.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, the point is here efficacy of methodology. Of course, if you do not have faith in Vajrayāna, then it won't work for you, just as if you do not have faith in the curative properties of given medicine, you will not take it.

Astus said:

Incorrect. The methodical difference is related to both kinds of gnosis, not merely the first, since in ordinary persons, the second arises from the first.

Real wisdom is the defining attainment of noble beings, and it is realised through vipasyana, wouldn't you agree?

Malcolm wrote:

The distinction between the the common and uncommon Mahāyāna is principally the difference between method, the latter being more efficacious and more rapid. One does not merely regard oneself as buddhanatured, causally, one regards oneself as a buddha from the outset of entering the path. One does not regard one's teacher as being "like a buddha," one regards one's master as an actual buddha right from the outset and so on, based on the special methods of abhiṣeka, sadhana, and so forth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 12th, 2020 at 11:42 PM

Title: Re: emptiness is pure

Content:

Minobu said:

empty is not called pure.

Malcolm wrote:

The Samadhirāja Sūtra states:

Youth, bodhisattva mahāsattvas know well that all phenomena are insubstantial, devoid of inherent existence, devoid of signs, devoid of characteristics, nonarising, unceasing, devoid of syllables, empty, peace from the beginning, and utterly pure by nature.

The Perfection of Wisdom in 8000 Lines:

Since inner emptiness is utterly pure, up the utter purity of the emptiness of the inherent existence of the absence of entities, omniscience is utterly pure.

M

Minobu said:
inner emptiness ? this is something other than sunyata...

I don't think this is in line with Lord Nagarjuna's teaching on Sunyata.

Malcolm wrote:
Interesting perspective. Why you think that Nāgārjuna's teachings on emptiness supercede important and definitive Mahāyāna sūtras, especially the Prajñāpāramitā, which is the definitive set of sūtras on emptiness?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 13th, 2020 at 12:59 AM

Title: Re: emptiness is pure

Content:

Queequeg said:

What does it mean to be Pure? Without defilements, impurities, contaminants, etc.

When we say something is empty, we mean it is compounded - ie. it is empty of intrinsic value; it is an incident (which include our psychological involvement with the proposed entity) that we falsely ascribe an entity to. But there are no entities from the beginning - just our ascribing of distinctions. The elements composing this incident are themselves empty. Anything we can say about any thing, or its constituents, is a discernment in our mind; ie. projections. There is nothing we can say about objects projected upon - because they don't exist. They are themselves functions of the distinction of self and object...

This analysis goes on and on until one is ready to give up. This analysis always defeats any notion we have.

There is nothing to say beyond our conjecture. We can, however, intuit that its not nothing... we call it pure because what else is there to say about it? It sheds any projections we put on it with bewildering ease... and yet its not nothing... it has no features... yet not nothing...

What is that?

That's what sitting on the cushion is for.

akuppa said:

I agree, and if the Prajnaparamita Sutras call what is empty pure, then it is enough for me.

So unless I can find some source for empty = unconditioned, my original idea was wrong.

Malcolm wrote:

Emptiness = uncompounded. Citations can be supplied. But I wouldn't make too much of it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 13th, 2020 at 1:47 AM

Title: Re: emptiness is pure

Content:

akuppa said:

I agree, and if the Prajnaparamita Sutras call what is empty pure, then it is enough for me.

So unless I can find some source for empty = unconditioned, my original idea was wrong.

Malcolm wrote:

Emptiness = uncompounded. Citations can be supplied. But I wouldn't make too much of it.

akuppa said:

Well if you could at least point me in the right direction regarding the literature, i'd be grateful.

Besides "I wouldn't make too much of it." means that emptiness is only uncompounded on a conventional level, since both the compounded and uncompounded are ultimately empty, right?

Malcolm wrote:

Keep reading Mahāyāna sūtras.

<https://84000.co>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 13th, 2020 at 6:20 AM

Title: Re: Open Letter from intellectuals lamenting racism and intolerance

Content:

Unknown said:

Editors are fired for running controversial pieces; books are withdrawn for alleged inauthenticity; journalists are barred from writing on certain topics; professors are investigated for quoting works of literature in class; a researcher is fired for circulating a peer-reviewed academic study; and the heads of organizations are ousted for what are sometimes just clumsy mistakes

Malcolm wrote:

.

This nothing new in American culture. Remember the Scopes Trial? Etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 13th, 2020 at 6:22 AM

Title: Re: Lama Lena Teachings

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

once i hear lama Lena say "Dzogchen is like anal sex, if you don't relax it cannot go in " that was a piece of good damn teaching. i still lmao when i remember.
LOLLLL

Tata1 said:

Khampa saying according to her

Malcolm wrote:

Unlikely, given the Tibetan aversion to “wrong orifices.”

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 13th, 2020 at 6:27 AM

Title: Re: Non-natural environments

Content:

tobes said:

A few months ago we had 5g installed. The phone line is in my shrine room so that's where the modem etc went. I know there are ridiculous tinfoil hat theories about 5g which are obviously false. But: I could really really feel the difference and it really really affected my meditations - kind of a throb or pulse which was constant and intense. I swiftly brought some extension cords and moved them out of the room, which solved my problem.

Malcolm wrote:

Low frequency sounds are demonstrably upsetting to people, animals, etc. it has nothing to do with magnets (other vibrations that they can produce) or electrical fields, and everything to do with subaudible low frequency vibrations. My 2 cents... as a former industrial musician/ sound terrorist...the things one can do with an oscillating bandpass filter...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 13th, 2020 at 7:38 PM

Title: Re: emptiness is pure

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

"All phenomena" are called both "pure" and "neither defiled nor non-defiled" in the Prajñāpāramitā. The former is positive, and the latter a negative description of the same thing?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 13th, 2020 at 7:39 PM

Title: Re: emptiness is pure

Content:

haha said:

I found inconsistency in above quote (i.e. inconsistency in term with the Heart Sutra that I am familiar with). And, I am not familiar with this version of Heart Sutra. Is it possible to get the reference?

akuppa said:

Yes, its from here: <https://plumvillage.org/about/thich-nhat-hanh/letters/thich-nhat-hanh-new-heart-sutra-translation/>

Would you mind explaining what you find inconsistent?

haha said:

Thank you for the link.

iha sariputra: sarva-dharmah sunyata-alaksana anutpanna aniruddha, amala avimala, anuna aparipurnah.

<http://www.dharmafellowship.org/library/texts/heart-sutra.htm>

एवं शारिपुत्र सर्वधर्माः शून्यतालक्षणा अनुत्पन्ना अनिरुद्धा अमला विमला अनूना असंपूर्णाः।

<http://www.dsbcproject.org/canon->

text/content/400/1828%20Praj%C3%B1%C4%81p%C4%81ramit%C4%81h%E1%B9%9Bdayasutram%20%5Bvistaram%C4%81t%E1%B9%9Bk%C4%81

Therefore, Śāriputra, all dharmas are emptiness; they are without characteristics; they are unarisen and unceasing; they are not tainted and not untainted; they are not deficient and not complete.

<https://www.lotsawahouse.org/words-of-the-buddha/heart-sutra>

In your provided quote, it says, “all phenomena bear the mark of Emptiness”

The heart sutra that I am familiar with states: sarva-dharmah sunyata-alaksana. It means all dharmas are emptiness, without characteristic, etc. It does not say: Sarva-dharma sunyataa-laksana (i.e. all phenomena bear the mark of Emptiness). For this reason I said inconsistency.

Malcolm wrote:

This difference arises from a difference between how the Chinese has been rendered and the Sanskrit original.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 12:31 AM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In sūtra there is no antidotal method of conceiving the appearance of things as pure which are typically conceived by ordinary sentient being as impure. Emptiness, in sutra, is provided as cure for this, in terms of nature, but not in terms of appearance. Vajrayāna address both nature and appearance; sūtra only addresses nature, not appearance.

Astus said:

One sees a tasty looking apple pie. How not to fall into craving? For instance, the Vitakkasanthana Sutta gives five (progressive) methods: pay attention to something else (that is conducive to good thoughts), consider the drawbacks of craving, forget and pay no attention to it, relax the mental fabrications/concoctions about it, subdue the thoughts by force. Or one can think of it as something disgusting, something undesirable; or as something insubstantial, meaningless, and worthless. How would Vajrayana address this situation? If one thinks one is a buddha one can just give in to any impulse?

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, these are all based on renunciation of sense objects since one has ordinary concepts concerning them.

With respect to "giving into impulses" Vajrayāna there is eating yoga, sleeping yoga, bathing yoga, yoga for engaging in sexual intercourse is one is a lay person, etc., everything to transform ordinary daily conduct and bring it into the path by replacing impure conceptuality with pure conceptuality.

When one is on an island composed entirely of gold, one will have attachment to no specific part of it, one will have no discrimination towards anything on it, and thereby, one is freed of clinging.

Astus said:

The distinction between the the common and uncommon Mahāyāna is principally the difference between method, the latter being more efficacious and more rapid. One does not merely regard oneself as buddhanatured, causally, one regards oneself as a buddha from the outset of entering the path. One does not regard one's teacher as being "like a buddha," one regards one's master as an actual buddha right from the outset and so on, based on the special methods of abhiṣeka, sadhana, and so forth.

How does it make it more efficacious to think of oneself being a buddha, instead of not to think of oneself as anything at all?

Malcolm wrote:

We already think of ourselves, this is a given. In other words, in just the same way as fire is used to put out fire, or water is used to draw water out of the ear, the creation stage uses conceptuality to overcome conceptuality. Hence it is more profound than methods which try to suppress or eliminate conceptuality, such as those you mention above.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 12:39 AM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Based in a to achieve buddhahood to benefit all beings eat the apple pie and enjoy it. You are a bodhisattva now. No need to rush.

Astus said:

That does not seem to agree with the teachings.

'Take food as medicine, in the right amount,

Without attachment, without hatefulness:

Don't eat for vanity, for pride or ego's sake,

Eat only for your body's sustenance.'

(Letter to a Friend by Nagarjuna, v 38, tr Padmakara Translation Group)

'Buddhas told those with desire

That food, clothes and dwellings are all

To be avoided and to remain

Close to their spiritual guides.'

(Four Hundred Stanzas by Aryadeva, v 138, tr Ruth Sonam)

'Most sentient beings are greedy for tastes; for the sake of food, they commit vile actions and are born in the hells. But those who {know the Dharma} are contented, not greedy, free from longing; they do not bow down to the sense of taste, but are contented and can be nourished even with very low-quality food.'

(Multitude of Jewels Sutra (Ratnarāśisūtra) quoted in The Training Anthology of Santideva, p 127, tr Charles Goodman)

See also: <https://www.wisdomlib.org/buddhism/book/maha-prajnaparamita-sastra/d/doc225714.html>

Malcolm wrote:

These above teachings are consistent with the path of renunciation. However, they are contradicted by the higher teachings of Vajrayāna, the path of transformation, and the citations illustrating this point have already been provided above, so there is no need to repeat them here.

As also mentioned above, the Buddha's teachings of sūtra are for those with a) less affliction, and b) less capability. But contrast, Vajrayāna teachings are designed for those with a) greater affliction, and b) greater capabilities.

Therefore, can either accept the Buddha's teachings in the tantras, in which case, one has no choice but to become a Vajrayāna practitioner; but failing that, if one cannot generate faith in these teachings, then leave them aside, but do not criticize them, because there in lies the fault of criticizing the Dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 1:37 AM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

This Aryadeva thing is Gelukpa,

Malcolm wrote:

Well, no. Khenpo Ngawang Palzang, Chatral's Rinpoche's guru, wrote an amazing commentary on this text.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 1:38 AM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Sādhaka said:

Perhaps; but these things are rarely explained it seems.

Malcolm wrote:

There is not much to explain. Bless your food, clothes, bathing water, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 1:40 AM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

This is true. There is this thing going on a lot in modern vajrayana. Folks just get empowerments. But what is meant to happen is an empowerment, full transmissions of all the sadhanas and full instructions on the practices. That way a person knows what they are doing and when to do it.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, what you say quite correct. People never sit down and learn one HYT sadhana practice from soup to nuts. Once they do this, all other sadhanas are cake. They never bother to pay attention to how to integrate their 24 hour a day activity into their practice. And so they remain confused and dissatisfied, and rather than understanding why they are interested in this system and that system, they wander around like hungry ghosts in search of food and water they never find.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 1:42 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

thepea said:

government has never taken a spare no expense attitude.

Queequeg said:

The US Government mobilized the entire economy in response to World War II.

Maybe the government will start to take the necessary steps to avert climate disaster next. We can only hope.

Malcolm wrote:

Hope is for suckers.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 1:44 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

thepea said:

Not to be callous but this virus does not seem capable of ending humanity. Many get this virus and experience harmless symptoms.

Why now?

Malcolm wrote:

Because there are long term health consequences for those who get this virus and become ill, and are permanently disabled from it, with brain damage, heart damage, lung damage, liver damage, kidney damage, and so on, that's "why now."

Further, we do not know the consequences for asymptomatic carriers, what kind of damage this virus will wreak on their health...but some information beginning to arrive, and it does not look good.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 1:48 AM

Title: Re: Jonang Kalachakra online empowerment July 24-27

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

One thing to keep in mind with Kalachakra is there are two empowerments. There is the outer empowerment and the secret empowerment. No way he can give the secret empowerment online.

Malcolm wrote:

Why not? HHDL did so in Washington DC when he gave Kalachakra there the last time. He gave the whole kit and kaboodle, and it was streamed live, all of it. Seem to me to be the lama's choice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 1:51 AM

Title: Re: Open Letter from intellectuals lamenting racism and intolerance

Content:

PeterC said:

Even the leaders in the socialist revolutions of the early 20th century were the intelligentsia.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and made defensive arguments about why they had never worked for a day's wage in their lives.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 1:52 AM

Title: Re: Open Letter from intellectuals lamenting racism and intolerance

Content:

KathyLauren said:

No one is going to jail for expressing viewpoints that fall short of hate speech.

Malcolm wrote:

These days, they don't even go to jail for hate speech.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 1:54 AM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Astus said:

(3) The path of Mahamudra is “the path of prajna” and “the path of suchness,” which relies on blessing and is for those who are intelligent and of sharp faculties.

Malcolm wrote:

It still requires an empowerment. The so-called "descent of the gnosis vajra empowerment" discussed by Indrabhūti in the Jñānasiddhi. The main practice of course here is guru yoga, this is the "blessings" part.

In this respect, Gampopa is cribbing his early training as a practitioner of Nyingma tantras, and the Mind Series (sems sde) in particular.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 1:59 AM

Title: Re: emptiness is pure

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

On terms of these specific versions, T255 is translated by a Ven Făchéng during the early Tang and is apparently translated from a Tibetan version.

Malcolm wrote:

If it is translated from Tibetan, that latter was based on a Sanskrit text, unless the translation is specifically identified as being based on a Chinese translation. In this case, it would likely be Vimalamitra's translation. But that is not that early, circa 800—810.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 9:50 AM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Astus said:

On an island of gold one does not hoard gold, one does not want gold at all.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct. The difference between this example, and your example of an empty plate is that we are not talking about an empty plate, thus your example is a non sequitor. The correct example would have been an island that was nothing but Apple pie.

Astus said:

Yes, skandhas are buddhas, and buddhas are pure beings, and thinking of oneself as a pure being is a unique method of Vajrayana. But even if one can reimagine oneself, that in itself does not liberate one from the three poisons, does it?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. One can rapidly realize Mahamudra (first bhumi) quite rapidly through the creation stage alone. 1) meditating on oneself as being a Buddha is far more meritorious than meditating on an external Buddha; 2) we have not even covered how the preliminaries of a sadhana practice generates all the merit and gnosis accumulations required, etc. there are many such reasons you can discover if you studied these things properly rather than just reading books, in other words, actually made an effort to learn these things from lineage masters. For example, your ludicrous assertion that Gampopa eschews empowerment rites. He doesn't. In order to have a guru, one needs to receive some form of abhisheka. Otherwise, all the empowerment's Gampopa received and gave would have been absolutely pointless. He never claims they were pointless. Very little written by Gampopa has been translated. You are presenting a very partial view of his thought. Most scholars have focused on polemics between early Sakya masters and early Kagyu masters, to the extent that a more robust view of what Gampopa actually taught, rather than a narrow and defensive presentation of his Mahamudra (about which there is considerable disagreement even among Kagyus) is sorely absent from modern discussions.

Astus said:

So I'm asking about some clear reasons for such an opinion.

Malcolm wrote:

They have been given.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 10:00 AM

Title: Re: Age of Mahayana Schools

Content:

Grigoris said:

None. But Vajrayana also does not believe in the efficacy of renunciation (or more to the point: it does not consider it the most efficient manner to achieve liberation). That puts it directly at odds with the Sravakayana.

Astus said:

If it does not renounce the three poisons, does it simply deny their existence? Because if it accepts that beings are driven by them, then either one can go by obeying the impulses, or not. Not obeying is renunciation.

Malcolm wrote:

Or you can transform those impulses without renouncing them. That's the point. Since this conversation is becoming repetitive, there is little point in continuing it further. You are free to consider sutra methods equal to Vajrayana methods, or equally efficacious. You are wrong of course, but that is not my problem. It's yours.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 10:20 AM

Title: Re: Open Letter from intellectuals lamenting racism and intolerance

Content:

PeterC said:

Hold on just a minute. I was watching Fox News the other day and it told me that all us lefties are 100% focused on social justice and transgender bathrooms and not give a shit about the american working man. So the last few posts on this thread are invalid and should be ignored. Meanwhile the republicans are fighting for the working class' interests by making sure that only those with high-paid jobs get healthcare, only the rich can get their kids a decent education, companies aren't inconvenienced by having to comply with laws, and that there's a strong police force to suppress the rabble. Just wanted to clear that up in case there was any misunderstanding.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Indeed, it's important to know who to criticize, and when. I mean I'm "on the side" of the people I'm complaining about. Seriously though, the stuff you mention above is often left out of the debate with the most vocal social justice advocates, even when it should be front and center, rather than policing of speech, etc. Bernie's campaign did a lot to advance the right ideas, but quite honestly I'm amazed at the number of young people who identify as "left" that have a fully identarian viewpoint, with little real focus on issues like the one's you mention. You still have to look to the "old left" for a lot that stuff, even with Journalism.

PeterC said:

There's probably a few causes of that, but what I find striking about the young "left" is that they severely lack historical perspective and critical thinking skills. The labor movement in the past had a genuine connection from one generation to the next. That's largely been lost. I suspect to a large extent the "identarian" perspective has been shaped by its opponents, because it's easy to attack. A debate about intersectional justice vs. christian values is great for the "right", but it's an irrelevant debate.

Malcolm wrote:

White identitarianism is now the dominant voice in what passes these days for conservatism, oh wait, it has since Buckley...sorry, I meant the civil war, oops, wait make that 1492...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 10:23 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

thepea said:

Have you ever heard the expression, "trust your gut"?

Queequeg said:

Oh, well.

The ol' substitute the gut for formal education and training.

Yep.

Malcolm wrote:

Guts are remarkably unreliable, as any one in the stock market will tell you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 7:01 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Astus said:

Based on Gampopa's teachings it's more likely from the Kadampas, if anyone.

'In line with the texts by Monlarn Tsiiltrim, these instructions are further evidence that Mahamudra style teachings existed in the Kadampa School, that this was the case even before Gampopa, and that Gampopa received such instructions.'
(When the Clouds Part, p 198)

Malcolm wrote:

This is Karl's opinion, but as I said, not even the Kagyus agree on where Ganmpopa derived the four yucas. Yangonpa, for example, asserts they are a result of Gampopa's own experience. The Drikung assert they were first taught by Milarepa (according to my teacher, the late Gyalpo Rinpoche), etc. it is very unlikely the Kadampas had such a scheme because it is found nowhere in the writings of Atisha and his immediate students. Gampopa only became a Kadampa monk in his middle years, after the death of his wife. Before this, he was a Nyingma practitioner, this well known.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 7:42 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

PeterC said:

Go Lotsawa was writing about four hundred years after Gampopa, if I remember the dates correctly. In Gampopa's own writings he repeatedly states the importance of empowerment. See the two texts Tony Duff translated of his.

Astus said:

Is Jamgon Kongtrul wrong then?

'Dakpo Rinpoché induced the realization of mahamudra even in beginners who had not received empowerment. Therefore this is the tradition of the perfections. These are instructions arising primarily from the Kadampa tradition.'
(Treasury of Knowledge, vol 9, p 212)

Malcolm wrote:

Doesn't it occur to you that this is Kongtrul basically acceding to Sapan's objections?

The place Sapan would have trouble with is a) the assertion of cigcar realization and b) terming a perfection vehicle result "Mahamudra" since the term does not exist in any sutra at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 7:43 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

PeterC said:

Go Lotsawa was writing about four hundred years after Gampopa, if I remember the dates correctly. In Gampopa's own writings he repeatedly states the importance of empowerment. See the two texts Tony Duff translated of his.

Astus said:

Is Jamgon Kongtrul wrong then?

'Dakpo Rinpoché induced the realization of mahamudra even in beginners who had not received empowerment. Therefore this is the tradition of the perfections. These are instructions arising primarily from the Kadampa tradition.'
(Treasury of Knowledge, vol 9, p 212)

And Dzogchen Ponlop Rinpoche?

'The Sutrayana approach to Mahamudra is seen as a very profound method because it does not require any of the sophisticated and complex tantric rituals, deity yoga visualization practices, or samayas. It is a simple sutra approach, yet it conveys the direct transmission of the tantric essence of awakening. This particular approach is also known as a secret passage.

...

The Sutra Mahamudra approach is seen as a specialty of the Kagyu tradition and was the central emphasis of Gampopa's teachings. Therefore, although it originated in India and was also taught by Marpa and Milarepa, Gampopa is regarded as the main figure responsible for bringing this teaching to its full development and manifestation.'

(Wild Awakening, p 32, 33)

There are Kagyupas who say things like that, and there are Kagyupas who would not. Of those who would say that, some would qualify it by saying that the pointing out instruction, which is central to the practice of Kagyu Mahamudra, could also be interpreted as a form of the fourth empowerment. Those who would not say that typically give an empowerment whenever they do a teaching on Mahamudra.

Jamgon Kongtrul also notes (ToK, v9, p 213): 'It has been the practice of most of Dakpo's heart disciples to present the mahamudra instructions after having first bestowed the empowerment.'

The same practice of mixing is also noted by Tashi Namgyal:

'In the present age, Mahamudra and Mantrayana [tantric mysticism] are being blended and meditated upon in order to enhance realization. Many tantric elements are also incorporated into the preparatory practices. For those who wish to practice these, the empowerment for actualizing the inner potentiality is certainly essential.'

(Mahamudra the Moonlight, p 125)

So it's a distinction without a difference.

It's a distinction made by Thrangu Rinpoche.

Malcolm wrote:

It's a distinction without a difference, as PC states.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 7:45 PM

Title: Re: Open Letter from intellectuals lamenting racism and intolerance

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

If you wanted to make the left irrelevant, focusing purely on identity politics is a great way to do it. So, I agree...in general the Left of today doesn't think tactically about messaging at all, just ideologically, and usually in very simplistic terms. Like I said though, Bernie's campaigns awakened a glimmer of hope, maybe.

PeterC said:

Maybe there is a message of hope there. Sanders didn't talk about identity politics at all. He talked a lot about basic economics. And he had a lot of support from the kids who do care about identity politics, curiously. That might suggest that it's really just education and information that they're lacking. However the vilification of Sanders from all directions shows just how little many sides of the political spectrum really wanted to have that discussion.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because revolutions, whether peaceful or violent, are very Inconvenient for oligarchs.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 14th, 2020 at 10:39 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Astus said:

"The other term for the Mother Perfection of Wisdom is mahamudra, because it is the very essence of nondual pristine awareness."[/i]

Malcolm wrote:

Too bad you did not read Jñānakīrti's whole text. You are merely dancing on books you cannot even read in the original. Just cherry picking citations because they suit your biases. Sorry, but this is the case.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 15th, 2020 at 3:14 AM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Astus said:

Not only that; the term Mahāmudrā is used for emptiness. The King of Concentration Sutra says, "The intrinsic nature of all dharmas is Mahāmudrā."

Malcolm wrote:

The Samādhirāja Sūtra says nothing of the sort.

The term "mahāmudra" is not exist in that sūtra or any other. This is just a fact. Therefore, you must stop using this citation. The scholar who originally claimed this citation as a support for mahāmudra was merely interpolating his bias into the text in order to deceive his hapless disciples.

The passage you are citing is this one:

འདི་ལས་སངས་རྒྱལ་ ཡེ་ཤེས་མཆོག་གུང་འབྱུང་། །ཆོས་ནམས་ཀུན་གྱི་རང་བཞིན་ལྟ་བུ་ལྟེ། །ཏིང་འཛིན་འདི་ནི་འདྲན་བདག་གིས་བཤད།

"It originates from the supreme wisdom of buddhahood.

It is the seal of the nature of all phenomena.

This is the samādhi taught by the guides."

17.144, Roberts, 84,000 edition.

Therefore, we can understand the term "mahāmudra" exists exclusively the tantras. Even there is has different meanings.

Indeed the Tattvāvatārākhyasakalasugatavacastātparyavyākhyāprakaraṇa says "Another name of the Bhagavāti Prajñāpāramita is mahāmudra, because it has the inherent nature of nondual gnosis."

But this has been poorly understood. Here, the Bhagavāti Prajñāpāramita is part of the maṇḍala of Guhyasamāja, etc., as the text describes in detail.

Further, far from being a treatise which equivocates sutrayāna or provides a basis for claiming that sutrayāna also has mahāmudra, it is quite the opposite. It is a text which explicates secret mantra for those of the best capacity. It says, "Because other yogis lack good fortune (skal med), gnosis is taught as mahāmudra in order to introduce them."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 15th, 2020 at 4:49 AM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Therefore, we can understand the term "mahāmudra" exists exclusively the tantras.

Astus said:

Even if that were so, apparently Kagyupas, starting with Gampopa, taught what is now called sutra Mahamudra, and it is a unique teaching of this tradition, and there's an offshoot Mahamudra among the Gelugpas, where they also teach it as a separate one from tantra Mahamudra.

Malcolm wrote:

It is so, it is not "even if that were so."

Also, the First Panchen Lama's "Ganden" Mahāmudra when it was introduced was quite controversial and even derided by the Great Fifth Dalai Lama, and remains somewhat controversial even still; though the present Dalai Lama has a more charitable view of it than did his predecessor. Indeed, a book of his teachings on this subject was published by Snow Lion.

So, Astus, I can call you a buddha, but that is a mere nominal designation, because I am pretty sure if we look between your legs, we will see that your penis dangles down like all other ordinary men, rather than being withdrawn into a sheath, like a buddha. Likewise, you can call Prajñāpāramitā "mahāmudra" if your goal is to inspire unfortunate yogis, as Jñānakīrti maintains, but it is still just calling something a name for which it lacks proper attributes; for example, calling a dog "Lion," or a small hill a "mountain," or a tiny pond a "lake" or a huge man "little."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 15th, 2020 at 4:53 AM

Title: Re: Open Letter from intellectuals lamenting racism and intolerance

Content:

Queequeg said:

<https://nypost.com/2020/07/14/bari-weiss-resigns-from-new-york-times-citing-illiberal-environment/>

More fallout.

Malcolm wrote:

Nah, this is conservative whinging, as usual. Good riddance. She can go write for Barfbart.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 15th, 2020 at 4:57 AM

Title: Re: emptiness is pure

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

On terms of these specific versions, T255 is translated by a Ven Fǎchéng during the early Tang and is apparently translated from a Tibetan version.

Malcolm wrote:

If it is translated from Tibetan, that latter was based on a Sanskrit text, unless the translation is specifically identified as being based on a Chinese translation. In this case, it would likely be Vimalamitra's translation. But that is not that early, circa 800—810.

Caoimhghín said:

Because of the king who's name I can't remember that instructed his translators to favour Sanskrit over buddhavacana in Prākṛits like Gāndhārī, in Chinese, etc. Who was the king again?

Malcolm wrote:

Ralpacan.

Caoimhghín said:

I was surprised to see this translation as listed as coming from Tibet. The information was pretty freely available, yet academics who speculate on Heart Sutra origins never cite this. This is a big hole in the theory that the Sanskrit version of the Heart Sutra is a Tang dynasty forgery. There must be some bias, whether right or wrong, causing them to doubt the origin of the T255 translation. That is the only thing I can think of.

Malcolm wrote:

There is also the reference by Wongchuck of an early Sanskrit version he had access to, also ignored by the Heart sūtra conspiracy theorists like Jayarava.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 15th, 2020 at 6:30 AM

Title: Re: Open Letter from intellectuals lamenting racism and intolerance

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Here's another piece from someone most definitely on "the left":

<https://theintercept.com/2020/07/14/cancel-culture-martina-navratilova-documentary/>

Malcolm wrote:

Greenwald is whinger too.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 15th, 2020 at 6:35 AM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Likewise, you can call Prajñāpāramitā "mahāmudra" if your goal is to inspire unfortunate yogis, as Jñānakīrti maintains, but it is still just calling something a name for which it lacks proper attributes; for example, calling a dog "Lion," or a small hill a "mountain," or a tiny pond a "lake" or a huge man "little."

Astus said:

So would you say then that Kagyupas are quite mistaken, that what has been called one of the main http://namobuddhapub.org/files/teachings/ThranguR-Mahamudra_and_the_Kagyu_Lineage.pdf over the centuries is fictitious?

Malcolm wrote:

I was refuting your citations, showing how they do not match the claims put forward for them. If others make errors, why should the one who points them out be held at fault?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 15th, 2020 at 9:54 AM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

conebeckham said:

From my perspective, Kagyupas don't teach "Sutra Mahamudra."

Kagyu lamas teach Mahamudra. In our day and age, what this means varies by teacher, but I feel confident in saying that Kagyu Lamas teach a variety of methods, from Sutra and Tantra, and use the term "Mahamudra" to denote relating to "nature of mind." I see "Sutra Mahamudra" as merely the name of a didactic method. Citations are used, and focus on "Sutra" is stressed, but I've not met any Kagyu Lama who teaches such things in a vacuum, apart from the path of the two stages, even in a simplified form. The Pointing Out Instructions of the various Kagyu traditions are really equivalent to the Fourth Empowerment, or so it is said. It may be true that Gampopa was influenced by his "Nyingma past," whatever that means, but it is stressed in our Kagyu traditions that the Dohas and other pith instructions are the inheritance of the Kagyu lineage. And while it's true that Mahamudra can be taught as a certain application during the path of the two stages, it is also a way of practice incorporating "sutra" methods--Samatha and Vipassana--but with unique instructions and a unique object of focus.

Honestly, though, all Tibetan Lamas of whatever institutional affiliation are Vajrayana practitioners. So in answer to the original question, I think it's better to see Mahamudra as a Vajrayana corpus of methods, sometimes relating to Sutra, sometimes relating more to "Tantra," but always found in Vajrayana and therefore at the level of Tantra.

For the life of me, I personally do not understand those who must adhere to some sort of notional "Pure Sutra Mahamudra" nor do I find much more than polemics in those who choose to argue vehemently against the "very existence" of a Sutra Mahamudra.

Malcolm wrote:

Just removing some incorrect claims here Cone.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 15th, 2020 at 9:58 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

thepea said:

So when medical officials are asked if elevators are safe and they answer yes!! Face the wall, and hold your breath, and they are safe.

My gut says.....right?

C-mon this is the most flip-flopped science mess in global history.

My gut says don't trust one bit.

<https://www.startribune.com/hum-or-hold-your-breath-how-to-protect-against-covid-19-when-someone-gets-too-close/571504742/>

Johnny Dangerous said:

No one cares about your gut, come with data and a rational argument. Obviously, the science on Covid 19 changes daily, expecting anything else would be silly, or just tremendously ignorant. Public policy is imperfect and yes, plenty of times it's not evidence-based. A lot of the "science journalism" is also terrible.

That's partially because there simply isn't much evidence yet, partially because they are forced to make decisions based on limited information and what is possible (rather than what is desirable), and partially because yes, sometimes public officials make stupid decisions even in the best of times, much less times like these.

Honestly, if you want to rant about Covid 19, you should look at a federal government that is refusing to provide the needed relief and infrastructure during shutdowns, instead of wringing your hands about the shutdowns themselves. A big part of why they are so devastating is because Trump and his cronies do stuff like this:

<https://news.yahoo.com/ivanka-trump-tells-workers-to-find-something-new-because-old-jobs-arent-coming-back-183756343.html>

And focus on corporate welfare and protecting companies from lawsuits instead of actually providing substantial, long term relief from people effected by the economic effects of the shutdown. It wouldn't be hard, the military budget is still insane.

Rambling on about your "gut" when you don't seem to even know the basics of where the science is at is just silly though.

On the article, I don't know, but since the virus is spread through droplets and possibly aerosol, I suppose being in an enclosed space one's choices are pretty limited. Most of the information I've seen suggests that short term exposure like that is less of a worry anyway. In the future if you have an issue with an article, it might be useful to actually address what's in the article instead of just making reference to "your gut", which means nothing.

thepea said:

Here is a very informative video from a self employed ppe specialist.

Her job is to put together ppe plans for doctors to follow while at hospital, depending on what they are protecting from.

Malcolm wrote:

She is an idiot, and so are you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 15th, 2020 at 10:39 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

PeterC said:

You won't find any statement of Gampopa himself saying you don't need any sort of empowerment, whether elaborate or unelaborate. You present a few quotations that might suggest this, but they run counter to the experience of the vast majority of living and dead kagyü masters.

Astus said:

Why not look for where Gampopa states one needs any sort of empowerment for Mahamudra? The quotations so far clearly differentiated the "tantra" from the "sutra" version, and for the tantric it's unambiguous about the need for empowerment. At the same time, Kagyüpas have been under attack since the time of Sakya Pandita that they teach Mahamudra outside the standard HYT system, and various teachers defended their position regarding the validity of Gampopa's Mahamudra. Were they all arguing about nothing?

Malcolm wrote:

You do not understand the parameters of the debate. Sapan says that so-called "sūtra mahāmudra" is just prajñāpāramitā, and as such, is not a swift path to awakening in a single lifetime. He is not arguing that the gnosis which arises from mahāmudra and prajñāpāramitā are qualitatively different. He even argues that to maintain there is a difference in view between sūtra and secret mantra is a qualitative error.

Astus said:

If "unelaborate empowerment" is the pointing out instruction, that is, the very method that Mahamudra is taught, then likely those who debate the absence of empowerment mean the complete four empowerments and they do not accept the possibility that direct introduction equals the fourth empowerment and is sufficient on its own.

Malcolm wrote:

If you examine Kongtrul's encyclopedia, he clearly states, echoing Jñānakīrti, that "sutra mahāmudra" was taught to inferior disciples who were not suitable for receiving actual Mahāmudra teachings. Why? Because they do not receive empowerment of any kind and are not proper recipients. So they receive instructions on śamatha and vipaśyanā, and inspiring dohas to reflect on.

Of course, this is not how the mahāmudra is actually taught in any Kagyü school, so you are just dancing on books you don't understand completely in a tradition that is not your own. A little knowledge as proven to be a dangerous thing in your case, Ācārya Astus. You should stay in your Chan lane.

As for your other point, it is true that Sakya Pandita and others do not accept a so-called "direct introduction" as a sufficient entry into Vajrayāna, but I am not defending Sapan on this point, since I myself do not agree with this perspective.

Nevertheless, those who do accept this principle still understand that "direct introduction," "pointing out," etc., "the empowerment of the potential of vidyā (rig pa'i rtsal dbang)," etc. are empowerments in every sense of the term and defend them on those terms, and consider these empowerments indispensable for entering the path. However, they maintain that these empowerments are reserved for those pupils of highest capacity, hence they are not suitable for everyone. Thus, essence mahāmudra, etc., are traditionally only given to people on the basis of having studied and practiced regular Vajrayāna teachings for many years.

*Most of Sapan's other criticisms, for example, of the karmo cigthub, are directed at Lama Shang, not Gampopa proper.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 16th, 2020 at 2:31 AM

Title: Re: Open Letter from intellectuals lamenting racism and intolerance

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

I just don't wanna go the right wing route and assume a left wing version of "soros protestors" or whatever with no evidence.

Malcolm wrote:

Ummm....dude, the Tea Party? Actually funded by the Kochs.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 16th, 2020 at 5:12 AM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

PeterC said:

When Gampopa himself talked about the kagyu system of mahamudra as the “single sufficient remedy” he is usually making the point that it doesn’t require Dzogchen as an adjunct.

Malcolm wrote:

In the 11th and 12th century, it was fashionable at the time to dismiss Dzogchen, because a) Lha Lama Yeshe Od wrote a polemical tract against it; Go Khugpa Lhatse wrote a polemical tract accusing its principle imperial and post-imperial period proponents (Ma Rinchen Chog, Nubchen Sangye Yeshe) of forging its basic texts, and so on.

In addition to this, Dzogchen was that old stuff from the imperial period, so it fell out of favor. Both the Kagyus and the Sakyapas had narratives developed around abandoning that Old Time Religion; the former grounded in the narrative of Milarepa being too much of a dunce to understand the teachings of Dzogchen he received from one Rongton; the latter grounded in the narrative of Khon Konchog Gyalpo and his older brother seeing secret Nyingma cham performed in public at a harvest festival. In addition to this was the hostility towards the older translation school tantras mentioned above, which is enthusiastically adopted and promulgated by orthopraxy-obsessed Dromton (who interfered with Atish's wish to focus on teaching Dohas, and termed a māra by Milarepa in one of his songs), etc.

So, from the time of Gampopa, all the way up through 18th century, it was de rigueur for everyone to criticize Dzogchen, notable Kagyupas such as the 8th Karmapa included.

Thankfully, Nyingma tertons and yogis paid such FUD little mind and just kept on promulgating Dzogchen teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 16th, 2020 at 5:55 AM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I was refuting your citations, showing how they do not match the claims put forward for them. If others make errors, why should the one who points them out be held at fault?

Astus said:

What do you then make of Maitripa's teachings, who is often named as the Indian source of equating Mahamudra with Madhyamaka?

Malcolm wrote:

You mean Avadhūtipa Advayavajra aka Maitrigupta aka Maitrīpa, the disciple of Naropa, the guru of Marpa, who was an adept of Cakrasamvara? Who states in the Tattvaratnāvalī:

Here I shall not explain the texts of secret mantras because they are extremely profound, because they are the domain of those persons very devoted to the profound vehicle, and because practice of the four seals and so on has been very extensively explained. Further:

"Though the goal is the same, unconfused;
with many methods, not difficult,
and to be undertaken by those of sharp faculties, the treatises of mantra are superior."

We are talking about the same person, correct? If so, what more is there to say about this master's view of sūtra and his position vis a vis Vajrayāna? Perhaps he did equate Madyamaka with Mahāmudra (textual citation please), but how is this different than equating the gnosis of Prajñāpārāmītā with Mahāmudra? No one is claiming the gnosis is different. But in this text, Maitripa is clearly claiming that Mantrayāna is superior in method. I mean, what else is there to say?

Having knocked down your bowling pins one by one, friend, it is high time for you to accept your defeat. You are not equipped for this argument in anyway. You just don't have the language skills in Tibetan (or Sanskrit). That's just a fact. Likewise, I do not have language skills in Chinese, so I generally just leave you to your various arguments in the Zen and Chan forums, and only occasionally pipe up if something is relevant to the presence of Chan in Tibet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 16th, 2020 at 6:05 AM

Title: Re: Open Letter from intellectuals lamenting racism and intolerance

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

I just don't wanna go the right wing route and assume a left wing version of "soros protestors" or whatever with no evidence.

Malcolm wrote:

Ummm....dude, the Tea Party? Actually funded by the Kochs.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Yes of course I know about all the obvious astroturf stuff, but we are talking specifically about right wing people putting forth the most ridiculous of the left-wing narratives in order to discredit the left, not the general fact that there is a huge right wing propaganda machine.

Malcolm wrote:

My point is that the right accuses the left of what it is quite guilty of: Billionaires funding "grassroots" movements. Hey, I got my check from George S. this week!!!

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 16th, 2020 at 11:25 AM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:

Ted Biringer said:

Seems a bit quiet in here - let's see if anyone wants to talk about Existence-Time (uji)

In Zen time and existence are not two different things; time is always existence-and-time, existence is always existence-and-time. This view is most clearly and comprehensively demonstrated in Shobogenzo's development and use of the term 'uji.' Dogen fashioned this term by combining two terms; 'u' (existence) and 'ji' (time) into the single term 'uji' (existence-time, or time-being). The point that seems most significant here is that existence and time are never separate from each other; each is an essential element of the other – no dharmas exist independent of time, and there is no time independent of dharmas. This notion of existence-time is central to Zen's vision of reality, thus is presupposed in all Zen expressions.

Hee-Jin Kim brings the crucial significance of this notion to light in a comment from his discussion of the aptly titled 'Uji' fascicle of Shobogenzo:

Dogen's whole thesis in this regard was crystallized in the following: "As we realize with the utmost effort that all times (jinji) are all existence (jin'u), absolutely no additional dharma remains." In other words, existence-time subsumed space and time totally and exhaustively.

Hee-Jin Kim, Eihei Dogen: Mystical Realist, p.150

In short, each and every particular thing, being, and event (i.e. dharma) is an intrinsic and essential element of total time, and each and every moment or duration of time is an intrinsic and essential element of total existence – hence each and every particular dharma is a manifestation of the whole universe, and the whole universe is manifest in and as each and every particular dharma. In Dogen's words:

Let us pause to reflect whether or not any of the whole of existence or any of the whole universe has leaked away from the present moment of time.

Shobogenzo, Uji (Trans. Gudo Nishijima & Mike Cross)

Accordingly, in Zen expressions the terms 'existence,' 'time,' and 'existence-time' are synonymous.

Peace,
Ted

Malcolm wrote:

How is this even the slightest bit different than the position of the Hinayana Sarvastivada, "everything exists in the three times" school?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 16th, 2020 at 6:47 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Astus said:

but most importantly guru yoga for the same purposes. Is that an acceptable distinction according to you?

Malcolm wrote:

Without empowerment, a guru is just a common Mahāyāna guru, there is no guru yoga in common Mahāyāna.. Guru Yoga is method which strictly belongs to Highest Yoga Tantra. So no, it is not an acceptable distinction. Guru Yoga is also connected with the so-called subtle body, and is not merely a practice of devotion, as is commonly misunderstood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 16th, 2020 at 9:32 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Without empowerment, a guru is just a common Mahāyāna guru, there is no guru yoga in common Mahāyāna.. Guru Yoga is method which strictly belongs to Highest Yoga Tantra. So no, it is not an acceptable distinction. Guru Yoga is also connected with the so-called subtle body, and is not merely a practice of devotion, as is commonly misunderstood.

Astus said:

I did not mean the guru yoga as part of sutra but as part of Vajrayana. The distinction I asked about was regarding the difference of methods getting to the point of being capable of performing vipasyana.

Malcolm wrote:

There are, within, Vajrayāna, two methods of giving rise to nondual gnosis: the first is the practice of the two stages; the second is guru yoga. Not that it really matters, but Sakya Pandita also endorses these two means.

Vipaśyanā, in Vajrayāna is not a result of intellectual analysis, it is rather a product of integrating the experience of the example gnosis or the genuine gnosis induced during empowerment, depending on the practitioner. For example, Naropa likens the experience of the example gnosis to the first bhumi, and while this experience is not necessarily the first bhumi, it can be a genuine gnosis in some persons of higher capacity. When it comes to "direct introduction" or so-called pointing out, the principle is roughly the same.

The difference between the two stages and guru yoga is that one is using the power of devotion (mos gus gyi rtal) to recapitulate the experience of the introduction, where as the former uses the more gradual process of working with this experience in the context of the two stages.

For the latter, having recognized what was introduced, the nature of the mind, one rests in that state.

These two methods, the two stages and guru yoga, are more effective for giving rise to vipaśyanā because there is no intellectual analysis involved. It is based on a direct perception, no matter how fleeting, not inferred through reasoning and analysis.

Virtually all schools use a combination of guru yoga and the two stages combined into a single practice, for example Five-fold Mahāmudra of Drikung, Naro Khacho of Sakya, and so on. Sort of hedging bets.

Guru yoga in all Tibetan Buddhist schools is regarded as the supreme path to awakening, bar none. Because Kagyu Mahāmudra and Dzogchen are both paths of self-liberation (grol lam), rather than paths of transformation (sgyur lam), guru yoga is the principle path, especially in Dzogchen teachings. The principle difference between Kagyu Mahāmudra and Dzogchen, as Ringu Tulku personally confirmed for me, is that the former lacks tögal. But in the Karma Kagyu and Drukpa Kagyu school, it is quite common for practitioners to spend a long time practicing Mahāmudra, and then eventually embark on practicing tögal, Khenpo Tsultrim Gyatso, Thrangu Rinpoche, etc., are all examples of masters who teach students using this progression. As I understand things in Drikung, having long association with Nangchen Drikungpas such as Gyalpo Rinpoche and Ontul Rinpoche, who are both important gurus of mine who specialize in Yangzab, people other than lineage heads usually choose one track or other other.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 16th, 2020 at 9:43 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Astus said:

sutra-style Mahamudra teachings

White Sakura said:

Definition of that term again please.

Malcolm wrote:

We've established there is no such thing, other than as a name for prajñāpāramitā, to inspire unfortunate yogis. If you examine Kongtrul's encyclopedia where he reviews the three kinds of Mahāmudra, it is quite clear in his writings that so-called sūtra mahāmudra is for inferior practitioners who are not ready for actual mahāmudra teachings. These days however, these three kinds of mahāmudra are not actually taught separately, as Cone pointed out, and furthermore, this is principally a Karma Kagyu scheme, as far I know.

Also in Sakya, in the Three Visions teachings of Lamdre, they do not use the term "mahāmudra" per se, but they do combine dohas with teachings on śamatha and vipaśyanā. For Nyingmapas, mahāmudra is either an alternate name for the state of Dzogchen, like Prajñāpāramitā, or more commonly, refers to realizing the nature of the mind in the form of a yidam, and refers to the third of the four vidyādhara stages.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 16th, 2020 at 9:53 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Astus said:

If we take Gampopa's word on it, Mahamudra per se is neither sutra nor tantra, but beyond them.

Malcolm wrote:

This is because sutra is spangs lam, the path of renunciation, but in secret mantra systems, there are two paths, sgyur lam, the path of transformation and grol lam, the path of self-liberation. Both Kagyu Mahāmudra and Dzogchen belong to the last path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 16th, 2020 at 10:00 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Astus said:

I studied and heard mainly some sutra-style Mahamudra teachings, so I'm not particularly familiar with other parts of Vajrayana.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, since you are a bodhisattva, you have an obligation to become expert in all dharma paths as much as possible. So, you better place yourself at the feet of a qualified Vajrayāna master quickly, because all the best ones are dying out pretty quickly.

I personally regret that first encounter with Zen was Eido Roshi, and that I was only 16 at the time when I did a weekend sesshin with him at Dai Bosatsu Zendo in the Catskills. Sometimes, when I am in a particularly generous mood, I am inclined to place Zen among the paths of self-liberation as well. But even when I not so inclined, Zen is the definitive expression of Mahāyāna sūtra paths, AFAIC. But I don't think I could ever practice with Meido. As much as I respect him, not into boot camps or martial arts. I am too much of an old hippy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 1:05 AM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Astus said:

If we take Gampopa's word on it, Mahamudra per se is neither sutra nor tantra, but beyond them.

Malcolm wrote:

This is because sutra is spangs lam, the path of renunciation, but in secret mantra systems, there are two paths, sgyur lam, the path of transformation and grol lam, the path of self-liberation. Both Kagyu Mahāmudra and Dzogchen belong to the last path.

White Sakura said:

Just asking: If I am taught for nine days, eight hours every day on the Mahamudra prayer of third Karmapa, without a single mantra, Yidam or any other visualization being mentioned during this days-then what is that? Secret Mantra teaching?

Malcolm wrote:

There is actually a blessing empowerment connected with the the Dorjechangma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 1:07 AM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

These two methods, thw two stages and guru yoga, are more effective for giving rise to vipaśyanā because there is no intellectual analysis involved. It is based on a direct perception, no matter how fleeting, not inferred through reasoning and analysis.

Astus said:

What do you call then instructions like these?

'Establishing the appearance of the mind is like a thief in an empty house.

It is beyond color, form, shape, and characteristics.

There is no searcher and no object of a search.

This is my heart's advice.

Mind and conceptual thought are like water and ice.

They have always been inseparable, yet cannot be said to be one thing or two.

This is my heart's advice.

The inseparability of appearance and mind is like last night's dream.

It possesses the four characteristics and is the union of appearance and emptiness.

It cannot be said to be one thing or two.

This is my heart's advice.'

(The Jewel Treasury of Advice, p 35)

Malcolm wrote:

Words and concepts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 6:21 AM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Words and concepts.

Astus said:

That's very Zen of you to say so.

But, I still feel that the question is not yet clarified. You wrote:

Vipaśyanā, in Vajrayāna is not a result of intellectual analysis, it is rather a product of integrating the experience of the example gnosis or the genuine gnosis induced during empowerment, depending on the practitioner.

But you also said that pointing out instructions are equal to the fourth empowerment.

Malcolm wrote:

Pointing out instructions are based on experience, not words.

Astus said:

What was quoted were examples of such pointers, and they are used in vipasyana, but there are others as well, like <https://studybuddhism.com/en/tibetan-buddhism/original-texts/tantra-texts/mahamudra-eliminating-the-darkness-of-ignorance/mahamudra-vipashyana-meditation>. As for no intellectual analysis, well, right, but that doesn't make it different from how insight is taught in the sutras, in fact, sutras are also used next to dohas and tantras to explain Mahamudra vipasyana, hence my question, whether the dividing line is in how one eventually gets to be able to do vipasyana in order to gain gnosis.

Malcolm wrote:

Honestly, you cannot reason this through in the way you are attempting to do. In all seriousness, you are completely entangled in a briar patch of views.

The so-called word empowerment is based on a specific experience. So are Mahamudra pointing-out instructions. I have received one on one Mahamudra pointing out instructions in the Karma Kagyu tradition from Ayang Rinpoche, a direct disciple of the 16th Karmapa. So I understand how this works very well through my own experience. You will not understand this unless you do the necessary work, find a guru, do what is necessary to please them, and make oneself a suitable candidate for such instructions. It is really that simple.

All the authors of all the Mahamudra books you are fond of quoting all assume that one has the required experience necessary for Mahamudra pointing out.

Further conversation about this is rather pointless. You are like a man who, having never tasted sugar, insists on arguing with those who have what "sweet" tastes like based on descriptions of "sweet" in a number of books.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 6:30 AM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:
clyde said:

If I understand what was written in the OP, there is no “sandwich” and no “three times”. The past doesn’t exist and the future doesn’t exist. There is only one time-existence, the present suchness.

But it’s equally likely I’ve misunderstood.

p.s: Uji, the combining of two terms to form one coherent concept reminds me of Thich Nhat Hanh’s “interbeing”; but that’s a different, though related topic.

Malcolm wrote:

So things arise without causes? How does that work? The Buddha was quite clear, “Where that arose, this arises,” etc. if there is no past, as you suggest, the consequence is that a) things arise from themselves or b) things arise causelessly because it is never seen anywhere that a cause exists at the time of its effect, or that an effect exists at the time of its cause.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 8:25 AM

Title: Re: The Six vs the Five Elemental Dhātus

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

At the Cham Shan temple in Toronto, at least one of the venerables there teaches the Dharma with six elements -- earth, water, fire, air, space, mind. This seems to be a minority practice, as most Buddhisms have the "Five Elements" -- earth, water, fire, air, space. Śrāvaka Buddhism is usually associated with the Four Elements -- earth, water, fire, air.

Of all unlikely places, I found a list of the six elements in śrāvaka scripture, both Theravādin Pāli and Sarvāstivādin Chinese parallels: Chayimā, bhikkhu, dhātuyo: 1. Pathavīdhātu, 2. āpodhātu, 3. tejodhātu, 4. vāyodhātu, 5. ākāsadhātu, 6. viññāṇadhātu. There are, monastic, these six elements: 1. The earth element, 2. the water element, 3. the fire element, 4. the wind element, 5. the space element, and 6. the consciousness element.

(Dhātuvibhaṅgasutta MN 140)

Where else does six pop up as opposed to five?

Malcolm wrote:

Four Mahabhutas, but six dhatus. All very standard. Nothing to see here, move along.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 8:26 AM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:

clyde said:

I didn't say there was no past. I said it doesn't exist.

Malcolm wrote:

The past does not exist = no past.

This leads to another problem, of course, if the past does not exist, as you say, how can a past cause and condition, which do not exist, produce a present effect, which presumably exists? This is also similar to asserting arising without a cause.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 10:16 AM

Title: Re: The Six vs the Five Elemental Dhātus

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

What is formally differentiating a mahābhūta from a dhātu here?

Malcolm wrote:

Materiality.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 10:16 AM

Title: Re: Claim: Buddha Shakyamuni was a student/emanation of Bon Buddha?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Which one did you have in mind? Classical or modern?

tingdzin said:

Sorry, which one what? If you're talking about "authoritative account" of Bon history, I had in mind the one that was promulgated by Drigung Paldzin long ago, and more recently taken up by Sumpa Khenpo, which was still taken as gospel in many quarters of Tibet up to 1950, and I think it was Helmut Hoffmann's main source for his account of Bon (not sure of that, though). A lot of scholars such as Samten Karmay and Dan Martin have devoted some attention to unravelling this account.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh yes, their accounts are largely rubbish.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 7:16 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

White Sakura said:

Just asking: If I am taught for nine days, eight hours every day on the Mahamudra prayer of third Karmapa, without a single mantra, Yidam or any other visualization being mentioned during this days-then what is that? Secret Mantra teaching?

Malcolm wrote:

There is actually a blessing empowerment connected with the the Dorjechangma.

White Sakura said:

Thank you

what is Dorjechangma? I only know Dorje Chang Thungma.

Malcolm wrote:

Same.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 7:24 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

White Sakura said:

Definition of that term again please.

Malcolm wrote:

We've established there is no such thing, other than as a name for prajñāpāramitā, to inspire unfortunate yogis.

White Sakura said:

just saying:

Mahamudra, in the Kagyu lineage, has three different classifications or approaches to practice: sutra Mahamudra, mantra Mahamudra, and essence Mahamudra.

there is no such thing as sutra Mahamudra for you, Malcom, other than as a name for another term. Since you are not Kagyu. You don't pay attention to any of the quotes of Dzogchen Ponlop Rinpoche, I know. But this is the Kagyu sub-forum here. So his citations might be of some importance.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, you need to read what Kongtrul says on the issue. As I pointed out, I have received Mahamudra teachings in the Karma Kagyu tradition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 7:34 PM

Title: Cultural Marxism

Content:

Unknown said:

Cultural Marxism therefore absolutely has white supremacist underpinnings. It is a projection, on to 'the other', the enemy, moulded by and built upon the world view of white supremacists. Indeed the precursor Cultural Marxism was a Third Reich invention, 'Kulturbolschewismus' (Cultural Bolshevism). It is an extreme right-wing conspiracy theory and it is the role of serious archaeologists and historians to challenge it.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://archaeosoupblog.wordpress.com/2020/07/16/shaking-the-tree-prohibiting-a-safe-space-for-ahistorical-hatred/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 7:41 PM

Title: Re: Kanye West announces POTUS run

Content:

Queequeg said:

Kanye has apparently taken his medication and calmed down. He has dropped his candidacy.

<https://thehill.com/blogs/in-the-know/in-the-know/507407-advisor-says-kanye-west-no-longer-trying-to-run-for-president>https://

Or maybe he didn't. <http://www.newsweek.com/kanye-west-officially-files-run-president-1516348>

PeterC said:

Even off his meds he is not crazier than others standing in this election

<https://gizmodo.com/qanon-is-running-for-congress-1844403427>

Queequeg said:

At what point, do you think, Trumpism turns into a death cult?

Malcolm wrote:

It started out as one.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 9:21 PM

Title: Re: Cultural Marxism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Cultural Marxism therefore absolutely has white supremacist underpinnings. It is a projection, on to 'the other', the enemy, moulded by and built upon the world view of white supremacists. Indeed the precursor Cultural Marxism was a Third Reich invention, ‘Kulturbolschewismus’ (Cultural Bolshevism). It is an extreme right-wing conspiracy theory and it is the role of serious archaeologists and historians to challenge it.

<https://archaeosoupblog.wordpress.com/2020/07/16/shaking-the-tree-prohibiting-a-safe-space-for-ahistorical-hatred/>

Grigoris said:
Archaeologists?

Anthropologists? Okay. Sociologists? Yes. Historians? Of course. Political Studies? Definitely!

But Archaeologists?

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, this guy is an actual archaeologist...

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 9:30 PM
Title: Re: Existence-Time
Content:
clyde said:
The (past) baby ‘clyde’ doesn’t exist, yet here I am.

The Buddha taught the dependent co-arising of dharmas,
“When this is, that is,
From the arising of this comes the arising of that.
When this isn’t, that isn’t.
From the stopping of this comes the stopping of that.”

It’s not some non-existent past ‘this’ that causes ‘that’ to arise, but present causes and conditions. And when those causes and conditions stop being present, ‘that’ stops.

Malcolm wrote:
How do present causes and conditions produce effects in the future which has not yet arisen and thus do not exist? The consequence is just the same.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 9:48 PM
Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra
Content:

White Sakura said:
just saying:

there is no such thing as sutra Mahamudra for you, Malcom, other than as a name for another term. Since you are not Kagyu. You don't pay attention to any of the quotes of Dzogchen Ponlop Rinpoche, I know. But this is the Kagyu sub-forum here. So his citations might be of some importance.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, you need to read what Kongtrul says on the issue. As I pointed out, I have received Mahamudra teachings in the Karma Kagyu tradition.

florin said:

I thought Kongtrul was wrong. Not only that, but how come you trust English translations?

Malcolm wrote:

I don't necessarily. But I can read the original texts for myself. Thus, I can judge how accurate translations from Tibetan are.

florin said:

Up until recently you said that English translations can't be trusted. Shall we think the same about yours ?

Malcolm wrote:

No translation can catch 100 percent of the nuances of the source language. All I can say about my translations is that they have been peer-reviewed pretty thoroughly. It's one of the advantages of publishing with Wisdom. Their CEO is a PhD from Harvard, reads both Sanskrit and Tibetan very well, and insists on rigorous scrutiny of manuscripts. I feel very fortunate to have them as my publisher.

And, Adriano C. personally told me that he thought I had done a good job. And of course I invited him to point out any errors he might encounter to improve the overall translation.

florin said:

It seems to me that Kongtrul is right or wrong depending of how the wind of bias and convenience blows.

Malcolm wrote:

I was referring Kongtrul's own presentation of the three kinds of Mahamudra in his Encyclopedia. There he clearly states "sutra" mahamudra is for students who are not suitable recipients for the two stages approach of the Six Dharmas of Naropa nor essence mahamudra. More importantly, the term "mahamudra" occurs in no sutra at all.

I am not actually arguing about sutra mahamudra. I was rejecting Altus's citations which contained claims which aren't sustainable on the basis of looking at what the Indian texts being cited themselves say.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 9:52 PM

Title: Re: Cultural Marxism

Content:

Grigoris said:

Archaeologists?

Anthropologists? Okay. Sociologists? Yes. Historians? Of course. Political Studies? Definitely!

But Archaeologists?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this guy is an actual archaeologist...

Grigoris said:

Yeah, I got that. I just fail to see how it is related to archaeology, though his idea of a constantly shifting (rather than static) view of history allows some room for relevance, but Marxism is hardly an archaeological pursuit.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, and he is castigating nazis for incorrect use of history, archaeology, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 9:54 PM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:

clyde said:

The (past) baby 'clyde' doesn't exist, yet here I am.

The Buddha taught the dependent co-arising of dharmas,

"When this is, that is,

From the arising of this comes the arising of that.

When this isn't, that isn't.

From the stopping of this comes the stopping of that."

It's not some non-existent past 'this' that causes 'that' to arise, but present causes and conditions. And when those causes and conditions stop being present, 'that' stops.

Malcolm wrote:

How do present causes and conditions produce effects in the future which has not yet arisen and thus do not exist? The consequence is just the same.

PadmaVonSamba said:

Ultimately, all that's happening is the illusion. Even karma is an illusion, but one that is experienced just as real as you experience yourself as real. A buddha isn't suffering the illusion, which is why a buddha is called “Buddha” or “awakened”. That’s why a buddha doesn’t suffer karma.

Malcolm wrote:

This does not address the issue.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 11:23 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

PeterC said:

You would need to identify exactly which instructions you're talking about to compare the instructions found in sutra on vipasyana and those found in Kagyu mahamudra.

Astus said:

Here are examples from Mahamudra the Moonlight. If required I can copy here the various quotes.

PeterC said:

yes that would be the point. I think what you're quoting here is the text, not the quotations in the text?

Malcolm wrote:

The only thing Astus is pointing out here, which he has already done, is the intellectual view of sūtra and tantra is the same. No one disputes this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 11:26 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Astus said:

The Bodhicittavivarana expounds:

Malcolm wrote:

Though the Bodhicittavivarana is actually commentarial text on the Akṣobhyavajra section of the Guhysamāja tantra, and is thus, a tantric commentary, not a sūtric commentary. It also is unlikely to be composed by Nāgārjuna I, though that hardly matters.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 11:32 PM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:
PadmaVonSamba said:
When we use the term, "exist"

...

There's the occurring of past and future as actual experience, but it's all going on within a vast, infinite "now".

Malcolm wrote:
You still didn't deal with the issue.

For example, a cause which has yet to produce an effect is just a noncause. Since causes and their effects cannot exist at the same time, all so-called "causes" therefore are non-causes, because a cause can only be labeled a "cause" if it has produced an effect.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 11:35 PM
Title: Re: Cultural Marxism
Content:
PeterC said:
On reflection. I know what it means.

So the practitioners of cultural marxism in our society would be, if anyone, the republican party.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, just as they are the ones who actually subscribe to identity politics.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, July 17th, 2020 at 11:37 PM
Title: Re: Cultural Marxism
Content:
Norwegian said:
These are the kind of people that use this term in a serious way.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, in just the same way the Nazi's used the term "cultural bolshevism."

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, July 18th, 2020 at 1:03 AM
Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:
Malcolm wrote:
the intellectual view of sūtra and tantra is the same.

Astus said:
Does that include the part where for instance one needs to establish for oneself, not just through reasoning but also directly, that the mind is not established in the three times?

Malcolm wrote:
What do you mean by "the mind is not established in the three times?"

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, July 18th, 2020 at 1:07 AM
Title: Re: Cultural Marxism
Content:
Danny said:
Marxism is...basic redistribution and consolidation of wealth into someone else's hands, just not yours.

Malcolm wrote:
I guess you are referring the redistribution of wealth to the super rich under the Trump Administration, and others before it.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, July 18th, 2020 at 1:17 AM
Title: Re: Cultural Marxism
Content:
Danny said:
So cultural Marxism is a thing...

Malcolm wrote:
Well, it is certainly is a favorite bogeyman of the Alt-right and its fellow travelers.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, July 18th, 2020 at 1:25 AM
Title: Re: Existence-Time
Content:
PadmaVonSamba said:
When we use the term, "exist"

...

There's the occurring of past and future as actual experience, but it's all going on within a vast, infinite "now".

Malcolm wrote:

You still didn't deal with the issue.

For example, a cause which has yet to produce an effect is just a noncause. Since causes and their effects cannot exist at the same time, all so-called "causes" therefore are non-causes, because a cause can only be labeled a "cause" if it has produced an effect.

PadmaVonSamba said:

Every cause is also a result.

Malcolm wrote:

This still does not deal with the issue. Changing the name "cause" to "effect" does not address the fundamental problem of causality in time. Imagining an "eternal" now also does not address the issue. Negating the existence of the past does not work. Collapsing time into the present does not work. Imaging that the present is durationless does not work. None of these linguistic games address the real issue.

To really understand what Dogen meant, I would want to see some native Japanese commentary on the issue. Matylda, where are you when we need you?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 18th, 2020 at 1:34 AM

Title: Re: Cultural Marxism

Content:

Danny said:

So cultural Marxism is a thing...

Malcolm wrote:

Well, it is certainly is a favorite bogeyman of the Alt-right and its fellow travelers.

Grigoris said:

In some people's minds shape-shifting reptilian overlords from an invisible satellite planet are a thing...

Doesn't really mean much.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, you didn't realize that reptilians are the main purveyors of this doctrine?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 18th, 2020 at 1:36 AM

Title: Re: Refuge Name

Content:

shankara said:

So I heard that Tibetans actually use their refuge name as a name to go by, is that true? Also, what would one call a person? The first name, the middle or the last? I recently received Refuge-from-Afar from Garchen Rinpoche, probably not going to actually take on the name so just curiosity really.

As it happens the name seems to suit me rather well, despite never having actually met Garchen.

Malcolm wrote:

Generally, Tibetan last names are our first names.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 18th, 2020 at 2:37 AM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

To really understand what Dogen meant, I would want to see some native Japanese commentary on the issue.

Astus said:

https://global.sotozen-net.or.jp/eng/library/key_terms/pdf/key_terms14.pdf

If I were to describe Dogen Zenji's definition of uji in a dictionary, I would say: (1) for something to have its own way of being (attribute) and develop it along its own unique time axis, (2) existence itself which has its own unique time and establishes its own way of being

Malcolm wrote:

Honestly, I cannot parse this and pretend that I understand the authors intent any better at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 18th, 2020 at 2:38 AM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This still does not deal with the issue. Changing the name "cause" to "effect" does not address the fundamental problem of causality in time. Imagining an "eternal" now also does not address the issue. Negating the existence of the past does not work. Collapsing time into the present does not work. Imaging that the present is durationless does not work. None of these linguistic games address the real issue.

To really understand what Dogen meant, I would want to see some native Japanese commentary on the issue. Matylda, where are you when we need you?

clyde said:

You're right, imagining doesn't work, nor does "linguistic games" work, nor does appeal to authority (Dogen) work. How would you address "the fundamental problem of causality in time"?

Malcolm wrote:

Time is a mere convention and cannot be established as anything more than a convention. When it comes to causes and effects, the only rational solution, conventionally speaking is that causes and effects are neither the same nor different.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 18th, 2020 at 2:46 AM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

What do you mean by "the mind is not established in the three times?"

Astus said:

'In this way, when the identity of the mind is specifically examined by wisdom, in the ultimate sense it is perceived neither within nor without. It is also not perceived in the absence of both. Neither the mind of the past, nor that of the future, nor that of the present, is perceived. When the mind is born, it comes from nowhere, and when it ceases it goes nowhere because it is inapprehensible, undemonstrable, and non-physical. If you ask, "What is the entity of that which is inapprehensible, undemonstrable; and non-physical?" the Heap of jewels states: "O Kashyapa, when the mind is thoroughly sought, it cannot be found. What is not found Cannot be perceived. And what is not perceived is neither past nor future nor present." Through such analysis, the beginning of the mind is ultimately not seen, the end of the mind is ultimately not seen, and the middle of the mind is ultimately not seen.'

(Stages of Meditation, p 131-132)

'If you wish to recognize clearly the non-dwelling mind, then during your meditation just be aware that your mind does not think about any object or hold on to any dualities, such as good and evil, etc. Since past things are already past, you should not think about them anymore; and, thus, any thought about the past vanishes. This is known as being without the past. Furthermore, since future things have not yet arrived, you should neither seek nor wish for them; and, thus, any thought of the future vanishes. This is known as being without the future. Finally, since present things are already present, you should not grasp them nor allow a thought of love or hate to arise; and, thus, any thought about the present vanishes. This is known as being without the present. In summary, if no thought about these three time periods arises, then the three time periods do not exist. If a thought of moving arises, do not follow it; and the thought of moving will vanish. If a thought of dwelling arises, do not follow it; and the thought of dwelling will vanish.'

(<https://ymba.org/books/entering- tao-sudden-enlightenment/treatise-entering- tao-sudden-enlightenment>)

Malcolm wrote:

The introduction is not in the analysis.

Astus said:

'Rest in a state of clarity and naturalness. Rest relaxed, without tightness. Do not examine or analyze good and bad. Do not have doubts about what is or isn't. When thoughts appear, do not follow after their numerous appearances. Rest completely, like a sheaf of hay that has had its string cut. Rest. relaxed, in natural consciousness. Past thoughts have ceased, the future ones have not arisen. In this relaxed in-between state of the present, it's taught:

That mind is no mind ; the mind's nature is luminosity.

Just this mind alone, which is completely empty, clear, aware, and lucid, is what is called the perfection of wisdom, luminosity, mahamudra, dzokchen, and dharmakaya.' (The Unrivalled Instructions of Shang Rinpoche, in Mahamudra and Related Instructions, p 77)

Malcolm wrote:

The introduction is not in the verbal instruction.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 18th, 2020 at 4:56 AM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Astus said:

Right, but the question is if the analysis/instruction used to get to the introduction/insight can also match between Sutrayana and Vajrayana, not just the wisdom/gnosis arrived at? For that I gave the example of looking at the mind/thoughts in terms of the three times, as that is a frame of reference used in both systems.

Malcolm wrote:

I understand the point you are trying to make, which is the same point you have been trying to make for years: one can learn Dharma from books without a master.

The difference here between sūtra and tantra is again, in the former case it is purely an intellectual analysis, in the later case, based on empowerment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 18th, 2020 at 9:31 AM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:
PadmaVonSamba said:
When we use the term, "exist"

...

There's the occurring of past and future as actual experience, but it's all going on within a vast, infinite "now'.

Malcolm wrote:
You still didn't deal with the issue.

For example, a cause which has yet to produce an effect is just a noncause. Since causes and their effects cannot exist at the same time, all so-called "causes" therefore are non-causes, because a cause can only be labeled a "cause" if it has produced an effect.

jimmi said:
As cause and effect are occurring in time and "now", the present, is the only existent aspect of time, what is the boundary or horizon where cause becomes effect? Not a hair's breadth of separation, right? What is occurring now that cause becomes effect?

Malcolm wrote:
So according to you, a tree, the result, and it's seed, it's cause, are simultaneously existent? Is that what you are claiming? If so, this is completely incoherent.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, July 18th, 2020 at 9:33 AM
Title: Re: Existence-Time
Content:
PadmaVonSamba said:
When we use the term, "exist"

...

There's the occurring of past and future as actual experience, but it's all going on within a vast, infinite "now'.

Malcolm wrote:
You still didn't deal with the issue.

For example, a cause which has yet to produce an effect is just a noncause. Since causes and their effects cannot exist at the same time, all so-called "causes" therefore are non-causes, because a cause can only be labeled a "cause" if it has produced an effect.

tkp67 said:

I can think of many examples that seem to betray the notion in bold. Perhaps it is because I don't understand the context. Are you saying this applies to all phenomenon or something more specific? Thank you in advance.

Malcolm wrote:

It applies to all compounded phenomena.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 18th, 2020 at 10:33 AM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:

jimmi said:

As cause and effect are occurring in time and “now”, the present, is the only existent aspect of time, what is the boundary or horizon where cause becomes effect? Not a hair’s breadth of separation, right? What is occurring now that cause becomes effect?

Malcolm wrote:

So according to you, a tree, the result, and it’s seed, it’s cause, are simultaneously existent? Is that what you are claiming? If so, this is completely incoherent.

jimmi said:

The tree is not the result of the seed, so no they cannot be simultaneously existent. If I am claiming anything it would be that cause and effect are continuously inseparable, that the causes of the seed’s becoming and those of the tree’s becoming cannot be isolated and that a seed becomes a tree only in imagination.

Given the inseparability of cause and effect (do you deny this?) what is occurring now that cause becomes effect?

Malcolm wrote:

So a tree is not a result of a seed? A cause is certainly a result of an antecedent cause, because that is how we conventionally understand causes and effects. Not sure what you mean by “inseparable.” If you mean that a cause is not a cause until it produces an effect, that is one thing. But if you mean something else, you will have to explain it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 18th, 2020 at 5:53 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Well, you need to read what Kongtrul says on the issue. As I pointed out, I have received Mahamudra teachings in the Karma Kagyu tradition.

White Sakura said:

Great to hear about your Kagyu teachings. Which Kagyu Lineage and which masters please?

But just saying, I have the right to abide by the opinions of Ringu Tulku Rinpoche and not of Kongtrul Rinpoche.

Malcolm wrote:

That that mentioned above.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 18th, 2020 at 5:55 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I understand the point you are trying to make, which is the same point you have been trying to make for years: one can learn Dharma from books without a master.

Astus said:

It isn't, as <https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?p=543943#p543943>, and <https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?p=543371#p543371>. It is something others keep bringing up.

White Sakura said:

Astus, they think you have no contact to a master, because you do not come up with names. The poor people are totally nervous because of that, and can't sleep anymore, until you give them names.

Malcolm wrote:

Astute freely admitted above he has not received any Vajrayana teaching, nor direct introduction.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 18th, 2020 at 6:32 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

White Sakura said:

But just saying, I have the right to abide by the opinions of Ringu Tulku Rinpoche and not of Kongtrul Rinpoche.

PeterC said:

That's not something Ringu Tulku would ever say

Malcolm wrote:
Yup.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 18th, 2020 at 6:35 PM

Title: Re: Buddhism's class "problem"

Content:

PeterC said:

It's obvious on even cursory observation that the majority of North American and European Buddhists are white and middle-/upper-class.

Fortyeightvows said:

How about in Latin America ?

or different parts of Europe ? still only middle/upper class?

Malcolm wrote:
Same.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 18th, 2020 at 9:41 PM

Title: Re: Buddhism's class "problem"

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

I think that it is probably not true that "It's obvious on even cursory observation that the majority of North American and European Buddhists are white and middle-/upper-class."

There is just no way that the majority of buddhists in America are white. No way.

Are there any groups in Laredo or El Paso ? They aren't going to be white Buddhist people there either.

Im not sure definition of middle class, but I am skeptical of that part too.

Malcolm wrote:

You didn't distinguish what kinds of Buddhist you meant. Of course, there are more Asian Buddhist in the Americas. But this is generally "pastoral Buddhism," where wats and and so on are built by immigrant communities to provide pastoral services and traditional rites for lay people by a monastic community. Then of course there is SGI, which is very diverse, and probably has the largest number of black people, Pure Land Buddhism, (though Pure Land generally falls into the pastoral Buddhist category). But in terms of people who are interested in actually practicing Buddhism, apart from SGI and other Nichiren groups, and not merely receiving pastoral services, this is a predominately a white, upper-middle class aging hippy phenomena.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 18th, 2020 at 11:03 PM

Title: Re: Buddhism's class "problem"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

But in terms of people who are interested in actually practicing Buddhism, apart from SGI and other Nicherin groups, and not merely receiving pastoral services, this is a predominately a white, upper-middle class aging hippy phenomena.

Caoimhghín said:

I think you've made an inadvertent racial statement that you didn't intend to make.

Malcolm wrote:

No, I did not make either.

Caoimhghín said:

In contrast, the Sri Lankan immigrant community who funds the Scarborough Mahavihara takes their Buddhism very seriously.

Malcolm wrote:

And of the many immigrant Buddhist temples of I have been to over the years in the east, south, and west, they mainly let monks do all the practice. As I said, in America, Immigrant Buddhism is mainly a pastoral affair. They are certainly serious about supporting the monastic sangha, but primarily for pastoral services.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 18th, 2020 at 11:04 PM

Title: Re: Buddhism's class "problem"

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

Something else to consider is that Buddhism in the west has inflated statistics on terms of how many white people are actually seriously participating. For instance, there is a movement of what is called "Tantra" amongst a fair amount of "spiritual" gay men in the village party scene of Montreal. This "Tantra" movement is actually just a group of men who have group sex with each other. There is no actually Tantra practiced in it, but participants will say they practice Tantric Buddhism. It's tantric "Buddhism," not Hinduism, specifically because the leader of the group has pretensions to being a Buddhist.

So there's at least ~500 false positives in Montreal. The amount only goes up when we take closer looks in other places.

Malcolm wrote:

Not talking about this. Talking about refuge-holding, card-carrying Buddhists.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 12:22 AM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Astute freely admitted above he has not received any Vajrayana teaching, nor direct introduction.

Astus said:

I <https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=50&t=34185&p=543801#p543801> that I mainly studied and heard sutra-style Mahamudra teachings, as that is what I like the most in Vajrayana. But since I was fortunate enough to receive the Fivefold Mahamudra teaching, I cannot say other parts are totally unknown to me.

Malcolm wrote:

Did you practice this?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 12:22 AM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

'Rest in a state of clarity and naturalness. Rest relaxed, without tightness. Do not examine or analyze good and bad. Do not have doubts about what is or isn't. When thoughts appear, do not follow after their numerous appearances. Rest completely, like a sheaf of hay that has had its string cut. Rest, relaxed, in natural consciousness. Past thoughts have ceased, the future ones have not arisen. In this relaxed in-between state of the present, it's taught:

That mind is no mind ; the mind's nature is luminosity.

Just this mind alone, which is completely empty, clear, aware, and lucid, is what is called the perfection of wisdom, luminosity, mahamudra, dzokchen, and dharmakaya.' (Thr Unrivald Instructions of Shang Rinpoche, in Mahamudra and Related Instructions, p 77)

The introduction is not in the verbal instruction.

White Sakura said:

So difficult. If not examining good or bad then why to deem it "good" to have transmissions by a Guru and deem it "bad" not to have empowerments?

Malcolm wrote:

When introducing one person to another, there is first an experience—first you see their face. But just seeing their face does not tell you their name. So then the person making the introduction says, "This is Mr. or Mrs. X." Direct introduction is the same. First you have an experience. Then you are told what that experience means.

Trying to introduce the nature of the mind without first having an experience of the nature of the mind is like trying to introduce someone to someone when that person is not present: you can say, "Mr. X" is tall/short, has big/short nose, is fat/thin, Arabic/Asian/Jewish/Black/White, etc., but if you don't see this person first, no matter what description you are given, you will not recognize this person.

White Sakura said:

Same thing with this "radical Dzogchen" practioners in Germany. Who "need no master". They argue with that.

Malcolm wrote:

There are fools everywhere. What to say?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Astus said:

The Kagyupa teachers I had met and received teachings from were from the Taklung (Phakchok Rinpoche), the Drikung (Chetsang Rinpoche, Garchen Rinpoche, Chokyi Nyima Rinpoche, Drupon Konchok Jigmet), and from the Drukpa (a disciple of Adeu Rinpoche) lineages. But all this, in my opinion, is totally irrelevant for the topic.

Malcolm wrote:

It is completely relevant.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 3:41 AM

Title: Re: Cultural Marxism

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

Essentially Gramsci and Eurocommunism is what is meant.

Malcolm wrote:

Which means there is no such thing as cultural marxism, if there ever was one, since the eurocommunists abandoned communism after the fall of the USSR.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 4:57 AM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:

jimmi said:

Still a long train of inseparable causes and effects before there is any likelihood of a tree. In my imagination I see no gap in the process, if that is indeed what it is, of cause and effect. What has become a seed arising from an infinity of intimate causes and conditions similarly unfolds in its being in the immediate, intimate and necessary causes and conditions that are appropriate to the seed becoming other than a seed ... could be a tree, or food for a mouse, or part of a loaf of bread. There is nothing discrete at any point. Where time comes into it, I'm not sure.

Malcolm wrote:

So is a seed and its sprout the same substance then, merely a transformation of the same entity? Or are seeds and sprouts different entities?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 4:58 AM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

The principle of cause and effect only occurs to conditioned existence (samsara), which is the illusory projection of mind.

Malcolm wrote:

So you mean seeds and sprouts only happen in the mind?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 4:59 AM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

There is no fixed point at which any identity can be established.

Malcolm wrote:

So wheat seeds can produce corn? After all, you said it is all merely a projection of the mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 5:02 AM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, Ver. 7: Exposition of the Elements (Dhatunirdesa); Discernment of the Factors (Dharma)

Content:

Queequeg said:

From the Pruden translation -

Commentary to 7a-b. Even though the expression samskrta signifies "that which has been created...", it also applies to future dharma and to present dharmas; in fact, a dharma does not change its nature by changing its time period. In the same way, one calls milk in the udder dugdha, "that which has been drawn", and kindling indhana, or "wood to be burned."

Am I reading this correctly to conclude they believe dharmas persist in the three times?

Malcolm wrote:

You're getting a bit ahead of yourself, but yes, according to the Vaibhāṣikas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 6:57 AM

Title: Re: Cultural Marxism

Content:

Ceisiwr said:

Essentially Gramsci and Eurocommunism is what is meant.

Malcolm wrote:

Which means there is no such thing as cultural marxism, if there ever was one, since the eurocommunists abandoned communism after the fall of the USSR.

Ceisiwr said:

They certainly didn't abandon conflict theory.

Malcolm wrote:

"They" do not exist, like cultural Marxism. The only difference between them is that the latter never existed, like the child of a barren woman.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 8:07 AM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

The principle of cause and effect only occurs to conditioned existence (samsara), which is the illusory projection of mind.

Malcolm wrote:

So you mean seeds and sprouts only happen in the mind?

PadmaVonSamba said:

Establishing that there is an absolute fixed point at which something exists as a seed, and something else exists as a sapling, and something else exists as a tree, as absolute entities, yes, that is purely a projection of mind.

Is there a continuously changing courses of events in biology on which we (due to the human inability to observe such slow change occurring in real time) impute fixed notions of “ seed”, “sapling” and “tree” the Yes. Of course.

Malcolm wrote:

So you mean labels are projections but processes are real?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 8:13 AM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

tobes said:

And in terms of influence in the dissemination of mahamudra in Tibet, has there been any more important master of mahamudra than Gampopa himself? So, I'm sorry to say that we have to deal with him in this thread - can't just skip over as if he never existed!

Back to the Jackson book - there have been plenty of defenders of Gampopa against the Sapan critique, including most Gelugs.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is an error. As I pointed out, Ganden Mahāmudra is quite late, formulated in the mid 17th century by the First Panchen Lama. I already pointed out that it was subject to derision by no less a personage than the Great Fifth Dalai Lama, his younger contemporary.

The first articulated defenses from the Kagyus of various stripes against Sapan's critiques waited for an entire two centuries.

Some would argue that Sapan was the most important master of mahāmudra in Tibet. He was after all an eighth stage bodhisattva. Just saying. It all depends on one's perspective and what one chooses to accept and reject. After all, oneself is the ultimate authority in all matters of religion, and no one else.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 8:14 AM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

tobes said:

So again, one could critique this in many ways, but it is a huge misrepresentation of the terrain to hold that anyone who argues against "mahamudra implies tantric empowerment" is an anomaly. It is simply isn't.

Malcolm wrote:

There is certainly no Indian precedent for the idea that there can be mahāmudra in absence of some kind of empowerment. None whatsoever. This is just a fact. There is nothing to argue about here.

But again, "authority" is up to you, not some book that says this or that. If people want to believe the realization of mahāmudra does not depend on a guru and empowerment, they are perfectly free to hold that belief. But it certainly isn't born out by an examination of his collected works that Gampopa actually believed this himself. In fact, in Gampopa's works one even finds criticisms of mahāmudra and dzogchen in favor of tattva, reality/truth. I am afraid that until his whole collected works are translated, it will be difficult for people to really understand completely what his point of view was.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 9:21 AM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

tobes said:

And in terms of influence in the dissemination of mahamudra in Tibet, has there been any more important master of mahamudra than Gampopa himself? So, I'm sorry to say that we have to deal with him in this thread - can't just skip over as if he never existed!

Back to the Jackson book - there have been plenty of defenders of Gampopa against the Sapan critique, including most Gelugs.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is an error. As I pointed out, Ganden Mahāmudra is quite late, formulated in the mid 17th century by the First Panchen Lama. I already pointed out that it was subject to derision by no less a personage than the Great Fifth Dalai Lama, his younger contemporary.

The first articulated defenses from the Kagyus of various stripes against Sapan's critiques waited for an entire two centuries.

Some would argue that Sapan was the most important master of mahāmudra in Tibet. He was after all an eighth stage bodhisattva. Just saying. It all depends on one's perspective and what one chooses to accept and reject. After all, oneself is the ultimate authority in all matters of religion, and no one else.

tobes said:

With respect, your view on this is very, very settled in favour of Sapan. I am not saying that this is unfounded, only that there are other sound positions and because you do not grant this there is little point engaging in a debate.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, there is the fact that no sutra mentions this word, “mahamudra.” The position Astus produced is based on cherry picked citations that do not take into consideration the whole text being cited.

I even pointed out that Sakyapas do exactly the same thing Kagyus do, that is, teach shamatha and vipashyana bolstered with mahamudra citations from Saraha, Virupa, and so on, the primary difference being that Sakyapas are a) unwilling to term this sutra mahamudra and b) unwilling to admit there are other forms of entry into Vajrayana than a major empowerment. As for b) I don’t hold the Sakya position. I never have, even though I have argued from that position as a formality. You should not assume I believe every position I defend. I’ve even defended Tsongkhapa’s presentation of the two truths for fun. It is called sharpening prajna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 10:03 AM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

haha said:

Well, there is the fact that no sutra mentions this word, “mahamudra.” The position Astus produced is based on cherry picked citations that do not take into consideration the whole text being cited.

17. 86

“ ‘It is the seal of the nature of all phenomena.

It is the transmission of a quintillion sūtras.

It is the unsurpassable wealth of the bodhisattvas.

Does the Jina teach this samādhi? {57}

या सर्वधर्माण स्वभाव मुद्रा

यः सूत्रकोटीनियुतान आगमः ।

यो बोधिसत्त्वान धनं निरूत्तरं

कच्चिज्जिनो भाषति तं समाधिम् ॥ ५७ ॥

17. 144

“ ‘It is the practice of the teaching of the lion’s roar.

It originates from the supreme wisdom of buddhahood.

It is the seal of the nature of all phenomena.

This is the samadhi taught by the guides. {114}

प्रतिपत्तियं देशित सिंहनादिना-

मितु बुद्धज्ञानस्य वरस्य आगमः ।

सर्वेष धर्माण स्वभाव मुद्राः
समाध्ययं देशितु नायकेहि ॥ ११४ ॥
॥ बहुबुद्धनिर्हरिसमाधिमुखपरिवर्तः ॥

The Entranceway to the Samadhi That Is Taught by Many Buddhas

From Samādhi rāja sutra

<https://read.84000.co/translation/UT22084-055-001.html>

<http://www.dsbcproject.org/canon-text/book/443>

Assumption is that this mudra has some distance relation with mahamudra. I don't know how many centuries it took to become Mahamudra. So, even the profound mahayana sutras are talking about the word (at least) mudra. Some teachers have loosely spoken it as mahamudra, instead of mudra.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, the sutra does not use the term "mahamudra." Have you any idea how common this word, "Mudra" is in relation to names of samadhis in the sutras? It would take a great deal of time to list them all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 6:48 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

White Sakura said:

"You are cherry-picking"- yea, and who is NOT cherry-picking citations in a debate?? Everybody chooses citations and parts of books that confirm his own opinion. The coolest was: On one hand you are cherry-picking. On the other hand you are "dancing on books"- which sounds like you didn't really read them. How can you find your "cherries" if you do not read the books??

Malcolm wrote:

He was. He is presently unable to view the entire contexts of the quotes he is using. It is quite common among Tibetan and other Buddhist scholars to simply repeat citations one has heard from others and stash them in one's notes, to be used later when oneself is composing a text, without checking the original source.

White Sakura said:

So the only argument that was left was: "Piss off here, you do not belong to the lineage." Dancing on books could have meant then: Only reading, not hearing and meeting a master.

Malcolm wrote:

You happened into a conversation Astus and I have been having for more than 10:years. It is completely friendly, and we are used to each other. You, on the other hand, arrived only a few weeks ago. So you are like a guy who walks into a cool bar you just discovered, and sees a couple of old geezers bickering about football teams, and not realizing that they are old buddies, begins to stand up for one against the other.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 7:18 PM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

Peter and 48vows were arguing about whether the US government or the Chinese government was confiscating personal property, specifically, PPE, in international transit.

It's no argument that the Chinese government really did!

My posts about it could be moved to the personal experience thread !

Malcolm wrote:

It is also no argument that Jared Kushner did the same thing, and profited from it by selling same supplies back to China.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 7:26 PM

Title: Re: Beckwith on Pyrrho and Buddhism

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

So, what is everyone's opinions on this book ?

You can see a lot of it on google books - <https://books.google.com/books?id=RLCUB...&q&f=false>

I'm interested to hear what others think

Malcolm wrote:

He basically argue that Pyrrho learned Buddhism, and taught it to the Greeks.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 7:40 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

tobes said:

Such an argument - that all of this implies the futility of vajrayana - is not being advanced in anyway -by either myself, nor any Kagyu (or Gelug) defenders of so called sutra mahamudra, nor does the implication you assert follow.

PeterC said:

As the major protagonist of this thread, I think Astus would advance that argument. But surely the implication does follow, unless one believes that "sutra mahamudra" is an exceedingly slow path

tobes said:

Well, let him advance it if he wishes, and then respond to that.

The Kagyu point is really about context/upaya: different techniques are needed for different dispositions. The slowness or haste of a particular path depends very greatly on the amount or lack of merit a given practitioner has.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this point has been addressed here, more than once, in this thread.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 7:42 PM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

PeterC said:

I'll go with "misinformed"

Danny said:

I would rather go with misinformed...

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, so that's why you voted for Trump. That's worked out really well.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 7:49 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

White Sakura said:

Two accumulations, I understand that as practicing emptiness and compassion. It is important not to think: "Everything is empty, everything is illusion so there is no karma and I do not need to pay attention to good actions, ethical conduct."

PeterC said:

it refers to merit and wisdom

Second: If somebody practices "only" sutra mahamudra, what exactly is the minimum of other practices to practice from the Vajrayana teachings? I cannot imagine it can be practised without at least a short formal guru yoga.

The two accumulations in the kagyu mahamudra curriculum are gathered in the uncommon preliminaries, which themselves are vajrayana - they are all guru yoga of different forms. This is what Thrangu R, in the passage Astus quotes, says that practitioners of "sutra" mahamudra need to be doing. All roads lead to Rome.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct. Among the uncommon or "unshared" preliminaries, the source of mandala offerings and guru yoga is the Guhyasamāja Tantra. These practices do not exist in lower tantras, much less sūtra. Vajrasattva comes from yoga tantra, but also does not exist in the two lower tantras, much less sūtra. Refuge and bodhicitta are the "shared" preliminaries.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 7:52 PM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Danny said:

I would rather go with misinformed...

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, so that's why you voted for Trump. That's worked out really well.

Danny said:

No, my political thinking are in line with a Chris Hitchens or a Tony Benn, but always happy for others to project whatever they feel comfortable with. I don't care

Malcolm wrote:

But both these guys are commies, whom you despise.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 9:05 PM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Danny said:

No, my political thinking are in line with a Chris Hitchens or a Tony Benn, but always happy for others to project whatever they feel comfortable with. I don't care

Malcolm wrote:

But both these guys are commies, whom you despise.

Danny said:

Yep

Malcolm wrote:

Well, you know what Emerson said about consistency.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 9:53 PM

Title: Re: Sutra, Tantra, Mahamudra

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You happened into a conversation Astus and I have been having for more than 10:years. It is completely friendly, and we are used to each other. You, on the other hand, arrived only a few weeks ago. So you are like a guy who walks into a cool bar you just discovered, and sees a couple of old geezers bickering about football teams, and not realizing that they are old buddies, begins to stand up for one against the other.

White Sakura said:

not exactly. I am not so stupid to think Astus needs me to stand up for him.

I am just trying to find out what little parts of this conversation me stupid guy can read several times to learn a little bit. Because from reading one times I cannot really get it, due to vocab problems.

I think he got a little bit that he is not only in a ten years of conversation with you, but tried to help me a bit. So, if I opened the thread, please be so kind to give me a little citation to think about, if you think his citations are lopsided.

Malcolm wrote:

Reread the thread.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 9:54 PM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Danny said:

Yep

Malcolm wrote:

Well, you know what Emerson said about consistency.

Danny said:
To be great is to be misunderstood?
A foolish consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, July 19th, 2020 at 10:47 PM
Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?
Content:

Danny said:
You lost my hobgoblin mind as to what quoting a transcendentalist has to do with a pandemic?

Malcolm wrote:
You gotta catch up, pokey. I was referring to your political admiration for two socialists despite your apparent dislike of socialism. In other words, I do not expect you to be consistent.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, July 20th, 2020 at 12:10 AM
Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?
Content:

Danny said:
You lost my hobgoblin mind as to what quoting a transcendentalist has to do with a pandemic?

Malcolm wrote:
You gotta catch up, pokey. I was referring to your political admiration for two socialists despite your apparent dislike of socialism. In other words, I do not expect you to be consistent.

Danny said:
Correct, that's breaking out of creating a rarefied atmosphere where being closed off to exchange of ideas only makes for stagnation of thought.
It's my right to change my mind.
I can admire whomever I like, without falling for the same old failed man centric notions and patterns that have wrecked much havoc upon humanity. It's called evolution of thought.
And is not contradictory. That's a type of consistency right?

Malcolm wrote:
Well, some might call it convenience, rather than "evolution." From my point of view, your "evolution" looks rather like devolution, from a stance where regulation of markets is understood to be judicious and beneficial, to the ridiculous trend against regulation (complete with the "Venezuela" bogeyman) being sold like crack in right wing newspapers these days to fools everywhere.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 20th, 2020 at 12:11 AM

Title: Re: W.H.O. Walks Back Claim That Asymptomatic Transmission is Rare

Content:

Sādhaka said:

Then you're going to have many people who are going to refuse it.

Even many leftists and other otherwise pro-vaxxers, when you read comment sections on various related videos, do not trust bill gates on this nor any covid vaccine regardless of what company it'll be produced by.

Malcolm wrote:

That's because they are idiots.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 20th, 2020 at 2:20 AM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Danny said:

I can't take you seriously trying to sell socialism

Malcolm wrote:

Practically speaking, I am Keynesian. In terms of my actual political orientation, deep ecologist. Socialism is just a bogeyman word now, used to frighten the childish.

Anyway, it is pretty clear that unregulated capitalism is destroying the world.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 20th, 2020 at 2:31 AM

Title: Re: Beckwith on Pyrrho and Buddhism

Content:

Grigoris said:

Have you read Pyrrho's philosophy? There is nothing original surviving, just recorded texts in writings by Sextus Empiricus.

There is a definite Indian influence but it is difficult to tell if it is Buddhist, or from some other "Hindu" sect.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddhist connection makes the most sense, given which religion was ascending in dominance at the time in India.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 20th, 2020 at 3:04 AM

Title: Re: Having some doubts recently...

Content:

Michael126unknown said:

I wanna give an update here. I think my main error was not doing much reflection to get some certainty before I began a session of practice and maybe this is where any sort of subtle misunderstandings or confusion before might've come in, not sure but it helped me; Now that I'm doing that more, these emotions are totally gone. Another thing I might have made a mistake on, I also compared these experiences to prior practice sessions for some reason, but that wasn't necessary obviously. (Btw - My teacher hasn't responded yet)

Thank you, guys!

Malcolm wrote:

As above, wrong place to ask questions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 20th, 2020 at 4:58 AM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

Establishing that there is an absolute fixed point at which something exists as a seed, and something else exists as a sapling, and something else exists as a tree, as absolute entities, yes, that is purely a projection of mind.

Is there a continuously changing courses of events in biology on which we (due to the human inability to observe such slow change occurring in real time) impute fixed notions of " seed", "sapling" and "tree" the Yes. Of course.

Malcolm wrote:

So you mean labels are projections but processes are real?

PadmaVonSamba said:

"real" usually means, "just as valid as the experience I have of myself and my perceptions".

Labels and projections and processes, all are dependently arising, composite, constantly changing phenomena, but are experienced as inherently existing entities to which we impute the quality of "real" or "reality".

It is certainly valid to do so, in terms of Samsaric existence. Otherwise we would not know if the bridge over a river was "real" or not.

Ultimately, however, “real” and “not real” doesn’t mean anything. In our “reality” the universe is real. The material world is real. Ultimately, it is neither real nor unreal. Those are simply relative concepts, a comparative duality.

Malcolm wrote:

So do phenomena exist or not? If so, how? How is "dependently arising, composite, constantly changing" any less a projection than a tree as an entity?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 20th, 2020 at 5:00 AM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:

Thundering Cloud said:

Thought-provoking stuff... thanks again for sharing.

Malcolm wrote:

The classical Buddhist assertion about time is a) time is measured by the duration of mental event, b) time depends on the perception of objects.

When there is no perception of objects, time, subjectively, vanishes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 20th, 2020 at 5:03 AM

Title: Re: Cultural Marxism

Content:

Modus.Ponens said:

Particularly disturbing is how they view society as racial struggle, thus perpetuating and aggravating racial tensions, instead of ending or minimising them.

Malcolm wrote:

It is obvious to anyone who has eyes to see, that in the post-colonial world, race is class.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 20th, 2020 at 8:18 AM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

So do phenomena exist or not? If so, how? How is "dependently arising, composite, constantly changing" any less a projection than a tree as an entity?

PadmaVonSamba said:

Constantly changing, etc. is the true condition of what we falsely perceive as inherently existing entity.

Yes, of course the action of conceptualizing phenomena as one thing or another is a projection of mind, regardless of what it is. But the truth of constantly changing (etc.) is there regardless of whether it is known (conceptualized) or not.

The Buddha made this truth known (conceptualized), whereas before it had not been known.

Malcolm wrote:

So changing phenomena exist, independent of our projections?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 20th, 2020 at 8:59 AM

Title: Re: W.H.O. Walks Back Claim That Asymptomatic Transmission is Rare

Content:

Sādhaka said:

Eh I dunno if it's quite that simple.

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, it's that simple. Such people are dangerous fools.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 20th, 2020 at 9:54 AM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

Constantly changing, etc. is the true condition of what we falsely perceive as inherently existing entity.

Yes, of course the action of conceptualizing phenomena as one thing or another is a projection of mind, regardless of what it is. But the truth of constantly changing (etc.) is there regardless of whether it is known (conceptualized) or not.

The Buddha made this truth known (conceptualized), whereas before it had not been known.

Malcolm wrote:

So changing phenomena exist, independent of our projections?

PadmaVonSamba said:

“Exist”? No.... “occur”? Yes.

If changing phenomena didn't occur beyond our perceptions and projections, Shakyamuni Buddha wouldn't have needed to explain that all phenomena are arising and falling away (impermanent).

Malcolm wrote:

Do you mean there are some phenomena which occur from their own side then? An actual basis of imputation?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 20th, 2020 at 7:11 PM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

“Exist”? No.... “occur”? Yes.

If changing phenomena didn’t occur beyond our perceptions and projections, Shakyamuni Buddha wouldn’t have needed to explain that all phenomena are arising and falling away (impermanent).

Malcolm wrote:

Do you mean there are some phenomena which occur from their own side then? An actual basis of imputation?

PadmaVonSamba said:

That would be to exist, rather than to occur.

Phenomena occur as the result of the interaction of components, including our own imputations and mental projections. For example, objects in dreams occur.

This conversation is occurring.

Malcolm wrote:

You just said that phenomena were separate from our projections. Which is it?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 20th, 2020 at 7:23 PM

Title: Re: History of Buddhism in America

Content:

tobes said:

<https://www.penguinrandomhouse.com/books/49314/how-the-swans-came-to-the-lake-by-rick-fields/>

I thought it was pretty good. It's history though, not everyone will be pleased....

Malcolm wrote:

It is also quite outdated and the author is deceased.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 20th, 2020 at 7:27 PM

Title: Re: Buddhism's class "problem"

Content:

Nemo said:

I think with the economy tanking and Tibetan Buddhist centres having such elderly Sanghas many will go bankrupt in the next 10 years. Many are little more than private clubs for aging hippies now. Tibetan teachers who grew up in India are really not the same. Things will change rapidly now.

And most Buddhists in America are Asian immigrants. A shame Tibetans chose to settle in India. It didn't work out well. I wish they had chosen a Western country and then flooded it.

PeterC said:

Even if the Tibetan lamas had all stayed in Tibet, the monastic model would still have had to change, because the economics of the society that once supported it have changed out of all recognition. Similarly the society that created and supported distributed Dharma centers has changed so radically that we need to rethink exactly what sort of a structure we need - and indeed, what are the outcomes we're even trying to achieve in terms of training lamas, organizing teachings, etc. A lot of sanghas still think raise money + build center = success. However the opposite is probably true: these centers then become a financial burden on the organization and the lamas' teaching schedules get hijacked to do quasi-fundraising in the form of teaching tours, and other activities (e.g. funding translations) get starved of cash as a result.

Malcolm wrote:

Covid shows the Dharma center model is unsustainable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 20th, 2020 at 7:40 PM

Title: Re: What are the (spiritual) physics behind dedicating merit?

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

I think it's pretty esoteric, but there is an idea of some substance being created when a person makes vows.

Look at this thread-

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?t=25372>

Malcolm wrote:

No relationship to dedicating merit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 20th, 2020 at 9:48 PM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You just said that phenomena were separate from our projections. Which is it?

PadmaVonSamba said:

Some phenomena does and some doesn't.

Obviously, there is much phenomena occurring of which one has no awareness...

Malcolm wrote:

So that means there are phenomena existing independently of us.

PadmaVonSamba said:

In a sense, one can say that phenomena fall into two categories: phenomena which is separate from our projections and phenomena which isn't separate from our projections, but which arises with our projections as a component.

Malcolm wrote:

So that means there are phenomena existing independently of us.

Now, the basic proposition:

"As we realize with the utmost effort that all times (jinji) are all existence (jin'u), absolutely no additional dharma remains."

"All times" must refer to the past, present, and future. All existence is included in these three times. As I pointed out once before I fail to see, facially, how this assertion is any better than the Hinayāna Sarvastivāda school's assertion that all phenomena exist in the three times.

Since Nāgārjuna effectively refutes time as a being anything more than a convention, and effectively refutes cause and condition as being anything more than a convention, I fail to see how your phenomena existing independently of one's projections is also anything more than a convention, which cannot be established in any way at all. Further, with respect to Dogen's assertion, if being = time, and time = being, the failure to establish one is the also the failure to establish the other since they are held to be mutually dependent.

In other words, rather than there being an eternal now, as someone suggested in this thread, in fact, no dharma ever arose anywhere at any time. The meaning of dependent origination is just nonorigination. I am certain Dogen addresses this point somewhere in his writing, and realizes this point, because everyone one understands Dogen to be a sublimely realized master.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 20th, 2020 at 9:55 PM

Title: Re: Cultural Marxism

Content:

Modus.Ponens said:

They [The Chinese] didn't gain that advantage by an accident of their culture which, at the time, did not value exploration of the seas.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, this is false. In the 13th century, the Chinese Navy was the largest in the world. It dominated the Pacific, the Indian Ocean, etc.

The quirk you refer to was not a result of Chinese culture. What happened was is that when Kublai Khan attempted to invade Japan, a typhoon interfered with the invasion. A Mongolian, he regarded this as a failure of maritime warfare, and scrapped the navy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 20th, 2020 at 9:58 PM

Title: Re: Cultural Marxism

Content:

Modus.Ponens said:

So I'm not a geographical determinist but, when you think about how many advantages Europe had, and think about how these can accumulate and reinforce each other over centuries, it's not surprising that those advantages overwhelmed the peoples of other continents.

Malcolm wrote:

What gave the Europeans an advantage was their racism and willingness to enslave, rob, rape, and murder the indigenous peoples of the Americas, Africa, Asia, and India for profit.

You need to read a book called 1493: The Colombian Exchange.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 21st, 2020 at 2:29 AM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Since Nāgārjuna effectively refutes time as a being anything more than a convention, and effectively refutes cause and condition as being anything more than a convention, I fail to see how your phenomena existing independently of one's projections is also anything more than a convention, which cannot be established in any way at all.

clyde said:

Malcolm; When you use the word "convention" what do you mean? It seems to be a term used to dismiss, so I'm asking for clarification/explanation.

Malcolm wrote:

A convention is something, which, left unanalyzed, seems to stand on its own. For example, "I am going to town." But when analyzed, the convention "going" is held to be untenable, since apart from something which has gone and something which has not gone, there is no present going. I refer you to Nāgārjuna's analysis of movement, from which this example is drawn.

Examples of thing which are not even conventionally possible are hair on a tortoise, horns on a rabbit, and the children of barren women.

"Convention" means "appears to function."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 21st, 2020 at 2:38 AM

Title: Re: Cultural Marxism

Content:

Modus.Ponens said:

They just had a lot more resources and advantages. Slavery has not been an exception in human history. It has been the norm. It is the absence of slavery that is the exception. I think singling out Europeans as a villainous race is quite disgusting. Especially coming from a Buddhist.

Malcolm wrote:

Villains behave villainously, for example, King Ashoka. He had 18k Jains slaughtered for a cartoon of the Buddha prostrating to Mahāvira.

However, the Europeans who pillaged and raped the world were also racist Christian religious fanatics, who inflicted far more harm on the world than any other kind of conquerer could even dream of.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 21st, 2020 at 6:43 AM

Title: Re: Cultural Marxism

Content:

Norwegian said:

Modus.Ponens: "The Better Angels of Our Nature", by Steven Pinker [...]"

... is yet another book that is hardly reputable as a source, and is viewed as quite poor by qualified people, such as historians etc.

(criticism of two of his books):

Modus.Ponens said:

Please find equivalent sources for "The Blank Slate" and "Enlightenment Now". I want to laugh some more at science denying ideologues.

EDIT: Links removed

Malcolm wrote:

It's funny to see a "Buddhist" relying on a new atheist author, I am sure next you are going to tell us rebirth and karma are false.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 21st, 2020 at 6:45 AM

Title: Re: Open Letter from intellectuals lamenting racism and intolerance

Content:

Modus.Ponens said:

Better than nothing, but too little, too late. The border between the centre left and the far left has not been enforced. A lot of damage has already been done. Now it's only by purging centre left institutions from communists and progressive authoritarians that things will go back to normal. Until then, the left is screwed. Whatever good cause it tries to defend, it will be hijacked by the extremists.

tingdzin said:

This is absolutely the case. Even charities such as Planned Parenthood, the Natural Resources Defense Council, and the ACLU, all of which might have at one time been regarded as center-left, are now in the hands of radical leftists.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh please. What a bunch of FUD.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 21st, 2020 at 9:18 AM

Title: Re: Open Letter from intellectuals lamenting racism and intolerance

Content:

tingdzin said:

I don't know what you mean by FUD, but I have been giving to these charities for decades and reading their material. Have you? Then don't speak.

Malcolm wrote:

I know quite well who these groups are, and the idea that they have been taken over by "radical leftists" is almost as silly as Qanon.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 21st, 2020 at 9:40 AM

Title: Re: Cultural Marxism

Content:

Modus.Ponens said:

Please find equivalent sources for "The Blank Slate" and "Enlightenment Now". I want to laugh some more at science denying ideologues.

EDIT: Links removed

Malcolm wrote:

It's funny to see a "Buddhist" relying on a new atheist author, I am sure next you are going to tell us rebirth and karma are false.

Modus.Ponens said:

That doesn't even make sense Malcolm.

Malcolm wrote:

Give it some thought.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 21st, 2020 at 9:41 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism's class "problem"

Content:

Queequeg said:

It was a joke. Do turtles have fur? Do any Westerners have the juice to teach in a full way?

Malcolm wrote:

That's excessively pessimistic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 21st, 2020 at 6:44 PM

Title: Re: Buddhism's class "problem"

Content:

Charlie123 said:

Anyway, it does not matter. Qualified teachers are enough.

Grigoris said:

^^^This^^^

I think it is just laziness and ego that drives people to look for teachers that can blow rings of fire out their ass.

It is an excuse to overlook the local lama that has spent at least three years practicing yidam (and so much more) and is capable of helping you reach that point too.

I see the same thing in martial arts: People flock for seminars with brand name teachers that will show them nothing useful, since the students are incapable of executing even the most basic techniques (and will never apply the advanced techniques anyway), but will ignore the local teacher that will make them slog through the basics that they actually need.

A university professor is useless as a teacher if you are still at kindergarten level.

Charlie123 said:

Well, that is not totally my point.

That part of my post was inspired by a recent reading of Khenpo Ngakchung's Zindri. Basically, in the section on examining potential gurus, Khenpo Ngakchung is very clear that in order to teach Vajrayana in general and Dzogchen in particular it is not actually necessary to be an awakened person.

But, I do think I agree with your post.

Malcolm wrote:

You know Tibetan? If so excellent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 21st, 2020 at 7:12 PM

Title: Re: Buddhism's class "problem"

Content:

Charlie123 said:

Well, that is not totally my point.

That part of my post was inspired by a recent reading of Khenpo Ngakchung's Zindri. Basically, in the section on examining potential gurus, Khenpo Ngakchung is very clear that in order to teach Vajrayana in general and Dzogchen in particular it is not actually necessary to be an awakened person.

But, I do think I agree with your post.

Malcolm wrote:

You know Tibetan? If so excellent.

Charlie123 said:

No, I do not. Using Padmakara's translation.

Malcolm wrote:

Ah, you were referring to the Longchen Nyinthig Ngondro zintri.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 21st, 2020 at 10:32 PM

Title: Re: Cultural Marxism

Content:

Modus.Ponens said:

So I'm not a geographical determinist but, when you think about how many advantages Europe had, and think about how these can accumulate and reinforce each other over centuries, it's not surprising that those advantages overwhelmed the peoples of other continents.

Malcolm wrote:

What gave the Europeans an advantage was their racism and willingness to enslave, rob, rape, and murder the indigenous peoples of the Americas, Africa, Asia, and India for profit.

You need to read a book called 1493: The Colombian Exchange.

Crazywisdom said:

Maybe. But the Bantu were the most enslaved tribe, and the primary suppliers of slaves were Africans. Iraqis were also a major market during the same time period and there was a notable slave uprising there. After giving this much thought, I have come to conclude racism is just an excuse and a red herring.

Malcolm wrote:

An excuse for what? Anyway, 1493 is about the profound technological, economic, and cultural changes that happened world wide as a result of trade from the "New world" with the old. It is a very interesting read, and not particularly ideological.

Crazywisdom said:

Race and religion are what get the guys excited.

Malcolm wrote:

Systematically oppressing people through negating and suppressing their language and culture in order to enforce cultural domination isn't racist?

Crazywisdom said:

What gave Europeans the advantage was a very competitive attitude and great competition among European principalities, along with advancements in weapons and boat building.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a factor, but it does not explain why the Spanish, English, French and so on were also completely racist.

Crazywisdom said:

Religion and race are given the blame, but it was actually just fierce opportunism. The muslim world would have done the same if they could.

Malcolm wrote:

They were at it earlier than the Europeans, and if Spain is any example, they were more inclusive and a lot gentler, because they were not as racist as White Christians.

Crazywisdom said:

One really must get out and hear different perspectives.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, I am all for it. I am also all for looking at what people actually did and what they said about their motivations for why they did what they did.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 21st, 2020 at 10:34 PM

Title: Re: Cultural Marxism

Content:

Modus.Ponens said:

Therefore I maintain this (apparently dissident...) view that singling out Europeans, or any ethnic group, as a villainous race is quite disgusting. It is textbook racism. And it will lead to nothing positive. It is sad that in 2020 we are having discussions that were ideologically solved in the 1960s: People should be judged by the content of their character, not the colour of their skin. Now we're going backwards. Which is why intersectionalism is also known as the regressive left.

Malcolm wrote:

Europeans are not a race, they are a heterogeneous cultural bloc, unified by a shared history of Roman, and then Christian, domination, under which their own indigenous cultures were wiped out. And the Romans were just as racist as they would later become.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 22nd, 2020 at 2:17 AM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

"Convention" means "appears to function."

clyde said:

“Convention” appears to function as a ‘rabbit-hole’ into which all dharmas, all phenomena, all arisings and ceasings, space and time fall, leaving . . . solely the Unconditioned?

Malcolm wrote:

Not even that. As Nāgārjuna pointed out:

Since arising, abiding, and cessation are not established, the compounded is not established.

Since the compounded has never been established, how could the uncompounded ever be established?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 22nd, 2020 at 2:28 AM

Title: Re: Cultural Marxism

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Sure it is racist. But racism was more like a motive, not an opportunity. There is racism everywhere. The difference was these racists had better fighting power.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I said that racism was a motive.

Crazywisdom said:

The Chinese are racist in Africa as well. Everyone is racist once they have the power. It is more like big talk. There is a book of recent about the history of of East vs West and why China lost. I forget the name and author now. I will check. But the premise was despite the fact that the Europeans were basically much worse off than the Chinese, the Chinese failed to garner a sufficiently competitive attitude, because of its isolation and size.

Malcolm wrote:

More likely, it is because they were subjugated by the Mongols during the 13th century, and the Yuan Dynasty lasted from 1279-1368. At this time, Europe experienced the black death. Please remember that between 1345-1351, 40-50 percent of the population of Europe died.

Crazywisdom said:

Whereas all these European states you mention were at each others throats all the time. The competition for resources was very magnified.

Malcolm wrote:

This is true. The main competition was for wood. Europe, by the 15th century, had largely razed all its major forests in the recovery from the black death. Wood has the mainstay of European technology.

Crazywisdom said:

The basic point here is economics is the driving factor. And as long as that is the case this will continue and one guise or another.

Malcolm wrote:

According to some, the only factor. I personally don't believe it is that simple.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 22nd, 2020 at 5:23 AM

Title: Re: Cultural Marxism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

They were at it earlier than the Europeans, and if Spain is any example, they were more inclusive and a lot gentler, because they were not as racist as White Christians.

Danny said:

Reconquista was not a lot gentler.

Malcolm wrote:

I was not talking about Reconquista. I was talking about Al Andalus period, especially under the Caliphate of Córdoba. Most of our knowledge of the pre-Islamic era in Rome, Greece and so on was preserved during this period by Muslim scholars and was for 200 years the principle center of learning in the West.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 22nd, 2020 at 6:45 AM

Title: Re: Open Letter from intellectuals lamenting racism and intolerance

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

A "radical leftist" from the ACLU wrote:

<https://www.aclu.org/news/criminal-law-reform/a-constitutional-crisis-in-portland/>

Unknown said:

While some federal officers had already been in the streets, we now have additional militarized special ops officers occupying the streets of downtown Portland, bent on inflicting pain and terror on people who believe Black Lives Matter.

Federal agents, including those from Trump's Departments of Homeland Security and Justice, are terrorizing the community, threatening lives, and relentlessly attacking protesters demonstrating against police brutality.

Militarized federal agents have flouted court orders protecting the rights of protesters from local law enforcement attacks, used sharpshooters to maim people, and deployed military tools and tactics — including sonic weapons and tear gas. Black Lives Matter protesters in Portland have been shot in the head with kinetic impact munitions, swept away in unmarked cars, and repeatedly tear gassed by federal agents. These government-issued weapons are funded with our tax dollars...

That is why the ACLU of Oregon took our local police department to court, and secured a court order blocking its unconstitutional attacks on journalists and legal observers. And that's why we're taking the federal agents to court, too. We will not rest until law enforcement agencies — at all levels of government — are held accountable for their brutal, inhumane, and unconstitutional attacks on the people of Portland.

This is a fight to save our democracy — here in Portland and nationwide. And we're just getting started. We will not let up until these federal agents leave our city, and these unconstitutional attacks on the right to protest against police brutality end.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 23rd, 2020 at 3:11 AM

Title: Re: Cultural Marxism

Content:

LhakpaT said:

A recommended read: The Myth of the Andalusian Paradise by Dario Fernandez-Morera.

Malcolm wrote:

Umm, to claim that I called Al Andalusia a "paradise" is an exaggeration. I said that is was comparatively gentle compared to the hell Christians wreaked on the world. I did not say that the Umayyid invaders and so on were all angles.

I am not aware that there was an Islamic Torquemada in Spain. Though it is true there was a riot in 1066, where a Muslim mob (* in Cordoba) murdered many of the Jewish inhabitants in reaction to the Jewish Vizier's alleged dismissal of Islam, based on a poem written by one Abu Ishaq.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 23rd, 2020 at 3:16 AM

Title: Re: Open Letter from intellectuals lamenting racism and intolerance

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

A "radical leftist" from the ACLU wrote:

tingdzin said:

Well, I agree with the ACLU on this one. But nowadays they are all over the place (at least, all over the left spectrum), and some of what they support has nothing to do with civil liberties.

Malcolm wrote:

You mean like the lawsuit described here?

tingdzin said:

<https://www.aclu.org/blog/free-speech/first-amendment-literally-banned-dc>

Can the government ban the text of the First Amendment itself on municipal transit ads because free speech is too “political” for public display?

If this sounds like some ridiculous brain teaser, it should. But unfortunately it’s not. It’s a core claim in a lawsuit we filed today challenging the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority’s (WMATA) restrictions on controversial advertising.

The ACLU, ACLU of D.C., and ACLU of Virginia are teaming up to represent a diverse group of plaintiffs whose ads were all branded as too hot for transit: the ACLU itself; Carafem, a health care network that specializes in getting women access to birth control and medication abortion; People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA); and Milo Worldwide LLC — the corporate entity of provocateur Milo Yiannopoulos.

Malcolm wrote:

Strange bedfellows, no?

Why don't you present us with one of those bothersome, leftist extra-civil liberties lawsuits? Seriously.

Looking through the list of policies at the NRDC, I really don't see anything that is "radical" left. I many evidence-based policies concerning the environment and so on. The worst think you can say about the NRDC is that they have holdings in oil and gas in their endowment fund. But who doesn't. Anyone with a 401k that is making any money at all has holdings in oil and gas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 23rd, 2020 at 3:28 AM

Title: Re: Cultural Marxism

Content:

LhakpaT said:

A recommended read: The Myth of the Andalusian Paradise by Dario Fernandez-Morera.

Malcolm wrote:

Umm, to claim that I called Al Andalusia a "paradise" is an exaggeration. I said that is was comparatively gentle compared to the hell Christians wreaked on the world. I did not say that the Umayyid invaders and so on were all angels.

I am not aware that there was an Islamic Torquemada in Spain. Though it is true there was a riot in 1066, where a Muslim mob murdered many of the Jewish inhabitants in reaction to the Jewish Vizier's alleged dismissal of Islam, based on a poem written by one Abu Ishaq.

LhakpaT said:

Sorry, I did not mean to imply that you said such. The talk about Al Andalus reminded me of this book, which I found very interesting. There is a lot of promotion of it (often with the best intentions) as some enlightened era of co-existence, when the reality is a lot more complicated than that.

Malcolm wrote:

Muslims subjected all non-Muslims to the dhimmi tax, brutal rulers still inflicted pain on slaves, and people under their control. Nevertheless, It still was the major center of learning in Europe for a couple of centuries. Without Al-Anadulsia, the world would have lost almost all knowledge of the ancient world.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 23rd, 2020 at 3:31 AM

Title: Re: Surgery effect on channels

Content:

LhakpaT said:

Not sure where to post this... I was wondering what the effect of surgery is on the channels, according to Tibetan medicine? Sinus surgery, for example, is pretty commonplace nowadays - what happens to the channels when that part of the body is operated on, perhaps parts of bone and tissue removed, etc. Are they injured? Do they heal?

Malcolm wrote:

Nadis are physical, so yes they heal. Yes they can be injured. Yes it is better to avoid surgery, but this is not always possible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 23rd, 2020 at 6:29 PM

Title: Re: Seeking a Classical Tibetan tutor

Content:

asdfjkl1979 said:

Hello All

Hoping I might get some luck here. I'm looking for some ongoing tutoring in classical Tibetan. So far I have completed one year of classes as SOAS in London as part of their Buddhist Studies masters programme. I was hoping to audit the second year unit but it isn't going ahead due to a lack of enrolments and the School's woeful financial situation. I have also spent a very brief time (only a week) at Shang Shung's Tibetan summer school at Merigar.

I am plodding along on my own and have worked through some of passages in a number of text books (e.g. Hodge's textbook and Hackett's reader). Sometimes I'm spot on, sometimes I'm way off and often I'm not entirely sure if I am anywhere near a correct translation or not! What I really need is some ongoing tutoring with someone who knows their stuff. My idea is a regular (weekly / fortnightly) Skype session where I can get feedback on a set translation I have attempted in the interim. I would love to make contact with someone suitable to discuss format and obviously than happy to discuss payment.

Doesn't need to be someone London or UK based (although this would be great!)

If anyone has any good leads regarding who I could approach I would be incredibly grateful - so please don't hesitate to DM me

Malcolm wrote:
Try Esukhia.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, July 24th, 2020 at 12:44 AM
Title: AOC My Sheroe
Content:

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, July 24th, 2020 at 2:34 AM
Title: Re: Leaving Buddhism
Content:

monkishlife said:
Or, are you using Right Speech because you know it is morally right, which leads to greater happiness? I never feel good when I'm using nasty or hateful speech.

Malcolm wrote:
"Right" speech can be "wrong" speech, and "wrong" speech can be "right" speech, there is no certain test.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 24th, 2020 at 3:29 AM

Title: Re: Mother sentient beings

Content:

Mirror said:

In many prayers there is used term: "mother sentient beings". Please can someone explain to me why mothers? Maybe it's my misunderstanding, but I don't see mother as someone special. It's more likely, that mother would be a nice person, but I witnessed mothers who were mentally and physically abusing their children or mothers who were drinking or taking drugs while being pregnant. Are those horrible mothers still considered as good mothers or great benefactors? Does bad mothers even exist (regarding dharma)? Thank you so much for clearing away my confusion.

Malcolm wrote:

All sentient beings were mother at one time or another.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 24th, 2020 at 6:21 AM

Title: Re: Madhyamakavata

Content:

tobes said:

From a Gelug pov, Huntington is best.

Malcolm wrote:

You mean better than Tsongkhapa's?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 24th, 2020 at 6:22 AM

Title: Re: Madhyamakavata

Content:

zerwe said:

LTK's Illumination of the Thought (dgongs pa rab gsal) translated by J. Hopkins and others and George Churinoff's translation of the Bhashyam is helpful as well.

Shaun

cloudburst said:

Im not sure I'm familiar with the Hopkins translation, could you include a link? Thank you!

Malcolm wrote:

<http://illuminationofthetruthought.com/downloads/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 24th, 2020 at 8:59 AM

Title: Re: AOC My Sheroe

Content:

tingdzin said:

IMO, she should be a little less brazen, not because she is a woman or non-white, but because she is just a beginner.

Malcolm wrote:

Then we need more beginners just like her.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 24th, 2020 at 9:02 AM

Title: Re: Madhyamakavata

Content:

tobes said:

From a Gelug pov, Huntington is best.

Malcolm wrote:

You mean better than Tsongkhapa's?

tobes said:

Tsong Khapa wrote in English??

Malcolm wrote:

It's been translated.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 24th, 2020 at 9:44 AM

Title: Re: Open Letter from intellectuals lamenting racism and intolerance

Content:

tingdzin said:

As far as the NRDC, I once got an e-bulletin telling me they were diverting some of their funds to Puerto Rican hurricane relief. When I asked politely what that had to do with Natural Resources conservation, I got a sanctimonious reply, asking me how dare I ask such a question. So I quit giving them money.

Malcolm wrote:

Not a radical leftist move.

tingdzin said:

The ACLU used to be for gay marriage, O.K., no problem. But this year they started supporting taxpayer-funded sex change operations. Is that a civil right?

Malcolm wrote:

If we can pay for viagra fir officers, we can certainly afford to pay for gender reassignment surgery.

tingdzin said:

Analysis | The military spends five times as much on Viagra as it would on transgender troops' medical care

A look at Trump's claim of "tremendous" medical costs.

By Christopher Ingraham

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.washingtonpost.com/news/wonk/wp/2017/07/26/the-military-spends-five-times-as-much-on-viagra-as-it-would-on-transgender-troops-medical-care/>

tingdzin said:

IMO, there are more urgent things for them to concern themselves with, like in the Portland clip you posted. And the lawsuit you posted today is an example of what the ACLU used to be all about. Another example: years back, the ACLU used to stand for proper treatment of illegals in custody, which I am all for. During the Central American "asylum" caravans, they came out with a stance that amounted to advocating open borders.

Malcolm wrote:

Nonsense. Anyone who enters this country by any entry, whether by walking across the border, or through a port of entry, plane, boat, train, bus, or foot, is entitled to ask for asylum. I am sure you know what's going on in Central America. And, yes, it is our problem. The fact that this administration has an explicitly racist immigration policy that the ACLU has fought from the beginning does not make their stance "radically leftist." It makes their stance a defense of the Constitution.

tingdzin said:

They have also come out for defunding the police (as opposed to reforming them), which is a far left position, that moreover has only very indirect connection with civil liberties.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is a sensible position considering all the facts. The police generally behave like an occupying army in communities of color, not peace officers. It is directly connected with civil liberties, since the principle violators of civil liberties are the police, who do so regularly and with complete impunity.

tingdzin said:

The same is true of sex education in elementary schools -- since when does this have to do with constitutional rights?

Malcolm wrote:

It has to do with establishment clause of the first amendment. Again, not a far left position.

tingdzin said:

#Me Too may or may not be a worthwhile movement, but, again, what does calling male chauvinists to account have to do with civil and constitutional rights?

Malcolm wrote:

Male chauvinists are the principle people who violate the civil rights of women, gay, and transgendered people.

tingdzin said:

Now we could turn to the Sierra Club. How a conservation-oriented organization could decide that open borders would be included on their agenda is beyond me, though I think that caused a split, and now they are calling themselves "Earthjustice" -- what a far left name!

Malcolm wrote:

Earthjustice (good name) is just the rebranded Sierra Club Legal Defense Fund, which was always a separate organization from the Sierra Club. They've been Earthjustice since 1997.

tingdzin said:

Or Amnesty International. They used to stand up for prisoners of conscience, against torture, and for basic humane treatment of people who had no voice. What could be more Buddhist? Now they have become largely a politics-at-the high-level organization, and somehow the governments they are concerned with overturning seem to be exclusively what people think of as right-wing. If you read the Wikipedia entry on them, they admit their focus shifted starting in the 2000s.

Malcolm wrote:

The accusation Amnesty focuses solely on human rights abuses solely by right wing governments is patently false, unless for some strange reason you are classifying a China, Nicaragua, Cuba, Venezuela, etc., as "right wing."

tingdzin said:

Then, Planned Parenthood. What the connection is between reproductive planning and Gay Rights is has never been clear to me. Again, gay rights, fine, but by assuming that everyone that supports the former is in favor of the later just has a polarizing effect on people who would be otherwise supportive.

Malcolm wrote:

Not a far left position.

tingdzin said:

As I said, I have closely followed all these organizations for years. Of all my former charities, only WWF seems to have stayed on mission.

Malcolm wrote:

None of the organizations you mentioned have have been taken over by radical leftists. It's quite debatable whether they are still on mission or not. From my point of view, they all look ship shape.

Based on your many comments, I rate your political stance Center-right overall. But you tend to lean into authoritarian policies like borders, police. Etc.

And yes, I am totally left-wing, no surprise there.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 24th, 2020 at 6:13 PM

Title: Re: AOC My Sheroe

Content:

Ayu said:

I think it is absolutely necessary and appropriate to address violent language against women by men and against this culture of misogyny.

Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez expresses it with much dignity.
She's wonderful.

Malcolm wrote:

The best American politics has to offer. No wonder she scares the shit out of the GOP and establishment Dems alike.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 24th, 2020 at 6:40 PM

Title: Re: Open Letter from intellectuals lamenting racism and intolerance

Content:

tingdzin said:

Well, where to begin.

Malcolm wrote:

If we can pay for viagra fir officers, we can certainly afford to pay for gender reassignment surgery.

tingdzin said:

This is a logical non sequiter. Did I say that the ACLU should file suits on behalf of viagra users?

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that there is no need for it. Officers get their viagra. Gender reassignment surgery is a legitimate medical need, and as long as there are people who feel a need to have such surgery, they should not be discriminated against, just as impotent officers are not discriminated against.

I am sure you know what's going on in Central America. And, yes, it is our problem.

It may or may not be our problem. the point is, it is not a civil liberties problem.

Um, yes it is.

The fact that this administration has an explicitly racist immigration policy that the ACLU has fought from the beginning does not make their stance "radically leftist." It makes their stance a defense of the Constitution.

And what part of the constitution are you referring to specifically? Everything that is ethical is not written into the Constitution, and we can't pretend that it is. Or at least we shouldn't. Otherwise the Constitution just changes with every intellectual fashion.

In this case the relevant laws is the 1980 Refugee Act. It has never been declared unconstitutional, therefore it is constitutional as it stands. It would require a court to declare it unconstitutional to void the law. No, it is a sensible position considering all the facts. The police generally behave like an occupying army in communities of color, not peace officers. It is directly connected with civil liberties, since the principle violators of civil liberties are the police, who do so regularly and with complete impunity. Well, rogue police are indeed probably the biggest or at least the most visible violators of civil liberties. They are, however, a necessity. Your rhetoric is utopian and not practical. An acquaintance of mine was recently pistol-whipped on the street in front of his house by a total stranger with some kind of vague grievance. Can you say with a straight face that you would live in the inner city without any possible police protection? There are a lot of badasses out there who, for example, take advantage of legitimate protests to burn and plunder. and if you were cracked in the face with a deadly weapon by one, your views might change. even the mayor of Chicago (a black woman) is now inviting an increased police presence.

Funny how police are rarely around when crimes are committed. Was this assailant arrested? Was this in a city where significant funds had been redirected to other agencies?

200 more LEO's [fascist thugs directed by Barr, actually] in Chicago are not going to make any difference in combatting gun violence in that city. But increased funding for childcare, education, social services, etc., would make a huge difference, demonstrably so. I find your basic argument here to be pretty racist, actually. As if the real problem isn't poverty and systemic oppression of urban communities of color, and is really just that cities are somehow breeding grounds for "crime."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 24th, 2020 at 9:27 PM

Title: Re: Open Letter from intellectuals lamenting racism and intolerance

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

200 more LEO's [fascist thugs directed by Barr, actually] in Chicago are not going to make any difference in combatting gun violence in that city. But increased funding for childcare, education, social services, etc., would make a huge difference, demonstrably

so. I find your basic argument here to be pretty racist, actually. As if the real problem isn't poverty and systemic oppression of urban communities of color, and is really just that cities are somehow breeding grounds for "crime."

PeterC said:

All the cities receiving this treatment will be solid democrat votes in 2016. That way trump gets to look tough on crime but doesn't hurt any swing counties. There is no legitimate law enforcement purpose here, it's a cynical electoral ploy

Malcolm wrote:

Worse, he is causing police riots on purpose.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 25th, 2020 at 12:20 AM

Title: Re: AOC My Sherroe

Content:

Archie2009 said:

I guess being progressive in the USA is synonymous with speaking and believing in the language of Critical Race Theory, Intersectionality and all that nonsense.

Malcolm wrote:

You are not American, so of course you don't get it.

Archie2009 said:

Critical Race Theory was developed out of legal scholarship. It provides a critical analysis of race and racism from a legal point of view. Since its inception within legal scholarship CRT has spread to many disciplines. CRT has basic tenets that guide its framework. These tenets are interdisciplinary and can be approached from different branches of learning.

CRT recognizes that racism is engrained in the fabric and system of the American society. The individual racist need not exist to note that institutional racism is pervasive in the dominant culture. This is the analytical lens that CRT uses in examining existing power structures. CRT identifies that these power structures are based on white privilege and white supremacy, which perpetuates the marginalization of people of color. CRT also rejects the traditions of liberalism and meritocracy. Legal discourse says that the law is neutral and colorblind, however, CRT challenges this legal "truth" by examining liberalism and meritocracy as a vehicle for self-interest, power, and privilege. CRT also recognizes that liberalism and meritocracy are often stories heard from those with wealth, power, and privilege. These stories paint a false picture of meritocracy; everyone who works hard can attain wealth, power, and privilege while ignoring the systemic inequalities that institutional racism provides.

Intersectionality within CRT points to the multidimensionality of oppressions and recognizes that race alone cannot account for disempowerment. "Intersectionality means the examination of race, sex, class, national origin, and sexual orientation, and how their combination plays out in various settings.”[1] This is an important tenet in pointing out that CRT is critical of the many oppressions facing people of color and does not allow for a one-dimensional approach of the complexities of our world.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://spacrs.wordpress.com/what-is-critical-race-theory/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 25th, 2020 at 2:02 AM

Title: Re: AOC My Sherore

Content:

Archie2009 said:

in safe spaces, a new voluntary form of (racial) segregation

Malcolm wrote:

You mean like white flight into the suburbs?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 25th, 2020 at 2:15 AM

Title: Re: AOC My Sherore

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

If I had to design something to limit the left's effectiveness in organizing, it would be something similar to these ideas, where in practice activists are constantly means-testing and credentialing each other, instead of organizing together. Yet, that often seems to be what it looks like.

Malcolm wrote:

The "problem" with the left, is that the left actually thinks and has thoughts, which naturally create diversity and conflict. The last thing the American left wants is to imitate the ideological lockstep "discipline" of the GOP.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 25th, 2020 at 5:51 AM

Title: Re: AOC My Sherore

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

If I had to design something to limit the left's effectiveness in organizing, it would be something similar to these ideas, where in practice activists are constantly means-testing and credentialing each other, instead of organizing together. Yet, that often seems to be what it looks like.

Malcolm wrote:

The "problem" with the left, is that the left actually thinks and has thoughts, which naturally create diversity and conflict. The last thing the American left wants is to imitate the ideological lockstep "discipline" of the GOP.

Johnny Dangerous said:

If anything the indentarian/CRT stuff -is- an attempt to corral everyone into the same set of ideas, so I agree.

Malcolm wrote:

The only identitarians I see are racist white men who are freaked by demographic change.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 25th, 2020 at 7:09 AM

Title: Re: AOC My Sheroe

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

If anything the indentarian/CRT stuff -is- an attempt to corral everyone into the same set of ideas, so I agree.

Malcolm wrote:

The only identitarians I see are racist white men who are freaked by demographic change.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Then you don't live in the right place to see what I'm talking about. There's definitely an unhealthy end of the indentarian left, spend enough time in corners of the left coast and you see it. I would not consider it a "far left" ideology at all though, I'd consider part of mainstream academy-inspired liberal culture, which is why this is the dominant form of thought when you take a class on cultural competency, diversity, etc.

I do agree that the indentarianism of the right is a much larger problem, of course.

Honestly though, if you guys haven't taken something like Cultural Comp, or another course heavily invested in people like Bell Hooks, Judith Butler, etc...you don't really know quite I'm talking about. I'm not making some dumb reflexive argument about "political correctness run awry" or whatever, simply that a lot of the intellectual currents behind "intersectionality" are ...well, bewilderingly incoherent, and are unfortunately what underpins a lot of debate on the American left these days. We watched a video in one of my classes that could have practically been made by the PMRC and implicitly claimed that young black males grow up in a cycle of violence and domestic abuse due to rap music and it's magical effect on violence-prone male minds. These are people calling themselves liberals.

I live in a community where white people literally cannot have an honest conversation on race because of this years of this kind of crap. Everything is just about proving you are an "ally" that checks the boxes in activist circles.

The pattern is just to shore up your own credentials to prove you are not racist, but actually do nothing about racism. It's almost pavlovian, all the classes on diversity, equity, and whatever else, amusingly many of them given in the justice system, which is monstrously racist. So you have all the people in the justice system doing everything they can to be "inclusive", "diverse" and whatever else, but little to no effect of the material conditions that create the bulk of suffering due to systemic racism and all its legacies.

I feel like where I live much of the time "intersectional" ideas become institutionalized and act as a kind of comfort mechanism for white guilt, and very little else. If you do all the right things personally, pay attention to microaggressions, be a good ally, use the right terms etc. then you can act like you've done your thing. Don't get me wrong, this stuff is miles better than open racism, and is a sign (I suppose) of some kind of progress. It's also pretty hypocritical in some ways.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, I live in New England, an even though there are hysterical college students, we are a bit more sensible than the left coast.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 25th, 2020 at 9:04 AM

Title: Re: Madhyamakavata

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<http://illuminationofthetruththought.com/downloads/>

cloudburst said:

Appreciated

how would you rate Geshe Michael as a translator?

Malcolm wrote:

I generally refrain from commenting on other translator's work.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 25th, 2020 at 9:51 AM

Title: Re: Identity politics, intersectionality and the left

Content:

PeterC said:

My issue with it - and I can't say for sure that I really understand it, to be honest, because it's intellectual underpinning seems so flaky - is that it doesn't seem to work towards any particular important results.

I take a rather simplistic view of social movements, that they are useful insofar as they solve an important problem; and otherwise they're just aesthetics. Important problems are things like the environment, overpopulation, resource scarcity, material oppression of groups of people, and so forth.

What this movement seems to be creating is endless navel-gazing and divisiveness, but not much by way of outcomes.

I may not fully understand it. Perhaps there's a bigger picture I'm not seeing. Moreover you really can't hold college age kids to too high a standard, I had all sorts of dumb ideas when I was their age that I thought were world-changing and radical too.

Malcolm wrote:

Precisely, just another right-wing tempest in a teapot.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 25th, 2020 at 6:54 PM

Title: Re: Why do so many forum users use only the Wylie transliteration for Tibetan words?

Content:

White Sakura said:

I try to go through an old thread and I know so much about Tibetan language that I can read the Tibetan letters, I know about the "ghost"-letters, the suffixes and prefixes. Well and that brought me to a true interest in the pronunciation-transcription.

I know that the Wylie-transcription tells not much about how the word is pronounced. Which is not very practical. I have the impression that many users here stick only to the Wylie, when writing a Tibetan word. I mean, if I see something like. Bgr... in the beginning of the word, I think, it's the Wylie.

I even think that an official pronunciation transliteration to roman letters could be helpful to preserve the Tibetan language.

I mean like grammar books written in that. That make it possible to be able to speak Tibetan but only be able to read the roman version. (Not helpful for Buddhist scholars of course).

I had my child in Tibetan lessons, but it didn't work out with the strain at school. And maybe some Tibetan refugee families wherever in the world they live, might have the same problem. The Tibetan script is so difficult, not because it has other letters than the roman letters, but because you must find out which letter to cross out, which is the main letter and so on...and then comes the school in the country where they live. So I think, the easy transliteration to roman letters is a really good thing.

And I like it if a text is written like: "Wylie:.....Pronunciation:.....".really nice is, if also the Tibetan letters come but of course that would be much more work and many people might not know it or like me, do not have the technical know-how, to make them appear here. But to type the roman letters pronunciation, why not?

Malcolm wrote:

Regional pronunciation is so varied, as to be impractical. For example rgyal is pronounced Gyal in central Tibet, Jyal in Kham, Rgyal in Ladakh. There are many other such issues.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 25th, 2020 at 6:55 PM

Title: Re: Open Letter from intellectuals lamenting racism and intolerance

Content:

Grigoris said:

Seems that for some people "far-Left" refers to anybody supporting democratic and constitutional rights...

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty much.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 25th, 2020 at 7:04 PM

Title: Re: AOC My Sherog

Content:

Archie2009 said:

llies.

And I was reticent to mention the ceremonies where white allies wash the feet of black people and other disturbing cult like behaviour. Frankly, I could never get on board with that.

Malcolm wrote:

Christians must really freak you out then:

Now that I, your Lord and Teacher, have washed your feet, you also should wash one another's feet. I have set you an example that you should do as I have done for you.

— John 13:12

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 25th, 2020 at 7:14 PM

Title: Re: Identity politics, intersectionality and the left

Content:

PeterC said:

My issue with it - and I can't say for sure that I really understand it, to be honest, because it's intellectual underpinning seems so flaky - is that it doesn't seem to work towards any particular important results.

I take a rather simplistic view of social movements, that they are useful insofar as they solve an important problem; and otherwise they're just aesthetics. Important problems are things like the environment, overpopulation, resource scarcity, material oppression of groups of people, and so forth.

What this movement seems to be creating is endless navel-gazing and divisiveness, but not much by way of outcomes.

I may not fully understand it. Perhaps there's a bigger picture I'm not seeing. Moreover you really can't hold college age kids to too high a standard, I had all sorts of dumb ideas when I was their age that I thought were world-changing and radical too.

Malcolm wrote:

Precisely, just another right-wing tempest in a teapot.

PeterC said:

If you applied the same standards in both directions - characterized the right wing in terms of what their college-age supporters, like the Proud Boys, say and do - it would be a truly horrible comparison.

Malcolm wrote:

Which is why I specified right-wing. The proud boys are fascists.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 25th, 2020 at 7:15 PM

Title: Re: Identity politics, intersectionality and the left

Content:

Grigoris said:

I believe that a bit of naval gazing is in order.

I started a discussion on my Facebook timeline a while ago asking "who/which/what is the new revolutionary subject"?

Seems to me that we keep relying on outdated ideas, not having learned from the failures of "real-time" communism.

There are very few people around that will fall for that idea again and/or will be willing to sacrifice their lives for it.

Plus modern society is quite different to early-industrial society.

And people do not really have a notion of what a collective (or collective action) is. They understand corporations but not collectives.

Not that economic class is not a key factor. Of course it is. But I don't think it is enough any more.

Discrimination and oppression (and it's opposite privilege) are more individualised in our modern societies. Mainly because post-colonial modern societies are not AS homogeneous as earlier societies. This is not to say that earlier societies were not heterogeneous, they were, but not to the same degree.

You cannot tell me that a middle-class straight black man is the same as his white neighbour.

You cannot tell me that an unemployed gay Mexican male suffers in the same way as a working class cis gender Black woman.

They don't.

Malcolm wrote:
Agreed.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, July 25th, 2020 at 7:17 PM
Title: Re: AOC My Sherone
Content:
jake said:
To me it's like ranting against those far-left standard deviationists.

Malcolm wrote:
The GOP politicizes even standard deviation in statistics these days: fake news.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, July 25th, 2020 at 10:19 PM
Title: Re: Why do so many forum users use only the Wylie transliteration for Tibetan words?
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
Regional pronunciation is so varied, as to be impractical. For example rgyal is pronounced Gyal in central Tibet, Jyal in Kham, Rgyal in Ladakh. There are many other such issues.

White Sakura said:

means, the "Ghost letters" are not everywhere Ghost letters? At least in your example in Ladakh is the "r" spoken.

Malcolm wrote:

The prefixes and suffixes all used to be pronounced at one point in Tibetan history, that's why they are there.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 25th, 2020 at 10:21 PM

Title: Re: Questions on consistency and validity of mahayana sutra's

Content:

nichiren-123 said:

Historically, we know that the Mahayana sutra's are later creations attributed to the Buddha.

Malcolm wrote:

No, we do not know this. Sutras are not books.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 25th, 2020 at 10:39 PM

Title: Re: Abhidharmakosabhasyam Book Club

Content:

Grigoris said:

Aggregate of formations (samskaraskandha) p230 and 231 of the GELONG LODRO SANGPO version.

Yes, that is right, it is only two pages.

Malcolm wrote:

It is described in much more detail in chapter two.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 25th, 2020 at 10:52 PM

Title: Re: Identity politics, intersectionality and the left

Content:

Dan74 said:

I think JD and others have already discussed many pertinent issues here. To me the key observation appears to be a dismal lack of solidarity and a practical focus on the Left.

Malcolm wrote:

There is really only one important political issue, the environment and sustaining life on this planet. Modern capitalism is a death cult.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 26th, 2020 at 1:46 AM

Title: Re: AOC My Sheroe

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Honestly though, if you guys haven't taken something like Cultural Comp, or another course heavily invested in people like Bell Hooks, Judith Butler, etc...you don't really know quite I'm talking about. I'm not making some dumb reflexive argument about "political correctness run awry" or whatever, simply that a lot of the intellectual currents behind "intersectionality" are ...well, bewilderingly incoherent, and are unfortunately what underpins a lot of debate on the American left these days.

Malcolm wrote:

I assume you are familiar with the origin of so-called identity politics? If not, it arose out of The Combahee River Collective Statement, a black lesbian feminist response to white radical lesbian separatists in the 1970's:

Although we are feminists and Lesbians, we feel solidarity with progressive Black men and do not advocate the fractionalization that white women who are separatists demand. Our situation as Black people necessitates that we have solidarity around the fact of race, which white women of course do not need to have with white men, unless it is their negative solidarity as racial oppressors. We struggle together with Black men against racism, while we also struggle with Black men about sexism.

And:

Above all else, Our politics initially sprang from the shared belief that Black women are inherently valuable, that our liberation is a necessity not as an adjunct to somebody else's may because of our need as human persons for autonomy. This may seem so obvious as to sound simplistic, but it is apparent that no other ostensibly progressive movement has ever considered our specific oppression as a priority or worked seriously for the ending of that oppression. Merely naming the pejorative stereotypes attributed to Black women (e.g. mammy, matriarch, Sapphire, whore, bulldagger), let alone cataloguing the cruel, often murderous, treatment we receive, Indicates how little value has been placed upon our lives during four centuries of bondage in the Western hemisphere. We realize that the only people who care enough about us to work consistently for our liberation are us. Our politics evolve from a healthy love for ourselves, our sisters and our community which allows us to continue our struggle and work.

This focusing upon our own oppression is embodied in the concept of identity politics. We believe that the most profound and potentially most radical politics come directly out of our own identity, as opposed to working to end somebody else's oppression. In the case of Black women this is a particularly repugnant, dangerous, threatening, and therefore revolutionary concept because it is obvious from looking at all the political movements that have preceded us that anyone is more worthy of liberation than ourselves. We reject pedestals, queenhood, and walking ten paces behind. To be recognized as human, levelly human, is enough.

We believe that sexual politics under patriarchy is as pervasive in Black women's lives as are the politics of class and race. We also often find it difficult to separate race from class from sex oppression because in our lives they are most often experienced simultaneously. We know that there is such a thing as racial-sexual oppression which is neither solely racial nor solely sexual, e.g., the history of rape of Black women by white men as a weapon of political repression.

<http://circuitous.org/scraps/combahee.html>

Note, the inclusion of what has now become known as "intersectionality" in red. How anyone can dispute any of the above is quite beyond me.

Identitarianism is basically rebranded European fascism, which sees its origins in France in the French New Right (Nouvelle Droite), the granddaddy of today's alt-right, founded by https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Alain_de_Benoist and others in 1968. This movement exercises great influences on such people as Renaud Camus, author of the Great Replacement "theory," and so on in France, and in the US, people like Steve Bannon, Steven Miller, as well as the foreign policy of the Trump Administration.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 26th, 2020 at 2:20 AM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

Opinion by E.D. Mondainé

July 23, 2020 at 10:51 a.m. PDT

E.D. Mondainé is president of the Portland, Ore., branch of the NAACP.

Early in his activism, Malcolm X was asked by a young white woman what she could do to help the cause of civil rights. He famously replied, "Nothing." Years later, he regretted dismissing her so abruptly, because he came to believe there was much she could do to advance the cause of justice for black people in the United States. But I am quite certain that striking yoga poses nude on the streets of Portland, Ore., was not on his list of actionable items.

Images of "Naked Athena," as the protester has been labeled, have gone viral, her unclothed confrontation with police earning her accolades as a brave ally of the cause. But I see something else: a beneficiary of white privilege dancing vainly on a stage that was originally created to raise up the voices of my oppressed brothers and sisters. In this, she is not alone. As the demonstrations continue every night in Portland, many people with their own agendas are co-opting, and distracting attention from, what should be our central concern: the Black Lives Matter movement.

The protests that have gone on for weeks in Portland and around the country had a very specific origin. The killing of George Floyd in Minneapolis prompted a nationwide reckoning with the original and savage crime of slavery our country committed against African Americans. This crime has been reverberating through every generation in this country, black and white, for 401 years. That monstrous crime has finally caught up with us as a nation. I do not believe it is a time for spectacle.

Unfortunately, “spectacle” is now the best way to describe Portland’s protests.

Vandalizing government buildings and hurling projectiles at law enforcement draw attention — but how do these actions stop police from killing black people? What are antifa and other leftist agitators achieving for the cause of black equality? The “Wall of Moms,” while perhaps well-intentioned, ends up redirecting attention away from the urgent issue of murdered black bodies. This might ease the consciences of white, affluent women who have previously been silent in the face of black oppression, but it’s fair to ask: Are they really furthering the cause of justice, or is this another example of white co-optation?

There is more at stake here than who appears most often on nightly TV broadcasts.

Everyone seeking to advance justice in Portland faces great danger. Right now, there are unmarked, unnamed federal forces kidnapping our citizens off the streets without justification or authority. The mayor of Portland and governor of Oregon have asked them to leave, to no avail. We know this is a violation of our Constitution, but with President Trump promising only more occupations in more cities, we ignore this risk at our peril.

At their core, the Trump administration’s actions in Portland are a deception. The federal government’s response is no display of strength — rather, it is a deliberate cover for Trump’s weakness. The president and his allies want spectacle, be it a naked yogi or the next shocking display of force. They need to distract the country by engaging our movement in empty battles where they have the advantage.

If we engage them now, we do so on their terms, where they have created the conditions for a war without rules, without accountability and without the protection of our Constitution. This makes me fearful for the safety of everyone demonstrating in Portland. That’s why we need to remember: What is happening in Portland is the fuse of a great, racist backlash that the Trump administration is baiting us to light.

We cannot fall for their deception. We cannot settle for spectacles that endanger us all. This is a moment for serious action — to once again take up the mantle of the civil rights era by summoning the same conviction and determination our forebears did. We welcome our white brothers and sisters in this struggle. In fact, we need them. But I must ask them to remain humbly attuned to the opportunity of this moment — and to reflect on whether any actions they take will truly help establish justice, or whether they are simply for show.

Thursday night, I will lead a rally in downtown Portland to refocus public attention where it belongs: on redeeming a guilty nation. But recent events might be a sign that our work in the streets should be coming to an end.

I am not suggesting retreat. Instead, I am proposing that we take the cause of Black Lives Matter into those places where tear gas and rubber bullets and federal agents cannot find us, and where there is less risk of spectacle distracting from our true aims. In boardrooms, in schools, in city councils, in the halls of justice, in the smoky backrooms of a duplicitous government — that is where we will finally dismantle the gears of the brutal, racist machine that has been terrorizing black Americans and hollowing out the moral character of this nation since its inception.

<https://www.washingtonpost.com/opinions/2020/07/23/portlands-protests-were-supposed-be-about-black-lives-now-theyre-white-spectacle/>

Interesting perspective.

Malcolm wrote:

George Floyd's murder opened up a can of worms that exposed the Trump Administration for what it is: a power grab by the far right. Trump is creating this spectacle. But how can people just go home when there are jackboots on US streets?

I totally understand this man's perspective, and I completely agree with him.

But what passes for Democracy in the US, imperfect as it is, with all its institutional flaws, is at heightened risk right now, agreed? Letting the Barr's thugs go unopposed is, I think, an error.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 26th, 2020 at 2:30 AM

Title: Re: Identity politics, intersectionality and the left

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Malcolm, I'm not objecting to any of that kind of analysis, I think I've actually made that clear. While this may have been the origin of the term, things have changed quite a bit since then, and what's generally referred to as 'identity politics' and 'intersectionality' can mean a pretty wide range of stuff, including what I'm talking about, which is people who are really of a "liberal" political disposition (as opposed to radical) simply trying to enforce some kind of ideological purity on their peers, or simply navel gazing academic models about the 'intersection of identities' often unconnected to anything practical.

Malcolm wrote:

When we know the precise origin of such ideas, we can more easily push back when those very same ideas are abused or misconstrued, no? I mean, imagine the look of shock when you inform someone, who you think is being a pill, that identity politics grew out of a black lesbian response to white lesbian separatist privilege. It should knock the wind right out of their sails.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 26th, 2020 at 3:22 AM

Title: Re: When does a day end?

Content:

Tenma said:

In terms of daily commitment and auspicious days, when does a day officially end and begin?

Malcolm wrote:

Begins and ends at dawn.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 26th, 2020 at 7:56 AM

Title: Re: What was Nichiren's issue with Zen?

Content:

Queequeg said:

He had an issue with Zen that claims a transmission outside the sutras. Basically, he doubted their oral lineage and thought their iconoclasm toward sutra was hypocritical and fake.

There's a good comedy bit in Conversation between a Sage and Unenlightened Man with a comical fictionalization of a zen practitioner. It actually aligns well with some of the jokers who claim Zen lineages and post here. This is not to disparage all zen practitioners, by any means. Just the Zen fool stereotypes.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry for butting in here, but according 9th century Tibetan records, what Bodhidharma said was that once the view has been experientially ascertained, at that point it is an error to continue to rely on books, since at that point there is no further need.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 26th, 2020 at 9:17 AM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Q is a New Yorker, for him all of America is a backwater.

Johnny Dangerous said:

I can't think of how to say this without sounding like I am "co opting" myself, but it actually connects to the identity politics thread, so I'm going to try to respond to the original article:

I hate to say it, but all this is actually not exclusively a Black issue. It's a Black-led movement to be sure, and for sure, black communities and people, and in particular young black men die more often at the hands of police, and certainly suffer disproportionately within the justice system in particular. As is often the case, Black communities are (by necessity) at the forefront of this kind of activism, but they are not the only one's with devastating experiences with the justice system, nor are they the only ones with a stake in the outcomes here. I grew up in a city where homeless people of a variety of colors were regularly murdered by the police, and I'm sure still are.

The justice system as it stands now is terrible to a wide range of people (mainly poor - once you are poor you stand much more chance of becoming involved in "the system", for a host of reasons), to varying degrees. A homeless white drug addict suffers due to its inequities, so does a mentally ill grandmother on SSI, so does the domestic violence victim not getting the proper help. All these people would undoubtedly suffer worse if they were Black, but the issues here affect everyone, other than those well-off and callous enough to not care.

Honestly, this stuff affects pretty much anyone who is poor and ends up doing time, or ends up being involved with the cops.

So I get where the author is coming from, spectacle-like white "ally" protests are definitely cringe worthy, and perhaps the people engaging in them are just dilettantes. However, as much as I respect that this movement has been initiated by BLM, it can't end by credentialing people to protest, everyone should care about reform and overhaul of the justice system. If anything, the performative (I hate that word, but it fits here) type of "allyship" activism I've seen around some of the protests probably lends itself to stuff like the Naked White Yoga Lady protest. I love what BLM is doing, I have nothing but respect and support for their demands. I believe in reparations, and all the sorts of these things, but we need to move to model of shared values to protest over, not social permission to protest based on demographics.

I am proposing that we take the cause of Black Lives Matter into those places where tear gas and rubber bullets and federal agents cannot find us, and where there is less risk of spectacle distracting from our true aims. In boardrooms, in schools, in city councils, in the halls of justice, in the smoky backrooms of a duplicitous government — that is where we will finally dismantle the gears of the brutal, racist machine that has been terrorizing black Americans and hollowing out the moral character of this nation since its inception.

First of all, I have no idea what this means. People have already been trying to address systemic racism in city councils, schools etc. for most of my lifetime, and while there's been laudable work done, it hasn't done a thing to change the brutality of America's growing Police State. See this is the whole issue, this person (and rightfully so perhaps from their perspective) sees this as entirely a Black issue. Many people don't. I acknowledge that Black people and communities suffer the worst in the justice system, by far, and I acknowledge that they are often (again by necessity) at the forefront of reform efforts - this deserves acknowledgement...however, it is rotten for pretty much - all poor- people. If someone does not understand that, they fundamentally do not understand America, frankly. The "machine" is not only racist, and seeing it as only racist (which seems uniquely American, frankly) is missing some important nuance, in my opinion.

So criticize dumb protests, that's great. That last paragraph though, it just sounds like an excuse to 1) tell white people they don't have enough of a stake here to make their own decision about protesting (which isn't true, especially for the poor ones), and 2) to go back to business as usual. Kind of a bizarre request, from my point of view, especially given the circumstances.

Queequeg said:

You f'in hayseeds. Jeez. Way to go Portland to be a joke. You can draw a line through Rachel Dolezol to this shit.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Portland is a major metropolitan center, the second most populous city in the PNW, what on earth are you talking about? You think everyone there is a Portlandia caricature?

Everything I'm hearing about the protest on the ground is just like they have been everywhere else - legitimate protest with a few assholes, and huge law enforcement over reaction to everything. Blaming this on the protestors is kind of gross.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 26th, 2020 at 7:44 PM

Title: Re: Why do so many forum users use only the Wylie transliteration for Tibetan words?

Content:

Archie2009 said:

German is not my first language. That was part of the problem. Highly technical discussions in German would be a bridge too far and not enjoyable. I am also unsure whether to start with Classical Tibetan again or work through one of the modern spoken Tibetan courses first. There seem to be a couple of good courses for the spoken language in English, but only Wilson's Translating Buddhism from Tibetan for the classical language.

White Sakura said:

What for do you need the spoken Tibetan? You need a tandem partner then. And then is the question what you have to offer in exchange. I already found out that I am in a good position, since I speak high-German and I saw a Tibetan person on a Swiss Language partner side looking for high-German speaking partner. German seems to be sometimes a practical skill. You can only offer your mother-tongue on such sides. They all want a native speaker-partner.

But now I got: I need Kham dialect and what is if she speaks Lhasa dialect or whatever. There seems to be nothing like high-German or Oxford English in Tibetan.

What I need is only the correct Kham-pronunciation for some words I know in Wylie. But I gave the big project up. It seems to be one of the most difficult languages in the world. I do not know why it is not on the official list for the most difficult languages.

Malcolm wrote:

Grammatically, Tibetan is very simple. Like German, it is an agglutinative language. But it has such a wide variety of dialects, Tibetans from Amdo use Chinese to talk to Tibetans from Lhasa, for example.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 26th, 2020 at 9:34 PM

Title: Re: Lama Lena Testimonies/Credentials

Content:

Pero said:

If you received teachings from her she is already your guru.

Malcolm wrote:

Not necessarily.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 26th, 2020 at 10:42 PM

Title: Re: Questions on consistency and validity of mahayana sutra's

Content:

Minobu said:

It was malcolm that helped me realize that Sutras are Buddha..i owe so much to that man...some of the stuff he said years ago finally made sense to me.

All i want for christmas is for Malcolm to turn into the grand daddy of all Nichiren Practitioners...

Malcolm wrote:

Nah, it wil never happen. In Dzogchen, the result does not arise from a cause; the intimate instruction does not depend on a scripture; and buddhahood does not arise from mind. From a Nicherin point of view I am much worse than a Zen, Pure Land, or Shingon heretic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 26th, 2020 at 10:44 PM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

Queequeg said:

She looks as ridiculous as the cosplay right wing revolutionaries with their bullet proof vests, rifles, and protruding beer gut.

Malcolm wrote:

Spoken from the protective confines of your comfortable, upper-middle class home.

Your privilege is showing, dude.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 26th, 2020 at 10:45 PM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

PeterC said:

The violence from the police against the BLM protests just seems so...pointless. They get dressed up and armed, carried enough weapons to invade a small country, but there seems to be no plan.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a plan: provoke violence at any cost.

PeterC said:

When they had the extinction riots in London last year the police tactics were brutal, but very effective. If you have to deploy police, it's in everyone's interest that they do the job quickly so things go back to normal.

Malcolm wrote:

That is not part of the plan. The plan is to try and justify canceling the election, cause "riots."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 26th, 2020 at 10:53 PM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

Queequeg said:

It would be great if the Portland protesters could explain how their vandalism of federal buildings relates to whatever cause they're doing it for.

Malcolm wrote:

It's really quite simple. It is talismanic magick. It's like burning an effigy.

Queequeg said:

They stand in stark contrast to the way police across the US basically rioted against BLM.

Malcolm wrote:

The police always riot against 2 things: black people and labor.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 26th, 2020 at 10:59 PM

Title: Antifa's Strategy

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 27th, 2020 at 12:18 AM

Title: Re: Lama Lena Testimonies/Credentials

Content:

Pero said:

If you received teachings from her she is already your guru.

Malcolm wrote:

Not necessarily.

Pero said:

How so?

Malcolm wrote:

For someone to be your guru, you must understand something from them in a concrete way. Just going and listening to some teachings really does not mean anything.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 27th, 2020 at 12:25 AM

Title: Re: Identity politics, intersectionality and the left

Content:

Dan74 said:

but a system that is based on perpetual growth appears to me to be fundamentally unsustainable.

Danny said:

Been that way since the Bronze Age.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, so why fix anything? Slavery, oppression of women. We might as well just go straight to this:

Why f#%k around?

As I said, capitalism is death cult.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 27th, 2020 at 12:27 AM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

PeterC said:

Of course that would be if we followed the law, which the trump faction seems singularly unwilling to do...

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is their whole point: screw the law. The only thing that matters is power.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 27th, 2020 at 12:52 AM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It's really quite simple. It is talismanic magick. It's like burning an effigy.

Queequeg said:

Right. Proof that they don't understand what they're fighting against. Just acting out against a facade. Navigating cause and effect fails because they fundamentally do not understand the reality.

That's why there needs to be deescalation. People need to catch their breath, regroup, and come up with a better plan. Until then - demented ballet between protesters and a state that is also out of its mind.

Malcolm wrote:

There can be no de-escalation if the authorities are deliberately escalating violence. The protestors are not demented. They are correct.

Queequeg said:

Yes. The police are a known commodity. So the plan is...

ONCE MORE INTO THE BREACH!

Doing the same ineffectual thing over and over is insane.

Malcolm wrote:

Tell that to your hero, MLK. The point of nonviolent protest is to TRIGGER state violence against unarmed protestors. That is why it is a devastating tactic to use against oppressors. It is in fact working. So, once more into the breach.

Queequeg said:

What we observe in the nineteen-sixties is that there was a nontrivial number of white moderates who were open to policies that advanced racial equality, and were also very concerned about order. The needle that civil-rights activists were trying to thread was: How do you advance racial equality, and capture the attention of often indifferent or hostile white moderates outside of the South, and at the same time grow a coalition of allies? And over time the strategy that evolved was one of nonviolent protest, which actively sought to trigger police chiefs like Bull Connor [in Birmingham, Alabama,] to engage in spectacles of violence that attracted national media and would, in the language of the nineteen-sixties, “shock the conscience of the nation.” So it isn’t just nonviolence that is effective, but nonviolence met with state and vigilante brutality that is effective.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.newyorker.com/news/q-and-a/how-violent-protests-change-politics>

The fact is that the protestors in Portland and elsewhere are nonviolent and always have been. They are just following Gandhi's approach.

Queequeg said:

On May 21, some 2,500 marchers ignored warnings from police and made an unarmed advance on the Dharasana depot.

American journalist Webb Miller was on the scene, and he later described what followed. “Suddenly,” he wrote, “at a word of command, scores of native police rushed upon the advancing marchers and rained blows on their heads...Not one of the marchers even raised an arm to fend off the blows. They went down like ten-pins.”

Miller’s harrowing account of the beatings circulated widely in the international media, and was even read aloud in the U.S. Congress. Winston Churchill—no great fan of Gandhi—would later admit that the protests and their aftermath had “inflicted such humiliation and defiance as has not been known since the British first trod the soil of India.”

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.history.com/news/gandhi-salt-march-india-british-colonial-rule>

But they do need to stop trying to wash tear gas away with water and milk:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 27th, 2020 at 12:54 AM

Title: Re: Identity politics, intersectionality and the left

Content:

Danny said:

Let it go to shit, what happens in the world is none of my business, if it comes to my door, then I'll deal with it my way.

Malcolm wrote:

Hinayāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 27th, 2020 at 1:40 AM

Title: Re: Enlightened Society

Content:

Danny said:

Off spin topic to discuss big ideas for an enlightened society. Let's use the Buddhist teachings as a framework.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddha never did. That wasn't his job. You cannot have an awakened society with people who are not awake. The best one can hope for is society based on reasonable secular ethics concerning the economy, governance, education, and so forth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 27th, 2020 at 2:08 AM

Title: Re: Enlightened Society

Content:

Danny said:

Ok so we start with education, if we had to strip out all the indoctrination, what basic ethical education do we teach the youngsters? And does that education belong at home or in a school?

Could a reasonable ethical standard of education be reached by all? What would be the final aim of that education?

Malcolm wrote:

The aim of education is to produce people capable of educating themselves. For that, a high level of literacy is required. I would argue that reading-heavy, secular, evidence-based curriculum is a desiderata. Our present STEM-oriented education is producing students with no understanding of history, literature, and so on. In fact, for the most part,

American students still read and write at an elementary school level by the time they get to college, which is why English courses are required for all freshman college students. It's truly pathetic. I understand that this is not necessarily the case in Europe. But in the US, we churn out dummies by the millions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 27th, 2020 at 2:10 AM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

Queequeg said:

Right. Proof that they don't understand what they're fighting against. Just acting out against a facade. Navigating cause and effect fails because they fundamentally do not understand the reality.

That's why there needs to be deescalation. People need to catch their breath, regroup, and come up with a better plan. Until then - demented ballet between protesters and a state that is also out of its mind.

Malcolm wrote:

There can be no de-escalation if the authorities are deliberately escalating violence. The protestors are not demented. They are correct.

Queequeg said:

What is demented is the whole dance.

Malcolm wrote:

The wall of moms is not demented. They are correct.

Queequeg said:

We have a big violence problem in this country. Continuing the demented ballet will not get us anywhere.

Malcolm wrote:

We need more walls of moms.

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/07/25/world/americas/protest-moms-power-police.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 27th, 2020 at 3:19 AM

Title: Re: Enlightened Society

Content:

Danny said:

Free education with no barriers to all.

Norwegian said:

Welcome to Scandinavia and the Nordic countries.

Danny said:

I'm assuming realistically, IQ is not distributed equally, not everyone can, or should be a PhD, we would still need crafts and trades people to make things for everyone's benefit. How does that work out in your part of the world?

Malcolm wrote:

Some of the smartest people I know are craftspeople. Some of them however could have definitely benefitted from a more rounded education.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 27th, 2020 at 5:40 AM

Title: Re: Enlightened Society

Content:

Danny said:

What I'm asking really is the value we put onto skills, and not just monetary value, but also a social value. Class barriers must also not be included in our enlightened society. Must have a mutual respect across the board. The man or woman that builds the road, the bridge for others to cycle on to work has a equal value in society.

Steel said:

Blue collars don't get any respect from society. Someone with a 4 year degree in gender studies and no job prospects will be treated better than the trades person who make more than six figures.

Malcolm wrote:

Really? Is that why there are so many PhD baristas and waitrons?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 27th, 2020 at 6:52 AM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

Queequeg said:

I know a former Weatherman.

Malcolm wrote:

There are quite a few still alive.

Queequeg said:

I expressed admiration for them.

Malcolm wrote:

I read Prairie Fire when it was sent to my house by someone who saw me born in 1962. When I was 12.

Queequeg said:

He told me how he was on his way to the safehouse that blew up and killed his friends. He insisted there are better ways. There was someone telling me the same thing.

Malcolm wrote:

The above person used to visit his SLA friends in jail. He was never arrested for anything, and worked on the Berkeley Free Clinic ambulance for decades. But such associations don't rub off. That is not my credential. I didn't do any of that. I did attend endless civil rights marches in the mid-60s with my mother, as well as pro-feminist marches.

Of my own volition, I went to the DC No Nukes Rally in 1979.

But I don't like crowds, never have. So I don't do protest marches. Monkey wrenching...well...But I deeply respect the people who march, when they are marching for causes in which I believe. Getting rid of Donald Trump is a cause in which I believe.

The only reason I mention any of the above is that you decided to front with it, in order to establish your street cred. But you and I are still privileged, upper-middle class dudes, who probably have more education than common sense.

Queequeg said:

Now, want to do some impact litigation? Organize political campaigns? Fight the hard ground game measured in inches? I'm your soldier.

Malcolm wrote:

Your arrogance towards and disdain for the people in Portland is a little strange, frankly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 27th, 2020 at 6:58 AM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

Frankly, I'm impressed with how most of US law on the books is quite well thought out, if carried out properly.

Malcolm wrote:

Lawyers are highly educated people who are trained to think systematically, most of them anyway. Therefore, they tend to write well, and coherently, even when they are wrong. Neil Katyal, for example, is someone I admire immensely. John Yoo, the torture memo guy, not so much, but the latter still writes well, even though he has the ethics of a Torquemada.

TharpaChodron said:

If people were to look at how the LA Riots destroyed years of progress and community development in the South Central LA areas, it set the black residential communities of LA years behind and they are still recovering. Family owned businesses destroyed, retail and business investments left, a general fear to invest or even live in the communities, even by black families themselves. But hey, if people think this is the way to change our system, then go for it and see how it works out.

Malcolm wrote:

This woman articulates why this happens in communities of color quite eloquently, I think:

This is just a snippet, but the whole interview is worth finding and watching, if you have not yet seen it.

America has two sins it needs to deal with: genocide of native people and the importation of slave labor by and for capitalists.

BTW, Senator Tom Cotton (R) today expressed his opinion that "slavery was a necessary evil."

TharpaChodron said:

In the interview, Cotton said the role of slavery can't be overlooked.

"We have to study the history of slavery and its role and impact on the development of our country because otherwise we can't understand our country. As the Founding Fathers said, it was the necessary evil upon which the union was built, but the union was built in a way, as Lincoln said, to put slavery on the course to its ultimate extinction," he said.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.arkansasonline.com/news/2020/jul/26/bill-by-cotton-targets-curriculum-on-slavery/?news>

This is why people are on the streets in Portland and everywhere else—because we continue to elect racists like him. Ironical that his last name is cotton, that he is from Arkansas, and he is defending our legacy of slavery.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 27th, 2020 at 8:28 AM

Title: Re: Enlightened Society

Content:

Steel said:

Blue collars don't get any respect from society. Someone with a 4 year degree in gender studies and no job prospects will be treated better than the trades person who make more than six figures.

Malcolm wrote:

Really? Is that why there are so many PhD baristas and waitrons?

Danny said:

I don't know what that means, sorry

Malcolm wrote:

People with PhD's who cannot find jobs in their fields, and so must make lattes and cappuccinos and wait on tables.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 27th, 2020 at 7:08 PM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

We need more walls of moms.

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/07/25/world/americas/protest-moms-power-police.html>

Queequeg said:

Yep. This is great.

But, I can't help but think of the irony... some dumb kids try to burn down the federal courthouse, antagonize the security guards, said poorly trained security guards make a mess of it, quite possibly violating the constitution. Mom comes to protect the wayward kids and clean up their mess.

Malcolm wrote:

Those people are not rentacops. They are heavily-armed fascist thugs, sent in order to start riots against nonviolent protestors. Spray painting graffiti is not violence. It's a legitimate tool of civil disobedience. This started in DC and has been spread to other cities with Democratic administrations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 27th, 2020 at 7:53 PM

Title: Re: Mother sentient beings

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

All sentient beings were mother at one time or another.

Mirror said:

I know, but why mother? Why not friends? Father? Other benefactors? Is this only a metaphor or mother is utterly pure unlike other beings in this lifetime?

Thank you all for your replies.

Malcolm wrote:

Because mothers carry us in their bodies, feed us from their bodies, and will do anything to protect us.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 27th, 2020 at 10:31 PM

Title: Re: How does Buddhism explain individual experience?

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

And as the saying goes, "you cannot stand in the same river twice". It is always changing. Humans and other sentient beings are just like that.

Malcolm wrote:

As it is said, "You cannot stand in the same river even once."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 27th, 2020 at 10:52 PM

Title: Re: Lama Lena Testimonies/Credentials

Content:

Pero said:

I mean, it seems to me that if this were true many wouldn't actually have "teachers"...

Malcolm wrote:

Correct. They have teachers in name only.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 27th, 2020 at 11:06 PM

Title: Re: Enlightened Society

Content:

Danny said:

I don't know what that means, sorry

Malcolm wrote:

People with PhD's who cannot find jobs in their fields, and so must make lattes and cappuccinos and wait on tables.

Steel said:

Yes, It would truly suck to spend so much money and years in college and not get the job you are looking for.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. And, to bring up Danny's point, since they never learned how to make anything useful, they can't even get a good "working class" job, with which to pay off their loans.

In reality, education should consist of both reading, etc., as well as learning the basics of useful things like farming, carpentry, plumbing etc. As for myself, I am told I am an excellent cook. I worked in food industry for many years when I was in my late teens and 20's. If I need to get a job flipping burgers, no problem. I am something of an expert on that subject alone. Never been afraid to work, and though I come from an upper middle class family, I never graduated from a western school, not one, unless you count 6th grade. So I worked a lot of "shit" jobs. Dishwashing, construction, prep cooking, etc., etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 28th, 2020 at 12:30 AM

Title: Re: Enlightened Society

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I never graduated from a western school, not one, unless you count 6th grade.

Pero said:

Why not?

Malcolm wrote:

Oppositional personality disorder.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 28th, 2020 at 12:54 AM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Spray painting graffiti is not violence.

Queequeg said:

I'm not defending DHS in any way. But come on - this is not about graffiti.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course, this is about incompetent law enforcement, state-sanctioned, extra-judicial murder, incompetent governance at the federal level, and so on. The violence we are seeing was entirely provoked by the police from the beginning. Reap what you sow.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 28th, 2020 at 1:01 AM

Title: Re: Lama Lena Testimonies/Credentials

Content:

Pero said:

I mean, it seems to me that if this were true many wouldn't actually have "teachers"...

Malcolm wrote:

Correct. They have teachers in name only.

Just think of all the people who waltz into an online empowerment, or tune into a Lama Lena Facebook teaching which is literally open to a billion people, check it out for a while, and then move onto say, Jax. So really, Lena is their guru? Their teacher? Or lets say someone checks out Buddhism for while, does Ngondro, and then, for whatever reason, they decide to become Christians, and hang up their mala for good. Did they ever have a guru in a real sense?

This idea that participating in a ritual or a teaching makes someone your guru is a somewhat strange idea if you have no idea of the meaning of the teachings and so, on, and no faith in the teachings, and no interest in following them as your path.

Of course, this idea is a traditional idea, one which functions well in homogenous Buddhist society where everyone is more or less on the same page. But in our culture it really does not apply, in my opinion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 28th, 2020 at 3:07 AM

Title: Re: Lama Lena Testimonies/Credentials

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Just think of all the people who waltz into an online empowerment, or tune into a Lama Lena Facebook teaching which is literally open to a billion people, check it out for a while, and then move onto say, Jax. So really, Lena is their guru? Their teacher? Or lets say someone checks out Buddhism for while, does Ngondro, and then, for whatever reason, they decide to become Christians, and hang up their mala for good. Did they ever have a guru in a real sense?

This idea that participating in a ritual or a teaching makes someone your guru is a somewhat strange idea if you have no idea of the meaning of the teachings and so, on, and no faith in the teachings, and no interest in following them as your path.

Of course, this idea is a traditional idea, one which functions well in homogenous Buddhist society where everyone is more or less on the same page. But in our culture it really does not apply, in my opinion.

Pero said:

I see your point now but am not sure about it. I partly agree but in school for example, I had many teachers who taught me many things which I never used and have forgotten (and some I never learnt lol). This does not make them not my teachers at some point. Also by what you're saying, if someone actually learns something from one teacher and then learns the same or similar thing from another, but would not be able to understand this if he had learned from the 2nd first, wouldn't the 2nd teacher still automatically become his teacher simply due to prior knowledge possessed by the student? And so on for the 3rd and 4th etc.

Malcolm wrote:

People really like to make shit complicated.

It's simple. For example, you listened to webcast. You received direct introduction. You did not understand, you do not experience anything. You never did any practice to discover your own state. In this case, Chogyal Namkhai Norbu is not your guru, not even your teacher. He is just some Tibetan dude you expressed some curiosity in. At best, you received a positive trace for meeting the teachings in a future life.

You met fifteen Dzogchen teachers. You really were devoted to them all. You didn't understand shit until you met ChNN for a conversation in a bar. But his few words opened up the meaning of Dzogchen for you. In this case, ChNN is your root guru. The others, gurus of empowerment and lineage only.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 28th, 2020 at 3:09 AM

Title: Re: Enlightened Society

Content:

Pero said:

Why not?

Malcolm wrote:

Oppositional personality disorder.

Pero said:

I'm actually not sure if you're maybe joking but for some reason I can totally imagine it.

Malcolm wrote:

Frankly, school bored me to tears. I generally finished reading all my books by the third of fourth week of school (not math though, not a strong point, and I lacked patience for it). And just sat bored in class for the rest of the year.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 28th, 2020 at 3:21 AM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

Queequeg said:

I'm not defending DHS in any way. But come on - this is not about graffiti.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course, this is about incompetent law enforcement, state-sanctioned, extra-judicial murder, incompetent governance at the federal level, and so on. The violence we are seeing was entirely provoked by the police from the beginning. Reap what you sow.

Queequeg said:

In the big picture, correct. Within the immediate scope, we're talking about Portland and the escalating rounds of violence. So far, I'm not aware of any extra-judicial murders in Portland arising out of the protests, and I pray that there will not be.

In order to survive a Trump Presidency, the rise of white nationalism, and widening income inequality, there needs to be a strong resistance.

Our resistance envisions a future where communities are empowered to create new solutions to present day problems, using direct action, political advocacy, and community development to inspire new people to get involved in politics and to create a united platform for progressive causes. Portland has an opportunity to become a beacon of light, modeling to the world what a nonviolent resistance movement can truly look like.

Our movement will endure, gather, and thrive. Each act of oppression spurs us to recommit our hands and our hearts. We work, we grow, we change — we resist!

Malcolm wrote:

https://www.pdxresistance.org/about_us

You ought to read this to get a sense of what the local issues are for these folks, and why they keep going into the breach, day after day.

<https://www.wweek.com/news/state/2020/07/26/next-round-of-police-reform-bills-in-the-legislature-could-include-blanket-bans-on-chokeholds-and-tear-gas/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 28th, 2020 at 5:05 AM

Title: Re: Enlightened Society

Content:

Steel said:

Do you wish you achieved more in life?

Malcolm wrote:

Frankly, my achievements, quite minor though they may be, are completely beyond what I could have imagined 40, 30, 20, or even 10 years ago.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 28th, 2020 at 5:41 AM

Title: Re: Enlightened Society

Content:

Steel said:

Do you wish you achieved more in life?

Malcolm wrote:

Frankly, my achievements, quite minor though they may be, are completely beyond what I could have imagined 40, 30, 20, or even 10 years ago.

Steel said:

That's good to hear. I think at the end of the day all these worldly achievements don't mean anything even if you're the ceo of some fortune 500 company. Nothing is more important than using this rare human life to engage in spiritual pursuits.

Malcolm wrote:

I wasn't talking about worldly achievements. I don't have any of those at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 28th, 2020 at 6:52 AM

Title: Re: Enlightened Society

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I wasn't talking about worldly achievements. I don't have any of those at all.

Steel said:

If you're referring to some high spiritual attainment then I tip off my hat to you.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, but I have managed to translate and publish five important Dharna Books in the past five years, and I have three more coming out in the next two years.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 28th, 2020 at 8:14 AM

Title: Re: Lama Lena Testimonies/Credentials

Content:

Pero said:

I see your point now but am not sure about it. I partly agree but in school for example, I had many teachers who taught me many things which I never used and have forgotten (and some I never learnt lol). This does not make them not my teachers at some point. Also by what you're saying, if someone actually learns something from one teacher and then learns the same or similar thing from another, but would not be able to understand this if he had learned from the 2nd first, wouldn't the 2nd teacher still automatically become his teacher simply due to prior knowledge possessed by the student? And so on for the 3rd and 4th etc.

Malcolm wrote:

At best, you received a positive trace for meeting the teachings in a future life.

tobes said:

I wouldn't underestimate this though. Dharma seeds can ripen in very unexpected ways, and they do not necessarily depend on the disciple being diligent, committed etc at the time of them being given/planted.

I owe a lot to this fact!

Malcolm wrote:

We all do, nevertheless, we have no idea when such traces ripen, and in most case, probably not in this life.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 28th, 2020 at 8:18 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Könchok Thrinley said:

Hey,

how is it with ngakpas? Are they a thing outside of Nyingma lineages? For example does a Drikung Kagyu have ngakpa practitioners?

Here by ngakpa I mean the sort of "lay" tantric practitioner who takes the ngakpa vows and has the white robe and all. Please correct my understanding of what ngakpa is and ideally broaden it.

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on what kind of "ngakpa" you mean. In general, anyone who has received and practices Vajrayāna is a mantrin/mantrika. Then there is the white skirted/long haired bunch. I would not term these people "lay people."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 28th, 2020 at 3:28 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

Then there is the white skirted/long haired bunch. I would not term these people "lay people."

They aren't people who have left home

Malcolm wrote:

That doesn't matter. And anyway, these days, in Tibetan Buddhism, most monks behave like lay people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 28th, 2020 at 9:17 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Path

Content:

Dvs said:

What is the Dzogchen path from start to finish. I would like to understand the complete path from point A to Z and everything in between?

Is it different in each Nyingma school? Is there a completely linear path?

Sorry if this is somewhat confusing.

Malcolm wrote:

Do you mean is there a graded path of Dzogchen?

Yes and no.

Like all other Vajrayāna paths, one begins with receiving an empowerment or a so-called direct introduction. Then, depending on master and tradition, one either engages in common Vajrayāna preliminaries, or one moves directly to the uncommon Dzogchen preliminaries. One may or may not spend time practicing deity yoga.

The essential practice of Dzogchen teachings is guruyoga.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 28th, 2020 at 9:25 PM

Title: Re: What are you doing about the coronavirus?

Content:

Dan74 said:

I fear you are adding to it, Peter, as folks keep looking for some underhanded thing the administration is doing. There is just no way the WH can do anything right or have support on any issue, is there?

Malcolm wrote:

Yup.

Dan74 said:

It almost feels like your entire political system and media need a massive overhaul.

Malcolm wrote:

We just need a new president who actually knows how to run a government. Despite all the bullshit about Biden, he is eminently capable of this. I am hoping he chooses Susan Rice as his VP, while there are many eminently qualified women under consideration, I think we need someone like her. Not because she is black, but because she is really, really smart. Basically, after Bush, we needed eight years of Obama to repair the damage the GOP did to our economy, etc., the last time around. This time around we will at least 24 years of Democratic administrations to repair the damage Donald Trump and his wrecking crew have inflicted on this nation. I sincerely hope that the GOP never wins another national election. If people are so stupid as to keep voting for the GOP, there is no help for them.

The "media" in this country has always had its partisan voices. The newspapers, barring opinion pages, only started to become a bit more objective in reporting since the early 20th century because they had to downplay partisanship in order to sell advertising.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 28th, 2020 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: Bernie 2020

Content:

Sādhaka said:

Okay, Shotenzenjin.

But that in itself does not automatically indicate the NOI as the actual assassins (no pun intended (?) on the hashashin & templar tip).

Talmadge Hayer was shot in the leg by a bodyguard and apprehended by members of the crowd as he tried to escape before police arrived. The other two suspects...

Malcolm wrote:

<https://time.com/5778688/malcolm-x-assassination/>

There is no doubt that Hayer was one of the people who shot Malcolm X. There is no doubt because he was holding physical evidence of one of the weapons used. The other two men were convicted on the sparsest of circumstantial evidence, merely because they were enforcers for NOI. Hayer steadfastly maintained they were innocent.

Hayer fingered four other men in the 1970's.

Whatever the case may be, NOI killed Malcolm.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 28th, 2020 at 10:46 PM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

Queequeg said:

I wrote this somewhere on the board when we were discussing Antifa confronting Proudboys in Portland, it would be a powerful statement if the Proud Boys were left to march but met with thousands of silent counter-protesters lining the streets, not engaging, but making clear that their views and their presence is not welcome.

Malcolm wrote:

"Nonviolence is a good strategy when conditions permit."

—Mandela

Queequeg said:

It would similarly be a profound statement if these federal officers were met with silent crowds making it clear they are not welcome in Portland. If these officers then started shooting these protesters with rubber bullets and tear gas, the moral wrong would be crystal clear.

Malcolm wrote:

Umm, that is what happened.

<https://www.oregonlive.com/portland/2020/07/protests-mark-day-50-in-portland-thursday-amid-growing-attention-from-trump-administration.html>

Queequeg said:

The crowd downtown eventually started growing late Thursday, including outside a federal office building next to the jail. By 11:15 p.m., more than one dozen officers, wearing either blue or camouflage uniforms, were posted near the entrance of the building at Southwest Third Avenue and Madison Street. Two dozen more officers soon streamed out of the building to join them.

Several dozen protesters stood on the sidewalk and street near officers. Officers shot some type of less-than-lethal projectiles to break up the crowd around 11:25 p.m. It was not clear what precipitated officers' actions.

Officers then pressed toward the crowd, shooting impact munitions and setting off devices that emit gas and smoke to force people to keep walking north on Third Avenue past the jail and then past the courthouse. Other officers in camouflage assembled on nearby Madison Street. As they pressed the crowd away from the buildings, the officers in camouflage walked beyond federal property and onto city streets.

Officers eventually formed a line on Third Avenue at Salmon Street, near the north end of the courthouse. Crowds of people gathered nearby on the other side of Salmon. Protesters pressed toward officers, and officers again set off devices that made loud noises and released gas, smoke and flashes.

Malcolm wrote:

The protests were winding down before the goons showed up. The goons have just exacerbated the issue.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 28th, 2020 at 10:51 PM

Title: Re: Enlightened Society

Content:

confusedlayman said:

During buddhas time... monestry was enlightened socity

Malcolm wrote:

No, if this were true, there would have been no need for so many vinaya rules. Most of Buddha's disciples were ignorant schmucks just like us.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 28th, 2020 at 10:53 PM

Title: Re: Bernie 2020

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Hayer fingered four other men in the 1970's.

Pero said:

It seems that doesn't have the same meaning in Massachusetts as it does elsewhere.

Malcolm wrote:

Get your mind out of the gutter, son.

In US colloquial, to finger someone means a) accuse someone of a crime b) stick a finger where it may or may not be wanted...depending on interest.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 29th, 2020 at 3:22 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Path

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Do you mean is there a graded path of Dzogchen?

Yes and no.

Dvs said:

Yes that's I meant. What are the uncommon Dzogchen preliminaries?

Thanks for the reply!

Malcolm wrote:

They are called "separating samsara from nirvana."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 29th, 2020 at 3:22 AM

Title: Re: Enlightened Society

Content:

Danny said:

Off spin topic to discuss big ideas for an enlightened society. Let's use the Buddhist teachings as a framework.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddha never did. That wasn't his job. You cannot have an awakened society with people who are not awake. The best one can hope for is society based on reasonable secular ethics concerning the economy, governance, education, and so forth.

Queequeg said:

I think there is room for application of ideas and methods we find in Buddhist education to a secular context, though. Secular ethics do not exist in a vacuum. They rely on wisdom traditions to inform the values.

Malcolm wrote:

What wisdom tradition did John Rawls rely on? Hume?

Queequeg said:

We handicap ourselves if we draw too strict a line between Dharma and the secular world.

Malcolm wrote:

Come on man, the establishment clause. The whole thrust of the Scottish Enlightenment was to get religion out of ethics.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 29th, 2020 at 3:26 AM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

Queequeg said:

So, you're saying conditions in Portland are comparable to apartheid S. Africa?

Malcolm wrote:

I am saying that the "riot" is confined to one city block in Portland. It is small potatoes. A fire was started, some graffiti was sprayed. Fox news had a cow. Trump, predictably, saw this as his Chicago Riot moment.

Queequeg said:

From what I understand, this sums up what happened in Portland in general.

Malcolm wrote:

I was referring to Federal goons.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 29th, 2020 at 3:28 AM

Title: Re: Bernie 2020

Content:

Pero said:

It seems that doesn't have the same meaning in Massachusetts as it does elsewhere.

Malcolm wrote:

Get your mind out of the gutter, son.

In US colloquial, to finger someone means a) accuse someone of a crime b) stick a finger where it may or may not be wanted...depending on interest.

Pero said:

Sorry but I googled it before I posted, just in case, and missed your a) definition. It's not in the Urban dictionary.

I see now I actually even completely misunderstood because I didn't read the post well and thought it means he killed four people.

Malcolm wrote:

"Convicted California Murderer Fingered in 'Allentown 4' Deaths; Missing NH Woman Presumed Dead"

"Murdered veteran 'fingered' two JBLM soldiers now charged in his death for a 'drug incident' last year, affidavit says

Local man is fingered as mystery murderer, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 29th, 2020 at 10:01 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Path

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The essential practice of Dzogchen teachings is guruyoga.

yagmort said:

Malcolm, could you please clarify this seeming contradiction ?

heart said:

Now you got me confused, isn't Guru Yoga a main Dzogchen practice?

Malcolm wrote:

Of course not. The main Dzogchen practice is the direct perception of your own state. Even guru yoga is a practice that works with mind, rather than pristine consciousness -- even Ati guru yoga. Thus, guru yoga is a method related to the second phrase of Garab Dorje, "decide one thing/remain without doubt." One uses guru yoga, or rushan, etc., to introduce oneself to the mind essence over and over as many times as one needs until one has attained some stability in recognizing it and sustaining that recognition.

Once you have "decided on one thing/no longer remain in doubt", then you do not remain passive, you shift your focus to "continue in the confidence of liberation/continue in that state," relying principally on the primary methods of the Great Perfection found in so called "man ngag lde," trekchö and thögal.

yagmort said:

this is from the thread

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=48&start=200&t=25216&sid=64ca0636b697f1c58d188357b63c2a3b>

Malcolm wrote:

There is no conflict. Guru yoga is how we discover our own state.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 29th, 2020 at 6:36 PM

Title: Re: How to avoid imagining the tantric world as inherently existing?

Content:

White Sakura said:

I am afraid of building concepts.

Malcolm wrote:

Deleted...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 29th, 2020 at 6:39 PM

Title: Re: How to avoid imagining the tantric world as inherently existing?

Content:

White Sakura said:

I am just not convinced of tantra being a higher path.

Malcolm wrote:

This means you are not a suitable candidate for Vajrayana teachings, and you have erred in taking many empowerment, because now you have many samayas. So you should just put Vajrayana aside without criticizing it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 29th, 2020 at 6:45 PM

Title: Re: Enlightened Society

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

What wisdom tradition did John Rawls rely on? Hume?

Queequeg said:

Judeo-Christian and its derivatives.

We handicap ourselves if we draw too strict a line between Dharma and the secular world.

Come on man, the establishment clause. The whole thrust of the Scottish Enlightenment was to get religion out of ethics.

The Establishment Clause reads,

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof;"

Its interpreted to mean that no church could be the official church of the US government. It doesn't mean people can't bring their religious or spiritual background to inform their participation in civil society. I don't think there was any consensus to remove religion from public life in America.

<https://youtu.be/8yOWjkAxrWE>

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it does. It is the reason we cannot erect stupas on public land, for example.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 29th, 2020 at 7:32 PM

Title: Re: How to avoid imagining the tantric world as inherently existing?

Content:

White Sakura said:

Tantra is not an equivalent to Vajrayana.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course it is.

Look, I have been doing this for 31 years. I have done three year retreat. I have five books published with Wisdom, one forthcoming from Shambhala, and two more forthcoming from Wisdom.

Tantra = Vajrayana. Please educate yourself before you make absurd statements.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 29th, 2020 at 7:38 PM

Title: Re: Existence-Time

Content:

Lillian said:

Or with Malcom's seed and tree. The seed is a cause of the tree, and yet the tree is the cause of the seed being a seed, seed and tree arise together, the seed fully contains the tree and every other tree and seed everywhere, and there are no seeds or trees at all because all are empty. These are not contradictory propositions any more than saying that the top of a mountain fully contains the bottom and the whole mountain, that every grain of sand of the mountain (or "moment" of the mountain for Dogen's being-time) holds the whole mountains and every mountain within, and other like perspectives from an integrated Huayan perspective, and also that there is no mountain nor grain of sand top to bottom because there is only emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

This perspective is pretty much the same as the nonbuddhist Samkhya school. You can't save it by calling it all "empty." That's just a cop out.

If you climb Everest, you are not climbing Meru. If you sail on the Indian Ocean, you are not on the Pacific. If you are in America, you are not in Japan. You are not me, and I am not you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 29th, 2020 at 9:09 PM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

tingdzin said:

Bravo Queequeg. Glad someone has the time and the patience to persist in persisting with a reasonable view.

I would just add that, rightly or wrongly, most of the electorate is not going to pay attention to the larger issues involved when they see riots. Get ready for another four years of Trump.

Malcolm wrote:

You seriously think "riots" are going to take precedence in people's minds over this administration's inept and fatal response to Covid-19?

Every person who dies (1000k a day right now) is on Trump. Our health care system will be dealing with the aftereffects of this disease for years. The economy is in the shithouse. And the GOP thinks $600 a week is a disincentive for people to find work. I don't see how the GOP or Trump gets past this without engaging brazenly in criminal activity during the election.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 29th, 2020 at 9:10 PM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

Ayu said:

A German newspaper headlined this morning:

"Chaos first! America second."

They believe, Trump is trying to cause a great stirr, polarizing - in order to win his election. But in Germany we think and hope he will not make it. He seems to be 10% behind Biden.

Queequeg said:

The insanity of our system is that he could possibly lose the popular vote by 10% and still get elected because of the electoral college.

Malcolm wrote:

No, the electoral math does not back that scenario up.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 29th, 2020 at 9:16 PM

Title: Re: Enlightened Society

Content:

Queequeg said:

Judeo-Christian and its derivatives.

The Establishment Clause reads,

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof;"

Its interpreted to mean that no church could be the official church of the US government. It doesn't mean people can't bring their religious or spiritual background to inform their participation in civil society. I don't think there was any consensus to remove religion from public life in America.

<https://youtu.be/8yOWjkAxrWE>

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it does. It is the reason we cannot erect stupas on public land, for example.

Queequeg said:

land \neq life

Malcolm wrote:

Tell that to George Mason:

Section 1. That all men are by nature equally free and independent and have certain inherent rights, of which, when they enter into a state of society, they cannot, by any compact, deprive or divest their posterity; namely, the enjoyment of life and liberty, with the means of acquiring and possessing property, and pursuing and obtaining happiness and safety.

<https://www.archives.gov/founding-docs/virginia-declaration-of-rights>

Here life and liberty are specifically equated "with the means of acquiring and possessing property."

The most important founders were all atheists, aka "Deists," followers of Lucretius's Epicureanism as treated in De Rerum Natura. If you haven't read it, you should read Nature's God: The Heretical Origins of the American Republic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 29th, 2020 at 9:18 PM

Title: Re: Enlightened Society

Content:

PeterC said:

But we all benefit by limiting discussion of public policy and law to the world of fact and logic.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, "Keep your goddamn religion out of my government."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 29th, 2020 at 9:23 PM

Title: Re: Enlightened Society

Content:

Queequeg said:

If you take religion away from both of those movements, it loses the existential urgency, as well as the... I don't know what the word is in English... 正 rectitude? Dignity?

Malcolm wrote:

This argument is total nonsense. The Civil Rights movement did not succeed because of religious conviction, it succeeded despite it. You recall, that the segregationists and advocates of slavery before them, also took the Bible as their source for their [un]ethical arguments about miscegenation and earlier, owning people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 29th, 2020 at 9:28 PM

Title: Re: How to avoid imagining the tantric world as inherently existing?

Content:

White Sakura said:

So if I made an absurd statement and nobody supported the same with very good arguments and citations, then I am quite convinced of the opposite of my absurd statement.

Sorry, I have a difficult mind and question everything.

Malcolm wrote:

Educate yourself. Then you won't make absurd statements, and cause other people to waste their time schooling you on basic definitions. Where do you think the term "tantra" comes from. It comes from Vajrayāna. Where do you think Vajrasattva, mandala offerings, and guru yoga come from? They come from tantras (specifically, the Guhyasamāja), which are the basic texts of Vajrayāna. Come on, man. The deleted comment was basically a comment to the effect that yes, you have listed many concepts, too many, and that you do not seem to understand even the very simplest basics of Vajrayāna sadhana practice. It is ok to lack knowledge, but your means of presenting your ignorance is incredibly arrogant and confrontational. This is my concept! Prove me wrong!

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 29th, 2020 at 9:32 PM

Title: Re: Is the argument out of date?

Content:

Viach said:

You can often hear the argument of the Mahayanists that the Theravada concept of the atom is untenable:

Malcolm wrote:

It is not just a Mahāyāna argument, it is also the argument of the Sautrantika school in India.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 29th, 2020 at 9:33 PM

Title: Re: Mother sentient beings

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Because mothers carry us in their bodies, feed us from their bodies, and will do anything to protect us.

Mirror said:

Some mothers abandon their children, drink an alcohol while pregnant (the result of such behaviour is a disability of a child) or even kill their children. So my opinion is that not every mother will do anything to protect her child. But I might be wrong and just misunderstand some things. Thank you

Malcolm wrote:

Did you mother do that to you? If not, then the objection is useless.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 30th, 2020 at 1:43 AM

Title: Re: Mother sentient beings

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Did you mother do that to you? If not, then the objection is useless.

Mirror said:

I know a guy, who is physically handicapped, because his mother was drinking an alcohol while she was pregnant. In order to reduce his suffering, I want to teach him how to develop love.

Malcolm wrote:

Then tell him to focus on the person he things cared for him the most.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 30th, 2020 at 1:46 AM

Title: Re: How to avoid imagining the tantric world as inherently existing?

Content:

White Sakura said:

But somehow now because I believe sutra mahamudra is a path not lower to tantra and there are three paths of Mahamudra described, then Varjayana cannot be only tantra, since it encompasses sutra mahamudra as an equal practice. So I draw the conclusion logically, I mean what appears to be logical to me, and didn't dream I about I have to look it up.

Malcolm wrote:

It has already been pointed out to you that Jamgon Kongtrul states that sutra mahāmudra is for people who are not suited for Vajrayāna practice of any kind, people of lower capacity. Do you really need chapter and verse?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 30th, 2020 at 1:49 AM

Title: Re: Is the argument out of date?

Content:

Viach said:

Theravada concept of the atom

Astus said:

It's the Sarvastivadins that Yogacarins argued against.

<http://www.themindingcentre.org/dharmafarer/wp-content/uploads/2009/12/26.2->

Buddhist-atomism-piya.pdf is a much later development, and it's somewhat different.

Malcolm wrote:
Not that different.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 30th, 2020 at 1:55 AM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

Queequeg said:

The insanity of our system is that he could possibly lose the popular vote by 10% and still get elected because of the electoral college.

Malcolm wrote:

No, the electoral math does not back that scenario up.

Queequeg said:

No? If say blue states went overwhelmingly blue, 99% blue with massive turnout, its not possible?

I haven't done the math so, I'll accept correction.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://fivethirtyeight.com/features/voters-are-starting-to-doubt-trumps-reelection-chances/>

Queequeg said:

For months now, President Trump has trailed Joe Biden in the polls. First, it was only a 5- or 6-percentage-point gap, but since the middle of June, that margin has widened to anywhere from 8 to 9 points, according to FiveThirtyEight's national polling average.

But until very recently, voters didn't seem all that convinced that Biden could win. In poll after poll, comparatively more voters said they thought Trump would win reelection in November. Now, though, that view may be shifting.

Over the past two and a half months, the share of voters who said they expect Trump to win has fallen from about 45 percent to around 40 percent in polling by The Economist/YouGov, as the chart below shows, while Biden's share has slowly ticked up to where Trump's numbers are. (Roughly a fifth of respondents still say they're "not sure.")

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 30th, 2020 at 3:31 AM

Title: Re: How to avoid imagining the tantric world as inherently existing?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It has already been pointed out to you that Jamgon Kongtrul states that sutra mahāmudra is for people who are not suited for Vajrayāna practice of any kind, people of lower capacity. Do you really need chapter and verse?

White Sakura said:

If it is in the book I started reading, Generation and Completion, then not. If it is in another book then: yes please and then I will try to believe what you say without citations.

Malcolm wrote:

Treasury of Knowledge, Esoteric Instructions, pg. 223-224. Here it is clearly stated that the sūtra mahāmudra tradition is taught in this degenerate age in order to introduce those who are not capable of practicing Vajrayāna in this moment as a practice to prepare them for it. It is also mentioned that in the present it is common to introduce everyone to sūtra mahāmudra because it is considered suitable for everyone.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 30th, 2020 at 5:56 AM

Title: Re: Biden's VP Choice

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I would prefer Susan Rice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 30th, 2020 at 5:56 AM

Title: Fox Vs. Fox

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 30th, 2020 at 5:57 AM

Title: Re: I don't want parinirvana, should I follow a different path?

Content:

DNS said:

Doesn't the bodhisattva vows include continual rebirth for helping other sentient beings?

Malcolm wrote:

This is misconception.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 30th, 2020 at 9:12 AM

Title: Re: Biden's VP Choice

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I would prefer Susan Rice.

Queequeg said:

I like Rice, too. She would immediately be the most qualified for the job of president. She seems "too safe", though. Might be the most competent to run the government as Steel suggests.

Malcolm wrote:

She is the person most qualified for the job. However, should Biden be short sighted enough to choose someone else, like Harris, Susan Rice would be my pick for Secretary of State.

I really hope he fills his cabinet with women.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 30th, 2020 at 9:21 AM

Title: Trump is toast...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In Michigan:

President Donald Trump's campaign is not currently running television or radio ads in Michigan and its allied super PAC has been dark in the state for most of July, a possible indication that the key Upper Midwestern battleground is beginning to fall out of reach.

Read more here: <https://www.mcclatchydc.com/news/politics-government/election/article244567752.html#storylink=cpy>

<https://www.newsandguts.com/link/mcclatchy-the-numbers-are-dismal-trump-campaign-super-pac-pause-ads-in-michigan/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 30th, 2020 at 11:10 AM

Title: Re: Biden's VP Choice

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I would prefer Susan Rice.

TharpaChodron said:

Susan Rice would be the best VP candidate. Being safe is okay right now, considering Biden himself is the loose canon to worry about. I'm not sure how much charisma she has, but she seems pleasant, something Harris sorely lacks.

I don't know how many people will cross party lines to vote for Biden, but with Harris as VP the number would be zero, with Rice there will be definitely be some republicans who vote for Biden and her (my 82 year old stepdad for one example)...

Malcolm wrote:

These days, merely being competent is all the charisma I want or need. I think given the covid debacle, there are going to be a lot of people who vote for Biden because they get the fact that their lives literally depend on it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 30th, 2020 at 7:08 PM

Title: Re: Biden's VP Choice

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

And a lot of people are happy they will finally get that war with Iran they have been wanting for so long!

Malcolm wrote:

That is a rather unfounded statement. Similar to the bullshit claims re: Hillary and nuclear war.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 30th, 2020 at 7:58 PM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Help Me Find Trump's 'Anarchists' in Portland

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/07/29/opinion/portland-protests-trump.html>:

If you want to call one side "rioters" or "anarchists" working to create tumult in Portland, it's the uninvited feds who qualify.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 30th, 2020 at 10:37 PM

Title: Re: Trump suggests delay election

Content:

PeterC said:

He has no authority to do that. Even congress doesn't.

He himself actually votes by mail, from Florida.

Malcolm wrote:
Illegally in fact, since his residence in Florida is illegal.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, July 30th, 2020 at 10:41 PM
Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Help Me Find Trump's 'Anarchists' in Portland
<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/07/29/opinion/portland-protests-trump.html>:
If you want to call one side "rioters" or "anarchists" working to create tumult in Portland, it's the uninvited feds who qualify.
There is a riot, a police riot:

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, July 30th, 2020 at 11:04 PM
Title: Trump eats his own...
Content:
Unknown said:
Herman Cain, the former Republican presidential candidate and business executive who was recently hospitalized with the coronavirus, has died. He was 74.

His death was announced on his website and social media accounts. Early this month, he said he had been hospitalized in the Atlanta area.

Mr. Cain, the former chief executive of Godfather's Pizza, tested positive for the virus after he attended President Trump's indoor rally in Tulsa, Okla., on June 20.

Malcolm wrote:
<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/07/30/us/politics/herman-cain-dead.html?searchResultPosition=1>

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, July 30th, 2020 at 11:33 PM
Title: Re: Trump suggests delay election
Content:
Nemo said:
I hope it destroys the empires ability to wreck other countries.

Malcolm wrote:
No, not at all. Once we regain competent leadership, the US will be just as lethal as it ever was. Rome didn't fall in a day. Neither will the US.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 30th, 2020 at 11:41 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Lingpupa said:

For my money it could be this: there is a vacuum between A) the "ordinary" (scare quotes because I'm trying not to be dismissive) lay Buddhist who makes a few offerings, tries to avoid the 5 bad things (killing, stealing etc.), recites refuge prayers regularly or even something longer from time to time, perhaps incorporating some formal practice along the mindfulness lines while generally trying generally try to be a decent person and B) fully ordained monastics.

Varis said:

Or you could just practice seriously as a layperson without wearing a zen or getting a hair empowerment, and the whole acting like a Tibetan Brahmin.

Malcolm wrote:

For example:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 12:09 AM

Title: Re: Trump suggests delay election

Content:

Nemo said:

I hope it destroys the empires ability to wreck other countries.

Malcolm wrote:

No, not at all. Once we regain competent leadership, the US will be just as lethal as it ever was. Rome didn't fall in a day. Neither will the US.

Nemo said:

Your cultural capital is so low now good luck with maintaining it in a profitable fashion.

Malcolm wrote:

We are still the largest economy in the world. As long as that is the case, well, you know the rest. It is not that I particularly admire the US's conduct in the world. But we are a pirate nation, always have been, and the booty has been abundant. We'll have our day, but not soon.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 12:11 AM

Title: Re: Trump eats his own...

Content:

PeterC said:

He just had to go and kill the token black guy, didn't he...

Malcolm wrote:

Yup.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 1:59 AM

Title: Re: I don't want parinirvana, should I follow a different path?

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

This is why it is best to treat Buddhadharma as an experiential path, not some collection of theories that you buy into in order to be correct, to be religious or spiritual, or whatever.

Malcolm wrote:

"Waiter?"

"Yes? Would you like to order now, sir?"

"Yes, thanks. I'll have a bit of Vipassana as my starter. I'd also like some Zen with that too. For my beverage, I'll have some mind training. For my main course, I'll have some Mahāmudra. For desert I think I'll have some Pure Land."

"Will that be all? And, do you have any allergies sir?"

"Thanks for asking. Make sure the chef holds the nirvana, I am allergic to it."

"We don't use any nirvana in this establishment, sir. I'll be right back with your beverage."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 3:15 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

pemachophel said:

IMO, the only ngakpa that matters is the one who actually has ngak. Even if one does have ngak, better to be a bay-pai naljor/hidden yogi in this day and age.

Könchok Thrinley said:

What is ngak?

Malcolm wrote:

mantra. Pema Chophel means that a mantrin is someone who actually activated the power of mantra in their voice. This is not necessarily a function of how many mantras one has recited however. It is more a function of quality.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 5:29 AM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is a riot, a police riot:

Modus.Ponens said:

I would love to know what actually happened instead of the BS this guy is saying happened.

Malcolm wrote:

You are unbelievable. It is quite clear this man was assaulted without provocation by federal officers.

Modus.Ponens said:

Many more have DIED as a result of police defunding and consequent crime surge.

Malcolm wrote:

Total nonsense:

"Police officers are not as successful as people think at solving violent crime. My Brookings colleagues Andre Perry, David Harshbarger, Carl Romer, and Kristian Thymianos argue that "the failure to prosecute murderous police typifies a bad overall track record with solving violent crimes: Approximately 38% of murders, 66% of rapes, 70% of robberies, and 47% of aggravated assaults go uncleared every year." Maybe in baseball or basketball these rates make a player an all-star, but the public expects police officers to be more successful at solving violent crime.

More importantly, police stops relative to charges and convictions are relatively low. To show how egregious this is, a study of the NYPD stop-and-frisk program found that well over 90% of people stopped by the police were not committing any crime and did not have any contraband or weapons on them. Overwhelmingly, the people stopped were Black and Latino, and physical force was used half the time. Interestingly, police were more successful at identifying criminality for whites versus Blacks. This is because officers use suspicious behavior when interacting with whites and use skin tone as the metric of suspicion when interacting with Black people. More police on the streets may be used to control the movement of Black bodies rather than solving crime. This is why the New York State Supreme Court ruled stop-and-frisk as unconstitutional. No-knock warrants and chokeholds should follow this pattern.

<https://www.brookings.edu/blog/fixgov/2020/06/19/what-does-defund-the-police-mean-and-does-it-have-merit/>

Modus.Ponens said:
But extremists never take responsibility for their awful mistakes.

Malcolm wrote:
The only extremist I see here is you.

Modus.Ponens said:
There have also been peaceful protests, but the article I linked above shows many stores across the country protecting themselves with plie wood and appeasing slogans. So the riots have been abundant and widespread.

Malcolm wrote:
Oh hardly.

Modus.Ponens said:
Most irritating of all is the LIE. I will repeat. The LIE that the agents are not identified. Their ID is in the top of their arms. Talk about gaslighting!

Malcolm wrote:
Again, you are actually engaging in a falsehood. DHS's own website:
In Portland, officers are not wearing name tags because of doxing attacks against law enforcement officers, which threaten the safety of not only our officers but also of their families. In the absence of individual names, each officer wears a unique identifier.
<https://www.dhs.gov/news/2020/07/27/myth-vs-fact-50-nights-violence-chaos-and-anarchy-portland-oregon>

Modus.Ponens said:
Further, they are not obligated to read miranda rights depending on what they are arresting the person for. And unmarked cars are used by police all the time. This "gestapo" narrative is insane bullsh*t spread by antifa and their sympathisers.

Malcolm wrote:
The person spreading bullshit here is you. Troll.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 5:34 AM
Title: Re: I don't want parinirvana,should I follow a different path?
Content:

Artziebetter1 said:

I don't want Nirvana. So have I ALREADY Abandoned the Dharma?

Malcolm wrote:

Samsara is one extreme; nirvana is another extreme. In Mahāyāna, we go beyond these two extremes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 7:29 AM

Title: Re: Portland's protests were supposed to be about black lives. Now, they're white spectacle.

Content:

Modus.Ponens said:

I would love to know what actually happened instead of the BS this guy is saying happened.

Malcolm wrote:

You are unbelievable. It is quite clear this man was assaulted without provocation by federal officers.

Modus.Ponens said:

It is 100% possible this man was ordered several times to disperse and, instead, decided to stand there. I don't believe antifa propaganda without proper evidence.

Malcolm wrote:

You don't live in the US. Your opinion means less than nothing. Mind your own damn business, troll.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 10:51 AM

Title: Re: Trump eats his own...

Content:

PeterC said:

It's a long-established hollywood horror film cliché. The black guy always dies. (Unless of course the black guy is Samuel L. Jackson...)

Jetavan said:

Though, in this case, it was the <https://www.motherjones.com/politics/2020/07/stephen-millers-grandmother-died-of-covid-19-her-son-blames-the-trump-administration/> who died first.

PeterC said:

Miller is still denying that she died of Covid

<https://www.jpost.com/diaspora/stephen-miller-rejects-claim-grandmother-died-of-covid-636188>

He is a truly repugnant person - or should I say, an excellent test of how strong one's compassion really is.

Malcolm wrote:

He is not a person. He is a piece of shit in human form.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 12:08 PM

Title: Re: "A hammer blow to Pakistan's Buddhist heritage"

Content:

tingdzin said:

There are some people here with whom it is possible to have a good faith discussion. Others' replies are usually or always just repetition of (usually leftist) talking points, weak convoluted arguments, and rhetorical flourishes, and name calling.

Malcolm wrote:

Use a mirror dude, you're just talking about yourself. Your substantive contributions here are about fing nil.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 6:15 PM

Title: Re: I don't want parinirvana, should I follow a different path?

Content:

Artziebetter1 said:

I never took refuge with a teacher but I took refuge many times by myself saying I seek refuge in buddha, dharma and sangha. so I did become buddhist. I don't have a teacher, there are no buddhist lamas in my city.

Malcolm wrote:

There are teachers you can find online. And, yes, you are a Buddhist if you take refuge. Period. Some people think you have to undergo a little ceremony, but it's not true.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 6:33 PM

Title: Re: Off setting smoke pollution in the environment

Content:

tobes said:

I live in the mountains, and my property has many tall trees. My neighbor burns off incessantly (he actually has OCD) during the spring and autumn months, often with wet materials that cause a lot of smoke in the environment. I really feel that this disturbs many of the local spirits etc and I wonder if anyone can recommend a practice or two that can bring those beings definite benefit/ restore harmony in the environment.

I already do a daily tea offering/golden libation, plus tormas etc.

I don't know much about sur or sang etc.

Malcolm wrote:
Sang is your ticket.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 7:24 PM
Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police
Content:
Dan74 said:
I didn't, but looked it up now. Interesting:

<https://en.wiktionary.org/wiki/race>

What's your point?

In English the word xenophobic is not quite the same as racist.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, not quite the same, but just as wicked.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 7:29 PM
Title: Re: I don't want parinirvana, should I follow a different path?
Content:
DNS said:
Doesn't the bodhisattva vows include continual rebirth for helping other sentient beings?

Malcolm wrote:
This is misconception.

Crazywisdom said:
Very wrong, guy.

Malcolm wrote:
I assume you referring to my comment. It is a misconception that bodhisattva vows include taking rebirth continually. For example, royal bodhicitta is the motivation to attain buddhahood as fast as possible in order to be able to help sentient ad infinitum, but Buddhas do not take rebirth. Rebirth is a samsaric process to which only bodhisattvas below the eighth bhumi are subject. Eight stage+ bodhisattvas have power over birth as well. There is of course the captain motivation, vowing to attain buddhahood simultaneously with all sentient beings, and the Shepard motivation, vowing to make sure all sentient beings attain buddhahood before oneself. In Vajrayana, we generally consider the first of these three to be the most skillful.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 7:42 PM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, V. 10d: Rupayatana

Content:

PeterC said:

10d. The tangible is of eleven types

(Commentary) Eleven things are tangible things: the four primary elements, softness, hardness, weight, lightness, cold, hunger and thirst.

I thought it worth pausing on this briefly as at first glance, it's extremely counterintuitive. You have elements, properties, and physical sensations bundled together into the same category. Why?

Malcolm wrote:

They are things experienced by the tactile organ, the body, and which must be touched or experienced physically. For example, though one can see the earth element, etc., as form, in order sense it's weight, or other quality you must pick it up or feel it with your body organ. You cannot see the air element, but you can feel breezes, and so on. The sensations of the other three primary elements are self explanatory, fire feels hot, water feels wet.

As I said before, don't get lost in the weeds of the debates. It will not contribute to your understanding of the basic subject. Save that for when you have understood the root text and the basic commentary. Things that are absent here are taken up later. It is helpful to understand that the topics in the Kosha are recursive. For example, the most detailed discussion of avijnapti occurs in the beginning of chapter four, Karma. As I mentioned already, the formation skandha receives its major explication in chapter two, indriyas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 8:09 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Lingpupa said:

And finally, is it LARPing (is that a verb?) when a practitioner is told by their teacher that they not only can wear the red/white shawl, but that they should?

Malcolm wrote:

Should/shouldn't are quite relative. If one teacher prefers you to wear religious gear, and another teacher discourages it, should you wear it in the presence of the teacher who discourages it? I learned early we need to be flexible when I understood, for example, that Chogyal Namkhai Norbu strongly discouraged his students from offering prostrations to him, or wearing zens and so on.

Though I have all the requisites to be part of the white-robed, long-haired bunch, I prefer casual clothes and don't wear any religious gear at all. Other people feel they need to wear it, and that's fine with me. But I generally discourage it among my pupils. If I am cold, I prefer a non-religious shawl or blanket around the shoulders. So these things are quite relative. I've personally never met a teacher who insisted I wear some kind of gear. I doubt I would be that interested up in such a teacher. When I go to teachings I wear decent clothes, and do not dress like a hippy. The only difference between me and others is the length of my hair, which I have never cut in 16 years, though attrition through age means it is not as long as it was a decade ago.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 8:13 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

For example:

Grigoris said:

I find it VERY hard to believe that ChNN had never received the ngakpa empowerments, or did not hold the root and secondary commitments. VERY hard to believe.

Malcolm wrote:

Well he kept his hair short, until he retired, and never wore monastic robes or striped zens, etc., apart from one occasion I can recall, which he himself mentions, when he had to accept the position of Abbot of a small Drukpa Kagyu monastery in Tibet. Otherwise, he always wore track suits or jacket, shirt, and trousers, depending on what he was doing. And in later years, tracksuits were his invariable outfit for all occasions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 8:16 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Grigoris said:

As for those dissin' on people trying to hold ngakpa/ngakma samaya: Check your personal samaya and let others be responsible for theirs.

Nobody is forcing you to do anything and it is best not judge others for trying, just because you may not have the karmic inclination.

Malcolm wrote:

When I received this ordination from the great tertön, Kunzang Dechen Lingpa, the only thing he stressed was never to cut my hair, ever. Never have.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 10:14 PM

Title: Re: "A hammer blow to Pakistan's Buddhist heritage"

Content:

tingdzin said:

There are some people here with whom it is possible to have a good faith discussion. Others' replies are usually or always just repetition of (usually leftist) talking points, weak convoluted arguments, and rhetorical flourishes, and name calling.

however, I should not resort to easy shots to rile people just because they do the same, so I will try to desist.

tobes said:

.....or Shantideva himself advising how aspiring bodhisattvas might handle the issue. Or is he just some leftist??

In case you missed it:

"Should others talk badly of or even destroy

Holy images etc of the sacred Dharma

It is improper of me to resent it

For the Buddhas can never be injured"

Shantideva, chp 6, 64.

PeterC said:

My friend, by now you should know that Shantideva is just another pinko commie. For instance:

What need to mention the wish to relieve each and every limited being of fathomless miseries, and the wish to help each and every limited being to actualize fathomless good qualities (1.22)

But how's he going to pay for all of this relieving beings of miseries? He's just going to blow up the deficit. We need fiscal discipline.

Throughout my beginningless samsaric existence, in this and other lives, I've unwittingly committed negative acts or caused others to commit (them) , and further,

Oppressed by the confusion of naivety, I've rejoiced (in them) – whatever I've done, I see them as mistakes and openly admit (them) to you, my Guardians, from the depths of my heart.(2.28-29)

This cancel culture has really got out of hand. Now we have to apologize for things that were done before we were even alive? I've always treated sentient beings well. Some of my best friends are sentient beings.

So long as wandering beings fall sick, may I serve as the medicine, the doctors and their nurse, until they've been cured of their illness. May I eliminate the pain of hunger and thirst with a shower of food and drink; and, in the times of the middle eons of famine, may I myself change into food and drink. (3.7-8)

After the failure of Obamacare we all know that socialized medicine doesn't work. I mean, look at Canada, people are dying in the street there! And this talk of providing food and drink for free - this is just going to create another generation of welfare queens. People who are disturbed by sickness are powerless over all their actions. Those whose minds are disturbed by bewilderment are likewise powerless over all their actions. (4.24) We cannot be letting people use insanity as a defence for crimes. We need to be tough on crime. Without law and order, we will have anarchy.

There've been many people with material wealth and there've been many with fame and reputation. But it's never been known that they've passed on to some place where their amassed wealth and fame have come with.

Now he's putting down the job creators that fuel our economy. When did we stop looking up to successful people in this country?

As many women as there are in the world, may they attain the status of men; and may the lowly attain high position, and the arrogant become humble.

There are those in this country who still hold to the traditional order of things. They know, like VP Pence, that a woman's place is at home, looking after the children and supporting their man. And they know that while some people are destined for success and high office, there are some who just don't have the character, the breeding and the background for it. We upset this natural order at our peril.

Malcolm wrote:

Absolutely brilliant. This is the best Dharma-based response to right-wing, conservative bullshit I have ever seen. Bravo!

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 11:05 PM

Title: Re: I don't want parinirvana, should I follow a different path?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Very wrong, guy.

Malcolm wrote:

I assume you referring to my comment. It is a misconception that bodhisattva vows include taking rebirth continually. For example, royal bodhicitta is the motivation to attain buddhahood as fast as possible in order to be able to help sentient ad infinitum, but Buddhas do not take rebirth. Rebirth is a samsaric process to which only bodhisattvas below the eighth bhumi are subject. Eight stage+ bodhisattvas have power over birth as well. There is of course the captain motivation, vowing to attain buddhahood simultaneously will all sentient beings, and the Shepard motivation, vowing to make sure all sentient beings attain buddhahood before oneself. In Vajrayana, we generally consider the first of these three to be the most skillful.

Crazywisdom said:

This is clearly a sectarian stance, because Lord Jigten Sumgon asserts the latter motivation to ensure others go first is the best motivation for vajrayana. This is in Gongchig which all Kagyu sects agree with.

Malcolm wrote:

Then this is also a sectarian stance.

Crazywisdom said:

think you are incorrect about Buddhas. They do take rebirth in the womb, but not based on samsaric attachment, but solely to fulfill the wishes of sentient beings.

Malcolm wrote:

This is not at all certain. A nirmalakaya displays the form of birth appropriate to where they are manifesting, but since the “Buddha” qua “Buddha” is the dharmakaya, no Buddha at any time ever took birth anywhere, and yet, sentient beings everywhere have never been abandoned.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 11:06 PM

Title: Re: I don't want parinirvana, should I follow a different path?

Content:

Grigoris said:

It takes a special type of egoistic foolishness to worry about whether one will realise enlightenment before others, or if one really wants to achieve parinirvana.

We cannot even control or transmute the basest occurrence of the the Three Poisons and we are concerning ourselves with what sort of enlightenment we will accomplish?

Priorities people!

King Harold.jpg

Malcolm wrote:

It matters.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 31st, 2020 at 11:07 PM

Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police

Content:

Pero said:

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=iUhdc1GAddk>

Malcolm wrote:
Saw this. Dumb.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 12:20 AM
Title: Re: After the Protests: Defund the Police
Content:
Pero said:
<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=iUhdc1GAddk>

Malcolm wrote:
Saw this. Dumb.

Pero said:
Why? Or which part? Their main point seemed to be that instead of defunding the police more training in various areas is required for them and not just once, higher standards for when you become a police officer, plus better screening of candidates. No doubt there are other issues too but this looks pretty sensible to me.

Malcolm wrote:
This video has been discussed. Police should not use choke holds. Period. We spend far too much on police considering how little crime they prevent, in fact. And crime rates have been dropping for years in this country. The recent spate of criminal violence is entirely related to COVID and unemployment in communities of color, not defunding or reallocating funds originally budgeted for police departments.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 1:01 AM
Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!
Content:
Varis said:
and the whole acting like a Tibetan Brahmin.

Grigoris said:
This shows a complete misunderstanding both of what it means to be a Brahmin and what it means to be a ngakpa. I mean I can think of a Gelug lama who is a layperson, doesn't wear zen, has short hair, etc.
Exception fallacy. Seems to me people want to LARP more than anything.
Seems you are being overly averse and judgmental for no reason at all.

Is dressing like a monk/nun LARP when a person has taken vows? Then why is dressing like a ngakpa/ngakma a LARP when somebody has taken ngakpa vows?

Do you know that Tibetan ngakpa/ngakma suffer the same sort of disrespect in the Tibetan ordained community? That they have had to fight with monks/nuns to be recognised as vow holders?

Malcolm wrote:

They have to sit behind the ordained sangha. Period. Why? They are not ordained. We humble ngakpas accept this, and don't make a fuss about it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 1:25 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

They have to sit behind the ordained sangha. Period. Why? They are not ordained. We humble ngakpas accept this, and don't make a fuss about it.

Grigoris said:

That's the least of the problems they encounter in their dealings with monks/nuns.

Malcolm wrote:

Ngakpas are often very poorly behaved. There is quite good reason for the poor view the Monastic Sangha have of ngakpas. Drinking to excess, womanizing, and excusing it all as "dharma practice." Not every ngakpa was as noble as HH Dudjom Rinpoche, Jikdral Yeshe Dorje or HH Sakya Trichen, in fact, probably very few. I am definitely not. So, I don't pretend. This is yet another reason why I do not wear that sort of gear. I don't live up to it, and I am not about to pretend I do.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 1:34 AM

Title: Re: I don't want parinirvana, should I follow a different path?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

yes I showed a sectarian stance by the opposing sectarian stance. We are discussing the relative view which is superior and nonbiased. Countering the relative with the ultimate is nonsequitur. Shakyamuni was born in Nepal to Mayadevi. The ultimate view is always a slight of hand argument to counter the relative. The question is which relative is superior.

Malcolm wrote:

"Superior" is also a relative judgement. It really depends on what criteria you are setting forth for "superior". Even a tenth stage bodhisattva does not have the omniscience of a samyaksambuddha. So the real question, if omniscience is one's criteria [it's mine], how will that omniscience can be achieved most expeditiously. If that is one's criteria, then most certainly the royal bodhicitta motivation is "superior."

As for the Buddha manifesting birth in Lumbini, this was not a real birth of a real person. Buddhas do not attain buddhahood in the desire realm. This is clearly stated in the Lankāvatāra and other sūtras. They attain buddhahood in Akaniṣṭha Ghanavyuha.

Śākyamuni Buddha's twelve deeds were like a puppet show, where mud and sticks are assembled to create an illusion of kings and queens, horses and elephants, and so on. A necessary illusion, but an illusion nevertheless.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 1:35 AM

Title: Re: I don't want parinirvana, should I follow a different path?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It matters.

If motivation does not count, then bodhicitta does not count. If bodhicitta does not count, then what are we doing here?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 1:42 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Grigoris said:

That's the least of the problems they encounter in their dealings with monks/nuns.

Malcolm wrote:

Ngakpas are often very poorly behaved. There is quite good reason for the poor view the Monastic Sangha have of ngakpas. Drinking to excess, womanizing, and excusing it all as "dharma practice." Not every ngakpa was as noble as HH Dudjom Rinpoche, Jikdral Yeshe Dorje or HH Sakya Trichen, in fact, probably very few. I am definitely not. So, I don't pretend. This is yet another reason why I do not wear that sort of gear. I don't live up to it, and I am not about to pretend I do.

Grigoris said:

Sounds self-defeating to me.

Why don't you wear the gear and make the effort to live up to it?

Malcolm wrote:

Because it's a pretense, where I am concerned. And I know it is pretense. I have enough pretenses already: ācārya, scholar, three-year retreat, Tibetan doctor, etc. I just don't need to add one more: ngakpa. I mean, I tried it on for a while...but it just felt too pretentious. YMMV

Grigoris said:

I rarely wear the full gear, but when I do I am on my best behaviour.

Rinpoche wants us to wear it when we are doing formal practice and/or when we are representing the tradition.

Malcolm wrote:

Different strokes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 1:43 AM

Title: Re: I don't want parinirvana, should I follow a different path?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If motivation does not count, then bodhicitta does not count. If bodhicitta does not count, then what are we doing here?

Grigoris said:

Personally I think it is highly unrealistic of me to be racking my brain about what sort of Bodhisattva path I am on. I think the point of divergence is a long way off for me to worry about which fork I will take.

I just practice, as the end goal is the same regardless.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a point of divergence, it is one's starting point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 1:45 AM

Title: Rats flee the ship...

Content:

Unknown said:

I have voted Republican in every presidential election since 1980, including voting for Donald Trump in 2016. I wrote op-eds and a law review article protesting what I believe was an unconstitutional investigation by Robert Mueller. I also wrote an op-ed opposing President Trump's impeachment.

But I am frankly appalled by the president's recent tweet seeking to postpone the November election. Until recently, I had taken as political hyperbole the Democrats' assertion that President Trump is a fascist. But this latest tweet is fascistic and is itself grounds for the president's immediate impeachment again by the House of Representatives and his removal from office by the Senate.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/07/30/opinion/trump-delay-election-coronavirus.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 2:13 AM

Title: Re: Biden's VP Choice

Content:

Grigoris said:

What is Biden's position on the concentration camps on the southern border?

Any plans for the seperated children?

Malcolm wrote:

It's all here, first 100 days:

<https://joebiden.com/immigration/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 2:20 AM

Title: Re: I don't want parinirvana,should I follow a different path?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a point of divergence, it is one's starting point.

Grigoris said:

How so? All Bodhisattva aim to perfect the Paramita.

Whether I choose to perfect them as a King, Captain or Shepherd...

Malcolm wrote:

It matter in terms of how quickly one manifests the result, from a causal and result vehicle perspective. Generally, it is explained in Nyingma and Sakya, it is a more suitable motivation for those who enter secret mantra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 3:00 AM

Title: Re: I don't want parinirvana,should I follow a different path?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

yes I showed a sectarian stance by the opposing sectarian stance. We are discussing the relative view which is superior and nonbiased. Countering the relative with the ultimate is nonsequitur. Shakyamuni was born in Nepal to Mayadevi. The ultimate view is always a slight of hand argument to counter the relative. The question is which relative is superior.

Malcolm wrote:

"Superior" is also a relative judgement. It really depends on what criteria you are setting forth for "superior". Even a tenth stage bodhisattva does not have the omniscience of a samyaksambuddha. So the real question, if omniscience is one's criteria [it's mine], how will that omniscience can be achieved most expeditiously. If that is one's criteria, then most certainly the royal bodhicitta motivation is "superior."

As for the Buddha manifesting birth in Lumbini, this was not a real birth of a real person. Buddhas do not attain buddhahood in the desire realm. This is clearly stated in the Lankāvatāra and other sūtras. They attain buddhahood in Akaniṣṭha Ghanavyuha.

Śākyamuni Buddha's twelve deeds were like a puppet show, where mud and sticks are assembled to create an illusion of kings and queens, horses and elephants, and so on. A necessary illusion, but an illusion nevertheless.

Crazywisdom said:

This is not correct. You are correct in identifying that superior is relative. Expeditiousness is also relative. Omniscience is also my criteria. But the question is the threshold. Assuming there is more merit in hurrying than being patient is not logical. Just because one wants something quickly does not mean that is what makes it happen. There is much merit in patience. That is Lord Jigten Sumgon point.

Malcolm wrote:

As I mentioned, this is a secret mantra criteria. From the point of view of sūtra, the royal motivation is the least courageous.

Crazywisdom said:

It is not in sutras where the explantation of Buddha taking birth in the human realm for the purpose of liberating beings is mentioned. This is mentioned by the gurus of vajrayana.

Malcolm wrote:

What is the antecedent of "it" and "this" here? I don't follow you.

Crazywisdom said:

The Dalai Lama for example has stated in various places that the reason a bodhisattva or a buddha takes birth is not due to negative karma but do to aspiration prayers. So your comments about sutras are not persuasive.

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on the bodhisattva. For example, due to the negative karma of killing the thief, it is said that the sea captain briefly endured rebirth in hell. This is well known.

Of course Buddhas have no negative karma, their descent from Tuṣita up to parinirvana is just a play, a show, a display, as the Mahāyāna sūtras point out.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 4:46 AM

Title: Re: I don't want parinirvana, should I follow a different path?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

This is not correct. You are correct in identifying that superior is relative. Expeditiousness is also relative. Omniscience is also my criteria. But the question is the threshold. Assuming there is more merit in hurrying than being patient is not logical. Just because one wants something quickly does not mean that is what makes it happen. There is much merit in patience. That is Lord Jigten Sumgon point.

Malcolm wrote:

As I mentioned, this is a secret mantra criteria. From the point of view of sūtra, the royal motivation is the least courageous.

Crazywisdom said:

It is not in sutras where the explanation of Buddha taking birth in the human realm for the purpose of liberating beings is mentioned. This is mentioned by the gurus of vajrayana.

Malcolm wrote:

What is the antecedent of "it" and "this" here? I don't follow you.

Crazywisdom said:

The Dalai Lama for example has stated in various places that the reason a bodhisattva or a buddha takes birth is not due to negative karma but due to aspiration prayers. So your comments about sutras are not persuasive.

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on the bodhisattva. For example, due to the negative karma of killing the thief, it is said that the sea captain briefly endured rebirth in hell. This is well known.

Of course Buddhas have no negative karma, their descent from Tuṣita up to parinirvana is just a play, a show, a display, as the Mahāyāna sūtras point out.

Crazywisdom said:

you just contradicted yourself. The Dalai Lama has mentioned several times it is not karma that causes a buddha to take birth in human form but aspiration prayers. Motivation honestly is not a cause. Having the right solution is a cause.

Malcolm wrote:

Aspirations are not driven by motivation? If not, then what?

And no, I did not contradict myself. If so, where?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 7:42 AM

Title: Re: I don't want parinirvana, should I follow a different path?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Even a tenth stage bodhisattva does not have the omniscience of a samyaksambuddha.

Losal Samten said:

They're still called omniscient though iirc? What's the difference between the omniscience of one and the other?

Malcolm wrote:

A sliver of knowledge obscuration.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 9:11 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Toenail said:

If you can only wear ngakpa dresses when you are Dudjom Rinpoche, you can only wear monk robes if you are Atisha.

Malcolm wrote:

People are free, they can wear what they want. I was talking about what I comfortable wearing. It was not a recommendation for others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 9:51 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Cinnabar said:

I'm a bit curious why this subject generates such strong emotions.

I remember wearing my zen and getting called out. Who gave you the zen? In what context? Why are you wearing that? Do you know what that means? Then on a different occasion, not wearing my zen and getting called out. Why aren't you wearing your zen? Don't you take your vows seriously? Don't you know that this is a commitment, a vow?

I've found few things in Tibetan Buddhism that draws so many projections.

It seems I've been either having this conversation, or listening to it from afar, for decades now.

Malcolm wrote:

The funny thing is, the striped zen is strictly a Tibetan innovation. Ancient ngakpas during the Imperial period wore white, head to toe.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 10:23 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The funny thing is, the striped zen is strictly a Tibetan innovation. Ancient ngakpas during the Imperial period wore white, head to toe.

Losal Samten said:

Why not blue?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, India there was a custom of mantrins wearing blue shirts. Thus also spread to Tibet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 6:54 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Danny said:

The above makes my point. It has become something negative in some people's minds already.

Varis said:

What might rub people off wrong is people who pretend to be a part of another culture.

The negativity towards zen is symptomatic of such a thing.

Doesn't really matter if you dress up in a zen, or in a kente.

You don't have to live your life as a medieval Tibetan to be a real dharma practitioner, for Christ's sake.

Dharma is cultureless, it has always been so and always will be.

Malcolm wrote:

Wearing a a zen is not cultural appropriation. Neither is wearing Ngakpa gear, if one in fact possesses the correct empowerments and so forth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 6:57 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Grigoris said:

Hell, the PratyekaBuddhas show us that you don't even need to be a Buddhist to achieve enlightenment.

Malcolm wrote:

You do need to have formed pratyekabuddha bodhicitta in a previous life while training under a Buddha. Hence pratyekabuddhas are Buddhists.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 6:59 PM

Title: Re: I don't want parinirvana,should I follow a different path?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

you just contradicted yourself. The Dalai Lama has mentioned several times it is not karma that causes a buddha to take birth in human form but aspiration prayers. Motivation honestly is not a cause. Having the right solution is a cause.

Malcolm wrote:

Aspirations are not driven by motivation? If not, then what?

And no, I did not contradict myself. If so, where?

Crazywisdom said:

you said royal is least courageous that is where i am aware of the aspirations and motivation situation and here is a very sharp thorn

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, according to sutra. It is still the preferred bodhicitta motivation in vajrayana. Ymmv.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 7:43 PM

Title: Re: "A hammer blow to Pakistan's Buddhist heritage"

Content:

Minobu said:

what i just read from peter , whom i don't know from Adam, is either sarcastic comedy relief or blatant anger

Malcolm wrote:

Clearly the former.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 10:00 PM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, V. 11-13d: Avijnapti-rupa

Content:

PeterC said:

This section is a little more complex. It starts off with a discussion of the avijnapti, which is a special form of rupa that contains (if I understand it correctly) non-manifest action. Then it goes into a discussion of the mahabhutas - the primary elements of earth, water, fire and wind. Avijnapti is formed by the elements. The discussion on the elements makes sense, but it's a little unclear why we need to have avijnapti in the theory at all.

Malcolm wrote:

Vows, that's the only reason for the introduction of this type of matter. As I said, this is discussed more fully at the beginning of chapter 4.

Sometimes I think I shouldn't bother contributing to this discussion, even though I am the only person here who has actually received teachings on this text in its entirety.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 1st, 2020 at 11:07 PM

Title: Re: How to avoid imagining the tantric world as inherently existing?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Astus is uninitiated so we cannot quote tantra.

Malcolm wrote:

Astus received the fivefold mahamudra empowerment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 2nd, 2020 at 2:47 AM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, V. 11-13d: Avijnapti-rupa

Content:

PeterC said:

This section is a little more complex. It starts off with a discussion of the avijnapti, which is a special form of rupa that contains (if I understand it correctly) non-manifest action. Then it goes into a discussion of the mahabhutas - the primary elements of earth, water, fire and wind. Avijnapti is formed by the elements. The discussion on the elements makes sense, but it's a little unclear why we need to have avijnapti in the theory at all.

Malcolm wrote:

Vows, that's the only reason for the introduction of this type of matter. As I said, this is discussed more fully at the beginning of chapter 4.

PeterC said:

Thanks - that makes sense. So it's the formation of karma from intent?

Malcolm wrote:

The way the Sarvāstivādin's conceive it, taking vows causes a material change of state of the material aggregate. One cannot perceive it, hence it is called avijñāpti-rūpa, imperceptible matter. When the vow is broken or relinquished, this causes another change of the state of one's material aggregate.

Sautrantikas reject this idea in toto. They say, simply, vows are intents, until they are disrupted by another intent. This is actually the basis for the Tibetan Buddhist position that the five upāsaka vows cannot all be broken if one is broken, and one can keep one, two, three or all, depending on one's situation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 2nd, 2020 at 2:48 AM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, V. 11-13d: Avijnapti-rupa

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Vows, that's the only reason for the introduction of this type of matter. As I said, this is discussed more fully at the beginning of chapter 4.

Sometimes I think I shouldn't bother contributing to this discussion, even though I am the only person here who has actually received teachings on this text in its entirety.

Grigoris said:

I thoroughly appreciate your input. Please stick around for us dummies.

Truth is that you have already answered to this question in the sections I had commented on.

So you believe we should just power through these sections since they are explained more fully in other chapters?

Up to which section/chapter/verse?

Malcolm wrote:

I would recommend you not get too bogged down in the Talmudic details. They can always be revisited later, and should be, but not on the first go through.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 2nd, 2020 at 2:49 AM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, V. 11-13d: Avijnapti-rupa

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

Could the wind that is seen refer to smoke, fog, or mist?

PeterC said:

Fog, smoke and mist would have been covered within the twenty-fold classification of visible matter in 10a - ie as visible forms. So I guess yes?

Malcolm wrote:

No, they are forms, which means they are essentially colored matter. as you may recall, Sarvastivadins try to distinguish visual shape and color; Sautrantikas reject this and assert visual shape is defined by color.

It is also useful to understand that these definitions of matter are being defined from the point of view of the sense organ they serve as objects for.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 2nd, 2020 at 5:15 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Mantrik said:

I'm not much fussed about the ordination, just curious. The one due for the UK would not have had it either, apparently - hundreds attending in a sports centre, which I would not enjoy.

treehuggingoctopus said:

I guess so. I got the impression -- on the basis of his (translated, of course) comments -- that he does not consider the hair bit important at all. (He was really happy to see Western zendra-wearing ngakpas, though. Said so, at least.)

Mantrik said:

Well, if anyone can change the format, he can. He may have assumed most folk would have asked for exemption anyway. I wouldn't need to, being retired and having very little hair left! lol

Malcolm wrote:

The hair empowerment is an add on. It's not part of the main Troma empowerment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 2nd, 2020 at 5:19 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Grigoris said:

THE WEARING OF THE ACCOUTERMENTS IS PART OF THE PRACTICE'S SAMAYA.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a bit of an exaggeration. I've received this empowerment three times, from three different lamas, not one of them ever asserted we were now obligated to wear ngakpa regalia. Your lama May have done so, YMMV.

Sangye Khandro received this directly from the previous HH Dudjom Rinpoche, and I have never seen her rocking ngakpa regalia, not even once. But please don't tell this samaya does not apply to women, since that would make no sense.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 2nd, 2020 at 5:33 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The hair empowerment is an add on. It's not part of the main Troma empowerment.

Losal Samten said:

Any history on why it was added?

Malcolm wrote:

It's connected with Dzogchen teachings on freedom from fabrication.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 2nd, 2020 at 7:57 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

pemachophel said:

According to one of my Teachers in Kham, there is a Jigme Lingpa ngakpa ordination that one person can only give to 13 others in their entire lifetime.

That Teacher always wears the whole ngakpa kit. However, I know one of his Western students who asked for this ordination and then asked to be excused from some of its vows. Personally, that seems like a real contradiction.

Many Dharma Teachers will specify what clothing They want Their students to wear when. If the Teacher has given explicit teachings on this, then following those teachings becomes a samaya. For me, that's the end of discussion.

Because I have different Teachers with different points of view on this, I wear different clothes when I'm with different Teachers. No big deal.

Malcolm wrote:

Dharma teachers should not be concerned with what clothes their students wear, in my opinion, unless the students are indecently dressed or wear too much damn patchouli (I.e any). Ymmv.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 2nd, 2020 at 7:58 AM

Title: Re: Biden's VP Choice

Content:

DNS said:

Biden was supposed to announce his VP choice next week, but now all of a sudden has postponed it until the 2nd week in August. Previously it was rumored that Kamala Harris would be the pick based on his exposed notes. Some pundits have suggested that this didn't sit well with the left wing of the Party, so that is why he is extending the process and now believe Harris is out and Bass has moved up to the top of the list as potential VP.

<https://www.cnn.com/2020/07/31/politics/joe-biden-running-mate/index.html>

Malcolm wrote:

Bass is fine. Still prefer Rice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 2nd, 2020 at 9:12 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dharma teachers should not be concerned with what clothes their students wear, in my opinion, unless the students are indecently dressed or wear too much damn patchouli (I.e any). Ymmv.

Cinnabar said:

Nor should students be concerned with what clothes their dharma siblings wear.

Malcolm wrote:
Agreed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 2nd, 2020 at 9:13 AM

Title: Re: Biden's VP Choice

Content:

DNS said:

Biden was supposed to announce his VP choice next week, but now all of a sudden has postponed it until the 2nd week in August. Previously it was rumored that Kamala Harris would be the pick based on his exposed notes. Some pundits have suggested that this didn't sit well with the left wing of the Party, so that is why he is extending the process and now believe Harris is out and Bass has moved up to the top of the list as potential VP.

<https://www.cnn.com/2020/07/31/politics/joe-biden-running-mate/index.html>

Malcolm wrote:
Bass is fine. Still prefer Rice.

DNS said:
I prefer Tulsi, but unfortunately that ain't happening.

Malcolm wrote:
She's a republican.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 2nd, 2020 at 9:15 AM

Title: Re: Off setting smoke pollution in the environment

Content:

tobes said:

I live in the mountains, and my property has many tall trees. My neighbor burns off incessantly (he actually has OCD) during the spring and autumn months, often with wet materials that cause a lot of smoke in the environment. I really feel that this disturbs many of the local spirits etc and I wonder if anyone can recommend a practice or two that can bring those beings definite benefit/ restore harmony in the environment.

I already do a daily tea offering/golden libation, plus tormas etc.

I don't know much about sur or sang etc.

Malcolm wrote:
Sang is your ticket.

tobes said:

Yes, I suspect it is. Any suggestions for how I might dispel my considerable ignorance about it?

Malcolm wrote:

I think the late lama tarchin has a video explaining rows sangcho.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 2nd, 2020 at 10:33 AM

Title: Re: Biden's VP Choice

Content:

DNS said:

I prefer Tulsii, but unfortunately that ain't happening.

Malcolm wrote:

She's a republican.

DNS said:

Perhaps (ideologically, not officially), but a good one. She's anti-war. She supported Bernie in 2016.

Malcolm wrote:

There are no good republicans. Personally, I think she is an idiot. And they hate her in HI.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 2nd, 2020 at 6:58 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

yagmort said:

where is the statue of Dudjom Lingpa in blue skirt.

aside from Lama Dawa Chödrak Rinpoche as mentioned by Pema Chopel i got it blue shirt is not that common among ngakpa practitioners ?

Malcolm wrote:

Every ngakpa has their own style.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 2nd, 2020 at 7:01 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Fa Dao said:

This will probably raise some hackles around here but the whole idea of "cultural appropriation" is simply one of the most ridiculous things I've heard in a very long time...And that now some go so far as calling it "racist" is beyond mind boggling...

Malcolm wrote:

Well, there is such a thing as cultural appropriation and it can be quite racist. For example:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 2nd, 2020 at 7:39 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Well, there is such a thing as cultural appropriation and it can be quite racist. For example:

Danny said:

They should teach bury my heart at wounded knee in schools.

jake said:

It was required reading for me in 10th grade, public school.

Let's get back to topic folks.

Malcolm wrote:

It's part of the topic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 2nd, 2020 at 7:44 PM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, V. 13d - 17b: Designation as Rupaskandha, vijñānaskandha and manas

Content:

PeterC said:

14a-b. These same organs and objects are regarded as ten āyatanas, ten dhātus. Ok, I'm a bit lost here. Why ten and not twelve? Are manas-āyatana (mind) and dharma-āyatana (thought) excluded? The list in the text mentions sprastavyāyatana and sprastavyadhātu at the end of the list, so...presumably that makes ten? I guess this is because we haven't yet discussed citta, and because although we've discussed avijnapti we haven't yet discussed how this becomes dharma?

Malcolm wrote:

[/quote]

We are only talking here about the material skandha, that which is made of the four elements: the five sense organs and five sense objects. And let that sink in. If the five sense objects are part of our material skandha...

Then there's a long digression in the commentary of which it's probably worth noting: Also the Blessed One said, "The updanaskandha called samskara is so called because it conditions conditioned things," that is to say, because it creates and determines the five skandhas of future existence.

So we continue with the definitions:

15b-d. These three skandhas, with avijnapti and unconditioned things, are the dharmayatana, the dharmadhatu.

(Commentary) Vedanaskandha, samjnaskandha, samskaraskandha, plus avijnapti and the three unconditioned things (extinction through analysis, extinction not through analysis, and space), are seven things which are called dharmadhatu.

So now we have almost the full set, and go on to define the aggregate of consciousness.

PeterC said:

16a. Consciousness is the impression relative to each object.

(Commentary) Vijñānaskandha is the impression relative to each object, the "raw grasping" of each object...(the) six classes of consciousness.

(footnote) ...it grasps the blue, etc. but does not say that it is blue, etc.

The text then explains that considered as an āyatana it is the mental organ; considered as a dhatu, it is the dhatus of the five sense aggregates plus manovijñānadhatu plus manodhatu. I found this a little confusing. There is a three-part system – object/faculty/consciousness. Isn't it duplicative if this skandha contains both manovijñānadhatu and manodhatu?

Malcolm wrote:

The three classifications are defined by intelligence—skandhas, āyatanas, dhātus; or depth of vipāśyāna—dhātus, āyatanas, dhātus. Both in descending order from best to worst.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 2nd, 2020 at 9:39 PM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, V. 13d - 17b: Designation as Rupaskandha, vijñānaskandha and manas

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The three classifications are defined by intelligence—skandhas, āyatanas, dhātus; or depth of vipāśyāna—dhātus, āyatanas, dhātus. Both in descending order from best to worst.

PeterC said:

Malcolm - could you say a bit more about that? Or will it be covered later in the text?

Malcolm wrote:

It will be covered, but in brief, very intelligent people can infer the other two from the skandhas. Very good mediators can meditate the dhatus more in depth, since the dharmadhatu contains all the compounded and un compounded dharmas, other than the matter, sensation and perception aggregate, and it breaks out the six sense consciousnesses from the mano ayatana.

Recall, the whole purpose this to undermine the notion of self of the person. So, put another way, if one's material aggregate includes all sense objects, it isn't really "one's" material aggregate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 3rd, 2020 at 12:49 AM

Title: Re: Historical Buddha

Content:

SuryaMitra said:

Do we have any historical proof that Shakyamuni Buddha existed ?

Malcolm wrote:

Is there any proof you exist? For all we know you could be a bot.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 3rd, 2020 at 5:56 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Cinnabar said:

I'm back to my original question: Why is this always such a hot topic?

The reality of some people with vows wearing robes while some people with vows not wearing robes hardly seems challenging.

Not controversial enough for it to be a perennial subject of debate.

There has to be a deeper thing going on here...?

Norwegian said:

I don't really know the answer to be honest. But ngakpas for some reason has become a sort of special mythologized class here in the West. For example, why isn't the ideal of the hidden yogi viewed with the same amount of interest and excitement?

heart said:

It is, but no one notice it.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:
Heh.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 3rd, 2020 at 5:56 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Fa Dao said:

yeaaahh..heres the thing man..I live in New Mexico and know LOTS of Natives..have been invited to dances etc...most that watch football..yep you guessed it, the Redskins are their TEAM!! I have not found one Native yet that has been in ANY way offended, outraged what have you by the WA Redskins...

Malcolm wrote:

You have not looked very hard then:

<https://www.theonefeather.com/2020/07/indian-country-reacts-to-retiring-of-redskins-name-and-logo/>

Fa Dao said:

Indian Country reacts to retiring of Redskins name and logo

The Washington NFL organization announced on the morning of Monday, July 13 that it was retiring its Redskins name and logo. Following are comments and statements from leaders and organizations throughout Indian Country on this decision:

United South and Eastern Tribes (USET) President Kirk Francis

“USET SPF is encouraged and heartened that, at long last, this disparaging and racist word will no longer be used in professional sports. We extend our deep gratitude to all the advocates and allies who never wavered in their efforts to achieve today’s win. While it should have been relegated to America’s racist past long ago, we welcome this change as an opportunity for education, growth, and reconciliation, as the nation acknowledges its historic and ongoing shameful acts against tribal nations and Native people. It is our hope that the team’s new name and logo will truly reflect our evolution as a society. Bottom line, our people and cultures are not mascots and the time is long past due for us to be properly respected, not only within sports teams, but in all aspects.”

National Congress of American Indians

“Today is a day for all Native people to celebrate. We thank the generations of tribal nations, leaders, and activists who worked for decades to make this day possible. We commend the Washington NFL team for eliminating a brand that disrespected, demeaned, and stereotyped all Native people, and we call on all other sports teams and corporate brands to retire all caricatures of Native people that they use as their mascots. We are not mascots – we are Native people, citizens of more than 500 tribal nations who have stood strong for millennia and overcome countless challenges to reach this pivotal moment in time when we can help transform America into the just, equitable, and compassionate country our children deserve.”

Navajo Nation President Jonathan Nez and Navajo Nation Vice President Myron Lizer
“For generations, this team name and logo has misrepresented the true history and events that define the term ‘redskins’. History tells us that the term ‘redskins’ derived from bounty hunters, which identified Indigenous peoples by the color of their skin. Bounties were offered for the murder of Native Americans. Bounty hunters killed Native Americans, referenced as ‘redskins’, and brought to the market the stained, bloodied scalps in exchange for payment. This is the tragic and disgusting history that the world is not often told.”

Navajo Nation Council Speaker Seth Damon

“The changing of a national football franchise’s name is no small accomplishment. Today, we commend the work of Suzan Shown Harjo, Amanda Blackhorse, and others that have continued to push for this moment since 1992. The term had become so normalized to American society that it forgot, or thought it could dismiss, the violent and bloody history behind the very word. Throughout the years, we’ve continued to hope that a retired Washington ‘Redskins’ team name and logo could become a symbol of greater understanding of the misrepresentation that many Native nations continue to face today. No amount of symbolic ‘honoring’ can undo decades of cultural appropriation that have followed on the coat tails of centuries of extermination and exploitation.”

Ho-Chunk Nation President Marlon White Eagle

“We thank FedEx, Nike, corporate sponsors and all of those involved in this historic change. As Indigenous people inherent to this land called the United States of America, we have for a long time been portrayed and characterized in a negative stereotype. We are not mascots. The name change is long overdue.”

Billy Mills, Olympic Gold Medalist and National Spokesperson for Running Strong for American Indian Youth

“It’s never too late to do the right thing. Now, I urge the Washington football team to truly turn the page and pick a new name and logo with no exploitation of Native people. They are on the verge of righting a historic wrong. What they do next will define this team’s legacy.”

Ponca Tribe of Nebraska

“The Ponca Tribe of Nebraska is encouraged that this long-overdue moment has arrived, with one professional sports franchise abandoning a mascot that perpetuated a racial slur and another examining how Native American mascots are offensive and have no place in our society. Using Native Americans as sport mascots and our deeply meaningful symbols, including headdresses, are inappropriate. Advancing troubling stereotype in popular culture and society, via sports, diminishes our personhood. The Ponca Tribe of Nebraska is hopeful that other sports franchises will make the right decision by ceasing their use of derogatory and offensive mascots, and thereby examining their own use of mascots, chants, symbols, and themes that disparage our people.”

Crystal Echohawk, IllumiNative executive director

“This is 30 years in the making, and we honor the leaders of this movement, Suzan Harjo and Amanda Blackhorse, and important contributors such as Dr. Stephanie Fryberg, First Peoples Worldwide, and thousands of other Native organizations, people, and tribal leaders who have fought for this. Tomorrow, our fight continues. We will not rest until the offensive use of Native imagery, logos, and names are eradicated from professional, collegiate, and K-12 sports. The time is now to stand in solidarity and declare that racism will not be tolerated. ”

Malcolm wrote:

There are so many more, and the WSJ reports that 67 percent of people who identify as native find the name offensive, so...maybe you know the other 33 percent...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 3rd, 2020 at 5:58 AM

Title: Re: Historical Buddha

Content:

SuryaMitra said:

Thnx. But that`s not a proof. Asoka lived almost 200 years after Sakyamuni supposedly was born. Just like the Christian Evangelias were written after Jesus supposedly lived. And there`s no historical proof of Jesus's existence whatsoever.

Minobu said:

two things that are similar.

Emperor Constantine became a devout follower of Jesus 300 years after Jesus died. The emperor had access to Roman History and if it was some fable he would have known.

Same with King Ashoka , he would have known it was all myth .
my take on it anyway.

Malcolm wrote:

Ashoka must have been a reptilian.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 3rd, 2020 at 9:54 AM

Title: Re: Kyabje Dzogchen Pema Kalsang Rinpoche

Content:

PeterC said:

Has anyone received teachings from him?

May be worth moving this thread to the Dzogchen subforum

Malcolm wrote:

According to Tulku Dakpa, this master is the preeminent Dzogcheb master in Tibet at the present moment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 3rd, 2020 at 6:56 PM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, V. 17c -19d: Skandhas, ayatanas, dhatus

Content:

PeterC said:

So the commentary clarifies this inclusion point a little. The organ of sight is included within the rupaskandha because it is form, within the sight ayatana and the vision dhatu, within the truth of suffering and arising, but not within the other skandhas, ayatanas, etc.

Malcolm wrote:

It is good to reorient yourself from thinking of rupa as “form” unless rupa is referring to the object of the eye.

Rupaskandha is the material aggregate, not the form aggregate. So, the organ of sight is included in the material aggregate because it is matter, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 3rd, 2020 at 11:05 PM

Title: Re: Historical Buddha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The best proof of the Buddha’s historical existence is the plethora of polemics attacking his school.

SuryaMitra said:

Do we have any historical proof that Shakyamuni Buddha existed ?

Malcolm wrote:

Is there any proof you exist? For all we know you could be a bot.

SuryaMitra said:

There`s no proof I exist whatsoever

For me and for my practice it doesn't really matter, whether or not Sakyamuni was a historical person or not, but my friend who is on the beginning of the Dharma journey asked me if there`s a proof for Sakyamuni`s existence as a historical person, and it seems to matter for her, as she`s a beginner and doesn't have sufficient confidence in the Dharma and practice yet. I realised that in spite of 24 years of me practising I have never actually checked that out as it never mattered to me. But I am trying to be of help for someone who has doubts and is at the beginning of her Dharma journey.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 4th, 2020 at 7:20 AM

Title: Re: are all Buddhas in tibetan buddhism literal emanations of the Adi Buddha

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 4th, 2020 at 7:33 AM

Title: Re: Feeling Emotions

Content:

BlackCircle said:

I have a question about feelings. I wanted to know what Buddhism says about it. I heard it said that we don't genuinely feel anything during meditation. Does this mean that how we feel about events and things that happen to us is not real? Another person told me that we don't genuinely feel things in meditation because nothing is happening to cause such feelings but that out in the world we do because there is something happening. Is this true? What does it have to say in regards to our feelings, which some (including me) think are important to navigating the world and helping us decide.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, ones ass, knees, and hips will hurt in the beginning for sure.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 4th, 2020 at 8:49 AM

Title: Re: are all Buddhas in tibetan buddhism literal emanations of the Adi Buddha

Content:

Toenail said:

There are even Sutras exclusively dedicated to defining what a Buddha is. Why do you say all these wrong things? You post all the time but 90% is just bla bla. Do you want to harm people?

Malcolm wrote:

You go first, then we'll see how well your definitions stack up.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 5th, 2020 at 5:19 AM

Title: Re: are all Buddhas in tibetan buddhism literal emanations of the Adi Buddha

Content:

Toenail said:

There are even Sutras exclusively dedicated to defining what a Buddha is. Why do you say all these wrong things? You post all the time but 90% is just bla bla. Do you want to harm people?

Malcolm wrote:

You go first, then we'll see how well your definitions stack up.

Toenail said:

Im not playing your games, jit.

Malcolm wrote:

Chicken.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 5th, 2020 at 6:33 PM

Title: Re: Abhidharmakosabhasyam Book Club

Content:

PeterC said:

Anyone? Bueller?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, continue please.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 5th, 2020 at 7:28 PM

Title: Re: Tantra and level of concentration

Content:

n8pee said:

I was trained that mastery of the generation stage is being able to visualize the mandala without distraction for two hours. I was also told that when you can not only remove the apple from the tree, but place it back on the tree (via your meditation), you're ready for completion stage.

Lingpupa said:

Well that pretty much counts out me and everyone I ever met. Are you sure it isn't eight hours?

PeterC said:

In one of his introductory books HHDL mentions, I think, three or four hours stability as a sign of the development stage being well-developed

Instructions vary considerably

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this not a Sakya POV, which places emphasis on the completion stage right away.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 5th, 2020 at 9:38 PM

Title: Re: AKB, Ch. 1, V. 20: significance of the threefold skandhas/ayatana/dhatu system

Content:

PeterC said:

...but provides no further discussion of ayatana. So that seems straightforward. So on to dhatu, the definition of which above isn't immediately obvious:

Dhatu signifies gotra, race, lineage. In the same way that the place, the mountain, where there are many 'families' of gems – iron, copper, silver, gold – is said 'to have numerous dhatus', in this same way in the human complex or series, there are eighteen types of 'families' which are called the eighteen dhatus.

Gotra is thus a mine. ...

The dhatus are the mine of their own species: the eye, being a 'cause similar to its effect' of the later moments of the existence of the eye, is the mine, the dhatu of the eye.

I find this analogy distinctly unhelpful. It then says that the unconditioned things are dhatu in the sense that they are "the mine of the mind and mental states". This seems inconsistent – wouldn't that associate them with the mental consciousness?

Malcolm wrote:

This is actually a really important point, and shows why English translations of the term dhātu as "basic space" and so on are entirely inadequate. So, for example, the six elements are called the sadadhātu—earth, water, fire, air, space, and consciousness—grouped together because these elements are of the same genre, or family. Likewise, there are the genre of the mind, mental consciousness, and mental factors, etc.

Uncompounded dharmas are in the dharmadhātu, because they are strictly objects of the mind and mental consciousness. In this way, the three uncompounded dharmas are the of the same genre as 49 of the 51 mental (excluding sensation and perception, which are treated separately because they are also indriyas). In Tibetan, the term dharmadhātu in this context is translated as chos kyi kham, literally "dharma element," whereas in a Mahāyāna context, it is translated "chos kyi dbying," "source of phenomena" (all Tibetans gloss dbyings as a 'byung gnas, a place of production, which resembles the definition of a mine.)

PeterC said:

(Brief pause while we appreciate the elegance of this grouping and, at the same time, we all justify why we're in group #1.)

Malcolm wrote:

Well, we all are subject to the Dunning-Kruger effect, right? The main purpose of Abhidharma is to prove that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 6th, 2020 at 9:39 AM

Title: Re: TL;DR: We are screwed.

Content:

Queequeg said:

<https://www.nature.com/articles/s41598-020-63657-6?fbclid=IwAR2PVm0A-SgtFl4XLq-wfBsC3MVylNi1qlxzdK2naVQD5kK3zl5ibXCMbFA>

"Modern societies are in fact driven by Economy, and, without giving here a well detailed definition of "economical society", we may agree that such a kind of society privileges the interest of its components with less or no concern for the whole ecosystem that hosts them... Giving a very broad meaning to the concept of cultural civilisation as a civilisation not strongly ruled by economy, we suggest for avoiding collapse that only civilisations capable of such a switch from an economical society to a sort of "cultural" society in a timely manner, may survive."

Yeah, man. The paradigm needs to change.

How do we get there from here?

PeterC said:

I'm increasingly convinced that we need world population back down to where it was a century ago - so about two billion or so - which will buy us a few more centuries to figure this out. Otherwise civilization ends up in a state from which it never recovers.

Of course all the means of returning to that level are...problematic.

Malcolm wrote:

Try 1804. One billion, and keep it there.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 6th, 2020 at 9:59 AM

Title: Re: TL;DR: We are screwed.

Content:

PeterC said:

I'm increasingly convinced that we need world population back down to where it was a century ago - so about two billion or so - which will buy us a few more centuries to figure this out. Otherwise civilization ends up in a state from which it never recovers.

Of course all the means of returning to that level are...problematic.

Malcolm wrote:

Try 1804. One billion, and keep it there.

PeterC said:

That would be better. But then we need a 7/8 reduction rather than a 3/4 reduction in population. Either way only a combination of war, famine, disease etc. on a global scale achieve that.

Malcolm wrote:

It's going to happen anyway, but not before we wreck the world.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 6th, 2020 at 7:29 PM

Title: Re: Do you know who this deity is?

Content:

johnwongnew said:

Hi,

Can someone tell me the name of this deity?

Is this deity Ekajati?

I am not sure because Ekajati is normally blue color or red color.

Is she an emanation of Vajrapani?

Do you have the mantra of this deity?

Thank you.

Link removed.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is ekajati. No one should be giving out her mantra in a public forum.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 6th, 2020 at 7:34 PM

Title: Hiroshima 75th anniversary

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Statement of His Holiness, The Dalai Lama: 8AF41A04-DDE9-4BEB-9398-8B24A2F14BC7.jpeg (128.73 KiB) Viewed 6929 times

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 6th, 2020 at 7:41 PM

Title: Re: Guide to the Gaṇḍavyūha Sūtra

Content:

avatamsaka3 said:

Excellent, thanks.

Zhen Li said:

If you are interested in the Avataṃsaka, there is also a guide for the Daśabhūmika.

As a quick update, I now also have uploaded the guides for the Laṅkāvatāra and Lalitavistara. Now I just have to revise the Samādhirāja.

There's nothing I can do for the Tathāgata-guhyaka at the moment as the translation has not been published—I hear 84,000 has one in the works and Péter-Dániel Szántó is producing a translation, but no idea when they will come out. In the meantime, it is possible to do as the Newars do which is substitute the Guhyasamāja, but that would somewhat interfere with the theme of these being exoteric texts. I also am not qualified to discuss something like that, but with some study it might be possible.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, if you received the empowerment, practiced the sadhana for some years, and studied the commentaries of Nagarjuna, Aryadeva, and Candrakīrti, etc. otherwise, no, you would in no way be qualified to discuss something like that. And then, you could discuss this others who've had the same training.

Otherwise, bravo for your efforts above.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 7th, 2020 at 3:12 AM

Title: Re: Hiroshima 75th anniversary

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty amazing that on a Buddhist site, after nearly eight hours, this gets no attention or mention.

Astonished.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 7th, 2020 at 5:30 AM

Title: Re: Hiroshima 75th anniversary

Content:

Archie2009 said:

Thank you for bringing this to our attention.

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty amazing that on a Buddhist site, after nearly eight hours, this gets no attention or mention.

Astonished.

Archie2009 said:

The thread title makes no mention of a statement by His Holiness. Furthermore it's been a busy, hot day.

Malcolm wrote:

I was surprised that no one seemed to notice or even bother to look. I should thought have the topic itself was sufficient.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 7th, 2020 at 5:58 AM

Title: Re: Do you know who this deity is?

Content:

yagmort said:

apologies for my ignorance, but why is it inappropriate showing this image publicly? i mean there are plenty of vajrayana pictures both online and printed, is it something about Ekajati specifically? restricted sadhanas and other texts come with a warning normally, i don't remember seeing a restriction warning for a deity picture.

Malcolm wrote:

Images of deities of the inner tantras are samaya images. Just because every one shows them these days does not make it right.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 7th, 2020 at 6:32 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

javier.espinosa.t said:

will you say that there is no such thing as taking advantage of such things indifferently in east or west?

treehuggingoctopus said:

What exacty is so advantageous about putting on zendras et al?

Malcolm wrote:

Nothing, as far as I can tell. Some people like stripped Zens. Some people like Hawaiian Shirts. Personally, I can't be bothered with mandated uniforms. After all, it is not like Guru Rinpoche cares. His compassion is not limited.

Like I told Sangye Khandro once (whom I deeply respect), the only religious gear I wear is a DC melong, since it is a takdrol, and since it was given to me by ChNN. Well, you can count my hair too, since that is a KDL thing. Otherwise, I just wear whatever I like, wherever I like. No one has yet ever said to me, "you can't be a ngakpa if you don't wear a white lower robe, a blue shirt, and a striped Zen." I have met so many different lamas from the Dudjom Tersar tradition, and they all wear different cloths, some rock the ngakpa gear, some don't, some do occasionally, some never do, one guy I know wears in Indian dhoti for his white lower robe. There is nothing certain at all. It's all just a play of delusion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 7th, 2020 at 9:28 AM

Title: Can a Lazy Person Awaken? Split from Zen forum

Content:

clyde said:

According to Bankei, Generally speaking, Zen teachers nowadays instruct people by setting up rules or using devices. Believing that without devices they can't manage, behaving as if without them it's impossible to instruct anyone, they're unable to teach by simply pointing things out directly. To teach people [this way], unable to manage without devices, is 'devices Zen.'

"Others tell students pursuing this teaching that it's no good unless they rouse a great ball of doubt and succeed in breaking through it. 'No matter what,' they tell them, 'you've got to rouse a ball of doubt!' They don't teach, 'Abide in the Unborn Buddha Mind!' [but instead] cause people without any ball of doubt to saddle themselves with one, making them exchange the Buddha Mind for a ball of doubt. A mistaken business, isn't it!

Malcolm wrote:

"Decide that doubt is liberation."

—Garab Dorje

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 7th, 2020 at 10:44 AM

Title: Re: Do you know who this deity is?

Content:

yagmort said:

how much of a negative karma that constitutes ?

Malcolm wrote:

It seems unavoidable. Like selling Dharma books, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 7th, 2020 at 7:19 PM

Title: Re: Dagpo Kagyu empowerments

Content:

tobes said:

I think Sarah Harding's WTF paper is really good for showing just how deep this labyrinth goes. In the end, I think the real question is: what is actually at stake in all of this?

Beyond sectarianism, politics etc, I think the answer is: very little.

PeterC said:

I think at the time they were writing, a lot was at stake. Fake lineages and fake terms did exist, and though the polemic literature may be a little...unnecessary at times, arguably it performed a needed quality control function. Though of course that wasn't the only, perhaps wasn't even the main reason for the existence of that literature.

Do we, centuries later, need to worry about it? Well, nobody is going to discover something in a text that suddenly makes people stop practicing a major teaching. But just as we're encouraged to study the guru for years (which nobody does anymore), it can't hurt to read some of this material. And if it does raise doubts in our minds, perhaps that indicates our confidence in the guru is not what it should be, or that we haven't worked hard enough on the practice to see its benefits.

Malcolm wrote:

Everyone should read Sapan's three vows and his Clarifying the Muni's Intent, even if it pisses them off. He raises excellent questions, and was an amazing scholar and practitioner. He was also the product of a particular era in Tibetan history, and it shows.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 7th, 2020 at 11:09 PM

Title: Re: is Consciousness a material element?

Content:

Artziebetter1 said:

is consciousness a material element in Tibetan Buddhism(among 4 other elements)?in wich way is it an element if it is not material?and in wich way is it material?how can matter give rise to subjective awareness?how can it interact with matter if it is not material?

Malcolm wrote:

Consciousness, like space, is a dhātu (kham), but not a bhūta ('byung ba). Hence, it is counted among the six "elements," but is not one of four material "elements."

In the Buddhist scheme of things in general, consciousness gives rise to matter. All matter derives from consciousness. Though it seems there is Cartesian Dualism in Buddhism, this is actually not correct. There is no absolute mind/matter dualism in Buddhadharma. Mind (nama) conditions matter (rūpa), matter conditions mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 7th, 2020 at 11:12 PM

Title: Re: How to know which image is restricted? (Split from "Do you know this diety?")

Content:

yagmort said:

[Mod note:] Topic split from here

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?p=546960#p546960>

i'm confused how do we expect a vajrayana amateur to go about lots and lots of images over the web if none of them are said to be restricted, unlike texts? in case of images how do we recognise a restricted image before we look at it? seems impossible. has this issue been addressed by any lama/Rinpoche? should we purify our negative karma in case we stumbled upon a picture we shouldn't suppose to see?

Malcolm wrote:

It is not your negative karma if you see; it is your negative karma if you share, since it is a violation of branch samayas. If you do not have such samayas, then it is just art.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 8th, 2020 at 3:33 AM

Title: Re: Dagpo Kagyu empowerments

Content:

PeterC said:

I think at the time they were writing, a lot was at stake. Fake lineages and fake terms did exist, and though the polemic literature may be a little...unnecessary at times, arguably it performed a needed quality control function. Though of course that wasn't the only, perhaps wasn't even the main reason for the existence of that literature.

Do we, centuries later, need to worry about it? Well, nobody is going to discover something in a text that suddenly makes people stop practicing a major teaching. But just as we're encouraged to study the guru for years (which nobody does anymore), it can't hurt to read some of this material. And if it does raise doubts in our minds, perhaps that indicates our confidence in the guru is not what it should be, or that we haven't worked hard enough on the practice to see its benefits.

Malcolm wrote:

Everyone should read Sapan's three vows and his Clarifying the Muni's Intent, even if it pisses them off. He raises excellent questions, and was an amazing scholar and practitioner. He was also the product of a particular era in Tibetan history, and it shows.

spinoza said:

Sakya Chokden's commentary on his text defends Kagyu Mahamudra against many of the disputes raised by him.

Malcolm wrote:
Such is the nature of polemics.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, August 8th, 2020 at 3:45 AM
Title: Re: Dagpo Kagyu empowerments
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
Everyone should read Sapan's three vows and his Clarifying the Muni's Intent, even if it pisses them off. He raises excellent questions, and was an amazing scholar and practitioner. He was also the product of a particular era in Tibetan history, and it shows.

PeterC said:
I found it very difficult to disagree with his arguments in Three Vows, even the ones I didn't agree with.

Malcolm wrote:
Indeed, Sapan, without question, was the greatest scholar in Tibet in the 13th century. And why not? He spoke and wrote Sanskrit fluently, had received nearly every teaching extant in Tibet during his day, had studied with 30 Indian tutors, and so on. His personal library boasted 3000 texts in Tibetan and Sanskrit, etc., etc. Actually, Tibet has never seen such a scholar since his time. That does not mean I personally agree with every one of his claims or critiques. But his scholarship was an exemplary model of an originalist approach to Buddhadharma, basing himself closely on what the texts of sūtra and tantra say, as opposed to the opinions of this or that guru.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, August 8th, 2020 at 10:08 AM
Title: Re: is Consciousness a material element?
Content:

Artziebetter1 said:
is consciousness a material element in Tibetan Buddhism(among 4 other elements)?in wich way is it an element if it is not material?and in wich way is it material?how can matter give rise to subjective awareness?how can it interact with matter if it is not material?

Malcolm wrote:
Consciousness, like space, is a dhātu (khams), but not a bhūta ('byung ba). Hence, it is counted among the six "elements," but is not one of four material "elements."

In the Buddhist scheme of things in general, consciousness gives rise to matter. All matter derives from consciousness. Though it seems there is Catersian Dualism in Buddhism, this is actually not correct. There is no absolute mind/matter dualism in Buddhadharma. Mind (nama) conditions matter (rūpa), matter conditions mind.

Artziebetter1 said:

Thanks malcolm. are you saying thus that buddhism holds the same view as idealism, where matter is a result of the mind's conscious projection? I thought only cittamatra held to idealism. what is the difference then between say dzogchen and cittamatra on consciousness creating matter?

Blessings!

Malcolm wrote:

It depends on the school, actually. It is also a complicated explanation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 8th, 2020 at 10:42 AM

Title: Re: Dagpo Kagyu empowerments

Content:

PeterC said:

I found it very difficult to disagree with his arguments in Three Vows, even the ones I didn't agree with.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed, Sapan, without question, was the greatest scholar in Tibet in the 13th century. And why not? He spoke and wrote Sanskrit fluently, had received nearly every teaching extant in Tibet during his day, had studied with 30 Indian tutors, and so on. His personal library boasted 3000 texts in Tibetan and Sanskrit, etc., etc. Actually, Tibet has never seen such a scholar since his time. That does not mean I personally agree with every one of his claims or critiques. But his scholarship was an exemplary model of an originalist approach to Buddhadharma, basing himself closely on what the texts of sūtra and tantra say, as opposed to the opinions of this or that guru.

Pero said:

Sorry, I know this is off topic, but if he had such a big library how come he had a limited exposure to Dzogchen? Or at least so it seems to me if he concluded that is only the result IIRC.

Malcolm wrote:

He asserted it was a ye shes. And when I asked ChNN about this in 1992, he said that Sapan was correct. Sapan mentions that he received Dzogchen teachings, but he does not specify which. But certainly he received sems sde in the Khon family lineage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 9th, 2020 at 8:59 PM

Title: Re: Sources substantiating claims about "Hindus" not achieving liberation

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha statements to this effect maybe found in the Mahaparinibbana sutta, as well as the Majjhima Nikaya. In these texts it is recorded that he said that outside of his Dharma and Vinaya, there were no stream entrants, once-returners, never-returners, or arhats. This means that there are no awakened people outside of those who follow Buddhadharma. Some people may object, "what about pratyekabuddhas?" A pratyekabuddha is a kind of an arhat who previously generated to the bodhicitta aspiration to achieve awakening in a future rebirth, even though a samyaksambuddha had not taken birth in the world. More info here: <https://www.what-buddha-said.net/files/library/wheels/wh305.pdf>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 10th, 2020 at 1:42 AM

Title: Re: Sources substantiating claims about "Hindus" not achieving liberation

Content:

Matt J said:

One problem is that Hinduism as it exists and is practiced today did not exist at the time of the Buddha-- there was Samkhya and Brahmanic rituals. Arguably, Vedanta derived a lot of its teaching from Tantrism and also Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

There was also nondualist Vedanta prior to the Buddha. However, a quick examination of the Brahmajala sutta will swiftly show that despite Indian philosophies many developments, its plethora of schools are either eternalist or annihilationist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 10th, 2020 at 1:53 AM

Title: Re: Sources substantiating claims about "Hindus" not achieving liberation

Content:

fckw said:

Which is most likely true for Advaita Vedanta, but which may not necessarily be true for especially the tantric Hindu tradition. If you take, for instance, the Spanda school of thought, at the core of their belief system seems to be the idea of "pulsating awareness", not the question of identity of Self and Brahman.

Malcolm wrote:

Spanda is just part of Trika, and as such, it is both substantialist and eternalist. Any reading of the Spandakarika's will show this. Further, since Spanda is just based on Samkhya, it is also a realist school.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 10th, 2020 at 2:04 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Adamantine said:

Yeah that accords with my experience of various ngakpas I've known. For example, Khenpo Choga seems to really like wearing golden outfits:

Grigoris said:

Possibly because he has accomplished Jambhala or another Ratna family practice?

Malcolm wrote:

Of maybe he just likes gold brocade. It is very popular among Tibetans.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 10th, 2020 at 2:19 AM

Title: Re: Sources substantiating claims about "Hindus" not achieving liberation

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

BTW, "Sources substantiating claims about "Hindus" not achieving liberation" is a misstated question.

Think about it. What do Buddhists claim liberation is? It is very simple, and all Buddhist schools, including Dzogchen, agree that liberation is freedom from affliction that causes rebirth in samsara. There are schools in Hinduism that agree with this proposition also.

But where do they disagree with Buddhadharma?

Hindu schools do not agree with how Buddha defined rebirth, or with how Buddha presented karma, or Buddha's presentation of dependent origination, and they reject the Buddha's assertion of two-fold emptiness. Thus, how could they possibly be discussing the same liberation as the Buddha? It is quite impossible actually.

So it is very simple to examine what various Hindu Darshan's claim about liberation and the procedures for realizing it. When you find a Hindu school that is not Buddhism that presents essentially the same message as Buddhism on rebirth, karma, dependent origination, two-fold emptiness, and so on, please share your research with us. As far as I know, that only nonbuddhist school which agrees with Buddhadharma on all of these points is Bon.

Until then, this conversation is fruitless.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 10th, 2020 at 4:10 AM

Title: Re: Antifa, The Anti-Fascist Handbook by Mark Bray

Content:

Shotenzenjin said:

Critics say shutting down political adversaries is anti-democratic; antifa adherents argue that the horrors of fascism must never be allowed the slightest chance to triumph again.

Malcolm wrote:

Strongly agree.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 10th, 2020 at 4:46 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Grigoris said:

Possibly because he has accomplished Jambhala or another Ratna family practice?

Malcolm wrote:

Of maybe he just likes gold brocade. It is very popular among Tibetans.

heart said:

Seems reasonable to me. He seems too like to dress up these days.

He was pretty young when I met him. He lived with a yogi, his root lama, when he was very young. Then he went to Dzogchen monastery and became a Khenpo very fast. When he left Tibet he went to south India and debated with the Gelug. He told me; "they don't like me there".

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

He also tried to debate CHNN. He lost.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 10th, 2020 at 9:33 AM

Title: Re: a confession

Content:

pemachophel said:

Pero,

The five sins of immediate retribution that you list are the sins that take you immediately to hell when you die without passing through the bardo or taking another life in-between. There are plenty of demeritorious actions beyond these five that can take you to hell. However, it is only these five that take you immediately to hell. But, not to worry, there are a number of different mantra that, when recited with the Four Powers (of confession and purification) can eliminate even the karma of the five sins of immediate retribution.

Malcolm wrote:

Also practicing dzogchen bypasses these.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 10th, 2020 at 7:21 PM

Title: Re: Biden's VP Choice

Content:

Grigoris said:

What is Biden's position on the concentration camps on the southern border?

Any plans for the seperated children?

LhakpaT said:

He didn't have a problem with him when he was vice president

Malcolm wrote:

Unlike the present policy, the Obama policy of separating children from parents was employed only when the parent was charged with a felony, or if the adult was suspected of not being the child or children's parent. Otherwise, children were not, as a rule, separated from their parents, when families crossed the border.

So, completely different.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 10th, 2020 at 7:25 PM

Title: Re: Antifa, The Anti-Fascist Handbook by Mark Bray

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

Political propaganda on dharmawheel

mutsuk said:

edited

Malcolm wrote:

"In order to maintain a tolerant society, the society must be intolerant of intolerance...I do not imply for instance, that we should always suppress the utterance of intolerant philosophies; as long as we can counter them by rational argument and keep them in check by public opinion, suppression would be most unwise. But we should claim the right to suppress them if necessary even by force..."

—The Open Society and Its Enemies, Karl Popper.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 10th, 2020 at 10:54 PM

Title: Re: Antifa, The Anti-Fascist Handbook by Mark Bray

Content:

Matt J said:

The problem is the criteria of intolerance.

Malcolm wrote:

Fascism was well defined by Umberto Eco:

The cult of tradition. "One has only to look at the syllabus of every fascist movement to find the major traditionalist thinkers. The Nazi gnosis was nourished by traditionalist, syncretistic, occult elements."

The rejection of modernism. "The Enlightenment, the Age of Reason, is seen as the beginning of modern depravity. In this sense Ur-Fascism can be defined as irrationalism."

The cult of action for action's sake. "Action being beautiful in itself, it must be taken before, or without, any previous reflection. Thinking is a form of emasculation."

Disagreement is treason. "The critical spirit makes distinctions, and to distinguish is a sign of modernism. In modern culture the scientific community praises disagreement as a way to improve knowledge."

Fear of difference. "The first appeal of a fascist or prematurely fascist movement is an appeal against the intruders. Thus Ur-Fascism is racist by definition."

Appeal to social frustration. "One of the most typical features of the historical fascism was the appeal to a frustrated middle class, a class suffering from an economic crisis or feelings of political humiliation, and frightened by the pressure of lower social groups."

The obsession with a plot. "The followers must feel besieged. The easiest way to solve the plot is the appeal to xenophobia."

The enemy is both strong and weak. "By a continuous shifting of rhetorical focus, the enemies are at the same time too strong and too weak."

Pacifism is trafficking with the enemy. "For Ur-Fascism there is no struggle for life but, rather, life is lived for struggle."

Contempt for the weak. "Elitism is a typical aspect of any reactionary ideology."

Everybody is educated to become a hero. "In Ur-Fascist ideology, heroism is the norm. This cult of heroism is strictly linked with the cult of death."

Machismo and weaponry. "Machismo implies both disdain for women and intolerance and condemnation of nonstandard sexual habits, from chastity to homosexuality."

Selective populism. "There is in our future a TV or Internet populism, in which the emotional response of a selected group of citizens can be presented and accepted as the Voice of the People."

Ur-Fascism speaks Newspeak. "All the Nazi or Fascist schoolbooks made use of an impoverished vocabulary, and an elementary syntax, in order to limit the instruments for complex and critical reasoning."

<http://www.openculture.com/2016/11/umberto-eco-makes-a-list-of-the-14-common-features-of-fascism.html>

Please use this as a checklist for determining whether someone or some nation is fascistic or not. I don't think Dharmawheel makes the cut, not matter how you slice it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 10th, 2020 at 11:01 PM

Title: Re: Antifa, The Anti-Fascist Handbook by Mark Bray

Content:

mutsuk said:

edited

Malcolm wrote:

Anti-fascism /= communism, though in the 1930's it very well may have. Of course, we know that you were raised under communism, and I think we all agree that any totalitarianism, whether it is right-wing totalitarianism, i.e., fascism; or left-wing totalitarianism, i.e., communism, or religious totalitarianism, i.e., Wahabism, Fundamentalist Christianity, etc., are fundamentally evil death cults.

On the other hand, we do have to keep in mind that the Buddha himself proclaimed the demise of the Dharma within 5000 years. So there is that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 10th, 2020 at 11:39 PM

Title: Re: Antifa, The Anti-Fascist Handbook by Mark Bray

Content:

mutsuk said:

edited

...

Malcolm wrote:

There is no such thing as a "leftist fascist." I think the word you are looking for "totalitarian leftist." That would be more accurate. It certainly wouldn't describe me.

Not all people on the left rock the hammer and sickle or wear tee shirts with pictures of Che, who as you aptly observe, was extremely homophobic, but then, even homosexuals were homophobic in those days, and many who are closeted now remain so. But also the communism you are railing against is not the communism you were raised under, aka Marxist-Leninism. What we have now is "market communism."

This is all a tempest in a teapot, I am afraid.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 10th, 2020 at 11:41 PM

Title: Re: Antifa, The Anti-Fascist Handbook by Mark Bray

Content:

mutsuk said:

edited

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think I have ever done that. So your rhetoric cannot possibly be aimed at me.

I do think however we in the US need to tighten up our act, and switch to a coordinated market economy, and let go of the liberal market economy we now have, which is fiscally expensive and socially irresponsible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 12th, 2020 at 3:19 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Wow, still arguing about thus? Come on...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 12th, 2020 at 9:02 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

Tata1 said:

Why are yall so worried about how other people like to do their dharma practice

javier.espinoza.t said:

i care because dharma, it aint about this or that guy/girl. if one doesn't care for it, it disappears, don't you agree?

Malcolm wrote:

It's going to disappear anyway.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 12th, 2020 at 9:27 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

i care because dharma, it aint about this or that guy/girl. if one doesn't care for it, it disappears, don't you agree?

Malcolm wrote:

It's going to disappear anyway.

javier.espinoza.t said:

not the best excuse to be passive, i think, Acharya.

Malcolm wrote:

It has nothing to do with being passive. It was predicted by the Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 12th, 2020 at 6:25 PM

Title: Re: Biden's VP Choice

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

You will see fancy talk but the actual action will be the kinds of things Reagan democrats like Biden's people would want. Biden-Harris is totally going to trounce Trump in the election. Trump is frak.

Malcolm wrote:

I would be happy just to see a competent US Gvt. again. I am quite certain that Biden will install a competent administration. I a, equally sure that if the Democrats take both the Hiuse and Senate, he won't squander the opportunity by being overly compromising with the party formerly known as the GOP.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 12th, 2020 at 6:45 PM

Title: Re: TL;DR: We are screwed.

Content:

Danny said:

Paul weller was ok, I got the lyric reference. Prefer "in the city" or classic class warfare of "Eton rifles".

Don't know if the public wanted the style council, but we certainly got it tho!

PeterC said:

Those songs are probably better. All the class war stuff seems so dated these days, though. I guess - to paraphrase another song - the war is ended and the good guys lost

Malcolm wrote:

FDR ended the class war by instituting the New Deal, etc. he is the single reason there was no socialist revolution in the US. But that was when the US, after decades of selective, racist, immigration policies, was predominantly white. Now, in the US, race is class, and unless we get our shit together and offer brown and black people more than empty words and token parity, we will have another class war on our hands as a result of the systematic dismantling of not only Johnson's Great Society, but also FDR's New Deal. Then there is the environment...and pernicious effects of unregulated capitalism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 12th, 2020 at 11:49 PM

Title: Re: TL;DR: We are screwed.

Content:

PeterC said:

Those songs are probably better. All the class war stuff seems so dated these days, though. I guess - to paraphrase another song - the war is ended and the good guys lost

Malcolm wrote:

FDR ended the class war by instituting the New Deal, etc. he is the single reason there was no socialist revolution in the US. But that was when the US, after decades of selective, racist, immigration policies, was predominantly white. Now, in the US, race is class, and unless we get our shit together and offer brown and black people more than empty words and token parity, we will have another class war on our hands as a result of the systematic dismantling of not only Johnson's Great Society, but also FDR's New Deal. Then there is the environment...and pernicious effects of unregulated capitalism.

PeterC said:

Race is class today, but class is also just class - however the lower-class white population have been so effectively co-opted into acting against their interests that they fight part of the class war on behalf of their masters against the people with who they should have common cause.

Malcolm wrote:

That's been going on in the America since the late 17th century.

PeterC said:

I think the class war is a reality today, not a future possibility. Why else spend so much money arming the police to fight it?

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think we have even seen the the half of it, if things continue with Trump for another four years.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 13th, 2020 at 12:19 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas everywhere!

Content:

PeterC said:

Maybe the mods should create a new thread - "the great ngakpa/robes debate" - and use it like the thread for vegetarianism?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 14th, 2020 at 10:08 AM

Title: Re: Dagpo Kagyu empowerments

Content:

Pero said:

Sorry, I know this is off topic, but if he had such a big library how come he had a limited exposure to Dzogchen? Or at least so it seems to me if he concluded that is only the result IIRC.

Malcolm wrote:

He asserted it was a ye shes. And when I asked ChNN about this in 1992, he said that Sapan was correct. Sapan mentions that he received Dzogchen teachings, but he does not specify which. But certainly he received sems sde in the Khon family lineage.

Crazywisdom said:

So why read something we know is wrong? In Dzogchen wisdom is not necessarily brought on by four initiations. The first 3 are worldly. Actual so called gnosis is not dependent on worldly anything. Let alone stages. So what are we learning from Sapan?

Malcolm wrote:

Sapan isn't wrong, on this point. But his position is predicated on certain assumptions

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 14th, 2020 at 7:52 PM

Title: Re: Antifa, The Anti-Fascist Handbook by Mark Bray

Content:

Fa Dao said:

You have missed the point...of course no one is FOR fascism...but when taken to an extreme like antifa has done to shut down any and all dissent by labeling anything they disagree with as fascist they themselves, ironically, become fascists

Malcolm wrote:

"The really dangerous American fascist... is the man who wants to do in the United States in an American way what Hitler did in Germany in a Prussian way. The American fascist would prefer not to use violence. His method is to poison the channels of public information. With a fascist the problem is never how best to present the truth to the public but how best to use the news to deceive the public into giving the fascist and his group more money or more power... They claim to be super-patriots, but they would destroy every liberty guaranteed by the Constitution. They demand free enterprise, but are the spokesmen for monopoly and vested interest. Their final objective, toward which all their deceit is directed, is to capture political power so that, using the power of the state and the power of the market simultaneously, they may keep the common man in eternal subjection."

Henry A. Wallace

https://www.cbsd.org/cms/lib/PA01916442/Centricity/Domain/1864/Henry%20Wallace_The%20Danger%20of%20American%20Fascism.pdf

In other words, FD, our present administration. Fascism is real, fascism is here, and thankfully, we have an Antifascist movement in this country, despite its occasional, and regrettable excesses. They pale in comparison however to locking up in children for years in concentration camps, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 15th, 2020 at 5:24 AM

Title: Re: Tsa Lung and Guru Yoga in the Bön tradition vs Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Charlie123 said:

Thanks for the info. I have had a very positive impression of Alejandro Chaoul. FWIW, ChNN encouraged him to study with Bonpo gurus. This is actually how he ended up a student of Lopon Tenzin Namdak.

Malcolm wrote:

Alejandro is one of the nicest people I've ever met.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 15th, 2020 at 7:38 PM

Title: Re: Tsa Lung and Guru Yoga in the Bön tradition vs Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

What it boils down to is that Bonpos has their narrative myths and legends and Buddhists have theirs.

There really isn't much reason to privilege one over the other, other than that we were introduced to one school first rather than the other.

Bonpo literature is intrinsically valuable and shows another facet of Tibetan civilization, one more rooted in Tibet's indigenous culture.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 15th, 2020 at 7:42 PM

Title: Re: 108 great tertöns

Content:

yagmort said:

imho unlikely, as both Chokgyur Lingpa and Jamyang Kheyntse Wangpo are there.

i don't quite get it if this list belongs to terma prophecies or Jamgön Kongtrul own creativity? if it's the latter case then perhaps he didn't include Düdjom Lingpa since he refused his termas be included in Rinchen Terdzö.. but that's just my uneducated assumption.

Malcolm wrote:

There are many great Tetons not included in that list.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 16th, 2020 at 5:07 AM

Title: Re: Antifa, The Anti-Fascist Handbook by Mark Bray

Content:

Brunelleschi said:

So, save it for someone else - you don't know squat about me. How could one possibly be a Buddhist and support an ethnostate.

Malcolm wrote:

So why are you supporting this idea?

Brunelleschi said:

Obviously if one incites violence that would be illegal under current laws in most Western countries. There could be situations where it would be legal. For example the NOI made the proposition of creating a black state - I think they proposed Georgia. That should be legal in my opinion. Not the best example but, eh.

Malcolm wrote:

They tried to make Oregon a white ethnostate. It didn't work. It's unconstitutional.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 16th, 2020 at 6:22 PM

Title: Re: 108 great tertöns

Content:

yagmort said:

probably has to do with 7 transmissions.

so it seems getting all seven is what constitutes a "major tertön".

Malcolm wrote:

No, this was a unique quality of JKW.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 16th, 2020 at 6:23 PM

Title: Re: Heart-sons

Content:

yagmort said:

about Dilgo Khyentse Rinpoche principal lineage holders i have not got a clue. Dzongsar Khyentse Rinpoche? would be glad for any help here

Malcolm wrote:

Sechen rabjam

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 16th, 2020 at 7:59 PM

Title: Re: Antifa, The Anti-Fascist Handbook by Mark Bray

Content:

Brunelleschi said:

The point that I'm trying to convey is that, in my opinion, a generous free speech is a safeguard against authoritarianism. Stifling speech is a method of authoritarianism - we all know about Trumps disdain for and attacks on journalists. The problem is who exactly is going to regulate speech. You want laws with punching power? Great, but don't be surprised when it's used by people you don't like.

Malcolm wrote:

The US has the most generous free speech provisions in the world. The freedom of the press is written into the constitution.

However, free speech does not include the right to violate civil rights: for example, if one uses slurs against black and jewish people in one context, it is permitted, for example, among your friends, an internet forum, etc..

If one uses the same slur to verbally assault a black or a jewish person, this is a felony punishable by jail time, even on an internet forum, etc.

If you are generally raving about Rothschilds and ZOG, well, you are an idiot, but in the US, it is not a crime to be an idiot. If someone comes on your forum and you attack them with slurs, you could be facing jail time if they can afford a lawyer, etc., etc.

In fact all speech is regulated; most of it is self-regulated, by custom and convention. Some speech is criminal, demonstrably harmful and misleading speech, like false advertising, crying fire in a theater, etc. There is lots of speech others consider harmful, like forums devoted to ethnostates, but the argument here that some are making is that such speech deserves to be included amongst harmful speech. This is a legal question, since it has not been brought up in court as far as I know. But I think it would very hard to pass laws against this in the US.

However, in private forums, holding that speech which advocates for such things ought to be banned is perfectly fine. Free speech only extends to public speech, not private speech.

Now, I understand you are not advocating for ethnostates personally, but you are making an nonargument. If the gods of this forum decree there shall be no discussion of ethnostates, then there will be no discussion of ethnostates, etc. And such a decree violates no one's free speech rights because we are all here voluntarily.

Suppressing Milo talks is perfectly fine. Milo is an asshole. No one has ever made it illegal to shout down your opponent. This is essentially what is happening with these alt-right douches, they are being shouted down, and rightly so. Some glass might get broken, but that is what insurance is for.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 16th, 2020 at 9:09 PM

Title: Re: Major Floods & Landslides Occur Throughout China - Jul. 7 / Jul. 14, 2020

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and the Chinese Gvt. is asking people to reduce their intake of food. Good times had by all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 18th, 2020 at 7:36 PM

Title: Re: Biden's VP Choice

Content:

PeterC said:

Are...we...comparing relative honesty in debate performances? Because that's not going to look good for the other side of the aisle...

Fa Dao said:

Im...a....democrat...and dont give a crap about what the "other side of the aisle" does. We used to be the "good guys"..now were becoming the party of lunatics. Still am undecided if it was worse that the DNC chose Hillary in 2016 or Biden/Harris in 2020 to represent us..not particularly thrilled with the DNC platform either..doesn't represent the majority of Dems out there..if they dont tone down all the crazy shit they are proposing they will virtually hand the election to Trump in a landslide

PeterC said:

In a two-party system you can't not care about what the other side of the aisle does. You can vote for them or vote for the republicans. You don't have to like the choice. And who are "they", and what specifically is the "crazy shit" they are proposing that you think will lose the election?

Malcolm wrote:

He means AOC wing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 18th, 2020 at 8:49 PM

Title: Re: The Woke Supremacy

Content:

Grigoris said:

When I read the original post I also thought that the book was light comic relief and then Danny came along and proved that some people actually take this shit seriously.

Imagine how delusional you have to be to believe that Obama was a socialist...

But really, this is just a clear example of just how far towards the Right the political pendulum has swung in the U$.

It highlights how deeply the "Red under the bed" hysteria has infiltrated into the Amerikan psyche.

Malcolm wrote:

Danny is not American. A brit, I think. And only among older white Americans who watch Carlson and Hannity. Everyone else laughs at the attempt to drum up a new red scare.

The pendulum among young people is rapidly swinging left, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 18th, 2020 at 8:49 PM

Title: Re: The Woke Supremacy

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

but every socialist from Marx to Hitler to Lennon...

Malcolm wrote:

First, Hitler was not a socialist by any stretch of the imagination, despite the use of the term "socialist" as a marketing ploy when the name of the Right-wing German Worker's Party (DAP) was changed to NSDAP.

Secondly, you mean this Lennon?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 18th, 2020 at 8:59 PM

Title: Re: Biden's VP Choice

Content:

PeterC said:

In a two-party system you can't not care about what the other side of the aisle does. You can vote for them or vote for the republicans. You don't have to like the choice. And who are "they", and what specifically is the "crazy shit" they are proposing that you think will lose the election?

Malcolm wrote:

He means AOC wing.

PeterC said:

The segment of the party that couldn't be more different to Hillary Clinton and that actually appeals to younger voters?

That makes sense if you think this election will be decided by some phantom swing vote of disaffected republicans. I don't believe that.

Malcolm wrote:

Neither do I.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 20th, 2020 at 12:41 AM

Title: Re: The Devil and Karl Marx

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

The first two sections of this 400+ page book are biographical, while the rest is more about the Devil & communism. Paul Kengor has penned another fine survey of the demonic forces abounding nowadays.

<https://www.tanbooks.com/the-devil-and-karl-marx.html>

Malcolm wrote:

Seems catholic conservatives are really freaked out about a dead ideology.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 20th, 2020 at 12:47 AM

Title: Re: Antifa, The Anti-Fascist Handbook by Mark Bray

Content:

Dan74 said:

Reading a little about prominent Black Americans, it seems to me that what they had to battle mostly against was not actual overt racism, but generational poverty which leads to internalised racism or destructive anger.

Malcolm wrote:

The policies which created generational poverty among African Americans and Native People were, are, and continue to be overtly racist.

This is one of dumbest things I have ever seen you say.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 20th, 2020 at 4:11 AM

Title: Re: Antifa, The Anti-Fascist Handbook by Mark Bray

Content:

Dan74 said:

Do you mean to say that the very harsh mandatory sentencing for crack cocaine was intended to put a lot of Black Americans behind bars, basically an act of white supremacy...

Malcolm wrote:

White kids get probation for a rock of crack. Black kids get ten years for the same rock. You figure it out.

In the sixties, white kids got probation for a joint. Black kids got ten years for the same joint. You figure it out.

White man waves a gun around in public, he gets a citation for disturbing the peace. Black man waves a gun around in public, he gets shot dead. You figure it out.

You just don't know what you are talking about.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 20th, 2020 at 4:47 AM

Title: Re: Antifa, The Anti-Fascist Handbook by Mark Bray

Content:

Dan74 said:

But they will be gone soon. Then what?

Malcolm wrote:

We have to deal with their children, in whom they instill the same beliefs.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 20th, 2020 at 4:48 AM

Title: Re: Antifa, The Anti-Fascist Handbook by Mark Bray

Content:

Dan74 said:

Sorry, he actually said it? Doesn't make sense... Aren't there sentencing guidelines?

Malcolm wrote:

Regularly ignored for white defendants...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 20th, 2020 at 8:45 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

500 people participated in the second meeting. Contact gakyils, gars, lings, sms instructors, dance instructors, yantra instructors, etc. they were all there. Demand an explanation.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Maybe that's an ok thing that things go in a smaller direction.

Russell said:

Yes, the organisation is there to support the teachers and the students, not the other way around, so if it needs to shrink a little we adapt to that.

I think this is the point, it takes time for the DC as a whole to recognise and give up their expectations, and when one does that one can see there really wasn't much fault in how things were handled. I'm not telling you to shut up or relax, just what worked for me.

Johnny Dangerous said:

It's not about fault, but about where to go from here, and not pretending things are something they aren't. Presenting an honest assessment of the situation to the membership at large. Basically it looks like it's going to be a bunch of smaller groups with nothing left to unite them -if indeed there is no heir and no further transmission. Why would it go otherwise?

Speaking for myself, why would I be interested in that if I don't live near a gar or ling and have connection there? Other than the lightning bolt spiritual experience that was regular DI and participation through webcast with Rinpoche, I know the DC members on this site more than I know anyone else in the DC, by far. There is no real mechanism for that to change. I imagine I am not the only DC member at large in this sort of situation. If things go this way, what is even the purpose of a general membership model, without a central transmission or teaching?

Without transmission being the thing that holds people together, nothing will look the same, and people like me will have little reason to remain members, without some major attempt at new ways of doing things. Yet, the communication tends to always emphasize the transmission we share, even emphasizing paying dues as a part of the responsibility of sharing that transmission! You can't on the one hand celebrate us all being unified through the transmission we were fortunate enough to receive from Rinpoche while also saying it's done with, and everyone is going to do their own thing, but that we should still support it the same as before. That's just crazy. That's the Head In The Sand approach I was talking about.

Some of this is just logistical. For instance, if long time SMS teachers offer a class on Rushens or something, if it happens in a centralized location, accessible to DC members generally, this is a different than the more conditional offerings which seem to have gone on so far. The Webcast page has offered some interesting stuff, but simply trying to sort it is a task. If they want to go to a membership mode where transmission is no longer central, reorganization like this should be central to it. There are some real strengths too. I've personally had SMS teachers answer my questions through email over the years, and their help was vital to me - that sort of thing is serious juju. So I don't mean to sound purely discouraging, just realistic.

I don't want to blame anyone, I'm sure everyone is trying their best and no one means anything but their best intentions, but someone needs to seriously fix their messaging. It may be bitter medicine to hear that, but sorry, it's how I see it. I feel these are valid and somewhat obvious points that get shot down out of "being respectful" "being calm" "not assigning blame" etc. But this is kind of where the rubber meets the road, isn't it?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 20th, 2020 at 7:42 PM

Title: Re: Antifa, The Anti-Fascist Handbook by Mark Bray

Content:

Dan74 said:

I don't put much stock in identity grievance issues and other individualist laments, like identity issues.

Malcolm wrote:

That's because you don't know the origin of the term "identity politics." You are unaware of how it came to be, why it is important.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 20th, 2020 at 7:44 PM

Title: Re: Antifa, The Anti-Fascist Handbook by Mark Bray

Content:

Dan74 said:

What interests me in the current conversation is whether the claims of wide-spread racial discrimination are true and whether they add up to be a significant impact on the welfare of the Black and other minority communities, or whether it is largely entrenched poverty and disadvantage, as I've said. Because, if it's the latter, then the conversation about race should not hog all the oxygen, and rather people should talk about removing the obstacles kids in disadvantaged communities face, rather than rambling on about racist white people. It's not the same thing and it doesn't lead to the same results, I think.

Malcolm wrote:

Dumb and dumber.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 20th, 2020 at 7:46 PM

Title: Re: quote origin the world is made of karma

Content:

Toenail said:

Hey, I am looking for the origin of above sentence. I remember some scholar/famous past yogi said that, but I cant find the exact quote. I want to rip it off for my thesis

Malcolm wrote:

Abhidharmakosha, chapter 4, in the beginning. "The variety of the world arises from karma."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 20th, 2020 at 9:21 PM

Title: Re: Antifa, The Anti-Fascist Handbook by Mark Bray

Content:

Kim O'Hara said:

That's unnecessarily unkind and quite unhelpful, Malcolm.

Malcolm wrote:

It is very kind and very helpful. Dan has been around for years, and he continues to act as if he just woke up from a long nap.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 20th, 2020 at 9:30 PM

Title: Re: Antifa, The Anti-Fascist Handbook by Mark Bray

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

It is also not for a more powerful group member to say, race is nothing. If one is actively benefitting from higher caste privileges then to say there is no caste is ridiculous.

Malcolm wrote:

CW:

Precisely. And this is what Dan's whole narrative supposes, "The problem isn't racism, per se., the problem is poverty, etc."

Tell that to my Haitian son in law. France and the US screwed Haiti because the Haitians rose up and kicked out the slavers.

Tell that the Navaho, etc., who still cannot get a fair shake from America; the indigenous people of Central America who are fleeing repressive regimes in Central America who have American-trained death squads and American-prison educated gangs. I maintain close contacts with many such people. I know their stories, their fears, and their pain.

Seeing some disembodied white guy from Switzerland cluelessly pontificate to us, who were raised in the US, about what is "really going on" in the US is well, words.

Dan:

America is a deeply racist country, Dan. Take it from me, I descend from OG Invader stock, Mayflower and all that. I know this much better than you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 21st, 2020 at 1:04 AM

Title: Re: quote origin the world is made of karma

Content:

Toenail said:

Hey, I am looking for the origin of above sentence. I remember some scholar/famous past yogi said that, but I cant find the exact quote. I want to rip it off for my thesis

Malcolm wrote:

Abhidharmakosha, chapter 4, in the beginning. "The variety of the world arises from karma."

Tenma said:

Where does karma originate from? Or is it an endless cycle without beginning nor end?

Malcolm wrote:

Actions arise from afflictions, resulting in suffering. There is no beginning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 21st, 2020 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: Antifa, The Anti-Fascist Handbook by Mark Bray

Content:

Dan74 said:

But rather than engage in the complexity of it, or even provide some actual content, it is easier to shout down a disembodied guy from Switzerland (not).

Malcolm wrote:

Disembodied white guys from Switzerland have time, in their alpine retreats, to contemplate such issues with the dispassion of a 19th century biologist dissecting a bug they've just snuffed with ether.

But you don't understand identity politics, you don't even seem to know where the term comes from. You think everything is quantified in some data set. It isn't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 21st, 2020 at 2:42 AM

Title: Re: Antifa, The Anti-Fascist Handbook by Mark Bray

Content:

Dan74 said:

But rather than engage in the complexity of it, or even provide some actual content, it is easier to shout down a disembodied guy from Switzerland (not).

Malcolm wrote:

Disembodied white guys from Switzerland have time, in their alpine retreats, to contemplate such issues with the dispassion of a 19th century biologist dissecting a bug they've just snuffed with ether.

But you don't understand identity politics, you don't even seem to know where the term comes from. You think everything is quantified in some data set. It isn't.

Dan74 said:

You are a truly lovable guy, Malcolm! Made my day with this mental picture.

I hope one day to have the honour of buying you a beer or whatever is your beverage of choice in your favourite establishment. I bet a lot of disagreements will silently dissolve with no effort whatsoever.

Malcolm wrote:

Glad you see my real face.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 21st, 2020 at 6:37 AM

Title: Re: Antifa, The Anti-Fascist Handbook by Mark Bray

Content:

tingdzin said:

Well, if "Buddhists" are able to justify, even rejoice in, shining lasers in peoples' eyes, trying to burn cops alive, beating up complete strangers, etc. then there's no hope for the Dharma in the West. I know this will invite a lot of vituperation and slander, so I have nothing more to say right now. These are rough times in America, but we should all be able to stand back, take a deep breath, and look at our own assumptions.

Malcolm wrote:

You justified denying medical care to refugees...People in glass houses as the saying goes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 1:02 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Norwegian said:

The ball is entirely in the court of the Dzogchen Community as an official body. They have to make clear and must make clear what their vision is, what the way forward is. No more waiting. No more keeping things within the four walls of tired bureaucracy.

treehuggingoctopus said:

Well, yes, if there are any directives. If there are none -- as seems to be the case -- then we need to decide the direction together. To do so, we need absolute clarity and transparency, plus as much respectful and well-informed discussing and debating as possible. And I do not mean gossiping or conspiring in the shadows. We need to do it the proper way.

Malcolm wrote:

We will evolve past the present situation. No one knows what that will look like.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 5:27 AM

Title: Re: Annals of Communism

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

Thanks to many years of scholarship Yale University Press had given us many seminal works on communism. The latest one is Stalin's Master Narrative, a critical edition of the standard manual giving the Party line for communists.

<https://yalebooks.yale.edu/series/annals-of-communism-series>

Malcolm wrote:

Now your cooking with gas. If you continued to present this kind of scholarship rather some of the ridiculous authors you previously have presented...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 7:45 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Pang Mipham Gonpo was an 85 year old monk when he received the Longde teachings from Vairocana. He and 7 of his successors achieved Rainbow body. Whose to say that someone in the DC wont get to the third level of visions and then be willing to step up? In other words..it aint over till its over!

Malcolm wrote:

Third vision is an iideal, it is not really a requirement. Good thing too, cause if it were, ChNN would have waited too long to begin. ChNNs original plan had people giving introduction after level 4.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 9:21 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Pang Mipham Gonpo was an 85 year old monk when he received the Longde teachings from Vairocana. He and 7 of his successors achieved Rainbow body. Whose to say that someone in the DC wont get to the third level of visions and then be willing to step up? In other words..it aint over till its over!

Malcolm wrote:

Third vision is an iideal, it is not really a requirement. Good thing too, cause if it were, ChNN would have waited too long to begin. ChNNs original plan had people giving introduction after level 4.

climb-up said:

What level have folks gotten to?

If no one got as far as level 4, are the steps to that point fully outlined?

Malcolm wrote:

Several people are on level four. Of course this is also arbitrary, since this level of klong sde does not imply third vision.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 9:22 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

climb-up said:

What level have folks gotten to?

If no one got as far as level 4, are the steps to that point fully outlined?

Malcolm wrote:

Several people are on level four. Of course this is also arbitrary, since this level of klong sde does not imply third vision.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 9:27 AM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

Norwegian said:

Have you ever been engaged in any primary study of Marx? As in, have you read his own works, like Grundrisse? Capital? Communist Manifesto?

tingdzin said:

By their fruits you shall know them.

Fortyeightvows said:

so true. and very buddhist

Malcolm wrote:

Ummm, actually Jesus.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 9:30 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

climb-up said:

What level have folks gotten to?

If no one got as far as level 4, are the steps to that point fully outlined?

[/quote]

Several people are on level four. Of course this is also arbitrary, since this level Of klong sde does not imply third vision.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh wow, that still kind seems like a big deal if the original intent was for people at level four to give DI.

It means that there was at least a plan for this particular lineage to continue (it's just seemed odd to me that ChNN didn't seem to have one, or at least didn't spell it out for us) and ...maaaaybeeee these good people are the ones who could do it!

Right?

...maybe?

climb-up said:

people really don't understand history of SMS, and why rinpoche created it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 9:30 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

people really don't understand history of SMS, and why rinpoche originally created it. It didn't work out as he originally planned.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 9:42 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

people really don't understand history of SMS, and why rinpoche originally created it.

climb-up said:

Oh, fair enough.

I use it base outline to help develop my ...well, base, for my practice and it's so wonderful; by I was under the impression that it was for teachers and continuing the tradition.

Is that wrong?

What is the history and original intent?

Malcolm wrote:

It was always to create teachers, take a level, teach a level was original idea, but about 6 years in the boss was dissatisfied. His original idea was that people who passed level four would be equipped to give introduction. He also stated in one SMS training that people following klong goal were making better progress than SMS people. For years I have watched people extolling sms teachers, but it really has not been as people have led themselves to believe.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 9:46 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Fa Dao said:

ok...so..I am just going to toss this out there and see where it goes..I am not good at organizing things so if someone wants to try and run with this, be my guest..

As people here know Rinpoche gave a transmission for Vajra Bridge of Longde which he said is the essentials of it. From my research there are 2 volumes in the Nyingma Kama that are devoted to the Vajra Bridge teachings/practices, and commentaries. Volumes 18 and 19 in one version and 32 and 33 in another.

So what I was thinking is 2 pronged...maybe a group of us could find a Nyingma Lama willing to give us the transmission for these 2 volumes..perhaps over skype or zoom (or something like that) and do it over time..for example: 1 hour a week or so until it is completed. And then we could try and find a translator that would be willing to translate it all into English..I would be willing to chip in whatever I could for a project like this to donate to a Lama and pay a translator...just want to see if there would be any interest from any of Rinpoche's students for this....

Thoughts?

Malcolm wrote:

Your better off moving on to man ngag sde. Rinpoche advised people at 2015 yang ti retreat not to remain stuck in klong sde.

I've already translated a goodly portion of the long vajra bridge. It's not what people imagine. The first volume is three histories, written by Kunzang Dorje, called vajra bridge. Second volume is various practices no one practices anymore, though there is a lot of interesting material there.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 9:54 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Just a general comment: Frankly, some people have their heads so stuck up the ass of "authority" and "authorization" they have forgotten the real meaning of dzogchen teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 10:10 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It was always to create teachers, take a level, teach a level was original idea, but about 6 years in the boss was dissatisfied. His original idea was that people who passed level four would be equipped to give introduction. He also stated in one SMS training that people following klong goal were making better progress than SMS people. For years I have watched people extolling sms teachers, but it really has not been as people have led themselves to believe.

PeterC said:

Malcolm, when you say following the klong sal, do you mean working through rushens semdzins trekchod etc according to his termas, or was he talking about some more specific sequence of practising his termas?

Malcolm wrote:

He meant the klong gsal teachings in general.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 10:41 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Fa Dao said:

ok...so..I am just going to toss this out there and see where it goes..I am not good at organizing things so if someone wants to try and run with this, be my guest..

As people here know Rinpoche gave a transmission for Vajra Bridge of Longde which he said is the essentials of it. From my research there are 2 volumes in the Nyingma Kama that are devoted to the Vajra Bridge teachings/practices, and commentaries. Volumes 18 and 19 in one version and 32 and 33 in another.

So what I was thinking is 2 pronged...maybe a group of us could find a Nyingma Lama willing to give us the transmission for these 2 volumes..perhaps over skype or zoom (or something like that) and do it over time..for example: 1 hour a week or so until it is completed. And then we could try and find a translator that would be willing to translate it all into English..I would be willing to chip in whatever I could for a project like this to donate to a Lama and pay a translator...just want to see if there would be any interest from any of Rinpoches students for this....

Thoughts?

PeterC said:

Fa Dao - I think if you wanted to practice Longde in ChNNr's lineage then you'd want the lung of the first volume of the Longsal terma cycle, which contains ChNNr's upadesha on the vajra bridge. (Correct me if I'm wrong about the content of that.)

Could I suggest a slight variation on your plan. We track down members of the DC who have received the lungs of each of the Longsal teachings - and since they were given at different times in different places, that means a group of people, it's highly unlikely one person will have received them all - and we organize a mass lung of the whole lot. People can seek out explanations afterwards, but we ensure that the reading transmissions have been given. The only requirement to give a lung of a text is that you've received it from someone who has received it. So we don't get into the contentious question of DI, but we do what we can to ensure the terms are propagated.

I would also be willing to contribute to the costs of this.

Malcolm wrote:

There are two parts to this: Kongtrul's gdams sngag mdzod klong sde instructions, Rinpoche's own visionary teachings. It's not hard to find people who received both from the boss.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 11:25 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There are two parts to this: Kongtrul's gdams sngag mdzod klong sde instructions, Rinpoche's own visionary teachings. It's not hard to find people who received both from the boss.

Adamantine said:

Have you?

Malcolm wrote:

Myself and many others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 11:55 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Adamantine said:

Have you?

Malcolm wrote:
Myself and many others.

Adamantine said:
Yes though not many others are actively teaching and offering lungs...

Malcolm wrote:
That will change. Klong sde is important, but by no means indispensable.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 7:34 PM
Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu
Content:

PeterC said:
Malcolm, when you say following the klong sal, do you mean working through rushens semdzins trekchod etc according to his terms, or was he talking about some more specific sequence of practising his terms?

Malcolm wrote:
He meant the klong gsal teachings in general.

climb-up said:
But unfortunately most of those teachings are closed to many of us. For someone as bad of a practitioner as myself it probably doesn't make a difference, I think the previous vase and ancillary could keep me busy for a lifetime, but do you see a path forward to the Longsal teachings who didn't receive them while ChNN was alive?

I'm certainly not trying to call you out but as a Lama who gives wang and DI yourself, wouldn't you (or someone with similar training and experience to you) be qualified to pass on Longsal practices? (Apologies if my heads sonfar up my ass about authority that I've missed the Dzogchen point!)

Malcolm wrote:
My job is the 17 tantras.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 8:14 PM
Title: Re: Guide to Communism
Content:
Bundokji said:
It is a natural progression. Marx was a Hegelian so it was always: thesis / antithesis ---> synthesis.

Grigoris said:

Which coincided with a more fluid interpretation of man, time, history and the nature of reality during that era, and preceded by a gradual shift towards a more scientific and objective mindset. The faith in human progress seems to be justified by rapid scientific and technological advancements associated with deconstructing the old and limiting belief system.

I remember reading that communism necessitates feudalism and capitalism as historical conditions for its applicability.

That is the historical materialist paradigm which was part of Marx's theory. The neo-Marxists believed that communism could be reached without going through this process, by relying on peasant class (in less industrialised societies) instead of the industrial working class as the motor for change.

Bundokji said:

It is unclear though how the state does not simply replace the old capitalists class from the neo-Marxists point of view.

Malcolm wrote:

Communism is the end point, the socialist state, the transitional phase. All quite utopian.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 8:19 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Fa Dao said:

ok...so..I am just going to toss this out there and see where it goes..I am not good at organizing things so if someone wants to try and run with this, be my guest..

As people here know Rinpoche gave a transmission for Vajra Bridge of Longde which he said is the essentials of it. From my research there are 2 volumes in the Nyingma Kama that are devoted to the Vajra Bridge teachings/practices, and commentaries. Volumes 18 and 19 in one version and 32 and 33 in another.

So what I was thinking is 2 pronged...maybe a group of us could find a Nyingma Lama willing to give us the transmission for these 2 volumes..perhaps over skype or zoom (or something like that) and do it over time..for example: 1 hour a week or so until it is completed. And then we could try and find a translator that would be willing to translate it all into English..I would be willing to chip in whatever I could for a project like this to donate to a Lama and pay a translator...just want to see if there would be any interest from any of Rinpoches students for this....

Thoughts?

PeterC said:

Fa Dao - I think if you wanted to practice Longde in ChNNr's lineage then you'd want the lung of the first volume of the Longsal terma cycle, which contains ChNNr's upadesha on the vajra bridge. (Correct me if I'm wrong about the content of that.)

Could I suggest a slight variation on your plan. We track down members of the DC who have received the lungs of each of the Longsal teachings - and since they were given at different times in different places, that means a group of people, it's highly unlikely one person will have received them all - and we organize a mass lung of the whole lot. People can seek out explanations afterwards, but we ensure that the reading transmissions have been given. The only requirement to give a lung of a text is that you've received it from someone who has received it. So we don't get into the contentious question of DI, but we do what we can to ensure the terms are propagated.

I would also be willing to contribute to the costs of this.

Malcolm wrote:

They would need to be able to read Tibetan and give the lung in that language.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 9:17 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

They would need to be able to read Tibetan and give the lung in that language.

PeterC said:

If after all these years the DC can't pull together a group of students who can read Tibetan, then the writing really is on the wall

Malcolm wrote:

The question is not can they, the question is, will they?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 9:33 PM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

Bundokji said:

Or to put it differently, why communism is not a religion where faith in the state or progress replaces faith in the God of the Abrahamic religions?

Malcolm wrote:

Communism is clearly a religious movement, in just the same way as Trumpian "Conservatism."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 9:59 PM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

Bundokji said:

Could you please elaborate on the difference between a humanist/secular utopia and the older religious notions of heaven and hell?

Or to put it differently, why communism is not a religion where faith in the state or progress replaces faith in the God of the Abrahamic religions?

Here, Marx's views on religion might be relevant:.

PeterC said:

I would hesitate to get into analysis of that work of Marx's because the meaning is not obvious. The work he's discussing - Hegel's elements of the philosophy of right - is really, really difficult. Not many people really understand it. And that essay that Marx wrote, he never published, we don't know if it's because he wasn't sure about it or because he didn't get around to it. That part you're quoting is heavily debated, and there are multiple different interpretations of it.

If you want to understand the ideas of Marx on religion that aren't contested, you need to go back to Capital. It's clear that he wasn't very interested in metaphysical questions - the truth of the claims of religion weren't very important to him, what he was interested in was the function of religion. He saw it as both part of the ideological control mechanism that the ruling class created, and also as a means for the proletariat to express their unhappiness in a way that didn't threaten the relations of production. It was part of the dominant ideology in his theory. That functional view of religion was actually a pretty fair representation of its role in society for centuries, and you could argue it still explains quite well the role of religion in society today.

He was primarily concerned with the role of the dominant religion. He didn't have much to say about conflicts of beliefs, minority religions or pluralistic societies.

The thing to understand with Marx is, as Malcolm said, that for him the communist society was the end-point. He actually said very little about what it looked like. He spent most of the time analyzing where we are now, how we got here, what makes the current society persist, and what will eventually change it. (The answer to that last question is: development of technology.) He was an extraordinarily insightful writer, and said a lot that was very relevant to understanding the failures of society today.

Bundokji said:

Hegel's work itself is known to be notoriously difficult to read, hence Marx's reflections on aspects of his philosophy would be equally difficult to understand.

More than 20 years ago, i bought "Capital" which was divided into five parts. The copy i bought was in Arabic, and i am not sure if it was bad translation or that the work itself is difficult. I remember after reading some 30 pages, i began to encounter mathematical formulas, so i gave up! This is why, i have sympathy with people who do not refer to primary sources.

I agree that his description on the role of religion in society is largely accurate, but i also see the drawbacks of linking it to the ruling class. My main issue with this approach is that it somehow excludes the ruling class from being equally deluded by the weaknesses of the human condition (greed, fear and ignorance), or that if the proliferates came to rule they will be radically different.

Malcolm wrote:

Marx is just an inversion of Plato's Republic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 10:10 PM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

TsultimNamdak said:

This is utterly baffling. This site is called "Dharma Wheel - A Buddhist discussion forum on Mahayana and Vajrayana Buddhism" so I would have supposed that even in a politics subforum there ought to be a Buddhist angle or at least a non-religious one, being about politics. Nicholas, you keep posting articles and book reviews from an extreme rightwing Christian viewpoint - Why do you do that here? Is it just trolling? Does it give you a warm, cuddly sense of "that will really show those leftwing, Satanic, Marxist, Commie types"?

It is utterly pathetic and it serves no other purpose than feeding your own sense of righteousness.

Nicholas Weeks said:

Are you devoid an historical sense? Does the obliteration of the Dharma in Asia by communists move you? If not, why not?

Ignoring communism's destructive effects is just speeding up this Dharma-ending age.

Malcolm wrote:

Nicholas, you have apparently neglected to read the Buddha's assertion that Dharma can not be destroyed from without, only from within. The PRC's recent actions are wholesale, aimed at erecting the cult of Xi, replacing all religion in the PRC with it. It's not really about religion. They don't care about religion beyond the fact that religious groups tend to be more resistant to mundane authorities. The PRC is acting no differently than any other entity seeking to control a market. Your focus on ideology misses the point entirely. Ideology is not the cause here, it's the excuse.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 22nd, 2020 at 10:13 PM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Marx is just an inversion of Plato's Republic.

Bundokji said:

Do you mean the aristocracy of those who believe in his interpretations?

Malcolm wrote:

Marx does not go beyond Judeo-Christian eschatology, as you already observed. He just inverts the kingdom heaven on earth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 23rd, 2020 at 12:00 AM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

If you really think that buddhadharma can only be destroyed from within,

Malcolm wrote:

I think the Buddha stated this quite clearly. Buddha statues are not Buddhadharma. Shantideva dismisses the destruction of buddha images of being any real concern. It's annoying, wasteful, and rude, certainly, but in reality Buddha statues do not suffer any more than statues of Jesus.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 23rd, 2020 at 12:02 AM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

Here is the first of snips from Kengor's Guide - this one on religion in general:
The Communist Manifesto said that, "Communism abolishes eternal truths, it abolishes all religion, and all morality." Marx and Engels envisioned a new morality without God, one based on "the most radical rupture with traditional ideas." The things that communism promises are entirely unnatural, completely contrary to what human beings had believed before, and even to their very humanity itself. It was intended to transform human nature.

Malcolm wrote:

If you believe in God, a creator being, etc., you are a Buddhist in name only, but not in view.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 23rd, 2020 at 4:01 AM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you believe in God, a creator being, etc., you are a Buddhist in name only, but not in view.

Grigoris said:

I don't understand this hard-on that Nicholas has for fundamentalist Christians either. Seems he believes that eternalism is preferable to nihilism.

That Christians are somehow natural allies with Buddhists, against materialists.

He seems to overlook the damage that Christians have inflicted on Buddhism during European colonial expansion into Asia.

Malcolm wrote:

It's the US prolife thing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 23rd, 2020 at 4:03 AM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

If you really think that buddhadharma can only be destroyed from within,

Malcolm wrote:

I think the Buddha stated this quite clearly. Buddha statues are not Buddhadharma. Shantideva dismisses the destruction of buddha images of being any real concern. It's annoying, wasteful, and rude, certainly, but in reality Buddha statues do not suffer any more than statues of Jesus.

Nicholas Weeks said:

I was thinking more of temples razed, monastics murdered & tortured etc. (but you knew that)

Malcolm wrote:

apparently you don't give a rats ass about Muslims though...just saying...where's the outrage about the Uighers?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 23rd, 2020 at 8:06 PM

Title: Re: Annals of Communism

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

Another gem from Yale giving evidence that communism infiltrated the USA.

<https://yalebooks.yale.edu/book/9780300068559/secret-world-american-communism>

A second volume provides more evidence:

<https://yalebooks.yale.edu/book/9780300071504/soviet-world-american-communism>

PeterC said:

So it's communism that's f*cking up the US, and not the Republican Party? How do you figure that?

Malcolm wrote:

We don't realize it, Peter, but the deep state is the CPUSA, and Nicholas is Q.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 23rd, 2020 at 10:14 PM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

Bundokji said:

In the article which i quoted, he reflects on the drawbacks of the state taking over many of the functions previously performed by charities and the overemphasis on notions such as rights and justice (which often come about with a sense of entitlement). It was meant to be a continuation on arguments i made on previous paragraphs about how to motivate the rich to contribute more to society while minimizing the role of government. I personally give no weight to what he does in his personal life.

Malcolm wrote:

We should not minimize the role of government. That is ridiculous. The job of the government, according to Nozik's Anarchy, State, and Utopia, is primarily to provide security and protect markets. However, when business itself is the main threat to healthy markets, business needs to be regulated, and governments enlarged to make sure these regulations are properly enforced.

The best way to motivate rich people do beneficial things with their money is to tax them on all assets in excess of say 15 million. If one cannot lead a decent life with 15 million, one is just a selfish prick. But let's say you have 100 million of personal assets, and you are faced with a choice of either give 85 to the feds, reinvesting it in a business, or setting up a charitable foundation (but not like say, Build the Wall), etc., then of course, make as much as you want, but anything above a certain number really isn't yours. You know, like during the Eisenhower years.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 23rd, 2020 at 10:17 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

the gakyil sent an email, there will be an official letter (not just one individual's perception) and a bigger meeting. patience so this arrives at the right time.

Malcolm wrote:

As far as I am concerned, since Rinpoche left no instructions, no one can speak for Rinpoche.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 23rd, 2020 at 10:24 PM

Title: Re: Biden's VP Choice

Content:

Minobu said:

So i don't get the big hub bub about postal voting...now that it is obvious that it is a mess , why not just go to a poll and vote...

Malcolm wrote:

Because of covid.

Minobu said:

all i can say it's scary...i recall when bush won i and others could not believe the American people...then those people voted in Trump...so like they never fail to completely surprise us.

Malcolm wrote:

Bush did not win in Florida, he did what Republicans always do these days, he cheated.

As for Trump, he lost the popular vote by 4 million, and won on the slimmest of margins, on a technicality of 77,000 votes, 0.055797101449275%, of the 138 million votes cast in the 2016 election.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 23rd, 2020 at 10:26 PM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #3

Content:

Fa Dao said:

yeah..all warm and fuzzy with no real content...

So disappointed with the DNC that Joe Biden was the best they could come up with all because they didnt want to give Bernie a shot.

Trump is so going to tear him a new one during the debates..it will be quite saddening for him to go out like that

Malcolm wrote:

You might as well declare yourself a trump supporter right here.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 24th, 2020 at 2:22 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Mantrik said:

Only a new head could speak for the DC.

Malcolm wrote:

Yeshe has abdicated this role completely. So, the DC is headless. Even then, not everyone would have followed Yeshe.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 24th, 2020 at 2:30 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #3

Content:

Fa Dao said:

yeah..all warm and fuzzy with no real content...

So disappointed with the DNC that Joe Biden was the best they could come up with all because they didnt want to give Bernie a shot.

Trump is so going to tear him a new one during the debates..it will be quite saddening for him to go out like that

Malcolm wrote:

You might as well declare yourself a trump supporter right here.

Fa Dao said:

no..Im still a democrat..and like a lot of us we were all very disappointed in the DNC's choice in 2016 as well as 2020

Malcolm wrote:

Bernie has gotten major things onto the DNC platform: free college, medicare for all, etc.

<https://www.forbes.com/sites/wesleywhistle/2020/07/08/biden-sanders-unity-task-force-free-college-student-debt-forgiveness-and-crack-down-on-for-profit-colleges/#5f0305d4111a>

<https://joebiden.com/healthcare/> #

Bernie won by losing. 2016 showed the Dems that if they ignore the Progressives, they lose the election.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 24th, 2020 at 2:34 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Mantrik said:

Only a new head could speak for the DC.

Malcolm wrote:

Yeshi has abdicated this role completely. So, the DC is headless. Even then, not everyone would have followed Yeshi.

Mantrik said:

Yes, at risk of a Hydra-headed existence rather than a tree with branches bearing fruit.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, it won't be like that. It will be just the same as any other Dzogchen lineage, not a tree, but more rhizomatic, all connected to the original rhizome. Hierarchy has no place in this scheme, other than to administer property and collect dues. But Garab Dorje never said, "start and organization and collect dues; set up copy right infringement protocols; trademark names;..."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 24th, 2020 at 4:12 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Matt J said:

I have been surprised that people have been thinking Yeshi would take over. Am I the only one who watched My Reincarnation?

Malcolm wrote:

No, but many people missed the statement where Rinpoche stated the DC would splinter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 24th, 2020 at 10:57 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

PeterC said:

ChNNr wanted all his students to read this book. After reading it I could understand why. The fact that his son was recognized by HH41ST as the reincarnation of the subject of the book makes the whole situation quite sad.

Tata1 said:

Im not sure i understand what you mean

PeterC said:

Which part - why he wanted us to read it, or why it's sad when viewed in context?

Malcolm wrote:

Khyentse Chokyi Wangchuk was a casualty of Derge Tulku politics, and still is, as one can see from Orgyen Thobgyal's less than kind remarks about him and the manner in which the retainers of Jamyang Khyentse Chokyi Lodo actively obstructed Norbu Rinpoche's access to the latter in Sikkim. Norbu Rinpoche wanted people to understand these circumstances because they explain a lot about the way Norbu Rinpoche's own career and teaching progressed, as well as the legacy that Yeshe was to inherit.

There are many instructive lessons here concerning the vicissitudes of the the tulku system, especially when incarnations are recognized outside of the Tibetan cultural sphere. It is well know that my personal opinion is that the practice of recognizing incarnations does not port particularly well in non-Tibetan cultural spheres.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 25th, 2020 at 7:46 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Harimoo said:

I like Adriano very much but, for me, this message, specifically, is problematic :

1st part: we've got to be responsible for ourselves, each of us following his own path

2nd part : the Community must remain together

Dzogchen teaching means that each of us can be Rinpoche's successor if we apply and realize his teaching, like sowing many seeds in a field as Rinpoche did for thousands of people in this world. Then it depends how the secondary causes are, the weather, the water and these kinds of things

Malcolm wrote:

so, the lineage of ChNN will continue, regardless of whether Yeshe is in or out.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 25th, 2020 at 7:49 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Aryjuna said:

I rewatched the movie yesterday, as I was reminded of it by the latest posts, it's nice. It does not really bring up people creating problems though, as far as I could tell, it focuses on Yeshe's relationship with his father and his struggle with being a tulku.

javier.espinoza.t said:

ChNN's cancer was directly related to people creating problems. and afaik he had it a 2nd time in his last years, causing his death.

or well, maybe is just my karmic vision, and he died due to natural causes...

Malcolm wrote:

This is just superstition, I am afraid. ChNN lived to the same age as the Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 25th, 2020 at 7:54 PM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

Bundokji said:

Taxing assets rather than annual income is a slippery slope as it puts a cap on the concentration of capital, profits and future tax revenue to the federal budget. The dynamic nature of a free market economy is what allows the likes of Eisenhower to impose higher taxes, for a while, then change.

Malcolm wrote:

Capital should not be allowed to concentrate in private hands beyond a certain level. There is no such thing as a "free market." All markets are protected and regulated.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 25th, 2020 at 8:03 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

so, the lineage of ChNN will continue, regardless of whether Yeshe is in or out.

Harimoo said:

For me, the lineage is not the problem. The problem is the organization. People immigrated to work for a Gar, other bought house nearby for their old days, some have jobs related to DC etc.

If the party is over...

Malcolm wrote:

That party is over...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 25th, 2020 at 8:43 PM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

Bundokji said:

Taxing assets rather than annual income is a slippery slope as it puts a cap on the concentration of capital, profits and future tax revenue to the federal budget. The dynamic nature of a free market economy is what allows the likes of Eisenhower to impose higher taxes, for a while, then change.

Malcolm wrote:

Capital should not be allowed to concentrate in private hands beyond a certain level. There is no such thing as a "free market." All markets are protected and regulated.

Bundokji said:

In the context i was presenting, a free market is more regulated by market forces (supply and demand) than by government regulations.

Malcolm wrote:

Such markets don't actually exist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 25th, 2020 at 8:48 PM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

"Under socialism the state owns the means of production"

...and under socialism the state functions for what economic class?

Grigoris said:

The proletariat.

entrepreneur

/ˌɒnrəprəˈnæː/noun

a person who sets up a business or businesses, taking on financial risks in the hope of profit.

This is not what happens under communism.

PadmaVonSamba said:

I'm quite familiar. I studied it quite a lot when I was young.

All I'm saying is that under socialism, in effect, since

1. The proletariat controls the state
2. State owns and invests in production, assumes risks, losses, profits,
3. Therefore the proletariat collectively Via the state, owns, and invests in production, assumes risks, losses, profits.

Therefore, it is for all intents and purposes collective entrepreneurship.

Under capitalism, the bank And the state becomes the tool by which the capitalist owns the means of production.

Malcolm wrote:

What you are describing is State Capitalism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 25th, 2020 at 8:48 PM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

Bundokji said:

What has changed recently though is the notion that the share market (which is the market value of corporate America) is a measure of the general health of the economy.

Malcolm wrote:

No one who understands anything believes the present gvt. funded bubble represents the economy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 25th, 2020 at 8:52 PM

Title: Re: How has being a Buddhist changed you?

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

The purpose of dharma is the cessation of suffering
And suffering manifests as experience of feeling.

Malcolm wrote:

This is only one of the three kinds of suffering.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 25th, 2020 at 8:54 PM

Title: Re: How has being a Buddhist changed you?

Content:

SilenceMonkey said:

I agree... It sounds like Malcolm is denying anything less than the view of nonduality is Dharma.

Malcolm wrote:

Nondual views also are not the Dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 25th, 2020 at 8:55 PM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

Bundokji said:

In the context i was presenting, a free market is more regulated by market forces (supply and demand) than by government regulations.

Malcolm wrote:

Such markets don't actually exist.

Bundokji said:

Maybe, but it speaks to human logic and appears to be predictable. It can be easily habituated and understood hence its appeal.

Malcolm wrote:

Appearances are deceiving.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 25th, 2020 at 8:58 PM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

Bundokji said:

What has changed recently though is the notion that the share market (which is the market value of corporate America) is a measure of the general health of the economy.

Malcolm wrote:

No one who understands anything believes the present gvt. funded bubble represents the economy.

Bundokji said:

Investors who bought the shares expecting future returns obviously believe that the current price reflects the future value of the corporations they invested in, unless the majority are short-selling, which would be difficult to imagine.

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually they don't. Most people have no idea what they are invested in because most people's money is not in Individual stocks.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 25th, 2020 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually they don't. Most people have no idea what they are invested in because most people's money is not in Individual stocks.

Bundokji said:

If you mean pension and superannuation, then those are usually managed by other corporates that hire financial advisors and analysts who invest on behalf of people. The logic of supply and demand persists in the sense that if those funds incur losses on behalf of pensioners, they would lose their customers, so its in their best interest to act with due diligence.

It goes without saying that i am parroting how the system is usually explained. I do not pretend to know exactly how it works.

Malcolm wrote:

Once the gvt. Introduced pension instability by allowing pension funds to invest in securities as well as bonds, the writing was on the wall for many people. But again, this is not a free market, thus is a rigged market. Rigged market are not free.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 25th, 2020 at 10:56 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Aryjna said:

I rewatched the movie yesterday, as I was reminded of it by the latest posts, it's nice. It does not really bring up people creating problems though, as far as I could tell, It focuses on Yeshi's relationship with his father and his struggle with being a tulku.

javier.espinoza.t said:

ChNN's cancer was directly related to people creating problems. and afaik he had it a 2nd time in his last years, causing his death.

or well, maybe is just my karmic vision, and he died due to natural causes...

DechenDave said:

Did Rinpoche say that's why he had cancer? If not, who did? Is this a commonly agreed upon thing in the DC?

Malcolm wrote:

All compounded things are impermanent, including the physical bodies of famous teachers, including the body of Śākyamuni Buddha. Some people have the idea that if people break their samaya, it will shorten the life of a teacher, or cause health problems for the teacher. But in ChNN's case, he lived a full 80 years, the same age as the Buddha. If breaking samaya was really a cause for a teacher's early demise, I think the life span of teachers would be shorter than the battlefield life of a tank, about one week.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 25th, 2020 at 10:57 PM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

Grigoris said:

When it comes to capitalism, it is always the poorest that pay.

Malcolm wrote:

That's point, right?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 26th, 2020 at 12:29 AM

Title: Re: How has being a Buddhist changed you?

Content:

SilenceMonkey said:

You are saying that nobody is really practicing Dharma until they realize emptiness?

Malcolm wrote:

Dharma sets out to solve one existential problem and one only: rebirth in samsara due to afflictions. If you are practicing ethics, meditation, etc. with any view in mind other than ceasing to take rebirth in samsara, you may be engaged in this or that practice, but you are not practicing Dharma. As Mañjuśrī said, "If one has clinging to this life, one is not a Dharma person."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 26th, 2020 at 12:39 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

DechenDave said:

Did Rinpoche say that's why he had cancer? If not, who did? Is this a commonly agreed upon thing in the DC?

Malcolm wrote:

All compounded things are impermanent, including the physical bodies of famous teachers, including the body of Śākyamuni Buddha. Some people have the idea that if people break their samaya, it will shorten the life of a teacher, or cause health problems for the teacher. But in ChNN's case, he lived a full 80 years, the same age as the Buddha. If breaking samaya was really a cause for a teacher's early demise, I think the life span of teachers would be shorter than the battlefield life of a tank, about one week.

Tata1 said:

He did stated, several times, that when he was sick it was better to do purification practice than long life tho.

Malcolm wrote:

To understand this we have to understand two things: 1) the cause of longevity: merit, and life force (this is why most longevity mantras contain "ayuhpunya"; and 2) the object of purification: the obscurations of affliction and knowledge, to which sometimes also karma is added as an obscuration. So now you can understand the real reason teachers recommend purification practices to their students when they become ill. It certainly isn't for their own benefit in order to live longer.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 26th, 2020 at 12:40 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Harimoo said:

Rinpoche should have died at 56.

Malcolm wrote:

According to a prediction he received from his teacher, yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 26th, 2020 at 12:57 AM

Title: Re: Latest 84K Sutra

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

Here is a translation of the dharani from the above tiny sutra:

I pay homage to the Three Jewels. I pay homage to the thus-gone, worthy, perfect buddha—the blessed Amitābha with the following: Om infinite one who arises from the infinite, whose nature is infinite, whose stride is infinite, whose range is infinite, who grants renown vast as the sky, who brings an end to all the afflictions, svāhā.

I am unclear as to what 'stride' means, it sounds so similar to 'range' ?

Malcolm wrote:

Means "step," but probably means more like courage, etc.

1 vikrAnta mfn. stepped beyond , taking wide strides &c. ; courageous , bold , strong , mighty , victorious (with %{\dhanuSi} , skilled in archery) MBh. ; m. a warrior L. ; a lion L. ; ` " passed over "'N. of a kind of Sam2dhi which leaves Visarga unchanged RPra1t. ; N. of a Praja1-pati VP. ; of a son of Kuvalaya7s3va and Mada7lasa1 Ma1rkP. ; (%{A}) f. N. of various plants (Cocculus Cordifolius , Clitoria Ternatea , Cissus Pedata &c.) L. ; n. a step , stride VS. TBr. ; manner of walking , gait MBh. R. ; bold advance , courage , might ib. ; a sham diamond L. ; a kind of intoxicating drink L. ; %{-gati} m. a man with a portly gait MW. ; %{-bhIma}N. of a drama ; %{-yodhin} m. an excellent warrior MBh. ; %{-zUdraka}N. of a drama Sarav.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 26th, 2020 at 3:30 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

schubertian said:

gossiping, backbiting, complaining, plotting and scheming and intestine feuding i

I think - I hope - you mean internecine feuding?

treehuggingoctopus said:

Damn you autocorrect! (On second thoughts, thank you, autocorrect, for lightening up the mood. I rest in the safety of knowing you will do it again. And again. And again.)

Malcolm wrote:

intestinal feuding definitely happens when fed a diet of bullshit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 26th, 2020 at 6:42 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #3

Content:

DNS said:

Professor predicts Trump will win in a landslide.

<https://news.stonybrook.edu/facultystaff/maverick-modeller-helmut-norpoth-predicts-another-win-for-trump/>

Norpoth, a professor in Stony Brook's Department of Political Science, has enjoyed notable success forecasting elections based on his Primary Model, a statistical representation of U.S. presidential races based on data going back more than a century.

The Primary Model has correctly predicted five of the past six presidential elections, and when applied to previous elections, correctly predicts an impressive 25 of the last 27, missing only the 2000 election in which George W. Bush defeated Al Gore and the 1960 election in which John F. Kennedy defeated Richard Nixon — two extremely close and contested votes marred by allegations of voting inaccuracies.

The model appears to have good success, but how can he put Trump so likely to win based on his primary wins? He was basically running unopposed for the GOP nomination, as an incumbent. Tradition has it that no one runs against the incumbent from the same Party (with only a few exceptions; Ted Kennedy in 1980 and maybe a couple of others).

One thing I do like about this model:

Unlike many other projections, Norpoth's equation ignores approval ratings.

Surveys on approval ratings are very subjective and change too quickly.

Malcolm wrote:

Alan Lichtman has also got every election right, apart from the Gore-Bush election, he predicts a Biden win:

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/08/05/opinion/2020-election-prediction-allan-lichtman.html>

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/The_Keys_to_the_White_House

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 26th, 2020 at 8:10 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Alan Lichtman has also got every election right, apart from the Gore-Bush election, he predicts a Biden win:

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/08/05/opinion/2020-election-prediction-allan-> lichtman.html

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/The_Keys_to_the_White_House

DNS said:

Apparently, he also got the 2016 election wrong.

Lichtman's model has successfully predicted the winner of the popular vote in every presidential election from 1984 to present, with the exception of 2016. In the contested election of 2000, the system predicted the popular vote winner, although not actual winners. As a result in 2000, he predicted using his system that Gore would be the next president; Gore won the popular vote but lost the electoral college.[3] In September 2016, the Keys forecast that Donald Trump would win the popular vote in the 2016 election, whereas he lost the popular vote, but won the electoral college.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/The_Keys_to_the_White_House

Malcolm wrote:

No, he got it right.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 26th, 2020 at 9:19 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #3

Content:

DNS said:

Apparently, he also got the 2016 election wrong.

Malcolm wrote:

No, he got it right.

DNS said:

Half right, at best, because Trump did not win the popular vote like he predicted; the outcome, yes, with Electoral Vote.

Malcolm wrote:

It still does not sway the results in favor of your primary watcher dude.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 26th, 2020 at 9:22 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Gedun said:

Rinpoche literally pleaded with us constantly to treat each other well, to have pure vision and give the benefit of the doubt. I certainly don't see this when people are quick to indict Yeshe based on a few things they've heard second hand. This will have absolutely no effect on him or the situation on the ground, but it can certainly have an effect on us and our realization.

Malcolm wrote:

No one indicted Yeshe of anything. All that has been pointed out is that Yeshe totally severed his ties with a community his father spent 42 years building. He is free, as we all are. But it has caused a leadership crisis in the community.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 26th, 2020 at 9:35 PM

Title: Re: Agar 35

Content:

mutsum said:

Siddhi Energetics is directed by Joe Wagner. He is a Nyingma practitioner and a very nice individual (also quite knowledgeable in the field of Tibetan medical products, etc.). His Siddhi Energetics and his sister site "Future Alchemy" are totally trustworthy.

Ignorant_Fool said:

Thanks, mutsum. Think I'll try to get in touch and talk to him about my situation. I've got so many things that are out of whack.

Malcolm wrote:

Joe, a personal friend, is not qualified to give such advice. You would need to contact Dr. Phuntsog Wangmo, Or some other Tibetan physician for guidance. As for myself, I have discontinued seeing patients.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 27th, 2020 at 3:34 AM

Title: Re: Latest 84K Sutra

Content:

mutsum said:

Vikranta is the past participle of vikrama [vi-kram] whose first meaning is that of step, march, stride, as well as pace (not sure of this last one but it seems the meaning is also that in Chinese). In this dharani, the infinite stride is to be counted as among the auspicious signs, qualities, or capacities of the Buddha. For instance, his stride (in French one would say: "son allure", "son pas", "son enjambée") is like the sauntering stride of an elephant, causing the earth to tremble ("Asceticism and the Glorification of the Buddha's Body", p. 14). Or it can be the strides of a lion (op.cit., p. 16; "Indian Buddhism through a Chinese Lens", p. 98-99):
gajapatigatigāmī śiṃhavikrāntagāmī Sauntering with the gait of the lord of elephants, with the strides* of a lion

* vikrānta विक्रान्त.

Nicholas Weeks said:

Thanks, but with the qualifier boundless or infinite, step or stride make no sense. I prefer to think of each & every movement (in thought or beyond) of Amita Buddha as bold, courageous & providential.

Malcolm wrote:

I think Mutsuk is correct bere.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 27th, 2020 at 6:54 AM

Title: Re: The Woke Supremacy

Content:

Sādhaka said:

There are instances of instigation of violence from both sides; so that's where the problem lies.

People on this forum like to deride 'conspiracy theorists', yet many 'conspiracy theorists' at least seem to make an effort to see past the false left vs right paradigm presented to us by mainstream media (cnn, fox, msnbc, etc.).

Malcolm wrote:

So, let me get this straight—you are saying there are good people on both sides?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 27th, 2020 at 6:57 AM

Title: Re: The Woke Supremacy

Content:

Grigoris said:

https://www.huffpost.com/entry/black-lives-matter-protester-shot-pennsylvania_n_5f45441dc5b60c7ec416ce79?utm_source=main_fb§ion=politics&utm_medium=facebook&ncid=fcbklnkushpmsg00000063&utm_campaign=hp_fb_page_s&fbclid=IwAR0z4i4NZwfsRH3qOpblveeWBW13BTgtEGx-kzXadQqBO8rhgSqv18LcRvM
Black Lives Matter Protester Shot While Marching Through Pennsylvania

A witness stated that a white man shot at the marchers, who are on a weekslong hike from Milwaukee to Washington, D.C. Police are investigating.

Anybody still not understand where the problem lies?

Malcolm wrote:

This is old news. The new news is:

<https://www.cbsnews.com/news/kyle-rittenhouse-kenosha-shooting-suspect-arrested-illinois/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 27th, 2020 at 11:24 PM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

Fa Dao said:

I really do want to try and understand all of this a little better as I will be trying to retire on social security in a couple of years

Malcolm wrote:

Well, you should understand that you should get your head out of the sand and vote for Biden. You didn't vote for Hillary last time, and look where that landed you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 27th, 2020 at 11:26 PM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

Grigoris said:

Now I understand why the Republicans are not really making an effort to win the next election.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they actually want to win. They believe that by inciting violence, people will vote for "law and order." It's the Nixon '68 gambit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 27th, 2020 at 11:47 PM

Title: Re: Clarification on terms

Content:

Yeshe Dorje said:

I am wondering if anyone, in this context, could guess at what the Tibetan terms could be that are being translated as 'pure' and 'perfect' and if so, are there connotations that come with the English terms that don't really equate to the Tibetan words?

Malcolm wrote:

Byang is what is being rendered as "pure," "chub" is what is being rendered as "perfect." What they are squabbling about is what is termed "the basis," which in one class of Dzogchen teachings is called "byang chub sems," or "bodhicitta." They are taking this terminology from Adriano Clemente.

Byang means "purified," as is the past tense of 'byang ba, to purify or pacify. Chub pa means "culmination, realization, or understanding," hence in Adriano's lexicon, he translates it as "perfect." "Sems" usually means mind, but not here, he is translating it as "presence."

There is a very useful explanation of this term in the long Vajra Bridge commentary:

Now the, “pure from the beginning” (gdod nas dag pa) means that without the reality of the mind essence there is not an iota of a concept established within one’s continuum. Since neither faults nor taints are established nor exist in that which has never been made nor fabricated by anyone from the beginning, it is pure from the beginning.

Pure (byang ba) means that reality of the mind essence is not adulterated by any positive or negative traces. Since transient concepts of subject and object are exhausted without remainder, it is pure.

Comprehension means (chub pa) means [6/b] 1) the comprehensions imbued with the five poisons when there is ignorance or delusion about the reality of the mind essence and 2) it means the comprehension imbued with the five pristine consciousnesses when there is knowledge and realization of that reality.

The five pristine consciousnesses: since that mind essence is recognized as the dhātu that has always been inseparable in the three times, it is the pristine consciousness of the dharmadhātu that is known as one’s mind essence. Since clarity is known as the mind essence, it is the mirror-like pristine consciousness. Since one knows the meaning of samsara and nirvana having always been uniformly permeated by the sugatagarbha, it is the pristine consciousness of uniformity. That reality exists in the continuum of all sentient beings. This being so, all phenomena of appearance and sound are distinct and bright. Since they can be discriminated as distinct and separate in one’s continuum without the need to search elsewhere, it is the individually discriminating pristine consciousness. As such, as soon as one realizes, just as it is, the meaning of how that has always been, since one understands that all objects, however they exist, have always been established in one’s continuum, this is the pristine consciousness of successful activities.

That is the five pristine consciousnesses. Furthermore, the Secret Pristine Consciousness explains:

Pristine consciousness is the consciousness of the meaning of intrinsic clarity that has never been fabricated.

[7/a] Therefore, this is the meaning of a comprehension endowed five pristine consciousnesses.

Next, because so-called “mind” (sems) is not the mind, it is the mind essence (sems nyid). The temporary concepts of mental processes arise from conditions and perish because of conditions. Being conditioned and relative, since [the mind] cannot endure and is transformed by conditions, [mind] is not ultimate.

The mind essence has always been unconditioned. The meaning of not being destroyed by conditions and never changing in the three times is that reality which clear and nonconceptual.

A slightly better translation of bodhicitta, byang chub sems, would be, "The mind essence comprehended as pure."

The group that claims that we should maintain a conceptual view that everything is pure are fools, very far away from the meaning of Dzogchen. They do not understand that this term, bodhicitta, is a description the realization of the pure nature of the mind, the basis, as being pure. Of course, if one is completely integrated with the knowledge of bodhicitta, then for you there is no karma and you will act spontaneously to benefit beings. But as long as one is distracted, one subject to affliction and action and its results, as is explained in the definition provided by the author of that text, Kunzang Dorje.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 28th, 2020 at 4:13 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

LhakpaT said:

And the logical reasoning provided by traditional Buddhist teachers is hardly persuasive for modern educated people well familiar with logic and critical thinking.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because we are so much smarter than the Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 28th, 2020 at 4:16 AM

Title: Re: Guide to Communism

Content:

Grigoris said:

Now I understand why the Republicans are not really making an effort to win the next election.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they actually want to win. They believe that by inciting violence, people will vote for "law and order." It's the Nixon '68 gambit.

Grigoris said:

And we all know how that worked out. No, I think they are more cunning than you give them credit for.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, Nixon won. They don't need to be cunning. It is basically going to boil down to whether a) people choose something resembling democracy or b) go all in for American Fascism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 28th, 2020 at 6:20 AM

Title: Re: Clarification on terms

Content:

Yeshe Dorje said:

Thank you Malcolm, very helpful indeed. In my Gelug studies bodhicitta is referred to as 'the mind of enlightenment'. Is there any readings you would recommend in order to begin to understand the differences between the gelug presentation of bodhicitta and the dzogchen presentation that you are referring to?

Malcolm wrote:

The term "bodhicitta" is used differently in Mahāyāna and Vajrayāna, and within Vajrayāna, it is used differently in mahāyoga and anuyoga (so called highest yoga tantra) and Atiyoga, where the term is sort of equivalent to the state of mahāmudra—with the caveat being that mahāmudra describes the result, whereas bodhicitta describes the basis, when arranged on the trio of basis, path, and result.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 28th, 2020 at 6:22 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

amanitamusc said:

Four Awarenesses for Those who Doubt Reincarnation

" Because any narrative always belongs to the domain of mind while the knowledge of Dzogchen is beyond mind."

The teachings and study of Dzogchen without DI is not of very much use.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, none at all. Complete waste of time better spent practicing a sadhana, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 28th, 2020 at 6:26 AM

Title: Re: Thoughts from a social philosopher

Content:

Grigoris said:

I wonder, if he [Hoffer] was alive now, what he would have to say about fanatical capitalists?

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.jacobinmag.com/2014/09/the-rights-working-class-philosopher>

Grigoris said:

The man lived a rich life of the mind — reading on the job during breaks, taking half-day walks to ponder particular intellectual conundrums, journaling fastidiously, and writing for publications. However, he never changed his views that politicians like Nixon and, especially, Reagan (first as governor, later as president) were noble and his union leaders dupes, “true believers” of false idols who demonstrated their own lack of self-confidence by joining a mass movement. Based on the limited record, Hoffer never spoke at meetings, never ran for any union office, and never volunteered in the union to help his fellow workers.

Ironically, the best-known working-class American of the Cold War era was a conservative who was lucky enough to find a job represented by the most powerful leftist union in postwar America. As such, his life represents the cognitive dissonance of many working Americans today: profiting from — albeit less so than in the past — the great gains of the labor movement yet unwilling to become union advocates.

As for Hoffer’s legacy, history can be cruel even to those who appreciate its fickleness. Today, few people know of Hoffer and fewer read him (though the term “true believer” still carries some rhetorical weight). The “longshoremen philosopher” was a powerful thinker, and the fact that he was a literary celebrity during the Cold War and consistently identified as “working class” is noteworthy.

While historians commonly associate the conservative ascendancy with Nixon and Reagan, they rarely note that the influential writings of the slightly older Hoffer predicted and praised the rise of the New Right. Scholars of Hoffer (generally conservatives themselves) inevitably note his working-class bonafides, but they don’t mention or analyze the irony of his membership in the leftist ILWU. In that way, they’re similar to all those, Hoffer included, who forgot that the labor movement brought us the weekend and much more.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 28th, 2020 at 7:54 PM

Title: Re: Why Damaging Property Isn’t The Same As “Violence”

Content:

Grigoris said:

Yes, I mean the Buddha spelled it out very clearly in the "Private Ownership is Sacrosanct" Sutra that breaking shit leads to rebirth in the Hell realms...

Fortyeightvows said:

No stealing is one of the five precepts, usually that is called 'not other people's things against their will'. By burning, smashing, stealing, ect, a person is breaking that precept.

Malcolm wrote:

I hate to point out the obvious, but the rioters are not buddhists, thus they have no precepts to break.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 28th, 2020 at 7:57 PM

Title: Re: Ability to Control the Weather

Content:

fckw said:

If anyone is willing to look into practices used by Sakta-sects, there is a fascinating read on this topic by Alexis Sanderson:

https://www.tantrictraditions.com/s/garudika_materials_in_jy-e4ey.pdf. Of course, reading comes at your own risk. After all, as a devout Buddhist practitioner you might end up in hell for peeping into Hindu tantric traditions if you are not careful.

Malcolm wrote:

No, Buddhists can make use of Hindu rites.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 28th, 2020 at 11:34 PM

Title: Re: Why Damaging Property Isn't The Same As "Violence"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I hate to point out the obvious, but the rioters are not buddhists, thus they have no precepts to break.

Fortyeightvows said:

People receive the consequences of what they do to others whether they are buddhist or not.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed, which is something the police, and the main boosters of racist violence like Fox News, should pay attention to, since the police have killed vastly many more people in extrajudicial killings than have the rioters. But somehow, you seem to overlook this, and seem to believe that right wing state-sponsored violence is "protecting law and order" and is therefore karmically neutral, whereas destroying some property elicits from you pearl-clutching condemnations and warnings about birth in lower realms.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 29th, 2020 at 1:07 AM

Title: Re: Why Damaging Property Isn't The Same As "Violence"

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

People receive the consequences of what they do to others whether they are buddhist or not.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed, which is something the police, and the main boosters of racist violence like Fox News, should pay attention to, since the police have killed vastly many more people in extrajudicial killings than have the rioters. But somehow, you seem to overlook this, and seem to believe that right wing state-sponsored violence is "protecting law and order" and is therefore karmically neutral, whereas destroying some property elicits from you pearl-clutching condemnations and warnings about birth in lower realms.

Fortyeightvows said:

The thread is about damaging property only. Not about killings

Malcolm wrote:

Do you have any idea the amount of property which has been damaged and stolen by the police from people suspected, but proven innocent of crimes under the civil forfeiture program?

<https://www.washingtonpost.com/news/wonk/wp/2015/10/01/most-americans-dont-realize-its-this-easy-for-police-to-take-your-cash/>

Then there is the wanton property damage caused by the police.

<https://www.forbes.com/sites/instituteofjustice/2019/12/03/innocent-property-owners-deserve-compensation-when-the-police-cause-destruction/#1821c2195030>

<https://www.kshb.com/news/local-news/the-price-of-pursuit-police-chases-can-lead-to-lawsuits-property-damage>

Your arguments are hollow, and smack of support for authoritarianism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 29th, 2020 at 1:08 AM

Title: Re: Trump.

Content:

gendun said:

The gaps is narrowing.

He's going to win again isn't he?

Malcolm wrote:

Only if people do not get out and vote.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 29th, 2020 at 3:08 AM

Title: Re: Why am I a socialist

Content:

Grigoris said:

"...mixed market democratic-socialist systems are the fairest and most functional societies (politically, economically and socially) that currently exist.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 29th, 2020 at 3:09 AM

Title: Re: Trump.

Content:

gendun said:

The gaps is narrowing.

He's going to win again isn't he?

Malcolm wrote:

Only if people do not get out and vote.

Minobu said:

but the numbers of the populist movement are insane...the Dems have to appeal to these people somehow , even a little would help.

you cannot rely on the intelligent crowd of America ...there are only so many people that were in the peace corp ...

anyway..itsa nightmare scenario being played out...

the dems remind me of the Liberals in Canada..i've talked to some of them that run for election federally...provincial liberals are asswipe..

they would rather lose an election than lower their standards..they stay true to their standards

Malcolm wrote:

You know that Biden is leading by 9 points, right?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 29th, 2020 at 3:50 AM

Title: Re: Trump.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.thenation.com/article/society/blueleaks-law-enforcement-blm/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 29th, 2020 at 6:48 AM

Title: Re: Thoughts from a social philosopher

Content:

shaunc said:

I'm a union member and have been since I started working at 15 years old. At one job I had I was the union delegate about 20 years ago. There is a problem with young people not wanting to be members mainly because they think why should I pay $20/week to the union when the guys not paying get exactly the same wages and benefits. Completely oblivious to the fact that it was the union that forced the hand of the employer to pay those wages and benefits originally.

Even in my own family I had to have this argument with my oldest son a few years ago. He said if I ever get a problem I'll join then. I told him that they may or may not take him on then, after all, you can't insure your car after you've had an accident.

Malcolm wrote:

Isn't socialism great!

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 29th, 2020 at 9:56 AM

Title: Re: Thoughts from a social philosopher

Content:

shaunc said:

I'm a union member and have been since I started working at 15 years old. At one job I had I was the union delegate about 20 years ago. There is a problem with young people not wanting to be members mainly because they think why should I pay $20/week to the union when the guys not paying get exactly the same wages and benefits. Completely oblivious to the fact that it was the union that forced the hand of the employer to pay those wages and benefits originally.

Even in my own family I had to have this argument with my oldest son a few years ago. He said if I ever get a problem I'll join then. I told him that they may or may not take him on then, after all, you can't insure your car after you've had an accident.

Malcolm wrote:

Isn't socialism great!

shaunc said:

I'd hardly call myself a socialist. I see absolutely nothing wrong with the employer profiting off their employees, after all they're the ones who took the gamble on starting the business, most likely borrowed money from the bank and had to put their home on the line to get it.

Not all business ventures are successful. My wife runs a small business and believe me it's not all roses

Malcolm wrote:

The fact that you are in a Union is one of the great successes of socialism, along with weekends, health care, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 29th, 2020 at 9:57 AM

Title: Re: Why am I a socialist

Content:

PeterC said:

...evidence-based government.

Malcolm wrote:

Something we are sorely in need of.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 29th, 2020 at 7:54 PM

Title: Re: Why am I a socialist

Content:

Kim O'Hara said:

The only other alternative I can think of is a benevolent dictatorship - whether of a person, a committee, or a computer - and then you have the well-known difficulty of making sure it remains benevolent.

Kim

PeterC said:

There's nothing magical about democracy, dictatorship, monarchy or any other political system. They're simply tools. They can be used and designed well, badly, skilfully or incompetently. Though bad design and incompetent use seem to be the norm these days.

Danny said:

Power is a means not an end.

Malcolm wrote:

Sadly, for most it is an end, not a means.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 29th, 2020 at 8:20 PM

Title: Re: Why am I a socialist

Content:

Danny said:

Power is a means not an end.

Malcolm wrote:

Sadly, for most it is an end, not a means.

Danny said:

True,

Power only respects power.

Malcolm wrote:

The problem is that, as Aryadeva points, kings are fools because they believe themselves to be the source of their power.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 29th, 2020 at 8:31 PM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #3

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

21% of the people who did the poll prefer Trump...

That's a pretty sizable minority

Malcolm wrote:

I wonder how many of the people who voted here for Trump actually live under the shitshow called the "Trump Administration." Not many, I'd wager.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 29th, 2020 at 9:52 PM

Title: Re: The Great Abortion Debate

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

A bhikṣu etc., only commits parajika, a complete defeat, if he causes an abortion after the 19th week. Prior to that, causing an abortion is not considered killing a human being.

Presto Kensho said:

Please cite where that can be found in the Vinaya.

Malcolm wrote:

I spoke in error. I conflated the issue with the fact that it is held in Tibetan and Ayurveda, medicine that fetuses suffer no pain prior to 19 weeks since their sense organs are not formed. In the Sarvāstivādin Vinaya, the nineteenth week is when a fetus is not longer called a "human embryo" and now termed a "human." Bhikṣus, etc., who encourage abortions do suffer monastic defeats. Unlike some people around here, when I make a mistake, I admit it.

All of the arguments against abortion hinge on religious beliefs.

According to medical and biological science, when does life begin?

Here is a summary of various views. In short, there is no consensus:

<https://science.jburroughs.org/mbahe/BioEthics/Articles/Whendoeshumanlifebegin.pdf>

Therefore, they violate the establishment clause of the first amendment.

If the government should stay out of abortion, why should there be public funding of abortion?

In the United States, abortion is a legal medical procedure, and women who seek it should not be penalized by being refused financial relief if they are unable to afford the procedure.

Ideally, people should try to avoid having abortions. Realistically, unwanted pregnancies will happen. It is far better for abortions to be safe and legal, than for them to be illegal, forcing women to resort to unsafe measures to end pregnancies. I personally do not favor abortion; however, I am totally against legislating religious principles into law.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 30th, 2020 at 3:33 AM

Title: Re: The Great Abortion Debate

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

The effect of killing a future human stops their chances to improve merit or good karma. Who knows how many sages or virtuous people are not here because of the butchery. If bad folk are trying to be born, then their chance for lessening their bad karma is also stopped.

Malcolm wrote:

Being aborted, like being murdered, can be a result of karma one committed in a past life. For example, your karmavipaka sucks so bad you were conceived in the womb of a woman who does not want to be pregnant with you. There are no "innocents" in the web of samsara. The idea that fetuses are "innocent" is an entirely Christian idea, based on creationist ideology.

Also, since all sentient beings are predicted to full buddhahood, being aborted now and again is hardly going impeded the force of the Buddha's prediction in this respect. After all, since there is no beginning to samsara, we've all been aborted countless times, and our mind streams still keep coming back for more. Of course, if one is a Christian, its a one shot deal, so more serious for them, because somehow their pitiless god does not automatically conduct aborted souls to heaven.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 30th, 2020 at 3:55 AM

Title: Re: Capitalism vs. Socialism: A Soho Forum Debate

Content:

Fa Dao said:

So the one dude was actually a libertarian? Hmm...interesting...I kinda liked the way he presented things

Malcolm wrote:

Libertarianism has its roots in the philosophy of a guy named John C. Calhoun.

Fa Dao said:

Hang around libertarians long enough and eventually one of them will start talking about "public choice theory" (I last heard it raised by a prominent libertarian scholar to justify corporations imposing adhesion contracts on their customers to force them to buy expensive consumables and service). It's a kind of catch-all theory that can handwave away any negative outcome from unregulated capitalism, the "freedom" of which is key to a kind of libertarian thought, above freedoms like "the freedom not to starve to death".

The theory has its origin in John C. Calhoun, a proponent of slavery, and James M. Buchanan, an opponent of the civil rights movement. Both used the language of oppression and freedom to defend elitism, characterizing any kind of redistributive movement as a form of oppressive control exercised by the majority (poor people, which, in America, overwhelmingly means racialized people) against a downtrodden, endangered minority (the one percent, again, overwhelmingly white people).

The connection between the libertarian right and white supremacy is forcefully made in Democracy in Chains: The Deep History of the Radical Right's Stealth Plan for America, Nancy MacLean's 2017 book, which attracted such a vitriolic response from the genteel face of oligarch-apologism that it bears scrutiny for that fact alone — anything that pricks those consciences so thoroughly must be pretty interesting!

Malcolm wrote:

<https://boingboing.net/2017/12/10/freedom-is-slavery.html>

And:

In marking Calhoun's political philosophy as the crucial antecedent of public choice theory, Tabarrok and Cowen unwittingly confirmed what critics have long maintained: libertarianism is a political philosophy shot through with white supremacy. Public choice theory, a technical language nominally about human behavior and incentives, helps ensure that blacks remain shackled.

<https://thebaffler.com/salvos/master-class-on-the-make-hartman>

And because inevitably someone will accuse Nancy MacLean of being a bad historian:

<https://medium.com/@jpj1961/was-james-buchanan-a-racist-libertarians-and-historical-research-60997da93834>

Fa Dao said:

Today's libertarians face a similar problem that Morley faced half a decade ago. Morley obviously adored Calhoun's anti-democratic political philosophy, but obviously could not defend slavery; thus slavery simply disappears as a topic in his treatment of Calhoun's thought. Today's libertarians admire Calhoun and Buchanan, but they cannot possibly admit that those figures were involved in racial segregation; thus segregation disappears as a topic. We saw the same thing with Constitutional originalists: That the theory was used for decades to defend racial segregation is simply ignored. MacLean has shown how Buchanan did work in an alliance with segregationists. Public choice theorists must face up to this fact as a flaw in their system of thought or admit that they have no answer to her case. They have not yet done so.

Malcolm wrote:

And:

When making your case, libertarians, please spare us the Freidmanesque "It would have worked if they hadn't given up!" None of that counterfactual stuff. We want a good, positive, libertarian-approved history of massive resistance that places the libertarians on the side of racial justice. Good luck.

<https://altrightorigins.com/2017/08/11/arguing-with-libertarians/>

And:

Rand's essay typifies two problems we have encountered before in this space. First, that the thing that united (and unites) right wing thinking is its commitment to inegalitarianism: right wing thought simply rejects equality as an important value or embraces inequality as a positive good. Second, that the libertarian reduction of all rights to property rights makes them unable to adequately respond to white supremacy. Both of these aspects of Rand's thinking are evident in her essay and in some of her subsequent writings.

<https://altrightorigins.com/2018/01/03/ayn-rand-on-racism/#more-8740>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 30th, 2020 at 4:12 AM

Title: Re: Pegyal Lingpa's Seven-line Prayer Sadhana

Content:

pemachophel said:

I am looking for a digital version of Pegyal Lingpa's Seven-line Prayer sadhana. I received the lung from Gochen Tulku Sang-ngak Rinpoche. My regular email address <mailto:13pemachophel@gmail.com> if you'd be willing to share it with me.

Thanks

Malcolm wrote:

sent

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 30th, 2020 at 4:18 AM

Title: Re: The Great Abortion Debate

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

The effect of killing a future human stops their chances to improve merit or good karma. Who knows how many sages or virtuous people are not here because of the butchery. If bad folk are trying to be born, then their chance for lessening their bad karma is also stopped.

Malcolm wrote:

Being aborted, like being murdered, can be a result of karma one committed in a past life. For example, your karmavipaka sucks so bad you were conceived in the womb of a woman who does not want to be pregnant with you. There are no "innocents" in the web of samsara. The idea that fetuses are "innocent" is an entirely Christian idea, based on creationist ideology.

Also, since all sentient beings are predicted to full buddhahood, being aborted now and again is hardly going impeded the force of the Buddha's prediction in this respect. After all, since there is no beginning to samsara, we've all been aborted countless times, and our mind streams still keep coming back for more. Of course, if one is a Christian, its a one shot deal, so more serious for then, because somehow their pitiless god does not automatically conduct aborted souls to heaven.

Nicholas Weeks said:

So is human intervention required to fulfill bad karma? I think not. My mother lost a child from a natural (or karmic if you wish) miscarriage.

Malcolm wrote:

Sometimes one's negative karma results in one being reborn in a place where one's life will be taken in an untimely way: there are three causes of death: lack of merit, exhaustion of life force, and karmavipaka, such as being murdered.

One can reasonably assume that aborted human fetuses either lack the merit to take birth in a suitable womb or that their karmavipaka causes them to meet death before they have been born at the hands of abortionist.

After all, karma is unerring, and killing human beings is killing human beings. But it does not stop the police from killing suspects, criminals from killing the police, nor soldiers from shooting each other, etc., all causes and results of karma.

You know what they say: Karma's a bitch.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 30th, 2020 at 4:21 AM

Title: Re: Capitalism vs. Socialism: A Soho Forum Debate

Content:

Matt J said:

I think this is the point everyone misses. In theory, this should be the key that unites not only the left, but the left and right (since most people, period, are not oligarchs). But the oligarchs will never let that happen, will they? If anything, the rich just keep getting richer.

Queequeg said:

Right now, power lies in the oligarchs. That needs to shift. That will require a broad agenda that must be implemented democratically.

Malcolm wrote:

Libertarianism is ideology of the oligarchs. That's why the Kochs, people like Theil and Musk, etc., are all fans of it. This is why the right has sold libertarianism to the American working class—it keeps them reach and the working class in blinkers.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 30th, 2020 at 5:05 AM

Title: Re: Pegyal Lingpa's Seven-line Prayer Sadhana

Content:

pemachophel said:

I am looking for a digital version of Pegyal Lingpa's Seven-line Prayer sadhana. I received the lung from Gochen Tulku Sang-ngak Rinpoche. My regular email address <mailto:13pemachophel@gmail.com> if you'd be willing to share it with me.

Thanks

Malcolm wrote:

sent

Sherab Rigdrol said:

Malcolm, could you please send me a copy as well? Thank you!

Malcolm wrote:

<http://tbrc.org/link?RID=W20869>

http://tbrc.org/link?RID=O2DB72891%7CO2DB728912DB73350\$W20869

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 30th, 2020 at 5:07 AM

Title: Re: Practicing dzogchen without tantric vows? Do i need them?

Content:

Danny said:

You don't need tantric vows to practice dzogchen. What you need is direct introduction from a teacher that meets all the qualifications, i.e. a teacher that teaches in perfect harmony with Garab Dorje's three statements.

Then later if your interested, you can discover the differences between initiation, empowerment, blessings, vows, samayas etc of the tantric system.

heart said:

Actually there are samayas in Dzogchen.

<https://www.rigpawiki.org/index.php?title=Samaya>

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Sort of, yes. But they all basically boil down to: don't be a dick.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 31st, 2020 at 12:41 AM

Title: Re: Greetings and Request for Guidance

Content:

cd347 said:

Are you suggesting that it's impossible to recognise the primordial state without assistance?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. In fact, the reason we are in samsara now is that we did not recognize the primordial state, the ye gzhi, aka the primordial basis, to begin with. If we have not recognized it on our own yet, how are we going to recognize it now? Dzogchen tantras are univocal in asserting that one must rely in a guru, and without one, we cannot recognize our own basis independently. There is no such thing as a self-arising Dzogchen teacher, other than Garab Dorje, and he was an emanation of the Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 31st, 2020 at 2:10 AM

Title: Re: The Dharmadatu Palace of Omin

Content:

JimO said:

Hello,

I wonder if anyone can help me. I have a small question about the Guru Yoga portion of the Ngondro text "The Chariot that takes the Path of the Realised".

On page 22b of my (Samye Ling) translation, it says:

From the dharmadatu palace of Omin, the one who is the very essence of the buddhas of the three times shows me clearly that my mind is the dharmakaya...

Can anyone tell me which buddha / diety this refers to? I have done some Google searches but nothing enlightening comes up!

Jim.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddha Vajradhara, Omin is phonetic rendering of "og min, which is a translation of Akaniṣṭha, which means "nothing higher" and refers to the buddhafiield of the Sambhogakāya. Sometimes, Akaniṣṭha is treated as the dharmakāya buddhafiield.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 31st, 2020 at 7:32 AM

Title: Re: The Woke Supremacy

Content:

Matt J said:

Now the right wingers are regularly shooting BLM protestors. So much for the antifa conspiracy.

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/08/30/us/portland-trump-rally-shooting.html>

Malcolm wrote:

This was Trump supporter that was shot. But not at a protest.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 31st, 2020 at 8:18 PM

Title: Re: Practicing dzogchen without tantric vows? Do i need them?

Content:

Danny said:

You don't need tantric vows to practice dzogchen. What you need is direct introduction from a teacher that meets all the qualifications, I.e. a teacher that teaches in perfect harmony with Garab Dorjes three statements.

Then later if your interested, you can discover the differences between initiation, empowerment, blessings, vows, samayas etc of the tantric system.

heart said:

Actually there are samayas in Dzogchen.

<https://www.rigpawiki.org/index.php?title=Samaya>

/magnus

florin said:

Actually dzogchen transcends the 10 natures of tantra.

Malcolm wrote:

The nature of the mind does, but not the mind. It's important to make a distinction between these two. When we see the ten principles of tantra being rejected in dzogcheb texts, they being rejected from the point of view of the basis, but not necessarily the path, which is why the Rigpa rangshar, the sgra thal gyur, and other tantras teach the necessity of empowerment, samaya, mandalas, and so on. The root tantra of dzogchen is not the kun byed rgyal po, but rather, the sgra thal gyur.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 1st, 2020 at 1:44 AM

Title: Re: CDC update

Content:

Dan74 said:

When those shocking numbers were coming out of Italy, we did see that the vast majority were elderly with preexisting conditions. The early 3%-5% mortality estimates were way too high too. Looks like it's under 0.5%. Still high and very contagious but not the disaster we initially feared.

Malcolm wrote:

It depends where one is. In Mexico, for example the covid case mortality rate is 10+%. In the US it is 2.1%. In the UK, 12.4 percent. In Italy, 13.2%.

Figures taken from here. The CDC is not a reliable source of information. It has been compromised by radical Christians.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 1st, 2020 at 8:24 AM

Title: CDC update Is fake news

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

CDC has not reduced the death count related to COVID-19

Some widely shared social media posts suggest the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention “backpedaled” on the number of deaths caused by COVID-19, but an AP Fact Check finds that’s not true

Read in ABC News: <https://apple.news/AwIZXaFzyR0q28M4A9ggMpQ>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 1st, 2020 at 8:02 PM

Title: Re: Dudjom Drollo

Content:

merilingpa said:

Hi!

I am kind of confused over Drollo in the Dudjom tradition.

There is the "Dudjom Traktung Pema Sokdrub" and also "Düddul Wangdrak Dorje Drolö".

As I understand it, they were both revealed by Dudjom Rinpoche.

Are there 2 cycles or are there only different sadhanas ?

Are there 2 different empowerments ?

Any more information on this would be most appreciated.

Thank you !

Malcolm wrote:

Outer and inner practices, same cycle.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 1st, 2020 at 9:21 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen without deity yoga/two stages?

Content:

yagmort said:

these are 2 quotes by Malcolm Smith taken from 2 topics, both locked.

Malcolm wrote:

...It may be the case that in modern Tibetan Buddhism Dzogchen has become mixed with anuyoga teachings, especially at the level of empowerments. For example, the Longchen Nyinthig is mostly deity practices. The Dzogchen section of it is very short, only a few very short texts (Yeshe Lama is not part of the Longchen Nyinthig, though it is included in the supporting text material)...

...

...We are talking about Dzogchen as it is presented within the Dzogchen tantras themselves and their related instructions such as the Vima Nyinthig, which have zero deity yoga practices as part of the path...

yagmort said:

taken from <https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?t=21990&start=160>

Malcolm wrote:

...Finally, just because some sadhana has really pretty Dzogchen words like "ka dag," "lhun grub," etc., does not mean that sadhana actually belongs to Dzogchen teachings. A case in point is the Chetsun Nyingthig. The Chetsun Nyingthig's actual Dzogchen instructions are included only in a very short section at the very end of the root text. The rest of it is devoted to discussing the empowerment, the ngondro practice, the sadhana of Chetsun, and so on. It is a wonderful practice, excellent in every way. But when you are practicing some sadhana reciting mantras, you are practicing the two stages, not Dzogchen. This does not mean the Chetsun Nyinthig sucks, does not have blessings (whatever that means) and so on. It means that in that system, when you have finished the two stages connected with the practice of Chetsun, then you move on to actual Dzogchen preliminaries and the main practice of Dzogchen. The main emphasis of the Chetsun Nyingthig is the Guru Yoga of Vimalamitra. It is very profound. But the main practice of Dzogchen is more profound, as Vimalamitra would agree...

...

...Some people like to follow the modern Nyingma system. I prefer to follow Garab Dorje.

We are all free to do as we like...

yagmort said:

taken from

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?start=180&t=25216&sid=fde6e99aa84851af8af8312313f85fdd> what i am curious about is are there any Dzogchen lineages/cycles which reflect Malcolm's POV? honestly i thought there are no cycles nowadays which has little to no deity yoga. i mean even if one would like to follow such an approach it's not possible to practice say Vima Nyingthig?

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen Community.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 1st, 2020 at 9:26 PM

Title: Re: Why Damaging Property Isn't The Same As "Violence"

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

If someone is justifiably angry at "the system"

and as an expression of protest, they burn down your house and destroy everything you have, you're okay with that, as long as nobody got hurt.

Malcolm wrote:

In military jargon, it's called "collateral damage," and guess what, when the police destroy your property, you have to be ok with it, even if someone gets hurt, just like you have to be ok with it when a LOE "chokes" and kills someone. After all, under Trump, policing is kinda like golf, only with guns.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 1st, 2020 at 9:29 PM

Title: Re: Vajrakilaya Empowerment

Content:

namtose said:

Jigme Lingpa was born in 1730. His phurba practice is part of the Longchen Nyingthig terma.

Malcolm wrote:

Jigling rgyud lugs phurba is part of Kama.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 1st, 2020 at 11:51 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen without deity yoga/two stages?

Content:

yagmort said:

thanks

Malcolm wrote:

But generally, if you want mundane siddhis, then you need to practice some creation stage practice, like Tara, Kilaya, Amitayus, etc. depending on one needs.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 1st, 2020 at 11:53 PM

Title: Re: Why Damaging Property Isn't The Same As "Violence"

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

If someone is justifiably angry at "the system"

and as an expression of protest, they burn down your house and destroy everything you have, you're okay with that, as long as nobody got hurt.

Malcolm wrote:

In military jargon, it's called "collateral damage," and guess what, when the police destroy your property, you have to be ok with it, even if someone gets hurt, just like you have to be ok with it when a LOE "chokes" and kills someone. After all, under Trump, policing is kinda like golf, only with guns.

PadmaVonSamba said:

So, you agree then, if I destroy Malcolm's house, say, to protest offshore drilling for oil, or police brutality, or perhaps factor farming, or U.S. military actions, that makes complete sense, and you are okay with that.

Malcolm wrote:

You missed the point. We regularly excuse the actions of our government officials when they involve damaging property and life, but clutch our pearls when civilians get angry and start burning shit. I didn't indicate that either was acceptable. Merely that one is tolerated, the other is not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 1st, 2020 at 11:55 PM

Title: Re: Dudjom Drollo

Content:

merilingpa said:

Hi!

I am kind of confused over Drollo in the Dudjom tradition.

There is the "Dudjom Traktung Pema Sokdrub" and also "Düddul Wangdrak Dorje Drolö".

As I understand it, they were both revealed by Dudjom Rinpoche.
Are there 2 cycles or are there only different sadhanas ?
Are there 2 different empowerments ?
Any more information on this would be most appreciated.
Thank you !

Malcolm wrote:
Outer and inner practices, same cycle.

treehuggingoctopus said:
Malcolm, isn't Pema Sokdrub the inner one?

Does their belonging to the same cycle mean that receiving one Dudjom Tersar Drollo wang lets one practice either (provided one has the lung)?

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, Pema Srogyal is the inner one, more anuyoga. Duddul Wangdrak is more mahayoga.

There are two separate empowerments, but they are frequently combined into one. I have received this that way twice now. They both come from the same cycle. Then there is the pure vision profound Hūṃ practice...

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, September 2nd, 2020 at 2:17 AM
Title: Re: Dzogchen without deity yoga/two stages?
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
But generally, if you want mundane siddhis, then you need to practice some creation stage practice, like Tara, Kilaya, Amitayus, etc. depending on one needs.

yagmort said:
no, not really, i m not after mundane siddhis honestly. all i aspire is to see true nature of things, but that's a common. i was just curious if there is any particular dzogchen cycle were you refering to, as all major cycles i know about - longchen nyingtig, chetsün nyingthig, chokling tersar, dudjom tersar, yangti nagpo, rigdzin sögdrup.. - all have deity sadhanas as part of their paths. so when you say "dzogchen community" am i correct assuming you talk about Namkhai Norbu's approach to dzogchen rather than any specific cycle?

Malcolm wrote:
Sadhanas can be a part of the path, as a secondary practice. Same is true in the DC. But it is not the main point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 2nd, 2020 at 2:18 AM

Title: Re: Why Damaging Property Isn't The Same As "Violence"

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

If someone is justifiably angry at "the system"

and as an expression of protest, they burn down your house and destroy everything you have, you're okay with that, as long as nobody got hurt.

Johnny Dangerous said:

This isn't what's happening though. Relatively small groups of people are committing acts like these against the backdrop of a large protest movement, most of the participants in said movement aren't destroying property. So, it may be wrong, but constantly talking about that - instead of what's being protested- is a problem.

It's a problem precisely because the people who don't want the circumstances being protested to change would very much like for you to focus on property destruction, rather than the elephant in the room.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, represented above by MLK as the personification of #BLM.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 2nd, 2020 at 4:27 AM

Title: Re: Why Damaging Property Isn't The Same As "Violence"

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

So, you agree then, if I destroy Malcolm's house, say, to protest offshore drilling for oil, or police brutality, or perhaps factory farming, or U.S. military actions, that makes complete sense, and you are okay with that.

Malcolm wrote:

You missed the point. We regularly excuse the actions of our government officials when they involve damaging property and life, but clutch our pearls when civilians get angry and start burning shit. I didn't indicate that either was acceptable. Merely that one is tolerated, the other is not.

PadmaVonSamba said:

No, I totally get that. I'm not that dense. And I've been involved fighting against both overt racism and systematic racism for nearly 50 years. I get the argument.

My question is whether it's also okay to destroy your house as part of the protesting Process.

A simple yes or no will suffice.

Malcolm wrote:

The question is irrelevant to the discussion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 2nd, 2020 at 4:30 AM

Title: Re: Why Damaging Property Isn't The Same As "Violence"

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

Most of the protesters are peaceful. But there's no responsible organizational leadership that can claim to represent that, that can denounce non-peaceful demo crashes as agent provocateurs, testosterone-driven Che Guevara wannabes, and RCP-type adventurists who think the American public is on the brink of Proletarian revolution.

Malcolm wrote:

You means in the same way MLK did NOT denounce rioters?

PadmaVonSamba said:

I think America must see that riots do not develop out of thin air. Certain conditions continue to exist in our society which must be condemned as vigorously as we condemn riots. But in the final analysis, a riot is the language of the unheard. And what is it that America has failed to hear? It has failed to hear that the plight of the Negro poor has worsened over the last few years. It has failed to hear that the promises of freedom and justice have not been met. And it has failed to hear that large segments of white society are more concerned about tranquility and the status quo than about justice, equality, and humanity. And so in a real sense our nation's summers of riots are caused by our nation's winters of delay. And as long as America postpones justice, we stand in the position of having these recurrences of violence and riots over and over again. Social justice and progress are the absolute guarantors of riot prevention.

Malcolm wrote:

Seems MLK was spot on then, and he is spot on now. #BLM

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 2nd, 2020 at 8:52 PM

Title: Re: Practicing dzogchen without tantric vows? Do i need them?

Content:

florin said:

Actually dzogchen transcends the 10 natures of tantra.

Malcolm wrote:

The nature of the mind does, but not the mind. It's important to make a distinction between these two. When we see the ten principles of tantra being rejected in dzogchen texts, they being rejected from the point of view of the basis, but not necessarily the path, which is why the Rigpa rangshar, the sgra thal gyur, and other tantras teach the necessity of empowerment, samaya, mandalas, and so on. The root tantra of dzogchen is not the kun byed rgyal po, but rather, the sgra thal gyur.

florin said:

I was under the impression that the 17 tantras are a much later development than originally thought according to some more recent scholarship.

If i recall correctly even you yourself at one point expressed doubts with regards to their supposed origins.

Malcolm wrote:

Our teacher considered the sgra thal gyur to be the most important of these tantras. I don't pay much heed to opinions of western scholars, they warp people's views of our tradition, and the Jaxes of the world follow them, misleading themselves and taking others with them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 2nd, 2020 at 9:51 PM

Title: Re: Practicing dzogchen without tantric vows? Do i need them?

Content:

florin said:

I was under the impression that the 17 tantras are a much later development than originally thought according to some more recent scholarship.

If i recall correctly even you yourself at one point expressed doubts with regards to their supposed origins.

Malcolm wrote:

Our teacher considered the sgra thal gyur to be the most important of these tantras. I don't pay much heed to opinions of western scholars, they warp people's views of our tradition, and the Jaxes of the world follow them, misleading themselves and taking others with them.

florin said:

Right.

Then in the future, whenever you feel the need to interject, dont forget to remind us not to pay too much attention to your opinion.

Malcolm wrote:

This is unnecessarily antagonistic. I understand that you believe the kun byed rgyal po to be the be-all and end-all of Dzogchen, and that's fine; but my opinions are not derived from some theory of my own making. I base myself on my gurus and the authoritative texts of our tradition. Vimalamitra states in Buddhahood in This Life (pg. 128):

If it is asked from which tantra those empowerments with their samaya originate, the Self-Originated Perfection Tantra, Mind Mirror of Vajrasattva Tantra, Powerful Lion Tantra, and Self-Arisen Vidyā Tantra state [the empowerments with samayas] exist to be conferred. [52b] The Inlaid Jewels Tantra and so on state both positions: the empowerments with samayas exist and do not exist to be conferred. Though it is claimed that the Realms and Transformations of Sound Tantra, String of Pearls Tantra, and Heap of Jewels Tantra show that the empowerments with samayas do not exist to be conferred, all four are shown in the Realms and Transformations of Sound Tantra. Nevertheless, the very unelaborate empowerment that illustrates the symbol of the mind is therefore primarily explained. Further, the result of buddhahood arises without impediment from the conjunction of a qualified guru, a disciple who possesses samaya, and the blessings of the empowerment. For example, like grain ripening after a seed is planted in fertile soil, well-tended with water, and so on, the result ripens based on not damaging samaya after the empowerment has been conferred upon one's pure continuum. It is not enough to leave grain such as barley and so on in their ripened state; they must be harvested. Like grain being suitable to eat after it has been harvested, the crop milled, and so on, having ripened that result of the mind, it is also necessary for the guru to correctly teach the instructions. If it is asked what the purpose is of ripening and liberation, just as ripened grain will be of no benefit if it is not harvested, even if one's continuum is completely ripened through purification, it is wasted if one does not practice the liberating intimate instructions of the guru. That demonstrates the four empowerments that ripen the practitioner, the special support along with samaya. Longchenpa points out in the Lama Yangthig: "Now then, although there is nothing to damage or transgress, the natural great perfection being beyond a boundary to protect, it is necessary for yogins on the path of practice to abide in commitments."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 2nd, 2020 at 10:21 PM

Title: Re: Why Damaging Property Isn't The Same As "Violence"

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

I'm not disagreeing with MLK in context.

But I still want to know if destroying property also happened include your house, if you'd be okay with that.

Otherwise, it's all hypothetical bullshit.

Malcolm wrote:

You are asking me the wrong question, as I keep telling you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 2nd, 2020 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: Why Damaging Property Isn't The Same As "Violence"

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

I'm not disagreeing with MLK in context.

But I still want to know if destroying property also happened include your house, if you'd be okay with that.

Otherwise, it's all hypothetical bullshit.

Malcolm wrote:

You are asking me the wrong question, as I keep telling you.

PadmaVonSamba said:

Sorry, I didn't realize you were homeless.

Malcolm wrote:

Your question presupposes that it is ok for the state to destroy property, but not civilians. I already answered that neither is acceptable, but that it happens. In the case of the former, it is considered allowable and understandable, but in the case of the latter it is met with pearl-clutching indignant cries about lawlessness and anarchy. Hence, you keep asking the wrong question.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 3rd, 2020 at 3:13 AM

Title: Re: Why Damaging Property Isn't The Same As "Violence"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Your question presupposes that it is ok for the state to destroy property, but not civilians.

PadmaVonSamba said:

No, that's a quality that you are imputing.

Would I protest Oil drilling by creating an oil spill?

No. But that doesn't automatically mean I am okay with the construction of a pipeline by an oil company, simply because I wouldn't cause an oil spill myself.

I already answered that neither is acceptable, but that it happens. In the case of the former, it is considered allowable and understandable, but in the case of the latter it is met with pearl-clutching indignant cries about lawlessness and anarchy. Hence, you keep asking the wrong question.

Wrong question or not, I thank you very much for answering it, even if in a roundabout way, that you would regard it allowable and understandable for angry people to destroy your home (if their anger was over a just cause, I assume).

You are indeed both generous and noble, and with much less attachment than myself.

...

Malcolm wrote:

If one's home is destroyed, what can one do? Are you going to stand out in front of a crowd of protestors pointing weapons at them? Are you going to get into a pitched gun battle with the state, ala Ruby Ridge? In both cases the result will be the same. This is why your question is the wrong question. If my home were to be destroyed by either the state or a mob, whether I am "ok" with it or not is irrelevant, my home is destroyed in either instance. My being upset about it isn't going to change the outcome one way or another. It's like asking whether or not someone is ok with the fact that they lost their house in Napa. Their house is gone, no matter how they feel about it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 3rd, 2020 at 3:23 AM

Title: Re: Practicing dzogchen without tantric vows? Do i need them?

Content:

florin said:

Right.

Then in the future, whenever you feel the need to interject, dont forget to remind us not to pay too much attention to your opinion.

Malcolm wrote:

This is unnecessarily antagonistic. I understand that you believe the kun byed rgyal po to be the be-all and end-all of Dzogchen, and that's fine; but my opinions are not derived from some theory of my own making. I base myself on my gurus and the authoritative texts of our tradition. Vimalamitra states in Buddhahood in This Life (pg. 128):

If it is asked from which tantra those empowerments with their samaya originate, the Self-Originated Perfection Tantra, Mind Mirror of Vajrasattva Tantra, Powerful Lion Tantra, and Self-Arisen Vidyā Tantra state [the empowerments with samayas] exist to be conferred. [52b] The Inlaid Jewels Tantra and so on state both positions: the empowerments with samayas exist and do not exist to be conferred. Though it is claimed that the Realms and Transformations of Sound Tantra, String of Pearls Tantra, and Heap of Jewels Tantra show that the empowerments with samayas do not exist to be conferred, all four are shown in the Realms and Transformations of Sound Tantra. Nevertheless, the very unelaborate empowerment that illustrates the symbol of the mind is therefore primarily explained. Further, the result of buddhahood arises without impediment from the conjunction of a qualified guru, a disciple who possesses samaya, and the blessings of the empowerment. For example, like grain ripening after a seed is planted in fertile soil, well-tended with water, and so on, the result ripens based on not damaging samaya after the empowerment has been conferred upon one's pure continuum. It is not enough to leave grain such as barley and so on in their ripened state; they must be harvested. Like grain being suitable to eat after it has been harvested, the crop milled, and so on, having ripened that result of the mind, it is also necessary for the guru to correctly teach the instructions. If it is asked what the purpose is of ripening and liberation, just as ripened grain will be of no benefit if it is not harvested, even if one's continuum is completely ripened through purification, it is wasted if one does not practice the liberating intimate instructions of the guru. That demonstrates the four empowerments that ripen the practitioner, the special support along with samaya. Longchenpa points out in the Lama Yangthig: "Now then, although there is nothing to damage or transgress, the natural great perfection being beyond a boundary to protect, it is necessary for yogins on the path of practice to abide in commitments."

florin said:

The samayas of dzogchen are implicit in the natural state and can never be broken.

Malcolm wrote:

Those four samayas can never be broken because they relate to the basis (aka natural state), and not the path.

florin said:

And in my view when Longchenpa says to abide by commitments, given that he is addressing dzogchenpas, he appears to mean to rest in the state. Because by doing so everything is fulfilled.

Malcolm wrote:

No, that is not what he is saying at all. He is following what the seventeen tantras says about samayas, not what florin says about samayas, because we are not always resting in the state of the basis. When we are not, which is most of the time, then we have something to observe and protect while we are on the path. This text by Longchenpa does not even discuss the four great samayas, it discusses only the 27 samayas of body, voice, and mind, to which all Dzogchen practitioners are subject. He says in the same text:

As such, protect these twenty seven commitments well, and moreover, the appropriate secrets, entrusted, and the accepted secrets must necessarily be guarded like one's eyes.

Thus to boast that Dzogchen practitioners have no samayas to protect is very damaging both to the person making the claim, and the others that follow their mistaken guidance.

florin said:

And if you think he means tantric commitments and as a side note, do you think he followed the commitments when he disparaged yantra yoga practitioners and yogis who practice with channels and winds while attempting to introduce the winds into the central channel?

Malcolm wrote:

Longchenpa never disparaged yantra, etc., he made fun of people who were obsessed with karmamudra practice, and stated it was for people with excess lust, who needed to get it out of their system before they were ready for serious practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 3rd, 2020 at 3:27 AM

Title: Re: Practicing dzogchen without tantric vows? Do i need them?

Content:

florin said:

Will that person have any samaya to uphold when not in the natural state ?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, the 22 common root and branch samayas as well as the twenty-seven samayas specific to the great perfection.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 4th, 2020 at 12:12 AM

Title: Re: Why Damaging Property Isn't The Same As "Violence"

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

If you are a woman who has been a victim of domestic violence, then if a person killed by police has a history of committing domestic violence, then you very well might applaud with the police action for reasons, emotional, rational, whatever, have nothing to do with the issue of race.

Malcolm wrote:

This is still extrajudicial violence, and deprives that man the right to defend himself in court. It really doesn't matter how the alleged victim feels.

Our system of justice depends on due process. Our system of democracy depends upon people's rights being protected from police violence, just as much it depends on people's rights to be protected from mob violence, such as the Tulsa and Rosewood massacres, and more recently, the public lynchings of Floyd and so many other black and brown people who are victims of racist violence, whether they are criminals or not, or the recent murder of the Trump supporter in downtown Portland, who clearly provoked his own death by spraying people with mace.

However, at the moment, law and order has been deliberately undermined by the "Law and Order" president, who himself has broken more laws than anyone can count. It is therefore not at all surprising that disenfranchised people are going to burn shit down since they have been targets of racial violence, economic violence, and state-mandated brutality in this country since 1619, and 1492, if we include native people.

Happy people do not destroy their own neighborhoods without cause or reason.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 4th, 2020 at 1:10 AM

Title: Re: Why Damaging Property Isn't The Same As "Violence"

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

The person I mentioned is not imaginary, and is a victim of domestic violence, and that is her point of view. Within the context of violence against women, which of course is related to systematic sexism in society, is the context from which she takes that position.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, and she could take matters into her own hands, and kill her abuser. But she would still be arrested, taken to trial, and a jury of her peers, ideally, would decide whether she was justified in killing her abuser. But the police ought not have the power to extrajudicially murder anyone. Of course, these days, the police always use the excuse of personal safety for unloading seven rounds into the back of anyone they deem a threat. And most cops who murder people are exonerated; and this means we are allowing a consistent percentage of sociopaths in uniforms to police our streets, often poorly trained, and often not very educated.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 4th, 2020 at 1:21 AM

Title: Re: Why is everything which is a product - impermanent ?

Content:

samr said:

Hi,

It is often asserted that "sound is impermanent because it is a product".

The implication is that whatever is a product is impermanent.

Why is it true?

Logical reasonings, and references are both welcome.

P.S. I believe that the meaning here is subtle impermanence - change moment by moment.

Malcolm wrote:

Simply put, because all products are compounded phenomena.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 4th, 2020 at 1:29 AM

Title: Re: Trump.

Content:

Minobu said:

they hand you a Ballot slip with lil black circles and the names of who is running and with a pencil you place your X in the circle ..fold it once... hand it to the guy at the poll who then folds it again hands it back to you and you put it in the ballot box..

Bristollad said:

Why would you hand it to the guy at the poll?! In the UK, they hand you your ballot paper, you go to a booth and cast your vote. You then fold and put it in the ballot box. The point is no-one knows how you've cast your vote unless you choose to tell them. No-one inside the polling station is even allowed to ask who you might vote for.

Malcolm wrote:

In my town, you go to the polling place, our town hall. You check in, ask for your ballot, you go to a booth. You mark it, you check out, and feed your ballot into our 100+ year old ballot marking machine, which accepts your ballot by the poll worker pulling a handle on it, and when your ballot is pulled into the machine, the machine rings. Then you leave.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 4th, 2020 at 1:33 AM

Title: Re: Why Damaging Property Isn't The Same As "Violence"

Content:

Unknown said:

The civil rights movement was not purely non-violent. Some of its bravest, most inspiring activists worked within the framework of disciplined non-violence. Many of its bravest, most inspiring activists did not. It took months of largely non-violent campaigning in Birmingham, Alabama to force JFK to give his speech calling for a civil rights act. But in the month before he did so, the campaign in Birmingham had become decidedly not-non-violent:

protesters had started fighting back against the police and Eugene "Bull" Conner, throwing rocks, and breaking windows. Robert Kennedy, afraid that the increasingly riotous atmosphere in Birmingham would spread across Alabama and the South, convinced John to deliver the famous speech and begin moving towards civil rights legislation.

This would have been impossible without the previous months of courageous and tireless non-violent activism. But it is also the emergent threat of rioting that forced JFK's hand. Both Malcolm X and MLK had armed bodyguards. Throughout the civil rights era, massive non-violent civil disobedience campaigns were matched with massive riots. The most famous of these was the Watts rebellion of 1965 but they occurred in dozens of cities across the country. To argue that the movement achieved what it did in spite of rather than as a result of the mixture of not-non-violent and non-violent action is spurious at best. And, lest we forget, Martin Luther King Jr., the man who embodied the respectable non-violent voice that the white power structure claims they would listen to today, was murdered by that same white power structure anyway.

Though the Civil Rights movement won many battles, it lost the war. Mass incarceration, the fact that black wealth and black-white inequality are at the same place they were at the start of the civil rights movement, that many US cities are more segregated now than they were in the sixties: no matter what “colorblind” liberals would say, racial justice has not been won, white supremacy has not been overturned, racism is not over. In fact, anti-black racism remains the foundational organizing principle of this country. That is because this country is built on the right to property, and there is no property, no wealth in the USA without the exploitation, appropriation, murder, and enslavement of black people.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://thenewinquiry.com/in-defense-of-looting/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 4th, 2020 at 2:45 AM

Title: Re: 6 Reasons so Many Spiritual People Have Been Fooled by Qanon

Content:

TsultimNamdak said:

Interesting article on the intersecting worlds of spirituality and right wing conspiracy theories.

<https://www.filmsforaction.org/articles/6-reasons-so-many-spiritual-people-have-been-fooled-by-qanon/>

Malcolm wrote:

"Spiritual" does not mean anything. It's a pity if Buddhists believe any of this bullshit though.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 4th, 2020 at 10:49 PM

Title: Re: Why is everything which is a product - impermanent ?

Content:

samr said:

The reason I take issue with such an interpretation is because it seems to me to contradict reality (and other Buddhist ideas).

The mindstream is a product; it is created from causes and conditions. As far as I understand, the substantial cause for the mind is the previous moment of mind; the conditions are the external phenomena (such as the things we see) and the body (such as the brain).

However, according to Mahayana Buddhism (and to reason), the mind is eternal. It is not subject to gross impermanence. It changes moment by moment, but remains eternally.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a difference between "eternal" and "permanent." Nirvana, for example, is permanent, but it is not eternal. Mind streams are permanent in the sense only that they are a ceaseless continuum of moments. Space is eternal, since it was never created. All eternal phenomena are permanent as well, but not all permanent phenomena are eternal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 4th, 2020 at 10:50 PM

Title: Re: are Dang, rTsal, and Rol pa different "densities" of the same reality?

Content:

RiceCake said:

Hey all,

I've been getting more into dzogchen, and now I'm coming across terms about the three kayas, as well as dang, tsal & rol pa.

I'm trying figure out the relationship between these things because.

Malcolm wrote:

Its not something one can figure out, it is something one must realize.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 5th, 2020 at 1:02 AM

Title: Re: Why Damaging Property Isn't The Same As "Violence"

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

Everybody is becoming asura realm.

Malcolm wrote:

The fact is that the colonization of the Americas took place on a foundation of European white supremacist ideology. In our country, genocide and slavery were the cause of all of the wealth we enjoy today. We've been the asuras all along. It does not take much imagination to understand this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 5th, 2020 at 1:25 AM

Title: Re: Why Damaging Property Isn't The Same As "Violence"

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

Everybody is becoming asura realm.

Malcolm wrote:

The fact is that the colonization of the Americas took place on a foundation of European white supremacist ideology. In our country, genocide and slavery were the cause of all of the wealth we enjoy today. We've been the asuras all along. It does not take much imagination to understand this.

PadmaVonSamba said:
Well Duuuuuuuuuuhhhh!!!

Malcolm wrote:
Then don't be surprised when people burn shit down and act indignant about it.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, September 5th, 2020 at 8:32 PM
Title: Re: NMHRK is a mantra or not
Content:
mansurhirbi87 said:
I know it was posedt here long ago, but it's not clear to me yet

/

Malcolm wrote:
It is not a mantra. There is a dharani in the Lotus Sutra, but chanting an homage to the Japanese title of a text does not qualify that homage as a mantra.

Mantras are something very precise and specific, defined in tantras.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, September 5th, 2020 at 10:29 PM
Title: Re: NMHRK is a mantra or not
Content:
mansurhirbi87 said:
I know it was posedt here long ago, but it's not clear to me yet

/

Malcolm wrote:
It is not a mantra. There is a dharani in the Lotus Sutra, but chanting an homage to the Japanese title of a text does not qualify that homage as a mantra.

Mantras are something very precise and specific, defined in tantras.

PadmaVonSamba said:
Here, I would disagree with you, based on the position that something becomes mantra by way of function, rather than by way of containing some essential quality of “mantra ness”.

Malcolm wrote:

There two kinds of mantras, vidya mantras, i.e. knowledge mantras, and guhya mantras, or secret mantras. The former are used for developing prajna, the latter are for method. Other than these two, in Buddhism there are no other kinds of mantras. These mantras are taught in the tantras, and some sutras, where they are clearly defined as mantras, like “om gate gate...” etc. the latter mantra from the heart sutra is a vidya mantra. They all begin with om, and end with either svaha or hum, and sometimes phat. Nembutsu and Daimoku do not qualify as mantras. This has nothing to do with whether they are valid practices. These two practices are Buddha anusmrti, like “Namo Buddha” recitation in Theravada.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 5th, 2020 at 11:39 PM

Title: Re: NMHRK is a mantra or not

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

Here, I would disagree with you, based on the position that something becomes mantra by way of function, rather than by way of containing some essential quality of “mantra ness”.

Malcolm wrote:

There two kinds of mantras, vidya mantras, i.e. knowledge mantras, and guhya mantras, or secret mantras. The former are used for developing prajna, the latter are for method. Other than these two, in Buddhism there are no other kinds of mantras. These mantras are taught in the tantras, and some sutras, where they are clearly defined as mantras, like “om gate gate...” etc. the latter mantra from the heart sutra is a vidya mantra. They all begin with om, and end with either svaha or hum, and sometimes phat. Nembutsu and Daimoku do not qualify as mantras. This has nothing to do with whether they are valid practices. These two practices are Buddha anusmrti, like “Namo Buddha” recitation in Theravada.

Minobu said:

Well my first mantra i received from TM was just , for me anyway, a two syllable word. no Om...

Malcolm wrote:

I specified Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 5th, 2020 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: NMHRK is a mantra or not

Content:

Minobu said:

it's way more than praise...Gakki used to say it meant devotion...which is not the same as taking refuge in something.

Malcolm wrote:

More or less, devotion and refuge are the same thing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 6th, 2020 at 2:48 AM

Title: Re: NMHRK is a mantra or not

Content:

Minobu said:

it's way more than praise...Gakki used to say it meant devotion...which is not the same as taking refuge in something.

Malcolm wrote:

More or less, devotion and refuge are the same thing.

Minobu said:

actually there is a subtle difference...devotion can be blind where as taking refuge is an act.

Malcolm wrote:

Refuge can also be blind, for example, taking sacred groves as a refuge and so on. So, there really is no difference.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 7th, 2020 at 1:59 AM

Title: Re: The Great Abortion Debate

Content:

Brahma said:

it is possible to suffer greatly in the womb while being a fully Enlightened Buddha from a past life because of demons that desire to do evil to such a Buddha.

Malcolm wrote:

No. This is absolutely and completely incorrect.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 8th, 2020 at 12:29 AM

Title: Re: Dharma Gems

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

Therefore, Ānanda, do not be judgmental regarding people. Do not pass judgment on people. Those who pass judgment on people harm themselves. I alone, or one like me, may pass judgment on people.

AN 6:44

Malcolm wrote:

Great advice, you should follow it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 10th, 2020 at 1:29 AM

Title: Re: Fire Destroys Most of Europe's Largest Refugee Camp, on Greek Island of Lesbos

Content:

Queequeg said:

Tragic.

Malcolm wrote:

It's where Grigoris works.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 11th, 2020 at 10:41 AM

Title: Re: What exactly is systemic racism anyway?

Content:

PeterC said:

(The one thing I didn't like about it was it's use of the nonsensical term "latinx", which definitely is a politically correct millennial invention. But that's a topic for another day.)

Malcolm wrote:

Latino actually only refers to men, just as Latina only refers to women. But in fact, the term Latinx erases the identity of the many hundreds if not thousands of groups of Native American peoples in "Latin America".

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 11th, 2020 at 7:24 PM

Title: Re: What exactly is systemic racism anyway?

Content:

PeterC said:

(The one thing I didn't like about it was it's use of the nonsensical term "latinx", which definitely is a politically correct millennial invention. But that's a topic for another day.)

Malcolm wrote:

Latino actually only refers to men, just as Latina only refers to women. But in fact, the term Latinx erases the identity of the many hundreds if not thousands of groups of Native American peoples in "Latin America".

PeterC said:

If we're talking about collective plurals - the masculine gender is used in romance languages to refer to mixed gender or unspecified gender groups.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, and therefore judged sexist and nonrepresentative.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 11th, 2020 at 7:35 PM

Title: Re: What exactly is systemic racism anyway?

Content:

PeterC said:

he one thing I didn't like about it was it's use of the nonsensical term "latinx", which definitely is a politically correct millennial invention. But that's a topic for another day.)

Malcolm wrote:

Latino actually only refers to men, just as Latina only refers to women. But in fact, the term Latinx erases the identity of the many hundreds if not thousands of groups of Native American peoples in "Latin America".

PeterC said:

. So in social justice terms, it's essentially a white american imposition on non-white language and culture. Outside the distorted world of US social media and universities I seriously doubt that a measurable proportion of the half a billion or so spanish speakers will ever use the term.

Malcolm wrote:

How is Spanish a nonwhite language? Anyway, here is an article about the term, it's possible origins, etc.

https://www.researchgate.net/publication/338551331_The_Complexity_of_the_x_in_Latinx_How_Latinxao_Students_Relate_to_Identify_With_and_Understand_the_Term_Latinx

For the TLDR crew, the author sums it up:

It is essential to recognize that the term Latinx is not commonly used among people of Latin American origin and diaspora, and that the term Latinx is caught between gender, sexual identity, ethnicity, and Spanish and English languages. Therefore, the term Latinx has now become ambiguous and convoluted in academic and activist spaces, subsuming various forms of social identities.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 11th, 2020 at 7:46 PM

Title: Re: Practice advice please

Content:

Rangdrol01 said:

The Pali Canon is still the foundation of Buddhism

Malcolm wrote:

No. It is not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 11th, 2020 at 8:12 PM

Title: Re: What exactly is systemic racism anyway?

Content:

PeterC said:

If we're talking about collective plurals - the masculine gender is used in romance languages to refer to mixed gender or unspecified gender groups.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, and therefore judged sexist and nonrepresentative.

PeterC said:

I'm just wondering at what point native English speakers decided it was up to them to correct aspects of other languages that they didn't like. That seems like a particularly futile exercise

Malcolm wrote:

The word seems to have emerged among Mexican American LGBTQ folks.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 11th, 2020 at 8:13 PM

Title: Re: What exactly is systemic racism anyway?

Content:

Kim O'Hara said:

From the OP -

PeterC said:

... (The one thing I didn't like about it was it's use of the nonsensical term "latinx", which definitely is a politically correct millennial invention. But that's a topic for another day.)

Kim O'Hara said:

So why is everyone wasting time on it here and now instead of talking about the thread topic, which is far more important???

Kim

Malcolm wrote:

Squirrel!

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 11th, 2020 at 8:25 PM

Title: Re: What exactly is systemic racism anyway?

Content:

Kim O'Hara said:

Here's a fresh starting point -

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think there is much disagreement here about this point. And people who disagree that there is systemic racism under settler colonialism are just blind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 11th, 2020 at 9:03 PM

Title: Re: Prophecy of Padmasambhava in the Nirvana Sutra

Content:

Brahma said:

There's no way that someone like Padmasambhava would kill someone just to attain the path of Enlightenment, unless that person he were to "kill" in wrath was a mara or demon who needed to be slain, yet transcendently not slain simultaneously, given a new life or sent to a place of punishment by Transcendental powers. With that being said. Padmasambhava or any Buddha would never kill an innocent person or even a very sinful person as a so-called provisory act, because that would become incredibly selfish and go against the precept, and set Him back, being impossible, as He has reached the state of no regression as a Buddha. A Buddha cannot commit any falsehood, no matter what.

Varis said:

Those motivated by bodhicitta sometimes kill, Ra Lotsawa killed a ton of people because they defamed Vajrabhairava.

Malcolm wrote:

He claimed to have done so through sorcery. There is no evidence he ever killed anyone by his own hand.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 11th, 2020 at 10:42 PM

Title: Re: Prophecy of Padmasambhava in the Nirvana Sutra

Content:

Varis said:

That's true, but to kill is to kill.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, sometimes "killing" is "liberating."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 11th, 2020 at 11:13 PM

Title: Re: Prophecy of Padmasambhava in the Nirvana Sutra

Content:

pemachophel said:

Just as the tshog chang in a ganachakra is not alcohol.

Malcolm wrote:

That depends on whether you are Catholic Tibetan Buddhist, in which case you believe in actual transubstantiation, or a Protestant Tibetan Buddhist, in which case you believe they are merely symbols.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 12th, 2020 at 7:36 AM

Title: Re: Prophecy of Padmasambhava in the Nirvana Sutra

Content:

pemachophel said:

The fact that tshog chang is amrit and no longer chang/alcohol is the reason why layperson's holding the five vows can drink the tshog chang without breaking their vow. I was taught this by a Khenchen, Konchog Gyamtsho.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this one interpretation. There are others, for example. ChNN.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 12th, 2020 at 9:28 AM

Title: Re: "heart of enlightenment"

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

Twice in Khunu Lama's Praise of Bodhicitta - verses 29 & 271 - these words appear.

What do they refer to - buddhahood or great compassion or ???

Malcolm wrote:

It is a mistranslation of BodhimaNDa (byang chub snying po) which actually refers to the seat (maNDa) of awakening.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 12th, 2020 at 8:53 PM

Title: Re: "heart of enlightenment"

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

Twice in Khunu Lama's Praise of Bodhicitta - verses 29 & 271 - these words appear.

What do they refer to - buddhahood or great compassion or ???

Malcolm wrote:

It is a mistranslation of BodhimaNDa (byang chub snying po) which actually refers to the seat (maNDa) of awakening.

Nicholas Weeks said:

Thank you Malcolm

So bodhimanda means a place in awareness very close to buddhahood, for high bodhisattvas, 8-10 stages are seated there too, in addition to Buddhas?

Malcolm wrote:

It means may I never lose bodhicitta until I am seated on the seat of buddhahood. Only a buddha can sit on the bodhimanda.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 15th, 2020 at 9:54 PM

Title: Re: Qualifications for Wrathful Activity

Content:

Mantrik said:

Did people misread the post, or am I ?

Seeker12 said:

Either you misread it or I wrote it poorly, probably more the latter than the former.

My question was basically this - in order to use wrathful means to 'forcefully liberate' a being, I believe there are certain criteria in place that the being-to-be-liberated needs to meet. That is, you wouldn't 'forcefully liberate' a being just because you don't like the look of their face, or they smell funny, or even because they get angry at you in an unreasonable way. It's only in particularly severe cases that this would be done, and there are clarifying qualifications or.. like there is a list of criteria that would need to be met, more or less.

Malcolm wrote:

zhing bcu - ten defects or the ten objects are: 1) The enemy of the Three Jewels, 2) the enemy of the master, 3) The samaya violator, 4) the perverted one, 6. the hostile one, 7. The samaya enemy with a wicked character, 8. The one arriving to the congregation, 9. the harmer of everyone, 10. the three lower realms. The enemies and obstructers are one's own and other's ignorance. In the liberation offering the ignorance is liberated into awareness [ry]

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 15th, 2020 at 10:38 PM

Title: Re: Why is everything which is a product - impermanent ?

Content:

Aemilius said:

The context is that the fact that composite things are impermanent is not a sufficient cause for their parts to be impermanent. I am not saying that the parts are permanent, I am saying that their possible impermanence does not follow from the fact that they are parts in a larger whole (which is impermanent).

"

Malcolm wrote:

Permanent parts cannot compose impermanent entity. It follows then that any part of an impermanent entity must itself be impermanent because a permanent entity cannot have parts or be a part of any entity but itself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 16th, 2020 at 9:23 PM

Title: Re: Tsadra Foundation website rollout on Buddha Nature

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

I think a lot of DW proclamations of "no forM of Buddhism believes X" type of statements will be disproven.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhist beliefs are N+1. The question is whether or not such beliefs are Buddhist in Name Only [BINO], for example, the Pudgalavādin position.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 16th, 2020 at 11:27 PM

Title: Re: Why is everything which is a product - impermanent ?

Content:

Aemilius said:

The context is that the fact that composite things are impermanent is not a sufficient cause for their parts to be impermanent. I am not saying that the parts are permanent, I am saying that their possible impermanence does not follow from the fact that they are parts in a larger whole (which is impermanent).

"

Malcolm wrote:

Permanent parts cannot compose impermanent entity.

Aemilius said:

Why not ?

Malcolm wrote:

There is no way permanent entities can interact with impermanent entities, due to a simple difference in kind. Permanent entities do not arise from causes and conditions. Impermanent entities arise from causes and conditions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 18th, 2020 at 4:25 AM

Title: Re: Looking for suggested reading on privilege

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

A bunch of basically well-off white people lecturing on another on how to be better anti-racists is an abject waste of time,

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed, the only way one can be antiracist is, well, be antiracist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 18th, 2020 at 4:27 AM

Title: Re: Qualifications for Wrathful Activity

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

zhing bcu - ten defects or the ten objects are: 1) The enemy of the Three Jewels, 2) the enemy of the master, 3) The samaya violator, 4) the perverted one, 6. the hostile one, 7.

The samaya enemy with a wicked character, 8. The one arriving to the congregation, 9. the harmer of everyone, 10. the three lower realms. The enemies and obstructers are one's own and other's ignorance. In the liberation offering the ignorance is liberated into awareness [ry]

Cinnabar said:

This is what I don't get. I am a samaya violator.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this means someone who turns their back on the Dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 20th, 2020 at 3:04 AM

Title: Re: Tsadra Foundation website rollout on Buddha Nature

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

In short, Brunnhölzl's presentation of Buddha Nature as it existed in India was more or less compatible to Malcolm's position.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, Karl is a good scholar, so that is not surprising.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 21st, 2020 at 12:46 AM

Title: Re: I was a Trump supporter but am increasingly becoming progressive

Content:

Artziebetter1 said:

I disagree with abortion but that's about it. I also think that viewing pornography should be banned. But I feel that progressive values are the only political values in common with a compassionate will towards sentient beings. feminism, veganism, animal rights, reparations for blacks, promoting organic food and a host of other leftist social issues are most in line with Buddhist teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

Congratulations. Just a couple of comments.

Artziebetter1 said:

We also need to ban guns as I think the crime rate is out of control in the USA.

Malcolm wrote:

While in principle we should severely restrict guns, but actually, the rate of crimes committed in the US has steadily been dropping for decades, some facts are in order:

<https://www.pewresearch.org/fact-tank/2019/10/17/facts-about-crime-in-the-u-s/>

Crime is not nearly as bad as Faux News would have one believe.

Artziebetter1 said:

I also think that work can and should be abolished. I follow the anti work subreddit and am convinced this is possible.

Malcolm wrote:

Everyone would like to get rid of work, but I would settle for universal healthcare, education, and public transportation.

Artziebetter1 said:

I basically am undergoing a conversion and I think that we shouldn't have borders between nations like we have now where we don't allow refugees to come as they like.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct.

Artziebetter1 said:

I'm also very worried about the climate. I follow guy McPherson and though he is often dismissed as an alarmist he has good points.

Malcolm wrote:

Alarmist have their place.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 23rd, 2020 at 4:12 AM

Title: Re: Tsadra Foundation website rollout on Buddha Nature

Content:

yeshegyaltsen said:

This link will bring to you to the home page

https://buddhanature.tsadra.org/index.php/Main_Page

Enjoy!

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Thanks.

Everybody that visits the website should relax their dependence on Nagarjuna's philosophy a bit. Trying to squeeze many interpretations of Buddha Nature into Madhyamaka is like trying to put a square peg in a round hole.

Malcolm wrote:

Longchenpa had no problem reconciling Prasanga Madhyamaka, which he maintains is the definitive view, with tathāgatagarbha sūtras, which he maintains are the definitive sūtras. Likewise Gorampa asserts that properly understood the tathāgatagarbha doctrine is definitive and does not contradict Madhyamaka, but wrongly understood leads to a wrong view. Thus, these are not examples of squeezing tathāgatagarbha into Madhyamaka, if anyone is doing any squeezing, it is the gzhan stong pas who try to squeeze Madhyamaka, Yogacāra and tathāgatagarbha all into the same box, without much success, frankly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 23rd, 2020 at 9:09 AM

Title: Re: Tsadra Foundation website rollout on Buddha Nature

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

. Since Buddha Nature cannot be an object of consciousness, it is not subject to the same deconstructions as other objects.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddha nature is in fact an “object” of a Buddha’s omniscience. It’s the dharmakaya “encased” in afflictions. This is why only Buddhas can perceive it, according to sutrayana. It cannot be perceived even by tenth stage bodhisattvas, since they retain a diaphanous knowledge obscuration. Therefore, it is said to be an object of faith for people like us, but not something we can ascertain directly. We can only infer it through reasoning. Nevertheless, if that reasoning leads one to assert there is something permanent etc., this is automatically a wrong view since it is based on a concept, rather than gnosis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 23rd, 2020 at 7:55 PM

Title: Re: Work is Necessary! No, its not! Split from "I was a Trump Supporter"

Content:

Fa Dao said:

As to illegals...theyre illegals..they shouldnt be here anyways

Malcolm wrote:

Whose gonna pick your fruit and vegetables?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 23rd, 2020 at 8:33 PM

Title: Re: Tsadra Foundation website rollout on Buddha Nature

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Therefore, it is said to be an object of faith for people like us, but not something we can ascertain directly. We can only infer it through reasoning.

I thought our good intentions and good sense were indicators of Buddha Nature's presence in us. However it is on a greatly diminished scale and contaminated by defilements. It's like a giant redwood can be traced back to a seedling.

That, and our not wanting to suffer.

Anyway i heard that somewhere.

Malcolm wrote:

That's not how it is presented in the uttaratantra.YMMV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 25th, 2020 at 9:23 AM

Title: Re: Work is Necessary! No, its not! Split from "I was a Trump Supporter"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

3E67B557-0F4E-4014-8B78-732BC1F23D1F.png (541.68 KiB) Viewed 121 times

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 25th, 2020 at 6:59 PM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Joe Rogan doesn't matter at all. He's just a dude making money off bored people on commuter trains. He wouldn't exist with the iPhone.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 25th, 2020 at 7:18 PM

Title: Re: Receiving pointing out without knowing

Content:

Daniel Kenny said:

"Real nature"?

Malcolm wrote:

One's dharmata.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 25th, 2020 at 8:45 PM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

tobes said:

I've only seen a bit of Rogan, but given where the US and many other places are right now, I think that this style of political discourse is tremendously important.

Listening across the spectrum. A pluralistic attitude. Getting people out of their algorithm bubbles, engaging with ideas they may not assent to. It's maybe the only way back.

Malcolm wrote:

It's just more blah blah blah. Read newspapers of record. And, I have no interest in listening to fascists like Gavin McInnes. Life is too short. And yes, he interviews Bernie. But smart people already listen to Bernie, so no value add there.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 25th, 2020 at 9:11 PM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

tobes said:

I've only seen a bit of Rogan, but given where the US and many other places are right now, I think that this style of political discourse is tremendously important.

Listening across the spectrum. A pluralistic attitude. Getting people out of their algorithm bubbles, engaging with ideas they may not assent to. It's maybe the only way back.

Malcolm wrote:

Tolerance of fascists leads to fascist takeovers.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 25th, 2020 at 10:40 PM

Title: Re: Tsadra Foundation website rollout on Buddha Nature

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Abstract by Alex Gardner:

Tibetans received the teaching first in the eighth century with the translations of the sūtras, but it only began to have an impact in the eleventh century with the translation of the Ratnagotravibhāga. Conforming to neither Madhyamaka nor Yogācāra, buddha-nature has been incorporated somewhat uneasily into both, although as a positivistic theory of reality it has been more easily accepted by Yogācārin traditions.

https://buddhanature.tsadra.org/index.php/Articles/A_History_of_Buddha-Nature_Theory:_The_Literature_and_Traditions

...and... Although over the centuries Chinese and Tibetan scholiasts have categorized the concept of buddha-nature as either Yogācāra or Madhyamaka, there is sufficient reason to believe that the tathāgatagarbha theory developed independently:

Malcolm wrote:

Ummm....I have been pointing this out for decades.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 25th, 2020 at 10:41 PM

Title: Re: Receiving pointing out without knowing

Content:

florin said:

I am of the opinion that pointing out occasions should always be clearly indicated. If they are not, then we might have situations like these where there is doubt as to whether something happened or not.

Malcolm wrote:

Ditto.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 26th, 2020 at 4:20 AM

Title: Re: Tsadra Foundation website rollout on Buddha Nature

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Buddha Nature and Dzogchen

Malcolm wrote:

There are some unforced errors in this presentation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 26th, 2020 at 4:51 AM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Tolerance of fascists leads to fascist takeovers.

Dan74 said:

What happened to this Malcolm?

malcolm.jpg

Malcolm wrote:

"Unlimited tolerance must lead to the disappearance of tolerance. If we extend unlimited tolerance even to those who are intolerant, if we are not prepared to defend a tolerant society against the onslaught of the intolerant, then the tolerant will be destroyed, and tolerance with them.—In this formulation, I do not imply, for instance, that we should always suppress the utterance of intolerant philosophies; as long as we can counter them by rational argument and keep them in check by public opinion, suppression would certainly be most unwise. But we should claim the right to suppress them if necessary even by force; for it may easily turn out that they are not prepared to meet us on the level of rational argument, but begin by denouncing all argument; they may forbid their followers to listen to rational argument, because it is deceptive, and teach them to answer arguments by the use of their fists or pistols. We should therefore claim, in the name of tolerance, the right not to tolerate the intolerant.”

Karl Popper, The Open Society and Its Enemies

“Justice does not require that men must stand idly by while others destroy the basis of their existence. Since it can never be to men’s advantage, from a general point of view, to forgo the right of self-protection, the only question, then, is whether the tolerant have a right to curb the intolerant when they are of no immediate danger to the equal liberties of others...while an intolerant sect does not itself have title to complain of intolerance, its freedom should be restricted only when the tolerant sincerely and with reason believe that their own security and that of the institutions of liberty are in danger. The tolerant should curb the intolerant only in this case.”

John Rawls, A Theory of Justice

We have arrived at this point in both Europe and the United States.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 26th, 2020 at 5:41 AM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Dan74 said:

What happened to this Malcolm?

malcolm.jpg

Malcolm wrote:

“Unlimited tolerance must lead to the disappearance of tolerance. If we extend unlimited tolerance even to those who are intolerant, if we are not prepared to defend a tolerant society against the onslaught of the intolerant, then the tolerant will be destroyed, and tolerance with them.—In this formulation, I do not imply, for instance, that we should always suppress the utterance of intolerant philosophies; as long as we can counter them by rational argument and keep them in check by public opinion, suppression would certainly be most unwise. But we should claim the right to suppress them if necessary even by force; for it may easily turn out that they are not prepared to meet us on the level of rational argument, but begin by denouncing all argument; they may forbid their followers to listen to rational argument, because it is deceptive, and teach them to answer arguments by the use of their fists or pistols. We should therefore claim, in the name of tolerance, the right not to tolerate the intolerant.”

Karl Popper, The Open Society and Its Enemies

“Justice does not require that men must stand idly by while others destroy the basis of their existence. Since it can never be to men’s advantage, from a general point of view, to forgo the right of self-protection, the only question, then, is whether the tolerant have a right to curb the intolerant when they are of no immediate danger to the equal liberties of others...while an intolerant sect does not itself have title to complain of intolerance, its freedom should be restricted only when the tolerant sincerely and with reason believe that their own security and that of the institutions of liberty are in danger. The tolerant should curb the intolerant only in this case.”

John Rawls, A Theory of Justice

We have arrived at this point in both Europe and the United States.

Dan74 said:

Have we? And you speak confidently not just for the USA but for the whole of Europe?
On what basis?

If one goes along with Popper, who was writing in the shadow of Nazism, wasn't he, he qualifies his statement heavily. If someone is prepared to discuss and debate, as long as they don't denounce all argument and just harangue, by Popper's standard, this isn't the time to suppress.

I have little experience and mixed feeling about Rogan. The last show I saw with him was when he had that conservative congressman with an eye-patch on. The guy blathered lies about Biden denouncing Trump for the ban on Chinese arrivals and arguing how much worse Biden would've been at handling the pandemic. Rogan did not challenge him. I thought that was appalling.. But I get it that he has good moments and is a lot less partisan and predictable than many other left-leaning hosts.

Malcolm wrote:

I didn't say Rogan was a fascist. I said I was not interested in watching the fascists he hosts to drive clicks to his show, or anyone else for that matter. He is just someone who largely blabbers on the internet to make money.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 26th, 2020 at 5:43 AM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

DNS said:

He said he...now supports Trump in 2020.

Malcolm wrote:

I take it back, he is a goddamned fascist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 26th, 2020 at 9:56 AM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Dan74 said:

What happened to this Malcolm?

malcolm.jpg

Malcolm wrote:

“Unlimited tolerance must lead to the disappearance of tolerance. If we extend unlimited tolerance even to those who are intolerant, if we are not prepared to defend a tolerant society against the onslaught of the intolerant, then the tolerant will be destroyed, and tolerance with them.—In this formulation, I do not imply, for instance, that we should always suppress the utterance of intolerant philosophies; as long as we can counter them by rational argument and keep them in check by public opinion, suppression would certainly be most unwise. But we should claim the right to suppress them if necessary even by force; for it may easily turn out that they are not prepared to meet us on the level of rational argument, but begin by denouncing all argument; they may forbid their followers to listen to rational argument, because it is deceptive, and teach them to answer arguments by the use of their fists or pistols. We should therefore claim, in the name of tolerance, the right not to tolerate the intolerant.”

Karl Popper, The Open Society and Its Enemies

“Justice does not require that men must stand idly by while others destroy the basis of their existence. Since it can never be to men’s advantage, from a general point of view, to forgo the right of self-protection, the only question, then, is whether the tolerant have a right to curb the intolerant when they are of no immediate danger to the equal liberties of others...while an intolerant sect does not itself have title to complain of intolerance, its freedom should be restricted only when the tolerant sincerely and with reason believe that their own security and that of the institutions of liberty are in danger. The tolerant should curb the intolerant only in this case.”

John Rawls, A Theory of Justice

We have arrived at this point in both Europe and the United States.

tobes said:

I don't this is true of Europe, but it clearly is for the US.

The issue is: those very same quotations/arguments can and are being used by the right.

The implication of both sides thinking in this way can only be force, violence, and hard power to obtain the necessary victory. Civil war is certainly conceivable from here.

I think there is still a possibility to avoid this, and this hinges entirely on finding a way to discourse which loosens the deep desire to vanquish the other side; to find some way of listening - which does not entail agreeing.

Maybe Habermas is the relevant thinker here. With Kant standing behind all three.

Malcolm wrote:

The difference, Tobes, is that the politics of white grievance that are driving right politics in Europe and the US have always driven fascism. The myth of the “intolerant” left is a lie. So, I must reject your assertion that these arguments are being used by the right and left alike. They are not being used alike.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 26th, 2020 at 10:32 AM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

The myth of the “intolerant” left is a lie

I don't have kids, but my friends do. What I'm hearing about their kids in their 20s-30s is that they are very self righteous and intolerant of anything less than the politically correct view.

Malcolm wrote:

Young adults tend to be self-righteous. On the other hand, if they are intolerant of racism and sexism, good for them

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 26th, 2020 at 7:57 PM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Young adults tend to be self-righteous. On the other hand, if they are intolerant of racism and sexism, good for them

There are intolerant of free speech. They believe anybody that doesn't agree with them should be silenced.

Apparently they also believe that the US Constitution is so racist (well, can't argue too much with the 1787 version) and privilege protecting, (again..) that they need not respect what it says. Their 'enlightened' views supersede the Constitution.

Malcolm wrote:

Free speech has clear limits.

As for your other claims, I can't speak to them as they are purely anecdotal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 26th, 2020 at 8:00 PM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

tobes said:

The problem with your approach is that it assumes that all people caught up in the webs of misinformation, conspiracy theories etc are ontological white nationalists/fascists etc. Whereas I think that for every such person (who is ontologically committed to fascist politics), there are at least a dozen who are simply overwhelmed with confusion and tiredness, drenched in targeted social media politics, being drawn into tribalism with every click of the mouse/touch of the screen.

If this is the case, then it follows that the answer to the aforementioned question is a widening of the sphere of information. A widening of the internet bubble. A widening into a more pluralistic frame.

Malcolm wrote:

I see, so you think there are a lot of "good germans."

If you support racists, you are a racist. If you support fascists, you are a fascist, case closed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 26th, 2020 at 8:02 PM

Title: Re: Receiving pointing out without knowing

Content:

florin said:

I am of the opinion that pointing out occasions should always be clearly indicated. If they are not, then we might have situations like these where there is doubt as to whether something happened or not.

Johnny Dangerous said:

The opposite should also be true though, that someone believes they have recognized etc. when they did not, simply due to the fact that the importance of the occasion was pointed out.

Malcolm wrote:

You should revisit song of the vajra book. This is all clearly explained by ChNN there.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 26th, 2020 at 11:13 PM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Free speech has clear limits.

The problem is, if those limits become "anything I disagree with" then by definition it is no longer free speech.

Malcolm wrote:

The limits to free speech are clearly outlined by various court cases.

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

I believe that over the summer a gay liberal NYT reporter was let go because he did not accept some new element of political correctness. I can't remember his name.

Malcolm wrote:

What does Bari Weiss (a woman) have to do with it? And, for the record, she resigned voluntarily, she was not "let go." And she was a LINO, Liberal in Name Only.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 27th, 2020 at 7:19 AM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

The problem is, if those limits become "anything I disagree with" then by definition it is no longer free speech.

The limits to free speech are clearly outlined by various court cases.

Correct. So limits in excess of those set in court cases are unconstitutional, or maybe contra-constitutional, by definition. Such as not allowing conservatives to speak on college campuses because they would say things that were not politically correct.

Malcolm wrote:

Free speech applies only to public speech, such as newspapers, books, magazines., etc. Colleges are private forums. Free speech laws are not applicable in these cases.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 27th, 2020 at 9:08 AM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Correct. So limits in excess of those set in court cases are unconstitutional, or maybe contra-constitutional, by definition. Such as not allowing conservatives to speak on college campuses because they would say things that were not politically correct.

Malcolm wrote:

Free speech applies only to public speech, such as newspapers, books, magazines., etc. Colleges are private forums. Free speech laws are not applicable in these cases.

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

That's why I came up with the term "contra-constitutional", against the spirit of the Constitution, as opposed to "unconstitutional", against the letter of the law. Maybe I should have been more clear on that. Sloppy posting on my part.

Malcolm wrote:

False, for example, free speech laws do not apply in businesses, etc., and never have.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 27th, 2020 at 9:11 AM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Genjo Conan said:

Re: colleges-- depends on if it's a public or private college. Public colleges/universities are government actors that generally may not discriminate on the basis of content.

They may refuse to host speakers on public safety grounds (eg to refuse to host speakers who will incite violence), but not based on their message per se.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed. But Harvard, Yale, etc., are all private schools. UC Berkeley, public,

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 27th, 2020 at 9:52 AM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

That's why I came up with the term "contra-constitutional", against the spirit of the Constitution, as opposed to "unconstitutional", against the letter of the law. Maybe I should have been more clear on that. Sloppy posting on my part.

Malcolm wrote:

False, for example, free speech laws do not apply in businesses, etc., and never have.

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

But Malcolm, you just said, Free speech applies only to public speech, such as newspapers, books, magazines., etc.

This thread is becoming comedic for the inept level of posting by people that should know better—starting with my unclear post.

Malcolm wrote:

The press is included in the constitution. Businesses are not. The constitution guarantees the right of free speech for _the press_, which includes publishers. It does not guarantee that right within the precincts of Microsoft, Apple, Harvard, Stanford, etc., or the Pentagon, or for Federal employees, etc

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 27th, 2020 at 8:01 PM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

tobes said:

The problem with your approach is that it assumes that all people caught up in the webs of misinformation, conspiracy theories etc are ontological white nationalists/fascists etc. Whereas I think that for every such person (who is ontologically committed to fascist politics), there are at least a dozen who are simply overwhelmed with confusion and tiredness, drenched in targeted social media politics, being drawn into tribalism with every click of the mouse/touch of the screen.

If this is the case, then it follows that the answer to the aforementioned question is a widening of the sphere of information. A widening of the internet bubble. A widening into a more pluralistic frame.

Malcolm wrote:

I see, so you think there are a lot of “good germans.”

If you support racists, you are a racist. If you support fascists, you are a fascist, case closed.

tobes said:

There were a lot of "good Germans". You need to think about the early 30's - fascists were in a big struggle with social democrats, Marxists etc.

Why did they prevail? Why did so many 'good' Germans ultimately get converted to that cause?

Answer: friend-enemy politics. The key political philosopher of the Nazi's, Carl Schmitt, coined this term. It's also a bit Stars Wars: "Only a Sith deals in absolutes." If you're not X, you must be Y.

Humans are inherently more messy and inconsistent than this, but they can be pushed into that friend-enemy politics all too easily. What usually follows are genocides, civil wars and all the rest.

So it follows, and I think Buddhists really get this point: if that is the cause, we must resist it. i.e. we must resist that conception of politics.

Malcolm wrote:

Neville Chamberlin proved that appeasement of fascists does not work.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 27th, 2020 at 8:04 PM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Dan74 said:

I don't claim to have the finger on the pulse of the US polity...

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, you really don't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 27th, 2020 at 8:35 PM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

I'm a liberal, but I'm old. So my idea is that nobody has a guaranteed monopoly on what is right. Therefore suppressing speech you don't agree with is, over time, itself a guaranteed mistake.

In other words, all movements succumb to the Animal Farm trap if there's no dissent and pushback. The Founding Fathers knew that. The modern left has rejected the idea. That's not good.

Malcolm wrote:

Your memory of the post-revolutionary war period is a little flimsy. The sedition act is still on the books. Barr is threatening to sue the mayor Seattle under this act.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 28th, 2020 at 8:04 AM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

tobes said:

There were a lot of "good Germans". You need to think about the early 30's - fascists were in a big struggle with social democrats, Marxists etc.

Why did they prevail? Why did so many 'good' Germans ultimately get converted to that cause?

Answer: friend-enemy politics. The key political philosopher of the Nazi's, Carl Schmitt, coined this term. It's also a bit Stars Wars: "Only a Sith deals in absolutes." If you're not X, you must be Y.

Humans are inherently more messy and inconsistent than this, but they can be pushed into that friend-enemy politics all too easily. What usually follows are genocides, civil wars and all the rest.

So it follows, and I think Buddhists really get this point: if that is the cause, we must resist it. i.e. we must resist that conception of politics.

Malcolm wrote:

Neville Chamberlin proved that appeasement of fascists does not work.

tobes said:

There is a very big difference between how one nation-state responds to another fascist nation-state committed to world domination, and, the struggle within that fascist nation-state a decade or so earlier. i.e. before it actually became fascist.

The practical point is simply: the best thing for Trump at the moment is more division, not less. He's been sowing that from day one, and the more it flowers, the more he succeeds. He can win if there is a sense of chaos, disorder etc. He can't if there isn't.

Nonetheless, it is easy to make these kinds of statements from the relative distance of Australia.....maybe you're already past the point of no return?

Malcolm wrote:

He either loses the election and is frog-marched out of the Whitehouse by the Secret Service, or what passes for democracy is finished in the US and there will eventually be a civil war.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 28th, 2020 at 11:16 AM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Just going by the basic facts, the aggressor in the Cold War was the US.

I suggest you read up on Stalin at some point.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, Peter is quite right. Stalin advocated “Socialism in one country,” contra Trotskyism. The USSR was too busy recovering from WWII to engage in much of any expansionist activities before Stalin’s death in 1953. Soviet expansionism beyond Eastern Europe and Central Asia was largely the program of Krushchev, but it was largely defensive, not aggressive. Even the Cuban Missile Crisis fomented by the USSR was largely a response to CIA plots to assassinate Castro and the failed Bay of Pigs fiasco.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 28th, 2020 at 6:37 PM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Schrödinger’s Yidam said:

Actually, Peter is quite right. Stalin advocated “Socialism in one country,” contra Trotskyism. The USSR was too busy recovering from WWII to engage in much of any expansionist activities before Stalin’s death in 1953.

The Iron Curtain, including the Berlin Wall. The White Terror. Tens of millions of his own people killed, putting Hitler’s body count to shame. And you don’t think Stalin was the antagonist?

I’m not sure I can think of any examples of when a democratically elected government flirted with US-style capitalism and the Soviet Union sponsored a coup.

Hungary’56, Czechoslovakia ‘68. Admittedly they were invasions, not coups.

Malcolm wrote:

Killing ones own people is not “interfering in foreign governments.” Stalin died in 1953.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 28th, 2020 at 7:39 PM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Think we have now gone completely off topic...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 28th, 2020 at 8:03 PM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Schrödinger’s Yidam said:

Killing ones own people is not “interfering in foreign governments.” Stalin died in 1953.

Believing that the greatest mass murderer of the 20th Century...

Malcolm wrote:

That really depends on which historian of the period you happen to believe:

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Excess_mortality_in_the_Soviet_Union_under_Joseph_Stalin.

Also, it borders on holocaust denial to assert that Stalin's crimes outweigh the crimes of Hitler:

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/The_Holocaust...

6 million Jews + 11 gentiles = 17 million, in less than a decade.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 28th, 2020 at 9:35 PM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

6 million Jews + 11 gentiles = 17 million, in less than a decade.

Body counts are difficult for Stalin. Estimates are nothing more than educated guesses. But the low estimate I've seen is 20 million. High estimates run several times that.

Malcolm wrote:

From the Wiki page above:

"Australian historian Stephen G. Wheatcroft asserts that prior to the opening of the archives for historical research, "our understanding of the scale and the nature of Soviet repression has been extremely poor" and that some specialists who wish to maintain earlier high estimates of the Stalinist death toll are "finding it difficult to adapt to the new circumstances when the archives are open and when there are plenty of irrefutable data" and instead "hang on to their old Sovietological methods with round-about calculations based on odd statements from emigres and other informants who are supposed to have superior knowledge"

So, I think your figures are highly exaggerated, and not based on good data. I prefer evidence-based history, again:

"The Stalinist regime was consequently responsible for about a million purposive killings, and through its criminal neglect and irresponsibility it was probably responsible for the premature deaths of about another two million more victims amongst the repressed population, i.e. in the camps, colonies, prisons, exile, in transit and in the POW camps for Germans. These are clearly much lower figures than those for whom Hitler's regime was responsible. "

http://sovietinfo.tripod.com/WCR-German_Soviet.pdf

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 29th, 2020 at 8:42 AM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Dan74 said:

Extremely meaningful comparisons of humanity's worst butchers notwithstanding, I don't think this proves anything for the question of whether the US failing would be a good thing. As JD said some pages ago, the US failing may lead to unprecedented turmoil, as failing empires death throes may bring us all under in the world that is already rather unstable.

Geez, we just like to chinwag over anything... and in the meantime, the roof's still on fire..

Malcolm wrote:

Trumps taxes show he is likely to do serious jail time after he loses.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 30th, 2020 at 4:08 AM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Dan74 said:

A pseudo-Warsaw Pact buffer of vassals around the empire? Given the opportunity to push this agenda, they will.

Malcolm wrote:

With GOP encouragement. The GOP has been Russia positive in the US for a long, long, time.

Dan74 said:

As for China, well, it has been waging an active campaign both infiltrating major Australian institutions, grooming politicians, hacking, building Centres with a definite agenda. A massive overt and covert PR campaign. Buying up assets, leasing ports, a major Belt and Roads initiative with Victoria. It is in many ways a boon for Australia, well, as long as it is prepared to cede some sovereignty in exchange for wealth. It is a trade many people are not yet ready to make.

Malcolm wrote:

It is called "capitalism." It is what powers with imperial ambition do. Nothing surprising there.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 30th, 2020 at 7:12 PM

Title: Re: Subtle body

Content:

avatamsaka3 said:

1. Does the subtle body exist conventionally? Or is it just a way to work with with our anatomy and physiology?

Johnny Dangerous said:

My take:

Does the nervous system exist conventionally? What about the cardiovascular system? There are both abstractions taken from viewing the body from outside, they exist in a conventional sense only as categories of phenomena. Even if you take a basic AP&P class you will see they don't really exist, they are just delimiters placed on larger systems to make sense of things. The difference is the Western anatomy comes at it purely from an external viewpoint, whereas subtle body concepts (which Astus mentions are not remotely unique to Buddhism) comes in part from "inner" experience of what we would term the body.

Malcolm wrote:

The notion of chakras, nadis, vayus, etc., comes from Ayurveda, actually, so also a medical view of the body. The term "subtle body" does not have a true correlate in Sanskrit or Tibetan. The new age idea comes from 1) the Upanishadic idea of the five koshas 2) the theosophical interpretation of the cakras. That idea is not applicable to Buddhist notions of human anatomy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 30th, 2020 at 7:21 PM

Title: Re: Dudjom Tersar Ngondro

Content:

sicklicchavi said:

Hi, I hope that you are all doing well. I am interested to hear about any experiences that anyone here has had with the Dudjom Tersar Ngondro and/or with Pema Osel Ling/Vajrayana Foundation. I've listened to some of the teachings from Lama Sonam Rinpoche and others, and I find the concise nature of the Dudjom Tersar Ngondro extremely attractive as a jumping off point to deepen my practice.

For those that have done this ngondro or developed a relationship with the teachers at POL/Vajrayana Foundation, what were your experiences like? Did you go on to do either of the more extensive ngondro's through this lineage (Khandro Tuktik or Throma Nakmo)?

Malcolm wrote:

Pema Osel Ling is Dudjom Yangsi Pema Shepa Dorje's NA seat. Many people begin with Khandro thugtik or Throma Ngondro directly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 30th, 2020 at 9:40 PM

Title: Re: Dudjom Tersar Ngondro

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Pema Osel Ling is Dudjom Yangsi Pema Shepa Dorje's NA seat. Many people begin with Khandro thugtik or Throma Ngondro directly.

sicklicchavi said:

Thanks for the response! Am I correct in understanding that all three ngondros have the same underlying practices, but that those two are more extensive in the number of repetitions required and the length of the recitations themselves?

Malcolm wrote:

they have those sample basic structure, the verses for recitation in the KT and throma are four line, but not two line. But one really ought not be negotiating the number of syllables. One should just do whatever practice ones teacher asks one to do.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 30th, 2020 at 11:13 PM

Title: Re: Dudjom Tersar Ngondro

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

they have those sample basic structure, the verses for recitation in the KT and throma are four line, but not two line. But one really ought not be negotiating the number of syllables. One should just do whatever practice ones teacher asks one to do.

sicklicchavi said:

Got it, thanks! Agreed on number of syllables, was just curious as to the differences between the practices. I will defer to the teacher as to which is most appropriate.

Malcolm wrote:

Also, for the Khandro Thugthig and Throma Ngondros, one will have to receive the empowerment. The short Dudjom Ngondro is often give to beginners with any empowerment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 1st, 2020 at 3:52 AM

Title: Re: Subtle body

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

My take:

Does the nervous system exist conventionally? What about the cardiovascular system? There are both abstractions taken from viewing the body from outside, they exist in a conventional sense only as categories of phenomena. Even if you take a basic AP&P class you will see they don't really exist, they are just delimiters placed on larger systems to make sense of things. The difference is the Western anatomy comes at it purely from an external viewpoint, whereas subtle body concepts (which Astus mentions are not remotely unique to Buddhism) comes in part from "inner" experience of what we would term the body.

Malcolm wrote:

The notion of chakras, nadis, vayus, etc., comes from Ayurveda, actually, so also a medical view of the body. The term "subtle body" does not have a true correlate in Sanskrit or Tibetan. The new age idea comes from 1) the Upanishadic idea of the five koshas 2) the theosophical interpretation of the cakras. That idea is not applicable to Buddhist notions of human anatomy.

Johnny Dangerous said:

I don't see how this relates to theosophy or the Upanishads, I was just talking about contextualizing the notion of a 'subtle body' -or- the physical body according to Western anatomy as a discrete entity. My point was that even in Western anatomy, there is no discrete body.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and I was pointing out that the term is flawed, from a buddhist perspective.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 1st, 2020 at 9:02 PM

Title: Re: QAnon - more than you ever wanted to know

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Thus is old news.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 1st, 2020 at 9:08 PM

Title: Re: Interesting article on media backlash and Joe Rogan

Content:

Dan74 said:

As for China...

PeterC said:

Just read this, I'd recommend it strongly, I agree with almost all of it. It's the most succinct and accurate statement of the broader US-China situation that I've read from an American.

<https://chasfreeman.net/the-struggle-with-china-is-not-a-replay-of-the-cold-war/>

Malcolm wrote:

Yup.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 1st, 2020 at 9:10 PM

Title: Re: Subtle body

Content:

avatamsaka3 said:

I think this hits the nail on the head. Our self sense includes the mind borne sensations associated with the skandhas. The subtle body is our detection of the more refined aspects of the workings of the skhandas. This does not make them any more "real" in an ontological sense.

This is an interesting perspective to consider. If that's true, this would mean that anything that has an effect on the skandhas could be subtle body work... Normal shamatha, exercising, etc.

Daniel Kenny said:

Except that the "subtle body" is a construct after the event. Maybe useful as a conceptual tool, but ultimately simply a by product..like a phantom limb. It is an attempt to make sense of what in the end is a series of ephemera.

The skandhas arise in emptiness constantly and dissolve constantly.

Malcolm wrote:

In fact, the explanation of vayus, bindus, and nadis exists to explain the gestation of the human body in the womb, and is not some quasi physical system in parallel with physical body.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 1st, 2020 at 9:22 PM

Title: Re: Banning political discussions on DharmaWheel

Content:

mikenz66 said:

That's what I said, David. The new leadership's attitude towards social issues, including a virulent antagonism to any kind of "Engaged Buddhism" lead to the acrimony, which, thankfully, was exported elsewhere where it can be ignored.

DNS said:

Okay, but there was a 2 year gap between the two events. I guess you could say it was "brewing" in that time.

Malcolm wrote:

It's the dumbest forum ever. it's embarrassing that it is called Dharmawheel Engaged. Instead, it should be called Dharmawheel MAGA.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 2nd, 2020 at 4:15 AM

Title: Re: Banning political discussions on DharmaWheel

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

I mean, I'm not spinning doom and gloom for here. We have a long way to go until we are another DhammaWheel/DWE, but if this forum becomes "officially" left-leaning, that is going to cause a lot more problems than it solves IMO.

Malcolm wrote:

Dharmawheel is left-leaning because Mahāyānīs in the west tend to be compassionate people interested in improving the lives of all sentient beings, rather than seeking oblivion in nirvana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 2nd, 2020 at 4:18 AM

Title: Re: Banning political discussions on DharmaWheel

Content:

Brunelleschi said:

Certain things should definitely be removed. You can debate different economic policies, but debating things like "qanon"/associated MAGA/authoritarian stuff is pointless.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because these are political death cults, not rational positions. But they are valid topics for discussion, like Jim Jones or Charles Manson.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 2nd, 2020 at 4:20 AM

Title: Re: Subtle body

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

It seems universal in the Buddhist schemes that physical processes (even subtle ones) are a result of the mind, and not the other way around. If you know a bit about the channels in the Tibetan scheme for instance, this is inescapable.

Malcolm wrote:

Vajrayāna does not accept substance dualism. Mind and body are inseparable, divorced from each other for convenience, but not an actual duality.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 2nd, 2020 at 7:12 AM

Title: Re: Banning political discussions on DharmaWheel

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

, I've got no time for those folks, the level of political "discourse" on DW:E is ghastly from my point of view and I am happy to keep it away from here...even if that makes us biased, or whatever.

Malcolm wrote:

Should be called MAGAwheel.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 2nd, 2020 at 7:13 AM

Title: Re: Banning political discussions on DharmaWheel

Content:

DNS said:

DWE is not an engaged buddhist forum in the practice of TNH. It is 'engaged' in the sense of applying the Dharma to everyday life; from the tagline at the top:

Engaged Buddhism forum, a nonsectarian community discussing the application of the Dharma to social, environmental, news and political issues.

Malcolm wrote:

Hardly, it's retro's MAGA tailgate party. Which is odd, since he's Australian.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 2nd, 2020 at 7:36 AM

Title: Re: Banning political discussions on DharmaWheel

Content:

Dan74 said:

the US is now faced with a prospect of the second Trump presidency...

Malcolm wrote:

Only if he stages a military coup, at this point.

Biden leads by enough to withstand a polling misfire.

<https://www.nytimes.com/live/2020/presidential-polls-trump-biden/biden-leads-by-enough-to-withstand-a-polling-misfire?referringSource=articleShare>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 2nd, 2020 at 7:50 AM

Title: Re: Banning political discussions on DharmaWheel

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

American Democrats were "sure" Trump was going to lose back when he won as well. Actually, something often forgotten by Trumpistas is that Trump himself quite obviously didn't think he was going to win. He called the election "rigged" literally the night before the votes were counted. Arguably, he doesn't think he'll win again, hence his comments already about this one allegedly being rigged too.

Rigged as much as the last one, one wonders?

Sadly, Trumpistas do not seem to notice these things. "I won! I won!"
"No, Donald. We need to recount. It's rigged, remember?"
(Definitely a conversation that actually happened.)

Malcolm wrote:
It's different this time:

<https://fivethirtyeight.com/features/trumps-chances-are-dwindling-that-could-make-him-dangerous/>

His only option is refusing to step down, once he loses.

Burisma is not Benghazi.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, October 2nd, 2020 at 9:53 AM
Title: Re: Banning political discussions on DharmaWheel
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Hardly, it's retro's MAGA tailgate party. Which is odd, since he's Australian.

DNS said:
It may not be much of a "party" in 32 days. We'll see.

Here's what's could happen:
Neither party concedes and each declares the other of cheating, mail fraud, etc.

The Dems come to their senses and put Tulsi Gabbard as Speaker of the House.

No result by inauguration date, so Tulsi becomes president.

I know, I'm dreaming.

*edit, actually she's ineligible since she's not running for re-election in her district in Hawaii, so she won't be in the new Congress.

Malcolm wrote:

She's not running because she is very unpopular in HI.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 2nd, 2020 at 10:25 AM

Title: Re: Subtle body

Content:

tobes said:

But if channels, pranas etc are purely rupa, then why the association with sambhogakaya (eg in the speech empowerment)?

Malcolm wrote:

Speech is part of rupa skandha; likewise the sambhogakaya is part of the rupakaya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 2nd, 2020 at 7:36 PM

Title: Re: Subtle body

Content:

tobes said:

But if channels, pranas etc are purely rupa, then why the association with sambhogakaya (eg in the speech empowerment)?

Malcolm wrote:

Speech is part of rupa skandha; likewise the sambhogakaya is part of the rupakaya.

tobes said:

Surely speech entails samjnaskandha and samskaraskandha too. It has both rupa and namah components.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it's a purely physical action. See the Kosha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 2nd, 2020 at 7:38 PM

Title: Re: Banning political discussions on DharmaWheel

Content:

Genjo Conan said:

I mean, I guess it depends on how you define

<https://dharmawheel.org/viewtopic.php?f=11&t=5442>

<https://dharmawheel.org/viewtopic.php?f=11&t=5080>

<https://dharmawheel.org/memberlist.php?mode=viewprofile&u=51>.

Johnny Dangerous said:
Exactly.

I respectfully disagree on not that bad David. It feels more like someone's Facebook wall than a forum.

At any rate, I think that I can speak here for the other members of the mod team and say that DW:E is an example at this point of exactly the kind of acrimonious circular political "conversations" that we are trying to limit on DW:M.

To be clear, I respect the experiment, I'm just not into by the results personally. Everyone's take on it will vary and people should look and decide for themselves. I did.

Ayu said:

JD, okay, we agree DWE is too exhausting and senseless to engage with for us as individuals.

But if we are honest, as moderators we cannot say DWE shouldn't exist. As someone mentioned before, it is good right now that DWE exists at all. It's an incredible job DNS is doing there. Because it makes our job here much easier. We can tell any person who is not interested in mahayana dharma discussions to vent their political opinion over at DWE.

If we think DWE was 'that bad' we shouldn't recommend it.

(I'm not talking about abusive, mysanthropic or conspiracy trolls here. They shouldn't have any place anywhere, I think.)

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, as a kind of Lord of the Flies Island where Piggy gets killed over and over again, it's great. Better there than here.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 2nd, 2020 at 8:24 PM

Title: Re: Breaking News!

Content:

Bristollad said:

If it's a cynical ploy, he's probably hoping for the increased sympathy vote. Even Boris Johnson was perceived as being a more reasonable person after his brush with the virus. It didn't last of course as he went back to his old ways pretty quickly.

PeterC said:

I agree. If this is fake then he avoids the debates, looks more sympathetic, then when he "recovers" he looks strong and healthy, and can tell everyone that it's no big deal. It's a win all round for him. He loses out by not holding more rallies and doing TV etc but frankly he's not going to achieve much with that right now. Anything more dramatic his government can do while he's incapacitated.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think this is fake news. He was on Hannity last night and he sounded unusually excited. Trump met Wednesday with Mnuchin, who met with Pelosi, putting the House leadership in question, so, this is just chaos as usual in the Trump era.

As for him looking strong and healthy, he hasn't looked strong and healthy for years.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 3rd, 2020 at 12:05 AM

Title: Re: Breaking News!

Content:

DNS said:

I imagine he'll definitely have to miss round 2 of the debates, but might be well for the final round 3.

Malcolm wrote:

Where's the MMS when you need it?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 3rd, 2020 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: Breaking News!

Content:

Minobu said:

I don't know how America will take to someone telling the President of the United States to shut up.. And then to call him a clown in public...

Malcolm wrote:

I thought it was perfectly appropriate. If Trump were a dog, someone would have put him down a long time ago. Just saying...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 3rd, 2020 at 2:07 AM

Title: Re: Breaking News!

Content:

tkp67 said:

Trump purposely took office to disrupt the government (drain the swamp).

This was intentional bait and switch. Selling the notion of lean government when he was targeting laws and resources that throttled corporate freedom to profiteer without accountability.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, he had no intention of winning, he was just looking for PR. Then he was elected, and decided he would drain the swamp, meaning all the money sloshing around DC looking for a crook to swindle it:

<https://www.vanityfair.com/news/2020/10/can-trump-pay-off-his-billion-in-debt>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 3rd, 2020 at 2:09 AM

Title: Re: Banning political discussions on DharmaWheel

Content:

tkp67 said:

Bullying is something I am quite adept at compassionately challenging wherever it exists, relentlessly and without regard for consequences.

Malcolm wrote:

there, fixed it for you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 3rd, 2020 at 4:24 AM

Title: Re: Banning political discussions on DharmaWheel

Content:

Brunelleschi said:

Anyway, if the choice is between lessening the damage Trump has done or punish the Democrats, I can understand why one would choose to vote for Biden.

Malcolm wrote:

The choice is between sanity and a political death cult.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 3rd, 2020 at 4:26 AM

Title: Re: Banning political discussions on DharmaWheel

Content:

Brunelleschi said:

Sure, I understand. My point is that Biden is a pretty despicable person (in my opinion). However, he's not a complete narcissist authoritarian ahole like the current POTUS.

Malcolm wrote:

We are not voting for a person, we are voting for a platform.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 3rd, 2020 at 5:19 AM

Title: Re: Banning political discussions on DharmaWheel

Content:

Danny said:

Ok sir, within context, politics is local, grass roots not National or global, if you can't fix what's outside the front door, why bother yourself with what happens elsewhere?

Genjo Conan said:

Because what happens elsewhere affects what's outside the front door. I work for a state government; I can assure you that national politics trickles down.

Danny said:

Nah sorry, states begging for federal bailouts for poor run states is a states problem, broken local politics. Own it.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is why prosperous blue states support the ne'er-do-well red states. Look it up if you don't believe me. If votes were distributed by the amounts of money paid in taxes, the Republicans would never win again, ever. And to the bargain, their shitty political fantasies would vanish.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 3rd, 2020 at 5:22 AM

Title: Re: Breaking News!

Content:

Bundokji said:

I think Biden did the right thing by wishing the president and his wife speedy recovery. When i checked my FB earlier today, i encountered posts wishing him to die, mockery that finally something positive came out of him, and that he deserves it because he denied how deadly the virus is.

Malcolm wrote:

"Karma, sometimes it ripens sooner rather than later."

-- Namdrol

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 3rd, 2020 at 5:27 AM

Title: 5:25 PM—Trump to be taken to Walter Reed.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

as it says

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 3rd, 2020 at 7:36 AM

Title: Re: Subtle body

Content:

tobes said:

Maybe we need to distinguish between speech as a physical-verbal articulation of sound, and the wider sense of the term in the Buddhist tradition, which is clearly more subtle.

Body body and mind.

OM OM HUM.....

Something is clearly missing right?

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually. More later.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 3rd, 2020 at 7:44 AM

Title: Re: Subtle body

Content:

tobes said:

Maybe we need to distinguish between speech as a physical-verbal articulation of sound, and the wider sense of the term in the Buddhist tradition, which is clearly more subtle.

Body body and mind.

OM OM HUM.....

Something is clearly missing right?

Johnny Dangerous said:

Interesting question, I can think of a couple of sadhana text that refer to the "two bodies" instead of three for just this reason - that Nirmanakaya and Sambogakaya are both Rupakaya. I mean, it seems like this is almost Theravadin...but there must be some other explanation.

Malcolm wrote:

There isn't, but i will explain this tomorrow.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 3rd, 2020 at 7:46 AM

Title: Re: 5:25 PM——Trump to be taken to Walter Reed.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Karma is a bitch.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 3rd, 2020 at 10:13 AM

Title: Re: 5:25 PM——Trump to be taken to Walter Reed.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah? So what. He killed 200k people and counting through his incompetence. Not impressed. May he recover and face the jail time he so richly deserves.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 3rd, 2020 at 10:06 PM

Title: Re: Subtle body

Content:

tobes said:

I look forward to it Malcolm. I'm sure you'll offer good reasons.

Malcolm wrote:

Vocal actions, speech, is part of the rūpaskandha. You are confusing mind with body.

The sambhogakāya belongs to the rūpakāya, the material kāya.

Karma is cetana (namaḥ), and what proceeds from cetana: verbal and physical actions (rūpa). Generally, nāmaḥ, mind, corresponds to the dharmakāya; where as the rūpa, matter, corresponds to the two rūpakāyas, speech and body.

Nāḍīs, bindus, and vāyus are all exclusively physical structures in the human body, as anyone who has studied the process of gestation described in Kālacakra, the Cakrasamvara Tantras, and the 17 Dzogchen tantras will rapidly understand.

In Buddhism, there are no entities that exists outside the six dhātus: earth, water, fire, air, space, and consciousness. Whatever is the limit of samsara, that is the limit of nirvana, and vice versa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 3rd, 2020 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: Work is Necessary! No, its not! Split from "I was a Trump Supporter"

Content:

Aemilius said:

There is also the knowhow of the life of an ascetic. You are just trying to play it down, that Gautama and other ascetics had learned the ascetic life from the tradition of asceticism that existed in India at the time. This is being true to the facts. Prince Siddhartha had not known that there are Sramanas in the world, before he saw one and was explained by his charioteer what a sramana is.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but the Buddha rejected the extremes of ascetism advocated by other śrāmaneras, since he had personal experience that they did not lead to the expected results. He offered a middle way in what was, by all accounts, a movement dominated by śrāmaneras of different sects who all advocated different kinds of self-mortification as a means to escape samsara.

Hence, Buddha's vinaya, contextual and not assembled all at once time, bears little relationship to the speculative asceticism current in the Buddha's day. For example, note his five ascetic companions were initially shocked and dismayed that the Buddha had put on weight and was eating food again.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 4th, 2020 at 12:21 AM

Title: Re: Breaking News!

Content:

PeterC said:

Running list of who has tested positive in the current outbreak;

Hope Hicks - Trump Senior Council, former Trump WH communications director

Donald Trump - President

Melania Trump - First Lady

Ronna McDaniel - RNC chair

Mike Lee - Republican Senator, UT

Rev. John Jenkins - president of the University of Notre Dame (attended SCOTUS nomination at Rose Garden)

Three unnamed journalists and one unnamed WH staffer

Thom Tillis - Republican Senator, North Carolina was at WH on Sat

Kellyanne Conway - Former White House counselor, attended Rose Garden event

Bill Stepien - Trump Campaign Manager

Ron Johnson - Republican Senator, Wisconsin

Chris Christie - Former Republican NJ Gov. Helped prepare Trump for debate

Trying to compile a similar list for the Biden campaign but can't find any names. Must be a deep state coverup.

Malcolm wrote:

Waiting for Bill Barr to show up on that list.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 4th, 2020 at 2:18 AM

Title: Re: Breaking News!

Content:

Dan74 said:

I think it can be argued that the challenges modern society presents are over and above what people 500, 300 or even 100 years ago had to concern themselves with. Or so it seems to me.

Malcolm wrote:

Nah, every thing was harder to do and more complicated.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 4th, 2020 at 2:33 AM

Title: Re: Breaking News!

Content:

Dan74 said:

I think it can be argued that the challenges modern society presents are over and above what people 500, 300 or even 100 years ago had to concern themselves with. Or so it seems to me.

Malcolm wrote:

Nah, every thing was harder to do and more complicated.

tkp67 said:

Earlier times were exponentially more laborious but the sphere of influence smaller. The nature of things less complex.

In the information age returning to lifestyles that mimic earlier times are trending because of the simplicity. This does not imply ease but rather a lack of complexity effected by a greater matrix of societal interdependence/interactions.

Malcolm wrote:

With species reductions and habitat destruction, I would say life was richer and more complex even 100 years ago compared with the present.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 4th, 2020 at 2:50 AM

Title: Re: Breaking News!

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

With species reductions and habitat destruction, I would say life was richer and more complex even 100 years ago compared with the present.

1920s were party time.

1930s desperation time.

1940s war time

1950s good time

1960s well....it seemed like a good idea at the time.

Malcolm wrote:

I wasn't really using an androcentric view here....

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 4th, 2020 at 3:26 AM

Title: Re: Breaking News!

Content:

tkp67 said:

Earlier times where exponentially more laborious but the sphere of influence smaller.

The nature of things less complex.

In the information age returning to lifestyles that mimic earlier times are trending because the simplicity. This does not imply ease but rather a lack of complexity effected by a greater matrix of societal interdependence/interactions.

Malcolm wrote:

With species reductions and habitat destruction, I would say life was richer and more complex even 100 years ago compared with the present.

tkp67 said:

Natural life, absolutely. My commentary is most definitely describing the realm of mankind from cities to internet.

In my formative youth I struggled with the modulation from a natural world to this man made world since I felt the natural world was perfect and frankly still do.

Malcolm wrote:

even with respect to technology, it has made our lives less complex, actually, not more. Just think of all the things we, especially urban dwellers, do not do. They don't fetch water, shit in outhouses, bath in woodtubs that have to have water heated manually, we don't have to use kerosine or oil for lamps, tryp on typewriters, or worse, write with pen and ink, the list really does go on and on. Our interconnected world is certainly more fragile and complicated in terms of its dependencies, but more complicated to live in? No, not at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 4th, 2020 at 6:15 AM

Title: Re: Breaking News!

Content:

tkp67 said:

Natural life, absolutely. My commentary is most definitely describing the realm of mankind from cities to internet.

In my formative youth I struggled with the modulation from a natural world to this man made world since I felt the natural world was perfect and frankly still do.

Malcolm wrote:

even with respect to technology, it has made our lives less complex, actually, not more. Just think of all the things we, especially urban dwellers, do not do. They don't fetch water, shit in outhouses, bath in woodtubs that have to have water heated manually, we don't have to use kerosine or oil for lamps, try on typewriters, or worse, write with pen and ink, the list really does go on and on. Our interconnected world is certainly more fragile and complicated in terms of its dependencies, but more complicated to live in? No, not at all.

Dan74 said:

I think the point got lost. Bundokji's point was that the modern voter has to parse very subtle issues that require a lot more than common sense, an imposition that premodern people were not put under. I am not so sure, but democracy certainly makes a lot of assumptions...

Malcolm wrote:

No, I don't agree with your idea.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 4th, 2020 at 6:22 AM

Title: Re: Subtle body

Content:

tobes said:

I look forward to it Malcolm. I'm sure you'll offer good reasons.

Malcolm wrote:

Vocal actions, speech, is part of the rūpaskandha. You are confusing mind with body.

The sambhogakāya belongs to the rūpakāya, the material kāya.

Karma is cetana (namaḥ), and what proceeds from cetana: verbal and physical actions (rūpa). Generally, nāmaḥ, mind, corresponds to the dharmakāya; where as the rūpa, matter, corresponds to the two rūpakāyas, speech and body.

Nāḍīs, bindus, and vāyus are all exclusively physical structures in the human body, as anyone who has studied the process of gestation described in Kālacakra, the Cakrasamvara Tantras, and the 17 Dzogchen tantras will rapidly understand.

In Buddhism, there are no entities that exists outside the six dhātus: earth, water, fire, air, space, and consciousness. Whatever is the limit of samsara, that is the limit of nirvana, and vice versa.

Charlie123 said:

Is it correct to say that speech is nothing more than the gyengyu lung?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, udanavayu is speech, along with tongue, lips, teeth, nasal cavity, and throat.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 4th, 2020 at 7:59 PM

Title: Re: Work is Necessary! No, its not! Split from "I was a Trump Supporter"

Content:

Aemilius said:

There is also the knowhow of the life of an ascetic. You are just trying to play it down, that Gautama and other ascetics had learned the ascetic life from the tradition of asceticism that existed in India at the time. This is being true to the facts. Prince Siddhartha had not known that there are Sramanas in the world, before he saw one and was explained by his charioteer what a sramana is.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but the Buddha rejected the extremes of ascetism advocated by other śrāmaneras, since he had personal experience that they did not lead to the expected results. He offered a middle way in what was, by all accounts, a movement dominated by śrāmaneras of different sects who all advocated different kinds of self-mortification as a means to escape samsara.

Aemilius said:

The point is that there are many things that he had learned and accepted from the tradition of sramanas, teachings and principles that his movement had in common with the sramanas and brahmanas of other denominations. Like meditation and logical thinking and epistemological views, as an example. The language and theory of a spiritual practice existed before Shakyamuni, and it existed in other schools of thought of his time and era.

Malcolm wrote:

This is trivial.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 5th, 2020 at 1:14 AM

Title: Re: Rules are rules. Vinaya and Norms. Split from "Work is Necessary! No it's not!"

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

It's a DW sacred cow that Buddha Dharma have absolutely nothing in common with any other spiritual tradition.

Malcolm wrote:

This is not a correct assessment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 5th, 2020 at 7:25 PM

Title: Re: Work is Necessary! No, its not! Split from "I was a Trump Supporter"

Content:

Aemilius said:

The point is that there are many things that he had learned and accepted from the tradition of sramanas, teachings and principles that his movement had in common with the sramanas and brahmanas of other denominations. Like meditation and logical thinking and epistemological views, as an example. The language and theory of a spiritual practice existed before Shakyamuni, and it existed in other schools of thought of his time and era.

Malcolm wrote:

This is trivial.

Aemilius said:

Firstly, Sramana is a different word from Sramanera (novice monk). For the meaning of Sramana see <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/%C5%9Arama%E1%B9%87a>.

Secondly, I would like to add that all the schools (in India), that were able to teach people a method to attain the four Dhyanas, were advanced schools and possessed spiritual knowledge or spiritual knowhow. This is not denied in Tripitaka, (that there is practice and attainment of dhyana outside of the Buddhist Sangha.)

When Siddhartha was fasting, he was not only fasting, he was also meditating or practicing dhyana.

Malcolm wrote:

Your point is still trivial.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 5th, 2020 at 7:57 PM

Title: Re: Question Regarding Samaya Pollution

Content:

Tenma said:

So, I've been noticing people here being concerned about not using things used by samaya breakers and some texts explicitly stating to not drink the same water from them. I wanted to ask, if someone is a samaya breaker, does that mean that they will pollute whatever environments and objects they encounter? With people who aren't even Buddhists or those who aren't aware that such a person is a samaya breaker, what affect does this "pollution" have, if any? How is it that whatever a person such as a samaya breaker does must be avoided as though it's harmful? Why avoid them? Aren't they sentient beings? This entire idea of not associating with "breakers"/"deserters" sounds awfully like a cult, especially the Jehovah's Witnesses.

Malcolm wrote:

I shun samaya breakers, you should too. A samaya breaker is someone who hates their guru, hates their vajra siblings, lacks bodhicitta, etc. We also have a samaya to avoid such people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 5th, 2020 at 8:42 PM

Title: Re: Subtle body

Content:

tobes said:

I look forward to it Malcolm. I'm sure you'll offer good reasons.

Malcolm wrote:

Vocal actions, speech, is part of the rūpaskandha. You are confusing mind with body.

The sambhogakāya belongs to the rūpakāya, the material kāya.

Karma is cetana (namaḥ), and what proceeds from cetana: verbal and physical actions (rūpa). Generally, nāmaḥ, mind, corresponds to the dharmakāya; where as the rūpa, matter, corresponds to the two rūpakāyas, speech and body.

Nāḍīs, bindus, and vāyus are all exclusively physical structures in the human body, as anyone who has studied the process of gestation described in Kālacakra, the Cakrasamvara Tantras, and the 17 Dzogchen tantras will rapidly understand.

In Buddhism, there are no entities that exists outside the six dhātus: earth, water, fire, air, space, and consciousness. Whatever is the limit of samsara, that is the limit of nirvana, and vice versa.

tobes said:

Thanks, typically cogent.

Nonetheless, this only explains 'vocal actions' - the actual sounds of speech. Do you regard language itself as purely physical?

If so, then there is no inconsistency. But if not, we're left with a physical account of something that contains non-physical content.

i.e. what moves between people is not merely sounds, but also conceptual and symbolic content.

Malcolm wrote:

Meaning is not transmitted directly, mind to mind, but through the physical media of sound, physically created images, and gestures. In other words, pada, words, are the medium for artha, meaning.

Vak—voice, speech, and language, are purely physical. The word “language,” has, as its etymon, lingua: tongue/speech/language.

Likewise Vak is a direct cognate of vox, which is the nominative of vocem, “voice, sound, utterance, cry, call, speech, sentence, language, word.”

Speech likewise comes from proto Germanic *sprek, etc, utterance, etc.

For example, if I only know Tibetan, and you only know English, it is impossible for the meaning of Dharma to be conveyed, because of a physical language barrier. And language barriers are as physical as a wall.

To out it another way, meaning (dharmakaya) is conveyed physically (rupakaya), by means of symbols (sambhogakaya) and words (nirmanakaya).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 5th, 2020 at 9:03 PM

Title: Re: 5:25 PM—Trump to be taken to Walter Reed.

Content:

PeterC said:

But on Nemo, and others. With the exception of a few people, I tend to believe that people on here are generally on the side of the good guys. Occasionally the way they talk may seem annoying, but I'm pretty sure I annoy people from time to time too. One of the reasons that groups like the Republicans manage to maintain power in the pursuit of what is essentially evil, is that they stick together. Right now that's what we need to do, too.

Malcolm wrote:

Nemo's ok. A bit extreme sometimes, but so am I.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 5th, 2020 at 10:46 PM

Title: Re: Eastern Enlightenment Vs. Western Psychopathology

Content:

DiabloRojo said:

What makes no-self not like depersonalization?

Malcolm wrote:

Loving kindness.

DiabloRojo said:

What makes emptiness not like derealization?

Malcolm wrote:

Compassion.

DiabloRojo said:

What makes detachment not like dissociation?

Malcolm wrote:

Bodhicitta.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 5th, 2020 at 11:25 PM

Title: On Christian Fascism—Chris Hedges

Content:

Unknown said:

The Christian fascists, like all fascist movements, creates its own truth. It discredits verifiable fact, science, law and rationality. It promises a new, glorious world of moral renewal and prosperity. It promises a creator who will carry out miracles for believers and for America. It calls on followers to abandon the world of cause and effect and replace it with a world of magic. The reality-based world, as in all totalitarian movements, is snuffed out.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://scheerpost.com/2020/10/05/trumps-barrett-nomination-another-step-toward-christian-facism/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 6th, 2020 at 12:29 AM

Title: Re: 5:25 PM——Trump to be taken to Walter Reed.

Content:

Queequeg said:

But in all fairness, "I got mine" is the real creed of the United States, Republican or Democrat. Democrats just believe in using lube. It really ought to replace the farcical, "In God we Trust" on our currency.

Genjo Conan said:

Oh, for sure. I'm a socialist; I think the kindest thing one can say about the vast majority of Democratic politicians is that they mean well, but are too indebted to the status quo of money and empire to really help, and are too unimaginative and feckless to break free. And that's me being kind.

Malcolm wrote:

Deep ecology.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 6th, 2020 at 12:39 AM

Title: Re: 5:25 PM——Trump to be taken to Walter Reed.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Deep ecology.

Queequeg said:

This resonates with me. But the last time I seriously considered the idea, I was at that stage in life where I could seriously consider spiking trees and sitting in tree houses.

How does one live this?

Malcolm wrote:

Edward Abbey was not a deep ecologist. He was a racist who today would probably vote for Trump.

We live this by practicing Buddhism. Buddhism is already deep ecological. It is not human-centered, and never has been. Christianity, etc., even Taoism, are all human-centered religions. Only in Buddhism does there exist the notion that our liberation and the liberation of all sentient beings are intimately connected.

Practically speaking, we start voting for ecological candidates, and promote democratic socialism.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 6th, 2020 at 2:25 AM

Title: Re: 5:25 PM—Trump to be taken to Walter Reed.

Content:

Genjo Conan said:

I have qualms about aspects of deep ecology--or, probably more accurately, with some of the beliefs of some of its adherents. I recognize and appreciate that Naess advocated for a gradual depopulation rather than, y'know, genocide. But at least some professed followers of deep ecology--your Earth Firsters, etc.--seem a little less discerning on that front, and at least some of the modern ecofascists seem to be co-opting some of the language of deep ecology.

Malcolm wrote:

One cannot be an ecofascist and a practitioner of deep ecology—the two are mutually exclusive. Ecofascists are people, like Abbey, the ultimate NIMBY, who martial ecological arguments as a proxy for their racism, etc. Ecofascists do not understand Naess or Ecosophy, the basis of Deep Ecology.

Genjo Conan said:

But yes, I believe strongly that, if I believe in interdependence (and I do), then my politics ought to reflect and enact that. The modern politics of expropriation, extraction, and exploitation reflect the delusion that human beings are separate from the world.

Malcolm wrote:

Strongly agree. You might find Regarding Nature of significant interest:

<https://www.sunypress.edu/p-1570-regarding-nature.aspx>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 6th, 2020 at 2:27 AM

Title: Re: On Christian Fascism—Chris Hedges

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Too late. I drank the Kool-Aid.

Malcolm wrote:

If one abandons cause and effect, one abandons dependent origination and karma, and then effectively, one abandons Dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 6th, 2020 at 4:11 AM

Title: Re: On Christian Fascism—Chris Hedges

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

My understanding is that the writer meant “cause and effect” to mean scientific materialism and, replace it with a world of magic.
To mean things like karma and reincarnation.

Malcolm wrote:

Karma and rebirth are part of cause and effect, not magic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 6th, 2020 at 4:13 AM

Title: Re: On Christian Fascism—Chris Hedges

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

I doubt it. Chris Hedges is not a Buddhist or anything...

Malcolm wrote:

Hedges is a former seminarian, a devout Christian in fact, perhaps not by the standards of the handmaiden crew.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 6th, 2020 at 4:21 AM

Title: Re: On Christian Fascism—Chris Hedges

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

You also have to keep in mind context here. I fully believe in post mortem rebirth and Karma, but I don't want to live in a society where we craft policy on them, and then force everyone to follow said policy.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct. Me either. We have more in common with scientific materialists than we do Christians, etc.

I am in full favor of a secular order based on ecological, democratic, and social welfare principles.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 6th, 2020 at 4:24 AM

Title: Re: 5:25 PM—Trump to be taken to Walter Reed.

Content:

Genjo Conan said:

I have qualms about aspects of deep ecology--or, probably more accurately, with some of the beliefs of some of its adherents. I recognize and appreciate that Naess advocated for a gradual depopulation rather than, y'know, genocide. But at least some professed followers of deep ecology--your Earth Firsters, etc.--seem a little less discerning on that front, and at least some of the modern ecofascists seem to be coopting some of the language of deep ecology.

Malcolm wrote:

One cannot be an ecofascist and a practitioner of deep ecology—the two are mutually exclusive. Ecofascists are people, like Abbey, the ultimate NIMBY, who martial ecological arguments as a proxy for their racism, etc. Ecofascists do not understand Naess or Ecosophy, the basis of Deep Ecology.

Genjo Conan said:

But yes, I believe strongly that, if I believe in interdependence (and I do), then my politics ought to reflect and enact that. The modern politics of expropriation, extraction, and exploitation reflect the delusion that human beings are separate from the world.

Malcolm wrote:

Strongly agree. You might find Regarding Nature of significant interest:
<https://www.sunypress.edu/p-1570-regarding-nature.aspx>

Bristollad said:

Just checked it out on Amazon: one review, 5 stars by.... Malcom Smith

Malcolm wrote:

It's a rather obscure book.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 6th, 2020 at 4:44 AM

Title: Re: On Christian Fascism—Chris Hedges

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

My understanding is that the writer meant "cause and effect" to mean scientific materialism and,

To mean things like karma and reincarnation.

Malcolm wrote:

Karma and rebirth are part of cause and effect, not magic.

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Seems like you've drunk the Kool-Aid too.

Try telling that to an atheist.

Malcolm wrote:

I am an atheist. Just not a materialist one.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 6th, 2020 at 8:00 AM

Title: Re: Sanskrit Names of Buddhas in Mipham's Tashi Prayer

Content:

Seeker12 said:

Does anyone know the Sanskrit names for the Buddhas listed in the Tashi Prayer?

Tibetan and English found here - <https://www.lotsawahouse.org/tibetan-masters/mipham/verses-eight-noble-auspicious-ones>

Thank you.

Charlie123 said:

http://lamakathy.net/resources/pdf/tashi_prayer.pdf

Malcolm wrote:

These are reconstructions and are not certain.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 6th, 2020 at 8:04 AM

Title: Re: What is one to do with the deep and abiding pain of unrequited love?

Content:

bcol01 said:

If a person is unable to love us, (such as a family member), how do we resist the natural tendency to internalize it?

Malcolm wrote:

All afflicted phenomena are suffering.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 6th, 2020 at 8:51 AM

Title: Re: Question Regarding Samaya Pollution

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I shun samaya breakers, you should too. A samaya breaker is someone who hates their guru, hates their vajra siblings, lacks bodhicitta, etc. We also have a samaya to avoid such people.

Danny said:

With all that said, it sounds harsh, but actually not really. You simply would have no connection to such an individual. However, there is nothing to say that such an individual would not be an expression of Buddha activity. Compassion for their actions, not a revenge or motivated by negativity towards the person. That would be something very bad no?

Hitting a bad dog, doesn't make the dog good, just makes it badder.

Malcolm wrote:

Shunning such people is compassionate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 6th, 2020 at 7:35 PM

Title: Re: Subtle body

Content:

tobes said:

Thanks, typically cogent.

Nonetheless, this only explains 'vocal actions' - the actual sounds of speech. Do you regard language itself as purely physical?

If so, then there is no inconsistency. But if not, we're left with a physical account of something that contains non-physical content.

i.e. what moves between people is not merely sounds, but also conceptual and symbolic content.

Malcolm wrote:

Meaning is not transmitted directly, mind to mind, but through the physical media of sound, physically created images, and gestures. In other words, pada, words, are the medium for artha, meaning.

Vak—voice, speech, and language, are purely physical. The word “language,” has, as its etymon, lingua: tongue/speech/language.

Likewise Vak is a direct cognate of vox, which is the nominative of vocem, “voice, sound, utterance, cry, call, speech, sentence, language, word.”

Speech likewise comes from proto Germanic *sprek, etc, utterance, etc.

For example, if I only know Tibetan, and you only know English, it is impossible for the meaning of Dharma to be conveyed, because of a physical language barrier. And language barriers are as physical as a wall.

To put it another way, meaning (dharmakaya) is conveyed physically (rupakaya), by means of symbols (sambhogakaya) and words (nirmanakaya).

tobes said:

I still find this a bit unconvincing, mainly because it induces us to conceive of concepts themselves as merely physical.

So, there is a physical apple, which is represented by the concept and word 'apple' or 'khu-shu'. To say both the physical, fleshy sweet thing and the representation of it in a symbolic-conceptual order are equally physical misses something important about the symbolic-conceptual order, doesn't it?

What does it miss? Namely that that entire order can be abstracted from physical reality; one can have discursive thoughts containing the word 'apple' which are purely mental, and which can induce us into obtaining and biting into one. Or into a conversation about where to find and obtain one.

So it seems to me that speech mediates between namah and rupa, depending on whether one is merely involved in conceptual proliferation or whether this spills out into verbal action.

Malcolm wrote:

You are overthinking this. I've given you the classical Buddhist answer. Not much more I can do, I am afraid. If you want to continue to speculate, well, I can't help you. Speech is physical.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 6th, 2020 at 7:38 PM

Title: Re: Work is Necessary! No, its not! Split from "I was a Trump Supporter"

Content:

Aemilius said:

Firstly, Sramana is a different word from Sramanera (novice monk). For the meaning of Sramana see <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/%C5%9Arama%E1%B9%87a>.

Secondly, I would like to add that all the schools (in India), that were able to teach people a method to attain the four Dhyanas, were advanced schools and possessed spiritual knowledge or spiritual knowhow. This is not denied in Tripitaka, (that there is practice and attainment of dhyana outside of the Buddhist Sangha.)

When Siddhartha was fasting, he was not only fasting, he was also meditating or practicing dhyana.

Malcolm wrote:

Your point is still trivial.

Aemilius said:

I think it is profound, at least it is unknown to many people.

Malcolm wrote:

To those who are not educated in the history of the Dharma, perhaps.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 7th, 2020 at 12:28 AM

Title: Re: Source of presentation of the path as view, meditation, conduct

Content:

Könchok Thrinley said:

Hi,

I am looking for a source of the presentation of the path as view, meditation and conduct. Is it mostly a dzogchen thing? I mostly heard it from ChNN and other dzogchen teachers. Also Garchen Rinpoche uses it. It seems to be mostly tibetan thing. Is there some textual resource for it, or idea when and where it appeared first? Can anyone tell me some details concerning this form of presenting the path?

Malcolm wrote:

It is a common framework coming from Vajrayāna in general.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 7th, 2020 at 4:05 AM

Title: Re: On Christian Fascism—Chris Hedges

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

I am unaware of anybody having reasoned their way to realization.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha did. In fact, when he was accused of this, he turned it into a compliment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 7th, 2020 at 4:39 AM

Title: Re: On Christian Fascism—Chris Hedges

Content:

Brunelleschi said:

Hmm, have to agree here. From a West European perspective - I don't know that many practicing Christians. I do however, know a few practicing Muslims and I have to say we definitely have more in common with (devout) Muslims than secular atheists.

Malcolm wrote:

No. they are theists. We are atheists. We do not believe a creator deity, etc. We believe in dependent origination.

Brunelleschi said:

I believe that's what Malcolm is referring to?

Malcolm wrote:

I was referring to all theists.

But not pagans. We are definitely in the pagan sphere, from the point of view of accepting a broad range of types of beings.

But even here, we don't believe in any kind of divine cosmogony. We believe in karma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 7th, 2020 at 11:01 AM

Title: Re: Subtle body

Content:

avatamsaka3 said:

*if we consider the very basic division of the skandhas into namah and rupa, this clearly situates language and speech with the namah side of the equation.

I suppose if we're looking at speech as sound waves coming out of my mouth and going into your ears, then it's clearly physical. If we're talking about the cognitive processes that initiate that process, they're not in the rupa category.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this was all covered above in the statement about the nature of karma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 7th, 2020 at 8:36 PM

Title: Re: On Christian Fascism—Chris Hedges

Content:

shankara said:

Anyway, I found this quote by the Dalai Lama which really helped me, actually brought me back to practicing Buddhism after some time following Hindu teachings. It pretty much encapsulates both the essential difference and essential unity with the eternalist traditions. Italics are my own.

Malcolm wrote:

HHDL is not saying that Buddha taught anyone there is a creator. He is saying that different people believe different things. Eternalism is a wrong view in Buddhadharma. Buddhadharma and Santanadharma are philosophically irreconcilable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 7th, 2020 at 10:06 PM

Title: Re: 5:25 PM—Trump to be taken to Walter Reed.

Content:

PeterC said:

Kellyanne Conway's Daughter

Malcolm wrote:

This is a must see:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 7th, 2020 at 10:07 PM

Title: Re: 5:25 PM—Trump to be taken to Walter Reed.

Content:

PeterC said:

Update on the trump superspreader list. 30 so far.

Donald Trump - President

Melania Trump - First Lady

Hope Hicks - Trump Senior Council, former Trump WH communications director

Ronna McDaniel - RNC chair

Mike Lee (R, UT)

Rev. John Jenkins - president of the University of Notre Dame (attended SCOTUS nomination at Rose Garden)

Two unnamed journalists and one unnamed WH staffer

Michael D. Shear - WH correspondent for NYT, and his wife

Thom Tillis (R, NC) - At WH on Sat

Kellyanne Conway - Former White House counselor, attended Rose Garden event

Kellyanne Conway's Daughter

Bill Stepien - Trump Campaign Manager

Ron Johnson (R, WI)

Chris Christie - Former Republican NJ Gov. Helped prepare Trump for debate.

Nick Luna - Trump Aide

Kayleigh McEnany - WH Press Secretary

Chad Gilmartin - Deputy to Press Secretary

Karoline Leavitt - Deputy to Press Secretary

Greg Laurie - Pastor at Harvest Christian Fellowship, attended Rose Garden event

Jayna McCarron - Trump's military aid for Coast Guard

Unnamed - Active duty military valet to the president

Salud Carbajal (D-CA) - After exposed to COVID-positive senator Mike Lee (R-UT)

Al Drago - Photojournalist at Rose Garden event

Charles W. Ray - U.S. Coast Guard admiral

Harrison W. Fields - Assistant Press Secretary

Jalen Drummond - Assistant Press Secretary

Stephen Miller - WH senior adviser

Malcolm wrote:
George Conway was also infected by Kellyanne...

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, October 7th, 2020 at 10:09 PM
Title: Re: Right speech, right mind...right politics
Content:

FiveSkandhas said:
It has been said that no-one can avoid politics; that non-action is a form of acquiescence to the current order. This is a powerful argument. Nevertheless, I think it leads to both individual and social sickness to "politicize everything," or to insist that all individuals must be politically active. It gives rise to a feverishness that is characteristic of the totalitarian mind (either on the right or on the left). In actual practice there should be space for both disengaged and engaged Buddhism, and a detachment to the political as samsaric and conditioned reality should be respected.

Malcolm wrote:
If anyone was seeking an excuse spiritual bypassing, they've found it.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, October 7th, 2020 at 10:14 PM
Title: Re: On Christian Fascism—Chris Hedges
Content:

shankara said:
Anyway, I found this quote by the Dalai Lama which really helped me, actually brought me back to practicing Buddhism after some time following Hindu teachings. It pretty much encapsulates both the essential difference and essential unity with the eternalist traditions. Italics are my own.

Malcolm wrote:
HHDL is not saying that Buddha taught anyone there is a creator. He is saying that different people believe different things. Eternalism is a wrong view in Buddhadharma. Buddhadharma and Santanadharma are philosophically irreconcilable.

shankara said:
Yeah sure I'm not saying that Buddha taught Eternalism. But concepts are provisional, whatever concept a person is following is a representation of reality, or some aspects of it. Buddhism simply rejects that any particular concept encapsulates or captures Reality exactly as it is in its totality, including the concepts of Buddhism itself.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is mistaken. There are two kind of right view: mundane and transcendent. They both hinge on dependent origination as being the correct understanding of things. The Buddha has said, "whoever sees dependent origination sees the dharma; whoever sees the dharma sees me." So your thesis that all concepts are merely provisional expedients with no more or less value than any other concept is actually rejected by the Buddha himself, as well as Nāgārjuna, etc.

shankara said:

I'm also not entirely convinced that the Sanatana position is entirely irreconcilable with the Buddhist one. For example in the Dvaita (Krishna Consciousness) thing there is the idea that liberation consists not in some peace of extinction but in becoming a "servant of Krishna". I'd say that's a kind of theistic way of saying "Bodhisattva".

Malcolm wrote:

Hardly.

shankara said:

In this video HHDL says that Buddhism and Hinduism are like "brother and sister"...
<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=8iLJ8ueOTQ8>. While one might be more philosophically developed than the other, the spirit is not so different I'd say.

Malcolm wrote:

Hinduism, in its entirety, is part of the vehicle of devas and humans, that is, it only leads to birth in higher samsaric realms. The same goes with the other theistic religions. But of course, birth as "a servant of Krishna" in Krishna's abode, Vaikuntha, is samsaric and when one's merit runs out there, one falls into lower realms.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 7th, 2020 at 10:27 PM

Title: Re: Subtle body

Content:

avatamsaka3 said:

i.e. Who/what am I? The material parts + the linguistic imputation 'tobes'.
You're saying all that you are is material...?

tobes said:

No - I'm saying there are material and mental parts, and language is connected more with the mental. i.e. it is my name imputed on my form.

Malcolm wrote:

If you wish to understand the classical position on this point, according to the Sautrantika school, refer to the discussion on Nāmakāya in chapter 2 of the Abhidharmakosha, verse 47ab. They say, "A nāman (word) is a sound upon which persons have come to agreement that it signifies certain things."

Your argument is realist, i.e. that there is something underlying speech called "language." But the Buddhist position is nominalist—language comes from agreement that certain sounds are agreed to represent certain things. For example, if language was in the mind, then all creatures with minds should have language, and the same language as well. But this is not the case, since formless realm beings have no language and engage in no communication at all, even though they have concepts, such as "limitless emptiness" and so on. Your name is imputed onto your body a posteriori, not a priori. There is an appearance—the nonconceptual engagement of a sense object—and then that appearance is conventionally designated; not the other way round.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 8th, 2020 at 3:16 AM

Title: Re: On Christian Fascism—Chris Hedges

Content:

shankara said:

And in what respect do other religions reject dependent origination?

Malcolm wrote:

By positing first causes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 8th, 2020 at 3:18 AM

Title: Re: Right speech, right mind...right politics

Content:

FiveSkandhas said:

It has been said that no-one can avoid politics; that non-action is a form of acquiescence to the current order. This is a powerful argument. Nevertheless, I think it leads to both individual and social sickness to "politicize everything," or to insist that all individuals must be politically active. It gives rise to a feverishness that is characteristic of the totalitarian mind (either on the right or on the left). In actual practice there should be space for both disengaged and engaged Buddhism, and a detachment to the political as samsaric and conditioned reality should be respected.

Malcolm wrote:

If anyone was seeking an excuse spiritual bypassing, they've found it.

FiveSkandhas said:

Please elaborate. I am not sure what you mean by "spiritual bypassing," and whether you think it is positive or negative.

Malcolm wrote:

It's quite negative. It means using one's spirituality as an excuse to ignore the problems of the world in which one lives. There is no such thing as a disengaged bodhisattva, not even when they are in retreat.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 8th, 2020 at 3:23 AM

Title: Re: Right speech, right mind...right politics

Content:

FiveSkandhas said:

I guess I just want people to take a deep breath and a step back and ask themselves if their relationship with politics is healthy. If your answer is an honest "yes," than no problem

Malcolm wrote:

Is your relationship with politics healthy? That's a question for yourself, not others.

We are in the grip of an incipient fascism in the US. The next 27 days will determine whether there is a complete collapse of American democracy as a result of four more years of Trump, or a period of restoration. As far as I am concerned, the GOP has lost all legitimacy, and I hope to never see another GOP presidency in this lifetime or any other.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 8th, 2020 at 3:28 AM

Title: Re: Subtle body

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Speech is physical.

PadmaVonSamba said:

The causes of events which produce vibrations on the ear drum is physical. It doesn't matter whether it's by a person talking or a tree falling in the forest.

And the neurological process of converting vibrations of the ear drum into electrical impulses traveling through the brain is physical.

But the experience, or interpretation of the neural activity as speech, identifiable sounds, as concepts is an activity of mind, of awareness.

A tree falling in the woods makes no sound if nobody hears it. It only produces vibrations of air molecules. Those vibrations can even be recorded by digital or analog means. But does any sound exist within the recorder or the CD or whatever means by which the information is stored? No. It only becomes “sound” when those signals are intercepted by the awareness of mind.

“Speech” itself is itself an abstract concept simply referring to the conveyance of information. Sign language is speech, using the hands instead of the mouth, and eyes instead of ears.

Speech is only physical when physical means are used to convey information (which is probably always) but speech itself is not physical. Otherwise, by your logic, the mouth would always be conveying information even when it is not moving and no sound is coming from it.

Malcolm wrote:

You really ought to read what classical buddhist authors say on the subject.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 8th, 2020 at 3:38 AM

Title: Re: Poll: Is consciousness/mind/related terms (vinnana/citta/manas/nama/etc.)...

Content:

Dgj said:

They are discrete terms because if all is mind and mind exists, it is not temporary and not likely to be dependent either. If all is mind and mind does not exist then it is some unique state beyond normal logic and reason as stating "all is mind, mind does not exist" is technically stating "all is non existent" since the mind becomes synonymous with "non existence". If nothing exists whatsoever, including mind, then it cannot be said to be dependent, nor temporary, as these words have no meaning in reference to something that does not exist at all. This is why I made the different poll options. Option 1 cannot be the same as options 5, nor 6.

Malcolm wrote:

Yogacāra asserts the mind is impermanent, momentary, and dependent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 10th, 2020 at 6:46 PM

Title: Re: Subtle body

Content:

tobes said:

I'm just saying: if we explore the nature of those linguistic cultural conventions, we find an interdependence between the mental and physical, and therefore, language and speech contains elements of both.

Malcolm wrote:

Not from a classical Buddhist point of view, and certainly not from the point of view of the formation of the body, which is what this thread is concerned with.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 10th, 2020 at 9:25 PM

Title: Re: Plants Acquiring Sentience

Content:

Jingtoo2 said:

Surely what distinguishes our actions from the action of plants is intention? A plant has no intention of turning towards the light. It is a mechanical/ chemical process. It is intention that creates karma. So a plant cannot create karma. Therefore it's energy cannot fuel the birth of a being driven by karma?

Malcolm wrote:

Physicalists such as Dennet argue our "mind" is just a mechanical/chemical process.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 11th, 2020 at 2:50 AM

Title: Re: Plants Acquiring Sentience

Content:

tkp67 said:

How does entheogens influence on consciousness factor in? I don't think one needs to experience this interaction to understand the reality of it. The cause and effect of opiates abuse comes to mind.

Malcolm wrote:

From a buddhist perspective, they alter the brain, which is the organ which processes sensory input. Not so different than western medicine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 11th, 2020 at 7:13 AM

Title: Re: Plants Acquiring Sentience

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

From a buddhist perspective, they alter the brain, which is the organ which processes sensory input. Not so different than western medicine.

jake said:

Plants are considered part of the container world (bhājanaloka), correct? (In case container world is an unusual translation, Princeton dictionary lists the Tibetan for Container world as snod ky i 'jig rten).

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 11th, 2020 at 9:09 AM

Title: Re: Tenzin Palmo

Content:

pemachophel said:

They are from a Chinese Bodhisatva ordination ceremony where cones of incense are burned on the skin of the head, thus leaving life-time scars. It has to do with taking on the suffering of all sentient beings.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, it's from her bhikshuni ordination in the dharmaguptaka tradition. The incense scars descend from an imperial Chinese decree mandating that legitimately ordained sangha bear these marks as witness to their officially sanctioned ordination, as such, it's a Chinese tradition found nowhere else.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 12th, 2020 at 4:22 AM

Title: Re: Subtle body

Content:

tobes said:

I'll offer an argument:

I walk outside and see a tree. The tree is physical, and I apprehend it (partly) through my physical senses.

Then at night time I go to sleep. I dream of the same tree. Being (now) only an appearance in my mind, it does not depend on my physical senses or the physical tree.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a trace impressed upon your mind because of a physical apprehension of an earlier tree. Without that tree, no dream tree for you.

tobes said:

Language can be thought of the same way. I grant that each nominal word was originally an empirical sound. However just because the first time someone said 'apple' it was a physical sound that depended upon that person's physical throat, voice, breath etc, does not mean that 200 years later, the word apple is similarly physical. It has over time become something which does not depend purely on rupa, just as the dreamt tree doesn't.

Malcolm wrote:

The word "apple" is only a vocalization, which depends upon the rūpa of two people agreeing, whether in print or in conversation, that the word "apple" refers to fruit of Malus domestica, and not a potato, the tuber known as Solanum tuberosum—though both in French are called "pomme." Hence, pomme frites refers to what we called French Fries, but literally, means "fried apple."

You are confusing concept and language, because subjectively, we have a hard time distinguishing the two. But the point that you are missing, consistently here, is that it is because of the physical structure of the nāḍīs in the body that we have a body at all, and those nāḍīs contain shapes, called akṣara, syllables, which are responsible for giving rise to speech as well as our experience of the six realms.

What you are referring to as language is termed, in the sutras and so on, as "verbal conceptuality," this means that among the trio of body, voice, and mind, speech belongs to voice, it remains physical. Verbal conceptuality on the other hand, derives from learning which sounds correspond to which objects.

To return to the Buddhist perspective, the Buddha states in the Lankāvatara Sūtra that words and concepts can be neither the same nor different. The Buddha points out that if mental conceptuality and words are the same, then concepts cannot be the cause of words, because concepts are the cause of words and words are the result of concepts (though conventional agreement, of course), and it is a standard principle that causes and their effects cannot be identical. If concepts and words are different, then the same fault applies, because there is no way a word will arise from a concept in this case. But here the Buddha never varies from his presentation that composition of words are physical, based on syllables, which emerge from eight locations: chest, throat, head, the tongue, teeth, nose, lips, and palate, and so on. And this ties right in with the distinction between karma, volition, and verbal and bodily actions, which are both physical.

The entire discussion on verbal conceptuality in this sūtra is extremely interesting, because it is also taken up the Caryāmelapakaprādīpa by Āryadeva II, but these texts never present a substantially different view from Abhidharma, which regards speech and language as fundamentally physical phenomena. And of course the whole point of the discussion is to show how the personally known gnosis (pratyatmyavedanajñāna) is completely beyond expression and not within the range of words and concepts. The discussion begins with how the notion of nonbuddhist permanence is a mere verbal conception, pointing out that like the horns of a rabbit, their permanent and inconceivable entity can have no cause and no characteristic, being a mere imputation. However, when contrasted with the personal knowledge of āryas, since it has a cause, and is free from the extremes of existence and nonexistence, our permanence and inconceivability is validly established, and therefore, it is not a mere verbal conception; its is a product of noble realization.

Which gets us to the real point of why the nāḍīs are physical structures in the body. The Buddha states in the Lanka, "For as long as there is engagement with verbal conceptuality, there will be permanence and annihilation. By exhausting thoughts of verbal conceptuality, the childish views of permanence and annihilation are averted, and due to the mind being free of them, it is no more."

The purpose of elucidating the formation of the body is to elucidate the formation of the nadis, etc. Vajrayāna theory in general holds that by eliminating the eighty course conceptual thoughts—specifically in the practice related to purifying the nāḍī syllables, which are the root of all verbal conceptuality in the Vajrayāna scheme of things—this makes it more possible for us to identify personally known gnosis and have that knowledge. This is why it is important to understand why verbal conceptuality and language are not the same thing. In addition the fact, to, as I pointed out before, that language barriers are as physical as walls.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 12th, 2020 at 6:26 AM

Title: Re: Breaking news! WHO now against lockdowns

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Fact: the only countries that have managed this pandemic correctly have totally locked down. Lockdowns are not working here because our gvt. gives money to the Fortune 500 rather than people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 12th, 2020 at 6:44 AM

Title: Re: Subtle body

Content:

tobes said:

I'll have a good think about this Malcolm, but in the meantime let me say: an excellent response. I think it shows why this question is worth pursuing. It might seem trivial or prapanca, but it is actually very profound and necessary to contemplate.

Malcolm wrote:

It's not trivial at all. In the West, we have this idea of logos, The Word, so we are not inclined to question the deeply embedded realism which colors our ideas of language, even going back to the Septaguent:

By the word (logos) of the Lord were the heavens established, and all the host of them by the spirit (pneuma) of his mouth

— Psalm 33:6

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 12th, 2020 at 9:59 PM

Title: Re: Breaking news! WHO now against lockdowns

Content:

Queequeg said:

Whatever this guy says, lockdowns become necessary when the spread gets out of control - I've read that 5% infection rate is the tipping point at which masks, social distancing and contact tracing become futile. Up to that point, people need to be conscientious and cooperative, wearing masks, social distancing, contact tracing. Murcans can't do this. Other countries - particularly in East Asia - are able to do this.

DNS said:

Taiwan appears to have pretty much knocked it out or at least flattened it, fairly early due to mass cooperation with wearing masks, limited travel, and no lockdown.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because they got nailed by SARS. They learned their lesson.

<https://jamanetwork.com/journals/jama/fullarticle/2762689>

S. Korea instituted rigorous testing and contact tracing immediately.

New Zealand shut down and engaged in contact tracing. etc.

Since the US refuses to support contact tracing and massive testing, lockdown is the sane alternative, the other being the "herd mentality" demonstrated by Trumpistas, which caused a 50 percent spike in cases in the US as of today, as well as turning the White House into a major hotspot. In other news, the Handmaiden is being interviewed today by the Senate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 12th, 2020 at 10:01 PM

Title: Re: Breaking news! WHO now against lockdowns

Content:

Dan74 said:

Italy, France and Germany have been very good at wearing masks and they are in the thick of the Second Wave now.

Malcolm wrote:

Italy, France, and Germany all have very stupid people who defy mask-wearing. They all have growing Fascist movements as well. Hmmmm....

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 12th, 2020 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: Question Regarding Samaya Pollution

Content:

Cinnabar said:

I mean, let's be real. We're all samaya corruptors. Just one instant of not holding phenomena as primordially pure and one has broken one's samaya.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a difference between being unable to maintain pure vision, which is an issue of capacity, and deliberately ignoring and transgressing samaya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 13th, 2020 at 1:10 AM

Title: Re: Coming to terms with Homosexuality

Content:

BlackCircle said:

Honestly the biggest thing that scares me about Buddhism is becoming some robot. I know that's not how it works but it just feels like that to me and I have a habit of warping the teachings into something that no longer resembles them. I'm also scared of not being gay anymore even though I don't think Buddhism will do that to me.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhism is not going to affect your sexual preferences at all, since they are biologically driven.

The only thing Buddhism will do is release you from desire, hatred, and ignorance.

On that point, you might want to listen to Lama Rod Owens, a black, gay Buddhist Lama.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 13th, 2020 at 4:11 AM

Title: Re: Breaking news! WHO now against lockdowns

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Which, if this theory is right means that masks are kind of the -the- way to prevent further lockdowns, and to live with as much "normalcy" as possible as we go through this.. because they greatly decrease hospitalization and case severity in infected people, along with the other obvious benefits.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but with the QAnon people and Trumpistas in general, another serious lockdown is the only way we are going to be able to bring infection rates down to a manageable level rapidly, so we can institute testing, quarantine, and treatment of infections. In the mean time, anyone with any sense is staying home as much as possible and wearing masks wherever they go in public.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 13th, 2020 at 4:15 AM

Title: Re: Words

Content:

master of puppets said:

Whatever happens it is good.

Malcolm wrote:
Such as the holocaust?

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, October 13th, 2020 at 7:12 AM
Title: Re: Breaking news! WHO now against lockdowns
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Short term pain = long term gain. New Zealand proved this.

Johnny Dangerous said:
Which, if this theory is right means that masks are kind of the -the- way to prevent further lockdowns, and to live with as much "normalcy" as possible as we go through this.. because they greatly decrease hospitalization and case severity in infected people, along with the other obvious benefits.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, but with the QAnon people and Trumpistas in general, another serious lockdown is the only way we are going to be able to bring infection rates down to a manageable level rapidly, so we can institute testing, quarantine, and treatment of infections. In the mean time, anyone with any sense is staying home as much as possible and wearing masks wherever they go in public.

Johnny Dangerous said:
I am nearly sure there will not be another full lockdown in most places, maybe some localized ones, but that's it. As far as what's sensible, there are levels. Just the improvement in treatment protocols and plummeting death rate I think makes it less likely that officials will go straight to severe restrictions.

I mask any time I'm near other people, and I have my "bubble" of people I have contact with. Personally, I am not just hanging out at home all the time, living my life entirely by Zoom, and don't ever plan on doing that. Why? Because you can leave your house and do stuff with reasonable safety levels. Like anything, it's a calculated risk. When I had possible Covid I more than followed the quarantine recommendations to keep others safe. The testing here is such a joke, you kind of have to.

Generally, I think people being judgemental and "Covid shaming" others is unscientific lifestyle politics, and not an evidence-based practice. When individuals do it, it's one thing, but public health officials should not be engaging in it. Basically, if someone is masking when they should, distancing when they should, the rest is nobody's business. The worst is when people blame others for catching Covid, assuming that they must have been negligent, or aren't following protocols.

This is different from criticizing the people who out and out refuse masks etc., criticizing Trump (he's idiotic) they are behaving stupidly and I'm fine with pointing that out. Beyond that though, I have noticed a very white, upper-middle class tendency to shame anyone who doesn't wanna (or can't) sit around their house and live through Zoom all day, and that is nonsense, and that is a class-based expectation, frankly. It's gross and people should stop doing it. It's especially shameful to see a bunch of supposed "liberals" getting mad at poor people who have to work. I have actually seen this kind of thing in my community.

As this guy says, the people who are saying "no big deal" to lockdowns tend to be 1) people with no kids 2) people with money who can basically live their lives from their home. 3) People who -can- social distance.. That isn't everyone by any stretch, and behaving as if it is is ignorant to what a large portion of the population has to go through with severe restrictions. Perhaps another lockdown means little to those people, but to some people it is quite a dire prospect. this is especially true in the US, just watch what will happen if there is another round of "non essential" business closure(again, thankfully I think it's unlikely) and things like eviction moratoriums end, more business close, etc. The social shitstorm of another round of severe restrictions can't be overstated, that needs to be balanced with safety from Covid, period.

Anyway, a lot of interesting stuff related to Covid and these questions comes up in the interview, it's worth watching. The guest Monica Ghandi also makes a very good point about how fear of Covid is changing social dynamics. I've found this to be very true in my own social life, so wherever people fall on this question, again, it's an interesting interview.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 13th, 2020 at 9:32 AM

Title: Re: Breaking news! WHO now against lockdowns

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Short term pain = long term gain. New Zealand proved this.

Johnny Dangerous said:

I think the entire population of New Zealand is smaller than NYC...it's hard to use as an example for larger countries with far different demographics, though sure some general things can be learned.

Malcolm wrote:

It's actually just math. Viruses don't care about demographics.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 13th, 2020 at 7:36 PM

Title: Re: Breaking news! WHO now against lockdowns

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It's actually just math. Viruses don't care about demographics.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Responses and public policy sure do.

Dan74 said:

NZ is tucked away in the furthest corner of the world, two islands with low arrivals who can be easily controlled and very low population densities, especially compared to NYC. It bears no comparison.

Seoul could be compared. Nearly 10 million people, high pop density.

Masks are no panacea, the studies are not very clear except to say there is some benefit. People still sometimes get infected when everyone wears masks. Just less. How much less we are not sure yet. But yes, wear masks. For sure. It's just not going to be enough in areas where people congregate a lot.

Malcolm wrote:

97 percent less likely, actually, if everyone wears masks.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 14th, 2020 at 2:34 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

heart said:

Perhaps with this we can discuss what really happened and what the situation actually is.

On Friday, August 14, an online meeting of the Gakyil and instructors of the International Dzogchen Community took place with Yeshe Namkhai, the son of Chögyal Namkhai Norbu. This was the second meeting, the first took place on August 9, attended by international gakyil and SMS instructors, and after that additional clarifications were required for a wider audience.

At the meeting, Yeshe Namkhai answered questions about the Dzogchen Community, transmission, etc. Here is a short summary of what we heard (all mistakes are on the narrator's conscience):

1) He helped the community for many years at the request of his father - until 2014, when he left the community. He no longer intends to have anything to do with it, other than tracking the correct use of the name Chögyal Namkhai Norbu.

2) He does not consider himself obligated to support the transmission of Chögyal Namkhai Norbu in line with the traditions of the community. Doesn't want to teach within the framework and context of the community.

3) He does not believe that he is the holder of the Longsal cycle and has the right to give Direct Introduction and lungs to community practices. He believes that no one is authorized to give Direct Introduction in the Chögyal Namkhai Norbu lineage.

4) In April 2020, he was going to give an explanation of the principles of Dzogchen (not Direct Introduction) in Merigar West to specially selected novices who wanted to study Rinpoche's teachings so that they could read literature for the community. But the event was canceled due to the epidemic, and Yeshe also found that the participants had little idea that they were going to study who Chögyal Namkhai Norbu was, etc.

5) He is not religious, not traditional, does not believe in reincarnation. Buddhist traditional lineages and methods of explanation do not interest him and he does not intend to support them. This is not his life, he is a Western man.

6) Regarding the history of the Dzogchen Community, The Blue Book was written personally by Chögyal Namkhai Norbu and he [Yeshe] considered it very important. While much of it is outdated, it is still the starting point for community issues.

7) He does not intend to make any official announcements for the community, since he does not consider himself bound by any obligations to it.

Yeshe Namkhai insisted that the meeting should not be recorded in any way, therefore, unfortunately, we cannot provide you with a recording, but can only summarize what we heard.

/magnus

Aloke said:

Could you please tell us the source for this? A friend of mine was very concerned about the situation and I sent her this, she asked me the source and I said it probably was sent in Norbunet. As I have unsubscribed from Norbunet (after receiving those cryptic confusing e-mails) I can't check this by my own. Thank you very much!

Malcolm wrote:

The source for this is the Russian Mirror. It is accurate, as I have checked it with senior members of the community who were present.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 14th, 2020 at 3:01 AM

Title: Re: Breaking news! WHO now against lockdowns

Content:

Dan74 said:

This culture of jumping to conclusions, the reflexive black-and-white thinking, rather than pausing and mulling things over a little, inquiring, with an open curious mind and a generous heart... all this makes for a very unpleasant discussion at times, even with very intelligent and well-meaning people.

Malcolm wrote:

When your house is burning down, or when there are thousands of people dying from a preventable illness everyday, you don't "pause and mull things over a bit." You take swift and decisive action to limit the spread of the disease. If you don't, you are simply being irresponsible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 14th, 2020 at 4:16 AM

Title: Re: Breaking news! WHO now against lockdowns

Content:

Dan74 said:

Yes, if you're the government. Are you?

Malcolm wrote:

I'm a taxpayer and I vote, so yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 14th, 2020 at 4:21 AM

Title: Re: Breaking news! WHO now against lockdowns

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

While there is a lot of uncertainty about the exact effect of masks,

Malcolm wrote:

No, there isn't. Masks + plus social distancing + staying home unless one needs to go out for food, work, etc. = reducing mortality rate exponentially the longer we do so until we can get to a place where we can do proper contact tracing, quarantining, and treatment where needed.

There is nothing to argue about here. The math of virus infection rates is inexorable and consistent. The fact that so many governments in the world resorted to criminal levels of negligence does not change the science on this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 14th, 2020 at 4:22 AM

Title: Re: Breaking news! WHO now against lockdowns

Content:

Dan74 said:

QQ, I don't know about shunning people. I don't have a platform to give someone or not to give, but I have my time. I've given it to murderers and sex offenders, when I served as a chaplain and I give it to just about anyone who genuinely seeks contact. Even if their views (or even deeds) are absolutely reprehensible.

Malcolm wrote:

Hey Dan, guess what, bulletin—this just isn't about you. Sheesh.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 15th, 2020 at 2:19 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

DNS said:

I'm usually pretty good at predicting POTUS outcomes, but this one's got me stumped. Biden is leading in most polls, but Trump is the one getting 20,000 + at rallies, so not sure.

On most of the past elections, my predictions were correct within about 10 electoral votes, almost getting the exact number of electoral votes per candidate. That all came to an end in 2016 where like most people, I was way off (I predicted a HRC landslide).

Johnny Dangerous said:

Most of the pollsters have adjusted since 2016. Right now the polls are pretty heavily in Biden's favor, moreso than 2016. It's not about Biden's popularity IMO, as much as it is Trumps unpopularity.

Malcolm wrote:

Trump, hands down, is doing an awesome job of defeating himself in this election.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 15th, 2020 at 6:58 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

i guess we have to wait another year, to complete the 3 years setted as the mourning period.

Aloke said:

I'm sorry but, are you serious? C'mon, what the purpose of these meetings then? And why some Gars, like the Russian are getting some information and others don't? It doesn't make any sense, and I think it has nothing to do with mourning anymore.

Tata1 said:

Every gar got the information because every gar and ling participated in the meeting

Malcolm wrote:

There are a lot of people who are in total denial about what real situation is in the DC.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I hope Biden packs the court.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 12:36 AM

Title: Re: Who or what is the Eternal Buddha?

Content:

illaraza said:

I believe that I can prove my assertions through the Lotus Sutra and writings of Nichiren. Either way, this is a good topic for discussion, I believe.

Malcolm wrote:

One can always prove one's own assertions by relying on the accepted texts of one's own tradition. Your effort just amounts to an exercise in self-confirming tenets, but do not have the force to actually convince anyone outside your own school of anything. Such is the nature of religious polemics.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 12:37 AM

Title: Re: Who or what is the Eternal Buddha?

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

This reminds me of when Tibetans say things like "a Dharmakaya has a lifespan of X aeons." The Dharmakaya obviously has no lifespan as far as I can see.

Malcolm wrote:

The Tibetans never say things like "the dharmakāya has a lifespan of x years." Where did you pick up this notion? There is only one dharmakāya, no matter what name one chooses to call it; it is the realization of the true nature of things that all samyaksambuddhas possess, nothing else.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 2:14 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Tata1 said:

Every gar got the information because every gar and ling participated in the meeting

Malcolm wrote:

There are a lot of people who are in total denial about what real situation is in the DC.

Aloke said:

Totally agree! Sad situation!

Now, a russian friend just told me that there was no article with that kind of information in the Russian Mirror, but confirmed that one girl from Saint Petersburg shared the info in the Community's russian mail list. She asked to please don't mention Russian or English Mirror as doing any post about the meeting with Yeshe Silvano Namkhai, "russian propaganda" she said.

Malcolm wrote:

I was told by a Russian friend it was on the Russian Mirror website—, however, the ultimate source was the notes of the secretary from the Russian gar. These notes are totally legitimate and are a fair record of the present situation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 2:28 AM

Title: Re: Words

Content:

HappyBuddha21 said:

There was no evil in m.o.p.'s posts.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, but it is an absurd position that the Buddha would certainly not support, since the Buddha spent a lot of time trying to convince people that karmic ripening could be pretty horrible, and that they ought to do their best to avoid being born in lower realms and so on. So I think that we can conclude that there is no pervasion in MOP's statement:

"Whatever happens, it is good"

To break this down:

All events are good;
The holocaust is an event:
Therefore, the holocaust is good.

You can try this at home:

All events are good;
The _____ is an event:
Therefore, the _____ is good.

For example:

All events are good;
The war is an event:
Therefore, the war is good.

As opposed to say:

All events are good;
The birthday party is an event:
Therefore, the birthday is good.

The above shows that the pervasion or concomitance does not apply in the minor premise; this means the major premise, "all events are good" is flawed and refuted. I merely showed through a consequence that the premise was flawed. It is not my fault his proposition is untenable as written.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 2:34 AM

Title: Re: Words

Content:

HappyBuddha21 said:

Everything has been extremely chaotic since the Holocaust was brought in...

Malcolm wrote:

I guess that proves you do not agree with your friend's proposition after all, otherwise, you would think it was good, since it happened.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 2:50 AM

Title: Re: Who or what is the Eternal Buddha?

Content:

illaraza said:

I believe that I can prove my assertions through the Lotus Sutra and writings of Nichiren. Either way, this is a good topic for discussion, I believe.

Malcolm wrote:

One can always prove one's own assertions by relying on the accepted texts of one's own tradition. Your effort just amounts to an exercise in self-confirming tenets, but do not have the force to actually convince anyone outside your own school of anything. Such is the nature of religious polemics.

Minobu said:

But in our schools of Lotus Buddhism every sentient in the universe is being taught by Lord Sakyamuni Buddha.
According to their capacity.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, self-confirming tenets...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 4:45 AM

Title: Re: Words

Content:

HappyBuddha21 said:

You think bullying and cursing others out is Buddhist? Your actions led to that.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not responsible for what others do.

HappyBuddha21 said:

You have nothing to add by trying to hurt others.

Malcolm wrote:

I didn't hurt anyone. But, according to your friend (double nick maybe?), "whatever happens, it is good."

HappyBuddha21 said:

Last post on this thread by me.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 4:46 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Tata1 said:

I dont even know why we keep talking about yeshi.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed, that ship has sailed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 4:50 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

PeterC said:

Rallies really mean nothing in this election. First, there's the pandemic. Second, both campaigns are all about turnout in their own base, and trying to lower turnout in the other's base - Biden by highlighting Trump's unfitness for office, and Trump by voter suppression. Of these, the single most important factor is turnout in the democrat base. That's why HRC lost in 2016, and really she lost by a tiny margin, Trump's margin of victory was fewer than 100k votes in three counties: and even before that, post-Comey's attack on her, Nate Silver was giving Trump a 1/3 chance of winning. With those odds, Trump winning was not an upset at all.

DNS said:

I think Biden is using the pandemic excuse for not holding rallies. He's afraid not many will show up. Or he'll get some crowds, but in lesser numbers than Trump. Biden doesn't have a fervent base of supporters who literally love him, the way Trump does. At Trump rallies they are literally chanting "we love Trump." However, you're probably right, it probably doesn't matter this time around. I think Biden will win, but not because people are voting for him; but rather voting for "anybody but Trump." And let's face it, even here at DW, most of us who live in the U.S. are probably voting for Biden for the same reason: "anybody but Trump" (lesser of two evils).

The current predictions at 270towin show Biden with 290 electoral votes and 163 for Trump. If those polls are correct, even if Trump wins every toss-up state still in play, he still loses since only 270 is needed to win.

<https://www.270towin.com/>

Malcolm wrote:

Fivethirtyeight shows Biden winning 87 percent of the time.

<https://projects.fivethirtyeight.com/2020-election-forecast/>

Georgia may tip over into blue...

DNS said:

"So there are certainly no sure things for Democrats in Georgia. But the fact that a formerly red state has become perhaps the most competitive battleground in the country is a bad sign for Republicans."

Malcolm wrote:

<https://fivethirtyeight.com/features/will-georgia-turn-blue/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 6:48 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Fivethirtyeight shows Biden winning 87 percent of the time.

<https://projects.fivethirtyeight.com/2020-election-forecast/>

Georgia may tip over into blue...

"So there are certainly no sure things for Democrats in Georgia. But the fact that a formerly red state has become perhaps the most competitive battleground in the country is a bad sign for Republicans."

<https://fivethirtyeight.com/features/will-georgia-turn-blue/>

DNS said:

Yeah, I don't see how Trump can win, but he did surprise most of us in 2016.

Georgia going blue is a real possibility (Abrams barely lost the governor race), as is Florida and North Carolina. Once Texas goes blue, then it's over for the GOP. I don't see any way Republicans could win the White House anymore once Texas becomes a blue state. That could happen this year or perhaps in 2024 or 2028 at the latest.

Texas is currently 38 electoral votes and that might go up once the 2020 census is completed.

Malcolm wrote:

In my ideal world, we have one party rule for next 50 years.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 8:25 AM

Title: Re: Words

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

From a Dzogchen view, what is imperfect?

Malcolm wrote:
Being in a state of ignorance.

Schrödinger's Yidam said:
And what does perfect and imperfect mean?

Malcolm wrote:
Knowledge vs. ignorance.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 12:28 PM
Title: Re: Who or what is the Eternal Buddha?
Content:
Minobu said:
I think you might be projecting yourself unto Buddhism and your understanding of Lotus Buddhism Malcolm

Malcolm wrote:
Nope, simply commenting on the limits of sectarian polemics. They always Amount to preaching to the choir.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 12:31 PM
Title: Re: Why is everything which is a product - impermanent ?
Content:
PadmaVonSamba said:
Every "moment" of a stream (of water, of smoke, of consciousness) does cease.

samr said:
First, let's agree on a common definition of what it means "to cease". Is "come to an end" acceptable?

Malcolm wrote:
No, "to cease" means there is an absence of a cause. That's it.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 7:55 PM
Title: Re: Why is everything which is a product - impermanent ?
Content:
PadmaVonSamba said:
Every "moment" of a stream (of water, of smoke, of consciousness) does cease.

samr said:
First, let's agree on a common definition of what it means "to cease". Is "come to an end" acceptable?

PadmaVonSamba said:

Before even that, let's first come to an agreement about exactly what is arising, occurring, ceasing, or "coming to an end".

Also, please note that there is no disputing that conventionally we can say that a stream (of something) has a beginning, a period of duration, and an end. Conventionally, we can say that a stream exists. We can even name streams of things, such as rivers. But moment to moment, as the saying goes, "you can't stand in the same river twice." The stream that existed a moment ago no longer exists. The movement may be continuous, but what is moving has already come and gone. "Gone" is what is meant by "ceased" or "come to an end".

But when we are talking about the nature of composite phenomena, we are going beyond conventional appearances. Conventionally, you can look at a newly built house and it appears solid and unchanging. But over the course of time, that house will begin to shift and settle, the roof will sag, the walls will crack, and eventually it will collapse. While it is standing, one can literally "take refuge" in it. One can rely on it as a source of shelter. But eventually, this will not be the case, because the house is made of components which are gradually, themselves, becoming unreliable.

What The Buddha is saying is that beings are always looking for something that will be a constant source of satisfaction ("happiness") and so we pursue this object or that object. That thing, or that person or whatever.

But because those objects are composites, the conditions upon which they arise are always subject to change and cessation.

Not everything in one's lifetime is temporary. The Sun, for example, although it will burn out some day, for us it is permanent. So, there is of course a relative aspect to this.

Malcolm wrote:

You can't stand in the same river even once.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 7:58 PM

Title: Re: Words

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Well, it is definitely a mindless comment spoken thoughtlessly, I'll give you that.

master of puppets said:

There is one thing that I couldn't be able to explain.

I'll try to repeat.

That "Whatever happens it is good" statement have being said with no-mind by nonthinking thought.

or whatever.

Trying to explain it with mind, mental, logic or first brain (which I call) is useless.

Otherwise it becomes like apples and pears trying to explain the other as in.

This is true for many zen statements

HappyBuddha21 said:

There was no evil in m.o.p.'s posts.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, but it is an absurd position that the Buddha would certainly not support, since the Buddha spent a lot of time trying to convince people that karmic ripening could be pretty horrible, and that they ought to do their best to avoid being born in lower realms and so on. So I think that we can conclude that there is no pervasion in MOP's statement:

"Whatever happens, it is good"

To break this down:

All events are good;

The holocaust is an event:

Therefore, the holocaust is good.

You can try this at home:

All events are good;

The _____ is an event:

Therefore, the ____ is good.

For example:

All events are good;

The war is an event:

Therefore, the war is good.

As opposed to say:

All events are good;

The birthday party is an event:

Therefore, the birthday is good.

The above shows that the pervasion or concomitance does not apply in the minor premise; this means the major premise, "all events are good" is flawed and refuted. I merely showed through a consequence that the premise was flawed. It is not my fault his proposition is untenable as written.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 8:03 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Aloke said:

But people do keep saying things that don't make any sense, and don't correspond to the truth...why keep saying things like this?

Malcolm wrote:

People are confused by mixed signals they have been receiving from the DC since the boss passed on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 8:06 PM

Title: Re: Who or what is the Eternal Buddha?

Content:

Ayu said:

Moderation decided to remove nothing. But everybody should be aware: you are not discussing Tibetan buddhist view in this section.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct. I am not discussing Tibetan Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 9:34 PM

Title: Re: Who or what is the Eternal Buddha?

Content:

Minobu said:

I think you might be projecting yourself unto Buddhism and your understanding of Lotus Buddhism Malcolm

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, simply commenting on the limits of sectarian polemics. They always Amount to preaching to the choir.

Minobu said:

So how did you overcome this?

Malcolm wrote:

By arguing a lot with other Buddhists outside my school.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 9:39 PM

Title: Re: Who or what is the Eternal Buddha?

Content:

Minobu said:

Take up the Banner of The Bodhisattva in modern times...

Malcolm wrote:

I am, by pointing out these kinds of polemics may be entertaining, but they are never convincing to anyone who is firmly grounded in another tradition.

All these arguments boil down to "it's true because my teacher said it or interpreted a scripture this way rather than that way."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 9:41 PM

Title: Re: Who or what is the Eternal Buddha?

Content:

Minobu said:

it's because you are waiting to die for results from your practice.

Malcolm wrote:

Now, now, Minobu, no need to get personal, not to mention your assertion is false.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 9:42 PM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

DNS said:

Yeah, I don't see how Trump can win, but he did surprise most of us in 2016.

Georgia going blue is a real possibility (Abrams barely lost the governor race), as is Florida and North Carolina. Once Texas goes blue, then it's over for the GOP. I don't see any way Republicans could win the White House anymore once Texas becomes a blue state. That could happen this year or perhaps in 2024 or 2028 at the latest.

Texas is currently 38 electoral votes and that might go up once the 2020 census is completed.

Malcolm wrote:

In my ideal world, we have one party rule for next 50 years.

Minobu said:

without both playing their role....rot occurs.

Malcolm wrote:

The GOP lost that privilege. They have no legitimacy anymore. The sane republicans will join the dems, and eventually the Social Dems like me will form our own party as everything shifts left.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 9:48 PM

Title: Re: Who or what is the Eternal Buddha?

Content:

Minobu said:

Take up the Banner of The Bodhisattva in modern times...

Malcolm wrote:

I am, by pointing out these kinds of polemics may be entertaining, but they are never convincing to anyone who is firmly grounded in another tradition.

All these arguments boil down to "it's true because my teacher said it or interpreted a scripture this way rather than that way."

Minobu said:

you did not read my post about actual proof in one's daily life.

lack of any result from years of practice brought you to this .

you might be right in other sections of Buddhism but not this one..

this one gives actual proof in one's daily life.

We don't wait for some promised land after you die..

Malcolm wrote:

The only result that matters to me is that one has less desire, hatred, and ignorance, and that one is more compassionate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 10:11 PM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Minobu said:

without both playing their role....rot occurs.

Malcolm wrote:

The GOP lost that privilege. They have no legitimacy anymore. The sane republicans will join the Dems, and eventually the Social Dems like me will form our own party as everything shifts left.

Minobu said:

Well I hope for this...it is about time ...

but we too have ultra conservative and socialist governments...one makes the other stronger over time it seems...we learn from conservatives how not to live and they double down.

Malcolm wrote:

You have parliamentary system, it has its advantages, but it really isn't the same.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 11:08 PM

Title: Re: 600, 900 kalpas

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

So I recently made a faux pas and voiced an erroneous belief that in Tibetan Buddhism a dharmakaya has a discreet finite lifespan. Now I am in the process of trying to figure out what I was misremembering. I have a suspicion what it is I might have misunderstood, and it has to do with an expiry limit on when a supreme nirmanakaya is the supreme nirmanakaya of that world, to do with Dharma-decline and the ending of their particular dispensation of said Dharma. Anyone have any ideas what this poor frazzled mind is remembering? I distinctly remember the number 900 or 600 kalpas related to this length of time.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://encyclopediaofbuddhism.org/wiki/Kalpa>

We are in the Bhadrakalpa over all, and there are still 998 buddhas to come before it ends. The next Buddha is Buddha Maitreya, as we commonly know who whose advent will be either 5.6 billion or million years hence.

One tradition, seemingly based on the Maitreya Sūtra, maintains that Sākyamuni's dispensation last for 5000 years, which was halved by the admission of bhikṣunis into the Sangha, and is broken into five distinct periods—this being the last five hundred years of the Dharma. So depending on when one considers Buddha's parinirvana to have occurred, we are already beyond the date when Buddha's teaching begins to completely degenerate. However, in some Tibetan Buddhist circles it is maintained that this only applies to sūtra teachings, that Vajrayāna teachings and Dzogchen teachings in particular have a longer "shelflife."

This article summarizes various positions:

<https://www.encyclopedia.com/religion/encyclopedias-almanacs-transcripts-and-maps/decline-dharma>

The calculation of the length of the doctrine is a major concern, and in Tibet, almost every major scholar has tackled it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 16th, 2020 at 11:25 PM

Title: Re: 600, 900 kalpas

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

We are in the Bhadrakalpa over all, and there are still 998 buddhas to come before it ends

Caoimhghín said:

That is a good candidate for the ~900 number in my head certainly. I thought it had to do with lifespan though. What is the maximum lifespan of a supreme nirmanakaya? I know that there is a debate as to if a Buddha can extend their lifespan indefinitely, but I don't know what the maximum lifespans postulated are.

Malcolm wrote:

There are different lifespans, depending on what epoch a Buddha is born into. We are in the Kaliyuga, locally speaking, and so Śākyamuni only had an 80 year lifespan. Maitreya will be born in a golden age, and will have a lifespan of 80,000 years. All supreme nirmāṇakāyas have life spans that are in line with the lifespan of humans in the age into which they are born, just as they are born into either brahmin, kṣatriya, or vaiśya families depending on which are more respected at the time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 17th, 2020 at 1:21 AM

Title: Re: 600, 900 kalpas

Content:

Queequeg said:

Did not realize that this was an issue in Tibet, and throughout the Buddhist world. I thought this was a uniquely East Asian concern.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, also in India, for example, the Chakrasamvara tantra proclaims that in the degenerate age of the last 500 years, it is only through the practice of Heruka that one can attain awakening.YMMV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 17th, 2020 at 1:23 AM

Title: Re: HH Sakya Trichen Virus Advice

Content:

kunle said:

Oṃ piśaci parnaśavari sarva jvara praśamanaye svāhā.

The syllable YE, indicating the dative case, was missing in the previous post

Malcolm wrote:

Thanks, and in case anyone is curious, Palden Lhamo is Parnaśavari's wrathful form.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 17th, 2020 at 3:08 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

The DC has no effective centralized method of communication, and has like 30 messages about a given subject going on at any time from a range of sources. I'm not saying it should be different, there are some distinct built in advantages to the decentralized way the DC does things. However, clear communication is never going to be one of those advantages, unless the model changes. Gossip and factions go along with organizations period, even moreso with organizations that do not a centralized form of messaging and communication with their members.

Malcolm wrote:

its too late. Unless the DC senior teachers decide to suck it up and start giving empowerments so that new people may join the Dzogchen Community, its just a retirement community now.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 17th, 2020 at 4:11 AM

Title: Re: Words

Content:

HappyBuddha21 said:

The only mindless comments are yours.

Malcolm wrote:
Just couldn't help yourself, could you?

HappyBuddha21 said:
Last post on this thread by me.

Malcolm wrote:
Sure.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, October 17th, 2020 at 4:13 AM
Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu
Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:
Yeshe was going to give DI in Merigar in April...

Malcolm wrote:
Supposedly he walked this back too, saying this idea was a misunderstanding.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, October 17th, 2020 at 5:05 AM
Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu
Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:
i don't think initiations work like a vendor machine. transmission ain't a money purse.

treehuggingoctopus said:
No one has suggested anything of the sort.

The thing is, we have experienced, learned, qualified and properly trained practitioners (Malcolm being one of them). Either they take the helm (or helms), or the whole thing becomes a museum trip. A long one, if the IDG allows inviting other teachers. A short one, if it does not.

javier.espinoza.t said:
the lineage can't get broken because someone appointed "says" that is not going to uphold it, eventually someone else will, be it now, in a year, in ten, whatever, so that is no problem.

now the problem is organizational, it is financial to be precise, and so the "new" people means fresh money.

if practitioners are good soil, the seed of transmission will ripen.

Malcolm wrote:

Lineage seem to be one thing, organization is another thing. These two things are not separate in Dzogchen Community, If for some reason the DC decides that it does not care to live on as an organization, I can accept that. But it has really serious consequences.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 17th, 2020 at 5:35 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

simply start and get DI at a later date.

Malcolm wrote:

That does not work in Vajrayāna, of which Dzogchen is a part.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 17th, 2020 at 7:02 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

i suspect people want a ChNN_v2.0 for running the idc, but that won't happen and is sign that in general we are still in grief.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, there will be no ChNN 2.0.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 17th, 2020 at 7:03 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

It looks like a real identity crisis.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed. It can't continue this way.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 17th, 2020 at 8:49 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

I do think it would be a big shame however if the transmission itself dies out.

Malcolm wrote:

It won't, the organization may not survive.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 17th, 2020 at 9:49 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

PeterC said:

That's the real priority. All the hand-wringing about yeshi, the DC leadership, etc is frankly a distraction.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 17th, 2020 at 8:22 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Tata1 said:

The community should become more open and invite teachers from other traditions also

Aryjna said:

That seems to me to be the best idea. There is already infrastructure and buildings all over the world. It should be easy to organize retreats with other teachers all the time, and there are many good teachers that can be invited. Also, it seems this used to happen anyway even when ChNNR was alive, though not that often, so there shouldn't be any problem.

Malcolm wrote:

It didn't happen often because people would get confused.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 17th, 2020 at 8:36 PM

Title: Re: Words

Content:

PeterC said:

In fairness, I did say that I thought M.O.P. was full of shit. But I then went on to explain, with reasons and references, why I believed that. Since 'full of shit' is a well-understood term in common usage, and not particularly offensive, I'm not apologizing for using it.

I suspect that what happybuddha is unhappy about is that we disagreed with his friend and challenged their view of the Dharma as this comforting world of rainbows, love and world peace. Again I don't think we should apologize for that in the slightest. The starting point for serious practice of the Dharma is wanting to do something about suffering. If you think there's no (conventional) suffering, why even practice?

I agree with Ayu's comment earlier that a discussion of the view vs. conduct question is helpful. Using statements about a very high view to dismiss the importance of conduct is a very common misunderstanding, and should be challenged.

You seem very angry about all of this

Do you have any actual arguments beyond bemoaning our apparent lack of civility?

master of puppets said:

Don't know what it means of "full of shit"

Don't be silly.

Do not insult people abuse, offence, affront, outrage, contempt, slur or invective

I don't need to discuss your holocaust.

nor even need to answer your questions.

stop acting like a virus.

Malcolm wrote:

I guess you do not actually believe "whatever happens, it is good."

The insults, abuse, outrage, contempt, affronts, offenses, abuse, slurs, and invectives are being hurled by "Happybuddha." Why he or she hasn't been disciplined yet for their appalling tirades is beyond me, but I am sure it is being discussed. So please keep it up, and get yourselves banned. So far, neither of you have offered anything of substance, much less Dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 17th, 2020 at 8:42 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Aryjna said:

"Other traditions" in the quote meaning other Dzogchen teachers, not necessarily teachers to teach different kinds of teachings. For example, I remember that sometimes they had invited Tsoknyi Rinpoche, why not do it again.

Malcolm wrote:

He is not a student of ChNN. He can't pass on longsal teachings or SMS. In his wisdom, ChNN left no viable successor. Perhaps he took it as a sign that his family lineage was effectively a dry tree.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 17th, 2020 at 11:06 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Aryjna said:

"Other traditions" in the quote meaning other Dzogchen teachers, not necessarily teachers to teach different kinds of teachings. For example, I remember that sometimes they had invited Tsoknyi Rinpoche, why not do it again.

Malcolm wrote:

He is not a student of ChNN. He can't pass on longsal teachings or SMS. In his wisdom, ChNN left no viable successor. Perhaps he took it as a sign that his family lineage was effectively a dry tree.

Aryjna said:

Yes, of course they would not be teaching in ChNNR's lineage but they could teach their own, which may be better than nothing.

Malcolm wrote:

If people want to take teachings from Chokyi Nyima Rinpoche, Migyur Rinpoche, Tsoknyi Rinpoche and so on, it is not difficult for them to do this. There is no need to invite them to the community to give teachings. There is nothing wrong with it of course. But you will see that pretty soon if we do this, then the DC will just become an adjunct of the Nyingma school, something which I don't think was ChNN's idea ever.

Aryjna said:

Rigpa sangha for example, regardless of all their craptastic drama, have been inviting teachers constantly and having good events apparently since years ago. Many teachings with Khenpo Namdrol for example.

Malcolm wrote:

Rigpa is a lam rim style place. Also, it is an Nyingma establishment place. This is not bad, but the DC was never the kind of top-down organization that Rigpa is. I don't think the cultures would blend very well, but maybe that's just me.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 18th, 2020 at 12:07 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

heart said:

Not really, ChNNR was a fully qualified lama and tulku when he left Tibet. No doubt did his teachers encourage him to teach. Even the 16th Karmapa begged him to teach in the west.

Malcolm wrote:

That's over stating it. What happened was that a Karma Kagyu Lama who was living in Italy and had a center passed away, and the 16th Karmapa asked ChNN to look after those students. ChNN agreed, but told the 16th Karmapa he was not going to teach them a Kagyu curriculum. The rest is history.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 18th, 2020 at 12:09 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

bah, in any case, point is that he wasn't traditional.

PeterC said:

He was very traditional. Just not a tradition that is common in mainstream Nyingma lineages these days. They typically follow the scheme of preliminaries, three roots, etc. That wasn't always how Dzogchen was presented, and indeed isn't always how it's presented today. But it was in no way an innovation by him.

javier.espinoza.t said:

that, and not putting emphasis on bodhicitta isn't traditional at all.

Malcolm wrote:

There are sufficient teachings on relative and ultimate bodhicitta in the Precious Vase, but he was not about to spend months explaining the 22 forms of bodhicitta mentioned in the Abhisamayalamkara and so on. And he taught on the three sublime principles many times.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 18th, 2020 at 2:13 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

yeah, because idc ppl is so compassionate.

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on the person. Some people are more compassionate than others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 18th, 2020 at 8:05 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Tata1 said:

Of course there is a point. The inviting other teachers is no to continue rimpoches lineage but to keep the community active. Without a central head of the community things have to change if we want to survive. This doesnt mean neglecting rimpoches legacy but to open up, something like what shang shung is doing

Malcolm wrote:

Shang Shung has a different project than the DC.

There is no DC without continuing CHNN's lineage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 18th, 2020 at 8:06 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Danny said:

Folks here openly discussing issues my root guru, Master Norbu, kept firmly outside his teaching mandala...None of the above is the correct way to present yourselves as a correct vessel to approach dzogchen.

Malcolm wrote:

Nonsense. Rinpoche discussed these very issues during teachings time and again, since the very first teaching I attended in 1992, the first US SMS base level retreat.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 18th, 2020 at 11:09 PM

Title: Re: Moneyr with images of Buddhist saints?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

https://www.jstage.jst.go.jp/article/orient1960/10/0/10_0_31/_pdf

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 18th, 2020 at 11:11 PM

Title: Re: Moneyr with images of Buddhist saints?

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 19th, 2020 at 3:50 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

heart said:

Not really, ChNNR was a fully qualified lama and tulku when he left Tibet. No doubt did his teachers encourage him to teach. Even the 16th Karmapa begged him to teach in the west.

Malcolm wrote:

That's over stating it. What happened was that a Karma Kagyu Lama who was living in Italy and had a center passed away, and the 16th Karmapa asked ChNN to look after those students. ChNN agreed, but told the 16th Karmapa he was not going to teach them a Kagyu curriculum. The rest is history.

heart said:

The way I remember the story Karmapa offered Rinpoche a very valuable terma statue (that he just received from Tulku Urgyen that also was present) from the Chokling Tersar in order to make Rinpoche change his mind about not teaching.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Myaybe, that's not the way I heard it from Rinpoche. It is true that when they were in Sikkim prior to ChNN's departure to the West, the 16th Karmapa was disappointed that ChNN refused ordination, and he gave the latter a small statue of Śakyamuni Buddha to remind ChNN of his wishes that ChNN ordain. I have seen that statue in Rinpoche's house.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 19th, 2020 at 3:56 AM

Title: Re: How Emperor Ashoka Invented Indian Buddhism

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

It's always interesting to me how much this sort of theory crafting seems to move away from actual practice and into ..well..prapanca.

Malcolm wrote:

You know with professors, it is "publish or die."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 19th, 2020 at 4:59 AM

Title: Re: Question on rebirth - point of no recollection

Content:

Dharmasherab said:

After the death, the sensory consciousness (vijñana) goes into the antarabhava (bardo) before taking the form of another sentient being in the form of aggregates. My question is at one point does the being no longer recollects his past life? All memories, sense of identity etc, at which point does the being no longer able to remember before the next life begins?

Malcolm wrote:

After the third week, or 21 days.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 19th, 2020 at 5:14 AM

Title: Re: Question on rebirth - point of no recollection

Content:

Karatzo said:

Consciousness is compound and thus not self, so it is not this that transmigrates. So what is it? And what is Rigpa? Rigpa is not a part of the 5 aggregates. But the buddha declared that a being consists of the 5 aggregates and nothing more. That there is no-self in absolute reality...then how transmigration works?

Malcolm wrote:

One, whoever told you rig pa is not part of the five aggregates? Rig pa is knowledge of your own state. In its impure form one's own state manifests as the five aggregates; in its pure form, it manifests as the five buddha families.

Nagārjuna resolves this issue through using the eight examples. There is no substantial transmission, but there is serial continuity, like lighting a fire from another fire, impressing a seal on a document and so on. See his verses on dependent origination:

All migrating beings are causes and results.

but here there are no sentient beings at all;

just empty phenomena entirely produced from phenomena that are only empty, phenomena without a self and what belongs to a self,

[like] utterances, lamps, mirrors, seals, lenses, seeds, sourness and echoes.
Although the aggregates are serially connected,
the wise are understand that nothing transfers.
Also, the one who imputes annihilation upon extremely subtle existents, is not wise,
and will not see the meaning of 'arising from conditions'.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 19th, 2020 at 7:16 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment in a Pure Land

Content:

Zhen Li said:

you are learning from the Dharmakāya itself...

Malcolm wrote:

This isn't possible. Only buddhas can perceive the dharmakāya. Not even tenth stage bodhisattvas can perceive the dharmakāya. And, Amitabha's buddhafiield is most certainly a nirmāṇakāya buddhafiield. This means that the Buddha's statement in the Lanka about buddhas attaining buddhahood only in Akaniṣṭha Ghanavyūha should be observed:

"Perfect buddhahood is attained there, the emanated ones attain buddhahood here."

Jñānaśrībhadrā comments, "The exhibition of the nirmāṇakāya's buddhahood lacks the fortune and the conditions of exhibiting the sambhogakāya, but if the nirmāṇakāya's buddhahood is not exhibited, sentient beings of the desire realm will lack confidence."

Further, the great Tibetan Buddhist master, Tāranātha (as well as other masters) clearly identifies Sukhāvatī as a nirmāṇakāya buddhafiield in his reply to one Geshe Paldan Śākya, "The Kusmalatagarbha buddhafiield mentioned in the ninetieth chapter of the Avatamska Sūtra is the nirmāṇakāya buddhafiield of Buddha Vairocana, not Akaniṣṭha Ghanavyūha, because it is explained that the buddhafiield of Buddha of Vairocana has definite dimensions and is newly made, like Sukhāvatī." In other words, Sukhāvatī is a conditioned buddhafiield, unlike the sambhogakāya buddhafiield of Akaniṣṭha Ghanavyūha.

In the context of birth in Sukhāvatī, no one there directly receives teachings from the dharmakāya, other than in the sense that they hear the words from the tongue of Buddha Amitabha. And of course, many beings there are not so blessed, since they reside inside of lotuses which block their sight of Amitabha Buddha for what are in human terms, eons. So while your enthusiasm for Amitabha and Sukhāvatī are indeed laudable, it is misconception to claim, as you do, "you are learning from the Dharmakāya itself, it is instantaneous and beyond the need for methods that can be calculated in the normal sense of duration and ascension." Sukhavati is a pure buddhafiield, but it is a nirmāṇakāya buddhafiield only, it is not beyond time.

You are correct in asserting however, that from the vantage point of Sukhāvati one may obtain teachings from other nirmāṇakāya buddhafiields with more ease.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 20th, 2020 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment in a Pure Land

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This isn't possible. Only buddhas can perceive the dharmakāya. Not even tenth stage bodhisattvas can perceive the dharmakāya. And, Amitabha's buddhafiield is most certainly a nirmāṇakāya buddhafiield. This means that the Buddha's statement in the Lanka about buddhas attaining buddhahood only in Akaniṣṭha Ghanavyūha should be observed:

Zhen Li said:

Apologies, because this is where East Asian Pure Land differs from the Indo-Tibetan tradition (in fact I initially responded to this thread without noticing it is in the Tibetan Buddhism forum, so excuse my butting in), in that the dharmakāya is considered to have two aspects:

Tanluan said:

All Buddhas and bodhisattvas have dharma-bodies of two dimensions; dharma-body as suchness and dharma-body as compassionate means. Dharma-body as compassionate means arises from the dharma-body as suchness, and dharma-body as suchness emerges out of dharma-body as compassionate means. These two dimensions of dharma-body differ but are not separable; they are one but cannot be regarded as identical.

Zhen Li said:

The other bodies are considered to be part of dharma-body as compassionate means:

Shinran, Kyogyoshinsho said:

The dharma-body is like the sun, and the light of accommodated and transformed bodies pervades all the worlds. Sun is inadequate for expressing immovability; hence, it is further said, like Mount Sumeru abide [immovable].

Zhen Li said:

In East Asian Pure Land thought, there are nirmāṇakāya aspects to Sukhāvati but it is inseparable from dharmakāya. Of course, it goes without saying that Amitābha is regarded as a dharmakāya, which has these aspects of compassionate means.

Malcolm wrote:

Your objection is not really valid. Why? Because there is only one dharmakāya, and only one teacher, the dharmakāya, since the dharmakāya of all buddhas is the same, that is, the dharmakāya of Amitabha is not different than the dharmakāya of Śākyamuni, etc. But it is nevertheless the case that no one can see the dharmakāya other than a buddha, since the dharmakāya of the buddhas is just their complete realization of buddhahood.

Because of the compassionate nature of buddhahood, different sentient beings experience different nirmāṇakāyas, but only bodhisattvas on the pure stages, 8-10, are able to perceive the sambhogakāya, since the sambhogakāya cannot be perceived by any person who is tainted with afflictive obscurations.

As for the dharmakāya having two aspects, this is a distinction without a difference. The dharmakāya emanates the sambhogakāya, and the sambhogakāya emanates various buddhas such as Amitabha, Śākyamuni, and the other of the 1002 buddhas of the fortunate eon.

But rather than be distracted by buddhology of Amitabha Buddha, we ought to be focusing rather on the nature of Sukhāvati. 1) Sukhāvati is compounded because it was formed out of the Bodhisattva Dipaṃkāra's cultivation of a buddhafiield. This is an undeniable fact. 2) Sukhāvati may be regarded as permanent, because it is sustained by Bodhisattva Dipaṃkāra's aspiration, which is limitless, given that he was an āryabodhisattva who perfected the perfections, one of which cultivating a buddhafiield, however, Akaniṣṭha Ghanavyūha is un compounded. The http://databases.aibs.columbia.edu/index.php?id=4c80390678a9883498b73fd877664edb&enc=sanskrit_romanized_title_4_search&coll=kangyur

Zhen Li said:

The buddhas abiding in that place praise Ghanavyūha.
Ghanavyūha has existed from beginningless time.
A self-originated emanation is there,
the stainless Buddha.
Dwelling beyond the three elements,
That place is without grasping to bliss,
it is free from the experience of I and mine,
it is unchanging, ultimately permanent, and stable.
Ghanavyūha is unconditioned.
The perfect buddhas awaken [there] but without buddhahood in the supreme place, Akaniṣṭha, the deeds of the buddha will not be performed in the desire realm.
Once they depart Ghanavyūha ten million emanations of the Buddha will always remain in yogic equipoise.

Malcolm wrote:

Thus, Amitabha also actually attains buddhahood in Akaniṣṭha Ghanavyūha. Further, unlike Sukhāvati, Ghanavyūha has no śrāvakas, since even arhats have afflictive obscurations. There is a great deal more that could be said about this.

But to summarize, there is no justification at all in commonly accepted scriptures for your two central claims: 1) "[Y]ou are learning from the Dharmakāya itself;" 2) "[It] is instantaneous and beyond the need for methods that can be calculated in the normal sense of duration and ascension."

As to your comment on your two citation, "In East Asian Pure Land thought, there are nirmāṇakāya aspects to Sukhāvati but it is inseparable from dharmakāya."

This is unsupportable as well: the first contradiction is that if Sukhāvati is nondual with the dharmakāya, then the dharmakāya must be compounded, because beings take birth there. The second contradiction is that if Sukhāvati is nondual with the dharmakāya, then it is impossible for sentient beings to attain birth there, and the aspirations of Bodhisattva Dipaṃkāra cannot be fulfilled. Both of these negative consequences arise from asserting that Sukhāvati something more than a nirmāṇakāya buddhafiield. In fact, that whole point of Sukhāvati is that it is a nirmāṇakāya buddhafiield, because 1) all learned people understand that even noble bodhisattvas from the seventh stage on down cannot see the sambhogakāya, must less those of us on the paths of accumulation and application, and because 2) not even bodhisattvas on the pure stages can perceive the dharmakāya since they have remaining knowledge obscurations. Since Dipaṃkāra's vows are specifically aimed at ordinary sentient beings, it is simply an exaggeration to make the two claims you have made, since they lack a basis in scripture and they cannot be defended with reason.

These rebuttals should not be seen as a negation of Bodhisattva Dipaṃkāra's vows, nor should they be seen as a rebuttal of the aspiration to attain rebirth in Sukhāvati. Rather, they are merely proffered in order to correct misconceptions that birth in Sukhāvati is somehow a short cut to buddhahood—it is not—or that birth in Sukhāvati relieves one of having gather accumulations and perfect the perfections, and so on, the normal duties of a bodhisattva on the path. In fact, as it is well known and as you admit above, some who are born in Sukhāvati do not hear the voice or see the face of Amitabha for five hundred years. This is crucial because the http://databases.aihs.columbia.edu/index.php?id=4c80390678a9883498b73fd877664edb&enc=sanskrit_romanized_title_4_search&coll=kangyur states that a single day in Sukhāvati equals a kalpa in the Saha world. This means that those who are stuck in lotuses in Sukhāvati must remain there for the equivalent of 182,500 kalpas (500 * 365) in human time. Of course they don't suffer, but still they are trapped, cannot hear the dharma, see the Buddha and so on. This is an unimaginable amount of time.

Further, this assertion of yours that the Large Sūtra is the last remaining sutra after the Buddha's doctrine is questionable, and lacks scriptural support, despite the Chinese translation of this text.

What is known as the http://databases.aibs.columbia.edu/index.php?id=ae49b016746c95489e8507a6f8a9ee4a&enc=tibetan_wylie_title&coll=kangyur in the Tibetan canon does not affirm this, It merely states, "In the future, until the sublime Dharma utterly perishes, this great Dharmapariyaya will be truly praised by all the buddhas, extolled by all the buddhas, and conferred by all the buddhas." But there is no mention at all of it being the last surviving sūtra at the end of Śākyamūni's dispensation, as the Sanskrit (See Gomez, Land of Bliss: Hawaii, 1996, pg. 108: section 150) also bears out.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 20th, 2020 at 1:42 AM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

FiveSkandhas said:

What I find somewhat challenging is the question of "apocryphal" texts...

Malcolm wrote:

All Buddhist sūtras and tantras are apocryphal, all of them, including the Pali Canon, etc., from a western scholastic point of view.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 20th, 2020 at 7:49 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment in a Pure Land

Content:

Zhen Li said:

The Amitābha sūtras do not specify a limit to methods practiced by bodhisattvas in Sukhāvatī, nor is there specified that they need to practice to attain the thirty-two marks, infinite dhāraṇīs, or all the supernatural powers—they have them naturally and inherently by the power of Amitābha's vows. Practicing or not practicing vajrayāna or sūtrayāna is not really a question, since "practice" Sukhāvatī is essentially just ekayāna—you are learning from the Dharmakāya itself, it is instantaneous and beyond the need for methods that can be calculated in the normal sense of duration and ascension.

Varis said:

We can reasonably assume Vajrayana is not practiced in Dewachen because the sentient beings that are born there lack sex organs.

Aryjna said:

The necessity for sexual organs seems to apply only in the context of particular classes of tantra and/or schools.

Malcolm wrote:

Gender differentiation applies In all four classes of tantra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 20th, 2020 at 7:21 PM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

All Buddhist sūtras and tantras are apocryphal, all of them, including the Pali Canon, etc., from a western scholastic point of view.

Astus said:

If the scriptures are viewed in a

Malcolm wrote:

Western, settler-colonialist, historical perspective... I prefer the indigenous perspectives, which are many, varied, and don't necessarily accept this idea of "earlier" and "later" texts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 20th, 2020 at 7:27 PM

Title: Re: Enlightenment in a Pure Land

Content:

Aryjna said:

The necessity for sexual organs seems to apply only in the context of particular classes of tantra and/or schools.

Malcolm wrote:

Gender differentiation applies In all four classes of tantra.

Aryjna said:

Are sexual organs needed to practice tantra in all systems? I thought it was the case only in Anuttarayogatantra in particular schools.

Malcolm wrote:

Gendered bliss arousal is needed in all four systems whether by gazing, holding hands, embracing, or intercourse, in that order.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 20th, 2020 at 7:29 PM

Title: Re: Enlightenment in a Pure Land

Content:

Aryjna said:

The necessity for sexual organs seems to apply only in the context of particular classes of tantra and/or schools.

Malcolm wrote:

Gender differentiation applies In all four classes of tantra.

AmidaB said:

How it is interpreted in the case of pure lands?

Malcolm wrote:

Some buddhafiekds have gender differentiation, some don't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 20th, 2020 at 7:31 PM

Title: Re: Enlightenment in a Pure Land

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

You can't fit an infinite Buddha within a finite space.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 20th, 2020 at 7:35 PM

Title: Re: Question on rebirth - point of no recollection

Content:

Karatzo said:

I also found this article which has some good points on the theory of rebirth and its problems.

<http://www.jayarava.org/texts/Some-Problems-With-Rebirth.pdf>

Malcolm wrote:

Jayarava is not a very reliable resource.

Try this:

<https://wisdomexperience.org/product/rebirth-early-buddhism-and-current-research/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 20th, 2020 at 9:52 PM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Western, settler-colonialist, historical perspective... I prefer the indigenous perspectives, which are many, varied, and don't necessarily accept this idea of "earlier" and "later" texts.

Astus said:

Wouldn't that result in an unnecessary isolation from the reasoning and arguments of modern scholarship in favour of other arguments that also claim to be based on reason? Just as it's been the practice of past teachers to address and respond to the views and doctrines of their own times, shouldn't that be followed today as well, especially in the field of Buddhist studies? Of course, this is not to say that everyone should occupy themselves with such matters, but at least some level of recognition of the need to be able to communicate Buddhism on the highest levels of human intellectual culture of our times would be beneficial.

Malcolm wrote:

What do the reasoning and arguments of buddhologists have to with buddhahood or the accounts of our own tradition? Why is it necessary to adopt a settler-colonialist perspective, which is foreign to Buddhadharma as a whole, as the measure by which we take stock of our own schools?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 20th, 2020 at 11:03 PM

Title: Re: Enlightenment in a Pure Land

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

You can't fit an infinite Buddha within a finite space.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct.

PadmaVonSamba said:

If that is correct, then, if an infinite Buddha resides in a Buddha realm, the Buddha realm must also be infinite.

Malcolm wrote:

Incorrect.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 21st, 2020 at 12:11 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment in a Pure Land

Content:

Zhen Li said:

Dharmākara is a time-delimited instantiation of the dharmakāya—as are the 48 Vows. They are created, whereas the fulfilled land is not.

Malcolm wrote:

Dharmakara was a bodhisattva on the paths and stages, not a buddha.

Zhen Li said:

Where the Japanese Pure Land sects do differ from others is in seeing the definitive practice as the fulfilment of the 18th Vow. But since it is effected by non-calculation and non-working, it is a non-practice practice. It's realisation of buddha-nature without accumulation of merits and surpassing sūtric and tantric methods.

Malcolm wrote:

Such a view has no support in the Indian scriptures upon which you rely.

Zhen Li said:

The Ghanavyūha does not feature in Japanese Pure Land so I can't say anything from a traditional perspective.

Malcolm wrote:

The Ghanavyūha Sūtra is in the Chinese canon.

"the fulfilled land."

I assume this is your translation of sambhogakāya-buddhakṣetra, sambhogakāya buddhafiield.

Zhen Li said:

But to summarize, there is no justification at all in commonly accepted scriptures for your two central claims: 1) "[Y]ou are learning from the Dharmakāya itself;" 2) "[I]t is instantaneous and beyond the need for methods that can be calculated in the normal sense of duration and ascension."

Malcolm wrote:

You too have stated that dharmakāya emanates sambhogakāya and that emanates nirmāṇakāya, and that these are distinct and yet without a difference, thus you are contradicting your first objection. [/quote]

This is a misrepresentation of my statement, unless by "dharmakāya as compassion," you are actually referring the rūpakāyas, in which case there is a difference between the three kāyas in terms of cause, the dharmakāya arises out of the accumulation of gnosis, the rūpakāya out of the accumulation of merit.

Zhen Li said:

On the other hand, attaining birth having not harboured doubt is the attainment of buddhahood and nirvāṇa, this is because it is the realisation of suchness and the dharmakāya as suchness in fulfilment of the 11th Vow.

Malcolm wrote:

This is uncertain. The eleventh aspiration only assures following a proper path, and nothing more.

Zhen Li said:

This is quite simple. As you stated, the dharmakāya emanates sambhogakāya, etc. Without the dharmakāya, Amitābha would not be a Buddha and Sukhāvātī could not be established.

Malcolm wrote:

Are you asserting then that the Sahāloka is nondual with the dharmakāya? If so, then all the benefits of Sukhavati should apply in the Sahāloka, because if you assert that Amitabha is the dharmakāya, then you must assert all buddhas are the dharmakāya, and therefore all buddhafiels of all buddhas are nondual with the dharmakāya, whether they are so called pure or impure buddhafiels.

Thus, the only reason there is a difference between the Sahāloka and Sukhāvātī is that the aspirations of Śākyamuni and Amitabha while on the path were different, accounting for differences in their respective buddhafiels. The same applies to Amoghasiddhi's buddhafiels, Bhaisajyaguru's buddhafiels and so on. This means these nirmāṇakāya buddhafiels are only compounded phenomena, not uncompounded.

Zhen Li said:

Moreover, if the dharmakāya is limited in the way you are suggesting, then you are asserting that the dharmakāya is separate from this world, its buddhas, and is not equal to suchness. This is not Mahāyāna, but perhaps you are asserting a different doctrine.

Malcolm wrote:

The question is not the limitations of the dharmakāya, the question is the limitations of the nirmāṇakāya, since the latter appears in various realms to various beings in those realms as a result of their karma, unlike the dharmakāya, which does not appear to sentient beings at all, not even bodhisattvas on the tenth bhūmi.

Zhen Li said:

As I understand, perception of the dharmakāya comes about with the attainment of the dharmakāya, realisation of suchness, nirvāṇa, and buddhahood. This is not the same as attainment of the recompensed land as effected by the 48 Vows, but it is claimed in the East Asian Pure Land tradition that the 18th vow in particular does enable one to attain the fulfilled land (Ghanavyūha if you will), but this is only because it is through the Buddha's power. Anyway, beings born in Sukhāvātī as the recompensed land are on the stage of irreversibility, they are at least on the 8th Bhūmi.

Malcolm wrote:

There are levels of irreversibility on each path. For example, someone on the path of accumulation reaches a state of irreversible generation of bodhicitta; someone on the path of application reaches a state of patience where they can no longer fall into lower realms, etc. It is quite impossible for beings to attain the eighth bodhisattva stage merely through birth in Sukhāvati. There is no justification in the sūtra for this position whatsoever. This also ignores the presence of srāvakas of various levels of attainment in Sukhāvati, bodhisattvas of inferior merit, and so on. There is also no statement in any Sukhāvati sūtra or its like which guarantees that one will be born as a eighth stage bodhisattva. Instead, it is due to the incredibly long lifespans of beings there that they are assured that they have only one lifetime before attaining buddhahood, and not because of any guarantee of immediate realization.

Zhen Li said:

The Buddha says different things on different occasions and to people with different conditions. Upāya are meant to encourage right action. Whether we take this literally or as an upāya, the point is clear: attain the three minds of the 18th Vow, attain birth in the first rank of the first grade, become irreversible.

Malcolm wrote:

The upaya card must stand up to scripture and it must stand up to reason, otherwise one can say anything about any text that one likes. Your assertion does not stand up to scripture, since the eighteenth aspiration makes no mention whatsoever of these three minds, and further excludes those who have committed the five deeds of immediate retribution from birth in Sukhāvati, so not only does this assertion not stand up to scriptural analysis, it also does stand up to reason since if it were the case, there would be no arhats or bodhisattvas of inferior merit in Sukhāvati, unless of course you argue that they lack these three minds. But the eighteenth aspiration guarantees only that apart from those who commit the five deeds of immediate retribution, those who hear the name of Amitabha and have trust in him are granted a vision of Amitabha at death.

Zhen Li said:

This is the Tibetan Buddhism forum, so I won't push the translations of other traditions here but the Chinese recensions are older.

Malcolm wrote:

This does not mean they were accurately translated. In fact, in this early period, when Saṃghavarman was working, the third century CE, translation into Chinese was still in its infancy. Given that we have a Sanskrit version that the Tibetan reflects very well, it casts doubt on the accuracy of the Saṃghavarman's translation on this point. We would need to compare it with later translations of the same text to see if there is a correspondence with other recensions of the text.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 21st, 2020 at 12:14 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment in a Pure Land

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

If that is correct, then, if an infinite Buddha resides in a Buddha realm, the Buddha realm must also be infinite.

Malcolm wrote:

Incorrect.

PadmaVonSamba said:

So, to use an analogy, the Buddha of infinite light could be like a lighthouse on an island, whose light shines everywhere, but whose island has limited area?

Malcolm wrote:

Amitabha is a nirmāṇakāya, with respect to Sukhāvati. His identification of being the dharmakāya is a Vajrayāna doctrine, connected with the lotus buddhafamily of Guru Rinpoche: Amitabha is considered to be the dharmakāya; Avalokiteśvara is considered to be the sambhogakāya; and Guru Rinpoche is considered to be the nirmāṇakāya. But this is inapplicable to this discussion, since Amitabha being discussed here is the nirmāṇakāya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 21st, 2020 at 12:31 AM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

What do the reasoning and arguments of buddhologists have to with buddhahood or the accounts of our own tradition? Why is it necessary to adopt a settler-colonialist perspective, which is foreign to Buddhadharma as a whole, as the measure by which we take stock of our own schools?

Astus said:

There is a shared field in the accounts of past events, where the traditional story says one thing, and historical documents say another, like in the case of <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Moheyan>. Furthermore, the very concept that one relies on a tradition - i.e. something transmitted to the present through past generations - invokes the assumption of validation through history. Only when authenticity is independent of the reliability of one's perception of history could it be said that verification of past events is irrelevant. Such freedom from historical constraints is said to be the quality of the Dharma, that it is readily visible (saṃdr̥ṣṭika) and timeless (akālika). The words of the Buddha are necessarily from the past transmitted to the present, therefore not free from historical circumstances, but the meaning delivered through them is immaterial, so while it is the meaning that matters more, it cannot be wholly removed from the words themselves.

Malcolm wrote:

If you wish to measure the validity of your practice through the erasures necessitated by adopting a settler colonialist perspective on Buddhist history, go ahead. But I think you will find that such histories are mainly concerned with coercion and the assertion of dominance and power over their subjects, and not really "facts." The very way you posed the question shows this, "but at least some level of recognition of the need to be able to communicate Buddhism on the highest levels of human intellectual culture of our times would be beneficial."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 21st, 2020 at 1:32 AM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Astus said:

Although there has been a significant growth of studies during the last few decades that showed how most of the important elements of Chan/Zen self-presentation as a "special transmission" is fabricated (and worse, fabricated with ill intentions), I have not seen anyone trying to answer that challenge, but rather things seem to continue as if such academic works did not exist at all. Although it might be that some in Japanese/Korean/Chinese academics try to work out a response. Not that it's anything new, after all, attacking the validity of the lineage was the tactics of both Tiantai and the various Chan factions.

Genjo Conan said:

What would an "answer to that challenge" look like, for you? I'm a Soto Zen practitioner; assuming the scholarship is right, do I, what, pack it in and become an Episcopalian? I have a graduate degree in history, so it's not like I'm against the practice, but I don't believe that scholarship ought to dictate faith. They're separate spheres.

Malcolm wrote:

Moreover, notions of "history" are quite fluid.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 21st, 2020 at 5:03 AM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

You can just look at the world of textual criticism of this sort ("Early Buddhism" is one of the best examples) to see that it quickly becomes a treasure hunt of sorts, and rarely brings people to actually practicing. To me, that is evidence enough that this approach is one that is only peripherally valuable to Dharma practice. Peripheral value like that has it's place, but once it becomes central it ceases to be Dharma practice.

Astus said:

I find <https://www.buddhismuskunde.uni-hamburg.de/en/personen/analayo.html> a great example of being both a scholar and practitioner, and actually using both areas to support the other.

Malcolm wrote:

One can be a Dharma scholar without adopting a Western-colonialist historical worldview.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 21st, 2020 at 5:03 AM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Astus said:

What might be a way to avoid the issue of lineage histories being fictional is a return to a more open view of Zen that is not apart from the sutras and other texts but rather co-existent with them.

Malcolm wrote:

Who says they are fictional? On what basis are these claims for the fictionality of Chan lineages made? What assumptions drive such claims of inauthenticity?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 21st, 2020 at 8:57 AM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

. It would be akin to approaching Native American traditions or something from this dry, modernist point of view, and then trying to practice them somehow, there's an absurdity there.

Malcolm wrote:

I have found that the perspectives on history given by indigenous writers a refreshing alternative to the faux empiricism of the academy. Of course this is tied to Buddhism in Tibet as an indigenous tradition and how it articulates itself to itself contra settler colonialism, both western and Chinese.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 21st, 2020 at 9:53 AM

Title: Re: Are there realms where beings can remember their past life(s)?

Content:

Zhen Li said:

The benefit of knowing past lives is repentance. Though it is unlikely we will know our past lives in this life, knowing our past deeds even from this life is important in developing the mind that aspires to birth:

Longer Sūtra said:

“If these sentient beings become aware of their past offenses and deeply repent with a desire to leave that place, then immediately as they wish, they will be able to go to the place of the Buddha of Immeasurable Life, where they can worship and make offerings to the Buddha. In addition, they will be able to visit all the other countless and innumerable Buddhas and cultivate various meritorious acts.

Zhen Li said:

Ajataśātru is an example of this. If you repent deeply from the deeds of this life, how much more so will you progress if you know of your negative deeds from countless prior lives? True knowledge of the evils of saṃsāra would require knowledge of past lives, so it is crucial for attaining Buddhahood to know more than one life.

Indeed, you can know your past lives by being born in the Amitābha's Pure Land, according to the fifth vow:

Longer Sūtra said:

(5) If, when I attain Buddhahood, the humans and devas in my land should not remember all their former lives, and thus be unable to know at least the events of the previous hundred thousand kotis of nayutas of kalpas, may I not attain the perfect enlightenment.

Malcolm wrote:

Let it be known that memory of past lives is a common attainment and not a characteristic of bodhi.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 21st, 2020 at 8:08 PM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Who says they are fictional? On what basis are these claims for the fictionality of Chan lineages made? What assumptions drive such claims of inauthenticity?

Astus said:

It is based on documents available from various eras, many of them from the Dunhuang caves, that show how the list of Indian patriarchs developed to its current form through a century of changes, and there are also the developments of the first six patriarchs of China, and how eventually Huineng was accepted as the sixth. Just that is already enough to show how the very basis of an unbroken lineage from the Buddha is fictional.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, no. All it shows is an uneven recounting of a lineage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 21st, 2020 at 8:19 PM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Who says they are fictional? On what basis are these claims for the fictionality of Chan lineages made? What assumptions drive such claims of inauthenticity?

Astus said:

From <https://beingwithoutself.org/jeff/>, a Rinzai Zen teacher and a professor at Hanazono University:

'Why, and from where, did the lineage-transmission legend arise? As Zen begins to take root in the West many Zennists naturally are attracted to this myth; some even naively believe it is literally true. They think that obtaining accouterment associated with lineage transmission somehow proves their Zen is authentic. Perhaps it just reflects a fundamental lack of awakening. A brief review of the historical development of the lineage-transmission legend will dispel some of the preposterous misconceptions surrounding it.

In the early Tang dynasty, a good 1,300 years ago, not just Zen, but other Buddhist schools were under pressure to at least prove their legitimacy, at best gain position and prestige from the vying political powers. The Chinese T'ien-t'ai [Jp.: Tendai] school was active in this before the nascent "Ch'an" or Zen school was. In spite of the "Separate transmission apart from scripture, Not depending on words and letters" rhetoric, as already mentioned, the "Zen school" had relied on sutras — The Lankavatara Sutra in the transmission from Bodhidharma to the second patriarch, and later The Diamond Sutra. But by the eighth century attempts were made to trace back directly to Shakamuni through a spiritual lineage-transmission.

In short, various "Zen groups" then created a number of conflicting lineage transmission charts to try and gain legitimacy. These lineage charts were based on imperial cult lineage and modified Confucian ancestor worship. A "Buddha-family Line" was created to try and show that the present possessor was a direct spiritual descendent of Shakamuni. By tracing oneself back directly to Shakamuni rather than just to statements in a sutra, one could come out superior to the other Buddhist schools, and to other "illegitimate" lineages within the Zen school. Just as the emperor was the ruler over this world, the Zen patriarch was to be considered the ruler over the spiritual realm. What we now naively view as "genuine" transmission-lineages in Zen Buddhism are largely dependent on vagaries of history and social-political plays for power. The pivotal figure is Katak Jinne [Ho-tsê Shên-hui 670-762]. In an attempt to make himself the seventh patriarch, Jinne mounted an attack on the so-called "northern school" of Zen and argued forcefully for the legitimacy of his "southern school." Using the obscurity of his teacher, now universally known as "the sixth patriarch," to advantage, he based his attack on a strict patriarchal succession that he created, based on imperial cult lineage. Although the actual teachings of the two schools were virtually the same, Jinne denounced the teachings of the northern school. One of the reasons for his success was that he raised a huge amount of money — for military purposes — by selling a great number of ordination certificates in state-sponsored ceremonies.'

(<https://beingwithoutself.files.wordpress.com/2011/07/sourceofzenwhotransmitswhat.pdf>)

Malcolm wrote:

The above argument is extremely silly and barely tenuous. The notion of lineages was carried from India to Tibet, China, and Central Asia by subcontinental Buddhists, principally by Vajrayana practitioners such as Amoghavajra, but also monastic abbots. Everyone seems to forget that in 845, a Taoist emperor destroyed 200,000 Buddhist temples, and sent up millions of texts in flames. Relying on the sparsity of Dunhuang to prove anything definitive about Buddhist history in China shows a paucity of reason and is at best specious. A better argument for the survival of the southern school is that it was in the southern hinterlands and so escaped suppression.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 21st, 2020 at 8:30 PM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Astus said:

Historical concerns are not foreign to the various traditions, as each have stated a version of its past. Simply dismissing research into Buddhist history is an option of course, but that seems to be driven by fear of losing something.

Malcolm wrote:

Holding up western historiography as the pinnacle of human intellectual culture is basically racist. This kind of historiography erases indigenous traditions and sensibilities because it is predicated on dominance, as I mentioned before. So it is to be resisted because it is harmful to our tradition, since this kind of historiography insists that only one set of facts can be accepted.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 22nd, 2020 at 1:38 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment in a Pure Land

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dharmakara was a bodhisattva on the paths and stages, not a buddha.

Zhen Li said:

The point I am making is not that he was a Buddha, it is that he has characteristics and yet is not, fundamentally, apart from suchness. From the dharmakāya perspective, there is no need for characteristics. From the upāya perspective, you need characteristics.

Malcolm wrote:

No sentient being is apart from suchness, yet not all sentient beings are buddhas.

Zhen Li said:

No, fulfilled land is a term used to indicate suchness, recompensed land is a term used to indicate the Pure Lands as compassionate means.

Malcolm wrote:

What's the Chinese?

Zhen Li said:

This is uncertain. The eleventh aspiration only assures following a proper path, and nothing more.

It assures irreversibility and nirvāṇa:

"If, when I attain Buddhahood, the humans and devas in my land should not dwell in the stage of the truly settled and necessarily attain nirvana, may I not attain the perfect enlightenment."

Malcolm wrote:

It does not assert that someone is reborn an eighth stage bodhisattva, merely that they will never 1) fall into a lower realm, b) that they will be on a correct path, and c) that eventually in time they will attain nirvana.

Are you asserting then that the Sahāloka is nondual with the dharmakāya? If so, then all the benefits of Sukhavati should apply in the Sahāloka, because if you assert that Amitabha is the dharmakāya, then you must assert all buddhas are the dharmakāya, and therefore all buddhafiels of all buddhas are nondual with the dharmakāya, whether they are so called pure or impure buddhafiels.

Thus, the only reason there is a difference between the Sahāloka and Sukhāvati is that the aspirations of Śākyamuni and Amitabha while on the path were different, accounting for differences in their respective buddhafiels. The same applies to Amoghasiddhi's buddhafiels, Bhaisajyaguru's buddhafiels and so on. This means these nirmāṇakāya buddhafiels are only compounded phenomena, not uncompounded. It's a matter of identity and difference at the same time, depending upon one's level of awakening. All Buddhas emerge from dharmakāya. The benefits of Sukhāvati are a result of the dharmakāya as compassionate means and not the dharmakāya as suchness are compounded, so they don't apply in the Sahāloka.

This does not make any sense. The Sahāloka is Śākyamuni's buddhafiels, so according to your terminology, it is also a result of the dharmakāya as compassionate means. On the other hand, the dharmakāya is knowledge, not a creative force. When we say the rūpakāya emerges from the dharmakāya, this is not mean literally on the sense of a seed emerging from a sprout. You've already agreed that the cause of the rūpakāya is merit.

The question is not the limitations of the dharmakāya, the question is the limitations of the nirmāṇakāya, since the latter appears in various realms to various beings in those realms as a result of their karma, unlike the dharmakāya, which does not appear to sentient beings at all, not even bodhisattvas on the tenth bhūmi.

I am not disputing this. Essentially we are largely in agreement about everything but you are not realising it, probably because I am using terminology that is sect specific. The same thing happens to me when I hear people from Tibetan Buddhism.

This happens all the time.

There are levels of irreversibility on each path. For example, someone on the path of accumulation reaches a state of irreversible generation of bodhicitta; someone on the path of application reaches a state of patience where they can no longer fall into lower realms, etc. It is quite impossible for beings to attain the eighth bodhisattva stage merely through birth in Sukhāvati. There is no justification in the sūtra for this position whatsoever. This also ignores the presence of srāvakas of various levels of attainment in Sukhāvati, bodhisattvas of inferior merit, and so on. There is also no statement in any Sukhāvati sūtra or its like which guarantees that one will be born as a eighth stage bodhisattva. Instead, it is due to the incredibly long lifespans of beings there that they are assured that they have only one lifetime before attaining buddhahood, and not because of any guarantee of immediate realization.

This is an interpretation, as is my assertion of the 8th bhūmi. But I would say you are right that not all bodhisattvas there are at a certain bhūmi immediately.

Then my assertion is not merely an interpretation, but is based in scripture and founded on reason, and also includes the fact that Buddha Amitabha is also Buddha Amitayus. Further, the details of the paths and stages are laid out very precisely by Asanga and so on.

The upaya card must stand up to scripture and it must stand up to reason, otherwise one can say anything about any text that one likes. Your assertion does not stand up to scripture, since the eighteenth aspiration makes no mention whatsoever of these three minds, and further excludes those who have committed the five deeds of immediate retribution from birth in Sukhāvati, so not only does this assertion not stand up to scriptural analysis, it also does stand up to reason since if it were the case, there would be no arhats or bodhisattvas of inferior merit in Sukhāvati, unless of course you argue that they lack these three minds. But the eighteenth aspiration guarantees only that apart from those who commit the five deeds of immediate retribution, those who hear the name of Amitabha and have trust in him are granted a vision of Amitabha at death.

1. The three minds are underlined here,

(18) If, when I attain Buddhahood, the sentient beings of the ten quarters who, with sincere and entrusting heart, aspire to be born in my land and say my name even ten times, should not be born there, may I not attain the perfect enlightenment. Excluded are those who commit the five grave offenses and those who slander the right Dharma. I.e. sincere mind, entrusting mind, and aspiring mind.

2. Not all who attain birth do so through the 18th vow. Also, the 18th vow does not produce birth due to merit.

3. Vision of Amitābha at death is not assured by the 18th vow.

This again is not certain, the term you've translated as heart is simply "citta," mind,

"mama nāmadheyam śrutvā prasannacittā māmanusmareyuh;" the adjective for citta is "prasanna," and it simply means "clear," so there are not three things here, but only two, "1) remembers me 2) with a clear mind." Since there are only two things here, being lucid at the time of death and Buddhanusmṛti, recollection of the Buddha, arguably this is even easier than the requirement to have Shinjin. It still does not guarantee anything about realization. The word "sincere" and "entrusting" are nowhere to be found in the Sanskrit, or the Tibetan, for that matter.

Furthermore, it is not birth in that land to which they aspire, it is "ye sattvā anyeṣu lokadhātuṣvanuttarāyām samyaksambodhau cittamutpādyā," is "Any sentient beings who generates the intent to unsurpassed full awakening in that lokadhātu, who hears/says my name, and remembers me with a clear mind , etc...." But there is no mention of ten times. "Say" rather than "hear", is Shinran's revision, however, there is an argument that can be made that śruta can be understood both ways, however the Chinese, if I recall, clearly has "hear," as Gomez confirms. Also in Gomez's translation of the Sangavarman recension, there is no ten times, this is a Shin addition to the text. So the intent here is that one must generate bodhicitta, aspirational bodhicitta, to attain unsurpassed full awakening in Sukhāvatī. And if one has generated such bodhicitta, heard the name of Amitabha, and at the time of death has a clear mind and remembers him, these are the four conditions that will result in a vision of Amitabha and his retinue at the time of death.

There are too many different directions this is going in, but the exclusion of those who commit the five grave offenses is also an upāya—since they are allowed birth if they have the three minds as per the Contemplation Sūtra. The point however for now is not in the details, it is that certain things are meant to encourage and not be definitive statements.

The devil is always in the details, this is why these conversations happen between schools. One's schools "skillful means" is a wrong view according to another school. But since you brought up certain points, it is important to demonstrate where there are variances between schools that ostensibly both belong to Mahāyāna.

This does not mean they were accurately translated. In fact, in this early period, when Saṃghavarman was working, the third century CE, translation into Chinese was still in its infancy. Given that we have a Sanskrit version that the Tibetan reflects very well, it casts doubt on the accuracy of the Saṃghavarman's translation on this point. We would need to compare it with later translations of the same text to see if there is a correspondence with other recensions of the text.

I'd argue that his translations are pretty comprehensible compared to other translators. Something like the passage we are referring to is unlikely to have issues, whereas matters of basic terminology do end up being problematic. Since entire sections are present or missing in different versions, it is clearly less a translation issue and more of a recension issue.

There are a number of issues both in Saṃghavarman's translations, and even more in the way Shinran has recast portions of Saṃghavarman's translation to fit with his approach to Nembutsu.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 22nd, 2020 at 4:33 AM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The notion of lineages was carried from India to Tibet, China, and Central Asia by subcontinental Buddhists, principally by Vajrayana practitioners such as Amoghavajra, but also monastic abbots.

Astus said:

Śubhakarasiṃha arrived in Chang'an in 716...

Malcolm wrote:

Monastic lineage lists certainly predate even these, that as my point.

Holding up western historiography as the pinnacle of human intellectual culture is basically racist. Thus kind of historiography erases indigenous traditions and sensibilities because it is predicated on dominance, as I mentioned before. So it is to be resisted because it is harmful to our tradition, since this kind of historiography insists that only one set of facts can be accepted.

Japan has been the leader in (East Asian) Buddhist studies throughout the 20th century...

The Japanese Buddhist scholars have merely adopted a paradigm of western knowledge accumulation from the Germans, which was used originally for evaluating the Bible.

This does not make it any less racist if one asserts it is the summum bonum of knowledge accumulation.

The Japanese have annihilated their own indigenous Buddhist tradition by falling the notion that there can only be a single set of facts, and those are known through textual analysis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 22nd, 2020 at 4:36 AM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Astus said:

That seems to imply to me that Buddhism can exist only apart from what is seen by most as the real world, that is, the realm of conventional truths. However, I think that it poses no problem if Shakyamuni is viewed as a historical person, and Buddhism as a tradition maintained by actual human beings over the centuries, because it does not diminish the validity of the transmitted and realised Dharma. On the other hand, setting it into an unreachable dimension may hurt the possibility of it being accepted as a truth for humans.

Malcolm wrote:

You seem to miss the point of what such empiricism erases, how it salts the soil of tradition, out of which nothing will grow.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 22nd, 2020 at 4:40 AM

Title: Re: Revisiting Kiva

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.cgdev.org/blog/kiva-not-quite-what-it-seems>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 22nd, 2020 at 7:16 AM

Title: Re: Akaniṣṭha is the gzhi

Content:

90hj209gh0g49h said:

Is this correct?

Malcolm wrote:

That rather depends on context.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 22nd, 2020 at 9:01 AM

Title: Re: Saving all beings, ultimate or conventional goal?

Content:

seeker242 said:

So, saving all beings from suffering is the goal of practicing.

Malcolm wrote:

It is an aspiration, not a realistic goal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 22nd, 2020 at 9:40 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment in a Pure Land

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The

http://databases.aiibs.columbia.edu/index.php?id=4c80390678a9883498b73fd877664edb&enc=sanskrit_romanized_title_4_search&coll=kangyur

Queequeg said:

Is this the 39th Chapter of the Avatamsaka or is this a different text?

Malcolm wrote:

Different text, you are referring to the Gandhavyuha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 23rd, 2020 at 12:19 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment in a Pure Land

Content:

Zhen Li said:

The Sahāloka was not established by vows. Not every land is the result of compassionate means. I think you are tending to read into my words claims that I did not make.

Malcolm wrote:

Every buddhafiield is established through the aspiration of the bodhisattvas who then appear there as buddhas. Some are "pure," some are not. But even here, the Vimalakīrtinirdeśa chapter on buddhafiields both establishes this point and that also the Sahāloka is actually a pure buddhafiield generated out of the aspiration of the Bodhisattva:

The Buddha said, “Śāriputra, this buddhafiield is always thus pure, but the Tathāgata makes it appear to be spoiled by many faults, in order to bring about the maturity of inferior living beings. For example, Śāriputra, the gods of the Trayastriṃśa heaven all take their food from a single precious vessel, yet the nectar that nourishes each one differs according to the differences of the merits each has accumulated. Just so, Śāriputra, living beings born in the same buddhafiield see the splendor of the virtues of the buddhafiields of the buddhas according to their own degrees of purity.”
<https://read.84000.co/translation/toh176.html#UT22084-060-005-92>

Zhen Li said:

Your Sanskrit needs some work. Prasanna in BHS is believing.

Malcolm wrote:

No, the Tibetan is also very clear, prasannacittā is "sems rab tu dang ba," and carries connotations faith, clarity, and being undisturbed; "dang ba" is a synonym is "gsal ba," as demonstrated in the phrase, "tshig gsal," "prasannapāda," and as shown in the 9th century translator lexicon, the Mahāvyutpati, which gives "dang ba ; dang ba 'm gsal ba ; gsal ba - prasannaḥ (mvyut_7295)."

The reason why this reading is preferable to simply having a mind of faith, "dad mos kyi sems" is that one must be clear minded at the time of death in order to have this experience, otherwise, arguably, the sūtra would had prāsadacitta. Also, Edgerton, while useful, has limits since there really is no such thing as BHS.

Zhen Li said:

The "aspiring mind" is interpreted as lacking doubt, and is thus an element of prasanna. Someone with shinjin "knows" that they are going to the Pure Land without doubt—it is not a worldly desire or aspiration as you understand. Thus it is prasanna.

Malcolm wrote:

To lack doubt is to be clear. The use of dang ba in Tibetan is very precise, dang ba'i dad pa for example means "clear faith."

Zhen Li said:

Hear or say are not interpolations by Shinran, there is a long history of understanding 念 recitation, which is not necessary to get into here.

Malcolm wrote:

I already granted that śruta can be both hear and say.

[/quote]

I'm not sure where you are getting these ideas, since you are clearly not familiar with Shinran's thought.

[/quote]

I've read everything that has been published, admittedly not for some time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 23rd, 2020 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Astus said:

However, it should be clear that what was created in China as special lineages are qualitatively different from the common understanding that monastics are heirs of the Buddha, and it was meant to set apart a unique group of people who wield more authority than ordinary monks, eventually resulting in the system of public monasteries bound to lineage members and under the direct control of the imperial court (see: How Zen Became Zen, p 39).

Malcolm wrote:

The notion of lineage is found in all Buddhist schools in India, and was carried to Tibet, China, etc., from there. Inconsistencies in the record do not indicate that such lineages are fictions, the central point of your contention.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 23rd, 2020 at 3:16 AM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The notion of lineage is found in all Buddhist schools in India, and was carried to Tibet, China, etc., from there. Inconsistencies in the record do not indicate that such lineages are fictions, the central point of your contention.

Astus said:

If so, could you point to some sources specifying lineages of Dharma?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, If you read Tibetan, you could read Lama Dampa's Sonam Gyaltzen's record of lineages for Vinaya, Abhidharma, Pramana, Bodhisattva vows, etc., and so on, as well as lineages Vajrayāna lineages, you name it,

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 23rd, 2020 at 9:14 AM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Well, If you read Tibetan, you could read Lama Dampa's Sonam Gyaltzen's record of lineages for Vinaya, Abhidharma, Pramana, Bodhisattva vows, etc., and so on, as well as lineages Vajrayāna lineages, you name it,

Astus said:

Anything about a thousand years before him, just to see how the concept of Dharma lineages already existed in various Indian schools?

Malcolm wrote:

As you know, there has been massive destruction of texts in India and China. But the Theravada chronicle of ordinations is illustrative.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 23rd, 2020 at 7:28 PM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Astus said:

The fictional nature of the lineage already shows in the above, since those teachers revered among Sarvastivadins and others had practically nothing to do with Mahayana, much less Zen.

Malcolm wrote:

How can you say Ananda had nothing to do with Mahayana?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 23rd, 2020 at 7:33 PM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Astus said:

In McRae's words (Seeing Through Zen...

Malcolm wrote:

This book is very cynical, and he makes erroneous assertions such as this:

By saying that Chan practice is fundamentally genealogical, I mean that it is derived from a genealogically understood encounter experience that is relational (involving interaction between individuals rather than being based solely on individual effort), generational (in that it is organized according to parent-child, or rather teacher-student, generations), and reiterative (i.e., intended for emulation and repetition in the lives of present and future teachers and students). No matter what the comparison or relationship between Chinese Chan and earlier forms of Indian Buddhist meditation practice, this particular complex of qualities is not found in other schools or forms of Buddhist training.

These three qualities are inherent in Vajrayana, for example, and also in Vinaya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 23rd, 2020 at 7:40 PM

Title: Re: Enlightenment in a Pure Land

Content:

Tenma said:

Mind if I may see the source containing this quote, please? Thanks!

GrapeLover said:

It's cited in the book "Approaching the Land of Bliss" in a section by Matthew Kapstein, but the footnote citing the source isn't available in the online preview.

Aryjna said:

Various Dzogchen/Mahamudra masters suggest Sukhavati practice, phowa, etc., so the argument about no tantra because of missing sexual organs sounds weird, and has not really been supported so far. Also, as far as I know, it is not mentioned that beings in Sukhavati do not have sexual organs, just that there are no females, other than offering devis (again the devis part is from Karma Chagme's aspiration). If anything, since sexual organs are one of the marks of a Buddha, and beings in Sukhavati have different marks (or maybe develop them over time?), the reasonable thing is that they have sexual organs.

However, this quote by Machig Labdron sounds a bit extreme, that it is not actually possible in practice to go to any other field for humans. It would be good to have a specific text name.

Malcolm wrote:

There is only apparition birth there, and no human women, And, there is in fact no Vajrayana practice in this buddhafiield, as opposed to say, Zandok Palri.

There is a Dzogchen understanding of the buddhafiields, but it is quite different than Chagmey's aspiration.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 23rd, 2020 at 8:22 PM

Title: Re: Pure view without being Panglossian.

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

All the Tantras I'm familiar with maintain the normal, common perception of phenomena is mistaken. The actual mode of being, the way things actually are, is as a Buddha Realm. They don't say "just the good parts".

Malcolm wrote:

Grasping unmistakable perception is also mistaken.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 23rd, 2020 at 8:23 PM

Title: Re: Pure view without being Panglossian.

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Enlightened beings and sentient beings may look the same, but they are as different as caterpillars and butterflies.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is false. There is no substantial difference between Buddhas and sentient beings. We don't become Buddhas, we already are Buddhas—at least, that's what the Hevajra and other tantras state.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 23rd, 2020 at 8:26 PM

Title: Re: Enlightenment in a Pure Land

Content:

Aryjña said:

What I find a bit difficult is to reconcile the fact that many Vajrayana masters (apparently including Machig Labdron), suggest going there, if it is really the case that you are cut off from Vajrayana.

Malcolm wrote:

You don't need it in Sukhavati.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 24th, 2020 at 4:56 AM

Title: Re: Akaniṣṭha is the gzhi

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That rather depends on context.

90hj209gh0g49h said:

Okay thank you, so if the dharmadhātu is understood to be the same thing as the gzhi, and Akaniṣṭha is understood to be the dharmadhātu, then in what context does this equivalency not hold?

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāyāna Sutra, where Akanistha is the sambhogakaya buddhafiield, and Hinayana sutra, where Akanistha is the highest form realm heaven among the five pure abodes. They are different.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 24th, 2020 at 5:00 AM

Title: Re: Pure view without being Panglossian.

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Enlightened beings and sentient beings may look the same, but they are as different as caterpillars and butterflies.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is false. There is no substantial difference between Buddhas and sentient beings. We don't become Buddhas, we already are Buddhas—at least, that's what the Hevajra and other tantras state.

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

That is true if you are speaking n the sense of their primordial essence both being Buddha Nature. Of course.

However if you are speaking about how they manifest as appearances, there's all the difference in the world. One manifests as limitations, suffering, defilements, and delusions. The other manifests as freedoms, peace, and spontaneously beneficial activity.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no substantial difference, the difference is solely the presence or absence of afflictions, and afflictions are not something substantial to be removed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 24th, 2020 at 5:04 AM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

These three qualities are inherent in Vajrayana, for example, and also in Vinaya.

Astus said:

Since Vajrayana couldn't have been much of a source for Zen, it is the Vinaya part that should be looked into. The Vinaya prescribes novice training, but after the first five years a monk is independent. Dharma transmission is not like that, it is not a training, but a confirmation of enlightenment. The Zen lineage represents a series of awakened patriarchs who embody the totality of the Dharma. From this it should be clear that it is not like Vajrayana either.

Malcolm wrote:

Your guru represents the totality of the Dharma, as it is said, "the guru is the Buddha...the Dharma...and the Sangha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 24th, 2020 at 5:05 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment in a Pure Land

Content:

Aryjna said:

What I find a bit difficult is to reconcile the fact that many Vajrayana masters (apparently including Machig Labdron), suggest going there, if it is really the case that you are cut off from Vajrayana.

Malcolm wrote:

You don't need it in Sukhavati.

Aryjna said:

I suppose so. It seems a bit strange though, when they could suggest Zangdokpalri instead.

Malcolm wrote:

Different strokes...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 24th, 2020 at 5:53 AM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Your guru represents the totality of the Dharna, as it is said, “the guru is the Buddha...the Dharma...and the Sangha.

Astus said:

How does that relate to Dharma transmission in Zen? It's not taught that one should cultivate that sort of devotion as in Vajrayana.

Malcolm wrote:

You asserted, “ The Zen lineage represents a series of awakened patriarchs who embody the totality of the Dharma.”

How is the above different from your assertion? The guru also embodies the lineage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 24th, 2020 at 9:39 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment in a Pure Land

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is only apparition birth there, and no human women, And, there is in fact no Vajrayana practice in this buddhfield, as opposed to say, Zandok Palri.

Losal Samten said:

There are Vajrayana initiations given there, for example the Nyingma/Drikung Great Phowa which was given directly from Amitabha there, and the Sri Mahadevi lower tantra was preached there also.

<https://read.84000.co/translation/UT22084-061-013.html>

Malcolm wrote:

Dharani texts are not tantras. Pure vision teachings on transference received here do not mean such teachings are actually taught there, what would be the point?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 25th, 2020 at 6:59 AM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

. Same stories with people like Dudjom Lingpa who had no human teacher.

Malcolm wrote:

Dudjom Lingpa had a human teacher, to whom he was very devoted and from whom he received the Termas of Dudul Dorje, his predecessor. This is very clearly discussed in his autobiography.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 25th, 2020 at 6:45 PM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

. Same stories with people like Dudjom Lingpa who had no human teacher.

Malcolm wrote:

Dudjom Lingpa had a human teacher, to whom he was very devoted and from whom he received the Termas of Dudul Dorje, his predecessor. This is very clearly discussed in his autobiography.

Johnny Dangerous said:

I didn't know that specifically, only that he remarks many times on not having human teacher, receiving teaching from enlightened beings etc.

Malcolm wrote:

He very specifically mentions his guru in his autobiography.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 25th, 2020 at 11:58 PM

Title: Re: Pure view without being Panglossian.

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

In short, the pedestrian mind is capable of seeing the horrors of the world. There's no spinning it as anything other than the 1st Noble Truth. If the pedestrian mind is correct, and it sees things as they actually are, then everything else is intellectual masturbation. Maybe it's interesting, but moot.

However if it is true that the pedestrian mind has veils that hide things as they actually are, and if there is a way to remove those veils, then it sees things incorrectly. And reports from people that have seen things more clearly will conflict with what seems obvious, certain, and indisputable on the surface.

"Self empty"? "Illusory"? "Perfect just as it is"? "Everything is good"? I don't see things that way, But I'm willing to be open to the idea that it is my vision that is fundamentally in error.

Malcolm wrote:

The pedestrian mind sees suffering as happiness, the impermanent as permanent, and not self as self. Aryas perceive things as they are. This meaning is also true even in mahamudra and dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 26th, 2020 at 7:35 AM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Genjo Conan said:

I understand you to be asserting that there is something unique about Zen's approach to lineage and transmission, but I'm not clear about where you think the uniqueness lies.

Astus said:

Do you know other schools where lineage means not the transmission of a method or doctrine, but those confirmed as awakened (it is the nature of this confirmation that can have a variety of meanings)?

Malcolm wrote:

The tulku tradition, and also the notion of "lineage holders" in Tibetan Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 26th, 2020 at 11:13 PM

Title: Re: Academic critiques and slandering the dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The tulku tradition, and also the notion of "lineage holders" in Tibetan Buddhism.

Astus said:

Tulkus are nominated mostly when they're children, and then they receive their education. As for lineage holders, is there actually a process of making that a qualification? Isn't it rather an expression meaning someone who knows the teachings of a lineage? So, neither of them seem to be like what goes on in Zen. For instance, to make it like Zen, Milarepa should have at one point told Gampopa that their attainment were the same, and not advise him to keep practising.

Malcolm wrote:

In many instances, students are told by their Masters they have attained what their master attained. It is quite common, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 27th, 2020 at 9:09 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment in a Pure Land

Content:

Aryjna said:

The main question is to what degree you can make rapid progress by doing that, in comparison to taking aeons until buddhahood. If you could shorten the time by travelling to Vajrayana oriented pure realms, then buddhahood would take a few centuries at most for everyone in Sukhavati. At least some, for example Lama Yeshe, as has been discussed so far, reportedly do not agree that you can do that in Sukhavati.

Seeker12 said:

Seems a bit odd to me given that Guru Rinpoche is an emanation of Amitabha.

Aryjna said:

Yes, it seems strange.

Malcolm wrote:

Vajrayana is the most rare teaching. For example, it will not be taught by Maitreya Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 30th, 2020 at 11:21 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

PeterC said:

Does anyone know what the issue is with Samtengar that is mentioned in the Q&A?
Please PM if not appropriate for public discussion dharmafirststeps said:

An instructor from there is giving direct introduction.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, a guy named Wesley. He owns Samten Gar.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 1st, 2020 at 2:35 AM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as an intrinsic existence.

Content:

Artziebetter1 said:

or an infinite number of conditioned Dharmas alone

Malcolm wrote:

This is the correct answer. There is no beginning, at all, anywhere.

Artziebetter1 said:

Since any model made up entirely of conditioned Dharmas can never have their conditions fulfilled, every conditioned Dharma must be caused by a series of realities that ends (or begins its ontological Series) with an unconditioned Dharma.

Malcolm wrote:

No, due to a dissimilarity because cause and effect. No unconditioned dharma can produce a conditioned dharma. If an unconditioned dharma could produce a conditioned dharma, it would have to produce all its effects at once. An unconditioned dharma cannot produce effects serially, in time, because then it would have parts, and thus would be conditioned, rather than unconditioned.

Artziebetter1 said:

Thus it follows that a intrinsic Existance does exist.

Malcolm wrote:

Your conclusion does not follow from your premise, you are merely restating your premise as the conclusion.

Artziebetter1 said:

the rangtong definition of Shunyata fails in light of this.

Malcolm wrote:

Your argument has nothing to do with the rang ston/gzhan stong controversy. Your argument is pulled from a theistic argument concerning the existence of a creator being. Buddhism, including gzhan stong, negates first causes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 1st, 2020 at 4:45 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Danny said:

Hmm, maybe the material possessions are a manifestation of those termas?
Anyway Pete, hope you find some peace of mind, it's a great day outside, I'm going out.

Malcolm wrote:

All compounded phenomena are impermanent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 1st, 2020 at 7:45 AM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as a intrinsic existance.

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

The general idea I got from the original post was that it misses the point of Madhyamaka, You're assuming Madhyamaka is the highest view. For some people and schools it is, and for others it isn't. It depends on who you talk to.

Recently H.H.Karmapa listed the 3 views as:

Madhyamaka
Mind Only
Buddha Nature.

That is changing the conversation.

Malcolm wrote:

No, everyone agrees Madhyamaka is the highest view. In Tibet, however, there is some disagreement over what constitutes Madhyamaka view.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 1st, 2020 at 10:55 AM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as a intrinsic existence.

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

No, everyone agrees Madhyamaka is the highest view.

No they don't, and you know it. Unless of course you're including Shentong as a form of Madhyamaka, "Great Madhyamaka" that is.

It's weird when you get disingenuous like that.

Malcolm wrote:

Gzhan stong scholars, all of them, proclaim their position is consistent with and represents the intention of Nagarjuna's Madhyamaka.

The question is not their allegiance to Nagarjuna, the question is whether their views are consistent with that allegiance.

I've read a great deal more in this area than you have. It's really not debatable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 1st, 2020 at 6:42 PM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as a intrinsic existence.

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

In any case, it is not true everyone holds Madhyamaka as the highest view. Khenpo Tsultrim's "Progressive Stages of Emptiness" clearly places Shentong above Madhyamaka. And since Khenpo Tsultrim is someone, that means not everyone holds Madhyamaka as the highest view, by definition.

Malcolm wrote:

There are three varieties of Madhyamaka among Tibetans. Gzhan stong is one of them. The other two are the Gelug school and the pre-gzhan stong, pre-Gelug variety that for convenience we will call Classical Tibetan Madhyamaka, which was the only form in Madhyamaka in Tibet prior to prior to the 14th century.

Classical Tibetan Madhyamaka itself has its own set of controversies, of course, such as the 12th century distinction between svatantrika and prasangika positions, and so on.

But all of these trends refer to themselves as Madhyamaka and they all proclaim their view is the highest.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 1st, 2020 at 9:39 PM

Title: Re: The material world of Mahayana

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

But it's nothing like the glut of merchandise in literally every price range for sale to Mahayana Buddhists.

...

Any thoughts?

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāyāna is better for the economy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 2nd, 2020 at 12:25 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Danny said:

Hmm, maybe the material possessions are a manifestation of those termas?

Anyway Pete, hope you find some peace of mind, it's a great day outside, I'm going out.

Malcolm wrote:

All compounded phenomena are impermanent.

Danny said:

But not the accumulation and dispersement of merit, which can also manifest as material phenomena.

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on the type of merit. Most merit is quite perishable. Merit is just positive karma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 2nd, 2020 at 3:36 AM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as an intrinsic existence.

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Khenpo Tsultrim's book, "Progressive Stages of Meditation on Emptiness" presents the various views—guess what!—in a progression! The final view presented is Shentong.

While Jonangpas and Nyingmapas call Shentong "Great Madhyamaka", Khenpo Tsultrim calls it is Yogacara. This does not mean he equates it with "Mind Only". He uses Cittamatra to refer to that. And given that "Mind Only" and "Empty of Other" use the same terms and texts, that's painfully confusing.

So perhaps for this conversation "Rongtong" and "Shentong" should be used.

Malcolm wrote:

No, since "rang stong" is a polemical appellation invented by gzhan stong pas. The term has no validity at all for anyone outside their milieu, for example, Sakyapas, Gelugpas, and Nyingmapas who follow the tradition of Khenpo Shenga (which is most Eastern Tibetan Nyingma Colleges, Dzogchen, Kathog, etc.). There are also Nyingma Colleges who follow Gelug Madhyamaka, especially in Amdo.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 2nd, 2020 at 4:52 AM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as an intrinsic existence.

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

1. Prasangika Madhyamaka vs. Great Madhyamaka. (Maha-Madhyamaka)

Malcolm wrote:

Every brand of Madhyamaka in Tibet calls itself "dbu ma chen po." Gzhan stong does not have special dibs on the term.

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

2. Prasangika Madhyamaka vs. Yogacara-Madhyamaka

Malcolm wrote:

This means Prasangika vs. Shantarakṣita's Yogacāra Madhyamaka synthesis. But that is not gzhan stong. Khenpo Tsultrim Gyatso largely follows the views of the Sakya master, Shakya Chogden who sought to reconcile the views of the Yogacāra school with the views of Madhyamaka. He failed. But his work is very interesting. Taranatha published a detailed account of how Shakya Chogden's views differed from Dolpopa's. But even so, this is merely calling Yogacāra "Madhyamaka." It is not related to what most people understand as Yogacāra Madhyamaka, that is, Śāntarakṣita's synthesis.

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

3. Self-Emptiness vs. Emptiness-of-Other

4. Rongtong vs. Shentong

To be clear, the distinction is between self-empty and empty-of-other.

Malcolm wrote:

Only if you are a gzhan stong pa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 2nd, 2020 at 5:09 AM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as a intrinsic existence.

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

So lay down your cards, and give me the terms you'd like to use.

Malcolm wrote:

There are three kinds of Madhyamaka in Tibet: Trodralwas, Gandenpas, and Zhantongpas. Only the middle one actually belongs to a specific sect. The first and the third are found in the other four sects in varying proportions, with the last being strongly identified with the Jonang school.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 2nd, 2020 at 5:14 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Minobu said:

2 Sleeps to the election.

feels like several lifetimes ago that President Obama graced the White House.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Really? Because Bush II and him partially helped pave the way for the authoritarianism of Trump to have much freer reign. Obama for instance went after whistleblowers and presided over the NSA spying scandal, did nothing but increase executive power and secrecy, following Bush II who of course ramped all that up after 9-11. In short, the entire political establishment helped normalize some things that never should have been normalized, and now we have Trump in office. Thanks guys.

I mean, Trump is awful, don't get me wrong, but a rosy view of the Obama admin actually misses a part of sickness, of which Trump is both a symptom and a perpetuating cause.

Malcolm wrote:

Obama is a nice guy, and played the hand he was dealt as well as and as fairly as he knew how. Still he was miles better than any president we have had in decades.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 2nd, 2020 at 7:42 AM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as an intrinsic existence.

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

So lay down your cards, and give me the terms you'd like to use.

Malcolm wrote:

There are three kinds of Madhyamaka in Tibet: Trodalwas, Gandenpas, and Zhantongpas. Only the middle one actually belongs to a specific sect. The first and the third are found in the other four sects in varying proportions, with the last being strongly identified with the Jonang school.

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

We can either ignore Gandenpas or fold them into Troldawas.

Malcolm wrote:

No, we can't.

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Plus we can stop assuming "Madhyamaka" to mean Nagarjuna's philosophy, and instead it simply means "Middle Way", which is applicable to both Self-Empty and Other-Empty.

Malcolm wrote:

Nagarjuna is the gold standard, that's why everyone calls themselves "madhyamikas."

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Okay, so then your preferred terminology is Trodalwas for Self-Empty, and Zhantong for Empty-of-Other.

Malcolm wrote:

Trodral is not rang stong, nor is it gzhan stong— it's beyond such proliferations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 2nd, 2020 at 8:41 AM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as a intrinsic existance.

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Trodral is not rang stong, nor is it gzhan stong— it's beyond such proliferations.

Okay so since you just used "rang stong" to mean Self-Empty, and "gzhan stong" to mean "Empty-of-Other", we can proceed using those terms.

Malcolm wrote:

You can. But it's not accurate. There is no such thing as "rang stong dbu ma." It's a contradiction in terms. "Intrinsic emptiness" can't be a "middle way." Neither can "extrinsic emptiness."

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Yet rang stongpas, such as yourself, commonly deny gzhan stong is consistent with Nagarjuna's philosophy.

Malcolm wrote:

Not a rang stong pa. Once we get that straightened out, then we can proceed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 2nd, 2020 at 9:05 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

I had very low expectations for his presidency, and that turned out to be reasonable.

Malcolm wrote:

Me too, but he is kind of like Churchill's quip about Democracy. Obama may have been a terrible president. But he was better than anyone since Carter,

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 2nd, 2020 at 8:20 PM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as a intrinsic existance.

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Kongtrul ToK book 6 part 3 The supreme traditions of these two chariots do not contradict each other:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is the point of view of some scholars. Others disagree. There are many arguments for both sides.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 2nd, 2020 at 10:26 PM

Title: Re: Which Bhumi is synonymous with the Theravad Arahant?

Content:

sapo7 said:

Do we know for sure which Bhumi corresponds to the Theravadin version of Arahant hood?

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bh%C5%ABmi_%28Buddhism%29

Astus said:

An arahant in Theravada is free from all attachments. In Mahayana only a buddha has that level of freedom.

Malcolm wrote:

False. The obscuration of affliction is abandoned on the seventh bhumi. Bodhisattvas on the pure stages are also free of attachments.

In the shravaka schools, the difference between an arhat and is Buddha is that the former has nonafflictive ignorance and the latter does not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 2nd, 2020 at 10:56 PM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as a intrinsic existence.

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Kongtrul ToK book 6 part 3

YesheD. said:

Well I think that is what everyone has been saying to you.

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Kongtrul was a Shentongpa. Shentongpas don't say Nagarjuna was wrong. They say he correctly deconstructs appearances.

It's the Rangtongpas that say Shentong is wrong, heretical, blasphemy, etc. And if you think I'm exaggerating just ask a Jonangpa. (Or Malcolm.)

Malcolm wrote:

You haven't established there is such a position as "rang stong" that exists outside of gzhan stong polemics.

There are of course scholars who consider the positions set forth by gzhan stong adherents to be deficient in varying degrees of severity. But their critiques of gzhan stong do not make them adherents of a so-called “rang stong.” Expecting those who are not gzhan stong pas to accept the appellation “rang stong pa” is a bit like expecting Kamala Harris to admit to being a communist merely because Trump insists she is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 3rd, 2020 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as a intrinsic existance.

Content:

Schrödinger’s Yidam said:

Kongtrul was a Shentongpa. Shentongpas don’t say Nagarjuna was wrong. They say he correctly deconstructs appearances.

It’s the Rangtongpas that say Shentong is wrong, heretical, blasphemy, etc. And if you think I’m exaggerating just ask a Jonangpa. (Or Malcolm.)

Malcolm wrote:

You haven’t established there is such a position as “rang stong” that exists outside of gzhan stong polemics.

There are of course scholars who consider the positions set forth by gzhan stong adherents to be deficient in varying degrees of severity. But their critiques of gzhan stong do not make them adherents of a so-called “rang stong.” Expecting those who are not gzhan stong pas to accept the appellation “rang stong pa” is a bit like expecting Kamala Harris to admit to being a communist merely because Trump insists she is.

Schrödinger’s Yidam said:

See what I mean?

Malcolm wrote:

You've decided to adopt the label "gzhan stong pa" for yourself, so you can't be upset if people refer to you as such, but you cannot expect people to simply accept your polemical description of them, especially if they don't accept the basis of your polemic to begin with.

See what I mean?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 3rd, 2020 at 1:14 AM

Title: Re: Which Bhumi is synomous with the Theravad Arahant?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

False. The obscuration of affliction is abandoned on the seventh bhumi. Bodhisattvas on the pure stages are also free of attachments.

In the shravaka schools, the difference between an arhat and is Buddha is that the former has nonafflictive ignorance and the latter does not.

Astus said:

That's a distinction coming from Sarvastivada that was then used by Mahayana. No such difference exists in Theravada.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, the Buddha clearly makes this distinction in various suttas found in the Pali canon. So while Theravadins argue there is no difference in bodhi, they do not claim that arhats are party to the same knowledge as a buddha: example, Mogallana had to ask the Buddha where his mother had taken rebirth. Hence, the distinction is recognized in Theravada as well.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 3rd, 2020 at 1:20 AM

Title: Re: Practices for epidemics and pandemics

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

i think gesar is no other than yet another tibetan folk lore thing taking place among buddhadharma. is culture, not dharma.

Malcolm wrote:

ChNN was heavily into Gesar practice, personally. I know this because we talked about it when we were watching a Gesar movie together over a bottle of Brunello. He did not want to say too much, though, since when I asked him about specific practices, he said they were secret, and ended the conversation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 3rd, 2020 at 3:30 AM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as a intrinsic existance.

Content:

YesheD. said:

I'm not clear what the underlying dynamic is here.....there seems to be an agenda of some kind.

Malcolm wrote:

The issue here is that gzhan stong pas divide Madhyamaka up into two divisions, those who assert or try to prove intrinsic emptiness, that is that all entities of whatever kind are rang stong, intrinsically empty, including buddhahood and its various attributes, ultimate truth, and so on. This position that they attribute to their opponents is described as "rang stong."

The gzhan stong position, extrinsic emptiness, is that while it is perfectly fine to assert that relative truth is intrinsically empty, they maintain it is incorrect to assert that ultimate truth is intrinsically empty, claiming ultimate truth is merely empty of relative truth. The substance of their claim depends on applying the three natures of the Yogacāra school to the two truths of Madhyamaka, positing that the imagined and dependent natures belong to relative truth, and the perfected nature belongs to ultimate truth, and that the perfected nature is empty of the imagined and dependent nature. Some of them (mainly the Jonang pas) further claim that tathāgatagarbha is this perfected nature, and that therefore, ultimate buddha qualities exist inherently in sentient beings in a fully developed form (the flaw in that argument is the consequence that the ultimate will have parts).

The whole debate goes back to a dispute between Indian Mahāyānists over whether the ultimate is a so-called affirming or a nonaffirming negation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 3rd, 2020 at 5:53 AM

Title: Re: The Sagacious Buddhist Blog, Altruistic Intention

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Anyone who calls themselves an ārya should be avoided.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 3rd, 2020 at 6:54 AM

Title: Re: The Sagacious Buddhist Blog, Altruistic Intention

Content:

cjdevries said:

I have the impression, based on what I've read from others, that Mike Turner is an excellent dharma coach.

Johnny Dangerous said:

I agree with Malcolm. I don't know what he teaches, he appears to be essentially his own tradition, but claiming to teach people stream entry. That's a big claim, and even more iffy to me is that he only does this in "private lessons". He does mention learning from Thubten Chodron, but I wonder whether he is authorized to teach what he is teaching by her or anyone else. He says he is a Gelugpa, but does not appear to think much of their praxis..otherwise one assumes he'd be seeking authorization and teaching that.

The reviews read like he is essentially doing counseling with people from a Buddhist point of view. I think there is actually a real place for this, but it is not the same thing as being a Dharma teacher at all.

I don't wish to prejudge him, so I freely admit I may be wrong, but to me there are some serious red flags here that make it worth being very critical about his writings. Looking through his website and "Buddhist enlightenment training and "dharma life coaching" does nothing to dissuade from a cautious approach.

Malcolm wrote:

Its a bunch of bullshit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 3rd, 2020 at 10:00 AM

Title: Re: So your brother went down the Qanon hole...

Content:

PeterC said:

Q-retards

Malcolm wrote:

Or as we call em around here "Qtards."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 3rd, 2020 at 10:35 AM

Title: Re: So your brother went down the Qanon hole...

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

Back when we thought envoys from advanced alien civilizations would look like they stepped out of Nazi propaganda. After all, they are a "master race," so to speak, in the minds of true believers in the interstellar policemen. Now I guess "we" think angels look that way.

To be fair though, white people angels pre-date white people aliens, to say nothing of white Jesus etc. Compare with depictions of angels in Near Eastern mythology and they are basically Sphinxes. We all know this though. Sorry for the off-topic.

PeterC said:

If we're going with biblical descriptions, they're extremely far from human. Six-winged beings of fire; chariot wheels; beings with four faces (man, lion, ox, eagle), four wings covered with eyes, and the body of a lion (possibly a Sumerian origin)...

Malcolm wrote:

Those were some really good mushrooms...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 4th, 2020 at 1:10 AM

Title: Re: Which Bhumi is synomous with the Theravad Arahant?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, the Buddha clearly makes this distinction in various suttas found in the Pali canon. So while Theravadins argue there is no difference in bodhi, they do not claim that arhats are party to the same knowledge as a buddha: example, Mogallana had to ask the Buddha where his mother had taken rebirth. Hence, the distinction is recognized in Theravada as well.

Astus said:

There can be many differences even among the arahants, depending on what qualities they possess. In what there is no difference between an arahant and a buddha is complete freedom from all attachments. The various special qualities of a buddha are not the result of liberation, but the accumulated merits/paramis, at least in Theravada.

Malcolm wrote:

This was your assertion, "An arahant in Theravada is free from all attachments. In Mahayana only a buddha has that level of freedom."

This assertion is mistaken.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 4th, 2020 at 3:29 AM

Title: Re: Practices for epidemics and pandemics

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

longsal works. gesar doesn't. that's the point in case you haven't noticed.

Malcolm wrote:

Gesar won't work for you, that's for sure.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 4th, 2020 at 8:07 AM

Title: Re: Which Bhumi is synomous with the Theravad Arahant?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This was your assertion, "An arahant in Theravada is free from all attachments. In Mahayana only a buddha has that level of freedom."

This assertion is mistaken.

Astus said:

Only buddhas are free from the two obscurations, meaning that even on the 10th bhumi there is some clinging to concepts. Arahants, in Theravada at least, are free from attachment to both physical and mental phenomena, so there is no room for any obscuration.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, there is.

That is why Mogallana had to ask the Buddha where his mother was. That's an obscuration.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 5th, 2020 at 12:25 AM

Title: Re: Which Bhumi is synomous with the Theravad Arahant?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, there is.

That is why Mogallana had to ask the Buddha where his mother was. That's an obscuration.

Astus said:

That is a story in the https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Yulanpen_Sutra, the closest event mentioned in the Pali Canon (<https://suttacentral.net/pv14/en/kiribathgoda>) is where Sariputta successfully helps his mother without the assistance of the Buddha. On the other hand, in the <https://suttacentral.net/sn54.9/en/sujato> the Buddha asked Ananda about why 'the mendicant Saṅgha seem so diminished'.

In any case, how do you define an obscuration that can be present without grasping at anything?

Malcolm wrote:

Non-afflictive ignorance satisfies that definition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 5th, 2020 at 12:27 AM

Title: Re: So your brother went down the Qanon hole...

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Trump is likely to win reelection.

Malcolm wrote:

Doesn't seem likely at this point in the game. Biden leads in Wisconsin, Michigan, and Nevada, and there are three million mail in ballots to count in PA, which favor Democrats.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 5th, 2020 at 12:28 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

DNS said:

7 states have not been called yet. Georgia, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Alaska, Nevada.

Trump is leading in Alaska, Georgia, North Carolina, Pennsylvania.

Biden is leading in Michigan, Wisconsin, Nevada.

If those leads hold out and they win those states, the final electoral vote will be Biden winning 270-268 in one of the closest elections ever.

Nevada might decide the election!

Malcolm wrote:

1,400,000 uncounted mail-in ballots in PA. This favors the Dems.

However, only 50% of electorate turned out, which means that 3 out of every 4 adult Americans are douches. Who precisely is a douche depends on who you voted for. But this means regardless of who one voted for, 50 percent of the US adult population are total losers officially, subtracting those deprived of voting privileges through voter suppression.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 5th, 2020 at 12:37 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.nytimes.com/2020/11/04/upshot/pennsylvania-election-results-ballots.html>

The Remaining Vote in Pennsylvania Appears to Be Overwhelmingly for Biden

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 5th, 2020 at 8:12 AM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as a intrinsic existance.

Content:

Artziebetter1 said:

the effect is the Cause, but as a expression of freewill. there is only unique immaterial consciousness, which due to infinite power can ilimit and atomize itself, yet remain transcendant to it. this is vijnaptimatratā.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is Hinduism, Advaita specifically. Your views, to which you are entitled, are found in no Buddhist School. You are in the wrong forum.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 5th, 2020 at 9:30 AM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as an intrinsic existence.

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

The part you are not understanding is that Shunyata = there is no such thing as cause and effect ultimately, they are relative designations. That's the very point. Do the analysis yourself, where are these ultimate beginnings and endings?

Your point of view as Malcolm says is something akin to Advaita.

You should try to study with a Buddhist teacher. How long have you been studying Buddhism now? A couple months? You are missing big chunks of these arguments.

Still waiting for you to show me the phenomena that have ultimate beginnings and endings, I'd love an example.

PadmaVonSamba said:

This thread can have an ending if it is locked

Artziebetter1 said:

my arguments throughout this thread haven't really been addressed though. it would be ashamed to lock it so soon.

Malcolm wrote:

They have been addressed. You just don't recognize it. Your point of view isn't acceptable in Buddhadharma, and does not even remotely resemble gzhan stong.

It's pretty clear you've no interest in learning anything, so I will leave this here. Even if I answered every objection you raised, you would not accept my replies. Your assertions are incoherent because your premises all stem from a priori assumptions. So, there is no point because there is no common basis for a discussion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 5th, 2020 at 9:33 AM

Title: Re: Which Bhumi is synonymous with the Theravad Arahant?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Non-afflictive ignorance satisfies that definition.

Astus said:

Since that means grasping at concepts like apprehender-apprehended, and agent-action-object, how would it be free from clinging?

Malcolm wrote:

Why would clinging be entailed? You certainly have not proven this to be so, you've merely asserted it. In any case, Mahayana rules here.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 5th, 2020 at 11:31 PM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Queequeg said:

Domestically, that might mean those of us in the blue states are going to have to respect that deeply religious people in Indiana don't want the values we live by in the Northeast or the West Coast. We need to respect the self determination, even if we don't like the outcome. And that goes for the red states.

That could be problematic for environmental issues. That's something we'll need to work on, but, the third rail social issues are positioning us for fights that are just not worth it.

Malcolm wrote:

The red states need to stop being welfare queens, and start paying their fair share of taxes.

As far as values go, with the present set up, I am more worried about the bat shit crazy religious right trying to impose their values on me and mine.

Environmental issues are non-negotiable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 5th, 2020 at 11:46 PM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as an intrinsic existence.

Content:

Artziebetter1 said:

Thanks.maybe Hinduism suits my beliefs best and I am not suited to Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I think this is a fair statement.

The view of Buddhism is dependent origination. This is not compatible with any theory of first causation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 6th, 2020 at 12:02 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Queequeg said:

localizing power, that's something that is going to be more difficult to work out.

Malcolm wrote:

I do not agree with this scenario.

Small government arguments are anti-democratic, they were 1786, and they still are.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 6th, 2020 at 12:33 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Queequeg said:

localizing power, that's something that is going to be more difficult to work out.

Malcolm wrote:

I do not agree with this scenario.

Small government arguments are anti-democratic, they were 1786, and they still are.

Queequeg said:

We're not talking about small or big government. We're talking about communities having self determination.

We live in different communities - different world views, different values, different morality, different ideas about how the communities should be governed. We've all basically established that we live in different communities in practice. Localizing power is just formalizing that.

As I said, we may not like the outcomes, but what other choices do we have? Forcing values on each other? That's undemocratic, too.

Malcolm wrote:

We already have local power.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 6th, 2020 at 6:29 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Dan74 said:

Not that you guys are going to care, but here we have a country that has probably even more diversity and is held together reasonably well. Partly due to a fairly loose confederation, partly due to the belief in the common project. Take a typical French Swiss urbanite from Geneva and put her together with a typical Swiss German speaking Protestant church-going farmer from the Canton of Glarus. In terms of their outlooks, views and day-to-day life, habits, food, they might as well be from different planets, or at least different centuries. And apart from that, they don't even speak a language in common. Yet, they vote in the same elections and manage not to hate each other.

Malcolm wrote:

You didn't fight a civil war. This is just 1860 one hundred and sixty years later.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 6th, 2020 at 6:32 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Dan74 said:

Some years back a US colleague from Maine told me how after school he went for one of those long road trips across the country which shattered his stereotypes of those "flyover country" places.

It seems that we get ever more locked into our echo-chambers, increasingly resistant to voices that sound different. Maybe this is something to look at rather than the incredible diversity we share?

An interesting practice I've found has been to deliberately go and interact with people who have very different views to mine. I spent some time with Patriot Prayer folks on their FB page, as Malcolm knows. Some of my old friends hold very strong opinions on issues and I regularly walk away from discussions with them online, because they start to get personal. Long way from mastering this! But I guess learning to see diversity, a different view as something fascinating rather than threatening, a different way of seeing things that can expand out horizons, has something going for it, IMO.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, oh edge lord. Easy to do since you don't have a burgeoning fascist movement complete anti-Semitic tropes rewritten into a bizarre conspiracy theory about cannibalistic democratic elites.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 6th, 2020 at 6:34 AM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as an intrinsic existence.

Content:

Artziebetter1 said:

Thanks.maybe Hinduism suits my beliefs best and I am not suited to Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I think this is a fair statement.

The view of Buddhism is dependent origination. This is not compatible with any theory of first causation.

Artziebetter1 said:

I think I should just stick with shaivism as madhyamika and kshanabhangavada seem false to me and I doubt I will ever get it.I had misunderstood shentong,though I understand madhyamika and Theravada dharma pretty well.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, you have a priori intellectual assumptions that cause you to misunderstand Buddhadharma. Simply put, your view is wholly eternalist and realist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 6th, 2020 at 9:59 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Dan74 said:

I get the US exceptionalism

Malcolm wrote:

It's bullshit. Our heritage is 500 years of genocide and 400 years of slavery.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 6th, 2020 at 9:39 PM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

a deranged scooby do villian

Queequeg said:

I realize that was a technical description, but if I was drinking coffee, I would have spit it out of my nose.

That's on a personal level. On a larger political level I think that we have to figure out a message that mitigates the numbers of people that jump headfirst into Trumpism..what form that would take I have no idea. Social media has weaponized a kind of corrosive idiocy that used to be confined to late night talk radio....what little capability existed for critical thought before, the landscape of today so discourages it, it's so much easier for people to go to some really dark places.

Losing this election will hopefully snap the ones who can be saved out of their derangement. The rest, the whackos, will eventually go back to living in their parents' basement, and then we can return to our regular eruptions of mass violence like isotopes shooting out of decaying uranium. Notice we haven't had any for a while? The psychos are tuned into the show. But its just time before they start sublimating that antisocial brain damage against fellow human beings again.

Malcolm wrote:

It's 1860. Don't forget that. The second Civil War started today.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 6th, 2020 at 9:50 PM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It's 1860. Don't forget that. The second Civil War started today.

Queequeg said:

People keep saying things like this. I guess it starts in Georgia this time?

Malcolm wrote:

Michigan, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 6th, 2020 at 9:59 PM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as a intrinsic existance.

Content:

Artziebetter1 said:

I understand kshanabhangavada to say that the cause must be destroyed before it's effects can arise.thats atleast classical Theravada .

The other option is production from other wich also cannot occur.

Malcolm wrote:

This objection only applies to moments with parts: arising, abiding, and perishing. Partless moments cannot be critiqued by such an analysis, they cannot even be refuted by Madhyamaka analysis. They are not an ultimate of freedom from extremes, but they are a conventional ultimate of analytical reduction.

Further, in Madhyamaka, causes and effects are understood to be neither the same nor different, for example, milk and curd, and causation by a single cause is also rejected.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 6th, 2020 at 10:20 PM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as a intrinsic existance.

Content:

Artziebetter1 said:

Anyway,I think by applying mipham's arguments against production to subtle mind,you can believe in a permanent

Malcolm wrote:

The cittasamtana is a series of partless moments supported on conditions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 6th, 2020 at 11:26 PM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Fast forward to 15:12. These people are so f#$king crazy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 7th, 2020 at 12:10 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 7th, 2020 at 12:11 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 7th, 2020 at 12:41 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It's 1860. Don't forget that. The second Civil War started today.

Queequeg said:

People keep saying things like this. I guess it starts in Georgia this time?

Malcolm wrote:
Michigan, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 7th, 2020 at 3:09 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Just watch what it turns into once Trump is no longer encumbered by political office....either he flames out entirely or becomes some truly scary focal point of far right organization. Or, maybe he tries to build up and run in 2024, I don't know.

Ayu said:

Probably I'm naive, but I really thought he'll go to jail once he is no longer protected by the state of being president.

Malcolm wrote:

he will at least be indicted for money laundering and tax evasion, he is being investigated by the Scottish government on that score; he is in deep trouble and so is his whole organization.

it is possible he could wind up being tried and convicted. Something I would very much like to see.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 7th, 2020 at 3:18 AM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as a intrinsic existance.

Content:

Artziebetter1 said:

Vijnaptimatratā is not a conventional self no because it is absolute and is not the physical buddhi mind...

Malcolm wrote:

This is Samkhya. There is no purusha in Buddhism. The Samkhya/Yoga criticism of Buddhism is that we mistake resting in sattva guna for liberation, and never transcend prakṛti.

Advaita largely concurs, but they reject the Samkhya notion that there are infinite purushas. For them, there is only one: brahman.

But in Buddhadharma we do not utilize this model of the 25 tattvas, with buddhi on down being material and insentient. There is no such concept in Buddhadharma.

Further, vijñāptimātra means "designation only." You are mistaking vijñāpti for vijñāna. From Edgerton:

vijñāpti

vijñāpti [Cologne record ID=13753] [Printed book page 485,2] vijñāpti, f. (in Skt. generally from an inferior to a superior, implying a request; Pali viññatti), (1) proclamation, announcement, making known (a mg. found also in Skt.): Mv 1887 = Tib. rnam par rig byed (wrongly pw 7.374); abhāvasamudgata-°ti-śabdo niścarati Samādh 8.11, the sound of proclaiming (all things as) arisen from non-becoming came forth; svapnopama-°tim Gv 82.19, and many like cpds. in the foll.; (divyaśrotra-°ti- Gv 251.10, announcement of (the gift, or faculty, of) supernatural power of hearing; Mv i.311.6, possibly request, see s.v. prajñāpti 3; (2) in Lañk, relative, exoteric knowledge, = vijñāna in this mg. and prajñāpti 4, q.v.: e.g. Lañk 270.1 lokam °ti-mātram; 274.10 °ti-mātram tribhavam; 269.12, see gotra (4); see Suzuki, Studies, 440.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 7th, 2020 at 5:54 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

明安 Myoan said:

Well, emerging from my hermit hut to say I think we're witnessing the US tilting into fascism, the situation being what it is with the RNC, the newly conservative Supreme Court, and a GOP thus far unwilling to disadvantage themselves by opposing Trump's wishes.

I hope I'm mistaken, and good luck to everybody.

Malcolm wrote:

Trump is out.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 7th, 2020 at 6:33 AM

Title: Re: why I believe Tathagatagarbha exists as an intrinsic existence.

Content:

Artziebetter1 said:

No, Malcolm. what I described is Advaita shaivism. buddhi is a creation of absolute awareness and not a existing substance separate from that reality like Vedanta asserts, which this isn't a true Advaita. this is basic abhonavagupta.

Malcolm wrote:

You should learn to read more carefully.

My point still remains the same however. Whether you want to go with the 25 tattvas of Samkhya, or the 36 Tattvas of Shaivism matters very little.

Your understanding of Mipham is quite distorted (Mipham is a Madhyamaka author), and your understanding of Buddhism is also quite mistaken.

You are basically wasting everyone's time here, including your own.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 7th, 2020 at 7:49 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

DNS said:

We don't know yet, where this is going; it could be a judicial decision.

Malcolm wrote:

Unlikely. Biden beat Trump in PA. Game over.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 7th, 2020 at 7:50 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Michigan, actually.

Queequeg said:

That's not a civil war. That's an idiot with a gun.

Malcolm wrote:

All civil wars start with one idiot with a gun. Case in point: Fort Sumter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 7th, 2020 at 9:45 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

A lot of that depends on where you live. I mean, there are places here that have always been like that. When I lived in Tulsa, OK as a teen for a bit I got accused of participation in Satanic Rituals for having a mohawk. Part of my concern is having family in public service, which already makes us a little heightened in terms of awareness about security, etc.

tobes said:

Just be careful! Stay concerned. Things will probably settle after a while.

Johnny Dangerous said:

I live in a super liberal place now. Probably as safe an area as you could ask for in this time, for which I feel seriously fortunate right now.

Malcolm wrote:

It's awesome being in the coastal "elite."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 7th, 2020 at 7:54 PM

Title: Re: Online Sakya Guru

Content:

Dharmalight889 said:

Does anyone know of any online Sakya teachers? I have been interested in learning more and practicing in the lineage, although there are no centers near me. Any recommendations would be appreciated.

Malcolm wrote:

Khenpo Migmar, Sakya Cebter, Cambridge, Ma.

<http://www.sakya.net>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 8th, 2020 at 3:08 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Norwegian said:

Trump camp, with Giuliani and the other maggots, are naturally enough claiming it is not over.

Brunelleschi said:

Are you even American?

Queequeg said:

Well, you don't have to be American to recognize despicable human character.

That said, folks, let's keep it civil. If there is anything that Biden's victory stands for, its a rejection of the inflammatory rhetoric of the last four years.

I'll take that medicine now, too.

Malcolm wrote:

Even so, Trump is still a whiny little bitch.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 8th, 2020 at 7:55 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Mantrik said:

Whatever you think of Trump he is entitled to his day in court.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, when he is indicted on charges of tax evasion, money laundering, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 8th, 2020 at 8:01 AM

Title: Re: Online Sakya Guru

Content:

Dharmalight889 said:

Does anyone know of any online Sakya teachers? I have been interested in learning more and practicing in the lineage, although there are no centers near me. Any recommendations would be appreciated.

Malcolm wrote:

Khenpo Migmar, Sakya Cebter, Cambridge, Ma.

<http://www.sakya.net>

Dharmalight889 said:

I checked this website link and it seems that his classes are in person except the online courses he offers over various subjects. Do you know if he holds weekly classes online or were you suggesting the online course options?

Malcolm wrote:

I suggest you get on his mailing list.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 8th, 2020 at 11:11 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

PeterC said:

We've won a small battle. We are still losing the war.

Malcolm wrote:

No, because Abhrams is in GA, and we will flip the senate come Jan 5th.

And with that, we can pack SCOTUS.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 8th, 2020 at 7:42 PM

Title: Re: Congratulations President elect Joe Biden

Content:

shaunc said:

I've always wondered why the slaves are concerned about who owns the plantation. Do you honestly believe that the new fella is the great white hope that's going to lead the western world to the promised land.

Malcolm wrote:

No, but he is 1) a competent executive 2) has Obama on speed dial 3) possesses empathy 4) and actually knows how to run a government. These four factors are lacking in the clown who is in the process of being evicted by the people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 8th, 2020 at 9:11 PM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Brunelleschi said:

There is little to no data to support this. More minorities voted for Trump than in the 2016 election and the overlap between the different political parties is larger than ever (see attached images). Furthermore, America is currently engaged in seven (7) different wars.

Malcolm wrote:

Most of minorities that support trump do so because of the abortion issue. This is actually the key wedge issue in American politics used as the proxy issue for all other disagreements.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 9th, 2020 at 6:29 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Bundokji said:

The example i provided is claims i saw on the forum when Trump caught COVID, while in other cases, such news are met with more sympathy.

Malcolm wrote:

Trump contracted covid because he is an idiot, no karmavipaka involved.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 9th, 2020 at 10:23 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Bundokji said:

I tend to agree with Carl Jung when he said something in the lines of: its better to act as if God exists, otherwise, something more sinister will take its place.

Malcolm wrote:

That's Pascal's Wager, nothing to do with Jung.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 9th, 2020 at 10:26 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Bundokji said:

You brought fascism into all of this, not me.

Malcolm wrote:

Fascism has been central to the discussion concerning Trump on thus forum since 2015. Trump is a fascist. Since you assert you don't frequent this forum much, you should be more aware of the history of the discussion you've inserted yourself into.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 9th, 2020 at 1:44 PM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That's Pascal's Wager, nothing to do with Jung.

Bundokji said:

This what i was referring to:

The idea of God is an absolutely necessary psychological function of an irrational nature, which has nothing whatever to do with the question of God's existence. The human intellect can never answer this question, still less give any proof of God. Moreover such proof is superfluous, for the idea of an all-powerful divine Being is present everywhere, unconsciously if not consciously, because it is an archetype. There is in the psyche some superior power, and if it is not consciously a god, it is the "belly" at least, in St Paul's words. I therefore consider it wiser to acknowledge the idea of God consciously; for, if we do not, something else is made God, usually something quite inappropriate and stupid such as only an "enlightened" intellect could hatch forth.

/

Malcolm wrote:

I see. So Jung accepted Pascal's wager. Not surprising, he was t very bright.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 9th, 2020 at 1:48 PM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

I am going to be honest with you though that i fail to see the added value of emphasizing that Trump is a fascist even if i grant you the accuracy of the description based on faith in your knowledge.

I used to be one of the people who wanted to hold off on the "fascist" label,

Malcolm wrote:

And you will recall, I applied it immediately, and not because Trump,was a "Republican." There used to be Republicans who weren't fascists, but they've become rare.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 9th, 2020 at 1:52 PM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Bundokji said:

elections results are currently disputed and what we have is media projection of Joe Biden as the next president.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they are not. Even Melania is telling Trump it's time to go home. 10 of Trump's lawsuits were tossed out this weekend. The rest is just stalling and trying to save face. He's done. The people have spoken, and apart from sullen losers, the people were dancing in the streets yesterday and there was celebration around the world.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 9th, 2020 at 8:34 PM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

amanitamusc said:

Sadly even when he\she mentions anything Buddhist it is from some books read and not her/his teachers. Another book Buddhist?

PeterC said:

Sounds like he/she would be more at home on DWE.

Malcolm wrote:

Chances are he/she/they is already there.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 9th, 2020 at 8:40 PM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

FiveSkandhas said:

"Fascism" has become a notoriously vague and loaded term for "Generally bad authoritarian right-wing stuff."

Malcolm wrote:

Wallace, who was FDR's right hand man during our struggle with fascism in Europe, presciently wrote:

The obvious types of American fascists are dealt with on the air and in the press. These demagogues and stooges are fronts for others. Dangerous as these people may be, they are not so significant as thousands of other people who have never been mentioned. The really dangerous American fascists are not those who are hooked up directly or indirectly with the Axis. The FBI has its finger on those. The dangerous American fascist is the man who wants to do in the United States in an American way what Hitler did in Germany in a Prussian way. The American fascist would prefer not to use violence. His method is to poison the channels of public information. With a fascist the problem is never how best to present the truth to the public but how best to use the news to deceive the public into giving the fascist and his group more money or more power.

If we define an American fascist as one who in case of conflict puts money and power ahead of human beings, then there are undoubtedly several million fascists in the United States. There are probably several hundred thousand if we narrow the definition to include only those who in their search for money and power are ruthless and deceitful. Most American fascists are enthusiastically supporting the war effort. They are doing this even in those cases where they hope to have profitable connections with German chemical firms after the war ends. They are patriotic in time of war because it is to their interest to be so, but in time of peace they follow power and the dollar wherever they may lead.

American fascism will not be really dangerous until there is a purposeful coalition among the cartelists, the deliberate poisoners of public information, and those who stand for the K.K.K. type of demagoguery.

https://www.cbsd.org/cms/lib/PA01916442/Centricity/Domain/1864/Henry%20Wallace_The%20Danger%20of%20American%20Fascism.pdf

Any questions?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 9th, 2020 at 11:36 PM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Dan74 said:

The one concrete thing I have heard of was denial of access. I've read that it was not an outright denial, but an argument over how close of an access one should have. Does anyone have more detail on that?

Malcolm wrote:

Trumpsters were upset they were told they had to stand 20 feet away, cause of covid. When they complained and the courts sided with them, they started to gum up the works by challenging every mail in ballot once they were allowed to stand 6 feet away.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 10th, 2020 at 12:00 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Dan74 said:

The one concrete thing I have heard of was denial of access. I've read that it was not an outright denial, but an argument over how close of an access one should have. Does anyone have more detail on that?

Malcolm wrote:

Trumpsters were upset they were told they had to stand 20 feet away, cause of covid.

When they complained and the courts sided with them, they started to gum up the works by challenging every mail in ballot once they were allowed to stand 6 feet away.

Dan74 said:

20 feet seems like a lot of social distancing. Why 20 feet exactly? I thought the commonly advised distance was 1.5m or 5 feet.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, the main point is that poll watchers are just there to watch. They can watch ballots being opened and processed from 20 feet away:

The dispute has been over how close observers can get to the canvassing proceedings, not whether observers are allowed to be present. Initially, a trial court denied the Trump campaign's request for closer observation in Philadelphia, finding on Nov. 3 that by the campaign's own admission, it had been given the opportunity to observe "the opening and sorting of ballots."

The next day, a state court reversed that ruling, allowing observers within 6 feet, "while adhering to all COVID-19 protocols, including, wearing masks and maintaining social distancing." Philadelphia's election board then appealed the ruling to the state Supreme Court, saying that it had complied with the law and that closer inspection "jeopardizes both the safety of the City Defendants' canvass, plus the privacy of voters."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 10th, 2020 at 12:06 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Queequeg said:

There has been no evidence presented of fraud or that anything else shady happened with the election. If there was, you can bet Trump would be exploiting it. Instead, the best his henchman, Giuliani, has been able to do so far is have a press conference in front of a dildo store.

No, Trump is gearing up to undermine the entire government by sowing doubt about the election with bald lies. He doesn't care about the courts unless they enable him. If they don't, his plan is to bypass them.

This man is not playing by the rules. He is undermining the rules at every turn.

Bundokji said:

You are technically correct, but when playing by the rules does not always convey honesty, things get more complicated.

Take how Bernie was treated in 2016 and during the primaries. They played by the rules, but to their own advantage caring less about what average people aspire to. The way they ganged up against Bernie has similarities with what is happening with Trump now.

Malcolm wrote:

No, there are no similarities. The Democrats (and the GOP) have constitutional right to rig their own primary. Bernie's case was thrown out.

Bundokji said:

Bernie on the other hand is too decent to become a leader which is the irony of destiny.

Malcolm wrote:

I am a Berniecrat. Bernie wanted us all to vote for Biden. So we did. Bernie wanted to be the Dem nominee in 2020, very much so. And he THE leader of the progressive wing of the Democratic Party.

Bundokji said:

So, there are other factors plays in Trump's favor, or at least, makes his claims more believable among his supporters.

Malcolm wrote:

Trump supporters will believe anything he says, whether the claims are believable or not. Under what rock have you been living for the past four years?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 10th, 2020 at 12:32 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Dan74 said:

It was just not clear what precisely was the issue of contention.

Malcolm wrote:

The issue of contention was that Trump was losing. Now he has lost. Apparently, at 3:00 PM today he is going to announce that Bill Maher is was right, and that he is not leaving, no matter what, if the following tweet is to be believed:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 10th, 2020 at 12:48 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Bundokji said:

I think Trump genuinely believes that this election has been rigged against him.

Malcolm wrote:

No he doesn't. Whatever Trump accuses someone of doing is something that he is doing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 10th, 2020 at 1:00 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, there are no similarities. The Democrats (and the GOP) have constitutional right to rig their own primary. Bernie's case was thrown out.

Bundokji said:

Having constitutional right to rig is not acting in good faith.

Malcolm wrote:

Bernie was not and has never been a Democrat. This time there were no shenanigans like 2016. Bernie lost fair and square. The Democrats chose Biden.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 10th, 2020 at 1:02 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, there are no similarities. The Democrats (and the GOP) have constitutional right to rig their own primary. Bernie's case was thrown out.

Bundokji said:

Having constitutional right to rig is not acting in good faith.

Queequeg said:

I'm not familiar with that right.

Malcolm wrote:

The Dems can rig their own nominating process however they like. So can the GOP. Donna Brazil and co. rigged the convention against the Bern in 2016. Old history, but it did not happen in 2020. Bernie lost to Biden fair and square.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 10th, 2020 at 2:11 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Queequeg said:

That's not a right, let alone a constitutional right. I get what you're saying, but that's not the right terminology. Rights, in the legal sense, are very specific privileges.

Bundokji said:

I agree, and for those who do not act in good faith, its more a sense of entitlement than anything else.

Malcolm wrote:

Trump has no reason to expect anyone will treat him with good faith. He has never treated anyone with good faith in his entire life. That being said, he is being treated with good faith in its entirety. Clinton did not contest the election and so on. Trump was given an opportunity to show he was a competent executive for four years. He failed, and he was voted out of office. All your whinging does nothing to change this fact.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 10th, 2020 at 8:08 AM

Title: Re: alaya vs. alaya vijnana

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Can some kind person point out the precise distinction here, and perhaps give a reading suggestion? I think I understand the basics, but would like to understand this question a bit better.

Malcolm wrote:

The alaya is free of sense contact; the alayavijnana possesses sense contact. That's the difference. It can be found in Bodhisattvabhumi.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 10th, 2020 at 8:53 AM

Title: Re: Dissolution of the elements

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

Earth, water, fire, and air are terms used to describe the dissolution of the body towards the time of death.

I'm curious about whether the "fire" element is even regarded as part of the composition of cold-blooded animals such as reptiles, fish, and amphibians.

Any thoughts on this?

Malcolm wrote:

Metabolism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 10th, 2020 at 9:47 AM

Title: Re: alaya vs. alaya vijnana

Content:

FiveSkandhas said:

Excuse my ignorance but isn't the word "alaya" part of the word "alaya vijnana" (i.e., "storehouse" and "storehouse-consciousness," respectively?) This suggests a grammatical relationship of modification rather than opposition, at least to my ignorant, braying common-sense-stunted way of reading.

After some frustrated googling I can't find anything suggesting the use of the word "alaya" in opposition to "alaya vijnana". Of course I am not a Yogacara scholar, much to my chagrin, so perhaps one of you could clear up for this yokel (me) how "x" and "x+y" are in a "versus" relationship.

Your kind efforts to assuage my mulish, dullwitted ineptitude would be most humbly appreciated.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, you can read the bodhisattvabhumi for starters, where this distinction is made.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 10th, 2020 at 9:48 AM

Title: Re: alaya vs. alaya vijnana

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

So Malcolm-La, do discursive thoughts (not sense activity) count as "part" alaya, or is alaya a neutral state free of thought?

So if we take the Lojong instruction for example, my understanding is that this is essentially an instruction on shamatha without a sign, and does not refer to the general concept of Alaya-Vijnana.

Malcolm wrote:

It is strictly a neutral state free of concepts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 10th, 2020 at 10:28 AM

Title: Re: alaya vs. alaya vijnana

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

BTW, what translations exist of the Yogacarabhumi, and which is recommended?

Malcolm wrote:

There is only one.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 10th, 2020 at 8:40 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Danny said:

But not the accumulation and dispersement of merit, which can also manifest as material phenomena.

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on the type of merit. Most merit is quite perishable. Merit is just positive karma.

Danny said:

When you say depends, your referring to the appearance of compassion as openness and the eight gates of spontaneous presence?' The gate of manifesting as compassion, as lights, as kayas, as wisdom, as nonduality, as freedom from extremes, as the impure gate of samsara and as the pure gate of wisdom?

A non-duality duality.

Malcolm wrote:

No, the difference is whether merit is dedicated free of the three spheres or not. The former merit is imperishable, the latter is perishable..

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 10th, 2020 at 11:46 PM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Sādhaka said:

It sounds like he's implying that the constitution is a threat to democracy.... And it would be, I suppose, if we live under a constitutional republic rather than a "democracy".

Malcolm wrote:

If the GOP tries to pull this stunt, having lost both the electoral college AND the popular vote, this country will perish in the ensuing conflict. The only time in recent history where this chain of events was even a true remote possibility was in 2000, when Bush "won" by 500 votes, and the Supreme Court engaged in deliberate vote suppression.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 11th, 2020 at 12:39 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Sādhaka said:

Hm, more rioting at any rate, likely worse than a few months ago at least.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it would perish. Maybe not all at once, but it would not survive this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 11th, 2020 at 6:38 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Danny said:

When you say depends, your referring to the appearance of compassion as openness and the eight gates of spontaneous presence?' The gate of manifesting as compassion, as lights, as kayas, as wisdom, as nonduality, as freedom from extremes, as the impure gate of samsara and as the pure gate of wisdom?

A non-duality duality.

Malcolm wrote:

No, the difference is whether merit is dedicated free of the three spheres or not. The former merit is imperishable, the latter is perishable..

Danny said:

That's interesting, I thought there was no such divisions radiating out of the rupakaya.

Malcolm wrote:

Merit is just good karma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 11th, 2020 at 9:23 PM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

PeterC said:

RBG said, not many years back, that the US constitution isn't a great example to look to if you're trying to write a new constitution now. Completely correct statement: it's a complex and unwieldy contraption distorted by decades of aggressive interpretation and held together by flaky precedents. She was of course attacked extensively because of it.

Queequeg said:

It is the oldest living democratic constitution. Written by men who had letters sent by horseback and boat, and had to make their own clothes.

No one buying a new car would look into the Model T.

The problem is, we are barely held together by this constitution. Resetting would likely result in strife, dissolution. We'll keep this thing together with duct tape and gum for as long as possible.

Malcolm wrote:
Time for a rewrite.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, November 12th, 2020 at 12:09 AM
Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Caoimhghín said:

But the only-vaguely-unofficial State Religion of America is Constitutionalism and Constitutional Fundamentalism with a Christian varnish.

"Yeah, but what nonsense did they intend?"

Likely that women wouldn't vote and their democracy would be restricted to ethnic preferables, much like Ancient Greek democracy.

Constitutionalists won't give that up without a long fight. The South can't even admit they lost a war. Trump can't admit he lost an election. There are people who would never acknowledge the new constitution even if there were a purely democratic process underpinning it, even if they got to participate in that process itself.

It's holy writ. Eight out of ten American Christian cats agree that it is "divinely inspired."

Malcolm wrote:
It's still needs to be rewritten.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, November 12th, 2020 at 3:02 AM
Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)
Content:

Queequeg said:

The acute problem we presently have is that a large segment of the population apparently doesn't even wants to have a democracy - even as they wrap themselves in flags and use words like "freedom".

Malcolm wrote:
Libertarianism and democracy are mutually exclusive. Libertarians deliberately undermine democracy at every turn because they do not actually accept rule by the people, they have no respect for the principles of self-government under which one understands a democracy to function.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 12th, 2020 at 3:10 AM

Title: Re: Cults

Content:

FiveSkandhas said:

Another "issue" with this factor is that if you practice Vajrayana Buddhism, Guru Yoga is part of the package. Guru Yoga is very focused on total devotionism to the Guru, who one is supposed to view as a Buddha and a basically perfected being.

Malcolm wrote:

As a long time Vajrayāna practitioner, I have to tell you this is something of a misconception. It is understood in Vajrayāna that we are not able to see our teachers this way, and so we visualize that Vajradhara, or Guru Rinpoche, etc. as our guru. The rest of the time, we try to maintain as pure a view of our guru as we can, understand the flaws we see to be impure vision. But keep in mind, as a Vajrayāna practitioner, we are also supposed to have a pure view of all sentient beings, not only our teacher.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 12th, 2020 at 5:52 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Queequeg said:

The people I have in mind are the Trumpists who show up to those rallies. I think you're giving them too much credit when you attribute some articulable ideology to what they're doing. They're not libertarians, except that maybe they subscribe to Ron Paul's gold bug newsletter.

Malcolm wrote:

I am talking about the people with the money and influence, the Kochs, etc., and yes, so-called conservatism in the GOP today is basically libertarianism, basically rehashed Bircherism. If you think the libertarian trend in conservative circles is accidental, well, libertarianism is the doctrine of Calhoun and other pro-slavery people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 12th, 2020 at 7:33 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I am talking about the people with the money and influence, the Kochs, etc., and yes, so-called conservatism in the GOP today is basically libertarianism, basically rehashed Bircherism. If you think the libertarian trend in conservative circles is accidental, well, libertarianism is the doctrine of Calhoun and other pro-slavery people.

Queequeg said:

I wasn't talking about them. They're not Trumpists. And they're not a significant portion of the population. They have outsized influence because they can buy mouthpieces and bull horns, but their votes don't move the needle.

Malcolm wrote:

They influence the needle because of how they condition people to vote.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 12th, 2020 at 10:09 AM

Title: Re: Cults

Content:

FiveSkandhas said:

Thank you for the correction. This is valuable information.

May I ask, is this a mostly "universal" Vajrayana outlook? Or does it vary by sect to some extent? Because I have read a lot suggesting more literal and strict devotion to one's personal, human guru.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a universal outlook.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 13th, 2020 at 10:03 PM

Title: Re: The Two Truths Debate - Poll & Discussion

Content:

Ayu said:

What nobody seems to know: Tsongkhapa didn't explain emptiness on an intellectual cognitive level.

Malcolm wrote:

Not exactly. He devoted many pages to explaining emptiness on an intellectual level. His writing on emptiness is not confined to Lam rim chen mo.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 13th, 2020 at 10:14 PM

Title: Re: The Two Truths Debate - Poll & Discussion

Content:

avatamsaka3 said:

So what is your understanding of the difference between the two perspectives?

Manjushri said:

As I mentioned in the first post, I'm at an early stage of exploring Tibetan Buddhism, therefore I cannot claim fluency and extensive knowledge on the subject, at all. Still, I think Sonam Thakchoe's book does a very good job at making the issue understandable to a degree for laymen's minds.

...

In a resumed way, for Tsongkhapa, enlightenment implies recognizing the validity of empirical truths, since the knowledge in which enlightenment is based requires empirical grounding, given their interrelated condition. Gorampa on the other hand refuses to accept it and proclaims that wisdom is only attained by getting rid altogether of the empirical truths and senses.

Malcolm wrote:

Part of the difference between the two is the tradition of tshad ma each master followed. Tsongkhapa followed the epistemological school of Sangphu founded by Phyapa with its complicated system of blo rigs; Gorampa followed Sapan, who rejected the former system in its entirety in his Treasury of Authority (tshad ma rigs gter). Sapan further asserted that Buddhist epistemology was of no value in liberation.

The fundamental difference between Tsongkhapa and Gorampa boils down to simple difference of opinion over whether or not one is to give precedence to the object of cognition or the cognition. Chandrakirti remarks that all dharmas bear two natures, one ultimate and one relative. He then goes on to say that relative truths are objects of mistaken cognitions; while ultimate truths are objects of veridical cognitions. The Gelukpas stress the former, that is the object; the Sakyapas stress the former, the cognition. When it comes to faithfulness to the Indian treatises, Gorampa wins hands down, IMO. The vast majority of Gorampa's arguments concern how Tsongkhapa is overriding, through reasonings, the plain intent of the Indian masters—indeed, at one point, Gorampa basically faults Tsongkhapa for over-finessing many points needlessly. But of course, it is just this finesse that Geluks celebrate in Tsongkhapa's writings.

I encourage you to study the Indian masters before getting wrapped up in Tibetan polemics about Madhyamaka. Then, once you have gained complete familiarity with the Indian masters, then return to the Tibetan masters and see with whom you agree.

Also, Thakchoe is a Gelukpa, his sentiments are plainly polemical and he does not really read Gorampa objectively. Gendun Chopel's presentation of Madhyamaka in Madman's Middle Way is far more objective.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 14th, 2020 at 12:43 AM

Title: Re: The Two Truths Debate - Poll & Discussion

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

...

Manjushri said:

Thank you for the comprehensive answer Malcolm, that was very clear and informative. If I may ask, do you lean more towards understanding conventional truth perhaps simply as a pedagogical device to direct oneself and help cognize ultimate reality, or do you view it as mutually interdependent with ultimate truth and therefore equally valid? Or maybe you have an altogether different perspective? If you prefer not to answer that's fine, I merely thought that perhaps having presented different looks from various users would help other people comprehend the rich interpretational tradition of the issue.

Malcolm wrote:

I follow the approach of Sakya Jetsun Dragpa Gyaltsen, who wrote:

The moon in the water is not the moon in the sky,
but without the moon there is no reflection;
similarly, the nature of all things is taught as the two truths.

There are no dharmas not included in the two truths.
Because the nature is not true and not false, grasping to the two truths is deluded.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 14th, 2020 at 8:25 AM

Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Libertarianism and democracy are mutually exclusive. Libertarians deliberately undermine democracy at every turn because they do not actually accept rule by the people, they have no respect for the principles of self-government under which one understands a democracy to function.

Sādhaka said:

“Under which one understands”....

But isn't libertarianism the epitome of self-governance (ideally that is, as not many actually follow the ideas they claim to follow), whereas democracy would be mob-rule?

Malcolm wrote:

Libertarians understand the self-governance of the polis to be a limitation on their individual liberty. Hence they oppose democracy at every turn.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, November 14th, 2020 at 8:27 AM
Title: Re: POTUS poll #4 (revised)
Content:

Sādhaka said:
I've seen the Koch bros. come up a couple times today.

Are Koch's really into Ron Paul's Austrian economics?

Malcolm wrote:
Yes

Sādhaka said:
Or are they into keynesian neoconservatism like Bush & co....?

Malcolm wrote:
No.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, November 14th, 2020 at 6:32 PM
Title: Re: Congratulations President elect Joe Biden
Content:

Sādhaka said:
Then again, maybe you guys have access to info from a inner-circle that I don't have access to....

Malcolm wrote:
Yeah, it's called "newspapers of record," where real journalism is practiced, rather than the fever swamps of the internet, from which arises pestilences like the alt-right and it's red-headed stepchild, Qanon.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, November 15th, 2020 at 8:31 PM
Title: Re: Setrap and Padmasambhava
Content:
Toenail said:
Hey,

I wonder about the connection of Setrap with Guru Rinpoche. There is the story of Setrap sewing Padmasambhavas shoe on his head etc, I wonder where this story comes from... It does not seem likely to be a story from a geluk source etc. Any info on their relationship or sources etc is appreciated.

TN

Malcolm wrote:

Setrap is sarma era protector. Gyalpo class.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 16th, 2020 at 1:43 AM

Title: Re: Namkhai Norbu lineage

Content:

Danny said:

Then we wouldn't be transmitting his lineage, we would be transmitting our own lineage. Does that make any sense?

Malcolm wrote:

No, since all of ChNN's teachings come from someone else.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 16th, 2020 at 4:05 AM

Title: Re: Namkhai Norbu lineage

Content:

Rasputin said:

I understand no lineage holder succeeds Namkhai Norbu. That means no one will be initiated into Rinpoche's teachings anymore, no Song of the Vajra, no Ganapuja, no nothing.

Tilopa said:

It seems his son is giving transmission to new students

<https://www.tsegyalgar.org/tsegyalgar-east/newsletters/transmission-with-yeshi-silvano-namkhai/>

Malcolm wrote:

That was cancelled.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 16th, 2020 at 4:32 AM

Title: Re: Namkhai Norbu lineage

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

Maybe it possible that there is still a direct linear link to Namkai Norbu's own teacher, via other teachers? In other words, maybe you have some dharma cousins you don't know about, and the teachings and transmissions can continue.

Malcolm wrote:

This issue here is his own teaching cycle, called Longsal Khandro Nyinthik. He did not leave an heir apparent for this cycle of teachings who is interested in passing that cycle on. This does not mean that these teachings will not be passed on, however.

Everything else is available from other teachers.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 18th, 2020 at 6:33 PM

Title: Re: Namkhai Norbu lineage

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

It certainly does not help in the least when regular members are told that they are samaya-bound or otherwise morally obliged to keep paying the fee till they drop dead or the world ends.

PeterC said:

I've never heard that from the DC - it sounds like you have? If I had, I would be out of it tomorrow, and would find other ways to support ChNNr's work instead. It's not about the money, I don't care about the money, you just can't have sanghas saying things like that. Now ChNNr did ask explicitly that everyone become a member of the DC, that was clearly his intent, but you've got to draw a line somewhere: if necessary I would find another way to fulfill that obligation.

Malcolm wrote:

SMS people have a samaya to support the DC, regular members do not. On the other hand, I don't think even ChNN anticipated that the DC was going to stop dead in its tracks. So, as far as I am concerned all bets are off. That said, I will continue to pay my dues for now.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 18th, 2020 at 10:25 PM

Title: Re: Namkhai Norbu lineage

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

On the other hand, I don't think even ChNN anticipated that the DC was going to stop dead in its tracks.

kirtu said:

So sad to hear. Nonetheless this was clearly foreshadowed.

You and others can do nothing to salvage the situation? You have already said that in terms of transmission the fundamental empowerments are available through other teachers. Perhaps organizing retreats to keep the practice alive and vital?

Malcolm wrote:

With SMS thus is true, not for Longsal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 19th, 2020 at 1:50 AM

Title: Re: Namkhai Norbu lineage

Content:

kirtu said:

So his terma and practices revealed in his dreams are lost as a practice beyond the current people to whom they were given.

Malcolm wrote:

We will see.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 19th, 2020 at 8:32 AM

Title: Re: Narak Kong shak

Content:

cjdevries said:

Does one need an empowerment in order to recite the Narak Kong Shak?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes,

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 21st, 2020 at 8:13 PM

Title: Re: So your brother went down the Qanon hole...

Content:

kirtu said:

The attraction of this cult is beyond comprehension and indicates very serious problems with people being able to analyze information and engage in serious thought in the US.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

And Germany, where it is becoming very popular amongst the anti-masker/antivaxxer crowd.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 22nd, 2020 at 12:09 AM

Title: Re: How is shentong different from tirthika doctrine

Content:

Artziebetter1 said:

Does shentong believe in a trans personal ground of being that is permanently enduring?and has Buddha qualities ?

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. Buddha-nature is personal, not transpersonal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 22nd, 2020 at 6:07 AM

Title: Re: How is shentong different from tirthika doctrine

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Here's a link to Tsadra Foundation's website dedicated to the various interpretations of Buddha Nature:

<https://buddhanature.tsadra.org/index.php/Explore>

It doesn't promote a single view, but gives a gamut of perspectives.

Malcolm wrote:

None of these presentations assert tathagatagarbha is transpersonal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 22nd, 2020 at 9:55 AM

Title: Re: How is shentong different from tirthika doctrine

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

None of these presentations assert tathagatagarbha is transpersonal.

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

<https://buddhanature.tsadra.org/index.php/Questions> Critics of the theory would say buddha-nature is the same as the self because buddha-nature teachings use positive language to describe an "essence" or an "innate characteristic" of a person. Some who accept buddha-nature argue that they are provisional teachings, that while they do seem to suggest a self, they nevertheless have practical value and, in any case, are not meant to be taken seriously—and there are scriptures to support this position. Others, however, disagree and hold to the buddha-nature teachings as a definitive teaching, and they maintain that in no way is buddha-nature a doctrine of a self. Those who advocate for this view teach that buddha-nature is not a matter of an individual essence; it is instead a universal reality—no one suggests that there are separate buddha-natures in each person. Individuals are subject to dependent origination—our existence comes about through causes and conditions and therefore cannot be said to be truly individually existent. But buddha-nature is not conditioned. It is simply a basic characteristic of having a mind and consciousness, and for this reason it cannot be said to belong to us as individuals. It is more like air—we all have it in our lungs, but it is not our own individual air.

(Underlining mine)

Malcolm wrote:

The red part means it is not transpersonal. All fires are hot. But the heat of this fire is not the heat of that fire.

The rest of this person's sentence is incoherent and contradicts the part outlined in red.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 22nd, 2020 at 10:01 AM

Title: Re: How is shentong different from tirthika doctrine

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

That is not what it says.

Malcolm wrote:

This is not a canonical text, not even a pandita's opinion; thus is just some person's rather sloppily written synopsis. As such it does meet the standard for being taken seriously as an assertion that tathagatagarbha is some kind of transpersonal reality, apart from in some ignorant person's febrile imagination.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 22nd, 2020 at 10:06 AM

Title: Re: How is shentong different from tirthika doctrine

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

<https://buddhanature.tsadra.org/index.php/Questions>

(Underlining mine)

Malcolm wrote:

The red part means it is not transpersonal. All fires are hot. But the heat of this fire is not the heat of that fire.

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

That is not what it says. it cannot be said to belong to us as individuals.

Malcolm wrote:

To say something is a characteristic is to say it is a property of a thing, for example, heat and fire. This person's synopsis is incoherently written.

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

It is simply a basic characteristic of having a mind and consciousness,

Malcolm wrote:

Their words, not mine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 22nd, 2020 at 10:12 AM

Title: Re: What is Dzogchen?

Content:

KonchogUrgyenNyima said:

I have realized that I actually have no idea.

Malcolm wrote:

Excellent. Now find a proper teacher and ignore answers you might find in the fever swamps of the internet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 22nd, 2020 at 9:21 PM

Title: Re: How is shentong different from tirthika doctrine

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Which canonical text - preferably with a pandita's commentary - would be a good place to go deeper into this topic?

There's a couple translations of "The Mahayana Uttaratantra Shastra" that are good.

Both are coming from Karma Kagyu sources.

The first is titled "Buddha Nature", Snow Lion, tr. Rosemary Fuchs. It has a commentary by Jamgon Kongtrul Lodro Taye.

Malcolm wrote:

This commentary is based almost entirely on the commentary written by the Sakya scholar, Rongton Sheja Kunrik, regarded as an emanation of Maitreya. Library of Tibetan classics is coming out with a collection of commentaries on Uttaratantra from the primary Tibetan Buddhist traditions.

There is only one Indian commentary, attributed to Asanga, generally regarded by Tibetans as being composed from the Prasanga Madhyamaka POV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 22nd, 2020 at 9:29 PM

Title: Re: Namkhai Norbu lineage

Content:

fckw said:

Why should a teacher have so many students in the first place that he can no longer follow them all?

Malcolm wrote:

ChNN was one of the most accessible teachers in modern memory. He answered every email, etc., as well as sitting for hours after almost every session to greet students personally until he became too ill. He also taught in a way that was so comprehensive as to anticipate nearly any question a student might have. He is the most important link to authentic Dzogchen teachings on this globe. I am proud to be his student, his lineage will continue as long as I am alive, and beyond, among my students, whether they are recognized by Dzogchen Community or not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 22nd, 2020 at 11:01 PM

Title: Re: Namkhai Norbu lineage

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

his lineage will continue as long as I am alive, and beyond, among my students, whether they are recognized by Dzogchen Community or not.

Danny said:

Zangthal will continue Master Norbu's longsal?

Malcolm wrote:

Don't chase names. Go to the essence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 22nd, 2020 at 11:09 PM

Title: Re: Namkhai Norbu lineage

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

Capitalism will let you have your half an hour long meditation session every other day, plus a week long retreat -- "retreat," rather -- in a Thai spa yearly.

Malcolm wrote:

With daily coffee enemas...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 22nd, 2020 at 11:17 PM

Title: Re: How is shentong different from tirthika doctrine

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

There is only one Indian commentary, attributed to Asanga, generally regarded by Tibetans as being composed from the Prasanga Madhyamaka POV.

I believe that one is available in English as "Changeless Nature", tr. Ken Holmes. I'm not a fan of that one. The 'commentary' is just a slightly different wording of the original text. Right?

Malcolm wrote:

No, that's a translation of the root text.

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

The first 3 chapters are dedicated to the Buddha, Dharma, and Sangha respectively.

The Buddha Nature related chapters start with ch.4

Root verses from Tsadra's website. Translations available in English, Tibetan, Sanskrit, and Chinese. The English is from Brunnhölzl's "When Clouds Part".

https://buddhanature.tsadra.org/index.php/Texts/Ratnagotravibh%C4%81ga_Mah%C4%81y%C4%81nottaratantra%C5%9B%C4%81stra/Root_Verses

It really is worthwhile to spend some time exploring that website.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that website is worthwhile. Doesn't make Tathagatagarbha transpersonal though.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 23rd, 2020 at 10:49 AM

Title: Re: What is Dzogchen?

Content:

KonchogUrgyenNyima said:

I have realized that I actually have no idea.

Malcolm wrote:

Excellent. Now find a proper teacher and ignore answers you might find in the fever swamps of the internet.

florin said:
Indeed. Completely ignored.

Malcolm wrote:
Obviously not.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, November 23rd, 2020 at 9:52 PM
Title: Re: How is shentong different from tirthika doctrine
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Interesting paper by Prof. Dorje Wangchuck:

[https://www.academia.edu/471582/Wangchuk_2004_The_r%C3%91i%E1%B9%85_ma
_Interpretations_of_the_Tath%C4%81gatagarbha_Theory_Wiener_Zeitschrift_f%C3%BCr die_Kunde_S%C3%BCdasiens_48_pp_171_213_appeared_in_2005_email_work_c ard=title](https://www.academia.edu/471582/Wangchuk_2004_The_r%C3%91i%E1%B9%85_ma_Interpretations_of_the_Tath%C4%81gatagarbha_Theory_Wiener_Zeitschrift_f%C3%BCr_die_Kunde_S%C3%BCdasiens_48_pp_171_213_appeared_in_2005_email_work_card=title)

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, November 23rd, 2020 at 9:52 PM
Title: Re: How is shentong different from tirthika doctrine
Content:
Schrödinger's Yidam said:
But it's safe to say that what HHK meant—whatever that is—is more authoritative than Brunnhölzl.

Astus said:
The more pertinent question is if Shentongpas take the works of Maitreya, Asanga, and Vasubandhu as their primary treatises or something else, because if yes, then they are rightly called Yogacarins.

Malcolm wrote:
They, do, but they misinterpret the way the three natures are applied by these masters, try to kludge them onto the two truths (without success), in an attempt to escape the internal contradiction in the three natures as actually presented by the Indian Yogacarin masters, which the latter unable to resolve on their own.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, November 23rd, 2020 at 9:58 PM
Title: Re: How is shentong different from tirthika doctrine
Content:
Donny said:
I heard from some posters that I do not know what shentong is. other posters have said to me that shentong is no different to Advaita. I don't know who to believe.

The statement that shentong is not different from Advaita is for sure false.

Malcolm wrote:

The positions of Advaita and Extrinsic Emptiness are structurally similar, in so far as they both posit an utterly real ultimate in which the utterly unreal relative does not exist.

Madhyamaka by contrast, merely argues that relative things are ultimately empty, without suggesting there is some ultimate reality that exists to be established beyond the emptiness of relative entities.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 23rd, 2020 at 11:07 PM

Title: Re: How is shentong different from tirthika doctrine

Content:

Donny said:

The positions of Advaita and Extrinsic Emptiness are structurally similar, in so far as they both posit an utterly real ultimate in which the utterly unreal relative does not exist. Structurally and as an philosophical argument they are very similar.

Malcolm wrote:

That is the main point. Where they differ is in the posited result: one asserts a sort of intellectual recognition of the unity of all phenomena in an underlying ground; the other asserts merely that all sentient beings possess from the beginning the ultimate qualities of buddhahood, with for a moment suggesting there is some universal underlying ground at all. In this way, we can understand that while there are structural similarities between Advaita and Extrinsic Emptiness, the former is completely nonbuddhist, while the latter is a transitional school between Yogacāra and Madhyamaka in its attempt to reconcile the inner contradiction in the Yogacāra doctrine with Nāgārjuna's Madhyamaka.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 24th, 2020 at 12:56 AM

Title: Re: Dissolving Bodies in Water to Help Save the Earth

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dont ever laugh

As a Hearse goes by

For you may be the next to die

They wrap you up

In a big white sheet

From your head down to your feet

They put you in a big black box

And cover you up with dirt and rocks

And all goes well

For about a week
And then your coffin begins to leak
And the worms crawl in, the worms crawl out
The worms play pinochle on your snout
They eat your eyes, they eat your noes
They eat the jelly between your toes
A big green worm with rolling eyes
Crawls in your stomach and out your eyes
Your stomach turns a slimy green
And puss comes out like whipping cream
You spread it on a slice of bread
And thats what you eat when your dead
And the worms crawl out and the worms crawl in
The worms that crawl in are lean and thin
The ones that crawl out are fat and stout
Your eyes fall in and your hair falls out
Your brain comes tumbling down your snout
And the worms crawl in, the worms crawl out
They crawl all over your dirty snout
Your chest caves in and your eyes pop out
Your brain turns to saurkraut
They invite their friends, and their friends too
They all come down to chew on you
And this is what it is to die, i hope you had a nice goodbye
Did you ever think as a Hearse goes by
That you might be the next to die
And your eyes fall out and your teeth decay
And that is the end of a perfect... day

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 24th, 2020 at 1:49 AM

Title: Re: How is shentong different from tirthika doctrine

Content:

Astus said:

The more pertinent question is if Shentongpas take the works of Maitreya, Asanga, and Vasubandhu as their primary treatises or something else, because if yes, then they are rightly called Yogacarins.

Malcolm wrote:

Not necessarily: that depends on whether or not Dolbupa and co. correctly represent the thought of the Yogacārins. The usual strategy is to try and claim that while the Yogacarin treatises of Maitreya, Asanga and Vasubandhu are a species of Madhyamaka, there is a so-called an inferior cittamatra interpretation of the treatises of Maitreya. However, Karl Brunnhölzl points out, the presentation of Tibetan extrinsic emptiness proponents is quite at odds with what Asanga and Co. actually say.

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

But it's safe to say that what HHK meant—whatever that is—is more authoritative than Brunnhölzl.

Malcolm wrote:

Only if one accepts what religious hierarchs assert as true by mere fiat.

I do however agree with the Karmapa in this respect, and I have said it before: Maitreya wrote treatises covering three distinct trends in Mahāyāna Buddhism: Prajñāpāramita, Yogācāra, and Tathāgatagarbha. However, it is pretty clear that in his synthesis of these three trends, the Ornament of Mahāyāna Sūtras, that the tathāgatagarbha doctrines takes a serious backseat, as it is mentioned but once, not only in his root text, but also in the commentary by Vasubandhu and Shtiramati.

Then there is the issue of whether the Uttaratantra was even written by Maitreya at all, and whether the commentary of Asanga was actually composed by him as well. And if it is the case that these texts were not written by Maitreya and Asanga (certainly the Chinese reception of these texts cast doubt on this), then the whole edifice the Extrinsic Emptiness proponents erect their arguments upon collapses because it is based on false authorial assumptions. I have already shown elsewhere that the convenient fiction of three turnings was of absolutely no interest to Indians writing on these subjects, and that there is no consensus about this idea among Tibetans.

The fact is that the Yogacarins also took the Prajñāpāramitā sūtras and the Madhyamaka of Nāgārjuna to be definitive—for example, Asanga receives no prediction in the Lanka, only Nāgārjuna—and merely faulted so-called mādhyamikas for being nihilistic. Indeed, one of their most famous scholars, Dharmapāla, wrote a commentary on Āryadeva's 400, not to fault Āryadeva, but to show that mādhyamikas (such as Buddhapālita and Bhavaviveka) were not understanding the father and son Madhyamaka correctly. And of course then we have the example of the 11th century paṇḍita and polymath, Ratnakāraśānti, whose Madhyamakālaṃkāra (referred to by Tibetans as the sems tsam rgyan) tries to reconcile Nāgārjuna with Maitreya and Asanga. The colophon of this translation itself contains a rare, vituperative polemic aimed at followers of Candrakīrti.

I should also add, that Candrakīrti spends a fair amount of time trying to correct Yogācāra misunderstandings of their own terminology in such texts as the Introduction to Madhyamaka and its autocommentary.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 24th, 2020 at 5:00 AM

Title: Re: How is shentong different from tirthika doctrine

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

In the case of the Karma Kagyu and HHK, yes I do.

Malcolm wrote:

I accept nothing by fiat. It is not the Buddha's way. Everything must be tested the way goldsmiths test gold. You've got to bite into it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 24th, 2020 at 5:03 AM

Title: Re: Im too slow at Ngongdro, help :(

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It's not a race.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 24th, 2020 at 5:05 AM

Title: Re: Field

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Hey, guys, this whole thread is off topic.

There is no Mahāyāna sūtra that takes about energy fields or anything like it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 25th, 2020 at 1:40 AM

Title: Re: Congratulations President elect Joe Biden

Content:

Queequeg said:

He's filling his cabinet with the usual neo-liberal suspects.

Malcolm wrote:

He is filling his cabinet with people who will be hard for Moscow Mitch to block, since they have already had senate approval in the past, assuming that GA goes to the Repugs.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 25th, 2020 at 1:55 AM

Title: weird as...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<https://twitter.com/therecount/status/1331292497495134211?s=20>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 25th, 2020 at 3:27 AM

Title: Re: Congratulations President elect Joe Biden

Content:

Queequeg said:

Maybe.

Not expecting a revolution from the guy. Just hoping we change course a little bit, because that neo-lib shit is a bad trip. Better than the spiked kool-aid we were getting the last four years, but...

Malcolm wrote:

He is filling his cabinet with people he has worked with for years, whom he trusts, and who are to the one actually competent at what they do. One thing is for sure, the MAGA trip is death cult, not only because of covid, but because of tariffs etc. Expect to see the TPTT back on the agenda. At least the neoliberal consensus had an actual plan...but then, I AM a globalist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 25th, 2020 at 4:03 AM

Title: Re: Congratulations President elect Joe Biden

Content:

Minobu said:

Up here the news was really up beat about the picks...all news on telly gives these people the good housekeeping seal of approval...

so like why is Bernie and Warren not in the administration...thats just weird..or are their more to come?

Malcolm wrote:

Bernie and Warren both come from states (VT and MA) with Republican governors, who will appoint republican senators to replace them if they leave office.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 25th, 2020 at 7:00 AM

Title: Re: Congratulations President elect Joe Biden

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Bernie's view, which is right on the money:

<https://www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2020/nov/24/bernie-sanders-working-class-win-back-from-donald-trump>

Queequeg said:

Thanks for that.

There's an article on WAPO, can't get it to link, commenting on Biden filling his cabinet with people who were behind policies that Trump used to get elected - like trade deals that screw American workers. I'm reading through my wife's account so can't get a clean link... but here's the quote that made me yell STFU at my computer screen:

Sullivan, who supported the Obama administration's TPP trade pact, has since acknowledged that Democrats overlooked the potentially negative consequences of such trade deals on American workers. Trump blamed both his 2016 opponent, Hillary Clinton, and Biden for destroying manufacturing jobs with the NAFTA trade deal.

In a September report, Sullivan underscored how trade deals can drive employers to pull out of U.S. communities and disrupt the livelihoods of people with few available alternatives. Democrats have frequently responded to this problem with federally funded economic-assistance programs, which Sullivan said were often "too little, too late."

Like, this was what you realized now? What fetid echo chamber was this guy stewing in for the last generation? Bernie was talking about this since the 90s. Unless Biden does massive infrastructure he's not getting re-elected, and Harris has no chance if Biden isn't up for round 2. I can see now he could burn his capital on identity stuff and otherwise go back business and usual for the Aspen Ideas Festival/Davos crowd.

Malcolm wrote:

TPTT would have limited China's power the same way NATO curtailed Russia's. Worrying about union jobs that are noncompetitive and obsolete just to please the latest political debutante at the ball, the "working class" is hardly the way to ensure American Hegemony. And Gentleman, if you think we have any other real way forward, I am all ears. But from where I sit, Trump proved that American Hegemony is more important than ever before.

In my opinion, we should be able accomplish progressive reform at home and repair our international standing, restoring our relation with EU, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 25th, 2020 at 8:55 AM

Title: Re: Congratulations President elect Joe Biden

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

None of that means much to me, I don't like endless war, "polite" militarism and austerity.

Malcolm wrote:

Endless war is a GOP thing. Leaders are required to maintain adequate defenses, even Buddha recognized this. Austerity is also a GOP trip.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 25th, 2020 at 11:00 AM

Title: Re: Congratulations President elect Joe Biden

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

TPTT would have limited China's power the same way NATO curtailed Russia's. Worrying about union jobs that are noncompetitive and obsolete just to please the latest political debutante at the ball, the "working class" is hardly the way to ensure American Hegemony. And Gentleman, if you think we have any other real way forward, I am all ears. But from where I sit, Trump proved that American Hegemony is more important than ever before.

In my opinion, we should be able accomplish progressive reform at home and repair our international standing, restoring our relation with EU, etc.

Queequeg said:

It's the white, non-college educated crowd that is the debutante... but they've been around, just got some further taxonomy so maybe they look new? Same Silent Majority, same hard hat rioters, same Populists. I don't think working class is new... they just were organized and energized around the MAGA banner and were heard for all the reasons we've analyzed for the last 4 years.

We can't have American power if we're on the verge of a civil war at home, and that divide is still real and still a problem. Things have been rearranged but give it a few months and we will see the battle lines again. The war is not over. The conservatives have the Supreme Court. They will likely have the senate. We will have a lot of stalemate in Congress and government by Executive fiat. And now we're learning it will be all the usual neo-lib suspects in the executive.

Malcolm wrote:

And you think the conservatives on the court care about the "working class?"

Please.

Queequeg said:

Meanwhile, I'm going to get ready for Trumpism in 2024...

Malcolm wrote:

No, I don't think so. This only happens if the electorate goes to sleep again.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 25th, 2020 at 8:41 PM

Title: Re: Congratulations President elect Joe Biden

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

None of that means much to me, I don't like endless war, "polite" militarism and austerity.

Malcolm wrote:

Endless war is a GOP thing. Leaders are required to maintain adequate defenses, even Buddha recognized this. Austerity is also a GOP trip.

Brunelleschi said:

Hmm, what? Biden's new cabinet members have been avid supporters of and/or contributed to the Iraq war, the bombing of Yemen and the subsequent mass famine, the Drone program (including extrajudicial killings of American citizens), torture of detainees, immunity to soldiers involved in the war in Afghanistan, sanctions against Iran contributing to a lack of medicine and worsening the country's response to Covid, the collapse of Libya and the selling of black Africans on the open slave market, etcetera.

Malcolm wrote:

Let's see, the guy in Yemen declared war on his birth country, so this hand wringing about extrajudicial killings of American citizens is, frankly, bullshit. He was self-avowed enemy of the USA. He lost his rights.

The Yemen famine is terrible, but that is a proxy war between the Saudis and Iran. As for US support, this is in Trump's lap.

The torture of detainees was a Bush era thing.

Sanctions against Iran, again, a Trump policy. Obama was normalizing relations with Iran.

Libya, mainly, an EU thing.

In fact the people Biden has selected will restore the government to its proper working order. That is the first order of business. The rest of the progressive agenda is just going to have to wait.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 25th, 2020 at 10:06 PM

Title: Re: weird as...

Content:

Danny said:

Ok moving on.. what exactly does Biden stand for?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, he doesn't need to stand for anything. The fact he isn't a malignant narcissist is sufficient.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 26th, 2020 at 12:26 AM

Title: Re: weird as...

Content:

Queequeg said:

This wasn't a vote FOR Biden. This was a vote AGAINST Trump.

Malcolm wrote:

It was also a vote for continued American Hegemony, rather than American Isolationism. Don't forget that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 26th, 2020 at 12:32 AM

Title: Re: How is shentong different from tirthika doctrine

Content:

Schrödinger's Yidam said:

Maybe not, but we can talk about the history and source of Shentong realization. It comes from the Kalachakra. Specifically as practiced in Eastern Tibet

Malcolm wrote:

Yumo Mikyod Dorje was from the region of Kailash, not Eastern Tibet.

https://treasuryoflives.org/biographies/view/Yumowa-Mikyo-Dorje/TBRC_P2589:

The Jonang tradition would ultimately place Yumo as a key link in the Tibetan Kālacakra lineage; Tāranātha would cite him as an advocate of their distinctive position of "other-emptiness" (gzhan stong) in a tantric context.

Perhaps you meant as practiced today in the Amdo region, where the Jonang tradition survived.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 26th, 2020 at 12:40 AM

Title: Re: How is shentong different from tirthika doctrine

Content:

tobes said:

But these are just sayings, assertions and beliefs. None is satisfactory, according to mahamudra, dzogchen, shentong, rangtong, or advaita vedanta. All agree that the yogic realisation exceeds such conceptual or semantic or rational approaches.

So that leaves us the with basic possibility of getting the realisation oneself and then coming onto Dharmawheel to say 'it is like this, but not like that' or.....accepting we're basically pissing into the wind with such discussions.

Malcolm wrote:

Advaita is strictly rational. Advaitans characteristically deride yoga. It is the highest perspective in Indian philosophy. Some people might argue that Trika is, but Trika is realist, even if they are a nondualist school like Advaita.

Madhyamaka, no matter which variety one subscribes, is strictly based on intellectual analysis as well.

It is only Vajrayāna that the example/ultimate wisdom pointed out/realized at the time of empowerment takes precedence over intellectual analysis. When this is realized, it is called mahāmudra or dzogchen. When one is a Vajrayāna practitioner, it does not matter much which intellectual view one subscribes to, whether Madhyamaka or Yogacāra, since the view at the time of the empowerment experienced is a correct, experiential Madhyamaka view. By practicing Vajrayāna practices such as the two stages, and so on, one cultivates this experiential view for a long while, eventually leading its realization.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 26th, 2020 at 12:48 AM

Title: Re: Congratulations President elect Joe Biden

Content:

Queequeg said:

I realized for people outside looking in at these conversations - we were cheering hard for Biden to win... and now that he won, we have our knives out for him. I wonder what impression its making on you. LOL

Minobu said:

yeah i was surprised that this attitude arose..

but what you are wishing for demands a whole new paradigm for America.

for me when i see people in america criticizing socialist ideals for people in such a rich country i scratch my head and wonder if it is really their mind or a convoluted one put out by the richest and most powerful capitalists in the world.

then why people do not want a better social system for free medi care...

Looking at Canada and talking about wait times and such is just not right.

Our governments are working, sometimes it's shelved , on better wait times...

but our population is aging and they take up a lot of medical assistance.

it's not excuse to scrap the idea of universal health system ...

you are the only G7 country that has no free medi care system ...and people rant they don't want it...weirdness galore...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 26th, 2020 at 2:08 AM

Title: Re: Congratulations President elect Joe Biden

Content:

Queequeg said:

I realized for people outside looking in at these conversations - we were cheering hard for Biden to win... and now that he won, we have our knives out for him. I wonder what impression its making on you. LOL

Ayu said:

I guess, you Americans are anxious because you have been hostages of a nutcase president. It was like a nightmare and you can't believe it's REALLY OVER NOW.

I think, you will see times of relief - even if Bernie would be far better.

'Not like Trump' will be a bigger relief than you can imagine right now. [IMHO - I hope so.]

Malcolm wrote:

People are just bitching about the fact that Americans are more conservative than they like, in general, and word "socialism" gives them the heebee jeebees.

Biden will do a fine job. And once we have restored sanity to our day to day government, that is the various departments of the executive branch, and cleaned up the carnage of the last four years, etc., then we can start talking sense to people. In the meantime, we have covid to deal with, 40 million Americans looking at becoming homeless because the Insane Clown Posse in the White House never ever had any intention of doing anything other than grifting the nation. It will sweet justice indeed if Scotland strips Trump of his assets there. I am sure at this very moment Barr is shredding documents, while the rest of Trump's lackeys are doing everything they can to harm the national interest. They should all be sent to Gitmo, in my opinion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 26th, 2020 at 2:40 AM

Title: Re: weird as...

Content:

Danny said:

Well I would give it the 24 hour rule.

Will wait and see if Biden delivers all you ever dreamed and wished for.

Ok moving on.. what exactly does Biden stand for?

kirtu said:

Biden stands for Establishment D policies.

Malcolm wrote:

Biden is inheriting another ruined economy from the GOP, just like Obama did, just like Clinton did, just like Carter did. The rest is not specifically directed at you Kirt.

[rant]

Americans are so dumb. They vote in the GOP cause "taxes," the GOP then cuts taxes, raises the deficit skyhigh, leaving economic ruin in their wake. The Democrats come in, fix it all, give the US a strong economy again, and then it starts all over again. Thank goodness there was only four years of Trump. 8 years would have been economic holocaust, not just carnage. I hope, but cannot be certain, that the GOP has ruined their brand for the next 20 years.

And all these people who bitch about neoliberalism—get a clue. As I said before, Isolationism is bad economics. Trump proved it; Hoover proved it, and the 19th century proved it. Granted, forcing austerity programs on countries does not work. It's also bad economics. But trade liberalization is a good thing, not a bad thing. What the Trump policies intended to do was to harm our trade allies for short terms gains; but in the end, we all would have lost.

Small government people need to wake up also—the only way to defend against corporate malfeasance is large government and strong regulation.

I really hope Biden strengthens and reinforces NATO and the UN. It is necessary, not just to bring Russia to heel, but also Poland and Hungary.

Trump ceded American soft power in the Pacific to China—that is a real problem for India as well Indonesia, Australia, we need to strengthen our presence there, both economically and militarily, just as Obama was doing toward the end of his administration.

We need to restore the continuity of diplomacy that was interrupted by Trump's diplomatic malfeasance. I am personally quite satisfied that Biden is placing Obama Admin veterans in his cabinet. They are competent and will restore the executive branch to proper working order. They know how shit is supposed to work.

America's reputation is badly damaged, but the route to salvaging that is not to promote some progressive dream team who likely cannot even get past the senate, but to put in place competent technocrats who are good at their jobs, who have served under multiple administrations.

So far, under the GOP we have had one paranoid vice president who led us into a war based on false intelligence (Cheney) and set the seed for undermining democracy in our country (Patriot Act), and a paranoid, malignant narcissist of a president who has nearly tore our democracy out from the root.

Therefore, the job before sane Americans is to make sure that GOP never returns to power in our lifetime. We've found out that there are 74 million people in this country, mostly racist white people, who willingly vote for fascists, because that is what the GOP party has become, a party of racists and fascists. That is pretty damn frightening. So wake up and stop dreaming about some other reality. [/rant]

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 26th, 2020 at 2:52 AM

Title: Re: weird as...

Content:

Norwegian said:

Will Biden reverse all of Trump's harmful environmental politics? Or will he conveniently ignore some of them, since they've already been set in motion by Trump? And can one trust a former DuPont consultant to be the right man for such an important job?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, he will reverse them all back to Obama's policies, as much as he can.

The guy everyone is freaking about is a former EPA deputy:

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/W._Michael_McCabe

Macabe has been on transition teams before. And then there is this:

"Michael McCabe has vast experience and knowledge of the EPA to help the Biden-Harris administration tackle the challenges facing our country. McCabe has recused himself from any matters involving the Toxic Substances Control Act. Additionally, he has also committed to not taking a position within the Biden administration."

He has worked with Biden for many years, but Biden knows he is a bit "toxic." So, he is not going to be heading up the EPA. He jsut has institutional memory. People really need to get a grip.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 26th, 2020 at 4:44 AM

Title: Re: weird as...

Content:

Queequeg said:

Malcolm, I hear you. But as you noted, Americans are so dumb.

Danny said:

Again low informed voters, do you know how condescending you come across as?

https://en.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/Low_information_voter

Low information voters, also known as misinformation voters, are people who may vote yet are generally poorly informed about issues. The phrase is mainly used in the United States and has become popular since the mid-1990s.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, describes Trump voters perfectly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 26th, 2020 at 5:24 AM

Title: Re: weird as...

Content:

Queequeg said:

Malcolm, I hear you. But as you noted, Americans are so dumb.

Danny said:

Again low informed voters, do you know how condescending you come across as?

https://en.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/Low_information_voter

Queequeg said:

I don't care. Stupid is stupid, and this country is full of stupid voters. You want to doll it up with a euphemism? Lipstick on a pig. Go ahead.

Malcolm wrote:

The funny thing is that low information voting is typically a charge made against GOP voters.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 26th, 2020 at 7:07 AM

Title: Re: How is shentong different from tirthika doctrine

Content:

tobes said:

My worry here is in the irresistible urge to denigrate paths which we ourselves have not practiced, have certainly not obtained any fruition, and are therefore not in a sound position to critique.

Malcolm wrote:

There are only two kinds of paths— those based on mind and those based on gnosis. The latter are always superior to the former.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 26th, 2020 at 9:44 AM

Title: Re: 84 mahasiddhas book (Lopez or Dowman)

Content:

climb-up said:

Has anyone read, or at least seen, both Keith Dowman's book "Masters of Mahamudra" and Donald Lopez's "Seeing the Sacred in Samsara".

They both feature biographies of all 84 mahasiddha, I believe (is that right?). Is either one particularly better or worse?

Thank you

Malcolm wrote:

Lopez is the better translator.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 26th, 2020 at 9:45 AM

Title: Re: 84 mahasiddhas book (Lopez or Dowman)

Content:

climb-up said:

Has anyone read, or at least seen, both Keith Dowman's book "Masters of Mahamudra" and Donald Lopez's "Seeing the Sacred in Samsara".

They both feature biographies of all 84 mahasiddha, I believe (is that right?). Is either one particularly better or worse?

Thank you

Malcolm wrote:

Lopez's translation is an improvement.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 26th, 2020 at 12:11 PM

Title: Re: 84 mahasiddhas book (Lopez or Dowman)

Content:

Heruka85 said:

Lopez's is not actually a translation of Abhaydatta's work but an illustrated guide to the Mahasiddhas with just a brief description of each of the 84. I would recommend Buddha's Lions by James Robinson if you want a translation of the Abhayadatta text, maybe with the Lopez because the art is a really good supplement. I can't say anything about the quality of Robinson's translation abilities but it is the most academically respected at least.

Malcolm wrote:
Robinsons is also fine.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, November 26th, 2020 at 8:37 PM
Title: Re: weird as...
Content:
FiveSkandhas said:

Delivering improvements in quality of life for the vast majority seems to me something that is beyond the control of the President. In many ways the US middle class is on a downward long-term trajectory that has multiple causes. Trump and many of his supporters seemed to believe that an isolated US with a return of manufacturing would help, but it appears in four years, hardly a dent was made in that direction. Meanwhile on the opposite side of the fence, it is believed by many that further globalization and engagement with the world at large is the road to prosperity.

Either way, the middle class keeps hollowing out and I am convinced it is not something a president can solve. It's a broader cultural, social, and economic shift.

PeterC said:
As Yoda said, that is why you fail.

Political discussion in the US is way to focussed on whining about what can't be done and navel-gazing on the obscenely-expensive spectacle of the endless elections. This will go on until an administration starts to take fixing issues seriously.

Malcolm wrote:
I think Biden does take this seriously. He has the most experience in Gvt., of any president we've seen in US history. This is really a great plus. And, Biden was an anti-spectacle.

He'll spend four years cleaning up the mess left by Trump, and then hopefully he will spend the next four after that really setting this country on a correct path. Then after that hopefully it will be eight years of Harris. By then, maybe America will have driven its fascists back into the goddamn closet where they should have stayed to begin with.

The worst thing to happen now is for idiots on the left to think now is a good time for third parties. Let the right go down that rabbit hole, let's encourage them to do so, in fact. But as a voting block, the left has to stick with the center.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, November 26th, 2020 at 8:48 PM
Title: Re: weird as...
Content:

Queequeg said:

Infrastructure spending will prop up the middle class.

We don't have a wealth problem... The US has never been wealthier.

We have a wealth distribution problem. We can distribute wealth throughout the country by implementing public works programs to build out a modern infrastructure.

This will have concatenating positive effects beyond just employing people: the modern infrastructure will be the platform for future growth and prosperity - like the railroads, the highways, electrification, etc.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, we need to go big, FDR big, on these issues— and renewables, climate mitigation, fiber-based internet rollouts in rural and urban communities, etc., should be a large part of that, not just roads and bridges.

All at 22.50 minimum wage, and up.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 26th, 2020 at 9:37 PM

Title: Re: Online Ngondro programs

Content:

yagmort said:

on ngondrogar site there is a comparison of topics for longchen nyingthig and chetsün nyingthig ngöndros.

what i found intriguing is that chetsün nyingthig one has different set of preliminary thoughts:

1. Impermanence
2. Deceptive nature of pleasure
3. Futility of our projects
4. Futility of life in general
5. The irreversibility of liberation
6. The value of the guru's instruction
7. Training in non-thought samadhi frankly, i feel that these thoughts click with me much better than more common ones (precious human rebirth, impermanence, karma, suffering of samsara), especially 2,3,4. i don't know if it's ok to ask as i don't have wang/lung for chetsün nyingthig ngöndro, but i'd like to know more about that. is it possible to share the part of chetsün nyingthig ngöndro about these thoughts without samaya violation (or the whole text)?

Malcolm wrote:

Cartland Dahl translated Jigme lingpa commentary on these.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 26th, 2020 at 10:03 PM

Title: Re: weird as...

Content:

FiveSkandhas said:

What do you folks think about mandatory minimum income? i.e., everyone gets 30k minimum per year.

Sounds inflationary but if they give trillions to the banks and big business already maybe shifting it to the people would work...not enough of an economist to know...

Malcolm wrote:

It's be great, but it will never happen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 26th, 2020 at 10:33 PM

Title: Re: weird as...

Content:

FiveSkandhas said:

The idea is out there. Once robotics and AI take the remaining middle class jobs you will have billions (incl. India and China) of people with no productive "purpose" but a global economy with the capacity to support them. I don't think in some form it is totally impossible.

Malcolm wrote:

I was referring to the US.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 27th, 2020 at 2:05 AM

Title: Re: Congratulations President elect Joe Biden

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Let's see, the guy in Yemen declared war on his birth country, so this hand wringing about extrajudicial killings of American citizens is, frankly, bullshit. He was self-avowed enemy of the USA. He lost his rights.

The Yemen famine is terrible, but that is a proxy war between the Saudis and Iran. As for US support, this is in Trump's lap.

The torture of detainees was a Bush era thing.

Sanctions against Iran, again, a Trump policy. Obama was normalizing relations with Iran.

Libya, mainly, an EU thing.

In fact the people Biden has selected will restore the government to its proper working order. That is the first order of business. The rest of the progressive agenda is just going to have to wait.

Brunelleschi said:

Fair enough. You say the same thing about his 16-year-old son and 8-year-old niece I presume? The drone program was of course massively expanded by Obama.

Malcolm wrote:

It seems the son was in the company of a guy named Ibrahim al-Banna.

Nawar al-Awlaki was killed by Trump, not Obama, during his first exercise in murder. BTW, I don't justify what Obama did. Murder is murder. But that's what rulers have to do.

Drones are just airplanes without pilots. There is no difference between a missile launched from a plane or a drone.

Brunelleschi said:

No, America provided logistical support. Also, Samantha Powers who is joining the administration backed the invasion by Saudia Arabia, UAE, etcetera.

Malcolm wrote:

Logistical support meant mainly fueling aircraft. In any case, this remains a proxy war between Iran and the Saudi's. And as I said, Trump killed far more people in Yemen than Obama. In 2017 alone, Trump carried out 133 airstrikes in Yemen, compared to 155 between 2002 and 2017. As I said, this is in Trump's lap.

Biden will end all US involvement in Yemen.

As for Samantha Power, you do understand how administrations work, right? She is a disciplined diplomat. As a employee of State, she cannot very well argue that the US should not support its allies in the region—we have treaties with them and treaties are law.

However, before Powers left State, she was criticizing the airwar in Yemen.

Brunelleschi said:

No, I disagree. Furthermore, people directly involved with it are being recruited by Biden (see Camp NAMA) and Obama of course opted NOT to prosecute the people who built and ran these black sites.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I understand this is difficult for many people. People are freaking out about McChrystal, McRaven, and Powers being on the transition team. I would also point out that they also have knowledge of the past 20 years of Middle East history and its wars you and I have no idea about, because it is classified.

Brunelleschi said:

Yes, agreed. However, many people who are joining the administration support sanctions against Iran.

Malcolm wrote:

US policy towards Iran is stupid, and has been since Regan. Again, blame the GOP. Iran would like the deal resumed.

Brunelleschi said:

I doubt the rest of the progressive agenda will happen.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, not in the first four years. And if people are stupid, the left will start fighting with the center. Right now the left and the center have to stand together, otherwise, in 2024, there will be another fascist voted into office.

Brunelleschi said:

We obviously have different views regarding interventionism. Fair enough.

Malcolm wrote:

If it's a choice between interventions by the US and NATO or Russia or China. I'll take the US and NATO, thanks. And, BTW, Russia and China seem to be teaming up.

And don't forget, the present geopolitical climate is mostly a result of GOP policies.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 27th, 2020 at 2:09 AM

Title: Re: weird as...

Content:

Queequeg said:

Honest dollar for an honest day's work. Or rather, 40hrs/wk at $22.50/hr. + OT.

Malcolm wrote:

$46,800 per year. Peanuts. But it would lift a hell of lot of people out of poverty.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 27th, 2020 at 3:05 AM

Title: Re: weird as...

Content:

Queequeg said:

e'd all be happier.

Malcolm wrote:

Social well-being seems to be rather low on the list for the GOP in general.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 28th, 2020 at 12:06 AM

Title: Re: Congratulations President elect Joe Biden

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

None of that means much to me, I don't like endless war, "polite" militarism and austerity.

Malcolm wrote:

Endless war is a GOP thing. Leaders are required to maintain adequate defenses, even Buddha recognized this.

kirtu said:

By no means. Korea, Vietnam, Clinton's engagement in Iraq, Yemen and the Sudan, Obama's disaster in Syria.

Malcolm wrote:

Obama's foreign policy was failed in Syria, but the Syrian situation was actually caused by the Iraqi's, who insisted that all US troops leave on schedule in 2011. Obama's hands were largely tied.

Iraq's problems were caused by Hussein, who was using chemical weapons against the Kurds, etc., and because he felt cheated by the Kuwaitis who cut oil prices, against their agreements. The war in Iraq was a GOP project, and while Clinton indeed had involvement, and one can of course debate the sanctions which lead to hundreds of thousands of civilian deaths, mainly Clinton, apart from Kosovo, was engaged with Al Qaeda.

Johnson may have escalated the war in Vietnam, but he saw his error and declined to run on that basis. Nixon was the one who continued the war in Vietnam.

North Korea started the Korean War, not Truman. Our response in Korea was informed by the WWII. The US was determined to prevent the totalitarian take over of South Korea.

kirtu said:

Endless war is a fearful/arrogant American thing that stems from specific historical situations, chiefly WW 2, the lessons of which were generally misread.

Malcolm wrote:

Ummm...Americans, in general, did not want to enter WWII. So no. Americans like quick wars, easy wars, after the experience of the Civil War. After all, even in WWI, we were in that war for only 18 months.

Austerity is also a GOP trip.

That's deliberate propaganda, even if the GOP is/was a big fan of austerity. Did the failed economic policies of the Obama Administration fall on deaf ears? For Establishment D's they in fact did.

Huh? The economy and employment rebounded quite well under Obama and continued to do so under Trump (no thanks to him at all) until he botched it with covid. To recap, in a 2nd Great Depression, brought on by R and D policies, some 20 M mostly older workers were pushed out of the workforce, were then reflexively told that their "skills" were "stale" (so you slapped a Star of David on us) and were locked out of the workforce through systematic age discrimination. For the majority of people there was no evidence at all that their "skills" were "stale". None at all. It was just a justification for the policy pushed by some people (notably Oligarchs and some Congresspeople) and picked up by the media and repeated as propaganda just like Fox News did and does. Those became desperate times with lots of suicide (initially reported by the press and then not) and lots of people contemplating suicide.

This has nothing to do with government policies. It had to do with the fact that older employees with seniority cost companies more money in terms of total compensation packages, and so on.

The one place we can agree here is that financial crisis of 2008 was a problem created when the Glass Stegal act was repealed. Pension fund managers were now allowed to invest in stocks rather than confining pension fund investing to bonds, thus exposing cities like Detroit to risk they were not prepared to take, etc. Dumb move, sure., while it happened under the Clinton Administration, it was voted into being by a GOP house and senate in 1999. It's roots however are to be found during the deregulation craze under Reagan. So again, GOP.

At the end of the day, you are on your own in these United States. And whether it's policies are steered by R's or D's is irrelevant.

Yes, it's always been that way. In the US, you are free, either to starve or be successful. FDR tried to put in a safety net, as did Johnson. The GOP, especially Reaganites and their ludicrous "small government" theories have, always been against these measures coz "socialism."

Voting with my feet can't come soon enough (esp. since I've finally voted in what will be that last US federal election for me).

Good luck wherever you wind up going. You've never like living the US anyway for as long as I have known you. It's understandable, the US has a lot of flaws, blatant flaws. Still, it's my home, and while I like and appreciate other countries, I like it here where I live in the Northeast. So I prefer to stay here and try and support what's good about our system, and try to improve what is flawed. YMMV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 28th, 2020 at 12:10 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

pemachophel said:

Magnus, So very sorry to hear this. My wife and I will do sur for him for 49 days.

Malcolm wrote:

No need, he is a Dzogchen practitioner with deep understanding of the path. He is not an ordinary person for whom we need to do Shitro, sur, and these kinds of things.

The correct thing to do is sing do Ati Guru Yoga and sing Song of the Vajra in his honor.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 28th, 2020 at 2:53 AM

Title: Re: Vipassanā

Content:

monkishlife said:

I believe strongly in non-duality, so I cannot be a Theravada Buddhist for that very reason.

Malcolm wrote:

You can't be a Dzogchen practitioner either then.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 29th, 2020 at 4:37 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Aloke said:

The Community did Shitro for him. Why not?

Malcolm wrote:

There is no need to do it FOR Elio. But people like to get together and mourn.

I, on the other hand, prefer to celebrate Elio's liberation in the bardo. YMMV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 29th, 2020 at 6:03 AM

Title: Re: Congratulations President elect Joe Biden

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

myfirst.jpg (112.3 KiB) Viewed 261 times

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 29th, 2020 at 9:44 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Ignorant_Fool said:
DYING IN THE STATE OF GURUYOGA
Chögyal Namkhai Norbu
The Practice of the Night...

Malcolm wrote:
Exactly.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, November 29th, 2020 at 11:18 AM
Title: Re: Congratulations President elect Joe Biden
Content:
PeterC said:

I've just read the federal appeals court decision on the PA voting case. It is...brutal. Written by a judge nominated by Trump, on a panel of three all nominated by Republican presidents. The last section is clearly a message to their ideological fellow travellers on the Supreme Court to let this one go.

Malcolm wrote:
These clowns just don't know when to go home:

<https://thehill.com/regulation/court-battles/527838-pennsylvania-supreme-court-strikes-down-gop-bid-to-stop-election>

PeterC said:
The Pennsylvania Supreme Court on Saturday rejected a last-ditch bid from Republicans including Rep. Mike Kelly (R-Pa.) to halt the certification of the 2020 election results in the Keystone State....

"Upon consideration of the parties' filings in Commonwealth Court, we hereby dismiss the petition for review with prejudice based upon Petitioners' failure to file their facial constitutional challenge in a timely manner,."

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, November 29th, 2020 at 9:38 PM
Title: Re: Congratulations President elect Joe Biden
Content:

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, November 29th, 2020 at 11:37 PM
Title: Re: Congratulations President elect Joe Biden
Content:
Dan74 said:

This is an interesting angle, and while I don't think it tells the whole story, it underscores how money has become such a driving force, a conscious and unconscious motivator of all that is happening and why this system really needs to be torn down. It's already ingratiated itself so deep into our culture, it might be nearly too late.

Queequeg said:

"has become"? as in, it wasn't already?

"For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows."

That nugget is some 1900 years old, and it wasn't novel when it was written down. See Code of Hammurabi, for instance.

Its been too late for several millennia, friend. We limp along with our vices.

Dan74 said:

I don't know, QQ. While avarice is old as time, yes, Consumerism, as it applies to every facet of our lives, invading and taking over not only our culture and spirituality, but even the most private sphere, is unprecedented, I think. The late Capitalist ability to monetise everything, to turn everything and everyone into a consumable, our attention, being the latest victim to the parasitic Social Media and clickbait, is unmatched.

Yes, Medieval Church sold Indulgencies. The reason this is so well known is because it stood out. It was perhaps a watershed moment. Now money has become the new original Abhidhammic dhamma, that everything else is composed of.

Malcolm wrote:

Arguably, capitalism was really created when the Church created purgatory so that Christian bankers could still get into heaven.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 30th, 2020 at 12:19 AM

Title: Re: weird as...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

$46,800 per year. Peanuts.

FiveSkandhas said:

Hey, speak for yourself.

Minobu said:

i betcha Malcolm comes from wealth...never thought about this , but that remark speaks volumes...

Wealthy people don't really get what poverty is...46 grand is above the poverty line but a disaster for someone born into wealth...

Malcolm wrote:

For most of my life, I have lived on considerably less than this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 30th, 2020 at 1:11 AM

Title: Re: weird as...

Content:

Minobu said:

i betcha Malcolm comes from wealth...never thought about this , but that remark speaks volumes...

