However, because many treasure texts were revealed that condemned its use, it has come to be considered something negative in Tibetan Buddhism.

Fully ordained monks in Theravada countries however smoke quite a lot.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 13th, 2017 at 9:41 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

On the other hand, if you are looking at it from the viewpoint of the ultimate truth, every perceptual mind arises in dependence upon causes and conditions, and upon the object that it perceives, and this is already discussed in my paper (<http://kenneth-chan.com/physics/direct-experiential-interpretation-of-quantum-mechanics>). For your benefit, I will reproduce that section of my paper here below:

Malcolm wrote:

No, from the standpoint of ultimate truth, minds do not arise at all since they cannot be established.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 13th, 2017 at 9:40 PM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

The small and middling enlightenments that are described in Buddha's sutra teachings are not actual states of liberation...

Malcolm wrote:

Of course they are. What they are not are stages of omniscience.

Arhats and pratyekabuddhas do not possess afflictive obscurations at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 13th, 2017 at 11:51 AM

Title: Re: Shrine Crystal

Content:

tomamundsen said:

Hi all,

What kind of crystals are acceptable for a shrine? Or does it not really matter? I'm thinking about the clear prism kind, but don't know what type of crystal they are.

Thanks,

Thomas

Malcolm wrote:

A natural one is best, but a crystal ball is also fine.

tomamundsen said:

So, at the crystal shop that I visited before, there are several different kinds of quartz crystals. Basically any type of quartz will work?

Malcolm wrote:

Natural is better than cut...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 13th, 2017 at 10:57 AM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.ibtimes.com/donald-trump-sex-tape-penthouse-might-have-proof-russian-golden-shower-gate-2474730>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 13th, 2017 at 10:53 AM

Title: Re: Shrine Crystal

Content:

tomamundsen said:

Hi all,

What kind of crystals are acceptable for a shrine? Or does it not really matter? I'm thinking about the clear prism kind, but don't know what type of crystal they are.

Thanks,

Thomas

Malcolm wrote:

A natural one is best, but a crystal ball is also fine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 13th, 2017 at 9:11 AM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

Queequeg said:

but once the fundamental agreement on reality and rules of civil engagement are lost, further intercourse becomes incredibly difficult.

.

Malcolm wrote:

That is gone. Time for New England to secede from the Union.

Virgo said:

But how wil New England protect itself? For example, the USAF will want to take back Westover, and the Navy will take Groton, and so on.

Kevin

Malcolm wrote:

I was being rhetorical.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 13th, 2017 at 6:20 AM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

Queequeg said:

I thought you were originally from New York?

Malcolm wrote:

I was born in New York, I was raised in Massachusetts. And one of my ancestors, Elbridge Gerry, signed the Declaration of Independence, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 13th, 2017 at 6:02 AM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

Queequeg said:

GW's Farewell Address

Malcolm wrote:

Easy for him to say. 85 percent of the soldiers who fought the British came from New England. If anyone has a right to be called Americans, we do.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 13th, 2017 at 5:22 AM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

Queequeg said:

but once the fundamental agreement on reality and rules of civil engagement are lost, further intercourse becomes incredibly difficult.

.

Malcolm wrote:

That is gone. Time for New England to secede from the Union.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 13th, 2017 at 5:12 AM

Title: Re: Non-conceptual thoughts ... ?

Content:

rachmiel said:

A few years ago, I started to notice what might be called non-conceptual thoughts arise in my mind. Could be I just didn't see them earlier, or it could be they're new for me.

It goes something like this: I become aware (during meditation) that a coherent thought has just occurred (or is occurring) but that there are no words or images associated with it. It presents as more of a diffuse feeling -- an inkling -- than a thought, but when I examine it, it reveals itself to "contain" a coherent thought.

These wordless/imageless thoughts come and go alongside word/image-ful thoughts. The two types of thoughts sometimes flow by in "single file" and sometimes overlap, like parallel layers of a stream of consciousness.

Anyone have an idea what these wordless/imageless thoughts that present as inklings might be?

Malcolm wrote:
Concepts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 13th, 2017 at 3:18 AM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Minobu said:

well i know nothing of this practice , but keeping in spirit of my post;
Can we look at this Mahayana practice as a Poison Drum?

Malcolm wrote:

It is an incorrect practice condemned rather harshly by HH Dalai Lama.

Minobu said:

That being said, Even Devadatta who tried to kill The Buddha was promised Buddhahood in the Lotus Sutra in the future as direct cause from this negative relationship with The Buddha.
this is the meaning of the Poison Drum .

so ya i get you claim this to be a bad practice but still it has a relationship with Buddha so eventually all will attain Buddhahood.

Also i'm still trying to lay cliam to the original spirit of my <http://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=39&t=24507&p=372769#p372769>

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think you really understand the gravity of the situation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 13th, 2017 at 1:19 AM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Minobu said:

there are no bad teachings being bandied about here...

Malcolm wrote:

Apart from gyalpo practice, I quite agree.

Minobu said:

well i know nothing of this practice , but keeping in spirit of my post;

Can we look at this Mahayana practice as a Poison Drum?

Malcolm wrote:

It is an incorrect practice condemned rather harshly by HH Dalai Lama.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 13th, 2017 at 1:16 AM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 13th, 2017 at 12:46 AM

Title: Re: Consciousness turns back upon itself; it does not extend beyond name-and-form

Content:

Queequeg said:

From the <http://www.accesstoinight.org/tipitaka/sn/sn12/sn12.065.than.html>, SN 12:65

"Then the thought occurred to me, 'Aging & death exist when what exists? From what as a requisite condition is there aging & death?' From my appropriate attention there came the breakthrough of discernment: 'Aging & death exist when birth exists. From birth as a requisite condition comes aging & death.' Then the thought occurred to me, 'Birth exists when what exists? From what as a requisite condition comes birth?' From my appropriate attention there came the breakthrough of discernment: 'Birth exists when becoming exists. From becoming as a requisite condition comes birth... [clinging], [craving], [feeling], [contact], [six senses], [Name-and-Form]... 'Name-&-form exists when what exists? From what as a requisite condition is there name-&-form?' From my appropriate attention there came the breakthrough of discernment: 'Name-&-form exists when consciousness exists. From consciousness as a requisite condition comes name-&-form.' Then the thought occurred to me, 'Consciousness exists when what exists? From what as a requisite condition comes consciousness?' From my appropriate attention there came the breakthrough of discernment: 'Consciousness exists when name-&-form exists. From name-&-form as a requisite condition comes consciousness.'

"Then the thought occurred to me, 'This consciousness turns back at name-&-form, and goes no farther. It is to this extent that there is birth, aging, death, falling away, & re-arising, i.e., from name-&-form as a requisite condition comes consciousness, from consciousness as a requisite condition comes name-&-form. From name-&-form as a requisite condition come the six sense media... Thus is the origination of this entire mass of stress. Origination, origination.' Vision arose, clear knowing arose, discernment arose, knowledge arose, illumination arose within me with regard to things never heard before.

This formulation of the arising of suffering has puzzled me for a long time. It differs from the more common teaching on the 12 Linked Chain in that consciousness does not have its base in "constructing activities" which in turn has its base in ignorance. Rather, consciousness and name-and-form are proposed as mutually dependent and arising. Name-and-form is a function of consciousness and consciousness is a function of name-and-form. This is not quite a materialist view, but seems closer to it than the picture given by the 12 Linked Chain.

Can someone please explain what is going on here?

Malcolm wrote:

It is only taking about the process of this life.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 13th, 2017 at 12:45 AM

Title: Re: Nāda yoga ~ Sound as Path ~ Sutra,Tantra,Mantra,Dzogchen

Content:

Panaesthesia said:

"The stages of training with the three kāyas emphasize the qualities of the elements. By training with the sound of the supreme aspect of earth, fire, water, and wind, supreme attainment will be certain. The sound of water is roaring and carries the melodious sound of the ḍākinīs. To always engage and become familiar with this, it is certain that the nirmāṇakāya will be attained. The characteristic of earth is cool and heavy, possessing the sound of great Brahmā. To always engage and maintain balance with this will bring the certain attainment of the nirmāṇakāya. To accomplish the sambhogakāya, by listening to the sound of fire, this reveals the sound of the great Viṣṇu. Whoever listens to this will certainly attain the qualities of the dharmakāya: the characteristics of wind are cool and fierce and carry the sound of uniting with the king[1] of birds. If one knows how to constantly practice this, then that is training with the common aspect of the three kāyas." (Reverberation of Sound Tantra)

 My emphasis on the word "supreme" in the quote. Notice that each stage given above notes the common sound aspect and the supreme sound characterization of each element: "sound of water" - "sound (language) of the ḍākinīs," etc., except for earth, which doesn't commonly have a sound unless it's moving, so only the supreme aspect is pointed to (but look for low rumbles like kettle drums). The common sound aspect is given to characterize the inner resonances that one uses. Don't confuse the "four elements" with physical manifestations like waterfalls, fires, rocks pounded together, and wind. The supreme sound characterization is specified to make sure you don't make that error.

Place awareness on the related chakra associated with each element, gather the inner sound (which will be very subtle at first, thus "gather" it), and once gathered, draw it up to the next element by moving awareness. Do this in the order specified: Earth, Water, Fire, Wind (Air). Start with Fire though and bring it down to Earth, to ground yourself, since fire is associated with ego, and this isn't about you. Then continue, repeating fire in the correct location. The visions of the four lamps will naturally arise when you're ready, so no need to put your eyeballs at risk with a mudra as when the practice of Thögel is introduced.

This "preliminary" attains the "common aspects" of three kayas, and the common siddhis, and is a natural pathway into Thögel.

[1] The Garuḍa

Malcolm wrote:

First, Reverberation of Sound is a completely incorrect (but common) translation, and it comes from a late attempt to normalize the titles of the 17 tantras by back translating them into Sanskrit in the Derge Nyingma Gyudbum. This mistake is absent from the Tshamdrag and Tingkye editions where the original, non-Sanskrit title is preserved.

The thal gyur in the title has to be translated separately. Thal ba, as explained in the tantra itself and the commentary, refers to buddhafiels which are strewn with precious powder (thal ba). Gyur ba refers to the transformation of the elements.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 13th, 2017 at 12:09 AM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Minobu said:

there are no bad teachings being bandied about here...

Malcolm wrote:

Apart from gyalpo practice, I quite agree.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 11:52 PM

Title: Re: Nāda yoga ~ Sound as Path ~ Sutra,Tantra,Mantra,Dzogchen

Content:

Panaesthesia said:

“Those who emanate to bring benefit to others must first practice this for, if not, then they will not have the ability to plant the seeds that bring forth such emanations. Hence, train in the sound of the elements.” (Seed of Secret Conduct Tantra)

Malcolm wrote:

Right, but that means you have to find out which phase of the elements you are, and then practice the appropriate sound for many months.

It is all detailed in the commentary to the Realms and Transformations of Sound Tantra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 9:57 PM

Title: Re: Refuge vows

Content:

crazy-man said:

Caffeine can have both positive and negative health effects. It can treat and prevent the premature infant breathing disorders bronchopulmonary dysplasia of prematurity and apnea of prematurity. Caffeine citrate is on the WHO Model List of Essential Medicines.[12] It may confer a modest protective effect against some diseases,[13] including Parkinson's disease[14] and certain types of cancer. One meta-analysis concluded that cardiovascular disease such as coronary artery disease and stroke is less likely with 3–5 cups of non-decaffeinated coffee per day but more likely with over 5 cups per day.[15] Some people experience insomnia or sleep disruption if they consume caffeine, especially during the evening hours, but others show little disturbance. Evidence of a risk during pregnancy is equivocal; some authorities recommend that pregnant women limit consumption to the equivalent of two cups of coffee per day or less.[16][17] Caffeine can produce a mild form of drug dependence – associated with withdrawal symptoms such as sleepiness, headache, and irritability – when an individual stops using caffeine after repeated daily intake.[1][3][5] Tolerance to the autonomic effects of increased blood pressure and heart rate, and increased urine output, develops with chronic use (i.e., these symptoms become less pronounced or do not occur following consistent use)
<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Caffeine>

Malcolm wrote:

If you do not want to drink coffee, fine. But it is not an intoxicant, a madana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 9:49 PM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Matt J said:

HHDL likes Dzogchen--- doesn't his opinion count at least a little given his relationship with LTKR?

Malcolm wrote:

Not with TKF, he is a gyalpo practitioner.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Another example of why it is necessary to check sources carefully and only trust reliable ones.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is why we trust HHDL instead of those who follow the gyalpo.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 9:48 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Justmeagain said:

I thought Emptiness was the nature of the mind and everything else and Mahamudra was a method to experience this?

Malcolm wrote:

Emptiness has no appearance. Mahāmudra does.

Justmeagain said:

And what is the nature of this appearance? I'd say Emptiness has the appearance of a lack of inherent existence. But maybe thats pushing it somewhat!

How about I put my OP this way....are Mahamudra and Shikantaza synonymous?

Malcolm wrote:

Emptiness and luminosity ('od gsal) are synonyms. When one is in the experience of emptiness or luminosity there are no appearances. In Mahāmudra there are appearances. Which appearances? The appearances of the world.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 9:21 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and the Two Truths Doctrine

Content:

srivijaya said:

Very much so.

Malcolm wrote:

The classical notion of the two truths hinges on vidyā and āvidyā being different, the former veridical and the latter false. But in fact vidyā and avidyā are just opposite sides of one coin, or even avidyā has vidyā.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 9:09 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Justmeagain said:

I suspect this thread needs to be moved to another home!

Or are we still trying to establish what Mahamudra is before comparing it to the more easily defined Shikantaza?

Malcolm wrote:

Mahamudra is the nature of your mind and everything else.

Justmeagain said:

I thought Emptiness was the nature of the mind and everything else and Mahamudra was a method to experience this?

Malcolm wrote:

Emptiness has no appearance. Mahāmudra does.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 8:51 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and the Two Truths Doctrine

Content:

srivijaya said:

historical Buddha

Mkoll said:

Them's fightin' words on this DW, friend. Tread carefully.

srivijaya said:

Hey! Okay, I get the message - don't beat me up guys!

On the OP though, the Two Truths Doctrine differs from ahem other Buddhism on a fundamental point (can't speak for Dzogchen though).

Briefly, Two Truths postulates a mistaken grasp of phenomena (ie. inherently existing). It sees the solution to this problem as breaking this illusion and seeing the underlying "nature" of self and other, as being emptiness. Furthermore emptiness gets called the ultimate state, which is a bit odd when you consider it carefully. Emptiness being the absence of inherent existence, rather than a "state" itself. Even the formulation 'form is empty, emptiness is form', equates the two. Equivalents cannot have one ultimate and the other not - it's like saying one half is larger than the other half. Quite how much of the Two Truths overlaps with Dzogchen, I have no idea, so if anyone can chip in, that would be great.

Malcolm wrote:

There are no two truths since even delusion is an expression of reality.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 8:32 AM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

Mod-QQ said:

We're trying for a PG-13 standard going forward. Edited to conform to the applicable standards. Thank you for your understanding.

Mod-QQ

dzogchungpa said:

Can you do something about

https://www.dharmawheel.net/search.php?keywords=shit too?

Malcolm wrote:

And https://www.dharmawheel.net/search.php?keywords=asshole:

BTW most nine year olds I know swear worse than truck drivers. I mean, have any of you listened to rap music lately?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 6:42 AM

Title: Re: Refuge vows

Content:

crazy-man said:

if you have health problems and you use Caffeine as a medicine, it is okay. but if you use Caffeine to change and manipulate your mind and consciousness, it is against the rules.

Malcolm wrote:

Nonsense. Caffeine is a merely a stimulant. Sheesh.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 6:36 AM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Matt J said:

HHDL likes Dzogchen--- doesn't his opinion count at least a little given his relationship with LTKR?

Malcolm wrote:

Not with TKF, he is a gyalpo practitioner.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 6:31 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I am not sure how much time you have spent with teachers and communities outside the DC, but trust me, they generally think we are very strange.

climb-up said:

What do they find strange about the DC?

Is it the view of dzogchen that is taught, or is the group's structure or interactional style unusual?

\

Malcolm wrote:

All of it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 6:21 AM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

No, there is no record of Tsongkhapa accepting the Dzogchen teachings as valid...

Malcolm wrote:

Dude, get a clue. This text is in the first volume of Tsongkhapa's collected works, Zhol edition, ppg. 295-314, directly before Tsongkhapa's commentary on the Fifty Verses of Guru Devotion. It is in the same place in all the other collected works as well.

But go ahead, keep your head in the sand.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 6:12 AM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

Queequeg said:

I had not thought it through that far. You're probably right. At some point they figured out they had the perfect patsy. The only card Trump has is his supporters. In order for them to function as his shield, he has to have them riled up and foaming at the mouth, and that is hard to do, especially when they realize the government he is putting together is not going to bring jobs to Columbus and Flynt, and is going to in fact strip out their medicare and medicaid, social security, etc. To keep that crowd whipped up, he would have continue his campaign around the country and sooner or later, that show is going to get boring. He's then going to find out he has no real clout at the midterms when he tries to remove congressmen and senators who aren't on his side. He's about to find out how little support you get from rank and file congressmen when you don't help them with fundraising and local campaigns.

Johnny Dangerous said:

It's gonna be a lot easier for him to rile up his supporters with people bandying about these random, unvetted accusations likely originating with the intelligence community. In fact it's one nightmare scenario that could come from people's sudden embrace of this "fake news", a likely one IMO since so much of this unverifiable, this will only galvanize his supporters. It lends credence to Trump in the eyes of his followers, and takes people's eyes off what they should be focused on - building some kind of legitimate resistance to Trump and his plans. So, great job American Deep State.

Malcolm wrote:

Bury him in the excrement, all of it, so he spends all his time whining like the little whiner he is. Could you believe the press conference today? Marching bands? hahahaha, what a tremendous fool those tushy holes elected.

We're trying for a PG-13 standard going forward. Edited to conform to the applicable standards. Thank you for your understanding.

Mod-QQ

Umm, no, this is G rating.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 6:08 AM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

So you believe, and you're free to do so.

Malcolm wrote:

My reply to you is the same as Nāgārjuna's reply to those who bore doubt about Mahāyāna in the Ratnavali. Higher vehicles always seems questionable to those who follow lower vehicles.

Tsongkhapafan said:

There is also a history of false teachings being touted as higher too, so one must be careful and investigate thoroughly as Buddha said.

Malcolm wrote:

There is nothing false about the teachings brought to Tibet by Ācārya Padmasambhava, Paṇḍita Vimalamitra and Lotsawa Vairocana. Even Tsongkhapa accepted Dzogchen teachings as valid. I advise you to read the ལྷ་ལན་ལྷན་མཚོག་བདུད་རྩིའི་ཐེང་བ་ by Tsongkhapa where he records a dialogue between himself and his Nyingma Guru Laykyi Dorje who acted as a intermediary between Tsongkhapa and Vajrapani. It is in Tsongkhapa's collected works.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 5:46 AM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The teaching of Vajradhara also is the result that does not arise from cause, the intimate instruction that does not arise from scripture, and the buddhahood that does not come from mind. Merely because you have not received this teaching does not make it false. Your incredulity also makes it no less the teaching of Buddha Vajradhara. Garab Dorje is a predicted emanation of Vajradhara. Again, just because you do not read these tantras does not make them invalid.

Tsongkhapafan said:

So you believe, and you're free to do so.

Malcolm wrote:

My reply to you is the same as Nāgārjuna's reply to those who bore doubt about Mahāyāna in the Ratnavali. Higher vehicles always seems questionable to those who follow lower vehicles.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 5:41 AM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

I'm happy to be in the minority - it's normally a good thing. Again, this is rather surprising to me as there is no enlightenment without causes and a graduated path.

Malcolm wrote:

Sadly, in this lifetime you will never understand the result that does not arise from cause, will never hear the intimate instruction that does not arise from scripture, nor realize the buddhahood that does not come from mind.

However, every time you see those six little syllables in my sig, it is planting a cause for your eventual liberation through Dzogchen teachings.

Tsongkhapa said:

That sounds a bit arrogant Malcolm, but I appreciate your sentiment.

Malcolm wrote:

I was responding in kind to your biased statement.

The teaching of Vajradhara also is the result that does not arise from cause, the intimate instruction that does not arise from scripture, and the buddhahood that does not come from mind. Merely because you have not received this teaching does not make it false. Your incredulity also makes it no less the teaching of Buddha Vajradhara. Garab Dorje is a predicted emanation of Vajradhara. Again, just because you do not read these tantras does not make them invalid.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 5:15 AM

Title: Re: Dorje and Bell

Content:

Aspiring.Monk said:

I am wondering if someone that has no tantric initiations can use the dorje and bell.

Thank you in advance for the help

Malcolm wrote:

Nope.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 5:14 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Justmeagain said:

I suspect this thread needs to be moved to another home!

Or are we still trying to establish what Mahamudra is before comparing it to the more easily defined Shikantaza?

Malcolm wrote:

Mahamudra is the nature of your mind and everything else.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 5:08 AM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

BuddhistPariah said:

And because this thread created by an advanced and respected teacher and Boddhisatva is about division and hatred...

Malcolm wrote:

I don't hate Trump. I just think he is an tushy hole.

Edited for language.

Mod QQ

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 1:03 AM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

Queequeg said:

I had not thought it through that far. You're probably right. At some point they figured out they had the perfect patsy. The only card Trump has is his supporters. In order for them to function as his shield, he has to have them riled up and foaming at the mouth, and that is hard to do, especially when they realize the government he is putting together is not going bring jobs to Columbus and Flynt, and is going to in fact strip out their medicare and medicaid, social security, etc. To keep that crowd whipped up, he would have continue his campaign around the country and sooner or later, that show is going to get boring. He's then going to find out he has no real clout at the midterms when he tries to remove congressmen and senators who aren't on his side. He's about to find out how little support you get from rank and file congressmen when you don't help them with fundraising and local campaigns.

Johnny Dangerous said:

It's gonna be a lot easier for him to rile up his supporters with people bandying about these random, unvetted accusations likely originating with the intelligence community. In fact it's one nightmare scenario that could come from people's sudden embrace of this "fake news", a likely one IMO since so much of this unverifiable, this will only galvanize his supporters. It lends credence to Trump in the eyes of his followers, and takes people's eyes off what they should be focused on - building some kind of legitimate resistance to Trump and his plans. So, great job American Deep State.

Malcolm wrote:

Bury him in the excrement, all of it, so he spends all his time whining like the little whiner he is. Could you believe the press conference today? Marching bands? hahahaha, what a tremendous fool those tushy holes elected.

We're trying for a PG-13 standard going forward. Edited to conform to the applicable standards. Thank you for your understanding.

Mod-QQ

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 12th, 2017 at 12:40 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Felix said:

I joined this Forum in good faith in order to share views on Dzogchen. I have encountered one thread where new age teachings are being marketed as Dzogchen, and those who object to this are being labelled as 'nit pickers'.

Now I find myself in a debate which seems to conflate Dzogchen with Sutrayana.

I think I need to spend time away from Dharma Wheel to examine and review my reasons for joining.

Malcolm wrote:

Felix, don't worry. This is all a dream.

I am not sure how much time you have spent with teachers and communities outside the DC, but trust me, they generally think we are very strange.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 11:22 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

heart said:

Probably Rinpoche find the Sarma tradition style of first training in relative Bodhicitta and the later ultimate Bodhicitta a little superficial.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that is what we have been saying.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 10:52 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

heart said:

Seems like I only know about authentic Bodhicitta then.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

He is contrasting this with the gradual process of developing bodhicitta in Mahāyāna where you first take the bodhisattva vow, and then you spend time cultivating love and compassion, practicing tons of tonglen, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

heart said:

You misunderstood obviously, it is a good idea to read Rinpoches book. Developing the bodhicitta of intention and application is an integral part of the path as Rinpoche teach it.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Hi Magnus:

What Rinpoche has said consistently since I started following him is that contrived bodhicitta is well, contrived. Bodhicitta that arises from seeing that the reason sentient beings suffer from not having recognized their own state on the basis of having recognized one's own is much better. The former can become maudlin sentimentality. The latter is genuine.

The reason he has standard teachings on bodhicitta in the Precious Vase and so on is that one needs to understand the differences between various kinds of bodhicitta if one is going to be a teacher. Remember, the Precious Vase is in fact a teachers manual. I am quite certain of this since the first retreat I ever attended was the first US SMS Base level retreat in 1992. He addressed this question at length, responding to criticisms that he never taught bodhicitta.

heart said:

"Maudlin sentimentality" isn't Bodhicitta on any level of teaching Malcolm. Rinpoche makes pretty clear how Bodhicitta is integrated in the path in "The foundations of the path".

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Magnus,

Rinpoche states again and again it is better to have bodhicitta based on recognition of one's real state than the contrived bodhicitta of common Mahāyāna. He is not saying bodhicitta is unnecessary, he is distinguishing contrived bodhicitta from authentic bodhicitta and the need to give rise to the latter rather than the former since the former is not stable and can disappear in a second.

For this reason, he uses the generation of bodhicitta that comes from the Anuyoga tantras:

I and all sentient beings have always been buddhas;
recognizing this to be so,
I generate supreme bodhicitta.
M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 10:31 PM

Title: Re: What is the Dzogchen and/or Nyingma assertion of how conventional phenomena exists?

Content:

Matt J said:

How is it that phenomenon are illusory dreams, yet not mind? How do they not exist from their own side yet are not projections of mind, either?

Tenzincharpa said:

According to the Dzogchen and/or Nyingma, does conventional phenomena:

Malcolm wrote:

According to the Dzogchen and/or Nyingma, conventional phenomena are apparent yet nonexistent, thus they are illusory, etc.

Mind is also a clearly apparent nonexistent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 10:30 PM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

I'm happy to be in the minority - it's normally a good thing. Again, this is rather surprising to me as there is no enlightenment without causes and a graduated path.

Malcolm wrote:

Sadly, in this lifetime you will never understand the result that does not arise from cause, will never hear the intimate instruction that does not arise from scripture, nor realize the buddhahood that does not come from mind.

However, every time you see those six little syllables in my sig, it is planting a cause for your eventual liberation through Dzogchen teachings.

Coëmgenu said:

Those symbols actually appear as boxes with X's in them on my computer. I guess I don't get the subliminal benefits.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, you need to install a Tibetan web font.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 9:33 PM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is not that we care, it is that combined with Trump's alleged rape of teenagers in sex parties of convicted pedophile Epstein, the Hollywood Access comments, comments made on the Howard Stern's show, and so on, it is just more of the same. Perv Elect Trump.

Grigoris said:

Rape is an illegal act of violence and has nothing to do with sex. Water sports, between consenting adults (albeit paid) is not illegal (especially not in Russia).

A rapist should not be put into the same category as somebody that has Queer sexual preferences, they should be put in the same category as a murderer or some other type of violent criminal.

Malcolm wrote:

Rapists can be queer. But that is not the point. The point is a pattern of behavior of sexual exploitation and power.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 9:25 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Felix said:

I at no point said that ChNN downplays or negates Bodhicitta. What I said was that he has said (in my hearing) that he cautioned us against striving to feel empathy or striving to feel compassion because it is counter productive. I am paraphrasing his words. As he says one way we generate Bodhicitta is by acts of compassion. This is not dependant on our subjective mindset.

heart said:

You misunderstood obviously, it is a good idea to read Rinpoches book. Developing the bodhicitta of intention and application is an integral part of the path as Rinpoche teach it.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Hi Magnus:

What Rinpoche has said consistently since I started following him is that contrived bodhicitta is well, contrived. Bodhicitta that arises from seeing that the reason sentient beings suffer from not having recognized their own state on the basis of having recognized one's own is much better. The former can become maudlin sentimentality. The latter is genuine.

The reason he has standard teachings on bodhicitta in the Precious Vase and so on is that one needs to understand the differences between various kinds of bodhicitta if one is going to be a teacher. Remember, the Precious Vase is in fact a teachers manual. I am quite certain of this since the first retreat I ever attended was the first US SMS Base level retreat in 1992. He addressed this question at length, responding to criticisms that he never taught bodhicitta.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 9:20 PM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

Grigoris said:

Yeah, I also don't get this American obsession with their Presidents sexual behaviour. One of Greece's longest serving and popular Prime Ministers dumped his wife and kids for an airline stewardess and nobody batted an eyelid.

There are MUCH more important things to critique Trump about.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not that we care, it is that combined with Trump's alleged rape of teenagers in sex parties of convicted pedophile Epstein, the Hollywood Access comments, comments made on the Howard Stern's show, and so on, it is just more of the same. Perv Elect Trump.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 8:59 PM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

DGA said:

For the record, who cares if he's into watersports? That's the least offensive thing about Trump.

Malcolm wrote:

It is just so typical...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 8:49 PM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

I'm happy to be in the minority - it's normally a good thing. Again, this is rather surprising to me as there is no enlightenment without causes and a graduated path.

Malcolm wrote:

Sadly, in this lifetime you will never understand the result that does not arise from cause, will never hear the intimate instruction that does not arise from scripture, nor realize the buddhahood that does not come from mind.

However, every time you see those six little syllables in my sig, it is planting a cause for your eventual liberation through Dzogchen teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 6:32 PM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.alternet.org/election-2016/donald-trump-was-bailed-out-bankruptcy-russia-crime-bosses>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 10:39 AM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

...

Malcolm wrote:

It has plenty of sources. The context is that Trump is a puppet.

Johnny Dangerous said:

None of it has been corroborated by anyone, and if mainstream sources are to be believed again it's of somewhat iffy provenance.

Malcolm wrote:

It's opo research originally payed for by Republicans against Trump and later Dems.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 10:34 AM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

...

Malcolm wrote:

It has plenty of sources. The context is that Trump is a puppet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 10:24 AM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Seems like the Left's version of Fake News frankly. All this nonsense and media coverage, and I have yet to see any proof.

Not that I would be surprised if I had, but this is all still just allegation, and from a questionable source - that report.

I really hope if this is indeed true that they make public something more than what they have.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh ye of little faith. The IC has felt that enough of the repot was substantiable to summarize it in a two page briefing for POTUS, Trump and so on.

Johnny Dangerous said:

I'm not sure that means much to me, frankly. This story is also being spun so differently in mainstream sources that it is almost impossible to tell exactly what is being presented to Trump, POTUS. I have no idea what to make of any it.

Malcolm wrote:

just read it and weep.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 10:20 AM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Astus said:

The Shurangama Sutra existed in China by around 730, if not earlier. Trisong Detsen, who invited Padmasambhava and Vimalamitra to Tibet, began his rule in 755. According to Sam van Schaik Dzogchen did not exist on its own until the 10th century, and Menngagde works date back only to the 11th century. In other words, not only sky gazing and leap over practices were nowhere around when the sutra appeared, but even Dzogchen has not yet formed.

Tsongkhapafan said:

In other words, Buddha did not teach Dzogchen. How then can it be a Buddhist practice? Buddha Shakyamuni predicted the appearance of Nagarjuna and Je Tsongkhapa but not Garab Dorje.

Coëmgenu said:

Do the words need to come out of the Buddha's mouth in exactly so-and-so order, in exactly such-and-such linguistic terminology and phrasing, to be, nonetheless, Buddha's teaching?

Take for instance the Heart Sutra. It is very unlikely that the Buddha himself said exactly those words in exactly that order, but Avalokiteśvara delivers Buddhavacana nonetheless, from a wide variety of sources, and condenses them into a succinct composite statement built from long but textually disparate Prajñāpāramitā Buddhavacana that was spoken by the Buddha (Buddha willing), in so-and-so order and such-and-such terminology/phrasing, it is simply put in a new order for the purposes of expounding the heart of the wisdom-perfection teachings.

Is the Heart Sutra not Buddhavacana? I would say it is, despite not being said by the Buddha in exactly that phrasing originally.

The same could be true of Dzogchen teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

Poor TKF does not understand the principle of the direct teachings, teaching through permission (like the Heart Sutra), teaching through blessings, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 10:17 AM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Seems like the Left's version of Fake News frankly. All this nonsense and media coverage, and I have yet to see any proof.

Not that I would be surprised if I had, but this is all still just allegation, and from a questionable source - that report.

I really hope if this is indeed true that they make public something more than what they have.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh ye of little faith. The IC has felt that enough of the report was substantiable to summarize it in a two page briefing for POTUS, Trump and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 9:58 AM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

dreambow said:

I don't think Trump is a Russian puppet. Like attracts like and in this case both leaders are oligarchs and seem to have their own lucrative projects, advancements and interests at heart.

Malcolm wrote:

Total puppet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 9:49 AM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Read about it https://www.buzzfeed.com/kenbensinger/these-reports-allege-trump-has-deep-ties-to-russia?utm_term=.mcbW4E5ea#.aj0Z0J1KG.

Coëmgenu said:

I agree with what is written, but BuzzFeed is a terrible source. Luckily they have links to better material embedded in their article.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that the Russians apparently have videos of Trump with prostitutes he has engaged for the purpose of pissing on each other in the bed the Obamas slept in, and much more sordid material, corruption, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 9:08 AM

Title: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Read about it https://www.buzzfeed.com/kenbensinger/these-reports-allege-trump-has-deep-ties-to-russia?utm_term=.mcbW4E5ea#.aj0Z0J1KG.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 8:49 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Astus said:

It is non-gradual if you limit Mahamudra to the realisation of and familiarisation with the nature of mind.

Malcolm wrote:

That's all Mahāmudra is.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Seems like a tricky way of seeing it, realization of the nature of mind would always be non-gradual wouldn't it? Sustaining that realization on the other hand would have to be gradual for the vast majority of folks.

Malcolm wrote:

No. Once you have seen the nature of the mind, that is all there is to do.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 8:45 AM

Title: Re: What Tsongkhapa said

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, why do you think that just because a word is in Sanskrit, its literal meaning is therefore rigidly cast in stone? Any word, used under different contexts, can mean different things, whether it is in English, Sanskrit, or any other language. Context is always important. Also, remember that language evolves.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a question of rigid definitions, it is, as Cone notes, a question of terminology as it was used at that time in India in a very specific technical context. But since you are not a translator, and have no expertise in either Tibetan or Sanskrit technical literature of any kind, your naive attitude towards language is forgivable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 6:15 AM

Title: Re: As ye sow so shall ye Streep

Content:

boda said:

I've adored Meryl Streep since The French Lieutenant's Woman, so it pains me a bit to find myself agreeing, in a way, with the backlash brought by her comments at the Golden Globe Awards. On the surface I completely agree with her, but looking more deeply I question what's really behind it.

George Clooney, a fellow actor, supported Streep by commenting that it's not the presidents job to belittle his critics. By the same token, couldn't we say that Streep is an actor and it's her job to act, and it's not her job to critique political figures?

Malcolm wrote:

Since when is being an actor a limit on one's speech?

A president has to maintain the dignity of his office, something Trump is entirely unequipped to do. He should take a page from the queen's book. Come to think of it, maybe New England should repatriate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 6:00 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and the Two Truths Doctrine

Content:

tomamundsen said:

While I have the utmost respect for Namkhai Norbu Rinpoche, and have no doubt that he is a Vidyadhara, this is just silly. He is not the only one alive today.

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty much. Who else is there? Seriously. Note I said "Vidyādhara of Dzogchen teachings." I did not say he was the only person from whom one could receive Dzogchen teachings. Unless you have directly studied with him, it is impossible to comprehend just how vast and deep his knowledge and realization of Dzogchen teachings are and how completely different his presentation of Dzogchen is from everyone else.

heart said:

Different isn't necessary bad, in fact it can be a good thing.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

You have taken many teachings with ChNN. So you know what I am talking about. People who have not met him cannot really comprehend what they are missing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 5:43 AM

Title: Re: Julian Assange

Content:

dreambow said:

Would not releasing the Clinton files also be seen as influencing the election? You can't win in this situation as too many have vested interests, many in America are dyed in the wool democrats or republicans. Often their political allegiance set in concrete. Without the release I would not have known Bernie was scuttled and given the old heave-ho by the Clinton camp.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that Assange is a dangerous asshole who only cares about his anti-privacy agenda. That includes your privacy and mine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 5:42 AM

Title: Re: What Tsongkhapa said

Content:

Jeff H said:

I'm not saying it's the only system or a universal "best" system. But it has been the best system for me. And I agree with cloudburst that it would be interesting to hear how Nagarjuna and Chandrakirti mean something different in the passages where they use "inherent existence" as opposed to where they use "existence".

Malcolm wrote:

It quite depends on whether they are using the word prakṛiti or svabhāva. Unfortunately Patshab Nyima Dragpa changed all instances of ngo bo nyid (svabhāva) in the MMK to rang bzhin without carefully distinguishing prakṛiti and svabhāva in the original. To Tsongkhapa's credit actually, his realization is supposed to have dawned as a result of reading the Buddhapaṇitavṛtti, which was translated in the early period by Cogro and carefully preserves this distinction, though there are other faults with it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 5:31 AM

Title: Re: Minobu's Muse: Lord Nagarjuna, The Lotus Sutra, The Gakki

Content:

Minobu said:

but if you know , if you really know then this post holds clues and keys to the accomplishment.

Malcolm wrote:

Guess you're not above flattering yourself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 5:28 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and the Two Truths Doctrine

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

While there are many good teachers alive today, there is only one living Vidyādhara of Dzogchen teachings.

tomamundsen said:

While I have the utmost respect for Namkhai Norbu Rinpoche, and have no doubt that he is a Vidyadhara, this is just silly. He is not the only one alive today.

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty much. Who else is there? Seriously. Note I said "Vidyādhara of Dzogchen teachings." I did not say he was the only person from whom one could receive Dzogchen teachings. Unless you have directly studied with him, it is impossible to comprehend just how vast and deep his knowledge and realization of Dzogchen teachings are and how completely different his presentation of Dzogchen is from everyone else.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 5:26 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and the Two Truths Doctrine

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

As Thinley Norbu says in "Echoes":

Malcolm wrote:

As Javier says, we need to meet a Vidyādhara. While there are many good teachers alive today, there is only one living Vidyādhara of Dzogchen teachings. Everyone better meet him while they still have the chance if they are truly interested in Dzogchen teachings. Everyone else can stick with their sadhanas, mālas, vajras, and bells.

heart said:

I think you limit yourself in an unnecessary way there Malcolm, in fact I know you do.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

You are missing the point, my friend. What I am saying is that people chase after this sadhana and that sadhana and miss the chance to meet a great master. There was once this guy who went to Nepal, and because he did not know who Tulku Orgyen was, missed a chance to go see him because he was more interested in Lamdre. I think you know who I am talking about.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 5:14 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and the Two Truths Doctrine

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

As Thinley Norbu says in "Echoes": If we follow a Lama who has wisdom mind, he will be able to introduce the fundamental nature without using any concepts, and without our having to think about it or become involved in any idea of it as anything at all. We will experience it directly. Without any concept at all, we will understand the Dzogchen view.

Malcolm wrote:

As Javier says, we need to meet a Vidyādhara. While there are many good teachers alive today, there is only one living Vidyādhara of Dzogchen teachings. Everyone better meet him while they still have the chance if they are truly interested in Dzogchen teachings. Everyone else can stick with their sadhanas, mālās, vajras, and bells.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 2:59 AM

Title: Re: What Tsongkhapa said

Content:

cloudburst said:

Chandrakirti comments on Aryadeva's 400 delusion acts to superimpose upon things an essence of true existence

Malcolm wrote:

He also says:

The term "permanence" is descriptor for a nature (rang bzhin), truth (bden pa), essence (snying po), existence (dngos po), and substance (rdzas). Since those do not exist, the conditioned is natureless, untrue, essenceless, nonexistent, insubstantial, possesses a deceptive identity, and is a mundane delusion of the immature.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 2:04 AM

Title: Re: Minobu's Muse: Lord Nagarjuna, The Lotus Sutra, The Gakki

Content:

Minobu said:

So you get to tell us what is a legend and give no other plausible reason on how the Sutras got here.

Malcolm wrote:

There are many plausible reasons.

Minobu said:

thats your rebuttal and reason for calling something sacred to me clap trap.

Malcolm wrote:

You are a Nicherin Buddhist, supposedly. There is neither Kundalini yoga nor Caṇḍalī yoga in Nicherin Buddhism.

Minobu said:

Ahhh but there is Padwan, one just needs a nudge.

Look at the Gohonzon and The Way the Characters Are Placed .

He inscribed His Life in Sumi Ink.

Malcolm wrote:

Whatever floats your boat.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 2:03 AM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Queequeg said:

That's too far, isn't it?

From a modern scholarly perspective, ie. the Social Sciences, the legends are more raw material for study.

For the modern scholar, all of it is just more stuff to catalog and analyze.

Astus said:

If one wants to establish a historical sequence, then it does not matter how old a tradition believes itself to be. What one should look for are datable and verifiable evidences. At the same time, it also means that one cannot say anything more than what the evidence can corroborate. So, for instance the Shurangama Sutra can be believed to be 2500 years old, but historically it is datable only to 8th century China.

Similarly, Dzogchen may proclaim itself to go back to India, but the earliest texts are 9th century Tibet. To put it another way, who would believe today a person who claims to be the sole representative of an ancient Buddhist lineage nobody has yet heard of and nothing can back up its existence?

Malcolm wrote:

In fact, we have independent confirmation of the presence of the Dzogchen tradition in India in the work of Mañjuśrīkīrti who notes an old debate with Śrī Simha concerning whether creation stage is actually necessary. We know from ancient Tibetan sources that Vairocana met this teacher.

You might be satisfied with the crippled approach of text criticism, but that is your problem. For you, everything depends on a book which appears at some time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 1:16 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

But it really doesn't work that way. No matter what books you might have read. Mahāmudra is nongradual.

Astus said:

It is non-gradual if you limit Mahamudra to the realisation of and familiarisation with the nature of mind.

Malcolm wrote:

That's all Mahāmudra is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 11th, 2017 at 12:36 AM

Title: Re: Scorpion Symbolism

Content:

philji said:

How are these pictures used? Above a door or anywhere in particular?

Malcolm wrote:

They are to keep the Gyalpo out of one's home.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 11:53 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

TaTa said:

So if one practices dzogchen semde the only difference between dzogchen and mahamudra approach is thogal? Or is there another difference.

Also, HYT empowerment would count for this approach to mahamudra, in the sense of the difference between sutra samatha and vipasyana and mahamudra samatha and vipasyana as you described? Or it has to be direct introduction in the same fashion as for example Namkhai Norbu teaches?

Malcolm wrote:

As for your first question. There are of course other differences, but they are mainly technical, not practical. Dzogchen has a more extensive explanation of the basis, and differentiates between the basis (gzhi), and the mind that apprehends the basis (kun gzhi). In Mahāmudra this distinction is not made. However, the essential difference between Dzogchen and other systems is thögal. Otherwise, Mahāmudra, Lamdre, Trekchö and so on all have the same main point, equipoise in a moment of unfabricated consciousness aka tha mal gyi shes pa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 11:48 PM

Title: Re: What Tsongkhapa said

Content:

cloudburst said:

Since this is a core position of Je tsongkhapa, you would need to understand it to understand his position.

DGA said:

You are avoiding the question. How do you prove that inherent existence appears to all sentient beings, at all times, except for aryas in equipoise?

It's one thing to understand whether or not Je Tsongkhapa makes such a claim. it's another thing to demonstrate that it is so. How would you do it?

cloudburst said:

Inherent existence is another way of saying the extreme of existence. It is axiomatic that sentient beings perceive it, for if they did not, they would not be sentient beings, they would be aryas

Malcolm wrote:

Thus you admit that existence and inherent existence are synonyms and there is no fault in negating existence rather than inherent existence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

Buddha Shakyamuni predicted the appearance of Nagarjuna and Je Tsongkhapa but not Garab Dorje.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddha predicted Garab Dorje also, as well as Padmasambhava. Your sectarian bias is showing here, TKF.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 11:13 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that uncommon śamatha and vipāśyāna is based on knowledge you have. Common śamatha and vipāśyāna is no different than sutrayāna practice. The former is based on direct introduction, and it is basically the same as the four samadhis of Dzogchen Sems sde: calmness (gnas pa), immovability (mi g.yo ba), nonduality (gnyis med) and natural perfection (lhun grub).

Astus said:

And what I described was that one practises the common calming and insight followed by the uncommon, and this order can be set into the four yogas where the first two are common calming and insight, and the last two are the uncommon.

Malcolm wrote:

But it really doesn't work that way. No matter what books you might have read. Mahāmudra is nongradual.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 11:07 PM

Title: Re: Mahayana origins and provenance of Mahayana sutras

Content:

paël said:

Have all Mahayana Sutras been brought from Naga Realm?

Malcolm wrote:

No, not really. According to the traditional account, the Mahāyāna sūtras were collected by Mañjuśrī and Samantabhadra on a mountain in S. India.

The PP Sūtras were supposedly recovered by Nāgārjuna from the Nāgās, but the details of this story are hopelessly confused with the tantric Nāgārjuna, so much so, that Buton winds up claiming that Nāgārjuna debates the hindu Shankara, who lived in the 8th century.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 10:59 PM

Title: Re: What Tsongkhapa said

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Oh Jeff

Jeff H said:

??

Malcolm wrote:

My bad

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 10:49 PM

Title: Re: tetralemma

Content:

gad rgyangs said:

"self"

"no self"

"both"

"neither"

are rejected as accurate depictions of reality, because reality transcends the four extremes.

Malcolm wrote:

Even reality does not exist according to the four extremes.

Nothing is beyond the four extremes.

gad rgyangs said:

if you dont like the word "exists" then you can say reality is "thus".

Malcolm wrote:

Since the relative does not exist by way of the four extremes, also ultimate does not exist by way of the four extremes. If there is something beyond the four extremes, it is an extreme.

In other words, there is nothing in the middle, either.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 10:27 PM

Title: Re: tetralemma

Content:

gad rgyangs said:

"self"

"no self"

"both"

"neither"

are rejected as accurate depictions of reality, because reality transcends the four extremes.

Malcolm wrote:

Even reality does not exist according to the four extremes.

Nothing is beyond the four extremes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 10:02 PM

Title: Re: Scorpion Symbolism

Content:

mint said:

What does the scorpion symbolize in Tibetan Buddhism? Is it an auspicious symbol?

Is there any connection between the scorpion symbolism and those person born in the zodiac symbol of Scorpio?

Malcolm wrote:

The scorpion is a messenger of Guru Dragpo. It is based on the taming of the gyalpo spirit Pehar at Samye Monastery.

Once, when Padmasambhava was teaching there, there Pehar manifested as a young monk and asked Padmasambhava what he feared most. Padmasambhava replied, in Tibetan, that he most feared sdig pa, misdeeds. Pehar, misunderstanding, thought Padmsambhava was referring to scorpions (also spelled sdig pa). The next day a huge scorpion terrified Samye, and Padmsambhava manifesting as the wrathful guru, seized the scorpion by its tail and threatened it with a vajra.

There is no connection with the Zodiac.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 9:52 PM

Title: Re: Minobu's Muse: Lord Nagarjuna, The Lotus Sutra, The Gakki

Content:

Minobu said:

So you get to tell us what is a legend and give no other plausible reason on how the Sutras got here.

Malcolm wrote:

There are many plausible reasons.

Minobu said:

thats your rebuttal and reason for calling something sacred to me clap trap.

Malcolm wrote:

You are a Nicherin Buddhist, supposedly. There is neither Kundalini yoga nor Caṇḍalī yoga in Nicherin Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 9:40 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

So you apparently agree with my statement, "...in mahāmudra, śamatha and vipāśyāna unified from the beginning since it is simply a means of stabilizing one's knowledge of the nature of the mind pointed out by the guru."

Astus said:

No. There are two interpretations of the four yogas I know of, and the more popular one among Kagyupas seems to be the view that one-pointedness is interpreted as the common practice of calming and concentration, while it is during simplicity / non-elaboration that one gains insight into the nature of mind. Accordingly, calming and insight are practised in order to gain knowledge, and only following that can one cultivate their unified form (the third yoga of one taste) based on the realisation.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that uncommon śamatha and vipāśyāna is based on knowledge you have. Common śamatha and vipāśyāna is no different than sutrayāna practice. The former is based on direct introduction, and it is basically the same as the four samadhis of Dzogchen Sems sde: calmness (gnas pa), immovability (mi g.yo ba), nonduality (gnyis med) and natural perfection (lhun grub).

The first is called "śamatha," because one cultivates an experience of a state of calmness. The second is called "vipāśyāna," because one recognizes that movement and calmness are identical in nature. These leads to the experience of their nonduality, and finally, the experience of natural perfection.

But all four of these samadhis are based on having had an experience of the nature of the mind based on direction introduction. In reality, these samadhis are not practiced gradually but are four qualities of equipoise on the nature of the mind.

It is a very common belief among Dzogchen teachers that Gampopa borrowed the four samadhis and changed their names, since he had started out as a Dzogchen practitioner. Further, Dzogchen teachers very often teach the four yogas of Mahāmudra when they teach sems sde, for example, Adzom Drugpa, Tulku Orgyen and so on.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 9:38 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Common śamatha and vipaśayāna are engaged in by those who have no experience of the nature of the mind. But in mahāmudra, śamatha and vipaśayāna unified from the beginning since it is simply a means of stabilizing one's knowledge of the nature of the mind pointed out by the guru, as in Dzogchen sems sde or trekchö, or the Lamdre's "inseparability of samsara and nirvana" and so on.

Astus said:

The reason calming and insight is practised is to experience the nature of mind. The difference between sudden and gradual according to Tashi Namgyal is that those with supreme intellect do not need to practise calming but can directly gain insight following their familiarity with the teachings. Then, according to Thrangu rinpoche, the difference between common and special practice of calming and insight is that in Mahamudra one begins with insight into the nature of mind instead of insight into the nature of appearances. Finally, systematic instruction in calming and insight is more reliable and efficient according to him than pointing out instructions.

Malcolm wrote:

So you apparently agree with my statement, "...in mahāmudra, śamatha and vipaśayāna unified from the beginning since it is simply a means of stabilizing one's knowledge of the nature of the mind pointed out by the guru."

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 9:32 AM

Title: Re: Minobu's Muse: Lord Nagarjuna, The Lotus Sutra, The Gakki

Content:

Minobu said:

Malcolm you called something I hold sacred claptrap.

<http://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=59&t=24375&p=371953#p371953>

This is why I implore you to clarify.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a pity when people hold misguided opinions to be sacred,

I assert that you actually don't know what the guy's post in question is about and that you just don't want to answer in order for it to go away.

You may assert whatever you like.

Minobu said:

so your take on Lord Buddha Nagarjuna's journey to the bottom of an Ocean to retrieve Sacred Sutra Scrolls you take "Literally" ?

Malcolm wrote:

Like all the origin legends of Mahāyāna, it is a legend.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 9:00 AM

Title: Re: Julian Assange

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Agreed except on the Assange part, IMO he has been so lopsided his motives are in question.

Malcolm wrote:

Precisely.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 8:43 AM

Title: Re: President elect Donald Trump

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Screw Trump, he is an asshole, and so is every one who voted for him.

R said:

I deeply care for him. Don't insult my grandmother from the past life.

Malcolm wrote:

Some of our grandmothers from past lives are complete assholes in this one.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 3:10 AM

Title: Re: President elect Donald Trump

Content:

R said:

Please, pray, offer, meditate, for the benefit of Donald Trump.

Thank you.

Malcolm wrote:

Screw Trump, he is an asshole, and so is every one who voted for him.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 3:07 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

conebeckham said:

I agree that, once Nature of Mind has been intuited, stabilizing one's knowledge is the practice, but I think it's fair to say that, at least in Kagyu Mahamudra traditions, we can see both gradual and non-gradual methods. One only need look at Dakpo Tashi Namgyal's Moonbeams or the well-known "Ocean of Certainty."

Malcolm wrote:

Even in these books, a clear distinction is made between the practice of those who have recognized the nature of the mind based on "pointing out" or direct introduction, and those who have not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 3:04 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Matt J said:

Isn't stabilizing, clearing the ground, removing afflictions and obscurations etc. just another name for gradual? No one advocates a one and done approach for most practitioners.

Malcolm wrote:

No. "Gradual" means accumulating merit and wisdom. This is not the principle in either Dzogchen or Mahāmudra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 2:10 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

With respect to Mahāmudra, it is simply wrong.

Astus said:

If that is wrong, then what do you consider all the methods transmitted under the label of Mahamudra, particularly the techniques of calming and insight?

Malcolm wrote:

Common śamatha and vipaśayāna are engaged in by those who have no experience of the nature of the mind. But in mahāmudra, śamatha and vipaśayāna unified from the beginning since it is simply a means of stabilizing one's knowledge of the nature of the mind pointed out by the guru, as in Dzogchen sems sde or trekchö, or the Lamdre's "inseparability of samsara and nirvana" and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 1:10 AM

Title: Re: Minobu's Muse: Lord Nagarjuna, The Lotus Sutra, The Gakki

Content:

Minobu said:

Now Kundalini is a very real aspect of the six yogas of Naropa. I can't and should not even be saying that. But it is pretty much in the public domain.
where do you think Tummo energy is derived from.

Malcolm wrote:

Common misunderstanding. Kundalini is one thing. Caṇḍalī (gtum mo) is another.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 12:51 AM

Title: Re: What is the Dzogchen and/or Nyingma assertion of how conventional phenomena exists?

Content:

Tenzinharpa said:

According to the Dzogchen and/or Nyingma, does conventional phenomena:

Malcolm wrote:

According to the Dzogchen and/or Nyingma, conventional phenomena are apparent yet nonexistent, thus they are illusory, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 12:43 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The four yogas in reality are not a means to achieve anything. They are a means to familiarize oneself with the nature of the mind one has already recognized.

Astus said:

I think I did not describe the yogas as methods either.

Malcolm wrote:

This is what you said:

Zen practice begins and ends at non-abiding. Mahamudra provides a gradual path to non-abiding.

With respect to Mahāmudra, it is simply wrong.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 12:29 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The principle of both mahāmudra and the great perfection is to distinguish the mind from the nature of the mind. That is accomplished on the basis of the intimate instructions of a qualified guru. But in both cases there is no gradual path.

Astus said:

"See nature, become buddha" could be called a shared idea of Zen and Mahamudra. But while you don't find much on the topic of gradual instructions in Zen, it seems to me that people like Dagpo Tashi Namgyal and Wangchuk Dorje worked hard on spelling out the details of the preliminary practices, the main practices of calming and insight, and the stages of the four yogas, just as modern teachers of the tradition, like Thrangu Rinpoche, follow in their footsteps. I'm not debating what you say about Mahamudra, but it seems to me that is a somewhat selective presentation. Furthermore, I consider those detailed instructions in the Mahamudra tradition of Gampopa an asset, and I'm not saying that it makes it anything inferior.

Malcolm wrote:

The four yogas in reality are not a means to achieve anything. They are a means to familiarize oneself with the nature of the mind one has already recognized.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 12:26 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Grigoris said:

And then there is Ganges Mahamudra...

Malcolm wrote:

This is not different than other mahāmudra instructions.

Grigoris said:

The praxis is different.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, I see, you mean between the four so called yogas of mahāmudra. Yes, Ganges Mahāmudra is nominally related to completion stage practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 12:22 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Grigoris said:

And then there is Ganges Mahamudra...

Malcolm wrote:

This is not different than other mahāmudra instructions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 10th, 2017 at 12:05 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāmudra and Dzogchen are both paths of self-liberation. There is no gradual training for either.

Astus said:

Do you then call the rest what? Preliminaries? Still, they are preliminaries somewhat specific in each tradition.

Malcolm wrote:

The principle of both mahāmudra and the great perfection is to distinguish the mind from the nature of the mind. That is accomplished on the basis of the intimate instructions of a qualified guru. But in both cases there is no gradual path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 9th, 2017 at 11:55 PM

Title: Re: Did Mahayana influence Theravada Buddhism?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

All Mahāyānis follow the same path. The Mahāyāna path begins with bodhicitta, the practice of the six or ten perfections is in the middle, and it concludes with perfect buddhahood.

There are merely differences concerning view. But not conduct, not the path, and not the result.

Grigoris said:

I think you may have missed the wide divergence of paths which starts to take place after the practice of the Paramita and their convergence back again at perfect Buddhahood.

Malcolm wrote:

Mere details.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 9th, 2017 at 11:55 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Justmeagain said:

But I think the process of practice is a given.

One is utterly without form, the other its antithesis.

Do both practices lead to the same end?

Astus said:

All Mahayana traditions have buddhahood as their goal.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, no. Some have buddhahood as their basis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 9th, 2017 at 11:18 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāmudra is non-gradual, actually.

Astus said:

Although one can say that " <http://www.unfetteredmind.org/pith-instructions-on-mahamudra/> " and " <http://keithdowman.net/guestpage/maitripas-essential-mahamudra-verses.html> ", there is still a gradual path employed to train in it.

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāmudra and Dzogchen are both paths of self-liberation. There is no gradual training for either.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 9th, 2017 at 10:49 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Justmeagain said:

I keep reading that the Soto Zen practice of Shikantaza, 'Just Sitting' with no focus or any sort of analytical investigation into the mind.....can be equated to Sutra Mahamudra practices....can someone clarify how or if this is even correct?

Thanks...

DGA said:

to make a meaningful comparison, you would need to get instruction in both practices from capable masters, and to practice them. Otherwise, you just have an intellectual exercise.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and that will take many years. So better to pick one and practice it. Choose well!

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 9th, 2017 at 10:24 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Justmeagain said:

Whilst I appreciate they're different traditions I can't help but feel they're so far apart so as to be almost contradictory.

...

The two practices couldn't be further apart in my opinion.

Astus said:

Zen practice begins and ends at non-abiding. Mahamudra provides a gradual path to non-abiding. There is no contradiction in that, they are simply different approaches.

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāmudra is non-gradual, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 9th, 2017 at 10:16 PM

Title: Re: Did Mahayana influence Theravada Buddhism?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāyāna is a school, in just the same way Theravada is a school. Why? Theravada is also not monolithic, and has many subtraditions, scholastic disputes, and so on.

Grigoris said:

ie Neither of them are a school. Mahāyāna is a school because all Mahāyānists follow the same path.

If you had said: "...because all mahayanis ULTIMATELY aspire to the same end." then I may have agreed with you, but I think it is pretty obvious that not all Mahayana schools follow the same path.

Malcolm wrote:

All Mahāyānis follow the same path. The Mahāyāna path begins with bodhicitta, the practice of the six or ten perfections is in the middle, and it concludes with perfect buddhahood.

There are merely differences concerning view. But not conduct, not the path, and not the result.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 9th, 2017 at 9:39 PM

Title: Re: Dharmata teachings.

Content:

Felix said:

Wow..I followed the link.

It's undeniably not Dzogchen..but I doubt if it's Buddhism at all any recognisable form.

Malcolm wrote:

Neo-mindfulness, complete with Rumi quotes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 9th, 2017 at 9:31 PM

Title: Re: Did Mahayana influence Theravada Buddhism?

Content:

Grigoris said:

In closing: Comparing Mahayana to Theravada is also misleading. Theravada is a school, the Mahayana is a collection of widely varying schools and traditions.

People are presenting the Mahayana as if it is some sort of unitary monolith, when, in fact, there is just as much (if not more) disagreement between Mahayana schools and traditions as there is agreement.

.

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāyāna is a school, in just the same way Theravada is a school. Why? Theravada is also not monolithic, and has many subtraditions, scholastic disputes, and so on.

Mahāyāna is a school because all Mahāyānists follow the same path. Theravada is a school because all Theravadins follow the same path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 9th, 2017 at 8:28 PM

Title: Re: Dharmata teachings.

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

This is connected to this program: <http://www.winterfeastforthesoul.com/>

Felix said:

I can see no connection between this and Dzogchen.

Winter what for the WHAT?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, <http://www.winterfeastforthesoul.com/index2.php?dest=about>

Felix said:

Consider Moses, Elijah, Buddha, Jesus and Mohamed. They all left their ordinary lives for 40 days to connect with the Indwelling Spirit.

Malcolm wrote:

Its a bunch of new twaddle.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 9th, 2017 at 12:16 AM

Title: Re: What Tsongkhapa said

Content:

cloudburst said:

they refute the use of autonomous syllogisms. Therefore prasangikas existed in india

Malcolm wrote:

Oh nonsense. Candra uses syllogisms in the Madhyamakāvatāra.
Further, Tsongkhapa himself uses syllogisms all of the time.

cloudburst said:

yes, madhymikas use syllogisms

Malcolm wrote:

The absurdity of this is that the term "prasangika" etc, is a wholly Tibetan invention, invented by someone who Tsongkhapa himself refutes (Patshab).

cloudburst said:

Where the term was invented has no bearing on whether Chandrakirti, for example, was a Prasangika

Malcolm wrote:

Of course it has a bearing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 8th, 2017 at 9:35 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

So far, I have not encountered any argument that has actually hurt my position in any way.

Malcolm wrote:

You do not acknowledge arguments which reject your position. So, it is no wonder that you have never "encountered" any such arguments.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 8th, 2017 at 9:17 PM

Title: Re: Question

Content:

aparajita said:

What deities or sadhanas would be most effective in countering a curse where someone called upon Santa Muerte? I'm asking for future reference. For background, Santa Muerte is a Central American death goddess who is very popular in Mexico and among those who are from Mexico.

Malcolm wrote:

Simhamukha is the most effective deity for this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 8th, 2017 at 10:11 AM

Title: Re: Julian Assange

Content:

Minobu said:

Ok..what would you call wiki leaks if not whistle blowing?

Malcolm wrote:

A toxic waste dump of mostly useless information.

Minobu said:

lol...

I'm actually starting to like you...

but it's our only glimpse into the goings on of the government...we need to drink from this , it's the only game in town....

Malcolm wrote:

It really isn't. EFF is much better.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 8th, 2017 at 9:28 AM

Title: Re: What Tsongkhapa said

Content:

Konchog1 said:

What did Rendawa attack, besides Kalachakra?

Malcolm wrote:

gzhan stong, he called it "outside Buddhadharma."

Konchog1 said:

Was this something that he himself thought or did he learn it from another? I'm wondering how far it goes.

Malcolm wrote:

AFAIK, it was Rendawa's extremist position alone, but one that influenced his disciple, Tsongkhapa, tremendously.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 8th, 2017 at 9:25 AM

Title: Re: What Tsongkhapa said

Content:

cloudburst said:

they refute the use of autonomous syllogisms. Therefore prasangikas existed in india

Malcolm wrote:

Oh nonsense. Candra uses syllogisms in the Madhyamakāvatāra.

The absurdity of this is that the term "prasangika" etc, is a wholly Tibetan invention, invented by someone who Tsongkhapa himself refutes (Patshab).

Further, Tsongkhapa himself uses syllogisms all of the time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 8th, 2017 at 9:22 AM

Title: Re: What Tsongkhapa said

Content:

Konchog1 said:

The Lord Buddha repeatedly criticized fire worship, holy war, and animal sacrifice as worthless and sinful.

Malcolm wrote:

Tsongkhapa on the other hand attacked fellow Buddhists for having what he decided were wrong views. But he was somewhat polite about it, and kind. His disciple, Kaydrup, on the other hand as neither polite, nor kind. The polemical climate in Tibet was not Tsongkhapa's fault of course. He was following the example of his teacher, the Sakya master Rendawa.

As I have observed before, there is virtually no benefit to studying Tibetan Madhyamaka scholars.

Konchog1 said:

What did Rendawa attack, besides Kalachakra?

Malcolm wrote:

gzhan stong, he called it "outside Buddhadharma."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 8th, 2017 at 8:23 AM

Title: Re: Julian Assange

Content:

Minobu said:

Ok..what would you call wiki leaks if not whistle blowing?

Malcolm wrote:

A toxic waste dump of mostly useless information.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 8th, 2017 at 8:21 AM

Title: Re: What Tsongkhapa said

Content:

cloudburst said:

This is not a very mature position. I agree that the tone of attacks on the Gelug position here is often off-putting, and the fact that Gelugs suppressed the views of others is also off putting, one does not justify the other.

Malcolm wrote:

In fact, Tsongkhapa started it by attacking the views of others. Thus, it is normal that others will respond.

Konchog1 said:

The Lord Buddha repeatedly criticized fire worship, holy war, and animal sacrifice as worthless and sinful.

Malcolm wrote:

Tsongkhapa on the other hand attacked fellow Buddhists for having what he decided were wrong views. But he was somewhat polite about it, and kind. His disciple, Kaydrup, on the other hand as neither polite, nor kind. The polemical climate in Tibet was not Tsongkhapa's fault of course. He was following the example of his teacher, the Sakya master Rendawa.

As I have observed before, there is virtually no benefit to studying Tibetan Madhyamaka scholars.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 8th, 2017 at 7:22 AM

Title: Re: Julian Assange

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I have no problem with whistleblowers. Assange is not a whistleblower. He is at best a middleman.

Minobu said:

i agree sort of...He takes the heat and he set up the means for the info to be uploaded to the internet...so yeah he is a whistle blower.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't agree, obviously. Snowden did not release through Wikileaks. He has also criticized Assange, much to the annoyance of the latter's vanity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 8th, 2017 at 7:01 AM

Title: Re: Our Pristine Mind - Orgyen Chowang's new book

Content:

DGA said:

No, "clarity" in this context does not refer to the conventional nature of mind.

Tsongkhapafan said:

That's what the meditation was on.

Are you referring to conventional or ultimate bodhicitta? the answer to your question about clarity and the point I was making about lhundrub in some respects depends on your answer to this question

Both are wonderfully profound.

Also, you cannot realise the ultimate nature of the mind by meditating on its conventional nature. You can meditate on clarity for a thousand years but you will never realise emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

Whatever happened to your union of two truths.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 8th, 2017 at 6:59 AM

Title: Re: What Tsongkhapa said

Content:

Jeff H said:

But I still consider it a good base and I have found the attacks on the Gelug position here very disconcerting.

Malcolm wrote:

It is normal. The Gelugpas engaged in the suppression of other religion traditions for centuries.

cloudburst said:

This is not a very mature position. I agree that the tone of attacks on the Gelug position here is often off-putting, and the fact that Gelugs suppressed the views of others is also off putting, one does not justify the other.

Malcolm wrote:

In fact, Tsongkhapa started it by attacking the views of others. Thus, it is normal that others will respond.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 8th, 2017 at 4:28 AM

Title: Re: Julian Assange

Content:

HePo said:

ps: Daniel Ellsberg (of the Pentagon papers) wrote:

[Snowden] is the quintessential American whistleblower, and a personal hero of mine, Leaks are the lifeblood of the republic and, for the first time, the American public has been given the chance to debate democratically the NSA's mass surveillance programs. Accountability journalism can't be done without the courageous acts exemplified by Snowden, and we need more like him. . . .

The secrecy system in this country is broken. No one is punished for using secrecy to conceal dangerous policies, lies, or crimes, yet concerned employees who wish to inform the American public about what the government is doing under their name are treated as spies. Our 'accountability' mechanisms are a one-sided secret court, which acts as a rubber stamp, and a Congressional 'oversight' committee, which has turned into the NSA's public relations firm. Edward Snowden had no choice but to go to the press with information. Far from a crime, Snowden's disclosures are a true constitutional moment, where the press has held the government to account using the First Amendment, when the other branches refused.

Malcolm wrote:

I have no problem with whistleblowers. Assange is not a whistleblower. He is at best a middleman.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 8th, 2017 at 4:24 AM

Title: Re: Julian Assange

Content:

Minobu said:

what do you mean he hated Obama????

Malcolm wrote:

Snowden hated

http://www.salon.com/2014/02/07/birth_of_a_whistle_blower_how_edward_snowden_became_edward_snowden/.

Minobu said:

was it Obama who initiated this world wide identify theft

Malcolm wrote:

No. It was the <https://www.eff.org/nsa-spying/how-it-works>:

The NSA's domestic spying program, known in official government documents as the "President's Surveillance Program," ("The Program") was implemented by President George W. Bush shortly after the attacks on September 11, 2001. The US Government still considers the Program officially classified, but a tremendous amount of information has been exposed by various whistleblowers, admitted to by government officials during Congressional hearings and with public statements, and reported on in investigations by major newspaper across the country.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 8th, 2017 at 4:05 AM

Title: Re: Minobu's Muse: Lord Nagarjuna, The Lotus Sutra, The Gakki

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Sheer new age fantasy. It is amazing that anyone falls for this inane claptrap.

DharmaChakra said:

Namaste,

Firstly what is naga, naga is not a race of people, its an abode of knowledge~vidya, usually its mystic and always above ordinary understanding, the nagas were known as mystics, who reside in subterranean worlds as one description. Nagarjuna same as the Buddha has two dimensions, one in the human form and other as an abode of consciousness, Buddha is not just confined to Siddhartha and the knowledge that Nagarjuna had is not uniquely his, the sage Nagarjuna discovered that abode of knowledge .

Buddha Dharma is a discovery, an awakened discovery of things that are already are there. Naga is if we put in modern language a junction within the subtle body, when a nadi opens then certain forms of knowledge is revealed, this knowledge is universal and applies to all and all can have access to it via sadhana or skillful means., many lokas many abodes, all with varying degrees of illuminating knowledge, So when the Buddha said that he keeps teachings with Naga's then he is meaning that they are stored in nagalands or deeper abodes or lokas, which are conscious and luminous and reside in all of us on a subtle level and are universal applicable and accessible to everyone, the sutras came from knowledge and illumination of that naga being experienced.

Is the Buddha in hell, yes he is in all states of consciousness but it may be covered by ordinary consciousness, Buddha is not created or a product of thought/meditation. It is said if one is bit by a naga then its a blessing.

With Metta

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 8th, 2017 at 3:56 AM

Title: Re: Julian Assange

Content:

Minobu said:

really good journalism

Malcolm wrote:

Assange is not a journalist.

I don't have disdain for Manning and Snowden. The former is a sad case; the latter, a libertarian activist who hated Obama.

I think Assange is a self-serving megalomaniac.

And none of them are Daniel Ellsbergs (a real journalist).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 8th, 2017 at 3:17 AM

Title: Re: Julian Assange

Content:

Minobu said:

without these people us little people know nothing.

Malcolm wrote:

We already knew the US Army was accidentally killing civilians in Iraq before Manning (at least, I did). We already knew that the NSA was scooping up all data before Snowden (at least, I did). All Manning and Snowden did was confirm what everyone already knew (at least, what I already knew).

Minobu said:

Governments should be totally transparent.

Malcolm wrote:

This is naive.

Frankly, spilling the voter registration data of all those women in Turkey places them at risk. Assange is a careless, self-promoting idiot.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 7th, 2017 at 11:57 PM

Title: Re: What Tsongkhapa said

Content:

Jeff H said:

But I still consider it a good base and I have found the attacks on the Gelug position here very disconcerting.

Malcolm wrote:

It is normal. The Gelugpas engaged in the suppression of other religion traditions for centuries.

There is nothing wrong with using Tsongkhapa as a base. But like all presentations, it is just a point of view, and not the essence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 7th, 2017 at 11:24 PM

Title: Re: What Tsongkhapa said

Content:

Jeff H said:

„,That is, Bhavaviveka must think that the only difference between Madhyamikas and non-Madhyamikas is that we have analyzed more deeply and worked out the correct implications of the common body of empirical evidence upon which all agree. In this way, Tsong-kha-pa argues, Bhavaviveka implies that intrinsic nature, just as it appears to our ordinary senses, does in fact exist conventionally.

Malcolm wrote:

You should realize that Newland's statements are obviously speculative and cannot be born out by examining what Bhavaviveka himself actually states in his criticism of Samkhya and Buddhapalita's argument against it. This is why, among non-Gelug Mādhyamikas, it is generally held that Bhavaviveka's arguments are more effective at refuting non-Buddhists, while Candrakīrti's arguments are more persuasive against Buddhists. Further, since inherent existence appears to no-one, ever, anywhere, at anytime, and is a learned object of negation, Bhavaviveka confines the object of refutation to the coarse object of refutation, existence.

By treating Bhavaviveka the way you do, you are effectively saying that everything is a nail, and so you will only use a hammer, when sometimes, in some cases, a saw is needed.

Jeff H said:

Point taken. Thank you.

I don't have the resources to bear out your position for myself, nor the inclination since my interest is in the point about subtle clinging to true existence rather than who said what. I have to mention that I consider Newland a reliable source for several reasons. I've read three of his books, listened to him lecture, my teachers hold him in high esteem, and he was the senior translating editor (under Joshua Cutler) for the Great Treastise project. The book I quoted from is his attempt to explicate some of Tsongkhapa's more difficult passages (in this case, he was talking about chapters 17-20).

In any case, I also consider you a reliable source and I appreciate you sharing your perspective.

Malcolm wrote:

There are two issues at stake here: one, your primary goal, which is to understand Tsongkhapa's perspective. In general, LRC is an excellent book. It is very detailed and interesting. The second issue, which should be of concern to everyone who cares about Madhyamaka in general, is the extent to which Tsongkhapa's use of the terms Prasanga and Svatantra actually reflect real positions in Indian Madhyamaka. If they do reflect substantive differences between Indian Madhyamakas, then the distinction becomes substantive. But if it is merely pedagogical, then the distinction is not substantive, apart from various Indian Madhyamakas who level against one another the charge of being making poor arguments, a trend begun by Bhavaviveka, rejected by Candrakīrti, who in turn was castigated for poor arguments by Jñānagarbha (in the Satdvayavibhanga).

Frankly, apart from the religious dimension of Tsongkhapa's impact on Tibetan Buddhism, most of the research done on his thought has been by adherents with a vested interest in trying to defend his view rather than a critical appraisal to verify his claims. So it becomes an issue when this or that person boldly proclaims this or that to be the position of Prasangikas (who never existed in India), when in fact it is really just the position of post 11th century Madhyamakas in Tibet who were trying to understand differences between the new fangled Madhyamaka introduced by Patrīkā Nyima Dragpa and the older Madhyamaka schools introduced during the Imperial period. This older, Tibetan Madhyamaka (Kadampas, 11th and 12th century) indeed made many of the claims about intrinsic characteristics and so on that Tsongkhapa rails against, but they did so in error, because they did not understand Madhyamaka perfectly. This is the reason why, for example, that Dzogchen authors like Rongzom castigate Kadampas in the 12th century for being too attached to characteristics in debate.

Thus, if your goal is to understand Madhyamaka, this is one thing; if your goal is to understand Tsongkhapa, that is another. But don't mix these two goals up please.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 7th, 2017 at 11:06 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics
Content:

Kenneth Chan said:
You are talking about ultimate analysis.

Malcolm wrote:
In Madhyamaka, that is the only kind there is.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, January 7th, 2017 at 10:24 PM
Title: Re: Our Pristine Mind - Orgyen Chowang's new book
Content:
Tsongkhapa said:
I watched the webcast and did the meditation.

So pristine mind is nothing more than stopping thinking? Surely, at best, it's only a meditation on the conventional nature of the mind ('clarity'). It seems directionless and not very profound! (sorry!).

DGA said:
No, "clarity" in this context does not refer to the conventional nature of mind. Here is a discussion in which one party promotes a meditation on a conventional object of mind, a so-called "generic image."

<http://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=51&t=24334&start=60#p368782>

I can't speak for Orgyen Chowang, but generally "clarity" is used to translate the Tibetan term lhundrub, which denotes something that is not limited to the conventional mind. It would be worth your time to investigate the Tibetan concepts kadag and lhundrub.

If you are accustomed to the highly structured programs characteristic of a cult, then yes, this material will likely seem directionless and open-ended to you.
I can see that it's relaxing but Bodhicitta is far more splendid and beneficial.
Are you referring to conventional or ultimate bodhicitta? the answer to your question about clarity and the point I was making about lhundrub in some respects depends on your answer to this question

florin said:
i knew lhundrub to mean something quite different

Malcolm wrote:
I think DGA is referring to the clarity which belongs to the nature, lhun grub. This clarity [gsal ba] is not the same as the various kinds of clarity that belong to the three realms, and can also be referred to as 'od gsal, luminosity; or zang thal, pellucidity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 7th, 2017 at 9:42 PM

Title: Re: Julian Assange

Content:

R said:

Then what?

Malcolm wrote:

The history of Clinton and Wikileaks which goes back a decade+. Assange has had a grudge against Clinton for a long while.

You seem to trust <https://theintercept.com/2016/08/06/accusing-wikileaks-bias-beside-point/>. My point is that Assange is not neutral. He is not above using information for his own political reasons. He is not a journalist. He is not to be trusted. He is careless. From the article above:

To make matters worse, the WikiLeaks Twitter feed also shared a link to another cache of hacked Turkish documents that included home addresses or phone numbers for every female voter in 79 of Turkey's 81 provinces.

This is unconscionable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 7th, 2017 at 9:37 PM

Title: Re: Engaged Buddhism comes in many political stripes

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Your post was probably moved because it has nothing to do with activism, i.e. 'engaged Buddhism', but is a pretty random, generalized complaint that everyone has heard many times. Basically, if you want to be taken seriously, post something that warrants it instead of a casual bitch session about DW politics...otherwise that's all it's going to be.

Dharma Flower said:

It explains in the article the Asian-American Buddhists who have been active in the Republican Party because they were anti-abortion and anti-communist. Can someone please explain how anti-communism and anti-abortion are not legitimate Buddhist forms of activism?

Millions of innocent lives have been lost due to communism and abortion, so why is it more important for Buddhists to hug trees? I am not even trying to be glib. Buddhists who engage in conservative causes are engaged Buddhists too. They have rights and feelings too.

Malcolm wrote:

When one lives in a liberal, democratic society, one should understand the importance of the separation of church and state. It is based in the establishment clause of the first amendment of the US Constitution. The US Government may not interfere in matters of religion, but coterminous with this, the US Government may not establish any religion or religious opinions in law.

I certainly support Buddhist women who prefer not to have abortions. However, your notion that "lives have been lost" due to abortion is a religious opinion, not a universally agreed upon fact. Therefore, I cannot in good conscience seek to legislate laws that limit a women's right to choose what do to with her own body and the tissues that reside in it since not all women are Buddhists. But we live in a society where free speech is cherished, and so people who are against abortion for this and that reason have a right to speak out against the practice as long as they do so legally.

Engaged Buddhism, like liberation theology, is essentially a class-based interpretation of Buddhist social action, which seeks to bring fairness to all living beings (sentient and otherwise), not only human beings. As such, Buddhism also cannot support the ecological and economic irrationality of Capitalism and its oppressive practices anymore than it can support Communism. In practice therefore, engaged Buddhists tend to follow Deep Ecology.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 7th, 2017 at 9:02 PM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Astus said:

What is the earliest example of sky gazing in a Dzogchen text?

Malcolm wrote:

That depends on when you date Garab Dorje.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 7th, 2017 at 9:01 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Of course, it is understood that the interplay itself is also empty of inherent existence. I have already stated this explicitly in a previous post.

Malcolm wrote:

If you carefully study Nāgārjuna, you will note that there is no interplay nor processes at all. Conventionally speaking, causes cannot exist before their effects (because they will then be noncauses), they cannot exist at the same time either (because they will then be noncauses). Causes and effects therefore can neither be the same nor different.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 7th, 2017 at 8:02 PM

Title: Re: The essence of the teachings is not different...

Content:

DharmaChakra said:

[

Nagarjuna's teaching was Incorporated by Gaudapada into his theories on Upanishads, mainly

Malcolm wrote:

He also incorporated Yogacāra arguments in order to refute satkaryavadins and asatkaryavadins. This does not mean that he was a Buddhist, but that he was ecumenical and pragmatic and found Buddhist arguments effective in constructing Hindu nondualism.

Of course, Shankara, in his commentary on the Agamasāstra, vigorously rejects the charge of other Hindus that Gauda took a page from the Buddhists and heaps derision on Buddhists.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 7th, 2017 at 7:56 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

You are still missing the point. In an interplay, we usually think of two or more separate entities coming together and interacting. Here, we have a situation where there is interaction but there are no separate entities to begin with! If you find that hard to imagine, that is exactly what makes this way of thinking revolutionary.

Malcolm wrote:

No, Mādhyamaka shows that since there are no entities which can withstand analysis, there are no interactions which can withstand analysis.

Claiming that there are no entities but that there are processes or interactions is a misunderstanding of dependent origination in toto. Dependent origination = non-origination.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 7th, 2017 at 7:42 PM

Title: Re: What Tsongkhapa said

Content:

Jeff H said:

„That is, Bhavaviveka must think that the only difference between Madhyamikas and non-Madhyamikas is that we have analyzed more deeply and worked out the correct implications of the common body of empirical evidence upon which all agree. In this way, Tsong-kha-pa argues, Bhavaviveka implies that intrinsic nature, just as it appears to our ordinary senses, does in fact exist conventionally.

Malcolm wrote:

You should realize that Newland's statements are obviously speculative and cannot be born out by examining what Bhavaviveka himself actually states in his criticism of Samkhya and Buddhapalita's argument against it. This is why, among non-Gelug Mādhyamikas, it is generally held that Bhavaviveka's arguments are more effective at refuting non-Buddhists, while Candrakīrti's arguments are more persuasive against Buddhists. Further, since inherent existence appears to no-one, ever, anywhere, at anytime, and is a learned object of negation, Bhavaviveka confines the object of refutation to the coarse object of refutation, existence.

By treating Bhavaviveka the way you do, you are effectively saying that everything is a nail, and so you will only use a hammer, when sometimes, in some cases, a saw is needed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 7th, 2017 at 7:37 PM

Title: Re: Julian Assange

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

He carried out a personal vendetta against Clinton. He proved that his "journalism" was just a front for his grudges.

R said:

Seems more like Clinton supporting media is having a personal vendetta against Assange because of the leaks. I think, what you're referring to, is the version of the truth media.

<https://theintercept.com/2016/12/29/the-guardians-summary-of-julian-assanges-interview-went-viral-and-was-completely-false/>

Malcolm wrote:

No, not at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 7th, 2017 at 9:31 AM

Title: Re: Julian Assange

Content:
Minobu said:
i have a grudge against the invasion of my privacy...

Malcolm wrote:
Assange could care less about your privacy. This is what the release of the Erdogan hack shows.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, January 7th, 2017 at 9:19 AM
Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention
Content:

Astus said:
The Shurangama Sutra existed in China by around 730, if not earlier. Trisong Detsen, who invited Padmasambhava and Vimalamitra to Tibet, began his rule in 755. According to Sam van Schaik Dzogchen did not exist on its own until the 10th century, and Menngagde works date back only to the 11th century. In other words, not only sky gazing and leap over practices were nowhere around when the sutra appeared, but even Dzogchen has not yet formed.

Malcolm wrote:
Sky gazing can be found in the PP sutras.

Your statements assumes that yogic practices come from texts, rather than the other way around. Bad assumption.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, January 7th, 2017 at 9:14 AM
Title: Re: What Tsongkhapa said
Content:

Jeff H said:
What's more, LTK's critique of Bhavaviveka is used to claim that even a great master of the Madhyamaka tradition could be found to have subtly implied intrinsic existence without intending to posit true existence.

Malcolm wrote:
The problem is that Bhavaviveka never, ever, implies anything of the sort. I have seen many centuries of claims that he did, but not one citation which proves it to be so.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, January 5th, 2017 at 4:28 PM
Title: Re: Dzogchen and the Two Truths Doctrine
Content:
manjusri said:

A follow-up question: given that the two truths don't exist in Dzogchen, can one even say that there is a path to realizing rigpa or beings who attain it? How does one hold onto the Middle Way here without falling into nihilism?

Malcolm wrote:

When existence is not established nonexistence is not established and thus there is no nihilism into which one could fall.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 5th, 2017 at 4:36 AM

Title: Re: Facination with Dzogchen

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Next time just rudely interupt....

rainbow_light said:

OK, so do you think I should just email him with a description of my practice history and ask for advice?

By the way, I'm reading Buddhahood in This Life at the moment. It is good! I am learning a lot from it.

Malcolm wrote:

I think it is better if you go and meet him.

Vasana said:

X2 for all of the above. I saw you at this last retreat by the way, Malcolm. You were speaking with some friends both times but i'm often too socially inept to know how to 'politely' interupt people who are in the middle of conversation I'll say hi next time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 5th, 2017 at 4:31 AM

Title: Re: What Tsongkhapa said

Content:

Konchog1 said:

I know nothing except that Adzom Drukpa slandered LTK's view...

Malcolm wrote:

Where did you read such a fantasy?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 5th, 2017 at 4:27 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Unknown said:

Svatantrika's assert that in order to correctly label a phenomenon there must be some characteristic from the side of the phenomenon that makes it suitable for a particular label.

Malcolm wrote:

No one in Indian Madhyamaka makes any such claim.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 4th, 2017 at 1:33 AM

Title: Re: Facination with Dzogchen

Content:

rainbow_light said:

Find a Dzogchen teacher who speaks English (or spend several years learning the teacher's language).

Malcolm wrote:

Meet Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

rainbow_light said:

Build mutual understanding with the Dzogchen teacher. This seems to require a huge amount of time (probably many years) and money to go on retreats with the teacher, or alternatively giving up the householder life temporarily and somehow following or living close to the teacher.

Malcolm wrote:

Not really necessary in the case of ChNN. Go to retreats, study, etc. You do not need to have some kind of close relationship. He will teach you everything you need for full realization in one retreat. Guaranteed.

rainbow_light said:

Assess whether the Dzogchen teacher is actually qualified to teach togal or yangtig. (If not, go back to step 1.)

Malcolm wrote:

Just go see ChNN.

rainbow_light said:

Meet any requirements set by the teacher in order to receive togal or yangtig instructions (may require spending 2+ years completing the ngondro).

Malcolm wrote:

Just go see ChNN.

rainbow_light said:

Somehow gather the funds necessary to stay in retreat indefinitely (I have no idea how much this would realistically be) in order to practice the togal or yangtig instructions.

Malcolm wrote:

Just go see ChNN.

rainbow_light said:

Actually put the instructions into practice, while maintaining contact with the teacher to receive further advice.[/list]

Malcolm wrote:

ChNN answers all emails, even very stupid ones.

M

rainbow_light said:

OK, so do you think I should just email him with a description of my practice history and ask for advice?

By the way, I'm reading Buddhahood in This Life at the moment. It is good! I am learning a lot from it.

Malcolm wrote:

I think it is better if you go and meet him.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 4th, 2017 at 12:06 AM

Title: Re: Dr. Nida Chenagtsang

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Not according to Dzogchen teachings. Making prayers to be reborn in this or that pure realm is not a guarantee that you will in fact take rebirth in this or that pure land in your next life. The twenty-one capacities that are discussed in your passage refer to the twenty-one types of people who have directly perceived dharmatā. The worst sort of person has this experience but is lazy about developing it.

Astus said:

That requirement sounds like a unique one in dzogchen, since according to the sutras buddha-remembrance is enough. But, as you have mentioned, "it is all really a question of whether you trust what the Buddha has said".

Malcolm wrote:

There is no shortcut in the sūtrayāna path, as much as some people would like to imagine there is. For example, one day in Sukhavati is one mahākalpa here.

However, one remains in the natural nirmanakāya buddhafiels for only five hundred human years before attaining buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 3rd, 2017 at 11:51 PM

Title: Re: Julian Assange

Content:

Dharma Flower said:

We might not like that Assange released information detrimental to a particular candidate, but it was in keeping with his anti-establishment and anti-war reputation.

Malcolm wrote:

He carried out a personal vendetta against Clinton. He proved that his "journalism" was just a front for his grudges.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 3rd, 2017 at 11:44 PM

Title: Re: Facination with Dzogchen

Content:

rainbow_light said:

Find a Dzogchen teacher who speaks English (or spend several years learning the teacher's language).

Malcolm wrote:

Meet Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

rainbow_light said:

Build mutual understanding with the Dzogchen teacher. This seems to require a huge amount of time (probably many years) and money to go on retreats with the teacher, or alternatively giving up the householder life temporarily and somehow following or living close to the teacher.

Malcolm wrote:

Not really necessary in the case of ChNN. Go to retreats, study, etc. You do not need to have some kind of close relationship. He will teach you everything you need for full realization in one retreat. Guaranteed.

rainbow_light said:

Assess whether the Dzogchen teacher is actually qualified to teach togal or yangtig. (If not, go back to step 1.)

Malcolm wrote:
Just go see ChNN.

rainbow_light said:
Meet any requirements set by the teacher in order to receive togal or yangtig instructions (may require spending 2+ years completing the ngondro).

Malcolm wrote:
Just go see ChNN.

rainbow_light said:
Somehow gather the funds necessary to stay in retreat indefinitely (I have no idea how much this would realistically be) in order to practice the togal or yangtig instructions.

Malcolm wrote:
Just go see ChNN.

rainbow_light said:
Actually put the instructions into practice, while maintaining contact with the teacher to receive further advice.[/list]

Malcolm wrote:
ChNN answers all emails, even very stupid ones.

M

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, January 3rd, 2017 at 11:39 PM
Title: Re: Dr. Nida Chenagtsang
Content:

Astus said:
It is said that by making prayers to take birth in a Buddha realm, you will be reborn there."[/i]
(Spacious Path to Freedom, p 198-199)

Malcolm wrote:
Not according to Dzogchen teachings. Making prayers to be reborn in this or that pure realm is not a guarantee that you will in fact take rebirth in this or that pure land in your next life. The twenty-one capacities that are discussed in your passage refer to the twenty-one types of people who have directly perceived dharmatā. The worst sort of person has this experience but is lazy about developing it.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, January 3rd, 2017 at 11:34 PM
Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Bakmoon said:

The question is whether or not negating inherent existence is a sufficiently broad negation.

Malcolm wrote:

The question also is whether or not asserting that the ultimate is only the negation of inherent existence leaves the consequence of asserting that the ultimate is a nonexistence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 31st, 2016 at 7:17 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

All I am saying, here, is that we cannot just interpret passages based on the literal meaning of individual words taken out of context. That's all.

Bakmoon said:

And no one has been blindly giving quotes out of context like that. You have been leveling the charge of literalism to try to slip away from being unable to justify your interpretations of Nagarjuna without giving an actual argument in support of your positions. For all your talk of the importance of commentaries, you haven't cited any, whereas Malcolm and I have several times cited Chandrakirti's commentary on MMK.

Kenneth Chan said:

If Malcolm is travelling now, so am I. I do not have access to the texts because I have not been home for three weeks now.

In any case, Malcolm has been using literal meanings of individual words, while not taking into account the context, to interpret the meaning of passages. Go back to the beginning of this thread and anyone can see that this is exactly the case. Malcolm even argued that there is no such thing as "Madhyamika philosophy" based on linguistics, and he even argued that he had refuted the fact that the findings of quantum mechanics provide strong scientific evidence that Lama Tsongkhapa's view that all things are empty of inherent existence because they are dependently originated is correct, although he apparently changed his mind later. Please recall this earlier post:

Malcolm wrote:

That has never been under question.

Kenneth Chan said:

This is truly strange. Now you admit that Lama Tsongkhapa's view that all things are empty of inherent existence because they are dependently originated is correct. As I have informed you, quantum mechanics is essentially a scientific finding that has been experimentally verified for over a century, which means that it is also correct.

Then why were you so adamant on trying to refute what I have repeatedly stated? And that is the fact that the findings of quantum mechanics provide scientific evidence that Lama Tsongkhapa's view that all things are empty of inherent existence because they are dependently originated is, in fact, correct.

Why did you repeatedly challenge this, and even go to the extent of claiming that you had refuted it (when you actually had not)? Even if you were unable to follow the reasoning behind how quantum mechanics provides evidence for Lama Tsongkhapa's view, surely you must have realized that it is just a matter of finding the correct way to connect the two, since both quantum mechanics and Lama Tsongkhapa's view are correct.

As Cloudburst correctly points out, there are some here who refuse to understand the Gelug point of view correctly by interpreting the words they use in the appropriate sense, i.e., according to what the Gelug texts actually mean by those words. This, unfortunately, calls into question the motivation behind such an attitude. I agree with Cloudburst's comments here below:

Matt J said:

But isn't the Gelug position summarized as:

The vase is not empty of the vase, it is empty of the inherent existence of the vase?

cloudburst said:

As always, the meaning of the words is what is important.

If you read my previous response to you, you will understand what "empty of inherent existence of the vase" means.

It's ludicrous to think that the view of Je Tsongkhapa is that phenomena are lacking something extraneous to themselves, but themselves are actually existent. This is the point of view of those not familiar with the Gelug point of view, and those insecure partisans who wish to aggrandize themselves and a particular school. I take you to be the former, others here as the latter.

It sounds to me like you have been reading the Center of the Sunlit Sky or similar, and relying on polemics to adequately express the views of the opponents of those polemics. These disputations are perhaps helpful in some respects to those who rely upon them, but really you cannot take the views posited therein as accurate. In many cases, they are simply representing an incorrect point of view and ascribing it to the opponent for the purposes of refutation. To really understand the Gelug pov on this you should consult Je Tsongkhapa's works.

Matt J said:

If the Gelugs are simply calling inherent existence what others call existence, and conventional existence what others call appearances, then there isn't an issue

cloudburst said:

I think that is actually the crux of it.

The main issue is no issue, although differences in this main issue create many subsidiary differences, but I don't believe these differences would obstruct either side from attaining liberation.

Kenneth Chan said:

This last point that Cloudburst makes is very important. Please remember that the purpose of the teaching on emptiness is to help us progress along the spiritual path. Since surely no one would dispute this, the onus is on us to try to understand the meaning being conveyed by the different traditions by accepting the terminology they use in the correct sense. Otherwise, we would be unnecessarily causing confusion which would work against the purpose of the teachings on emptiness, which is to help us progress along the spiritual path.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that the Gelug school pretends they have the definitive take on the intention of Madhyamaka. It is this claim, among others, that is under dispute and always will be. The bearing that this has on your OP is your uncritical acceptance and dogmatic promulgation of a somewhat nihilistic understanding of Madhyamaka as a panacea for errors in physics that Madhyamaka was never intended to resolve since physics has nothing to do with liberation from suffering in samsara.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 28th, 2016 at 6:12 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Lukeinaz said:

I believe it was Lama Yeshe who said it's ok to get a little nihilistic. I wonder about this point because if you hold cause and effect within emptiness what danger could there ever be of not positing a conventional self?

cloudburst said:

If there were no conventional self, upon whom would karma ripen? Who would be empty?

Malcolm wrote:

Why should there be someone upon whom karma ripens? To paraphrase the Visuddhimagga, there is no agent of karma, nor is there a person to experience its ripening, there is merely a flow of dharmas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 28th, 2016 at 6:03 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Candra disputes that any of the aggregates can form a proper basis of designation for the self....

cloudburst said:

Chandrakirti disputes that any of the aggregates are the self, he clearly indicates that the proper basis of designation for the merely imputed self is the aggregates.

Candrakirti's Prasannapada says:

The self is imputed dependently; it is what those who have the error of ignorance cling to fiercely; it is regarded as the appropriator of the five aggregates. Those who seek liberation analyze whether this self has the character of the aggregates. When those who seek liberation have analyzed it in every way, they do not observe a self, and thus [Nagarjuna's Fundamental Treatise] says:

If the self does not exist

How could that which belongs to the self exist?

Because they do not observe the self, they also do not at all observe the aggregates which belong to the self—the basis on which the self is designated.

Malcolm wrote:

I cannot properly address this because I am traveling, but I will. In the mean time, Candrakirti very clearly rejects that the aggregates can form that basis for the object of grasping to a self even conventionally in various places.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 28th, 2016 at 12:53 AM

Title: Re: Regarding using mantras

Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

I respect you. But some practitioners go too far with this kind of stuff. I remember one saying that only people that have completed a retreat may consecrate an image. So... what about traditions that don't have retreats? Their images are not validly consecrated?

Malcolm wrote:

Theravadins for example, do not consecrate their images in the same way. The consecration of images is mainly a tantric thing. To do this, one must be a vajra master, and that means one has done serious retreat.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 28th, 2016 at 12:36 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Jeff H said:

I guess I'm just not getting it. Conventionally the basis of designation for the I is the aggregates.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and Candrakīrti rejects this. So when someone claims that the aggregates are the basis of designating a self, they do not understand Candra's view.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 28th, 2016 at 12:04 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

... Nevertheless, Candra says this imputation of the nonexistent I is fully functional and can generate karma as well as experience its ripening.

Jeff H said:

Isn't "this imputation of the nonexistent I" exactly what is meant by "mere self"? It seems like the distinction is that from an ultimate perspective there is no valid basis of designation, but from a conventional perspective it functions and we can use this fictitious agent to direct our karmic path.

Malcolm wrote:

No, the distinction is not from the ultimate, it is from the relative. This is what it means when Candra rejects all basis of designation for the self. The self is a designation which lacks a basis of designation. This is what makes it a false imputation. This is the unique point of view of Candra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 27th, 2016 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Bakmoon said:

The aggregates are indeed designated as the aggregates, but this isn't actually a valid designation because the innate concept of self people have is that of a unitary unchanging core observer, and this concept doesn't correspond to anything in the aggregates.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Yes, but the view of the transitory collection depends upon the aggregates. There is no valid or invalid view of self without them.

Jeff H said:

This explanation by Tsongkhapafan is exactly how I was taught, where the permanent "core observer" is the utterly non-existent inherent self. But this discussion seems to get hung up on conflicting perspectives: ultimate versus conventional.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha said it is fine to say 'self' as long as one understood nothing real was indicated. It is the same with the term existence.

Jeff H said:

and Some people get confused about this point because it is certain that the thought of a self arises in dependence on appearances which are mistakenly designated a self, but in fact there is no valid basis of designation a self. Those who do not understand this point do not understand the profound point of Prasanga.

I understand Tsongkhapa to say that ultimately nothing real is indicated by the designation "mere self", but that conventionally there is a meaningful distinction between valid (i.e. functional) designations of appearances and invalid ones.

Georges Dreyfus calls the Prasangika's "realists", not because they advocate a material reality but because they ascribe validity to the workings of conventional reality. That is the context in which everyone other than buddhas do our work and pursue the path.

Malcolm wrote:

Please tell us upon what appearance a self is designated, and I will show the appearance that Candrakirti rejects as a basis for designation a self. If Candrakirti ever rejects designating a self on the basis of a consciousness, what else could there be left over? Nevertheless, Candrakirti says this imputation of the nonexistent I is fully functional and can generate karma as well as experience its ripening.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 27th, 2016 at 10:57 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

That's completely incorrect.

Malcolm wrote:

Since self and inherent existent are synonyms, if there is a valid basis for designating a self there should be a valid designation for designating inherent existence since a self and inherent existence are one and the same thing.

Instead Candrakirti rejects all bases of designation of a self, asserting in its place that the imputation of self needs to no basis of designation because it is wholly unreal.

Some people get confused about this point because it is certain that the thought of a self arises in dependence on appearances which are mistakenly designated a self, but in fact there is no valid basis of designation a self. Those who do not understand this point do not understand the profound point of Prasanga.

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, how did you come to the conclusion that "self and inherent existent are synonyms"? Please explain.

Also, what exactly do you mean by " valid basis" and " valid designation"? In terms of the ultimate truth, of course, we can say that there is no valid basis, no valid designation, no basis of designation, etc, etc. Because all things are empty of inherent existence, we can always say no this and no that, and no one can dispute it. But what exactly is the point you are trying to make?

Malcolm wrote:

The self proposed by ātmanāvadins is permanent, unchanging, and unconditioned, just the way inherent existence is defined.

As someone mentioned before, Bhavaviveka asserts that consciousness is a suitable conventional basis for designation a self, but Candrakīrti rejects this and asserts out there is no suitable basis for designating a self, even conventionally. Instead Candrakīrti says that I-making is a habit which imputes a nonexistent. He also claims this habit is capable of generating karma and experiencing its ripening. The habit of course is a dependently originated phenomena, but the I which it imputes does not exist at all. Likewise, the imputation of inherent existence arises in dependence, but that imputation is a false one, like the imputation of self.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 27th, 2016 at 7:23 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Since self and inherent existent are synonyms, if there is a valid basis for designating a self there should be a valid designation for designating inherent existence since a self and inherent existence are one and the same thing.

Tsongkhapa said:

Self and inherent existence are not synonyms. Inherent existence does not exist but the self clearly does as it can perform actions. The self of Buddha benefits all each and every living being every day.

It's a big mistake to conflate the merely imputed self with an inherently existent self. Those who are unable to tell the difference will definitely fall into the extremes of inherent existence and non-existence, as you have done.

Malcolm wrote:

The imputation of a self exists i.e., the conception exists, but it is a false imputation since it has no valid basis of designation. The proposition of a self is exactly the same as proposing inherent existence. The refutation of one is the refutation of the other.

In other words, the negation of the self does not confirm a merely existing self. It merely points to its absence in the aggregates, and so on.

This is also why existence is included in inherent existence sui generis. The Buddha said it is fine to use say "self" as long as one understood nothing real was indicated. It is the same with the term existence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 27th, 2016 at 5:09 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Clearly people do not understand that there is a valid basis of designation for the self. The self that exists is the mere 'I' that is imputed upon the basis of the body and mind.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, Candra rejects this idea. There is no valid basis at all for designating a self.

Tsongkhapafan said:

That's completely incorrect.

Malcolm wrote:

Since self and inherent existent are synonyms, if there is a valid basis for designating a self there should be a valid designation for designating inherent existence since a self and inherent existence are one and the same thing.

Instead Candra rejects all bases of designation of a self, asserting in its place that the imputation of self needs to no basis of designation because it is wholly unreal.

Some people get confused about this point because it is certain that the thought of a self arises in dependence on appearances which are mistakenly designated a self, but in fact there is no valid basis of designation a self. Those who do not understand this point do not understand the profound point of Prasanga.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 27th, 2016 at 4:51 AM

Title: Re: Longchenpa fathered a son as a monk

Content:

heart said:

Of course he didn't give other monks license to do this, the Nyingma have a good lineage renunciate monks to this day. Longchenpa was a very special person and I see no reason to believe he ever turned his back on Dharma in favour of worldly life. If he had children it was a part of his vast and profound Dharma practice.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Or, he just didn't care much about being a monk.

heart said:

Who knows, his writing covers just about every level of Dharma imaginable.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Noticeably absent however is a vinaya manual.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 27th, 2016 at 4:39 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Clearly people do not understand that there is a valid basis of designation for the self.

The self that exists is the mere 'I' that is imputed upon the basis of the body and mind.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, Candra rejects this idea. There is no valid basis at all for designating a self, just as there is no valid basis for designating inherent existence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 27th, 2016 at 4:38 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Yes, the "I" exists in mere name only, and is merely imputed by the mind.

Malcolm wrote:

The "I" does not dependently arise, since it does not even exist conventionally, being a mere designation which has no valid basis for being designated, according to Candra, unlike, for example, a car.

Lukeinaz said:

Malcom, this is surprising to me as I have never heard you refer to the "I" as a mere designation for the aggregates.

And in your very next post you say it has no valid base for being designated. What happened to the aggregates you were referring to in the first post?

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha claims this aggregates are what is designated as the I. Candra disputes that any of the aggregates can form a proper basis of designation for the self, which is of course why he rejects Bhava's designation consciousness as the self.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 27th, 2016 at 4:35 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Saying the self is dependently originated is precisely the same thing as saying inherent existence is dependently originated. In other words it is a total contradiction in terms.

Karma Dondrup Tashi said:

And so karma also contains this contradiction.

Malcolm wrote:

No, not really. Karma is just a word for volition. I think you might mean vipaka.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 26th, 2016 at 4:22 PM

Title: Re: Longchenpa fathered a son as a monk

Content:

yan kong said:

I was reading over a biography of Longchenpa today and learned that he fathered a son while holding a monks precepts.

I realize this is probably not the first or last instance in which this happened, but I'm wondering what the lineage reasoning is behind this? Did he break his vows, if not why? Does this give license to other monks to do this, and if not why?

heart said:

Of course he didn't give other monks license to do this, the Nyingma have a good lineage renunciate monks to this day. Longchenpa was a very special person and I see no reason to believe he ever turned his back on Dharma in favour of worldly life. If he had children it was a part of his vast and profound Dharma practice.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Or, he just didn't care much about being a monk.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 26th, 2016 at 4:18 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No one claims the "I" dependently arises. For example a seed arises from a sprout based on causes and conditions. But this is not the case with respect to the self. The self exists only as a designation without a basis of designation, unlike a seed and a sprout.

Karma Dondrup Tashi said:

How is a basis of designation different from an existence which, conventionally speaking, is "inherent"?

You were getting at this before but I didn't understand.

Also - if a basis of designation is merely an aggregate, is it not possible for a "sense of self" to conventionally exist, like a thought? I'm not sure what the difference would be between that kind of "sense of self" and "awareness" or "self-awareness" in its ordinary sense.

It seems difficult to me to embrace all that under Nagarjuna's second lemma. What is the proper understanding of it?

PS: Rather, what is the purpose of emphasizing only that lemma, in particular in the light of the katak side of things?

Malcolm wrote:

Saying the self is dependently originated is precisely the same thing as saying inherent existence is dependently originated. In other words it is a total contradiction in terms.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 26th, 2016 at 5:42 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Yes, the "I" exists in mere name only, and is merely imputed by the mind.

Malcolm wrote:

The "I" does not dependently arise, since it does not even exist conventionally, being a mere designation which has no valid basis for being designated, according to Candrakirti, unlike, for example, a car.

Kenneth Chan said:

This is again merely semantics. The "I" is a label, and exists in mere name only. It is said to be dependently arisen because the "I" arises only in dependence upon the imputation by the mind. The process of dependent arising is itself also empty of inherent existence. So, in terms of the ultimate truth, there is no dependent arising.

(I am not sure what you mean by "unlike, for example, a car.")

Malcolm wrote:

No one claims the "I" dependently arises. For example a seed arises from a sprout based on causes and conditions. But this is not the case with respect to the self. The self exists only as a designation without a basis of designation, unlike a seed and a sprout.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 25th, 2016 at 11:03 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

This is a teaching on emptiness. The passage is exactly trying to explain that this is the case. Note that it emphasizes this: "If a Perfectly Enlightened Buddha were to say to himself, 'I am enlightened' he would be admitting there is an individual person, a separate self and personality ..." It is stressing the fact that the "I" is empty of inherent existence because there is no individual person that is a separate self and personality. The "I" is empty of inherent existence because it is dependently arisen, and does not exist independently and separately from its own side.

Malcolm wrote:

The "I" does not exist at all, apart from being a mere designation for the aggregates.

Kenneth Chan said:

Yes, the "I" exists in mere name only, and is merely imputed by the mind.

Malcolm wrote:

The "I" does not dependently arise, since it does not even exist conventionally, being a mere designation which has no valid basis for being designated, according to Candrakīrti, unlike, for example, a car.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 25th, 2016 at 9:36 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

This is a teaching on emptiness. The passage is exactly trying to explain that this is the case. Note that it emphasizes this: "If a Perfectly Enlightened Buddha were to say to himself, 'I am enlightened' he would be admitting there is an individual person, a separate self and personality ..." It is stressing the fact that the "I" is empty of inherent existence because there is no individual person that is a separate self and personality. The "I" is empty of inherent existence because it is dependently arisen, and does not exist independently and separately from its own side.

Malcolm wrote:

The "I" does not exist at all, apart from being a mere designation for the aggregates.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 24th, 2016 at 11:27 PM

Title: Re: Since Tibetans are outcastes, how does it effect Tibetan Buddhism?

Content:

MiphamFan said:

I am not saying the white Huns had no effect. I am saying they were far from the death knell of Buddhism the way you seem to put it. Verardi's whole thesis is that Vajrayana was the final anti-nomian Buddhist weapon against the nomos of Brahmanical society, and it was effective until Islam came into the scene.

Malcolm wrote:

On the whole, I think Verardi's thesis is reductionist, wrong-headed and naive. He shows no understanding of Tantric Buddhism at all. If anything, Indian Buddhism responded by becoming more normative with respect to the by then Brahmin dominated society of India, with for example, Anandagarbha making passionate arguments for why Buddhist homavidhis were more valid than the Vedic version and so on.

MiphamFan said:

Anyway I agree, Islam doesn't usually outright slaughter/force-convert a population historically (besides in Central Asia). It works more slowly and insidiously most of the time, by what Nassim Taleb calls the <https://medium.com/@nntaleb/the-most-intolerant-wins-the-dictatorship-of-the-small-minority-3f1f83ce4e15#.i9kctxhen>: ...For Islam itself is ending up being taken over (in the Sunni branch) by the purists simply because these were more intolerant than the rest: the Wahhabis, founders of Saudi Arabia, were the ones who destroyed the shrines, and to impose the maximally intolerant rule, in a manner that was later imitated by "ISIS" (the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria/the Levant). Every single accretion of Sunni Islam seems to be there to accommodate the most intolerant of its branches.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, much like American politics on the right.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 24th, 2016 at 10:13 PM

Title: Re: Since Tibetans are outcastes, how does it effect Tibetan Buddhism?

Content:

MiphamFan said:

The White Huns did that at the end of the 5th century, rendering a blow to Indian Buddhism from which it would never fully recover.

I find this rather hard to believe. Buddhism certainly was on a decline cycle from the 5th century (collapse of WRE destroying trade with Europe etc) but Buddhism was respected enough to be adopted by the mandala surrounding India up through the tantric period. Indonesia, the Maldives, Cambodia, Tibet all adopted Buddhism long after the 5th century.

Malcolm wrote:

Most historians agree that Indian Buddhism suffered greatly at the hands of the white Huns, who looted the whole of the Gangetic plain and toppled the Guptas, throwing Indian Buddhism into the crisis that precipitated the rise of Vajrayāna. Davidson's book is instructive in this respect.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 24th, 2016 at 9:14 PM

Title: Re: Yangti

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is awesome that you are coming...

DGA said:

I look forward to seeing you all there.

Malcolm wrote:

see you there dude.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 24th, 2016 at 9:12 PM

Title: Re: Since Tibetans are outcastes, how does it effect Tibetan Buddhism?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Before people continue to broadcast the political myth that Islam delivered the coup de gras on Buddhism in India, they should really read this book.

BuddhaFollower said:

And if you keep reading he says:

"Indeed, contrary to the standard idea promoted by the above story that Nalanda's destruction signaled the death of Buddhism, the fact is that the Dharma survived in India at least until the seventeenth century."

and:

As noted above, the destruction of Nalanda offers us a clear-cut narrative with good guys and bad. It avoids entirely the complex shades of gray that most often color the messy fabric of history.

So he fully admits Nalanda was destroyed.

Malcolm wrote:

One out of two Buddhist temples:

Muhammad Ghuri was in fact the first Central Asian ruler who projected Muslim power beyond the Punjab. And by 1206 his forces had marched all the way across north India and even attempted an invasion of Tibet by following the Brahmaputra River up through the Himalayas. 31 While this particular expedition failed spectacularly, by the early thirteenth century India from the Khyber Pass to Bengal was under the control of the Ghurids. And in order to secure their hold on power they followed the age-old Muslim custom of temple destruction. Although it is now known that the claims of such destruction are vastly inflated in Muslim conquest literature as well as in Hindu and Buddhist histories, we do know that at least eighty temples were destroyed during this period. 32 Two of these destroyed temples were Buddhist. 33

Elverskog, Johan (2011-06-06). Buddhism and Islam on the Silk Road (Encounters with Asia) (Kindle Locations 2248-2256). University of Pennsylvania Press. Kindle Edition.

The point is that this narrative of Muslims sweeping into India and murdering all the Buddhists is not true. The White Huns did that at the end of the 5th century, rendering a blow to Indian Buddhism from which it would never fully recover.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 24th, 2016 at 8:53 AM

Title: Re: Since Tibetans are outcastes, how does it effect Tibetan Buddhism?

Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

Harvey also points out in this book, that Theravada survived in in South Indian Tamil Nadu until the 12th century. Far from the islamic invasions. This also makes evidence of the disputes between Buddhism and tamilian Shaivism. May shaivite tales tell of how shaivite saints defeated buddhist monks with miracles etc. That's why I don't bite in the hindutva proposal of Indian religions being all one same thing.

But besides Buddhism in the case of Tamil Nadu, why also Janism also survived only under the protection of mostly hindu rulers in the deccan plateau? Like Buddhism, it almost vanished from north/central India, Kashmir, Bengal, Bihar (its birthplace like Buddhism) etc ?Another question to think about!

What about classical indian/hindu culture, like classical dance, sculpture, architecture, in many ways it has disappeared from North India? Things like chola bronzes, city temples like madurai and hampi? Classical dance like bharatanatyam, odissi or charya nritya, only survived in places much less affected by muslim rulership. Instead the monuments of the north are the Taj Mahal, Agra, Delhi Mosque etc.

At its peak Nalanda had an extensive faculty teaching a diverse student body of about three thousand on a beautiful campus composed of numerous cloisters with lofty spires that “resembled the snowy peaks of Mount Sumeru.” 3 Then suddenly the serenity of this Buddhist institution was shattered. In the fall of 1202, Muslim soldiers on horses rode in and hacked down teachers and students where they stood. The once majestic buildings were left in ruins. 4 The savagery was so great it signaled the end of the Dharma in India. This powerful story has been told countless times. Today it is ubiquitous, being found in everything from scholarly monographs to travel brochures. Indeed, by its sheer pervasiveness, this one episode has in many ways come to encapsulate and symbolize the entire thirteen-hundred-year history of Buddhist-Muslim interaction. And on account of this, whenever the topic of Buddhism and Islam is ever mentioned it almost invariably revolves around the Muslim destruction of the Dharma. 5 This is problematic for many reasons, not the least being that the story of Nalanda is not true. For example, not only did local Buddhist rulers make deals with the new Muslim overlords and thus stay in power, 6 but but Nalanda also continued as a functioning institution of Buddhist education well into the thirteenth century. 7

Malcolm wrote:

Elverskog, Johan (2011-06-06). Buddhism and Islam on the Silk Road (Encounters with Asia) (Kindle Locations 55-66). University of Pennsylvania Press. Kindle Edition.

Before people continue to broadcast the political myth that Islam delivered the coup de gras on Buddhism in India, they should really read this book.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 24th, 2016 at 8:48 AM

Title: Re: Since Tibetans are outcastes, how does it effect Tibetan Buddhism?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I am quite familiar with Hindutva nationalism, I don't find it really convincing, like most nationalist "history."

BuddhaFollower said:

So you prefer Sheldon Pollock's amateurish scholarship which says Ravana was a proxy for Islam?

Both Hindu and Buddhist texts clearly say Ravana was a foremost Dharma practitioner.

Malcolm wrote:

As far as Lankāvatara goes, that's a bit of stretch.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 24th, 2016 at 5:56 AM

Title: Re: Upcoming teachings with Zazep Tulku Rinpoche

Content:

Punya said:

Extensive teachings and initiations in January-March 2017.

Zazep Tulku Rinpoche

Malcolm wrote:

Major gyalpo guy, caveat emptor.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 24th, 2016 at 2:48 AM

Title: Re: Since Tibetans are outcastes, how does it effect Tibetan Buddhism?

Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

But we cannot underestimate the blow Islamic invasions had on Indian Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

it is massively overstated. Buddhism was already in severe decline in India when Nalanda was sacked. It is also very clear that invading Muslims really could not discern the differences between this school and that school. The idea that Muslims singled out Buddhists for special treatment in India is mistaken.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

I agree that Buddhism was already suffering before the invasions. Unlike Buddhism, Jainism always liked to keep a distinct identity, and maybe this helped its survival in India, also relying in patronage. Arguing like this I agree with most of your opinions. But again, the question whether shudras converted to Islam or not en masse is very much disputed by Indian scholars. The institution of caste is something very complex and seems to have changed with history and the development of Hinduism, or even without hinduism. Your thinking lends to a typical western understanding derived from the first indologists views on it since the 19th century!

http://www.infinityfoundation.com/mandala/h_es/h_es_karan_caste.htm

Malcolm wrote:

I am quite familiar with Hindutva nationalism, I don't find it really convincing, like most nationalist "history."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 24th, 2016 at 2:24 AM

Title: Re: Rebirth and karma

Content:

rachmiel said:

I am cultivating a love and respect for all spiritual traditions, each with its own way to realizing _____ .

Johnny Dangerous said:

That's a good thing to do, but as the quote says, it can be akin to wanting to travel, but denying the need for a vehicle.

And let's be honest here, you've talked many times about your uncomfortable feelings regarding "tradition", is that not true anymore?

It's the Middle Way message, isn't it: Grasp not, avert not. For grasping/averting (which give rise to one another) cause suffering.

Of course it's that yes, but it also talks about the habits that create mindsets about tradition, which is the part I found interesting.

Malcolm wrote:

This thread has become a waste of time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 24th, 2016 at 2:23 AM

Title: Re: Since Tibetans are outcasts, how does it effect Tibetan Buddhism?

Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

But we cannot underestimate the blow Islamic invasions had on Indian Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

it is massively overstated. Buddhism was already in severe decline in India when Nalanda was sacked. It is also very clear that invading Muslims really could not discern the differences between this school and that school. The idea that Muslims singled out Buddhists for special treatment in India is mistaken.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 24th, 2016 at 1:43 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Jeff H said:

We see and experience suffering and we want it to stop. In order to overcome the delusions and negativities that cause suffering we aim to attain arhathood or buddhahood. We do it because liberated and enlightened beings are perfected beings (with the caveat that all beings are empty, of course). Therefore, we seek perfection..

Malcolm wrote:

Not sure how "perfect" they all are. For example, first stage bodhisattvas still experience ripening karma and are subject to afflictive pride, etc. This is why the six impure bhumis are called "impure," since bodhisattvas have not eradicated all afflictive traces.

We hold out the Buddha as an example of a "perfect" being. But what does this really even mean? Have we ever met such a being? Of course not.

Thus, we then are instructed to do the next best thing, which is to regard our gurus (if we are practicing Vajrayāna) to be buddhas in person, actual buddhas despite their obvious human flaws and failings, which we are instructed to ignore since they are inevitable.

Maybe it is better to view all these things from the Prajñāpāramitā Sūtras standpoint of original purity since in reality our state and the state of buddhahood are not two different states.

Jeff H said:

Granted, perfection is a direction not a destination. But isn't it the case that movement toward the ideal of overcoming suffering necessarily involves progressive effort that can be conventionally expressed as a balance between virtue and non-virtue? Are you saying there is no distinction between that which is to be abandoned and that which is to be adopted, even from a conventional perspective?

Thanks to you, I am beginning to investigate "the Prajñāpāramitā Sūtras standpoint of original purity since in reality our state and the state of buddhahood are not two different states". But even that realization requires a process; it isn't either/or, like leaping from Earth to Proxima Centauri. There are degrees of ability to recognize "original purity".

Malcolm wrote:

I am saying that the elimination of afflictions is in general sufficient for most people, without this imperative for "perfection." One, it sets up false expectations. Two, it is unattainable in this lifetime for 99.999% of humans beings. What I am saying is that the overcoming suffering of afflictions and perfection are not coterminous. Even in terms of bodhicitta, there is aspirational bodhicitta where one recognizes that the goals one wishes for oneself and others are likely not within ones power. Engaged bodhicitta also have limits, since it is aspiration.

I guess I am also reacting to this idea of human perfection. I prefer my humans flawed, they are more interesting.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 24th, 2016 at 12:01 AM

Title: Re: Berlin Christmas Market Attack

Content:

Queequeg said:

Point is, having been a teenage boy often driving around in old cars, I know cops have every reason to profile and pull them over because they are most definitely up to something.

Malcolm wrote:

That is not profiling, that's called "memory"— that is every cop remembering what he or she did when he or she was a teenager.

Queequeg said:

I have friends who became cops, and some of them... well, you'd never imagine them cops if you met them at 17.

I know you're joking, or at least I think there's a little humor in there somewhere, but calling what cops do in those instances, memory, can be problematic. There's tons of evidence of cops' hardened attitudes toward blacks based on "memories", leading to what ought to be treated as civil rights offenses, but often not.

Looks like the authorities killed the man they were looking for in a shootout near Milan. having been a teenage boy

Malcolm wrote:

I was referring to this...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 23rd, 2016 at 11:58 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Jeff H said:

We see and experience suffering and we want it to stop. In order to overcome the delusions and negativities that cause suffering we aim to attain arhathood or buddhahood. We do it because liberated and enlightened beings are perfected beings (with the caveat that all beings are empty, of course). Therefore, we seek perfection..

Malcolm wrote:

Not sure how "perfect" they all are. For example, first stage bodhisattvas still experience ripening karma and are subject to afflictive pride, etc. This is why the six impure bhumis are called "impure," since bodhisattvas has not eradicated all afflictive traces.

We hold out the Buddha as an example of a "perfect" being. But what does this really even mean? Have we ever met such a being? Of course not.

Thus, we then are instructed to do the next best thing, which is to regard our gurus (if we are practicing Vajrayāna) to be buddhas in person, actual buddhas despite their obvious human flaws and failings, which we are instructed to ignore since they are inevitable.

Maybe it is better to view all these things from the Prajñāpāramitā Sūtras standpoint of original purity since in reality our state and the state of buddhahood are not two different states.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 23rd, 2016 at 10:53 PM

Title: Re: Berlin Christmas Market Attack

Content:

Queequeg said:

Point is, having been a teenage boy often driving around in old cars, I know cops have every reason to profile and pull them over because they are most definitely up to something.

Malcolm wrote:

That is not profiling, that's called "memory"— that is every cop remembering what he or she did when he or she was a teenager.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 23rd, 2016 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: Yangti

Content:

bhava said:

Hi, thanks for your answer. What D. Germano is saying in that link is based on his research of various materials, but still it is much of his hypothesis and assumptions. Yet he seems to be saying that the "ati, chiti, yangti" appeared at first in terms of Nyang Ral Nyima Ozer and also of Guru Chowang.

Malcolm wrote:

Norbu Rinpoche regards these terms of Nyang and Chowang as the root of Yangti.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 23rd, 2016 at 10:37 PM

Title: Re: Since Tibetans are outcastes, how does it effect Tibetan Buddhism?

Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

But its worth noting that Buddhism survived in South Asia In regions that were quite far from muslim invasions and subsequent muslim rule. This is the case of Sri Lanka and Nepal. Much like the classical hindu culture, high culture, is also much more better kept in these places, as Nepal and Tamil Nadu. Not that I don't agree with you and Namdrol in most point, specially when you considere the survival of Jainism and its ties to royal patrons. But Islamic invasions were probably a very fatal blow to Buddhadharma in India, and also made much of classical hindu culture to decline.

Malcolm wrote:

No, the varna system was the Achilles heel of India, and it caused millions of sudras to turn to what they believed to be the more socially egalitarian faith of Islam.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 23rd, 2016 at 10:34 PM

Title: Re: Since Tibetans are outcastes, how does it effect Tibetan Buddhism?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Śankara began the concerted anti-Buddhist campaigns against in India. Read some history. Shaivaite Hindu kings were largely responsible for the systematic decline of Buddhism, as typified by the encounter of Virupa with the rāja of Varanasi, etc.

BuddhaFollower said:

Starting on page 70, Sanderson goes kingdom-by-kingdom to show Saiva kings sponsored Buddhism:

.

Malcolm wrote:

He does not really show anything of the sort. What he shows is the presence of Buddhist kings in nominally Shaiva dynasties in disparate time periods beginning with the late Gupta period all these up the early middle ages.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 23rd, 2016 at 10:00 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

I know! Cone is incorrigible, isn't he?

conebeckham said:

If you go back and re-read my posts, you will find I am much more kind to Tsongkhapa's presentation than you have been to any critic.

Tsongkhapafan said:

I wasn't aware of being unkind. It's certainly not my intention. I was just joking about you in response to Malcolm's comment about sectarianism. I was trying to lighten the passive aggressive atmosphere so apologies if you have felt offended.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not passive-aggressive, we just are not allowed to really out and out say this person is x.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, December 23rd, 2016 at 1:07 PM
Title: Re: Dorje Drolo question
Content:

RikudouSennin said:
Pages 286-293

Malcolm wrote:
the hagiography is much much longer.

Fa Dao said:
you mean the one you're writing? Although I am of course chomping at the bit to be able to read that, it unfortunately wont be for a while as you said...would it speed things up if I threatened to throw a childish temper tantrum and hold my breath till my face turned blue?

Malcolm wrote:
The one I am translating...yes.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, December 23rd, 2016 at 1:02 PM
Title: Re: Since Tibetans are outcastes, how does it effect Tibetan Buddhism?
Content:

BuddhaFollower said:
Adi Shankara died early in life and lived in the early 700s.

Malcolm wrote:
Śankara began the concerted anti-Buddhist campaigns against in India. Read some history. Shaivaite Hindu kings were largely responsible for the systematic decline of Buddhism, as typified by the encounter of Virupa with the rāja of Varanasi, etc.

MiphamFan said:
Verardi says that Buddhism and Brahmanism had a back-and-forth dialectic for centuries, in periods where international trade flourished, Buddhism gained power, when it declined, Brahmanism was on the ascendant. Islam disrupted this balance as it was also a mercantile-based religion which displaced Buddhism.

So yes, Brahmins obviously were opposed to Buddhism, but to say Islam had no effect on the demise of Buddhism in India is absurd. The Kalachakra writers clearly recognised what was a greater threat to them early on, and it wasn't the Brahmins per se.

The Turkic Muslims who invaded Central and Asia at the time very consciously https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Mahmud_al-Kashgari their persecution of Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

This is very late, when Buddhism in India was already in very serious decline. Mahmud may have been superficially driven by Islam, but he was much more driven by his distaste for urbanism. In any event, Khotan is very far from India.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 23rd, 2016 at 12:58 PM

Title: Re: Root Tantra

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

How does a tantra's status as either "root" or "explanatory" effect its status as either esoteric or exoteric? Is there any correlation?

Malcolm wrote:

All tantras are esoteric in so far as all of their practices are rooted in empowerments.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 23rd, 2016 at 11:30 AM

Title: Re: Dorje Drolo question

Content:

Fa Dao said:

I just looked in there bro and cant find it...page #?

RikudouSennin said:

Pages 286-293

Malcolm wrote:

the hagiography is much much longer.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 23rd, 2016 at 10:57 AM

Title: Re: Yangti

Content:

Norwegian said:

Were you going? I forget.

heart said:

No, I am going to Austria to see my guru.

/magnus

Norwegian said:

Okay, we'll have to meet another time then. Enjoy Austria

Malcolm wrote:

It is awesome that you are coming...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 23rd, 2016 at 10:55 AM

Title: Re: Since Tibetans are outcastes, how does it effect Tibetan Buddhism?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It was the brahmins lead by Śankara, etc., that destroyed Buddhism. Not Islam.

BuddhaFollower said:

Adi Shankara died early in life and lived in the early 700s.

Malcolm wrote:

Śankara began the concerted anti-Buddhist campaigns against in India. Read some history. Shaivaite Hindu kings were largely responsible for the systematic decline of Buddhism, as typified by the encounter of Virupa with the rāja of Varanasi, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 23rd, 2016 at 9:44 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

If you look at Lamrim Chenmo, Je Tsongkhapa is pretty insistent that Chandrakirti distinguished between inherent existence and existence:

Malcolm wrote:

And everyone agrees that indeed Candrakīrti makes this formal distinction. The question is, how important is this distinction, given Nāgārjuna's crystal clear statement about existence being included in inherent existence in MMK 15. People also deeply question the assumptions in Tsongkhapa's reasoning on this point. Gorampa, among others, specifically addresses this issue.

Tsongkhapafan said:

That's not what Nagarjuna is saying. He's saying that ultimately there is no intrinsic or extrinsic existence, which is correct. In emptiness, nothing exists and the extreme of non-existence is dispelled by emptiness.

It doesn't preclude things being mere existents, mere appearances to mind, conventionally.

Malcolm wrote:

Huh? You apparently have not actually studied MMK. And you also get a gold star for out and out irrationally contradicting yourself in the same sentence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 23rd, 2016 at 9:40 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

I'm sure you would agree that you can't just believe anything written in a book. In the case of my Guru, I've studied with him for many years so I know him well and his Teachings are completely trustworthy and in accordance with tradition; that is not necessarily the case with other authors.

As Je Tsongkhapa said, when it comes to Dharma, we should not be like a dog, eating everything.

Malcolm wrote:

Honestly, narrow minded sectarianism in Western Buddhists of any school never ceases to amaze me.

Tsongkhapafan said:

I know! Cone is incorrigible, isn't he?

Malcolm wrote:

I had a different person in mind, but you knew that...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 23rd, 2016 at 8:34 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

But again, they are just words without commentary or context. If I'm going to buy a horse, I'm going to need to know his pedigree. You can't just believe everything you read in books.

conebeckham said:

Unless they're written (or Ghost-written) by your teacher, eh?

Tsongkhapafan said:

I'm sure you would agree that you can't just believe anything written in a book. In the case of my Guru, I've studied with him for many years so I know him well and his Teachings are completely trustworthy and in accordance with tradition; that is not necessarily the case with other authors.

As Je Tsongkhapa said, when it comes to Dharma, we should not be like a dog, eating everything.

Malcolm wrote:

Honestly, narrow minded sectarianism in Western Buddhists of any school never ceases to amaze me.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 23rd, 2016 at 7:46 AM

Title: Re: Since Tibetans are outcastes, how does it effect Tibetan Buddhism?

Content:

DharmaChakra said:

Ksatriyas are rulers, but mostly through out Indian culture Brahmins were above the Ksatriyas for advice on many things, it was just a system of etiquette, like their council advisers, for ceremonies, rituals and most other social/spiritual functions, mostly Ksatriyas would not make any decision without consulting Brahmins for one reason or another, it was a holistic dynamic in its healthiest state.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, no. For example, the Upanishads represented the meaning of the Vedas the brahmins did not know.

DharmaChakra said:

As far as I understand the Pali suttas Siddharta spoke out against the unhealthy state within society. Buddhism and Brahmins and Ksatriya rule lived harmoniously and supported each other mostly in India, until the invasions came.

Malcolm wrote:

You need to study Indian History more carefully. It was the brahmins lead by Śankara, etc., that destroyed Buddhism. Not Islam.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 23rd, 2016 at 7:43 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Je Tsongkhapa's masterful union of Madhyamaka and Pramana

BuddhaFollower said:
Atisha denies Tsongkhapa's approach to emptiness:

"Perceptual and inferential cognition—
These two are accepted by Buddhists.
Only narrow-minded fools say
That emptiness is realized by these two."

and

"Perceptual and inferential cognition are useless.
It is just for the sake of refuting non-Buddhist opponents
That the learned ones have promoted them.
The learned master Bhavya said
That the scriptures are clear about
[The ultimate] being realized neither through Conceptual nor nonconceptual consciousnesses."
-----translated in Center of the Sunlit Sky

Tsongkhapafan said:
Can you give a source from Atisha's works for these quotations?

Malcolm wrote:
Just read Khenpo Karl's books. Everything he writes is meticulously sourced.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, December 22nd, 2016 at 9:51 PM
Title: Re: Dorje Drolo question
Content:
RikudouSennin said:
Why is he sometimes depicted as naked with eyes all over?

Edit: If it's not okay to discuss I understand.

Fa Dao said:
wow..ok..thats definitely one I havent seen before.....really wish somebody would write a book in English on Dorje Drollo, there is so little out there and he is said to be very relevant to our times...

Malcolm wrote:
There is a hagiography of drollo I have been slowly working on over the years.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 22nd, 2016 at 9:51 PM

Title: Re: Dorje Drolo question

Content:

RikudouSennin said:

Why is he sometimes depicted as naked with eyes all over?

Edit: If it's not okay to discuss I understand.

Malcolm wrote:

That is just a specific tradition, some master's vision.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 22nd, 2016 at 9:04 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Your interpretation of Chandrakirti's words, yes.

Malcolm wrote:

Not just mine, most people's.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Majority views generally aren't correct. That's why we're in samsara.

As I said, we must agree to disagree.

Malcolm wrote:

In this case, it is not a samsaric majority view, but rather a majority of realized masters in Tibet and India.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 22nd, 2016 at 8:49 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

It is, however, Gorampa's view (and yours?) that all conventional truths are wholly deluded perceptions.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is Candrakīrti's view, among others.

Tsongkhapa said:
Your interpretation of Chandrakirti's words, yes.

Malcolm wrote:
Not just mine, most people's.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, December 22nd, 2016 at 8:48 AM
Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics
Content:

Kenneth Chan said:
[T]he Kalama Sutta...

Malcolm wrote:
...is for non-Buddhists. But this is a more interesting <http://www.accesstosight.org/tipitaka/sn/sn48/sn48.044.than.html>:
"Excellent, Sariputta. Excellent. Those who have not known, seen, penetrated, realized, or attained it by means of discernment would have to take it on conviction in others that the faculty of conviction... persistence... mindfulness... concentration... discernment, when developed & pursued, gains a footing in the Deathless, has the Deathless as its goal & consummation; whereas those who have known, seen, penetrated, realized, & attained it by means of discernment would have no doubt or uncertainty that the faculty of conviction... persistence... mindfulness... concentration... discernment, when developed & pursued, gains a footing in the Deathless, has the Deathless as its goal & consummation."

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, December 22nd, 2016 at 8:45 AM
Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics
Content:

Kenneth Chan said:
The spiritual path in Buddhism does not depend on belief.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, it most certainly does. Faith is the first of the five indriyas of the path. First, you have to believe that awakening is possible, etc. Along with that goes faith in karma, rebirth, etc.

Kenneth Chan said:
Malcolm, why do you persist in doing this? Why did you delete my next two lines to ensure that my sentence is taken out of context, and then attack it? Why? The whole paragraph reads:
The spiritual path in Buddhism does not depend on belief. The clearest illustration of this is the fact that even if we genuinely and strongly believe everything that the Buddha taught, we are still not enlightened. Mere belief achieves very little other than serve as an incentive to actually embark on the spiritual path.

You deliberately left out the next two lines, so that my first sentence will appear out of context. Why? It is a waste of time debating with someone who just wants to argue for the sake of arguing.

Malcolm wrote:

Your next two lines contradict your premise, "The spiritual path in Buddhism does not depend on belief."

I am too kind to show you how your own conclusion contradicts your own premise.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 22nd, 2016 at 8:42 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

It is, however, Gorampa's view (and yours?) that all conventional truths are wholly deluded perceptions.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is Candrakīrti's view, among others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 22nd, 2016 at 4:47 AM

Title: Re: Dorje Drolo question

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Appreciate the clarification! So why then did he choose to look like that? He was Padmasambhava...didn't really need to look like anyone but his badass self (not meaning this in the flippant way it might sound, just trying to understand is all)

Malcolm wrote:

Drolo's appearance is disheveled and crazy. Thus he is just much more bad ass than the eight classes. One bad ass human.

Fa Dao said:

other than the fact that most humans don't have 3 eyes and fangs...ok cool...thanks

Malcolm wrote:

Drolo is not always wrathful in appearance, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 22nd, 2016 at 4:11 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

The spiritual path in Buddhism does not depend on belief.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it most certainly does. Faith is the first of the five indriyas of the path. First, you have to believe that awakening is possible, etc. Along with that goes faith in karma, rebirth, etc.

Kenneth Chan said:

This process of verification on the spiritual path—by direct personal experience brought about by a progressive transformation of our being—is, of course, very different from the experimental verification of science. Nonetheless it is a process of verification. Thus, it means that both Buddhism and science are investigations of reality based on the principle of verification.

Malcolm wrote:

So is Hinduism, so is Jainism. Your argument is incredibly weak. You sound no different than Christian physicists who conclude from their studies that creation is proven since our cosmos cannot be a result of chance.

Kenneth Chan said:

It is, in fact, this very difference in the nature of the verification process between Buddhism and science that makes them ideally suited to complement each other in the quest for truth and understanding. There is no reason why we should not make use of both methods of verification at our disposal in the quest for understanding our reality and the nature of the ultimate truth.

Malcolm wrote:

Wayfarer pointed out that your quest is quixotic. He is right.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 22nd, 2016 at 3:56 AM

Title: Re: Re Lo-ma Gyon-ma Invocation

Content:

pemachophel said:

Loppon-la,

Thanks. Just what I was hoping for. Had the words but not the grammar.

Malcolm wrote:

Cho 'phrul (prātihārya) has the connotation of a conjuration, magic or jugglery, but I thought magic display was a little heavy here, but I have used that elsewhere

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 22nd, 2016 at 12:00 AM

Title: Re: Re Lo-ma Gyon-ma Invocation

Content:

pemachophel said:

Can anyone help me with the SECOND line of this invocation of Parnashawai/Lo-ma Gyon-ma? Got the rest but can't quite find the English for the second line.

rgyal ba kun gyi ye shes sgyu ma yi cho 'phrul rnam par dag pa las thon pa'i lha mo gang gi sprul pas nad gdon bgegs kun tu zhi mdzad ma la phyag ;tshal lo

Thanks.

Malcolm wrote:

Homage to the goddess who issues forth from the pure display of the illusory pristine consciousness of all the victors, who emanates to completely pacify illness, spirits, and obstructors.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 11:55 PM

Title: Re: Since Tibetans are outcastes, how does it effect Tibetan Buddhism?

Content:

DharmaChakra said:

Varna is something that is inherent in humans....

Malcolm wrote:

If by inherent you mean as primates we also have primate dominance behaviors, that is one thing. But the idea that one is born a brahmin is negated by the Buddha in many places.

In Buddhadharma a "brahmin" is someone of exceptional conduct, not a birth right.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 10:02 PM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The path to awakening is a delusion. But we are deluded and so we follow it until we are no longer deluded. Then we see there was never a point to it to begin with, since we realize then that delusion is not possible at all.

Tsongkhapa said:

So the path to awakening is a delusion, so we follow it and....we get more deluded. Sorry bro, following delusions makes you more deluded, not less. Geshe Chekhawa says "do not follow delusions" but for you the path is deluded. Your logic doesn't make any sense and it proves that actually the path to awakening is not a delusion. If I'm cold and want to get warm, I don't walk into the freezer! Walking deeper into the freezer doesn't solve your coldness problem.

If what you say is true, why don't we just follow our attachment and anger then? Since there is no difference between them and the path to awakening (because a delusion is a delusion) that would work just as well by your logic.

Furthermore, delusion is not possible at all? That's nonsense. Wrong awarenesses clearly exist and function.

Malcolm wrote:

You need to read Haribhadra on this point. What he says, in essence, is that the path and everything in it, up to Buddhahood is an illusion, a false appearance, and when we attain buddhahood, we look back and realize we were never deluded to begin with. In other words, we are illusory sentient beings following an illusory path to attain an illusory buddhahood which in the end we realize we never needed to follow. Why? Just as when one understands that an illusory elephant is just a trick of the eyes created by the magician, likewise, one understands that all of samsara and nirvana are just tricks created by afflictions. When one sees through the trick, one recognizes that the elephant never existed; likewise, when one attains buddhahood, one recognizes one was never deluded.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 8:31 PM

Title: Re: Dorje Drolo question

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Appreciate the clarification! So why then did he choose to look like that? He was Padmasambhava...didn't really need to look like anyone but his badass self (not meaning this in the flippant way it might sound, just trying to understand is all)

Malcolm wrote:

Dollo's appearance is disheveled and crazy. Thus he is just much more bad ass than the eight classes. One bad ass human.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 8:14 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Both science and Buddhism are investigations of reality and are based on the principle of verification.

Malcolm wrote:

Science is based on empirical verification. Buddhadharma is based on subjective verification. This is a major and overlooked difference. Buddhadharma has not in the past, does not now, and will never depend on empirical verification.

Kenneth Chan said:

Since both Buddhism and science are, nonetheless, investigations of reality based on verification, they are thus perfectly suited to complement one another. Even His Holiness, the Dalai Lama, feels that this is beneficial.

Malcolm wrote:

Hindus have their version of "Hinduism and Physics," there are the intelligent design folks, and "socialist" science of the old USSR.

Science is a discipline that necessarily should be free from religious and political ideology even if politicians and religious people do not like the results of imperfect empirical observation. Buddhadharma is not scientific, is not a science, and it is a mistake to regard it as such.

For example, we have such Advaita sentiments as:

This then is the final meaning of Advaita Vedanta. The same Absolute Substance, called the Brahman, is the origin of both our material universe and our consciousness, and this Brahman can be experienced within our consciousness, and this is the spiritual goal of our life.

<http://www.advaitayoga.org/advaitayogaarticles/advaitaquantumphysics.html>

You can find much discussion of such things out there. We can find out that Schrödinger wrote in his book My View of the World: "In all the world, there is no kind of framework within which we can find consciousness in the plural; this is simply something we construct because of the temporal plurality of individuals, but it is a false construction....The only solution to this conflict in so far as any is available to us at all lies in the ancient wisdom of the Upanishad."

So again, you find confirmation of QP in the doctrine of the Perfection of Wisdom, Schrödinger and Heisenberg in the Upanishads, and then we have the very well funded ID community, lead by the Templeton Foundation. It is normal that people wish to find confirmation of their religious beliefs in science, and indeed, that is HHDL's main intent.

I personally think is better to let religions be religions, politics be politics, and science be science.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 12:18 PM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

That's not my problem at all - in fact, it's your problem. You don't understand that there are false cognitions and valid cognitions, but for you if it's conventional, it's all false cognition.

BuddhaFollower said:

Yes, because this is straight from Candrakirti's Madhyamakavatara:

"The object of perfect seeing is true reality,
And false seeing is the seeming reality"

Candrakirti says the relative is a result of ignorance:

"Since ignorance obscures its true nature, this is the seeming.
The Sage has declared that seeming reality
Is that which is fabricated and appears as real through this [ignorance].
Thus, fabricated entities are the seeming."

Atisa denies the two truths saying:

"The nature of phenomena is not established as anything whatsoever,
So how could it be two or three and such?"

P.S. All quotes from Center of the Sunlit Sky.

Malcolm wrote:

Right but our friend TKfan has never read even a remotely well translated version of Candrakirti, so it is natural his understanding is skewed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 12:17 PM

Title: Re: Dr. Nida Chenagtsang

Content:

Manju said:

And this applies for each moment, not only for the time after death.
If we only weren't so distracted.

Malcolm wrote:

If you wish to realize rainbow body in this lifetime, go for it. I was talking about the instructions for extremely lazy people.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 12:15 PM

Title: Re: Dorje Drolo question

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Many wrathful deities are in the form of one of the 8 classes in order to subdue them...except badder of course. So, when Padmasambhava transformed into Dorje Drolo which one does Dorje Drolo look like?

Malcolm wrote:

Protectors take the form of the eight classes, but not yidams in general. Exceptions might be Yamantaka and Simhamukha.

Drolo does not look like any of them.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 7:55 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

You're suffering from 'one big fat wing' syndrome. If all conventional truth was a delusion, ultimate truth would also be a delusion because it depends upon conventional truth. The path to enlightenment would also be a delusion, which is clearly nonsense!

Malcolm wrote:

The path to awakening is a delusion. But we are deluded and so we follow it until we are no longer deluded. Then we see there was never a point to it to begin with, since we realize then that delusion is not possible at all.

Your problem is that you keep trying to unify a false cognition and true cognition into one. This will never work. Your second problem is that you think that ultimate truth is true from its own side. That is the worst delusion of all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 7:53 AM

Title: Re: Yet another Dzogchen pseudo-guru?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you think you are being all Saidian, think again...

dzogchungpa said:

You mean, like this?

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

In all seriousness, I think he is being more Sadean than Saidian.

Malcolm wrote:

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Orientalism_%28book%29

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 7:49 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Both science and Buddhism are investigations of reality and are based on the principle of verification.

Malcolm wrote:

Science is based on empirical verification. Buddhadharma is based on subjective verification. This is a major and overlooked difference. Buddhadharma has not in the past, does not now, and will never depend on empirical verification.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 5:59 AM

Title: Re: "Terror" attack in Berlin

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

If i did not explain my story and opinion to the point, sure everybody would say, look he is a fu..... neo nazi.

This because you Americans really do not know exactly what is going on here.
So even you as a very intelligent person did not know that I never can be pro Wilders, because you do not know the in between combinations here in Holland. Ok you cannot know everything that is normal.

Malcolm wrote:

I used him as an example. Donald Trump is another. They are both fools, not least because of their anti-Muslim bias.

kalden yungdrung said:

Well the tolerance from the people here about Moroccans and Turkish people is nearly finished. Many Moroccan youth joins and support the IS, I have heard from a trustful Moroccan I know for years. He told me many more than is published are inside IS in Holland and I was astonished to hear that. So Dutchmen are very careful if they meet Moroccans and Turkish people, that is reality .

Malcolm wrote:

It is a pity when people give into bigotry.

kalden yungdrung said:

I leave the ship, I am sick and tired of the situation, no future possible.

Malcolm wrote:

The problem is not Muslims. The problem is right wing people in general.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 5:50 AM

Title: Re: Yet another Dzogchen pseudo-guru?

Content:

Queequeg said:

I don't get it. Why the shade?

Malcolm wrote:

Racism, pure and simple.

BuddhaFollower said:

If it's about my comment, I think you mean colonialism and cultural appropriation.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, BF, Buddhadharma is an international religion. Always has been, right from the beginning. If you think you are being all Saidian, think again...Tibetans want their religion to spread, they always have.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 5:10 AM

Title: Re: "Terror" attack in Berlin

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

But do not tell me now i am a pro sieg heil neo frak nazi !

Malcolm wrote:

I didn't say you were. But there were a lot of antisemites before WWII who did not understand the consequences of their views until after.

I am suggesting that singling out muslims is a bad policy. Treat criminals as criminals when they do criminal things, but leave people's ethnicity out of it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 5:07 AM

Title: Re: Yet another Dzogchen pseudo-guru?

Content:

Queequeg said:

I don't get it. Why the shade?

Malcolm wrote:

Racism, pure and simple.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 4:53 AM

Title: Re: Namaste and Hi

Content:

DharmaChakra said:

Namaste

I will say one thing, as I dont usually do the challenges on etymology, as English for one isn't the best language to convey all these concepts, plus the modern education system of learning isn't the best platform to copy how dharma is learned or expressed. Seems one of my post was not approved due to double clicking

All Dharma Shastra includes experience, or the experiencer, its not an objective study. Sama is the neutral, the equanimity that keeps calm and poise, this is conscious and as you say a neutral mental factor, samatha is calm abiding, but that is nothing unless vipassana happens, just feeling calm and equi[used is not enough, one wouldnt know how to discriminate or operate even in this world with the faculty of intelligence, but when dhi is combined with sama to make samadhi then the supra mental faculty, or the higher faculty that understand dharma is united with that ground of equanimity to break down the defilement, so sama and dhi are in union at all times of its a real experience of samadhi, and all of this can only be known via experience, via sila, good character and culture to bring balance to the mind. I think people nowadays are well aware that unskillful habits leads to suffering for oneself and others and should be given up to experience higher states of mind, that dont really need to be analysed literally. But why would dhi be considered as part of the supra mental faculty, why not ordinary intelligence ? can dharma be approached by the normal faculty of intelligence, scholars and academics who dont practice dont seem to be getting the right understanding, would you agree ?

With Metta

Nice to meet you by the way Maclom.

Malcolm wrote:

Dharmacakra:

Nice to meet you too.

I suggest you acquaint yourself with Vasubandhu's Abhidharmakośa. That is the standard here, in this Mahāyāna forum.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 4:11 AM

Title: Re: Namaste and Hi

Content:

DharmaChakra said:

Namaste

I'd say experience to be the best one, if your stuck in etymology then doesnt that side step and retract from the Buddhas teachings. I could post many things especially Abhidharma of Ledi Sayadaw and The Burmese Vipassana tradition, but what would be the point, as I stated my path is not to get lost in the words and technical side, practical is much better. Changing and not challenging people is my Buddha Dharma. You dont even have common courtesy and yet you say you know Buddha Dharma, how can one know dhi without right speech, right motivation etc, as there isnt any equanimity.

With Metta

Malcolm wrote:

Samādhi is a neutral mental factor that everyone possesses all of the time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 4:01 AM

Title: Re: Namaste and Hi

Content:

DharmaChakra said:

This is Buddha Dharma as per Vipassana tradition.

Malcolm wrote:

Citation please supporting your etymology.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 3:47 AM

Title: Re: Vajrasattva questions

Content:

pueraeternus said:

In East Asia, this tantra is titled the Vajrasekhara Sutra. You can find it translated in BDK's Two Esoteric Sutras: <http://www.bdkamerica.org/book/two-esoteric-sutras>

Malcolm wrote:

No. the Vajrasekhara Tantra (Sūtra) is a different text.

pueraeternus said:

From the BDK link, the Sanskrit name matches though: Skt. Sarvatathāgata-tattvasaṃgraha-mahāyānābhīṣamaya-mahākālpaparājā. Translated into the Chinese by Amoghavajra as Jinggangding yiqie rulai zhenshi she dasheng xianzheng dajiao wang jing (金剛頂一切如來真實攝大乘現證大教王經). 3 fascicles.

Malcolm wrote:

Sarvatathāgatātattvasaṃgraha-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra (D 479).

Translator(s): Śraddhākaravarman, Rin-chen-bzang-po

Vajra-śikhara-mahā-guhya-yoga-tantra (D 480). Translator(s): Karmavajra, Gzhon-nu Tshul-khrims

It appears that in Shingon, the former is known by the name of the latter. According to <http://vajrayana.faithweb.com/Yoga-Tantra.pdf>:

During the first quarter of the eighth century the Compendium of Principles and texts associated with it were transmitted to China. These south Indian traditions organized the texts into an eighteen-part tantric corpus called the Vajrasekhara Yoga system.

and:

In 723 CE the Indian master Vajrabodhi (641-741) produced the Recitation Sūtra Extracted from the Vajrasekhara Yoga.¹⁰ This text, in four fascicles, is not a translation proper; rather, it is Vajrabodhi's introduction to the Compendium of Principles and a larger system of eighteen tantras, of which the Compendium of Principles was the most prominent member.

Vajraśekhara then refers to a system which includes both the Vajra-śikhara and the Sarvatathāgatatattvasaṃgraha.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 3:32 AM

Title: Re: "Terror" attack in Berlin

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

There would be 4000 Jihad warriors among the refugees who entered Europe

Malcolm wrote:

Really, you sure about this? I think you ought to stop listening to people like Gert Wilders. And you might want to stop listening to ISIS propaganda.

kalden yungdrung said:

Tashi delek M,

Well it is sure, maybe we can quarrel about 4000, 2000, 1000 , 100 but they came in, they are not stupid and this is for them THE opportunity to enter in secret.

Who is Gert Wilders and what has he to do with me? There are a lot of Dutchmen like me who do not follow Gerd Wilders but have a certain opinion about Muslims and Muslims. Oh that is for Americans hard to believe i guess so.

Come here and live for two years in certain parts of Holland, then we talk again.

There are in Holland also people from Christian parties who do not like these extreme Muslims here.

Ok i will follow your advice and will walk blindfolded and with fingers in my ears through Holland.

Thank you very much for your helpful to the point advice .

i will recommend this to other Dutchmen, very sure, no doubt about it

KY.

Malcolm wrote:

Your attitude makes the problem worse, not better. You know, no one mentions the white guy that killed three muslims in Zurich the same day.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 3:24 AM

Title: Re: Vajrasattva questions

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Vajrasattva comes from the Sarvatathāgatatattvasaṃgraha, the root tantra of Yoga tantra. It is also found in the Vajrapañjara Tantra and other HYT tantras.

Vasana said:

Thanks, Malcolm.

pueraeternus said:

In East Asia, this tantra is titled the Vajrasekhara Sutra. You can find it translated in BDK's Two Esoteric Sutras: <http://www.bdkamerica.org/book/two-esoteric-sutras>

Malcolm wrote:

No. the Vajrasekhara Tantra (Sūtra) is a different text.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 3:23 AM

Title: Re: Namaste and Hi

Content:

DharmaChakra said:

Namaste,

I do not really see much of a difference from you said to me, in texts usually the context is kept pure, so without going into to many variations of the translation of the word samadhi as there are many levels expressed in different traditions, as the experience can only be one. If we stick for the time being as sama as equanimity or balance and dhi as you mention to hold still holds the same context, what would be holding that sama or equanimity it would then again be that supra mental faculty, or intellect that holds the mind by superior knowledge in the state of sama, so even though sama and dhi make up the compound they are always in union.

With Metta

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, this explanation just has nothing to do with Buddhadharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 21st, 2016 at 3:12 AM

Title: Re: "Terror" attack in Berlin

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

There would be 4000 Jihad warriors among the refugees who entered Europe

Malcolm wrote:

Really, you sure about this? I think you ought to stop listening to people like Gert Wilders.

And you might want to stop listening to ISIS propaganda.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 20th, 2016 at 8:51 PM

Title: Re: Since Tibetans are outcastes, how does it effect Tibetan Buddhism?

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

Wikipedia is full of long debunked Chinese propaganda.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 20th, 2016 at 8:50 PM

Title: Re: If Vajrayana is superior to Hinayana, how come no stories of Dipa Ma-like siddhis?

Content:

AlexanderS said:

The buddhists won hands down.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course, the victors write the history.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 20th, 2016 at 8:48 PM

Title: Re: Julian Assange

Content:

steveb1 said:

He is so Now. The world's crumbling freedoms and its populace, kept constantly in the dark, need people like J.A.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, he gave up the torch when he started manipulating the media, contributing to the dark, rather than lifting it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 20th, 2016 at 8:47 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

conebeckham said:

However, it is said that, in certain contexts, compassion can be one's enemy. Karmapa Rangjung Dorje addresses this in his "Connate Mahamudra." If one has undertaken practice in retreat, for instance, compassion can arise in one's experience, and if one leaves retreat to perform acts benefitting others--like tending to the bleeding person--this can be an obstacle. Context and circumstances are important, of course.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Compassion is never one's enemy...

Malcolm wrote:

Its a manner of speaking, it is not to be understood literally, unlike Madhyamaka texts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 20th, 2016 at 11:58 AM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

Karma Jinpa said:

Which part? snying thig is not snying gyi thig le? Or bindu shouldn't be defined as "essential drop"?

Malcolm wrote:

Both, in this context.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 20th, 2016 at 11:31 AM

Title: Re: Aparamitāyus

Content:

Karma Jinpa said:

Recently, while perusing Sam van Schaik's blog,

<https://earlytibet.com/2010/12/13/secrets-of-the-cave-i/>, I discovered that apparently there is a longer form of Buddha Amitāyus' name: Aparamitāyus.

As far as I can tell, the initial element means "Unrivaled," according to http://www.sanskrita.org/wiki/index.php?title=apara#.E0.A4.85.E0.A4.AA.E0.A4.B0.C2.A0a-para_.5B_apara_.5D: अपरं a-para [apara]

1 mfn. having nothing beyond or after, having no rival or superior

Can anyone confirm or deny this? My knowledge of Sanskrit is certainly much more limited than some on here.

Obvioulsy the name should not be parsed a-paramita-ayus, since this would mean something like "not-transcending-life," though the syllables 'paramita' in this longer form is what first jumped out at me.

Malcolm wrote:

Aparamita means beyond estimate. Thus Aparamitāyus means life span beyond measure or estimate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 20th, 2016 at 11:29 AM

Title: Re: Rebirth and karma

Content:

Wayfarer said:

To make awakening seem like something boring, routine and quotidian is surely to mischaracterise it.

Malcolm wrote:

I gather you are speaking from personal experience.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 20th, 2016 at 11:13 AM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

Lewis Decottes said:

What would be a more accurate translation?

Malcolm wrote:

Literally speaking, snying thig means "the core [thig] of the center [snying]," like the heartwood of a tree. The term "bindu" is not justified in the Sanskrit title, neither is "drop" ([thigs pa])

The standard conventions, "heart essence" or "innermost heart" are perfectly fine since here citta simply means heart. The thig in this case is an intensifier.

M

Karma Jinpa said:

So snying thig is not to be understood as snying gyi thig le, as indicated by http://rywiki.tsadra.org/index.php/thig_le?

Personally, I prefer the translation "Heart Essence" or "Vital Essence" to "Heart Bindu," but isn't a bindu/thigle usually glossed as "essential drop"?

Malcolm wrote:
It is not.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, December 20th, 2016 at 8:47 AM
Title: Re: Julian Assange
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Assange is a self-aggrandizing, megalomaniacal, narcissistic has been. He is so 2006.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, December 20th, 2016 at 8:41 AM
Title: Re: Rebirth and karma
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Buddhist awakening is very specific and precise. Other ideas of enlightenment are extraneous and not necessary for those who practice Buddhadharma. For us, they are irrelevant, if not invalid.

rachmiel said:
Interesting ...

So Buddhism does not say:

"Follow our teachings and you will know Truth (with a capital T)." This is what I associate with awakening.

rather:

"Follow our teachings and your suffering will end." Period. End of contract. No "Truth" promised, just surcease of suffering.

Malcolm wrote:
The truth is that there is no self, all phenomena are empty. There really isn't any truth beyond that to realize. Buddhadharma is a crashing bore when it comes to the wow factor. This is why Hindus do much better, they attract the bliss bunnies, the yoga dudes, and all the other hipsters.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, December 20th, 2016 at 3:13 AM
Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Minobu said:

Buddhism , I thought was not really a religion. It's more about a philosophical system of thought and examination.

.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhism is a religion which insists on various unfalsifiable beliefs such karma, rebirth, etc. I personally accept these beliefs, but I am under no illusion that they are anything other than religious beliefs.

Minobu said:

You have a construct of spirituality that is unique to Malcom.

it borrows and cherry picks from Buddhism and yet your construct is not Buddhist for it denies certain edicts in Mahayana.

Malcolm wrote:

I guess we should hold a convocation and elect you the Buddhist Pope, Pope Minobu the First!

Minobu said:

Your analysis of Madhyamika suits your construct and denies the credibility of many Mahayana edicts.

Malcolm wrote:

Or, it merely contradicts your personal interpretation of Mahāyāna Buddhism.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 20th, 2016 at 3:11 AM

Title: Re: Root Tantra

Content:

Caoimghín said:

Greetings,

This is a very basic question, I fear, but what exactly is the difference between a "root tantra" versus a tantra that is not called a "root tantra"?

I encounter the term "root tantra" very frequently and haven't had an easy time figure out what "root" means in that context. Are root tantras exoteric and regular tantras esoteric? Is that the difference?

-Caoimghín

Malcolm wrote:

A "root" tantra is generally the tantra that explains the basics of a given mandala and so on. An explanatory tantra elaborates on the root, and gives details of mandala construction and so on. However, both root and explanatory tantras are not confined to these subjects.

Usually root tantras appear first and are followed later by explanatory tantras.

conebeckham said:

Explanatory Tantras are also sometimes referred to as "Shared" Tantras....for example, you have the Hevajra Tantras, and the Cakrasamvara Tantras, and these are known as Root Tantras. The Samputa Tantra is a "shared" Tantra that can apply to both Hevajra Tantras and Samvara Tantras, and others, I think.

Malcolm wrote:

yes, some are shared.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 20th, 2016 at 1:43 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, how did you come to the conclusion that "one must inevitably be the master of the other"? Please explain with reasoning based on logic and evidence. I really am amazed at how you can possibly reach such a conclusion.

Malcolm wrote:

Mādhyamikas accept any number of propositions that find no basis in science whatsoever such as rebirth, karma, buddhahood and so on.

For example, the logic of dependent origination precludes such ideas that some physicists have that the universe is a one-off, a one shot deal.

Kenneth Chan said:

If both the Prasangika Madhyamaka view—that all things are empty of inherent existence because they are dependently originated—and the formulation of quantum mechanics are correct, why do you insist that there cannot be a connection between the two?

Malcolm wrote:

As I have pointed out again and again, the function of Madhyamaka is to remove incorrect views about the Buddha's teachings, that is all. It has no role in solving disputes among physicists.

Incidentally, the Buddha taught pretty clearly that dependent origination was meant to describe the life cycle of sentient beings and not external phenomena.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 20th, 2016 at 1:14 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

That is why, in Madhyamika philosophy, we say that this object is empty of inherent existence—its very existence depends on causes and conditions (represented by the quantum wave function) and depends upon the mind that apprehends it (which is the experiential event that occurs in the act of observation). There is no such object without this dependent origination via these factors.]

Malcolm wrote:

But this assertion is in itself not correct. Designations are dependent on appearances. But appearances are not dependent on designations. Designations do not bootstrap appearances into existence.

Further, you are making an assertion of parabhāva, other or dependent existence. We have already discussed this before.

But my point is that wave-particle duality is not something about which there is common consensus in physics, unlike for example, the fact that we all agree there is one moon in the sky.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 20th, 2016 at 1:08 AM

Title: Re: Rebirth and karma

Content:

rachmiel said:

So, going along with your metaphor, what do the paths of all awakened beings have in common?

Malcolm wrote:

Freedom from the afflictions that cause *in*form karma which causes in turn birth in the three realms.

rachmiel said:

And this meets Buddha's goal = to end suffering (dukkha) ... yes? Any other definition of awakening is not really recognized in Buddhadharma.

That makes sense, since -- again, going along with Buddha's very clear goal of ending suffering as a doctor might cure a disease -- recognizing other forms of awakening runs the risk of undermining the prescribed Buddhist path to ending suffering.

Malcolm wrote:

The ending of suffering depends on recognizing that all phenomena are without self. This is what destroys affliction and its traces.

Buddhist awakening is very specific and precise. Other ideas of enlightenment are extraneous and not necessary for those who practice Buddhadharma. For us, they are irrelevant, if not invalid.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 20th, 2016 at 1:02 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Minobu said:

Religion is religion. Science is science. They should be kept separate.

Buddhism, I thought was not really a religion. It's more about a philosophical system of thought and examination.

.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhism is a religion which insists on various unfalsifiable beliefs such as karma, rebirth, etc. I personally accept these beliefs, but I am under no illusion that they are anything other than religious beliefs.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 20th, 2016 at 12:44 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

but I think Yogacara may be too close to solipsism

Malcolm wrote:

OED: Solipsism:

noun

the view or theory that the self is all that can be known to exist.

Yogacāra is not solipsism, it is not even remotely close to solipsism. Yogacāra argues for the existence of separate mind streams. It negates external phenomena (in various ways, not all Yogacārins absolutely reject external phenomena), but not separate mind streams.

Kenneth Chan said:

Yes, I know Yogacara is not solipsism. That's why I only said that it "may be too close to solipsism." The problem is that, like solipsism, it negates external reality (although perhaps not absolutely).

Malcolm wrote:

It is not close at all. Yogacāra is called "cittamatra" following the method they use to discover ultimate truth. However, the ordinary things of everyday existence which are included in the imagined nature still function, like cars, etc. "Cittamatra" is a method of ultimate analysis they use.

The way in which external reality functions in the Yogacāra analysis is very complex and subtle, and beyond any discussion here. But because it is complex and subtle, and because the basic concepts to which they refer are found in the Buddhas sūtras, Madhyamakas were compelled to comment on them to remove misconceptions Madhyamakas felt Yogacārins had introduced in the latter's explanations.

So for example, if the Buddha had taught a sūtra on quantum physics, then Madhyamakas might have some business commenting on the same. But since he didn't, I still maintain that QP is properly outside the domain of proper Buddhist discourse because it can only be speculative, a thicket of views.

Kenneth Chan said:

Another problem with solipsism is the fact that all the different minds seem to agree with what is happening in the external world. They all perceive the same blue sky, the same green grass, and the same events happening in the external world. How is this agreement possible if everything is only happening in each of their minds? Why would these events be correlated at all?

Malcolm wrote:

In the Yogacāra model all external perceptions of the three realms is accounted for by traces (vasanas) which exist in the mind streams of sentient beings. These vasanas are traces of actions and act as seeds which when meeting special conditions ripen into karmic appearances. Because these traces are so deep, sentient beings in general never question appearance of their common container universe. It is more detailed than this, but this is a brief overview of how it works.

This means that all collective appearances arise from common karmic traces, while individual appearances arise from specific traces. Thus all hell beings share common traces to experience a hell realm, but the individual suffering of each one is based on traces unique to that individual.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 11:42 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

In this way, you are doing more harm than good. So kindly and seriously consider this.

Malcolm wrote:

In your opinion. I think that pretending that Madhyamaka offers solutions to questions in physics is harmful and misleading. Religion is religion. Science is science. They should be kept separate. Why? Because one must inevitably be the master of the other if they intrude too much on each other's proper domain.

The domain of Buddhadharma is bring suffering to an end. The domain of physics is to offer a description of matter and its modes.

While it is tempting to allow Buddhadharma to intrude on science and vice versa, the outcome is that both suffer.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 11:25 PM

Title: Re: Vajrasattva questions

Content:

Vasana said:

Bumping this thread as i didn't want to start another topic.

I'm looking for information about the root Tantra of Vajrasattva and the origin of the 100 syllable mantra and i'm struggling to find any original texts or detailed accounts other than the root tantra's name, Dorje Gyan, or Vajra Ornament.

Anyone have any leads?

Malcolm wrote:

Vajrasattva comes from the Sarvatathāgatatattvasaṃgraha, the root tantra of Yoga tantra. It is also found in the Vajrapañjara Tantra and other HYT tantras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 11:04 PM

Title: Re: Vajrasattva questions

Content:

smcj said:

In the NgonDro the different schools have different details about the visualization.

Sakya ...= solo figure in full lotus. (99% sure about that)

kirtu said:

In ngondro, yes. However I was surprised after several years of doing a different Vajrasattva when my Sakya Khenpo got us together and we did single figure Vajrasattva practice. At that point I had never done single deity Vajrasattva in my Sakya practices ever. You can actually enter Sakya practice and do Sakya sadhanas for years and not encounter the single deity Vajrasattva form. I'm not saying that everyone will have this experience though. If you are introduced to Sakya ngondro right away then you definitely get the single form. But it is very common to get the typical tantric introductory initiations (Hevajra or Chakrasamvara and Vajrayogini), practice that and really just do Atisha's refuge prayer with extensive sutra lineage study for a long time. And then later begin ngondro.

Kirt

supermaxv said:

Weird. The Sakya Ngondro that I was introduced to and engaged with is definitely not the single deity form.

Malcolm wrote:

No, because this is Vajraheruka, not Vajrasattva. It comes from the mother tantras; whereas Vajrasattva comes from the yoga and father tantras, in general (but not exclusively).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 10:59 PM

Title: Re: Rebirth and karma

Content:

rachmiel said:

So, going along with your metaphor, what do the paths of all awakened beings have in common?

Malcolm wrote:

Freedom from the afflictions that cause inform karma which causes in turn birth in the three realms.

Any other definition of awakening is not really recognized in Buddhadharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 10:35 PM

Title: Root Tantra

Content:

Caoimghín said:

Greetings,

This is a very basic question, I fear, but what exactly is the difference between a "root tantra" versus a tantra that is not called a "root tantra"?

I encounter the term "root tantra" very frequently and haven't had an easy time figure out what "root" means in that context. Are root tantras exoteric and regular tantras esoteric? Is that the difference?

-Caoimghín

Malcolm wrote:

A "root" tantra is generally the tantra that explains the basics of a given mandala and so on. An explanatory tantra elaborates on the root, and gives details of mandala construction and so on. However, both root and explanatory tantras are not confined to these subjects.

Usually root tantras appear first and are followed later by explanatory tantras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 10:31 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Actually what my paper demonstrates is that interpreting the formulation of quantum mechanics in terms of the Prasangika Madhyamaka principle—that all things are empty of inherent existence because they are dependently originated—would solve the mystery of quantum physics.

Tsongkhapa said:

There is great compatibility. I have a degree in physics and I find it interesting that particles can sometimes act as particles and sometimes as waves, for example. This shows that nothing is fixed and existing from its own side, but what it is depends upon causes and conditions, which is exactly what Nagarjuna demonstrates.

Malcolm wrote:

They do not act as particles or waves, they are best described sometimes as particles or sometimes as waves. Albert Einstein wrote: "It seems as though we must use sometimes the one theory and sometimes the other, while at times we may use either. We are faced with a new kind of difficulty. We have two contradictory pictures of reality; separately neither of them fully explains the phenomena of light, but together they do."

And of course, there is still no absolute consensus on the issue, with some contemporary 21st century physicists arguing that in reality all we are observing is particles, and others arguing that all we are observing is pure waves of matter. Thus, I really do not see how any version of Madhyamaka is going to help this situation along.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 10:20 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

but I think Yogacara may be too close to solipsism

Malcolm wrote:

OED:

Solipsism:

noun

the view or theory that the self is all that can be known to exist.

Yogacāra is not solipsism, it is not even remotely close to solipsism. Yogacāra argues for the existence of separate mind streams. It negates external phenomena (in various ways, not all Yogacārins absolutely reject external phenomena), but not separate mind streams.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 10:15 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

...all things are empty of inherent existence because they are dependently originated...

Malcolm wrote:

is not a Prasangika principle. It is the principle of the Prajñāpāramita sūtras.

The prasangika principle is reductio ad absurdum.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 11:27 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You are, in fact, invalidating facts.

The hilarious thing is that your gurus are relying histories as well. Just older, more inaccurate ones with far less accurate facts.

Tsongkhapa said:

Except, they may be Buddhas (I believe so) in which case they know everything without error in which case they don't need to rely upon history books.

conebeckham said:

For ordinary beings such as ourselves, it is said, that even Bodhisattvas on the first stages may appear to be Buddhas.

Malcolm wrote:

Māra can also appear as a Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 7:07 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

No, because things do exist as mere appearance, existence is not refuted per se.

Malcolm wrote:

You mean like mirages, illusions, and so on of course. All things which do not exist but merely appear.

Tsongkhapafan said:

They do exist - as mere appearances. If we think there is a car in car, then we are deluded but the mere appearance of car exists (I can drive it, but not a hallucination of car) so we have to say that the car 'exists' to distinguish it from deluded perceptions of cars that cannot function at all.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, this does not work. You are claiming that appearances in correct relative truth have more ontological substance than appearances in false relative truth. In other words, you are claiming that the appearances in correct relative truth are less "mere" than illusions that truly are "mere appearances" as that is all they are. When you say that both correct and false relative truths are mere appearances you are claiming they have equal status. But you qualify the latter as "functional." Thus you are making the claim that these appearances are more real than the others.

It would be better for you to say that correct relative truth is mere existence, while false relative truth is mere appearance, as opposed to true nonexistents like the sons of barren women and hairy turtles which have no causes for arising.

This is the point of my saying your understanding of delusion is not subtle enough. Candra is quite clear: all relative truths are objects of false cognitions. This means that even conventional truths are actually delusions, subtle delusions, as opposed to coarse delusions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 6:52 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Yes, that's a good description of inherent existence; primarily feeling that things exist independently with their own characteristics outside the mind.

conebeckham said:

That sounds like a good definition of existence to me.

Tsongkhapafan said:

No, because things do exist as mere appearance, existence is not refuted per se.

Malcolm wrote:

You mean like mirages, illusions, and so on of course. All things which do not exist but merely appear.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 6:51 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Except, they may be Buddhas (I believe so) in which case they know everything without error in which case they don't need to rely upon history books.

Malcolm wrote:

Your belief that they are buddhas does not make them buddhas anymore than a child's belief in Santa makes him come down the chimney.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Geshe Potowa said if you see your Spiritual Guide as a Buddha, you will receive the blessings of a Buddha. If you see your Spiritual Guide as a bodhisattva, you will receive the blessings of a bodhisattva. If you see your Spiritual Guide as an ordinary being, you will receive the blessings of an ordinary being (no blessings).

He also says that it doesn't matter if our Spiritual Guide is a living Buddha, if we don't see him or her as such, we will receive no blessings but on the other hand, if we see our Spiritual Guide as a Buddha and he is she is ordinary, all the Buddhas will enter into his or her body and we will receive their blessings. View, therefore is very important; imputations function. (reliably, I might add)

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is all very fine and wonderful, but it sure does not mean that your teacher is a buddha just because you believe it to be so. This is called "leaving your brain at the temple door with your shoes." All too common these days, and creates potential for massive abuse.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 6:36 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Well, according to Gendun Chopel, it's pointless trying to use your analytical powers to discover anything conventionally valid.

Malcolm wrote:

He is merely pointing out that rhetoric like yours is fruitless. But it is useless to ask you to pull your head out of the sand.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Oh, it's my rhetoric that's fruitless? Oh good, I thought he was referring to you too - It's good to have your company in the sand. There's no point saying anything about the ultimate because it's couched in the oh-so-unreliable conventional, so you might as well not say anything

Malcolm wrote:

In fact there is little use in saying anything about the ultimate since it is inexpressible and all descriptions of it are false. Why, well, as Śāntideva points out the ultimate is outside the range of the mind since the mind is relative.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 6:34 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

No, my inverted commas were meant to demonstrate that what you take as 'fact' may not in fact be so. I'm not invalidating facts, I'm just saying that your 'facts' may not be so. Thanks for attempting to misrepresent me though.

I trust the Gurus, you trust historians - I can tell you who is more reliable.

Malcolm wrote:

You are, in fact, invalidating facts.

The hilarious thing is that your gurus are relying histories as well. Just older, more inaccurate ones with far less accurate facts.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Except, they may be Buddhas (I believe so) in which case they know everything without error in which case they don't need to rely upon history books.

Malcolm wrote:

Your belief that they are buddhas does not make them buddhas anymore than a child's belief in Santa makes him come down the chimney.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 6:29 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Can't "facts" about gurus be deceptive? That was what Malcolm was talking about.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Well, according to Gendun Chopel, it's pointless trying to use your analytical powers to discover anything conventionally valid.

Malcolm wrote:

He is merely pointing out that rhetoric like yours is fruitless. But it is useless to ask you to pull your head out of the sand.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 6:28 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You have basically invalidated everything you have to say from here on out.

Tsongkhapafan said:

No, my inverted commas were meant to demonstrate that what you take as 'fact' may not in fact be so. I'm not invalidating facts, I'm just saying that your 'facts' may not be so. Thanks for attempting to misrepresent me though.

I trust the Gurus, you trust historians - I can tell you who is more reliable.

Malcolm wrote:

You are, in fact, invalidating facts.

The hilarious thing is that your gurus are relying on histories as well. Just older, more inaccurate ones with far less accurate facts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 6:22 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Vasana said:

If any of you would like a brief poetic interlude from Gendün Chöphel, please feel free.
Seems relevant to the content and direction of this discussion on multiple levels.

Tsongkhapa said:

Is this the same Gendun Chopel who appeared not to understand Je Tsongkhapa's masterful union of Madhyamaka and Pramana (Pramana tells you what you can reliably accept about convention) and who decided to follow Gorampa instead?

No thanks. I'll stick with Je Tsongkhapa and Dharmakirti.

Malcolm wrote:

It is the same Ganden Chopel who realized that most of Gorampa and Mipham's refutations of the position of the Riwo Gendenpa's were true. He also criticized Gorampa where warranted. He was not partial

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 6:11 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Vasana said:

If any of you would like a brief poetic interlude from Gendün Chöphel, please feel free.
Seems relevant to the content and direction of this discussion on multiple levels.

"Objects of knowledge posited by the mind as existent and nonexistent;
Valid forms of knowledge dependent on objects true and false.
Having seen that the source of falsity in one is entrusted to the other,
I am uncomfortable about positing the validity of convention.

The presentation of the unexamined, unanalyzed world;
The systems of tenets that examine and analyze.
Having seen that the foundation of one rests on the other,
I am uncomfortable about positing the validity of convention.

Illusions that are mere appearances to the mind;
The mode of being determined to be real.
Having seen that if one is true, the other is false,
I am uncomfortable about positing the validity of convention.

The first speaker hides the mountain of his own faults;
His opponent searches for the other's faults with a needle.
Having seen them take turns defeating each other,
I am uncomfortable about positing the validity of convention.

The nonobservation of what is suitable to appear negates the extreme of existence;
The nonobservation of what does not appear abandons the extreme of nonexistence.
Having seen that the presentation of one is destroyed by the other,
I am uncomfortable about positing the validity of convention.

Because there is no difference in the attachment produced
By the conception of true existence that holds a friend to be real and
By the valid knowledge which understands that friends are helpful,
I am uncomfortable about positing the validity of convention.

Having seen no difference in the hatred produced
By the conception of real existence that holds an enemy to be true and
By the valid knowledge which determines that enemies are harmful,
I am uncomfortable about positing the validity of convention.

Inferential valid knowledge is produced from direct perception;
Inference analyzes whether direct perception is true or false.
Because the child is serving as the father's witness,
I am uncomfortable about positing the validity of convention.

Analysis by reasoning depends on the founders' systems;
The founders are established by the power of reasoning.
If I can decide on my own, whom should I follow?
If I cannot decide, on whom can I rely?

Correct reasoning is found in definitive scriptures;
The provisional and definitive are distinguished by stainless reasoning.
If one understands with reasoning, why search for definitive meaning?
If one does not understand with reasoning, how does one find definitive meaning?

Because of this way in which Maitreya-nātha was seen as a female dog,
I do not believe in the unanalyzed, innate mind.
Because of this way in which the views of Madhyamaka and Cittamātra abbots contradict each other,
I do not believe in the minds of analytical scholars.

Vulgar people, having repeatedly followed what is right,
Find the innate conception of true existence; it is the root of all downfall.
Scholars, having repeatedly followed what is right,
Find the artificial conception of true existence; it is worse than that.

In this world where there resounds the noise of debate
About existence and nonexistence, is and is not, true and false,
Whatever is constantly seen appears as an object of knowledge.
Whatever one has always known appears to be valid.

Whatever most people like appears as the truth;
Whatever most mouths agree on appears as dogma.
Inside each person is a different valid form of knowledge,
With an adamant scripture to support it.

Beyond each mountain pass is a different religious sect
With thousands of scholars and fools who follow, saying,
“Just this is true; this will not deceive you.”

This self-authorization of one's own truth
Delights a group of like-minded beings.
When told to a group that does not agree, they are scornful.

Here in the capital of six types of beings who cannot agree,
What is asserted by ten is not asserted by a hundred;
What is seen by humans is not seen by gods.
Who makes the laws that validate truth and falsity?”

Malcolm wrote:
What Ganden Chopel said.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 5:54 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

'Facts' can be deceptive.

Malcolm wrote:

Just let this sink in folks...it explains so much about certain people and why they make the crazy decisions they do...

You are never going to live this one down, TKF, I predict that from now on you are going to met with a lot of "But facts can be deceptive, according to you." Especially when you try to use a fact.

You have basically invalidated everything you have to say from here on out.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 5:19 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Minobu said:

But would not there be some sort of protection against this from ...like...'HEAVEN" and all the Dharma Protectors...I mean we really are talking about " Buddha Nagarjuna" here.

And as these teachings are going to have fallen in our lap from time when they were taught...can we not have some sort of faith in them...

i mean we are not talking about Moses and his exodus here or the risen Christ.

Malcolm wrote:

Nāgārjuna I, according to the general tradition, only achieved the first bhumi. It is true he is called the "Second Buddha," but this is poetic praise. We need not take it literally.

I have not problem with the teachings themselves. However, I do have issues with their attributions.

Coëmgenu said:

These attributions = upāya.

Malcolm wrote:

Upāyas are provisional.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 5:06 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

It's logical and a direct consequence of emptiness, but if you don't accept logic, fine.

Malcolm wrote:

In reality, apart from some stories in some books there is no evidence Nāgārjuna lived for 600 years. I think it is a legend which resulted from Tibetans becoming confused over several Indian authors using the name "Nāgārjuna" who lived in different epochs.

Minobu said:

But would not there be some sort of protection against this from ...like...'HEAVEN" and all the Dharma Protectors...I mean we really are talking about " Buddha Nagarjuna" here.

And as these teachings are going to have fallen in our lap from time when they were taught...can we not have some sort of faith in them...
i mean we are not talking about Moses and his exodus here or the risen Christ.

Malcolm wrote:

Nāgārjuna I, according to the general tradition, only achieved the first bhumi. It is true he is called the "Second Buddha," but this is poetic praise. We need not take it literally.

I have not problem with the teachings themselves. However, I do have issues with their attributions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 4:57 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Anders said:

They may not perceive its existence as being "inherent", but I think it is not wrong to say that in perceiving something to exist, we unwittingly bring hidden assumptions of inherency (/permanence) to that which exists.

Malcolm wrote:

Absolutely not. Everyone knows their car is going to break down, that they are going to sicken and die, etc.,

Anders said:

If that were really the case, the Buddha wouldn't have bothered teaching reflecting on impermanence as a method of practice.

Clearly there is something skewed in our perception of the impermanence of things that the Buddha sought to redress.

We may be conceptually aware of impermanence but as often as not, this knowledge is not penetrative enough to save ourselves from the heartaches of permanence.

Malcolm wrote:

People have attachment to permanence, this does not mean that they do not know things are actually impermanent. Of course as Buddhists we brain wash ourselves into believing that no one is aware of this simple fact.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 4:49 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:
...your view of conventional truth is too coarse...

Malcolm wrote:
Your understanding of delusion is too coarse.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 4:39 AM
Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics
Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:
It's really a bit lazy to accuse someone whose view you don't agree with as being a fundamentalist, just because they follow the traditional views of Buddhism. If your claim is that I'm believing something without a logical reason, you can check out my logical explanation for why Nagarjuna lived for 600 years a few posts back.

Malcolm wrote:
Your "logical" explanation will not be accepted outside a small circle of coreligionists because there is no possible way you can prove this.

Tsongkhapafan said:
It's logical and a direct consequence of emptiness, but if you don't accept logic, fine.

Malcolm wrote:
In reality, apart from some stories in some books there is no evidence Nāgārjuna lived for 600 years. I think it is a legend which resulted from Tibetans becoming confused over several Indian authors using the name "Nāgārjuna" who lived in different epochs.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 4:26 AM
Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics
Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:
It's really a bit lazy to accuse someone whose view you don't agree with as being a fundamentalist, just because they follow the traditional views of Buddhism. If your claim is that I'm believing something without a logical reason, you can check out my logical explanation for why Nagarjuna lived for 600 years a few posts back.

Malcolm wrote:
Your "logical" explanation will not be accepted outside a small circle of coreligionists because there is no possible way you can prove this.

Minobu said:

From that point of view we cannot prove anything that was supposed to be said by Buddha.

you posted something about 6 or seven years ago i will never forget.

You said ,and this is not a direct quote, that; like the Hindu's do and put Krisna as the author of stuff to give it credibility so is a lot of Buddhist teachings....very rough quote but the jist is there...maybe you might recall it..
it unwittingly became part of my thought process ...

the thing is if the seal of approval comes from someone we revere as a Buddha Teacher , then regardless if it is impossible historically correct to assume, or more aptly impossible conventional history to regard as correct and accurate , then we can rely on it by going the route of It being a Dharma Kaya thing...yes / no ?

If it is a Dharma Kaya thing then it is slander to thwart the Teaching?..

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that there are provisional and definitive teachings of the Buddha. We are enjoined to eschew the former and follow the latter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 4:11 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Minobu said:

So you agree that Karma can effect physical Phenomena such as earth quake , or other natural disasters?

and what about the wording produce/dictate...same thing in regards to Karma and it's effect/affect ?

Malcolm wrote:

I am not really very certain of this. For example, the Theravada school holds that not all effects are karmic effects. Being blown up in a plane or murdered is not necessarily a result of a karmic cause. This strictly deterministic idea of karma is rather unique to Tibetan Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 3:43 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

Inherent existence is just a term to explain how ordinary people perceive their world. It's more than existence, it's independent existence.

Malcolm wrote:

Absolutely no one perceives that world as existing inherently.

Anders said:

They may not perceive its existence as being "inherent", but I think it is not wrong to say that in perceiving something to exist, we unwittingly bring hidden assumptions of inherency (/permanence) to that which exists.

Malcolm wrote:

Absolutely not. Everyone knows their car is going to break down, that they are going to sicken and die, etc.,

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 3:34 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

It's really a bit lazy to accuse someone whose view you don't agree with as being a fundamentalist, just because they follow the traditional views of Buddhism. If your claim is that I'm believing something without a logical reason, you can check out my logical explanation for why Nagarjuna lived for 600 years a few posts back.

Malcolm wrote:

Your "logical" explanation will not be accepted outside a small circle of coreligionists because there is no possible way you can prove this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 3:33 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Karma has no direct bearing on the the causes and conditions that create physical phenomena in the universe.

Minobu said:

Do you believe in the concept of collective Karma?

Can you see from the point of view that there is a collective Karma how that could effect everything from governments taking power over people, to pollution, to complete self destruction of an entire planet if it got to the point where Karma dictated/produced such an event.

does Karma dictate or produce or both?

is there another more apt word to describe how Karma has an effect on anything.

Malcolm wrote:

There is such a thing as collective karma. When sentient beings act in similar ways this causes similar results — we term this "collective karma." But this has no bearing on whether the sun circles the earth (false relative truth) or whether the earth circles the sun (correct relative truth aka conventional truth).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 3:28 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Karma has no direct bearing on the the causes and conditions that create physical phenomena in the universe.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Sure it does - all phenomena are mere appearances to mind. I thought you were a Chittamatrin!

It isn't anything other than karma.

Malcolm wrote:

This is extremely poorly thought out. Nāgārjuna points out that the sequence is afflictions, action, suffering. Rinse, repeat.

Tsongkhapafan said:

A flat earth and geocentricity are of a piece.

That doesn't follow at all.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure it does.

Tsongkhapafan said:

No, it is not a valid appearance for anyone. People believe such things because they had no means of verifying them conventionally. This of course is the problem with conventional truth. Many conventions arise about things which one cannot possibly verify.

Buddha explained this, so you don't believe Buddha. Fair enough.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha said many things which were provisional, not definitive.

Tsongkhapafan said:

I'm really surprised that you don't accept that emptiness means that experience is completely subjective; how can you argue against this?

Malcolm wrote:

Emptiness has nothing to do with subjective experience. All things are empty, where subjective or objective. Emptiness does not mean that all things are just mental experiences, unless of course you are Yogacarin.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Unless you are a Buddha, you cannot verify enlightenment but many people accept it through logic reasons and small experience so there's no problem with conventional truth.

Malcolm wrote:

There can be many problems with conventional truth, because conventional truths rely on broad consensus, rather than proof.

Tsongkhapafan said:

I practise the union of the Prasangika and Chittamatrin views.

Malcolm wrote:

This is called Yogacara Madhyamaka, the school of Śāntarakṣita.

You must then accept that conventional truths are not that important for Madhyamakas since you keep switching between Sautrantika and Yogacara for your conventional truth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 3:17 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

[

Ah, here we are: "All conventional perceptions are deluded." which is really throwing the baby out with the bathwater.

Malcolm wrote:

All conventional perceptions are deluded. Why? Because they are part of relative truth. Thinking there is a car in car, for example, is deluded. There is no car in a car.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 3:01 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Yes, sometimes it is, depending on karma.

Malcolm wrote:

So depending on karma, sometime the sun moves around the earth, and other times it moves around the sun?

That is pretty ridiculous.

Tsongkhapafan said:

No, clearly not, because there is no karmic cause for that appearance. Karma doesn't mean that just anything can appear. A rainbow cannot appear if there are no causes and conditions for it to appear.

Malcolm wrote:

Karma has no direct bearing on the the causes and conditions that create physical phenomena in the universe.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Also, I didn't say that the sun moves around the earth, I said that for some, the earth is flat.

Malcolm wrote:

A flat earth and geocentricity are of a piece.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Buddha described the world in this way with Mount Meru. This is a valid appearance for some beings

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is not a valid appearance for anyone. People believe such things because they had no means of verifying them conventionally. This of course is the problem with conventional truth. Many conventions arise about things which one cannot possibly verify.

Tsongkhapafan said:
Emptiness means subjective appearance to mind.

Malcolm wrote:
Wow, even more amazing, a follower of Lama Tsongkhapa who is a Yogacarin.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 2:15 AM
Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics
Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:
Malcolm wrote:
The concern for creating a perfect conventional truth is very much confined to the Gelugpa school. Of course, as we see, Gelugpas like TKfan ignore conventional truth whenever it suits them to do so, such as proclaiming with absolute certainty that Nāgārjuna lived for 600 years and expressing shock at the idea that a traditional story might a legend rather than a historical fact.
So on the one hand, Malcolm wants to assert that all conventional truths are creations of delusion. How can you trust 'historical fact' then when it's untrustworthy?

Malcolm wrote:
I did not say that. I said that relative truths were objects of false cognitions.
Conventional truths are consensus truths that arise from common observations amongst ordinary people about such as things as the earth revolving around the sun and so on—— truths, in your religious fervor you seem immune to, just like fundamentalist Christians who believe against all sense and reason that the earth was created on October 23, 4004 B.C.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 2:09 AM
Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, and the earth is flat.

Tsongkhapafan said:
Yes, sometimes it is, depending on karma.

Malcolm wrote:
So depending on karma, sometime the sun moves around the earth, and other times it moves around the sun?

That is pretty ridiculous.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 2:08 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Minobu said:

then the edict from Malcolm squashing any semblance of Gelug Tradition on the matter.

Malcolm wrote:

This (the idea that Nāgārjuna lived for 600 is not a Gelugpa idea. It is a very late Indian tradition adopted by Tibetans.

Minobu said:

I think Malcolm sort of abhors Madhyamika...

Malcolm wrote:

You should ask me what I think, rather than assume.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 1:44 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That Nāgārjuna, Siddha Nāgārjuna was at Nalanda. The Buddhist University at Nalanda was not founded until the 4th century CE., more than a century after the passing of Nāgārjuna I. Saraha live in the 9th century. This places Siddha Nāgārjuna sometime in 9th century as well.

Moreover, Nāgārjuna I spent his entire life in Andhra Pradesh. He was South Indian. He also lived a couple of centuries before Nalanda was founded.

Tsongkhapa said:

It's the same person.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and the earth is flat. And I suppose you also believe his severed head is slowly inching back towards his body...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 1:28 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Jeff H said:

It seems to me the semantics here would be resolved if we distinguish between the method of madhyamaka and the Madhyamaka School, according to the tenet systems tradition.

This quote from The Presentation of Tenets by Jetsün Chökyi Gyaltsen (trans. Glen Svensson) indicates that Madhyamikas (proponents of the Madhyamaka tenet system) utilize madhyamaka (the method of non-affirming negation) to further the Mahayana. "Propounding Great Vehicle tenets" means following Mahayana. The non-affirming negation of true establishment is a distinguishing method for this school, but it doesn't eliminate the assertion of the Mahayana.

Malcolm wrote:

Yogacara and Madhyamaka represent two different approaches to Mahāyāna, so we agree on that much. The former is constructionist, in that they engage in many detailed explanations and the elaborations of positions based on the Buddha's teachings found principally in the Samdhinirocana Sūtra, Lankāvatāra Sūtra and so on. The latter is deconstructionist, principally following the prajñāpāramita sūtras. There is of course a third school, the Tathātagarbha school which is based on the ten tathāgatagarbha sūtras, but in terms of treatises it is represented only by the Uttaratantra, its commentary, and some texts attributed to Nāgārjuna.

The point is that neither of these three schools promote a separate path. All three schools promote the same path, with different understandings of consciousness and reality, and different methodologies for ascertaining the same. Madhyamaka's approach, as you correctly note, is strictly critical.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 19th, 2016 at 1:11 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Nonetheless this means that it is not true the Madhyamaka masters are only concerned with refuting wrong views. How you classify their treatises into different sections does not change this fact.

Malcolm wrote:

I never said that Madhyamaka masters were solely concerned with refuting wrong views, they had responsibilities for transmitting vinaya, teaching abhidharma and so on; I said that Madhyamaka is a critical method which is solely involved in refuting wrong views.

Kenneth Chan said:

So it appears that your concern is over semantics. Even while it is clear that the Madhyamaka masters are concerned with the spiritual path, you insist that the word “Madhyamaka” must only be used to strictly mean “a critical method which is solely involved in refuting wrong views.” If, however, your concern is not merely over semantics, can you clarify exactly what your concern is?

Malcolm wrote:

A chess master might also be an expert chef. But when they are playing chess they are not cooking. A Madhyamaka master may also be an expert in Vinaya. But when they are writing Madhyamaka treatises they are concerned principally with the elimination of incorrect views.

Kenneth Chan said:

I am afraid your reply here still does not answer the question why you have such a problem with a Madhyamika philosophy that considers the conventional truth as crucial.

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka is not a philosophy. It does not set forth its own propositions. For example, the Buddha proposes that there are two truths. This is not a Madhyamaka proposition. The idea of the two truths is also addressed in Abhidharma. Madhyamaka merely corrects Abhidharma misconceptions about the two truths. For example, Buddha taught mind-only, the three natures and the all-basis consciousness in the so called Yogacara sūtras. Candrakīrti did not invent these ideas, but he endeavors to correct Yogacara misinterpretations of these teachings.

Kenneth Chan said:

It does not explain why you are so against any suggestion that Madhyamika philosophy has anything directly to do with the spiritual path that necessarily requires bodhicitta (I say this because you repeatedly argue that Madhyamika philosophy is not concerned with the conventional truth).

I have never suggested that Madhyamaka has nothing to do with the spiritual path. The elimination of incorrect views is crucial to the path. What I stated was that the Madhyamaka focus was on the elimination of wrong views; that it, Madhyamaka, is a critical method and not a philosophy. Madhyamaka does not set forth propositions or claims about anything. As Buddhapaṇita so clearly states, Madhyamaka does not make the claim that this or that does not exist; it merely removes claims that this or that exists without the need for adding the qualifier “inherently.”

Malcolm wrote:

Since, as you say, “the elimination of incorrect views is crucial to the path,” Madhyamika philosophy must definitely be concerned with the spiritual path.

One, there is no Madhyamaka philosophy since Madhyamaka does not make propositions about things. Madhyamaka does not set forth either an epistemological theory nor an ontological theory. It merely shows an opponent the inherent contradictions which are a consequence (prasaṅga) of their own assertions without putting forth any counter assertions.

Kenneth Chan said:

While you admit that the Madhyamaka masters are concerned with the spiritual path, you insist that the word “Madhyamaka” must, nonetheless, be restricted to mean “the elimination of wrong views,” and that the word “Madhyamaka” must be strictly and only used to mean “a critical method” and must never be used to mean "a philosophy."

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Kenneth Chan said:

So this means that your motivation is over semantics and the correct usage of words. If this is not so, can you now clarify exactly what your motivation is?

Malcolm wrote:

My personal motivation is that people understand what Madhyamaka is and what it is not. It is a critical method used to prune wrong views. It is not a spiritual philosophy nor does it make any propositions of its own. It serves strictly as a critical method for removing misconceptions about what the Buddha taught, that's all.

So for example, when you proclaim that Madhyamaka philosophy solves the mystery of quantum physics, this is wrong on two counts: 1) Madhyamaka is not a philosophy, since as explained above it make no propositions of its own. 2) Madhyamaka has no role in confirming mundane theories such as quantum physics, much less karma. If Madhyamaka is to play a role in quantum physics, it would be merely to show that propositions in quantum physics suffer from internal contradictions if and when quantum physicists make ultimate truth claims that contradict the teachings of the Buddha (i.e. claiming there is arising from self, other, both or without a cause). To the extent that they do not do this, Madhyamaka has no interest in quantum physics.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 18th, 2016 at 11:52 PM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Inherent existence is just a term to explain how ordinary people perceive their world. It's more than existence, it's independent existence.

Malcolm wrote:

Absolutely no one perceives that world as existing inherently.

Lukeinaz said:

I feel that there is a substance to things, like they exist independently of me. They exude some sort of existence. Is this not getting at inherent existence?

Malcolm wrote:
This is dualism, not inherent existence.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, December 18th, 2016 at 11:07 PM
Title: Re: Emptiness
Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:
Inherent existence does not exist at all, but it appears to mind.

Malcolm wrote:
Um no. Common people do not have concept "Inherent existence." It is a philosophical idea, not a common idea. The idea that common people have is "this [entity] exists." Inherent existence is not an appearance to the mind. Even Tsongkhapa admits this.

Tsongkhapafan said:
Inherent existence is just a term to explain how ordinary people perceive their world. It's more than existence, it's independent existence.

Malcolm wrote:
Absolutely no one perceives that world as existing inherently.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, December 18th, 2016 at 10:47 PM
Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics
Content:

Anders said:
The upadesha is far more likely to have been authored by Nagarjuna than the tantric texts. Not in the least because the former is an encyclopaedia of Mahayana from a strict madhyamika perspective whilst the latter is, well, tantra.

Tsongkhapafan said:
Nagarjuna was the student of Saraha and was a great Tantric master. He was also an alchemist and could transmute metals into gold, but more importantly he knew how to transform our very subtle body and mind into a Buddha's body and mind. Tantric alchemy is the best.

Malcolm wrote:
That Nāgārjuna, Siddha Nāgārjuna was at Nalanda. The Buddhist University at Nalanda was not founded until the 4th century CE., more than a century after the passing of Nāgārjuna I. Saraha lived in the 9th century. This places Siddha Nāgārjuna sometime in 9th century as well.

Moreover, Nāgārjuna I spent his entire life in Andhra Pradesh. He was South Indian. He also lived a couple of centuries before Nalanda was founded.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 18th, 2016 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Chandrakirti, Shantideva and Lama Tsongkhapa were all also clearly concerned with the bodhisattva path. So it is incorrect to say that Madhyamaka masters are only concerned with refuting wrong views. That is definitely not the case.

Malcolm wrote:

The activities of any given master span many activities. However, it is perfectly correct to maintain that the aim of Madhyamaka treatises are primarily to offer a critique of śrāvaka errors, and later on, errors in Yogacara exegesis.

Kenneth Chan said:

Nonetheless this means that it is not true the Madhyamaka masters are only concerned with refuting wrong views. How you classify their treatises into different sections does not change this fact.

Malcolm wrote:

I never said that Madhyamaka masters were solely concerned with refuting wrong views, they had responsibilities for transmitting vinaya, teaching abhidharma and so on; I said that Madhyamaka is a critical method which is solely involved in refuting wrong views.

Kenneth Chan said:

What I am struggling to understand here, Malcolm, is this: What exactly is your motivation here in persistently arguing that Madhyamakas are “concerned only with refuting the mistaken views of others”?

Because that is what Nāgārjuna states in the Vigrahavyavartani:

If I had a thesis, I would be at fault;

since I alone have no thesis, I alone am without fault.

Malcolm wrote:

So your motivation is simply on the basis of how you choose to interpret Nagarjuna's words?

But there are many different ways of interpreting any words. Perhaps I am wrong but it appears to me that your motivation may be something else.

That is your speculation, something which I am not able to control.

Kenneth Chan said:

Otherwise, just consider this. If your interpretation happens to be incorrect (especially since many people, including Madhyamaka masters, disagree with your interpretation), and you are forcibly pushing this onto everyone else, you may end up doing more harm than good.

Malcolm wrote:

A sector of post-15th century Tibetans may disagree with me. I am totally ok with that.

Kenneth Chan said:

And if this is your stance, what do you consider as the appropriate spiritual path to enlightenment?

Without entering into refuge on the Buddha's path, one is not following a correct path. Without developing the aspiration for supreme awakening, one is following a lower path. Without understanding that all phenomena are natureless, free from the four extremes, nonarising and inexpressible, one will be subject to conceptual proliferation and be long delayed in attaining buddhahood— as Mañjuśrī said Sachen, "If grasping arises, one does not have the view."

Malcolm wrote:

How is any of this a problem with a Madhyamika philosophy that considers the conventional truth as crucial?

As I pointed out, there are only four uses of the term "convention" in the MMK.

The concern for creating a perfect conventional truth is very much confined to the Gelugpa school. Of course, as we see, Gelugpas like TKfan ignore conventional truth whenever it suits them to do so, such as proclaiming with absolute certainty that Nāgārjuna lived for 600 years and expressing shock at the idea that a traditional story might a legend rather than a historical fact.

Kenneth Chan said:

It does not explain why you are so against any suggestion that Madhyamika philosophy has anything directly to do with the spiritual path that necessarily requires bodhicitta (I say this because you repeatedly argue that Madhyamika philosophy is not concerned with the conventional truth).

Malcolm wrote:

I have never suggested that Madhyamaka has nothing to do with the spiritual path. The elimination of incorrect views is crucial to the path. What I stated was that the Madhyamaka focus was on the elimination of wrong views; that it, Madhyamaka, is a critical method and not a philosophy. Madhyamaka does not set forth propositions or claims about anything. As Buddhapaṇita so clearly states, Madhyamaka does not make the claim that this or that does not exist; it merely removes claims that this or that exists without the need for adding the qualifier "inherently." This also does not preclude those who write about Madhyamaka from writing about other issues, such as the Bodhisattva path, Abhidharma, Vajrayāna and so on, for example, Śāntideva wrote not only the Bodhicaryāvatāra, but also the Compendium of Training (Śikṣasāmmucaya). Nāgārjuna I wrote not only on Madhyamaka, but he also wrote a short text on Ayurveda called the Jivāsūtra, as well as a detailed discourse on Mahāyāna training called Ratnavali. You should read it, it is really quite remarkable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 18th, 2016 at 1:09 PM

Title: Re: Since Tibetans are outcastes, how does it effect Tibetan Buddhism?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Varna does not apply to Tibetans, Chinese, Greeks, etc.

BuddhaFollower said:

Exactly. You are "Avarna ", which means beyond the Four Varnas. Which means outcaste.

Introduction to Hinduism by Flood, page 61 says:

".....'outcaste' beyond the system of the four classes (avarna)."

Also see:

<https://www.google.com/#q=Avarna+outcaste&safe=off&tbm=bks>

<https://www.google.com/#q=Avarna+untouchable&safe=off&tbm=bks>

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, it does not apply.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 18th, 2016 at 7:43 AM

Title: Re: Since Tibetans are outcastes, how does it effect Tibetan Buddhism?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Also, Tibetans are outside the varna system.

BuddhaFollower said:

Right, they are outcastes. Thats what I said.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they are completely outside of it. Varna does not apply to Tibetans, Chinese, Greeks, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 18th, 2016 at 7:41 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

It is essential to combine wisdom and compassion on the spiritual path to enlightenment, and that is why conventional truth is crucial in Madhyamika philosophy. Let me quote from the book “Relative Truth, Ultimate Truth” by Geshe Tashi Tsering:

“Understanding conventional truth enables the practitioner to develop the method side—compassion, concentration, and ethics—whereas understanding the ultimate truth leads to the wisdom side—emptiness. These realizations will, in turn, result in the two Buddha bodies, the truth body and the form body.

People who want to be free from suffering need to cultivate an understanding of reality, the wisdom of ultimate truth, while developing the method side of the practice, which entails a thorough understanding of conventional truth. There is no other way.”

Malcolm wrote:

There are virtually no Madhyamaka texts which illustrate the bodhisattva path. This is because Madhyamaka and Yogacara present the same path; while having differences over the nature of consciousness and reality. The texts by Madhyamaka authors that treat the path (the Abhisamayālaṅkāra literature) are taxonomic, and do not present a path different than that of the Yogacara masters since the Abhisamayālaṅkāra was written by a Yogacara master, Maitreyanatha.

The collection of reasoning and the praises of Nāgārjuna are entirely critical. One might imagine Āryadeva's 400 to be a path text. In reality, it engages in what you would like to call "conventional analysis" for the first four chapters and ultimate analysis for the final four chapters. But in general, it does not present a path. It is wholly concerned with correcting misconceptions.

It is really only Śāntideva that presents a Madhyamaka path text, and to a lesser extent, Nāgārjuna's Ratnavali.

But for the most part, Nāgārjuna and other Madhyamakas are concerned only with refuting the mistaken views of others without putting forward some unique view called "Madhyamaka." They are instead attempting to critically restore the Buddha's middle way.

Kenneth Chan said:

Nagarjuna also transmitted a system of Guhyasamaja, which definitely concerns the bodhisattva path.

Malcolm wrote:

That Nāgārjuna and the Nāgārjuna of the MMK are not the same person.

Kenneth Chan said:

Chandrakirti, Shantideva and Lama Tsongkhapa were all also clearly concerned with the bodhisattva path. So it is incorrect to say that Madhyamaka masters are only concerned with refuting wrong views. That is definitely not the case.

Malcolm wrote:

The activities of any given master span many activities. However, it is perfectly correct to maintain that the aim of Madhyamaka treatises are primarily to offer a critique of śrāvaka errors, and later on, errors in Yogacara exegesis.

Kenneth Chan said:

What I am struggling to understand here, Malcolm, is this: What exactly is your motivation here in persistently arguing that Madhyamakas are “concerned only with refuting the mistaken views of others”?

Malcolm wrote:

Because that is what Nāgārjuna states in the Vīṅraḥavyavartani:
If I had a thesis, I would be at fault;
since I alone have no thesis, I alone am without fault.

Kenneth Chan said:

This is not a criticism; I am asking for clarification from you. It appears to me that you are against any suggestion that Madhyamika philosophy has anything directly to do with the spiritual path that necessarily requires bodhicitta, since you repeatedly argue that Madhyamika philosophy is not concerned with the conventional truth. Am I right? If so, why are you so insistent on this?

Malcolm wrote:

If you want to look at Nāgārjuna's writing on the Mahāyāna path, they really are only to be found in three texts which we can be certain were written by Nāgārjuna I: the Mahāyānavimsika, the Ratnavali and the Suḥṛllekha. Of these three, the first barely mentions the Mahāyāna path at all, but focuses mainly on a nonpolemical exposition of the view of Prajñāpāramita. Ratnavali has an extensive presentation of Mahāyāna view and practice, and the Suḥṛllekha mainly focuses on such things as the need to practice the ten virtues, the results of negative actions and so on.

Otherwise, it is quite difficult to ascertain which of over 300 texts in the bstan 'gyur were authored by Nāgārjuna I since they are never mentioned anywhere by later Madhyamaka authors or cited by them. Then of course there are Chinese translations, but they are beyond the scope of our discussion.

However the Madhyamaka texts we do have that everyone accepts are authored by Nāgārjuna leave no details on how to practice Mahāyāna, I therefore contend that Madhyamaka is strictly a critical method to eliminate wrong views.

Kenneth Chan said:

And if this is your stance, what do you consider as the appropriate spiritual path to enlightenment?

Malcolm wrote:

Without entering into refuge on the Buddha's path, one is not following a correct path. Without developing the aspiration for supreme awakening, one is following a lower path. Without understanding that all phenomena are natureless, free from the four extremes, nonarising and inexpressible, one will be subject to conceptual proliferation and be long delayed in attaining buddhahood— as Mañjuśrī said Sachen, "If grasping arises, one does not have the view."

Both Yogacara and Madhyamaka offer perspectives on the Mahāyāna path, but the latter is strictly critical.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 18th, 2016 at 3:00 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Nāgārjuna wrote the MMK to pacify proliferation,

Coëmgenu said:

I had inherited a narrative about different motivations about why Nāgārjuna wrote his treatise, something about a svabhāva heresy among the Sarvāstivāda Abhidharmikāḥ and śūnyatā being a refutation of said svabhāva heresy?

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, Sarvāstivādins accept emptiness, but their emptiness only goes so far. Then they engaged in lots of proliferation, making up this and that dharma to account for this and that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 18th, 2016 at 2:50 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Nāgārjuna wrote the MMK to pacify proliferation, not to set up a system called "The Middle Way." However, later scholars have taken it upon themselves to turn Madhyamaka into a position concerning the ultimate, rather than a systematic presentation that rejects all positions concerning the ultimate.

Minobu said:

Are you sure this is not your interpretation of things , based on your preference to Dzogchen .

because there is a lineage to this teaching and as taught to me...it included compassion as the reason for it's inception.

yes it uses certain techniques to allow for one to see the true nature of how existence and non existence exist as one.

And again it is not a metaphysics lecture, nor is it metaphysical except in the eyes of someone using that lens, which skews it.

it facilitates compassion in the view which brings a strong sense of duty to perform for all sentient beings.

it is a philosophy and not a theory ...yes /no?

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka is neither a philosophy nor a theory. It is a critical method within Mahāyāna for eliminating wrong views. Some later scholars however have decided to turn Madhyamaka into both a philosophy and a theory, and this is an error.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 18th, 2016 at 2:48 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Guide to the Middle Way by Chandrakirti.

Malcolm wrote:

This does not illustrate the path, it describes the qualities of the ten stages with no reference whatsoever to the paths of accumulation and application and focuses on the sixth bhumi, where he takes issue with various opponents over what he perceives to be their misunderstandings of the middle way, principally, Yogacarins.

Paths describe realization. Stages describe qualities.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Sure it does - it explains the perfections of giving, moral discipline, patience, effort, mental stabilisation and wisdom - that IS the path.

Malcolm wrote:

No, the paths are the path of application, preparation, seeing, cultivation, and no more training. The Madhyamakāvatāra does not explain these things in any detail, it merely mentions in passing the perfections and their results. It is not a manual for practicing them, like the Bodhicaryāvatāra, for example. For example, in his autocommentary, Candrakīrti devotes very little time to an exposition of anything other than the sixth bhumi. He devotes 12 folios to the first five bhumis, 40 folios on the sixth bhumi, and another 12 folios on the bhumis 7-10. In other words, he devotes two thirds of his entire text to one bhumi.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 18th, 2016 at 2:28 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka has serious limitations.

Minobu said:

this of course will nag me forever, seeing Lord Buddha Nagarjuna is the founding father of this teaching.

but i did see this in your tone and i see now that you are an honest person.

Malcolm wrote:

Nāgārjuna wrote the MMK to pacify proliferation, not to set up a system called "The Middle Way." However, later scholars have taken it upon themselves to turn Madhyamaka into a position concerning the ultimate, rather than a systematic presentation that rejects all positions concerning the ultimate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 18th, 2016 at 2:19 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There are virtually no Madhayamaka texts which illustrate the bodhisattva path.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Guide to the Middle Way by Chandrakirti.

Malcolm wrote:

This does not illustrate the path, it describes the qualities of the ten stages with no reference whatsoever to the paths of accumulation and application and focuses on the sixth bhumi, where he takes issue with various opponents over what he perceives to be their misunderstandings of the middle way, principally, Yogacarins.

Paths describe realization. Stages describe qualities.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 18th, 2016 at 1:52 AM

Title: Re: Since Tibetans are outcastes, how does it effect Tibetan Buddhism?

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

The Cakrasamvara Tantra says:

For a brahmin, one should sacrifice twenty times over seven days. For a kshatriya, one should sacrifice seven times, and for a vaishya, five times. For a shudra, sacrifice three times, and for an outcaste, once. ---translated by David Gray

Since Tibetans are outcastes, how does it effect Tibetan Buddhism?

Malcolm wrote:

This cannot be taken literally. Every single word of the Cakrasamvara is intentional language.

Also, Tibetans are outside the varna system.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 18th, 2016 at 1:37 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Rakz said:

You know better than they do? Do you have firsthand experience of what it is like to go through a divorce in the west as they have?

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, was taken to the cleaners too. But I am a man, not a child. So you know what? I don't complain because I am old school, not like these modern whiny man-babies of today.

Gyurme Kundrol said:

What do you suppose are the forces, philosophies and social ideals that led to a culture of whiny man babies?

Malcolm wrote:

Reactionary politics in response to feminism, mainly. The 80's men's movement was really pathetic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 18th, 2016 at 1:35 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There are virtually no Madhayamaka texts which illustrate the bodhisattva path.

Minobu said:

I cannot argue this point but it seems skewed somehow.
If not impossible taken at face value.

The philosophy is aimed not solely at destroying the "I" so to speak but to see what reality truly is.
There is a conventional "I" and the complete lack of an "I" is nihilistic. Even though the "I" is not inherent it does need to be dismissed entirely .

the most important point is that it is a "view" to be developed.

after reading yours and some others here discussing Emptiness, i feel you are all more or less bent towards nihilism, to some extent.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. In order to be an advocate of annihilation, first one has to propose something which exists. We propose existents of no kind whatever. Therefore, we cannot be accused of annihilationism.

Minobu said:

One person said it is about taking things apart.

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka is wholly critical, and not constructionist at all.

Minobu said:

As far as saying no Madhayamaka texts which illustrate the bodhisattva path
I did say that compassion is the goal . Like all buddhist teachings.
I don't know how you can take compassion out of the philosophy and justify it by using the words no Madhayamaka texts which illustrate the bodhisattva path

Malcolm wrote:

Compassion is the basis of the Mahāyāna path. Madhyamaka however is concerned primarily with correcting faults with respect to ultimate truth.

Minobu said:

I must say that nihilism seems to be the focal point in what you are and others here are dictating concerning the nature of the Philosophy.

Malcolm wrote:

I've already rejected this assertion.

Minobu said:

what did you say about Buddhas only see Buddhas and not sentient beings...something like that...it keeps coming back to me and now i see those words taken at face value,Malcolm, completely dismiss the fact the Buddha taught ignorant deluded sentient Beings...why teach at all if we are all Buddhas...

Malcolm wrote:

So we will recognize our own state and actualize it. However, buddhas too are mere appearances and are not real in anyway. As Haribhadra so wonderfully said, the entire path, from beginning to the attainment of Buddhahood is totally illusory.

Minobu said:

True A buddha sees the potential and the Tathagatagarbha , but saying they only see other Buddhas again is misleading and nihilistic.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhas have no impure vision. Therefore, they do not see sentient beings, they only see buddhas. Likewise, buddhas do not see any impure realms, they see only buddhafiels.

Minobu said:

also why am i getting a tone that Madhyamika is somehow inferior to you .
i get a tone and wonder if this is true about your feelings towards it.

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka has serious limitations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 18th, 2016 at 12:55 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Jeff H said:

In that sense, as a training technique for ordinary beings, the residue of “mere existence”, which seems to be affirmed as a form of existence in distinction from inherent existence, is no more than a temporary synonym for “appearance” which is not affirmed, it's simply not negated.

Malcolm wrote:

People have no problem negating an illusory elephant. It is also mere appearance. The problem comes about when one uses the term "mere existence."

It is instructive to note that the term conventional truth appears nowhere in Nāgārjuna's writing. He does not accord truth status to mundane conventions, he merely advises in the analysis on karma that they should not be violated (for obvious reasons), and that they should be employed in order to make it possible to understand ultimate truth. In fact, the term "convention" appears only four times in the whole of the MMK.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 18th, 2016 at 12:16 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In a dream you think it is all real. When you wake, you realize it was not real.

Karma Dondrup Tashi said:

If I am a worldly person, I can't say the dream was "not real", the same way I can't say the movie is "not real". Even when I wake up, if I say the dream is "not real" then I'm saying it didn't function at all. But even when I'm awake I remember that the dream functioned. I remember the events of the dream. It isn't "unreal". It's just "less real" than the objects of my waking life. If you say there's "no" water in water you wouldn't chase the oasis in the desert at all, and you'd die of thirst not knowing if it would function as an oasis or a mirage.

Malcolm wrote:

This has little to do with with making a distinction between inherent existence and existence, that is my point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 18th, 2016 at 12:03 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Your perception of water is delusion-based. Why? Because not all beings of the six realms have a consensus upon the liquid you are drinking. So for you, it is water; to a deva, asura, hell being and so on, your insisting it is water is deluded.

Tsongkhapafan said:

You really need to do some investigation into valid cognition!

Liquid is empty of inherent existence which means how it appears depends on karma.

Malcolm wrote:

...which comes from affliction which is itself based in delusion.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Liquid appears to me as water, that's not deluded because I'm a human being. If I saw water as pus and blood that would be a deluded perception for me but not for a hungry ghost. If I saw water as being inherently existent, that would also be a deluded perception.

Malcolm wrote:

It is deluded because it clearly is not perceived as water by all. There is no objective water which is a nondeceptive authoritative object which invariably produces an authoritative cognition. Nor are human cognitions authoritative, rendering all other cognitions nonauthoritative. In fact, authoritative objects and authoritative objects cannot be established.

Tsongkhapa said:

The fact that it appears differently to different beings doesn't prove that the perception of water is deluded, it proves that water is a mere appearance to mind depending upon karma and being dependent; it's empty, not deluded.

Malcolm wrote:

The fact that the appearance of water is one's karmic vision proves it is deluded. Karmic vision is deluded by definition.

As Virupa said, "For sentient beings in affliction there is impure vision."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 11:45 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

conebeckham said:

You think worldly people are able to distinguish between existence and "inherent existence?"

Karma Dondrup Tashi said:

Yes, otherwise they would all be unable to distinguish whether they were dreaming or awake. If you tell someone that when they are eating a cheese sandwich "it is like when you are watching a movie", they would understand what you mean.

Malcolm wrote:

Your example does not follow. In a dream you think it is all real. When you wake, you realize it was not real. But this does not mean that you thought appearances in a dream were inherently existent while you were in the dream, or that you now think this computer screen you are reading inherently exists.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 11:21 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

All conventional perceptions are deluded. Relative truth in toto is defined by Candrakīrti as the object of a false cognition. The reluctance on your part to accede to this represents a limitation of your understanding, not a limitation of Madhyamaka.

We all know that there is no water in a mirage and no elephant in an illusion. What we seem to not understand is that there is no water in water or an elephant in an elephant either. The point of Madhyamaka is to show that there is no water in water nor elephants in elephants. If you don't understand that, you don't understand Madhyamaka. It is very simple.

Tsongkhapa said:

In your hurry to deny that which is valid and exists, it seems you have no explanation as to why I can drink water but not a mirage. It's because one is a valid appearance to mind and the other is not, but such subtle distinctions don't exist in your philosophy.

Malcolm wrote:

Your perception of water is delusion-based. Why? Because not all beings of the six realms have a consensus upon the liquid you are drinking. So for you, it is water; to a deva, asura, hell being and so on, your insisting it is water is deluded.

Tsongkhapa said:

The lack of subtlety in your view means you are really missing something important.

Malcolm wrote:

Your insistence on a nonexistent subtly is similar to animals who chase mirages in the desert and die of thirst.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 11:18 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

It is essential to combine wisdom and compassion on the spiritual path to enlightenment, and that is why conventional truth is crucial in Madhyamika philosophy. Let me quote from the book "Relative Truth, Ultimate Truth" by Geshe Tashi Tsering:

"Understanding conventional truth enables the practitioner to develop the method side—compassion, concentration, and ethics—whereas understanding the ultimate truth leads to the wisdom side—emptiness. These realizations will, in turn, result in the two Buddha bodies, the truth body and the form body.

People who want to be free from suffering need to cultivate an understanding of reality, the wisdom of ultimate truth, while developing the method side of the practice, which entails a thorough understanding of conventional truth. There is no other way."

Malcolm wrote:

There are virtually no Madhyamaka texts which illustrate the bodhisattva path. This is because Madhyamaka and Yogacara present the same path; while having differences over the nature of consciousness and reality. The texts by Madhyamaka authors that treat the path (the Abhisamayālaṅkāra literature) are taxonomic, and do not present a path different than that of the Yogacara masters since the Abhisamayālaṅkāra was written by a Yogacara master, Maitreyanatha.

The collection of reasoning and the praises of Nāgārjuna are entirely critical. One might imagine Āryadeva's 400 to be a path text. In reality, it engages in what you would like to call "conventional analysis" for the first four chapters and ultimate analysis for the final four chapters. But in general, it does not present a path. It is wholly concerned with correcting misconceptions.

It is really only Śāntideva that presents a Madhyamaka path text, and to a lesser extent, Nāgārjuna's Ratnavali.

But for the most part, Nāgārjuna and other Madhyamakas are concerned only with refuting the mistaken views of others without putting forward some unique view called "Madhyamaka." They are instead attempting to critically restore the Buddha's middle way.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 11:04 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Minobu said:

Thank you for seeing the actual point i was making, and making it known.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that Madhyamaka is only about emptiness. It is not about conventional reality. Conventional reality needs no defense from Madhyamakas and the idea that it does is a deviation.

Tsongkhapafan said:

That's really incorrect. Madhyamaka is also about the relationship between conventional and ultimate truth, otherwise you're a bird with one big fat emptiness wing flying round and round in circles.

It's not about defending conventional truth, it's about understanding the subtle relationship between conventional and ultimate truth, seeing the harmony between them and how the middle way can unite the two truths without contradiction; it's not good enough to write off appearances to mind as simply manifestations of ignorance à la Gorampa. Not all conventional perceptions are deluded ones.

Malcolm wrote:

All conventional perceptions are deluded. Relative truth in toto is defined by Candrakīrti as the object of a false cognition. The reluctance on your part to accede to this represents a limitation of your understanding, not a limitation of Madhyamaka.

We all know that there is no water in a mirage and no elephant in an illusion. What we seem to not understand is that there is no water in water or an elephant in an elephant either. The point of Madhyamaka is to show that there is no water in water nor elephants in elephants. If you don't understand that, you don't understand Madhyamaka. It is very simple.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 9:49 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Minobu said:

You cannot experience the Madhyamika view without touching upon both conventional and ultimate reality, with one's awareness.

the ultimate reality being all things are empty of inherent existence .

Which for the uninitiated does not translate as nihilistic in nature as well.

the Madhyamika understands conventional reality, does not dismiss it the whole point is to blow away both simultaneously and maintain a middle view by seeing the empty nature of all things.

to blow away the concept of inherency and the concept of nihilism . which brings you to a view that everything is empty .

even emptiness is empty , and that awareness is also empty .

to deny conventional reality and dismiss it, is fanatical , taking something to the extreme and missing the entire point of the philosophy.

Tsongkhapa said:

These are good points, thanks for making them. The whole idea that Madhyamaka is just about emptiness is incorrect, as emptiness cannot exist alone without conventional reality. Emptiness of inherent existence is always the emptiness OF something, a point that is missed by many people writing on this thread. Buddha himself said:

Form is empty; emptiness is form.

The validity of form is not denied.

Minobu said:

Thank you for seeing the actual point i was making, and making it known.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that Madhyamaka is only about emptiness. It is not about conventional reality. Conventional reality needs no defense from Madhyamakas and the idea that it does is a deviation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 12:45 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Anyone wanna tell me how many dharmas can fit on the end of a pin?

Malcolm wrote:

All of them.

conebeckham said:

What pin?

Malcolm wrote:

All of them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 12:44 PM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is just as Nāgārjuna states in the Ratnavali:

If by refuting existence

there will be however be non-existence,

therefore, by refuting non-existence,

for what reason will there not be existence?

Thus, we again see the necessity of the step by step negation of the four extremes.

cloudburst said:

Malcolm, could you give a citation here so we can look at your translation from other sources please?

I assume:

"there will be however be non-existence" means

"there will however be non-existence" or ""there will be however non-existence," whichever one prefers for readability?

the truth is so many assertions and contradictions have been asserted and dropped in this conversation that it would be impossible for someone who was not already versed in these issues to make any sense of it.

Do you recommend that we should accept that Nagarjuna, the prototypical Madhyamika, accepts the law of the excluded middle?

Malcolm wrote:

Ah, typos. Gotta love em.

"there will however be non-existence"

You can find this in the Hopkins translation.

It seems that Nāgārjuna accepts the law of the excluded middle as well as the law of noncontradiction conventionally, except in the case of the four fold negation, or with respect to the <https://plato.stanford.edu/entries/contradiction/#LNCBudTet>.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 11:32 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Anyone wanna tell me how many dharmas can fit on the end of a pin?

Malcolm wrote:

All of them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 11:31 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Bakmoon said:

Is it not true though, that the idea of existence (in the functional sense, not the philosophical sense) is renowned among worldly people?

Malcolm wrote:

Worldly people are incapable of making a distinction between inherent existence and existence. One, not only because existence is included in inherent existence sui generis, but two, there is no need to make the distinction. The coarse object of negation is sufficient.

Tsongkhapafan said:

The problem is that your view is coarse and so you are unable to make a distinction between the mode of existence that normally appears to the minds of sentient beings (inherent existence), and mere appearance, mere imputation.

Malcolm wrote:

Inherent existence is not a mode of appearance that appears to any sentient being's mind. This is your basic mistake. Appearances are not imputations; instead imputations are based on appearances. Therefore, the coarse object of negation, existence, is sufficient.

For example, when we negate the existence of an illusion, we are negating the appearance itself. The elephant in an illusion is not an elephant. We are not negating some inherently existing elephant in the illusion, we are saying in that appearance of an elephant is not an elephant. All phenomena can be understood the same way.

Tsongkhapa said:

Thus your object of negation 'existence' is too general and is also negating mere appearance. Negating something that does exist is a wrong view.

Malcolm wrote:

Since existence is included in inherent existence, and since you claim inherent existence never existed, for you also existence never existed. You must accept this consequence.

Tsongkhapa said:

You are also unable to make a distinction between an object of a valid mind and an object of a non-valid mind

Malcolm wrote:

All relative truths are objects of false cognitions, so says Candrakīrti.

Tsongkhapa said:

thus you tar all appearances with the same brush and miss another level of subtlety and profundity in relation to conventional truth.

Malcolm wrote:

But there is nothing profound in conventional truth, since it is just the object of a false cognition. Conventional truth is not profound, it can be useful however.

Tsongkhapa said:

If you don't really understand conventional truth, you don't completely and accurately understand ultimate truth, thus the means to attain liberation is lacking.

Malcolm wrote:

All that one needs to understand is that conventional truth is based on a consensus of ordinary people who are suffer from deluded cognitions, thinking that things exist when they don't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 8:58 AM

Title: Re: Inherent déjà vu all over again

Content:

Bakmoon said:

Gelugpas negate inherent existence, not existence in general, so this establishes the nonexistence of inherent existence, not a total nonexistence.

But Gelugpas do not negate the nonexistence of inherent existence. They negate the inherent existence of the nonexistence of inherent existence.

Malcolm wrote:

There is really no difference between existence and inherent existence, as Nāgārjuna shows and as I have discussed many times. It is in fact a barren distinction: Where is there an existence not included in inherent existence or dependent existence..."

Bakmoon said:

The conventional existence which Gelugpas do not refute is not the same as 'existence' as understood by worldly people, so it isn't fair to lump it in under the category of existence. in a general sense like that.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course it is, who else do you think Gelugpas are talking to, āryas? The whole point of the Gelugpa view is that they claim to be addressing common people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 8:28 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

conebeckham said:

An illusory appearance is eating an illusory sandwich. On this level of convention, which is predicated on ignorance, nonetheless appearances function, and my grilled cheese sandwiches are especially delicious. And filling.

All of this occurs on the level of the seeming, and there is no contradiction at all. Between you and I, my grilled cheese sandwiches are.....beyond description.

Bakmoon said:

Is it not true though, that the idea of existence (in the functional sense, not the philosophical sense) is renowned among worldly people?

Malcolm wrote:

Worldly people are incapable of making a distinction between inherent existence and existence. One, not only because existence is included in inherent existence sui generis, but two, there is no need to make the distinction. The coarse object of negation is sufficient.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 8:24 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

You're right, from one point of view we are just relying on words; but words are empty of inherent meaning so we need to receive the correct meaning from living realised Masters.

Malcolm wrote:

We do, so it is imperative to find one. Good luck!

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 8:23 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

You're the one with the words Malcolm. The negation of inherent existence is just that - a non-affirming negative. There is no affirmation therefore you're incorrect.

Malcolm wrote:

A nonaffirming negative (med 'gag) only applies to a proposition of one's opponent. An affirming negation (ma yin 'gag) is a negation that affirms one's own position.

Only Madhyamakas use exclusively use nonaffirming negatives since they have no position of their own to defend.

Now the negation of inherent existence will only be a nonaffirming negation if someone proposes something as being inherently existent and you directly negate it without proposing something in its place.

But you set forth the negation of inherent existence as a negation that affirms (ma yin 'gag) your own tenet system. Therefore, you are using the term incorrectly.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Negatives are not about debate...

Malcolm wrote:

Incorrect, they are explicitly about debate.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Inherent existence does not exist therefore it is always correct to negate it because grasping at it is a wrong awareness and the root of samsara.

Malcolm wrote:

And since existence is included in inherent existence, it is always correct to negate it as well.

Tsongkhapafan said:

What do we need to put in its place? Nothing. It's a mere negation that doesn't affirm any positive phenomenon.

Malcolm wrote:

In your case, you use the negation of inherent existence to affirm mere existence. Therefore, you have a position and your use of the negation of inherent existence is not a nonimplicative negation, but rather an implicative negation.

Tsongkhapafan said:

It's also no nihilistic because we are not putting something that exists out of existence - we are merely realising that what we always thought to exist does not. 'There is no inherent existence' tells you that there is no inherent existence and it doesn't affirm anything in its place.

Malcolm wrote:

Your use of negation is meant to affirm a position, mere existence, and therefore, you are not using a nonimplicative negation.

Tsongkhapafan said:

An affirming negative on the other hand is realising something by negating something else. For example, "my cousin lacks being female" tells you that my cousin is male.

Malcolm wrote:

Not necessarily, in this day and age.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Negating inherent existence is a non-affirming negative.

Malcolm wrote:

Not when it is used to affirm mere existence, which is strictly how you use it.

Tsongkhapafan said:

When I negate the inherent existence of form, I realise only a lack of inherent existence of form. When I negate the inherent existence of emptiness, I realise only a lack of inherent existence of emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

When you negate the inherent existence of form or emptiness, you are affirming form and emptiness because your negation is implicative, not nonimplicative — and you cannot escape this consequence for as long as you affirm mere existence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 7:25 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The negation of existence establishes nonexistence..

Bakmoon said:

Gelugpas negate inherent existence, not existence in general, so this establishes the nonexistence of inherent existence, not a total nonexistence.

Malcolm wrote:

For example, if one negates inherent existence, one is establishing a nonexistence. If one in turn negates that nonexistence, for what reason is one not establishing its opposite? These are the kinds of flaws that flow from treating the absence of inherent existence alone as emptiness.

Bakmoon said:

But Gelugpas do not negate the nonexistence of inherent existence. They negate the inherent existence of the nonexistence of inherent existence.

Malcolm wrote:

There is really no difference between existence and inherent existence, as Nāgārjuna shows and as I have discussed many times. It is in fact a barren distinction: Where is there an existence not included in inherent existence or dependent existence..."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 7:22 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

You're the one with the words Malcolm. The negation of inherent existence is just that - a non-affirming negative. There is no affirmation therefore you're incorrect.

Malcolm wrote:

A nonaffirming negative (med 'gag) only applies to a proposition of one's opponent. An affirming negation (ma yin 'gag) is a negation that affirms one's own position.

Only Madhyamakas use exclusively use nonaffirming negatives since they have no position of their own to defend.

Now the negation of inherent existence will only be a nonaffirming negation if someone proposes something as being inherently existent and you directly negate it without proposing something in its place.

But you set forth the negation of inherent existence as a negation that affirms (ma yin 'gag) your own tenet system. Therefore, you are using the term incorrectly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 7:01 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is a perfectly fair criticism. The negation of existence establishes nonexistence. The negation of nonexistence establishes existence. For example, if one negates inherent existence, one is establishing a nonexistence. If one in turn negates that nonexistence, for what reason is one not establishing its opposite? These are the kinds of flaws that flow from treating the absence of inherent existence alone as emptiness.

Tsongkhapa said:

Bakmoon's comments are correct. Negation of inherent existence establishes the non-existence of inherent existence (it never has existed). It is not non-existence that is being negated, it's the inherent existence of lack of inherent existence that is being negated. We are not negating emptiness, merely its falsely appearing as inherently existent. Thus one is realising the non-true existence of emptiness such that emptiness itself is not grasped as something.

Malcolm wrote:

Keep going, pretty soon you will wrap yourself up just as nicely as any silkworm in a cocoon.

- 1) Negating an existence establishes a nonexistence.
- 2) Negating a nonexistence establishes an existence.
- 3) Negating inherent existence establishes a nonexistence.
- 4) The latter is what you call emptiness, the nonexistence of inherent existence.
- 5) Thus, the negation of the inherent existence of the nonexistence of inherent existence (emptiness) can only be an affirmation of the existence of inherent existence because of the rule concerning such double negations.

Thus, you tie yourself in knots with this entirely clumsy, illogical and unnecessary language.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 6:38 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

yadā na bhāvo nābhāvo...

ཡང་ཆོ་དངོས་དང་དངོས་མེད་དག

When neither an entity (dngos po, bhāva) nor a nonentity (dngos po, abhāva)...

Not one of the words in the following phrase exist in the Tibetan translation, not to the mention the Sanskrit original.

Eventually, when the true existence of things and the true existence of emptiness....

None of Śāntideva's Indian commentators understand this to mean the "true existence of..." and translated non-entity as emptiness is quite strange and wrong.

The primary commentator, Prajñākaravarman, states:

As such, this means that when neither an entity nor a nonentity remain before the mind of the yogi, because at that time an apprehensible aspect does not appear, all concepts are pacified through the absence of perception.

It is in sum, an incorrect translation.

Tsongkhapafan said:

It's a translation of the meaning, not just the words.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a translation of the meaning. The meaning of bhāva is not "true existence."

Never has been, never will be.

Tsongkhapafan said:

I know you are a literalist, Malcolm, who believes that the mere words of a text convey the correct meaning, but this is simply not the case.

Malcolm wrote:

This is an extremely facile argument. Not even worth the electricity it uses on the internet.

Tsongkhapafan said:

I have given a clear explanation of the real meaning of this verse. Can you explain how Prajñākaravarman's commentary differs from the explanation I gave? I don't believe there is any difference except that it is incorrect to say there is an absence of perception per se because there is no mind without an object.

Malcolm wrote:

And yet, that is indeed what the text says. When there is neither an entity nor its absence present before the mind, there is nothing else to perceive, and mind is pacified.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Thus, even the commentary requires clarification as to the correct meaning which is that all concepts of inherent existence are pacified through the absence of perceiving inherent existence.

Malcolm wrote:

The commentary says nothing about concepts of inherent existence, in fact, none of them do.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 6:20 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Now you are just tying yourself in knots. So first you have the negation of inherent existence, which you call emptiness; but then, you have to negate the inherent existence of your negation, and we all know double negations affirm their opposite, thus in negating the absence of inherent existence which alone you claim to be emptiness, you are affirming inherent existence. It is just as Nāgārjuna states in the Ratnavali:

If by refuting existence

there will be however be non-existence,

therefore, by refuting non-existence,

for what reason will there not be existence?

Thus, we again see the necessity of the step by step negation of the four extremes.

Bakmoon said:

That's not a fair critique of the Gelug position because Gelugpas do not negate the emptiness perceived in meditation, but rather they negate the inherent existence of that very emptiness. Just like Gelugpas do not negate pots, but only negate the inherent existence of pots, so to they do not negate emptiness, only the inherent existence of that emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a perfectly fair criticism. The negation of existence establishes nonexistence. The negation of nonexistence establishes existence. For example, if one negates inherent existence, one is establishing a nonexistence. If one in turn negates that nonexistence, for what reason is one not establishing its opposite? These are the kinds of flaws that flow from treating the absence of inherent existence alone as emptiness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 5:49 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Minobu said:

the Madhyamika understands conventional reality, does not dismiss it

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamakas are only concerned with conventional truth to the extent that it allows one to formulate the conventional ultimate, understand it, and realize nirvana. Beyond that, Madhyamakas have no other conventional horses in relative races.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 5:45 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Jeff H said:

It is attributed to Kelsang Gyatso. I still have the Tharpa recording of his Guide to the Bodhisattva's Way of Life from my previous association with NKT. This is chapter 9:34 in the book and on the recording it is found on disk 4, track 2, at 4:28.

I'd be very interested to hear from Malcolm or one of the other translators here, just how the translation is mistaken.

DGA said:

It's really weird. What's "the true existence of emptiness," for starters?

Tsongkhapa said:

It's not weird - it's the appearance of emptiness being inherently existent; in other words, how emptiness appears on the paths of accumulation and preparation. The verse is saying that when, in meditation, there is no appearance of inherent existence and not even the appearance of inherent existence of emptiness, the mind will abide in a direct realisation of emptiness in which all dualistic conceptions have been pacified. This is the path of seeing onwards.

Malcolm wrote:

Now you are just tying yourself in knots. So first you have the negation of inherent existence, which you call emptiness; but then, you have to negate the inherent existence of your negation, and we all know double negations affirm their opposite, thus in negating the absence of inherent existence which alone you claim to be emptiness, you are affirming inherent existence. It is just as Nāgārjuna states in the Ratnavali:

If by refuting existence

there will be however be non-existence,

therefore, by refuting non-existence,

for what reason will there not be existence?

Thus, we again see the necessity of the step by step negation of the four extremes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 5:33 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

That's not what Shantideva is saying at all. This is an alternative translation of the verse you quoted:

DGA said:

Would you please give a source for this translation? that is, can you say who the translator of this verse is?

Jeff H said:

It is attributed to Kelsang Gyatso. I still have the Tharpa recording of his Guide to the Bodhisattva's Way of Life from my previous association with NKT. This is chapter 9:34 in the book and on the recording it is found on disk 4, track 2, at 4:28.

I'd be very interested to hear from Malcolm or one of the other translators here, just how the translation is mistaken.

Malcolm wrote:

The text merely says:

yadā na bhāvo nābhāvo...

ཡང་ཆེ་དངོས་དང་དངོས་མེད་དག

When neither an entity (dngos po, bhāva) nor a nonentity (dngos po, abhāva)...

Not one of the words in the following phrase exist in the Tibetan translation, not to the mention the Sanskrit original.

Eventually, when the true existence of things and the true existence of emptiness....

None of Śāntideva's Indian commentators understand this to mean the "true existence of..." and translated non-entity as emptiness is quite strange and wrong.

The primary commentator, Prajñākaravarman, states:

As such, this means that when neither an entity nor a nonentity remain before the mind of the yogi, because at that time an apprehensible aspect does not appear, all concepts are pacified through the absence of perception.

It is in sum, an incorrect translation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 3:32 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

This is an alternative translation of the verse you quoted:

Malcolm wrote:

Your alternate translation is simply wrong.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 3:03 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

When you negate existence, it is not so much a negation as a not finding. When analyzed, things are not found to exist, not exist, both and neither, both in the relative and the ultimate. We don't negate existence, but when sought, it is not found.

Kenneth Chan said:

This means that you essentially agree that we do not “negate existence in its entirety.” You are just putting the same meaning in different words, and placing the emphasis on this idea that “it is not so much a negation as a not finding.” Nonetheless it means that we do not negate existence in its entirety. You are just using a different interpretation of the word “negate.”

Malcolm wrote:

When something is not proven and is completely unfindable when sought, we can conclude it is nonexistent. Thus, when an existent thing is not proven and cannot be found when sought, we can conclude it is nonexistent. For example, when a mirage appears we search for the water in that place where the mirage appears, we can conclude that mirage is an appearance of water that does not exist. Of course the mirage arises because of causes and conditions, but if we assume that the mirage exists, this represents a limitation of our analysis. It is not a conventional analysis, it is a defective ultimate analysis.

Kenneth Chan said:

The next part of your comment is also another case of a difference in the interpretation of words. In this case, we are talking about the word “analysis.” It is important to make the distinction between analysis concerning the ultimate truth (ultimate analysis) and analysis concerning only conventional matters (conventional analysis). Here, Malcolm, you are mixing up these two forms of analysis in your use of words. Let us look closely at your comment line by line.

Malcolm wrote:

When we use analysis in Buddhadharma, we are not engaged in conventional analysis; we are always engaged in ultimate analysis. Why? Because all analysis is a search for the real. An analysis which is incomplete is a faulty analysis.

However, what Nāgārjuna shows is that some kinds of analysis are defective. For example, Vasubandhu states that truths are cognitions: a relative truth is an appearance that has not been analyzed, such as water; ultimate truths are analytical cognitions of those appearances, for example, ascertaining that water is limpid, cool, and wet. Thus, for Sautrantikas following the scriptures, these svalakṣaṇas, intrinsic characteristics are ultimate (paramārtha satyas) because they represent the final limit of analysis. However, from a Madhyamaka point of view, these are not conventional analysis, these are defective ultimate analysis. See for example Nāgārjuna's analysis of the five dhātus.

Kenneth Chan said:

According to you however, appearances can bear analysis.

Now we are having a problem with your use of the word “analysis.” You are failing to make a distinction between ultimate analysis and conventional analysis. Appearances can bear conventional analysis even though appearances cannot bear ultimate analysis.

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamakās never engage in conventional analysis. What would be the point? The point of Madhyamaka is not to reinforce conventional appearances which are by definition objects of false cognitions. The point of Madhyamaka is solely to point out the defective ultimate analysis of others.

Kenneth Chan said:

For example, a snake is an appearance to a nonanalytical mind;

This is referring to a mind that does not use both conventional and ultimate analysis, and not just ultimate analysis.

Malcolm wrote:

This is referring to a nonanalytical mind.

Kenneth Chan said:

the rope is an appearance to a mind that has embarked upon analysis,

This refers to conventional analysis.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this refers to a mind that has not completed an ultimate analysis. For example, analyzing water into its intrinsic characteristics, or the perception of the shards left over when a vase is smashed with a hammer, in Vasubandhu's analysis of the two truths.

Kenneth Chan said:

but if we stop analyzing there, the rope remains a false appearance, because it is composed of parts, etc. When subjected to an ultimate analysis, no rope is found when sought.

Now, suddenly, you revert back to ultimate analysis only.

Malcolm wrote:

No, here the ultimate analysis is continued to its final conclusion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 2:33 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Lukeinaz said:

I am a bit confused about this conceptual image. The way I understand it is that we use analysis to come to a conclusion which produces a feeling. So when I am shocked at not finding my car exactly where I parked it I rest in this feeling. Where does the conceptual image fit in here?

Tsongkhapafan said:

It is a conceptual image. The empty space that your car occupied has no meaning from its own side; your eye consciousness just sees a vacuity. You conceptually impute 'no car' on this space so now you have a generic image of no car, not just an empty space.

This emptiness has meaning - the object of negation is car, and what is realised conceptually is 'no car'. Your mind is resting in the generic image of an absence of car.

Malcolm wrote:

This is an implicative negation, not a nonimplicative negation. Madhyamaka negation is nonimplicative, meaning, when the object is negated, there is nothing else to which to refer.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 2:25 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Lukeinaz said:

I am a bit confused about this conceptual image. The way I understand it is that we use analysis to come to a conclusion which produces a feeling. So when I am shocked at not finding my car exactly where I parked it I rest in this feeling. Where does the conceptual image fit in here?

Malcolm wrote:

The problem here is the notion of "the generic image of emptiness." Emptiness cannot have a generic image since emptiness is not a thing, like a vase and its blueness. Meditating on the concept, "this is empty" is also unworkable. Of course, when we are learning about emptiness, of course we have to come to confidence in emptiness rationally, through reasonings. But when it comes to applying confidence in meditation, it is the position of the Sakya and Nyingma schools that focusing on a concept of emptiness is not a correct vipaśyāna, and in fact can lead to rebirth in the formless realms.

Correct vipaśyāna meditation on emptiness is resting the mind in an objectless equipoise discovered through exhausting all possible conceptual proliferation concerning entities in terms of all modes of their existence, as Śāntideva notes. It is not resting the mind on the concept that results from conceptual analysis, rather, the mind that deconstructs even the notion., "this is ultimate" and rests in that state, free of proliferation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 17th, 2016 at 2:17 AM

Title: Re: Rebirth and karma

Content:

Queequeg said:

The crux of the problem for people resistant to rebirth seems to be this notion of mind generating form. This is completely at odds with the assumption that mind is a function of material.

rachmiel said:

I have no problem with the notion of mind generating form. Or of other notions, speculations, theories as to the nature of reality. So many wonderful stories! (Some perhaps "truer" than others.)

My issue is with certainties: My/this view is the view. And that issue holds, no matter who or what that source of certainty is. That's why I'm an eclectic. I look at religions/philosophies as blind men holding forth on the nature of the elephant. Each gets an aspect of the whole, but no one gets it 100%. So I pick and choose ... and that becomes my blind man's scope of understanding.

Malcolm wrote:

This assumes you are sure this is an elephant. It might be a tiger.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 16th, 2016 at 11:53 PM

Title: Re: Rebirth and karma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Not when one understands that it is the mind that generates the body, rather than the other way around. For example, the mind of a buddha can generate a billion bodies at the same time.

Queequeg said:

The crux of the problem for people resistant to rebirth seems to be this notion of mind generating form. This is completely at odds with the assumption that mind is a function of material.

BTW, just a billion?

Malcolm wrote:

It is the standard number, but it is not a limitation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 16th, 2016 at 11:44 PM

Title: Re: Rebirth and karma

Content:

Bakmoon said:

For example, consider yourself right now in comparison to when you were a young child. Physically the body replaces it's material after every so many years, and mental phenomena only arise for very short spans of time, so there isn't any underlying 'packet' that makes the child-you and the current-you the same person. And yet at the same time, there is continuity between the two, so we can designate it as the same person.

The only difference between this little thought experiment and how rebirth works is that in rebirth, you get a different physical body. But because the body clearly isn't a self or person, that doesn't really change anything. The continuum of mental states between one rebirth and the next is there, and that's what makes it possible to designate them as the same person, just as the continuum of you and you as a child allows you to be considered the same person.

rachmiel said:

It's a vivid analogy ... but does it hold? The body-brain is the material medium in which the energy of self arises. Isn't it a leap of faith (in Buddha, the teachings, your own intuition) to believe that this energy continues when the material is no more?

Malcolm wrote:

Not when one understands that it is the mind that generates the body, rather than the other way around. For example, the mind of a buddha can generate a billion bodies at the same time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 16th, 2016 at 10:31 PM

Title: Re: Dr. Nida Chenagtsang

Content:

Grigoris said:

Understand or realise (or both)?

Malcolm wrote:

Understand.

Grigoris said:

So if I read a couple of books, listen to a couple of lectures, get the terminology down and grasp the concept I will 100% never return to Samsara again?

Malcolm wrote:

That is one kind of understanding. I was referring to another — the kind of understanding you only obtain from the intimate instructions of a teacher. It can't be gained from any book. But if you grasp that ideas behind the intimate instruction and gain that kind of understanding, applying it in your direct perception, then yes, according to Dzogchen tantras, etc., you will never return to samsara, one hundred percent. You just need a teacher who themselves have this understanding, and hopefully, realization. They can explain this to you, but no one else can. Then of course, all the books of Dzogchen will become immediately understandable (at least in Tibetan).

florin said:

In dzogchen, Namkhai Norbu remarks, understanding is more important than meditation.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, he does. All of the time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 15th, 2016 at 2:49 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

conebeckham said:

Just to add to this, the stilling of all false concepts is also represented as the "exhaustion of concepts." That's the state. Malcolm's covered everything else I would have said.

Except-

Your Generic Image is an object of conceptual mind. It cannot be the cause of realization.

Tsongkhapafan said:

There is no realisation without conceptual minds. If you want to abandon all conceptions this is Hashang's view and leads nowhere, except to becoming a stone.

The path to a non-conceptual realisation of emptiness is the path of conceptuality; there's no other path other than to abandon conceptual minds and this is not a spiritual path.

Malcolm wrote:

One cannot abandon concepts through conceptuality. It simply isn't possible. One can exhaust conceptuality through examining all possible modes of the exustence of a given thing, but the Buddha says nowhere that one should meditate on a conceptual view of emptiness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 10:24 PM

Title: Re: Tertön

Content:

DGA said:

Right. Which is to say that while someone (anyone) who applies the correct effort after having received the right teachings can become realized and may share "pure vision" teachings with the world, BUT only those with the correct past life connection to Guru Rinpoche can reveal terma now.

This takes us back to a discussion we were having in which the distinction between mind terma and pure vision was disregarded, which was unfortunate. Here:

<https://www.dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?t=23725#p356254>

Grigoris said:

The distinction was not disregarded, nobody bothered to define the distinction. There were statements made, but no explanations.

On the basis of the explanations, I am more than willing to accept that there would be a distinction made between the two categories.

DGA said:

OK, now I understand your position better.

Malcolm wrote:

This problem also plagues Dzogchen Community. ChNN has said over and over again he is not a tertön. People keep insisting however that the Longsal teachings are termas. But they are not. They are dream teachings. ChNN never had a treasure index and so on. And it is not like he receives these teachings while he is awake (I suppose he could, but it never appears that way in the texts of his teachings. They are always received in dreams). Of course, if one accepts he is the tulku of Adzom Drugpa, one could argue that this manner of receiving teachings is easier for doubtful westerners to swallow than the trope of pulling caches out of caves guarded by nāgās.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: Inherent déjà vu all over again

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

Nagarjuna's view is the harmonious union of the conventional and the ultimate.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it isn't. He proclaims in the Sixty Verses of Reasoning:

When the victors have proclaimed that nirvana alone is true,
at that time, what kind of scholar does not think the rest is false?

Tsongkhapa said:

It's only false for non-Buddhas and Nagarjuna's words are only from the perspective of Sutra.

Malcolm wrote:

So, now, you, a Gelugpa, are claiming that the view of sūtra and tantra are not the same?

And your response makes no sense. Nāgārjuna is very clear here that there is only one truth, nirvana. Everything else is false.

Tsongkhapa said:

If you look only from the perspective of emptiness you have no way to reconcile conventional and ultimate truths and your view is contrary to the valid perceptions of worldly people who Buddha would never disagree with.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no need to reconcile them. Relative truth is an appearance to a nonanalytical mind. Ultimate truth is found upon analysis of those appearances. Why? Because as Candrakīrti points out, all things bear two natures, one relative (pre-analytical) and one ultimate (post-analytical). This is why, until Buddhahood, there is an equipoise (ultimate truth) and post-equipoise (relative truth) phase of insight meditation. In Buddhahood, the mind is completely integrated with ultimate truth, and there is no division into equipoise and post-equipoise. The Buddhas have no false cognitions at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 10:10 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

But that all things are empty of inherent existence because they are dependently arisen is Tsongkhapa's presentation of Madhyamaka so we have no disagreement.

Malcolm wrote:

That has never been under question. Other things about Tsongkhapa's presentation, such as asserting that only inherent existence is to be negated, are much more problematical.

Tsongkhapa said:

Certainly not. By negating inherent existence only, this allows harmony with conventional truth because existence per se is not being negated - that's nihilistic.

That's saying that the objects perceived by worldly people are not valid and do not exist because they are ONLY hallucinations of ignorance. Yet they perform reliably, which is quite different to the water of a mirage which is definitely wholly a hallucination.

You have no way to explain this reliability if you negate existence in its entirety - you are throwing the baby out with the bathwater by negating that mere appearances exist and function in accordance with karma. For you there is no difference between a horse and a unicorn so your conceptions about conventional truths are inadequate. It seems you are denying relative truths.

Malcolm wrote:

When you negate existence, it is not so much a negation as a not finding. When analyzed, things are not found to exist, not exist, both and neither, both in the relative and the ultimate. We don't negate existence, but when sought, it is not found. In other words, there is an appearance, when it is examined, its existence cannot be found in its parts, in one part, or separate from its parts, etc. In other words, we accept appearances as they are prior to analysis, since a relative truth is an appearance to a nonanalytical mind. When appearances are analyzed however, they cannot withstand analysis. According to you however, appearances can bear analysis. For example, a snake is an appearance to nonanalytical mind; the rope is an appearance to a mind that has embarked upon analysis, but if we stop analyzing there, the rope remains a false appearance, because it is composed of parts, etc. When subjected to an ultimate analysis, no rope is found when sought.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 9:27 PM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

Nagarjuna's view is the harmonious union of the conventional and the ultimate.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it isn't. He proclaims in the Sixty Verses of Reasoning:
When the victors have proclaimed that nirvana alone is true,
at that time, what kind of scholar does not think the rest is false?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 9:17 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Hi All, just a reminder for those interested, I will be live streaming a talk on the book from <https://facebook.com/zangthal/>.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 8:45 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

But that all things are empty of inherent existence because they are dependently arisen is Tsongkhapa's presentation of Madhyamaka so we have no disagreement.

Malcolm wrote:

That has never been under question. Other things about Tsongkhapa's presentation, such as asserting that only inherent existence is to be negated, are much more problematical.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 8:43 PM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

cloudburst said:

this is where I think you haven't grasped Je Tsongkhapa's interpretative genius. I am happy to go around the merry go round for another dance if people find it helpful, I'm just not sure that that is what this thread is about.

Malcolm wrote:

I understand Tsongkhapa's point. The point is that such a short cut is fine for bodhisattvas on the stages who have realized emptiness, but not for commoners, who have not. They still need to plod, step by step through the four fold negation until they get it right. Commoners who think negating inherent existence is sufficient wind up with a nihilistic view of the ultimate, thinking that the generic image of a negation is emptiness.

Tsongkhapafan said:

What does the generic image of the four fold negation look like? Surely it's just an intellectual negation?

Negating inherent existence is not nihilistic because inherent existence has never existed. Realising that you are clinging to something that has never existed and letting go is not nihilistic, it's liberating. When you realise there is no inherently existent I and there never has been, all fears and suffering disappear because these hallucinations were based on the experience of a false self.

Malcolm wrote:

Asserting that the ultimate is a mere negation is nihilistic.

The fourfold negation has no generic image, that is the point. The fourfold negation stills all false concepts possible about the relative and the ultimate leaving the mind in a state of freedom from proliferation. Śantideva says in Chapter 9:

When neither entities nor nonentities are present before the mind, since at that time there is no other aspect, it is without an object, totally peaceful.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 8:33 PM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

Over time, you come to feel that the things you normally see (inherently existent things) do not exist at all and all phenomena are like dreams, mere appearances to mind.

Malcolm wrote:

One does not need to meditate on the absence of inherent existence to come to this "feeling:"

Row, row, row your boat, gently down the stream. Merrily, merrily, merrily, merrily, life is but a dream.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 10:58 AM

Title: Re: Tertön

Content:

tingdzin said:

The last thing Tibetan Dharma in the West needs is for a bunch of people to start hanging out tertön shingles, although I've seen a couple of instances already. We have enough bogus tulkus, emanations, and dakinis without providing a further ego-enhancing role to aim at.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 10:55 AM

Title: Re: Demonetisation

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Thus the full fledged and cynical attack against climate science.

Coëmgenu said:

It's not a cynical attack "against" it. These people doubtless know the reality of climate change...

Malcolm wrote:

That is why the attack is cynical

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 10:37 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

cloudburst said:

this is where I think you haven't grasped Je Tsongkhapa's interpretative genius. I am happy to go around the merry go round for another dance if people find it helpful, I'm just not sure that that is what this thread is about.

Malcolm wrote:

I understand Tsongkhapa's point. The point is that such a short cut is fine for bodhisattvas on the stages who have realized emptiness, but not for commoners, who have not. They still need to plod, step by step through the four fold negation until they get it right. Commoners who think negating inherent existence is sufficient wind up with a nihilistic view of the ultimate, thinking that the generic image of a negation is emptiness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 10:35 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

What does that mean? What is the meditation that leads to an experience of the freedom from extremes? If you say "things don't exist but they don't not exist" what does that even 'look like'?

It's not a practical object of meditation so this creation is purely intellectual and cannot lead to liberation.

Malcolm wrote:

How is meditating on a nonexistence practical?

Tsongkhapa said:

It's really simple - you take away that which is not true and end up with the truth. By realising that there is no snake on the basis of that rope, your mind mistakenly believing that it exists ceases and you see the truth.

Malcolm wrote:

So you are not in fact meditating on the absence of inherent existence? Or are you?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 10:32 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

My purpose is to show that the findings of quantum mechanics provide strong scientific evidence that Lama Tsongkhapa's view that all things are empty of inherent existence because they are dependently arisen is, in fact, correct. And I have done so. Whether you agree or disagree with this interpretation of Madhyamika philosophy does not change this fact.

One, this is not Tsongkhapa's unique idea. It is the Buddha's unique idea.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Thanks for confirming that Tsongkhapa's view and Buddha's view are the same, it's what I've been saying all along.

Malcolm wrote:

No one claims that the Buddha did not reject inherent existence. That is not what is under dispute about Tsongkhapa's presentation of Madhyamaka. It never has been.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 10:30 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

First you say that consciousness is not worth being taken into account because there are no machines that can measure it. But Buddhism definitely takes consciousness into account.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhism isn't science and it isn't scientific.

Kenneth Chan said:

Then you say "it does not necessarily follow that someone who accepts that dependent phenomena are devoid of inherent existence necessarily needs to accept that consciousness is anything other than neuronal interactions produced in a brain on the basis of sense stimulus. This latter point is what your paper fails to prove." But the purpose of my paper is not to prove this. It is to show how interpreting quantum mechanics in terms of Madhyamika philosophy can solve the mystery of quantum physics.

Malcolm wrote:

Only by taking consciousness into account, according to your paper. But since consciousness is not an empirically verifiable entity, well, you draw the conclusion.

Kenneth Chan said:

Then you say that there is no point in even trying to understand "conventional presentations of reality" because, based on a religious claim, we can never understand everything. What has this got to do with what my paper is trying to show? I make no claim that its aim is to understand everything.

Malcolm wrote:

I didn't say that. Reread my comment.

Kenneth Chan said:

So you admit, when challenged, that those two facts are indeed facts.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a fact that you made two claims, those were the only facts I was admitting.

Kenneth Chan said:

But Malcolm, you claim that you have already provided the refutation regarding the scientific evidence for Lama Tsongkhapa's view.

Malcolm wrote:

You definitely have not provided any scientific evidence for any Buddhist view, let alone Tsongkhapa's.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 6:45 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

conebeckham said:

It is ironic that a thread about TsongKhapa's Madhyamaka is accused of being overly intellectual.

...

In the end, whether engaging in Analytical Meditation as per the Geluk presentation, or in Awareness/Emptiness practice of Mahamudra or some sorts of Dzogchen, or in the completion Stages of one's yidam practice, the crucial point is to "rest" in equanimity, in a mental state generated by or facilitated by whatever preceding techniques one has utilized, is it not?

Tsongkhapafan said:

What does that mean? What is the meditation that leads to an experience of the freedom from extremes? If you say "things don't exist but they don't not exist" what does that even 'look like'?

It's not a practical object of meditation so this creation is purely intellectual and cannot lead to liberation.

Malcolm wrote:

How is meditating on a nonexistence practical?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 4:59 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, the fact that you think that my explanation is "an article of faith" proves that you do not understand my paper.

boda said:

Hello Kenneth,

If I may ask, do your fellow physicists agree with your paper?

Kenneth Chan said:

My paper is completely new. Most physicists have not even seen it. It will, of course, be extremely difficult to get them to stop insisting on materialism, because the entire body of academic work of many physicists may be dependent on this very idea of materialism.

Malcolm wrote:

The proper word these days is physicalism:

In philosophy, physicalism is the ontological thesis that "everything is physical", that there is "nothing over and above" the physical, or that everything supervenes on the physical. Physicalism is a form of ontological monism—a "one substance" view of the nature of reality as opposed to a "two-substance" or "many-substance" view. Both the definition of "physical" and the meaning of physicalism have been debated. Physicalism is closely related to materialism.

Materialism is too easily confused with greediness, etc. In other words, this sentence is true, "Not all physicalists are materialists."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 4:53 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, the fact that you think that my explanation is "an article of faith" proves that you do not understand my paper.

Malcolm wrote:

Your proclamation that Madhyamaka solves the mystery of quantum physics is proven nowhere by your paper since it hinges on the role of consciousness as a factor which you consider unaccounted for in the interpretation of quantum physics. You admit that consciousness is beyond any measurable observation by present methods. So your claim amounts to a mere speculation without an ounce of experimental evidence to prove it.

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, it is a fact that all the interpretations of quantum physics deny a role for consciousness (apart from the one by von Neumann and Wigner which is generally not accepted by physicists because of the problem of solipsism, as I discussed in my paper). It is a fact that no scientific equipment can directly measure consciousness. That means that my paper is based on these two facts. And now you are saying that because it is based on these facts, it is mere speculation??

Malcolm wrote:

You wish physicists to take in to account something they cannot empirically account for. The fact that physicists do not take consciousness into account in their observations is not solved by recourse to Madhyamaka. In other words, it does not necessarily follow that someone who accepts that dependent phenomena are devoid of inherent existence necessarily needs to accept that consciousness is anything other than neuronal interactions produced in a brain on the basis of sense stimulus. This latter point is what your paper fails to prove. Indeed, you keep treating consciousness as if it is something which needs to be taken into account without having convinced anyone in your field that this is a problem. I also do not see it as a problem. Why should it be. All conventional presentations of reality, no matter how subtle or embracing, are bound to be incomplete, because no one but a Buddha has the omniscience to understand everything in its essence and in all its diversity. But this is not a scientific claim, this is a religious claim, and is rightly outside of the domain of secular science.

Kenneth Chan said:

I challenge you to prove that these are not facts. Please prove that these two things are not facts, because I would really like to see you try. This is the problem with debating with you. You seem to want to dispute everything without even knowing the facts.

Malcolm wrote:

Your paper is indeed based on two facts. The second fact is insoluble since there is no empirical basis, accepted by everyone, which accounts for consciousness at all.

Kenneth Chan said:

My purpose is to show that the findings of quantum mechanics provide strong scientific evidence that Lama Tsongkhapa's view that all things are empty of inherent existence because they are dependently arisen is, in fact, correct. And I have done so. Whether you agree or disagree with this interpretation of Madhyamika philosophy does not change this fact.

Malcolm wrote:

One, this is not Tsongkhapa's unique idea. It is the Buddha's unique idea. Two, your main contention with other physicists, that they do not take consciousness into account, is not solved by Madhyamaka.

As to the second point, your main idea here is trivially true. Anyone who has studied Mahāyāna Buddhādharma at all understands that all entities, whether conditioned or unconditioned, are niḥsvabhāva, devoid of inherent existence. I am not sure why you think this is a mind-blowing revelation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 3:08 AM

Title: Re: Inherent déjà vu all over again

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

The other big causal theory from then was that the result is complete within the cause...

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is Saṃkhya, arising from self...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 2:59 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

rachmiel said:

Malcolm,

When will your Wisdom podcast be downloadable?

Malcolm wrote:

I am not sure.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 2:50 AM

Title: Re: Inherent déjà vu all over again

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

We consider this to be a malformation of the four-fold negation, as you know, and an affirmation that the ultimate is in fact mere one-sided negation.

cloudburst said:

of course.

I think the issue here is that you have failed to see the brilliance of what Lama Tsongkhapa has done. He has simply essentialized the critique. Refuting the first extreme, inherent existence sorts the issue, the rest is just clean-up. It's clean up that may need to happen, and of course we study it.

Malcolm wrote:

But it really does not.

The reason why Nāgārjuna refutes four extremes is that Jains, for example, maintain that things both exist and do not exist simultaneously, thus the refutation of the third extreme is needed, or the speculation that in the phase of arising, an entity may be said to both exist and not exist, as in the opinion of some Abidharmikas. Nonexistence is refuted because the Carvakas hold that a self which exists now is later annihilated, and existence is refuted in order to eliminate the belief that existents are veridical and nondeceptive, etc.

Production from self is refuted because this is what the Sāṃkhya school holds, production from other is what the Vaiśeṣika school holds, and production without causes is what the Carvakas hold, and so on.

Each and every one of Nāgārjuna's refutations has as specific opponent in mind, and it is sloppy to think that one can simply clean them with a pen because one imagines they are unnecessary double negatives.

Thus when the Buddha or Nāgārjuna says, "Not existent, not nonexistent, not both existent and nonexistent, and not neither existent and nonexistent" he has a specific opponent or class of assertions in mind which he is negating, one by one. Since these points of view are very possible in the mind and can be and are held, it is necessary to go through each one, step by step, in order to eliminate the faulty conceptualization which produces them in one's own mind.

Negating inherent existence only addresses the first extreme, but not the rest. That is the point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 1:56 AM

Title: Re: Inherent déjà vu all over again

Content:

cloudburst said:

When others hear 'this exists' or 'that exists', they flip out, because they have been taught that all existence is existence by way of a nature. We say existence and they helplessly conclude that we are "realists in the conventional and nihilists in the ultimate." I have pondered, especially in the light of this recent "quantum physics" thread as to whether they don't understand what is being said, or simply find it expedient NOT to.

Malcolm wrote:

We consider this to be a malformation of the four-fold negation, as you know, and an affirmation that the ultimate is in fact mere one-sided negation.

As for the QP thread, I think the OP's project is quixotic at best.

cloudburst said:

Meanwhile, even though he debates as though he is totally certain of what he writes, he is just working it out as well.

Malcolm wrote:

There are certain themes about which I am utterly consistent.

BTW, it is pretty hilarious to move this into the Sakyapa Thread. I am no more a Sakyapa, than I am a Nyingmapa, a Gelugpa or Kagyupa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 1:48 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

The relentless criticism of Tsongkhapa's views on DW gets a bit wearing after a while.

Malcolm wrote:

Gelugpas only have themselves to blame for this, considering that the Gelugpa hegemony expended endless energy suppressing and censoring generations of scholars in Tibet that disagreed with the Gelug orthodoxy.

Even you have over and over again here proclaimed that only Tsongkhapa's understanding of Madhyamaka is correct, and everyone else's is faulty and does not lead to liberation. When you make such claims, it is normal people will object to your dogmatism.

Tsongkhapafan said:

I've not seen a single person post any useful meditations on emptiness or any practical information that would lead to a realisation of emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

One assumes you are including yourself in this criticism.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Does anyone have anything practical to say?

Malcolm wrote:

Do you?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 12:43 AM

Title: Re: Namkhai Norbu and Vegetarianism

Content:

ThoroughlyCutting said:

Okay. What about the money you're pumping into the market that helps perpetuate this particular cycle of suffering? Regardless of the motivation to aid the being whose flesh is being consumed, the practitioner is fully aware that their action is serving, small part though it is, as a basis for the continuation of the meat industry to continue. There are billions of animals slaughtered every year for this purpose. Isn't it more reasonable to work for the end of this situation, rather than supporting it?

Malcolm wrote:

This argument has been hashed out a million times on the great vegetarian thread.

Since all of the food that we eat also involves the deaths of hundreds of billions of non-food creatures every year— insects, birds, rodents— there is no diet which free from cost to sentient beings. So we do the best we can. If you don't want to eat meat, that is fine. But please do not pretend that agriculture is not an abattoir in general.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 14th, 2016 at 12:00 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Lukeinaz said:

Malcom,

Can you recommend this book as a starting point for those who have received transmission yet are new to Dzogchen teachings and have not read any other material?

If not can you recommend a starting point so one can work towards this material?

Thanks!

Malcolm wrote:

Otherwise, get the Precious Vase and work through it. Or get both.

pael said:

Is WWT webcast of Namkhai Norbu enough for this also?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 11:45 PM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Jeff H said:

Malcolm and the other critics of Tsongkhapa have raised serious questions for me about the object of negation. The purpose of debate is not winning; it is examination. I think the concept of inherent existence is a useful expedient in my efforts to process selflessness. Malcolm thinks it is a pernicious obstruction. Despite his strong arguments, I'm not inclined to renounce the wisdom of the lineage that has taught me about inherent existence. I need to understand what he is saying, and learn what the Gelugs say, then decide for myself. I think that is what Buddha taught. (And, yes, even though I am no academic scholar like many on DW, my method is still largely intellectual. It's my karma now, and by following through, I hope to generate a more practice- and faith-based karma for the future.)

.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think the Tsongkhapa's treatment of inherent existence is a pernicious obstruction— everyone agrees that phenomena have no inherent existence. The disagreement 1) is over the issue of the intellectual history of Madhyamaka in India, and 2) over novelties in Tsongkhapa's own interpretation which seem unwarranted when Indian Madhyamaka is examined.

Finally, the purpose of these conversations is to eliminate concepts which lead us deeper into the cave, for everyone involved, including myself.

Finally, the reason why this conversation comes up again and again is because of the historical accident that the political dominance of the Ganden Phodrang propelled the teachings of Tsongkhapa to prominence and thus, they were the first version of Tibetan Madhyamaka to which early Western Buddhist scholars had access. This has skewed Madhyamaka studies in the West almost from the beginning.

It is necessary to redress this imbalance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 11:38 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, the fact that you think that my explanation is "an article of faith" proves that you do not understand my paper.

Malcolm wrote:

Your proclamation that Madhyamaka solves the mystery of quantum physics is proven nowhere by your paper since it hinges on the role of consciousness as a factor which you consider unaccounted for in the interpretation of quantum physics. You admit that consciousness is beyond any measurable observation by present methods. So your claim amounts to a mere speculation without an ounce of experimental evidence to prove it.

Kenneth Chan said:

Actually I believe there is little point continuing this debate with you since you make blanket statements like the above, even when you do not understand my meaning. It is quite telling that, at no time, did you ask me for clarification before immediately attacking what you presume I am saying.

Malcolm wrote:

It is quite clear what you are saying. The problem is quite simply that you have an axe to grind with other physicists, and are using Madhyamaka incorrectly in order to bolster your claims about the lack of accounting for consciousness as a factor in observations of quantum phenomena. The problem with your whole theory is that Madhyamaka does not make any statements about consciousness per se. In Buddhadharma, theories about consciousness belong to Abhidharma and Yogacāra. At best, Madhyamakas are like Supreme Court justices, who are only interested in resolving ultimate truth claims.

You have claimed, over and over again that quantum physics is plagued by problems of inherency. It is true that physicalists regard the material world as real in the strong sense, in varying degrees. But their notion of the real does not necessitate that things are permanent, constant, unchanging, and independent—the ancient sense of "the real" that Madhyamaka critiques.

Instead the modern sense of the real is "the matter of fact." So for some physicists, the big bang is a matter of fact, i.e., real, until it is proven otherwise. In other words, the notion of the real in modern science is pragmatic, ala Charles Pierce, who echoes quite well the notion of conventional truth in Madhyamaka, "The opinion which is fated to be ultimately agreed upon by all who investigate is what we mean by the truth, and the object represented in this opinion is the real."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 10:31 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

These statements of yours show that you have completely misunderstood my meaning. I am in no way making a philosophical argument by putting forward a philosophical stance on mind, matter, and so on.

Malcolm wrote:

Then why say, "Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics?"

Kenneth Chan said:

So quantum mechanics cannot possibly take into account factors that relate directly to mind and consciousness. That is the point I am making.

Malcolm wrote:

It's a trivial point. We know this already.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 10:10 PM

Title: Re: Who was Chokro Lui Gyaltzen?

Content:

crazy-man said:

Klu'i rgyal mtshan, Cog ro

Tibetan translator, ca. 8th Century A.D.

-dBu ma rtsa ba'i tshig le'ur byas pa śes rab ces bya ba (Tibetan translation of Mūlamadhyamakakārikā), in Tg, vol. tsa, 1a1-19a6. Mmk

-rGyal po la gdam bya ba rin po che'i phren ba (Tibetan translation of Ratnāvalī), in Tg, vol. ge, 107a1-126a4 (with Jñānagarbha). Rā

<https://www2.hf.uio.no/polyglotta/index.php?page=person&bid=2&vid=495&entity=495&kid=495> more:

<https://www.tbrc.org/#!rid=P8183>

<http://worldcat.org/identities/lccn-no2002064458/>

http://aibs.columbia.edu/databases/New/index.php?id=d9bb1fe1891d3879cdf337e6fe13c8bf&enc=tibetan_wylie_title&coll=tengyur

http://www.dharmawiki.ru/index.php/%27dul_ba/_%28ka_-_pa%29

Malcolm wrote:

He also translated the Buddhapalitavṛtī. His translation of Nāgārjuna's MMK is markedly superior to the later revision by Batshab Nyima Drag, which unfortunately became the standard.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Matt J said:

I don't see how substance dualism survives even conventionally. When you hear a science vs faith argument, the scientist is always eager to contrast monistic materialism with dualism because dualism collapses under its own paradox: that if things are separate, how do they interact, and if they interact, how are they separate? The poverty of dualism makes it an ideal punching bag for materialists.

In addition, things are never established even conventionally, so what is the basis for erecting different substances? There is none. And Vasubandhu made a lot with breaking down the atomistic dharmas of the old Buddhist schools. Plenty of modern Madhyamaka teachers use his analysis to refute particles, and QM upholds that refutation scientifically.

Also, one thing QM shows us is that binary options are not the only options. It is not that X is either a particle or a wave, but it manifests as both. X is something else entirely. So I don't agree that if we reject substance dualism we are left with Yogacara or materialism even conventionally, which is kind of the point of the paper. There may be a higher, simpler level in which matter and mind are united the way waves and particles are. Or they may be an explanation we simply don't know about.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddhist perspective is that matter arises from consciousness, in fact. This is clearly stated by Vasubandhu in the Kośa.

Also, I did not say this, "Yogacara or materialism." My point was that Kenneth originally proclaimed that solution to QM was to overthrow substance dualism. He then retreated on this point when I pointed out to him that there really are only two choices if we choose substance monism: everything is either a mental event or a physical event.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 9:56 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

First of all, the charge that the Copenhagen interpretation rejects causality is not mine.

Second, dependent origination is strictly deterministic, "where this exists, that exists; from the arising of that, this arises."

... with respect to causality, Buddha is a determinist.

Kenneth Chan said:

This argument concerning the fact that quantum mechanics is not deterministic is extremely important and needs to be carefully addressed. Malcolm, it may surprise you to know that your argument, concerning how the indeterministic nature of quantum mechanics contrasts with the deterministic nature of causality in Buddhism, actually supports the argument that the application of Madhyamika philosophy solves the mystery of quantum mechanics. Let me elaborate.

The lack of determinism in quantum mechanics is a lack of determinism when only the materialistic factors are taken into account. It means that given all the information concerning materialistic things that it is possible to have, we cannot predict the exact behaviour of particles in the future.

Quantum mechanics can only take into account the materialistic information that experimental science can provide. Currently there is no scientific equipment that can detect or measure consciousness directly. And no such equipment means no actual data on mind and consciousness per se. And that, in turn, means that quantum mechanics does not take into account factors pertaining directly to the mind and consciousness.

Malcolm wrote:

So now you are a substance dualist? And further, your proof depends on something (mind) that cannot be measured.

Kenneth Chan said:

So when we say that quantum mechanics is not deterministic, we actually mean that, given all the information on only materialistic things, we cannot predict the future behaviour of materialistic particles. This is not a problem for Buddhism. In fact, the reverse would be a problem. If, in fact, quantum mechanics is deterministic, there would then be no room for karma, motivation, mental factors, and so on, to have a role to play.

Malcolm wrote:

So you now are retreating from your position regarding the nonduality of mind and matter and are proposing instead substance dualism?

Kenneth Chan said:

If quantum mechanics is fully deterministic while being based only on materialistic considerations, we would be back to the classical idea of a clockwork universe, where mind and consciousness are totally insignificant and are to be considered only as “side-effects.”

So the fact that quantum mechanics is not deterministic actually supports the understanding that Madhyamika philosophy can actually explain the mystery of quantum physics. Also, the fact that the mind plays an important role in quantum mechanics actually suggests that the indeterminant nature of quantum physics may actually be due to the fact that quantum mechanics does not take into account factors pertaining to the mind itself.

Malcolm wrote:

That would depend on nama (mind) and rūpa (matter) being distinct substances (dravya), i.e., substance dualism.

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, I believe it is time for you to seriously revise your position.

Malcolm wrote:
I don't have a position.

Kenneth Chan said:
Your arguments concerning both causality and the indeterminacy of quantum mechanics are invalid.

Malcolm wrote:
Mere assertion.

Kenneth Chan said:
There is also no reason why Madhyamika philosophy cannot be applied to solving the problem of quantum mechanics, regardless of whether or not the Madhyamaka masters actually focused on these kinds of issues. Also, I see no reason why I have to prove that the interpretation according to the Madhyamaka view must necessarily be incompatible with the Yogachara position. That's not really relevant.

Malcolm wrote:
I merely point out that everything you say can equally be explained from a half-eggist Yogacāra position, since they do not refute external objects.

Kenneth Chan said:
As far as I can see, the only thing that remains unresolved is the question of whether Lama Tsongkhapa's interpretation of Madhyamika philosophy represents the ultimate truth. That point cannot be resolved on the basis of the findings of quantum mechanics. Regardless of that, it still remains true that the findings of quantum mechanics provide strong scientific evidence that Lama Tsongkhapa's view that all things are empty of inherent existence because they are dependently originated is, in fact, correct.

Malcolm wrote:
We already know things are empty of inherent existence because the teaching dependent origination negates prime movers, i.e. unconditioned first causes. The point Nāgārjuna was making was that any explanation of dependent origination which involved inherency theories is incoherent (we don't need to bring Tsongkhapa into this since the idea that a given thing that is dependently originated lacks inherent existence is not Tsongkhapa's idea to begin with).

This already renders the speculations of physicists about the big bang and so on a priori invalid from a Buddhist point of view because they do not correspond to relative truth, rendering the world static and functionless. Of course, at this point, physicists are beginning to understand that the universe has no actual beginning, it is also based on causes. But they have no math to describe the cyclic universe of ancient Indian cosmology since their observations necessarily end at conventional beginning of this one.

So, the point is not that quantum mechanics validates the Buddha's insight into dependent origination, the point is that unconditioned entities beget nothing; only conditioned entities beget conditioned entities. The real problem at the heart of modern physics is the Aristotelian notion of prime movers which is deeply embedded in our concepts of God and the origin of the universe. In my view, physicists import such ideas into their modeling unconsciously, or quite consciously in the case of the Templeton Foundation and the intelligent design folks.

However I am quite sure, since dependent origination is the correct interpretation of conventional truth, that as science progresses, its view of reality will more closely match the ancient philosophical intuitions of the Buddha— on this much we can agree.

Kenneth Chan said:

I note that you complain that I keep making this statement. It is, however, an important statement, and is, in fact, the crux of the matter. So if you disagree with it, you have to refute it. However, up till now, I see no indication that you are able to do so. So the statement stands.

Malcolm wrote:

I have refuted it. You have not shown how quantum mechanics confirms Madhyamaka, nor have you shown that Madhyamaka resolves issues in quantum mechanics. All you have done is declare this as an article of faith. I expect more than declarations of faith on such issues.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 9:22 PM

Title: Re: Rebirth and karma

Content:

tomschwarz said:

...calling them a reality binds them to the relative truth.

Malcolm wrote:

They are relative truth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 9:20 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Astus said:

Causal conditionality is completely mechanical, hence deterministic. But since newer factors influence older ones, there is the possibility of enhancing or diminishing the effects of previous causes.

Anders said:

Is it though? I would expect karma to be presented in a less open-ended fashion, if it were the case that all that we do is pre-ordained. Buddhism seems to operate on the assumption that choices are open-ended to a certain extent.

Malcolm wrote:

No, karma is described as unerringly, not probabilistic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 9:19 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Anders said:

Is Buddhism really deterministic though? Is it a Buddhist tenet that all future events are already pre ordained?

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhist causality is deterministic in the sense that a cause must always produced a result, otherwise that cause will amount to a noncause.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 8:34 PM

Title: Re: Brass kapala

Content:

Grigoris said:

PS I reckon the next generation of Mahasiddhas are going to have a grand old time deconstructing the Brahmanic tendencies of "modern" Vajrayana.

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāsiddhas were the ones who set forth these protocols, like Padmasambhava.

Grigoris said:

Yup, and it will be up to the next Mahasiddhas to overturn their protocols, just like the 84 overturned the protocols of their forefathers...

Malcolm wrote:

You have strange ideas about mahasiddhas. They did no such thing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 10:38 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I do not see how quantum mechanics is reaffirming the basic insight that there is no inherent existence. For example, to take your line of thinking, one can make a argument that (half-eggist) Yogacara is affirmed by quantum mechanics because of the overwhelming emphasis in your theory on the role of the observer. For example, in the half-eggist theory, physical phenomena exist, but how they exist for us is determined by our perception of them, much like your collapse of the wave function.

Kenneth Chan said:

There is no “overwhelming emphasis on the role of the observer” in my paper. I have already said, many times, that Madhyamika philosophy avoids the extreme position of solipsism. So it is not at all like the Yogacara argument.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a total mischaracterization to state that any school of Yogacāra is in anyway solipsistic.

Kenneth Chan said:

There is no solipsism because it is the interaction of the mind and the “causes and conditions” of the external world that constitutes our primary reality (although even this is empty of inherent existence). This interaction (which I call an experiential event) involves both the mind and the “external world” in equal measure.

Malcolm wrote:

As in half-eggist Yogacāra.

Kenneth Chan said:

The quantum wave function, in quantum mechanics, would correspond to the “causes and conditions” of the “external world,” and the eigenstates and their corresponding eigenvalues would correspond to the experiential events that manifest upon the act of observation by the mind. So both mind and “external world” have the same ontological status.

Malcolm wrote:

As in half-eggist Yogacāra.

Kenneth Chan said:

The quantum wave function is not something that only occurs in the mind; it is present in the "external world" although it is empty of inherent existence because what the quantum wave function does is merely to provide a probability distribution of possible measurement results if and only if there is an actual act of measurement by the observer. So, because the very meaning of the quantum wave function depends on the mind of the observer, it is empty of inherent existence. Nonetheless, it is definitely not totally nonexistent. The presence of the quantum wave function in the "external world" means that we do not have a case of solipsism.

Malcolm wrote:

So far you have failed to remove the objection that what you say would not equally be the case for half-eggist Yogacāra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 9:13 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

There is no deflection here. It is simply a case of accepting that there is such a thing as conventional truth. Malcolm, you really need to see things in the correct context. I have already repeated this many times. The problem is that the philosophical framework of an inherently existing mind-matter dualism led physicists to the extremes of either solipsism or materialism. That is the problem. And Madhyamika philosophy solves this problem. Please see things in the correct context.

Malcolm wrote:

You have stated this an assertion, but you certainly have provided to proof that physicists are committed to either position ideologically.

Kenneth Chan said:

Just because "Madhyamakās do not spend time erecting theories about conventions" does not mean that Madhyamika philosophy cannot be applied to solve the problem of interpreting quantum mechanics. To claim that Madhyamika philosophy cannot be applied as a solution to a problem would be illogical. Again, please see things in the correct context.

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka cannot be applied as solution to this problem because Madhyamaka merely provides a rule set for falsifying ultimate truth claims. It does not set out any ultimate truth claims of its own. Ultimate truths are the objects of veridical cognitions derived from the analysis of entities. This is why for example, Candrakīrti says any given entity bears two natures, one relative, one ultimate.

Kenneth Chan said:

Please see things in the correct context. The problem of having to fit quantum mechanics into the framework of an inherently existing mind-matter dualism led physicists to the extremes of either solipsism or materialism. Since solipsism is unacceptable to physicists, they turned to materialism, but it is simply not possible to interpret quantum mechanics properly with materialism.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course it is. You yourself have admitted it to be so. However, there is one problem here. You have never defined what for you materialism means. As I understand it, materialism— by which I understand you to mean physicalism— is the claim that a "mind" is merely a convention for physical events which occur in a brain which give us the illusion of self, and so on.

Kenneth Chan said:

That is the problem in interpreting quantum mechanics, and Lama Tsongkhapa's view that all things are empty of inherent existence because they are dependently originated solves that problem.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't see how, given all that I have said. As far as I can tell, you are just making the same claim over and over again regardless of anything which shows that your claim is irrelevant to the problem you claim exists.

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, how many times do I have to say this? We are dealing with the problem physicists have in interpreting quantum mechanics, and physicists are generally not interested in philosophy per se. I know physicists; most of them, in fact, claim that philosophy is "a lot of hot air"! So if you ask them about Hume or Dennett, they will probably tell you that they are not interested in what they say. So whether or not Hume has addressed the problem of inherency is irrelevant here. Physicists, in general, insist on materialism and that is the problem.

Malcolm wrote:

I think the problem here is that you are not defining your terms well. Physicist in general tend to be physicalists, that is, they reject the idea that there is some kind of mind which exists separate from materials processes, if they even accept that mind exists at all. Hence they tend to be substance monists. You keep claiming they are dualists, in general, and I do not see how you can make this generalization. Your claim is something like the "all true scotsman" fallacy.

However, whether or not all physicists, some physicists or none of them are substance dualists or physicalists, this has no bearing at all on whether or not they agree in principle that observation affects the outcomes of experiments in quantum mechanics. Einstein rejected this idea, but his rejection of this, his insistence that there had to be an actual physical event which correlates to an observation, has been dismissed for 80 years.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 8:59 AM

Title: Re: Namkhai Norbu and Vegetarianism

Content:

theanarchist said:

Okay, next time I need a car, I buy one from a dealer in stolen goods, because, you know once the car is stolen from it's previous owner, it's inert.

When I buy it I automatically ask for it to be killed. The price of the meat includes the wage of the professional butcher doing it. I pay him with the money I pay for the meat.

Malcolm wrote:

Now, you are simply making irrational arguments. A car is inert from the start.

You only pay a butcher if you ask him to kill an animal for you. This is clearly forbidden. Otherwise, when you buy meat in a modern market, the consciousness of that animal is long dead, well on its way to yet another rebirth. There is no connection between meat that I buy, and the suffering of said animal. It already happened and is finished, for that life.

Karma is volition, and the secondary acts of body and voice that proceed from that. In order for killing to be part of my karma, I must request some being be killed or do it myself. Otherwise, there is no karma involved.

ThoroughlyCutting said:

In that case, how is the animal benefited by the Dzogchen practitioner? If the meat is inert and there is no connection between it and the animal killed for it, how is this connection possible?

Malcolm wrote:

The connection comes through one's mindfulness of that animal and its samsaric pain and suffering.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 7:22 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

The fact that Madhyamaka texts do not reject substance dualism in toto is a clear indication that the conventional truth is important in Madhyamika philosophy. There is no misunderstanding of Buddhism. This is just another case involving conventional truth and ultimate truth.

Malcolm wrote:

Kenneth, you have spend many pages proclaiming that the reason issues in quantum mechanics is resolved by Madhyamaka is that in Madhyamaka there is no substance dualism.

The minute that I point out that Madhyamaka does not reject the classical substance dualism which pervades Sūtrayāna Buddhism, you then deflect.

Madhyamakas do not spend time erecting theories about conventions. A conventional truth is something which is functional, designated on the basis of relative appearance to healthy sense organs. The minute something which was previously thought functional is shown to be conventionally false, Madhyamakas also reject that. As long as everyone accepts it is true, Madhyamakas will waste no time tilting windmills. for example, if physicalism proves to be true, Mādhyamikas would be bound to accept it, since it would be conventionally established. And as there are no ultimate phenomena, there would no refuge for Madhyamakas there.

Kenneth Chan said:

Please see things in the correct context. The problem of having to fit quantum mechanics into the framework of an inherently existing mind-matter dualism led physicists to the extremes of either solipsism or materialism. Since solipsism is unacceptable to physicists, they turned to materialism, but it is simply not possible to interpret quantum mechanics properly with materialism. That is the problem in interpreting quantum mechanics, and Lama Tsongkhapa's view that all things are empty of inherent existence because they are dependently originated solves that problem.

Malcolm wrote:

And as I pointed out, the problem of inherency is not an issue in the modern philosophy of science and hasn't been since Hume.

One can be a total physicalist ala Dennet, and the idea that states are determined also by the observation is no less true. Madhyamaka does not solve that issue. Madhyamaka is the extraneous to that.

When you collapse mind/matter dualism, you have two choices, all events are mental events (Yogacāra) or all events are physical events (Dennet, etc.). This still does not prevent the observation of phenomena.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 5:57 AM

Title: Re: Brass kapala

Content:

Grigoris said:

PS I reckon the next generation of Mahasiddhas are going to have a grand old time deconstructing the Brahmanic tendencies of "modern" Vajrayana.

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāsiddhas were the ones who set forth these protocols, like Padmasambhava.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 4:07 AM

Title: Re: Brass kapala

Content:

Grigoris said:

If you do not have transmission for these practices...

Malcolm wrote:

...you cannot and should not do them, including making their offerings. Stick to the outer offerings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 4:05 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

What the Gelugpas seem to describe in ontological terms, the Sakyapas and others described in phenomenological terms.

Bakmoon said:

Well, Gelug Madhyamaka presents things primarily from the perspective of ordinary beings, so to an extent that's to be expected. The question of which approach is better is largely one of pedagogical concern with respect to that set of issues I think. Personally I find issue that Gelug Madhyamaka not propounding freedom from all views with regards to the ultimate to be a much more significant issue. Primarily because that issue doesn't seem to be primarily an issue of terminology.

Malcolm wrote:

Pramana is not really for distinguishing bad argumentation from good argumentation, it is really for understanding how we perceive things.

Bakmoon said:

Either way, Madhyamikas of all stripes in Tibet use aspects of pramana conventionally and find it to be useful, and conventionally make distinctions between things that are accepted conventionally, and things that are not accepted conventionally, and many find it convenient to use some variation of the word 'exist' on the level of convention rather than a much longer technical term.

Malcolm wrote:

I think a major difference is that Sakyas and those who follow Sapan, as well as Nyingmapas, reject the idea that Buddhist epistemology (pramāṇa) has any soteriological value; whereas the Gelugpas and some Kagyus, such as Drigung, think it has soteriological value.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 3:35 AM

Title: Re: Demonetisation

Content:

DGA said:

Frankly, I think we may be in the midst of a reset that none of us asked for. For example, the alliance of the coming Trump administration with Putin against China reorganizes more or less everything in global trade.

Malcolm wrote:

It is about oil (exploiting the Arctic, in which China has no foothold) vs. cheap consumer goods.

Thus the full fledged and cynical attack against climate science.

DGA said:

yes. the alliance with Russia sets up Canada and Norway as the only real opposition. Canada and Norway. Maybe Denmark (via Greenland)?

the attack on climate science is only partly attributable to this, however. Trump used it to good effect in appealing to coal country voters. This made a significant difference in Pennsylvania and Ohio. Also to the "earth is only 500 years old" Jesus rode a dinosaur to Temple set.

Malcolm wrote:

In my opinion, this is the outcome of a decades old strategy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 3:22 AM

Title: Re: Demonetisation

Content:

DGA said:

Frankly, I think we may be in the midst of a reset that none of us asked for. For example, the alliance of the coming Trump administration with Putin against China reorganizes more or less everything in global trade.

Malcolm wrote:

It is about oil (exploiting the Arctic, in which China has no foothold) vs. cheap consumer goods.

Thus the full fledged and cynical attack against climate science.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 3:11 AM

Title: Re: Demonetisation

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

Sometimes I think that nothing short of a truly dramatic calamity could really change such things. Nothing short of resetting the system and starting anew. I would love to be proved wrong.

Malcolm wrote:

This is pretty nihilistic. Things may suck, but things will suck much worse with a reset:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 2:17 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually we don't. Direct perceptions are not imputations. Conventional designations are subsequent to appearances. Appearances do not arise from conventional designations, conventional designations are made on the basis of appearances. Relative truths are not determined by conventional designations. Relative truths are appearances to an non-analytical mundane mind which is not influenced by adventitious delusions.

Bakmoon said:

Agreed, but my point is that when you have to start talking about things in the conventional world and describe them as illusory, mere appearance, mere designation, or anything like that, if that is to assert an ontological concept, then it seems like asserting ontology is totally unavoidable, so why pick on the Gelugpas?

Malcolm wrote:

What the Gelugpas seem to describe in ontological terms, the Sakyapas and others described in phenomenological terms.

Your last sentence just means you have to cripple yourself.

Bakmoon said:

That kind of an issue is something that everyone who wants to make use of any pramana has to deal with, not just Gelugpas. The way I see it, the Munchausen Trilemma is a form of ultimate analysis that refutes pramana, but conventionally we can still accept the helpful aspects of pramana so we can distinguish bad argumentation from good argumentation. I don't see how other systems of logic can dodge this issue either to be honest.

Malcolm wrote:

pramana is not really for distinguishing bad argumentation from good argumentation, it is really for understanding how we perceive things.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 1:48 AM

Title: Re: Dr. Nida Chenagtsang

Content:

Grigoris said:

In the case of Dzogchen practitioners, and by this I mean people who actually understand Dzogchen teachings, 100 percent.

Understand or realise (or both)?

Malcolm wrote:

Understand.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 1:47 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Asserting things are mere imputations is an ontological concept.

Bakmoon said:

And yet all Madhyamikas do this when they have to address the issue of accepting conventionalities.

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually we don't. Direct perceptions are not imputations. Conventional designations are subsequent to appearances. Appearances do not arise from conventional designations, conventional designations are made on the basis of appearances. Relative truths are not determined by conventional designations. Relative truths are appearances to an non-analytical mundane mind which is not influenced by adventitious delusions.

Unicorns are imputations. Horse are imputations. Now you have to define the difference between a false one and a true one. And that is where you start making ontological assertions. A true imputation involves a correspondence theory between what you perceive and what is out there. Now, we already know that a correspondence theory is invoked by Candrakīrti on the basis of the distinction between two modes of false cognitions: 1) false cognitions about natures 2) false cognitions about common appearances, i.e., seeing one moon as opposed to two.

However, this does not bear up to analysis either since in the experience of a yogi, he or she may see a given space as the pure land of Avalokiteśvara, Potala, where we all see a midden heap filled with trash. In this case then, is the experiential appearances of a yogi deluded, like the drunk's perception of two moons? A madmen too may see his region as the Potala buddhafiield. A madman too may believe he is Avalokiteśvara.

Bakmoon said:

Can't you make a distinction though based on the mind of the perceiver though? A Yogi has a valid yogic direct perception, whereas the madman has impaired faculties.

In any case, I'm not surprised that you can easily get into trouble when you start looking at these issues in pramana. It's like the old chicken and egg problem with perception relying on inference and inference relying on perception. Under analysis, pramana falls apart just like everything else, so if you are trying to work things out conventionally, you have to accept that pramana is able to function and remember to steer clear of the issues that lead you to analyze too deeply.

Malcolm wrote:

A common person cannot make a distinction between the mind of a madman or a yogi. He or she can only make a distinction on the basis of their conduct. Even this not certain, since most people will regard a yogi engaged vratacarya, or the conduct of strict discipline to be lunatics. The point is that in the Gelug presentation, conventional truth is put forth from the perspective of Sautrantikas following reason, which is essentially a pramana based perspective. Why do you think other schools give Gelugpas such a hard time. No only are the contradictions in Tsongkhapa's teachings with respect to what Nāgārjuna fathers and sons have said, but there are problems with his resorting to the conventional truth perspective of pramana.

Your last sentence just means you have to cripple yourself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 1:31 AM

Title: Re: Dr. Nida Chenagtsang

Content:

Grigoris said:

When you say common, what do you mean? 60-70%?

Malcolm wrote:

In the case of Dzogchen practitioners, and by this I mean people who actually understand Dzogchen teachings, 100 percent.

Grigoris said:

And how do you know a dead person's mindstream has been liberated?

Malcolm wrote:

There is a tantra devoted to discussing this issue called the sku gdung 'bar ba. It also has a 150 folio long commentary. I'll get to it in a couple of years. In brief however it discusses the kinds of signs one has at the time of death and in the bardo, and how others can know from these one's realization. It also discusses signs from past lives which are discernible in this lifetime and so on.

It is all really a question of whether you trust what the Buddha has said in Dzogchen tantras and teachings. If you don't trust this, and approach this issue from the point of view of the eight lower vehicles, then it probably means Dzogchen is not an appropriate teaching for you yet. But there is always hope. Even hearing the word "Dzogchen" means that you will eventually attain liberation through Dzogchen teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 1:09 AM

Title: Re: Dr. Nida Chenagtsang

Content:

Minobu said:

i just posted this in what could hijack another thread , i think it is appropriate here for this is where i got sparked to think about what i just deleted.

Malcolm and others, i am not a Dzogchen initiate, but am fascinated with it.

I once asked a Rinpoche, in a group setting, who i was practicing under diligently.

I asked what are the chances of a Tantra practitioner who is a householder , attain enlightenment in this life.

He said out right. "very slim to none."

What about Dzogchen, which I am thinking about embarking on.

Also 10 years ago I wanted to embark on this path but it was like you really needed to be close for awhile to a Guru / Teacher before receiving the empowerments.

In other words , really be close to one.

Now it seems that it's easy to find someone , even online in a webcast to receive this empowerment.

Back in the day only a select few monks could receive any sort of empowerment , then it became like me....walk in off the street and for a few bucks you too can be Vajrayogini .

really hope this received well and in the light of just what the words say with no agenda here..

i need honesty and compassion to comfort a part of my being at this juncture.

Malcolm wrote:

It is rare anyone achieves Buddhahood in this lifetime. It is very common however for Vajrayāna practitioners to attain buddhahood at the point of death, or even in the bardo. It is even more common for Dzogchen practitioners to achieve buddhahood at the time of the death or in the bardo, and in the case of Dzogchen practitioners, provided they understand the teachings and practice in a precise way, it is certain they will never return to samsara again.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 1:01 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Bakmoon said:

Fair enough, but as I understand it, conventional existence isn't meant to be an ontological concept. Gelug Madhyamaka accepts that conventional existence is, like everything else, a mere imputation.

Malcolm wrote:

Asserting things are mere imputations is an ontological concept.

Bakmoon said:

If I say that horses exist and unicorns don't, I don't think that is an ontological statement about the nature of reality. I think that is just a distinction between things that are rejected on the level of worldly convention and things that are accepted on the level of worldly convention.

Malcolm wrote:

Unicorns are imputations. Horse are imputations. Now you have to define the difference between a false one and a true one. And that is where you start making ontological assertions. A true imputation involves a correspondence theory between what you perceive and what is out there. Now, we already know that a correspondence theory is invoked by Candrakīrti on the basis of the distinction between two modes of false cognitions: 1) false cognitions about natures 2) false cognitions about common appearances, i.e., seeing one moon as opposed to two.

However, this does not bear up to analysis either since in the experience of a yogi, he or she may see a given space as the pure land of Avalokiteśvara, Potala, where we all see a midden heap filled with trash. In this case then, is the experiential appearances of a yogi deluded, like the drunk's perception of two moons? A madmen too may see his region as the Potala buddhfield. A madman too may believe he is Avalokiteśvara.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 13th, 2016 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: Inherent deja vu all over again

Content:

Bakmoon said:

I guess my main summary of the whole issue is that everyone (both Gelug and non-Gelug Madhyamikas) agree that mere appearances are not refuted, but the Gelug tradition puts qualifiers into all the negations to make this clear up-front, and non-Gelug Madhyamikas generally leave the qualifiers out and don't feel the need to make all of the technical terms fit together into a detailed and comprehensive philosophical system.

Malcolm wrote:

Appearances are the object of analysis, but they are not the object of negation. For example, when we have a moon in the water, we do not say, that moon in the water does not exist. We do however subject it to analysis to understand that it is not the real moon. Also the appearance of the moon in the sky is an object of analysis. However, since conventional appearances are not able to bear ultimate analysis, any concept regarding their existence or nonexistence has to be abandoned. It is the only way the creation stage works. For example, the third Döcupchen asks Gelugpas, "If for you appearances are conventionally established in the perception of ordinary people, does this not render the creation stage a mere imputation and a false appearance?"

In reality, when practicing Vajrayāna, Gelugpas use a species of Yogacara Madhyamaka just like everyone else.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 12th, 2016 at 11:41 PM

Title: Re: Inherent déjà vu all over again

Content:

Jeff H said:

In the thread concerning Kenneth Chan's essay on <https://www.dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=102&t=24265#p367191>, there was a familiar sub-topic critiquing Tsongkhapa's use of "inherent existence". The sub-topic started around

<https://www.dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=102&t=24265&start=80#p367976>, and reached a pinnacle for me

<https://www.dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=102&t=24265&start=160#p368353>, with my summation and the replies from Malcolm and Bakmoon that followed, concluding with this from Bakmoon: Thank you both, Malcolm and Bakmoon! These direct responses are particularly good grist for my still churning mill. I'm struggling to formulate a coherent question about all this to put to a couple of my teachers.

Bakmoon said:

Would you like to talk over some of these issues in a new thread? I know from experience that these subtle issues are really opaque if you haven't studied the subject fairly closely already, so I can definitely sympathize with the confusion.

Jeff H said:

I'd like to take Bakmoon up on his suggestion of a thread to explore the critique of Tsongkhapa. I'm putting this in the Gelug forum because my purpose is to compose a question for my Gelug teachers, and I'd like some assistance.

On DW it seems like a foregone conclusion that Tsongkhapa's teachings on the topic of inherency as the object of negation have been overturned. Tsongkhapa always takes up the banner, but it appears that most of the rest of us who follow Gelug teachings aren't really up to entering the debate.

How should I present this question to my teacher? Here's my starting place:

"Some say Tsongkhapa's qualification of 'inherent existence' is unnecessary. Worse than unnecessary, as one person put it, 'The main criticism of Tsongkhapa's view is that it supposes that a nonexistence (the absence of inherent existence) is ultimate. This makes Tsongkhapa's point of view subtly nihilistic.'

"They point to references from Nagarjuna and Chandrakirti that indicate the object of negation is simply existence and, by extension, non-existence. They say there's no reason to belabor conventional appearance as an instance of what might be called 'false existence', and that to do so leaves an impression of true existence in the student's mind.

"I revere the Tsongkhapa-based teachings I have received, but I do not know how to respond to these criticisms."

Malcolm wrote:

The actual problem is that the Gelug view promotes relative realism (not nonexistent in the relative) and ultimate nihilism (not existent in the ultimate).

Your teachers will probably tell you to stop listening to Sakyapas and Nyingmapas. But the truth is that the Gelugpas have never amounted an effective rebuttal to Gorampa or Mipham. The scholar who has the most balanced view about all of this in the modern epoch is HHDL. He is committed to Tsongkhapa's view, but has the largeness of heart to try and understand the critiques against Tsongkhapa's view and to try and see where there is commonality among them.

The normal trope is that Tsongkhapa explains the view from the perspective of an ordinary person; the Sakyapas explain the view from the perspective of the path; and the Nyingmapas explain the view from the perspective of the result. It is a gross generalization, but there is some truth in it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 12th, 2016 at 11:11 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

So the central mystery of quantum physics is simply the fact that no consistent interpretation can be found for the formulation of quantum mechanics. That basically means that the mystery is why quantum physics cannot be explained.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, because the data is not complete, there are therefore inconsistencies.

Kenneth Chan said:

We know now that the actual reason for this mystery is that physicists had been required to fit any possible interpretation into the prevailing philosophical framework of an inherently existing mind-matter duality.

So isn't it true that Madhyamika philosophy solves the mystery of quantum physics?

Malcolm wrote:

No, since Sūtrayāna Buddhādharma conventionally asserts a classical substance dualism. Madhyamaka texts do not reject this.

Your thesis is predicated on a misunderstanding of Buddhism— i.e. that Buddhism in toto rejects substance dualism, but it does not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 12th, 2016 at 11:00 PM

Title: Re: Differences between Chöd wang and TroNak wang?

Content:

Karma Jinpa said:

Also, does anyone happen to know the lineage history of the Chöd wang that both Lho Ontul Rinpoche and Lamchen Gyalpo Rinpoche typically give? It's given for empowering the practice of the lüjin composed by Lho Nuden Dorje (after a Karma Kagyupa had requested it), and also for the extensive sadhana compiled by Gyalpo Rinpoche himself. It doesn't come from the Yangzab terma cycle, since there's no Chöd practice there, and it seems there isn't a Troma wang in the Fivefold Mahamudra lineage of Drikung either, from what i can tell, so I'm at a loss...

ratna said:

I don't know what empowerment Lamchen Gyalpo Rinpoche gives, but the wang for the Rainbow Body Chod that Lho Ontul Rinpoche often gives comes from the terma of Lho Nuden Dorje.

R

Malcolm wrote:

It is the same.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 12th, 2016 at 10:59 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I think the more accurate position to take (based for example, on Mañjuśrīmitra's Meditation of Bodhicitta) is that buddhahood could also be accomplished indirectly as well, through mantra practice, as he says:

Further, because the teacher has declared that awakening can be correctly grasped with a symbol, in that case, this is the basis of the meditation that generates awakened mind.

After the three samadhis are stable, and after binding three symbolic mudras, generate the mind as the great dharmamudra and meditate the recitation of the essence [mantra].

Mipham, summarizing Mañjuśrīmitra's autocommentary, adds:

If it is asked, "What is the method of realizing the definitive meaning through the indirect method?," since nonactivity is illustrated with the activity of fabricated efforts, like pointing to the moon with the finger, also awakened mind correctly grasped through a symbol will accomplish awakening, because the Bhagavan Buddha, the teacher of devas and humans, has declared that it is "great awakening." Any unfortunate one who conceptualizes entities should make efforts in the indirect method of realization.

M

RikudouSennin said:

This is similar to what Dudjom Lingpa says in Vajra Essence 182-184

"For the direct identification within your own being, you first establish all phenomenon included in samsara and nirvana as emptiness. Once you have ascertained them as the displays of the space of ultimate reality, you identify this state as the great revelation and apprehend your own nature. As a result, you naturally settle in ground pristine awareness as the great freedom from extremes. This is the swift path, the yana of the great perfection.

In reliance upon the relative, effortful path--as a means for leading beings to ultimate, effortless absolute space-- the kayas and facets of primordial consciousness of the ground sugatagarbha are generated as signs. And many sadhanas involving visualisations and recitations are taught in accordance with the many accounts of the names and meanings of deities to be revealed, buddhafi elds, palaces, teachers and retinues

All accounts asserting that by striving in meditative practice you will reach some vast region somewhere else, called a buddhafi eld, are called paths of expedient means."

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 12th, 2016 at 10:51 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Because the Copenhagen interpretation is the dominate interpretation, and it explicitly rejects causality, contra Einstein, etc.

Anders said:

That is too simplistic, and only considers Bohr.

The Copenhagen interpretation rejects determinism. Not causality per se. As can be seen from this quote from Bohr:

"In physics, causal description, originally adapted to the problems of mechanics, rests on the assumption that the knowledge of the state of a material system at a given time permits the prediction of its state at any subsequent time."

Moreover, as a strict instrumentalist, Bohr did not reject causality as a physical law (of which he was noncommittal), but as a useful mode of description and measurement concerning certain properties at the quantum level, of which he claimed their causal (deterministic) properties could not be known at the quantum level.

Heisenberg, in contrast, did not equate causality with determinism and understood quantum physics to be very much causal, albeit probabilistic causality.

Kenneth Chan said:

The Copenhagen interpretation is one of the interpretations I discussed in detail in my paper. And Anders is absolutely correct. It does not reject causality. What the Copenhagen interpretation actually rejects is determinism, not causality.

The Copenhagen interpretation, and, in fact, quantum mechanics in general, is not deterministic because we cannot determine the exact future behaviour of a particle, even if we have all the information it is possible to have concerning a particle. This is because the quantum wave function of the particle only provides us with a probability distribution of possible measurement results if and only if we make a measurement. With only knowledge of a probability distribution of possible measurement results, it means that we cannot predict the exact result of a future measurement on a particle.

But that hardly means that it rejects causality. There is still cause and effect, only the exact effect cannot be predicted beforehand from the information we can have about a physical particle. Einstein's unhappiness about this probabilistic nature of quantum mechanics was what prompted him to declare: "God does not play dice."

There is, nonetheless, still cause and effect. The clearest example of this in quantum mechanics would be that it is the act of measurement by an observer that causes the collapse of the wave function ... only we cannot predict beforehand exactly how the quantum wave function would collapse. That surely does not mean that there is no cause and effect.

In fact, it is exactly this cause and effect that constitutes the process of dependent origination. In the collapse of the wave function, the physical particle, in Heisenberg's words, makes the transition from the "possible" to the "actual" and manifests as a particle, in dependence upon the mind of the observer that apprehends it. And since the particle is only dependently originated, it is empty of inherent existence.

How then does this not provide scientific evidence for Lama Tsongkhapa's view that all things are empty of inherent existence because they are dependently originated?

Malcolm wrote:

First of all, the charge that the Copenhagen interpretation rejects causality is not mine.

Second, dependent origination is strictly deterministic, "where this exists, that exists; from the arising of that, this arises."

Further, I do not see how quantum mechanics is reaffirming the basic insight that there is no inherent existence. For example, to take your line of thinking, one can make an argument that (half-eggist) Yogacara is affirmed by quantum mechanics because of the overwhelming emphasis in your theory on the role of the observer. For example, in the half-eggist theory, physical phenomena exist, but how they exist for us is determined by our perception of them, much like your collapse of the wave function.

But in fact, with respect to causality, Buddha is a determinist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 12th, 2016 at 10:49 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, exactly how did you come to the conclusion that "quantum mechanics rejects causality"?

Malcolm wrote:

Because the Copenhagen interpretation is the dominate interpretation, and it explicitly rejects causality, contra Einstein, etc.

Anders said:

That is too simplistic, and only considers Bohr.

The Copenhagen interpretation rejects determinism. Not causality per se. As can be seen from this quote from Bohr:

"In physics, causal description, originally adapted to the problems of mechanics, rests on the assumption that the knowledge of the state of a material system at a given time permits the prediction of its state at any subsequent time."

Moreover, as a strict instrumentalist, Bohr did not reject causality as a physical law (of which he was noncommittal), but as a useful mode of description and measurement concerning certain properties at the quantum level, of which he claimed their causal (deterministic) properties could not be known at the quantum level.

Heisenberg, in contrast, did not equate causality with determinism and understood quantum physics to be very much causal, albeit probabilistic causality.

Malcolm wrote:

Which throws the Buddha's dictum, "where this exists, that exists; from the arising of that, this arises" into question, necessitating a reframing, "where this probably exists (but not definitely), that probably exists (but not definitely; from the probable arising of that (but not definite), this probably arises (but not definitely)."

All this goes to show that Buddha's teaching of dependent origination was not intended originally to be applied to external phenomena, but rather, the processes of living beings only.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 12th, 2016 at 12:00 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, exactly how did you come to the conclusion that "quantum mechanics rejects causality"?

Malcolm wrote:

Because the Copenhagen interpretation is the dominate interpretation, and it explicitly rejects causality, contra Einstein, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 12th, 2016 at 8:06 AM

Title: Re: Tertön

Content:

Grigoris said:

Basically we are saying the same thing. What Malcolm is outlining is the correct effort I am referring to.

DGA said:

I'm not so sure. You're saying that with the right kind of effort, anyone could become a tertön. (unless you are saying something else, in which case please correct me).

Malcolm is saying that the right kind of effort for someone today would have to involve getting in a time machine to create the correct causal relations to Guru Rinpoche in a past life. (unless I understand Malcolm incorrectly, &c).

Malcolm wrote:

What I was saying is that in order to be terton one must be a reincarnation of one of the twenty five disciples.

Of course, this a very specific Tibetan socio-historical phenomena. Becoming realized person is the basic qualification for revealing any sort of new teaching of the Buddhas into the world.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 12th, 2016 at 8:03 AM

Title: Re: Rebirth and karma

Content:

rachmiel said:

"However, when Ferdinand (the bull) is led into the ring, he is delighted by the flowers in the ladies' hair and lies down in the middle of the ring to enjoy them, upsetting and disappointing everyone. Ferdinand is then sent back to his pasture, where to this day, he is still smelling flowers."

One must imagine Ferdinand happy.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I remember the tale fondly. It was one of my favorites.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 12th, 2016 at 7:46 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Please tell how exactly am I encouraging this "fault"? All I am saying is that quantum mechanics shows that it is true that all things are empty of inherent existence because they are dependently originated. Whether or not this is to be considered the "ultimate reality" and whether or not this is actually "a negation" are actually different issues altogether.

Malcolm wrote:

You are going to have to demonstrate to me, in a simple way, why this is correct. Just how does quantum mechanics confirm that "all things are empty of inherent existence because they are dependently originated?"

How so, when for example the standard interpretation of quantum mechanics rejects causality?

I am sure you are more familiar than I with the intellectual history of quantum mechanics, but how, for example, can you show that causality is necessary, when quantum mechanics theory for the last century 80 years has in general rejected it?

In order to show that quantum mechanics confirms dependent origination, you would have to show that quantum mechanics confirms causality.

The Buddha's proposition is a simple one, all conditioned entities arise from a cause, and all causes are themselves effects.

This is entirely separate from the notion of the presence or absence of inherent existence, introduced into Buddhism in order to explain causality by śrāvakas later on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 12th, 2016 at 6:51 AM

Title: Re: Rebirth and karma

Content:

rachmiel said:

So many flowers!

Malcolm wrote:

You ought to change your name to Ferdinand.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 12th, 2016 at 5:13 AM

Title: Re: Rebirth and karma

Content:

rachmiel said:

Sound about right?

Malcolm wrote:

You are getting old. You will die in a relatively short amount of time, even if you are lucky enough to live another fifty years. At this point, you resemble a hamster on a spiritual wheel. Lots of effort, going nowhere fast.

You need to start with the four common foundations.

This may sound like harsh advice, but it isn't.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 12th, 2016 at 4:55 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

boda said:

So what, if anything, does it mean for a quantum event to fail your dependent origination test?

Malcolm wrote:

It means a scientist has not properly analyzed the event in question.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 11th, 2016 at 11:36 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Jeff H said:

I learn a lot every time this topic, about how wrong Tsongkhapa was, comes up. I do not reject attacks on his position about the object of negation, but neither am I ready to renounce it, or all the masters who have propagated his teaching, including my teachers. Cone may be right that today Tsongkhapa's is a minority teaching -- and it certainly appears to be so on DW. But in my personal, lineage-oriented world it is highly respected. And I think valid.

Malcolm wrote:

The sectarianism concerning this was started by Keydrup Jey who violently attacked people who disagreed with Tsongkhapa. You can read the tenor of his polemics in A Thousand Doses of Emptiness translated by Jose Cabazon. Keydrup Jey too was the one who began the earnest canonization of Lama Tsongkhapa. There is a recent book <http://www.wisdompubs.org/book/authorized-lives> which explores this. It is very interesting and worthwhile reading.

Dudjom Rinpoche wisely quips that if one were to take seriously all of the polemics in the history of Tibet, no one's teachings could be regarded as valid.

Jeff H said:

It seems to me that in the end the negation of inherent existence and inherent non-existence comes to the same place as the negation of existence and non-existence. Neither side is saying that anything exists independently.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no term in Sanskrit niḥniḥsvabhāva. This is only svabhāva and niḥsvabhāva, inherent existence and the absence of inherent existence.

It is an argument which mainly concerns 1) pedagogy 2) Tsongkhapa's novel attempt to create a system out of what he called "Prasangika" which would be largely unrecognizable to any Indian Madhyamaka scholar. A great deal of the debate turns on how definitive Nāgārjuna's own writings are. For those who consider Nāgārjuna definitive and straightforward, many Gelug attempts at subtlety and nuance seem off-base. Gelugs respond that Nāgārjuna needs interpretation, which is tantamount to saying that Nāgārjuna's own writings are not definitive.

Jeff H said:

Tsongkhapa is saying that what we experience is a relative existence in the minds of people like me. I start from a place of not recognizing that I actually perceive phenomena as independent "ping pong" balls (to use Berzin's expression). Tsongkhapa provides me with a stepping stone of conceptualizing inherent existence first.

Malcolm wrote:

Be honest— did you have any idea of "inherent existence: prior to reading any Madhyamaka?

Jeff H said:

But the Tsongkhapa lineage always teaches not to confuse the experience that is left after negating inherent existence for any kind of concrete reality. The principle is that we simply can't deny our experience — experience simply is.

Malcolm wrote:

The main criticism of Tsongkhapa's view is that it supposes that a nonexistence (the absence of inherent existence) is ultimate. This makes Tsongkhapa's point of view subtly nihilistic.

Jeff H said:

I still think that Kenneth is using the Madhyamaka-Prasangika method correctly to negate the view of materialism among physicists, and without affirming another view in its place.

Malcolm wrote:

Instead he is encouraging another fault— regarding ultimate reality as a negation.

Jeff H said:

He's simply using the particular version of an ancient teaching, which he was taught, to show them that when faced with conventional evidence contradicting materiality as they know it, they should accept that evidence rather than trying to stuff it into a materialistic box. That would be a great lesson, but not a view.

Malcolm wrote:

As far as I can tell, he is trying to convince himself that Madhyamaka confirms quantum mechanics. But it does not.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 11th, 2016 at 11:20 PM

Title: Re: Tertön

Content:

paël said:

Were Virupa tertön? Who was his guru? He found Hevajra tantra, right? Can anyone find new tantra?

Malcolm wrote:

Not just anyone, paël. Only people who are one the bodhisattva stages who also have the correct dependent origination accumulate through past lives.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 11th, 2016 at 11:05 PM

Title: Re: Dr. Nida Chenagtsang

Content:

amanitamusc said:

Did he have a falling out with Namkhai Norbu Rinpoche?

Malcolm wrote:

When Nida started teaching Mantra Healing though Shang Shung Institute (SSI), Norbu Rinpoche felt this was outside the scope of SSI's mission, and so Nida, after fulfilling his obligations to SSI, parted with SSI and struck out on his own. It was not a sudden thing, but a gradual disengagement. Nida's departure seems to have been precipitated by a Sache project Nida had initiated at Mergigar in 2003. Nida, at some cost, had five boulders placed in a meadow (below the Yellow House) at Merigar and painted the colors of the five elements. Norbu Rinpoche really did not like this at all and immediately had some Dzogchen community people who had helped Nida paint the boulders scrub the paint off with wire brushes. FYI, I was there at the time and witnessed everything first hand. After this point, Nida and SSI began to slowly disengage.

So I think it is fair to say that there was some substantive disagreements over the direction Nida was taking at SSI, and so in order to be more free to follow his own dictates, Nida moved on, since he was not a student of Norbu Rinpoche. I would not characterize this as a falling out, but rather, a parting of ways after a largely successful collaboration seemed to have run its course. The Italian SSI still teaches Kunye in Nida's style, rather than Dr. Phunstok Wangmo's style. Actually, I think it is good Nida moved on. Diversity is good in education, and hopefully Nida's various projects with respect to Tibetan Medicine will bear fruit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 11th, 2016 at 10:02 PM

Title: Re: Dr. Nida Chenagtsang

Content:

adividya said:

Regarding his qualifications, I am new to this forum, and question how appropriate it is to list details of anyone's Vajrayana lineage masters or accomplishments in this way.

Malcolm wrote:

Perfectly appopriate, as the Union of the Sun and Moon Tantra shows:

If the history is not explained,

there will be the fault of lack of confidence

This means the history of the lineage — how can there be confidence in a lineage if someone does not know from whom this or that master received this or that transmission, permission, what retreats they have done, where, how long, etc? It is therefore a perfectly reasonable question.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 11th, 2016 at 9:57 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

When I used the term "dependent origination" in the passage above, I was not actually referring to the 12 causal links...

Malcolm wrote:

The general theory of dependent origination (Where this exists, that exist; with the arising of that, this arose) was taught so that monks would stop bugging the Buddha about their past lives.

Tsongkhapafan said:

That's a ridiculous statement. Buddha taught dependent origination to show how samsara arises and how to cut its root - he taught it so that people would develop wisdom. Buddha can't be 'bugged' by anything.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha was trying to forestall a lot of stupid questions (bugging) by monks with regards to their past lives. In response, he taught the general theory of dependent origination. Please see the Abhidharmakośabhaṣyaṃ at 2:25cd.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 11th, 2016 at 10:28 AM

Title: Re: Tertön

Content:

RikudouSennin said:

How to become tertön?

dzogchungpa said:

I think Naropa has a degree program for that now.

Malcolm wrote:

A weekend certificate course, so I hear.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 11th, 2016 at 10:16 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

When I used the term "dependent origination" in the passage above, I was not actually referring to the 12 causal links...

Malcolm wrote:

The general theory of dependent origination (Where this exists, that exist; with the arising of that, this arose) was taught so that monks would stop bugging the Buddha about their past lives.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 11th, 2016 at 8:04 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

It is so crucial, in fact, that should the lineage of transmission be broken, the lineage is considered lost even though the texts of the lineage are still available.

Malcolm wrote:

There are in fact ways of restoring an interrupted lineage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 11th, 2016 at 6:04 AM

Title: Re: Tertön

Content:

RikudouSennin said:

Pardon my ignorance. What is the difference between pure vision and a terma?

If I understood Alan Wallaces introduction correctly Dudjom Lingpas 5 Dzogchen texts

(The Sharp Vajra of Conscious Awareness Tantra,

The Foolish Dharma of an Idiot Clothed in Mud and Feathers , The Enlightened View of Samantabhadra, Buddhahood Without Meditation, The Vajra Essence) are from pure visions.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, which means they are a product of Dudjom Lingpa's experiential realization, rather than a text predicted by Guru Padmasambhava and concealed by him or one of the 25 disciples.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 11th, 2016 at 5:31 AM

Title: Re: Tertön

Content:

RikudouSennin said:

There is a saying, that siddhas have siddha gurus.

Is this true for Tertons, do they usually have a guru who was a terton?

Who can become terton?

And now for the grand question.

How to become terton?

Malcolm wrote:

1) Yes, generally tertons learn how to be tertons from other tertons, but not always.

2) Anyone who has A) been blessed by Guru Rinpoche b) is an advanced Dzogchen practitioner.

3) Refer to 2.

Boomerang said:

How advanced do you have to be?

Malcolm wrote:

You have to have reached the third so called "vision."

The requirement for pure visions are not so stringent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 11th, 2016 at 5:03 AM

Title: Re: Tertön

Content:

RikudouSennin said:

There is a saying, that siddhas have siddha gurus.

Is this true for Tertons, do they usually have a guru who was a terton?

Who can become terton?

And now for the grand question.

How to become terton?

Malcolm wrote:

1) Yes, generally tertons learn how to be tertons from other tertons, but not always.

2) Anyone who has A) been blessed by Guru Rinpoche b) is an advanced Dzogchen practitioner.

3) Refer to 2.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 11th, 2016 at 4:36 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

boda said:

Interestingly, quantum events like decay occur without a cause.

Malcolm wrote:

Perishing does not have a cause, perishing occurs due to absence of a cause. I.e. when that does not exist, this does not exist, with the perishing of this, that ceases."

boda said:

What does that mean in regard to karma, or for ignorance being the first cause?

Malcolm wrote:

Anyone who told you that ignorance was a first cause, told you wrong. There are no first causes in dependent origination. If there were, we could not describe origination as dependent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 11th, 2016 at 2:14 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Lukeinaz said:

Malcom,

Can you recommend this book as a starting point for those who have received transmission yet are new to Dzogchen teachings and have not read any other material?

If not can you recommend a starting point so one can work towards this material?

Thanks!

Malcolm wrote:

There are parts in this book suited to beginners, specifically topic 8, in the sections on semzins and rushan. The first seven topics mainly cover theory and yogic anatomy. Of course the latter is very important, and one should understand them well.

Otherwise, get the Precious Vase and work through it. Or get both.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 11th, 2016 at 2:12 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

Yes it makes perfect sense and it is the expression of a view. Through the negation of inherent existence we come to realise that things are dependently-arisen appearances and on this level, they exist. This is an assertion and therefore a view. The Madhyamaka is therefore not 'no view' or merely the negation of others' views.

Malcolm wrote:

On the contrary, Nāgārjuna states:

Emptiness was taught by the victor for the renunciation of views;
they say someone who has a view of emptiness is incurable.

Tsongkhapa said:

That really isn't what I'm saying. Emptiness is the mere absence of all the things we normally see. That's a view but that mere absence is not a 'thing'. This is the mistake that Nagarjuna is referring to, the reifying of emptiness, feeling that it is a separate reality existing behind conventional appearances when it is actually the real nature of those appearances.

Again, Nagarjuna's words require interpretation. 'renunciation of views' means 'renunciation of views of inherent existence' not renunciation of views per se - that's going too far.

Malcolm wrote:

You, my friend, have a view of emptiness, precisely as Nāgārjuna described it, " the reifying of emptiness, feeling that it is a separate reality existing behind conventional appearances when it is actually the real nature of those appearances."

You think, by making a distinction between separate reality on the one one hand and a real nature on the other that you are avoiding this problem, but it is not so. This exactly the mistake to which Nāgārjuna refers.

Emptiness is the recognition that the things we perceive are not real. It is not their absence. If you claim emptiness is the absence of things, you are reifying that absence, similar with the one who reifies the mistaken thought of a fairy castle. Thus you are dragged underwater by the crocodile of the view.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 11th, 2016 at 1:32 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Bakmoon said:

It is an affirmation of the key principle of Prasangika Madhyamaka: All things are empty of inherent existence because they are dependently arisen. This has to be how Chandrakirti, Shantideva and Lama Tsongkhapa interpreted the meaning of Nagarjuna to arrive at this conclusion. And it makes sense.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Yes it makes perfect sense and it is the expression of a view. Through the negation of inherent existence we come to realise that things are dependently-arisen appearances and on this level, they exist. This is an assertion and therefore a view. The Madhyamaka is therefore not 'no view' or merely the negation of others' views.

Malcolm wrote:

On the contrary, Nāgārjuna states:

Emptiness was taught by the victor for the renunciation of views;
they say someone who has a view of emptiness is incurable.

In his commentary to this line, Buddhapalita states:

For example, someone with a confused mind sees a fairy castle and the thought arises in his mind "fairy castle," but when he is free from that confusion and sees it as it truly is, there is no entity called "mistaken thought of a fairy castle" in the mistaken thought of a fairy castle and he only then becomes free from a concept about a nonexistent. In the same way, when seeing how it truly is, that mistaken emptiness (which arises from the crocodile of the view [of emptiness as an] entity) is not [in fact] an entity called "emptiness." Apart from the mere expression, "emptiness," those that view emptiness as an entity have their eye of wisdom obscured by the darkness of ignorance and thus the great doctors, the victors, able to discern for whom a treatment will succeed or not, have said [the treatment] will not succeed [for them].

Thus emptiness is merely a therapy for wrong views, and cannot be construed as a view itself. To construe emptiness itself as a view is to render oneself incurable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 11th, 2016 at 1:01 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

It is not the literal translation of individual words that count. Words have to be taken in context. Otherwise why do we ever need commentaries to any text? Also, you realise that both translators do not agree with you. The same word can have a different meaning if the context is different. Anyway, let's just agree to disagree. You can read it your way, and I'll read it my way.

Malcolm wrote:

It is fruitless to claim appeal to commentarial authority when you have produced nothing to back up your claims by way of such commentaries.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 10th, 2016 at 10:13 AM

Title: Re: Theodicy in Buddhadharma

Content:

Grigoris said:

How is this theodicy?

Bakmoon said:

I think Malcolm's key point is that to say that makes it sound like a Buddha on their own can just enlighten someone if they wanted to. The problem of course is that the Buddhas in their infinite and perfect compassion already want to do this for every single sentient being, so if this were possible, they would have already done it by now and Samsara would be over.

Malcolm wrote:

Exactly. Nirvanadol...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 10th, 2016 at 10:12 AM

Title: Re: Theodicy in Buddhadharma

Content:

tomamundsen said:

Wouldn't the Great Perfection be a kind of Buddhodicy as well? (e.g., five elements/five lights)

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, since no one can make you recognize a thing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 10th, 2016 at 10:12 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

...your position is nihilistic.

Malcolm wrote:

No, since I have not proposed something which exists. In order for someone to have a annihilationist perspective they have to advocate the nonexistence of something. I have never advocated the nonexistence of anything.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 10th, 2016 at 6:27 AM

Title: Re: Theodicy in Buddhadharma

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Shouldn't it be, like, 'Buddhodicy' or something?

Malcolm wrote:

I thought about it, but then declined to coin this term.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 10th, 2016 at 6:26 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

conebeckham said:

It [i.e. Madhyamaka] is not nihilistic because saying that no assertion can be made about existence is not equivalent to any assertion about nonexistence.

Madhyamaka serves to point out the impossibility of making any assertion about ontological status of conditioned phenomena. Just because no assertion can be made about the existence of things, it is not logical to conclude that a "nonexistence" is ontological truth.

Wayfarer said:

I agree with that interpretation, but it is quite different to:

Malcolm wrote:

Annihilationism, in Buddhadharma, is the assertion that something which exists now, such as a person, will be utterly destroyed later and cease to exist. But this kind of statement is only possible if someone first claims something exists.

As Buddhapalita says, and as I have stated many times:

It is not that we [Mādhyamikas] claim nonexistence, we merely remove claims for existing existents.

Wayfarer said:

Saying that 'nothing ceases because it never really existed in the first place' is completely different to saying that 'no assertion can be made about existence.' The first is ontological (concerning what exists), the second epistemological (concerning what we know).

Malcolm wrote:

Nāgarjuna's famous maṅgalam states:

Not ceasing, not arising,
not impermanent, not permanent,
not going, not coming,
not different, not identical...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 10th, 2016 at 6:21 AM

Title: Re: Theodicy in Buddhadharma

Content:

Grigoris said:

Theodicy tries to reconcile the fact that this world is imperfect and full of evil and yet is created by an perfect, omniscient and compassionate God. So I still fail to see how Queequeg's statement is theodicy.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha's world is perfect, and yet while able to reveal this merely by pointing his toe, he fails to do so.

It's a version of Theodicy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 10th, 2016 at 6:02 AM

Title: Re: Theodicy in Buddhadharma

Content:

Grigoris said:

How is this theodicy?

Malcolm wrote:

Read Queequeg's statement again carefully.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 10th, 2016 at 6:01 AM

Title: Re: Theodicy in Buddhadharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Our moderator Queequeg

https://www.dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=59&t=24301#p368010:

If the Buddha wanted to reveal the real aspect to beings, he can, by simply pointing his toe.

<https://www.google.com/search?client=safari&rls=en&q=theodicy&ie=UTF-8&oe=UTF-8> in Buddhadharma, how novel and how equally indefensible. If a buddha could do such a thing, a compassionate buddha would have no choice, since they cannot bear to let sentient beings suffer in misery.

Coëmgenu said:

Surely the Buddha is always "simply pointing his toe" in the interest of revealing the real aspect to beings, since that is just what a compassionate Buddha would do. That doesn't mean we are more able to see it than if the Buddha didn't. We still have a need to purify ourselves and engage in practice of some sort.

Malcolm wrote:

Queequeg's statement states that the Buddha is not doing so, but if he wanted, he could, and then we would see it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 10th, 2016 at 5:33 AM

Title: Theodicy in Buddhadharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Our moderator Queequeg

<https://www.dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=59&t=24301#p368010>:

If the Buddha wanted to reveal the real aspect to beings, he can, by simply pointing his toe.

<https://www.google.com/search?client=safari&rls=en&q=theodicy&ie=UTF-8&oe=UTF-8> in Buddhadharma, how novel and how equally indefensible. If a buddha could do such a thing, a compassionate buddha would have no choice, since they cannot bear to let sentient beings suffer in misery.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 10th, 2016 at 5:17 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Bakmoon said:

I'm having some trouble tracking down this passage. Can anyone here tell me what the chapter and verse in the MMK these are?

Malcolm wrote:

Chapter 15, verse 6, I think, or thereabouts.

Bakmoon said:

Thank you very much.

Chandrakirti commenting on this verse says:

Such are those who delude themselves that they are faithfully expounding the teaching of the perfectly realized one when they explain the self-existent and essential nature of things, saying that solidity is the self-existent and essential nature of earth, that experience of the object is the self-existent and essential nature of feeling and that being reflected as an object is the self-existent and essential nature of consciousness. And they explain existence-as-otherness (parabhāva) saying that consciousness is other than object and that feeling is other than both. They explain that consciousness and the other factors of personal existence, when in the present, exist, and when they are in the past do not exist. They do not explain the supremely profound truth of dependent origination. So self-existence and existence-as-other are, as we have shown, contrary to reason (upapattiviruddha).

Chandrakīrti doesn't put in any qualifiers in interpreting the passage, so presumably he takes Nāgārjuna's statement at face value, as a logical dichotomy.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhapālita states:

If there is something existent, it is counted as something self-existent (svabhāva) or dependently existent (parabhāva). Because of that, if there is self existence and dependent existence, existents will be established. Also when there is no self existence, at that time there is also no dependent existence; there is no description of an existence not included in self existence and dependent existence, where will that existence alone, without becoming self or dependently [existent]?

The reason that I translate parabhāva as "dependent existence" is that Buddhapālita comments on it that it is conceived as an existence which is "assisted" by another, similar in meaning to paratantra.

He continues a little later:

Someone like that, who [has a] view of self existence, dependent existence, existence or nonexistence does not see the truth in the profound as the supreme teaching of the Buddha. Because we, in the correct way, see the nonexistence of the self existence of things which appear because the sun of dependent origination arose, because of that, because we see the truth, liberation is can be accepted only for us.

Recall, existence is only valid if and only if inherent existence is valid. Dependent origination is not possible in the face of inherent existence, and for Nāgārjuna, etc., there is no existence apart from inherent existence.

Nāgārjuna closes the chapter by stating:

‘Is’ is holding to permanence,

‘Is not’ is an annihilationist view.

Because of that, is and is not are not made into a basis by the wise.

Because something is self existent,
it is permanent because [it is] never non-existent;

‘produced earlier, presently non-existent’, therefor, the consequence is annihilation.
TKF's mere existence is refuted here.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 10th, 2016 at 4:42 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Wayfarer said:

All the discussions I read on madhyamika seem to culminate with Malcolm saying that Nāgārjuna says that nothing really exists, yet that somehow this is not nihilistic. I have long since given up on ever trying to understand that.

Malcolm wrote:

Annihilationism, in Buddhadharma, is the assertion that something which exists now, such as a person, will be utterly destroyed later and cease to exist. But this kind of statement is only possible if someone first claims something exists.

As Buddhapalita says, and as I have stated many times:

It is not that we [Mādhyamikas] claim nonexistence, we merely remove claims for existing existents.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 10th, 2016 at 4:39 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Where is there an existence not included in inherent existence and dependent existence? If inherent existence and dependent existence are established, existence will be established.

Bakmoon said:

I'm having some trouble tracking down this passage. Can anyone here tell me what the chapter and verse in the MMK these are?

Malcolm wrote:

Chapter 15, verse 6, I think, or thereabouts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 10th, 2016 at 4:17 AM

Title: Re: Difference between Black Hayagrīva and Red Hayagrīva

Content:

paël said:

Is tinnitus karmic disease? From loud noise.

Malcolm wrote:
No, not generally.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, December 10th, 2016 at 4:13 AM
Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics
Content:
Tsongkhapafan said:
I'm not clear on the meaning of those quotes from Naagarjuna.

Malcolm wrote:
I am, since I have examined in detail the commentaries of Buddhapalita and Candrakīrti with respect to them. What they mean is that anyone who holds at all any view of existence has a wrong view.

The purpose of Madhyamaka is the elimination of all views, its purpose is not to privilege something called "Madhyamaka view" over other views.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, December 10th, 2016 at 2:09 AM
Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics
Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:
Madhyamaka does propose a view of reality, it's the middle way. Things exist as mere appearances, being one nature with their emptiness. The truth is between non-existence and inherent existence. It's also certainly not indifferent to conventional truth since Nagarjuna's view is the union of the two truths.

Malcolm wrote:
No, this is really incorrect. If this were so, why does Nāgārjuna say:
Where is there an existence not included in inherent existence and dependent existence?
If inherent existence and dependent existence are established, existence will be established.

Jeff H said:
This is very interesting to me. Certainly Je Tsongkhapa was familiar with this quote from Nagarjuna. Are you saying that Nagarjuna's term "inherent" here and Tsongkhapa's term are the same?

Malcolm wrote:
Identical, rang bzhin, svabhāva.

...

Further the Buddha states in the Ārya-kāśyapa-parivarta-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra: Kāśyapa, existence is the first extreme; nonexistence is the second extreme; whatever is between those two extremes cannot be discerned, cannot be shown, is not a support, does not appear, cannot be known, and is not present. Kāśyapa, this is how the middle way correctly discerns phenomena.

I know this is a stretch, but this statement reminds me of what Kenneth explains about the interval between conventional measurements in quantum observation (I think it was Heisenberg's point). It is impossible to say anything about an observed electron between observations, not even whether it exists or not. It's like, conventionally we see this phenomenon and that phenomenon, then we try to fill in a continuity (like quantum mechanics predicts probability parameters), but in fact there is nothing that can be discerned and nothing is present.

Am I completely off-base with this?

What the Buddha is saying here is that in the Middle Way, phenomena are inexpressible. All expressions are a deviation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 10th, 2016 at 1:40 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

Madhyamaka does propose a view of reality, it's the middle way. Things exist as mere appearances, being one nature with their emptiness. The truth is between non-existence and inherent existence. It's also certainly not indifferent to conventional truth since Nagarjuna's view is the union of the two truths.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is really incorrect. If this were so, why does Nāgārjuna say:

Where is there an existence not included in inherent existence and dependent existence?

If inherent existence and dependent existence are established, existence will be established.

He then goes on to say:

Whoever has a view of inherent existence, dependent existence, existence, and non-existence has not seen the Buddha's teachings.

Thus when you claim that "the truth is between non-existence and inherent existence," you clearly have not seen the Buddha's teaching.

Further the Buddha states in the Ārya-kāśyapa-parivarta-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra: Kāśyapa, existence is the first extreme; nonexistence is the second extreme; whatever is between those two extremes cannot be discerned, cannot be shown, is not a support, does not appear, cannot be known, and is not present. Kāśyapa, this is how the middle way correctly discerns phenomena.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 10th, 2016 at 1:15 AM

Title: Re: Difference between Black Hayagrīva and Red Hayagrīva

Content:

paël said:

Does these deities help genetic diseases?

Malcolm wrote:

Genetic diseases are karmic diseases. So whether or not someone with such a disease can be helped by medicine or ritual depends largely on whether the disease is one hundred percent karmic, in which nothing can be done for it in this lifetime; or whether it is only partially karmic, in which something can be done.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 10th, 2016 at 12:33 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Jeff H said:

This paper doesn't ignore the western contributions to denying inherent existence; it addresses, more specifically, the long line of physicists who are insisting on maintaining strict materialism against a growing body of evidence.

Malcolm wrote:

It is entirely appropriate that experimental science confines itself to what is observable. This made indeed lead some to take a materialist position, but quite frankly, that is preferable, in my opinion, to the intelligent design folks, whose intelligent designer is rather like the ether than Kenneth mentions in his paper above.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 10th, 2016 at 12:00 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Jeff H said:

Quantum mechanics has shown, experimentally, how "conventional truths are dissonant with how phenomena actually exist by nature". Kenneth is saying that since these results correspond with what Buddhists have said for centuries, western science should take note and move forward with fresh eyes instead of stomping their feet and insisting on inherency.

Malcolm wrote:

Inherency has been long abandoned in Western Philosophy, for example, Hume refuted necessary connection, self, and so on in his Inquiry into Human Understanding.

Further, Heisenberg's uncertainty principle, which is fundamentally what our friend Kenneth is talking about, is old news.

What I object to, as well as some others, is the reification of Madhyamaka as if it actually proposes how conventional things are supposed to function. There are a variety of theories about this even with Buddhism, which all have their usefulness in different contexts.

The Buddha as well as Nāgārjuna, are entirely silent on the question of external, dependently originated phenomena. Cosmology is the domain of Abhidharma, and that presentation is now necessarily deprecated.

The idea of the absence of inherent existence may be a great discovery for Kenneth personally, but he is not the first person to make such a link between this idea and physics. This is why I recommended that Kenneth check out the work of <https://www.amazon.com/Choosing-Reality-Buddhist-View-Physics/dp/1559391995>. Wallace not only has an undergraduate degree in physics, but he is quite expert in Madhyamaka studies. He even offers what he calls "a centrist view of physical science." He offers, usefully, "Physics offers us bodies of experimental evidence which can be consistently interpreted in a variety of ways." He then goes on to explore differences in the ways in which this body of evidence may be understood in different cultures, leading to different conventional formulations of its import.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 9th, 2016 at 10:48 PM

Title: Re: Difference between Black Hayagrīva and Red Hayagrīva

Content:

Karma Jinpa said:

Are any other deities said to specifically help with depression? I had been lead to believe that this was a foreign concept to Tibetans, who don't have a direct word for it.

Malcolm wrote:

They do in fact. Tibetan Medicine identifies three different kinds of depression, based on the three humors. There are also some provocation illnesses whose expression resembles chronic depression.

cloudburst said:

Do you recommend any books on Tibetan medicine? I would like to find out more. I know there is the Tibetan Classics one...is that any good?

Malcolm wrote:

That one is a classical history book. This is the best book out there right now: Essentials of Tibetan Traditional Medicine by Gyato and Hakim

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 9th, 2016 at 9:18 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Let me state here categorically that that is NOT my claim. Context, context, context. What I am showing is that, at the conventional truth level, interpreting the mathematical formulation of quantum mechanics in terms of the Madhyamaka view of reality...

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka does not propose a view of reality, that's the point.

Kenneth Chan said:

in terms of the Madhyamaka view...

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka also does not propose a view. It eliminates views. Take for example Buddhapalita (the actual founder of so called "Prasangika"):

It is not the we [Mādhyamikas] propose nonexistence, we merely remove claims for existing existents.

Some people insist that one needs to append "inherent" to the above formulation, but it is not necessary, in fact.

That is why I keep saying Madhyamaka is indifferent to conventional truth presentations, since they are all inherently flawed cognitions. Conventional truths are dissonant with how phenomena actually exist by nature.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 9th, 2016 at 11:43 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Let me state here categorically that that is NOT my claim. Context, context, context. What I am showing is that, at the conventional truth level, interpreting the mathematical formulation of quantum mechanics in terms of the Madhyamaka view of reality...

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka does not propose a view of reality, that's the point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 9th, 2016 at 10:56 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

bfaus said:

Thank you Malcom for your work and continuous efforts! I would too be interested in receiving the Lung.

Malcolm wrote:

I have just received word from the Lama I had in mind that he would be willing to do this, and the way it will work is that he will give a section of the text, which I will then read in english, and so it might take a couple of days.

When the detail are worked out, I will let you know.

M

Adamantine said:

May we ask who the Lama is? Would it be open to participation in meat space too?

Malcolm wrote:

The Lama, who will remain nameless for now, is top notch. And I am not sure yet about the venue, but watch this space, and I will keep you all in the loop when we have finalized details of dates and venue.

Thanks,

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 9th, 2016 at 10:52 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Yes, but I am not saying that this is not the case. The purpose of my paper, however, is to show that there is a more appropriate model compared to another model which has inconsistencies even at the conventional truth level of analysis. And this argument is presented in terms of the conventional truth. Is there a problem with this?

Malcolm wrote:

The problem is the claim that Madhyamaka validates any conventional truth presentation, which is the essence of your claim.

Kenneth Chan said:

I am not saying that this is not so. Please recognise the context. I am trying to show that, at the conventional truth level, interpreting the mathematical formulation of quantum mechanics in terms of the Madhyamaka view of reality resolves the inconsistencies, while doing so in terms of an inherently existing mind-matter duality would end up with all sorts of inconsistencies. Again, is there a problem with this?

Malcolm wrote:

I understand you think the anti-essentialism of Madhyamaka is helpful in clarifying some problems in physics. But this is no more true than saying the anti-essentialism of Hume would help in just the same way.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 9th, 2016 at 8:12 AM

Title: Re: Difference between Black Hayagrīva and Red Hayagrīva

Content:

Karma Jinpa said:

Are any other deities said to specifically help with depression? I had been lead to believe that this was a foreign concept to Tibetans, who don't have a direct word for it.

Malcolm wrote:

They do in fact. Tibetan Medicine identifies three different kinds of depression, based on the three humors. There are also some provocation illnesses whose expression resembles chronic depression.

Karma Jinpa said:

I guess Khenchen Lodrö Thaye Rinpoche's translator is simply unaware of the terminology, or else not well-versed enough in Tibetan medicine to have known.

Malcolm, could you please elaborate? I meant primarily chronic depression, a.k.a. major depressive disorder, when asking that question. What is the Tibetan term for this, and where can I find resources on its treatment in Tibetan medicine? I daresay this genetic mental illness is the main obstacle to my practice, and it would be quite helpful if I could discuss it with my lamas.

Much appreciated.

Malcolm wrote:

Chronic depression results from either a deficiency of what is known as satisfying phelgm in the brain, or what is known as accomplishing bile in the heart.

You would need to see a Tibetan doctor to find out for sure.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 9th, 2016 at 7:57 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Thank you for the chance to clarify things. The way I am talking about the model being functional is not in terms of the ultimate truth. It is in terms of the conventional truth. When I say that a model explains how things really are in terms of functioning, I am referring to the fact that it is the appropriate model compared to another model which has inconsistencies even at the conventional truth level of analysis.

Malcolm wrote:

All conventional truths have inconsistencies, this is why none of them bear up to ultimate analysis.

Kenneth Chan said:

The presentation in the paper is, however, given mainly in terms of the conventional truth. Otherwise it would be impossible to even compare the difference between the two different philosophical frameworks, i.e. the framework of a mind-matter duality compared with Madhyamaka.

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka, including Tsongkhapa's presentation of Prasanga, actually accepts the conventional duality between mind and matter. Why? Because conventionally, mind and matter are different substances (dravya).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 9th, 2016 at 5:07 AM

Title: Re: Difference between Black Hayagrīva and Red Hayagrīva

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Extremely Wrathful Black Hayagriva has special power to affect beings' minds and benefit those who are depressed, dysfunctional, or crazy, as well as to cure disease.

Karma Jinpa said:

Are any other deities said to specifically help with depression? I had been lead to believe that this was a foreign concept to Tibetans, who don't have a direct word for it.

Malcolm wrote:

They do in fact. Tibetan Medicine identifies three different kinds of depression, based on the three humors. There are also some provocation illnesses whose expression resembles chronic depression.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 9th, 2016 at 3:12 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

bfaus said:

Thank you Malcom for your work and continuous efforts! I would too be interested in receiving the Lung.

Malcolm wrote:

I have just received word from the Lama I had in mind that he would be willing to do this, and the way it will work is that he will give a section of the text, which I will then read in english, and so it might take a couple of days.

When the detail are worked out, I will let you know.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 9th, 2016 at 2:22 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Jeff H said:

I'm puzzled by this outpouring of resistance to Kenneth's position.

Perhaps I'm misinterpreting it, but it sounds to me like the main point is not to impose Madhyamaka as a scientific model. Rather it is to show that, with quantum, western science could be aligning more closely with an ancient Buddhist understanding of reality.

Malcolm wrote:

The resistance comes from the fact that Madhyamakas are impartial with respect to presentations of relative truth. Their only interest in with respect to presentations of relative truth is when those presentations make claims which contradict the principles of dependent origination.

This is the reason for example that followers of Bhavavivkeas and Candrakirti largely follow the Sautrantika presentation of relative truth, apart from Sautrantika tenets like partless particles and so on that that conflict with reason and are found to be irrational assertions upon analysis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 9th, 2016 at 12:41 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Matt J said:

So here's a question: how do we go from stating that I cannot find x, which is an epistemological statement, to there is no x, which is an ontological one? Why isn't it possible for to exist in a way we don't know?

Malcolm wrote:

The only mode of existence that is possible is a conditioned mode of existence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 8th, 2016 at 11:47 PM

Title: Re: Looking/feeling for "I"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you want the flavor of Malcolm, you will want to listen to my Wisdom podcast, not sure when it is to be published.

rachmiel said:

I'm definitely interested, please keep us informed.

In the meantime, the "I" is a barrier to experiencing things as they are— nonarising and unceasing.

The "I" feeling is "things as they are" for the feeler ... it might be an illusion, but this illusion exists -- similarly to how a dream exists (subjectively, for the dreamer). If this is understood, feeling the "I" is not a barrier, rather a way in. Or so I see it on this brisk December morning in the year of our Lord 2016.

Malcolm wrote:

"I" is what prevents one from seeing things as they actually are. It is the root delusion which spawns all other delusions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 8th, 2016 at 11:44 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

In Madhyamika philosophy, particles do not inherently exist on their own right. Particles arise only in dependence upon causes and conditions, in dependence upon their parts, and in dependence upon the mind that apprehends them.

Malcolm wrote:

This is only conventionally true. When particles or their arising is sought, neither particles nor there arising can be found. For example, in the refutation of motion, Nāgarajuna states:

Apart from having moved or not having moved, [at present] there is no moving.

Arising particles cannot bear this analysis. In other words, to address your statement"

Apart from having arisen or not having arisen, [at present] there is no arising.

Kenneth Chan said:

This would correspond very well with the mathematical formulation of quantum mechanics. The quantum wave function of a particle would correspond to the “causes and conditions” aspect, and the eigenstate and its corresponding eigenvalue would correspond to the experiential event of the mind experiencing the particle. Neither the separate inherently-existing particle, nor the separate inherently-existing mind appears in the mathematical formulation. What does appear is the experiential event, where the conscious experience and the particle appear as a combined reality. These experiential events are what actually make up our reality.

Malcolm wrote:

The same applies to experience:

Apart from having been experienced or not having been experienced, [at present] there is no experiencing.

Kenneth Chan said:

And since, these arbitrary concepts lead to problems in interpreting quantum mechanics—problems that still remain unresolved to this day—it is probably wise that we remove them from our direct experiential interpretation of quantum mechanics.

Malcolm wrote:

Perhaps, but this is still all conventional proliferation.

In the end, what is salient to your thesis is the statement by Nāgārjuna:

For those whom emptiness is possible, everything is possible;
for those whom emptiness is impossible, nothing is possible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 8th, 2016 at 10:21 PM

Title: Re: Looking/feeling for "I"

Content:

rachmiel said:

The example with the car reminds me a lot of my big Aha! from HHtDL where he talked about a flower not really existing as anything but the sum of its parts, all of which were like the flower (not existing except for the sum of their parts, etc., all the way down down down baybey).

But, respectfully, for me your responses in this thread are right views and come off a bit clinical. I don't see the passion, wonder, or Malcolm-ness in them. Are you ever simply awe-struck by the miraculous messy unfathomable richness of ... this ... ? Does your worldview have soul? Does life still get you all hot and bothered?

Malcolm wrote:

If you want the flavor of Malcolm, you will want to listen to my Wisdom podcast, not sure when it is to be published.

In the meantime, the "I" is a barrier to experiencing things as they are— nonarising and unceasing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 8th, 2016 at 10:10 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

paël said:

Is World Wide Guru Yoga Transmission of Namkhai Norbu enough?

Do I receive lung, if I sleep during it? Or do I need to stay awake? I don't understand Tibet.

It is 1:30AM here during webcast.

Malcolm wrote:

You do not receive a lung if you sleep through. In any case, paël, this is all merely speculation at this point. Nothing has been confirmed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 8th, 2016 at 9:50 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

paël said:

Is this book practical? Is it useful? Can you read it without lung? Can you use it without lung? How long lung webcast is? When it comes here is night.

Malcolm wrote:

This book is a systematic overview of the teachings found in the 17 Dzogchen Tantras. If you have Dzogchen transmission, you can use the information in the book.

The lung would take some time, probably two hours.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 8th, 2016 at 9:48 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

People have to wake up and understand that human beings have only one planet on which we live. They also have to understand that we all come from a very small population of humans that survived a global cataclysm 75,000 years ago.

binocular said:

Can you explicate your reasoning as to why people _should_ understand those things?

Malcolm wrote:
Species preservation, human and otherwise.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, December 8th, 2016 at 10:51 AM
Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics
Content:

Kenneth Chan said:
Hi Astus, Malcolm, and Conebeckham. Please allow me to address all your questions together.

The situation with quantum physics is really quite unique. What the physicists have discovered is a mathematical procedure, called quantum mechanics, that enables them to calculate very accurately the probability distribution of possible results of measurements made on a particle. The big problem is that we have no idea at all why this mathematical procedure works. Sounds amazing but it is true. No one knows why it works. That is why Richard Feynman openly admits that no one understands quantum mechanics.

Malcolm wrote:
If it works, it is conventionally true. It will still not hold up to ultimate analysis.

Kenneth Chan said:
But the problem does not end there. What this mathematical procedure, called quantum mechanics, tells us is that whenever an observer makes an actual measurement, our external reality changes. This process is called the collapse of the wave function. What it means is this: If the observer does not make a measurement, the external reality behaves in a certain way. If the observer does make a measurement, the external reality will behave in a completely different way!

Malcolm wrote:
Yes. Meaning that entities are conditioned by our perception of them.

[/quote]

I think it is worthwhile for Buddhists to look closely at quantum physics, and I believe that is also why His Holiness, the Dalai Lama, presided over the recent conference on Madhyamika philosophy and quantum physics. Take a look at the title of this article on the conference: "Dalai Lama: Religion Without Quantum Physics Is an Incomplete Picture of Reality" (<http://motherboard.vice.com/read/dalai-lama-religion-without-> quantum-physics-is-an-incomplete-picture-of-reality). So I believe His Holiness, the Dalai Lama, would encourage Buddhists to look more closely at quantum physics, since quantum physics is telling us what our reality is really like.

What my paper shows is that there is something even better than just parallels or intersections between Madhyamika philosophy and quantum physics. Madhyamika philosophy can actually solve the mystery of quantum physics—by interpreting the actual formulation of quantum mechanics explicitly in terms of the Madhyamaka view of reality. Looking at it the other way around, it means that there is now concrete scientific evidence that Madhyamika philosophy is correct. I have deliberately written the paper in such a way that Buddhists, who may not know any mathematics or physics, can also understand it—with a bit of effort, of course. (The paper can be found at <http://kenneth-chan.com/physics/direct-experiential-interpretation-of-quantum-mechanics/>. I would, of course, be happy to clarify things further on this forum if required.)[/quote]

You might want to look at Alan Wallances work.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 8th, 2016 at 9:33 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If enough people demonstrated interest, I might be able to arrange for a lama to give the lung of the original Tibetan text.

Losal Samten said:

Webcasted?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, somehow, it is possible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 8th, 2016 at 9:23 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Marc said:

Dear Malcolm,

I've just purchased your book and have already gone, with care and much appreciation, through your very enlightening introduction !

Thank you for your work

A question that may (or may not) sound odd:

For those of us who have already received initiations and instructions in Trekchö & Thögal, have you contemplated the idea of giving the reading transmission of the Great Commentary via webcast ?

This, I am sure, would be a wonderful opportunity for many of us

Malcolm wrote:

If enough people demonstrated interest, I might be able to arrange for a lama to give the lung of the original Tibetan text.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 8th, 2016 at 4:32 AM

Title: Re: Do you think Trump will recognize Taiwan as a state?

Content:

Minobu said:

in any case Malcolm , nice try...what you are trying to do is well below the standards i used to have for you...

Malcolm wrote:

Your standards, you own them, not I.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 8th, 2016 at 1:20 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Hi Malcolm. The point here is that there is no current interpretation of quantum mechanics that is actually fully functional. All the current interpretations have conceptual problems and inconsistencies.

Malcolm wrote:

Then from a Madhyamaka point of view they fail the functionality test, and this means they are not valid. However, as long as some of the predictions made by quantum models are functional, then we can accept those as conventionally true. Conventional truth does not need to be completely true, otherwise, it would stand up to ultimate analysis.

Kenneth Chan said:

However, if we interpret the formulation of quantum mechanics in terms of the Madhyamaka view of reality—i.e. that all things are empty of inherent existence because they are dependently arisen—we can now actually obtain an interpretation that is free of inconsistencies and free of the need to add on further ad hoc conditions to the basic formulation of quantum mechanics. That is what I am talking about.

Malcolm wrote:

These quantum models can only be accepted as conventional if they make predictions that turn out to be valid. Otherwise, from a Madhyamaka point of view, if it is not functional, it is part of false relative truth, like the difference between one moon seen in the sky by a sober person and two moons seen in the sky by a drunk.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 8th, 2016 at 12:40 AM

Title: Re: Do you think Trump will recognize Taiwan as a state?

Content:

Minobu said:

A stronger America financially.

I think he will be a success in this endeavour.

the concept his policies are going to throw the country into recession is laughable.

Malcolm wrote:

Don't let the facts hit you in the butt <http://www.politifact.com/truth-o-meter/statements/2015/sep/22/hillary-clinton/hillary-clinton-recessions-more-frequent-under-rep/>

Minobu said:

Since 1947, there have been 11 official recessions, totaling 49 recessionary quarters. Of those 49 quarters, just eight occurred under Democratic presidents, compared to 41 under Republicans. So, over the past 65 years, quarters in recession were about five times more common under a Republican president than under a Democratic president.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 8th, 2016 at 12:09 AM

Title: Re: Kagyu refuge tree

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 8th, 2016 at 12:07 AM

Title: Re: Do you think Trump will recognize Taiwan as a state?

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

The only reason why we stick to Geneva conventions is so that our soldiers are treated well.

But it's not a legally binding thing like liberals think.

Malcolm wrote:

Our agreements with the WTO etc., are very binding. For example, there was a law in Massachusetts that barred trade with Myanmar over human rights violations . It was challenged by the WTO and Massachusetts lost, http://www.citizen.org/trade/article_redirect.cfm?ID=11103:

Massachusetts officials were flummoxed to learn they were required to comply with WTO procurement rules that they had never approved. They later learned that a previous governor had sent a letter to the USTR during the Uruguay Round without legislative consultation, much less approval which was the basis for the claim that the state was bound to the WTO procurement rules.

However, the EU and Japan suspended the WTO case pending the outcome of a federal lawsuit filed against that state by the NFTC in U.S. District Court. The NFTC argued that the Massachusetts law “unconstitutionally infringed on the federal foreign affairs power, violated the Foreign Commerce Clause, and was preempted by the federal Act.”[ix] The District Court permanently enjoined enforcement of the state law, ruling that it “unconstitutionally impinge[d] on the federal government’s exclusive authority to regulate foreign affairs.”[x] Massachusetts appealed, but the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit affirmed the District Court’s decision.

Massachusetts appealed to the Supreme Court. Seventy-eight Members of Congress, 38 state and local governments, all eight major state and local government associations, and 66 non-profit organizations filed amicus curiae (“friend of the court”) briefs supporting the Massachusetts law.[xi] Nonetheless, the Supreme Court affirmed the lower courts’ decisions, although on narrower grounds, holding that a state or local selective purchasing law sanctioning a nation is preempted only when Congress has passed a corresponding law sanctioning that nation – as Congress had done in the case of Burma – and only when the two laws differ. This leaves the door open for state and local governments to pass several other types of laws.

For example, state and local governments could enact general laws to avoid purchasing goods and services from companies that violate human rights or labor standards as long as the laws do not apply specifically to companies doing business in a country where Congress has adopted different sanctions.[xii] Thus, states and cities could divest their holdings in companies that do business in Burma or could require companies to disclose whether they do business in Burma as a condition for selling goods or services to the government because these actions do not conflict with the federal Burma law. Under the Supreme Court ruling, state and local governments also could use preferential purchasing policies regarding countries about which Congress has not passed conflicting legislation. Thus, the Supreme Court decision, in contrast to WTO Agreement on Government Procurement (AGP) rules, does not rob state and local governments of all their options.

The U.S. Supreme Court ruling is more permissive of human rights links to procurement decisions than the relevant WTO rules. The WTO AGP forbids consideration of any non-commercial factors in governments', even sub-federal governments', procurement decisions.

Here is a clear case where international laws of trade superseded local policy decisions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 11:56 PM

Title: Re: what does emotional detachment mean?

Content:

White Lotus said:

when one has become emotionally detached from people and things what does it mean?

Malcolm wrote:

Its meaning depends on whether you have compassion or not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 11:45 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

the Madhyamaka view of reality.

Malcolm wrote:

The Madhyamaka view of reality is that whatever ordinary people with healthy sense organs (including minds) hold to be true is true as long as it a) functional b) is not subject to ultimate analysis.

For example, the Madhyamaka refutations of prime movers stem from this principle.

Therefore, Meru Cosmology, Newtonian Physics, Logical Positivism, Quantum Mechanics, String Theory, etc. can all be considered valid from a Madhyamaka point of view as long as they work and are not subjected to ultimate analysis.

Now then, this does not mean that Madhyamaka precludes cosmologies and scientific theories from being deprecated and replaced with new ones. But Madhyamaka will never hold up any conventional model of the world as being definitive. I think this is the point you are missing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 11:27 PM

Title: Re: Kagyu refuge tree

Content:

lisasimmarco said:

Anyone can point me to a online detailed description of the Kagyu refuge tree?

Starting Ngondro. It's going to take a while, chronic health problems.

Also, anyone here performed Ngondro yet? Any experiences they would like to share?

Thank you!

Lisa

Malcolm wrote:

Which Kagyu lineage?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 11:26 PM

Title: Re: Do you think Trump will recognize Taiwan as a state?

Content:

DGA said:

1. what propaganda are you referring to?

BuddhaFollower said:

One liberal propaganda is "international law".

International law = nonsense.

Coëmgenu said:

Not the most relevant to the post but who wants to stick on topic these day?

Malcolm wrote:

That never happens.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 11:26 PM

Title: Re: Do you think Trump will recognize Taiwan as a state?

Content:

DGA said:

1. what propaganda are you referring to?

BuddhaFollower said:

One liberal propaganda is "international law".

International law = nonsense.

Malcolm wrote:

They are not, actually. For example, when the US Government signs an agreement with another country, all the legal provisions in that agreement become part of US Law.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 10:27 PM

Title: Re: Looking/feeling for "I"

Content:

rachmiel said:

Look for "I" ... and there is no-thing there.

And yet ... going about my daily life, "I" reveals itself in so many ways: thoughts, actions, fears, hopes.

What kind of a "thing" is this ... disappears on observation, yet drives the organism?

Malcolm wrote:

A habit of imputing a nonexistent permanent identity onto an impermanent set of aggregates.

For example, we use the identity "car" in order to drive one, but when examined no car can be found either together with its parts, separate from its parts, or within one part.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 10:03 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

binocular said:

It's an order that castrates people and takes away the meaning of life for many, if not most of them.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, in your opinion, not in mine. People have to wake up and understand that human beings have only one planet on which we live. They also have to understand that we all come from a very small population of humans that survived a global cataclysm 75,000 years ago.

The concept of races and nations is increasingly anachronistic. The various creeds in the world need to get along through recognition of a common ethical foundation, as HH Dalai Lama says:

Today, however, any religion-based answer to the problem of our neglect of inner values can never be universal, and so will be inadequate. What we need today is an approach to ethics which makes no recourse to religion and can be equally acceptable to those with faith and those without: a secular ethics.

Dalai Lama, H.H. (2011-12-06). Beyond Religion: Ethics for a Whole World . Mariner Books. Kindle Edition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 9:51 PM

Title: Re: Do you think Trump will recognize Taiwan as a state?

Content:

Rakz said:

That's too bad. Do you want a safe space?

Have you been to the rustbelt? The area used to be prosperous with many decent paying jobs and strong middle class. You go there now and is full of crime, drugs, and poverty. We don't need to declare war to see what hell looks like, we already have it here. The people living there used to carry themselves with self respect by working hard and supporting their families with their hard earned wealth. Now they live from government handout to handout. Barely making it. That is like a dog's existence.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, but this is a result of the failure of American companies to meet the efficiencies found in other countries. In short, these manufacturing jobs are never going to come back to the rust belt, just as textile jobs are never coming back to New England. You should go take a look at Lawrence, Lowell, and Holyoke, MA, and Manchester, NH if you want to see another, older version of an American industry that feel on hard times because it was not nimble enough to adapt to changing world economic conditions. The same thing happened to the British Midlands.

The most expensive part of manufacturing is the price of human labor. The comparative advantage of labor costs on other countries, compared to the US, is too high for corporations to ignore. At the same time, we are giving corporations massive tax incentives (aka corporate welfare), shifting the burdens of their cost on the taxpayers. Corporate welfare in this country exceeds the social welfare you mention above by hundreds of billions of dollars in tax deferments, write-offs, and so on. And Trump, in his ineffable wisdom, wants to slash corporate tax rates from 35% to 15%. This might help small mom and pop businesses a little (well, until the recession hits us that Trump's policies will inevitably cause), but it will mean billions of dollars in less revenue to run the government and pay for roads, bridges, police, fire departments, schools, and so on.

Your economic nationalism will do nothing but impoverish everyone further, tipping us over into Hunger Games territory in the long run. Your economic nationalism, which will privatize all services, etc., will just in the long run create huge blocks controlled by corporations, rather than governments, as in like Rollerball.

Frankly, the anger you feel is you not recognizing how you've been manipulated; but deep down underneath, your anger is an expression of your underlying anxiety that old boss is the same as the new boss.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 12:13 PM

Title: Re: Do you think Trump will recognize Taiwan as a state?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Large corporations are the #1 welfare queens.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, and Trump is their new sugar daddy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 12:12 PM

Title: Re: Do you think Trump will recognize Taiwan as a state?

Content:

The Cicada said:

Americans possess a deep-seated quality for whining and complaining that is mostly absent from the Mexican disposition. That disposition is the keystone of our democracy. Thus, the people of Mexico have tolerated the abuses that their upper-class has heaped upon them for quite some time and will likely continue to do so until they find their own solution to their problems.

Malcolm wrote:

You really have no idea about Mexico at all. You should visit Mexico. You might learn something.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 10:04 AM

Title: Re: Do you think Trump will recognize Taiwan as a state?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

To be fair, he reportedly played a large role in stopping the Carrier corporation from outsourcing out of America.

Malcolm wrote:

Um, no...check into it. Only 700 jobs are staying here, at the cost of 7 million dollars in tax breaks...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 10:03 AM

Title: Re: Do you think Trump will recognize Taiwan as a state?

Content:

DGA said:

Behold, ladies and gentlemen: the Trump team "draining the swamp"

Malcolm wrote:

I wonder how long it will take Rakz to experience Trumpgret.

Rakz said:

NEVER. I reject all liberal propaganda. He will not let the American working man down.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, he already has. For example, the Carrier deal was based on a 7 million dollar tax break that Indiana taxpayers have to swallow...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 10:01 AM

Title: Re: Do you think Trump will recognize Taiwan as a state?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Another point is that American workers are incredibly lazy compared to Mexicans and so on.

The Cicada said:

Reverse racism...

Malcolm wrote:

Apparently you have never been to Mexico, http://www.businessinsider.com/united-tech-ceo-says-trump-deal-will-lead-to-more-automation-fewer-jobs-2016-12?utm_content=buffer5c68f&utm_medium=social&utm_source=facebook.com&utm_campaign=buffer:

JIM CRAMER: What's good about Mexico? What's good about going there? And obviously what's good about staying here?

GREG HAYES: So what's good about Mexico? We have a very talented workforce in Mexico. Wages are obviously significantly lower. About 80% lower on average. But absenteeism runs about 1%. Turnover runs about 2%. Very, very dedicated workforce.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 7:05 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

dreambow said:

Islam definitely contributed to the destruction of Buddhism after Nalanda they continued plundering.

Widespread and almost industrial scale destruction of temples, places of worship. The word 'butshikan' gets coined meaning destroyer of Buts (or Buddhas)

Widespread looting and excessive taxation - Entrenchment of local zamindars, imposition of jizya (tax on non-Muslim subjects). Religion inspired violence, mass forced conversions. They also played a big part in the slave trade. Also an introduction of Persian as the official language. I have to mention Aurangzeb who was a religious zealot and the 'sword of Islam', one of the cruellest emperors out of an assortment of ruthless leaders.

Malcolm wrote:

And Muslims are responsible for introducing Europeans to the Upanishads, etc. Muslim regimes in general tended to be more tolerant than Christian ones, etc.

If you try to paint Islam with a single brush as you have done here, how can anyone assume you are free of bias?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 3:24 AM

Title: Re: Do you think Trump will recognize Taiwan as a state?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Economic nationalism in the US will be good for the US...

Malcolm wrote:

No, it won't, which is why we abandoned the American system (mercantilism) for the British system (international capitalism) in the late 19th century.

To put it plainly, manufacturing jobs are never coming back to the US.

Another point is that American workers are incredibly lazy compared to Mexicans and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 3:14 AM

Title: Re: Do you think Trump will recognize Taiwan as a state?

Content:

DGA said:

Behold, ladies and gentlemen: the Trump team "draining the swamp"

Malcolm wrote:

I wonder how long it will take Rakz to experience Trumpgret.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 2:52 AM

Title: Re: "Tshogs kyi mchog"

Content:

Temicco said:

In the refuge recitation, why is "supreme assembly" written "tshogs kyi mchog"?

Given how adjectives are ordered, wouldn't it be either "tshogs mchog" or "mchog kyi tshogs"?

I've also seen the whole phrase written "tshogs kyi mchog dge 'dun" which makes more sense if the 'brel sgra is marking apposition rather than connecting an adjective. But most versions I've seen don't include the "dge 'dun".

Thoughts?

Malcolm wrote:

It is literally, "Supreme among assemblies, the Sangha." So yes, it is appositional. 'brel sgra have varied uses, not always strictly conforming to our notion of the genitive.

Temicco said:

Good to know; my textbook's examples of its use aren't very varied.

I think I get it now. It seems ultimately unimportant here whether "mchog" is acting as a noun or an adjective; the meaning is the same and it is syntactically trivial here. The phrase could seemingly also be translated as a superlative, although that would be unnecessary given that the closer English translation is natural and grammatical. Is all that true?

Malcolm wrote:

Your textbook does not give idiomatic usages.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 2:28 AM

Title: Re: Do you think Trump will recognize Taiwan as a state?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Economic nationalism in the US will be good for the US...

Malcolm wrote:

No, it won't, which is why we abandoned the American system (mercantilism) for the British system (international capitalism) in the late 19th century.

To put it plainly, manufacturing jobs are never coming back to the US.

Queequeg said:

Well, if we do have real economic nationalism implemented, we will see soon enough.

Malcolm wrote:

It will never happen, the house has already stated it to be so. Trump and his cabinet may be throwbacks, but our government remains firmly committed to neoliberalism. Why? Because that is what corporations want.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 2:21 AM

Title: Re: Do you think Trump will recognize Taiwan as a state?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Economic nationalism in the US will be good for the US...

Malcolm wrote:

No, it won't, which is why we abandoned the American system (mercantilism) for the British system (international capitalism) in the late 19th century.

To put it plainly, manufacturing jobs are never coming back to the US.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 2:09 AM

Title: Re: Looking/feeling for "I"

Content:

rachmiel said:

So feelings -- gut feelings, intuition, heart, innate knowing -- are, for you, nothing more than cosmetically enhanced concepts?

Malcolm wrote:

Feelings are a mental factor, all mental factors are concepts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 2:08 AM

Title: Re: Do you think Trump will recognize Taiwan as a state?

Content:

Queequeg said:

I am sure they were counting on another passive US administration with regard to Asia policy. Asian allies are probably nervous but hopeful that the US will flex its muscle in Asia. As an Asia-watcher, it is long over due.

Malcolm wrote:

We have never had a passive policy with respect to China. Our people wanted cheap shit, so we made a deal with China for them to manufacture all the crap people buy at Walmart. Messing with China hurts our economy more than theirs.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 12:44 AM

Title: Re: Looking/feeling for "I"

Content:

rachmiel said:

Ach Du liebes Madhyamakakarika!

Malcolm wrote:

No, being honest. When looking for something with the conceptual mind, you will never find anything but concepts. Since there is no other mind with which to investigate, well, draw your own conclusion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 12:17 AM

Title: Re: Looking/feeling for "I"

Content:

rachmiel said:

So even when you feel for an I ... all that arises is: concept?

What about in the midst of a strong emotion? Let's say one of your patients walked up to you and spat hatefully in your face. Would there be no sense of "How dare they do this to ME?!" in your reaction?

Malcolm wrote:

Which is just a concept.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, December 7th, 2016 at 12:08 AM

Title: Re: Looking/feeling for "I"

Content:

rachmiel said:

When I look for "I" there is no-thing there. It's like looking at "solid" matter: the deeper you look the more the solidity goes away and you're left with ... no-thing (except, perhaps, energy).

It's different if I feel for my self/I. It takes a while, but I usually end up feeling a sense of ground, home, rightness.

What do you see when you look and feel for "I" ... ?

Malcolm wrote:
A concept.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, December 6th, 2016 at 9:15 PM
Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?
Content:
dreambow said:
No jihad wasn't on the agenda, just pointing out some info.

Malcolm wrote:
Your info about Islam is incorrect. Trying reading Buddhism and Islam on the Silk Road by Johan Elverskog.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, December 6th, 2016 at 9:10 PM
Title: Re: Do you think Trump will recognize Taiwan as a state?
Content:
Coëmgenu said:
I'll be honest here. I am 90% sure that Trump accepting Taiwan's call was an ridiculous blunder on his part. I don't think he had any idea that what he was doing would be even slightly controversial.

But it seems like he is doubling down on it.

I am not a Trump fan, but if one good thing comes out of this mess, increased recognition of Taiwan's sovereignty could be that.

Malcolm wrote:
Sure, war with China is always a great idea...

Rakz said:
Nobody is going war with China. This is just more liberal fear mongering, but a war with the communist hellhole would be brilliant. Bomb their factories and decimate their economy like they have decimated ours. After they are brought down to their knees, replace their communist dictatorship with a democracy that respects basic human rights. That way the Tibetans can also reclaim their sovereignty which you probably support.

Malcolm wrote:
Buddhist advocating for war are an abomination.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, December 6th, 2016 at 10:22 AM
Title: Re: Best Wrathful Deity to use against malicious spirits?
Content:

MiphamFan said:
In translations of Hindu tantra, I've seen "fierce" used more often than wrathful and IIRC there was a Buddhist translator of Tibetan who also thinks "fierce" is more appropriate.

Malcolm wrote:
krodha: 1 krodha m. anger , wrath , passion VS. xxx , 14 AV. S3Br. &c. ; (ifc. f. %A) Amar. ; Anger (personified as a child of Lobha and Nikr2iti ; or of Death ; or of Brahma1) VP. ; N. of a Da1nava MBh. i , 2543 Hariv. ; of the mystic syllable %hum} or %hrUM} , Ra1mat Up. ; (%A) f. N. of one of the thirteen daughters of Daksha and wife of Kas3yapa MBh. i , 2520 Hariv. ; (%I) f. (in music) N. of a S3ruti ; (%am) n. N. of the fifty-ninth year of the sixty years "" Br2ihaspati cycle VarBr2S.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, December 6th, 2016 at 9:17 AM
Title: Re: Do you think Trump will recognize Taiwan as a state?
Content:

Coëmgenu said:
I'll be honest here. I am 90% sure that Trump accepting Taiwan's call was an ridiculous blunder on his part. I don't think he had any idea that what he was doing would be even slightly controversial.

But it seems like he is doubling down on it.

I am not a Trump fan, but if one good thing comes out of this mess, increased recognition of Taiwan's sovereignty could be that.

Malcolm wrote:
Sure, war with China is always a great idea...

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, December 6th, 2016 at 9:01 AM
Title: Re: Emptiness
Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:
Inherent existence does not exist at all, but it appears to mind.

Malcolm wrote:

Um no. Common people do not have concept "Inherent existence." It is a philosophical idea, not a common idea. The idea that common people have is "this [entity] exists." Inherent existence is not an appearance to the mind. Even Tsongkhapa admits this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 6th, 2016 at 8:38 AM

Title: Re: Best Wrathful Deity to use against malicious spirits?

Content:

crazy-man said:

Avalokiteśvara, spyen ras gzigs.

only the bodhisattva who embodies the compassion of all Buddhas can ultimately do this

In this world Hate never yet dispelled hate. Only love dispels hate. This is the law, Ancient and inexhaustible.

Buddha, Dhammapada

Malcolm wrote:

The wrathful form of Avalokiteśvara is the wrathful deity Hāyagriva.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 6th, 2016 at 5:27 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

dreambow said:

"at the same time preserving a harmonious balance in different regions of the world that respect their culture and diversity." Greed, Christianity and Islam have done more to destroy diversity in India, Africa and South America, brow beating, proselytising, and its still a work in progress. I forgot to mention Papua New Guinea where every second male is now named Pious or Mathew.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, so lets get all hot under the collar and wage a jihad against all those evil christians and muslims. Sure, that will really bring peace into the world. Have you even read HH Dalai Lama's point of view about these things?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 6th, 2016 at 3:17 AM

Title: Re: "Tshogs kyi mchog"

Content:

Temicco said:

In the refuge recitation, why is "supreme assembly" written "tshogs kyi mchog"?

Given how adjectives are ordered, wouldn't it be either "tshogs mchog" or "mchog kyi tshogs"?

I've also seen the whole phrase written "tshogs kyi mchog dge 'dun" which makes more sense if the 'brel sgra is marking apposition rather than connecting an adjective. But most versions I've seen don't include the "dge 'dun".

Thoughts?

Malcolm wrote:

It is literally, "Supreme among assemblies, the Sangha." So yes, it is appositional. 'brel sgra have varied uses, not always strictly conforming to our notion of the genitive.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 6th, 2016 at 2:22 AM

Title: Re: Original teachings of Padmasambhava and their reception in Tibet

Content:

AlexanderS said:

I believe guru rinpoche transcends any mundane reality.

BuddhaFollower said:

This is my position.

Malcolm wrote:

Having a position means you are primordially screwed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 6th, 2016 at 2:21 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Hence the necessity of grounding social ethics in secular rather than religious values...

binocular said:

It's not clear how this can be done without such secular ethics being that very same materialistic value system that lead to the current problems of poverty, pollution etc. to begin with.

Malcolm wrote:

It would be a mistaken to equate secular ethics with capitalism. The point is that religions, including Buddhism, themselves do not address the total needs of the global population. The needs of our planet require us to go beyond the constraints of nations, religions, and borders, while at the same time preserving a harmonious balance in different regions of the world that respect their culture and diversity. A tall order, hopefully we will someday get there.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 6th, 2016 at 1:46 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Lukeinaz said:

Another seeming contradiction I find within this system is that emptiness is dependent on the thing it is empty of.

For instance, if I am analyzing the table and get a sense of this object of negation, the inherent existence of this table, I am then able to realize that the table exists in no such way.

So how can emptiness depend on inherent existence if inherent existence does not exist at all?

Malcolm wrote:

This all just points to the limitations of words and intellectual analysis. The reason why common Mahāyāna is a slow path is that it largely depends on words and analysis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, December 6th, 2016 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

binocular said:

It's not clear whether you can help people without also pushing them toward Buddhism -- which they could experience as an infringement on their religious freedom.

Malcolm wrote:

Hence the necessity of grounding social ethics in secular rather than religious values...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, December 5th, 2016 at 10:21 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

CapNCrunch said:

Just ordered my copy! What an accomplishment through merit, something worthy of praise and support! I feel so fortunate to have access to the texts of the transmission lineage in my mother tongue through the work of gifted translators. May you live long and have many more occasions to bless & inspire through your work, Malcolm!!!

Malcolm wrote:
Thanks again all.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, December 5th, 2016 at 10:20 PM
Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma
Content:
dreambow said:
Don't put so much emphasis on statistics as they can be changed, modified, manipulated. When it comes to figures like in accountancy, its often called 'creative accounting'.

Malcolm wrote:
Another poisoning of the well. The new normal in a post-fact world.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, December 5th, 2016 at 9:53 AM
Title: Re: Qualifications for giving empowerments
Content:
Lhasa said:
What is a major yidam retreat?

Malcolm wrote:
Hevajra, Kalacakra, Vajrayogini, Magyud, etc.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, December 5th, 2016 at 6:01 AM
Title: Re: Best Wrathful Deity to use against malicious spirits?
Content:
Tirisilex said:
What is the best Wrathful Deity to use against wrathful spirits that are bothering someone?

Malcolm wrote:
The one you have practiced the most.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, December 5th, 2016 at 5:24 AM
Title: Re: Qualifications for giving empowerments

Content:
Dharmaswede said:
Wonderful, thank you for your prompt reply.

"a yidam" or " the yidam" (specific to the practice)?

Best,

Jens

Malcolm wrote:
A major Yidam. Sometimes Lamas give large collections of empowerments. There is no chance they have done the approach and accomplishment for every deity in that collection. In general, if you have done a major retreat, you can then given the transmission for any empowerment you have received.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, December 5th, 2016 at 5:08 AM
Title: Re: Qualifications for giving empowerments
Content:
Dharmaswede said:
This is admittedly a vague, ignorant, and broad question:

What are the qualifications for a teacher to give tantric empowerments in the Tibetan tradition?

(Apologies if this topic already has been sliced and diced in another thread, kindly provide a link if that is the case.)

Malcolm wrote:
In general, they must have received the empowerment they are going to give, as well as the instructions on how to do the practice. They must have accomplished at least a major yidam retreat or failing that, have received permission from their own guru to bestow that empowerment.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, December 5th, 2016 at 12:34 AM
Title: Re: Hello
Content:
TheNonduality said:
Hello!

My name is TheNonduality. I'm a Soto Zen monk on medical leave, and I'm super excited that I found this board! It's really hard to spend most of my year cloistered at a remote monastery and then be in the middle of a big city. So it's really nice to find a community of fellow practitioners to chat with about Buddhism.

As I said, I've been a Soto Zen Monk, but I've also spent time as a Rinzai Monk, and a Theravadan monk. That being said, I really love studying all forms of Buddhism. I've also spent a brief time training in Tendai and recently Hua Yen. I'm excited to get to know people here and engage in deep and meaningful discussions.

Malcolm wrote:

That only leave Sakya, Kagyu, Nyingma, Gelug, and Bon to go!

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 4th, 2016 at 10:58 PM

Title: Re: Incenses and power substances

Content:

PadmaDorje said:

I am studying a red deity Khyentse sadhana and it says at some point to burn power substances as incense.

Would anyone be so kind as to give me examples of what "powerful substances" are in this case?

Malcolm wrote:

Red sandalwood, for example.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 4th, 2016 at 10:57 PM

Title: Re: Original teachings of Padmasambhava and their reception in Tibet

Content:

heart said:

Yes, you are right, nutritional science is a joke. The history of Anthropology and Comparative Religion is pretty scary actually.

Malcolm wrote:

We can learn interesting things from text critical scholarship, but we should never mistake text criticism for history.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 4th, 2016 at 10:55 PM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

So did the Buddha ever address individuals who thought others to be less deserving of proper treatment on account of perceived negative past karma? Or is that misunderstanding a strictly modern departure from the dharma?

Malcolm wrote:

No and yes.

Coëmgenu said:

"No and yes" to if the Buddha ever addressed discrimination based on perceived karma or "no and yes" to if this misreading of the purpose and function of karma is a distinctly modern departure from the dharma?

Malcolm wrote:

You asked two questions: no to the first, yes to the second.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 4th, 2016 at 10:53 PM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Rakz said:

I find it sickening you won't even acknowledge the fact that divorce courts are in favor of women and instead blame it all on karma. Just because someone has made a poor choice doesn't give any court the right to unfairly treat that individual due to his or her gender. That's called sexism.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course they are in favor of women with children. Women typically experience a 73% loss in income after a divorce, well men typically experience a 43% boost in income. 40 percent of the households in the US headed by women live in poverty and more than half of impoverished children live with their mothers and not their fathers. For every dollar a man makes, a white women make 77 cents, a black women 63.5 cents, and hispanic woman makes 54 cents.

Thus, I contest your contention that the courts treat men unfairly in divorces. In fact, men, after a divorce, have far more advantages than their former spouses and children as we can see above. Moreover, only 61% of court-orderd child support is ever paid.

These are the facts.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 4th, 2016 at 9:58 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

So did the Buddha ever address individuals who thought others to be less deserving of proper treatment on account of perceived negative past karma? Or is that misunderstanding a strictly modern departure from the dharma?

Malcolm wrote:

No and yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 4th, 2016 at 8:30 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Rakz said:

You know better than they do? Do you have firsthand experience of what it is like to go through a divorce in the west as they have?

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, was taken to the cleaners too. But I am a man, not a child. So you know what? I don't complain because I am old school, not like these modern whiny man-babies of today.

Rakz said:

So you've supposedly been "taken to the cleaners" by your ex wife and you have not one negative thing to say about it? That's strange.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is not strange. It's called being a grown up. No one married her but me. My mistake, my karma. It's called "accepting to consequences of one's actions." It is also called being a man. But these days, there are simpering fools who think they can just appropriate the language of the oppressed because they're feelings have been hurt when they themselves should take responsibility in their own poor choices of partners.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 4th, 2016 at 6:41 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Rakz said:

You know better than they do? Do you have firsthand experience of what it is like to go through a divorce in the west as they have?

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, was taken to the cleaners too. But I am a man, not a child. So you know what? I don't complain because I am old school, not like these modern whiny man-babies of today.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 4th, 2016 at 6:21 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Rakz said:

You have a narrow minded view when it comes to the men's movement. I recommend this documentary for you.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, I think these guys are a bunch of [insert favorite Bill Maher insult here]. I have zero sympathy for them.

Rakz said:

Why shouldn't they be worthy of any sympathy?

Malcolm wrote:

If they were actually suffering from some real oppression, then I would have sympathy for them. But since they are behaving like hysterical children who are complaining of monsters they imagine to be under their bed...well, they are not children...so...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 4th, 2016 at 6:05 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Rakz said:

You have a narrow minded view when it comes to the men's movement. I recommend this documentary for you.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, I think these guys are a bunch of [insert favorite Bill Maher insult here]. I have zero sympathy for them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 4th, 2016 at 5:50 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Gyurme Kundrol said:

Even though white privilege is a thing, its not all its cracked up to be. Theres draw backs to being a white man...

For example in the eyes of society you have 0 excuse for not being successful and wealthy. Oh youre white? If your not wealthy/have a car/have a home then you are somehow a frak up and someone to avoid. People easily forgive anyone else for not having these things because of their disadvantages, but a white man without these? Worthless. Pathetic. A loser.

If you need help there are not organizations who will really help you. There is no support group. If you are gay you can easily find groups that will take you in, help you, take care of you. If you are a straight white male? Good luck! Same goes with other minorities who have groups focused solely on helping them. As a white man I've never been able to get help from anyone except immediate friends or family. The government could care less if I fall through the cracks, and there are no real groups that help white men that are easily accessible. You are basically laughed at and ignored if you need help as a white guy.

If you end up homeless as a white man? Well good luck with that! There's plenty of groups helping women, gays, youths and others but a white man? Again it goes back to this expectation that white = intelligent and competent and if you don't have it all you've done something terribly wrong.

So there's upsides and downsides, but it's not all cracked up to be. My main experience of being white is being held to an impossible standard that in my entire life I've never been able to live up to.

Malcolm wrote:

No different than being a black man or a latino man. Men have zero access to social services apart from food stamps. It is not a white man thing, it is a man thing. Also if you are a woman, it is the same, unless you have young kids. Of course, the amount of money spent on social services such as welfare are a tiny percentage of the budget, but no one ever notices this when they bitch about lack of access to social services they imagine "other" people have access to. In other words, your post is basically racist since you imagine you are being held up to a standard that people of color are not being held up to.

maybay said:

Another defiant use of the incendiary term "racist" where "prejudice" would suffice, and is clearly more representative of his post. Moreover, you've isolated the point about social services, the part government plays, which is only part of his grievance, and made a sharp edge of it.

Malcolm wrote:

When racist language is used, it is appropriate to term it racist. For example, there is a so called "men's movement" where men complain about how they are disadvantaged by their gender because of the success of the women's movement; but in reality they are basically upset that they cannot with impunity behave like sexist pigs anymore. When such complaints are lodged by such men, it is appropriate to call those complaints sexist. When an advantaged person complains that their advantage is a disadvantage by either ethnicity or gender, that complaint is either racist or sexist because it involves pointing out something undesirable about another race or a gender.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 4th, 2016 at 5:25 AM

Title: Re: Measurements of Mandala set

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Personally, I have never seen a wooden mandala set being used.

Malcolm wrote:

It was quite common in Tibet, which is why it is mentioned frequently in the literature.

But it needs to be large, to compensate for the mandala being made of inferior material.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 4th, 2016 at 5:21 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

It is a serious question, not a claim. I am trying to ascertain (in terms of cause/condition) how far down it is all reduced.

Malcolm wrote:

Caittas and cittas are always conditioned. Negative cittas are conditioned by negative caittas, which in turn are conditioned by afflicted caittas; positive cittas are conditioned by positive caittas, which are conditioned by positive caittas. Neutral cittas are conditioned by the ten neutral caittas, in absence of either positive or afflicted caittas. The minimum number of caittas a sentient being in desire realm can possess is twelve — the ten neutral caittas that accompany all minds or cittas in the desire realm, including coarse attention and sustained attention. That number decreases in the form and formless realm.

That said, even positive and neutral cittas and caittas are contaminated if they are not connected with the path dharma of the 37 adjuncts of awakening.

Sherab Dorje said:

Would it be true to say that ignorance is the ultimate cause of all afflicted relative mental states, positive or negative?

If Mahamudra/Dzogchen is unconditioned then it would not be associated with positive mental factors either. Right?

Malcolm wrote:

In order to arrive at the realization of either, one must have first given rise to five faculties (faith, diligence, mindfulness, samadhi and wisdom), the first set within the 37 factors of awakening. These five faculties are found with neutral (mindfulness, samadhi and wisdom) and positive mental factors (faith and diligence), and when combined with the right path, lead to eventual buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 4th, 2016 at 3:00 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That is a nonsequitur.

Sherab Dorje said:

It is a serious question, not a claim. I am trying to ascertain (in terms of cause/condition) how far down it is all reduced.

Malcolm wrote:

Caittas and cittas are always conditioned. Negative cittas are conditioned by negative caittas, which in turn are conditioned by afflicted caittas; positive cittas are conditioned by positive caittas, which are conditioned by positive caittas. Neutral cittas are conditioned by the ten neutral caittas, in absence of either positive or afflicted caittas. The minimum number of caittas a sentient being in desire realm can possess is twelve — the ten neutral caittas that accompany all minds or cittas in the desire realm, including coarse attention and sustained attention. That number decreases in the form and formless realm.

That said, even positive and neutral cittas and caittas are contaminated if they are not connected with the path dharma of the 37 adjuncts of awakening.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 4th, 2016 at 2:50 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

You said there are positive, negative and neutral volitions. You didn't say there is volition, and it can be conditioned by mental factors.

Malcolm wrote:

In fact I did say this

<https://www.dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=36&t=24243#p366715>:

Sherab Dorje said:

Oooops... sorry, didn't remember this one!

So now mental factors are the unconditioned dharmas?

Malcolm wrote:

That is a nonsequitur.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 4th, 2016 at 2:35 AM

Title: Re: Enlightened individuals as impossible to pin down linguistically

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This illustrates my point nicely.

Astus said:

It does illustrate the role of concepts in experience, but it also shows the presence of experience without conceptualisation.

Malcolm wrote:

No, experience is always conceptual. One has to be conceptually aware of something for to to be one's experience. It is fundamental fact of the meaning of the word in <https://en.oxforddictionaries.com/definition/experience>.

It is also the meaning of the word in Sanskrit, anubhū: "to notice , perceive , understand ; to experience , to attempt."

There is no such thing as an actual nonconceptual experience. A so called nonconceptual experience is one that is attended by a very subtle level of conceptuality, not entirely absent of conceptuality, just as formless means "very subtle matter" but not actually immaterial in fact.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 4th, 2016 at 2:12 AM

Title: Re: Measurements of Mandala set

Content:

Dharmaswede said:

Thank you.

By chance, do you happen to know of a source of wooden mandala sets?

Best,

Jens

Could someone kind send the measurements of a mandala set, i.e. the diameter and height of the base and the rings.

Thank you.

Best Regards,

Jens

Malcolm wrote:

If it is wood or clay, or some other base material, the width should be about a cubit.

It is made of copper it should measure the width between the tip of your outstretched thumb and the tip of the pinky.

A precious metal mandala can be very small.

M

You would have to make one yourself. The rings are optional and not practical when counting. Also you need a shrine mandala, generally, this one has the rings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 4th, 2016 at 2:06 AM

Title: Re: Original teachings of Padmasambhava and their reception in Tibet

Content:

MiphamFan said:

Pelliot 44 is a fragment of a text on Vajrakila from Dunhuang, which already links Padmasambhava to Vajrakila as well as Yeshe Tsogyal IIRC, as the later Vajrakila tradition says. Robert Mayer has written about it.

heart said:

So Padmasambhava is an existing person now? He was just a myth a few hours ago. (pelliot 44 is dated 800-900 A.D.)

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

It is kind if like butter. Butter for a long while was regarded as being the worst thing for your health ever. Then it was touted as the best thing ever. Now there is a swing back to saying it is the worst thing ever. Sentient beings are never satisfied.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 4th, 2016 at 2:01 AM

Title: Re: Measurements of Mandala set

Content:

Dharmaswede said:

Could someone kind send the measurements of a mandala set, i.e. the diameter and height of the base and the rings.

Thank you.

Best Regards,

Jens

Malcolm wrote:

If it is wood or clay, or some other base material, the width should be about a cubit.

It is made of copper it should measure the width between the tip of your outstretched thumb and the tip of the pinky.

A precious metal mandala can be very small.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, December 4th, 2016 at 1:52 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

You said there are positive, negative and neutral volitions. You didn't say there is volition, and it can be conditioned by mental factors.

Malcolm wrote:

In fact I did say this

<https://www.dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=36&t=24243#p366715>:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 3rd, 2016 at 11:03 PM

Title: Re: Namkhai Norbu and Vegetarianism

Content:

climb-up said:

Curious to hear thoughts on this.

Does that make me either a heretic or someone who should not be following the DC teachings?

Malcolm wrote:

We all work with all kinds of limitations all of the time. Some we impose on ourselves, like moral beliefs about diets, others are imposed upon us, such as lifespan, health and so on.

Being a Dzogchen practitioners means in part to recognize one's limitations and work with them.

There are no heretics.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 3rd, 2016 at 11:53 AM

Title: Re: Enlightened individuals as impossible to pin down linguistically

Content:

Astus said:

Or when for instance one is unexpectedly talked to, and when the words were spoken they were not comprehended, but when they're recalled right after that they become understandable.

Malcolm wrote:

This illustrates my point nicely.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 3rd, 2016 at 3:43 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Rakz said:

Some folks who believe in bs like "white privilege" would also agree that those who are born white have much better karma than those born with a darker skin pigmentation. It is kind of like the Hindu caste system which the Buddha completely rejected.

Gyurme Kundrol said:

Even though white privilege is a thing, its not all its cracked up to be. Theres draw backs to being a white man...

For example in the eyes of society you have 0 excuse for not being successful and wealthy. Oh youre white? If your not wealthy/have a car/have a home then you are somehow a frak up and someone to avoid. People easily forgive anyone else for not having these things because of their disadvantages, but a white man without these? Worthless. Pathetic. A loser.

If you need help there are not organizations who will really help you. There is no support group. If you are gay you can easily find groups that will take you in, help you, take care of you. If you are a straight white male? Good luck! Same goes with other minorities who have groups focused solely on helping them. As a white man Ive never been able to get help from anyone except immediate friends or family. The government could care less if I fall through the cracks, and there are no real groups that help white men that are easily accessible. You are basically laughed at and ignored if you need help as a white guy.

If you end up homeless as a white man? Well good luck with that! There's plenty of groups helping women, gays, youths and others but a white man? Again it goes back to this expectation that white = intelligent and competent and if you don't have it all you've done something terribly wrong.

So there's upsides and downsides, but it's not all cracked up to be. My main experience of being white is being held to an impossible standard that in my entire life I've never been able to live up to.

Malcolm wrote:

No different than being a black man or a latino man. Men have zero access to social services apart from food stamps. It is not a white man thing, it is a man thing. Also if you are a woman, it is the same, unless you have young kids. Of course, the amount of money spent on social services such as welfare are a tiny percentage of the budget, but no one ever notices this when they bitch about lack of access to social services they imagine "other" people have access to. In other words, your post is basically racist since you imagine you are being held up to a standard that people of color are not being held up to.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, December 3rd, 2016 at 2:33 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Where do these unconditioned "volitions" abide then?

Malcolm wrote:

Who said volitions were unconditioned? I already explained clearly that in general volitions were included in among the neutral mental factors, and were colored by their association with positive minds (composed of the ten positive mental factors) or negative minds (composed of the six afflicted mental factors and of negative mental factors).

In any case, anyone who wishes to understand karma and vipaka clearly is directed to read the Abhidharmakośa and its commentary.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 2nd, 2016 at 10:47 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

As mentioned before, I will be introducing the book over Facebook here, on Dec 14th, 6:30 P.M. EST:

<https://www.facebook.com/zangthal/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 2nd, 2016 at 10:19 PM

Title: Re: Enlightened individuals as impossible to pin down linguistically

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Secondly, direct perceptions are by definition nonconceptual, and are only experienced when they are coordinated through second order conceptual identification such as "this is blue," "this is red," and so on. We have many direct perceptions everyday which we never experience because we never notice them.

Astus said:

Do you say that one cannot be aware of one's environment without taking note of each element? That would make life quite difficult.

Malcolm wrote:

Awareness of our environment is a conceptual picture built up through familiarization. No one lives in the moment, apart from babies, who have not yet developed the conceptual framework to start organizing their direct perceptions into conceptual patterns and frames of reference. This is why a great deal of secular mindfulness literature and "live in the moment" slogans are total bunk.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 2nd, 2016 at 10:15 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Are you suggesting that money should be based on something like gold? The gold standard is a <http://www.theatlantic.com/business/archive/2012/08/why-the-gold-standard-is-the-worlds-worst-economic-idea-in-2-charts/261552/>:

Why would anyone want to go back to the bad old days? The gold standard limited central banks from printing money when economies needed central banks to print money, and limited governments from running deficits when economies needed governments to run deficits. It was a devilish device for turning recessions into depressions. The answer is that some people aren't worried about depressions. Some people are worried about inflation. Even when none exists. To them, these fetters are the feature, not a bug.

Gyurme Kundrol said:

Yes that is what I was suggesting. My understanding is that the economy is basically a bunch of fake money- not really backed by anything anymore. Its just...digits. Those digits have more value in some places on earth than others. They are backed maybe by labor, but thats a very ephemeral thing.

So I guess my question is... what is our money even based on anymore? It used to be based on gold and silver... now its just paper. Or so it seems!

Malcolm wrote:

I think you need to study some economic history. For example, the economic history of money, and the instability which is inevitable when the value of currency is pinned to a precious metal such as gold or silver, for example. So called commodity money is at the mercy of commodity prices, as history shows, when the Spaniards flooded the world markets with silver from Mexico:

For hundreds of years, China produced silk, porcelain, and tea to acquire a commodity, silver, which was needed to replace the paper notes that the government had made valueless. It was as if to buy a newspaper for a dollar one first had to make and sell something else to get the dollar banknote. Actually, it was worse: the silver stocks had to be constantly replenished, incurring further costs, because the metal was constantly worn away as it passed from hand to hand. (Paper money wears out, too, but costs next to nothing to replace.) Given the circumstances, acquiring the silver was entirely rational— it provided monetary stability. But it was also extremely costly. “Rather than pull silver out of their own ground (had China contained rich silver deposits, which it did not), the Chinese produced exports to buy silver that was pulled out of the ground somewhere else,” Flynn wrote in an e-mail to me. “Even scholars tend to impute mystical qualities to commodity monies like silver and gold, but we must recognize them as physical products that involve massive production costs. A significant hunk of the GDP of China— then the world’s biggest economy— was surrendered in order to secure a white metal that was produced mostly in Spanish America and Japan. Some people made enormous profits from doing this, but think about what else those resources could have been used for.”

Mann, Charles C. (2011-08-09). 1493: Uncovering the New World Columbus Created (pp. 162-163). Random House, Inc.. Kindle Edition.

Also, the cost of our exports was too high, and thus was the main reason we got off the gold standard...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 2nd, 2016 at 9:58 PM

Title: Re: Enlightened individuals as impossible to pin down linguistically

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

So you have become a substance dualist? Amazing.

Astus said:

I am merely curious how you synchronise your idea of all experiences being conceptual with the teachings, where for instance the teachings on the dhatus do not seem to agree with that.

Malcolm wrote:

For example, when we talk about a nonconceptual experience, we are actually talking about an experience that has very little concept attached to, but it is still a subtle conceptual experience, which why it is can be a deviation if the conceptuality is not recognized.

Secondly, direct perceptions are by definition nonconceptual, and are only experienced when they are coordinated through second order conceptual identification such as "this is blue," "this is red," and so on. We have many direct perceptions everyday which we never experience because we never notice them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 2nd, 2016 at 9:52 PM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Rakz said:

Some folks who believe in bs like "white privilege" would also agree that those who are born white have much better karma than those born with a darker skin pigmentation. It is kind of like the Hindu caste system which the Buddha completely rejected.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha did not reject the idea that people were born into higher and lower social classes as <http://www.accesstosight.org/tipitaka/mn/mn.135.nymo.html>:

"Beings are owners of karmas, student, heirs of karmas, they have karmas as their progenitor, karmas as their kin, karmas as their homing-place. It is karmas that differentiate beings according to inferiority and superiority."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 2nd, 2016 at 8:50 PM

Title: Re: Invocation for dakas and dakinis

Content:

cck123 said:

Hi friends,

do you know an invocation for dakinis like these for the dharmapalas? As i know dharmapalas as well as dakas/dakinis help on our way.

Dharmapalappractice is very usual, the dakinis i know are only yidam practice and not for beginners like me. Is there a reason for this?

Thanks for your answers!

Chris

Malcolm wrote:

There is such a thing as the general tormas offering of Ḍākinīs, very common in Sakya, Gelug and Kagyu.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 2nd, 2016 at 11:27 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You just answered your own question. In the first case, you are taking the five precepts out of deceit. This means that you have severed the root of the positive results from the start because your motivation is negative and therefore your action is negative. In the second, case, you have a positive motivation which leads you to do something positive for others. Thus the rule still applies.

You might want to brush up on the karma chapter of the Kosha.

Sherab Dorje said:

In which case there are no essentially/intrinsically positive or negative actions. They are conditioned by various factors. Motivation is one of the four recognized factors which condition the outcome of an action. That's all I have been saying the whole time.

Malcolm wrote:

Karma is volition. Those volitions can be positive, negative or neutral, and they will result in acts that are positive, negative, or neutral, with results that are correspondingly positive, negative or neutral.

Therefore, it is novel to claim that actions are neither positive or negative by nature since volition itself is action, and all volitions are positive, negative or neutral by nature.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 2nd, 2016 at 5:10 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Since derived actions of body and speech arise on the basis of positive or negative intentions which are themselves karma by definition, it is novel to claim that actions cannot be essentially positive or negative. For example, taking the five precepts is an essentially positive action whose ripening is essentially positive. Breaking the five precepts is an essentially negative action whose ripening is essentially negative.

Sherab Dorje said:

So if I keep the five precepts because I want to curry favor and deceitfully nab a swag of cash (for example) I am doing something essentially good. And if I break one of the five precepts in order to selflessly benefit sentient beings, I am doing something essentially bad.

Seriously?

I don't think so...

Malcolm wrote:

You just answered your own question. In the first case, you are taking the five precepts out of deceit. This means that you have severed the root of the positive results from the start because your motivation is negative and therefore your action is negative. In the second, case, you have a positive motivation which leads you to do something positive for others. Thus the rule still applies.

You might want to brush up on the karma chapter of the Kosha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 2nd, 2016 at 3:42 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

I feel like, conventionally, there will always be negative karma as long as there are deluded mindsets. That's a fair enough statement I think.

Given that it is believed to be delusion that brings rise to the mindset that is susceptible to "negative and positive" conceptualizations, as long as delusion exists so will there exist positive and negative karma, right?

Because delusion brings rise to the negative, and by bringing rise to the negative, so too is positive created. Basic Dàodéjīng right?

I don't really know if this is in line with the Buddhavacana though.

Malcolm wrote:

It is fairly straightforward, actually. Cetana by itself is a neutral mental factor. But it is colored, positively or negatively, by whether it is accompanied by positive mental factors or negative mental factors. Thus cetanas accompanied by positive mental factors are positive, cetanas accompanied by negative mental factors are negative. It's not hard to understand.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 2nd, 2016 at 2:42 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The nature of actions is determined by the motivation that drives them. Actions motivated by hatred, greed or ignorance are essentially negative and have negative results, measured by the relative amount of suffering the result of each entails.

Sherab Dorje said:

In which case there is no such thing as an ESSENTIALLY positive or negative action since the outcome of any action is conditioned by motivation (and other factors). So, if you are agreeing with me, why do you find the position novel?

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha, Nāgārjuna and Vasubandhu all say, "Action (karma) is volition (cetana) and what proceeds from volition."

Since derived actions of body and speech arise on the basis of positive or negative intentions which are themselves karma by definition, it is novel to claim that actions cannot be essentially positive or negative. For example, taking the five precepts is an essentially positive action whose ripening is essentially positive. Breaking the five precepts is an essentially negative action whose ripening is essentially negative.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 2nd, 2016 at 2:16 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Essentially there is no such thing as negative and positive karma...

Malcolm wrote:

Really? That is a novel position.

Sherab Dorje said:

Really? So you believe there are actions that are ESSENTIALLY (the word I used in the above quote) positive or negative? Seems like a novel position to me.

Malcolm wrote:

The nature of actions is determined by the motivation that drives them. Actions motivated by hatred, greed or ignorance are essential negative and have negative results, measured by the relative amount of suffering the result of each entails.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 2nd, 2016 at 2:13 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

Not all appearances are the same. You cannot say that the object of a wrong awareness that cannot perform the function that it appears to possess is the same as an object to a valid mind that does. I cannot drink the water of a mirage but I can put my cup on a table. Mirage water does not exist, tables do. From the point of view of the things that we normally see, all appearances are deceptive but we must distinguish between functioning appearance and that which doesn't exist at all.

Malcolm wrote:

One day Candrakīrti was walking through the halls of Nalanda and distracted by a book he was reading, bumped his head on a pillar. A student noticed this and said "Ha, that pillar is not empty, is it!"

Candra, having regained his composure, said "Sure it is," and passed his hand right through it.

One time, a geshe went to see Milarepa. Thinking that he could defeat Mila in debate, he asked Mila whether space was conditioned or unconditioned. Mila replied, "Certainly space is conditioned."

The geshe, now thinking that Mila was a great fool, began to refute him with citations and reasonings, while Mila sat quietly until the geshe was finished. Mila then picked up a stick from the ground, and began beating out a rhythm on space, which made a tremendous sound.

If I were you, I would not place so much confidence in so called "functional appearances."

Tsongkhapa said:

These are great stories, thank you. Chandrakīrti also drew milk from a picture of a cow on a wall.

What does this prove? There is no inherent existence; someone with control of their mind can determine their appearances. However, for ordinary beings, there are still perceptions informed by ignorance and perceptions informed by wisdom and there is therefore a clear difference: there are wrong and correct perceptions.

Malcolm wrote:

The point of these stories is conventional perception is not reliable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 2nd, 2016 at 2:00 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism, Social Equity, and odd interpretations of karma

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Essentially there is no such thing as negative and positive karma...

Malcolm wrote:

Really? That is a novel position.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, December 2nd, 2016 at 1:48 AM

Title: Re: Resources on Dharma Protectors

Content:

tingdzin said:

You know, Nebesky_Wojkowitz is supposed to have died prematurely after he write "Oracles and Demons". Maybe there's a reason people don't write a lot on this stuff.

Karinos said:

so did Losang Tsering (David Gonsalez) ...

but then seeing this as a punishment from Dharma protectors is silly unless you are engaged in some sort of demon cult (which I cannot name here)

I personally see these cases as examples of accumulating merit enough to liberate themselves from human existence and possibly cycling existence.

Malcolm wrote:

Or unless you break samayas feeling no shame.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 11:38 PM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Hallucinations are completely deceptive because their objects do not exist at all. Objects in dreams do not actually exist because they are mere appearances but they function. The water of a mirage, however, cannot function. There is this subtle distinction.

The objects of hallucinations are not mere appearances because they are non-existents.

Malcolm wrote:

They exist as appearances, no different from any other appearance. You are heading into the rough when you start distinguishing appearances on the basis of correspondence to external objects which exist.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Not all appearances are the same. You cannot say that the object of a wrong awareness that cannot perform the function that it appears to possess is the same as an object to a valid mind that does. I cannot drink the water of a mirage but I can put my cup on a table. Mirage water does not exist, tables do. From the point of view of the things that we normally see, all appearances are deceptive but we must distinguish between functioning appearance and that which doesn't exist at all.

Malcolm wrote:

One day Candrakīrit was walking through the halls of Nalanda and distracted by a book he was reading, bumped his head on a pillar. A student noticed this and said "Ha, that pillar is not empty, is it!"

Candra, having regained his composure, said "Sure it is," and passed his hand right through it.

One time, a geshe went to see Milarepa. Thinking that he could defeat Mila in debate, he asked Mila whether space was conditioned or unconditioned. Mila replied, "Certainly space is conditioned."

The geshe, now thinking that Mila was a great fool, began to refute him with citations and reasonings, while Mila sat quietly until the geshe was finished. Mila then picked up a stick from the ground, and began beating out a rhythm on space, which made a tremendous sound.

If I were you, I would not place so much confidence in so called "functional appearances."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 11:29 PM

Title: Re: Calexit?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

We have Tesla. We can have a death ray.

Coëmgenu said:

I am highly unexposed to American culture. What do you mean by this? Tesla's death ray was never designed. It never existed. It is impossible to exist by the metrics that Tesla set forth for its building. Or did you mean "death ray" metaphorically?

Malcolm wrote:

I am pretty sure CW is referring to the company, not Nikolai Tesla...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 10:34 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

maybay said:

Tenpa Rinpoche wrote a blog post about how he thought he could engage with anger constructively, and turn it around to his enlightened will.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think Bill Cassidy is really someone you want to cite as an example of enlightened will.

Interesting blog? Sometimes. Awakened tulku? That depends on whether are you a rube or not. You are obviously a rube.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 10:32 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

maybay said:

Whether you do nothing or everything, ultimately it doesn't make the slightest difference, and when you recognise that - you have found contentment.

Malcolm wrote:

Thus nihilism...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 10:07 PM

Title: Re: Innovative ways of mantra counting

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you are not using a proper mala, in secret, it does not matter how mantras you count. They don't count. Only mantras counted in formal sessions count. But hey, we know that people are very fond of criticizing others for following traditions that have no basis in the teachings, while embracing novel traditions they make up on the spot.

aparajita said:

That's because some of the distinctions seem distinctly scholastic and/or like they were made up by people who need perfectly precise answers to questions when "Maybe, maybe not. Depends on the circumstances." is the only reasonable answer that can be supplied. All of those things are entirely secondary and making them the standard of whether a recitation counts or not almost literally puts the cart before the horse by making the supporting factors more important than the thing they're supposed to support.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they are not entirely secondary. If they were, imperatives such as not displaying images and paintings, and samaya articles such as the vajra, bell, mālā and so on, would not have been proclaimed by masters in the past. We may live in the time of the five degenerations, but that does not mean we have to be degenerates with respect to how to properly observe samayas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 9:14 PM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

As mere appearance to mind, like in a dream. Dream things appear and function, which is different to things that do not exist at all and do not function, such as the water of a mirage.

Malcolm wrote:

Hallucinations are also mere appearances to a mind, like a dream; during a hallucination, things seem to function.

Tsongkhapa said:

Hallucinations are completely deceptive because their objects do not exist at all. Objects in dreams do not actually exist because they are mere appearances but they function. The water of a mirage, however, cannot function. There is this subtle distinction.

The objects of hallucinations are not mere appearances because they are non-existents.

Malcolm wrote:

They exist as appearances, no different from any other appearance. You are heading into the rough when you start distinguishing appearances on the basis of correspondence to external objects which exist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 9:37 AM

Title: Re: When does counting mantras count?

Content:

dreambow said:

If you deeply believe in tra la la it'll take you there. My point being that somewhere along the way when the time is right/ripe you may drop it. Its spontaneous not something thought through.

Malcolm wrote:

This might have currency in some new age circles, but it has nothing to do with how mantra is understood in Vajrayāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 9:25 AM

Title: Re: taking samaya pills

Content:

Jangchup Donden said:

So I'm curious as to the best method for taking samaya pills. Should you let it dissolve your mouth, chew, or swallow immediately? Or does it not matter?

Malcolm wrote:

samaya pills? You mean pills for purifying samaya? If so, you just scrape of a little.

Jangchup Donden said:

Probably using the wrong terminology. Maybe medicine pills? The little things given away at the end of some blessing ceremonies/empowerments.

Malcolm wrote:

You mean bdud rtsi sman sgrub. It depends on lineage. Some are for use in the inner offering, others are liberation through taste. You need to ask.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 9:24 AM

Title: Re: taking samaya pills

Content:

Karma Jinpa said:

Garchen Rinpoche says to swallow blessing pills whole, while visualizing the seed-syllable of the deity inside them.

The pouches Rinpoche gives at his empowerments are supposed to last one year if you swallow one pill each day. They can be taken with water and one's other medicines, according to him.

Malcolm wrote:

Those are myong grol, liberation through taste.

There are all kinds of pills. You need to find out which one this person is actually asking about.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 9:23 AM

Title: Re: Enlightened individuals as impossible to pin down linguistically

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That consciousness is nonconceptual is not even slightly debatable. Conceptuality, and hence, experience, is the function of the caittas. Cittas are nonconceptual.

Astus said:

The physical senses and their objects are neither mind nor mental phenomena. In other words, 10 of the 18 realms are not even mental, and the 5 sensory consciousnesses are not mental phenomena, consequently the 15 dhatus related to the form aggregate cannot be conceptual. If you say that the five matter related functions of mind do not occur on their own, then you assume there are two instances of consciousness at the same time.

Malcolm wrote:

So you have become a substance dualist? Amazing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 9:19 AM

Title: Re: Calexit?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

California supported Reagan and Nixon. CA as a blue state is a new deal. It has a deeply conservative SoCal and farmland contingent. It wouldn't necessarily change anything. But as far as CA has no say in who becomes president despite our gigantic size, tells me, the USA doesn't need or want us. So frak the USA. We can arm as quickly as Japan. We have all the best engineers and all the resources we need. We have Tesla. We can have a death ray. We have smarter people. California could be a superpower.

Malcolm wrote:

Like everywhere else in the US, most of the smarter people are immigrants.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 9:15 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

These idiots have no idea what they're doing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 9:12 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Neither can be established as existing from their own side, but they do exist.

Malcolm wrote:

In what way?

Tsongkhapafan said:

As mere appearance to mind, like in a dream. Dream things appear and function, which is different to things that do not exist at all and do not function, such as the water of a mirage.

Malcolm wrote:

Hallucinations are also mere appearances to a mind, like a dream; during a hallucination, things seem to function.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 9:10 AM

Title: Re: When does counting mantras count?

Content:

dreambow said:

Mantra is beneficial and a tool used to subdue the chattering mind.

Malcolm wrote:

If that is all you think it is, you might as well plug your ears and recite lalalalalalalalalalalalala...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 6:01 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

If you cannot establish conditioned phenomena or unconditioned phenomena...

Malcolm wrote:

Nāgarjuna proves neither can be established:

Since arising, abiding and perishing cannot be established, the conditioned cannot be established.

Since the condition can never be established, how can the unconditioned ever be established?

Tsongkhapafan said:

Neither can be established as existing from their own side, but they do exist.

Malcolm wrote:

In what way?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 5:48 AM

Title: Re: Enlightened individuals as impossible to pin down linguistically

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In order for something to be experienced, it has to be noticed by the mind.

Astus said:

Then you're saying that the sensory consciousnesses do not exist, so there is only one sensory area, in which case it makes no sense to list six. But then, you should not have written that the sensory consciousnesses are non-conceptual. Furthermore, then what is the difference between visual perception and thoughts? Even Yogacara accepts the five sensory phenomena as distinct from thoughts.

Malcolm wrote:

In reality there aren't six. There is only one. The different names for sense consciousness do not describe six different consciousness, they describe one functioning through six different sense organs, for example, like a monkey in a house with six or eight windows.

That consciousness is nonconceptual is not even slightly debatable. Conceptuality, and hence, experience, is the function of the caittas. Cittas are nonconceptual.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 5:44 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

maybay said:

You don't need to read Tibetan or meet a nomad personally to know about their culture.

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, actually you do. Otherwise, you are just an armchair bore waffling on about things of which you have no experience.

maybay said:

Appeal to consequence fallacy.

Malcolm wrote:

It's like wine. Unless you have tasted, you cannot speak about it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 5:37 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

boda said:

You are apparently arguing that disadvantaged people in society should accept their situation.

maybay said:

A lot of disadvantaged people have, for the most part, accepted their situation.

Malcolm wrote:

So let's just leave them that way. It is so much f@%king easier than assuring they have good educations, healthcare, job protection, equitable housing, and a clean environment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 4:43 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

maybay said:

The Buddha used metaphors in his teachings according to who he was speaking to, not according to the class he was born into.

Malcolm wrote:

And you are confident of this for what reason that is hidden to ordinary mortals?

maybay said:

Because I read the sutras. Its common knowledge to anyone who does the same.

Through his deep meditative attainments and his enlightened wisdom, the Buddha had the special ability to discover the precise way to teach the people who came to him for guidance. He could read deep into the hidden recesses of a person's heart, perceive that person's aptitudes and interests, and frame his teaching in the exact way needed to transform that person and lead him or her on to the path of freedom. Bhikkhu Bodhi

Malcolm wrote:

This does not preclude the Buddha from speaking about things according to the class to which he was born.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 4:41 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

maybay said:

Disingenuous correlation. You just want to shout down the idea by painting me as an anachronistic snob. Well its not my idea.

Malcolm wrote:

No, I am just pointing out that you are talking out of your ass since you don't read Tibetan and have never met an actual Tibetan nomad.

maybay said:

You don't need to read Tibetan or meet a nomad personally to know about their culture.

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, actually you do. Otherwise, you are just an armchair bore waffling on about things of which you have no experience.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 4:36 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Tirisilex said:

Svātantrika and Prasāṅgika

Malcolm wrote:

Are a Tibetan category, applied with considerable inaccuracy to Indian Madhyamaka.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 4:36 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

If you cannot establish conditioned phenomena or unconditioned phenomena...

Malcolm wrote:

Nāgārjuna proves neither can be established:

Since arising, abiding and perishing cannot be established, the conditioned cannot be established.

Since the condition can never be established, how can the unconditioned ever be established?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 4:33 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

I'll tell ya what whiteness is. The ability to set up the entire population in a huge scam.

Mnuchin tapped for Treasury. REITs fall. Why? He is central to the housing crash of 2008.

Trump is setting up for the biggest pump and dump scam EVER! The biggest insider trade EVER! Those who will end up with the losses are betting against the inevitable and hold to hope they will be in the winners' camp. Even when they know they are the losers, they will act like they are winners. And they will trash everyone else. That's whiteness in America.

Gyurme Kundrol said:

Yeah its coming. Its over due really. People have no clue about how the economy works.

I dont really either, but my general idea is this: Print a bunch of fake monopoly money, use it for awhile. Then orchestrate a crisis so all the fake money disappears and nobody notices its monopoly money. Then rinse and repeat...

Malcolm wrote:

Are you suggesting that money should be based on something like gold? The gold standard is a <http://www.theatlantic.com/business/archive/2012/08/why-the-gold-standard-is-the-worlds-worst-economic-idea-in-2-charts/261552/>:

Why would anyone want to go back to the bad old days? The gold standard limited central banks from printing money when economies needed central banks to print money, and limited governments from running deficits when economies needed governments to run deficits. It was a devilish device for turning recessions into depressions. The answer is that some people aren't worried about depressions. Some people are worried about inflation. Even when none exists. To them, these fetters are the feature, not a bug.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 3:08 AM

Title: Re: Alt-right coming out of their ugly closet.

Content:

Minobu said:

...it must be hard dealing with the inarticulate and other rabble like me who inflict this sort of punishment upon your person..

Malcolm wrote:

I don't type particularly fast, and rather poorly at that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 3:07 AM

Title: Re: taking samaya pills

Content:

Jangchup Donden said:

So I'm curious as to the best method for taking samaya pills. Should you let it dissolve your mouth, chew, or swallow immediately? Or does it not matter?

Malcolm wrote:

samaya pills? You mean pills for purifying samaya? If so, you just scrape of a little.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 2:06 AM

Title: Re: When does counting mantras count?

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

Also, I wonder what is the point of suggesting that what Sherab Dorje's teachers have told him about these things is wrong?

Malcolm wrote:

This discussion is not about what Greg does, nor whatever he has been told by his teachers.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, December 1st, 2016 at 1:56 AM

Title: Re: Alt-right coming out of their ugly closet.

Content:

Minobu said:

Yeah well without a higher state , the secular could be just another muggle waving a placard.

Malcolm wrote:

Not that interested in higher states. Definitely interested in preserving as much life on the planet as possible.

Minobu said:

higher states of mind and body ,for me , is the goal of practicing any form of Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think there are higher and lower states. I think there are afflictive and nonafflictive states. Whether one is afflicted or not, helping other sentient beings is more important than one's own goals.

Minobu said:

you might disagree and i would welcome that, for your one liners in answer to me just sort of fall in the category of "Classic Nirvana Fallacy" , and it creates a sort of slumming for my use of the word Nirvana.

Malcolm wrote:

My time constraints require brevity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 11:04 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

PuerAzaelis said:

@ Kim a great blog post by one of my favorite authors. Nevertheless militancy is part of the language of resistance. Without it don't we become doormats? And I don't want to be a doormat. Ghandhi and Martin Luther King were "warriors" of "ahimsa". Paradoxical but true. If the word is in our language I say we use it for the sake of dharma, like Trungpa.

Malcolm wrote:

The language of Buddhadharma is kitted out in all kinds of martial metaphors. The Buddha, in this dispensation, was after all a member of the warrior class.

maybay said:

The Buddha used metaphors in his teachings according to who he was speaking to, not according to the class he was born into.

Malcolm wrote:

And you are confident of this for what reason that is hidden to ordinary mortals?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 11:03 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

maybay said:

The warrior features prominently in Tibetan nomadic culture where it is not defined by the appearance of violence, but by the quality of bravery.

Malcolm wrote:

You have apparently never met any Tibetan nomads. Thus you suffer from the noble savage bias.

maybay said:

Disingenuous correlation. You just want to shout down the idea by painting me as an anachronistic snob. Well its not my idea.

Malcolm wrote:

No, I am just pointing out that you are talking out of your ass since you don't read Tibetan and have never met an actual Tibetan nomad.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 10:58 PM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Jeff H said:

...some of us are on a lower path which we need to cultivate fully before we are ready for more advanced direction.

Malcolm wrote:

Anyone who properly enters Vajrayāna should have confidence that they will, at worst, attain buddhahood within sixteen lives.

The final chapter of all Lamrim texts exhort the practitioner to enter Vajrayāna teachings if they wish to wake up in one, three, seven or at most, sixteen lifetimes.

This life is short. Not entering Vajrayāna teachings if one has the chance is a waste of this precious human birth with its eighteen freedoms and endowments. It is unlikely this chance will come around again soon. Lack of confidence in one's own capacity is a māra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 10:18 PM

Title: Re: Enlightened individuals as impossible to pin down linguistically

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually we don't experience the content of the five sense consciousness without conceptual layer. Experience is always conceptual.

Astus said:

What do you call then all the sensory phenomena that occur even while one is focused on a single object, or while one is thinking about something? Are they not experiences? Or do you think that one thinks about them at the same time?

Malcolm wrote:

In order for something to be experienced, it has to be noticed by the mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 10:06 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

@ Kim a great blog post by one of my favorite authors. Nevertheless militancy is part of the language of resistance. Without it don't we become doormats? And I don't want to be a doormat. Ghandhi and Martin Luther King were "warriors" of "ahimsa". Paradoxical but true. If the word is in our language I say we use it for the sake of dharma, like Trungpa.

Malcolm wrote:

The language of Buddhadharma is kitted out in all kinds of martial metaphors. The Buddha, in this dispensation, was after all a member of the warrior class.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

maybay said:

The warrior features prominently in Tibetan nomadic culture where it is not defined by the appearance of violence, but by the quality of bravery.

Malcolm wrote:

You have apparently never met any Tibetan nomads. Thus you suffer from the noble savage bias.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 12:50 PM

Title: Re: When does counting mantras count?

Content:

drodul said:

What do we mean exactly when we say mantras "don't count?" Is it that we can't report back to our lamas that we have accumulated some number of mantras we are supposed to say? Or is it that the signs of accomplishment of the mantra won't arise unless we count them on the cushion and with a proper mala? Will healing mantras not have any healing effect, or magnetizing mantras not magnetize, if they are not recited in a formally correct session? Just wondering, since there's a lot of arguing, but I'm not sure what the criteria are for knowing if a mantra has counted or not.

(And how come, when I try to emphasize a word by using what looks like the italics button above, the program wants to create a quote instead?)

Malcolm wrote:

Mantras recited in a state of distraction are as useful as trying to make a needle by rubbing an iron bar with wool. In order to be free from distraction, one must be alone. In order to maintain the siddhis, they must be done in secret. It is really that simple.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 11:49 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

dreambow said:

"Sure, and recall that Fa Dao has been chief among those of us here hysterically decrying Muslims for being, well, Muslim" I may not agree with everything Fa Dao has to say but I don't find him hysterical anymore then I find you hysterical. Let people have their say!

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, you agree with him.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 10:25 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

boda said:

...it could be seen that you're simply trying to rationalize a desire to maintain your position in the status quo.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed, all supremacist ideology is predicated on reserving privilege, aka, the status quo.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 10:23 AM

Title: Re: Enlightened individuals as impossible to pin down linguistically

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

And in fact there is no experience beyond mind, given that the other five sense consciousness are totally nonconceptual, and thus not experiences per se.

Astus said:

One still experiences sights, sounds, etc. even without a conceptual layer, so I rather differentiate the two.

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually we don't experience the content of the five sense consciousness without conceptual layer. Experience is always conceptual.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 10:21 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

One would think even beginners in Buddhadharma could understand that it is wrong to condemn the religion of an entire group of people.

Fortyeightvows said:

condemning a religion is not the same as condemning people. Another example is people whose religions practices involve hurting animals, we can condemn those practices and beliefs without being mean to the people.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure it is. When you condemn a religion you automatically condemn the people who have a faith commitment to that religion.

There are many religions which validate animal sacrifice, Islam among them. There are other religions, such as Christianity, which proclaim that the entire domain of nonhuman nature has been divinely mandated to be under the suzerainty of humans, men in particular. I don't happen to subscribe to those particular beliefs, but I see no reason to condemn the whole of a religion merely because I disagree with some of its parts. All religions recommend to their adherents love and compassion as the way of life they should follow.

His Holiness, the Dalai Lama states:

"All the world's religions, with their emphasis on love, compassion, patience, tolerance and forgiveness, can and do promote inner values. But the reality of the world today is that grounding ethics in religion is no longer adequate. This is why I am increasingly convinced that the time has come to find a way of thinking about spirituality and ethics beyond religion altogether."

This is, in large part, a statement which reinforces my commitment to the promulgation of humanist ethics as the bedrock upon which people of different faith commitments can find common ground.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 6:40 AM

Title: Re: Enlightened individuals as impossible to pin down linguistically

Content:

Dgj said:

Could you elaborate on this idea from a Buddhist perspective? There is only body and mind? As in just the immediate body and mind one is experiencing, singular? Or that there are only bodies and minds in general, ie no things or other realities, just many minds and bodies interacting and trees, rocks, houses, etc. are not real?

Astus said:

All experiences fall within the six sensory areas: sight, sound, smell, taste, touch, thoughts. The first five are the physical and the sixth is the mental. There is no experience beyond these six.

Malcolm wrote:

And in fact there is no experience beyond mind, given that the other five sense consciousness are totally nonconceptual, and thus not experiences per se.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 5:46 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

maybay said:

Erroneous thinking is the same wherever it comes from.

Malcolm wrote:

You can't do much about the erroneous thinking of others.

maybay said:

You can learn from it.

Malcolm wrote:

First you have to make sure your own thinking is not erroneous. Otherwise, you are blind person begin led by other blind people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 5:41 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

maybay said:

In this forum i care about protecting from the hazards of erroneous thinking.

Malcolm wrote:

Maybe you should examine the hazards of your own erroneous thinking.

maybay said:

Erroneous thinking is the same wherever it comes from.

Malcolm wrote:

You can't do much about the erroneous thinking of others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 5:29 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

maybay said:

In this forum i care about protecting from the hazards of erroneous thinking.

Malcolm wrote:

Maybe you should examine the hazards of your own erroneous thinking.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 5:25 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

We are in the last five hundred years of Buddha Shakyamuni's teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

Don't be silly. We have been in the "last five hundred years" of the Buddha's teaching for over a thousand years. Sakya Pandita thought he was living in the last five hundred years, and so on. It is a trope, it needn't be taken literally.

Tsongkhapafan said:

I think it can. Buddha Shakyamuni's teachings were supposed to last five thousand years but due to the negative actions of people living in this world, that period has reduced and we are now down to the last five hundred years. We can see that interest and capacity for Dharma study and practice is decreasing. I have seen it change even in the past twenty years.

Malcolm wrote:

The length of the Buddha's teachings were actually supposed to cut off by the fact that the Buddha ordained women. In fact, there are different time spans for different yānas. But as is common, people mix up predictions for one with the other and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 5:17 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

We are in the last five hundred years of Buddha Shakyamuni's teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

Don't be silly. We have been in the "last five hundred years" of the Buddha's teaching for over a thousand years. Sakya Pandita thought he was living in the last five hundred years, and so on. It is a trope, it needn't be taken literally.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 5:10 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

As for this, this is a ridiculous sectarian fantasy.

Tsongkhapafan said:

No, it's just a fact. Dharma degenerates over time as living beings capacities and wisdom degenerates.

Malcolm wrote:

I was responding to this:

this is one reason why Chandrakirti produced 'Guide to the Middle Way', to clarify the correct meaning of Nagarjuna's 'Fundamental Wisdom'.
Candrakīrti's book is nice, but there are lots of nice books on Madhyamaka out there.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 5:04 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

maybay said:

But why would I advocate contentment if I didn't recognize social upheaval and accuse you of inciting it? You too misrepresent my argument.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that you clearly do not understand the causes of social upheaval, and so you misdiagnose the illness and suggest remedies which only make it worse, just like an incompetent physician who prescribes camphor for a cold disease.

maybay said:

For one thing, I know that social upheaval is almost never a simple matter. I'm not handing out panaceas. But you won't even admit contentment into the pharmacopoeia.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that at every turn when presented the opportunity to encourage people of color's education, social and economic advancement, you reply with idle simpers about how much better everything would be if colonially disadvantaged people would simply be happy and content with their lot. Your sentiments remind me of foul statements like <http://www.dailystormer.com/blacks-loved-slavery-and-regretted-its-end-2/>:

Clearly, as slaves, they had things that they never would have had otherwise. For one, they had a stable family structure. They were treated like children – but children that were loved, a part of the family – and the masters made sure that they married and stayed together. They were also given order, and knowledge of the joys of a hard days work. The comfort that they had living in houses built by Whites was something they never would have had if they hadn't been slaves.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 4:53 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you listen to some people, no one before Tsongkhapa understood Madhyamaka before him(including Chandrakirti), so it makes you wonder how all those realized people became realized before he emanated to straighten everyone out.

Tsongkhapafan said:

That's incorrect.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. Of course it is. There were myriad people who realized emptiness in India and Tibet before the time of Tsongkhapa, even before the time Atisha arrived in Tibet, and in Tibet even after Lang Dharma imposed a tax on monasteries which resulted in his assassination (He did not destroy the Dharma in Tibet, he just decided the Tibetan economy could not afford the free ride monasteries had enjoyed up to 840 CE). To reject this is to slander many thousands of realized people in Tibet.

Tsongkhapa said:

Also, over time, the meaning of Dharma is lost and this is one reason why Chandrakirti produced 'Guide to the Middle Way', to clarify the correct meaning of Nagarjuna's 'Fundamental Wisdom'.

Malcolm wrote:

As for this, this is a ridiculous sectarian fantasy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 4:43 AM

Title: Re: When does counting mantras count?

Content:

AlexanderS said:

I often use my mala when in public. I just try to conceal under a table, or in a way that does not capture attention while I recite mantra's silently. I never thought that I wasn't allowed to. Most religious traditions use rosary's. I don't see really what problem is besides most people in secular countries not being used to see anyone use one.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a question of allowed, it is question of what you are aiming to accomplish.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 3:42 AM

Title: Re: Help with protection against malefic psycho-magical interferences

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Hope and fear are suffering. Toss out hope. Abandon fear. When neither hope nor fear exist, one will be free of suffering.

— Guru Rinpoche

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 3:15 AM

Title: Re: When does counting mantras count?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I was thinking about this issue and I remembered this: Lama Pema Dorje Rinpoche will be guiding a multi-year program for people over fifty based on intensive practice of the Vajra Guru mantra. This program is suitable for people who have faith in Guru Rinpoche Padmasambhava and would like to recite his mantras ten million times over a three year period. For most people this would amount to a commitment of two or more hours a day of practice, which could be done during formal practice, or when walking, driving, sitting on public transit or similar activity. For those who have not completed the foundational practices—the ngondro—this would be an alternative gateway to becoming a Dzogchen student of Rinpoche's.

from here: <https://lotuscircle.wordpress.com>, underlining added.

Just sayin'.

Malcolm wrote:

Merit accumulation is just not the same thing as approach and accomplishment, just saying...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 3:13 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Jeff H said:

This is my point exactly. It's helpful for me. And yet it seems we cannot have this discussion based in Tsongkhapa's terms on DW.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure you can. But even when you have them in the Gelug forum, there are also people who have strange ideas about them who claim to be Gelugpas, so what to do?

You should, at some point, just reconcile yourself to the notion that Tsongkhapa's ideas are at minimum controversial (it is why he is so famous). When someone comes along as raises an objection you don't want to deal with, ignore it, unless they are being too disruptive.

Frankly, it is precisely because Tibetans have so muddied the water with their own controversies and disputes, I generally tell folks they should study the original Indian texts first, Tibetan polemics later (if there is any need). If you listen to some people, no one before Tsongkhapa understood Madhyamaka before him(including Candrakīrti), so it makes you wonder how all those realized people became realized before he emanated to straighten everyone out.

Jeff H said:

Aha! You are certainly right here. Especially about "strange ideas" from people "who claim to be Gelugpas", myself included. I confess to wishfully thinking that there could be an in-depth discussion of Tsongkhapa's concepts here on DW that is both authoritative and sympathetic. What I haven't been reconciled to is the improbability of that.

Malcolm wrote:

I am afraid that is not possible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 2:33 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Jeff H said:

This is my point exactly. It's helpful for me. And yet it seems we cannot have this discussion based in Tsongkhapa's terms on DW.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure you can. But even when you have them in the Gelug forum, there are also people who have strange ideas about them who claim to be Gelugpas, so what to do?

You should, at some point, just reconcile yourself to the notion that Tsongkhapa's ideas are at minimum controversial (it is why he is so famous). When someone comes along as raises an objection you don't want to deal with, ignore it, unless they are being too disruptive.

Frankly, it is precisely because Tibetans have so muddied the water with their own controversies and disputes, I generally tell folks they should study the original Indian texts first, Tibetan polemics later (if there is any need). If you listen to some people, no one before Tsongkhapa understood Madhyamaka before him(including Candrakīrti), so it makes you wonder how all those realized people became realized before he emanated to straighten everyone out.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 1:32 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Lukeinaz said:

Malcom, I am interested in your second point here. Can you give some examples?

Malcolm wrote:

I think I did so in my preceding post.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 1:26 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Jeff H said:

I do not consider the Gelug four tenet system teaching to be a matter of Buddhist intellectual history. Rather I think it is a useful structure to facilitate progressively refined ways of thinking about selflessness and emptiness, with Tsongkhapa's distinction between intrinsic existence and inherent existence being the subtlest conceptual distinction.

Malcolm wrote:

1) This thread is not in the Gelug Forum. It is in the General Dharma forum.

2) What bothers me about this conversation is that no discussion of Tsongkhapa's views can take apparently take place without slandering one of the great Mādhyamaka authors by name and without grossly distorting his views.

3) The fact that you are not properly distinguishing svalakṣaṇa, which here is incorrectly translated as "intrinsic existence," from svabhāva, here translated as "inherent existence," is just one of the myriad problems this conversation faces.

4) The four tenet system is indeed part of Buddhist intellectual history. It is not just a war game where one can try out intellectual strategies and tactics. The purpose of learning about the four tenet systems and so on is not to increase false concepts (which is what happens when one does not get things right), but rather to reduce one's false concepts altogether (thus necessitating getting things right). This cannot happen when one is cultivating false concepts about that object or that person being refuted.

Jeff H said:

I'm not renouncing my teacher or this tradition because I believe it is -- at the very least - a useful, provisional means which fits my karmic propensities at this time. Your input is, of course, valuable, but not relevant to my present situation. I will be grateful in the future. Meanwhile, I respectfully cede the discussion to you.

Malcolm wrote:

This is the basic problem in Buddhist intellectual history: to wit, when Nāgārjuna was writing, there was general hostility in Buddhist circles to what we now call "logic," (Pramāṇa), as it evidenced in Nāgārjuna's Vigrahavyāvartanī, as well as some controversy over the notion of what exactly an intrinsic characteristic (svalakṣaṇa) is. For pre-Pramāṇa Buddhism, the idea of svalakṣaṇa was identical to the idea of svabhāva, to give you an example, heat is both the svabhāva as well as the svalakṣaṇa of fire. Many Śrāvaka Buddhists regarded svalakṣaṇas as ultimate truths.

Enter the Prāmāṇikas such as Dignaga and Dharmakīrti. They used the term "svalakṣana" in a way distinct from the usage that was attacked by Nāgārjuna. They used the term merely to describe the identifying characteristics of a given object such as the blueness of a blue vase, without imposing upon this svalakṣana the idea it was somehow an ultimate truth or entity. Instead, for the Prāmāṇikas, a svalakṣana is merely the simplest percept we can perceive, one that we perceive without concepts.

Bhavaviveka was a post-Pramāṇa author, and by his time, the conventions of Pramāṇa has become so widespread in scholarly Buddhist discourse, that he took Buddhapaṇita to task in one spot in his MMK commentary for ignoring those conventions (this is Bhavaviveka's real fault). In reply to this, Candrakīrti, also conversant in the conventions of Pramāṇa, decided that Bhavaviveka was being quite unfair, and defended Buddhapaṇita's original formulation. But this dispute between the two of them should not cause us to ignore Bhavaviveka's enduring and important contributions to the Madhyamaka tradition, and sadly, today it is the case that his contribution has been marginalized precisely because of an overall Tibetan lack of attention to the intellectual history of Indian Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 12:56 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Jeff H said:

I do not consider the Gelug four tenet system teaching to be a matter of Buddhist intellectual history. Rather I think it is a useful structure to facilitate progressively refined ways of thinking about selflessness and emptiness, with Tsongkhapa's distinction between intrinsic existence and inherent existence being the subtlest conceptual distinction.

Malcolm wrote:

1) This thread is not in the Gelug Forum. It is in the General Dharma forum.

2) What bothers me about this conversation is that no discussion of Tsongkhapa's views can take apparently take place without slandering one of the great Mādhyamaka authors by name and without grossly distorting his views.

3) The fact that you are not properly distinguishing svalakṣana, which here is incorrectly translated as "intrinsic existence," from svabhāva, here translated as "inherent existence," is just one of the myriad problems this conversation faces.

4) The four tenet system is indeed part of Buddhist intellectual history. It is not just a war game where one can try out intellectual strategies and tactics. The purpose of learning about the four tenet systems and so on is not to increase false concepts (which is what happens when one does not get things right), but rather to reduce one's false concepts altogether (thus necessitating getting things right). This cannot happen when one is cultivating false concepts about that object or that person being refuted.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 12:45 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 12:31 AM

Title: Re: Alt-right coming out of their ugly closet.

Content:

Minobu said:

Yeah well without a higher state , the secular could be just another muggle waving a placard.

Malcolm wrote:

Not that interested in higher states. Definitely interested in preserving as much life on the planet as possible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 12:30 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

but cannot be found upon ultimate analysis. On Tsong-kha-pa's reading, Svatantrikas (like Bhavaviveka) are those Madhyamikas who accept that, at a conventional level, things actually do have intrinsic nature just as they are perceived.

No, this is not correct.

Bristollad said:

What is not correct? Are you saying that Tsong-kha-pa didn't teach that or that you think that what Tsong-kha-pa taught isn't correct?

Malcolm wrote:

The latter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 12:17 AM

Title: Re: Alt-right coming out of their ugly closet.

Content:

Minobu said:

the moment you learn to make stuff someone wants to profit in some way...hence the opinion that industrialized capitalism is inevitable...

Malcolm wrote:

Industrial capitalism is destroying nature. That means it is also destroying us.

Minobu said:

Your preaching to the choir here.

I agree 100%.

that being said, when dealing with the muggles this is what one gets, hence the advent of Buddhism.

Our only real chance for any reversal is to increase the education of the populace into what exactly they are.

Have them produce a higher state in themselves and then the environment will change. I am speaking of the entire environment, in other words a sort of Shambhalla world in which to live.

I would love to have met you in person Malcolm, and actually share our ideas instead of argue semantics on the internet.

Malcolm wrote:

I would settle for a secular world based on ecological rationality.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 30th, 2016 at 12:05 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

[snark ignored]

To the point:

All Madhyamikas agree that intrinsic nature appears to our senses

No, not all Madhyamikas agree with this proposition. If they did there would be no dispute at all.

Jeff H said:

but cannot be found upon ultimate analysis. On Tsong-kha-pa's reading, Svatantrikas (like Bhavaviveka) are those Madhyamikas who accept that, at a conventional level, things actually do have intrinsic nature just as they are perceived.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is not correct.

Jeff H said:

It is important to recognize that one does not find direct, unambiguous statements about this difference between Prasangika and Svatantrika in the Indian Madhyamaka texts.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, there is no such thing as "Prasangika and Svatantrika" in Indian Madhyamaka. These categories were invented by Batshab Nyima Drag.

Jeff H said:

Moreover, the earlier Tibetan scholars who first classified Madhyamikas as Prasangikas and Svatantrikas did not notice any philosophical difference in their views of ultimate reality. This was something Tsong-kha-pa discovered, inferring it from his close reading of the Indian texts.

Malcolm wrote:

And as we know, this reading is hotly contested.

Jeff H said:

Tsong-kha-pa argues that Bhavaviveka's insistence on autonomous syllogisms is not just a difference in method but also evidences an underlying difference — a shortcoming — in his view of emptiness. The discussion of these points in the Great Treatise is famous as the most difficult portion of the text. Here, I simply offer a summary explanation of Tsong-kha-pa's conclusions.

In order to understand emptiness, you do not necessarily have to understand or agree with Tsong-kha-pa's argument about how Bhavaviveka betrays his belief in intrinsic nature. Nor do you have to be absolutely sure that Bhavaviveka really held the position Tsong-kha-pa claims to have discovered implicit in his arguments. Our purpose is to understand emptiness; it is not to debate the details of Buddhist intellectual history. For us, this controversy over how to reason about reality is an opportunity to become more familiar with Tsong-kha-pa's view of emptiness itself.

Malcolm wrote:

In fact, if you create a Madhyamaka strawman to knock down (or Yogacara strawmen for that matter), you will never come close to understanding the real differences between various Mādhyamaka authors, just as if you insist on abiding by strawmen Buddhists built for refuting in Hindu tenets, you will never come close to understanding what is actually a valid object of rebuttal within Hindu tenet systems. We resist stereotypes and inaccurate characterizations of social and racial groups, why should we be lazy in applying rigor to our investigation of our own and others' tenet systems?

Newland is making an appeal to be callous and indifferent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 29th, 2016 at 11:30 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Your advocacy of relentless social upheaval and strife is demagogic and irresponsible, and in the final analysis the extra layer of entirely unnecessary psychological pain is nothing short of cruel.

Your inability to recognize that there will continue to be social upheavals as long as there are social and environmental disparities based on race, class and gender is a sign that you have not absorbed the lessons to be learned from the outcomes of European colonialism.

maybay said:

But why would I advocate contentment if I didn't recognize social upheaval and accuse you of inciting it? You too misrepresent my argument.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that you clearly do not understand the causes of social upheaval, and so you misdiagnose the illness and suggest remedies which only make it worse, just like an incompetent physician who prescribes camphor for a cold disease.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 29th, 2016 at 11:05 PM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Lukeinaz said:

Chill out Jeff. I asked the question well aware of the answer specifically to spark the response of buddhafollower. I think these are important discussions.

Jeff H said:

Chilling...

In my febrile mind (with thanks and a hat-tip to Malcolm for my new vocabulary word) and because of the Prasangika distinction, I think of intrinsic as referring to defining qualities that exist within an object and inherent existence as referring to a fully independent object.

The difference is this:

From a Svatantrika perspective, an observing mind discovers an object's intrinsic qualities and then imputes the correct label on the basis of those pre-existing qualities.

From a Prasangika perspective, however, the very presence of any intrinsic quality would necessarily imply independent, concrete existence, and that is impossible. Therefore, Prasangikas say that the observing mind imputes an object's apparently intrinsic qualities, thus falsely imbuing it with inherent existence.

The important point is that inherent existence is an object of negation for both Svatantrika and Prasangika. Tsongkhapa postulated the distinction between inherent and intrinsic existence and strongly emphasized the necessity of identifying the object of negation in distinction from “mere existence”, which he identifies as our actual experience of being.

Malcolm wrote:

But this is not the actual difference between Bhava and Buddhapalita, which hinges solely on a pedagogical distinction based on the former's criticism of the latter for not using a formal syllogism to refute the Saṃkhya position of arising from self in the latter's prolegomena in his commentary on the MMK.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 29th, 2016 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

maybay said:

My advocacy of contentment is Buddhist.

Bristollad said:

No, your advocacy of contentment is a call to inaction.

maybay said:

You're putting words in my mouth and misrepresenting my argument.

Malcolm wrote:

Your words speak for themselves. No one needs to put words in your mouth, you are very good at thoughtlessly spewing them on your own.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 29th, 2016 at 9:57 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

maybay said:

My advocacy of contentment is Buddhist.

Bristollad said:

No, your advocacy of contentment is a call to inaction. Inaction in the face of others' suffering is not Buddhist.

Malcolm wrote:

Thank you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 29th, 2016 at 9:53 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You live in a country where white people live in beautiful houses and most black people who work for them live in appalling slums close by with no indoor plumbing, colored people having it only slightly better. Your advocacy of "contentment" is both classist and racist. You seem to have learned nothing since the fall of apartheid.

maybay said:

My advocacy of contentment is Buddhist.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it isn't. It is cruel and unnecessary.

maybay said:

If liberals like you could appreciate that people can be content with less wealth and opportunity so long as their goodness and purpose is acknowledged, then it wouldn't be an issue. When people know their place they can get on despite all the sufferings. Your advocacy of relentless social upheaval and strife is demagogic and irresponsible, and in the final analysis the extra layer of entirely unnecessary psychological pain is nothing short of cruel.

Malcolm wrote:

Your inability to recognize that there will continue to be social upheavals as long as there are social and environmental disparities based on race, class and gender is a sign that you have not absorbed the lessons to be learned from the outcomes of European colonialism. I have been to South Africa, prayed with (genuine) Sangomas, and seen for myself the cruelty that century after century of European economic domination has had on the indigenous peoples in your land. For you to advocate "contentment" in the face of the brutal conditions under which Africans still live in their own country, post-apartheid, is nothing less than a sick joke. On the other hand, there is a sign of hope, since I have also met white South Africans who understand the problems which face South Africa and certainly do not broadcast the callous classist and racial privilege you spew here. For you to preach contentment, where in your country raw sewage runs in the streets of many black communities right next door to tidy, neatly kept, white communities (maintained by those very same Africans) is nothing short of appalling. Shame on you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 29th, 2016 at 9:35 PM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Bristollad said:

For svatantrika, inherent existence is untrue but intrinsic (established by way of their own character as the referent of a conceptual consciousness) is true.

Malcolm wrote:

Only in the febrile imagination of the followers of Lama Tsongkhapa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 29th, 2016 at 9:33 PM

Title: Re: Emptiness

Content:

Tirisilex said:

First off the book I'm reading "Emptiness: The Foundation of Buddhist Thought, Volume 5" uses the words Inherent Existence and Intrinsic Existence. I do not know what these 2 things mean.. What is Inherent existence? What is Intrinsic existence? I have looked them both up on online dictionaries but i still dont know what they really mean. I know the Intrinsic means Belonging Naturally and the Inherent means existing in something as a permanent, essential, or characteristic attribute. But what you put these together with existence and speak that this is reality I'm at a loss. I know I shouldnt be but I am. The book says that Intrinsic and Inherent existence is empty. But I dont understand that.

I was looking at my lamp and then my computer and I said to myself that I value the computer Intrinsicly but I do not value the lamp intrinsicly. Then I compared the 2.. But I found that I'm really just looking at value and not intrinsic. I saw how my value is an Illusory expeience but How do I Intrinsicly see it? Is it Intrinsicly real? I'm at a loss with this.

BuddhaFollower said:

You do realize these are Gelug-only positions right?

Lukeinaz said:

Inherent existence is a Gelug only position?

Malcolm wrote:

The idea that inherent existence is the sole object of negation is a key feature of Tsongkhapa's thinking. This is his interpretation of a key feature of Candrakīrti's thinking, i.e., that the negation of inherent existence was common to both Mahāyāna and Śrāvaka tenet systems. What Tsongkhapa neglected was that the uncommon Mahāyāna formulation of emptiness however is the systematic negation of the four extremes. This is not found in Śrāvaka tenet systems at all. As a consequence, the followers of Tsongkhapa deride the profound Mahāyāna emptiness of freedom extremes as promulgated in Tibet by Batshab Nyima Drag (the translator of Candrakīrti's major works into Tibetan).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 29th, 2016 at 9:14 PM

Title: Re: Alt-right coming out of their ugly closet.

Content:

Minobu said:

the moment you learn to make stuff someone wants to profit in some way...hence the opinion that industrialized capitalism is inevitable...

Malcolm wrote:

Industrial capitalism is destroying nature. That means it is also destroying us.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 29th, 2016 at 8:33 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

maybay said:

If i remember correctly, all I have advocated for is contentment. I'm not a bigot.

Malcolm wrote:

You live in a country where white people live in beautiful houses and most black people who work for them live in appalling slums close by with no indoor plumbing, colored people having it only slightly better. Your advocacy of "contentment" is both classist and racist. You seem to have learned nothing since the fall of apartheid.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 29th, 2016 at 4:57 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Bristollad said:

As you can see by his opening paragraph, he starts from a position " that Buddhism and Jainism were not movements for social reform directed against the caste system ", and interprets and picks quotes to show he's right

maybay said:

What would you have done?

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that you constantly advocate for class and race disparities, and try to erroneously justify with crappy scholarship, like most bigots.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 29th, 2016 at 4:21 AM

Title: Re: When does counting mantras count?

Content:

maybay said:

Kei river

Malcolm wrote:

This explains a lot about you.

maybay said:

Nothing to see here folks. Keep it moving.

Malcolm wrote:

It explains your inability to see the white privilege you possess in a country where only 1 in 10 people are white.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 29th, 2016 at 4:08 AM

Title: Re: Alt-right coming out of their ugly closet.

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Some human societies are still hunter-gatherers. The "hogwash" was in reference to the fact that all societies MUST develop into industrial capitalist societies sooner or later.

Minobu said:

i've tried but i don't see where i wrote that either.

where did i write all societies must develop into this.

Malcolm wrote:

Here:

Minobu said:

I feel industrialization is just part of human development. As I said it is inevitable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 29th, 2016 at 3:53 AM

Title: Re: When does counting mantras count?

Content:

maybay said:

Kei river

Malcolm wrote:

This explains a lot about you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 29th, 2016 at 3:49 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

maybay said:

Buddha didn't judge the caste system.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course he did, he completely refuted it.

<http://www.accesstoinight.org/tipitaka/mn/mn.093.than.html>:

"Now, Assalayana, when those seven brahman seers couldn't defend their own birth-statement when interrogated, pressed, & rebuked by the seer Devala the Dark, how can you now defend your own birth-statement when interrogated, pressed, & rebuked by me — you, their lineage holder, but not (the equal of) Punna, their ladle holder?"

maybay said:

You can read Buddhism and the Caste System by Y. Krishan.

Malcolm wrote:

I'd rather read the Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 29th, 2016 at 1:15 AM

Title: Re: Alt-right coming out of their ugly closet.

Content:

Minobu said:

What ever one poster said ,them being Canadian, we generally are not a racist society and try very hard to thwart those that are.

Malcolm wrote:

Tell that to the First Nations and the French Canadians.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 29th, 2016 at 1:14 AM

Title: Re: Alt-right coming out of their ugly closet.

Content:

Minobu said:

Industrialized capitolism

Malcolm wrote:

You need to read Regarding Nature: Industrialism and Deep Ecology by Andrew McLaughlin.

It is an eminently Buddhist project to stem the rise of industrialism. As McLaughlin writes, "Industrialism requires a strong commitment to managing society's relations with the rest of nature in order to satisfy desire."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 11:26 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

maybay said:

Buddha didn't judge the caste system.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course he did, he completely refuted it.

<http://www.accesstoinsight.org/tipitaka/mn/mn.093.than.html>:

"Now, Assalayana, when those seven brahman seers couldn't defend their own birth-statement when interrogated, pressed, & rebuked by the seer Devala the Dark, how can you now defend your own birth-statement when interrogated, pressed, & rebuked by me — you, their lineage holder, but not (the equal of) Punna, their ladle holder?"

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 11:26 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Fa Dao said:

the "self righteous moral indignation" button is SO easy to push in some people....although you would think it would be more difficult in an "advanced" practitioner, apparently it isnt....I will stop now and try to be good..apologies

Malcolm wrote:

One would think even beginners in Buddhadharma could understand that it is wrong to condemn the religion of an entire group of people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 11:10 PM

Title: Re: When does counting mantras count?

Content:

saraswati said:

I've just come back from Nepal, and I saw so, so many Nepalese and Tibetans repeating and counting their mantras in public and displaying their malas.

Malcolm wrote:

I have heard many Tibetan teachers decry this Tibetan custom as being incorrect.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 9:10 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Really? How is mainstream liberalism "extreme", by supporting corporate interests, supporting gay marriage, what? If anything mainstream liberalism is mainly tepid.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, apparently in Fa Dao's view, Blacks Lives Matter, Greenpeace, the Southern Law Poverty Center, the ACLU, Amnesty International, the Sierra Club, Planned Parenthood, and NASA all qualify as extremist, whereas Brietbart has become reasonable.

Johnny Dangerous said:

It's that whole "it's biased to call out racism" argument, or something of the sort.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, and recall that Fa Dao has been chief among those of us here hysterically decrying Muslims for being, well, Muslim.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 9:08 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

maybay said:

1984

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, by all means, we must allow tacit segregation, otherwise this might happen and the game would be up:

If he were allowed contact with foreigners he would discover that they are creatures similar to him and that most of what he has been told about them is lies. The sealed world in which he lives would be broken, and the fear, hatred, and self-righteousness on which his morale depends might evaporate.

— the Goldstein Manifesto, chapter III.

maybay said:

Rather, it is because you have not convinced me...

Malcolm wrote:

I am not interested in convincing you of anything. However,

http://prospect.org/article/battle-royal-over-segregation-queen-city-0:

In addition to sobering statistics on school segregation in Charlotte-Mecklenburg, new research out of Harvard University and the University of California, Berkeley, found that Charlotte ranks dead last in the nation in terms of upward mobility, and that racial segregation and school quality are two main culprits behind this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 5:59 AM

Title: Re: When does counting mantras count?

Content:

maybay said:

Its true, it just needs qualification.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is not true, unless you only selectively choose to read things you have read in the books of groovy french intellectuals.

maybay said:

What have you got against groovy French intellectuals? Was there a woman involved?

Malcolm wrote:

Nothing, I like groovy french intellectuals— some of them, at any rate. The point is that your assertion viz privacy is just not true.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 5:46 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

maybay said:

You cannot police tacit segregation.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure you can.

maybay said:

1984

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, by all means, we must allow tacit segregation, otherwise this might happen and the game would be up:

If he were allowed contact with foreigners he would discover that they are creatures similar to him and that most of what he has been told about them is lies. The sealed world in which he lives would be broken, and the fear, hatred, and self-righteousness on which his morale depends might evaporate.

— the Goldstein Manifesto, chapter III.

The above of course is why laws favoring poor whites were instituted in the 18th century in order to turn them against their African compatriots which whom they had previously found common cause with and with whom they often revolted together to protest the conditions of oppression they both found themselves in:

Fearful that such measures might not be sufficient to protect their interests, the planter class took an additional precautionary step, a step that would later come to be known as a “racial bribe.” Deliberately and strategically, the planter class extended special privileges to poor whites in an effort to drive a wedge between them and black slaves. White settlers were allowed greater access to Native American lands, white servants were allowed to police slaves through slave patrols and militias, and barriers were created so that free labor would not be placed in competition with slave labor. These measures effectively eliminated the risk of future alliances between black slaves and poor whites. Poor whites suddenly had a direct, personal stake in the existence of a race-based system of slavery. Their own plight had not improved by much, but at least they were not slaves. Once the planter elite split the labor force, poor whites responded to the logic of their situation and sought ways to expand their racially privileged position. And of course, the reason why your objections are utterly racist:

During this period, conservatives gave lip service to the goal of racial equality but actively resisted desegregation, busing, and civil rights enforcement. They repeatedly raised the issue of welfare, subtly framing it as a contest between hardworking, blue-collar whites and poor blacks who refused to work. The not-so-subtle message to working-class whites was that their tax dollars were going to support special programs for blacks who most certainly did not deserve them.

And:

The Southern white elite, whether planters or industrialists, had successfully endeavored to make all whites think in racial rather than class terms, predictably leading whites to experience desegregation, as Derrick Bell put it, as a net “loss.”

— Alexander, Michelle (2012-01-16). The New Jim Crow

And as James Baldwin put it:

And if the word integration means anything, this is what it means: that we, with love, shall force our brothers to see themselves as they are, to cease fleeing from reality and begin to change it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 5:32 AM

Title: Re: When does counting mantras count?

Content:

maybay said:

What did Foucault say about humanists, they want to change the ideologies while leaving the institutions intact.

Malcolm wrote:

Your assertion is simply false. Hiding behind french intellectuals is not going to make your fallacious assertion any more valid.

maybay said:

Its true, it just needs qualification.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is not true, unless you only selectively choose to read things you have read in the books of groovy french intellectuals.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 5:31 AM

Title: Re: Alt-right coming out of their ugly closet.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is nothing positive about industrial capitalism.

Minobu said:

coming late, only found out what alt right meant a few days ago when it hit toronto.

as for capitalism, isn't it inevitable once we evolved from hunter gatherers?

also did not Buddha approve of business and making money?

I thought he looked at it as a cause from Karmic reward or something?

Communism doesn't seem to work on the planet, socialism is a must from where i sit.

It's the rich's duty in this system to care for those who just cannot care for themselves.

there is a limit to socialism ,in the sense it is not meant to be a free ride "Just Cause" as for industrialization of the planet...done right it can be almost pollution free , as we are finding ways to improve , and it can be a huge benefit to well being of the citizenry .

Left to the greedy at heart it did the planet no favours, but with enforcement it could be a lot less of an impact and eventually possibly with the right science zero harm.

It's here to stay so...make lemonade!

You , malcolm seem to enjoy the fruits of it, case in point the internet.

If you did not take part in any of it you might be able to be a harsh critic of it, but as it stands you take part in it.

Malcolm wrote:

Classic nirvana fallacy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 5:05 AM

Title: Re: Innovative ways of mantra counting

Content:

maybay said:

Let's be clear on the terms here. The public/private paradigm is only a couple hundred years old.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it isn't.

maybay said:

What did Foucault say about humanists, they want to change the ideologies while leaving the institutions intact.

Malcolm wrote:

Your assertion is simply false. Hiding behind french intellectuals is not going to make your fallacious assertion any more valid.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 5:01 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

maybay said:

You cannot police tacit segregation.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure you can.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 4:59 AM

Title: Re: Alt-right coming out of their ugly closet.

Content:

maybay said:

Its how it works for people who insist on making everything black and white. It makes for terrible discussion.

Malcolm wrote:

There is nothing positive about industrial capitalism.

maybay said:

Case in point.

Malcolm wrote:

There is nothing to discuss. Industrial Capitalism is destroying the planet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 4:39 AM

Title: Re: Innovative ways of mantra counting

Content:

heart said:

Counting mantras in public don't count. I am surprised that you would think it does.

maybay said:

Let's be clear on the terms here. The public/private paradigm is only a couple hundred years old.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it isn't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 4:32 AM

Title: Re: Alt-right coming out of their ugly closet.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The export of jobs from the US is the fault of American consumers and no one else. We wanted lots of cheap shit because we are cheap, and prefer variety over quality.

PuerAzelis said:

Or maybe that's how capitalism works.

maybay said:

Its how it works for people who insist on making everything black and white. It makes for terrible discussion.

Malcolm wrote:

There is nothing positive about industrial capitalism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 4:31 AM

Title: Re: Innovative ways of mantra counting

Content:

Dharmaraj said:

Guys

What are some ways of counting mantra which will not attract unnecessary attention, besides rosary and tally counters ?

Any technique or method to count mantra anytime, anywhere easily without attracting unnecessary attention

With rosary and tally counters, it attracts too much attention

There is one way of counting on fingers but its complicated and cant be used as easily and readily as tally counters

heart said:

Counting mantras in public don't count. I am surprised that you would think it does.

/magnus

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 4:27 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

maybay said:

You can't compel people to live together anymore than to live apart.

Sherab Dorje said:

Freedom of association is not about compelling people to live together, it is about allowing them the opportunity to live together if they wish.

maybay said:

Unless they don't, in which case you want to break apart their schools.

Malcolm wrote:

In fact, bussing forces people to get motivated to improve the schools their children are attending. It also eliminates racist funding patterns. But of course racists like you will have no sympathy with that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 4:13 AM

Title: Re: Innovative ways of mantra counting

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

My concern is for people that DON'T have the suitable (according to the book) external conditions and yet wish to practice.

Malcolm wrote:

They need to create them if they want their practice to succeed. It is called "arranging dependent origination."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 3:24 AM

Title: Re: Innovative ways of mantra counting

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

So do you think it is compassionate to tell somebody: "No, f*ckin' way are you going to be able to properly accumulate mantra like that.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. Definitely. Why? Because if they do not practice in a proper way, there will be no benefit whatsoever in their practice.

As for why one does not practice in the presence of those who do not have samaya or who have impure samya:

The Samayasarvaviti-anusarvasani-tantra vimalaraja-nama states:
Associating with a samaya breaker, or appeasing a samaya breaker, explaining the Dharma to samaya breakers and unsuitable vessels, and not shunning samaya breakers will cause one to be affected with the contamination of the broken samaya of those samaya breakers.
I confess and reveal with shame and repentance the negative conditions of this life and the obscurations of the next.

Patrul Rinpoche states:

In particular, the Dharmas of Secret Mantra Vajrayāna say “Reciting the visualizations of the creations is a doorway of words.” Those critical points of the creation stage are just words of a visualization. Without even facing the meaning of the creation and completion stage which is the reason for the visualizations, they summon with many kinds of ritual words which are empty talk such as visualize this, meditate that, focus on this, chanting to drums and horns. When they come to the actual approach recitation, the essential meaning, [225/b] they relax. In the end, their posture which has been straight up to now is released. They smoke tobacco, the source of one hundred nonvirtues. They open the treasure of much gossip with irrelevant talk of news in the valleys. They pass the time by counting a thousand malas, like pulling intestines. When the evening comes, they look once at the sky, saying “Vajra puṣpe, dhupe...” and release a crescendo of cymbals. Since their ersatz rituals are worse than imitation rites, it is definitely better than that to recite the confession of downfalls or the Bhadracaryapranidhana with pure motivation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 2:57 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

maybay said:

You call it desegregation, I call it forced association. You couldn't achieve a liberal utopia by provisioning rights so now you want the government to force it on citizens with heavy handed social engineering. Wishful thinking gasps its last dying breath.

Sherab Dorje said:

Whereas apartheid is not heavy handed social engineering?

maybay said:

Apartheid was worse than that. The situation in the states is not worth comparison.

Malcolm wrote:

Apartheid was justified on the basis of Jim Crow laws in the states.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 2:50 AM

Title: Re: Innovative ways of mantra counting

Content:

conebeckham said:

People like to think of the Mahasiddhas as "Working Joes," you know, and we think they obtained the fruit of the path while engaged in their "day jobs" or even as a result of their day jobs.....

Sherab Dorje said:

It is pretty clear in some of the accounts. Some of them were even sent to do menial tasks as part of their practice. but if you read their stories you do find they practiced the Two Stages--some of the stories even mention their yidams, etc.

Nobody is denying that. --but the idea that the weaver, or the pimp, or the sesame seed pounder, didn't do formal sessions, but engaged in the Two Stages in the midst of their work is not supported.

Neither is the idea that they DIDN'T engage in the Two Stages in the midst of their work. There is not really enough evidence to support either view. And they kept their practice secret.

I don't think anybody here said that you should run around telling everybody your Yidam and the practice associated with it. But it doesn't mean that Vinapa used his lute playing as his method of obtaining realization.

In some of the stories they quite clearly use their daily life as a support for their practice.

Malcolm wrote:

These people were sent out to engage in these occupations once they had reached the stage of strong heat on the Mantra path of application. When one reaches the stage of strong heat, there are three things one should know: first, at this point the kind of vratyācarya (brtul shugs spyod pa) one before engaged in secretly should now be done in public. Secondly, at this point one cannot break one's samaya. Third, as a sign of one's practice, one's bell and vajra will float in space while one is practicing.

Prior to this, however, they did their practice in strict secrecy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 28th, 2016 at 12:14 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Milo is the "sassy gay friend" archetype to homophobes everywhere: making them feel comfortable and justified in their backward thinking regarding gays.

Malcolm wrote:

Not to mention his rendering gay people of color as sex objects for his own exploitation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 27th, 2016 at 11:46 PM

Title: Re: Innovative ways of mantra counting

Content:

fckw said:

It's a really fascinating thing. You practice a tantra that supposedly brings you to a level of realization beyond good and evil, holy and unholy, pure and impure, etc. However, it's extremely important that your mala actually is of the exact right substance, blessed by a master, nobody is allowed to see or touch it and so on. Otherwise, unfortunately, there is absolutely no way of success.

Reading the stories of the mahasiddhas, it's quite obvious that they used whatever circumstances were given to either teach or learn. If you could obtain a perfect mala and practice under the perfect circumstances, great. If not, still ok.

Malcolm wrote:

And if you read their stories, they kept secret things secret.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 27th, 2016 at 9:20 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Quay said:

Alas the modern Republican party is neither conservative nor really republican (small r) in that it has been taken over by extremists of all flavors, ones that make the dreaded John Birchers of the past look like Boy Scout Headmasters.

Fa Dao said:

I dont entirely disagree with this...however the same thing has happened to the left as well...that's why I don't identify as being left/right, liberal/conservative any longer...

Johnny Dangerous said:

Really? How is mainstream liberalism "extreme", by supporting corporate interests, supporting gay marriage, what? If anything mainstream liberalism is mainly tepid.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, apparently in Fa Dao's view, Blacks Lives Matter, Greenpeace, the Southern Law Poverty Center, the ACLU, Amnesty International, the Sierra Club, Planned Parenthood, and NASA all qualify as extremist, whereas Brietbart has become reasonable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 27th, 2016 at 9:14 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Fa Dao said:

I dont entirely disagree with this...however the same thing has happened to the left as well...that's why I don't identify as being left/right, liberal/conservative any longer...

Malcolm wrote:

A beautiful essay on white privilege by http://www.nytimes.com/2016/11/26/opinion/sunday/why-i-left-white-nationalism.html?ref=opinion&_r=0, whose father started Stormfront:

Much has been made of the incoherence of Mr. Trump's proposals, but what really matters is who does — and doesn't — need to fear them. None of the ideas that Mr. Trump has put forward would endanger me, and I once enthusiastically advocated for most of what he says. No proposal to put more cops in black neighborhoods to stop and frisk residents would cause me to be harassed. A ban on Muslim immigration doesn't implicate all people who look like me in terrorism. Overturning Roe v. Wade will not force me to make a dangerous choice about my health, nor will a man who personifies sexual assault without penalty make me any less safe. When the most powerful demographic in the United States came together to assert that making America great again meant asserting their supremacy, they were asserting my supremacy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 27th, 2016 at 10:37 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

maybay said:

Goodbye freedom of association.

Malcolm wrote:

Only you could equate the elimination of defacto apartheid in the US with a restriction on democracy.

maybay said:

With hyperboles like that no surprise media distrust then new president Trump.

What you propose is overextension of the system into the life world, which is precisely apartheid, denying people the choice of association.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry Charlie, but Seperate but Equal was knocked down by SCOTUS in the 1950's, but I guess you will be welcomed by those nazis who read brietbart

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 27th, 2016 at 10:36 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

maybay said:

Goodbye freedom of association.

Malcolm wrote:

Only you could equate the elimination of defacto apartheid in the US with a restriction on democracy.

maybay said:

With hyperboles like that no surprise media distrust then new president Trump.

What you propose is overextension of the system into the life world, which is precisely apartheid, denying people the choice of association.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry Charlie, but Seperate but Equal was knocked down by SCOTUS in 1950's. I guess you are just another rascist idiot.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 27th, 2016 at 10:30 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Fa Dao said:

And you did not refute ANY of the points he made...nice deflection. Besides I already know that more blacks are incarcerated than whites...he addressed that in the interview, and according to the facts and figures he cited it isn't due to "systemic racism"

Malcolm wrote:

Watch the movie, or better yet read the New Jim Crow, if you want "facts and figures":

I reached the conclusions presented in this book reluctantly. Ten years ago, I would have argued strenuously against the central claim made here—namely, that something akin to a racial caste system currently exists in the United States.

-- Michelle Alexander

Fa Dao said:

And so far you still have not refuted any of the points he made...I am open to reading the book etc..I am open to differing viewpoints...are you?? I used to be far left until I noticed that the far left sounded an awful lot like the far right that I, at one time, would call "racist, misogynistic, homophobic, fascist, and lets not forget islamophobic". Then about a year ago I decided to open my mind a little...so instead of just reading Huffpo etc I started also reading Breitbart etc. to gain more than a one-sided viewpoint. If a person presents a view in a rational and fact based way I am open to listening..dont care if they are right/left, liberal/conservative. I refuse to buy into any narrative that is tried to be shoved down my throat by anyone. And I also look deeper with anyone that I am listening to, to find out what their agenda is...and EVERYONE has an agenda...even facts and figures can be skewed depending upon the persons personal agenda and the viewpoint they are trying to sell you. But I will say this...if a person starts their talk with "liberal america haters", "far right racist fascists" etc etc and liberally peppers their argument with name calling...I tend to tune them out....

Malcolm wrote:

I have no interest in convincing you of anything. But I am certain that Brietbart is a racist outlet for neonazis. That aside, a sober analysis of the facts, like the one presented by Alexander, should awaken any thoughtful person to the fact that rascism remains systematically embedded in our society, so much so, that we are blind to it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 27th, 2016 at 8:59 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Yes...looks like an interesting show but does not negate any of the points that Larry Elder made. I admire the guy...takes a lot of courage to stand up against the current PC narrative and say what he did

Malcolm wrote:

So you didn't watch it. Figures.

Fa Dao said:

And you did not refute ANY of the points he made...nice deflection. Besides I already know that more blacks are incarcerated than whites...he addressed that in the interview, and according to the facts and figures he cited it isn't due to "systemic racism"

Malcolm wrote:

Watch the movie, or better yet read the New Jim Crow, if you want "facts and figures": I reached the conclusions presented in this book reluctantly. Ten years ago, I would have argued strenuously against the central claim made here—namely, that something akin to a racial caste system currently exists in the United States.

-- Michelle Alexander

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 27th, 2016 at 7:49 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Him or you? LOL Seriously though, sounds like he has a relatively healthy attitude...and if you notice he's not saying that racism doesn't exist, just that it's not as prevalent and systemic as the left puts forth in their narrative...not to mention that he puts forth some interesting facts and figures on crime rates in the black community...I found this interview quite thought provoking...

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.netflix.com/title/80091741>

Fa Dao said:

Yes...looks like an interesting show but does not negate any of the points that Larry Elder made. I admire the guy...takes a lot of courage to stand up against the current PC narrative and say what he did

Malcolm wrote:

So you didn't watch it. Figures.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 26th, 2016 at 11:49 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

binocular said:

So, again, I ask: What are your suggestions on how to change, reform racists? How to make them stop being racists?

Malcolm wrote:

Desegregating schools, eliminating charter schools, and generally enforcing laws which are designed to protect the civil rights of minorities.

maybay said:

Goodbye freedom of association.

Malcolm wrote:

Only you could equate the elimination of defacto apartheid in the US with a restriction on democracy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 26th, 2016 at 8:26 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Fa Dao said:

and how about the views of this guy?

Malcolm wrote:

Someone who is in deep denial.

Fa Dao said:

Him or you? LOL Seriously though, sounds like he has a relatively healthy attitude...and if you notice he's not saying that racism doesn't exist, just that it's not as prevalent and systemic as the left puts forth in their narrative...not to mention that he puts forth some interesting facts and figures on crime rates in the black community...I found this interview quite thought provoking...

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.netflix.com/title/80091741>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 26th, 2016 at 8:06 PM

Title: Re: Innovative ways of mantra counting

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Not sentient beings, people, humans.

Sherab Dorje said:

And what is the "logic" behind the idea that it is naughty to do it in front of humans that don't have samaya, but okay to do it in front of other sentient beings that don't have samaya?

Malcolm wrote:

Greg, I think you need a refresher course in what it means to keep samaya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 26th, 2016 at 6:29 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

binocular said:

So, again, I ask: What are your suggestions on how to change, reform racists? How to make them stop being racists?

Malcolm wrote:

Desegregating schools, eliminating charter schools, and generally enforcing laws which are designed to protect the civil rights of minorities.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 26th, 2016 at 5:45 AM

Title: Re: Innovative ways of mantra counting

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Great, so now we turn Dharma practice into yet another object of neurotic obsession... Excellent!

And this idea of "secret", or of not doing mantra in the presence of those without samaya... At any point in time we are surrounded by thousands of beings that are not perceivable by us. Some are non-corporeal, some are microscopic, etc... There is NEVER a time or place where you will practice mantra, without sentient being that has not taken samaya being present. NEVER.

Except, maybe, in some Pure Land. Maybe.

Malcolm wrote:

Not sentient beings, people, humans.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 26th, 2016 at 1:57 AM

Title: Re: Innovative ways of mantra counting

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you want to practice the two stages there is a precise way followed by those who became mahasiddhas. Even Guru Rinpoche observed the principles of strict practice when it came to Phurba and so on.

If you wish to practice Dzogchen, there is also a precise way, but it does not involve counting mantras necessarily, even though it could. But in the latter case, one would follow the procedures of creation and completion very precisely.

Sherab Dorje said:

One has to work with their circumstances. Obviously if one can execute a practice "by-the-book" then one should. But the internal mechanisms of the practice, seem to me, to be more important than the external forms.

As far as I am concerned it would be stupid to say to somebody that they cannot achieve liberation if they practice in the presence of people not bound by samaya, if they only have the opportunity to practice in the presence of those without samaya. It would also fail to take into account that Dzogchen/Mahamudra is with us everywhere, and under all circumstances. Dzogchen/Mahamudra is not restricted to those holding malas in the left hand, while hiding them from those that are not bound by samaya, and only within the physical confines of a sanctified space. Dzogchen/Mahamudra is boundless, completely unrestricted by space and time. So, it seems to me, that to say that it can only be realized under specific physical conditions is a recipe for failure.

Malcolm wrote:

You are making a classic error. There are many kinds of Dzogchen practice that must be done in complete secrecy. Secret Mantra is called "secret" for a reason. There is a difference between working with circumstances and disregarding the proper way to do things. Dzogchen practitioners need to observe the same samayas as everyone else. Otherwise why observe your ngakpa commitments?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 26th, 2016 at 1:31 AM

Title: Re: When does counting mantras count?

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

It's probably why the Mahasiddhas, that had to do their practice while engaged in their worldly tasks (or whose worldly tasks were their practice), never reached a significant level of realization.

Malcolm wrote:

I think you need to read their bios more carefully Greg.

Sherab Dorje said:

Sorry, I meant to write "some of the Mahasiddhas..."

Regardless... Somehow I do not believe the Mahasiddhas relied on anal-retentive-obsessive-compulsiveness to achieve their aims. Seems to me that that path would run contrary to the idea of just "letting go" and remaining in Mahamudra/Dzogchen.

Malcolm wrote:

If you want to practice the two stages there is a precise way followed by those who became mahasiddhas. Even Guru Rinpoche observed the principles of strict practice when it came to Phurba and so on.

If you wish to practice Dzogchen, there is also a precise way, but it does not involve counting mantras necessarily, even though it could. But in the latter case, one would follow the procedures of creation and completion very precisely.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 26th, 2016 at 1:28 AM

Title: Re: Innovative ways of mantra counting

Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

Yes, I'm quite aware and agree the importance of ritual objects and its proper use in vajrayana practice. But the question remains, can you count in a formal session, or asana using a device when for some reason you don't have a mala at hand? I've counted mantras using my hands in some sessions when I realized I left my mala somewhere before starting and was too late to break the seating and go after it.

Malcolm wrote:

If you are doing a formal practice of approach and accomplishment, you need your mala. If you are doing any kind of serious practice, you need your mala. However, if you are doing a short thun, for example, in ChNN's system, you don't need a mala because you are not counting the recitations. If you are counting, you need, if you are not counting, you don't. Still, it is better to use a mala when reciting mantras.

paël said:

Do you need to count sutric mantras? I have counted them in my head. I can't use mala. I can't use my hand.

Malcolm wrote:

No.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 26th, 2016 at 1:05 AM

Title: Re: When does counting mantras count?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Counting mantras where people who lack samaya can see you doesn't count.

Sherab Dorje said:

It's probably why the Mahasiddhas, that had to do their practice while engaged in their worldly tasks (or whose worldly tasks were their practice), never reached a significant level of realization.

Malcolm wrote:

I think you need to think more carefully Greg.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 25th, 2016 at 11:11 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Fa Dao said:

and how about the views of this guy?

Malcolm wrote:

Someone who is in deep denial.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 25th, 2016 at 11:07 PM

Title: Re: Innovative ways of mantra counting

Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

How about using these non-orthodox devices in a formal session when a proper mala is not at hand ? It makes the recitation less or not valid at all?

Malcolm wrote:

It is the responsibility of the practitioner to obtain the proper items for a given practice. There are dependent originations at play when a correctly made mala is used, counted with the left hand, etc, that cannot be duplicated with a digital counter and so on.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

Yes, I'm quite aware and agree the importance of ritual objects and its proper use in vajrayana practice. But the question remains, can you count in a formal session, or asana using a device when for some reason you don't have a mala at hand? I've counted mantras using my hands in some sessions when I realized I left my mala somewhere before starting and was too late to break the seating and go after it.

Malcolm wrote:

If you are doing a formal practice of approach and accomplishment, you need your mala. If you are doing any kind of serious practice, you need your mala. However, if you are doing a short thun, for example, in ChNN's system, you don't need a mala because you are not counting the recitations. If you are counting, you need, if you are not counting, you don't. Still, it is better to use a mala when reciting mantras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 25th, 2016 at 10:37 PM

Title: Re: When does counting mantras count?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you are not using a proper mala, in secret, it does not matter how mantras you count. They don't count. Only mantras counted in formal sessions count. But hey, we know that people are very fond of criticizing others for following traditions that have no basis in the teachings, while embracing novel traditions they make up on the spot.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

How about using these non-orthodox devices in a formal session when a proper mala is not at hand ? It makes the recitation less or not valid at all?

Malcolm wrote:

It is the responsibility of the practitioner to obtain the proper items for a given practice. There are dependent originations at play when a correctly made mala is used, counted with the left hand, etc, that cannot be duplicated with a digital counter and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 25th, 2016 at 10:15 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Because it is so much better to feign indifference and lack of concern when observing the rise of fascism...

binocular said:

Fighting them or feigning indifference toward them aren't the only options. Another option is that you could try to convert your opponents to your way of thinking and living -- but for that, you'd need to give up your doctrine of personal autonomy.

Malcolm wrote:

One could try, but it did not work very well in 1933.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 25th, 2016 at 10:06 PM

Title: Re: Innovative ways of mantra counting

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you are not using a proper mala, in secret, it does not matter how mantras you count. They don't count. Only mantras counted in formal sessions count. But hey, we know that people are very fond of criticizing others for following traditions that have no basis in the teachings, while embracing novel traditions they make up on the spot.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 25th, 2016 at 10:47 AM

Title: Re: Innovative ways of mantra counting

Content:

Dharmaraj said:

Guys

What are some ways of counting mantra which will not attract unnecessary attention, besides rosary and tally counters ?

Any technique or method to count mantra anytime, anywhere easily without attracting unnecessary attention

With rosary and tally counters, it attracts too much attention

There is one way of counting on fingers but its complicated and cant be used as easily and readily as tally counters

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

<https://western-hindu.org/2010/01/01/how-to-chant-a-mantra-108-times-without-mala-beads/>

Malcolm wrote:

Which has nothing to do with our tradition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 25th, 2016 at 7:27 AM

Title: When does counting mantras count?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Note of moderation: Topic split from here

<https://www.dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=39&t=24205#p365667>

Dharmaraj said:

Guys

What are some ways of counting mantra which will not attract unnecessary attention, besides rosary and tally counters ?

Any technique or method to count mantra anytime, anywhere easily without attracting unnecessary attention

With rosary and tally counters, it attracts too much attention

There is one way of counting on fingers but its complicated and cant be used as easily and readily as tally counters

Malcolm wrote:

Counting mantras where people who lack samaya can see you doesn't count.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 25th, 2016 at 4:12 AM

Title: Re: Alt-right coming out of their ugly closet.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The export of jobs from the US is the fault of American consumers and no one else. We wanted lots of cheap shit because we are cheap, and prefer variety over quality.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 25th, 2016 at 4:05 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Sometimes in evolution, species make nonadaptive choices. This would be one of those.

binocular said:

It's not clear how this is the case.

Look how much time, how much attention you give them. They've managed to get large amounts of your attention -- attention which you could have spent otherwise. They have psychologically conquered you, at least occasionally. Now that is evolutionary success! To gain power over someone's mind, over their time, over their attention!

People generally don't seem to think all that highly of economical wellbeing, even if they say they do. What seems to matter the most in life is to be in a particular psychological state -- to feel powerful, regardless of one's material state.

Malcolm wrote:

Because it is so much better to feign indifference and lack of concern when observing the rise of fascism...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 24th, 2016 at 9:16 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That does not make them Republicans, that just makes them suckers.

binocular said:

Or just an evolutionary success.

Malcolm wrote:

Sometimes in evolution, species make nonadaptive choices. This would be one of those.

There isn't single American culture, there are roughly three, The culture of the coasts [The west coast largely settled by people from the Northeast], and the culture of fly-over country, and the culture of the South (which spread after the civil war into the western states in the eastern side of the Rockies).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 24th, 2016 at 9:13 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That does not make them Republicans, that just makes them suckers.

binocular said:

Or just an evolutionary success.

Malcolm wrote:

Sometimes in evolution, species make nonadaptive choices. This would be one of those.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 24th, 2016 at 5:04 PM

Title: Re: Alt-right coming out of their ugly closet.

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

In July of 2016, BronyCon, the annual convention for infantilized adults who love all things related to the children's TV show My Little Pony, drew 7600 attendees to the Baltimore Convention Center. NPI's convention last week in DC drew 200 assholes plus Tila Tequila. Any "movement" that draws 38 times fewer people than one dedicated to "adults" who dress up like cartoon horses ain't shit.

<http://ace.mu.nu/archives/367002.php>

dzoki said:

Actually this was more like "press conference" not an actual annual convention. We have same problem here in the EU. Nazis are still hiding, though they are increasingly coming into open. You might think their numbers are extremely low, but if you looked into how many people have nazi stickers (such as confederate flag, or in case of my country, Slovakia, WWII. nazi state's double cross) on their cars, you would see that numbers of sympathizers and active members are much much higher.

Malcolm wrote:

More amazingly, this conference took place in a federal building.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 24th, 2016 at 9:02 AM

Title: Re: Living from ultimate truth

Content:

conebeckham said:

well-

I learned the three types of compassion as:

1. Compassion focused on beings being free from suffering.
2. Compassion focused on beings not recognizing the impermanent nature of conditioned phenomena.
3. Non-Referential compassion manifested by those with direct experience of the True Nature, or Emptiness/Awareness, etc.

Frankly, all three are "true compassion," but the third is the Buddha's compassion. Those on the path can experience the first two.

boda said:

So Malcolm was only referring to #2 for some reason, when there are in fact other ways in which compassion arises, including at least #1 from your list. Non-referential compassion does not sound like compassion but something else. If the Buddha felt no inclination to help others then why did he?

Malcolm wrote:

No, I was referring to something else entirely.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 24th, 2016 at 3:39 AM

Title: Re: Alt-right coming out of their ugly closet.

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Damn, I must be really out of it. I didn't know that Tila Tequila was a Nazi.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup:

dzogchungpa said:

In a series of Facebook messages, Tequila told the story of Hitler, describing the brutal German dictator as a misunderstood dreamer who was "bullied" and simply wanted to show Jewish people "love."

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.thehollywoodgossip.com/2013/12/tila-tequila-dresses-like-a-nazi-shows-love-for-hitler/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 24th, 2016 at 3:30 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

binocular said:

It's racists hiding behind the masks of democracy and liberalism that make racism so persistent and resistant to any effort to undo it.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and such people are called Republicans.

PuerAzaelis said:

Good luck trying to switch the holodeck back on.

94% of the counties that voted for Obama either in 2008 or 2012 and 31% of the counties that voted for Obama twice - voted for Trump in 2016. That is, millions of Trump's votes came from people who voted for the black guy with the Muslim name.

Malcolm wrote:

That does not make them Republicans, that just makes them suckers.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 24th, 2016 at 2:03 AM

Title: Re: Historic Chod Conference July 12-16th

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I kind of wish they had given it a cool name, like "Tromapalooza" or "Machig: The Gathering".

Malcolm wrote:

I will bring it up at the next meeting and specifically tell Lama Tsultrim you complained...

Lhasa said:

Maybe Lama Tsultrim might consider inviting her friend Ram Dass, not as a teacher, but to receive the healing benefits, they could have him sit in the center of the Chod practice circles. I'd love to have someone do Chod for me. Any way for remote participation...like putting names in the circle?

Malcolm wrote:

There will be an opportunity for remote healing.

Vasana said:

I hope they live-stream or record the conference.

Malcolm wrote:

At this point, there will not be live-streaming (but it may be possible), but the conference will be recorded/videoed.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 23rd, 2016 at 9:36 PM

Title: Re: Alt-right coming out of their ugly closet.

Content:

Ayu said:

Many of those rightist-racists on twitter (and facebook?) are Bots only. (Does anybody have a good source for this claim? They told so in German TV.)

This gives the nazis the feeling of "We are many!" - they need that sentiment urgently and it attracts more people also, who before had no opinion at all.

Malcolm wrote:

They are more than you want to believe.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 23rd, 2016 at 9:34 PM

Title: Re: Historic Chod Conference July 12-16th

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I kind of wish they had given it a cool name, like "Tromapalooza" or "Machig: The Gathering".

Malcolm wrote:

I will bring it up at the next meeting and specifically tell Lama Tsultrim you complained...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 23rd, 2016 at 4:46 AM

Title: Re: Historic Chod Conference July 12-16th

Content:

Vasana said:

I hope they live-stream or record the conference.

Malcolm wrote:

I intend to bring this up. I am not sure streaming is an option however due to the remoteness of Tara Mandala.

Vasana said:

Good stuff. I assume past webcasts and transmissions from Lama Tsultrim Allione weren't from Tara Mandala then.

Malcolm wrote:
I have no idea.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, November 23rd, 2016 at 4:38 AM
Title: Re: Historic Chod Conference July 12-16th
Content:
Vasana said:
I hope they live-stream or record the conference.

Malcolm wrote:
I intend to bring this up. I am not sure streaming is an option however due to the remoteness of Tara Mandala.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, November 23rd, 2016 at 4:28 AM
Title: Re: Historic Chod Conference July 12-16th
Content:
DGA said:
I will try to attend this.

What is the topic of your presentation, Malcolm?

Malcolm wrote:
At this time, it is on the connection between Chod and Dzogchen, I may instead do a presentation on provocations. It is not completely decided.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, November 23rd, 2016 at 3:51 AM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:
Fa Dao said:
stumbled across it on youtube...watched it..found it interesting and thought I'd share it simply as an alternative narrative....sick to death of the far right AND the far left....both are about the same in my book...and both have the arrogant attitude that they know whats best for the majority of regular people in the middle...

Malcolm wrote:
All I know is that white men do not have their civil rights systematically violated, unlike Women, People of Color, Native Americans, and LGBT people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 23rd, 2016 at 3:48 AM

Title: Re: Historic Chod Conference July 12-16th

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

161121_chod_conf_lo_res_cropped.jpg (377.18 KiB) Viewed 29800 times

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 23rd, 2016 at 3:10 AM

Title: Re: Why do you All seek Enlightenment to avoid Suffering?

Content:

binocular said:

I suppose I believe in such a self altogether a few minutes tops in an average day. For the most part, I don't think about such things.

Malcolm wrote:

The self is a habit, not a belief.

boda said:

Does that mean no-self is a belief rather than a habit?

I believe neural science informs that a sense of self is rather hardwired. There are cells in the human brain which are dedicated to the function. So it would be just as erroneous to classify it as a habit as it would to class it as a belief, I believe.

Malcolm wrote:

Habits can't be hardwired?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 22nd, 2016 at 9:23 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Fa Dao said:

I found this to be a thought provoking video in line with some of the discussions in this thread....please, no knee-jerk reactions from either side..

thoughts?

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Malcolm wrote:

White privilege is not about income. It's about the fact that white Americans (excluding Jews) run virtually no risk of having their civil rights systematically violated.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 22nd, 2016 at 6:02 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

sillyrabbit said:

Seperatism is not a solution, it's just more of the same.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed, separatists are not thinking clearly, if at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 22nd, 2016 at 3:40 AM

Title: Re: Why do you All seek Enlightenment to avoid Suffering?

Content:

binocular said:

In that case, your quest was poorly conceived, and bound to result in a negative.

Malcolm wrote:

Apart from some inexpressible, unknowable identity that cannot be discerned no matter how much one searches for it, and thereby is itself a mere imputation, there is no identity which can be found upon analysis.

binocular said:

You simply didn't clearly define the objective of your quest, hence it is no wonder you ended up empty-handed.

The same happens with any poorly defined quest, not just with the search for a self.

If you set out to look for x, but you never define what x is, you're just not going to find it.

That, however, doesn't yet mean that x doesn't exist.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, the subject of investigation is very well defined: find an immutable essence which serves as one's identity, a.k.a, soul or atman.

If such an immutable essence exists, since it is necessarily unconditioned, it cannot be found through analysis and cannot be known by the mind. In this case, it is still an imputation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 22nd, 2016 at 1:00 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

binocular said:

It's racists hiding behind the masks of democracy and liberalism that make racism so persistent and resistant to any effort to undo it.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and such people are called Republicans.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 21st, 2016 at 11:08 PM

Title: Re: Reincarnation as a prison and gratitude

Content:

hareaza said:

...to whom would a Buddhist be grateful to since Buddhism doesn't consider that there's an anthropomorphic God , or a God in the traditional religious sense?

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha, for giving us teachings that allow us to find freedom from the suffering that is the endless wheel of samsara.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 21st, 2016 at 8:42 AM

Title: Re: Liberal fear mongering vs Reality

Content:

Rakz said:

...the whole place starts looking like the USSR.

Malcolm wrote:

Says that guy who admires Putin.

Rakz said:

USSR was dissolved in the early 90s. Putin came to power much later.

Putin was a KGB foreign intelligence officer for 16 years, rising to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel before retiring in 1991 to enter politics in Saint Petersburg.

Malcolm wrote:

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Vladimir_Putin

As I said...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 21st, 2016 at 4:38 AM

Title: Re: Liberal fear mongering vs Reality

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Well, Mussolini was also a National Socialist. Recall, he was the editor of Avanti, the Socialist newspaper out of Milan, for 15 years. But when the First World War broke out, a dispute arose among Italian Socialists over whether socialists should fight in the war or not. Mussolini felt.

Sherab Dorje said:

Yes, originally he was a socialist, but then he decided that courting Italian capital and the monarchy was more personally lucrative, so...

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, of course, but that was some years later once he gained a seat in the Italian Gvt. and realized his fortunes lay with monied landowners in rural Italy rather than workers in northern cities such as Milan. He even made a show of being a faithful Catholic...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 21st, 2016 at 4:29 AM

Title: Re: Liberal fear mongering vs Reality

Content:

conebeckham said:

Did you even read the article? Not all Fascists were Hitler.

Sherab Dorje said:

Hitler was not a Fascist, he was a National Socialist.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, Mussolini was also a National Socialist. Recall, he was the editor of Avanti, the Socialist newspaper out of Milan, for 15 years. But when the First World War broke out, a dispute arose among Italian Socialists over whether socialists should fight in the war or not. Mussolini felt they should for nationalist reasons. The difference with the Italian Fascists (whom Hitler initially admired) hinged on the question of anti-semitism. Fascism was nationalist, and its racist tendencies were primarily pragmatic, not ideological, much like Mr. Trump's. But naturally, the latter's pragmatic racism appeals to ideological racists like that fellow Vidyaraja.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 21st, 2016 at 4:17 AM

Title: Re: Liberal fear mongering vs Reality

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

I don't think "racist" or "fascist" are particularly confusing or ambiguous.

Sherab Dorje said:

It is actually fashionable amongst the fascists here in Greece to accuse anybody that opposes them, of acting like fascists.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, you see the same charge by the right here in the US, so called "Liberal Fascism." Of course it is absolutely ridiculous, but whatever.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 21st, 2016 at 4:08 AM

Title: Re: Why do you All seek Enlightenment to avoid Suffering?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

An identity of persons and things that was something other than a conventional attribution.

binocular said:

In that case, your quest was poorly conceived, and bound to result in a negative.

Malcolm wrote:

Apart from some inexpressible, unknowable identity that cannot be discerned no matter how much one searches for it, and thereby is itself a mere imputation, there is no identity which can be found upon analysis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 21st, 2016 at 3:56 AM

Title: Re: Why do you All seek Enlightenment to avoid Suffering?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If one looks for a self and does not find one, that is not a view.

binocular said:

What were you looking for, when you set out to look for the self?

Malcolm wrote:

An identity of persons and things that was something other than a conventional attribution.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 21st, 2016 at 2:16 AM

Title: Re: Why do you All seek Enlightenment to avoid Suffering?

Content:

binocular said:

"Self" is a reflexive pronoun; as such, I do not know what it refers to.

Malcolm wrote:

Then how can you meaningfully construct a sentence?

binocular said:

Tentatively.

Which is a problem only for those who cling to self-views.

Malcolm wrote:

I see, you consider the assertion that "there is no autonomous self" to be a self-view.

If one maintains conceptually the idea "there is not self," this is a self-view. If one looks for a self and does not find one, that is not a view.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 21st, 2016 at 2:05 AM

Title: Re: Why do you All seek Enlightenment to avoid Suffering?

Content:

binocular said:

"Self" is a reflexive pronoun; as such, I do not know what it refers to.

Malcolm wrote:

Then how can you meaningfully construct a sentence?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 21st, 2016 at 1:50 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

Oh please. White people are not devils. They're nationalists (read Nazis). The cardinal sin is thinking that any nation that is not a minority is cool, especially if it's your own. Self hatred is the only acceptable perspective.

Malcolm wrote:

The United States was founded on three pillars: not capitalism, democracy and liberty, as many suppose, but rather, ethnic cleansing, genocide and human trafficking.

This needs to be honestly and openly addressed by our nation.

PuerAzelis said:

It has been addressed.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it really hasn't been. You are conflating a desire for white guilt and self-flagellation (which I don't have and think is pointless) for a process of truth and reconciliation (which I think is important), since many Americans still think we had and have a right to remove Native people from their lands, and import other people as chattel. And of course now we are looking at an AG who calls black people "boy."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 21st, 2016 at 1:41 AM

Title: Re: Liberal fear mongering vs Reality

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In the other hand, Mr. Trump precisely matches Umberto Eco's

<http://www.nybooks.com/articles/1995/06/22/ur-fascism/> that make one a fascist:

PuerAzelis said:

LOL Christ right on cue the resident Godwin's law.

Malcolm wrote:

Interestingly, https://www.washingtonpost.com/posteverything/wp/2015/12/14/sure-call-trump-a-nazi-just-make-sure-you-know-what-youre-talking-about/?utm_term=.d1a05a07e900 said last year:

First, let me get this Donald Trump issue out of the way: If you're thoughtful about it and show some real awareness of history, go ahead and refer to Hitler or Nazis when you talk about Trump. Or any other politician.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 21st, 2016 at 1:37 AM

Title: Re: I declined the AirBnB commitment

Content:

maybay said:

Make up your mind already. Did Trump win or did Clinton lose?

Malcolm wrote:

Neither. One got a job that the other should have had the good sense to avoid.

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 21st, 2016 at 12:57 AM

Title: Re: I declined the AirBnB commitment

Content:

rachmiel said:

maybay, howdy.

You might find this NY Times editorial interesting:

http://www.nytimes.com/2016/11/20/opinion/sunday/the-end-of-identity-liberalism.html?ref=opinion&_r=1&mtrref=undefined&gwh=748B62E21A471016468BC6B75A276C8A&gwt=pay&assetType=opinion

rachMiel

Malcolm wrote:

The author is quite wrong here:

Identity politics, by contrast, is largely expressive, not persuasive. Which is why it never wins elections — but can lose them.

Identity politics did win this election, they just happened to be white identity politics.

maybay said:

Make up your mind already. Did Trump win or did Clinton lose?

Malcolm wrote:

Neither. One got a job that the other should have had the good sense to avoid.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 21st, 2016 at 12:08 AM

Title: Re: Liberal fear mongering vs Reality

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

You have been disinclined to provide an actual concrete statement about what exactly you have been talking about, hence the suspicion that "socialist" for you just means "dummies I don't like or agree with".

Malcolm wrote:

In the other hand, Mr. Trump precisely matches Umberto Eco's

<http://www.nybooks.com/articles/1995/06/22/ur-fascism/> that make one a fascist:

1. The first feature of Ur-Fascism is the cult of tradition. Traditionalism is of course much older than fascism. Not only was it typical of counter-revolutionary Catholic thought after the French revolution, but it was born in the late Hellenistic era, as a reaction to classical Greek rationalism. In the Mediterranean basin, people of different religions (most of them indulgently accepted by the Roman Pantheon) started dreaming of a revelation received at the dawn of human history. This revelation, according to the traditionalist mystique, had remained for a long time concealed under the veil of forgotten languages—in Egyptian hieroglyphs, in the Celtic runes, in the scrolls of the little known religions of Asia.

This new culture had to be syncretistic. Syncretism is not only, as the dictionary says, “the combination of different forms of belief or practice”; such a combination must tolerate contradictions. Each of the original messages contains a silver of wisdom, and whenever they seem to say different or incompatible things it is only because all are alluding, allegorically, to the same primeval truth.

As a consequence, there can be no advancement of learning. Truth has been already spelled out once and for all, and we can only keep interpreting its obscure message.

One has only to look at the syllabus of every fascist movement to find the major traditionalist thinkers. The Nazi gnosis was nourished by traditionalist, syncretistic, occult elements. The most influential theoretical source of the theories of the new Italian right, Julius Evola, merged the Holy Grail with The Protocols of the Elders of Zion, alchemy with the Holy Roman and Germanic Empire. The very fact that the Italian right, in order to show its open-mindedness, recently broadened its syllabus to include works by De Maistre, Guenon, and Gramsci, is a blatant proof of syncretism.

If you browse in the shelves that, in American bookstores, are labeled as New Age, you can find there even Saint Augustine who, as far as I know, was not a fascist. But combining Saint Augustine and Stonehenge—that is a symptom of Ur-Fascism.

2. Traditionalism implies the rejection of modernism. Both Fascists and Nazis worshiped technology, while traditionalist thinkers usually reject it as a negation of traditional spiritual values. However, even though Nazism was proud of its industrial achievements, its praise of modernism was only the surface of an ideology based upon Blood and Earth (Blut und Boden). The rejection of the modern world was disguised as a rebuttal of the capitalistic way of life, but it mainly concerned the rejection of the Spirit of 1789 (and of 1776, of course). The Enlightenment, the Age of Reason, is seen as the beginning of modern depravity. In this sense Ur-Fascism can be defined as irrationalism.

3. Irrationalism also depends on the cult of action for action's sake. Action being beautiful in itself, it must be taken before, or without, any previous reflection. Thinking is a form of emasculation. Therefore culture is suspect insofar as it is identified with critical attitudes. Distrust of the intellectual world has always been a symptom of Ur-Fascism, from Goering's alleged statement ("When I hear talk of culture I reach for my gun") to the frequent use of such expressions as "degenerate intellectuals," "eggheads," "effete snobs," "universities are a nest of reds." The official Fascist intellectuals were mainly engaged in attacking modern culture and the liberal intelligentsia for having betrayed traditional values.

4. No syncretistic faith can withstand analytical criticism. The critical spirit makes distinctions, and to distinguish is a sign of modernism. In modern culture the scientific community praises disagreement as a way to improve knowledge. For Ur-Fascism, disagreement is treason.

5. Besides, disagreement is a sign of diversity. Ur-Fascism grows up and seeks for consensus by exploiting and exacerbating the natural fear of difference. The first appeal of a fascist or prematurely fascist movement is an appeal against the intruders. Thus Ur-Fascism is racist by definition.

6. Ur-Fascism derives from individual or social frustration. That is why one of the most typical features of the historical fascism was the appeal to a frustrated middle class, a class suffering from an economic crisis or feelings of political humiliation, and frightened by the pressure of lower social groups. In our time, when the old “proletarians” are becoming petty bourgeois (and the lumpen are largely excluded from the political scene), the fascism of tomorrow will find its audience in this new majority.

7. To people who feel deprived of a clear social identity, Ur-Fascism says that their only privilege is the most common one, to be born in the same country. This is the origin of nationalism. Besides, the only ones who can provide an identity to the nation are its enemies. Thus at the root of the Ur-Fascist psychology there is the obsession with a plot, possibly an international one. The followers must feel besieged. The easiest way to solve the plot is the appeal to xenophobia. But the plot must also come from the inside: Jews are usually the best target because they have the advantage of being at the same time inside and outside. In the US, a prominent instance of the plot obsession is to be found in Pat Robertson’s The New World Order, but, as we have recently seen, there are many others.

8. The followers must feel humiliated by the ostentatious wealth and force of their enemies. When I was a boy I was taught to think of Englishmen as the five-meal people. They ate more frequently than the poor but sober Italians. Jews are rich and help each other through a secret web of mutual assistance. However, the followers must be convinced that they can overwhelm the enemies. Thus, by a continuous shifting of rhetorical focus, the enemies are at the same time too strong and too weak. Fascist governments are condemned to lose wars because they are constitutionally incapable of objectively evaluating the force of the enemy.

9. For Ur-Fascism there is no struggle for life but, rather, life is lived for struggle. Thus pacifism is trafficking with the enemy. It is bad because life is permanent warfare. This, however, brings about an Armageddon complex. Since enemies have to be defeated, there must be a final battle, after which the movement will have control of the world. But such a “final solution” implies a further era of peace, a Golden Age, which contradicts the principle of permanent war. No fascist leader has ever succeeded in solving this predicament.

10. Elitism is a typical aspect of any reactionary ideology, insofar as it is fundamentally aristocratic, and aristocratic and militaristic elitism cruelly implies contempt for the weak. Ur-Fascism can only advocate a popular elitism. Every citizen belongs to the best people of the world, the members of the party are the best among the citizens, every citizen can (or ought to) become a member of the party. But there cannot be patricians without plebeians. In fact, the Leader, knowing that his power was not delegated to him democratically but was conquered by force, also knows that his force is based upon the weakness of the masses; they are so weak as to need and deserve a ruler. Since the group is hierarchically organized (according to a military model), every subordinate leader despises his own underlings, and each of them despises his inferiors. This reinforces the sense of mass elitism.

11. In such a perspective everybody is educated to become a hero. In every mythology the hero is an exceptional being, but in Ur-Fascist ideology, heroism is the norm. This cult of heroism is strictly linked with the cult of death. It is not by chance that a motto of the Falangists was Viva la Muerte (in English it should be translated as “Long Live Death!”). In non-fascist societies, the lay public is told that death is unpleasant but must be faced with dignity; believers are told that it is the painful way to reach a supernatural happiness. By contrast, the Ur-Fascist hero craves heroic death, advertised as the best reward for a heroic life. The Ur-Fascist hero is impatient to die. In his impatience, he more frequently sends other people to death.

12. Since both permanent war and heroism are difficult games to play, the Ur-Fascist transfers his will to power to sexual matters. This is the origin of machismo (which implies both disdain for women and intolerance and condemnation of nonstandard sexual habits, from chastity to homosexuality). Since even sex is a difficult game to play, the Ur-Fascist hero tends to play with weapons—doing so becomes an ersatz phallic exercise.

13. Ur-Fascism is based upon a selective populism, a qualitative populism, one might say. In a democracy, the citizens have individual rights, but the citizens in their entirety have a political impact only from a quantitative point of view—one follows the decisions of the majority. For Ur-Fascism, however, individuals as individuals have no rights, and the People is conceived as a quality, a monolithic entity expressing the Common Will. Since no large quantity of human beings can have a common will, the Leader pretends to be their interpreter. Having lost their power of delegation, citizens do not act; they are only called on to play the role of the People. Thus the People is only a theatrical fiction. To have a good instance of qualitative populism we no longer need the Piazza Venezia in Rome or the Nuremberg Stadium. There is in our future a TV or Internet populism, in which the emotional response of a selected group of citizens can be presented and accepted as the Voice of the People.

Because of its qualitative populism Ur-Fascism must be against “rotten” parliamentary governments. One of the first sentences uttered by Mussolini in the Italian parliament was “I could have transformed this deaf and gloomy place into a bivouac for my maniples”—“maniples” being a subdivision of the traditional Roman legion. As a matter of fact, he immediately found better housing for his maniples, but a little later he liquidated the parliament. Wherever a politician casts doubt on the legitimacy of a parliament because it no longer represents the Voice of the People, we can smell Ur-Fascism.

14. Ur-Fascism speaks Newspeak. Newspeak was invented by Orwell, in 1984, as the official language of Ingsoc, English Socialism. But elements of Ur-Fascism are common to different forms of dictatorship. All the Nazi or Fascist schoolbooks made use of an impoverished vocabulary, and an elementary syntax, in order to limit the instruments for complex and critical reasoning. But we must be ready to identify other kinds of Newspeak, even if they take the apparently innocent form of a popular talk show.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 20th, 2016 at 10:40 PM

Title: Re: I declined the AirBnB commitment

Content:

rachmiel said:

maybay, howdy.

You might find this NY Times editorial interesting:

http://www.nytimes.com/2016/11/20/opinion/sunday/the-end-of-identity-liberalism.html?ref=opinion&_r=1&mtrref=undefined&gwh=748B62E21A471016468BC6B75A276C8A&gwt=pay&assetType=opinion

rachMiel

Malcolm wrote:

The author is quite wrong here:

Identity politics, by contrast, is largely expressive, not persuasive. Which is why it never wins elections — but can lose them.

Identity politics did win this election, they just happened to be white identity politics.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 20th, 2016 at 10:10 PM

Title: Re: Why do you All seek Enlightenment to avoid Suffering?

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

It seems to be the default approach for a lot of people round here. I.e. "There exists nothing to negate". I just don't see how that's not sophistry or nihilism.

Malcolm wrote:

Upon investigation, no entities can be found to negate. Prior to investigation, there is something to negate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 20th, 2016 at 9:53 PM

Title: Re: Why do you All seek Enlightenment to avoid Suffering?

Content:

binocular said:

I suppose I believe in such a self altogether a few minutes tops in an average day. For the most part, I don't think about such things.

Malcolm wrote:

The self is a habit, not a belief.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 20th, 2016 at 2:11 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This needs to be honestly and openly addressed by our nation.

Sherab Dorje said:

It was not addressed when you had a "black" man as president, you expect it to be addressed by the Trump administration?

Malcolm wrote:

Consciousness raising is a bitch.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 20th, 2016 at 2:01 AM

Title: Re: Anadi on the Flawed Perfection of Dzogchen

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

I am going to set myself up as a NeoAdvaita teacher.

Just write a long rambling book, with a lot of references to Jesus.

Malcolm wrote:

Don't forget Babaji. And you need some references to Rumi...and Nasruddin, if you want humor.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 20th, 2016 at 1:28 AM

Title: Re: Jobs or the Environment?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Returning to the gold standard is a very popular idea among Trumpistas.

DONALD TRUMP: Bringing back the gold standard would be very hard to do, but, boy, would it be wonderful. We'd have a standard on which to base our money.

<http://www.npr.org/2016/06/16/482279689/trump-favors-returning-to-the-gold-standard-few-economists-agree>

Sherab Dorje said:

I cannot believe they made this man president of the U$...

Malcolm wrote:

The Dems did it to themselves by insisting on nominating HRC.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 20th, 2016 at 1:18 AM

Title: Re: Jobs or the Environment?

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Economic nationalism? How does that work in an international market?

Malcolm wrote:

It is the return of the discredited 19th century American system:

1. High tariffs on imports
2. Massive infrastructure projects
3. Stringent central bank controls.

It won't work.

Sherab Dorje said:

With a major difference being we know have a global monetary system and there is no 1:1 ratio between currency and gold (or some other random internationally recognized physical object of trade).

Malcolm wrote:

Returning to the gold standard is a very popular idea among Trumpistas.

Sherab Dorje said:

DONALD TRUMP: Bringing back the gold standard would be very hard to do, but, boy, would it be wonderful. We'd have a standard on which to base our money.

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.npr.org/2016/06/16/482279689/trump-favors-returning-to-the-gold-standard-few-economists-agree>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 20th, 2016 at 1:10 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

The government decides...

The Cicada said:
And who runs the government? White devils.

PuerAzelis said:
Oh please. White people are not devils. They're nationalists (read Nazis). The cardinal sin is thinking that any nation that is not a minority is cool, especially if it's your own. Self hatred is the only acceptable perspective.

Malcolm wrote:
The United States was founded on three pillars: not capitalism, democracy and liberty, as many suppose, but rather, ethnic cleansing, genocide and human trafficking.

This needs to be honestly and openly addressed by our nation.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, November 20th, 2016 at 1:06 AM
Title: Re: Jobs or the Environment?
Content:
Queequeg said:
Bannon also apparently confessed, he's an "economic nationalist"...

Sherab Dorje said:
Economic nationalism? How does that work in an international market?

Malcolm wrote:
It is the return of the discredited 19th century American system:

1. High tariffs on imports
2. Massive infrastructure projects
3. Stringent central bank controls.

It won't work.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, November 20th, 2016 at 12:54 AM
Title: Re: Anadi on the Flawed Perfection of Dzogchen
Content:
PuerAzelis said:
Im not so sure. If compassion is simply the display, how compassionate can it really be?

Malcolm wrote:

Thugs rje, compassion, is the basis for the arising of the nirmanakāya. For example, the commentary on the Realms and Transformation of Sound Tantra states:

Thugs is the affection (brtse ba) in the heart for sentient beings. Rje is the arising of a special empathy (gdung sems) for them.

And:

When analyzed, there is the compassion that exists in the basis, the compassion that appears on the path, and the compassion of the perfected result.

Among those, since the compassion that exists on the path is undivided, it exists as the basis for the arising of the diversity. Since it is undisclosed, it has no activities.

There is the compassion that appears on the path. From among the three pristine consciousnesses of the basis, since the essence is intrinsically pure, [compassion] is not disclosed in any way. Since the nature self-appears, compassionate deeds are diverse. Since all beings are pervaded by compassion, compassion seems to appear as the one who tames those to be tamed.

The compassion of the perfected result intrinsically exists in the dharmakāya, comes from invocation and supplication to the sambhogakāya, and is produced when the nirmāṇakāya meets conditions and objects.

-- Buddhahood in This Life, ppg. 14 and 17 respectively.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 19th, 2016 at 10:31 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Kim O'Hara said:

This is reminding me of a lot of issues which came up in the Shinto and Buddhism thread - <http://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=53&t=24013>.

More specifically, is it plausible that Bon and Shinto only began to define themselves as "a religion" after encountering "a religion" in the form of (imported) Buddhism? That practitioners only developed a systematic philosophical framework after encountering (and no doubt debating) Buddhism?

Kim

Johnny Dangerous said:

With Bon, from a perspective of historicity, there is some truth to this I think. AFAIK The Bonpo developed their own system of dialectics etc. in response to Buddhism. However, I -do- think that a part of their teaching is undeniably ancient, the part that is and the part that is not is a subject for debate..and that debate is more important to historians than to practitioners, I think.

I think if you're going to ask about the influence, you at least to consider that there is some kernel of truth to the Bonpo claim that their tradition is old, and has influenced Tibetan Buddhism, the first is harder to prove with modern methods, but the second is undeniable. There are all kinds of aspects of Vajrayana that come from Bon..and vice versa, but practitioners on both sides seem to find it a thorny area.

Anyway, the main point is that Bon is as "complete" as Vajrayana, just viewing it as "shamanism" hasn't been true for near 1000 years, by the most conservative estimate, and it's influence on TB extends beyond Shamanism too.

Malcolm wrote:

We simply have very little idea what religion looked like in Tibet prior to the arrival of Buddhism. We have some guesses and attempts at reconstruction, but they are all very tentative.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 19th, 2016 at 6:58 AM

Title: Re: Liberal fear mongering vs Reality

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

-What job killing socialist policies?

Malcolm wrote:

He means the ones that build roads, bridges and fund the military— those socialist programs.

Rakz said:

Nope. That has nothing to do with the cancer known as socialism.

Malcolm wrote:

Pray tell, define "Socialism" for us?, as well as those socialist policies that kill jobs?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 19th, 2016 at 6:51 AM

Title: Re: Liberal fear mongering vs Reality

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

-What job killing socialist policies?

Malcolm wrote:

He means the ones that build roads, bridges and fund the military— those socialist programs.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 18th, 2016 at 10:32 PM

Title: Re: Living from ultimate truth

Content:

rachmiel said:

So I don't have to search for a teacher ... rather admit to myself that I already found one and act on it. Hopefully my inner teacher will learn what it needs from Anam to become a more effective and loving presence.

Malcolm wrote:

Compassion arises from observing that sentient don't know who they are.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 18th, 2016 at 11:38 AM

Title: Re: Living from ultimate truth

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The guru's job is to teach. Your job is to discover the meaning. It is not a situation where you have to meet with your teacher regularly on a private basis.

rachmiel said:

I accept that this is part of the tradition. But I don't like it. I like intense and regular one-on-one meetings. I like to develop an actual intimate relationship with my teacher. It has to be personal for me. If not, I'd rather get the lessons from books.

Malcolm wrote:

You will never be able to have an experience of the direction perception of your real nature by reading a book. It will never happen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 18th, 2016 at 8:57 AM

Title: Re: Living from ultimate truth

Content:

rachmiel said:

From what JD and Malcolm and a couple of others have said, my quest to awaken without an external guru sounds hopeless.

Which is, I think, an excellent starting point: absence of hope. I can work with that.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Might be a better starting point to ask why you are so adamant about not having one, or about not connecting to teachers.

rachmiel said:

Also a good place to dive in. Maybe I never met the right person, but of the dozen or so guru-ish figures I've had in my life -- teachers in school, college, therapists, shamans, "masters" from different spiritual traditions -- I ended up feeling NONE of them had much more of a clue than I did about what's really going on. They might have had their games down, believed deeply in their stories ... but I never met anyone I would trust to tell me how to "get it." With the possible exception of Anam Thubten, but I'll never know how that would have worked out because he doesn't offer the kind of personal relationship with regular private meetings that I want in a teacher.

I might give off the vibe that I've never bothered to try the guru/pupil thing ... but I have, several times, and it doesn't seem to work for me, for whatever reasons. The only "wisdom" I've ever acquired that's stuck is that which I've run into on my own, often painfully, head on, BOOM! I will only accept that which I discover myself.

Malcolm wrote:

The guru's job is to teach. Your job is to discover the meaning. It is not a situation where you have to meet with your teacher regularly on a private basis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 18th, 2016 at 8:18 AM

Title: Re: Living from ultimate truth

Content:

rachmiel said:

From what JD and Malcolm and a couple of others have said, my quest to awaken without an external guru sounds hopeless.

Which is, I think, an excellent starting point: absence of hope. I can work with that.

Malcolm wrote:

None of us managed to learn anything in this life without a teacher, whether it was tying one's shoes or learning how to read and write. Why does anyone think that Dharma is any different? Following a teacher is not a commitment to indentured servitude. It is a commitment to one's own liberation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 18th, 2016 at 7:07 AM

Title: Re: Living from ultimate truth

Content:

rachmiel said:

Gotcha. Thanks for sharing your take, I can see the good sense in it.

Malcolm wrote:

Pandita Vimalamitra states in his commentary on the Secret Tantra Without Syllables: Even if vidyā could be found through the imputation and scrutiny of intellectual analysis, it cannot be stabilized by necessary cultivation because it cannot be known whether one has indeed found vidyā or not. Therefore, in the beginning, a pure guru is very important. Afterwards, one's own cultivation and familiarity is very important.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 18th, 2016 at 6:21 AM

Title: Re: Liberal fear mongering vs Reality

Content:

Rakz said:

The fact is that the people have chosen Trump to be their next President.

Malcolm wrote:

Well no, some people have chosen Trump to be their next president. Most of the people did not.

And of course, had the electoral college gone the other way, Trumpistas would have been out there screaming bloody murder about election "rigging."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 18th, 2016 at 2:34 AM

Title: Historic Chod Conference July 12-16th

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<http://taramandala.org/chodconf/> at Tara Mandala, July 12-16th

Unknown said:

This historic First International Chöd-Zhije Conference will draw together leading scholars and practitioners researching and teaching this unique lineage in its various manifestations. Keynotes, panel discussions, and small group sessions will be held. They will explore the teachings of 11th century Tibetan yogini Machig Labdrön and her teacher, the renowned Indian yogi Padampa Sangye, the developments of the lineage over the last millennium, the role of women, as well as the application of these teachings to our modern world. Dharma teachings and performances of Chöd songs and dances will foster a rich and engaged experience. Follow-up retreats will offer the opportunity to learn some of the different Chöd practices.

Malcolm wrote:

I will continue to post more details to this thread as they become available.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 18th, 2016 at 12:43 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

East Coast white Protestant culture.

Malcolm wrote:

Southern Protestants, not East Coast. East Coast is the belt from New England to DC that is by and large very liberal and very diverse.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 17th, 2016 at 9:37 PM

Title: Re: Liberal fear mongering vs Reality

Content:

Unknown said:

My sites were picked up by Trump supporters all the time. I think Trump is in the White House because of me. His followers don't fact-check anything — they'll post everything, believe anything. His campaign manager posted my story about a protester getting paid $3,500 as fact. Like, I made that up. I posted a fake ad on Craigslist.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.washingtonpost.com/news/the-intersect/wp/2016/11/17/facebook-fake-news-writer-i-think-donald-trump-is-in-the-white-house-because-of-me/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 17th, 2016 at 8:40 PM

Title: Re: Liberal fear mongering vs Reality

Content:

Rakz said:

...funded by George Soros...

Malcolm wrote:

...must be a shadowy international conspiracy.

Funded by the Mercers and the Kochs? Just honest Americans funding American causes for freedom and democracy (sure).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 17th, 2016 at 8:35 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

So the man bleeding by the side of the road should have known better after all.

Malcolm wrote:

A man bleeding out by the side of the road is a man bleeding out by the side of road. Someone either happens along and gives him aid, or not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 17th, 2016 at 6:11 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

Yes well some people indeed have the emotional or mental intelligence of children. I suppose they're as morally autonomous as the guy lying bleeding by the side of the road. Perhaps we should immediately teach him about emptiness after all. Or about eating cake.

It's odd that things are so interdependent, yet an individual's moral autonomy so absolute.

Malcolm wrote:

Personal moral authority is absolute because karma is unerring. If karma were erring, if it were possible for someone to be removed from the result of acting out their own intentions. However, they are not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 17th, 2016 at 5:42 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

Speech without agency is impotent, and is therefore neither right nor wrong. Like any other action, when I speak I have created something in the world that was not there before. To the extent that speech, like any other object, affects the listener, beyond the listener's capacity to investigate, to that extent speech has agency over the listener, and the listener has no autonomy.

Malcolm wrote:

The listener has a moral obligation to himself to evaluate all that he or she hears and judge whether it is valid or not. No one can make those determinations for anyone but themselves. A person can certainly hand over their agency by willingly choosing to believe everything a given person says, but they are never stripped of their moral autonomy with respect to making decisions about things that are right and wrong. Thus, if someone hears from Donald Trump that most Mexicans are rapists and drug dealers, and then proceeds to go out and beat and harass Mexicans, getting arrested for it, Donald Trump is not responsible for their actions to the extent that he cannot be found liable for incitement. Of course, if it is found that he is guilty of incitement, this in no way mitigates all those people who were incited to act criminally. Those people turned over their agency to another, but this does not remove their autonomous moral authority, unless they are children.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 17th, 2016 at 5:00 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

... Eichmann was not able to deflect blame for his crimes.

PuerAzelis said:

And if you do not speak up against Eichmann, you are likewise not responsible for those he is deceiving? Others just have to "investigate"?

And if you do speak up, that has not increased or affected in any way the moral responsibility of those who listen to "investigate"?

If speech has meaning, it has a moral power to affect circumstances just like any other object of perception, and those who use it are responsible for it.

If I refuse to have a conversation with some "deplorable", can I really blame that person if they take some action which I might not appreciate?

If I see someone with a knife in his hand and refuse to tell him how to remove it, can I really blame that person if they do something in some passion which harms them and others even more?

Your absolute view of moral autonomy is merciless and inapplicable to the circumstances of the relative world. The consequence of your view is to create some "safe space" which really is some isolated cave up on a hill.

Malcolm wrote:

We are talking at cross purposes.

One is one's own authority. One cannot rely on another for authority. Eichman sought to excuse his actions by claiming his responsibility was deferred because he was following orders. The point is that he was passing the buck.

People following Trump are responsible for their own decision. I am not responsible for their decision. It is no failing of mine personally that Trump was elected. I did not vote for him.

People are autonomous authorities. They can choose to relinquish that authority, but that choice also autonomous. A person's agency can be stripped away from them, but never their authority.

You are confusing agency with authority. As an agent in the world, I have responsibility for actions of mine that harm others. But agency and authority are different. When we make moral arguments, we can only do so by respecting the fact that people are morally autonomous. For example, if we have a conversation with someone who voted for Trump, we have to respect their moral autonomy in making that decision. We have to respect Eichmann's moral autonomy too. Indeed, the whole premise upon which convicting him of genocide, etc., rests, is that he was morally autonomous and made criminal choices which arose from his autonomy. He was not a minor, for example, whose moral autonomy is limited and therefore, his crimes might be ascribed to his parents, or in Eichmann's case, his superiors. The recognition of the moral autonomy of the individual is the basis for all distinctions of right and wrong in an individual's conduct.

With respect to your knife example: you have no agency to interfere with that person unless the knife they are holding is illegal, or they appear to be actively harming someone. People have the moral autonomy to make bad choices.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 17th, 2016 at 4:24 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The minute one abrogates one's own discrimination and investigations of things, it is at that moment when one becomes a slave of blind ignorance.

PuerAzelis said:

That is a merciless, existential view of moral autonomy which exists only in utopia. In the relative world, existence does not precede essence. I am morally responsible for my right speech not because it affects me alone, but because it has the power to deceive others who may not have the capacity to "investigate".

Malcolm wrote:

In fact, you are not responsible for the effects of your speech in this sense: when a person has jaundice, they will see everything as yellow. No matter how much you may want to correct them, you cannot.

Your speech has not power to deceive another. You cannot lie in a language you do not know. If you can speak in a language however, even if you are lying, it is the responsibility of others to ascertain this. For example, Eichmann was not able to deflect blame for his crimes. This is why it is up to the student to check a teacher's qualities out beforehand.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 17th, 2016 at 4:09 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

but those who speak, have "actual authority" or "actual responsibility" for the faith placed in such generalizations by society.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they don't. The responsibility lies upon oneself to ascertain what is true or false. If one gives over one's confidence to others to ascertain for oneself what is true or false, one is no better than the blind person in your thought experiment.

Consensus does not arise because we are told what it is we are supposed to agree upon; consensus arises individuals investigate things and agree upon common findings. The minute one abrogates one's own discrimination and investigations of things, it is at that moment when one becomes a slave of blind ignorance.

Thus, when someone shouts fire in a theater, I am going to find out if there is a fire before getting up in a panic, because it is my responsibility to do so.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 17th, 2016 at 3:12 AM

Title: Re: Living from ultimate truth

Content:

rachmiel said:

So can you choose to live from ultimate truth, "the transcendent state of the tathāgatas," like you might choose to live as a responsible mature adult instead of a narcissistic selfish adolescent?

Or does "the transcendent state" choose you once you have eightfold-path-ishly prepared the soil?

I ask because I am not interested in adopting a moral code or following a prescriptive path (grew up Catholic, been there done that, done with that) ... but I AM interested and drawn to living from emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

When you understand what vidyā is, and you cultivate that, eventually, while performing virtuous acts (with respect to cultivating a path) becomes unnecessary, equally one has no impetus to engage in nonvirtuous acts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 17th, 2016 at 2:50 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

If you think the point of conversation is to "make others responsible for my own views", that says a lot. If I am not responsible for the hope and faith of other people, then I am indeed living in a cave. To speak at all is to be responsible.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. The only true authority is oneself. One hopes that authority is not mislead through lack of investigation and so on.

PuerAzelis said:

If the only true authority is oneself, how could it ever be "mislead"?

Malcolm wrote:

"True" meaning actual, not "true" meaning undeceived.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 17th, 2016 at 2:44 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

If I am not responsible for the hope and faith of other people, then I am indeed living in a cave. To speak at all is to be responsible.

Malcolm wrote:

There are two issues here being conflated:

The only true authority is oneself. One hopes that authority is not mislead through lack of investigation and so on. Thus, in matters of faith and so on, one must take responsibility for what one believes.

As to the second issue:

In a society based on freedom of discourse, we are responsible for our speech only to the extent that it does not incite riots and cause harm. But for example, Bernie Sanders is not responsible for the Democrats that did not believe he was a better candidate than Clinton.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 17th, 2016 at 2:37 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The faith that others may or may not have is not my responsibility.

PuerAzelis said:

That, in a nutshell, is why the blinders will never come off those living inside the "safe spaces". Of course you're responsible, we all are.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. In matters of faith, you are your own authority. You cannot make others responsible for your own views.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 17th, 2016 at 2:30 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

PuerAzaelis said:

There are a lot more white people out there who are not racist and therefore do not like being called racist or being berated about how their country is racist. They also sense that the "everything is about race" crowd is using race as a cudgel to silence critics and have their way.

Malcolm wrote:

While not all "white" people are racists, unfortunately for us all America is a place where racism is systematic. We have not yet dealt with this reality as a country.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 17th, 2016 at 2:08 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It was the context of the thread. A previous poster castigated me for causing people to lose their faith. You then replied you have lost your faith, the normal implication being you were holding me at fault. So I wanted to know how. Simple.

binocular said:

We're talking about people losing faith in the Buddhadharma. Losing faith in the Buddhadharma.

If the Buddhadharma as you teach is true, then loss of faith in it is tremendous. Such loss should not be taken lightly.

Malcolm wrote:

The faith that others may or may not have is not my responsibility.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 17th, 2016 at 2:01 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

DGA said:

people who correspond to the category "white" come from diverse backgrounds, and which backgrounds count as white has changed dramatically over time. Jews of European descent didn't used to be regarded as white; now they are. Arabs--white or not?

Depends who and when you ask.

binocular said:

Many people are not philosophers, and they think and speak like Humpty Dumpty, making words mean whatever they want them to mean. And they are so much better off for that!

Malcolm wrote:

Humpty Dumpty sat on a wall,
Humpty Dumpty had a great fall.
All the king's horses and all the king's men
Couldn't put Humpty together again.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 17th, 2016 at 12:46 AM

Title: Re: Living from ultimate truth

Content:

rachmiel said:

Is it possible to live from ultimate truth?

I.e. to grok ultimate truth and let the grokking inform all aspects of your life?

Since there is finally no difference between ultimate and conventional truth, is living from ultimate truth simply ... living?

Malcolm wrote:

In Dzogchen this is called "the transcendent state of the tathāgatas," which is defined as being in a continuous one pointed state of mind on the meaning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 17th, 2016 at 12:06 AM

Title: Re: anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Violence changes society, but never for the good.

Sherab Dorje said:

Nonsense. Violent resistance to Nazi occupation (for example) did society a world of good.

Malcolm wrote:

It was necessary, but it was never good, and it led to the invention of nuclear weapons. There is never anything good about war, ever.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 17th, 2016 at 12:05 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Sentient Light said:

But you're correct that white consciousness must also mean conscious of the privilege that it affords, because if there is no honesty about that, then how can we (the confederation of "Other" cultures) possibly interact and engage with white American culture? There's room for all of us here if we could just talk to each other and be honest with one another and, somehow, drop away the fear we have that the other's viewpoint is a threat to our own existence.

Malcolm wrote:

The problem with the normalization of a "white ethnic consciousness" is that it is not a true consciousness, it is a false consciousness, a dangerous one.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 16th, 2016 at 11:30 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

binocular said:

And you let me down at the first opportunity.

Malcolm wrote:

How?

binocular said:

I said I lost my faith in the Buddhadharma, and the first thing you reply is suggesting that I blame you for that loss.

Malcolm wrote:

It was the context of the thread. A previous poster castigated me for causing people to lose their faith. You then replied you have lost your faith, the normal implication being you were holding me at fault. So I wanted to know how. Simple.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 16th, 2016 at 11:26 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Interview with

http://www.salon.com/2010/03/23/history_of_white_people_nell_irvin_painter/, author of The History of White People:
As you write in the book, there were four great expansions of what America considers whiteness. What were they?

The first three are expansions of whiteness, because the assumption was that to be American you first had to be white. The first occurred in the Jacksonian era, in the first half of the 19th century, when citizenship criteria were changed from wealth to race. That's when adult males of any income were allowed to vote, as long as they were considered white. Things changed in the 20th century, when different groups came in as immigrants and people of Irish background were incorporated into the notion of American whiteness. The third great enlargement took place in the mid-20th century, starting with the New Deal in the 1930s and WWII. Politics and the mobilization of Americans to fight the Great Depression and to fight the Second World War opened up American-ness to people who had been considered alien races and their children and grandchildren.

We're currently in the midst of the fourth great expansion, which is an expansion of the idea of the American — that an American doesn't necessarily need to be white to be considered American. "American" now includes Hispanics, for example, and people who identify themselves as multiracial. Because of this sort of great enlargement, we can no longer sum up the American as one person or the white man as one person.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 16th, 2016 at 11:11 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

MiphamFan said:

I just want to note that this place is kinda a "safe space" -- I know plenty of Buddhists who don't have leftist proclivities, both lamas and students. Most Tibetans I've met are not exactly sanguine about Islam for example.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. Many Tibetans are also quite racist when it comes to black people. And I have heard some pretty outrageous lies about Muslims that Tibetans tell each other to keep the hate going.

MiphamFan said:

On the other hand it is rather silly for someone to be a white nationalist and a Buddhist at the same time.

Malcolm wrote:

The era of Buddhist alignment with national interests is nearly at an end. Those nations where Buddhism is most aligned with national interests — Bhutan, Burma, Thailand, and Shri Lanka— have serious issues with discrimination against minorities.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 16th, 2016 at 11:25 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

Attitudes like yours is why Trump won.

conebeckham said:

Wrong again.

Trump won because Democratic voter turnout was pathetically low. 3rd party voting didn't have much effect, overall.

<https://www.pastemagazine.com/articles/2016/11/the-10-most-common-post-election-narratives-and-wh.html>

<http://blogs.wsj.com/washwire/2016/11/14/how-third-party-voters-influenced-election-2016/>

BuddhaFollower said:

Jill Stein constantly attacked Clinton right up to the election.

You don't think that might have depressed turnout?

Malcolm wrote:

The amazing thing about that is that she recycled memes about Clinton which originated in the batshit crazy far right. For that reason Stein has forever lost my respect.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 16th, 2016 at 11:21 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Admin_PC said:

Mod note:

Locking thread for clean up. White nationalists & those sympathetic to the white nationalist cause have no business posting on DharmaWheel as their behavior explicitly violates the Terms of Service.

Malcolm wrote:

Thank you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 16th, 2016 at 8:25 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

WuMing said:

Haven't been able to watch the stream, unfortunately! Was this event recorded? Can it be watched somewhere?

Malcolm wrote:

It has not happened yet.

M

WuMing said:

that's too bad! maybe it will appear sometime somewhere ...

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it will appear next month, on December 14th, 2016.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 16th, 2016 at 1:28 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

Unless the antiTrump people here voted for Clinton, they have no credibility.

Malcolm wrote:

Voted for Clinton.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 11:43 PM

Title: Re: anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Ok, so you accept that guns and violence are necessary to effect social change. I don't. Therefore, I don't accept your notion of revolution.

Sherab Dorje said:

"Can be" necessary, not "are" necessary. History tends to lean towards the "are", that is why I am not willing to write them off as tools for social change.

Malcolm wrote:

Violence changes society, but never for the good.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 11:02 PM

Title: Re: Edward Henning (kalacakra.org) passed away

Content:

Karinos said:

via Chime Rinpoche (UK) post on Facebook:

Edward Henning passed away today at Barnet Hospital just before 7pm. at his bedside was Lama Chime Rinpoche, Edward's wife, his step daughter and John Howard. We pray for Edward to be reborn in the pure land Dewachen, We will miss him greatly Edward was great scholar on Kalachakra and Tibetan Astrology, close disciple on Bokar Rinpoche, Tenga Rinpoche and Chime Rinpoche UK. He shared some of his expertise knowledge on this page <http://kalacakra.org>. Please join in prayers.

Malcolm wrote:

Truly a loss.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 9:35 PM

Title: Re: anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Providing your concept of revolution does not involved guns and violence, fine.

Sherab Dorje said:

Of course it is not going to involve guns and violence. I mean Trump and Clinton and the various neo-Nazis and tin-pot dictators of this world are all going to say: "You know what Malcolm? We are convinced by the veracity of your logical and intelligent argumentation. Here, take all our power and privilege and divide it up amongst the weak and needy, so that they no longer suffer oppression or want for anything."

And then harp playing angels (ghandarva) will descend from the heavens and everything will be light and fluffy and a pale pink color...

That's the way change will come about. Definitely.

Malcolm wrote:

Ok, so you accept that guns and violence are necessary to effect social change. I don't. Therefore, I don't accept your notion of revolution.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 9:23 PM

Title: Re: a true flame? a true jewel?

Content:

DGA said:

Did Leonard Cohen know about the abuse, or no?

asking for a friend.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course he knew. I have friends who travelled there to do sesshin years before any of Sasaki's Roshi's actions were well known to the general public, and they found out right away (and were very upset by it). <http://sweepingzen.com/anka-rick-spencer-on-joshu-sasaki/>

DGA said:

More than once I heard ordained members of the Rinzai-ji sangha say, "If you have a problem with roshi's behaviour, it's your problem." The implication was that Sasaki had no problems. If you thought he did, that just proved your own lack of understanding.

This was "old news" in the 1980's. It's very sad.

Anka Rick Spencer

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 8:53 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dear Friends:

We at Zangthal Editions are pleased to announce a book release

<https://www.facebook.com/events/347201122292286/> on December 14th, 2016, 6:00 PM EST, which will be streamed live on Facebook for the benefit of those of you who reside far away from Vermont (most of you.)

WuMing said:

Haven't been able to watch the stream, unfortunately! Was this event recorded? Can it be watched somewhere?

Malcolm wrote:

It has not happened yet.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 11:49 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

maybay said:

It's not working.

Malcolm wrote:

The justice system is not working because racism is embedded in it systematically. Therefore, racists and bigots need to be called out for their actions.

Quay said:

Calling out the racists and bigots is working. It will take some time, though, to translate that into election actions. Many interesting statistics happening recently such as a huge surge in memberships in the ACLU and the Southern Poverty Law Center, plus the actions of countless protesters nationwide.

Things are just really getting started.

And as I think Malcolm rightly points out, progressive change will take a while since racism is baked-in to the justice system and many other parts of the federal and state governments. Meanwhile, people who engage in racist behavior should be held accountable in every peaceful way possible. This begins with speaking truth to power as plainly and loudly as can be done.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 11:25 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

gzodzilpa said:

Thanks Malcolm for your efforts, the book is great! The translation is clear, the forward is insightful, and the text is very well organized.

Malcolm wrote:

Glad you are enjoying it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 11:07 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

maybay said:

It's not working.

Malcolm wrote:

The justice system is not working because racism is embedded in it systematically. Therefore, racists and bigots need to be called out for their actions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 3:21 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

conebeckham said:

Yes, but he is apparently learning. Maybe not quickly, and maybe not well enough....but I think we've seen a few signs that he's either learned a few things, or been told to back-pedal on some issues, in his first few days as Prez-Elect.

Malcolm wrote:

You mean like finding out that he has to hire a staff all at once, and not piecemeal?

Nemo said:

You put an orange real estate agent in control of the world's last remaining super power with the world's most complex economy.

This will make for some great TV.

Malcolm wrote:

Don't blame me, I voted for Bernie.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 3:12 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2020, part 1

Content:

Rakz said:

I think he will rock it in his first term.

DGA said:

For the sake of our country and the world, I hope Trump succeeds at the following (in no particular order):

1. addressing climate change

Malcolm wrote:

Dream on.

DGA said:

2. addressing income inequality

Malcolm wrote:

As above.

DGA said:

3. addressing the racial and ethnic animus that got him elected

Malcolm wrote:

Betray his base? No chance.

DGA said:

4. creating jobs...

Malcolm wrote:

The prison-industrial complex will thrive on all the undocumented immigrants he plans to incarcerate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 3:03 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

But then he knows nothing of governance or law.

conebeckham said:

Yes, but he is apparently learning. Maybe not quickly, and maybe not well enough....but I think we've seen a few signs that he's either learned a few things, or been told to back-pedal on some issues, in his first few days as Prez-Elect.

Malcolm wrote:

You mean like finding out that he has to hire a staff all at once, and not piecemeal?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 2:32 AM

Title: Re: anti-intellectualism

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Revolution or evolution. Depending on how one defines either term.

Malcolm wrote:

How are you defining revolution?

Sherab Dorje said:

A complete and radical (as in root) change of attitude.

Malcolm wrote:

Providing your concept of revolution does not involved guns and violence, fine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 1:44 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

If you don't understand there are various regulations for H1B visas, greencards etc., you are beyond help.

Malcolm wrote:

These issues are governed by the Immigration Act of 1990.

BuddhaFollower said:

According to justsit, this act violates the Constitution.

Malcolm wrote:

I suspect what justsit is getting at is that is not considered legal to bar someone admission to the united states solely on the basis of their race, political creed (unless one is a member of the Communist or National Socialist Parties), or gender preference or religion. For this purpose we have set up a quota system governing how many people can emigrate here yearly in a country by country basis. The idea that Trump floated— barring people admission to the US because they are Muslims — is illegal. But then he knows nothing of governance or law.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 1:37 AM

Title: Re: anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The alternative being?

Sherab Dorje said:

Revolution or evolution. Depending on how one defines either term.

Malcolm wrote:

How are you defining revolution?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 1:08 AM

Title: Re: anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

One can gear-up movements, and I am all for that, but eventually, those movements have to effect change in government and policy, and in a republic, in the end it means the ballot box.

Sherab Dorje said:

Sure, if you want to stay within the bounds of reformism...

Malcolm wrote:

The alternative being?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 1:07 AM

Title: Re: anti-intellectualism

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Seems that you benefitted from left-wing intellectuals demanding universal access to education though.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not so sure. Being able to read and write does not guarantee that one has received an adequate education. But it's a start.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 1:03 AM

Title: Re: anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You mean like voting for the candidates of conspiracy-theory laden political parties? Hmmmm, that leaves, sadly, only the Democratic Party. The other three parties, the GOP, the Green Party and the Libertarians are lead by lunatics who subscribe to many of the same conspiracy theories. For example, the idea that Clinton was bent on starting a nuclear war with Russia.

Sherab Dorje said:

Who said anything about voting for parties? Not me, that's for sure.

Malcolm wrote:

One can gear-up movements, and I am all for that, but eventually, those movements have to effect change in government and policy, and in a republic, in the end it means the ballot box.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 1:00 AM

Title: Re: anti-intellectualism

Content:

The Cicada said:

But isn't obvious, from current events, that you all have failed us?

Malcolm wrote:

You've failed yourselves.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 12:55 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

justsit said:

DGA - Thanks, you beat me to it. He obviously didn't do his homework.

BuddhaFollower said:

If you don't understand there are various regulations for H1B visas, greencards etc., you are beyond help.

Malcolm wrote:

These issues are governed by the Immigration Act of 1990.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 12:45 AM

Title: Re: anti-intellectualism

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

The sooner you realise that, the sooner you will start to make semi-intelligent political choices.

Malcolm wrote:

You mean like voting for the candidates of conspiracy-theory laden political parties? Hmmmm, that leaves, sadly, only the Democratic Party. The other three parties, the GOP, the Green Party and the Libertarians are lead by lunatics who subscribe to many of the same conspiracy theories. For example, the idea that Clinton was bent on starting a nuclear war with Russia.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 15th, 2016 at 12:39 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

binocular said:

And you let me down at the first opportunity.

Malcolm wrote:

How?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 14th, 2016 at 11:53 PM

Title: Re: anti-intellectualism

Content:

Rakz said:

Maybe it has nothing to do with envy, but more to do with a distrust for crooks?

Sherab Dorje said:

Nah, that's not it. If it was a distrust for crooks they wouldn't have voted for Trump, coz he is currently under investigation for thievery too...

Rakz said:

Most of it are BS allegations. Hillary on the other hand is pure slime. I will be very upset with Donald if he doesn't go through with his promise in getting her prosecuted and throwing her crooked a$$ in jail for a long time.

Malcolm wrote:

You mean prosecuted for things for which she has already been exonerated? Honestly, you GOP people have an irrational hardon for Clinton.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 14th, 2016 at 10:15 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

maybay said:

The moment you accuse someone of racism you distance them, you objectify them, and you'll never get that distance back.

Malcolm wrote:

When one person violates or denies the civil rights of another through word or deed, that person's act is racist or bigoted. A person who acts in a racist or bigoted manner has already set the distance between themselves and the person they have objectified. They will never get that distance back until they engage the truth of their actions and begin the process of reconciliation with the objects of their hatred.

Calling out someone such as Donald Trump for their acts of racism and bigotry (which include hiring racist antisemites such as Steve Bannon, and bigots such as Mike Pence) is the only way to impress upon all racists and bigots that they are acting in a wrong and harmful manner to society.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 14th, 2016 at 10:02 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Rakz said:

Liberal fear mongering at its best. You talk as though we are still living in the Jim Crow era where blacks are getting lynched left and right.

Malcolm wrote:

Black people are disproportionally victims of extrajudicial killings by the police. This is a statistical fact.

Rakz said:

We are nowhere close to some sort of post-racial society but it is much better than before.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it isn't. African Americans account for 13.5 percent of the population, but they represent 40% of incarcerated males, or 2,306 people per 100,000 people who are incarcerated. In other words, for every 100,000 people there are five times as many African American prisoners than white prisoners, a 5:1 ratio. In 1980 there were 319,598 people in prison, 182,288 in jail, 220,438 on parole, and 1,118,097 on probation. That number in 2013 is 1,574,700 in prison, 731,200 in jail, 853,200 on parole, and 3,910,600 on probation. Those stats simply do not bear out the GOP fantasy that "it is much better than it was before."

Rakz said:

And if you really cared about minorities you would be in full support of the second amendment so that they may be able to defend themselves against acts of extreme violence.

Malcolm wrote:

Against the police? Black men are being shot because the police fear they have guns. How is spreading more guns going to help people in the black community?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 14th, 2016 at 11:43 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Speaking from an economic growth point of view, right now we are already in a phase of sluggish trade, etc. Going all isolationist ala Herr Trump will destroy the recovery from 2008.

Political discontent is almost always divorced from economic reality.

Karma Dorje said:

There was no recovery from 2008. Quantitative easing has delayed any real recovery. ZIRP has been bleeding people on fixed income dry. The only jobs that have been created are at the low end of the market, everything else has been either hollowed out, shipped out or filled by foreigners on H1Bs. This is exactly why Trump's message resonated with enough people to win.

Economic "reality" is totally divorced from actual reality. Witness how a bad jobs report or CPI read leads to the stock market climbing on anticipation of further easing. Conversely a good jobs report bleeds points off the stock market as investors fear the QE party will end and/or interest rates will climb. The incentives are entirely perverse and not at all what Keynes intended to stimulate the economy during a bust.

If Obama had actually locked up the Blankfein's and Geitner's and Summers of the world for their role in the crash, the Democrats might have some credibility. The fact of the matter is, right now they are the Vampire Squid Party. You can't run an economy on financial "engineering". You need to actually make stuff. There will be a day of reckoning for us either way. The pendulum has swung far too far towards globalism. It's time for it to swing back, and yes it won't be fun for a lot of people, particularly with the fascists controlling all three branches of government.

Malcolm wrote:

The stock market is not an indicator of how the economy is doing, either.

You missed an important point— I was making the observation that there is discontinuity between how people think they are doing, and how they are actually doing. <https://www.pewresearch.org/fact-tank/2015/07/09/how-americans-compare-with-the-global-middle-class/> occupy the high income bracket when considering wealth on a global scale:

Nonetheless, the majority of Americans are part of the global high-income population that resides almost exclusively in Europe and North America. These two regions accounted for 87% of the global high-income population in 2011 – only slightly less than in 2001, when their share stood at 91%. The rest of the world has a lot of catching up to do.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 14th, 2016 at 11:28 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The neoliberal solution of making sure everyone has cellphones and flatscreen tvs is not working. Ergo, we need to revive the civil rights movement, the women's movement, the labor movement, and most importantly of all, the environmental movement.

PuerAzelis said:

Why would something which is already an anachronism return to the anachronism which it replaced?

Malcolm wrote:

These four movements are not anachronisms, they were never brought to their conclusion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 14th, 2016 at 6:31 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

dreambow said:

The shifting around of great swathes of people, millions around the globe has to be addressed; this has resulted in cheap labour flourishing around the world undermining and undercutting wages and living conditions. In addition Chinese money buying up housing in Canada, Australia and the rest of the western world, often not living there but going back to China and Hong Kong, leaving empty investment properties, this has driven up the rental market so the locals can ill afford to buy or even find property to rent. I know its a global phenomenon but this needs a serious look in. Brexit and the newly elected Trump are the long suffering echo of the people's discontent.

Malcolm wrote:

I think you need to study some economic history. You ever hear of the https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Smoot%E2%80%93Hawley_Tariff_Act?

dreambow said:

At first, the tariff seemed to be a success. According to historian Robert Sobel, "Factory payrolls, construction contracts, and industrial production all increased sharply." However, larger economic problems loomed in the guise of weak banks. When the Creditanstalt of Austria failed in 1931, the global deficiencies of the Smoot-Hawley Tariff became apparent.[17]

U.S. imports decreased 66% from $4.4 billion (1929) to $1.5 billion (1933), and exports decreased 61% from $5.4 billion to $2.1 billion. GNP fell from $103.1 billion in 1929 to $75.8 billion in 1931 and bottomed out at $55.6 billion in 1933.[21] Imports from Europe decreased from a 1929 high of $1.3 billion to just $390 million during 1932, while U.S.

exports to Europe decreased from $2.3 billion in 1929 to $784 million in 1932. Overall, world trade decreased by some 66% between 1929 and 1934

Malcolm wrote:

Speaking from an economic growth point of view, right now we are already in a phase of sluggish trade, etc. Going all isolationist ala Herr Trump will destroy the recovery from 2008.

Political discontent is almost always divorced from economic reality.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 14th, 2016 at 5:14 AM

Title: Re: anti-intellectualism

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Really? Is there a poll that shows that "most Americans" think this way?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, for example <http://www.nbcnews.com/storyline/iraq-turmoil/not-worth-it-huge-majority-regret-iraq-war-exclusive-poll-n139686>: Seventy-one percent of Americans now say that the war in Iraq "wasn't worth it," a new NBC News/Wall Street Journal/Annenberg poll shows, with skepticism about the lengthy war effort up substantially even in the last 18 months.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 14th, 2016 at 4:24 AM

Title: Re: anti-intellectualism

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Are you insane? 1. Why the frak would they give U$ troops immunity? 2. ISIS are funded and armed by the Saudis, who happen to be the U$'s major buddy in the Middle East and who are currently invading a sovereign nation (Yemen), committing all sorts of atrocities in the process, with the U$ not even batting an eyelid.

Vietnam taught the U$ the value of private mercenary troops to do their dirty work. Afghanistan and Iraq has taught them the value of proxy military forces.

Malcolm wrote:

We knew all these lessons already.

As a condition for any "peacetime" deployment, the US always insists on immunity, meaning that only the US can charge and try US soldiers.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 14th, 2016 at 3:29 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dear Friends:

We at Zangthal Editions are pleased to announce a book release

<https://www.facebook.com/events/347201122292286/> on December 14th, 2016, 6:00 PM EST, which will be streamed live on Facebook for the benefit of those of you who reside far away from Vermont (most of you.)

Jeff H said:

Cool beans, man!! Northern Daughters Art Gallery is two blocks from my house. Hope to meet you!

Malcolm wrote:

I am sure we will meet then.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 14th, 2016 at 2:51 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

Breitbart

Malcolm wrote:

Get your head out of the gutter, man! It will rot your mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 14th, 2016 at 2:07 AM

Title: Re: anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

We have to make sure we do not become

<http://www.urbandictionary.com/define.php?term=Good%20German>

Sherab Dorje said:

I think most modern U$ citizens are already "good Germans" and have been for quite some time, especially when they turned a blind-eye to the excesses of the U$ military in Asia, the Middle East and to their governments support of murderous dictatorships in Central and South America.

And let us not forget the treatment of their own citizens in U$ jail facilities.

I reckon (if one was not to take into account the methodical genocide of Native Americans, which is why I am referring to MODERN U$ citizens), that U$ citizens have been "good Germans" since the mass murder of 230,000 civilians in Nagasaki and Hiroshima.

Malcolm wrote:

I can understand why you see it that way. I think it is bit more complicated than that, however.

During the Cold War, most Americans thought that our governments actions were totally justified in the face of the spread of communism. It was not the case that Americans sought to deflect blame, they actually supported our actions overseas and abroad (including the bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki).

Now, most Americans, once they woke up from the fog of 9/11, realize that the Iraq War was deeply wrong, even those who voted for Trump. Many Americans understand that the destruction of Libya was wrong. And Syria is not on us, that's on Assad and Putin, despite our blunders with respect to the the Syrian opposition. The Iraqis would not give US troops immunity, so we pulled them all out in 2011, hence ISIS.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 14th, 2016 at 1:19 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dear Friends:

We at Zangthal Editions are pleased to announce a book release

<https://www.facebook.com/events/347201122292286/> on December 14th, 2016, 6:00 PM EST, which will be streamed live on Facebook for the benefit of those of you who reside far away from Vermont (most of you.)

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 14th, 2016 at 1:09 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Minobu said:

I go here to discuss things from a Buddhist perspective.

Malcolm wrote:

And I go here to discuss things from a Buddhist's perspective.

Minobu said:
cherry picking is fun.

Malcolm wrote:
When we have conversations with each other, we do not respond point by point, word by word, to what was said to us. It is only in online communication where people have the idea that if you respond only to one thing that they have said, that you are not responding to the whole of their communication. This is a false idea. And of course, in online communication it does help matters if one frames one's ideas clearly, in complete, well-formatted sentences.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, November 14th, 2016 at 12:43 AM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:
Minobu said:
I go here to discuss things from a Buddhist perspective.

Malcolm wrote:
And I go here to discuss things from a Buddhist's perspective.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 11:47 PM
Title: Re: anti-intellectualism
Content:
Jeff H said:
Instead of focusing on the malcontent extremists Trump used to get elected, find common ground with the legitimately discontented majority.

Malcolm wrote:
Good question. Is their discontent legitimate? After all, the average Trump voter makes $75,000 a year.

MiphamFan said:
Trump has a larger share of <https://www.washingtonpost.com/news/the-fix/wp/2016/11/10/there-probably-is-no-new-donald-trump-voting-coalition/> than Clinton.

The low income vote, regardless of race, dropped from Obama to Clinton for the Democrat side.

Malcolm wrote:
In actuality, what happened was that Obama revived the ideals of the civil rights movement, the labor movement, the women's movement and the environmental movement...then there was a gaping silence...and everyone started to stay home.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 10:51 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Nemo said:

Minobu likes living in a bubble. Canada is a post racial socialist paradise in his mind. I replied to him about my daughter's experiences of extreme racism but got no reply.

Hateful graffiti at the elementary school just down the street now.

http://ottawa.ctvnews.ca/hateful-message-spray-painted-on-ottawa-elementary-school-1.3149695#_gus&_gucid=&_gup=Facebook&_gsc=S94lNAL

Malcolm wrote:

Day before the US Election. Chilling.

Nemo said:

Voting is not how you get anything done politically.

Malcolm wrote:

In their pursuit of unfettered global trade, which they imagined was going to create a consumer paradise (instead it created a Walmart Nation of cheap shit that breaks easily and unhealthy food), the Democrats ceded the civil rights movement (we should include the LGBT movement here), the labor movement, the women's movement, and the environmental movement. To whom? To no one. They just dropped it.

Meanwhile, the religious right got their shit together. They 1) created a movement to oppose a woman's right to reproductive health, 2) manufactured the myth that America was post-racial and that civil rights for all people were in fact guaranteed (it isn't and they are not), 3) manufactured the myth that climate change is debatable science (it isn't), and 4) seeing an opportunity with Trump to hijack areas where in the United States the labor movement used to be powerful, they won this time.

You need real movements in order to generate electoral results. The neoliberal solution of making sure everyone has cellphones and flatscreen tvs is not working. Ergo, we need to revive the civil rights movement, the women's movement, the labor movement, and most importantly of all, the environmental movement.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 10:30 PM

Title: Re: anti-intellectualism

Content:

Jeff H said:

The important thing now is to accept what has happened and find ways to generate a counter balancing force. That will not happen by labeling all Trump supporters as evil and heaping insults on them.

Malcolm wrote:

We have to make sure we do not become

<http://www.urbandictionary.com/define.php?term=Good%20German>

Jeff H said:

A citizen of Nazi Germany who participated in or overlooked atrocities while denying personal moral responsibility by appeal to his submission to supposedly legitimate authority.

Malcolm wrote:

Tolerating the forcible removal of 11 million people, for example, would make one a "good German."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 9:42 PM

Title: Re: anti-intellectualism

Content:

Jeff H said:

Instead of focusing on the malcontent extremists Trump used to get elected, find common ground with the legitimately discontented majority.

Malcolm wrote:

Good question. Is their discontent legitimate? After all, the average Trump voter makes $75,000 a year.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 9:23 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Minobu said:

same point I've been making for days.

this is a Buddhist site with Buddhist ideals and philosophy.

Malcolm wrote:

And you are the arbiter of those ideals and philosophy?

Minobu said:

All this other stuff is just there to show you what you do not want to be part of.

Malcolm wrote:

Then follow your own advice and cease participating in political discussions. This is the kind of lack of discipline to which I was referring before. You have spent several days now engaging trenchant criticisms of those of us who choose to be engaged in the political process, even recognizing that you've been, in your words, "sucked in again." But you are not in fact an unwilling participant. Rather than trying to cover the world with leather, I suggest you put on some damn shoes.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 8:34 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

and this is my fault because?

binocular said:

There you go. I never said it was your fault that I have lost faith in the Buddhadharma.

But you're certainly not helping to build that faith.

In the end, you are every bit the proponent of rugged individualism as Trump.

Malcolm wrote:

Bait and switch. Got it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 10:30 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

So you are saying that you are now bereft of faith in Buddhadharma in toto?

Yes.

and this is my fault because?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 2:35 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

PuerAzaelis said:

You seem to me to be going in circles which happens I think when people argue for the sake of arguing.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed, I have often thought that maybay's avatar should be this:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 2:31 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Minobu said:

What did Obama do in the eight years he was president to thwart real climate change. Nothing.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, he did quite a bit. It is not obvious because he was forced to do things through executive orders since the GOP position is that science is not science.

As for the rest of your post, it merely shows a lack of discipline in thought.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 2:28 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

maybay said:

This is getting personal. Ok, you hold them accountable. I don't think anyone is suggesting you wouldn't. Time to hold each other accountable then. This will be force. Not something we can discuss. Better to watch your mind and act decisively.

Malcolm wrote:

The only force I need to use is the force of bearing witness.

maybay said:

If you believe in effective justice and not just some ideal of justice then you will need a police force.

Malcolm wrote:

I have no problem with peace officers, as the police were once known.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 2:25 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

maybay said:

Umm...guys I'm saying "The entire point of dharma is that any degree of violence at all is unacceptable" is blatantly untrue.

Malcolm wrote:

What degree of violence is acceptable to you?

maybay said:

Definition: As a defence against the illegitimate use of force when rational negotiation proves impossible.

Example: Noble Peace Prize winner Nelson Mandela's paramilitary group https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Umkhonto_we_Sizwe

Malcolm wrote:

I hope it does not come to that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 2:15 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

maybay said:

I want to understand them. You seem to want to damn them.

Malcolm wrote:

No, I am simply going to hold them accountable for their harmful words and actions.

I already understand them. They are my relatives and neighbors.

maybay said:

This is getting personal. Ok, you hold them accountable. I don't think anyone is suggesting you wouldn't. Time to hold each other accountable then. This will be force. Not something we can discuss. Better to watch your mind and act decisively.

Malcolm wrote:

The only force I need to use is the force of bearing witness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 2:12 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

maybay said:

Umm...guys I'm saying "The entire point of dharma is that any degree of violence at all is unacceptable" is blatantly untrue.

Malcolm wrote:

What degree of violence is acceptable to you?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 2:08 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

maybay said:

I want to understand them. You seem to want to damn them.

Malcolm wrote:

No, I am simply going to hold them accountable for their harmful words and actions.

I already understand them. They are my relatives and neighbors.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 1:59 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

Violence is the use of force against the person or property of a nonconsenting other adult. By this definition, we have indeed seen many acts of violence in these past days, on the level of the body. The entire point of dharma is that any degree of violence at all is unacceptable for our greater happiness, and that we can apply the remedy to it.

maybay said:

I suppose you think they called Padmasambhava in to Tibet for his masonry skills or something

Malcolm wrote:

Skills in irrigation planning and implementation, actually, according to the very earliest records we have on him.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 1:57 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I guess what you all don't understand is that I was raised in the protest culture of the 1960's— my momma was a dedicated civil rights activist, and later, a dedicated feminist activist. A desire for social, economic and environmental justice is in my blood. YMMV.

maybay said:

Well then, now we know who we're really to.

Malcolm wrote:

This sentence is incoherent— but apart from that, I have never made any secret of the above.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 1:56 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Minobu said:

i don't think you actually want to hear what i have to say...

Malcolm wrote:

I think you don't have a real grasp of the situation. If you did, you would not be advocating passivity [just the climate change ramifications of the Trump Administration are really terrible].

As for hate, I have no wish to harm anyone. Therefore, your accusation of hate is unfounded. You should apologize.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 1:53 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

PuerAzaelis said:

The entire point of dharma is that any degree of violence at all is unacceptable for our greater happiness, and that we can apply the remedy to it.

Malcolm wrote:

And "harming" includes not intervening when sentient beings are being harmed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 1:52 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

maybay said:

In fact it is all hidden to most of them. They understand neither the science nor the technology, and they are excluded from most of the media.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, but this statement is truly idiotic and elitist.

maybay said:

Idiotic in the sense of politically ignorant? Elitism is a fact Malcolm. You of all people should know this.

Malcolm wrote:

Idiotic in the sense of falling into the All True Scotsman fallacy.

maybay said:

But I wouldn't say this to anyone in the video. And I'm not criticising them for being racist. And I'm not excusing them. And not having an understanding of science and technology, or a stake in the media, is not the same as being mentally inferior.

Malcolm wrote:

See above.

maybay said:

I agree they know what they are doing and saying, but obviously that is not the issue. I was highlighting their ignorance as a contributing factor of their fear and anger.

Malcolm wrote:

You highlighted the wrong ignorance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 1:36 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

Brahman is not pristine consciousness?

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. Pristine consciousness (ye shes, jñāna) is not transpersonal.

BuddhaFollower said:

Okay, then this is the same as the Upanishads.

Remember there is a difference between the Upanishads and Advaita Vedanta formulated by Adi Shankara etc.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not the same as the Upanishads, since jñāna in the Upanishads is not empty.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 1:33 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Mkoll said:

Again, no excuse for any for it. Perhaps the Trump people are more to blame for violent acts, perhaps not. What I know for sure is that there is a lot of hate on both sides. And when there is only demonization of the other side without acknowledging the demons on one's own, there is little chance for positive change.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not going to patronize racists the way maybay does, and I am not demonizing anyone. I am pointing out the real consequences of the Trump election. If you can't handle it, just go ahead, be passive, and close your eyes. My momma raised me better than that.

I guess what you all don't understand is that I was raised in the protest culture of the 1960's— my momma was a dedicated civil rights activist, and later, a dedicated feminist activist. A desire for social, economic and environmental justice is in my blood. YMMV.

BuddhaFollower said:

You don't understand that minorities have ALWAYS experienced racism.

I've had shit yelled at me as gas stations or walking on a sidewalk ALWAYS.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I do know this. I have intervened every time I have personally been witness to it. The way to deal with this is to continue to share your experience with people who care.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 1:30 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

Do you have a specific course of action in mind, sign me up.

Malcolm wrote:

Keep posting, do not let this memory fade. Hit the streets when necessary.

PuerAzelis said:

You're not saying that dharma is not the best way to do those three things, are you?

Malcolm wrote:

There are two kinds of Dharma: secular Dharma (mi chos) and higher Dharma (lha chos). Right now, the appropriate Dharma is mi chos. But some people where have not been properly taught, so they do not know that there is a right time and right place for everything.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 1:27 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I am sorry, my friend, but we have had over

<https://www.splcenter.org/hatewatch/2016/11/11/over-200-incidents-hateful-harassment-and-intimidation-election-day> incidents of racial attacks etc., in the past four days.

Incidents such as the one you picture were exceedingly rare during the campaign. The Trump campaign owns the vast majority of violent incidents. And now, since the election, it has gotten a great deal worse.

Mkoll said:

Again, no excuse for any for it. Perhaps the Trump people are more to blame for violent acts, perhaps not. What I know for sure is that there is a lot of hate on both sides. And when there is only demonization of the other side without acknowledging the demons on one's own, there is little chance for positive change.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not going to patronize racists the way maybay does, and I am not demonizing anyone. I am pointing out the real consequences of the Trump election. If you can't handle it, just go ahead, be passive, and close your eyes. My momma raised me better than that.

I guess what you all don't understand is that I was raised in the protest culture of the 1960's— my momma was a dedicated civil rights activist, and later, a dedicated feminist activist. A desire for social, economic and environmental justice is in my blood. YMMV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 1:22 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

maybay said:

In fact it is all hidden to most of them. They understand neither the science nor the technology, and they are excluded from most of the media.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, but this statement is truly idiotic and elitist.

maybay said:

I'm presenting my understanding of their sociological context. And you are predictably returning to the legal bureaucratic talk which they feel is an illegitimate basis for common understanding.

Malcolm wrote:

If you ever said this to any one of the people in that video, they would beat the shit out of you because it is so patronizing. Feel free to criticize them for being racist, but don't excuse it on the basis that they are somehow mentally inferior and too stupid to know better. They know exactly what they are doing and saying.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 1:19 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Minobu said:

you made your point months ago.

Malcolm wrote:

Obviously not, since you continue to make excuses for racist violence in the guise of "We can't do anything about it anyway."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 1:17 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Excuses, anyone?

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Mkoll said:

The fact is that there is deplorable speech and action on both sides. One can't single out just Trump supporters for being hateful, as the video below evidences.

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Malcolm wrote:

I am sorry, my friend, but we have had over

<https://www.splcenter.org/hatewatch/2016/11/11/over-200-incidents-hateful-harassment-and-intimidation-election-day> incidents of racial attacks etc., in the past four days.

Incidents such as the one you picture were exceedingly rare during the campaign. The Trump campaign owns the vast majority of violent incidents. And now, since the election, it has gotten a great deal worse.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Minobu said:

No I do care.

There will always be hate in this world. Some Americans are white supremacist and some are tree huggers and some are etc.

Malcolm wrote:

Pathetic rationalization.

Minobu said:

Trump did not create American Nazis , he just wanted their vote. It is proven now that so called ,racist white people by the droves came out to vote , mostly for the first time.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, this is false. It is not born out by voter registration records. It is a myth.

Minobu said:

It's the way of the world Malcolm , that there is this sort of thing in it.

Malcolm wrote:

The old, "You can't fix samsara" is getting rather old. Of course you cannot fix samsara. But you can help sentient beings.

Minobu said:

My point is politicians for the most part are con men and women and will do and say anything to the great unwashed to get in power.

To get caught up in it to the point where it becomes an obsession is not healthy.

The only way to change it is from within. the more you try to do exactly what you are doing is only creating people without your view to get angrier, and it's all so moot anyway and a waste of energy.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a rational for passivity in the face of the suffering of others. What happened to your bodhisattva commitments? There are certain kinds of views that are pernicious in society and they need to be shut down when they spill over into violence and harm. Of course some idiot is going to come back with a quip about liberal intolerance, it is to be expected from people who do not think clearly and are solely interested in justifying racism.

Minobu said:

The only way to change it is the change from within the individual . Every time you connect to the Primordial Buddha by focusing with the Dharma that brings you to that state within ,you actually affect the entire universe in a positive way only a Buddha can fathom.

This is what we are taught.

Malcolm wrote:

Your theory contradicts what you stated above.

Minobu said:

all this stuff you are doing , seriously, makes you look like as much a hate monger as what you are hating.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, protesting against racist violence and environmental disaster makes one a hate monger.

Minobu said:

in any case i am trying to help.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't need your help. But thanks anyway.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 1:00 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

maybay said:

They find the whole idea of someone creeping around with hidden technology to catch people saying swear words utterly spineless, miserable, underhanded and completely lacking in self respect.

Malcolm wrote:

Those were cell phone videos and video cameras. No secret technology needed. That is what people like Project Veritas do, creep about with hidden cameras. You are basically defending the right of some people to violate the civil rights of others with impunity. Shame on you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 12:58 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

maybay said:

They fear for their way of life. They feel ignored, ganged up on by an elite bureaucracy.

Malcolm wrote:

This is no excuse. This same excuse was used to explain why whites in the South reacted to the Civil Rights Movement.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 12:53 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

Iso As someone said before however the hardest thing to do is not to pray for the victims, but the murderers, racists, terrorists, fascists.

Malcolm wrote:

One has to bear witness and not shut one's eyes. We have not seen such a surge in racism and bigotry in the USA since the Civil Rights Movement. When you combine this with the fact that there have been 832 extrajudicial killings this year by the police as of today, how can anyone in their right mind not speak out? How can anyone excuse this? Please, explain it to me. I am all ears.

When you excuse the hatred, violence and bigotry in these videos, and pictures, you are excusing the oppression of human beings.

People who float the "This is samsara, what do you expect" argument are betraying their bodhisattva commitments.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 12:44 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Minobu said:

I mean really now if you listen to what some people post in this thread you wonder how much they are conning themselves and are wrapped up in the delusion.

Malcolm wrote:

You need to take a look at <https://medium.com/@seanokane/day-1-in-trumps-america-9e4d58381001#.uzo8r6knv> and <https://www.splcenter.org/hatewatch/2016/11/11/over-200-incidents-hateful-harassment-and-intimidation-election-day>.

This is about bearing witness to the bigotry, racism and xenophobia unleashed by Trump in the American Electorate. If you don't care, don't comment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 13th, 2016 at 12:11 AM

Title: Re: Electoral College

Content:

DGA said:

... arugula munching ...

PuerAzelis said:

As a spokesperson for the rights and responsibilities of arugula I take exception to this characterization. Redneck racists munch arugula as well as Euro commie pinkos, Muslim terrorists and Canadians. It's time for this great country to heal by coming together over the arugula. We all belong to one salad bowl. Let's seize this opportunity to munch the arugula as a team, and avoid the soup.

Malcolm wrote:

Make Arugula Great Again.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 12th, 2016 at 11:55 PM

Title: Re: Electoral College

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

When was the last time a President was impeached?

Malcolm wrote:

Clinton, 1998-1999. He was acquitted. Nixon resigned rather than face impeachment.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Impeachment_of_Bill_Clinton

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 12th, 2016 at 11:31 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Excuses, anyone?

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, November 12th, 2016 at 8:54 PM
Title: Re: Ultimate Truth
Content:

BuddhaFollower said:
Why did you translate the bolded part like that?

Sounds like Advaita Vedanta.

Malcolm wrote:
then you have not studied well enough.

BuddhaFollower said:
Brahman is not pristine consciousness?

Malcolm wrote:
Nope. Pristine consciousness (ye shes, jñāna) is not transpersonal.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, November 12th, 2016 at 11:44 AM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:
Fa Dao said:
FINALLY!! a voice of reason...wisdom AND compassion!

Malcolm wrote:
Compassion for racist clowns is a given, compassion for their racism, no chance.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, November 12th, 2016 at 11:38 AM
Title: Re: Ultimate Truth
Content:

BuddhaFollower said:
Why did you translate the bolded part like that?

Sounds like Advaita Vedanta.

Malcolm wrote:
then you have not studied well enough.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, November 12th, 2016 at 5:42 AM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:

dzogchungpa said:
Well, as ChNN says in The Supreme Source, "the state of consciousness of each individual is the center of the universe."

.

Malcolm wrote:
Pretty much eliminates the possibility for a transpersonal interpretation of Dzogchen now, doesn't it.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, November 12th, 2016 at 5:41 AM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:

Vasana said:
But i suppose this isn't the time for that when so many people are pissed and fearful of their future.

Malcolm wrote:
My future is not an issue. It is the future of others that has me concerned.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, November 12th, 2016 at 5:28 AM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:
Minobu said:
how many more Kalpas is Malcolm going to produce this ...

Malcolm wrote:

None. After this life, no more rebirth in samsara for me. But your concern is noted and appreciated.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 12th, 2016 at 3:51 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Also, it is useful to understand how insignificant we are at the same time, and how vast the universe is. It is also useful to understand that the universe is of course naturally pure. There is no buddhahood anywhere else.

Vasana said:

I never buy the remark that we're insignificant based on the sole fact that the universal existence of a sentience that can formulate a scale-of-significance in the first place is in it's self, pretty significant for that very reason. Then there's the profound but overlooked significance of 'being' anything at all.

Malcolm wrote:

Ok, well, glory in your significance then.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 12th, 2016 at 3:23 AM

Title: Re: When Karma gets produced

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Though I am not really convinced about the Arhat thing. Why? Arhats have no clinging to life.

maybay said:

What's to be convinced about. It's specifically mentioned.

Hsuan-tsang: 'There is killing even when there is doubt: a person, with respect to the object that he desires to kill, is in doubt: Is this a living being or not? And, if it is living, is it such a one or another?' then he makes the decision: 'Whether this is one or the other, I shall kill him': by reason of this parityaga thought, if he kills a living being, he commits the action." Paramartha:

" . . . by reason of these three factors, there is the action (above, note 312). If this is the case, then a person can be in doubt and kill (=commit the transgression of murder): 'Is this a living being or not? Is this such a one or not?' This person, with respect to the object to be killed, is determined to kill:

'Whether this be one or the other, I shall kill him.' There is thus production of a parityaga thought.

If he kills, he obtains the transgression of killing."

Malcolm wrote:

No, you misunderstand. Greg was saying:

Sherab Dorje said:

Or it will be different if you kill one Arhat as opposed to 100 ants.

Malcolm wrote:

I was expressing some doubt about this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 12th, 2016 at 2:23 AM

Title: Re: When Karma gets produced

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, these are the details. Though I am not really convinced about the Arhat thing. Why? Arhats have no clinging to life.

Sherab Dorje said:

I think it has more to do with the positive influence that an Arhat exercises on an environment and their rarity, that makes killing them a greater "offence".

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is the rational, still not convinced.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 12th, 2016 at 2:03 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Minobu said:

also you have sparked a deep question me , Malcolm.

you refer to Mahayanist view. You also talked of this in another thread.

Malcolm wrote:

You don't get it. We live inside of the body of Mahavairocana. There are no budhafiels not included in Mahavairocana's body. We live in a world system which is contained in the palm of his hand, Kusumatalagarbha-alamkara. From that point of view, the goings on in our own little Sahaloka are but trifles.

Minobu said:

This has gnawed at me and i need to know what you know....

have you discussed this in this forum...is there a thread where i can learn more about it and this Mahayanist view you hold. I think i might be skewed a tad...lol...and you might be helpful...

so if you have the time...it won't be ill spent.

i retain stuff for life...and i think my view needs a tad tweaking for my paradigm might be off...

also i won't be such a delicate flower when it comes to my ego with you any more...Sorry for being so samsaricly frail to your posts at times.

Malcolm wrote:

Being neglectful of others' suffering is the antithesis of Mahāyāna motivation. We may not be physically able to do much for others, but we should always been aware and sympathetic for the sufferings of others, event the suffering of fascist shiteads who out of ignorance seek their own happiness through inflicting misery on others.

Also, it is useful to understand how insignificant we are at the same time, and how vast the universe is. It is also useful to understand that the universe is of course naturally pure. There is no buddhahood anywhere else.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 12th, 2016 at 1:57 AM

Title: Re: When Karma gets produced

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

My completely baseless opinion on the matter is that the intention to commit an action is the defining/determining factor, but the action itself (according to Jigten Sumgon), the extent of the action, the object of the action and whether one takes delight or feels remorse about the action, affect the final overall outcome.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha, Nāgārjuna and Vasubandhu have declared with one voice: "Karma is volition and that which proceeds from volition." Thus volitions are primary actions and the deeds of body and voice are derived action.

Thus, there are three kinds of volition, positive, negative and neutral. Positive thoughts are positive karma, a.k.a., merit. Etc.

Sherab Dorje said:

I don't disagree, but there is no doubt, for example, that if you have the intention to kill then the karma accrued will be different if you kill one being than if you kill 100. Or it will be different if you kill one Arhat as opposed to 100 ants. Or that the effect on the mindstream will differ depending on whether you feel joy regarding the killing, or regret.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, these are the details. Though I am not really convinced about the Arhat thing. Why? Arhats have no clinging to life.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 12th, 2016 at 1:44 AM

Title: Re: When Karma gets produced

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

My completely baseless opinion on the matter is that the intention to commit an action is the defining/determining factor, but the action itself (according to Jigten Sumgon), the extent of the action, the object of the action and whether one takes delight or feels remorse about the action, affect the final overall outcome.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha, Nāgārjuna and Vasubandhu have declared with one voice: "Karma is volition and that which proceeds from volition." Thus volitions are primary actions and the deeds of body and voice are derived action.

Thus, there are three kinds of volition, positive, negative and neutral. Positive thoughts are positive karma, a.k.a., merit. Etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 11th, 2016 at 11:37 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Jeff H said:

How exactly to "we" – especially those like me, who've been politically asleep for years – fight this? I don't know where to turn.

Malcolm wrote:

Educate yourself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 11th, 2016 at 7:21 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In Trumpland today:

<http://www.nydailynews.com/news/politics/n-kkk-group-hold-victory-parade-donald-trump-article-1.2868491>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 11th, 2016 at 11:13 AM

Title: Re: Electoral College

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

The electoral college should not be abolished.

The popular vote should be abolished. It is a useless and pointless circus designed to make American feel like they are actually in control of something.

Abolish the popular vote and let Americans get properly angry about the state of their democracy, and the foolishness of electing a member of the 1% to "stick it to" the 1%.

Clinton was in the 1%'s pocket.

Trump is not in the 1%'s pocket.

Why?

That's his pocket.

Malcolm wrote:

Very poor reasoning, my friend.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 11th, 2016 at 11:02 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Just go look at the racist, misogynist Id of the <http://www.dailystormer.com>

PuerAzelis said:

Agree 100%, but something else occurs to me. If "racist" has been used since the 60s as a brush to tar every GOP candidate, it's like the boy who cried wolf. Finally the power and significance of the word - which should be a word of disgrace and shame and terror

- is lost. I mean I remember some people talking about Mitt Romney like he was Genghis Khan for Christ's sake, I mean Mitt f*ckin Romney - that crash test dummy wasn't important enough to be denounced as any goddam thing. But now, finally, we really do have a wolf, a real wolf, who has a genuinely dangerous fringe supporting his base. But everyone's become so desensitized to the word, it's become meaningless. If everybody's "racist", no-one is.

Rakz said:

I agree. racist is a worthless word thrown around these days. Thank the white liberals for making it meaningless.

Malcolm wrote:

That's strange. It has been a GOP narrative since Reagan that racism is over. But you are probably too young to remember this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 11th, 2016 at 11:01 AM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

RikudouSennin said:

Hmmm, so there are errors in the translations, bummer.

My copy of the Golden Garland seemed okay but then again I don't know the original language, so finding out about errors in the translation...glad my other order was refunded.

Malcolm wrote:

Translators are works in progress.

RikudouSennin said:

True. I don't mean to sound like I don't appreciate translators hard works. Was just worried about potential errors in the text. Also the text came with the Tibetan script so that's cool as well.

As a side note Eric is sending my order even after refunding me, so I thought that was pretty cool of him.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that was understood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 11th, 2016 at 8:09 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

dreambow said:

'The cave is out back, up on the hill' As I see it you can meditate in an apartment in London if you want. Why are you so fascinated by your thoughts?

Malcolm wrote:

The real question is, why are you are so fascinated by my thoughts?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 11th, 2016 at 5:05 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

dreambow said:

Ultimately if you can stop the tyranny of the chattering mind....you know its the truth!

Malcolm wrote:

The cave is out back, up on the hill.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 11th, 2016 at 4:44 AM

Title: Re: Electoral College

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

However:

Trump can still be stopped. The Founding Fathers foresaw just this catastrophe, and built a fail-safe into the Constitution. It's called the Electoral College. Alexander Hamilton was explicit: this mechanism was designed to ensure that "the office of president will never fall to the lot of any man who is not in an eminent degree endowed with the requisite qualifications." In short, it was designed to prevent just this situation: the rise of an unqualified demagogue like Donald Trump.

http://www.huffingtonpost.com/douglas-anthony-cooper/the-electoral-college-was_b_12897066.html

Sherab Dorje said:

Didn't stop GB Jr, Ronald Reagan and a number of other demagogues. Ain't gonna stop this one.

Malcolm wrote:

If a sitting president is convicted of a felony, even a civil one, this is firm grounds for impeachment. If he is found guilty of fraud in the Trump U case, this could upend him. He has to appear in court in Dec.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 11th, 2016 at 4:39 AM

Title: Re: Electoral College

Content:

DGA said:

electors at the electoral college are obligated to carry out the will of the state's voters... most days.

Malcolm wrote:

Not really, see post above.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 11th, 2016 at 4:38 AM

Title: Re: Electoral College

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

However:

Trump can still be stopped. The Founding Fathers foresaw just this catastrophe, and built a fail-safe into the Constitution. It's called the Electoral College. Alexander Hamilton was explicit: this mechanism was designed to ensure that "the office of president will never fall to the lot of any man who is not in an eminent degree endowed with the requisite qualifications." In short, it was designed to prevent just this situation: the rise of an unqualified demagogue like Donald Trump.

http://www.huffingtonpost.com/douglas-anthony-cooper/the-electoral-college-was_b_12897066.html

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 11th, 2016 at 4:29 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

maybay said:

Kalacakra Tantra is Buddha's vision. It makes no difference that there is/was a temporal equivalent. Myth/vision is timeless.

Ok, so how do you propose to make the world one happy Vajra family? It did not even work in Tibet, let alone India.

Indeed, they practised it in India and in Tibet.

Malcolm wrote:

The Kalacakra Tantra, according even the traditional histories, did not exist in India until the middle of the 9th century. It circulated among a very small group and it was brought to Tibet in 1027 (the date the 60 year cycle starts in). In Tibet, it spread in small circles again, since everything but Nyingma was small at that point. By 1200, Indian Buddhism was more or less finished and there was never a chance in India for the Kalacakra social vision to spread far, if at all, because people were mainly interested in its yogic novelties, and astrology system.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 11th, 2016 at 3:24 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Just go look at the racist, misogynist Id of the <http://www.dailystormer.com>

PuerAzaelis said:

Agree 100%, but something else occurs to me. If "racist" has been used since the 60s as a brush to tar every GOP candidate, it's like the boy who cried wolf.

Malcolm wrote:

Or, every GOP candidate who has run since Nixon has tried to stir up white racism since the latter's Southern Strategy. The difference now is the speed with which people can share ideas and create virtual communities.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 11th, 2016 at 2:58 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

maybay said:

Kalacakra Tantra is Buddha's vision. It makes no difference that there is/was a temporal equivalent. Myth/vision is timeless.

Ok, so how do you propose to make the world one happy Vajra family? It did not even work in Tibet, let alone India.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 11th, 2016 at 2:15 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Jeff H said:

I think it matters how you fight. I strongly disagree with Moore's third point:

Trump has rocked the system and the system needed rocking. Now is the time to distinguish between changes to the system that benefit as opposed to those that harm both society and our system of government itself. Obstructionism lacks discernment. Obstruct what is wrong; empower what is right.

Malcolm wrote:

With all due respect, the Dems need to be as obstructionist as they can. It is necessary for the sake of the environment. #nodapl

Jeff H said:

From Sean Wilentz' The Rise of American Democracy it sounds like the country has been divided very much the way it is now right from the beginning, including the fact that both sides think the other side is deluded and dangerous. The issues and the players change, but the divisions remain pretty similar.

The Republicans have demonstrated obstructionism-for-its-own-sake, like <https://www.dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=47&t=23179&hilit=obstruction&start=760#p363209>. I just think that can only result in a non-functioning government. That may be your point, but I think someone has to be willing to look for that which is somewhat beneficial from the opposition.

Malcolm wrote:

Not to be rude, but "It's the environment, stupid," among many other things.

We have a President Elect who does not believe climate change is real, who has promised to re-certify Keystone, who has pledged to auction off federal land for drilling, and whose followers have begun to terrorize muslims, blacks, latinos, etc. within hours of the election.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 11th, 2016 at 1:59 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Minobu said:

Lord Sakyamuni walked away from the system He was born into and never looked back.

Malcolm wrote:

The example above was for Hinayāna practitioners, not Mahāyānis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 11th, 2016 at 1:35 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Minobu said:

Your concerning yourself with a red neck polulace Malcolm. along with all other Buddhists in this thread ... you are supposed to be above the circus of red neck ville.

PuerAzaelis said:

This sentiment is vile, and, again, is a microcosm of the entire election. I suppose "all other Buddhists in this thread" are meant to adopt some kind of gnostic elitism? I don't recall that Lord Buddha used the phrase "basket of deplorables" in any sutta, in fact my recollection is that he said some things that were quite in the opposite train of thought.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, he did have some pretty harsh words for some brahmins who he thought were crooks playing on people's fear. And you have to admit, the alt-right is pretty damn deplorable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 11th, 2016 at 1:02 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Jeff H said:

I think it matters how you fight. I strongly disagree with Moore's third point:

Moore said:

3. Any Democratic member of Congress who didn't wake up this morning ready to fight, resist and obstruct in the way Republicans did against President Obama every day for eight full years must step out of the way and let those of us who know the score lead the way in stopping the meanness and the madness that's about to begin.

Jeff H said:

Trump has rocked the system and the system needed rocking. Now is the time to distinguish between changes to the system that benefit as opposed to those that harm both society and our system of government itself. Obstructionism lacks discernment. Obstruct what is wrong; empower what is right.

Malcolm wrote:

With all due respect, the Dems need to be as obstructionist as they can. It is necessary for the sake of the environment. #nodapl

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 11th, 2016 at 12:54 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Minobu said:

Your vote and your impetus in an election has no effect on the sentient's liberation.

Malcolm wrote:

I quite disagree.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 11th, 2016 at 12:45 AM

Title: Re: Constitutional Amendment

Content:

DGA said:

I like the direct election of senators rather than the election of senators by state legislators, so I say keep 17. I don't think the federal income tax has anything to do with federal elections, so there's no reason to consider nixing 16.

That leaves us with 12, which establishes the electoral college. I'm totally on board with drowning that baby if a reasonable alternative is proposed.

AlexMcLeod said:

17 makes the Senate up for direct purchase.

As a Jeffersonian Liberal, of course I want 16 gone.

12 doesn't establish the Electoral College. It forces the party that won into both President and VP. Before, the runner up got VP. I think that more accurately represents the electorate.

Malcolm wrote:

!6 was voted in because the US Government abandoned the practice of collecting revenue based on import tariffs. Returning to a tariff system is, quite frankly, stupid.

As for the idea that reverting to the old system where the loser became VP, this never worked in practice and was a result of much discord.

I am ok with 17.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 11th, 2016 at 12:26 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The Dems have no one to blame but themselves. It was turnout, in the end, that did them in. As Sanders pointed out, again and again, in low turnout elections like this one, the GOP wins it. In high voter turn out elections, the Dems win it. Were the DNC buffoons and idiots? Yes, and this is all Podesta's emails show. Did the Dems become apathetic overall and willingly permit this to happen? Yes. And we Bernistas saw it coming.

Minobu said:

To be honest..I view the entire political systems of the world as folly . it's all a con from top to bottom form sideways to bothways..

they are all schooled in the art of the dodge and deception.

If you view my posts in this thread sarcasm and a total flippant personage appears.

that being said ..

Bernie would do worse than Hilary did. The american people obviously are not ready for anyone of intellect and would dismiss the guy as some tree hugging flake. which is not my opinion of him.

Your concerning yourself with a red neck polulace Malcolm. along with all other Buddhists in this thread.

your lost in something that will have only ill effects on your path . It's all moot.it's the greatest of all delusions to get sucked into.

you are supposed to be above the circus of red neck ville.

Malcolm wrote:

I disagree. I think Mahāyāna Buddhists have an ethical obligation to be active in civil and social life.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 11:38 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

justsit said:

I'm curious to see exactly how Mr. Trump plans to fulfill his campaign promise to provide 25 million jobs.

25 million. Really?

PuerAzelis said:

He's been talking about 4-5% GDP growth per annum which is fantasy, it hasn't happened since WW2.

Malcolm wrote:

Not to mention, that kind of growth is ecologically irrational; in fact any growth in the world economy is ecologically irrational.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 11:15 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

... there was a depressed turnout in this election compared with 2008 and 2012 ...

PuerAzelis said:

If that's true, that's extraordinary given Sanders' plea to his own base. I guess after the nomination and the DNC revelations they really did all just go home. Even knowing they had an unusual populist opponent. That's really amazing. Sanders knew.

You know I read this article somewhere a couple of months ago (I can't remember where) that the author had polled a lot of Sanders' supporters and a lot of them had told him that if Sanders didn't get nominated they were voting Trump. The writer was like, I know this is hard to believe, but this is a thing. I disregarded it at the time. I underestimated the extent to which the Dems, too, are now split.

Queequeg said:

I've been saying this all along. Bernie supporters and Trump supporters are largely from the same socio-economic class. As Bill said, 'it's the economy, stupid.' this was primarily about an economy that has been broken for a lot of former middle class people. They are pissed and want it fixed. Identity politics don't mean much when you're worried about paying the mortgage.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh for lords sake, low voter turn out cost the Dems the election, as Bernie warned, allowing racist and sexist white people to dominate the election. It's that simple.

Just go look at the racist, misogynist Id of the <http://www.dailystormer.com>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 11:06 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

... there was a depressed turnout in this election compared with 2008 and 2012 ...

PuerAzelis said:

If that's true,

Malcolm wrote:

It is a fact. Not even a speculation. The hard numbers prove it.

PuerAzelis said:

...that's extraordinary given Sanders' plea to his own base. I guess after the nomination and the DNC revelations they really did all just go home. Even knowing they had an unusual populist opponent. That's really amazing. Sanders knew.

Malcolm wrote:

Sanders own base, those of us who wandered off into Libertarian and Green Lalaland, should have known better. The Libertarian vote may have actually swayed the Florida election. It is hard to say how many people who voted for "Allepo" Johnson might have voted for Sanders, and certainly, many of the 64K Green party voters would have voted for Sanders. One thing is certain. In 2012, only 44,726 people voted Libertarian; and only 8,947 voted Green (16651 votes went to other fringe parties of Fla.), compared with 2016 where there were 206,007 Libertarian votes, 64,019 Green votes and 25,464 votes for fringe candidates, for a total of 9,318,789. By contrast, in 2012, only 8,474,179 total votes were counted.

PuerAzelis said:

You know I read this article somewhere a couple of months ago (I can't remember where) that the author had polled a lot of Sanders' supporters and a lot of them had told him that if Sanders didn't get nominated they were voting Trump. The writer was like, I know this is hard to believe, but this is a thing. I disregarded it at the time. I underestimated the extent to which the Dems, too, are now split.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, hatred of HRC runs deep in many white men.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 10:44 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I know is tempting to pin all the blame on CNN, MSNBC, the Times and so on. But the reality of it is that POC and young people did not turn out because they just didn't care. "An old white guy? An old white women? Meh. Who cares."

Queequeg said:

Yes.

That is a great point. It was disappointing to see that Bernie never got traction with POC. The exception was young POC who were and are still on the Bernie wavelength. In places like NY, older POC stuck with HRC because she was perceived to be their best friend through the decades.

Tulsi Gabbert?

Malcolm wrote:

I was actually talking about Trump, but I can see how you went to Bernie.

Tulsi Gabbard is a congressperson, she does not have the clout yet to make a run. Let her win a governorship in Hawaii, then she would have a more solid chance. However, her religion may not go down well with main stream America.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 10:31 PM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

RikudouSennin said:

Hmmm, so there are errors in the translations, bummer.

My copy of the Golden Garland seemed okay but then again I don't know the original language, so finding out about errors in the translation...glad my other order was refunded.

Malcolm wrote:

Translators are works in progress.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 10:29 PM

Title: Re: Quitting cigarettes

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

I've been addicted to cigarettes for about a year.

If you have managed to quit smoking, how did you do it?

Malcolm wrote:

I decided to stop. Then I did stop (in 1989, after smoking for 13 years).

Coëmgenu said:

Fair enough. Did any practical methods help you though? Did you use nicorette gum? Was it effective?

Malcolm wrote:

I just stopped. As a support, I drank a lot of water, avoided coffee and alcohol for a few weeks, and other people who smoked.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 10:27 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

maybay said:

Close on 60 million people voted for Trump.

Malcolm wrote:

Less than the number who voted for McCain and Romney (more than 60 million in both cases).

maybay said:

Shambhala

Malcolm wrote:

Shambhala was not Buddha's vision; according to Chogyal Namkhai Norbu, it was a real country which no longer exists at present.

maybay said:

Because everyone involved is basically good.

Malcolm wrote:

If someone does not recognize their own basic goodness, their basic goodness is like a gem concealed under the lintel of a pauper's home.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 10:16 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Nemo said:

Bernie is just the latest Henry Wallace. The Democrats created super delegates so that another FDR could NEVER take over the party again. If you think you can get a real candidate in charge of the Dems you are naive. .

Malcolm wrote:

Um, not they created superdelegates so that another Eugene McCarthy would not be nominated.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 8:19 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

He is spot on.

Malcolm wrote:

It was voter turnout. All this bullshit about a forgotten America who turned out in droves is bullshit. 10 million less voters turned out in this election than in 2008. The same number +/- of GOP voters turned out in all three.

Queequeg said:

That too. They're the same crowd that wanted HRC and only begrudgingly covered Bernie, casting him as the 'bro' candidate because these people run in the same circles as the DNC establishment.

Voter turnout was down because HRC never gave us something to be inspired about; she just waited for Trump to implode. Hate the game, but that's how it's played. You need charisma by the truck load to be president. Charisma comes in many forms. Young people and POC never felt her message outside of the habitual voters.

Malcolm wrote:

I know it's tempting to pin all the blame on CNN, MSNBC, the Times and so on. But the reality of it is that POC and young people did not turn out because they just didn't care. "An old white guy? An old white woman? Meh. Who cares."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 8:03 PM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

muni said:

Furthermore H H Dalai Lama said when such as these dividing actions cannot stop, there is the need to find a solution beyond religion.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that solution is called "Secular Humanism."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 8:01 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

mossy said:

so, who will be the new leader/face of the DNC?

Queequeg said:

Us. The people marching last night. Everyone who feels like we really lost something with such an oaf elected POTUS.

We've got a fight on our hands because all those vampires and sycophants who joined the Democrats out of fancy schools looking for consultant jobs and to otherwise ride the coattails of the inevitable choice are still going to try and make a career out of politics and those ass holes cannot be trusted.

Malcolm wrote:

The Dems have no one to blame but themselves. It was turnout, in the end, that did them in. As Sanders pointed out, again and again, in low turnout elections like this one, the GOP wins it. In high voter turn out elections, the Dems win it. Were the DNC buffoons and idiots? Yes, and this is all Podesta's emails show. Did the Dems become apathetic overall and willingly permit this to happen? Yes. And we Bernistas saw it coming.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 7:55 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

He is spot on.

Malcolm wrote:

It was voter turnout. All this bullshit about a forgotten America who turned out in droves is bullshit. 10 million less voters turned out in this election than in 2008. The same number +/- of GOP voters turned out in all three.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 7:53 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

It's also curious no-one has remarked on Julian Assange after this result. He had a personal vendetta against Clinton, and intended to destroy her - and he did. He may have been the single most influential person in this whole election.

Malcolm wrote:

The story is, according to turn out, a not surge from a forgotten America — there was a depressed turnout in this election compared with 2008 and 2012, which showed a precipitous decline in Democratic voters between 2008 and 2016.

2008: 69.5 million for Obama; 60 million for MacCain

2012: 66 million for Obama; 61 million for Romney

2016 59.8 million votes for Clinton, 59.6 million votes for Trump.

Trump lost, but given how the electoral college works, he won. In a nutshell, Clinton failed to energize voters in the right places. (The gutting of the Voting Rights Act sure did not help her either).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 11:24 AM

Title: Re: Quitting cigarettes

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

I've been addicted to cigarettes for about a year.

If you have managed to quit smoking, how did you do it?

Malcolm wrote:

I decided to stop. Then I did stop (in 1989, after smoking for 13 years).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 10:52 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Bernie in a Trump cabinet? Really? (*&^ an aye, use your brain.

Queequeg said:

Bernie is the head of the opposition.

He's going to get the megaphone from the media. We gotta come through when he calls. "To the degree that Mr. Trump is serious about pursuing policies that improve the lives of working families in this country, I and other progressives are prepared to work with him," Sanders said. "To the degree that he pursues racist, sexist, xenophobic and anti-environment policies, we will vigorously oppose him."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 5:34 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Fa Dao said:

to all of you doomsayers who are to say the least not happy with the election results...be honest...if the situation were reversed all of you would be saying "sour grapes"... "get over it"...and "accept it, we all have to pull together now under OUR new president".

Malcolm wrote:

Not at all. I would be saying, "Now it is time to sharpen the knives to make sure Clinton keeps her promises to Sanders."

#StillSanders

The thing is, at least Clinton accepts that anthropogenic climate change is a problem we have to face up. Now, we have to deal with thin-skinned narcissist who wants to role back Roe V Wade; change the first Amendment; frack on federal lands; impose trade tariffs, etc.

Essentially, he wants to (without understanding any of the history) dismantle the Federal Government and put us back on the so-called https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/American_System_%28economic_plan%29 of the Whigs:

- *Support for a high tariff to protect American industries and generate revenue for the federal government
- *Maintenance of high public land prices to generate federal revenue
- *Preservation of the Bank of the United States to stabilize the currency and rein in risky state and local banks
- *Development of a system of internal improvements (such as roads and canals) which would knit the nation together and be financed by the tariff and land sales revenues.

In simpler terms, he wishes to implement <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Neomercantilism>.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 4:24 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

drodul said:

"Somehow, I think Guru Rinpoche is not going to influence an election." - Malcolm

Thanks for the encouraging words, Malcolm, but the election is over in any case. I was thinking more of the election's horrific consequences. Guru Rinpoche was even said to have stopped wars, but I suppose he is really only a "method" rather than a great being, as I hear from wiser people than I, and thus unable to influence worldly events. Still, if you check back with your basic Vajrayana vows, you might find something about "uprooting the attitude of those who have faith."

Malcolm wrote:

So you are saying that you are now bereft of faith in Buddhadharma in toto?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 3:27 AM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

So what does one see?

Malcolm wrote:
Everything.

BuddhaFollower said:
So you see the five pure lights and conventional objects?

Malcolm wrote:
Since conventional objects are made of the five pure lights...

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 1:15 AM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:
drodul said:
This dark, nightmarish day is also Guru Rinpoche Day. As my lama once said in discussing the inevitability of the impending Kali Yuga, "Still, if we supplicate Guru Rinpoche, perhaps something can be done."

Malcolm wrote:
Somehow, I think Guru Rinpoche is not going to influence an election.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 1:04 AM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:
The Cicada said:
Exactly. But where are our pious academics who, full of great compassion and insight in their opposition of Trump,

Malcolm wrote:
Will be watching and waiting for him to fail again, as he failed to win this election without the voter suppression and district rigging that permitted his technical, but not actual, victory.

The GOP cannot win an election fairly.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 1:02 AM
Title: Re: Chomsky on Lesser Evil Voting
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
As Michael Moore warned some days ago, the pollsters did not know how to properly poll the rust belt.

However, Trump does not have a clear mandate. Clinton still won the popular vote.

Sherab Dorje said:

Mandates don't mean squat. It is the result that counts. It's not like the "popular voters" are going to rise up against Trump and bring down the political-economic system that sustains them (them being the US public).

Malcolm wrote:

Greg, what it means is that more than half of the country did not vote for Trump. His win is technical, based on voter suppression and district rigging.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 12:13 AM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

Y?

Malcolm wrote:

Because it is not correct, because it does not correspond to the meaning, because there is no locative particle before chos nyid— for many reasons.

Khyentse Wangpo explains that because all phenomena (dharmin) are exhausted, also their dharmatā is exhausted.

BuddhaFollower said:

So what does one see?

Malcolm wrote:

Everything.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 10th, 2016 at 12:04 AM

Title: Re: Chomsky on Lesser Evil Voting

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Gah, Trump supporters can't even gloat without resort to conspiracy theories, Clinton just conceded.

You guys have it, all three branches soon, it's not anyone else's problem any more. So now, when the place goes even farther to shit, the liberal/elite/reptile/muslim/whatever conspiracy cannot be blamed.

WeiHan said:

How do you explain that all prior polls predicted a landslide clinton victory with 70-80% and even 100% probability as Malcolm stated while it turn out to the opposite?

Malcolm wrote:

As Michael Moore warned some days ago, the pollsters did not know how to properly poll the rust belt.

However, Trump does not have a clear mandate. Clinton still won the popular vote.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 9th, 2016 at 11:45 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Nemo said:

The Democratic Party elite take full blame for this. They had a winning candidate in Bernie Sanders. Voting Democrat is not voting for change. It is a vote for inertia and neoliberal corporatism. Now you are in danger of losing many fundamental rights and know that the Democratic Party will betray you to their corporate overlords at every opportunity.

Join grassroots movements to stop the misogyny, racism, xenophobia and fascism that is growing in America. Get involved and know that voting Democrat every few years does absolutely nothing to support those changes. Get to work.

Malcolm wrote:

Agreed. #StillSanders.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 9th, 2016 at 11:44 PM

Title: Re: Constitutional Amendment

Content:

AlexMcLeod said:

Now that the shitstorm is basically done, let's talk preventative measures.

First, I propose an Amendment to repeal Amendments 16, 17 and 12. These amendments made it easier for the system to be manipulated.

Next, an Amendment to prevent all of a state's electoral votes from going to the same candidate because of majority. Basically, outlawing first past the post. This would destroy the two party hold on the Presidency, and allow the people to choose actual best options when voting.

Finally, a term limit Amendment for Congress, and a number of years limit on SCOTUS Justices. This removes people from lifetime membership to federal ruling class, and prevents the nation from moving too far in one direction because of entrenched politicians.

Finally, amendment to eliminate non-elected regulatory bodies. All laws need to run through Congress, who, by this point should actually represent the people in the manner designed.

What do you all think?

Malcolm wrote:
Libertarian fantasy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 9th, 2016 at 1:48 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

MiphamFan said:

I never trusted any of the polls after Brexit, but even then, I didn't expect Trump would win, and by a pretty big margin.

Malcolm wrote:
The Dems f#%king blew it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 9th, 2016 at 4:51 AM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

How accurate is this:

This is the vision of being consumed into reality.

Malcolm wrote:
This is not correct.

BuddhaFollower said:
Y?

Malcolm wrote:

Because it is not correct, because it does not correspond to the meaning, because there is no locative particle before chos nyid— for many reasons.

Khyentse Wangpo explains that because all phenomena (dharmin) are exhausted, also their dharmatā is exhausted.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 9th, 2016 at 4:51 AM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Heart Bindu of the Dakinis...

Is an incorrect translation of ḍākkini citta, a.k.a, mkha' 'gro snying thig.

Temicco said:

Why does snying thig here correspond to citta?

Malcolm wrote:

Because the title of the cycle, given within the gter ma text itself is ḍākkini citta.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 9th, 2016 at 4:35 AM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

Lewis Decottes said:

Is an incorrect translation of ḍākkini citta , a.k.a, mkha' 'gro snying thig.

What would be a more accurate translation?

Malcolm wrote:

Literally speaking, snying thig means "the core [thig] of the center [snying]," like the heartwood of a tree. The term "bindu" is not justified in the Sanskrit title, neither is "drop" ([thigs pa])

The standard conventions, "heart essence" or "innermost heart" are perfectly fine since here citta simply means heart. The thig in this case is an intensifier.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 9th, 2016 at 4:29 AM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

How accurate is this:

This is the vision of being consumed into reality.

Malcolm wrote:

This is not correct.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 9th, 2016 at 12:22 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

DGA said:

I voted this morning. I live in a nominally swing state, Virginia, so my vote does count.

This summarizes why this election matters.

This is not a joke. This is one of the moments in history when the republic is at the brink.

<http://nymag.com/daily/intelligencer/2016/11/final-answer-trump-or-the-republic.html>

PuerAzelis said:

I think Virginia is leaning way Clinton now. I'm far more worried about his surge in Florida and NC yesterday. If he can get Florida and NC anything becomes possible. All he'd need then would be Nevada and NH. This could be much closer than anyone thought.

PS: What happens if they both only get 269 college votes?

Malcolm wrote:

She is ahead in florida by 210,000 votes right now. She is also narrowly ahead in NV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 9th, 2016 at 12:18 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Mkoll said:

Sadly, getting a new SCOTUS justice in a Clinton presidency is not a given. Hopefully they won't follow through on this further destabilization of our political system.

<http://www.pbs.org/newshour/rundown/clinton-wins-gop-say-no-9-supreme-court/>

kirtu said:

There is no way that the obstructing forces can continue this tactic. It is simply unconstitutional and President Obama should have been more forceful in countering them.

Kirt

DGA said:

He has exhausted all options this side of the Pentagon to get them to do their Constitutionally-defined jobs. Should ask the army to ensure that the Senate does its work?

Malcolm wrote:

He can appoint Garland during the congressional recess.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 8th, 2016 at 10:50 PM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dharmatā means a number of things, depending on context. In logic it refers to the predicate of an argument, for example, the dharmin, water, has the dharmatā, wetness.

When used in as it is being used here, it refers to one's own nature.

With respect to your question above, the emptiness of a subject is dharmatā; the emptiness of all things collectively is the dharmadhātu.

Tsongkhapa said:

Thanks, just to clarify, when you say 'subject' do you mean mind? So are you therefore saying that dharmata is specifically the emptiness of the mind?

Malcolm wrote:

If we are talking dharmatā śūnyatā, it refers in general to the emptiness of a person. When used with respect to the mind it is called cittadharmatā.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 8th, 2016 at 8:48 PM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

And your reasons for stating this are?

You obviously deny the existence of the Illusory Body of Highest Yoga Tantra which possesses limbs and appears in the aspect of the Deity. Looks like Father Tantra is a waste of time then according to you!

Malcolm wrote:

The Diamond Sūtra states, famously:

Anyone who sees me as form,
anyone who knows me as sound,
engage in mistaken effort.

Those people who do not see me,
see the dharmatā of the buddhas.

Since the dharmakāya of the guides
is not a knowable entity,
it cannot be known.

The creation stage is not necessary as many Indian scholars such as Śrī Simha and so on have argued. In the Śrīsarvaguhya vidhigārbhāṣṇakāra-nāma, Mañjuśrīkīrti records their position:

The teaching of the creation stage and its means of conduct are taught as methods for refuting annihilationists, for proponents of the dependently originated result, and for some worldly people who are terrified of the profound meaning. Utterly pure, perfect buddhahood itself is an inconceivable pristine consciousness. Since that cannot arise from a dissimilar cause, here, emptiness—which is not perceptible as a sign, inconceivable, and the eliminator proliferation—is the supreme result that possessed when the yogi relies on the absence of thoughts.

Of course he complains that these Dzogchen practitioners have an invalid point of view, but this is because he does not understand the meaning of "absence of thoughts," in this case, the absence of thoughts referred refers to the nonconceptual direct perception of dharmatā. The latter does not require the creation stage since dharmatā is innate.

Tsongkhapa said:

Thanks for your response. Of course the principal basis of imputation for a Buddha is the truth body, but Buddhas manifest as subtle and gross form to help sentient beings. The path body that is the principal cause of these is the illusory body developed through completion stage meditation.

Malcolm wrote:

Your objection is already noted in here: "The teaching of the creation stage and its means of conduct are taught as methods for refuting annihilationists, for proponents of the dependently originated result, and for some worldly people who are terrified of the profound meaning."

Tsongkhapa said:

I completely disagree that generation stage is not necessary and this is in contradiction with the views of the great Indian adepts such as Saraha and Nagarjuna. They are clear that generation stage is the cause of completion stage and completion stage is where we manifest and purify our very subtle mind and turn it into the pristine consciousness of a Buddha.

Malcolm wrote:
As above.

Tsongkhapa said:
Furthermore, an absence of thoughts does not lead to such a result because stones lack thought but they don't become Buddhas! A mere absence of conceptual thought is not a realization.

Malcolm wrote:
Are there thoughts in pristine consciousness? If not, then what makes one think that one can realize it based on the conceptuality of the creation stage? If there are thoughts in pristine consciousness, how is this different than ordinary dualistic consciousness?

[/quote]
I've heard the term dharmata before, can you explain what it is? I've read that it is the true nature of things, but the true nature of things is emptiness and in Tantra, the union of appearance and emptiness.[/quote]

Dharmatā means a number of things, depending on context. In logic it refers to the predicate of an argument, for example, the dharmin, water, has the dharmatā, wetness.

When used in as it is being used here, it refers to one's own nature.

With respect to your question above, the emptiness of a subject is dharmatā; the emptiness of all things collectively is the dharmadhātu.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, November 8th, 2016 at 8:40 PM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:
MiphamFan said:
It's these people you need to convince, and you can't do that if you just tar them with the label of "racist", "redneck" etc.

Malcolm wrote:
But in fact a lot of these people are racists, and didn't know it until Obama was elected.

rory said:
Ah the intellect spraying everyone who isn't on the Clinton train with the terms: "racist", "misogynist".

Malcolm wrote:
On
http://www.slate.com/articles/news_and_politics/politics/2016/11/the_majority_of_trump_supporters_surveyed_described_black_people_as_less.html today:

These results are not limited to groups of whites that are often stereotyped as racially prejudiced. For instance, 33 percent of white Democrats and 34 percent of high-income whites rated black people as less evolved than white people, compared with 39 percent of white Republicans and 41 percent of low-income whites. Dehumanizing views are pervasive across white social groups.

That said, there is one group of whites that stands out in the degree to which it holds dehumanizing views of black people: Trump supporters. To measure evaluations of Trump, we asked our subjects to describe how warm they feel toward Trump on a 0-100 scale. Here we compare Trump's strongest opponents (defined here as those who rate Trump at a 25 or below) to Trump's strongest supporters (those who rate Trump higher than 75). Twenty-eight percent of white Trump opponents rate blacks as less evolved than they rate whites. In contrast, a majority of Trump supporters—52 percent—rate blacks as less evolved than whites.

rory said:

Marc Lamont Hill...The distinguished professor of African American studies at Morehouse college and New York Times best-selling author explained that making the short-term "political sacrifice" of four years of Donald Trump in the White House is a small price to pay to for the long-term goal of setting "the groundwork to imagine a new world, a new politics, and a new order

Malcolm wrote:

He is an intelligent idiot, like Jill Stein. There will be no chance of setting "the groundwork to imagine a new world, a new politics, and a new order" if we permit fascists to take power.

rory said:

It's being a true feminist to loathe HRC who aided and abetted her husband's vile sexual predatory behavior. Frankly I fear her warmongering and $ from Saudi and the corporate interests that want constant war far more than I fear Trump. And so I voted for Gary Johnson.

Malcolm wrote:

You have no evidence that Clinton "aided and abetted" Bill's philandering. You have no evidence that Clinton is anything other than a Liberal Interventionist (Wilsonian), who is merely following the general foreign policy we have had in this country for nearly a century. That policy is, I agree, flawed, but nothing she did either in the Senate nor State is inconsistent with the general tenor of US foreign policy. Pragmatically speaking, dismantling the Pax Americana means permitting power vacuums to be occupied by China and Russia , and ensuring decades of unrest around the world. As far as the money from the Saudis go, the US Government has been accepting money from the Saudis for decades: for example, the Saudis transerred 100 Billion dollars to the US in the '70's and '80's for administration, construction, weapons. The pittance that the Clinton Foundation received is hardly grounds for alarm considering how much money the Saudis have invested in the US for the past 40 years.

The myth of perpetual war is saddening, because it is false. The war on drugs, now that has been a real perpetual war, and has gained no ground. It was lost before it began. The war on terror is similar, but these are not real wars. Right now we are in one of the most peaceful eras in world history. But people are made hysterical by the media, and when they are hysterical they tend to vote for fascists like Trump, fantasists like Stein, and irresponsible, ignorant stoners like Gary "Aleppo" Johnson (whose libertarian platform is an environmental nightmare). At least Clinton and Sanders are sane, unlike the other three candidates in the race.

If you are a real Sanders supporter, you are heading out to the polls to vote the way Bernie votes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 8th, 2016 at 10:19 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

MiphamFan said:

It's these people you need to convince, and you can't do that if you just tar them with the label of "racist", "redneck" etc.

Malcolm wrote:

But in fact a lot of these people are racists, and didn't know it until Obama was elected.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 8th, 2016 at 9:35 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

This is the position of some, but not others.

Malcolm wrote:

It is the position of man ngag sde.

BuddhaFollower said:

Where in the 17 tantras?

Malcolm wrote:

Many places.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 8th, 2016 at 9:34 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

This is the position of some, but not others.

Malcolm wrote:

It is the position of man ngag sde.

conebeckham said:

Malcolm, just as an aside, have you read Ringu Tulku's comments regarding the Tögal visions and correspondences between Sarma tantra, found in the "Ri-Me Philosophy" book? His comments stem from Shechen Gyaltsap Rinpoche. Has anyone refuted this position?

Malcolm wrote:

I asked him about this personally, he walked it back.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 8th, 2016 at 6:37 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you want to see buddhas, you must receive a shintö empowerment, etc.

BuddhaFollower said:

This is the position of some, but not others.

Malcolm wrote:

It is the position of man ngag sde.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 8th, 2016 at 6:36 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you want to see buddhas, you must receive a shintö empowerment, etc.

BuddhaFollower said:

This is the position of some, but not others.

And it seems to be wrong, when you read how the visions unfolded for a certain western couple.

Malcolm wrote:

Hahaha, dude, they were students of Chagdud Tulku — they received many empowerments and did tons of sadhana practice, I know people who know them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 8th, 2016 at 3:59 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

You see Buddhas with topknots etc. in the visions of thogal.

Malcolm wrote:

Those buddha are inert appearances. They are like images projected onto a movie screen.

BuddhaFollower said:

I understand that actually.

But you made it sound like these images are artifacts of Indian culture, when they are actually primordial to the elemental vayus flowing through the heart.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they are artifacts. If you want to see buddhas, you must receive a shiro empowerment, etc. The idea that these shapes etc, exist in the body with faces and hands is a deviation of Mahāyoga.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 8th, 2016 at 3:08 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You better hope the people in power stay in power. The alternative is overt fascism.

Queequeg said:

And that is the line that will go down in history as the theme of this election.

Nothing to vote for. The only choice is to vote against the apocalypse.

That's a heads I win, tails you lose proposition if I ever saw one. And the reason I'm probably not wasting my time at the polls tomorrow. I got shit to do, man.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because the GOP have proven themselves, time and again, to be absolutely incompetent with respect to governing the country.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 8th, 2016 at 3:06 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Nor this:

Buddhas possess none of these forms.

M

BuddhaFollower said:

You see Buddhas with topknots etc. in the visions of thogal.

Malcolm wrote:

Those buddha are inert appearances. They are like images projected onto a movie screen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 8th, 2016 at 3:00 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This liberal status quo is necessary so we have the social and economic stability needed to further transform our healthcare system, our educational system, and to address the climate crisis effectively.

Queequeg said:

Robert Reich:

I've known Hillary Clinton since she was 19 years old, and have nothing but respect for her. In my view, she's the most qualified candidate for president of the political system we now have.

But Bernie Sanders is the most qualified candidate to create the political system we should have, because he's leading a political movement for change.

The upcoming election isn't about detailed policy proposals. It's about power – whether those who have it will keep it, or whether average Americans will get some as well.

If its Clinton, its the people in power keeping the power.

Malcolm wrote:

You better hope the people in power stay in power. The alternative is overt fascism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 8th, 2016 at 2:15 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

We see her voting record: a good New York Senator, adequately representing the social views of the of Upper East and West Sides, Park Slope, Westchester - "liberal" but not one to lead the way (she was OK with civil unions but not marriage, until marriage was declared the law by the judiciary - and that basic timidity on social issues is definitive). Supportive of the financial industry - she talks about regulation, but she will never do anything that might upset Jamie Dimon and Lloyd Blankfein, let alone try to put any of them in jail. If you're looking for the corruption, that's where it is - circulating at the top of the NYC food chain. She has enough empathy for working people to get the endorsement of the SEIU and Teacher's Union, but don't expect her to stick her neck out when it comes time to strike. She appeals to soccer moms. Don't expect her to excel at retail level politics, showing up to cut ribbons at newly opened youth centers the way Schumer does.

We see her decision making is uninspired and sometimes poor because she seems she stays safely within the parameters of "Conventional Wisdom". She has conservative instincts. She will not take a position unless its clear that the support is already there. She is not a leader in the sense that she leads. She is a leader in the sense that she can get things done in bureaucratic/administrative environments.

Malcolm wrote:

She is a strong believer in the Pax Americana, and every decision she has made points to this. Yes, she is not going to shake up the status quo, and as I explained to dreambow, we do not want the status quo shaken, since it will result in social, economic, and environmental calamity. we actually wish the Liberal status quo to continue. When the GOP and the far left complain about the status quo, they are complaining about the Liberal status quo. Anyone who is not a) a social conservative b) a bat shit crazy anarchist from the right or the left wants this liberal status quo. This liberal status quo is necessary so we have the social and economic stability needed to further transform our healthcare system, our educational system, and to address the climate crisis effectively.

Queequeg said:

Her decision making, though, is what leaves the most to be desired. And the people she is going to have in her inner circle are not going to help her overcome her limitations. Unless she surprises, its going to be the same crowd as Clinton I.

Malcolm wrote:

As above, she is a strong believer in the Pax Americana.

Queequeg said:

I suspect, she has promised significant concessions to Bernie, and he is going to get some major power in the Senate - head of finance committee? Maybe some of his people at the heads of some the agencies, maybe even a cabinet position or two?

Bernie's agitation is going to be critical. However, don't be surprised that after she fulfills whatever promises she made to him, that she will box him out. Bernie's power will depend on him being able to call on us when needed to turn the electoral pressure on.

Indeed, long life for Bernie.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, but I still insist that she has gotten far more unfair criticism than fair criticism and it has clouded people's abilities to make a fair assessment of her as a person.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 8th, 2016 at 1:56 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

And your reasons for stating this are?

You obviously deny the existence of the Illusory Body of Highest Yoga Tantra which possesses limbs and appears in the aspect of the Deity. Looks like Father Tantra is a waste of time then according to you!

Malcolm wrote:

The Diamond Sūtra states, famously:

Anyone who sees me as form,
anyone who knows me as sound,
engage in mistaken effort.

Those people who do not see me,
see the dharmatā of the buddhas.

Since the dharmakāya of the guides
is not a knowable entity,
it cannot be known.

The creation stage is not necessary as many Indian scholars such as Śrī Simha and so on have argued. In the Śrīsarvaguhya vidhigarbhāṃkāra-nāma, Mañjuśrīkīrti records their position:

The teaching of the creation stage and its means of conduct are taught as methods for refuting annihilationists, for proponents of the dependently originated result, and for some worldly people who are terrified of the profound meaning. Utterly pure, perfect buddhahood itself is an inconceivable pristine consciousness. Since that cannot arise from a dissimilar cause, here, emptiness—which is not perceptible as a sign, inconceivable, and the eliminator proliferation—is the supreme result that possessed when the yogi relies on the absence of thoughts.

Of course he complains that these Dzogchen practitioners have an invalid point of view, but this is because he does not understand the meaning of "absence of thoughts," in this case, the absence of thoughts referred refers to the nonconceptual direct perception of dharmatā. The latter does not require the creation stage since dharmatā is innate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 8th, 2016 at 12:00 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, but the reason so many people dislike her is largely because of the misogynistic criticisms of her, originating from a GOP hardon, that she has endured for decades. My point is that people are buying into this uncritically. Bernie never did. Bernie always made it very clear that he thought most of the flack directed her way was completely unwarranted, and clouded the real differences between them over trade, foreign policy and so on.

Queequeg said:

The Clintons have been around a long time. Long enough for observers to know who they are.

.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, it is the opposite. People really don't know who HRC is due to the fact that she has developed a very intense shell as a result of being subjected to years of attacks.

She has been repeatedly tried by the GOP in public, convicted and executed without anyone being able to show that she is actually corrupt or criminal.

Citizen's United pretty much closed the lid on the idea that taking money necessitated a quid pro quo arrangement, and as a consequence of Citizen's United, it is now very difficult to show quid pro quo arrangements without specific documents proving, for example, that HRC granted favors to people as a direct result of cash donations to the Clinton Foundation, etc.

In any case, she will at minimum be a competent executive, and if the Dems win the senate, which is a toss up right now, at least we will have liberal supreme court justices on the bench.

And we still have Bernie to keep her honest. And if the Dems win the senate, he is in line to become a very powerful senator indeed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 11:37 PM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

Emptiness is permanent but not necessarily eternal because it depends on conventional truth.

Malcolm wrote:

Therefore, buddhahood too is merely a convention and does not exist apart from a designation. That's ok with me.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 11:34 PM

Title: Re: Ayn Rand Sucks - Split from POTUS Part 3

Content:

AlexMcLeod said:

B. If you want to keep the innovation and incredibly high standard of care that exists here, it's a bad thing. All those countries with "better healthcare" than the U.S. send their rich leaders here when they require medical attention.

The way we did things before was kinda bad, but at least you would receive care a vast majority of the time if you needed it.

Malcolm wrote:

Ok, this is truly nonsensical. We do not have a higher standard of care here. Our standard of care is appalling when compared to other first world nations, we come in below Costa Rica, we are 37th on the list.

AlexMcLeod said:

Besides that, our government is notoriously bad at providing healthcare. Look at the VA.

Malcolm wrote:

No, our Government isn't notoriously bad at providing healthcare, in fact it is quite good at it. Medicare and Medicaid are very successful programs which are hampered only Congress' unwillingness to extend the system to everyone.

The VA is run by the the Department of Veteran's affairs, and the problems it faces is due to chronic <https://www.bloomberg.com/view/articles/2014-05-23/the-graphic-reality-of-the-va-s-funding-woes> courtesy of who? You guessed, Congress.

I get that you lean conservative, but your opinions are not backed up by the investigation. As the American philosopher, <http://www.peirce.org/writings/p119.html> observes, The opinion which is fated to be ultimately agreed to by all who investigate, is what we mean by the truth, and the object represented in this opinion is the real.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 10:16 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

AlexMcLeod said:

The problem with Wikileaks is that at least one document has been proven to have been tampered with. The sender was changed to look more damaging. The sender of the original email came out and provided it to the media.

Mkoll said:

Indeed, there are a lot of uncertainties with Wikileaks and organizations like it. It wouldn't be hard for them to edit documents themselves to push an agenda. Or even for an actor to allow themselves to be hacked only to provide doctored material. And as another poster implied, Assange might be getting blackmailed and forced to further someone else's agenda. Heck, Wikileaks may have been set up by a state actor.

And who is to stop those things from happening future Wikileaks-like organizations?

Malcolm wrote:

Right, who blows whistles on the whistleblowers? Any way Assange is a fool. A broken down hacker who lost any skillz he might have had decades ago, a narcissist who spends most of his time on the net obsessively looking for comments about himself. Even Snowden castigated him for being irresponsible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 10:10 PM

Title: Re: Living near an old war zone. Bad spirits?

Content:

Ayu said:

And those obstacle-creating spirtits, that are brushed off before an empowerment - what kind of bad spirits are those?

Malcolm wrote:

Concepts.

Ayu said:

Thanks.

My question wasn't precise enough: In an empowerment there are so-called "inner" and "outer obstacles" being brushed off. Probably concepts are inner hindrances, right? I meant: what kind of fellows are those outer obstacles?

Malcolm wrote:

Outer obstacles are appearance generated by one's karma, which is in turn created by afflictive concepts. Inner obstacles are concepts themselves.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 9:56 PM

Title: Re: Living near an old war zone. Bad spirits?

Content:

Ayu said:

And those obstacle-creating spiritits, that are brushed off before an empowerment - what kind of bad spirits are those?

Malcolm wrote:

Concepts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 9:33 PM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Buddhahood is clearly created as before following a spiritual path there was no Buddhahood. In Tantra, sometimes generation stage is called 'creation stage'. It's the realisation of a creative yoga. Generation stage creates a blueprint for enlightenment in the form of the Deity body, mandala and so forth. Before this practice, there is no Deity, mandala, etc. The Illusory body is created by completion stage yogas so you cannot say that Buddhahood is not created.

Malcolm wrote:

If Buddhahood is created, it is conditioned, and if it is conditioned, it is impermanent. "All conditioned phenomena are impermanent."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 9:30 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

If it were happening in the UK, the polls would mean Trump will be the new POTUS, albeit by a narrow margin. I am genuinely curious how different the American society is in this respect.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not 50/50. It is 65/35 according to https://projects.fivethirtyeight.com/2016-election-forecast/?ex_cid=2016-forecast. There is, at this point, only a very narrow pathway for Trump. He must win all the tossup states, like <http://www.latimes.com/nation/politics/trailguide/la-na-trailguide-updates-democrats-take-slender-early-voting-1478354705-htmlstory.html>, and turn at least one blue state red. It is unlikely this will happen. All HRC has to do is to win http://www.nytimes.com/interactive/2016/upshot/clinton-trump-paths-to-win-election.html?_r=0very%20narrow%20pathway anywhere and he is toast. Buh bye.

The <http://predictwise.com/politics/2016-president-winner> give him a 1:9 chance of winning, i.e. HRC has 9:1 chance of winning.

<http://election.princeton.edu/2016/11/06/is-99-a-reasonable-probability/#more-18522> gives HRC a 99% chance,

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 9:26 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

MiphamFan said:

I think at most he's a useful pawn.

Malcolm wrote:

A useful idiot, as Lenin put it, like Trump.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 9:25 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

I might be taking anti nausea medicine Tuesday. Not decided yet. I'm in a place where my vote makes no difference.

Malcolm wrote:

Sad to see you have been taken in by the blatant misogyny that has permeated this campaign from the outset.

Queequeg said:

Lol. Ok. Not actually liking HRC makes me a misogynist. Couldn't be any other reason!

Malcolm wrote:

No, but the reason so many people dislike her is largely because of the misogynistic criticisms of her, originating from a GOP hardon, that she has endured for decades. My point is that people are buying into this uncritically. Bernie never did. Bernie always made it very clear that he thought most of the flack directed her way was completely unwarranted, and clouded the real differences between them over trade, foreign policy and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 6:09 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

conebeckham said:

Our aggregates are in reality the male and female Buddhas.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, you mean they look like this?

vairocanayabyum.jpg

Come on cone, this is merely a symbol used in order to make sure that we do not reify the yidam as a self. But our aggregates, etc., do not have faces and arms, nor do they wear medieval Indian costumes. At least mine don't. YMMV.

Tsongkhapafan said:

So you deny that Buddhas appear as Enjoyment Bodies or Supreme Emanations Bodies in these aspects to disciples? How else are they to communicate with them? Disciples cannot communicate with the Dharmakaya.

Practitioners of the past have seen Manjushri and so forth in the forms that are represented in drawings and paintings and received teachings directly from them. I don't understand your problem with this unless you disbelieve these stories.

Malcolm wrote:

My friend, Buddhas do not possess these forms. More to the point, your aggregates, etc, do not have faces, arms, and ornaments. They not look like this:

Nor this:

Nor this:

Nor this:

Buddhas possess none of these forms.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 5:56 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

On a side note, I'm not interested in people's academic qualifications - there are many scholars who have an incorrect understanding of Dharma just as there are many Yogis who have not studied extensively but who have pure experiences of Sutra and Tantra because of their faith and pure view. I'm interested in the meanings that people convey. If they convey meanings that do not agree with my own understanding and experience of Dharma, I will question that. If they cannot provide logical support for their position, again I will challenge that. Anyone can quote scripture just as a parrot can repeat human speech, what is important is the meaning of the scripture, not just the words. Also, actions speak louder than words. It doesn't give me much faith when someone who appears to have extensive learning denigrates others when they simply disagree with their views.

Malcolm wrote:

Great justification for continuing in a state of ignorance about the real meaning of Secret Mantra Vajrayāna.

BTW, TKF, you are not as lily-white as you try to come off. Just review some of your own replies to me, for example.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 5:38 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

conebeckham said:

Primordial purity is beyond the distinctions "pure" vs. "Impure" of convention.

Suffering is due to ignorance, not due to a change in purity or impurity with regard to reality. Ignorance of our nature, which is due to habits and other obscurations.

Tsongkhapa said:

Erm, ignorance is impurity, thus our aggregates are not pure. Of course the purity or impurity of reality doesn't change.

conebeckham said:

Our aggregates are in reality the male and female Buddhas.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, you mean they look like this?

vairocanayabyum.jpg (44.4 KiB) Viewed 4220 times

Come on cone, this is merely a symbol used in order to make sure that we do not reify the yidam as a self. But our aggregates, etc., do not have faces and arms, nor do they wear medieval Indian costumes. At least mine don't. YMMV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 5:33 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

dreambow said:

Hillary is a hawk; just look at the mess in Iraq, Libya and the Yemen.

Malcolm wrote:

Iraq, that is squarely on the GOP. They started the Iraq war, and even though Clinton voted for funding (unlike Sanders) W wanted, one cannot blame her for it. In terms of what happened in 2011, the Iraqi govt. refused to pass a law granting legal protections to US Forces on the ground. You can't blame CLinton because the Iraqi's refused to provide legal protection to US troops fielded to protect their government.

Syria: Clinton advocated not permitted a vacuum in Syria. Mistakes in Syria rest mainly on Obama's shoulders.

Libya: started by NATO, with Clinton's support in response to the 2011 Libyan Civil War. Definitely a geopolitical error on the part of NATO.

Yemen: Every administration has been arming the Saudi's with the latest in high tech weapons. This is a problem with US foreign policy in general, not Clinton specifically.

You forgot to mention Honduras— now here was twisted reasoning used by State: if they cut off Honduras because of the coup, they would have immediately had to end all humanitarian aid to the region by US law, so they sought to finesse the deal. Bad reasoning by my estimate, but there you have it.

The thing is, she gets no credit for the Iran deal, which is a good thing. A very good thing, despite the GOP hysteria is caused.

A impartial review of her tenure at State https://www.washingtonpost.com/opinions/was-hillary-clinton-a-good-secretary-of-state/2014/05/30/16daf9c0-e5d4-11e3-a86b-362fd5443d19_story.html:

The verdict? Clinton brought a clear vision of U.S. interests and power to the job, and future presidents and secretaries of state will find many of her ideas essential. Yet she struggled to bring together the different elements of her vision into a coherent set of policies. The tension between America's role as a revolutionary power and its role as a status quo power predates Clinton; the struggle to reconcile those two opposed but equally indispensable aspects of American foreign policy has survived her tenure at the State Department.

dreambow said:

She has Wall Street backing her, the bankers and the corporations don't want any change in the status quo.

Malcolm wrote:

And neither do you. Do you really wish to go through the the global economic, political, and social disruption a sudden radical change in the "status quo" would entail? We enjoy certain advantages from the "Pax Americana." Surely you don't wish to throw these away? Nothing good comes from outright revolution. Right now in the world, the only place where there is outright war is in the Middle East and parts of Africa. The Western Hemisphere is free of war, apart from social conflict in Venezuela and Central America. Asia is free of war. Europe is free of war. Changing the status quo, as you call it, will result in war over much of the planet. We need to have stable economies and governments so we can tackle the problems posed by climate change properly. If we do not tackle those problems, then we really will be facing a change of the status quo and not one for which anyone will be able to see a favorable outcome.

dreambow said:

Its obvious the main stream media is backing her to the hilt....just trot out a few more singers and celebrities...

Malcolm wrote:

Oh sure, as opposed to the egregious lies the far right and left "media" have united over in their impotence (thank goodness) to be of any real effect in changing things .

dreambow said:

anyway Assange has pointed this out already, I say the situation is going to get really murky!

Malcolm wrote:

Assange is a self-serving twit. He is distracted by the wrong problems. He is still views the world through the lens of 1980's style radicalism. He is an anachronism, like Trump.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 4:19 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Rakz said:

It's because of patriarchy that she's an evil dirtbag? What are you trying to say?

Malcolm wrote:

What I am saying is that she is not an evil dirtbag, and it there is blatant misogyny in the GOP and its alt-right Id, represented by its nominee, who is in fact an evil bag of shit.

Rakz said:

So her war record and blatant corruption is just false propaganda in your mind?

Malcolm wrote:

I see no evidence of blatant corruption on her part. In other words, I don't see any proof that she accepted bribes from anyone for any reason.

As far as her diplomatic record is concerned, I think she made some errors, but the not the kind of errors that would rule her out from being an effective President.

Trump, on the other hand, in addition to being a sexist, racist, piece of shit, is a terribly dishonest and unsuccessful businessman (four casinos of his went bankrupt? Come on.), who lies merely for the sake of lying because his fan base eats it up.

In other words, the Clinton base are actually quite a bit more discerning about their candidate (virtually no-one is excited about HRC becoming president) than the Trump base, who seem to regard Trump as a political messiah who will magically restore the 1950's White America they erroneously remember via Happy Days and Leave it to Beaver.

In other words, rational people who actually read newspapers and who bother to understand the world as it really is, rather than favoring Fox News and Breitbart, think he is unfit. As even the Wall Street Journal points out:

The case for Donald Trump is political disruption. A broken Washington needs to be shaken up and refocused on the public good, and who better to do it than an outsider beholden to neither political party? If only that reform possibility didn't arrive as a flawed personality who has few convictions and knows little about the world.

<http://www.wsj.com/articles/the-gamble-of-trump-1478299393>

Trump is dangerous primarily because he is an ignorant fool, something he has proven time and again while campaigning. He is also dangerous because he is a deeply racist man, who indicates his racism with almost every speech he gives, especially when he goes off the message that has been carefully scripted for him by Conway et al (which is also filled with the most egregious lies). His racism has awoken a kind of xenophobia in the US, a xenophobia that was scripted by the alt-right and something he buys into uncritically. It is no mistake that he and his sons regularly retweet tweets from @WhiteGenocideTM, Jason Bergkamp, etc. Melania Trump, for example, claimed that Julie Ioffe provoked anti-semitic attacks against herself because Ioffe wrote an piece for <http://www.gq.com/story/melania-trump-gq-interview> that was not merely a puff-piece profile. Racism is a systematic problem in the Trump clan, despite Ivanka's having married into the tribe.

Quite frankly, when stacked up against Clinton, the only reason he has gotten as far as he has is because of the unreasonable hatred for Clinton which has been fueled by right wing mysogyny since the 1970's.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 3:30 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

I might be taking anti nausea medicine Tuesday. Not decided yet. I'm in a place where my vote makes no difference.

Malcolm wrote:

Sad to see you have been taken in by the blatant mysogyny that has permeated this campaign from the outset.

Rakz said:

It's because of patriarchy that she's an evil dirtbag? What are you trying to say?

Malcolm wrote:

What I am saying is that she is not an evil dirtbag, and it there is blatant mysogyny in the GOP and its alt-right Id, represented by its nominee, who is in fact an evil bag of shit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 3:20 AM

Title: Re: Lam Rim Discussion: Part 1

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

I don't suppose you know that lamrim is both Sutra and Tantra because the presentation of lamrim contains all the Buddha's teachings?

Malcolm wrote:

You don't suppose you know that in the Gelug system, Sngags rim (stages of mantra) follows Lam rim (stages of the path), in the order of presentation? This thread concerns Lam Rim. While it true that in Lam Rim literature, there is always at the end a brief pitch for the necessity of practicing Vajrayāna for attaining the aims of Mahāyāna, the stages of mantra are not presented in any detail whatsoever in the 18 famous Lam Rim treatises, not even in the Lam Rim treatise of your beloved Pabhongkha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 3:17 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

amanitamusc said:

I hope Bernie's influence plays strong if she does get in.

I would feel much better with all of Bernie in there.

Malcolm wrote:

Bernie is not going anywhere. We should all be doing longevity practice for the Bern.

As for your latter sentiment, I agree of course. But since he is the one in whom I place my trust, and since he has strongly recommended we Berners line up behind HRC, any true Sanders supporter should follow his advice. Anyone who claims he sold out has never understood Sanders from the outset.

Queequeg said:

I might be taking anti nausea medicine Tuesday. Not decided yet. I'm in a place where my vote makes no difference.

Malcolm wrote:

Sad to see you have been taken in by the blatant mysogyny that has permeated this campaign from the outset.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 2:42 AM

Title: Re: Lam Rim Discussion: Part 1

Content:

Jeff H said:

From the point of view of the vajrayana, our worst problem is self-denigration, the denigration of our aggregates, elements, and senses as impure. From the point of view of the sutras, in particular of the Vinaya and so forth — the common vehicle — these aggregates, elements, and sense are stated to be impure, troublesome, filthy, and so on. One attempts to cultivate disgust for them as a basis for the achievement of freedom. But in the vajrayana one does not cultivate disgust for the aggregates, elements, and senses.

[From a teaching on Essence of Wisdom: Stages of The Path, Part 3 by Lama Tashi Topgyal. Translated by Lama Yeshe Gyamtso. Full teaching available from the KPL bookstore as an MP3 download.]

Tsongkhapafan said:

I think this is incorrect. The reason for practising generation stage and completion stage of Tantra is the recognition that the ordinary appearances of our aggregates is impure. We want to practise generating new, pure appearances of the body, mind, enjoyments, environment and deeds of an enlightened being. Through this correct imagination, we will attain the supreme state of enlightenment.

Malcolm wrote:

Hahahah TKF imagines that his form aggregate looks like this in actuality:
vairocanayabyum.jpg (44.4 KiB) Viewed 24268 times

Anyway, TKF, the subject of the thread is LAM RIM not SNGAGS RIM.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 2:02 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

How different is the Buddhist weather procedure from the Sakta procedure:

http://www.alexissanderson.com/uploads/6/2/7/6/6276908/garud%CC%A3ika_materials_in_jy.pdf

Malcolm wrote:

Very different and generally far more simple in execution.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 1:48 AM

Title: Re: Power of mantras

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I examined several commentarial sources and these two asuras are never mentioned. Sumbha means intensely brilliant, etc, and seems to have nothing at all with this legend,

Fortyeightvows said:

Thanks for doing that Malcolm. I guess I was wrong on this one. (About this particular mantra) Sure seems like quite a coincidence though.

For what it's worth the english book 'sublime path to kechara paradise' gives it as overpower.

Malcolm wrote:

The commentaries give it the meaning bjid, brilliance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, November 7th, 2016 at 1:45 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Gyurme Kundrol said:

Im curious about the meaning of "Dakinis living in the hair". What is this about, and why is hair specifically an important residence for Dakinis? Is it meant that quite literally Dakinis will somehow reside in your hair, or is it more metaphorical like "Dakini energy" will somehow reside in the practitioner and become focused in ones hair? Also what is Dakini energy? What would it be called in Sanskrit? Is it one of the forms of Shakti? Is it Kundalini? Not sure if these are questions that can be answered publicly or not.

Does seeing/touching/tasting the hair of a "true ngakpa" therefore contain some special blessing due to it carrying this special energy?

Malcolm wrote:

When one receives a hair empowerment, one's hair is theoretically blessed as a mandala, thus you are not to cut it, much as when one takes general empowerments, one must not harm the five aggregates since they are blessed as the mandala of male and female buddhas.

Ngakpa Yeshe Dorje gave me some of his hair from his brush, and told me that if I faced serious obstacles, I could burn it and they would be removed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 6th, 2016 at 10:53 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

amanitamusc said:

I hope Bernie's influence plays strong if she does get in.

I would feel much better with all of Bernie in there.

Malcolm wrote:

Bernie is not going anywhere. We should all be doing longevity practice for the Bern.

As for your latter sentiment, I agree of course. But since he is the one in whom I place my trust, and since he has strongly recommended we Berners line up behind HRC, any true Sanders supporter should follow his advice. Anyone who claims he sold out has never understood Sanders from the outset.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 6th, 2016 at 10:51 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Hawley, MA

kirtu said:

Can this site be visited?

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it sure can.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 6th, 2016 at 10:50 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

For example, my teacher, the famed late Ngakpa Yeshe Dorje (d. 1993], made it quite clear that not everyone could just become a weather controller. In order to become a weather controller, you have to have the ability in your bone lineage (father line).

Quay said:

Bone lineage. What an interesting phrase & not one I'd heard before in this context. I would very much like to know if that is that a translation and/or one of the qualities from the father's line or lineage in Tibetan culture/language. Thank you.

Malcolm wrote:

The mother line is called the khrag rgyud, the "blood line." The father line is called rus brgyud, the "bone line."

This is based on the fact that the father's elements contributes to the formation of bone tissue, nerves and so on; while the mother's elements contributes to the development of flesh, muscle, blood and so on.

For example, since Terdag Lingpa never had a son, but only a daughter, the Mindroling paternal line ceased, and only the maternal line continued via his daughter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 6th, 2016 at 10:45 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

DGA said:

We're talking about ngakpas such as Sherab Dorje who are living in Europe or North America and whose reputations are formed by a different set of traditional norms than those of the Tibetan cultural sphere.

Malcolm wrote:

In general in traditional Tibetan society, no one would dream of calling themselves a Ngakpa based on having received an empowerment, or even a hair empowerment.

Ngakpas are people who have shown some juice from their practice of mantra. When I see some practitioners who develop some real juice in their practice, then I will call them ngakpas. Until then, for me, they are just earnest practitioners with aspirations.

My teachers, Ngakpa Yeshe Dorje and Kunzang Dechen Lingpa (both "heart sons" of Dudjom Rinpoche who were with him in Tibet for many years) demonstrated the juice of their practice. The former did several years of retreat on Throma in remote caves in Kongpo, the latter did one week of Vajrakīlaya practice and achieved siddhi (the latter was recognized by Dudjom Rinpoche as the tulku of Tertön Longsal Nyingpo).

Ordinations do not create Ngakpas, siddhis do. That is my main point here. Since I do not have siddhis, I don't call myself a Ngakpa, even though I have all the requisite empowerments and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 6th, 2016 at 8:45 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

amanitamusc said:

Trump is outrageous But

If Hill wins and appoints Joe Biden Sec of State we will be looking at increased carnage .

Whoever wins. The people lose.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course you are entitled to your opinion, but I do not think this is how it is going to go. Clinton's platform is 2/3rds of Sanders. She adopted 2/3rds! Bernie is still around to keep her in line.

The alternative will represent a decrease in freedom for everyone but white men.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 6th, 2016 at 8:26 PM

Title: Re: Power of mantras

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

So you really think that a mantra that really just consists of two names (with hum phet added) isn't related to those two names? But other mantras with names or titles are? But not this one?

So saying the names of these two deity's has nothing to do with those two deity's? Even you would have to admit then, it's quite a coincidence !

Malcolm wrote:

I examined several commentarial sources and these two asuras are never mentioned. Sumbha means intensely brilliant, etc, and seems to have nothing at all with this legend,

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 6th, 2016 at 9:23 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Unlike the Ngakpa lineages.

Malcolm wrote:

Good luck piercing the aristocratic foundation of the Ngakpa tradition. In Tibet, in terms of one's reputation, one's family comes first, then one's teacher, then one's personal qualities.

For example, I have seen doctors presented as good teachers (who were horrible actually) because their qualities were listed in that order. It really does not fit with the egalitarian model you have in your head, Greg, that "anyone" become a Ngakpa in the traditional Tibetan sense. For example, my teacher, the famed late Ngakpa Yeshe Dorje (d. 1993], made it quite clear that not everyone could just become a weather controller. In order to become a weather controller, you have to have the ability in your bone lineage (father line).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 6th, 2016 at 9:15 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

I think you guys mean varna mobility.

Caste is a British invention, and recorded by the Government of India. It cannot be changed.

Sherab Dorje said:

It ain't shit, it's pooh. The British just simplified, renamed and ossified a pre-existing system, in order to fortify their "divide and rule" tactics.

BuddhaFollower said:

No they are literally different things.

Varna refers to Brahmin, Kshatriya, Vaishya and Shudra.

Caste refers to the various Patels, Kapus, Velamas etc.

Malcolm wrote:

Tibetans translate the term varna as rigs, which means caste, derived from Spanish and Portuguese "casta", 'lineage, race, breed.' But we can also say "color" if you insist, which just shows that Indian civilization is inherently racist, but we knew this already, right?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 6th, 2016 at 9:06 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Awakened people don't get jaundice, but they may appear to from our point of view. By awakened I assume you mean enlightened, not just liberated.

Malcolm wrote:

Nirmanakāyas have physical bodies, which suffer from erosion, just like ours do. In the Mahaparinibbana sutta it is said:

But when the Blessed One had entered upon the rainy season, there arose in him a severe illness, and sharp and deadly pains came upon him. And the Blessed One endured them mindfully, clearly comprehending and unperturbed..."Now I am frail, Ananda, old, aged, far gone in years. This is my eightieth year, and my life is spent. Even as an old cart, Ananda, is held together with much difficulty, so the body of the Tathagata is kept going only with supports. It is, Ananda, only when the Tathagata, disregarding external objects, with the cessation of certain feelings, attains to and abides in the signless concentration of mind, [19] that his body is more comfortable." Now, I am sure you have some fantasy answer, but I think the Buddha's words are more reliable than yours.

Tsongkhapafan said:

These are ordinary appearances to ordinary minds; Buddha sees things differently.

You'll be telling me that Buddha died next!

Malcolm wrote:

Uhuh, you should go on Fox News, your capacity of self-deception matches theirs.

Tsongkhapafan said:

You really should study Tantra. Buddha's Tantric teachings are very reliable.

Malcolm wrote:

You really have no clue.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 6th, 2016 at 9:03 AM

Title: Re: Ayn Rand Sucks - Split from POTUS Part 3

Content:

kirtu said:

There's a lot of false analysis in US media. The failure of Millenials to sign up for so-called Obamacare is likely to be one of these. One of the contributing factors is likely the multiplicity of implementations since Obamacare appears to be implemented at a state level rather than a federal level.

Malcolm wrote:

Massachusetts' system works quite well. You should think about moving north of the Mason/Dixon line.

Despite flaws in the ACA, these days the main factor undermining the program is the 32 states whose governors refuse to implement state exchanges, forcing their citizens onto federal exchanges the law was never designed manage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 6th, 2016 at 3:33 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

... 6 miles away from Jigme Lingpa's thumb relic and 4 miles away from Khandrol Ling...

kirtu said:

Where is Jigme Lingpa's thumb relic?

Kirt

AlexMcLeod said:

I'm going to make a wild guess based on the other information in his post and say somewhere in Buckland, Ma

Malcolm wrote:
Hawley, MA

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, November 6th, 2016 at 3:32 AM
Title: Re: Ultimate Truth
Content:

Tsongkhapa said:
Awakened people don't get jaundice, but they may appear to from our point of view. By awakened I assume you mean enlightened, not just liberated.

Malcolm wrote:
Nirmanakāyas have physical bodies, which suffer from erosion, just like ours do. In the Mahaparinibbana sutta it is said:
But when the Blessed One had entered upon the rainy season, there arose in him a severe illness, and sharp and deadly pains came upon him. And the Blessed One endured them mindfully, clearly comprehending and unperturbed..."Now I am frail, Ananda, old, aged, far gone in years. This is my eightieth year, and my life is spent. Even as an old cart, Ananda, is held together with much difficulty, so the body of the Tathagata is kept going only with supports. It is, Ananda, only when the Tathagata, disregarding external objects, with the cessation of certain feelings, attains to and abides in the signless concentration of mind, [19] that his body is more comfortable." Now, I am sure you have some fantasy answer, but I think the Buddha's words are more reliable than yours.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, November 6th, 2016 at 3:21 AM
Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic
Content:
Malcolm wrote:

If you care sufficiently, you can do some research and find out that what I said about brahmins is factual.

Sherab Dorje said:
If I didn't care I wouldn't ask you. I guessed that since you stated it so authoritatively, you would have some specific examples/sources in mind.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, Greg. It is something I read in some book on India some years ago. It struck me because caste fluidity is not something that is discussed much. Here is a paper that discusses it:

http://shodhganga.inflibnet.ac.in/bitstream/10603/28091/6/06_chapter%203.pdf

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 6th, 2016 at 2:53 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Do you have any examples?

Malcolm wrote:

If you care sufficiently, you can do some research and find out that what I said about brahmins is factual.

Sherab Dorje said:

But that is like saying that to receive an empowerment for and utilize a phurba (for example) you have to be proficient in it's methods of application.

Malcolm wrote:

To receive an empowerment for a kīla, no; to utilize a kīla, one should do the approach before wielding a kīla.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 6th, 2016 at 2:42 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

kirtu said:

No,

Malcolm wrote:

It must be terrible to live where you live. I hope you can move back to the pureland of Europe ASAP.

kirtu said:

It is terrible to live in the US and watch as the people throw away their great advantages and never (or almost never) try to improve their society.

I have to wait a few years until I can return to Europe and hopefully take dual citizenship and then help to build a democratic society. And even inch our way towards a Pure Land

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

Hopefully trump won't win, and I will just stay here in my little hidden land in Western Ma, 6 miles away from Jigme Lingpa's thumb relic and 4 miles away from Khandro Ling...and even if he does, it is very, very liberal in my neck of the woods. But it is not like this everywhere in the US.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 6th, 2016 at 2:32 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Have you actually studied Tantra? Just asking. Are you saying that Pure Lands don't exist? If you are, then you are denying Buddha's teachings. What makes pure lands pure? The absence of impurity. This is not a dualistic concept any more than the absence of delusion is a dualistic concept. The six realms of samsara don't exist for Buddhas because they are creations of deluded mind and Buddhas are not deluded. Not only does shit not exist for them, any ordinary thing that is perceived by an impure human mind doesn't exist for them, otherwise you are saying that a person with clear sight sees the appearance of floating hairs, they just don't grasp at them! Hallucinations don't exist for people who are not hallucinating.

You do understand that appearances are relative and dependent on the mind, right?

Malcolm wrote:

If an awakened person has jaundice, they will see conches as yellow, just like anyone else.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 6th, 2016 at 1:42 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

kirtu said:

Which furthermore means that in the US, practically all politicians are egregious liars.

Malcolm wrote:

In every country, practically all politicians are egregious liars. Why? Because the populace is swayed by hope and fear. Thus, politicians tell lies to both instill fear of their opponents (though in Trump's case, everything negative said about him is true, while in her case, very little is) and to rouse hope in their promises (which often turn out if not to be outright false, impracticable and unachievable).

kirtu said:

No,

Malcolm wrote:

It must be terrible to live where you live. I hope you can move back to the pureland of Europe ASAP.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 6th, 2016 at 12:18 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

heart said:

More or less what many westerners think as well, or will be thinking soon.

kirtu said:

We have an opportunity to turn this around,

Kirt

heart said:

Would be great, but I don't see that happening.

Malcolm wrote:

This kind of behavior is baked into patriarchal cultures.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, November 6th, 2016 at 12:17 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

kirtu said:

Which furthermore means that in the US, practically all politicians are egregious liars.

Malcolm wrote:

In every country, practically all politicians are egregious liars. Why? Because the populace is swayed by hope and fear. Thus, politicians tell lies to both instill fear of their opponents (though in Trump's case, everything negative said about him is true, while in her case, very little is) and to rouse hope in their promises (which often turn out if not to be outright false, impracticable and unachievable).

On a side note, I can't wait for the GOP and their pathetic minions to start blaming Hillary for the outpouring of national mysogyny that will follow her win, just as they are presently blaming Obama for white racism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 11:12 PM

Title: Re: The importance of direct experience

Content:

LastLegend said:

How do you eat "emptiness is form?"

Malcolm wrote:

With both hands.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 11:01 PM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

So Buddhas have impure minds? This is a contradiction.

Malcolm wrote:

No, there is no contradiction. The problem is not appearances, the problem is clinging; so whether a buddha perceives shit or gold, they are regarded them the same way — a buddha regards them without any accepting or rejecting. But it does not mean that a buddha perceives that all shit smells like roses. For a buddha, roses smell like roses and shit smells like shit.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Impurity isn't related to Buddha's mind. Buddha's don't see shit, these are hallucinations for impure beings like ourselves. If even gods perceive fluids are nectar, it goes without saying that Buddhas do not perceive impure things.

Malcolm wrote:

Things are neither pure nor impure, "pure and impure" are the dualistic concepts of sentient beings. Buddhas see shit, they just don't relate to it as impure or something to avoid, nor to they relate to gold as something pure to acquire.

Since this is case, if you insist that Buddhas in the human realm do not see water (or do not see pus and blood in a preta realm), I think you are deluded and you do not understand the meaning of conventional truth.

If on the other hand you opine that buddhas do not perceive phenomena such as shit and gold in terms of purity or impurity, then I can go along with this. But to believe that buddhas live in a comic book world of pure lands is naive beyond belief, and it means, as far as I am concerned, you have not understood the real import of the generation stage nor the completion stage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 10:39 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

There is one VERY significant difference though: One can only be born as a Brahmin, whereas anyone can become a Ngakpa.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this isn't true. Buddha explains to one brahmin boy that in the distant past, his family were slaves of the Buddha's clan and were not in fact brahmins. And we know that practically speaking, families do in fact move up and down through the caste system, it is not a fixed as many believe unless you belong to one of the so called "unscheduled castes."

And while it is true that anyone can take some vow and not cut their hair, that is not really what a ngakpa is. A real ngakpa is someone who actually has some realization, someone who has at least generated some heat through practicing Secret Mantra. It is for this reason I don't place very much importance on the so called "ngakpa ordination" or necessarily have a lot of respect for all these people who want to take "ngakpa vows" and go about in religious gear. For example, at base, to really be a candidate for wearing the white lower robe, you must be proficient in tummo, and so on. To really be a candidate for not cutting your hair, you must have the great compassion necessary that ḍākinīs will take up residence in it, etc. Ḍākinīs are not going to inhabit your hair just because you took a vow not to cut it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 10:30 PM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

But there is nothing in regular sūtra to suggest that a buddha perceives only pure appearances.

Tsongkhapafan said:

So Buddhas have impure minds? This is a contradiction.

Malcolm wrote:

No, there is no contradiction. The problem is not appearances, the problem is clinging; so whether a buddha perceives shit or gold, they are regarded them the same way — a buddha regards them without any accepting or rejecting. But it does not mean that a buddha perceives that all shit smells like roses. For a buddha, roses smell like roses and shit smells like shit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 10:24 PM

Title: Re: The importance of direct experience

Content:

rachmiel said:

I remember having no problem understanding "Form is emptiness" but scratching my head over "Emptiness is form." Maybe I was overthinking it (as I tend to do), but form seems to unravel nicely into emptiness while emptiness is kinda sorta no-thing to begin with ... so how could it "ravel" into form?

Malcolm wrote:

It is an identity proposition: if the material skandha is empty [the rūpa referred to in the sūtra], then emptiness has to be the material skandha since the material skandha cannot be other than emptiness, and emptiness cannot be other than the material skandha. It is the same for the other four skandhas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 10:20 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Tongnyid Dorje said:

when Lopon Ogyan T.Rinpoche gave ngakpa ordination first time in my country, he was giving Vajrakilaya wang. after that he asked us to leave those who dont want this ordination and added short ritual with special visualisation for hair empowerment. recently i saw text for this among John Reynolds traslations of different Throma texts.

then there is this famous Throma Nagmo in Dudjom Tersar.it contains everything, including weapons, and so on, and full ngakpa garment. as i understood, its is conected with this upasaka tradition, but actually also with style how tantrikas used to dress in Oddiyana. Rinpoche explained to us, that you can still se there yogis dressing white (he believes that Oddiyana was in present day Orissa. i was lucky to make pilgrimage with him there).

also, when he gave as Simhamukha in Dudjom tersar, he said there is also everything for become a ngakpa.

im not wearing ngakpa robe all the time, of course. hovever Rinpoche explained, that robe is something like armour for practicioner, cos when you are wearing a robe, you will not go to pub, and so on. i do wear a robe mainly on the retreats, or when im doing practice. also Dzongsar K.Rinpoche said in his book (Not for happiness, that it is good for us to wear smthing "special" for practice.

Malcolm wrote:

I can't comment on the Oḍḍiyāna thing, it is very unclear. There is a strong Indian tradition that witches (dākinīs) live the Swat region, perhaps because many people there have blue eyes and red hair. Further, Chogyal Namkhai Norbu maintains that it was in Pakistan. So what to do?

In terms of Ngapa dress, I have said many times that Ngakpas are kind of like the brahmins of Tibetan society, fulfilling many of the same functions. In Thailand, for example, there are brahmins and this is how they appear:

Like Brahmins, in Tibet we have family Ngakpa lineages, which are generally held to be very important. For example, this person is something like the head Ngakpa:

It is fine by me if people like to wear outfits when they practice. I have no need for it personally. What other people do is their business, not mine. But I do like to use an indian blanket to keep warm if the room is a little cold:

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 9:08 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

This was post Citizen's United. It changed when Wasserman Schultz became head of the DNC. I'll try to find the exact rule I'm referring to.

Malcolm wrote:

DWS was Obama's pick.

Queequeg said:

What? That makes no sense.

Malcolm wrote:

You have any better explanation of the largely unwarranted persecution of her by the GOP for the past 30 years? She is just a much a target of GOP misogyny as anyone we have ever seen on the national stage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 12:42 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 5:42 AM

Title: Re: Power of mantras

Content:

heart said:

The "om subhana..." mantra? No, I think not.

Fortyeightvows said:

You learned that it is the name of deity's, how different is that?

Malcolm wrote:

It is not the name of a deity. It is a mantra for setting a protective boundary, etc. Really, if you want to know about mantras, you have to become a practitioner of Secret Mantra. These things are secret for a reason.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 5:36 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

conebeckham said:

Shentong is still a Sutra view, as I understand things. I'm not sure your example applies. As for the deity being ultimate, however, this is indeed the case....but if by the deity being ultimate, one understands the ultimate to be, say, a blue-black many armed anthropomorphic figure holding weapons, etc., that is mistaken view of the "ultimate deity."

Tsongkhapafan said:

Buddha's mind, the Dharmakaya and Buddha's body, the Sambogakaya, are one nature, therefore they are both ultimate in that how they exist is how they appear; this is not mistaken.

The Enjoyment Body arises from the Truth Body like a rainbow arising out of an empty sky but they are one nature.

Malcolm wrote:

So you mean the three kāyas exist inherently?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 5:34 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

Assuming that your opinions are objective fact, does that substantially affect the import of the documents he releases?

Malcolm wrote:

You know, the Podesta emails just show a campaign in full swing, with the standard amount of partisan assholishness. There is nothing mind-blowing or significant in them. Is the DNC corrupt? Yes, but we already knew this. So while it is certainly interesting and entertaining to see what a stunning jerk Podesta et al are, the emails are really of no significance whatsoever,

Queequeg said:

I don't agree that this is par. Obama has not been like that, and there are plenty of accounts about how the DNC under Obama was not this dirty. It was only when HRC started gearing up to run and Obama handed over the reigns of the DNC to the Clinton crowd that it started getting slimy again. I don't recall the details, but when Obama was calling the shots, he was not permitting certain types of donations, for instance.

Malcolm wrote:

You mean pre-Citizen's United? Anyway, the corruption in the DNC is precisely Obama's fault.

Queequeg said:

The Clinton crowd came in and they rescinded that restriction and opened it up to the full tilt of the law.

Malcolm wrote:

And you blame them? You do recall Citizen's United was a ruling in favor of a movie that was basically a witch hunt against Clinton?

Queequeg said:

This is not politics as it has to be. People who think politics is just going to be more of what we saw under Obama are going to be in for a rude awakening as the Clinton crowd takes over everything and starts calling shots.

Malcolm wrote:

This politics courtesy of the GOP. You know, like blaming a wife for her philandering husband.

Queequeg said:

The Clintons are uniquely slimy.

Malcolm wrote:

Bill is creep. HRC is a women who has tried, with many errors, to deal with the patriarchal hand she was dealt.

Queequeg said:

The same crowd that is gunning for Clinton have been gunning for Obama. The difference is, Obama is clean - he's got nothing, and so the best they could do is this birther crap and straight up race bating. With the Clintons, they're so dirty, there's endless ammo to go after them.

Malcolm wrote:

But they aren't, actually. The GOP has made up tremendous bullshit about them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 5:30 AM

Title: Re: Power of mantras

Content:

heart said:

That is not what that mantra do, sorry.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, of course they do Magnus. When you recite Om ah huṃ vajra guru padma siddhi hūṃ you are invoking the awakened continuum of Padmasabhava. You can do this externally, like a supplication, or you can do this internally, as a means of realizing the nature of your mind, and so on.

heart said:

The "om subhana..." mantra? No, I think not. But perhaps someone could feel like that about the vajra guru mantra.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

I already clarified, the sumba mantra is an activity mantra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 5:29 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

If you grasp at inherent existence, you're right. Beings appear as enlightened to pure minds and as suffering to impure minds, no contradiction. What something is depends upon how it is viewed.

Malcolm wrote:

This means that the Buddha's view of sentient beings as pure something relative, and not ultimate, in contradiction to your previous claim.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Ultimate doesn't mean absolute, it simply means that there is no contradiction between how something appears and how it exists. Buddhas see all phenomena as manifestations of bliss and emptiness and that's how they exist.

Malcolm wrote:

When you say ultimate, which Tibetan/Sanskrit term do you mean? Otherwise, it becomes confusing. When I say ultimate, I mean don dam, paramārtha.

Still, even if you maintain the above, the Buddhas perception of phenomena is still relative.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 5:04 AM

Title: Re: Power of mantras

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

Propitiate, supplicate, appease, whatever it's called...

heart said:

That is not what that mantra do, sorry.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, of course they do Magnus. When you recite Om ah huṃ vajra guru padma siddhi hūṃ you are invoking the awakened continuum of Padmasabhava. You can do this externally, like a supplication, or you can do this internally, as a means of realizing the nature of your mind, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 5:01 AM

Title: Re: Power of mantras

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

What's a vidyamantra?

Malcolm wrote:

A mantra from kriya tantra. However, the origin of the term guhyamantras are mantras that are associated with Vajrapani, and should be kept secret, since they are related to controlling guhyakas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 4:55 AM

Title: Re: Power of mantras

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

Saying the names of deity's, which many mantras are is seems like a form of propitiation. Sumba and nisumba, the pali parittas , mantras for protection, etc..

heart said:

Just because it seems like that doesn't mean it is like that, in tantra that is.

/magnus

Fortyeightvows said:

I think generally what you are saying is true about the use of mantras in tantra vs sutra But....

How about mantras like sumba nisumba? That's from tantra. so...?

Malcolm wrote:

These are action mantras because they are responsible for actions. For example, the mantra you mention is for frightening obstructors and used for purification of offerings. But this is the realm of secret mantra and so you really need empowerment to use these.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 4:32 AM

Title: Re: Power of mantras

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

Thanks for that.

So what about the idea of a mantra as a device to aid in memorization or understanding of a text? Like the mantra in the heart sutra, or the mantra of dependent origination ?

Malcolm wrote:

That is a dhāraṇī, which means roughly, something that aids one in retention.

Fortyeightvows said:

I'm not trying to be difficult but in the heart sutra it is called a mantra...

Really I'm not trying be difficult. Just want to understand better.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it is called a mantra, but it is not a secret mantra (guhyamantra) nor a knowledge mantra (vidyāmantra).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 4:24 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 4:21 AM

Title: Re: Power of mantras

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

Thanks for that.

So what about the idea of a mantra as a device to aid in memorization or understanding of a text? Like the mantra in the heart sutra, or the mantra of dependent origination ?

Malcolm wrote:

That is a dhāraṇī, which means roughly, something that aids one in retention.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 4:18 AM

Title: Re: Power of mantras

Content:

heart said:

Nevertheless, your quote doesn't correspond to the meaning you give it.

Fortyeightvows said:

Sorry to reopen this old thread but...

Please explain.

Malcolm wrote:

The words mantra simply means "the protect (tra) the mind (manas)."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 4:14 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Astus said:

"Hence, the ultimate wrong conceptual consciousness that conceives the object of negation is the innate ignorance which is the first of the twelve factors of dependent-arising. Acquired objects of negation are merely superimpositions based on this. Thus, it is not at all the case that reason negates all of the cognitive processes through which non-conceptual consciousnesses - e.g., sensory consciousnesses - apprehend things. Therefore, only conceptual mental consciousnesses have cognitive processes that are negated by reason; more specifically, reason refutes the cognitive processes of the two conceptions of self and the cognitive processes of those conceptual consciousnesses that superimpose further attributes on objects that have been imputed by those two conceptions of self. It is not that reason refutes the cognitive processes of all conceptual consciousnesses of any kind."

(Tsongkhapa: The Great Treatise on the Stages of the Path, vol 3, p 212)

Malcolm wrote:

The problem, here, is that what is being discussed is a discussion from the point of Vajrayāna. For example, some people who adhere versions of gzhan to stong theory, will indeed claim that the deity, whose representation is meditated in the creation stage, is ultimate.

But there is nothing in regular sūtra to suggest that a buddha perceives only pure appearances.

conebeckham said:

Shentong is still a Sutra view, as I understand things. I'm not sure your example applies. As for the deity being ultimate, however, this is indeed the case....but if by the deity being ultimate, one understands the ultimate to be, say, a blue-black many armed anthropomorphic figure holding weapons, etc., that is mistaken view of the "ultimate deity."

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, this is what some versions of gzhan stong hold.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 4:03 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

conebeckham said:

He does not negate appearances. Nor does he claim appearances, as such, "change."

Astus said:

"Hence, the ultimate wrong conceptual consciousness that conceives the object of negation is the innate ignorance which is the first of the twelve factors of dependent-arising. Acquired objects of negation are merely superimpositions based on this. Thus, it is not at all the case that reason negates all of the cognitive processes through which non-conceptual consciousnesses - e.g., sensory consciousnesses - apprehend things. Therefore, only conceptual mental consciousnesses have cognitive processes that are negated by reason; more specifically, reason refutes the cognitive processes of the two conceptions of self and the cognitive processes of those conceptual consciousnesses that superimpose further attributes on objects that have been imputed by those two conceptions of self. It is not that reason refutes the cognitive processes of all conceptual consciousnesses of any kind."

(Tsongkhapa: The Great Treatise on the Stages of the Path, vol 3, p 212)

Malcolm wrote:

The problem, here, is that what is being discussed is a discussion from the point of Vajrayāna. For example, some people who adhere versions of gzhan to stong theory, will indeed claim that the deity, whose representation is meditated in the creation stage, is ultimate.

But there is nothing in regular sūtra to suggest that a buddha perceives only pure appearances.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 3:48 AM
Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic
Content:
dzogchungpa said:
As much as it pains me to say this...

Malcolm wrote:
You feel pain?

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 3:26 AM
Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
The reality is that all these specific and "special" empowerments and commitments are completely relative.

Sherab Dorje said:
Nobody said they are absolute. You are projecting again. But, given you are not a mind reader, you cannot know the motivation that each individual being has for practicing in these lineages. You are quick to judge though and that is a nasty habit.

Malcolm wrote:
I assume the motivation for practicing in any Vajrayāna lineage is to attain buddhahood for the benefit of others. No mind reading needed at all.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 3:01 AM
Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic
Content:
Sherab Dorje said:
Special and specific are not synonyms. You are projecting.

Malcolm wrote:
Pretty much the same.

Sherab Dorje said:
Not at all. You are projecting (again).

Malcolm wrote:
No, Greg.

The reality is that all these specific and "special" empowerments and commitments are completely relative.

There is one passage where Saraha derides people for running around in kapalika outfits...another where Jigme Lingpa taunts so called ngakpas...YMMV

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 2:55 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

We all want our traditions to be special, but in reality they are just variations on a general theme.

Sherab Dorje said:

Special and specific are not synonyms. You are projecting.

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty much the same. But if you want to feel special, who am I to stop you? You have enough problems working with refugees, that is more important than all this bullshit we argue about.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 2:43 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

His opinions are worse than useless. He is desperately seeking relevance, and sooner or later, Ecuador will tire of him...

Queequeg said:

Assuming that your opinions are objective fact, does that substantially affect the import of the documents he releases?

Malcolm wrote:

You know, the Podesta emails just show a campaign in full swing, with the standard amount of partisan assholishness. There is nothing mind-blowing or significant in them. Is the DNC corrupt? Yes, but we already knew this. So while it is certainly interesting and entertaining to see what a stunning jerk Podesta et al are, the emails are really of no significance whatsoever, and Assange's involvement in releasing them does not make them more significant, though in his little fever driven brain, it must seem so to him.

The FBI's conduct however is truly egregious and that Comey guy should be up on charges.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 2:34 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

there are also a range of specific empowerments with specific samaya,

Malcolm wrote:

Every empowerment has specific samayas connected with specific empowerments, for example, the reason why Padmasambhava carries a skull cup and a vajra is that these articles are samaya commitments for Śrī Heruka, his main yidam.

Cakrasamvara and Yoginī practitioners are never supposed to be separate from the bone implements and so on, and so often they carry around a little card with representations of these items.

Thus, that mantrins, whether lay or ordained, have articles of samaya they are supposed to carry about with them is not an exception, it is instead the rule.

Sherab Dorje said:

Yes, I know. But not all empowerments have the same specific samaya.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that was the point of my posting the above, "Every empowerment has specific samayas connected with specific empowerments [within that empowerment]."

Thus it is not surprising in the least that that there are specific empowerments in Pema Lingpa's tradition concerned with this or that article, just as there is a hair empowerment in Dudjom Troma, etc. We all want our traditions to be special, but in reality they are just variations on a general theme.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 2:25 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

there are also a range of specific empowerments with specific samaya,

Malcolm wrote:

Every empowerment has specific samayas connected with specific empowerments, for example, the reason why Padmasambhava carries a skull cup and a vajra is that these articles are samaya commitments for Śrī Heruka, his main yidam.

Cakrasamvara and Yoginī practitioners are never supposed to be separate from the bone implements and so on, and so often they carry around a little card with representations of these items.

Thus, that mantrins, whether lay or ordained, have articles of samaya they are supposed to carry about with them is not an exception, it is instead the rule.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 2:11 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Fa Dao said:

interview clip with Assange...

Malcolm wrote:

Assange is an asshole. He is still facing rape charges in Sweden.

Queequeg said:

And so... what?

Malcolm wrote:

His opinions are worse that useless. He is desperately seeking relevance, and sooner or later, Ecuador will tire of him...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 1:59 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Fa Dao said:

interview clip with Assange...

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Malcolm wrote:

Assange is an asshole. He is still facing rape charges in Sweden.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 1:47 AM

Title: Re: How effective are liberation-upon-seeing dharma doors?

Content:

Virgo said:

Malcolm, may I ask who told you this and if you still feel this way? Thanks.

Kevin

Malcolm wrote:

Kunzang Dechen Lingpa told me this, and I still take this seriously.

DGA said:

This is useful.

the word "amulet" can refer to a few different things. are these examples or do you mean something else?

<http://www.mahasiddha.org/store/Amulets.html>

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, some of these are "liberation through wearing."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 1:45 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

DGA said:

That's good stuff, Malcolm. Thank you.

I am among those who had understood that the term "ngakpa" corresponds to some kind of ordination system designating persons with some know-how in Dharma.

Malcolm wrote:

The origin of the custom of wearing white lower robes goes back to the fact that in ancient India, pious Buddhist lay people often wore all white cloths, indicating their status as upāsakas and upāsikās.

In Tibet, however, the garb of the so called "mantrins" became invested with much ritual significance, much of it coming from the tradition of Chō. And since there are so many traditions, it is not surprising that there have come to be much variance with respect the uniform of an upāsaka mantrin in Tibet. Exhibit A)

You can see here there is that most of these Repkong ngakpas wear an assortment of outfits. They are mainly recognizable through the distinctive coiled dreadlocks on their heads.

However, due to the important position of the Dudjom Tradition in the exile community and in West, the characteristic uniform of the mantrin students of Dudjom Rinpoche's followers has come to represent the standard uniform of upāsaka mantrins.

DGA said:

It occurs to me that if this is a misperception in regard to the situation in the Himalayas, it might open onto some useful possibilities in the West. Suppose there's low demand for practitioners able to dispel hailstorms. That's OK, because demand is high for "lay" teachers who are able to dispel ignorance.

(by "lay" I mean living more or less as householders do.)

Malcolm wrote:

Well, people do like to dress up in outfits:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 1:21 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Hi friend

Yes, Buddha sees that all beings are enlightened. This is the truth from his point of view, from the point of view of a completely pure mind. Our impurity, suffering and problems are hallucinations created by ignorance; they are not true, so Buddha doesn't see this. These things exist only for us and they are mistaken appearances. Buddha knows that from our impure point of view, we are suffering because we are hallucinating. He's trying to wake us up, although being Dharmakaya and beyond conceptions, he doesn't have to think about helping us. He naturally manifests whatever is needed to help us in accordance with our karma in the same way that the sun radiates light and heat and doesn't have to consciously think about doing so.

Malcolm wrote:

The statement above suffers from an internal contradiction. If all beings are enlightened, they cannot have impurities, they also cannot experience impurities.

Tsongkhapafan said:

If you grasp at inherent existence, you're right. Beings appear as enlightened to pure minds and as suffering to impure minds, no contradiction. What something is depends upon how it is viewed.

Malcolm wrote:

This means that the Buddha's view of sentient beings as pure something relative, and not ultimate, in contradiction to your previous claim.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 1:15 AM
Title: Re: Ultimate Truth
Content:

Coëmgenu said:

The Buddha does not see us as delusion, as suffering, as self-conception. He sees us as tathāgatagarbha. Obviously I am making assumptions here about what the user "Tsongkhapafan" meant, though. I apologize if I have misrepresented "Tsongkhapafan".

Obviously he also sees delusion, suffering, ignorance, etc, because otherwise he could not have ministered to us. He wouldn't have seen us as suffering at all if that were the case. I think that my explanation of the Buddha's ability to see "things-as-they-are" is what "Tsongkhapafan" meant though. The Buddha does not "see" ignorance/suffering/delusion in that he knows that "ignorance/suffering/delusion" is false. That being said, he can still recognize the falseness in order to rectify it.

Tsongkhapafan said:
Hi friend

Yes, Buddha sees that all beings are enlightened. This is the truth from his point of view, from the point of view of a completely pure mind. Our impurity, suffering and problems are hallucinations created by ignorance; they are not true, so Buddha doesn't see this. These things exist only for us and they are mistaken appearances. Buddha knows that from our impure point of view, we are suffering because we are hallucinating. He's trying to wake us up, although being Dharmakaya and beyond conceptions, he doesn't have to think about helping us. He naturally manifests whatever is needed to help us in accordance with our karma in the same way that the sun radiates light and heat and doesn't have to consciously think about doing so.

Malcolm wrote:

The statement above suffers from an internal contradiction. If all beings are enlightened, they cannot have impurities, they also cannot experience impurities.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, November 5th, 2016 at 12:23 AM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:
Unknown said:

After Mitt Romney's loss in 2012, moderate Republicans famously issued a detailed plan for the future that recommended extensive minority outreach. But the course the GOP actually chose in 2016 hewed a lot closer to a white paper Spencer wrote in 2011 about a "majority strategy" advanced by racist intellectuals. The strategy urged Republicans to forgo their fruitless minority outreach and instead unite a majority of white voters by focusing on immigration restriction. The GOP, Spencer wrote, needed to accept its role as the “white people’s party whether Republican leadership likes it or not.

Malcolm wrote:

<http://highline.huffingtonpost.com/articles/en/alt-right/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 4th, 2016 at 10:38 PM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

Yes, they are ultimate truths for enlightened minds because the way they appear coincides with how they exist - as mere appearances.

Malcolm wrote:

How is this different from sentient beings and ordinary planets? By your logic, they too are ultimate truths since for an "enlightened mind" their appearance and mode of existence will also coincide as mere appearances.

Tsongkhapa said:

Enlightened beings don't see impure worlds and beings because they are ordinary appearances and ordinary appearances are mistaken. They see all worlds and beings as completely pure, the union of appearance and emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, which is? Are the appearances false or are the minds apprehending them mistaken?

If the appearances are false, then they will continue to be false no matter what kind of mind apprehends them. If the minds that apprehends appearances is mistaken, the appearances will be same regardless of whether the mind that apprehends them is mistaken or veridical.

Appeals to authority are bogus if you do not provide a citation, BTW.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 4th, 2016 at 10:33 PM

Title: Re: The importance of direct experience

Content:

rachmiel said:

Thanks.

I'm not familiar with two-fold emptiness. Feel like explaining it ... or gotta link?

Malcolm wrote:
Emptiness of persons and emptiness of phenomena.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, November 4th, 2016 at 10:29 PM
Title: Re: The importance of direct experience
Content:

conebeckham said:

My understanding is that liberation and Buddhahood are two different things, first of all. I believe both are directly experienced, but I think liberation is a transformative event, but not a change of state. I think it's more like knowledge gained after an experience, never to be lost. However, Buddhahood, as perfect knowledge and omniscience, is unchanging, and a change of fundamental state. But I leave it to those more learned and experienced to correct my misunderstandings.

rachmiel said:

Anyone "more learned and experienced" have something to add/change to the above?

Malcolm wrote:
There are three things: realization, liberation, full awakening.

Having a realization is not equivalent to liberation. There are many realizations one must have before one enters the path of seeing. Once one has entered the path of seeing however, one begins the process of liberation that culminates on full awakening, buddhahood, at the end of the tenth bhumi. The fullest account of this, in Mahāyāna is found in the Abhisamaya-alaṃkāra.

The process of liberation means gradually abandoning the afflictions which cause rebirth in samsara. Full awakening means omniscience.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, November 4th, 2016 at 10:11 PM
Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic
Content:

DGA said:

Reviewing this thread, it seems to me that someone who does not have a clear idea regarding what a ngakpa or ngakmo actually is or does may find this tradition discouraging or even silly. That sucks, because this is not a silly situation.

Be that as it may...

there are some sources online that describe the precepts ngakpas & ngakmos are given. for example:

http://www.nyingma.com/artman/publish/ngakpa_root_commitments.shtml are there any recommended texts that describe how these are applied in a practical sense in this context, in more detail?

Malcolm wrote:

DGA, everyone who has received the a major empowerment possesses these vows. They are not unique to the so called gos dkar cang lo de, the white skirted, long haired bunch.

Read Buddhist ethics by Kongtrul if you want a greater overview.

DGA said:

What specifically differentiates a ngakpa or ngakmo from a practitioner who has received empowerment and eschews haircuts at the level of practice?

Malcolm wrote:

Nothing.

DGA said:

in social role?

Malcolm wrote:

They are specialists in apotropaic rituals for their communities.

DGA said:

That was my understanding (and thanks for the lead on the Kongtrul text. I haven't made it through the Treasury of Knowledge.) With that said, and at the risk of being blunt: what's the big deal?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, for one, I think the "big deal" came about because early Western observers of the exile Tibetan community in the 1970's saw that there was a community of practitioners [like my guru Ngakpa Yeshe Dorje and Kunzang Dechen Lingpa] surrounding Dudjom Rinpoche who dressed in a specific uniform consisting of a white skirt, a stripped Zen, their hair bound in a topknot [often around a metal cylinder containing tantras and tagdrols].

These westerners saw this as a alternate ordination path, based on the lore that in the first decades of the 9th century, King Ralpcan honored the tiny community of Tibetan lay Vajrayāna practitioners on the same level as the tiny community of monastics, and based on legend that when Langdarma "destroyed" the monastic community, Nub Sangye Yeshe intimidated him into leaving the community of practitioners of Secret Mantra alone (Nub Sangye Yeshe definitely lived in the latter part of the 9th century and the beginning of the tenth. Nevertheless, Nubchen is considered one of the 25 disciples of Padmasambhava. In order to explain the latter fact, it is held that he lived for possibly as long as 130 years. Not an impossible feat by any means).

It seems certain to me that Langdarma's "persecution" of the monasteries was in fact his demand for taxes from the monasteries which had previously operated free of taxation that when the Tibetan economy went into serious recession in the early 840's (due to trade disruption along the silk route due to the fall of the Uyghur empire in 840). It was this that led to his assassination by Lhalung Palgyi Dorje.

DGA said:

...what's at stake in this discussion, given that the communities in question here don't have a baked-in demand for averting-bad-fortune, bringing-good-fortune rituals?

Malcolm wrote:

On a purely social and economic level, as a culture Tibetans have proven themselves, since the '59 diaspora, remarkably effective in creating and cultivating clients, thus creating a demand for the services they provide. These services range from religious instruction to the kind of apotropaic rituals described above, and everything in between.

DGA said:

I attended a retreat a year or two ago at a large center in rural Colorado. I volunteered for "karma yoga" duty, which put me in the kitchen washing dishes. I did what I ordinarily do: rolled up my sleeves, put an apron on, tied up my hair, and got to it. No problem. Someone else on KP duty at that time had evidently committed to the full ngakmo costume at all times, meaning that she struggled to scrub teacups one at a time while wearing a zentra and with her hair down. Not too productive. It was kind of sad. One assumes that the role of a ngakpa/mo is not to make oneself useless, no?

Malcolm wrote:

There are all kinds of commitments one can undertake, but the idea that one is required, like monastics, to wear special "Ngakpa robes" at all times, is a complete misunderstanding. There are all kinds of Ngakpa styles, short haired, long haired, monastic, dread-locked, etc.

For many Tibetans, the term sngags pa really just means, "lay people with long hair who practice rituals, eat meat, drink booze, and chase girls." While among western Nyingmapas, Ngakpas are revered with near comical devotion, the situation among Tibetans is just not the same, just as Indians do not really think that sadhus are all that. Also, as you point out, there is no market for western Ngakpas, not really. Though there are some who go around and try to cultivate markets for their services, some more successful, some less, the fact is that the Ngakpa tradition as a whole serves a segment of the Tibetan population with rites that in some respect are not really proper for monks to engage in, such as divination, hail prevention, and so on. As you astutely point out, there is no baked in demand for Ngakpa services in the West. I just don't see Ngakpas replacing Evangelical Christian prayer circles for driving out demons and so on any time soon. Perhaps in Mexico on down to South America, the situation will be a little different.

Anyway, I keep my own Ngakpa gear tucked away nicely. Maybe some day I will see a reason to put it on, but frankly, I have not seen such a reason for some years.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 4th, 2016 at 8:46 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

DGA said:

Reviewing this thread, it seems to me that someone who does not have a clear idea regarding what a ngakpa or ngakmo actually is or does may find this tradition discouraging or even silly. That sucks, because this is not a silly situation.

Be that as it may...

there are some sources online that describe the precepts ngakpas & ngakmos are given. for example:

http://www.nyingma.com/artman/publish/ngakpa_root_commitments.shtml

are there any recommended texts that describe how these are applied in a practical sense in this context, in more detail?

Malcolm wrote:

DGA, everyone who has received the a major empowerment possesses these vows. They are not unique to the so called gos dkar cang lo de, the white skirted, long haired bunch.

Read Buddhist ethics by Kongtrul if you want a greater overview.

DGA said:

What specifically differentiates a ngakpa or ngakmo from a practitioner who has received empowerment and eschews haircuts at the level of practice?

Malcolm wrote:

Nothing.

DGA said:

in social role?

Malcolm wrote:

Ngakpas are specialists in apotropaic rituals for their communities.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 4th, 2016 at 4:08 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Mere appearances to a pure mind exist, such as the appearance of Deities and Pure Lands.

Not all appearances are caused by delusions.

Malcolm wrote:

So for you, deities and pure lands ultimately exist since they are objects of undeluded perceptions.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Yes, they are ultimate truths for enlightened minds because the way they appear coincides with how they exist - as mere appearances.

Malcolm wrote:

How is this different from sentient beings and ordinary planets? By your logic, they too are ultimate truths since for an "enlightened mind" their appearance and mode of existence will also coincide as mere appearances.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, November 4th, 2016 at 1:23 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

conebeckham said:

Is there the appearance of shadows?

Malcolm wrote:

No more than there is an appearance of black lines in the sky observed by those with fevers, or yellow conches observed by those with jaundice.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Mere appearances to a pure mind exist, such as the appearance of Deities and Pure Lands.

Not all appearances are caused by delusions.

Malcolm wrote:

So for you, deities and pure lands ultimately exist since they are objects of undeluded perceptions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 3rd, 2016 at 4:43 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

White Lotus said:

kunga, you are synonymous with buddha. you have always seen 'this' experience of life. 'this' is no special realization.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Then why are some Buddhas praised and some made to feel like they're idiots ?

Why are some Gurus honored and we are not ?

Why is there so much discrimination ?

Why is it, that I feel like I'm not good enough ?

Why aren't we all treated like Buddha's ?

Why is The Dali Lama, and all the famous Lamas treated like royalty, but I'm treated like a nobody ?

Malcolm wrote:

You have to examine yourself. Śrī Singha said to Padmasambhava:

Since buddhas and sentient beings are inseparable and the same, it is necessary to respect all sentient beings as being on the same level with the buddhas. Can you?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 3rd, 2016 at 2:24 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

conebeckham said:

Is there the appearance of shadows?

Malcolm wrote:

No more than there is an appearance of black lines in the sky observed by those with fevers, or yellow conches observed by those with jaundice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 3rd, 2016 at 2:09 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Bahiya heard a few lines and became an Arahant. Student X heard a few pith instructions and became a Buddha.

Difference?

Malcolm wrote:

Omniscience.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 3rd, 2016 at 1:52 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

rachmiel said:

Yes, but "that" to which the dharmadhātu attempts to point might (or might not) exist.

Malcolm wrote:

The statements means there is no reality, since outside the two truths, nothing else exists.

rachmiel said:

So per Buddhism there are no noumena, only phenomena. No objects casting the shadows in the cave, just the shadows.

?

Malcolm wrote:

Per Buddhadharma, neither phenomena nor noumena are established as real: as there are no objects to cast shadows, there are no shadows.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 3rd, 2016 at 12:52 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

"Ultimate and relative" are also just emphatic labels,
but the two truths don't exist in the dharmadhātu, the dharmadhātu does not exist.
— Virupa

rachmiel said:

Yes, but "that" to which the dharmadhātu attempts to point might (or might not) exist.

Malcolm wrote:

The statements means there is no reality, since outside the two truths, nothing else exists.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 3rd, 2016 at 12:51 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Yup. In which case recognition is not contingent on introduction, right?

Malcolm wrote:

You are not understanding the difference between a cause and a condition.

Sherab Dorje said:

Oh I understand the difference, but whether it is a cause or a condition the outcome is still contingent on it and thus...

Malcolm wrote:

No, when one has been introduced and recognized the basis, that is sufficient. For example, when one has been introduced to a person, the next time one sees them, one will recognize them. Of course, it is possible to forget their face after some time in a one time meeting, so once one has been introduced to a person, familiarization with that person, going to meet them again and so on, is recommended.

No one ever claimed that one was able to introduce oneself to the basis, or that having been introduced, there was nothing further to do. But what is stated is that there is nothing that needs to be transformed, changed or otherwise modified as a result of such an introduction. One needs only to familiarize oneself with the subject that was introduced. Indeed, in Dzogchen teachings, vidyā or rig pa is sometimes referred to as "the conditional basis," because vidyā or rig pa is conditional upon introduction and does not exist without it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, November 3rd, 2016 at 12:09 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

conebeckham said:

These threads are sort of ridiculous, frankly.

Malcolm wrote:

It did not begin ridiculous.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 2nd, 2016 at 10:29 PM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

“Mahāmudrā” is a mental imputation of the childish.

-- Virupa.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Bu twat exacty is he really saying ? Of course it its childish to impute Mahamudra mentally...because it's not a mental phenomena. It is not in your mentality. It is not you. It's the goddess Nairātmyā (no-self)

<http://www.lionsroar.com/the-mahamudra-lineage/>

Malcolm wrote:

“Ultimate and relative” are also just emphatic labels,
but the two truths don’t exist in the dharmadhātu, the dharmadhātu does not exist.
— Virupa

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 2nd, 2016 at 10:16 PM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Mahāmudrā by itself connotes the ultimate truth, realization, or achievement of yoginī Tantra practice: the great seal that marks all phenomena and experiences; a synonym for suchness, sameness, emptiness, space, and the goddess Nairātmyā (no-self); unchanging bliss beyond object and subject, shape, thought, or expression; and the ultimate gnostic attainment, mahāmudrā-siddhī.

<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Mahamudra>

Malcolm wrote:

“Mahāmudrā” is a mental imputation of the childish.
-- Virupa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 2nd, 2016 at 7:10 PM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Why are you repeating what I said? Secondly, if recognition is conditioned by the introduction, then it would be necessary to be constantly introduced over and over again otherwise the recognition would cease.

Sherab Dorje said:

Yup. In which case recognition is not contingent on introduction, right?

Malcolm wrote:

You are not understanding the difference between a cause and a condition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 2nd, 2016 at 9:45 AM

Title: Re: Buddha's Son/Son of Buddha

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Then I found a (not crazy) user here named Son_of_Buddha.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this guy is pretty crazy, in fact.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 2nd, 2016 at 9:44 AM

Title: Re: Buddha's Son/Son of Buddha

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Is the English expression "son of Buddha" an idiosyncratic translation of the word "bodhisattva"?

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is a translation of jinaputra.

tomamundsen said:

Isn't jinaputra an epithet for bodhisattvas?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but it is not a translation of bodhisattva.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 2nd, 2016 at 7:51 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

DGA said:

The Green Party is basically the Whole Foods version of the alt-right.

Malcolm wrote:

hahahaha, so true.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 2nd, 2016 at 7:50 AM

Title: Re: How effective are liberation-upon-seeing dharma doors?

Content:

Virgo said:

Malcolm, may I ask who told you this and if you still feel this way? Thanks.

Kevin

Malcolm wrote:

Kunzang Dechen Lingpa told me this, and I still take this seriously.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 2nd, 2016 at 6:05 AM

Title: Re: Buddha's Son/Son of Buddha

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Is the English expression "son of Buddha" an idiosyncratic translation of the word "bodhisattva"?

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is a translation of jinaputra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 2nd, 2016 at 5:16 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Again, as in everything, first intent has to be shown.

AlexMcLeod said:

This isn't Buddhism. It is law. Whether I intend to break the law or not is irrelevant. The only relevant factors are whether the law is broken and if I'm the one that benefited.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, no, actually. The reason cops get away with killing so many black kids is that the courts have to prove criminal intent or negligence in wrongful death suits.

The same applies to Clinton and her damn emails.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, November 2nd, 2016 at 2:18 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

When you interfere with a criminal investigation, that's a criminal offense. Criminal offenses have criminal penalties. Criminal law is a whole different ball game.

Malcolm wrote:

Again, as in everything, first intent has to be shown.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 1st, 2016 at 9:34 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

rory said:

So you're comparing the gravity of behavior and prudence of HRC, the Secretary of State, charged with the nation's secrets with the host of Celebrity Apprentice?..

Here's why HRC is a disaster: She loves foreign wars, next is Russia....

Green party presidential candidate Jill Stein: Donald Trump is less scary on foreign wars, because he wants to work with Russia.

<https://www.c-span.org/video/?c4624521/jill-stein-donald-trump-better-russia>

gassho

ROry

Malcolm wrote:

Jill Stein is a fool for falling for this right wing bullshit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, November 1st, 2016 at 5:27 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Unknown said:

Over the course of decades, Donald Trump's companies have systematically destroyed or hidden thousands of emails, digital records and paper documents demanded in official proceedings, often in defiance of court orders.

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.newsweek.com/2016/11/11/donald-trump-companies-destroyed-emails-documents-515120.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 31st, 2016 at 11:44 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

mossy said:

And the FBI is investigating crooked hillary again. Democrats could have had sanders but they went with hillary.....

Malcolm wrote:

For lord's sake, they are not investigating Clinton. Please get your goddamn facts straight.

Fa Dao said:

yes...you're right...they were investigating weiner and happened to find even more stuff on Hillary and are now re-investigating her...didn't you hear the announcement that Comey made? and pissed off the Justice Dept with?

Malcolm wrote:

No, they are not reinvestigating Clinton. This is misinformation. They have not found anything. Comey himself admits that he had no knowledge of what was in Huma Abedin's emails.

Fa Dao said:

This morning I sent a letter to Congress in connection with the Secretary Clinton email investigation. Yesterday, the investigative team briefed me on their recommendation with respect to seeking access to emails that have recently been found in an unrelated case. Because those emails appear to be pertinent to our investigation, I agreed that we should take appropriate steps to obtain and review them.

Of course, we don't ordinarily tell Congress about ongoing investigations, but here I feel an obligation to do so given that I testified repeatedly in recent months that our investigation was completed. I also think it would be misleading to the American people were we not to supplement the record. At the same time, however, given that we don't know the significance of this newly discovered collection of emails, I don't want to create a misleading impression. In trying to strike that balance, in a brief letter and in the middle of an election season, there is significant risk of being misunderstood, but I wanted you to hear directly from me about it.

Malcolm wrote:

To quote Bernie Sanders, "Enough about the damn emails."

Additionally, it seems quite likely Comey violated the Hatch Amendment. He should resign.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 31st, 2016 at 12:48 PM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Wayfarer said:

and at that point, no more need for a raft, I guess.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha stated:

Nothing here to remove,
nothing here to add;
see the truth as the truth;

when the truth is seen, there is liberation.

Coëmgenu said:

Where is this from? Not that I am implying that it is a fake quote, I just like to read.

Malcolm wrote:

It is from the heart of dependent origination by Nāgārjuna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 31st, 2016 at 10:14 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Wayfarer said:

and at that point, no more need for a raft, I guess.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha stated:

Nothing here to remove,

nothing here to add;

see the truth as the truth;

when the truth is seen, there is liberation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 31st, 2016 at 4:04 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Vasana said:

not knowing the source of the relative is what keeps the wheel of suffering spinning.

Astus said:

If you assume there is a source, it is necessarily relative. What keeps the wheel spinning is the assumption that there is something ultimate to attain.

Malcolm wrote:

Revise that to, "What keeps the wheel spinning is the assumption that there is something ultimate," then it is perfect.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 31st, 2016 at 3:43 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Vasana said:

The ultimate can be defined in relative terms, yes, but what I was getting at is that the ultimate has no terms of it's self so to speak.

As you said earlier,
[...]defining the ultimate as beyond the mind because the very mind itself is relative.

Malcolm wrote:
This is why we describe the ultimate as empty.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 31st, 2016 at 3:39 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Nemo said:

Holy crap.

"An ABC News/Washington Post tracking poll released Sunday showed Clinton ahead 46% to 45% -- narrower than Saturday's 2-point Clinton edge.

In CNN's Poll of Polls, which averages results for the five most recently released national surveys, Clinton has a 47% to 42% advantage over Trump. That's unchanged from the most recent Poll of Polls on Saturday."

Gary Johnson and his 4.8% is the only thing between Trump and the Presidency.

Malcolm wrote:
Trump is still losing. Gary Johnson, bless his heart, is an idiot, and so is Jill.

https://projects.fivethirtyeight.com/2016-election-forecast/?ex_cid=rrpromo

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 31st, 2016 at 3:06 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Vasana said:
The ultimate isn't something that can be defined either.

Malcolm wrote:
The ultimate can be defined. In fact, it is necessary to define it. If one cannot define it, one cannot meditate upon it; if one cannot mediate on the relative example ultimate, one will not produce heat on the path of application. If one does not produce heat on the path of application, there is no chance that one will enter the path of seeing.

Therefore, we have different ways of definining the ultimate such as free from extremes, absence of inherent existence, emptiness, nonorigination and so on.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, October 31st, 2016 at 3:02 AM
Title: Re: Ultimate Truth
Content:

Sherab Dorje said:
Whatever happened to the One Truth?

Malcolm wrote:
We are not discussing Dzogchen. We are answering someone's question concerning the two truths. The OP wanted it grounded in śāstra, so I am obliging.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, October 31st, 2016 at 2:51 AM
Title: Re: Ultimate Truth
Content:
rachmiel said:
I'm getting an "ultimate truth" is in the eye of the definer kinda feeling here ...

Which makes sense in a way ... since the definer is trying to hold water in their hand.

Malcolm wrote:
You might think so, however, since concepts are entities, they also have two natures, as Candrakīrti states:
Because all entities are perceived validly and falsely, two natures will be discerned for a given entity.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, October 31st, 2016 at 2:29 AM
Title: Re: Ultimate Truth
Content:
rachmiel said:
So it's basically saying all we can speak knowledgeably of is relative truth. The nature of ultimate truth, if there is such a thing*, is pure guesswork.

* That would follow, yes ... that ultimate truth might be a mind-devised fiction.

Malcolm wrote:
There are two kinds of ultimate truth: conventional and actual. The former is a conceptual construct, the latter is the way things are. The former, however, is a valid approximation of the latter, in so far as it cannot be rejected with reasoning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 31st, 2016 at 2:08 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

rachmiel said:

> The ultimate is not within range of the intellect;

> the intellect is said to be relative.

Is this at odds with the assertion that "Nothing has inherent essence/existence?" Or a different way of stating it?

Malcolm wrote:

It is statement defining the ultimate as beyond the mind because the very mind itself is relative.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 31st, 2016 at 12:31 AM

Title: Re: Ultimate Truth

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Greetings all,

This is a wildly open-ended question, and obviously I don't expect an "ultimate answer", but, either practically or theoretically, what is "ultimate/absolute truth", either in respect to the polarity between that and "conventional truth", or just on its own? Individual opinions on this are fine obviously, but if your definition is grounded in a teachers words or a sūtra, please guide me to the source of them.

Malcolm wrote:

I think Candrakīrti's definition in the Madhayamaka-avatāra is best:

Any object of a veridical perception is real;

it is said that false perception is relative truth.

It is also held there are two kinds of false perception; that of nondefective sense organs and that of defective sense organs.

And Śāntideva's definition from the Bodhicarya-avatāra clarifies it well:

Relative and ultimate are held to be the two truths.

The ultimate is not within range of the intellect;

the intellect is said to be relative.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 30th, 2016 at 6:11 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:
Sherab Dorje said:
Which leads to the questions:

If awakening is not innate, where does it come from?

If we are innately awakened, why are we ignorant?

Malcolm wrote:
We are not innately awake. Even Samantabhadra possessed ignorance.

Sherab Dorje said:
Which is why I normally like to take the safe route and call it a "potential". But still this is problematic.

Malcolm wrote:
In the tradition of the Great Perfection, sugatagarbha is the basis, as the Inlaid Jewels Tantra states:

Just as oil has always been naturally perfect within sesame seeds and mustard seeds, the seed of the sugatas with corresponding light is present in the deceptively appearing bodies of sentient beings.
Sentient beings do not have an enlightened nature, and they are not aspects of Samantabhadra since the basis has never been tainted by ignorance. However, when they see their own nature, they are no different than Samantabhadra.

kirtu said:
Well, yes. But the "enlightened nature" referenced is Buddha Nature or the potential for enlightenment. Of course it is still technically a provisional teaching but still quite accurate.

Once again, not everyone is a garuda and the whole point of "lower" teachings is to lead beings to the higher, not to present a seemingly infinite and unscalable cliff face that could discourage

Malcolm wrote:
Actually, I'm following Longchenpa, Gorampa, etc., have come to regard tathāgatagarbha and the Tathāgatagarbha Sūtras as a definitive in meaning, but for entirely different reasons than gzhan stong pas.

As to your second point, Dzogchen is an independent vehicle. There is no need to approach it as if one is somehow climbing the rungs of a ladder, indeed, that is the worst way to approach it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 30th, 2016 at 2:38 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Which leads to the questions:

If awakening is not innate, where does it come from?

If we are innately awakened, why are we ignorant?

Malcolm wrote:

We are not innately awake. Even Samantabhadra possessed ignorance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 30th, 2016 at 2:35 AM

Title: Re: Thinley Norbu - Dzogchen account of a perfect woman?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Greetings all! I've been reading the new Thinley Norbu book "Echoes", which BTW is quite interesting, and I came across the following passage: I am not a great Lama, and there is not much I can say about Dzogchen to help you understand it in greater depth. In a sense Dzogchen is a very difficult subject to talk about. There is the Dzogchen account of a perfect woman, for example, with a description of her waist, her hair, and so on. If I were to start talking about these things, it would arouse a lot of jealousy. Does anyone know what this is about? I was wondering if it was just some kind of joke.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not really a "Dzogchen" account. It is the Tibetan appropriation of standard tropes about padminis which one can find in Kama Sūtra and so on, a subject I have written about elsewhere.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 30th, 2016 at 2:13 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

'cept that the result is not the Rigpa/Dharmata/Mahamudra/Prajnaparamita, but the recognition of the aforementioned. This recognition is conditioned by the practice. It is a consequence of practice.

Malcolm wrote:

That recognition is itself vidyā, mahāmudra, and prajñapārāmita.

That recognition is not a consequence of practice nor of meditation, it is a consequence solely of introduction. "Practice" consists of deepening familiarization with that recognition. As the Self-Arising Vidyā Tantra states in Chapter 4:

It exists as something that can be illustrated
to all unrealized sentient beings.

There is neither arising nor declining
in the transcendent state of the tathāgatas.

Further, if it is asked what is the system of liberation,
it is liberation through the meaning of the oral instruction.

Sherab Dorje said:

In which case recognition is a consequence of introduction. ie It is conditioned by introduction.

.

Malcolm wrote:

Why are you repeating what I said? Secondly, if recognition is conditioned by the introduction, then it would be necessary to be constantly introduced over and over again otherwise the recognition would cease.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 30th, 2016 at 1:43 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If sentient beings had an enlightened nature, they could not achieve buddhahood since their nature is already enlightened.

Sherab Dorje said:

Or they are all already Buddhas and just not aware of it. According to Mahayana the Buddha (apparently) achieved Buddhahood although already enlightened.

Malcolm wrote:

Hi Greg:

Don't confuse the dramatic play of the nirmanakāya for the erroneous concept of innate awakening. The Lankāvatara Sūtra states:

Buddhahood is not attained in the desire realm, the final accomplishment is in Akaniṣṭha.

And:

Perfect buddhahood is attained there,

the emanations attain buddhahood here.

And:

Buddhas do not attain buddhahood in the desire realm or the formless realm;
free of desire, you attain buddhahood in the form realm.

As to the idea that sentient beings are buddhas without knowing it, this is a popular misunderstanding based on looking at the words but not understanding the meaning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 30th, 2016 at 12:44 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

'cept that the result is not the Rigpa/Dharmata/Mahamudra/Prajnaparamita, but the recognition of the aforementioned. This recognition is conditioned by the practice. It is a consequence of practice.

Malcolm wrote:

That recognition is itself vidyā, mahāmudra, and prajñapāramita.

That recognition is not a consequence of practice nor of meditation, it is a consequence solely of introduction. "Practice" consists of deepening familiarization with that recognition. As the Self-Arising Vidyā Tantra states in Chapter 4:

It exists as something that can be illustrated
to all unrealized sentient beings.

There is neither arising nor declining
in the transcendent state of the tathāgatas.

Further, if it is asked what is the system of liberation,
it is liberation through the meaning of the oral instruction.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 29th, 2016 at 10:11 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Sentient beings do not have an enlightened nature,

Sherab Dorje said:

Cough, splutter...

Malcolm wrote:

If sentient beings had an enlightened nature, they could not achieve buddhahood since their nature is already enlightened.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 29th, 2016 at 10:06 PM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Astus said:

A teaching cannot be unconditioned. The result of applying the teaching can be.

Sherab Dorje said:

If it is a result of applying the teaching then it arises conditionally based on the teaching.
ie The result is conditioned.

Malcolm wrote:

For example, previously one could not recognize gold. However one can recognize gold when instructed in how to recognize it, but that gold is not produced by the recognition. Likewise, previously one could not recognize dharmatā. However one can recognize dharmatā when instructed in how to recognize it, but that dharmatā is not produced by the recognition.

Unlike gold, however, dharmatā is not a conditioned or compounded entity. Dharmatā does not arise dependent on the introduction. Dharmatā, one's own nature, is present whether or not it is recognized, like the wish-fulfilling gem concealed under the lintel of a pauper's door.

Just as a gold bed pan or a gold Buddha statue are equally made of gold, when our own nature is not recognized, it is called "the basis." When it is recognized, it is called "the result," but it has itself undergone no transformation at all. For this reason then, the result is never conditioned because the basis is never conditioned. Nonrecognition of the basis is not a fault of the basis, it is a fault of the consciousness which apprehends the basis. When the basis is rightly apprehended, this is called vidyā, rig pa or knowledge. When the basis is incorrectly apprehended, this is called avidyā, ma rig pa, or ignorance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 29th, 2016 at 8:57 PM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

RikudouSennin said:

The text are quite amazing

Heart Bindu of the Dakinis...

Malcolm wrote:

Is an incorrect translation of ḍākkini citta, a.k.a, mkha' 'gro snying thig.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 29th, 2016 at 8:36 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Why not indeed! Why not rely on the enlightened nature of all sentient beings? Why not apply the Dzogchen rhetoric of one truth and see all beings as Buddhas since they are nothing else but an aspect of the Dharmakaya of Samatabhadra and Samantabhadri? Why separate reality into true and false? High and low? Etc...?

"Why?" indeed!

Malcolm wrote:

Sentient beings do not have an enlightened nature, and they are not aspects of Samantabhadra since the basis has never been tainted by ignorance. However, when they see their own nature, they are no different than Samantabhadra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 29th, 2016 at 8:31 PM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

maybay said:

I can't find any mention of promulgating the Dharma in MSL. What reasons and what contradictions?

Malcolm wrote:

" ecause the (vehicles) began together..."; pg.7, Thurman translation.

I suggest you reread the first chapter with a bit more care.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 29th, 2016 at 8:19 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

mossy said:

And the FBI is investigating crooked hillary again. Democrats could have had sanders but they went with hillary.....

Malcolm wrote:

For lord's sake, they are not investigating Clinton. Please get your goddamn facts straight.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 29th, 2016 at 6:56 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

kirtu said:

Overall this will have a serious effect blessing people.

Malcolm wrote:

Ridiculous.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 29th, 2016 at 6:54 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

maybay said:

No one is playing what if games here. The simple fact is this is the order in which it occurred, and now, like it or not , later teachings, traditions and teachers all make these earlier teachings the basis of their own.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is false. Why? For example, the Mahāyāna Sutrālaṃkāra explains that the three turnings were turned at the same time. To interpret the three turnings as temporal in sequence is an error, they occurred at one and the same time.

maybay said:

If that is true then there is no basis for calling them first, second, third. There's a nice chapter just on the promulgations in Dudjom's NSTB.

Malcolm wrote:

They are called "first, second, and third" due to their content, not due to their temporal sequence.

Dudjom Rinpoche's presentation is based upon that Buton Rinchen Drup. But such presentation had already been long rejected by Loppon Sonam Tsemo for the reasons I outline above. Additionally, there are a host of contradictions which arise if the wheels were not turned simultaneously.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 29th, 2016 at 3:57 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

maybay said:

No one is playing what if games here. The simple fact is this is the order in which it occurred, and now, like it or not , later teachings, traditions and teachers all make these earlier teachings the basis of their own.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is false. Why? For example, the Mahāyāna Sutrālaṅkāra explains that the three turnings were turned at the same time. To interpret the three turnings as temporal in sequence is an error, they occurred at one and the same time.

maybay said:

Id be interested to see what percentage of scripture is spent using, citing, redefining, and attacking other teachings. I imagine its quite a lot.

Malcolm wrote:

Surprisingly little, in fact, when it comes to sūtra and tantra itself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 29th, 2016 at 3:48 AM

Title: Re: Is Trekchod a form of wrathful practice?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In fact, the final empowerment of the Rinchen Terzon contains an empowerment from Sangye Lingpa's cycles of termas called the "Poti Lung Wang." Not only does this empowerment contain an empowerment into the nine yānas, it also includes a section which grants one the empowerment for all termas past, present and future, as well as a method of giving oneself the lung for any text, sadhana or empowerment one might ever need.

maybay said:

This reminds me of all those ridiculous inventions you see advertised on TV that never catch on.

Malcolm wrote:

Are you calling Sangye Lingpa's termas ridiculous?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 29th, 2016 at 3:45 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

It seems to be that the interpretation of monastics as the third jewel is very common.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a mistaken idea.

The proper Sangha refuge for Mahāyānis is defined by Mātṛceṭa in the Triratnastotra:
Homage to the Āryasangha, who have purified the obscuration of affliction and the obscuration of knowledge, removing them gradually with antidotes, dwelling on the stages, benefitting sentient beings, and purifying buddhafiels.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 29th, 2016 at 3:28 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

I consider all Sangha members objects of Refuge, Arya and not. Why? Because the Arya Sangha didn't just pop out of its own ass, it started off as dumb-ass ignorant fools just like you and me. So, as far as I am concerned anybody that is making a REAL effort is cool by me. A field of merit and an object of Refuge.

PS I am not an Acharya, so you'll have to excuse me if sometimes I get terms mixed up.

Malcolm wrote:

Going for refuge to those who are not awakened damages one's refuge.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 29th, 2016 at 2:08 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

So dress me in orange and call me a Theravada then.

Malcolm wrote:

Even in Hinayāna, the Jewel of the Sangha does not refer to ordinary monks, but refers instead to āryas as well: stream entrants (who can be lay people), once returners, never returners, and arhats.

Sherab Dorje said:

Well then, I am just going to have to disagree on principle with these theories, take my chances and consider all sangha members as a worthy field of merit. As you pointed out in another thread: I am not really capable of figuring who is at what level, so...

Malcolm wrote:

Even ordinary sentient beings are fields of merit (the impure field). You are mistaking 'fields of merit' for "Objects of Refuge." They are not the same thing.

I thought you were a Dharma teacher. I am amazed you are not clear about these things.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 29th, 2016 at 1:55 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

This is all perfectly true at the level of ultimate truth.

Malcolm wrote:

There are no two truths, Greg. As the Soaring Garuda, one of the five original Dzogchen lungs brought to Tibet by Vairocana states:

Since phenomena and nonphenomena have always been merged and are inseparable, there is no further need to explain an “ultimate phenomenon.”

Or as the All-Creating King states:

The one who talks about relative and ultimate—words of exaggeration and deprecation—does not understand the meaning of nonduality.

And:

Since I, the creator of all, have made all Dharmas, there is no need for the two truths in my Dharma.

Who claims the two truths are needed in my Dharma?

All that I have made, was made in the state of bodhicitta.

Relative and ultimate do not exist in bodhicitta.

Thus we can see, the two truths are deviations from the meaning of the Great Perfection.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 29th, 2016 at 1:00 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No. The Jewel of the Sangha for Mahāyāna practitioners, including Secret Mantra practitioners, is only ārya bodhisattvas, i.e., bodhisattvas of the first bhumi and beyond.

Sherab Dorje said:

So dress me in orange and call me a Theravada then.

Malcolm wrote:

Even in Hinayāna, the Jewel of the Sangha does not refer to ordinary monks, but refers instead to āryas as well: stream entrants (who can be lay people), once returners, never returners, and arhats.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 29th, 2016 at 12:48 AM

Title: Re: Is Trekchod a form of wrathful practice?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Why are these non-Nyingmapas so fussy?

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, for historical reasons.

conebeckham said:

Yes, I think so....partially. Then again, if a Shitro wangkur was the sole ingredient, we wouldn't need the Rinchen Terdzo, for instance, would we?

Historical. Also, expedient.

Malcolm wrote:

In fact, the final empowerment of the Rinchen Terzon contains an empowerment from Sangye Lingpa's cycles of termas called the "Poti Lung Wang." Not only does this empowerment contain an empowerment into the nine yānas, it also includes a section which grants one the empowerment for all termas past, present and future, as well as a method of giving oneself the lung for any text, sadhana or empowerment one might ever need.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 29th, 2016 at 12:45 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Astus said:

It is still the only common ground among all Buddhists, regardless of how individual schools interpret it. And that makes it fundamental, the basis for everyone.

Malcolm wrote:

But it is not a common ground at all. Or, rather, because of the history of Buddhist Studies in the West, there has come to be a mirage of commonality which every one chases, but somehow, no one can quite reach.

maybay said:

What are u talking about? Western academics and their contrived problems?

Malcolm wrote:

I am pointing out that because of Western Buddhist studies, many Westerners maintain views like Astus, and indeed yourself, which hold that somehow śravakayāna teachings are a foundation or a bedrock, upon which all other Dharma systems must depend. We have unconsciously inherited this idea from the kind of Buddhist historiography we find in the West, in general.

While such ideas are not absent from traditional hermeneutics, the traditional approach to this in Tibet, for example, is predicated on the three vows, rather than historical analysis of the Pali Canon, the Agamas, and so on, because the traditional sense of Buddhist history does not proceed from the same set of assumptions Westerners use to approach Buddhist history (text critical, etc.). Astus' approach exemplifies the Western approach very well, in his assumption that the Nikāya/Agamas form a layer of teachings earlier than and prior to Mahāyāna and Vajrayāna, so that without the former, the latter could not have arisen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 29th, 2016 at 12:36 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

But it is not a common ground at all. Or, rather, because of the history of Buddhist Studies in the West, there has come to be a mirage of commonality which every one chases, but somehow, no one can quite reach.

Astus said:

Even if the Agamas were not particularly popular in East Asia, and they were not transmitted to Tibet, the core doctrines, like the three characteristics, four noble truths, five aggregates, eighteen realms, twelve links and the thirty-seven factors have always been known.

Malcolm wrote:

These things are not core doctrines at all. They are just taxonomies.

Astus said:

Although if there is no common ground for the various groups, it also means that the paths they distinguish are different, and they actually do not say anything about the others, but rather simply make up their own structure of teachings. For example, the nine vehicles of the Nyingmapas say nothing about the teachings of the Kagyupas or the Theravadins, because those nine are merely their own interpretation of the teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

The nine yānas are also a taxonomy, a way of presenting distinct kinds of methodologies. No one ever claimed they were a "core teaching." The Kagyus however, never dispute the nine yāna presentation, no matter how much it may have been disputed by first Sakyapas, and later, Gelugpas.

So what might be a core teaching of the Buddha, as opposed to a taxonomy?

This ambrosial Dharma I have obtained is deep, peaceful, immaculate, luminous, and unconditioned.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 11:44 PM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

maybay said:

It is fundamental in that it is, or was, essential. Without it we would not know what to make of higher teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, Charlie. Each vehicle is independent and does not depend on the others for either sense or context.

maybay said:

We were talking about turnings not vehicles.

Malcolm wrote:

The first turning of the Wheel of Dharma by Buddha Śakyamuni is not the first turning of the wheel of Dharma. The first turning of the wheel of Dharma was the teaching of the Realms and Dimensions of Sound Tantra (sgra thal 'gyur) by the Buddha Nangwa Dampa at the beginning of this great eon.

With respect to turnings, the teachings of Śakyamuni, as indeed the teachings of all nirmankāyas, are referred to as "unsystematic teachings." In this case, the first turning corresponds to śrāvakayāna, while the second and third correspond to bodhisattvayāna, all teachings of the general vehicle of the cause.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 11:41 PM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The Dharma taught by the Buddha in the First Turning is palliative, not fundamental; provisional and not definitive.

Astus said:

It is still the only common ground among all Buddhists, regardless of how individual schools interpret it. And that makes it fundamental, the basis for everyone.

Malcolm wrote:

But it is not a common ground at all. Or, rather, because of the history of Buddhist Studies in the West, there has come to be a mirage of commonality which every one chases, but somehow, no one can quite reach.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

It's been more than a month for me

RikudouSennin said:

Have you emailed him?

Has he responded?

Crazywisdom said:

I haven't followed up. Seems pointless.

Malcolm wrote:

The notorious EFM.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

maybay said:

Liberation, ie nirvana, may be a fruit of practice, but it is not the goal. Its not something the ideal practitioner aims for. That would be improper motivation outside Hinayana, and in Dzogchen incorrect view.

Malcolm wrote:

Here, sir, you are absolutely mistaken. One cannot help others while one is still bound oneself. While I can agree with you that liberation as an end in it and of itself is a limited motivation; but to claim that liberation is not goal of Dzogchen practitioners is frankly absurd.

maybay said:

Recently I was being tested as to my knowledge of GPS. After completing some exercises I was asked to clear the waypoints I had used, but I didn't know how to, so I just reset the whole device to factory default. I inadvertently wiped all the custom settings on the GPS, which the chief wasn't happy about.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, you might want to apply the same care you should have applied to your GPS device to how you parse Buddhist teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 10:18 PM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Astus said:

From both the historical and religious perspective, the primary/fundamental basis of the Dharma that everyone agrees on is the collection of teachings in the Nikayas and Agamas.

Malcolm wrote:

The Dharma taught by the Buddha in the First Turning is palliative, not fundamental; provisional and not definitive.

maybay said:

It is fundamental in that it is, or was, essential. Without it we would not know what to make of higher teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, Charlie. Each vehicle is independent and does not depend on the others for either sense or context.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 10:18 PM

Title: Re: Is Trekchod a form of wrathful practice?

Content:

maybay said:

Trekchö means cutting through delusion with fierce, direct thoroughness. Essentially delusion is cut through with the irresistible force of the view of rigpa, like a knife cleaving through butter or a karate expert demolishing a pile of bricks. The whole fantastical edifice of delusion collapses, as if you were blasting its keystone away. Delusion is cut through, and the primordial purity and natural simplicity of the nature of mind is laid bare.

Sogyal Rinpoche

Malcolm wrote:

While I recognize this is one way of explaining khregs chod, there is another. According to Chogyal Namkhai Norbu, the term "chod" in khregs chod is an intransitive verb; khregs here refers to a bundle of things; for example, khregs shing refers to a bundle of sticks. Hence the image in use is a bundle whose fastening has come apart on its own, without any agent unfastening it, since the verb has no direct object.

maybay said:

Where else is the word chod used?

Malcolm wrote:

All kinds of places, it is a common Tibetan word. In common language it is regarded as a the imperative of gcod, to cut.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 9:54 PM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Astus said:

From both the historical and religious perspective, the primary/fundamental basis of the Dharma that everyone agrees on is the collection of teachings in the Nikayas and Agamas.

Malcolm wrote:

The Dharma taught by the Buddha in the First Turning is palliative, not fundamental; provisional and not definitive.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 9:50 PM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

maybay said:

the goal of dzogchen is not liberation.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course it is. Do you want citations?

maybay said:

Liberation, ie nirvana, may be a fruit of practice, but it is not the goal. Its not something the ideal practitioner aims for. That would be improper motivation outside Hinayana, and in Dzogchen incorrect view.

Malcolm wrote:

Here, sir, you are absolutely mistaken. One cannot help others while one is still bound oneself. While I can agree with you that liberation as an end in it and of itself is a limited motivation; but to claim that liberation is not goal of Dzogchen practitioners is frankly absurd.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 9:35 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Mica said:

... I am really fascinated in the Ngakpa tradition...

Quay said:

A person can find endless fascination with playing with phenomena.

Sherab Dorje said:

The Ngagkpa are Buddhist lay Tantric practitioners. That makes them one of the Three Jewels.

Malcolm wrote:

No. The Jewel of the Sangha for Mahāyāna practitioners, including Secret Mantra practitioners, is only ārya bodhisattvas, i.e., bodhisattvas of the first bhumi and beyond.

Even if we move to the inner refuges according to Secret Mantra, Guru, Deva, and Ḍākinī, the Sangha jewel is the Ḍākinis, not Ngakpas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 9:29 PM

Title: Re: Is Trekchod a form of wrathful practice?

Content:

maybay said:

Trekchö means cutting through delusion with fierce, direct thoroughness. Essentially delusion is cut through with the irresistible force of the view of rigpa, like a knife cleaving through butter or a karate expert demolishing a pile of bricks. The whole fantastical edifice of delusion collapses, as if you were blasting its keystone away. Delusion is cut through, and the primordial purity and natural simplicity of the nature of mind is laid bare.

Sogyal Rinpoche

Malcolm wrote:

While I recognize this is one way of explaining khregs chod, there is another. According to Chogyal Namkhai Norbu, the term "chod" in khregs chod is an intransitive verb; khregs here refers to a bundle of things; for example, khregs shing refers to a bundle of sticks. Hence the image in use is a bundle whose fastening has come apart on its own, without any agent unfastening it, since the verb has no direct object.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 9:16 PM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāyāna in general does not promise a rapid path— quite the opposite in fact— but nevertheless promises a higher path than Hinayāna. So long in fact, that by the criteria you suggest, most definitely middling and average practitioners of Mahāyāna will appear afflicted by comparison to even average practitioners of Hinayāna, so that is not a sure means of evaluation of paths.

Sherab Dorje said:

Of course it is a sure means, because a middling practitioner, of whichever path, is a middling practitioner NOW. It is irrelevant if they reached here after a billion lifetimes of trying, three lifetimes of trying or one lifetime, they are all half way through.

Malcolm wrote:

I think we need a definition of terms. What is a middling Mahāyāna practitioner? What is a middling Hinayāna practitioner? What is a middling Vajrayāna practitioner? What is a middling Dzogchen practitioner? In the case of the latter, a middling Dzogchen practitioner is one who attains buddhahood in the bardo, not in this lifetime. An average Dzogchen practitioner attains buddhahood in a natural nirmanakāya buddhafiield in the next life.

Sherab Dorje said:

With respect to liberation, the criteria of liberation is freedom from afflictions. But this also cannot be evaluated from outside.

Of course it can. One just needs to observe anothers behavior to notice if they are afflicted or not. Another method is to step on their callous and see how they react.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, no. There is a famous account in the sūtras concerning one of Buddha's past lives. Long ago, there were two groups of śrāmaneras. One group was headed by a very strict leader, whose discipline and renunciation was impeccable as it was famous. The other group was headed by a very liberal leader, who encouraged his students to go into the towns in the evenings, and mingle with the townsfolk in bars and restaurants, associating with men and women alike.

When the leader of the first faction heard about this, he was immediately disapproving of the second faction and their leader and reproached him severely. The long and short of it is, the first leader spent time in lower realms, and when he took rebirth as Śakyamuni Buddha, his sangha fractured into sectarianism as a karmic residue resulting from his criticism of the more liberal monk and his sangha.

Sherab Dorje said:

The argument for the Great Perfection, the summum bonum of all vehicles, is based on the fact that it cannot be ascertained through words and explanations, but only on the basis of the intimate instructions of a guru, which are not (as is commonly misunderstood from the name "intimate instructions," "pith instructions," and so on) solely based on explanations, but are a means of introducing someone to their own state in the form of a direct sensory perception which bypasses conceptual constructs. When a person with the fortune to meet a guru with such a lineage of instructions (assuming that person recognizes the meaning of the intimate instructions which they have been given), they will have no fear of ever falling into three lower realms ever again. That's not an argument, that is an explanation of the didactic method and rhetoric about the effect.

Malcolm wrote:

It is indeed an argument. The only way it can be disproven is to demonstrate the premise is false. Please do try.

Sherab Dorje said:

If someone thinks that Dzogchen rhetoric is mere triumphalism, they have not understood the point of Dzogchen at all in the first place.

So if I don't agree with you, I don't know what I am talking about... Somehow I don't think that is how Garab Dorje won his debate. You certainly are not going to "win" this one with that line of "logic" either.

Malcolm wrote:

I already provided you with the reasoning whereby Garab Dorje defeated Mañjuśrīmitra in debate with the citation from Mañjuśrīmitra's text. You have not made any effort to contest it, which means you accept it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 9:01 PM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

maybay said:

the goal of dzogchen is not liberation.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course it is. Do you want citations?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 4:47 AM

Title: Re: Is Trekchod a form of wrathful practice?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

However, this only applies to Nyingma. I am quite sure Sakyapas and Gelugpas do not accept this.

conebeckham said:

Nor Kagyupas.

dzogchungpa said:

Why are these non-Nyingmapas so fussy?

Malcolm wrote:
Oh, for historical reasons.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 4:46 AM
Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path
Content:
Malcolm wrote:

Someone who is not expert in paths will not necessarily be able to distinguish a correct path from an incorrect path, or a superior path from an inferior path. Only some people have the necessary knowledge to make such an evaluation.

Astus said:
When the so called expert decides what those paths are, it is quite straightforward to claim to be the upholder of the best of the best and paint everyone else as inferior. It is like the aesthetician who says that Pre-Raphaelites are inferior to Cubists, but Pointillists are truly the best of all.

Malcolm wrote:
This is why, rather than relying on the evaluations of paths made by scholars, we rely on the evaluations of paths made by buddhas.

Astus said:
the purpose of evaluating paths is due to the fact that everyone wishes to achieve liberation as rapidly as possible
Shravakas may worry about quick liberation, bodhisattvas realise that there is nothing to attain.

Malcolm wrote:
[/quote]

Bodhisattvas may realize there is nothing to attain, but they sure spend a long time going about that nonattainment.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 3:44 AM
Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path
Content:
PuerAzelis said:

If the truth of Buddhism is relativity why can't the success of any path also be relative?

Malcolm wrote:
The success of any path based on cause and result must be relative. The success of a path that is not based on cause and result must be ultimate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 3:42 AM

Title: Re: Is Trekchod a form of wrathful practice?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

I don't think it's as simple as that. He is saying wrathful should be immediate and so is tregcho. So is there some connection? Of course there is... No method should be effortful in these deity practices. Trying is an obstacle always. Your quote teaches that.

Malcolm wrote:

No, Mañjuśrimitra is stating very clearly that there is direct method of realization and an indirect method. Mipham comments here:

If it is asked, "What is the method for realizing the definitive meaning through the indirect method?," since nonactivity is illustrated with the activity of fabricated efforts, like pointing at the moon with a finger, also awakened mind correctly grasped through a symbol will accomplish awakening because the Bhagavan Buddha, the teacher of devas and humans, has declared that it is "great awakening." Any unfortunate one who conceptualizes entities should make efforts in the indirect method of realization.

In that case, this which is to be explained is the basis or cause of the meditation that generates ultimate awakened mind itself. If it is asked what that is, it is samadhi and mudra.

Now then, through the power of cultivating the three samadhis of suchness, universal illumination and the cause, [14/a] one will be stable, and not carried away by negative conditions. After the meditation of binding the three symbolic mudras of buddhahood—the body (mahāmudra), the mind (samaya mudra), and the activities (karmamudra)—generate the mind as the great dharmamudra (the symbol of speech). One should then meditate the recitation of the essence mantra.

If one meditates generating the thought that the samadhis and the mudras are dharmatā and therefore are not different, the ultimate awakened mind will arise. If one actualizes the meditation, one realizes that all phenomena do not exist apart from one's mind. The accumulations are gathered and obscurations are purified because of that meditation. One becomes realized because one's continuum is blessed by the deity of pristine consciousness

.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 3:37 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Someone who is not expert in paths will not necessarily be able to distinguish a correct path from an incorrect path, or a superior path from an inferior path. Only some people have the necessary knowledge to make such an evaluation.

Likewise, someone who is not expert in gems will not necessarily be able to discern a real diamond from a fake diamond, a high quality diamond from a low quality diamond. Only some people have the necessary skills to make such an evaluation.

Since this is so, the fact that these criteria are only accepted by some Vajrayānis merely indicates that the skill to evaluate all paths is missing from schools other than Vajrayāna, and in particular, the Great Perfection.

Furthermore, the purpose of evaluating paths is due to the fact that everyone wishes to achieve liberation as rapidly as possible. Likewise, the purpose of evaluating gemstones is due to the fact that everyone wishes to know that they are buying the best quality gem possible.

Sherab Dorje said:

Fair enough, but a promise of rapid liberation is not a guarantee of rapid liberation.

And, of course, one should rely on expert advice, but it always happens to be the case that the expert giving the advice happens to be a practitioner of the path/vehicle, regardless of the path/vehicle. Proof of the pudding is in the eating, yes?

But what I like to do, is not judge a tradition by its adepts, because the adepts of any religion/tradition seem to display the same qualities, I like to judge by the qualities displayed by middling/average practitioners. They tend to be the dead giveaways.

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāyāna in general does not promise a rapid path— quite the opposite in fact— but nevertheless promises a higher path than Hinayāna. So long in fact, that by the criteria you suggest, most definitely middling and average practitioners of Mahāyāna will appear afflicted by comparison to even average practitioners of Hinayāna, so that is not a sure means of evaluation of paths.

With respect to liberation, the criteria of liberation is freedom from afflictions. But this also cannot be evaluated from outside. However, liberation is just half the Buddhist path, there is also omniscience. Since this omniscience is primarily defined from knowledge of the paths of awakening, it is also difficult to ascertain from outside.

The arguments for the efficacy of Vajrayāna over Mahāyāna is based on being an easy path, with many methods, for those of sharp faculties, and so on.

The argument for the Great Perfection, the summum bonum of all vehicles, is based on the fact that it cannot be ascertained through words and explanations, but only on the basis of the intimate instructions of a guru, which are not (as is commonly misunderstood from the name "intimate instructions," "pith instructions," and so on) solely based on explanations, but are a means of introducing someone to their own state in the form of a direct sensory perception which bypasses conceptual constructs. When a person with the fortune to meet a guru with such a lineage of instructions (assuming that person recognizes the meaning of the intimate instructions which they have been given), they will have no fear of ever falling into three lower realms ever again.

The point is not to proclaim, "My diamond is unflawed, yours is flawed," the point is to relieve sentient beings from anxiety about being forever trapped in samsara. This is why I reject your charge of triumphalism. If someone thinks that Dzogchen rhetoric is mere triumphalism, they have not understood the point of Dzogchen at all in the first place.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 2:49 AM

Title: Re: Is Trekchod a form of wrathful practice?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

OK, do you mean any wrathful sadhana, or any sadhana, period?

Malcolm wrote:

Any sadhana.

Crazywisdom said:

Any nyingma sadhana?

Malcolm wrote:

Any Nyingma sadhana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 2:41 AM

Title: Re: Is Trekchod a form of wrathful practice?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Any sadhana, no exception. Vajrasattva, being the main deity of Shitro, is the master of all buddha families.

dzogchungpa said:

Ok, thanks, that's good to know.

Malcolm wrote:

However, this only applies to Nyingma. I am quite sure Sakyapas and Gelugpas do not accept this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 2:36 AM

Title: Re: Is Trekchod a form of wrathful practice?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is really true. It is a special feature of the Nyingma school.

dzogchungpa said:

OK, do you mean any wrathful sadhana, or any sadhana, period?

Crazywisdom said:

Any that's fits into shitro mandala which is every important nyingma method.

Malcolm wrote:

Any sadhana, no exception. Vajrasattva, being the main deity of Shitro, is the master of all buddha families.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 2:33 AM

Title: Re: Is Trekchod a form of wrathful practice?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Is that really true? I did not know that. Very interesting.

Malcolm wrote:

This is really true. It is a special feature of the Nyingma school.

dzogchungpa said:

OK, do you mean any wrathful sadhana, or any sadhana, period?

Malcolm wrote:

Any sadhana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 2:25 AM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Perhaps you should request your money back.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 2:24 AM

Title: Re: Is Trekchod a form of wrathful practice?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

... having received more or less any Shitro empowerment, from that point onward one only needs the lung and the instructions in order to practice any sadhana.

dzogchungpa said:

Is that really true? I did not know that. Very interesting.

Malcolm wrote:

This is really true. It is a special feature of the Nyingma school.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 2:23 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Astus said:

Criteria: rainbow body, all the signs along the path of Vajrayana etc

How are those criteria objective when they are accepted only by some Vajrayana followers?

Malcolm wrote:

Someone who is not expert in paths will not necessarily be able to distinguish a correct path from an incorrect path, or a superior path from an inferior path. Only some people have the necessary knowledge to make such an evaluation.

Likewise, someone who is not expert in gems will not necessarily be able to discern a real diamond from a fake diamond, a high quality diamond from a low quality diamond. Only some people have the necessary skills to make such an evaluation.

Since this is so, the fact that these criteria are only accepted by some Vajrayānis merely indicates that the skill to evaluate all paths is missing from schools other than Vajrayāna, and in particular, the Great Perfection.

Furthermore, the purpose of evaluating paths is due to the fact that everyone wishes to achieve liberation as rapidly as possible. Likewise, the purpose of evaluating gemstones is due to the fact that everyone wishes to know that they are buying the best quality gem possible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 2:04 AM

Title: Re: Is Trekchod a form of wrathful practice?

Content:

Gyurme Kundrol said:

I've been studying wrathful practices, their meaning and purpose, and came across the idea that the essence of wrathful practice is something like trekchod- an immediate and forceful cutting through of delusion and a return to the non-dual state. Is trekchod considered a wrathful practice and if you can do trekchod well is there even any need to get wrathful empowerments? Does a wrathful practice (such as Vajrakilaya) add anything that trekchod doesn't already include?

Also are there wrathful practices which can be done without empowerments and or if you have received certain empowerments like the Zhitro are there wrathful practices you can do even if you haven't received a special empowerment for that particular deity?

Malcolm wrote:

Trekchö is not a wrathful practice, and it involves no effort. If one is using effort to "cut through" anything, one has not discovered trekchö.

As to your second question; while wrathful yidams like Kilaya are for dealing with secondary issues, they can also be used as means for discovering the meaning of trekchö. Mañjuśrimitra writes:

Furthermore, since the teacher has declared that awakening can be correctly grasped with a symbol,

in that case, this is the basis of the meditation that generates awakened mind.

After the three samadhis are stable and after binding the three symbolic mudras, generate the mind as the great dharmamudra and meditate the recitation of the essence [mantra].

People who, for whatever reason are not capable of directly approaching the meaning of the Great Perfection directly, can do so indirectly via the means of sadhana practice.

Finally, there are no wrathful practices that do not require empowerment, but having received more or less any Shitro empowerment, from that point onward one only needs the lung and the instructions in order to practice any sadhana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 1:55 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Maybe it is just too nuanced for a brute like me to perceive.

Malcolm wrote:

Perhaps.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 12:15 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Read Mañjśrimitra's Meditation on Bodhicitta (byang chub sems bsgom). He wrote it as an apology for being defeated in debate by Garab Dorje.

Sherab Dorje said:

Which is proof that Garab Dorje is a good debater. Then what?

Malcolm wrote:

Garab Dorje was a nirmanakāya buddha. You can either accept his teachings or not, it is up to you. If you can't accept his teachings, it is better for you to leave them aside, rather than criticize them. If you do accept his teachings, then you have no basis to argue with me at all.

Sherab Dorje said:

The claim is not that the Dzogchen path takes one beyond cause and effect; the claim is that the language of cause and effect are themselves incoherent, and any path based on ideas of cause and effect is likewise incoherent.

Personally, I think you are splitting hairs.

Malcolm wrote:

I think you are not paying attention.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 28th, 2016 at 12:12 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Fair enough. Now you can go off and convince all the (pseudo) dzogchenpas of this fact. I wish you the best of luck!

Malcolm wrote:

I don't need to convince anyone of anything.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 27th, 2016 at 10:11 AM

Title: Re: Remote Teaching Centres and Programmes

Content:

Wayfarer said:

I am aware of several online training courses and resources for Buddhist teachings, such as Dharma Ocean, and FPMT, and DharmaNet. However I think a useful resource would be a structured home-study and practice program, with some teacher oversight.

In my case, I have a regular daily practice, and have attended retreats and lectures so am familiar with the Buddhist teachings and principles. But my own practice is a bit patchy and I think a curriculum of things to learn, and a regular schedule of activities, would really help to give it structure; I feel like I'm wasting a lot of time by being so irregular in my practice, but I'm not that good at self-management with nobody to oversee my activities.

For instance, in monastic and retreat centres, there is a regular schedule, and also a calendar, around which observances and practices are organised. A lightweight version of that approach would be really helpful. I wouldn't imagine it would need to go to nearly the same depth as the above-mentioned centres. But it could incorporate some liturgical materials, meditation practices, and things to commit to memory, and so on.

Is the community aware of any such resources out there?

Malcolm wrote:

Try Chokyi Nyima Rinpoche's Tara Triple Excellence program

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 27th, 2016 at 5:18 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

For example: if somebody claims their path is the most direct and fastest path to liberation, then they need to demonstrate the reality of the claim.

Malcolm wrote:

Read Mañjuśrimitra's Meditation on Bodhicitta (byang chub sems bsgom). He wrote it as an apology for being defeated in debate by Garab Dorje.

Sherab Dorje said:

If somebody claims their path takes them beyond cause and effect, then they need to demonstrate the reality of this claim.

Malcolm wrote:

The claim is not that the Dzogchen path takes one beyond cause and effect; the claim is that the language of cause and effect are themselves incoherent, and any path based on ideas of cause and effect is likewise incoherent. Mañjuśrimitra states:

It may be said, "The way all this is produced is dependent origination, arising and ceasing.”

Like a burnt seed, a nonexistent is not produced from a nonexistent; the cause and the result do not exist.

The mind that clings to entities and clings to cause and result itself appears as cause and condition, but because they are nondual, there is no arising and perishing.

Because there is no arising and perishing, there is no self and other. Because there is no death and transmigration, there is no permanence and annihilation.

Therefore there is no delusion or samsara. In fact, there is also no nirvana.

Sherab Dorje said:

If somebody claims that their path is the highest and only for those of highest capacity, then...

Malcolm wrote:

The claim in Dzogchen is that there are no differences in capacity. There is no "higher" or "lower." The sole difference between people is whether or not they possess the intimate instruction from their guru. As Zhabkar explains in the Soaring Garuda:

If this is practiced, all will be liberated;

there is no distinction between sharpness and dullness in capacities.

If one practices, even a cowherd will be liberated.

If one understands the significance of the luminosity of one's mind through direct perception, the rhetoric of scholars is not necessary here;

just as when one eats molasses,

there is no need to explain the taste of molasses.

Without understanding this, even a paṇḍita will be deluded.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 27th, 2016 at 4:45 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Luke said:

I haven't been following this thread recently. I just wanted to say how impressed I am with Jill Stein! She is perhaps the most ethical American presidential candidate I have ever seen!

Malcolm wrote:

Oh hardly, she owns stock in Merck (think Vioxx) and Home Depot (think union-busting). Moreover, like many others on the progressive left, she regularly repeats falsehoods which originate from the far-right.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 27th, 2016 at 1:24 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Anybody can say that their path is the best, the fastest, the highest, etc...

Few can actually prove it via the fruit of their practice.

Malcolm wrote:

How would one go about proving such a thing?

PuerAzaelis said:

By not asserting its superiority.

If someone feels the need to assert superiority instead of demonstrate it, he betrays his disinterest in real persuasion.

That issue would be completely irrelevant to a superior path.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, there are three paths, causal paths, resultant paths and the path beyond cause and result. How could someone possibly prove the superiority of a path via the fruit (or result) of practice when such a concept is negated at the outset?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 27th, 2016 at 12:50 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Anybody can say that their path is the best, the fastest, the highest, etc...

Few can actually prove it via the fruit of their practice.

Malcolm wrote:

How would one go about proving such a thing?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 27th, 2016 at 12:08 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Fa Dao said:

as well as all of the world leaders repeating the tired old phrase every time yet another atrocity happens in the name of islam..."Nothing to do with islam".

The Dalai Lama has said there is no such thing as a "Muslim terrorist" as anyone who partakes in violent activities is not a "genuine" Muslim..."Buddhist terrorist. Muslim terrorist. That wording is wrong," he said. "Any person who wants to indulge in violence is no longer a genuine Buddhist or genuine Muslim, because it is a Muslim teaching that once you are involved in bloodshed, actually you are no longer a genuine practitioner of Islam."

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.independent.co.uk/news/people/dalai-lama-muslim-terrorism-islam-no-such-thing-as-video-watch-speech-a7317001.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 27th, 2016 at 12:05 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Fa Dao said:

...the horrific doctrine that is islam.

Malcolm wrote:

BTYW, it is pretty hard to claim you are not a bigot when you make unqualified generalizations like this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 27th, 2016 at 12:02 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Try criticizing America on any national platform in America, like that football player did with his passive protest. "Simply find out who you are not allowed to criticize".

Malcolm wrote:

The amazing thing about football players in the NFL standing for the national anthem is that it was a "custom" that seems to have begun in 2009.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 26th, 2016 at 11:37 PM

Title: Re: If Vajrayana is superior to Hinayana, how come no stories of Dipa Ma-like siddhis?

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

How come Jigme Linga didn't understand where the Vajrasana was?

Malcolm wrote:
Poor geography classes in school.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, October 26th, 2016 at 11:11 PM
Title: Re: If Vajrayana is superior to Hinayana, how come no stories of Dipa Ma-like siddhis?
Content:
shaunc said:
However if it's magic tricks you're after may I suggest a circus.

BuddhaFollower said:
Its not a magic trick. Dipa Ma trained from the Visuddhimagga.

Steps:
1. You master the jhanas.
2. You master kasinas.
3. Then you can change one element into another. This leads to the siddhis.

Malcolm wrote:
Go for it, BF.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, October 26th, 2016 at 10:53 PM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:
Fa Dao said:
just think that Hillary has gotten a free pass for far too long.

Malcolm wrote:
What does this even mean? One of the amazing things about this election is the blatant mysogyny with which it has been colored. While no great fan of Clinton, the unwavering mysogynistic attacks on her from the GOP have caused me to become ever more sympathetic with her. What I find increasingly amazing is that the progressive left in this country is willing to use smears against her from the far right with ever more enthusiasm and with an increasing lack of discrimination.

Fa Dao said:
Was not aware that islam was a "sect" of Buddhadharma....

Malcolm wrote:
Buddhism is one sect, Islam is another. As practitioners of Buddhadharma we should not give into sectarian anxiety and prejudice, especially those of us who are nominally practitioners of Mahāyāna.

Fa Dao said:

do I have some concerns about all of the bombings, beheadings, shootings, throwing people off of rooftops, stabbings, stonings etc etc that are going on all over the world in the name of islam? Yep, you bet I do! Dont you???

Malcolm wrote:

The victims of terrorist violence perpetrated by people who are nominally Muslims are overwhelming other Muslims. However, the number one killer of Muslim noncombatants remains the United States and its Western Allies. For example, 1.7 million children died as a result of US sanctions against Iraq, according to the UN.

According to the Physicians for Social Responsibility report, <http://www.psr.org/assets/pdfs/body-count.pdf>, 1.3 million people in Iraq, Afghanistan, and Pakistan have directly or indirectly been killed by the war on terror.

By contrast, ISIS has only managed to kill roughly 1200 people outside of Iraq and Syria.

Fa Dao said:

Do I have anything against individual muslims? NOPE! As I have said so MANY times before..I dont have a problem with individual muslims...

Malcolm wrote:

You have no idea how prejudiced this sounds.

Fa Dao said:

I do have a problem with some of the totalitarian ideology that is laced throughout the doctrines of islam

Malcolm wrote:

From where did you gain this expertise on the Qur'an? With whom did you study it? How good is your classical Arabic?

Fa Dao said:

as well as all of the world leaders repeating the tired old phrase every time yet another atrocity happens in the name of islam..."Nothing to do with islam".

Malcolm wrote:

They are correct. The actions of so called "Muslim Terrorists" are criminal, and thus they should be tried as criminals. Their actions are not motivated by any systematic doctrine which can be found in the Qur'an.

What you and others who crow about "Radical Islamic Terrorism" fail to understand is that use of language legitimizes them as "Muslims." It is clearly a biased and discriminatory use of language. For example, in this country, people who murder people at reproductive health clinics are never identified as "Christian terrorists," and yet bombings of and shootings at reproductive health clinics continue unabated.

We never discuss Christian violence against Muslims in Africa. 60,000 Muslims fled the Central African Republic in 2014 fleeing Christian militias intent on murdering them.

And of course in this country, the right-wing militias are gearing themselves up https://www.washingtonpost.com/news/post-nation/wp/2016/10/14/three-kansas-men-calling-themselves-crusaders-charged-in-terror-plot-targeting-muslim-immigrants/?tid=hybrid_collaborative_2_na&utm_term=.347906ea9c09

Fa Dao said:

Islamophobia is a ridiculous word created by the muslim brotherhood to deflect any and all critical discussion about the horrific doctrine that is islam.

Malcolm wrote:

The term "Islamophobia" was not coined by the Muslim Brotherhood. This is yet another oft-repeated, right wing conspiracy theory. According to the OED, the "Qur'an" of all things English, the term is attested to in English as early as 1923.

The modern usage of the term finds its source in a commission established in 1996 by the Runnymede Trust, the Commission on British Muslims and Islamophobia, which published a report in 1997 entitled, <http://www.runnymedetrust.org/uploads/publications/pdfs/islamophobia.pdf>. The report defines Islamophobia as, "...an outlook or world-view involving an unfounded dread and dislike of Muslims, which results in practices of exclusion and discrimination."

Fa Dao said:

And by the way...it doesn't make one a "racist" for questioning and trying to discuss the "teachings" found in islam....

Malcolm wrote:

It certainly makes one a bigot when one does so from a position of near total ignorance about the religion of Islam. The very fact that you use scare quotes in the sentence above when describing Islamic teachings means that you have made up your mind already about a religion of which you and most Americans are wholly ignorant. In Buddhism, when we "question" the teachings of another school, it is done on the basis of a thorough and sympathetic critical review of those schools. Islam is deserving of no less.

Fa Dao said:

what race is islam? Wake up people...pull your heads out of the PC sand...I think Voltaire said it best..

"To learn who rules over you, simply find out who you are not allowed to criticize"

Malcolm wrote:

It's never ceases to amaze me when intelligent people uncritically pull quotes off the internet that have long been known to be penned by fascists. Basically my friend, you need to stop reading alt-right websites. It's poisoning your moral compass.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 26th, 2016 at 10:14 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

tomamundsen said:

Just to add another viewpoint to the mix:

I know some practitioners who view the zen, chuba, etc. as a form of passive proselytizing. Some will walk around urban areas in full attire. The idea is that someone may look at the person and think "hmmm, I wonder what he's up to?" or something of that nature and spark some kind of interest in Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

Some people will convince themselves of anything. If the Dharma were in outfits, outfits would be liberation.

tomamundsen said:

I don't think anyone would claim people would become liberated by seeing someone in Buddhist robes. Just maybe spark interest, like when the Buddha saw a sramana on the side of the road outside the palace walls.

Malcolm wrote:

We clearly have different ideas. I think practitioners should be invisible. YMMV. Also, as you know I am not a fan of proselytization, passive or otherwise.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 26th, 2016 at 9:53 AM

Title: Re: If Vajrayana is superior to Hinayana, how come no stories of Dipa Ma-like siddhis?

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

If Vajrayana is superior to Hinayana, how come no stories of Dipa Ma-like siddhis?

Dipa Ma could fly through the air, walk through walls, dive into the ground etc etc.

The Vajrayana mystical stuff is merely having visions of deities, travelling to Pure Lands in dreams and pulling stuff out of rocks and the ground.

Malcolm wrote:

The real question is: why do you believe some stories and reject others?

As for your contentions about Vajrayana practices, passing through mountains, etc is part and parcel of the tradition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 26th, 2016 at 9:45 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

tomamundsen said:

Just to add another viewpoint to the mix:

I know some practitioners who view the zen, chuba, etc. as a form of passive proselytizing. Some will walk around urban areas in full attire. The idea is that someone may look at the person and think "hmmm, I wonder what he's up to?" or something of that nature and spark some kind of interest in Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

Some people will convince themselves of anything. If the Dharma were in outfits, outfits would be liberation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 26th, 2016 at 9:21 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Fa Dao said:

the snopes article did not debunk anything..the most it said was that the clinton campaign denied it....and they have been sooo honest with us in the past

Malcolm wrote:

OMG, Clinton is going to bring Sharia Law to America!!!

Fa Dao said:

really Malcolm? a strawman argument? seriously? At least when it comes to Buddhadharma you are always able to back yourself with citations etc...maybe you should stick with that?

Malcolm wrote:

You have loudly broadcast your anxiety about and prejudice against Muslims. In my opinion practitioners of Buddhadharma should be above such sectarian anxiety and prejudice.If I did not know better I would peg you as a Trumpista.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 26th, 2016 at 4:43 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

DGA said:

And no, neither Monsanto nor the Rockefeller family nor the New World Order is paying me to plant false flags.

seriously tho wake up sheeple. jet fuel doesn't melt vaccines or flouride or whatever.

The Cicada said:

Sounds like disinformation to distract from Obama's secret "Chocolate Rain" project that is injecting our water supply with RNA sequences to alter our genes.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh yeah, here it is:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 26th, 2016 at 2:20 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

DGA said:

It works better in the plural. Like this:

Nobodies take this paranoid crap seriously.

This is an unkind thing to say, but it is correct.

And no, neither Monsanto nor the Rockefeller family nor the New World Order is paying me to plant false flags.

seriously tho wake up sheeple. jet fuel doesn't melt vaccines or flouride or whatever.

Queequeg said:

It is mean.

The question is, chicken or egg? Nobody because they're paranoid? Or Paranoid because they're nobody?

I'm interested in this more because this kind of thinking seems to be a symptom of something more immediate.

Other factors are at work in creating a conspiratorial mind. Uscinski and Parent note that in laboratory experiments "researchers have found that inducing anxiety or loss of control triggers respondents to see nonexistent patterns and evoke conspiratorial explanations” and that in the real world “there is evidence that disasters (e.g., earthquakes) and other high-stress situations (e.g., job uncertainty) prompt people to concoct, embrace, and repeat conspiracy theories.”

- <https://www.scientificamerican.com/article/why-do-people-believe-in-conspiracy-theories/>

Other factors-

1. Group Identity
2. Education

There are many reasons we need broader participation in community and community decision making and I'd go farther and say, reorganization of the wealth distribution system. Happiness of our fellows, encouraging everyone to have a sense of agency, might be one of the most important.

Malcolm wrote:

All of you should stop what you are doing right now, and read Regarding Nature: Industrialism and Deep Ecology by Andrew McLaughlin, SUNY, 1993.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 26th, 2016 at 1:34 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Fa Dao said:

the snopes article did not debunk anything..the most it said was that the clinton campaign denied it....and they have been sooo honest with us in the past

Malcolm wrote:

OMG, Clinton is going to bring Sharia Law to America!!!

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 25th, 2016 at 10:45 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

How can you? It seems in this respect you are hoisted on your own petard.

Sherab Dorje said:

That is what I was saying: That we can't know. There was no petard to speak of.

Malcolm wrote:

What you said was:

Sherab Dorje said:

And this is where your theory stumbles and falls. The Buddha chose the colours, the hairdo and the garments so that Buddhist ascetics DID stand out from non-Buddhist lay-people and clergy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 25th, 2016 at 10:10 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, in fact he did not.

Sherab Dorje said:

How do you know that? I based what I said on what is written in the Vinaya. Now, of course, there are later accretions to the Vinaya, but how can you know exactly what the Buddha said?

Malcolm wrote:

How can you? It seems in this respect you are hoisted on your own petard. Further, which Vinaya?

It is completely clear, BTW, that the differences between styles of robes and the adoptions of color schemes are post-Nirvana conventions, as are the ordination rituals and compilations of the Vinaya in general.

Sherab Dorje said:

Having a shaved head was a common practice among many śrāmanera communities of the time.

Sure it was. I am talking about the shaven head in combination with the rest of the package.

Malcolm wrote:

There is considerable evidence that during the time of the Buddha, his sangha was not obviously discernible from other contemporary śrāmanera communities in Ancient India.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 25th, 2016 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: Mahayana vs Hinayana, accusations of supersessionism, expedient means, et al.

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

...makes it all the more confusing and upsetting that Western Buddhologists have done such a good job of convincing the world that "Hinayana" in ancient texts absolutely refers to Theravada practice, which most ancient Mahayana practitioners would have had no contact with to judge it so.

Malcolm wrote:

The ancestors of the Thervavada school taught the Dharma, which in its general features is not terribly distinct from the teachings of the other schools classified under the "18 schools."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 25th, 2016 at 10:02 PM

Title: Re: Mahayana vs Hinayana, accusations of supersessionism, expedient means, et al.

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

There's already been a sūtra reference from a polemical sūtra, so I may start there...In this context the passage on the three turnings of the wheel of doctrine is presented. Here the underlying intent (samdhi) not only of Hinayana teaching but also of the Prajnaparamita scriptures is presented as in need of explication, for their meaning has to be drawn out (neyartha) through the fully explicit (nitārtha) hermeneutic of the previous analysis of consciousness...If you are familiar with this sūtra, do you happen to know the reasons that are found therein as to why the "Hinayana" teachings were/had to be taught in such a way?

Malcolm wrote:

The sūtra is silent on the subject of the three turnings apart from mentioning them and giving an outline of the them. No other sūtra mentions the subject.

The Indian tradition, what we possess of it, is also largely silent on the matter. Tibetan traditions following Buton have seized on the matter and have expressed a number of different interpretations, but generally consider the tathāgatagarbha doctrine is being the principle representative of the third turning. The Gelugpa are contrarians here in this respect, rejecting the Saṃdhinirmocana and the third turning as provisional since they locate this sūtra in the Yogacara school since it also mentions the ālayavijñāna.

Coëmgenu said:

If the Buddha were capable of giving teachings where "their meaning [does not have] to be drawn out (neyartha) through the fully explicit (nitārtha) hermeneutic of the previous analysis of consciousness," why didn't he just teach the "perfect" teaching at the beginning?

Malcolm wrote:

His students would not have understood it.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 25th, 2016 at 11:10 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana vs Hinayana, accusations of supersessionism, expedient means, et al.

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Do you think that this lack of leading-ability toward removing "subtle knowledge obscurations" is due to a deficiency of what the Buddha taught them (the Agama-Nikaya layer of Dharma-dispensation) or because of their own interpretations of the Dharma?

Malcolm wrote:

According Saṃdhinirmocana sūtra, the first turning of the wheel, what we commonly associate with Nikāya Buddhism, is incomplete, provisional, and subject to dispute, as was the second turning. The third turning was a restatement of the second turning in no uncertain terms so that it would be understood as complete, definitive, and not subject to dispute.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 25th, 2016 at 5:51 AM

Title: Re: How do buddhas contact people?

Content:

Luke said:

If we assume for a moment that Buddhas like Amitabha, Akshobya, etc. exist in different parallel universes, what is the mechanism through which they can contact us and we can contact them?

It's clearly some faster-than-light mechanism...

Malcolm wrote:

I think email works pretty well.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 25th, 2016 at 4:16 AM

Title: Re: Is there any evidence Buddhism rejects the Vedas?

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

The first source cited by Wikipedia, Secularism and Religion-Making, doesn't support what is claimed. In fact it supports what I'm saying:

" It is clear, for instance, that the āstika–nāstika distinction so often pressed into service to reinforce the separation of “Hindu” and “Buddhist” traditions is a fluid and changeable mode of classification with shades of meaning and application that shift according to context. The Buddhist philosopher Nāgārjuna, for instance, refers to the Vaiśeṣika school as one of several nāstikas (nonaffirmers) in his work the Ratnāvalī I, v. 60–61"

I don't have access to the second.

Malcolm wrote:

Dude, just read the verse 60-61 of the Ratnavali.

BuddhaFollower said:

What does it have to do with anything?

60 They implicitly have no nihilistic thesis
And also have no nihilistic behavior
And due to relying on [the path to] enlightenment have no nihilistic thought.
Hence how can they be regarded as nihilists?

61 Ask the Samkhyas, the followers of Kanada, Nirgranthas,
And the worldly proponents of a person and aggregates,
Whether they propound
What passes beyond “is” and “is not.”
na pratijñā na caritaṃ na cittaṃ bodhiniśrayāt |
nāstikatve ’rthato yeṣāṃ kathaṃ te nāstikāḥ smṛtāḥ ||60||

無言行及心 由依菩提故
若說彼墮無 何因不墮有

| gañ dag don gyi med ñid du | | dam mi ’cha’ žiñ mi spyod pa |
| byañ chub rten phyir sems med na | | de dag ji ltar med par bśad |

[For us] there is no thesis to be demonstrated, no rules of conduct, and on account of our taking shelter in the supreme illumination, not even mind, our doctrine is really the doctrine of nothingness. How then can we be called nihilists?

sasāṃkhyaulūkyanirgranthapudgalaskandhavādinam |
pṛccha lokaṃ yadi vadyat astina_stiviyatikramam ||61||

僧佉世師 尼捷說人陰
約世汝問彼 若說過有無

| gañ zag phuñ por smra ba yi | | 'jig rten grañs can 'ug phrug dan |
| gos med bcas la gal te žig | | yod med 'das pa smra na dris |

You may ask the common people along with its philosophers either the Sāṃkhyas or the Vaiśeṣikas or the Jains or those who maintain the existence of a personality as represented by the five groups whether they preach a doctrine like ours beyond the dualism of existence and non-existence.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www2.hf.uio.no/polyglotta/index.php?page=record&vid=69&mid=116981>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 25th, 2016 at 4:00 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

[

And this is where your theory stumbles and falls. The Buddha chose the colours, the hairdo and the garments so that Buddhist ascetics DID stand out from non-Buddhist lay-people and clergy.

Malcolm wrote:

No, in fact he did not. All he insisted was that early robes were to be made out of discarded shrouds and dyed any color one pleased so they would not be white.

The number of robes, three, were gradual additions.

Having a shaved head was a common practice among many śrāmanera communities of the time.

Sherab Dorje said:

This served a number of purposes: If an ascetic behaved in a wholesome manner then the meritorious behaviour was immediately associated with the practices of the BUDDHIST monastic community. If an ascetic engaged in unwholesome behavior he was easily identifiable and thus ran the risk of expulsion.

Malcolm wrote:

In reality, especially early on, there was little to distinguish a Buddhist monk from some other kind of śrāmanera.

The protocols around the color of robes, and the patterns of the cloth were much latter additions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 25th, 2016 at 3:41 AM

Title: Re: Is there any evidence Buddhism rejects the Vedas?

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

I don't accept Chinese texts as sources.

Malcolm wrote:

That is idiotic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 25th, 2016 at 3:38 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and the Two Truths Doctrine

Content:

manjusri said:

Thank you Malcolm. So, generally, a Dzogchen teacher would not even teach this doctrine to his/her students?

Malcolm wrote:

It is necessary for any discussion of the vehicles of cause and result.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 25th, 2016 at 3:03 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and the Two Truths Doctrine

Content:

manjusri said:

Can anyone enlighten me on where Dzogchen stands relative to the Two Truths Doctrine? I have come across the view that there is only a "single truth" in Dzogchen? Moreover, did the historical Buddha teach some variant of the two truths? My understanding is that Nagarjuna based his doctrine on the words of the historical Buddha (Kaccayanagotta Sutta).

Malcolm wrote:

The two truths do not exist for Dzogchen. As the Soaring Garuda states:

Since phenomena and nonphenomena have always been merged and are inseparable, there is no further need to explain an "ultimate phenomenon."

And Mañjuśrīmitra explains that the two truths are the same:
Therefore, because awakening and nonawakening are the same in terms of absence of characteristics, there is nothing to accept or reject.
In accordance with that meaning, all those explanations of the nominal ultimate, the absence of arising and ceasing, sameness, nonduality, beyond thought, emptiness, the dharmadhātu, freedom from expression and convention, and so on are neither ultimate nor relative. If it is said, "This is the path in accordance with the ultimate," that is relative.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 25th, 2016 at 2:38 AM

Title: 91% of the Things Donald Trump Says Are False

Content:

Unknown said:

They don't care that Donald Trump lies; they love him because his lies soothe them. His lies appease them. His lies make them feel justified and righteous. His lies make them feel good about who they are. The voters are the children who do not want to be grown ups and the grown ups in the party have indulged them and fed them candy to keep from having to parent, and now they are stuck with a monster of a child.

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.politicususa.com/2016/03/31/ninety-one-percent-donald-trump-false.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 25th, 2016 at 1:41 AM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana the 'third turning'?

Content:

Wayfarer said:

I have noticed a passage on the Wikipedia article about Vajrayana:

http://www.wikiwand.com/en/Vajrayana#/Third_turning_of_the_wheel

The text under the heading says: 'Vajrayana can also be seen as the third of the three "turnings of the wheel of dharma".'

Whereas, I had understood that 'the third turning' was generally understood to be Yogācāra.

Is this recognised by the tradition, or ought the article to be edited?

Malcolm wrote:

Some people assert that the Uttaratantra is a transitional doctrine presaging Vajrayāna. But Vajrayāna is not a separate turning of the wheel.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 25th, 2016 at 1:35 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

muni said:

Is this contradicting the Buddha's teachings? Is religious harmony in any way harming Buddhism or is it teaching itself?

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, but asserting that all traditions point to the same truth is simply a wrong view.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 25th, 2016 at 1:22 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Rakz said:

Also, I know many degree holders who serve coffee and flip burgers. So much for prestige and a better lifestyle. A degree is not a ticket to the middle class as they once were.

Queequeg said:

It also depends on the degree you get.

Many liberal arts degrees don't get you anything, except maybe some entry level job paying $25,000 a year. That's fine if you have parents paying your rent while you work for less than minimum wage and gain experience. If you're smart enough, you'll be able to translate that into something better in a few years. Or you go back to grad school after a while. Takes money to make money, they say.

If you don't have that luxury, don't have any particular genius, you probably should pursue a Bachelor of Science (instead of arts), and pick a field where there are demands. Engineering, nursing, for instance. Be willing to transfer where the jobs are when you graduate. You may not get to live someplace sexy like San Francisco or Brooklyn or Austin, but you'll be in a position to have a solid middle class life by taking that chemical engineering job in St. Louis.

The dirty secret they don't tell kids coming up the social ladder is that they don't have the luxury of reading literature for four years or studying art history unless their parents are in a position to support them through the first few years of their post-college lives so that they can take poorly paying or non-paying jobs that allow you the experience, exposure and connections you need to build one of those creative careers.

Malcolm wrote:

STEM is destroying education and turning people into uncultured f*&kwits.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 25th, 2016 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen does not make a distinction between persons of sharper and duller capacity, for example, unlike lower paths.

cyril said:

But still, there are practitioners who can never relax in the natural state more than a split-second, others who are almost never distracted and then anything in-between. Wouldn't that allude to some difference in regards to personal capacity?

Malcolm wrote:

No, this merely points to a difference in diligence and familiarization.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 25th, 2016 at 12:44 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

muni said:

DGA wrote there are some who hold what might be called a universalist view
What is an universalist view?

Malcolm wrote:

The belief that all religious traditions point to the same truth. It is also called "perennialism".

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 25th, 2016 at 12:34 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Is there a serious lack of context for monastic attire too? Obviously, yes. Does that mean that monastics should not wear their robes too?

Malcolm wrote:

In many cases, yes, they should not wear monastic attire if they have something else less likely to stand out. For example, if they have to work at a job, they should wear professional clothing. If they wish to wear club colors, fine. But slacks and shirts please.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 25th, 2016 at 12:06 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Jeff H said:

In passing, and without having read the whole thread, I'll just note that the gradations (limitations) I speak of are largely a matter of what teachers and teachings one has been previously exposed to, not some inherent, personal capabilities. I believe one's karmic causes determine what conditions one will encounter and which of those will activate any particular latencies.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and we are persons who are fortunate to have even encountered the name "Buddha", much less, "Great Perfection."

That said, I never stated that teachings like lam rim, mind training and so on were useless. Like all tools, they have uses, as well as limitations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 24th, 2016 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

muni said:

All traditions point to the same truth.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they certainly do not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 24th, 2016 at 11:18 PM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In this regard it is better to pursue Dzogchen teachings which offer a guaranty of liberation in this life, the bardo or the next life in the nirmanakāya buddhafiels.

Jeff H said:

I anxiously await your book!

I know little about Dzogchen but I know there is a Bodhisattva vow that warns against disparaging lesser paths, namely Hinayana, because a Bodhisattva must understand and appreciate all the necessary means for any individual being to attain enlightenment. Does Dzogchen not respect those on lower paths?

Malcolm wrote:

You cannot understand all paths unless you understand the limitation of each path.

Dzogchen, being the essence of all paths, merely points out the limitations of other paths, i.e., the ways in which they obscure the meaning of buddhahood.

Jeff H said:

Meanwhile I continue to believe there are many like me who more appropriately follow a graduated path.

Malcolm wrote:

The notion of gradual vs. sudden is a self-imposed limitation. Dzogchen does not make a distinction between persons of sharper and duller capacity, for example, unlike lower paths. In Dzogchen, there is no notion that there are some people who cannot understand the meaning of Dzogchen.

There is only the notion that there are people who either have not had the fortune of meeting Dzogchen teachings or whose own conceptuality regarding cause and effect, and so on, prevent them from embracing Dzogchen teachings whole-heartedly.

Once a person decides to embrace Dzogchen teachings and is willing to dispense with the conceptual limitations about buddhahood imposed by the paths of cause and result, there is no obstacle placed in the way of people who wish to learn about Dzogchen teachings. Dzogchen teachings make no distinction between persons of sharper and duller capacity as I mentioned above. A proper teacher is all that one requires to follow Dzogchen teachings.

Any teacher who claims that Dzogchen requires one to be a person of high capacity, etc., frankly, does not know what they are talking about and should be immediately understood as a person of very limited understanding of Dzogchen teachings.

On the other hand, there are today teachers who use the name "Dzogchen" to defraud students into following them, who then never give actual teachings on Dzogchen, or who are given mistaken teachings on Dzogchen. So, caveat emptor.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 24th, 2016 at 10:56 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

The teacher I received the ngakpa initiations from gets pissed off if we don't wear our ngakpa attire when practicing.

Malcolm wrote:

Just what sort of costume does rigpa wear?

Sherab Dorje said:

Whatever costume it damn well pleases!

Malcolm wrote:

Thus no costume at all is required. Ngakpa attire is symbolic, but not essential. There is no compunction to wear it. It's voluntary.

There is a serious lack of social context for Ngakpa attire in western countries, unlike the garb of religious ordinands belonging to Catholicism, etc. This is why it seems odd to others outside of a retreat center.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 24th, 2016 at 10:46 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpa tradition & magic

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

The teacher I received the ngakpa initiations from gets pissed off if we don't wear our ngakpa attire when practicing.

Malcolm wrote:

Just what sort of costume does rigpa wear?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 24th, 2016 at 3:24 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That all depends on whether or not one accepts Dzogchen teachings as the definitive teachings of the Buddhas. YMMV.

Sherab Dorje said:

I take it your aim is to bore everybody into Dzogchen by trotting out the same stuff every single time in every single thread?

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 24th, 2016 at 2:36 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In this regard it is better to pursue Dzogchen teachings which offer a guaranty of liberation in this life, the bardo or the next life in the nirmanakāya buddhafiels.

Greg said:

And since Dzogchenpa say it, it must be true!

Malcolm wrote:

That all depends on whether or not one accepts Dzogchen teachings as the definitive teachings of the Buddhas. YMMV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 24th, 2016 at 1:20 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

You cool with that? Fine. But you better makes damn sure you reach enlightenment in this lifetime, otherwise you are screwed.

Malcolm wrote:

In this regard it is better to pursue Dzogchen teachings which offer a guaranty of liberation in this life, the bardo or the next life in the nirmanakāya buddhafiels.

Sherab Dorje said:

Hence the reliance of Vajrayana practitioners on all three levels of vows.

Malcolm wrote:

One has no need to rely on a vow which one is in no danger of breaking.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 24th, 2016 at 12:49 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I said, "so what," not "ok."

Jeff H said:

Sorry, I didn't mean to misrepresent your position. Is there a difference? Do you mean by this that it's not ok? Are you saying it's neither ok nor not ok?

Is there any such thing as distinguishing appropriate and inappropriate behavior, at this mundane level, for a person who is voluntarily pursuing a Buddhist path before they have established sufficient mental discipline to transform all behaviors? Is renunciation necessary for any Buddhist practitioners?

Incidentally, I'm not criticizing or judging anyone. I am sincerely trying to understand when the principles of what to adopt and what to abandon are legitimately negated.

Malcolm wrote:

Who can consider Vinaya reliable since it is embedded in ancient gender disparities between men and women? How are they even relevant today?

Even the way the vow against sexual misconduct is formulated (even where I agree with it) is a reflection of patriarchal economic values embedded in property relations and principally refers to male sexual conduct. The formulation of bhikṣuni vows is clearly oppressive towards women since they must follow an additional 111 extra vows, on top of the 253 vows prescribed for bhikṣus.

Thus, in the face of this kind of disparity, whether or not monks watch porn is pretty much a nonissue since Buddhist institutional monasticism systematically oppresses women.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 24th, 2016 at 12:27 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Gyurme Kundrol said:

Being a monk does mean you have a responsibility to uphold conduct that will not create delusion in the minds of sentient beings regarding Dharma. This doesn't mean never breaking a vow though. It would mean however in this case that the monk in question should apologize, confess, make amends, seek to not do this again and so forth.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course, this expectation created a situation where, in Tibet, the convention came to be telling lay people that they were not privileged to know what monks' vows were, because if they did know, they might criticize monastics for breaches of their discipline and lose faith.

Just another patriarchal means of control...

Interestingly, after being rejected by the Tibetans proper in Tshang, the Dzogchen teachings were first spread and preserved on the Tibetan plateau in a matriarchal society, the country of rGyal mo tsha ba rong, literally, "The Hot Gorge of the Queens.

Gyurme Kundrol said:

The rGyalrong are one of the many ethnic and linguistic groups of western Sichuan. Due to the extreme nature of the mountains and valleys where they live, they have been relatively isolated throughout much of their history, resulting in a wide variety of divergent dialects. There is documentation of the rGyalrong as early as the Tang dynasty (AD 608-917) describing a legendary matriarchal society, ruled by a queen, protected by fortress-like watchtowers along a river of gold. Ancient towers still stand, and the Dajin River (大金川, Big Gold River) flows through rGyalrong territory, historically rich in gold.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://collectanealinguistica.wordpress.com/2015/11/08/in-search-of-a-language-unrecognised-part-2/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 23rd, 2016 at 11:43 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Nemo said:

The median income of a Trump supporter is 72,000$ a year. I hate to break it to you but that means most Trump supporters have a degree. .

Malcolm wrote:

Not necessarily.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 23rd, 2016 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Jeff H said:

Agreed, but I think there are standards for supporting one another on the path and monasteries have an historical role in that.

Malcolm wrote:

My friend, there is virtually no real practice in monasteries.

Jeff H said:

Some of us need remedial support of a more imperfect nature while we attempt to shape our own future selves.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not advanced at all. But I am confident that monasteries are not the refuges that monastic propaganda would have us believe.

Jeff H said:

Ok, I'll buy that as a position. The argument, then, is: porn in monasteries is ok because monasteries themselves are not ok (as vehicles for Buddhist refuge?).

Malcolm wrote:

I said, "so what," not "ok."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 23rd, 2016 at 11:17 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

maybay said:

Perhaps you should get your thoughts together about patriarchy and publish them in a single cogent volume with your name on it

Malcolm wrote:

I can do that in one sentence: patriarchy is a socio-economic system in which every everyone and everythings' moral and spiritual value is predicated on their economic value in a market economy dominated by men.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 23rd, 2016 at 12:28 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Which I pointed out is not certain, since there is no agreement among lineages as to what these vows entail in their particulars.

Sherab Dorje said:

And now you are invoking your authority and the dog continues to chase its tail. It is incredibly tiring to have a conversation with somebody that cannot even recognize when somebody is agreeing with them.

Malcolm wrote:

Hahahahah, nice try, Greg. I am not invoking my own authority. As to your agreement, you may agree with my conclusion, but I suspect the route we travel to get to that agreement is rather different. For example, as a proponent of deep ecology, I can certainly agree with Christian and Socialist environmentalists that the environment is worth saving, but the routes we all take to come to a common conclusion are founded on very different perspectives.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 11:59 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Jeff H said:

I object to those who say, "Porn in the monastery? So what?"

Malcolm wrote:

You cannot fix samsara for others, only for oneself. Therefore, "Porn in the monastery? So what?"

Jeff H said:

Agreed, but I think there are standards for supporting one another on the path and monasteries have an historical role in that.

Malcolm wrote:

My friend, there is virtually no real practice in monasteries.

Some of us need remedial support of a more imperfect nature while we attempt to shape our own future selves.

I am not advanced at all. But I am confident that monasteries are not the refuges that monastic propaganda would have us believe.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 11:49 PM

Title: Re: Buddhist forums and why you choose to be active on dharmawheel

Content:

The Cicada said:

I'm here because I'm a religious fanatic who enjoys arguing with rich people.

Malcolm wrote:

Then you're in the wrong place.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 11:42 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Jeff H said:

I object to those who say, "Porn in the monastery? So what?"

Malcolm wrote:

You cannot fix samsara for others, only for oneself. Therefore, "Porn in the monastery? So what?" I do not say it was "ok," I just said it was of no consequence. But then again, I have no confidence in religious corporations in general.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 11:41 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

]It may surprise you to know that I agree 100%. I was saying the exact same thing.

Malcolm wrote:

What you did was invoke an authority:

Instead of heeding the advice of all the legitimate teachers to (as a Vajrayana practitioner) observe all three sets of vows,

Which I pointed out is not certain, since there is no agreement among lineages as to what these vows entail in their particulars.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 11:07 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Instead of heeding the advice of all the legitimate teachers to (as a Vajrayana practitioner) observe all three sets of vows, which, depending on the capacity of the practitioner may legitimately involve renunciation, they just puff out their chest and posture, while indulging their ego.

Malcolm wrote:

While other people self-righteously berate others about vows, similarly indulging their egos.

kirtu said:

Sounds like quite a projection. I have not seen people "self-righteously berate" others about vows. A couple of times I have personally heard that but online I have almost never seen it.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

What do you think was going on here?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 10:56 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

Well, I for one have never said a Vajrayana practitioner cannot resort to renunciation. But the "canker of sensuality" is a phrase that hardly belongs to the language of Vajrayana. "Indulging in pleasure" is also a heavily loaded expression, is it not?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, this is not entirely true. We discuss asrava (zag pa) all the time in Vajrayāna even in Dzogchen. The "body with effluents" is a common phrase, and effluents here refers to the three or five afflictions.

treehuggingoctopus said:

What never ceases to amaze me is that "pleasure-seeking" or "indulging in pleasure" becomes a problem for some people (almost) only when it comes to sex. It is OK when one takes great pleasure in what one is eating, studying, listening to, reflecting on, drinking (provided it is alcohol-free!), etc. It is also quite OK to pursue openly such pleasures, and talk about doing so. Everybody praises our erudition, or the exquisite honing of some of our skills, or our devotion to a particularly charming hobby.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, all of these activities are associated with asravas, i.e., "outflows," effluents," or "cankers" (weeping sores).

Vajrayāna does not deny afflicted phenomena. Its approach to them with respect to the path however differs markedly from lower yānas as you know.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

While other people self-righteously berate others about vows, similarly indulging their egos.

Sherab Dorje said:

A bit of self-directed valid criticism (because in your hurry to respond negatively to what I said, it seems you did not notice that the criticism was directed at myself too) goes a long fucking way. I, at least, am willing to admit my incapacity as a practitioner. Hopefully it will save me a tonne of suffering in the future.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, praising oneself with faint criticism is often a proffered justification of the harsh criticism of others, i.e., "I'm not perfect, but that other person..."

As far as the three vows go, this is an interesting literature, but none of it is decisive nor conclusive. Why? Because no one agrees on how they should be interpreted, for example, the controversy over whether the fifth samaya merely refers to abandoning Mahāyāna bodhicitta, or the release of semen. Tibetan scholars spend lifetimes obsessing about issues which are of no fundamental importance.

However, if we get the essence of the three vows, rather than being distracted by their particulars, the essence of the Hinayāna vows is not harming others. Therefore, the evaluation of pornography from this point of view should be "Does my action of indulging in erotica or pornography harm others?"

The essence of Mahāyāna vows is helping sentient beings. Therefore, the evaluation of pornography should be, "Does my action of indulging in erotica or pornography cause me to objectify women (and men)—treating them as objects of personal gratification—and cause me to lose sight of them as persons deserving of my compassion?"

The essence of general Secret Mantra vows is pure vision. Therefore, the evaluation of pornography from this point of view should be "Does my action of indulging in erotica or pornography lead me into engage in impure vision?"

We won't get into Dzogchen, since in Dzogchen, there is nothing to abandon or adopt, but only something to recognize.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 10:19 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

The Cicada said:

Some perspective. (Check out the facial expressions in the background.)

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

<http://www.dancarlin.com/product/common-sense-310-or-else/>

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, the audience's discomfort with clumsy, graceless Donald is palpable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 10:10 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

For me the issue is not about indulging the senses, the issue is also about how one indulges the senses.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, from the perspective of Tibetan Medicine/Ayurveda, it is quite possible to abuse one's senses with sense objects.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 9:34 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Personally, it seems to me, that many (almost all) here could (legitimately, even within a Vajrayana context) benefit from renunciation when it comes to sense pleasures...

Malcolm wrote:

Vajrayāna is not a path of renunciation (i.e. a path of giving up objects of desire), just as common Mahāyāna, while a path of renunciation, is not a path of self-centered renunciation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 9:28 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Instead of heeding the advice of all the legitimate teachers to (as a Vajrayana practitioner) observe all three sets of vows, which, depending on the capacity of the practitioner may legitimately involve renunciation, they just puff out their chest and posture, while indulging their ego.

Malcolm wrote:

While other people self-righteously berate others about vows, similarly indulging their egos.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 11:31 AM

Title: Re: The Whiggish view of history and Buddhism

Content:

MiphamFan said:

I think you have too specific a definition of "middle", conditioned by your own perspective. It seems like you are using middle as an absolute point, with Marxism on the left and crony capitalism with reactionary social views to the right.

I personally would just call middle and mainstream whatever is in mainstream political discourse. The Overton window.

What is "middle" today in America was not "middle" 100 years ago, nor middle in Roman times. I'd argue for example that socialist parties posed a far greater threat to capitalism in the pre-WW2 period than they do today. So "Leftism" then was a much more effective opponent of the "Right" than it is today. But both "Left" and "Right" are meaningless if you extend the timeline over a longer period.

There are plenty of things that are not mainstream and not necessarily alt-right, for example, what I discussed in the OP, that progress and growth will face limits, we cannot expect perpetual economic growth. Even Green parties don't discuss this.

Malcolm wrote:

Green Parties are not really green, since they have come to a rapprochement with Capitalism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 6:33 AM

Title: Re: The Whiggish view of history and Buddhism

Content:

Wayfarer said:

So actually things aren't as bad as he foresaw at the time.

Malcolm wrote:

No, in fact things are considerably worse.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 6:32 AM

Title: Re: Is there any evidence Buddhism rejects the Vedas?

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

Unifying Hinduism by Nicholson pages 2-3:

After this late medieval period, it became almost universally accepted that there was a fixed group of Indian philosophies in basic agreement with one another and standing together against Buddhism and Jainism.

Similarly the widely studied 2nd-3rd century CE Buddhist philosopher Nagarjuna, in Chapter 1 verses 60-61 of Ratnāvalī, wrote Vaiśeṣika and Sāṃkhya schools of Hinduism were Nāstika, along with Jainism, his own school of Buddhism and Pudgalavadins (Vātsīputriya) school of Buddhism.[20][21]

Malcolm wrote:

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/%C4%80stika_and_n%C4%81stika

BuddhaFollower said:

The first source cited by Wikipedia, Secularism and Religion-Making, doesn't support what is claimed. In fact it supports what I'm saying:

" It is clear, for instance, that the āstika–nāstika distinction so often pressed into service to reinforce the separation of “Hindu” and “Buddhist” traditions is a fluid and changeable mode of classification with shades of meaning and application that shift according to context. The Buddhist philosopher Nāgārjuna, for instance, refers to the Vaiśeṣika school as one of several nāstikas (nonaffirmers) in his work the Ratnāvalī I, v. 60–61"

I don't have access to the second.

Malcolm wrote:

Dude, just read the verse 60-61 of the Ratnavali.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 6:31 AM

Title: Re: “You Can’t Watch Pornos in the Monastery”: Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

maybay said:

People with an agenda

Malcolm wrote:
You brought up her story, not me.

maybay said:
No one asked who started it.

Malcolm wrote:
Right, I was pointing out that this was your agenda, not mine.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 4:32 AM
Title: Re: Is there any evidence Buddhism rejects the Vedas?
Content:

BuddhaFollower said:
This classification is late medieval, after the decline of Buddhism in India.

It really is meaningless.

Malcolm wrote:
I rather doubt it, since Nāgārjuna uses the term in the Ratnavali.

BuddhaFollower said:
Unifying Hinduism by Nicholson pages 2-3:

After this late medieval period, it became almost universally accepted that there was a fixed group of Indian philosophies in basic agreement with one another and standing together against Buddhism and Jainism.
Similarly the widely studied 2nd-3rd century CE Buddhist philosopher Nagarjuna, in Chapter 1 verses 60-61 of Ratnāvalī, wrote Vaiśeṣika and Sāṃkhya schools of Hinduism were Nastika, along with Jainism, his own school of Buddhism and Pudgalavadins (Vātsīputriya) school of Buddhism.[20][21]

Malcolm wrote:
https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/%C4%80stika_and_n%C4%81stika

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 4:26 AM
Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:
maybay said:
People with an agenda

Malcolm wrote:
You brought up her story, not me.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 4:02 AM
Title: Re: Is there any evidence Buddhism rejects the Vedas?
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Buddha rejects śruti, the idea that the Vedas are self-originated. This is why Buddhism was classed as a nastika tenet system.

BuddhaFollower said:
This classification is late medieval, after the decline of Buddhism in India.

It really is meaningless.

Malcolm wrote:
I rather doubt it, since Nāgārjuna uses the term in the Ratnavali.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 3:50 AM
Title: Re: The Whiggish view of history and Buddhism
Content:
maybay said:
Methinks OED needs to re-examine that one.

Also, what kind of notation is " \neq " ? Not equal in boolean algebra is " \neq ".

Malcolm wrote:
Lazy boolean algebra, means you do not have to hit the shift key. \neq

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 3:49 AM
Title: Re: Secret Map of the Body
Content:
RikudouSennin said:
There is a book titled 'Secret Map of the Body'.
What school or cycles is this connected with?
Or is it based on Indian Higher Yoga Tantras?

Malcolm wrote:

Based largely on Indian Tantras, is a synthetic commentary on Sakya Lamdre and Drukpa Kagyu tantric anatomy by 13th century master, Yang Gongpa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 3:43 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

She then cultivated her guru's instructions and having giving up all activities, she remained for one year. After her husband came and took her to his house, she did all the mundane work and activities, she agreed to comply

maybay said:

Nobody asked her to comply - not in either of the translations I'm looking at. And just for everyone else who reads this Dowman has that she went to her new husband "without demur", i.e. without protest and the usual nonsense. "In her new home she performed everything that was expected of her cheerfully and uncomplainingly, always speaking modestly and sweetly, thus controlling both her body and speech."

Malcolm wrote:

In the Tibetan, "After her husband came and took her to his house..." the verb is khyer ba which means "to be carried away" The verb is commonly used to describe what happens to one when caught in a flood. This term indicates that she did not go willingly, especially in light of the protest against her parents.

Dowman's translation above is excessively interpretive— the words "new home," "demur," "cheerful," "uncomplaining," and "expected" exist nowhere in the Tibetan text and are not implied at all.

maybay said:

If we are going to characterize this story, I think Manibhadra the Domestic Drudge is a more apt analogy than "Happy Housewife."

Well that's just your opinion man. The story goes she was from wealthy family. Drudgery seems unlikely. If it weren't for Kukkuripa she wouldn't have considered liberation.

Malcolm wrote:

You miss another essential point in the story— that she sat for a whole day looking at the broken pot on the ground. Why do you think so?

Considering that she had already been beaten and abused verbally by her parents for running off to follow Kukkuripa to begin with, and was "carried off" or "taken" by her husband after having remain on her own for a year following that, the entire story suggests that she was in a situation of involuntary, domestic servitude (the condition of billions of women and girls in the world today) through an arranged marriage over which she had no control— which is what makes her doha at the end more poignant.

Now I shall go to great bliss without returning to the house of samsara.

In this case, the "happy" housewife is equating her home with samsara. Some happy housewife.

maybay said:

I don't know why you seem so desperate to deny this possibility.

Malcolm wrote:

This issue is not housewives in general and the obvious fact that many women today find this a fulfilling, satisfying life. The issue is Manibhadra specifically, and her obvious unhappiness with her state of domestic servitude, her youthful rebellion and her eventual emancipation more than a decade after meeting her guru.

Indeed, this tale is edifying example for women in so far as Manibhadra shakes free of the shackles of mundane, patriarchal domesticity and realizes her own power as an independent woman. Recall that in general the tales of the 84 Mahāsiddhas virtually always contain some element of transgression of conventional norms. A common woman shaking free of her domestic role and abandoning her husband and young children would have been nothing short of totally shocking and transgressive to Indians in the 11th century.

My critique is not directed at liberated men and women, but rather the patriarchal values that overlook, demean, and obscure women (with rare exceptions like the four female Mahāsiddhas, the Therīgāthā and so on) through the near total silence of women's voices and the obvious male fetishization of women found in Buddhist literature in general, and particularly in the Niruttarayogatantras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 2:40 AM

Title: Re: Is there any evidence Buddhism rejects the Vedas?

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

I've read a lot of translations, and never once did I read anything rejecting the Vedas.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddha rejects śruti, the idea that the Vedas are self-originated. This is why Buddhism was classed as a nāstika tenet system.

He did not necessarily reject the Vedas themselves.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 2:19 AM

Title: Re: The Whiggish view of history and Buddhism

Content:

DGA said:

Well, the most popular political sentiment of a particular society at a given time might not be in the middle and often isn't. Socialism was pretty popular in the USSR; the mainstream was far to the left of the spectrum. Similarly for Fascist Italy--the mainstream was far to the right, and those in the center might be dissenters, out of the mainstream.

so the mainstream doesn't correspond necessarily to the political center.

Malcolm wrote:

Popularity /= mainstream

Also, you did not qualify your terms.

DGA said:

"Mainstream" means widespread or predominant and has since Carlyle coined the term in the early 19th century, and that is the sense in which I meant "popular."

Malcolm wrote:

OED seems to predominantly define "mainstream" as normal or conventional.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 2:08 AM

Title: Re: The Whiggish view of history and Buddhism

Content:

DGA said:

truthfully, I don't know where to position a mainstream on a spectrum.

Malcolm wrote:

In the middle?

DGA said:

Well, the most popular political sentiment of a particular society at a given time might not be in the middle and often isn't. Socialism was pretty popular in the USSR; the mainstream was far to the left of the spectrum. Similarly for Fascist Italy--the mainstream was far to the right, and those in the center might be dissenters, out of the mainstream.

so the mainstream doesn't correspond necessarily to the political center.

Malcolm wrote:
Popularity /= mainstream

Also, you did not qualify your terms.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 1:57 AM
Title: Re: The Whiggish view of history and Buddhism
Content:
DGA said:
truthfully, I don't know where to position a mainstream on a spectrum.

Malcolm wrote:
In the middle?

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 1:51 AM
Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire
Content:

boda said:
You need to understand that making something illegal is not always a solution, and can even cause more problems and suffering than it's supposed to relieve.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, for example, Prohibition.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 12:31 AM
Title: Re: The Whiggish view of history and Buddhism
Content:
MiphamFan said:

"Conservatives" conserve socioeconomic privileges for their elites and make a show of conserving social values, but no 18th century observer would call them "conservative" in any sense of that word;

Queequeg said:
The Conservative battle cry in the US in 2016 is, "Make America Great Again ". Emphasis added. In the UK, it was a retreat from European integration which is often championed on the idea that integration is the greater destiny. If they had to be described, these are archaisms, longing for some idealized past.

DGA said:

The Trump people and the Brexit people aren't conservatives. They are reactionaries. Your description is a precise definition of reactionary logic.

Malcolm wrote:

I second this. This is the reason why the GOP is in disarray.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 22nd, 2016 at 12:13 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

malcolm said:

I think you missed the part where Dowman observes the ratio of male to female siddhas in the 84 Mahāsiddhas is 20:1.

maybay said:

Why is that significant? Clearly the function of the compilation, if we can suppose one, was to show that enlightenment is available in a variety of karmic circumstances. And it does just that.

Malcolm wrote:

Clearly the compilation was written from a male-centric point of view, which reinforces my point.

maybay said:

But I think you missed the point of the quote which is that the enlightened Manibhadra (who probably represents the most populous role in society of all the 84) rebukes the very agenda you are heroically pursuing in her name.

Malcolm wrote:

The point of the story is that she is unhappy with family life, and when she breaks the pot she says:

To what home will beginningless sentient beings go when the clay vessel of their bodies is broken?

My clay vessel has long been broken,

Now I shall go to great bliss without returning to the house of samsara.

E ma! Those who wish to attain bliss should rely on the amazing guru!

You also seem to lack the understanding that she rebelled against her parents after receiving the Cakrasamvara empowerment and instructions from Kukkurpa:

The guru saw that the girl's continuum was ripe, and bestowed upon her the empowerment of Cakrasamvara. After she was given the instruction for unifying creation and completion, she practiced in that retreat place for a week. Then she returned to her parents.

Since they beat and derided her, the girl said, "If the three realms are pure, are you not my parents? Though your family and lineage are important, you do not turn away from samsara. I have been struck by the accomplishment of liberation based on my guru! I shall follow the path," and left them speechless.

She then cultivated her guru's instructions and having giving up all activities, she remained for one year. After her husband came and took her to his house, she did all the mundane work and activities, she agreed to comply in body and speech, and spoke pleasantly, and so on.

She continued in this way for 12 years, had a couple of kids, etc., then she has the incident with the pot. So I think that your characterization (while understandable given the way it is presented in the translation you are using) is thoroughly inaccurate.

If we are going to characterize this story, I think Manibhadra the Domestic Drudge is a more apt analogy than "Happy Housewife."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 21st, 2016 at 10:49 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

laws seeking to outlaw pornography are an attack on the First Amendment.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Then why is indecent exposure illegal ?

Malcolm wrote:

Simply put, when someone flashes a penis at you on the street, it is assault. Erotica and pornography are films and literature which one peruses voluntarily, and thus are protected speech.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Why can't you have sex in public places ?

Malcolm wrote:

It is considered "lewd and indecent behavior." But when you peruse erotica and pornography in your home or on your own computer, etc., it is considered protected speech.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Why can't you go nude on a beach ?

Malcolm wrote:

That depends on the beach. For example, there are many "clothing optional" beaches all over the United States, for example, in Cape Cod, Long Island, etc. It is also legal to be nude in public in places such as Burlington, Vt. and so on.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Also, Porn is immoral, according to Buddhist standards :

1. No sex in the daytime
2. No anal sex
3. No oral sex
4. No bestiality
5. No sex with minors
6. Wrong livelihood

Malcolm wrote:

If you wish to follow rules 1-3, fantastic, more power to you.

It might be argued from a Buddhist POV that the pornography industry, item 6 on your list, is a species of human trafficking, but personally, I think that would be an over-application of the principle. All actors in the pornography industry must a) prove their age b) sign consent forms in order for that pornography to be considered legal.

I also agree that there is illegal pornography which is a result of human trafficking.

As for 4 and 5, animals and children cannot give consent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 21st, 2016 at 10:21 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

justsit said:

Trump may be inevitable. President Trump is not.

The Cicada said:

They keep calling him "god-king." Not sure why.

Malcolm wrote:

They call him God-Emperor on reddit, a reference to the God-emporer of Dune, Leto II: Leto II Atreides, the God Emperor, has ruled the universe as a tyrant for 3,500 years after becoming a hybrid of human and giant sandworm in Children of Dune. The death of all other sandworms, and his control of the remaining supply of the all-important drug melange, has allowed him to keep civilization under his complete command. Leto has been physically transformed into a worm, retaining only his human face and arms, and though he is now seemingly immortal and invulnerable to harm, he is prone to instinct-driven bouts of violence when provoked to anger. As a result, his rule is one of religious awe and despotic fear.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/God_Emperor_of_Dune OG1PjXs.jpg (257.45 KiB) Viewed 1517 times

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 21st, 2016 at 10:13 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

DGA said:

Meanwhile there are PhDs who are basically sociopaths. Some of these have held elected office, such as Betsy McCaughey.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, having an advanced degree does not preclude one from having a personality disorder of the first degree.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 21st, 2016 at 10:11 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

MiphamFan said:

Of course, no argument. Bernie would be much better than either of the candidates up there right now.

I'm just saying a degree isn't everything. i wouldn't trust PhDs who never had jobs outside academia to be good leaders.

Malcolm wrote:

It depends on what kind of PhD. For example, I think Thurman would make a dreadful politician.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 21st, 2016 at 10:09 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

I just think the porn industry is disgusting, and does more harm than good for society. So many women have been traumatized by husbands or boy friends addicted to sex & porn. It has ruined millions of relationships, and broken up families. Let alone exploiting women and sex trafficking, and innocent children involved. Do you want to support that ???

Malcolm wrote:

Alcohol addiction has also ruined millions of relationships and broken up families.
When one lives in a free society, one accepts certain risks.

Child pornography is illegal by definition.

Apart from that, in general, every case brought to the courts has found that laws seeking to outlaw pornography are an attack on the First Amendment.

Quite frankly, if there is an amendment worthy of revision, it would be the Second.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 21st, 2016 at 10:06 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Thus far, no gender scholars have emerged who are sufficiently educated about and intimate with the primary and secondary literature of Vajrayāna to make any sustained critique of its systematic sexism

maybay said:

When my mind was enshrouded in ignorance
Critical thought attended every sound
When reality was revealed as my own nature
The nature of whatever appeared was reality itself

- Yogini Siddha Manibhadra, the happy housewife

Malcolm wrote:

I think you missed the part where Dowman observes the ratio of male to female siddhas in the 84 Mahāsiddhas is 20:1.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 21st, 2016 at 7:39 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

MiphamFan said:

Bernie only has a bachelor's.

Sanders studied at Brooklyn College for a year in 1959–60[34] before transferring to the University of Chicago and graduating with a bachelor of arts degree in political science in 1964.[34] He has described himself as a mediocre college student because the classroom was "boring and irrelevant," while the community provided his most significant learning.[35]

Malcolm wrote:

I said it was as a preference for the job, not a requirement. Also Sanders is a great deal more intelligent than Trump.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 21st, 2016 at 10:36 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

dreambow said:

Clinton is a corporate whore. She only takes orders from Wall street and the corporations, the rest of the time its giving fake and appeasing smiles to the masses. Some may prefer to be governed by politicians with at least a masters degree...let me say politicians who elbow their way to the top are nearly always shrewd operators. A stint at university does not teach you deceptive games of one-upmanship or the wily ways of lobbying for the big end of town.

Malcolm wrote:

Guess that makes Trump a corporate gigolo.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 21st, 2016 at 6:52 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

... fundamentally serve male fantasies ...

PuerAzelis said:

If that story was the worst you can come up with, you probably think Andrea Dworkin is Hitler or something.

Malcolm wrote:

One hilarious factoid is that Dworkin was instrumental in writing Canada's anti-pornography legislation, under which some of her own works were censored.

In terms of the Ghantapāda story, the point is that is representative of male-centered tropes which belie the oft touted gender egalitarianism of Vajrayāna.

Thus far, no gender scholars have emerged who are sufficiently educated about and intimate with the primary and secondary literature of Vajrayāna to make any sustained critique of its systematic sexism and replacement of women's voices with narratives which mainly serve to reinforce human female subordination to male whimsies, while transforming empowered women into dangerous Others in the form of witches (ḍākinīs) and hags (matrikas).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 21st, 2016 at 6:41 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In general, my criticism of Trump here is in direct proportion to his bragging about the quality of his education. That being said, I prefer educated people for office, master's degree at least, when we are discussing high political offices.

Coëmgenu said:

Trump keeps saying he'll run the country like he runs his business... I'm surprised Clinton hasn't said: "You mean bankrupt four times?" He's basically giving her free material.

Malcolm wrote:

She did in the previous debates.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 21st, 2016 at 4:50 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

A combination of genuine ignorance and conspiratorial thinking.

Malcolm wrote:

Trump is definitely an ignoramus. He only holds a Bachelor's degree from Wharton and has apparently never read a book since. At least Hill and Jill have advanced degrees. Johnson too only has a Bachelor's degree, he is also quite uneducated, as well as a real loon.

maybay said:

What a strange thing to say. I don't have any degree, doesn't mean I'm an ignoramus.

Malcolm wrote:

In general, my criticism of Trump here is in direct proportion to his bragging about the quality of his education. That being said, I prefer educated people for office, master's degree at least, when we are discussing high political offices.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 21st, 2016 at 3:33 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

I just wasted a two hours of my time, instead of working on a thesis, before class, slogging through leaked Clinton emails looking for something even vaguely controversial that would warrant these extremely common accusations of sedition, conspiracy, or criminal activity that Trump supporters are very passionate about directing towards Clinton.

There's been nothing so far.

These allegedly 'shocking' emails have proved a thoroughly bland disappointment. I want some of the drama I was promised.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it is indeed very hard to understand why Trump and his brood are so outraged and fired up about all of this.

Johnny Dangerous said:

A combination of genuine ignorance and conspiratorial thinking.

Malcolm wrote:

Trump is definitely an ignoramus. He only holds a Batchelor's degree from Wharton and has apparently never read a book since. At least Hill and Jill have advanced degrees. Johnson too only has a Batchelor's degree, he is also quite uneducated, as well as a real loon.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 21st, 2016 at 3:30 AM

Title: Re: New Book by Dzongsar Khyentse Rinpoche: The Guru Drinks Bourbon? (Nov 2016)

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 21st, 2016 at 2:25 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

Progressives need to be ready from Nov. 9, to put the heat to Clinton and keep it on her. Make her do the right thing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 21st, 2016 at 1:44 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

I just wasted a two hours of my time, instead of working on a thesis, before class, slogging through leaked Clinton emails looking for something even vaguely controversial that would warrant these extremely common accusations of sedition, conspiracy, or criminal activity that Trump supporters are very passionate about directing towards Clinton.

There's been nothing so far.

These allegedly 'shocking' emails have proved a thoroughly bland disappointment. I want some of the drama I was promised.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it is indeed very hard to understand why Trump and his brood are so outraged and fired up about all of this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 21st, 2016 at 12:38 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

amanitamusc said:

It was bound to happen hillery has started shrieking again.

The fingernails on the chalk board.The Horror

The Cicada said:

Such a nasty woman. Smh

Malcolm wrote:

Not nearly as nasty as that orange haired shitgibbon you support.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 21st, 2016 at 12:26 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

maybay said:

I thought you didn't need stories?

Malcolm wrote:

Not these kind.

maybay said:

Using is needing, and you use them.

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on what you mean by "need."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 20th, 2016 at 11:01 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

maybay said:

I thought you didn't need stories?

Malcolm wrote:

Not these kind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 20th, 2016 at 10:51 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

and I wonder if it would be levelled against any male candidate.

Malcolm wrote:

Only if they were gay, because the bias against gay men in our culture is deeply rooted in sexism towards women.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 20th, 2016 at 10:30 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Karinos said:

you know some Mahasiddhas had prostitute consorts or some were prostitutes themselves? and they are described as dakinis taking form of prostitute. Can you just for a second imagine that porn star can be dakini too or daka for that matter?

Malcolm wrote:

The reason that Darikpa, a prince, was ordered by his teacher Luipa to serve a courtesan (not really the same as a prostitute, and did not necessarily involve sex work) was to cut his pride.

This brings up another issue: the extent to which, in the West in particular, Vajrayāna tropes such as "Mahasiddhas had prostitute consorts or some were prostitutes themselves" serve male fantasies since women's voices in these scenarios are entirely absent, apart from narratives entirely written by men which generally portray women as treacherous and dangerous to the project of yoga, as in the tale of Ghantapāda:

There was a wicked whore in Pataliputra who told Devapala that she would be able to corrupt Ghantapa and ruin him. This vile woman had a virtuous and unspoiled virgin daughter who was commanded to seduce the yogin. As Ghantapa would meditate the young girl would bow and circumambulate him, begging for the opportunity to serve him and be his patron. He resisted but the girl was persistent. Ghantapa eventually moved to a small hut for the monsoon season and although the maiden followed him; he requested that his food only be brought by male servants.

For two weeks, only men tended to the yogin but on the fifteenth day the young woman told them to stay back and she went herself. When Ghantapa asked her to leave she complained that there were rain clouds in the sky and that she should wait until they pass. Once the clouds had passed it was getting dark and she cried saying that if she were to leave at night bandits would kill her. He told her that she had to sleep outside but as it got colder during the night she moved into the hut. Saying she was cold, she got closer and closer until eventually their bodies touched and thus the two came together in tantric union.

<http://www.himalayanart.org/search/set.cfm?setID=332>

Here, we have a "wicked whore" (how do we know she was wicked? What is her story?) who has a "virtuous and unspoiled virgin daughter," (at this point, we really are in a patriarchal Catholic universe where the virginity of women has "moral," and thus economic value). We have the celibate yogin, who resists this delectable young women, until, out of his kindness, he lets her stay the night because he fears for her safety. "Naturally," he is unable to resist her charms, but manages in the story to foil the plot of the "vile woman" to subvert him with the erotic power of her "virtuous and unspoiled virgin daughter." And of course, story portrays Ghantapāda as a sexual naif who takes no responsibility for his own arousal, shifting it onto the dangerous Other.

Certainly, as I note above, the manuals for selecting female consorts differ very little from the descriptions of different kinds of women found in erotic manuals like the Kama Sūtra. But what are notably absent in such manuals are the graphic descriptions of men appropriate for each of these kinds of women, described as padminis, conches, and so on based on descriptions of women's breasts, vaginas, teeth, lips, eyes, and vaginas. At least the Kama Sūtra contains descriptions of types of men, their body types, the size of their penises and the kind of women for which those penises are best suited.

Corresponding descriptions of male phenotypes and their genitalia are conspicuously absent from manuals which describe such women. Present however is the strong recommendation to inflame passion through the standard Indian tropes of kissing, pinching, biting, and so on, as well as "erotic conversation (aka "talk dirty to me")" and use of visual erotica as preliminaries for karmamudra practice. Monks and single men, of course, who wished to engage in these practice, needed to use a different kind of "consort," i.e. their hands, while visualizing an imagined consort and imagining these behaviors (you may think I am kidding, but I am not.)

Indeed, we really have to understand these stories as patriarchal accounts which obscure womens' stories, which render them as dangerous, which fundamentally serve male fantasies through the way patriarchal society fetishizes women (virginity vs. prostitution; celibacy vs. being sexual active; treacherous women vs. honorable men and so on).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 20th, 2016 at 9:15 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

MiphamFan said:

You want to find the probability that watching porn has a direct correlation with violence against women and children.

Malcolm wrote:

Perhaps I was not clear. I was pointing toward an understanding of pornography itself as violence towards women and children (and perhaps men as well). For example, we do not consider rape a "sex" crime, we understand rape to be a violent crime.

So the true question before us is what distinguishes erotica (non-violent sexual entertainment conveyed through images and writing) from pornography (violence against women and children perpetrated through images and writing).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 20th, 2016 at 8:43 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

shaunc said:

It seems to me that crucifying a few monks for watching a stick flick is a bit over the top.

treehuggingoctopus said:

Failure to really come to terms with the fact that we are sexual beings does seem to lead to us being as inconsiderate towards others as we are towards ourselves. And it may, and often does, make us downright cruel.

Malcolm wrote:

The issue around which everyone is dancing is simply this: violence against women and children, and the extent to which pornography can be directly implicated in perpetuating violence against women and children.

Of course, when and if we understand pornography as a species of violence against women and children, this changes the issue considerably.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 20th, 2016 at 5:45 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

But, i still think the sex industry is getting away with it...and stricter punishment is the only way to end it.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, because authoritarian solutions are always so effective...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 20th, 2016 at 4:20 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Doesn't it concern you that your definition of porn would include a graphic sex education video in the category of pornography?

Malcolm wrote:

Quite obviously it is included in many people's definition, given that funding for sex education in the US has been drastically reduced because of concerns some people have about obscenity.

Sherab Dorje said:

What about modern tv shows that graphically depict sex acts? Literature which graphically depicts sex acts? Etc?

I have already answered to this issue a number of times.

Malcolm wrote:

No satisfactorily.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 20th, 2016 at 1:56 AM

Title: Re: Poor student looking for approachable and serious Chöd teacher

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

"Remind yourself of the defects of the pleasures of the senses, and avoid befriending ordinary people." [/i]

Reference: A Torch Lighting the Way to Freedom

Malcolm wrote:

Since one becomes a bodhisattva to help ordinary people, and since one must befriend them in order to help them, this instruction cannot be held to be definitive.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 20th, 2016 at 12:57 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I support choice, not patriarchy. I don't think the solution is to try and control people's choices.

Sherab Dorje said:

Neither do I. When somebody chooses to take monastic vows they should keep them, if they choose to not hold their vows they should not. But then they should not consider themselves as having acted within the bounds of their vows. They can't have their cake and eat it too.

Malcolm wrote:

In fact, watching pornography is not major downfall. It is about the same level as drinking alcohol or killing animals, or watching combat for entertainment.

Sherab Dorje said:

Clearly, even you admit that patriarchy-free porn is possible, Nope. Not according to the "strict" definition of porn based on its etymology.

Malcolm wrote:

You think there sex work is impossible under matriarchy? I don't. As far as etymologies are concerned, language has two modes, diachronic and synchronic. Your definition is excessively synchronic and anachronistic.

Sherab Dorje said:

...so the problem is not porn nor the graphic depictions of sexual acts.

No. For me porn is problematic. Graphic representations of sexual acts, on the other hand, especially in a correct context, are not problematic. A sexual education video depicting the act of sex is not pornography according to the "strict" definition.

Malcolm wrote:

[/quote]

What about modern tv shows that graphically depict sex acts? Literature which graphically depicts sex acts? Etc?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 20th, 2016 at 12:39 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

[quote="dzogchungpa"]

So are you saying that, from this POV, the release of semen is necessary for the benefit that men derive from karmamudra?

[quote]

Yes. The bodhicitta descends, is held, reversed and then spread through the nāḍīs and cakras.

Jñānamudra practice is a mental exercise using the same principle with a visualized consort. Further, there is limited benefit of the partners involved are over 26 because of the degeneration of the physical body. The ideal age for this practice is between 16-26.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 20th, 2016 at 12:21 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

The Cicada said:

I think it's inexcusable for the Clintons to deny Bill's mixed-race son.

Malcolm wrote:

People who read Infowars, etc., will believe anything — the poor, misinformed dunderheads that they are.

<http://www.snopes.com/bill-clinton-illegitimate-son/>

The Cicada said:

I suppose it takes highly advanced mental faculties to ignore the obvious.

Malcolm wrote:

Umm, dude, DNA testing dispensed with this allegation a long time ago. You're living in the past. Just accept that HRC is your next president, and move on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 20th, 2016 at 12:08 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

DGA said:

good old Mahayana FTW. It's good enough for me.

The Cicada said:

I'm glad we share a common ground.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't being a Trumpista is consistent with Mahāyāna, nor for that matter is being Clintonista. However, being a Sanderista is entirely consistent with Mahāyāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 20th, 2016 at 12:06 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

patriarchy-free porn

The Cicada said:

Would it have a plot line?

Malcolm wrote:

Who needs plots?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 20th, 2016 at 12:04 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The purpose of karmamudra is to take desire into the path. If you have no desire, there is no need to rely on the path of messengers. Furthermore, from a Dzogchen point of view, as stated in the Tantra of the Union of the Sun and Moon, for example, the practice is beneficial only for men.

dzogchungpa said:

That's interesting, is there some explanation there, or anywhere, of why it is only beneficial for men?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. The point is that female orgasm is not connected with the release of their own reproductive tissue.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 19th, 2016 at 10:37 PM

Title: Re: Poor student looking for approachable and serious Chöd teacher

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Has your friend taken refuge?

Malcolm wrote:

Interest in the teachings is refuge enough. There is no need to get a groovy Tibetan name or have a snippet of hair cut from one's head.

Sherab Dorje said:

You don't even know why I am asking. You just assumed a whole heap of BS.

Malcolm wrote:

Usually, when people ask "Has x taken refuge," they have the idea that someone needs a refuge vow.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 19th, 2016 at 10:19 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

The problem is patriarchy, I agree, and porn is one way in which patriarchy is imposed on men and women. So why are you supporting porn???

Malcolm wrote:

I support choice, not patriarchy. I don't think the solution is to try and control people's choices. Clearly, even you admit that patriarchy-free porn is possible, so the problem is not porn nor the graphic depictions of sexual acts.

Sherab Dorje said:

This also applies to Buddhist tantric statues and thangka art, where the depictions of women show clear power differentials and patriarchal tropes, since they are forms and symbols largely determined by men.

I already answered to this point on page 1.

Malcolm wrote:

I just checked the whole thread. I did not see you address this point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 19th, 2016 at 10:10 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

gzodzilpa said:

To me, the rather conservative monastic view seems more like a romanticized fantasy decoupled from the history and practical function of tantra. I believe it was suggested that it is propaganda to keep monks being monks?

Malcolm wrote:

Perhaps. All I can tell is you what I have been taught by my teachers, and what Longchenpa and others say about the practice in various manuals.

The purpose of karmamudra is to take desire into the path. If you have no desire, there is no need to rely on the path of messengers. Furthermore, from a Dzogchen point of view, as stated in the Tantra of the Union of the Sun and Moon, for example, the practice is beneficial only for men.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 19th, 2016 at 10:05 PM

Title: Re: Poor student looking for approachable and serious Chöd teacher

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Has your friend taken refuge?

Malcolm wrote:

Interest in the teachings is refuge enough. There is no need to get a groovy Tibetan name or have a snippet of hair cut from one's head.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 19th, 2016 at 9:57 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Somebody does not have to be a prostitute, to act like a prostitute. Lots and lots of women are objectified and abused in relationships too.

Malcolm wrote:

How about women-made hardcore lesbian porn?

The reason why women are subject to abuse in the porn industry is because of patriarchal attitudes towards women worldwide, not because depictions of sex acts, even graphic depictions of sexual acts, are intrinsically immoral.

The problem is not porn, the problem is patriarchy. This also applies to Buddhist tantric statues and thangkha art, where the depictions of women show clear power differentials and patriarchal tropes, since they are forms and symbols largely determined by men. This applies equally to the objectification of women in manuals on how to choose consorts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 19th, 2016 at 9:50 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This definition of the 5th Samaya, provided below, is not certain. I for one contest it as translated completely.

Gyurme Kundrol said:

Id love to hear your thoughts on which parts of this you think are mistranslated or incompletely translated and how a practitioner could interpret it in a different light. I couldnt argue the point either way since I dont know Tibetan but I am genuinely interested since I know translation issues cause a lot of problems in general for understanding certain aspects of Dharma.

Are there other commentaries on the meaning of Tantric vows and how they are to be upheld that you would recommend?

Malcolm wrote:

For one thing, Jetsun Dragpa Gyaltsen and the Sakya school in general complete rejects this interpretation. The fifth samaya is simply an indication that one should abandon not relative and ultimate bodhicitta. The idea that it includes semen is also a problem, since the word in Tibetan is khu ba, and depending on context, it wither refers merely to the reproductive seed, or the precursor substances which is divided into reproductive seed and ojas (mdangs). ChNN, in his Birth, Life and Death, states unequivocally, that the reproductive seed is a complete waste product of the body and should be released.

According to him, attempts to conserve can lead to sexual dysfunction, stones, and so on. His point of view is supported in various Ayurveda and Tibetan medicine, as well as cycles such as the Khandro Nyinthig.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 19th, 2016 at 3:24 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This definition of the 5th Samaya, provided below, is not certain. I for one contest it as translated completely.

Gyurme Kundrol said:

When the subject of sex comes up it seems most practitioners lose their common sense.

Instead of engaging in the categorization and definition of pornography as better or worse, good or bad, pure or vile, we should be engaging in pure view generally. Instead of judging a monk for masturbation we should judge ourselves for not having pure view towards our Vajra brothers and sisters. Instead of thinking some sex and some porn is fine but others is not we should seek to view all phenomena as the innately pure and empty display of the energies of our awareness. Instead of engaging in mental gymnastics to rationalize our attachment to sex we should remember the four noble truths and the fact that even small attachments will lead to small suffering, so needless to say great attachment will lead to great suffering.

Attachment leading to suffering doesn't stop just because we are attached to something we like a lot. In fact it only makes things worse. Even a householder can overcome sexual desire while fulfilling martial duties.

Vajrayana and Tantra in general gives us the tools to deal with all these things. Sexual desire can be overcome, and saying "I'm a householder" or "society is full of sex" or "this is the degenerate age" is just making excuses. You are either serious about liberation or you are not. You either want freedom or you do not. If you are serious then you will work with these energies and seek to no longer let them be your master and delude you. If not... then you will allow certain attachments to flourish and as a result will keep suffering in a state of delusion and probably stay in Samsara at least for a little while longer.

Ultimately if you are not willing to give up sexual desire you should never take Vajrayana vows. Refuge and Bodhisattva vows are fine, but Tantric vows require you to seek mastery over these energies and attachments and failure to do this is breaking your Samaya and you will suffer as a result of that.

"The fifth (root downfall) is, with a desirous mind and at an inappropriate time, intentionally emitting semen, thus forsaking the bodhicitta generated for sentient beings. The appropriate times to allow seminal fluid to leave the body are during the secret empowerment as an offering to the deities, when increasing the family line of ancestral heritage, and when making special pills or other medicines. Otherwise and especially out of desire, to ignore the words of honor and training and emit semen for one's own personal satisfaction outside the context of higher anuyoga practice constitutes the downfall. This also includes the abandonment of bodhicitta for any sentient being, because bodhicitta and the essential fluid are seen as one on the level of generation stage practice (of inner tantra). If aspirational bodhicitta is abandoned, practical bodhicitta is automatically forsaken.

-Perfect Conduct, Ascertaining the Three Vows - Commentary by Dudjom Rinpoche" Overall it's pretty straightforward. Anyone holding Vajrayana vows should not engage in these activities. Those who do not, can do as they like but the Buddha is clear that attachment leads to suffering. From an ultimate perspective it's made clear all phenomena are primordially pure displays of luminous emptiness. So we should practice at the highest level we are capable of and should seek to stay committed to our vows. These vows we take also include pure view towards our Vajra brothers and sisters, which means not judging their conduct even if it is wrong and even if it occurs in a space we consider sacred.

There are also ways to go about calling someone out for breaking their Samaya and so forth, I don't recall where I read about it though and it has to be approached in a certain way. Certainly a mind of compassion is required since judging and pointing fingers and making lots of "you" statements won't do any good. Looking down on those who we share lineage with doesn't help us at all. And until our own minds are free from defilement we really shouldn't even attempt to correct others but should just keep working on ourselves.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 19th, 2016 at 3:22 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

'cept that the correct definition is: the graphic depiction (-graphy) of the activities of prostitutes (porno).

dzogchungpa said:

Um, have you ever looked at the "amateur" section of a porn site? I guarantee you a lot of people would consider a lot of that pornography, even though there are often no prostitutes involved. Furthermore, technically, the people involved in professional porn are not engaging in prostitution either, otherwise it would be illegal, at least in the States.

Malcolm wrote:

The neopuritan Buddhists have a hard time with neolibertines like myself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 18th, 2016 at 8:17 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

That's pretty telling, I would say.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a lot of depictions of sexual intercourse on television these days. Is that porn?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 18th, 2016 at 8:15 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

maybay said:

So what were you doing watching the entrance of a strip club?

krodha said:

I used to get paid to watch the entrance of a strip club. We never got any monks.

Sherab Dorje said:

Maybe they were moonlighting as "Johns"?

Malcolm wrote:

No, they were five Korean Monks who had been staying at the Cambridge Zendo.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 18th, 2016 at 9:07 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Malcolm, in all seriousness, shouldn't you be out smashing the patriarchy or something?

Malcolm wrote:

Baby steps...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 18th, 2016 at 4:36 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

maybay said:

In the presence of desire we feel loaded.

Malcolm wrote:

You might, I don't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 18th, 2016 at 4:34 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Wayfarer said:

It isn't a matter about 'being angry with monks'. It's a matter of principle - pornography is an insidious evil in today's world, it is available to anyone with an internet device, panders to the basest cravings, and is strongly habit-forming. Millions of people are finding that when they're habituated to pornography, they can no longer experience normal intimacy with their loved one. Millions of boys are being 'educated' about sexuality via instantly-available, always-on pornography, which they access via the same device they have been given for schoolwork. It is a moral calamity of the highest order.

And besides, it is like sulphuric acid to any kind of sadhana; it's spraying your garden bed with weed-killer.

Malcolm wrote:

Pornography is an ill-defined word. What exactly is porn? Naked Lunch? Lolita? DH Lawrence? The definition of pornography is closely tied to obscenity. We all know it is very difficult to define obscenity, and that the more strict obscenity laws are, the more pervasive and hidden rape culture is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 18th, 2016 at 4:04 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

maybay said:

Well I don't think it's so easy to understand monks or the administrations they inhabit. I wish I did.

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty easy to find out. Go to Thailand, ordain for a month.

maybay said:
Somehow I don't think it's that easy.

Malcolm wrote:
Sure it is, you are a smart person.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, October 18th, 2016 at 3:40 AM
Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire
Content:
maybay said:
I disagree. We are speaking of afflictions. Not my afflictions or your afflictions, just afflictions as they manifest in the world. That is worth understanding, and it is established practice.

Malcolm wrote:
It is easy to understand why monks watch porn. It is not rocket science.

maybay said:
Well I don't think it's so easy to understand monks or the administrations they inhabit. I wish I did.

Malcolm wrote:
Pretty easy to find out. Go to Thailand, ordain for a month.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, October 18th, 2016 at 3:04 AM
Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire
Content:
Jeff H said:
I disagree. To say "So what?" does indeed deny the importance of the subject. It means, "this thing doesn't matter and I don't care".

Malcolm wrote:
Precisely, it does not matter and no one should care. Since you like Śāntideva, he also recommends that when one cannot speak well of another, one should remain like a piece of wood. Speaking of others afflictions, especially in abstract, is pointless.

maybay said:
I disagree. We are speaking of afflictions. Not my afflictions or your afflictions, just afflictions as they manifest in the world. That is worth understanding, and it is established practice.

Malcolm wrote:

It is easy to understand why monks watch porn. It is not rocket science.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 18th, 2016 at 2:57 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Unknown said:

While stitching a cut on the hand of a 75 year old farmer, the doctor struck up a conversation with the old man. Eventually the topic got around to Donald Trump and his role as the Republican Nominee for President.

The old farmer said, " Well, as I see it, Donald Trump is like a 'Post Tortoise'."

Not being familiar with the term, the doctor asked him what a 'post tortoise' was.

The old farmer said, "When you're driving down a country road and you come across a fence post with a tortoise balanced on top, that's a post tortoise."

The old farmer saw the puzzled look on the doctor's face so he continued to explain.

"You know he didn't get up there by himself, he doesn't belong up there, he doesn't know what to do while he's up there, he's elevated beyond his ability to function, and you just wonder what kind of dumb ass put him up there to begin with."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 18th, 2016 at 2:18 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Jeff H said:

I disagree. To say "So what?" does indeed deny the importance of the subject. It means, "this thing doesn't matter and I don't care".

Malcolm wrote:

Precisely, it does not matter and no one should care. Since you like Śāntideva, he also recommends that when one cannot speak well of another, one should remain like a piece of wood. Speaking of others afflictions, especially in abstract, is pointless.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 18th, 2016 at 1:06 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

maybay said:

Do you think those monks had some part to play in your decision not to return?

Malcolm wrote:

None whatsoever. In fact, I knew people who worked in that club, and sometimes we would go there to have a drink. But strip clubs always made me uncomfortable for the simple reason that the women who work in them in general despise the clientele. This is what caused me to cease frequenting such places.

maybay said:

Sounds like they kicked you out

Malcolm wrote:

No, in fact I was friends with a number of the dancers, and we frequently would go out after the club closed to eat in China Town. But I have to tell you, looking at a friend's genitals in close quarters in a dingy club can be a bit discomfiting, and is probably the least erotic experience one can have.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 18th, 2016 at 12:38 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Jeff H said:

"So what?" is a statement of dismissal...

Malcolm wrote:

of peoples' self-righteous indignation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 18th, 2016 at 12:06 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

maybay said:

So what were you doing watching the entrance of a strip club?

Malcolm wrote:

I was myself going into that strip club...in 1993. I am pretty certain that was the last time I ever visited a strip club.

maybay said:

Do you think those monks had some part to play in your decision not to return?

Malcolm wrote:

None whatsoever. In fact, I knew people who worked in that club, and sometimes we would go there to have a drink. But strip clubs always made me uncomfortable for the simple reason that the women who work in them in general despise the clientele. This is what caused me to cease frequenting such places.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 17th, 2016 at 11:45 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Jeff H said:

But the point of becoming a Buddhist renunciate is very specifically to follow a path that seeks reversal of normal society.

Malcolm wrote:

And getting outraged at the alleged behavior of some monks is a complete waste of time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 17th, 2016 at 11:43 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

If you, of all people, don't know the answer to that, then I am not going to waste my time replying.

Malcolm wrote:

When there are major problems in the world which are more in need of our attention, I know that I have better things to do than be outraged by some people's petty afflicted behavior.

maybay said:

Major problems have small beginnings. What exactly am I supposed to do about the bombing of Aleppo? These 'petty' afflictive emotions as you put it are, in contrast, quite workable.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, please by all means work on your own petty afflictions. However, you can no more work on the petty afflictions of others than you can stop Assad from murdering children in Aleppo. Thus, my observation that kirt's stated outrage at the inconsequential behavior of some monks was misplaced

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 17th, 2016 at 11:38 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I've seen monks coming out of strip clubs. So what?

maybay said:

So what were you doing watching the entrance of a strip club?

Malcolm wrote:

I was myself going into that strip club...in 1993. I am pretty certain that was the last time I ever visited a strip club.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 17th, 2016 at 9:07 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

I've seen monks coming out of strip clubs. So what?

If you, of all people, don't know the answer to that, then I am not going to waste my time replying.

Malcolm wrote:

When there are major problems in the world which are more in need of our attention, I know that I have better things to do than be outraged by some people's petty afflicted behavior.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 17th, 2016 at 8:08 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

And yes, there are more important things happening out there in the world, but wtf does that even mean? That vows count for nothing? That practice counts for nothing because out there in the real world all hell is breaking loose? Actually I believe that in the degenerate age, vows and wholesome behaviour are even MORE important. Of course it is more difficult to maintain vows in the degenerate age, but that does not mean we just jump into the fray, does it?

Malcolm wrote:

It means that this outrage being expressed because some monks were watching porn is all out of proportion to real problems in the world.

I've seen monks coming out of strip clubs. So what?

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 17th, 2016 at 7:09 PM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Honestly, who cares? Children being killed by bombs in Aleppo and Yemen is far more important. The wholesale destruction of the biosphere by capitalism is far more important. A few people watching people f%^king and a few people f%^king in a monastery is of absolutely no importance at all by comparison. Anyway, this the age of five degenerations. We cannot have high expectations.

maybay said:

How is it that hatred, bombs in Aleppo, and ignorance, environmental destruction, are important, but not desire? The three condition each other. I think the Russian temperament that results in Aleppo is very closely linked to their perception of sexuality, as received through orthodox Christian monasticism.

Malcolm wrote:

Desire is quite permissible for bodhisattvas, hatred never is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 17th, 2016 at 11:16 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There are far more important things than vows.

Honestly, who cares? Children being killed by bombs in Aleppo and Yemen is far more important. The wholesale destruction of the biosphere by capitalism is far more important. A few people watching people f%^king and a few people f%^king in a monastery is of absolutely no importance at all by comparison. Anyway, this the age of five degenerations. We cannot have high expectations.

shaunc said:

Malcom. That is the most sensible statement yet.

There's probably not too many men on this forum, or anywhere for that matter that haven't had sex or watched a porn movie. Expecting people to fight against mother nature is a pretty big ask.

This isn't a scandal. There's no children involved. It's just small minded gossip.

kirtu said:

Really? It's small minded gossip to keep ones vows at a monastery during a retreat?

And these were full-time renunciates.

I agree that there are more important things in order to directly reduce short term suffering though and Malcolm highlights two of them. Unfortunately the US and Russia and other nations spread their poison of weapons throughout the world. People have been advocating that weapons sales from the West stop for many decades. This has fallen on deaf ears. Even after German tracked vehicles sold to Turkey were used to torture and kill PKK members (terrorists to the Turkish government and majority Turks), even after this hit front page newspapers decades ago, weapons were still sold.

Even now the US fails to lead on climate change forcing some of the rest of the world to initiate necessary but much too belated changes wrt energy production and efficiency and the transformation necessary to reign in mindless farming. Still no one has significantly raised other pressing environmental issues at a high enough level.

Powerful people will always fail to lead on pressing issues until it is too late. Wars will consume mankind. People who are supposed to be representatives of Shakyamuni Buddha should at least keep their vows purely it shouldn't take a ngakpa, even a highly revered one, to remind them of that.

kirt

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 17th, 2016 at 6:55 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

We cannot keep other people's vows. And as I said, there are more important things of concern.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 17th, 2016 at 5:12 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

So instead of discussing the crux of the issue we are just going to indulge in pointless gossip?

Malcolm wrote:

The issue being what, monks like to watch porn? Everyone knows this.

kirtu said:

The issue being that the renunciates should not be indulging in porn. The other issue would have been that the ngakpa practitioners would also have been bared from indulging in porn (and I was shocked about the sex on premises point as well).

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

Honestly, who cares? Children being killed by bombs in Aleppo and Yemen is far more important. The wholesale destruction of the biosphere by capitalism is far more important. A few people watching people f%^king and a few people f%^king in a monastery is of absolutely no importance at all by comparison. Anyway, this the age of five degenerations. We cannot have high expectations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 17th, 2016 at 3:36 AM

Title: Re: King Ajatasatru Bathed in Troughs of Butter and Sandal Wood

Content:

Zhen Li said:

I am not sure where this appears outside of the Tibetan Vinaya Ksudraka, but in Buton's History of Indian and Tibetan Buddhism he relates how Mahakasyapa knew that when Ajatasatru heard of the Buddha's death he would surely die unless he was placed into first seven troughs of fresh butter and then a trough of sandal wood. This happens, the Bramin Varsaka acts as Kasyapa instructed him to, and the king indeed recovers.

I thought this was very strange. Does anyone have any insight into what is going on here? Perhaps a commentary in Tibetan says something. Obermiller cites Vinayaksudraka Kg. HDUL. XI. 290-1.

Thanks

Malcolm wrote:

Fresh butter and sandalwood are both remedies for pitta illnesses.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 17th, 2016 at 1:26 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

So instead of discussing the crux of the issue we are just going to indulge in pointless gossip?

Malcolm wrote:

The issue being what, monks like to watch porn? Everyone knows this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 17th, 2016 at 12:53 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, at least I know how to say 'porn' in Tibetan now.

BTW, does anyone have a guess about where the story took place?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, it would either have to be Rigdzin Ling, Vajrayāna Foundation or Tashi Choling.

dzogchungpa said:

Tashi Choling is in Oregon and i don't think RL could be described as being "located at the bottom of a pretty meadow".

Malcolm wrote:

Process of exclusion then...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 17th, 2016 at 12:06 AM

Title: Re: "You Can't Watch Pornos in the Monastery": Tibetan Tantra, Imagined Pleasure, and the Virtuality of Desire

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, at least I know how to say 'porn' in Tibetan now.

BTW, does anyone have a guess about where the story took place?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, it would either have to be Rigdzin Ling, Vajrayāna Foundation or Tashi Choling.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 16th, 2016 at 11:45 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, but we do have Red Hats, and they are working themselves up into a frenzy. When Trump loses the election, I predict they will lash out with unprecedented violence.

treehuggingoctopus said:

That is very likely.

Malcolm wrote:

It is almost certain:

“If she’s in office, I hope we can start a coup. She should be in prison or shot. That’s how I feel about it,” Dan Bowman, a 50-year-old contractor, said of Hillary Clinton, the Democratic nominee. “We’re going to have a revolution and take them out of office if that’s what it takes. There’s going to be a lot of bloodshed. But that’s what it’s going to take. . . . I would do whatever I can for my country.”

<https://www.bostonglobe.com/news/politics/2016/10/15/donald-trump-warnings-conspiracy-rig-election-are-stoking-anger-among-his-followers/LcCY6e0QOcfH8VdeK9UdsM/story.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 16th, 2016 at 10:41 PM

Title: Re: Demonic Possession in Buddhism

Content:

Lhasa said:

I'm trying to rid my body of shaktipat/kundalini/shiva type introjects.

Malcolm wrote:

\

Practice yantra or trulkhor.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 16th, 2016 at 9:57 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Nemo said:

The pieces are already in place for a war with Russia.

Malcolm wrote:

This is just FUD being propagated by Russian ultranationalists.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 16th, 2016 at 9:04 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

Thing is, you do not have brownshirts marching across your capital. We do. And some people at the helm seem suddenly very eager to repeat the Great War.

Malcolm wrote:

No, but we do have Red Hats, and they are working themselves up into a frenzy. When Trump loses the election, I predict they will lash out with unprecedented violence.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 16th, 2016 at 8:35 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

The whole POTUS business is making me feel cold and indifferent now.

Malcolm wrote:

You would feel a whole lot less indifferent if Trump won.

treehuggingoctopus said:

I am not sure if you got my point. I did not say I do not care. I am hoping that Trump will not get the presidential chair. It is just that the (increasingly) staggering amount of bad things happening daily dulls the mind. You Yankees may or may not know the feeling. Europe has always been a powder keg, and right now everyone is playing with fire again.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is why we split Europe and perpetrated ethnic cleansing, genocide and human trafficking in the Americas — not enough trees or land, too many damn kings, too many paupers, too many wars, and too many priests.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 16th, 2016 at 8:10 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

MiphamFan said:

Modern conservatives are Whigs, that's why they look to Burke for inspiration. Burke himself was a Whig.

19th century conservatives didn't see themselves as following Burke. The Tories still opposed the Corn Laws until Peel.

Malcolm wrote:

The problem here, MF, is that there is no unified conservative movement worldwide. So you keep on talking about Whigs and Tories, these things do not apply to the US.

MiphamFan said:

Nonetheless, British and American political thought have been the greatest mutual influences on one another ever since American Independence. I mean, the very fact that you yourself pointed out that American conservatives claim to follow Burke testifies to this.

Malcolm wrote:

Interestingly, while Burke opposed the French Revolution, he was a supporter of American Independence.

MiphamFan said:

I'm also not saying that the only alternative to Whiggism is Toryism/Conservatism; almost every other view of history humanity has developed, from China to India to Iceland does not view history as teleologically leading to greater "progress". I am just saying that modern "conservatism" is mainly Whiggish.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, most regimes in History regarded themselves as the apex of progress.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 16th, 2016 at 7:26 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

dreambow said:

"That is because it is ancient news" The media didn't touch it then or now. Is the media gagged, are most journalists intimidated? Do the media moguls who pay editors and journalists salaries own them? It appears so.

Malcolm wrote:

It is because everyone understands that money = power.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 16th, 2016 at 1:15 AM

Title: Re: Demonic Possession in Buddhism

Content:

Lhasa said:

Would a 'thun-rwa', Tibetan shaman's rattle, be helpful in clearing these kinds of energies, beings?

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on whose doing the rattling.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 15th, 2016 at 10:45 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 15th, 2016 at 10:18 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

MiphamFan said:

Modern conservatives are Whigs, that's why they look to Burke for inspiration. Burke himself was a Whig.

19th century conservatives didn't see themselves as following Burke. The Tories still opposed the Corn Laws until Peel.

Malcolm wrote:

The problem here, MF, is that there is no unified conservative movement worldwide. So you keep on talking about Whigs and Tories, these things do not apply to the US.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 15th, 2016 at 10:07 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

MiphamFan said:

I'm not an alt-righter, where did I ever say I was?

All I said was their criticism (Mencius Moldbug among others) of modern conservatism is justified. Conservatism never conserves anything. I have read NRx articles before, I don't really follow alt-right sites like Breitbart.

Malcolm wrote:

Conservatism has its roots in the writings of Burke, among others, and embraced free trade and so on nearly from its inception.

Buckley aptly defines American Conservative principles here:

It is the job of centralized government (in peacetime) to protect its citizens' lives, liberty and property. All other activities of government tend to diminish freedom and hamper progress. The growth of government (the dominant social feature of this century) must be fought relentlessly. In this great social conflict of the era, we are, without reservations, on the libertarian side.

Read more at: <http://www.nationalreview.com/content/magazines-credenda>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 15th, 2016 at 9:55 PM

Title: Re: Ayn Rand Sucks - Split from POTUS Part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, is there are philosophy here to counter?

AlexMcLeod said:

Wouldn't that be classical Stoicism?

Malcolm wrote:

Not even remotely.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 15th, 2016 at 9:49 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

MiphamFan said:

19th century Tories were pro-conserving the environment, anti-foreign intervention, anti-privatization. Laissez faire economics, "free" markets, deregulation, etc were Whiggish policies. It was a Whiggish/Liberal government who started the Opium Wars in China.

In the US even Theodore Roosevelt's Republicans were against destruction of nature by market forces.

Where is that conservatism now?

Modern conservatives just pay lip service to conserving "social values" while being completely Whiggish on everything else.

Malcolm wrote:

Alt-right = fascism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 15th, 2016 at 9:10 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

MiphamFan said:

Their criticism of conservatism as useless at conserving anything (besides the interests of elites), basically being another branch of liberalism, is justified.

Malcolm wrote:

No, I don't think so. They are just immature john birchers.

They are like political script kiddies; just as script kiddies don' really know anything about computer programming, the Alt-right crew are for the most part uneducated, knowing nothing of history, law and economics.

For example:

During the speech at a rally in West Palm Beach, FL, Trump... also claimed that Clinton "meets in secret with international banks to plot the destruction of U.S. sovereignty in order to enrich these global financial powers" and that the election may be "in fact controlled by a small handful of global special interests rigging the system."

Anyone who believes this is an idiot. This is just a dog whistle to those fools who still believe in the Protocols of Zion, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 15th, 2016 at 8:59 PM

Title: Re: Ayn Rand Sucks - Split from POTUS Part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, is there are philosophy here to counter?

Queequeg said:

I've never been able to figure that out. I can't tell if you're right or I'm just dense. There's a sizable community who take this seriously. I'm hesitant to conclude all those people are stupid and tend to presume I'm missing something.

What I know is that ass holes tend to refer to Ayn Rand to suggest that their behavior is principled.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a sizable community that takes this seriously too:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 15th, 2016 at 8:54 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

MiphamFan said:

They are an offshoot of and dumbing down of NRx, Neoreaction; the mainstream media completely neglected this connection.

Reactionaries don't see themselves as conservatives, they see conservatism as weak. And really they are quite justified on that, what have Republicans in the US or Conservatives in the UK conserved over the last century?

Malcolm wrote:

Justified in what? Racism and sexism? The alt-right crew are idiots. BTW, I am quite aware of the rebranding of NRx, etc., etc., as the alt-right.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 15th, 2016 at 8:51 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Nemo said:

Alt right is not conservative though...

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, they despise conservatives for not being racist enough.

The Cicada said:

I think it's inexcusable for the Clintons to deny Bill's mixed-race son.

Malcolm wrote:

People who read Infowars, etc., will believe anything — the poor, misinformed dunderheads that they are.

<http://www.snopes.com/bill-clinton-illegitimate-son/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 15th, 2016 at 8:46 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Nemo said:

Can't wait for the season finale of America November 8th.

treehuggingoctopus said:

The whole POTUS business is making me feel cold and indifferent now.

Malcolm wrote:

You would feel a whole lot less indifferent if Trump won.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 15th, 2016 at 8:45 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

dreambow said:

The media is asleep at the wheel....not impartial, not addressing any of the real issues. I was reading WikiLeaks and one of the latest releases about Obama picking the key players in his cabinet from the list given to him by Citibank. Lets face it the power behind the throne appears to be Wall Street and other big players. Of course no one is really shocked by this revelation but the media refuses to touch it, let alone tackle it.

Malcolm wrote:

That is because it is ancient news.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 15th, 2016 at 9:57 AM

Title: Re: Ayn Rand Sucks - Split from POTUS Part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, is there are philosophy here to counter?

undefineable said:

Any serious counter-arguments to Rand's philosophy?

Malcolm wrote:

Is there a philosophy to counter?

Queequeg said:

Fwiw.

Wikipedia:

Objectivism is a philosophical system developed by Russian American writer Ayn Rand (1905–1982). Rand first expressed Objectivism in her fiction, most notably The Fountainhead (1943) and Atlas Shrugged (1957), and later in nonfiction essays and books. Leonard Peikoff, a professional philosopher and Rand's designated intellectual heir, later gave it a more formal structure. Peikoff characterizes Objectivism as a "closed system" that is not subject to change.

Objectivism's central tenets are that reality exists independently of consciousness, that human beings have direct contact with reality through sense perception, that one can attain objective knowledge from perception through the process of concept formation and inductive logic, that the proper moral purpose of one's life is the pursuit of one's own happiness (rational self-interest), that the only social system consistent with this morality is one that displays full respect for individual rights embodied in laissez-faire capitalism, and that the role of art in human life is to transform humans' metaphysical ideas by selective reproduction of reality into a physical form—a work of art—that one can comprehend and to which one can respond emotionally.

Academic philosophers have mostly ignored or rejected Rand's philosophy. Nonetheless, Objectivism has been a significant influence among libertarians and American conservatives. The Objectivist movement, which Rand founded, attempts to spread her ideas to the public and in academic settings.

More here: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Objectivism_%28Ayn_Rand%29?wprov=sfla1

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 15th, 2016 at 9:21 AM

Title: Re: Ayn Rand Sucks - Split from POTUS Part 3

Content:

undefineable said:

Any serious counter-arguments to Rand's philosophy?

Malcolm wrote:

Is there a philosophy to counter?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 15th, 2016 at 5:17 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Nemo said:

Alt right is not conservative though...

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, they despise conservatives for not being racist enough.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 15th, 2016 at 12:30 AM

Title: Re: Materialists in hiding

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

By all means continue to denigrate and dismiss atheists. Continue to preach against them. You have listed a couple of celebrities as being normative for all atheists. Richard Dawkins isn't the atheist pope. He gets press because he is contrarian and provoking.

maybay said:

He writes influential books, which many people buy. Can you name an atheist currently more influential than Dawkins?

Malcolm wrote:

Marx.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 14th, 2016 at 11:59 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

...part of which can be laid at the feet of the mealy-mouthed, corporate Democrats and their complete selling out and ridicule of a big chunk of poor, white rural people.

Malcolm wrote:

Trump's base is the Tea Party, the racist backlash that arose from the election of a African-American president, whose constituency is primarily white people, often found in rural and peri-urban areas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 14th, 2016 at 10:45 PM

Title: Re: Apology to the Naga Realm

Content:

pemachophel said:

Yeah, at first I thought Malcolm's answer was correct in terms of how this mistake crept in. One of the translator's typed in the Tibetan wrong. However, when I typed in the correct Tibetan into an on-line Tib-Eng dictionary yesterday, I also got "musk." So lu-tsi may be a synonym for la-tsi (unless the dictionary is wrong, which also could be). In this case, one needed to know that the lu tsi in the text was not a compound term, but that lu (klu) was an adjective (or possessive).

Malcolm wrote:

Hi.

klu rtsi (ལུ་རྩི) is definitely not a synonym for gla rtsi (གླ་རྩི). Synonyms for musk included ལྷུ་ལྷུ་, poison for snakes; ལྷུ་ལྷུ་ཕྱེད, agent that terrifies snakes. In this case the entry is not in a Tibetan-Tibetan dictionary, but just an erroneous entry in the Valby dictionary.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 14th, 2016 at 10:34 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

The Cicada said:

Not true.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, absolutely. White nationalism, racism, and xenophobia have no place in Mahāyāna.

The Cicada said:

And regard for our nation, towards our families and communities a willingness to face harsh truth squarely? Mahāyāna, as known to Malcolm, forbids these things?

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāyāna has no place for disregard of and enmity towards other nations, families and communities, the very things the so-called "Alt-right" thrives upon.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 14th, 2016 at 9:04 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

DGA said:

alt-right jingoism are antithetical to Mahayana.

The Cicada said:

Not true.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, absolutely. White nationalism, racism, and xenophobia have no place in Mahāyāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 14th, 2016 at 4:07 AM

Title: Re: Ayn Rand Sucks - Split from POTUS Part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

Goddamn I want to kick someone in the nuts.

Malcolm wrote:

John Galt, perhaps?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 14th, 2016 at 12:52 AM

Title: Re: Materialists in hiding

Content:

maybay said:

The imputation of self... plays no part in the causal samsaric flow.

Malcolm wrote:

The imputation of a self is the basis and sustainer of samsara.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 10:43 PM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:

DGA said:
PS Ayn Rand sucks and Ryan doesn't know this, the little twerp.

Queequeg said:
Can we talk about how utterly awful Ayn Rand is?
Infuriating that people wear the fact that they have slogged through Atlas Shrugged like a badge of honor. Like they had finished Moby Dick or Ulysses. I wonder if they realize the brain damage they caused themselves. When they praise Ayn Rand I am convinced of the dementia.

Who is John Galt? Ugh.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, reading Ayn Rand is the literary equivalent of sniffing glue.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 7:39 PM
Title: Re: Apology to the Naga Realm
Content:
Soma999 said:
Thank you everyone for your input.

Still, if an analysis on how this word came to be translated as musk and why it's wrong would be interesting for me.

Malcolm wrote:
It is a mistake present in an electronic dictionary, where someone apparently entered an incorrect spelling of gla rtsi (musk), or were incorrectly informed by a Tibetan.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 9:59 AM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:
MiphamFan said:
I wouldn't vote for anyone even if I could. I would try to prepare a bunker though.

Malcolm wrote:
That is a bit paranoid.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 9:26 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

MiphamFan said:

I have to say I am much more frightened of Clinton provoking a nuclear war with Russia than Trump.

<http://edition.cnn.com/2016/10/12/politics/us-russia-tensions-cold-war/index.html>

Malcolm wrote:

Good thing you ca't vote in US elections then, since this is just FUD.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 5:30 AM

Title: Re: Alexander Gardner on "Rime"--

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

I thought that the Rime movement was an attempt to preserve (obscure) practices from (obscure) lineages that were in danger of being lost.

Malcolm wrote:

The activities of Dzogchen masters is vast.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 5:29 AM

Title: Re: Alexander Gardner on "Rime"--

Content:

conebeckham said:

LOL. That's actually fairly accurate.

It certainly doesn't mean mixing up practices from a variety of lineages.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course not. Rime masters practice Dzogchen themselves, and teach the lineages that they came from, respecting their integrity.

conebeckham said:

,...and espouse "Shentong" as the pinnacle "philosophical view."

LOL.

Malcolm wrote:

Well some Kongtrul influenced Dzogchen masters do, others, such as Jigme Lingpa espouse Tsongkapa's formulation of Madhyamaka as the best; still others, such as Mipham, follow Gorampa for the main part.

But in Dzogchen, the two truths do not exist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 5:25 AM

Title: Re: Alexander Gardner on "Rime"--

Content:

conebeckham said:

Pretty good article about what "Rime" means, and doesn't mean, in the Fall 2016 issue of Buddhadharma. Tried to find it online, as I don't necessarily support "Buddhist Magazine" culture, but I read it and thought it was worthwhile.

Mr. Gardner is associated with the "Treasury of Lives" website, by the way.

Malcolm wrote:

Rime just means people who practice Dzogchen who started in Kagyu, Sakya or Gelug.

conebeckham said:

LOL. That's actually fairly accurate.

It certainly doesn't mean mixing up practices from a variety of lineages.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course not. Rime masters practice Dzogchen themselves, and teach the lineages that they came from, respecting their integrity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 5:22 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

"Eat shit."

That's how I'm going to greet people until election day.

Malcolm wrote:

I know how you feel. Frankly, however, the Republicans have proven so incompetent, feckless, and shorn of any semblance of decency, they should never, ever be allowed to have political power in the US ever again.

Queequeg said:

Look, man. I'm giving you a hard time. I'm a NYer and bitching is our birthright.

But you're right...

Recovery from the Bern... I'm at the stage of acceptance.

This is why I am going to gulp vote for Clinton:

I don't want my daughter growing up in a world where the President is such an unapologetic pig. She's a toddler, but her first memories of the President of the United States should not be some guy who brags about molesting women. I worry about her growing up and encountering ass holes like him. As a consolation, she grows up seeing a woman as President.

I reserve the right to hate on her as soon as the election is called for her... probably around 9 pm Eastern.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, I voted for President Sanders. He is my president. Clinton is a placeholder.

I do however think that her real sins have been covered over by media-generated distortions. For example, Yemen, not Benghazi, is a real sin of Secretary Clinton.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 5:20 AM

Title: Re: Materialists in hiding

Content:

binocular said:

These are nonsensical questions.

They are like asking "Does x see x? Does x have x?"

maybay said:

Davidbrainerd said that the 'you' can be found. So its a fair to ask how this might happen. SD knows it can't be answered. This just proves that the self is imagined. It is not a dependently arisen phenomena. When you apprehend a self, you are not seeing as it is. You are making a false imputation.

boda said:

You say that the self is not a dependently arisen phenomena. If it's not dependently arisen then it must be independently arisen. How, pray tell, is that possible? An immortal soul?

Malcolm wrote:
It's just a dependent designation.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 5:12 AM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:
Unknown said:
Dear Donald,

"Thank you for your letter and for your enclosures. I have given some thought to our recent correspondence. It is always difficult to decide on how to respond to people whose ethos is so alien and, in fact, repellent to one's own. It is not that I take exception to the general points made by you but that every ounce of my energy has been devoted to an active opposition to cruel bigotry, compulsive violence, and the sadistic persecution which has characterised the philosophy and practice of Trumpism.

"I feel obliged to say that the emotional universes we inhabit are so distinct, and in deepest ways opposed, that nothing fruitful or sincere could ever emerge from association between us.

"I should like you to understand the intensity of this conviction on my part. It is not out of any attempt to be rude that I say this but because of all that I value in human experience and human achievement.

"Yours sincerely,
Bertrand Russel"

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 5:08 AM
Title: Re: Alexander Gardner on "Rime"--
Content:
conebeckham said:
Pretty good article about what "Rime" means, and doesn't mean, in the Fall 2016 issue of Buddhadharma. Tried to find it online, as I don't necessarily support "Buddhist Magazine" culture, but I read it and thought it was worthwhile.

Mr. Gardner is associated with the "Treasury of Lives" website, by the way.

Malcolm wrote:
Rime just means people who practice Dzogchen who started in Kagyu, Sakya or Gelug.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 5:07 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You can talk all you want about how terrible she is, but that really is not the point. Trump cannot be allowed anywhere near the White House. Just bite down on the turd sandwich, chew and swallow.

Queequeg said:

"Eat shit."

That's how I'm going to greet people until election day.

Malcolm wrote:

I know how you feel. Frankly, however, the Republicans have proven so incompetent, feckless, and shorn of any semblance of decency, they should never, ever be allowed to have political power in the US ever again.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 4:58 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

...she has established that she has terrible judgment.

Malcolm wrote:

And so has every president that has come before her in both parties since WWII, apart from Carter. And I think, in all fairness, her judgement is not worse than W's. It may no be better, but is certainly isn't worse.

Queequeg said:

Oh, I guess that's a hall pass. Shouldn't talk about how bad she is and how frak we are.

Malcolm wrote:

You can talk all you want about how terrible she is, but that really is not the point. Trump cannot be allowed anywhere near the White House. Just bite down on the turd sandwich, chew and swallow.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 4:52 AM

Title: Re: Apology to the Naga Realm

Content:

pemachophel said:

Thanks Malcolm.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course, my pleasure.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 4:50 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

...she has established that she has terrible judgment.

Malcolm wrote:

And so has every president that has come before her in both parties since WWII, apart from Carter. And I think, in all fairness, her judgement is not worse than W's. It may no be better, but is certainly isn't worse.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 4:37 AM

Title: Re: Apology to the Naga Realm

Content:

pemachophel said:

OK, I think I have the revised translation. On page 18 of the Saraswati Bhawan on-line version, where it says "Musk...", I believe it should read:

Naga plants and healing medicinals, such as Suitable flat [leaves] and sprouts,

The problem is that one of the translators simply typed into their on-line Tib-Eng dictionary klu rtsi and got the word "musk." Since this person was not conversant with Naga puja and lore, this did not raise a red flag. Since I trusted the translator, I also did not notice this (even though I should have).

However, now I'm wondering if the next line, reading "The patterns of colors of a peacock [feather]," is correct. This does not really fit as a type of healing plant. Perhaps rma bya'i mdongs is the proper Tibetan name of a medicinal herb. Malcolm?

Malcolm wrote:

mdongs here means the "eye" or bindu (thig) on a feather (sgro) of a peacock. so it means a peacock feather, simply put. mdongs - ...1) sgro thig ...rma bya'i sgro mdongs bkrag mdangs can,..., sgro thig - rma bya sogs kyi sgro'i mig

This passage: ལྷ་ཅི་དང་ལྷ་ཅི་གི་ལོ་ལོ་ལོ་ལོ་ simple means " The elixir/tonic and restorative medicine of the nāgās is as follows..."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 4:24 AM

Title: Re: On the importance of the white sangha...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There will be many such "siddhas" who confidently rely on false craziness.

dzogchungpa said:

"False craziness" = what in Tibetan?

Malcolm wrote:

smyo brdzu: ma smyo yang smyo khul byed pa, someone who is not crazy/insane pretending to be crazy/insane.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 3:57 AM

Title: Re: On the importance of the white sangha...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Also from the same prediction:

Also there will be many siddhas with the ability to ripen and liberate themselves and others, free from obstruction in signs of accomplishments. The lineage of siddhas who have taken dākinīs and dharmapālas as servants will become widely spread just like a cluster of stars.

But the "strict" discipline of those believed to be siddhas will be guzzling booze. Their qualities will be bad behavior. Their practice will be attachment and aversion. Their experience will be avarice. Their signs of accomplishment will be spawning bastards. The way they benefit migrating beings is seducing groups of young women. Their activities impoverish the land. There will be many such "siddhas" who confidently rely on false craziness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 3:44 AM

Title: Re: On the importance of the white sangha...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Oddly enough, the harshest criticism of so-called village Ngakpas (grong sngags pa) are in predictions of Padmasambhava.

heart said:

I am interested to hear more about this as it might explain a few experiences I had, please continue.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

For example, from the Konchog Chidu:

Pekar possess bhandhes, only a few men possess vows. Since demons and spirits possess ngakpas, commitments do not exist and illness increase. Since Gyalpos possess men, they start civil wars. Since Srinmo possess women, they commit adultery, administer poisons and are deceptive. Since The'u rang possess children, they steal, have fevers, and are badly behaved. There are many madmen and rabid dogs. Since the amount of food of sentient beings diminish, the essence of their elements is harmed. Efforts will be made to reach the top of the Himalayas and there will be farming on the mountains.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 3:02 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

And just to be fair and balanced:

So today I'm performing a public service on behalf of all the voters. I went back and re-read all the criticisms and attacks and best-selling "exposés" leveled at Hillary Rodham Clinton over the past quarter-century. And I've compiled a list of all her High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

Here they are:

1. When she was first lady, she murdered White House lawyer Vince Foster and then dumped his body in a park.
2. She drove Vince Foster to commit suicide through her temper tantrums.
3. She was having an affair with Vince Foster.
4. She's a lesbian.
5. Chelsea isn't Bill Clinton's child.
6. She murdered Vince Foster to cover up that she once bought a tract of undeveloped land in Arkansas and lost money.

7. She murdered Vince Foster to cover up her role in firing the White House travel department.
8. After she murdered Vince Foster, she ransacked his office in the middle of the night and stole all the documents proving her guilt.
9. When Bill Clinton was governor of Arkansas, she was a partner in the state's top law firm, and it sometimes did work involving the state government.
10. She once invested in commodities futures on the advice of a friend and made $100,000, proving she's a crook.
11. She once invested in real estate on the advice of another friend and lost $100,000, also proving she's a crook.
12. Unnamed and unverifiable sources have told Peggy Noonan things about the Clintons that are simply too terrible to repeat.
13. The personnel murdered at Benghazi make her the first secretary of state to lose overseas personnel to terrorism — apart from Condi Rice, Colin Powell, Madeleine Albright, George Schultz, Dean Rusk and some others.
14. Four State Department staff were murdered at Benghazi, compared with only 119 others murdered overseas under every secretary of state combined since World War II.
15. She illegally sent classified emails from her personal server, except that apparently they weren't classified at the time.
16. She may have cynically wriggled around the email law by "technically" complying with it.
17. She once signed a lucrative book contract when she was a private citizen.
18. Donald Trump says she "should be in jail," and he's a serial bankrupt casino developer in Atlantic City, so he should know.
19. Former House Majority Leader Tom Delay says his "law-enforcement sources" tell him she is "about to be indicted" — and if a man once convicted of money laundering and conspiracy doesn't have good law-enforcement sources, who does?
20. She's a hard-left radical who wants to break up the nuclear family.
21. She's a conservative "mousewife" who refused to break up her own family.
22. She's in favor of single moms.
23. She refused to be a single mom.

24. When she was first lady of Arkansas, she pandered to conservative voters by dyeing her hair.

25. Before that, she totally insulted them by refusing to.

26. She's a frump.

27. She spends too much money on designer dresses.

28. She has "cankles."

29. She has a grating voice.

30. She yells into the microphone.

31. She spent 18 years in Arkansas and some of the people she knew turned out to be crazy rednecks and crooks.

32. She's in the pay of the mafia.

33. She's in the pay of the Chinese government.

34. She's in the pay of the Wall Street banks.

35. In order to suppress the billing records from her time at the Rose Law Firm in Little Rock, she cleverly packed them up and took them to the White House rather than shredding them.

36. When she handed over the documents to public officials, they couldn't find any evidence she'd committed any crimes, so she must have doctored them.

37. Congress spent tens of millions of dollars and six years investigating her investment in the Whitewater real-estate project, and, while they didn't actually find anything, they wouldn't have spent all that money if there weren't something there.

38. By cleverly hiding all evidence of her crimes in the Whitewater affair, she caused Congress to waste all that taxpayers' money.

39. When she ran for senator of New York, she was still a fan of the Chicago Cubs.

40. She once said the Clintons were thinking of adopting a child, and they didn't follow through.

41. She was photographed holding her hand near her mouth during the raid that killed Osama bin Laden.

42. She's got brain damage.
43. She's old.
44. She's really ambitious and calculating, unlike all the other people running for president.
45. She secretly supported Palestinian terrorists, Puerto Rican terrorists and Guatemalan terrorists.
46. She secretly supported a group that wants to give Maine back to the Indians.
47. She's a secret follower of "radical prophet" Saul Alinsky.
48. She did her law degree at Yale, and it's a well-known "socialist finishing school."
49. When she was young, she did things to build up her résumé rather than just for their own good.
50. When Bill was president, she "allowed" him to keep people waiting.
51. She's married to a sex addict.
52. She's an enemy of traditional marriage.
53. She didn't divorce her husband.
54. His philandering is her fault because she is too strong, and too weak, and too frumpy, and too fat, and too cold.
55. She's hostile to women who fool around with her husband.
56. A divorced taxi driver in Florida told me that if Hillary is elected president, "women will take over everything."
57. She insulted Tammy Wynette.
58. When they left the White House, she and Bill bought a big house in New York that they couldn't afford.
59. She sometimes calls her staff during dinner, even when they're out at a restaurant.
60. She claimed there was a "vast right-wing conspiracy" against her husband, and it turned out there was nothing but a bunch of tycoons financing private investigators, and some fake think tanks and books and news sites and stuff.
61. When she got married, she didn't "stay at home and bake cookies."

62. She supported the Iraq war because she's a secret foreign-policy conservative.

63. She's a secret foreign-policy radical with a plan to impose worldwide "radical social experimentation" through the World Bank.

64. She is secretly plotting to let children sue their parents for making them take out the garbage.

65. She looked bored during the Benghazi hearings.

66. Oh, yeah — and she totally has a vagina.

It's clear: Hillary must be stopped. Hearings now!

<http://www.marketwatch.com/story/all-the-terrible-things-hillary-clinton-has-done-in-one-big-list-2016-02-04>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 2:56 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

PS, the only year they had a person of color running at the top of the ticket was against Obama in 2008. The rest of the time their top of the ticket as been a white person (Nader 2000; Cobb 2004, Stein 2012, 2016).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 2:53 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

amanitamusc said:

If Bernie used it as a platform to run?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, you have to understand that Stein is part of the 1%. She behaves that way as well. Not only that but she owns stock in Merck (Vioxx) and Home Depot (union busting, <https://teamsternation.blogspot.com/2011/04/home-depots-disgusting-union-busting.html>).

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 2:33 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

We? Who the F is "we"?

You? Well, rest assured, I was not referring to you in the latter half of my comment about the Crook's supporters.

Malcolm wrote:

Basically, "we" is everyone who is voting "for" Clinton at this point is voting to keep Trump out, even her fervent devotees.

And quite honestly, I hope the GOP loses their majorities. They have proven themselves incapable of controlling the batshit crazy wing of their party.

At this point, people who would have voted democratic, but are voting for either Jill "Watch me get arrested" Stein or Gary "What's Aleppo" Johnson are idiots. I cannot understand why the Libs did not put Bill Weld as the top of the ticket. They might have had a real chance. Bill Weld is ok.

amanitamusc said:

I think we might have had a real chance if Bernie took Stein's offer to run in her place.

Malcolm wrote:

Nah, Greens are mainly incompetent white liberals who do not understand their own privilege.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 13th, 2016 at 12:52 AM

Title: Re: On the importance of the white sangha...

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Now why would somebody anonymously forge something like this and then ascribe it to somebody?

For the money? The power? The hot chicks? The fast cars?

Malcolm wrote:

They even translated the title of this fake text wrong. It should be, " The Sūtra of the Black Locks of Samantabhadra."

To answer your question though: branding.

There is a reason why the provenance of a text should be subjected to scrutiny.

tomamundsen said:

Is the rest of the information in the article similarly unreliable? Or mostly true?

Malcolm wrote:

In my opinion, it is mostly concerned with silly arguments such as:

The reason now that we place such importance on the outer appearance is a question of bodhicitta rather than of essential necessity. If Buddhism, let alone Vajrayana Buddhism, is to survive in the West - there must be an alternative to the monastic style. Buddhism will never be established even as a minor religion in Western countries as long as there are no clergy apart from monastics. This is why we have to be so scrupulous about our costume and the precise details of the vows involved. This is why we have to insist on uncut hair. Any deviation from the historical model undermines our position completely.

This sentiment is complete bollocks. There is no set, official Nakpa outfit or hair style. Ngakpas dress a hundred different ways, corresponding with the needs of sentient beings. They can wear three robes, or Gucci suits.

What is important is practicing Dzogchen, not being concerned with one's hair style, clothing, or other relative, secondary accouterments.

Further:

We simply advocate the gö-kar-chang-lo as a way of integrating with life in the West - a way of making working family life a method of practice that can inspire others.

It is unnecessary, and in fact bizarre, to insist that copying Tibetan clothes is necessary for making family life a method of practice in the West.

tomamundsen said:

until the 11th Century, but thereafter the gö-kar-chang-lo'i-dé began to diminish and female practitioners in particular were forced into the background.

Malcolm wrote:

This is an unsubstantiated (male) fantasy. There is no evidence to support this. One, there is no evidence to support the idea that Ngakpas went into decline following the 11th century. Second, women, when they appear in ancient literature at all, generally appear only as the mothers and wives of important men. I can count on the fingers of one hand the number of female authors in Tibetan Buddhism before the 20th Century, all of them Nyingma.

tomamundsen said:

This was the time when they began to live in remote villages in order to continue their practises. They would live anywhere sufficiently far from the large monastic institutions. It would seem that the disparaging term 'village ngakpa' came from that period, as a way of diminishing respect given to the ngakphang sangha in places where the monasteries had less influence.

Malcolm wrote:

This piece of sociological speculation is also completely unsubstantiated and is not born out by even a superficial observation of Tibetan society. Ngakpa Dratsangs always operated within close proximity to large Monastic establishments. The exception to this would be Tibetan Lamas who fled local wars with their families and followers and relocated to hidden lands. When established, they would automatically set about reestablishing Monastic Buddhism, monks and all. Oddly enough, the harshest criticism of so-called village Ngakpas (grong sngags pa) are in predictions of Padmasambhava.

I could go on, but what's the point?

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 12th, 2016 at 11:38 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. We are just talking about denying the Whitehouse to a uninformed, paranoid, sissy manbaby with a serious narcissistic personality disorder.

Queequeg said:

We? Who the F is "we"?

You? Well, rest assured, I was not referring to you in the latter half of my comment about the Crook's supporters.

Malcolm wrote:

Basically, "we" is everyone who is voting "for" Clinton at this point is voting to keep Trump out, even her fervent devotees.

And quite honestly, I hope the GOP loses their majorities. They have proven themselves incapable of controlling the batshit crazy wing of their party.

At this point, people who would have voted democratic, but are voting for either Jill "Watch me get arrested" Stein or Gary "What's Aleppo" Johnson are idiots. I cannot understand why the Libs did not put Bill Weld as the top of the ticket. They might have had a real chance. Bill Weld is ok.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 12th, 2016 at 11:03 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

Our discourse in these threads parallels the election discourse. Now that it's dominated by the Buffoon and the Crook, we're discoursing like middle schoolers about vomit and genitals or disingenuously promoting a candidate as the best option who has no clear idea why she's running except that it was an ambition of hers back in college and thinks it's now her turn.

Woe.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. We are just talking about denying the Whitehouse to a uninformed, paranoid, sissy manbaby with a serious narcissistic personality disorder.

My president is still Bernie Sanders. That is who I voted for. Now I am just voting against.

Any practitioner of Buddhadharma who does not understand why they need to vote against Trump has understood nothing about the Dharma and needs to start over at the beginning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 12th, 2016 at 9:41 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Fa Dao said:

a little surprised here Malcolm...as an accomplished scholar and debater I figured you would have something more convincing than that...

Norwegian said:

If someone holds several buckets full of vomit, and threatens to empty it over your furniture and belongings, do you need a scholar's dissertation on why this would be a bad thing?

Fa Dao said:

yes..especially if there is someone there saying I have to choose between that and another person standing there with a bucket of piss...I am not proTrump...its just that so far I have not been shown anything, anywhere that shows me he is worse than hillary

Malcolm wrote:

Then you have not been paying attention.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 12th, 2016 at 5:54 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Fa Dao said:

even with everything that has come out recently I am still not convinced that hillary is the "lesser of two evils"...

Malcolm wrote:

Trump cannot be allowed in the Whitehouse.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 11th, 2016 at 6:55 AM

Title: Re: On the importance of the white sangha...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty sure this whole piece is an old, anonymous forgery from the use of the term sngags 'phang, which actually does not exist in Tibetan.

For example, you can go run a search on it here:

https://www.tbrc.org/#library_BannerAdvanced

Search 1,007,324 pages of Tibetan, and you will never find it once, not to mention the so called "kun tu bzang po ral pa nag po'i mdo."

dzogchungpa said:

There's some discussion of the word here:

<https://approachingaro.org/comment/reply/30>

Malcolm wrote:

There are some discussions everywhere.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 11th, 2016 at 5:22 AM

Title: Re: Svabhava / Brahman

Content:

rachmiel said:

And ultimately?

Malcolm wrote:

They are empty.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 11th, 2016 at 5:08 AM

Title: Re: Svabhava / Brahman

Content:

rachmiel said:

So do processes exist?

Malcolm wrote:
Conventionally, yes.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, October 11th, 2016 at 4:48 AM
Title: Re: On the importance of the white sangha...
Content:

Sherab Dorje said:
Now why would somebody anonymously forge something like this and then ascribe it to somebody?

For the money? The power? The hot chicks? The fast cars?

Malcolm wrote:
They even translated the title of this fake text wrong. It should be, " The Sūtra of the Black Locks of Samantabhadra."

To answer your question though: branding.

There is a reason why the provenance of a text should be subjected to scrutiny.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, October 11th, 2016 at 4:39 AM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:
amanitamusc said:
My feeling is that when Bernie left there was no one to vote for .

Malcolm wrote:
Yup.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, October 11th, 2016 at 4:38 AM
Title: Re: On the importance of the white sangha...
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Pretty sure this whole piece is an old, anonymous forgery from the use of the term sngags 'phang, which actually does not exist in Tibetan.

For example, you can go run a search on it here:

https://www.tbrc.org/#library_BannerAdvanced

Search 1,007,324 pages of Tibetan, and you will never find it once, not to mention the so called "kun tu bzang po ral pa nag po'i mdo."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 11th, 2016 at 3:58 AM

Title: Re: Svabhava / Brahman

Content:

rachmiel said:

And ultimately speaking? Is there any true continuity/connection between the six "snapshots?"

On the ultimate level, is what we'd call a process -- a glass dropping and shattering on the floor, a seed sprouting and growing into a tree and getting old and dying, a human life from conception to death -- truly a process (a sequence of events/moments linked over time by causality) or is "process" just a figment of the mind's imagination?

Malcolm wrote:

There is no ultimate level which can be ascertained apart from the relative level. The two truths are inseparable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 11th, 2016 at 2:09 AM

Title: Re: Svabhava / Brahman

Content:

rachmiel said:

So, per the MMK, there is ultimately no causation, right? Therefore no continuity. Therefore each of these "moments" is utterly independent of the others:

Letting go of a glass.

The glass halfway to the floor.

The glass hitting the floor.

The glass shattering into pieces.

The sound of shattering.

The field of shards lying on the floor.

Any sense of connection/continuity is an illusion created by mind.

?

Malcolm wrote:

According MMK, conventionally speaking causes and effects are neither the same nor different, like milk and curd.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 11th, 2016 at 1:27 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Yeah. threatening to jail your political opponents is a real "knock out".

Oh wait, no it's not. It's insane, childish rhetoric befitting a two bit wannabe dictator.

amanitamusc said:

When Kissinger was SS he certainly deserved a sentence .H C and her role as SS would also make her a candidate for a striped suit.

This fact in no way qualifies trump as a leader.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, agreed, and from this point of view we would have to jail every politician from George Washington (Washington engaged in the ethnic cleansing of Native Americans, and was given the name Town Destroyer) onwards.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 11th, 2016 at 1:20 AM

Title: Re: Svabhava / Brahman

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Because that which dependently originates is empty, it is illusory.

rachmiel said:

Gotcha, thanks. Emptiness itself is not a phenomena to characterize as either real or illusory.

But is is a conceptual construct. In which case emptiness itself is empty. Right?

Malcolm wrote:

Emptiness is a dependent designation, so yes, it is itself empty.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 11th, 2016 at 12:36 AM

Title: Re: Svabhava / Brahman

Content:

rachmiel said:

This is an exchange from page 12 of the

https://www.dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=77&t=20407&start=220:

>>> rachMiel: This would mean that one of the cornerstones of Buddhist dharma, dependent arising, is ultimately illusion. Ditto, I assume, for the other biggies: anicca, anatman, rebirth, etc. Dharmakaya too.

>> Bakmoon: Precisely, all is illusory,

> Malcolm: Yes, Haribhadra states the path, including the attainment of buddhahood, is illusory from beginning to end.

If dependent arising = emptiness, and dependent arising is an illusion ... emptiness is an illusion also. But that's not what Nagarjuna asserts, right?

Malcolm wrote:

Because that which dependently originates is empty, it is illusory. Emptiness itself is not a phenomena to characterize as either real or illusory. To say something is empty is equivalent to saying it is illusory.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 10th, 2016 at 11:50 PM

Title: Re: Svabhava / Brahman

Content:

rachmiel said:

In Advaita, cause and effect holds at the conventional level (vyavaharika), but is meaningless at the ultimate level (paramarthika) in which there is only brahman.

Isn't that basically what Nagarjuna said (except for the brahman part) in the Mulamadhyamakakarika?

Malcolm wrote:

No, Nāgārjuna states that dependent origination and emptiness are basically the same thing:

That which originates in dependence is explained as emptiness, that is a dependent designation, that itself is the middle way.

And:

Whoever rejects the emptiness of dependent origination is one who rejects all mundane conventions.

And:

Whoever sees dependent origination sees suffering, the source of suffering, the cessation of suffering, and the path.

One of the Buddhist criticisms of Advaita is that their presentation of the relative, conventional level is faulty, and therefore, their presentation of the ultimate is consequently faulty.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 10th, 2016 at 11:05 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Unknown said:

I say this straightforwardly — I think Donald Trump is a pathological liar. It really is rather extraordinary.

Malcolm wrote:

-- Bernie Sanders 10/10/2016

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 10th, 2016 at 10:49 PM

Title: Re: Svabhava / Brahman

Content:

rachmiel said:

But if self is understood to be nothing other than _____ (the unfathomable mystery), can it still be said to be self? The statement "atman is brahman" can be effectively reduced to simply "brahman" since brahman is all there really is.

Malcolm wrote:

If this is the case, the cause and effect are rendered meaningless and Advaita cannot escape the fault of Satkaryavāda.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 10th, 2016 at 9:57 PM

Title: Re: Svabhava / Brahman

Content:

rachmiel said:

Yes.

I still wonder how different these teachings really are:

Buddhism: Don't identify with anything.

Advaita: Identify with no-thing.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is the latter is a view of self. The former is not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 10th, 2016 at 9:55 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Rakz said:

What an amazing knockout performance. We can officially say The Donald is back in it.

Clinton: OK, Donald. I know you're into big diversion tonight, anything to avoid talking about your campaign and the way it's exploding and the way Republicans are leaving you.

Malcolm wrote:

Poor Donald, a short, brash, annoying woman ran circles around you. Perhaps you need another line.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 10th, 2016 at 8:53 AM

Title: Re: Svabhava / Brahman

Content:

rachmiel said:

Advaita recognizes six kinds of knowledge, one of which, pratyaksha (perception) implies direct, immediate cognition. But I don't think pratyaksha and rigpa have much in common.

From <http://www.vmission.org.in/vedanta/articles/pramanas.htm>:

In all direct perception the knowledge is extremely clear but its scope is very limited. What we can directly see not only constitutes an extremely small iota of the wide spectrum of things existing in this universe, but many a times that which is directly cognized is far from truth.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said it is a special direct perception.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 10th, 2016 at 6:02 AM

Title: Re: Svabhava / Brahman

Content:

rachmiel said:

In Advaita knowledge experience is considered fleeting and ultimately illusory. Knowledge on the other hand is considered permanent; you don't have to re-learn that you are brahman.

Malcolm wrote:

By experience, a special kind of direct perception with one's senses is meant.

This knowledge (rig pa) is irreversible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 10th, 2016 at 5:16 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

The Cicada said:

Why else would we respond to the motto, "Make America Great Again?"

Malcolm wrote:

Elect Trump, and with his pathetic business record, the US will never recover, just like his casinos and other failed businesses.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 10th, 2016 at 5:13 AM

Title: Re: Svabhava / Brahman

Content:

rachmiel said:

Advaitan teachings are very rational, almost like a science of metaphysical reality. Knowledge is valued more than experience. Practice consists mostly of reading and contemplating the teachings, and maintaining a lifestyle conducive to this. Meditation is generally seen as optional.

Malcolm wrote:

In Dzogchen, experience is knowledge, without which one knows nothing other than abstractions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 10th, 2016 at 4:56 AM

Title: Re: Svabhava / Brahman

Content:

rachmiel said:

Malcolm: Gotcha.

If brahman has no attributes, therefore is undetectable, how can it be known that it is real?

In my understanding, Advaita's answers to this are:

1. You keep Neti Neti! -ing (rationally denying the ultimate truth of things/appearances) until the Truth (brahman) is all that remains.
2. You trust the word of the Hindu/Advaitan sages who have come to know the Truth with utter certainty.
3. You come to know the Truth with utter certainty via your studies/contemplation.

Malcolm wrote:

This is all completely intellectual.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 10th, 2016 at 4:21 AM

Title: Re: Svabhava / Brahman

Content:

rachmiel said:

Brahman is not like emptiness; phenomena are not "brahmanic."

The closest I can come to describing brahman (given my understanding of the term) is something like:

Everything is brahman: phenomena, mind, self, energy, mass, thought, etc. ad infinitum. You name it, it's brahman. (That which cannot be named, brahman too.) But bear in mind that this is just figurative, since brahman defies any literal description. Which is why for most traditional Advaita teachers, the less said about brahman the better.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, which is why I find it to be an incoherent view.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 10th, 2016 at 3:03 AM

Title: Re: Svabhava / Brahman

Content:

rachmiel said:

That might be how the teaching is delivered or interpreted. But "permanent" and "undifferentiated" are attributes. So the most accurate teaching wouldn't include either of these terms.

Malcolm wrote:

At base, is Brahmin an attribute of phenomena or not? Emptiness is an attribute of phenomena.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 10th, 2016 at 2:48 AM

Title: Re: Svabhava / Brahman

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Advaita teaches us to identify with a permanent, undifferentiated essence which possesses no attributes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 10th, 2016 at 2:36 AM

Title: Re: Experiences after some Mahakala and Vajrasattva meditations

Content:

purple1 said:

Thanks for the help, i didn't knew that a teacher is nessecary for practice Vajrasattva meditation. What about Mahakala? Is Mahakala meditation need a teacher like Vajrasattva meditation?

Malcolm wrote:

In order to practice any mantra of Mahakala, you need transmission too. In the latter case, many obstacles can arise if you do not do things in a proper way.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 9th, 2016 at 10:55 PM

Title: Re: Experiences after some Mahakala and Vajrasattva meditations

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Again false. This mantra exists in no sūtra.

Sherab Dorje said:

Not even the short one?

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. I have looked into this extensively. This confusion exists because there is a one hundred syllabe mantra of the tathāgātas found in sūtra, but it is completely different than Vajrasattva.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 9th, 2016 at 10:28 PM

Title: Re: Experiences after some Mahakala and Vajrasattva meditations

Content:

purple1 said:

Hi there. I am a theravada (hinayana) buddhist and i practice theravada (hinayana) meditations but sometimes i do meditation on Mahakala and Vajrasattva. I don't see that my life became better. I will detail it. Mahakala should defend me, he should remove the big hindrances and problems from my life. I don't experience it. Vajrasattva should clean my bad karmas, so i should experience less bad karmas in my present life. I don't experience it. WHY? The only interesting thing was i saw a blue buddha with blue lights around his body. I never saw such buddha before. Then i did a search on the internet with these words "blue buddha" and i saw the buddha on google, it was very similar like which i saw. Interesting. Another buddha i saw after a meditation was a buddha which sit on lotus and the lotus was on clouds. I saw it for only some second so i didn't really saw the buddha. But i saw the clouds. I did a search on google and sure i saw buddhas who sit on lotus and the lotus was on clouds.... Again, an interesting thing. My life.... is not better than before. What more, my life is worse now. I lost my job, i got a new job, which is harder than my previous job. My mental illness doesn't change, i spent some days at the psychiatry some months ago. (I have serious schizophrenia and anxiety). Working is very hard to me - though i work only 4 hours daily because i get a money support. My mind is very tired often. I get injection once in a month for cure schizophrenia.

If there are buddhas around me - then why they do not help? Where are they when i am in stress? Why my life doesn't turn into better?

Virgo said:

Hi purple,that vajrasattva practice that you spoke about. Did you receive a transmission of the mantra from a Buddhist guru? You should not do those mantras without an initiation.

Virgo

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

Vajrasattva may also be practiced as a sutra practice, no lung needed. But its best with lun always.

Malcolm wrote:

Again false. This mantra exists in no sūtra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 9th, 2016 at 10:27 PM

Title: Re: Experiences after some Mahakala and Vajrasattva meditations

Content:

Vasana said:

According to Alex Berzin on this site you can engage with Vajrasattva meditation at Mahayana sutra level before tantric initiation. Someone else will have to confirm if this is correct.

Malcolm wrote:

Berzin is wrong. Vajrasattva comes from Yoga Tantra. It is for purifying samaya. It is not a sutra level practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 9th, 2016 at 10:18 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

The Cicada said:

If Hillary Clinton wins because enough individuals were actually taken in on the media's spin of everything Trump has ever said in his entire life, it means that Americans are generally unfit for the democracy that will be laid to rest when she takes office. If the constituency is genuinely that greedy or fearful or weak-minded, it will mean that the country I was born in no longer exists.

Malcolm wrote:

It hasn't existed for a long time. Reagan put the first nails in the coffin, and W finished it.

The Cicada said:

When I was young, this was a nation that strode into the stars and had plans to plant roots in the sky. We were bold and magnanimous and ready to atone for the past and move into a new future for humankind - and truly, for all life as we know it. We were an earnest nation of the chosen, though hicks, who nonetheless defended the weak of the whole world, fed the hungry, righted wrongs, and made a place for the brightest of this human race to contribute for the benefit of everyone. But what are we now?

Malcolm wrote:

This is a nice fantasy, but it is utterly false in every respect. This nation has never defended the weak, fed the hungry, righted wrongs, nor made a place for the brightest in the human race.

It has engaged in the systematic genocide of the indigenous population, made institutions of racism and sexism, and created a base for capitalism to practice unrestricted, environmentally destructive, pillaging of the natural resources of every continent in the world, and engaged in aggressive war after aggressive war in order to satisfy imperialist goals.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 9th, 2016 at 10:13 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

dreambow said:

You have faith Bernie will save the day... you may wish it but its unlikely to happen What with the power and influence of the big end of town casting a shadow over the candidates. If you believe he is the saviour you are in snooze mode.

Malcolm wrote:

Bernie is not going to save any day. But he will continue to inject honesty into politics. And that is all we need.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 9th, 2016 at 8:55 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

dreambow said:

Even though many are fed up, there will be no up rising, no revolution. The reason being while there is plenty of food, huge variety from organic to junk food, alcohol readily available and often cheap enough. Then add entertainment, distraction...porn, face book, snap chat, TV, Netflix, I could go on and on. It placates us, we doze in fits and starts, sometimes we are aware we are being had, watched. exploited but not for long. Mainly its siesta time and we readily press the snooze button.

Malcolm wrote:
Speak for yourself.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, October 9th, 2016 at 4:14 AM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:

DGA said:
Disagree. Those emails confirm everything about the Clinton campaign and the DLC and DNC that Sanders was pointing out in his campaign. This is hardly insignificant.

Malcolm wrote:
As I said, the emails are old news. We knew everything in them.

DGA said:
This is a smoking gun confirming what had largely been inferred by those of us on the left or the "good governance" set on the right and in the center.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, and I intend to follow Bernie's advice and vote to deny Trump the presidency. I assume you will too.

DGA said:
By the way, it is worth noting that many of Sanders' supporters were/are more conservative than Clinton's in the primaries. How is that? Because they were attracted to a promise of good governance, not because they wanted to support a socialist. That's disappointing to those of us who want to see a left-oriented social movement take hold, but promising in that it shows meaningful political coalitions can be created across the left-right poles if the objectives are clear.

Malcolm wrote:
I vote based in my commitment to environmentalism. HRC will be better for the environment than Trump. Stein is an grandstanding idiot. Gary "Aleppo" Johnson is too high to be president.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, October 9th, 2016 at 3:33 AM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:

Nemo said:

Yep, it would take a miracle for Donald "Grab her by the pussy" Trump to be elected now. Maybe Wikileaks will drop a bomb on Hillary. Still 3 weeks to go. Hillary is an awful warmonger, but not GHBTP awful. He has lost his protest vote appeal.

Malcolm wrote:

Wikileaks emails also dropped, nothing to see there.

DGA said:

Disagree. Those emails confirm everything about the Clinton campaign and the DLC and DNC that Sanders was pointing out in his campaign. This is hardly insignificant.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, the emails are old news. We knew everything in them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 9th, 2016 at 3:15 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Nemo said:

Remember when you guys thought Rob Ford was funny. You laughed and laughed. He was unelectable too.

And Malcolm, Trump is more Turd Sandwich if elected. Unelected he is a Giant Douche. Brexit-ers lied to pollsters but in the privacy of the voting box they gave the elites that giant turd sandwich.

Malcolm wrote:

Trump lost the election yesterday.

Nemo said:

Yep, it would take a miracle for Donald "Grab her by the pussy" Trump to be elected now. Maybe Wikileaks will drop a bomb on Hillary. Still 3 weeks to go. Hillary is an awful warmonger, but not GHBTP awful. He has lost his protest vote appeal.

Malcolm wrote:

Wikileaks emails also dropped, nothing to see there.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 9th, 2016 at 2:53 AM

Title: Re: Deep Ecology

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is to be found in the Pali canon. Keep looking.

binocular said:

Found with the kind help from Bodhipaksa:

SN 22.94

<https://suttacentral.net/en/sn22.94>

At Savatthi. "Bhikkhus, I do not dispute with the world; rather, it is the world that disputes with me. A proponent of the Dhamma does not dispute with anyone in the world.

Although "to dispute" is not the same as "to be against", unless one is coming from an authoritarian background where "he that is not instantly and totally with me, is instantly and totally against me".

Malcolm wrote:

You've understood the meaning. That is the important part.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 9th, 2016 at 12:48 AM

Title: Re: Anadi on the Flawed Perfection of Dzogchen

Content:

fckw said:

I have my doubts that Anadi ever systematically practiced Dzogchen and received corresponding teachings. At least to me it does not look like.

Yet, at the same time, I find it also quite interesting, how he is disqualified here without anyone ever even trying to understand his arguments.

Malcolm wrote:

His arguments are worthless. They are not based on any actual experience with the meaning of the Natural Great Perfection.

fckw said:

Maybe what he has to say is actually worth considering? For example:

One of its main shortcomings is that it does not point with any real clarity to what rigpa actually is, or how to verify if and when one has reached it.

Is he right, is he wrong? If so, why?

Malcolm wrote:

The entire content of the Great Perfection teaching concerns what vidyā is, how to verify that one's knowledge is accurate and so on.

fckw said:

For example, I have visited two very highly regarded Dzogchen teachers (who shall remain unnamed) and was quite disappointed by both of them. In my eyes, their teachings were rather useless to the then present audience.

Malcolm wrote:

Did other students present share your opinion? If not, why not?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 8th, 2016 at 11:41 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Nemo said:

Remember when you guys thought Rob Ford was funny. You laughed and laughed. He was unelectable too.

And Malcolm, Trump is more Turd Sandwich if elected. Unelected he is a Giant Douche. Brexit-ers lied to pollsters but in the privacy of the voting box they gave the elites that giant turd sandwich.

Malcolm wrote:

Trump lost the election yesterday.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 8th, 2016 at 11:11 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Jeff H said:

Fair enough. But to your first and third points, it seems to me that even if Trump can't win the election, he is closer to being able to lead a significant movement than Bernie and his supporters are.

Malcolm wrote:

Trump and Sander received more or less an even number of votes in the primary, 13.3 million (Trump) to Sander's 13.2 million. Given that, I don't really cede your point.

Jeff H said:

To the second point, 300 years?

Malcolm wrote:

Yup. This this is how we have to think about our goals and targets.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 8th, 2016 at 10:25 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Jeff H said:

How can the left-leaners be awakened? How will "we" deal with, not just Clinton, but the whole corrupt system later? I don't mean this rhetorically. How?

Malcolm wrote:

The same way any social movement deals with anything — through constant speaking to the issues.

Jeff H said:

It's a similar issue that's being discussed in the "Deep Ecology" thread: how does an esoteric, elite social impulse become a national movement that can affect meaningful change in a timely manner?

Malcolm wrote:

Any meaningful environmental movement, in this epoch, has to have a three hundred year time frame.

Jeff H said:

"We will deal with [fill in the blank] later" is a direct quote from the movie Cabaret which depicted why Hitler was unstoppable after his society hit a certain threshold of "post-truth, post-fact, post-honesty".

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think Trump will be elected. Clinton is not Hitler.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 8th, 2016 at 8:22 PM

Title: Re: Deep Ecology

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Now you are being inconsistent with your previous statements.

binocular said:

How?

I don't see an inconsistency.

As the Buddha said, "I am not against the world, but the world is against me,."

Source, please.

The Buddha never seemed to me like someone with Jesus' attitude.

Aemilius said:

This "quotation" of Buddha probably derives from what he said at the end of the Smaller Sukhavativyuha Sutra. Buddha Shakyamuni says there that he has now achieved a most difficult task by teaching the Dharma of Sukhavati which the whole world is reluctant to believe and reluctant to accept.

There are many versions and/or translations of this sutra in circulation, the above is how

I remember it (from 1970's and 1980's). The present version of Jodo Shu Research Institute is slightly different, but not entirely different.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is to be found in the Pali canon. Keep looking.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 8th, 2016 at 8:21 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

It went into overdrive in the aughts for several reasons - pumping the money supply to distract from the war (?), the development of all those crazy derivatives turning the hiding of risk into a giant shell game... The pop just set us back on the track of the long decline.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, and all of this was a result of Bush administration policies. So while the Dems did some stupid things like the final coup de grace on Glass Stegal, it was the Republicans who really created the 2008 mess.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 8th, 2016 at 8:28 AM

Title: Re: Deep Ecology

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Not everything is findable google.

binocular said:

Then do provide a source for the Buddha saying, "I am not against the world, but the world is against me."

This doesn't seem like a Buddhist outlook.

Malcolm wrote:

It's a very famous statement by the Buddha. Keep looking.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 8th, 2016 at 8:27 AM

Title: Re: Anadi on the Flawed Perfection of Dzogchen

Content:

florin said:

I would say that his conclusion that dzogchen is a flawed perfection is quite flawed.

Malcolm wrote:
He is an idiot. Ignore.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, October 8th, 2016 at 5:39 AM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
- shrinking of the middle class
This happened because of George W. Bushes failed economic policies.

Queequeg said:
No. Systemic, though Dubya was part of the problem. Along with Bubba. Along with Barry. The wealth distribution system is broken. Tech advances and free trade hollowed out the middle class. Excel and word processing made back office personnel unnecessary. Free trade and robots did the rest.

Malcolm wrote:
No, it was mostly W. 2008 crash happened on his watch, because his advisors encouraged liberalization of lending practices and financial services.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, October 8th, 2016 at 5:36 AM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:
dreambow said:
" My only regret is that the DNC corruptly denied Bernie the nomination. But I am still voting against Trump. As I said, we will deal with Clinton later" Brave words! How exactly are you going to deal with Clinton later?

Malcolm wrote:
Bernie.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, October 8th, 2016 at 5:21 AM
Title: Re: Deep Ecology
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
You are a big boy, you can find it.

binocular said:
Google doesn't give any finds.

Malcolm wrote:
Not everything is findable google.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, October 8th, 2016 at 4:06 AM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:
Rakz said:
It is always easy to blame everything on Bush.

Malcolm wrote:
I am just blaming him for the things you brought up.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, October 8th, 2016 at 3:13 AM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:
Rakz said:
4 years will be more than enough to heal and make no mistake things will continue to get worse under Clinton.

Malcolm wrote:
Worse for who?

Rakz said:
For everyone.

Under the Dems for the past 8 years:

- race relations at the lowest point in decades

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, racism has increased dramatically because of white resentment of our first black president. The police have been shooting black people for years, smartphones just made it visceral and not anecdotal.

Rakz said:
- helped Iran become a nuclear power

Malcolm wrote:
This is unbelievably silly.

Rakz said:

- shrinking of the middle class

Malcolm wrote:

This happened because of George W. Bushes failed economic policies.

Rakz said:

- with the help of Hillary, fomented the rise of islamic terrorist organization ISIS and destabilized many Middle Eastern countries

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, this again falls squarely on W's shoulders.

Rakz said:

- set illegal immigrants on the road to citizenship

Malcolm wrote:

I fully support amnesty for all undocumented immigrants who have no criminal record.

Rakz said:

- National debt doubles

Malcolm wrote:

To pay for a war W started.

So I guess if you are white, Christian and conservative things have gotten a little worse because of decades of Republican failed policies. Other than those whiny people, things are not great but they have improved somewhat since there has been no Republican in the white house for the past 8 years. My only regret is that the DNC corruptly denied Bernie the nomination. But I am still voting against Trump. As I said, we will deal with Clinton later.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 8th, 2016 at 3:01 AM

Title: Re: Deep Ecology

Content:

binocular said:

As the Buddha said, "I am not against the world, but the world is against me,."

Source, please.

The Buddha never seemed to me like someone with Jesus' attitude.

Malcolm wrote:

You are a big boy, you can find it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 8th, 2016 at 2:59 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Rakz said:

There's no doubt Trump will lose this one. Republican party is focused on Paul Ryan for 2020. 12 years of Democrat rule will be too much to bear and the pendulum will swing back hard.

Malcolm wrote:

Nah, Trump has ruined the republican brand for at least another 8 years, if not longer.

Rakz said:

4 years will be more than enough to heal and make no mistake things will continue to get worse under Clinton.

Malcolm wrote:

Worse for who?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 8th, 2016 at 2:51 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Rakz said:

There's no doubt Trump will lose this one. Republican party is focused on Paul Ryan for 2020. 12 years of Democrat rule will be too much to bear and the pendulum will swing back hard.

Malcolm wrote:

Nah, Trump has ruined the republican brand for at least another 8 years, if not longer.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Yep. They are pretty much toast until they re-brand as some sort of more inclusive libertarian thing.

Malcolm wrote:

It is pretty hard to recover from going all in for a fascist shithead.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 8th, 2016 at 2:50 AM

Title: Re: Gyatrul R. on 9.21.16

Content:

smcj said:

The idea that all appearances, sounds, and thoughts are by nature enlightened body, speech, and mind—that is right now.

Malcolm wrote:
Totally inconsistent with gzhan stong though...

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, October 8th, 2016 at 2:33 AM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:
Rakz said:
There's no doubt Trump will lose this one. Republican party is focused on Paul Ryan for 2020. 12 years of Democrat rule will be too much to bear and the pendulum will swing back hard.

Malcolm wrote:
Nah, Trump has ruined the republican brand for at least another 8 years, if not longer.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, October 8th, 2016 at 2:13 AM
Title: Re: Deep Ecology
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Why should they wish to prove something that is demonstrably false?

binocular said:
I don't know if it's false. Legions of modern psychologists and teachers of popular spirituality hold that happiness is to be found in the here and now, in various worldly pursuits. They can't be ignored just like that.

Malcolm wrote:
Now you are being inconsistent with your previous statements.

binocular said:
So if you say they're wrong, then it's you vs. all those people.

Malcolm wrote:
As the Buddha said, "I am not against the world, but the world is against me,."

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, October 7th, 2016 at 8:28 PM
Title: Re: "transmission outside the scriptures"
Content:

Matylda said:

one may see many root texts also in other traditions like dzogchen which by themselves do not make yet any real sense without proper instruction of genuine master, and subsequent instructions in the course of practice and appearing experiences... however one may see people who pretend to understand and who try to make their own teaching out of the invalid reading..

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. This is true.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 7th, 2016 at 8:27 PM

Title: Re: "transmission outside the scriptures"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

A rock cannot point out to your own state. That is the difference between a rock and guru.

Astus said:

Is that so? There are several stories in Zen that show how someone was awakened by natural events.

Malcolm wrote:

This is not the same as having your real nature pointed out to you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 7th, 2016 at 8:26 PM

Title: Re: Deep Ecology

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

One of the basic principles of deep ecology is developing a sense of what Naess calls an "ecological self," which he defines with reference to the Mahāyāna concept of absence of inherent nature.

Buddha himself declared that it is fine to refer to the aggregates as a self, providing one understood that nothing real was described by such a usage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 7th, 2016 at 8:25 PM

Title: Re: Deep Ecology

Content:

binocular said:

they refuse to show that one can find ultimate satisfaction in worldly pleasures. I'm still waiting.

Malcolm wrote:

Why should they wish to prove something that is demonstrably false? You are asking the wrong questions, making the wrong points, and expect things of lay people the Buddha never expected.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 7th, 2016 at 8:23 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Nemo said:

I think Brexit means Trump could be pushed over the top into winning. Most people know he is a turd sandwich.

Malcolm wrote:

No, he is the great douche. HC is the turd sandwich. I see you have not been keeping up with Southpark.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 7th, 2016 at 9:04 AM

Title: Re: The 5th Skandha

Content:

maybay said:

The problem with the doctrine of momentariness is, apart from being post canonical, that by the end of its development in yogacara there's still no clarity on what a moment is meant to represent. It could be a second or an aeon.

.

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually a moment is the duration of a concept. That length is 1.3 milliseconds according to Vasubandhu, converted to the decimal system.

maybay said:

Well he's obviously wrong in the kosa which doesn't represent yogacara view anyway.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, it is one of the few places in Buddhist literature where moments are given a definition at all...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 7th, 2016 at 5:32 AM

Title: Re: Apology to the Naga Realm

Content:

Soma999 said:

Hi Malcolm,

I was wondering from which source do you know that musc is toxic to nagas ?
Do you imply the sutras contains errors ?

There are many sources. Some say nagas don't eat meat, still, Machik talk about some nagas who does (they class them in four, depending on their castes if i remember well ; 3 are vegetarian, 1 take meat).

Maybe your advise on musc comes from the fact this is derived from animal product ?

Malcolm wrote:

I am sure the sutra is not in error, I am sure however the translation is in error.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 7th, 2016 at 5:27 AM

Title: Re: The 5th Skandha

Content:

maybay said:

The problem with the doctrine if momentariness is, apart from being post canonical, that by the end of its development in yogacara there's still no clarity on what a moment is meant to represent. It could be a second or an aeon.

.

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually a moment is the duration of a concept. That length is 1.3 milliseconds according to Vasubandhu, converted to the decimal system.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 7th, 2016 at 5:09 AM

Title: Re: The Twelve Linked Chain and The Between State

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

So... You are saying that a "body" composed of the air element is a physical body (form skandha), because it is composed of an element?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, the idea that hell beings have no bodies comes from Vasubandhu.

Sentient Light said:

Unless I'm thinking of another section than you, I think what Vasubandhu was mostly asserting is that the guards that dole out the torment within hell don't have actual bodies, because they are not real beings subject to birth and death, but rather are projections manifest from the minds of the beings who were born into hell.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, including everything else that happens to them.

When I said you were mixing up Hinayāna and Mahāyāna views, I meant that there is only one section of Mahāyāna that maintains that even conventionally, hells being have no bodies, i.e., cittamatra.

Sentient Light said:

If we take the cittamatra view to be that hell beings have no bodies, we would also have to assert that human beings have no bodies either, wouldn't we? Cittamatra says that form is not independent of the mind, but that doesn't mean that bodies of hell beings are not still manifest of form.

Malcolm wrote:

Vasubandhu maintains that preta realm and hell realm are purely mental projections, unlike the upper four realms, where conventionally beings have bodies.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 7th, 2016 at 4:44 AM

Title: Re: The Twelve Linked Chain and The Between State

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

So... You are saying that a "body" composed of the air element is a physical body (form skandha), because it is composed of an element?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, the idea that hell beings have no bodies comes from Vasubandhu. When I said you were mixing up Hinayāna and Mahāyāna views, I meant that there is only one section of Mahāyāna that maintains that even conventionally, hells being have no bodies, i.e., cittamatra.

The element of air is one of the four mahābhūtas, and therefore, a body made from the element of air is indeed part of the rūpāskandha and is capable of perceiving physical sense objects, which are also part of the rūpaskandha. It is indeed a subtle body, since it is predominantly made of air, but each of the four elements contains the other three elements.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 7th, 2016 at 4:13 AM

Title: Re: The Twelve Linked Chain and The Between State

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You are mixing up Mahāyāna and Hināyāna definitions. From the Hinayāna POV, hell beings and pretas have physical bodies and locations.

Sherab Dorje said:

??? I didn't say they had physical bodies, I said the opposite.

Malcolm wrote:

They have physical bodies, unless you are subscribing to the cittamatra view, in which the aggregate of form is just part of the imputed nature.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 7th, 2016 at 4:10 AM

Title: Re: The Twelve Linked Chain and The Between State

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

In the Chonyi bardo one has all five aggregates? I would have thought that after the dissolution into the element of space one kisses their previous physical form goodbye.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, one has all five aggregates even in the bardo of dharmātā. When one passes through the bardo of the time of death, one assumes a new series of aggregates. This is why one hears and sees sound, lights and rays during the bardo of dharmātā. This is all very clearly described in the Dzogchen teachings on the bardo. But that is beyond the scope of Q's question.

Vasana said:

When does the mental body or gandharva come in to all this ?

The question that has been bugging me for a while is how such a set of aggregates is held together after the parting of the mind and body. If the sense-fields of the physical body no longer constitute part of the consciousness aggregate, then what is it that keeps the mental body or experience self-contained and personal to that mental continuum? If it's Vayu without the shell of the physical body to be enclosed by, how does it not dissipate into space? Is it like an apparitional self-projected hologram that either recognizes or fails to recognize it's display as baseless?

I need to get to Bardo 101 class.

Malcolm wrote:

The so-called mental body in the bardo is in fact made of the matter of the element of air, as Greg mentioned above. It has complete sense organs and so on, because consciousness and vāyu are inseparable. It is a special point of Dzogchen, in fact, that there are no realms which are utterly devoid of matter, including the formless realms. The idea that the formless realm is utterly lacks matter Sarvastivadin idea which is also maintained in Mahāyāna and general Secret Mantra, except Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 7th, 2016 at 3:36 AM

Title: Re: The Twelve Linked Chain and The Between State

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Preta, Asura, Deva and Naraka would not be subject to Dependent Origination...

PS Name and Form arise well before being (bhava) and birth (jati).

Malcolm wrote:

Hell beings, pretas, devas and asuras all have five aggregates. Only formless realm beings lack all five aggregates, having only one aggregate since they lack the rūpa, vedana, saṃjñā and saṃskara skandhas.

Sherab Dorje said:

I've heard explanations that it is due to the fact that hell beings do not have form that they are capable of being tormented and surviving tortures that would otherwise completely destroy a being that has form.

Malcolm wrote:

You are mixing up Mahāyāna and Hināyāna definitions. From the Hinayāna POV, hell beings and pretas have physical bodies and locations.

Even in Mahāyāna however, hells beings are constantly destroyed and revived since they have emanational birth, like bardo beings, pretas and devas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 7th, 2016 at 3:34 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

But falling into tribalism definitely does not get us anywhere.

binocular said:

In terms of samsaric survival, tribalism seems to be a better way to organize society.

Malcolm wrote:

Only for people whose horizons do not include the understanding that all human beings are descendants of a small band of humans in S. Africa who survived a cataclysm about 75,000 years ago.

Tribalism bears the implication that those who are not "the people" are not even human.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 7th, 2016 at 3:30 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Besides, I hate football.

Queequeg said:

You see? Malcom hates America.

Malcolm wrote:

This comment is rather typical of the kind of misrepresentation in which Trumpistas school their adherents.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 7th, 2016 at 3:24 AM

Title: Re: "transmission outside the scriptures"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Just as a parent can show a child something sweet, a proper teacher can show you your own state directly, without any words.

Astus said:

What good is a mute teacher? The insentient constantly teach the Dharma.

"At this time, everything in the universe in ten directions—soil, earth, grass, and trees; fences, walls, tiles, and pebbles—performs the Buddha's work."

(Dogen: Bendowa, BDK ed SBGZ vol 1, p 6)

"realizing the truth on seeing the peach blossoms, realizing the truth on hearing the sound of a bamboo, and realizing the truth on seeing a bright star, are all examples of the sutras producing good counselors."

(Dogen: Bukkyo, BDK ed SBGZ vol 3, p 140)

"The causes and conditions of eighty-thousand such Dharma aggregates are, in every case, the establishment of the mind. Some [people] have established the mind in a dream and attained the truth; some have established the mind in drunkenness and attained the truth; some establish the mind and attain the truth amid flying flowers and falling leaves; some establish the mind and attain the truth amid peach blossoms and green bamboo; some establish the mind and attain the truth in the heavens above; and some establish the mind and attain the truth in the sea."

(Dogen: Hotsu-mujoshin, BDK ed SBGZ vol 3, p 337)

Malcolm wrote:

A rock cannot point out to your own state. That is the difference between a rock and guru.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 7th, 2016 at 3:22 AM

Title: Re: The Twelve Linked Chain and The Between State

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In the bardo, one has all five aggregates.

Sherab Dorje said:

In the Chonyi bardo one has all five aggregates? I would have thought that after the dissolution into the element of space one kisses their previous physical form goodbye.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, one has all five aggregates even in the bardo of dharmātā. When one passes through the bardo of the time of death, one assumes a new series of aggregates. This is why one hears and sees sound, lights and rays during the bardo of dharmātā. This is all very clearly described in the Dzogchen teachings on the bardo. But that is beyond the scope of Q's question.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 7th, 2016 at 3:19 AM

Title: Re: The Twelve Linked Chain and The Between State

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Preta, Asura, Deva and Naraka would not be subject to Dependent Origination...

PS Name and Form arise well before being (bhava) and birth (jati).

Malcolm wrote:

Hell beings, pretas, devas and asuras all have five aggregates. Only formless realm beings lack all five aggregates, having only one aggregate since they lack the rūpa, vedana, saṃjñā and saṃskara skandhas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 7th, 2016 at 3:09 AM

Title: Re: The Twelve Linked Chain and The Between State

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Which between state? There is more than one. It definitely operates in the Kyenay bardo (skye gnas bar do), the bardo of living.

Malcolm wrote:

The four or six bardos exist only in Dzogchen teachings, and specifically, they come from the man ngag sde tantras (and not sems sde or klong sde). Common Mahāyāna and even the tantras of the new schools have no knowledge of anything besides the so called srid pa'i bar ma do, the antarabhāva, the bardo of rebirth.

As to the question, yes, the twelve links operate in the bardo.

Queequeg said:

OK. So now I have several questions... but I'll stick to my first. Let's set aside the Dzogchen betweenens for the time being.

The between state that I'm asking about is the period after the death of this body and the next birth.

It seems that not all of the links "operate" in between.

It would seem that only the first three links operate in between - ignorance, mental formations, consciousness. Name-and-form would already be birth.

Is that correct?

Malcolm wrote:

Dependent origination functions both serially and simultaneously. The way it does so is described in the beginning of chapter 3 of the Abhidharmakośa in much detail. The issue of the bardo is also addressed in chapter three, in relation too dependent origination.

In the bardo, one has all five aggregates.

If you read this chapter, you will understand the entire topic with respect to the bardo of rebirth. You will not understand the elaborated concept of the bardo discussed in Dzogchen teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 7th, 2016 at 3:04 AM

Title: Re: Deep Ecology

Content:

binocular said:

No, I still want you to list some examples. Because I'm quite sure that for every action that you describe as "selfish," I'd probably call it "passionate," or "greedy," or "confident."

Sherab Dorje said:

And the difference is...

binocular said:

It appears I don't focus on various self-views the way many other people do.

Oh dear? What is "Oh dear" about the Two Truths?

Heh. I guess I just am not a Mahayani.

Malcolm wrote:

One of the basic principles of deep ecology is developing a sense of what Naess calls an "ecological self," which he defines with reference to the Mahāyāna concept of absence of inherent nature.

Now, if you are not a Mahāyanī, what possible reason do you have for wanting to post here?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 6th, 2016 at 10:11 PM

Title: Re: The Twelve Linked Chain and The Between State

Content:

Queequeg said:

Does the 12 Linked Chain of Causation operate in the between state?

Sherab Dorje said:

Which between state? There is more than one. It definitely operates in the Kyenay bardo (skye gnas bar do), the bardo of living.

Malcolm wrote:

The four or six bardos exist only in Dzogchen teachings, and specifically, they come from the man ngag sde tantras (and not sems sde or klong sde). Common Mahāyāna and even the tantras of the new schools have no knowledge of anything besides the so called srid pa'i bar ma do, the antarabhāva, the bardo of rebirth.

As to the question, yes, the twelve links operate in the bardo.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 6th, 2016 at 10:08 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Unknown said:

As president, Trump and his brand of extremism would have more than a cultural outlet. Through their appointees, presidents have power in our everyday lives. Cabinet appointments and department hires run powerful federal agencies including the Department of Justice, Homeland Security, Department of Defense, State Department, Department of Interior and more. Trump and his campaign have mentioned these right-wing extremists as potential appointees: Rudy Giuliani, Joe Arpaio, Sarah Palin, Ben Carson, Chris Christie and Forrest Lucas, oil executive and animal rights opponent for Department of Interior. Perhaps scariest of all, Myron Ebell, a leading climate-change denier, is expected to head Trump's EPA. Trump's running mate, Indiana Gov. Mike Pence, is a fundamentalist Christian who pushed extreme anti-LGBT and anti-reproductive rights legislation as governor. With an administration like this, dissidents like Sanders supporters would have little hope of exerting any kind of influence.

Malcolm wrote:

https://www.washingtonpost.com/posteverything/wp/2016/10/06/i-dont-like-hillary-clinton-or-the-democratic-party-im-voting-for-them-anyway/?utm_term=.5427ee882a82

How can any Buddhist in their right mind not vote against Trump?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 6th, 2016 at 9:43 PM

Title: Re: "transmission outside the scriptures"

Content:

Astus said:

Just as you say, one has to arrive at the experience oneself, it cannot be handed over. What can be received are the words.

Malcolm wrote:

Just as a parent can show a child something sweet, a proper teacher can show you your own state directly, without any words.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 6th, 2016 at 7:50 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is interesting that you seem to find the Trumpistas compelling and attractive.

Queequeg said:

It's interesting how pliable you are in now supporting Clinton. But why go there?

Here's an analogy.

I'm a Buffalo Bills fan, and I can always count on having my heart broken. Doesn't stop me from being amazed by Tom Brady cutting up our secondary. Even as I want to punch him in that puckered up mouth, the guy is the greatest to play the game. His game is beautiful.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not supporting Clinton, I am against Trump, and I find nothing admirable in him or his team of knownothing fascists. As a result, your simile falls flat. Besides, I hate football.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 6th, 2016 at 7:58 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

The VP debate was hard to watch.

Pence the Jock wiped the floor with Kaine the glee club dork.

That was your introduction to the guy who will actually run the day to day if Trump wins.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, absolutely not. Pence was supercilious, obtuse and evasive.

It is interesting that you seem to find the Trumpistas compelling and attractive.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 9:57 PM

Title: Re: "transmission outside the scriptures"

Content:

Astus said:

If you say that words are incapable of communicating the meaning, then no teaching is possible...

Malcolm wrote:

You cannot explain "sweet" to anyone. But when they taste it, they know exactly what you mean by sweet. Buddhahood is something to be shown in one's direct perception. It is a meaning that must be discovered before one can give it a word. It is not something that can be communicated with abstract concepts before it is experienced, despite Nāgārjuna's famous dictum about the necessity of convention for understanding the ultimate, since the two truths are deviations in themselves. There is only one truth and one stage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 8:55 PM

Title: Re: Deep Ecology

Content:

binocular said:

Oh well. I'm always amazed when promoting Buddhist views on a Buddhist forum gets characterized as problematic or defective somehow ...

Must be some advanced mystery that my hina mind couldn't possibly understand ...

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think you are promoting "Buddhist views" at all, nor deep ecological ones. Deep Ecology is not a harbor for intolerance or extremism. That's why we can have monster truck deep ecologists.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 8:53 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You are using the word in its negative, Hinayāna sense. I am using the word in its positive, Vajrayāna sense.

binocular said:

Do you think cows, pigs, sheep, chicken, fish etc. freely and with delight give up their life so that humans can eat them?

Or that women are universally happy to risk health and life just so that they can have a "romantic" relationship with men?

Malcolm wrote:

Sounds like you want to turn the world into a celibate, vegan monastery. Good luck with that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 8:43 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is fine, but again this is for monks, who follow a path of renunciation.

binocular said:

No, it's for everyone who wants to live a sustainable lifestyle.

Malcolm wrote:

If you wish to live like a monk. Please do. But count me out of your Trotskyist Vihara.

binocular said:

Attachment clouds thinking. It has nothing to do with the sensuous. As Tilopa told Naropa, "Objects are not the problem, clinging is."

And did Tilopa say that the pleasures of killing, raping, and pillaging are perfectly fine, as long as one doesn't cling to them?

Malcolm wrote:

Tilopa nowhere states that afflicted action is ok, in fact he says the opposite. I cannot imagine killing, raping or pillaging without it being driven by affliction.

This is quite a bit different than enjoying the pleasures of the senses free from affliction and clinging.

binocular said:

Gee! Sensual pleasures are great -- as long as one doesn't have to pay for them with one's health or life.

Avoiding sense pleasures does not ensure longevity or health, and in fact can hasten illness and untimely death.

Strawman.

Malcolm wrote:

Not at all, in Ayurveda and Tibetan medicine it is considered important for one's health to engage the senses with pleasurable things.

binocular said:

I'm talking about particular strains (worldly) of sensuality and attachment to them.

Malcolm wrote:

You did not specify this. That is why I objected.

binocular said:

Much of the Path has to do exactly with pursuing pleasures -- except that they are higher pleasures, not the pleasures connected with the eight worldly gains and losses.

Malcolm wrote:

Higher pleasures? Such as?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 7:04 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

boda said:

Vital means indispensable to the continuation of life. You may be confusing this with indispensable to the continuation of lifestyle.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it means vital to one's life. You are superimposing a limitation Naess never makes. He is not a technophobe...

boda said:

We don't need to argue about the meaning of vital, it's in the dictionary. I think we can safely assume that Naess, and any who may have assisted, chose their words carefully.

Who said anything about technophobia?

... he [Naess] is quite pragmatic, for example, when commenting on point 5 he says:

Point 5: People in the materially richest countries cannot be expected to reduce their excessive interference with the nonhuman world to a moderate level overnight. Less interference does not imply that humans should not modify some ecosystems as do other species. Humans have modified the earth and will probably continue to do so. At issue are the nature and extent of such interference.

Yes that's the issue I've brought up. If everyone in rural communities across the globe owned a 4-wheel drive vehicle that would be extending the interference even more than it is today.

Malcolm wrote:

People in the materially richest countries cannot be expected to reduce their excessive interference with the nonhuman world to a moderate level overnight.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 7:02 AM

Title: Re: Democrats and Republicans

Content:

Queequeg said:

It should be pointed out on the other side... in Hilary's propaganda, all immigrants are Joseph and Mary and baby Jesus, or rather Jose, Maria and Jesus, blacks are the crucified conscience of the nation, women are all Rosie the Riveter, gays are the paradigm of love and marriage, and white men are the devil, unless they're dorky dads like Tim Kaine.

The whole election is a Marvel v. DC comicon.

Malcolm wrote:

Frankly, I would rather have Hillary's saccharine propaganda than the dystopian vision Trump thrives upon.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 7:01 AM

Title: Re: "transmission outside the scriptures"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Contradicts what you write here:

Astus said:

Even if we consider buddhas in other worlds, it makes no difference, that was what I intended to point out. Nevertheless, what Shakyamuni taught is what we have in the scriptures.

Malcolm wrote:

No, what the Buddha taught can never be captured in words, no more than one can capture the taste of sweet in words.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 3:36 AM

Title: Re: "transmission outside the scriptures"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Then you should understand that there is only a tiny fraction in this world system, and not one of them reaches the meaning of "direct perception."

Astus said:

As Linji said,

"Even if, through your seeking, you did find something, that something would be nothing more than fancy descriptions in written words; never would you gain the mind of the living patriarch. Make no mistake, worthy Chan men! If you don't find it here and now, you'll go on transmigrating through the three realms for myriads of kalpas and thousands of lives, and, held in the clutch of captivating circumstances, be born in the wombs of asses or cows."

(Record of Linji, p 8, tr Sasaki)

Malcolm wrote:

Contradicts what you write here:

What teachings are not found in the sutras? If they are not in the sutras, they could not have been taught by the Buddha, consequently they are not even Buddhist teachings, much less Zen.

And it implies that knowledge of reality is something pointed out by a master in a student's direct perception.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 3:32 AM

Title: Re: 本佛 a/k/a Primordial Buddha

Content:

Queequeg said:

I don't know if Himalayan Buddhism has parallels here.

Malcolm wrote:

It is derived from iṣṭa-devatā, etc., personal deity as noted (Tibetan, yid dam, literally, mental commitment).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 3:17 AM

Title: Re: "transmission outside the scriptures"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Funny thought that, thinking that Buddha's teachings are confined to extant sūtras, since only a tiny fraction of sūtras in toto exist in this world system. Then of course there is the issue of tantras...

Astus said:

Tantras are not different from sutras, they are both scriptures (jing 經) of the canon. And what the teachings (jiao 教) refer to are the words of the Buddha.

As Zongmi wrote:

"The sutras are buddha word, while Chan is the intention of the buddhas."
(Zongmi on Chan, p 109)

And as the later tradition, maintained, in the words of Hyujeong:

"The branches of Seon and Doctrine were Kāśyapa and Ānanda. To use no words to reach the wordless is Seon; to use words to reach the wordless is Doctrine. So then the mind is the Seon dharma (method) and language is the Doctrine dharma."
(Collected Works of Korean Buddhism, vol 3, p 59)

Malcolm wrote:

Then you should understand that there is only a tiny fraction in this world system, and not one of them reaches the meaning of "direct perception."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 3:15 AM

Title: Re: 本佛 a/k/a Primordial Buddha

Content:

Queequeg said:

I substituted "tutelary deity" for "object of devotion" as the translation of 本尊 (honzon, as in Gohonzon). It doesn't quite work, but I think it conveys a little more of the nuance that the word "honzon" is supposed to mean.

Malcolm wrote:

Google translate gives: "Principal image"

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 3:00 AM

Title: Re: Question about Tilopa's Six Advices

Content:

conebeckham said:

These days, so much about Mahamudra (and Dzogchen) has been published, people can search the internet and come across all sorts of right (and wrong) information, as far as it goes.

I do think the true meaning of Tilopa's advice, and that of Virupa and Maitripa's, as well, can only really be understood via transmission from a living, breathing, lineage-holding guru. But---people will talk about it, scholars will write about it.....we can only do our best to eliminate confusion, but we certainly cannot give transmission over Dharma Wheel.

Malcolm wrote:

Come on cone, a real siddha could, you know, like Jax.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 2:46 AM

Title: Re: "transmission outside the scriptures"

Content:

AlexMcLeod said:

As for the saying we are discussing means teachings that aren't written down in sutra. Why would someone writing about such things write them down if they know they can't be written down?

Astus said:

What teachings are not found in the sutras? If they are not in the sutras, they could not have been taught by the Buddha, consequently they are not even Buddhist teachings, much less Zen.

Malcolm wrote:

Funny thought that, thinking that Buddha's teachings are confined to extant sūtras, since only a tiny fraction of sūtras in toto exist in this world system. Then of course there is the issue of tantras...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 12:56 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha Post?

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 12:54 AM

Title: Re: Deep Ecology

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I forgot to tell you— I belong to the monster truck wing of Deep Ecology.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 12:51 AM

Title: Re: Question about Tilopa's Six Advices

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Maybe it has something to do with this: The four syllables (yi-ge bzhi) tradition, found widely among the various Kagyu lineages, derives from Maitripa, who together with Naropa were the main Indian spiritual teachers of Marpa. It explains mahamudra in terms of the hidden meaning of the four syllables of the Sanskrit word amanasi (yid-la ma-byed-pa), which means “not taking to mind” or “not paying attention (incorrectly).”

The four syllables connote:

1. cutting down to the foundational root state of the conventional mind,
2. gaining certainty with the methods for quieting and settling the mind in concentration,
3. severing the mind's connection with points where it can deviate into conceptual cognition of true existence and into destructive states,
4. transforming the mind into the nature of pathways of deep awareness.

from http://studybuddhism.com/web/en/archives/advanced/mahamudra/gelug_kagyu_mm/gelug_kaguy_mm_dhargyey.html

Just a guess.

Malcolm wrote:

I think this is correct since it corresponds precisely with the four topics.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 12:32 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

boda said:

Maybe there is confusion concerning "vital needs." What exactly does vital needs mean to you?

Malcolm wrote:

When one lives in a rural area, a 4-wheel drive vehicle is a vital need.

boda said:

Vital means indispensable to the continuation of life. You may be confusing this with indispensable to the continuation of lifestyle.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it means vital to one's life. You are superimposing a limitation Naess never makes. He is not a technophobe, he is quite pragmatic, for example, when commenting on point 5 he says:

Point 5: People in the materially richest countries cannot be expected to reduce their excessive interference with the nonhuman world to a moderate level overnight. Less interference does not imply that humans should not modify some ecosystems as do other species. Humans have modified the earth and will probably continue to do so. At issue are the nature and extent of such interference.

Naess, Arne (2009-05-01). The Ecology of Wisdom: Writings by Arne Naess (p. 113). Counterpoint. Kindle Edition.

So we do our best.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: Vajrapani in sutric context

Content:

tingdzin said:

Very interesting post; I stand corrected about Vajrapani and the Pali Canon.

I wonder how those Buddhist modernists who claim that there are no "supernatural" elements in "original" Buddhism would account for this incident -- maybe calling it a "later interpolation" to the Sutta, or something like that.

Malcolm wrote:

Obviously they were all added by New Agers in the 1980's.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 12:20 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha Post?

Content:

conebeckham said:

there was a state of original purity

Malcolm wrote:

There is a state of original purity. It has no temporal existence however.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 5th, 2016 at 12:00 AM

Title: Re: Is the Dharmakaya unconditioned and uncaused?

Content:

prsvrnc said:

Yes! The dharmakaya is uncaused. Explanation and source? I am looking for one...

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, it depends on who you ask. For example, the Āryalaṅkāvatāra-nāma-mahāyānasūtravṛttitathāgatahṛdayālaṃkāra maintains that the dharmakāya is obtained from gathering the two accumulations. It also refers to the tathāgatagarbha as the cause which is compatible with the dharmakāya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 4th, 2016 at 11:48 PM

Title: Re: Question about Tilopa's Six Advices

Content:

conebeckham said:

Malcolm, thanks for posting that.

"Syllables".....what's the Tibetan word for that? Perhaps that may clarify....?

Malcolm wrote:

Yi ge.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 4th, 2016 at 11:28 PM

Title: Re: Question about Tilopa's Six Advices

Content:

rachmiel said:

So what are the four syllables?

Malcolm wrote:

That is a good question. I don't know. All I know is that is the title of the text. But I suspect it refers to the four topics of the text.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 4th, 2016 at 11:09 PM

Title: Re: Question about Tilopa's Six Advices

Content:

rachmiel said:

Wunderbar! Thanks ... lots to digest here.

Are "na-mo gu-rue" the actual four syllables? What do they mean ... or are they just sounds?

Malcolm wrote:

Namo Guruve means "Homage to the Guru."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 4th, 2016 at 10:48 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

binocular said:

There are proper uses of the requisites: "[3] And what are the fermentations to be abandoned by using? There is the case where a monk, reflecting appropriately, uses the robe simply to counteract cold, to counteract heat, to counteract the touch of flies, mosquitoes, wind, sun, & reptiles; simply for the purpose of covering the parts of the body that cause shame.

"Reflecting appropriately, he uses almsfood, not playfully, nor for intoxication, nor for putting on bulk, nor for beautification; but simply for the survival & continuance of this body, for ending its afflictions, for the support of the holy life, thinking, 'Thus will I destroy old feelings [of hunger] and not create new feelings [from overeating]. I will maintain myself, be blameless, & live in comfort.'

"Reflecting appropriately, he uses lodging simply to counteract cold, to counteract heat, to counteract the touch of flies, mosquitoes, wind, sun, & reptiles; simply for protection from the inclemencies of weather and for the enjoyment of seclusion.

"Reflecting appropriately, he uses medicinal requisites that are used for curing the sick simply to counteract any pains of illness that have arisen and for maximum freedom from disease.

"The fermentations, vexation, or fever that would arise if he were not to use these things [in this way] do not arise for him when he uses them [in this way]. These are called the fermentations to be abandoned by using.

<http://www.accesstosight.org/tipitaka/mn/mn.002.than.html>

Malcolm wrote:

This is fine, but again this is for monks, who follow a path of renunciation.

binocular said:

However, it appears that such attachment to sensuality impedes clear thinking as far as environmental issues go, as evidenced by the industrial age and its results.

Malcolm wrote:

Attachment clouds thinking. It has nothing to do with the sensuous. As Tilopa told Naropa, "Objects are not the problem, clinging is."

binocular said:

Gee! Sensual pleasures are great -- as long as one doesn't have to pay for them with one's health or life.

Malcolm wrote:

Avoiding sense pleasures does not ensure longevity or health, and in fact can hasten illness and untimely death.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 4th, 2016 at 10:47 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

binocular said:

There are proper uses of the requisites: "[3] And what are the fermentations to be abandoned by using? There is the case where a monk, reflecting appropriately, uses the robe simply to counteract cold, to counteract heat, to counteract the touch of flies, mosquitoes, wind, sun, & reptiles; simply for the purpose of covering the parts of the body that cause shame.

"Reflecting appropriately, he uses almsfood, not playfully, nor for intoxication, nor for putting on bulk, nor for beautification; but simply for the survival & continuance of this body, for ending its afflictions, for the support of the holy life, thinking, 'Thus will I destroy old feelings [of hunger] and not create new feelings [from overeating]. I will maintain myself, be blameless, & live in comfort.'

"Reflecting appropriately, he uses lodging simply to counteract cold, to counteract heat, to counteract the touch of flies, mosquitoes, wind, sun, & reptiles; simply for protection from the inclemencies of weather and for the enjoyment of seclusion.

"Reflecting appropriately, he uses medicinal requisites that are used for curing the sick simply to counteract any pains of illness that have arisen and for maximum freedom from disease.

"The fermentations, vexation, or fever that would arise if he were not to use these things [in this way] do not arise for him when he uses them [in this way]. These are called the fermentations to be abandoned by using.

<http://www.accesstoinight.org/tipitaka/mn/mn.002.than.html>

This is fine, but again this is for monks, who follow a path of renunciation.

However, it appears that such attachment to sensuality impedes clear thinking as far as environmental issues go, as evidenced by the industrial age and its results.

Attachment clouds thinking. It has nothing to do with the sensuous. As Tilopa told Naropa, "Objects are not the problem, clinging is."

Malcolm wrote:

Only uptight, contracted people have a problem with sensuality.

binocular said:

Gee! Sensual pleasures are great -- as long as one doesn't have to pay for them with one's health or life.

Malcolm wrote:

Avoiding sense pleasures does not ensure longevity or health, and in fact can hasten illness and untimely death.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 4th, 2016 at 10:30 PM

Title: Re: Question about Tilopa's Six Advices

Content:

rachmiel said:

Big thanks to everyone who participated in this thread! Here's the main thing I learned from it:

If you pluck a teaching from the body of dharma teachings without understanding its context (Buddhist school, lineage, time period, etc.) no matter how much this teaching resonates with you (as Tilopa does with me) you run the risk of misunderstanding the context therefore missing the exact message the teacher intended to communicate, all of which could hamper your personal progress to realization.

It's a good lesson for me to learn. But, just so you know, my take on realization is perhaps a bit different from the conventional Buddhist take. (I am not a Buddhist, but deeply appreciate some Buddhist teachings.) I think realization is our birthright ... built into the package of being human. And I think "the other shore" is the same other shore regardless of what method one ends up taking to get there: swimming, snorkeling, rafting, surfing, flying, perhaps even walking on water ... I see Tilopa's advices as instructions for building and navigating a certain kind of raft. If I misinterpret them (in terms of his intended meaning), then I end up with a different raft. But different doesn't mean useless ... or perhaps not even inferior. It's just ... different, Tilopa's intended meaning filtered through me. So I don't mind the potential misunderstanding so much, in fact I kind of welcome it, I feel it gives me room to be creative with applying the teaching to my path.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, there is always Dombhi Heruka's Four Syllables:

Namo Guruve.

The Intimate Instruction of the Great Bliss of Dharma

There are three essences, four commitments, three deviations and four methods of resting.

The three essences: Effortlessness

Without contrivance

Everything that occurs is understood as one's own mind.

The four commitments: Afflictions are not abandoned because they are one's mind.

Antidotes are not relied upon because the mind is non-dual.

The true nature is not meditated upon because mind is without grasping.

A result is not hoped for, realizing the mind itself is Buddhahood.

The three deviations: If there is hope for Buddhahood, it is a deviation.

If there is fear towards Samsara, it is a deviation.

If there is attachment to appearances, it is a deviation.

The four methods of resting: Just like the limpid quality of water when it is undisturbed, rest relaxed in uncontrived mind.

Just as a bird in the sky leaves no tracks, consciousness rests without support.

Just like the sun not concealed by clouds, rest in one's own unobstructed state relaxing into the objects of the six sense organs.

Just like water always falling, rest undistracted at all times and in all activities.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 4th, 2016 at 10:14 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

boda said:

Maybe there is confusion concerning "vital needs." What exactly does vital needs mean to you?

Malcolm wrote:

When one lives in a rural area, a 4-wheel drive vehicle is a vital need. When one lives in a large town or a city, a personal vehicle is not a vital need. For example, until 1997, I never owned a car, nor did I have a drivers license because I did not need either. They were not vital needs.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 4th, 2016 at 10:13 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is a celebration of the sensuous.

binocular said:

The celebration of the sensuous is the pipe dream of males who are still relatively healthy and wealthy.

Malcolm wrote:

You are using the word in its negative, Hinayāna sense. I am using the word in its positive, Vajrayāna sense.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 4th, 2016 at 7:12 AM

Title: Re: Democrats and Republicans

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

As far as I know, the Democrats are only accused of wanting to dismantle the least important of the amendments, the 2nd.

Queequeg said:

So... based on your latest posts on the issue of politics... have you reconciled yourself with voting for Clinton?

Malcolm wrote:

I am voting to eliminate Trump, following Bernie's suggestion. First things first. We will deal with Clinton later.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 4th, 2016 at 7:11 AM

Title: Re: Democrats and Republicans

Content:

Queequeg said:

Well, at least they're cool with the 13th amendment.

Malcolm wrote:

They have to be, after all they are nominally "The Party of Lincoln."

On the other hand, the 13th amendment does not totally eradicate slavery, and permits the monetization of incarceration. So of course Republicans won't want to dismantle legalized slavery in the United States of America.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 4th, 2016 at 5:10 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Vasana said:

The only requirement for subscribing to the 8 points is that you perceive them to be an accurate assessment and means to engage with the world and its variety of sentient beings.

boda said:

Actually the 8th point is an obligation to act in accord with the previous points. .

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, either " directly or indirectly."

boda said:

this kind of action requires a commitment to "vital needs," which would mean a sacrifice in sensual needs. Perhaps that's what binocular was getting at

Malcolm wrote:

Not at all. Don't confuse Deep Ecology as some sort of ecoasceticism. It is in fact the opposite. It is a celebration of the sensuous. One of the more famous books in the Deep Ecology is called The Spell of the Sensuous, arguing that this environmental debacle arose in large part because human beings have become alienated from the sensuous. We have cut ourselves off from our biosphere by trapping ourselves in abstractions, and so, having forgotten it in our deepest sense consciousnesses, we destroy it without noticing it anymore.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 4th, 2016 at 4:24 AM

Title: Re: Democrats and Republicans

Content:

Queequeg said:

Republicans

Malcolm wrote:

= supporting stop and frisk, racist immigration policies, unfettered military spending, restricted access for women's health care, dismantling the separation of Church and State, in other words supporting the dismantling of the 1st, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 14th, 15th, 16th, and 24th amendments, you know, the most important ones.

As far as I know, the Democrats are only accused of wanting to dismantle the least important of the amendments, the 2nd.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 4th, 2016 at 3:35 AM

Title: Re: Democrats and Republicans

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Come on, David, everyone knows that the Buddha was a deep green/ left biocentrist, which is why his Dharma is so unpopular these days...there were only a few people in the 80's and 90's who were interested in it.

binocular said:

He was a monk. Doing things suitable for monks, behooving monks.

Malcolm wrote:

You need a sense of humor. Somehow yours was amputated. I hear though that they have really promising research in humor regeneration therapy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 4th, 2016 at 3:28 AM

Title: Re: Question about Tilopa's Six Advices

Content:

florin said:

And that is why these explanations are aimed at people who were already introduced to the real state beyond cause and effect already and only need certain clarifications of how to maintain that view in a practical way (symbolic transmission) in order to receive the direct transmission that cannot be given by any human.

Malcolm wrote:

A transmission that cannot be given is a contradiction in terms, don't you think?

florin said:

That's how they call it.

The idea is that there is no human involved since that is the moment when the practitioner recognizes and rests in the secret state of the real teacher, that is one's own state.

Malcolm wrote:

The words in Tibetan brgyud, lineage, which makes more sense in context. In this case you are talking about the rgyal ba'i dgongs brgyud (jinasamatīparamparā), the lineage of the transcendent state of the Victors. Transcendent state (samatī) means you abide one pointedly in the knowledge of reality 24/7/365 since your knowledge is beyond time. This is also called, in Dzogchen literature, the union of day and night.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 4th, 2016 at 3:24 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

hotair.jpg (90.22 KiB) Viewed 2141 times

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 4th, 2016 at 3:07 AM

Title: Re: Democrats and Republicans

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Come on, David, everyone knows that the Buddha was a deep green/ left biocentrist, which is why his Dharma is so unpopular these days...there were only a few people in the 80's and 90's who were interested in it.

Queequeg said:

Buddha was a Republican.

David N. Snyder said:

One could probably make an argument that Buddha is closest to any of the other major political parties (U.S.) too, if you selectively look to certain Buddhist principles or sutras/suttas.

The Buddha was for hard work, individual effort, individual responsibility. The Buddha was pro-life. Therefore, the Buddha was a Republican.

The Buddha was for hard work, individual effort, individual responsibility. Buddhism has precepts, but they are voluntary and nothing was compulsory in terms of commandments. Therefore, the Buddha was a Libertarian.

The Buddha was the ultra-Compassionate One; spoke out against greed, attachments, worldly desires. Therefore, the Buddha was a Democrat.

The Buddha was the ultra-Compassionate One; wanted to help all out of suffering; knew that human birth was rare and we must protect the only home we have. Therefore, the Buddha was an environmentalist / Green Party.

In other words, whatever your political belief, you can find Buddhist principles to fit into that view, except for fascism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 4th, 2016 at 2:55 AM

Title: Re: Question about Tilopa's Six Advices

Content:

florin said:

And that is why these explanations are aimed at people who were already introduced to the real state beyond cause and effect already and only need certain clarifications of how to maintain that view in a practical way (symbolic transmission) in order to receive the direct transmission that cannot be given by any human.

Malcolm wrote:

A transmission that cannot be given is a contradiction in terms, don't you think?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 4th, 2016 at 2:30 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

To be a deep ecologist, one merely has to subscribe the eight-point platform.

binocular said:

There is an unsaid there: What are the requirements in order to be able to subscribe to the eight-point platform?

It seems to me that without either a firm commitment to sensuality, or a firm commitment to karma and rebirth, one cannot subscribe to the eight-point platform.

You noted that my point about karma and rebirth was short-sighted. I pointed out the problems with sensuality.

Malcolm wrote:

Only uptight, contracted people have a problem with sensuality.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 4th, 2016 at 2:29 AM

Title: Re: Democrats and Republicans

Content:

Queequeg said:

Buddha was a Republican.

binocular said:

Talk about men, women, horses (or donkeys, in this case), and elephants!

/.../

Then the Blessed One, emerging from his seclusion in the late afternoon, went to the meeting hall and, on arrival, sat down on a seat made ready. As he was sitting there, he addressed the monks: "For what topic of conversation are you gathered together here? In the midst of what topic of conversation have you been interrupted?"

"Just now, lord, after the meal, on returning from our alms round, we gathered at the meeting hall and got engaged in many kinds of bestial topics of conversation: conversation about kings, robbers, & ministers of state; armies, alarms, & battles; food & drink; clothing, furniture, garlands, & scents; relatives; vehicles; villages, towns, cities, the countryside; women & heroes; the gossip of the street & the well; tales of the dead; tales of diversity, the creation of the world & of the sea; talk of whether things exist or not."

"It isn't right, monks, that sons of good families, on having gone forth out of faith from home to the homeless life, should get engaged in such topics of conversation, i.e., conversation about kings, robbers, & ministers of state... talk of whether things exist or not."

"There are these ten topics of [proper] conversation. Which ten? Talk on modesty, on contentment, on seclusion, on non-entanglement, on arousing persistence, on virtue, on concentration, on discernment, on release, and on the knowledge & vision of release. These are the ten topics of conversation. If you were to engage repeatedly in these ten topics of conversation, you would outshine even the sun & moon, so mighty, so powerful — to say nothing of the wanderers of other sects."

<http://www.accesstosight.org/tipitaka/an/an10/an10.069.than.html>

Malcolm wrote:

This is for monks. We are not monks.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 3rd, 2016 at 10:13 PM

Title: Re: BumShi in English? Bon Traditional Tibetan Medicine tantras

Content:

mahabuddha said:

Is the Bon Traditional Tibetan Medicine tantras, BumShi, translated in English? Does it still exist in Tibetan? Any help would be greatly appreciated.

Yours in the Dharma,

Chimed Dorjee

Malcolm wrote:

It still exists in Tibetan and is 98 percent identical with the rgyud bzhi.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 3rd, 2016 at 9:36 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

binocular said:

And I would still like to see why you think my suggestion from before is short-sighted.

Malcolm wrote:

To be a deep ecologist, one merely has to subscribe the eight-point platform. I don't recall seeing a requirement for belief in rebirth and karma included.

The Deep Ecology Platform

1. The well-being and flourishing of human and nonhuman life on Earth have value in themselves (synonyms: inherent worth, intrinsic value, inherent value). These values are independent of the usefulness of the nonhuman world for human purposes.

2. Richness and diversity of life forms contribute to the realization of these values and are also values in themselves.

3. Humans have no right to reduce this richness and diversity except to satisfy vital needs.

4. Present human interference with the nonhuman world is excessive, and the situation is rapidly worsening.

5. The flourishing of human life and cultures is compatible with a substantial decrease of the human population. The flourishing of nonhuman life requires such a decrease.

6. Policies must therefore be changed. The changes in policies affect basic economic, technological, and ideological structures. The resulting state of affairs will be deeply different from the present.

7. The ideological change is mainly that of appreciating life quality (dwelling in situations of inherent worth) rather than adhering to an increasingly higher standard of living. There will be a profound awareness of the difference between big and great.

8. Those who subscribe to the foregoing points have an obligation directly or indirectly to participate in the attempt to implement the necessary changes.

—Arne Naess and George Sessions (1984)

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 3rd, 2016 at 10:39 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You have not demonstrated anything of the sort.

binocular said:

Of course I have. DE's claims have left no traction in this mind of mine. And I know I'm not the only one who remains unimpressed by DE.

You (plural) can blame us all you want. My point is that the goals of DE may be noble, but the method in which its proponents sometimes disseminate their ideas and the attitude they have toward people is not helping to win supporters for DE's cause. Someone called them "the ivory tower brigade", which I find quite fitting.

I request that you substantiate why you think that my view is short-sighted: I don't think that the goals of deep ecology can be effectively pursued other than by a commitment to a belief in karma and rebirth (or even a belief in serial reincarnation may be necessary) and to according action.

Malcolm wrote:

This is short sighted.

1. Left biocentrism is a left focus or theoretical tendency within the deep ecology movement,

/.../

10. To be politically relevant, deep ecology needs to incorporate the perspective advanced by left biocentrism.

<http://home.ca.inter.net/~greenweb/lbprimer.htm>

binocular said:

I don't disagree with any of that, but I think it's insufficient as a philosophical framework.

My issue with various secular approaches is that secularists refuse to or are unable to teach people how to find ultimate satisfaction in what in dharmic terms would be considered sensual or worldly pursuits. (Schumacher had to turn to religion.)

I once bought a camera; it came with a user manual and one of the sections of the manual said "Learn how to enjoy presentations". Well, the manual didn't teach how to enjoy presentations, it just taught how to make them. I felt betrayed. It didn't deliver what it promised. This same experience repeats with so many secular propositions for how to find worth and meaning in this world and in worldly pursuits: they don't deliver.

Sights, sounds, smells, tastes, tactile sensations, and ideas are fleeting and so are the pleasures that come with them. This is undeniable, and people do know that, even if just intuitively.

Yes, trees, meadows, clean rivers, giraffes etc. etc. are beautiful, but the pleasures one gets from them are fleeting, and therefore cannot serve as a reliable foundation for changing one's attitude to life and the world.

Malcolm wrote:

What attitude toward life and the world should one have?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 3rd, 2016 at 5:07 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

kirtu said:

Secondly social democracy is most definitely not capitalism with benefits. It is capitalism contained and controlled and made safer

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry Kirt, but what you describe is merely "capitalism with benefits." And you really cannot make capitalism "safer." This is like "clean" coal, or "safe" nuclear plants, i.e., contradictions in terms.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 2nd, 2016 at 4:14 AM

Title: Re: "transmission outside the scriptures"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I forgot to ask if these teachings included intensive practice under their guidance, or were in the form of academic encounters.

Astus said:

None were particularly academic, I have spent various length of time with various teachers. But if you are interested in details, just send me a PM here or on FB.

Malcolm wrote:

I was just curious. For example, it is well known that I spent three years in a solitary retreat in the mid 90's.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 2nd, 2016 at 4:03 AM

Title: Re: Would you vote to legalize marijuana?

Content:

David N. Snyder said:

Polling so far:

DWT: 17-4 for legalizing

DWM: 26-0 for legalizing

Mahayanists are generally known to be more liberal than Theravadins.

Rakz said:

I am a hard nosed conservative on just about every issue except for this and prostitution.

Malcolm wrote:

This just means you are a Libertarian, a.k.a., a Republican who smokes weed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 2nd, 2016 at 4:00 AM

Title: Re: Democrats and Republicans

Content:

Rakz said:

Buddha was not a Republican but most definitely a man of highly conservative moral values.

Malcolm wrote:

How so? He dissed the conservative faction of Brahmanical society, he dissed social norms by ditching his family, he dissed social norms by preaching against the varna system, he dissed social norms by refusing to support any side in a violent conflict, he dissed social norms by following the Jains in permitting the ordination of women, etc. By the standards of his day, the Buddha was in fact a radical liberal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 2nd, 2016 at 1:25 AM

Title: Re: Deep Ecology

Content:

Unknown said:

1. Left biocentrism is a left focus or theoretical tendency within the deep ecology movement, which is subversive of the existing industrial society. It accepts and promotes the eight-point Deep Ecology Platform drawn up by Arne Naess and George Sessions. Left biocentrism holds up as an ideal, identification, solidarity, and compassion with all life. "Left" as used in left biocentrism, means anti-industrial and anti-capitalist, but not necessarily socialist. The expressions 'left biocentrism' or 'left ecocentrism' are used interchangeably.

2. Left biocentrism accepts the view that the Earth belongs to no one. While raising a number of criticisms, left biocentrism is meant to strengthen, not undermine, the deep ecology movement which identifies with all life.

3. Left biocentrism says that individuals must take responsibility for their actions and be socially accountable. Part of being individually responsible is to practice voluntary simplicity, so as to minimize one's own impact upon the Earth.

4. Left biocentrists are concerned with social justice and class issues, but within a context of ecology. To move to a deep ecology world, the human species must be mobilized, and a concern for social justice is a necessary part of this mobilization. Left biocentrism is for the redistribution of wealth, nationally and internationally.

5. Left biocentrism opposes economic growth and consumerism. Human societies must live within ecological limits so that all other species may continue to flourish. We believe that bioregionalism, not globalism, is necessary for sustainability. The perspective of the late German Green philosopher Rudolf Bahro is accepted that, for world-wide sustainability, industrialized countries need to reduce their impact upon the Earth to about one tenth of what it is at the present time. It is also incumbent upon non-industrialized nations to become sustainable and it is necessary for industrialized nations to help on this path.

6. Left biocentrism holds that individual and collective spiritual transformation is important to bring about major social change, and to break with industrial society. We need inward transformation, so that the interests of all species override the short-term self-interest of the individual, the family, the community, and the nation.

7. Left biocentrism believes that deep ecology must be applied to actual environmental issues and struggles, no matter how socially sensitive, e.g. population reduction, aboriginal issues, workers' struggles, etc.

8. Social ecology, eco-feminism and eco-marxism, while raising important questions, are all human-centered and consider human-to-human relations within society to be more important and, in the final analysis, determine society's relationship to the natural world. Left biocentrism believes that an egalitarian, non-sexist, non-discriminating society, a highly desirable goal, can still be exploitive towards the Earth.

9. Left biocentrists are "movement greens" in basic orientation. They are critical of existing Green political parties, which have come to an accommodation with industrial society and have no accountability to the deep ecology movement.

10. To be politically relevant, deep ecology needs to incorporate the perspective advanced by left biocentrism.

Malcolm wrote:

<http://home.ca.inter.net/~greenweb/lbprimer.htm>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 2nd, 2016 at 1:19 AM

Title: Re: Would you vote to decriminalize marijuana?

Content:

Bakmoon said:

Absolutely right. Just look at what added sugar and fatty food has done to the health of the U.S.

Malcolm wrote:

And Latin American, China, India, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 2nd, 2016 at 1:10 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I have no interest in convincing you of anything. So far, you have not given me a reason to be interested in doing so since it seems you have not even investigated the basic texts of deep ecology.

binocular said:

I've just demonstrated that the proponents of deep ecology don't find much traction in this world....

Malcolm wrote:

You have not demonstrated anything of the sort.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 2nd, 2016 at 12:46 AM

Title: Re: "transmission outside the scriptures"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

At this point, it would be apropos to ask from whom you learned Zen/Chan yourself. What is your lineage? Are you just going based on things that you have read, or have you actually practiced Zen/Chan under the direction and guidance of a qualified master.

Astus said:

It does not seem to be a relevant question to me. What difference does it make in discussing interpretations? But if you want to know.

I have learnt

- Chan from Shi Mingzheng, Shi Minglai, John Crook, Simon Child
- Seon from Antal Dobosy, Wu Bong SSN, Chong An Sunim JDPSN
- Zen from Sozui Zenni, Shodo Harada, Yvon Myoken Bec

Malcolm wrote:

I forgot to ask if these teachings included intensive practice under their guidance, or were in the form of academic encounters.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 2nd, 2016 at 12:04 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I disagree with the premise that you presented, i.e., "the goals of deep ecology cannot be pursued effectively without a commitment to a belief in karma and rebirth." I think it is short-sighted. Have you even have read Naess, Orton, Shiva, etc.?

binocular said:

I'm giving you the opportunity to convince me that deep ecology and a secular approach are worth it and suffice. So far, you have not done that.

Malcolm wrote:

I have no interest in convincing you of anything. So far, you have not given me a reason to be interested in doing so since it seems you have not even investigated the basic texts of deep ecology.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 11:21 PM

Title: Re: Democrats and Republicans

Content:

Queequeg said:

And these programs squelched by the Republican saint spontaneously came into being?

Malcolm wrote:

They were a public reaction of Anglo guilt, signed into law by Johnson, at how poorly black people were treated. The guilt wore off.

Then the usual racist and sexist recriminations began to be repeated again [even while social welfare programs for capitalists were expanded at an astonishing rate], and welfare programs, never more than a small fraction of the budget, were undermined and eliminated, especially under Clinton.

In other words, Republicans definitely believe in corporate welfare. They just don't believe in welfare for the poor, women, blacks and latinos.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 11:17 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

binocular said:

I don't think that the goals of deep ecology can be effectively pursued other than by a commitment to a belief in karma and rebirth (or even a belief in serial reincarnation may be necessary) and to according action.

Malcolm wrote:

This is short sighted.

binocular said:

And with replies like that, you wonder why people aren't all that interested in deep ecology ...

Malcolm wrote:

I disagree with the premise that you presented, i.e., "the goals of deep ecology cannot be pursued effectively without a commitment to a belief in karma and rebirth." I think it is short-sighted. Have you even have read Naess, Orton, Shiva, etc.?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 10:56 PM

Title: Re: Democrats and Republicans

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Buddha is Trump?

Malcolm wrote:

It's the reverse:

buddhatrump.jpg (39.02 KiB) Viewed 4752 times

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: "transmission outside the scriptures"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

At this point, it would be apropos to ask from whom you learned Zen/Chan yourself. What is your lineage? Are you just going based on things that you have read, or have you actually practiced Zen/Chan under the direction and guidance of a qualified master.

Astus said:

It does not seem to be a relevant question to me. What difference does it make in discussing interpretations?

Malcolm wrote:

It is Buddhadharma. If one does not have the aural lineage, one's opinions mean squat.

Thanks for being candid.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 10:20 PM

Title: Re: Democrats and Republicans

Content:

Queequeg said:

On social economic policy, the fundamental difference between the philosophies of the two major American political parties is this:

Republicans believe in individual cause and effect. One should reap the effects of one's actions, benefits and consequences. In terms of welfare, this translates to general opposition.

Malcolm wrote:

Republicans do not in fact believe these things, unless one happens to be poor, female, black, or latino.

Queequeg said:

...In terms of welfare, this translates to no strings attached welfare programs.

Malcolm wrote:

This is so absurd as to be laughable. There are no such welfare programs. Any that may have existed briefly in the 1970's were squelched immediately by Reagan.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 9:58 PM

Title: Re: "transmission outside the scriptures"

Content:

AlexMcLeod said:

Actually, I completely agree with his definition, and come from a different lineage.

Astus said:

What sources do you base that on?

Malcolm wrote:

At this point, it would be apropos to ask from whom you learned Zen/Chan yourself. What is your lineage? Are you just going based on things that you have read, or have you actually practiced Zen/Chan under the direction and guidance of a qualified master.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 8:34 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Wayfarer said:

The world badly needs an alternative to capitalism that isn't communism, in my view.

kirtu said:

It has it already: Dutch, German, Scandinavian social democracy.

Malcolm wrote:

Social Democracy is a weak model that as someone else mentioned is being steamrolled by neoliberalism, austerity economics, and sadly, nativism.

Why? Because it is capitalism with benefits, that's all. But once the market turns sour, austerity measure are adopted and scapegoating begins.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 8:33 PM

Title: Re: Deep Ecology

Content:

Wayfarer said:

The world badly needs an alternative to capitalism that isn't communism, in my view.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it is called deep ecology/ left biocentrism, where "left" does not mean Marxist or even Socialist, but merely anti-capitalist.

Wayfarer said:

I am keen about such ideas, but I think the problem is they don't really constitute an alternative economic model. They tend to be fringe, in the way that 'green parties' are generally parties of protest, rather than genuine alternative governments.

It would take a lot to create a real alternative economic model. I think one of the many enormous structural problems, is that consumerism and endless growth and the stimulation of desire is essential to the capitalist model. Imagine if you had a model where the ideal was 'cultivation of wisdom'? It is actually hard to imagine - but I suppose that is one of the ideas behind a classical book in this tradition, Schumacher's 'Small is Beautiful'. It would take more than a different economic model, more like a very different mentality. Actually, I guess Schumacher is a good model in this area. I admit, I haven't done a lot of study about these things. (I have got The Value of Nothing, by Raj Patel, and I think I have Prosperity without Growth here somewhere.)

I guess, to be honest, I would actually be in a position to get 'off the grid' if I converted all my city equity into a country freehold (I'm in one of the most expensive cities in the world to own property, as it happens). But, wife is totally against such ideas.

Malcolm wrote:

Schumacher is a good start.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 8:31 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

binocular said:

I don't think that the goals of deep ecology can be effectively pursued other than by a commitment to a belief in karma and rebirth (or even a belief in serial reincarnation may be necessary) and to according action.

Malcolm wrote:

This is short sighted.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 8:18 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

I will not vote for anyone who advocates war, which is the mass murder of mother-beings based on greed and hatred

People can say a vote for A is really a vote for B all day long. I say a vote for A is primarily a vote for A. I will not take responsibility for the circus that are the DNC and GOP.

It's truly sad both major parties have legitimized endless warfare, and the average citizen seems a-okay with this.

Out of sight, out of mind.

Malcolm wrote:

In this case, the choice is between a somewhat hawkish policy wonk, and someone who will start a nuclear war. The decision is up to you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 8:15 AM

Title: Re: Would you vote to decriminalize marijuana?

Content:

Bakmoon said:

I'm opposed to the use of marijuana and other drugs,

Malcolm wrote:

That's silly. For example, there are proven clinical uses for mushrooms, LSD, etc. And, dropping acid will definitely change your mind. But it is a rather one dimensional experience.

Bakmoon said:

substance abuse problems are public health issues

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, but substance abuse is not confined to so called "drugs." If it were, we would not have the various health epidemics we do.

Bakmoon said:

Also, decriminalization places the production of marijuana squarely in the hands of legit businesses and stops the profits from lining the pockets of violent gangs and drug cartels. It seems to have worked nicely in Colorado, with an actual decrease in crime and very nice increases in state revenue.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 5:23 AM

Title: Re: Would you vote to decriminalize marijuana?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Massachusetts too.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 3:15 AM

Title: Re: "transmission outside the scriptures"

Content:

Jeff said:

Sure they do.

krodha said:

Nah.

Malcolm wrote:

Seconded. Can we have a vote now?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 3:13 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

They just go on about bodhisattvas not being bodhisattvas and sentient beings not being sentient beings.

Malcolm wrote:

No, that is a trivialization of Prajñāpāramitā. But since you are in this hypercritical mood, well enjoy! (but being critical shortens one's life considerably).

Crazywisdom said:

I don't respond well to threats. Lol

Malcolm wrote:

Not threatening, just observing. For example, Situ Panchen was a very staunch defender of the standard Madhyamaka view, but his guru told him to adopt the gzhan stong view because it would lengthen his life.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 2:44 AM

Title: Re: Deep Ecology

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

It's not a dog, it's a poodle...

Malcolm wrote:

No, its more like the difference between a dog (numerous and shallow) and a wolf (few and deep).

Sherab Dorje said:

What I meant was that your quote did not contradict what I said, and your above statement just confirmed it.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure it contradicts what you said. You said:

Which would be a fatal error, since Deep Ecologists go to great efforts to show that they are not "just" environmentalists. That is why they consider themselves "deep" and everybody else "shallow".

The fundamental difference in approach is that shallow environmentalism seeks to maintain the industrial, capitalist, growth-oriented, market economy status quo.

Deep ecology is by definition anti-capitalist, anti-industrialist, and anti-class . To be a deep ecologist then is to consistently act in ways which foster the eventual elimination of capitalism, industrial civilization and class.

David Foreman's views on immigration, for example, are shallow inso far as they reinforce class distinctions by refusing to allow indigenous people impoverished by NAFTA from crossing into the USA on the excuse that "more people = more land degradation."

Forman's chief error, like his guru's Edward Abbey, is assuming there was ever a "wild" America. We know that Native People in the Americas systematically managed their environment in a manner which fostered the diversity and health of the ecosystem (after they systematically hunted American megafauna into extinction). The forest fires we experience regularly in the West are chiefly a result of shallow environmental practices which assumed an unpopulated primeval wilderness through which humans moved lightly, if at all.

And of course it is well known that Edward Abbey was a complete racist, whose views on ecology are anything but deep:

It might be wise for us as American citizens to consider calling a halt to the mass influx of even more millions of hungry, ignorant, unskilled, and culturally-morally-generically impoverished people. At least until we have brought our own affairs into order.

Especially when these uninvited millions bring with them an alien mode of life which - let us be honest about this - is not appealing to the majority of Americans. Why not?

Because we prefer democratic government, for one thing; because we still hope for an open, spacious, uncrowded, and beautiful-yes, beautiful!-society, for another. The alternative, in the squalor, cruelty, and corruption of Latin America, is plain for all to see.

<https://towncriernews.blogspot.com/2005/12/edward-abbey-immigration-and-liberal.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 2:43 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

It's obvious the Mahayana sutras and the Pali sutras are not spoken by the same person, tantrtras are even wilder. This is my opinion. Besides that, they don't really offer anything additional or superior.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, I don't agree. Just compare either Cullasuññata sūttas with any Prajñāpāramitā sūtra.

Crazywisdom said:

They just go on about bodhisattvas not being bodhisattvas and sentient beings not being sentient beings.

Malcolm wrote:

No, that is a trivialization of Prajñāpāramitā. But since you are in this hypercritical mood, well enjoy! (but being critical shortens one's life considerably).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 2:17 AM

Title: Re: Apology to the Naga Realm

Content:

cyril said:

"By offering musk [...] snakeskin [...] cuttlefish bone... " - from the page 18 of the document.

I thought you were not supposed to offer animal-derived ingredients, as this will only irritate the Nagas.

Malcolm wrote:

Musk in particular is toxic to Nāgās.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 1:19 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

The true story is these Bodhisattvas are sock puppets.

Malcolm wrote:

True story? No, just another narrative.

Crazywisdom said:

It's obvious the Mahayana sutras and the Pali sutras are not spoken by the same person, tantrtras are even wilder. This is my opinion. Besides that, they don't really offer anything additional or superior.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, I don't agree. Just compare either Cullasuññata sūttas with any Prajñāpāramitā sūtra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 12:35 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

It's not a dog, it's a poodle...

Malcolm wrote:

No, its more like the difference between a dog (numerous and shallow) and a wolf (few and deep).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 12:26 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

Mahayana teaching is said to come from Dharmakaya for historically a lot of it was not spoken by the Buddha Sakyamuni .

Malcolm wrote:

Technically, the sambhogakāya has five certainties. One of them is the certainty of the teaching, which is always Mahāyāna.

Minobu said:

Take the Lotus Sutra , it's a given it was never actually told to people in like the way we go to concert and watch a performance.

and I believe it was first written hundreds of years after Sakyamuni historically left earth.

Malcolm wrote:

Traditionally it is held that when the Buddha taught Mahāyāna, it was collated by the bodhisattvas Mañjuśrī and Samantabhadra on a mountain in S. India and then hidden for several generations.

Crazywisdom said:

The true story is these Bodhisattvas are sock puppets.

Malcolm wrote:

True story? No, just another narrative.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 1st, 2016 at 12:02 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Jeff H said:

Do you consider not voting for Hillary to be a vote for Trump? Certainly in the battleground states, but I think generally, it is a mistake to assume he can't win. And, regardless of the arguments against her, I think putting him in office would be worse.

Malcolm wrote:

The point, in this election, is not who we put into office (anyone is better than Trump), the point is to keep Trump out of the White House. This can only be effectively done by voting for Clinton.

conebeckham said:

Yes indeed.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, we will deal with Hillary Clinton later.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 30th, 2016 at 11:56 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

The two bodies of Sambhogakaya and Nirmanakaya came after due to the realization of Dharmakaya??? or the generation of Dharmakaya ????

how's that ?

so in the end no sentient has been the Primordial Buddha???

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, the realization of the dharmakāya comes before the manifestation of the two rūpakāyas.

So, yes, there is no being who is a true "First Buddha."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 30th, 2016 at 11:51 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

conebeckham said:

Frankly, anyone who would vote for him at this point is demonstrating a crippling lack of intelligence and judgement.

Jeff H said:

Do you consider not voting for Hillary to be a vote for Trump? Certainly in the battleground states, but I think generally, it is a mistake to assume he can't win. And, regardless of the arguments against her, I think putting him in office would be worse.

Malcolm wrote:

The point, in this election, is not who we put into office (anyone is better than Trump), the point is to keep Trump out of the White House. This can only be effectively done by voting for Clinton.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 30th, 2016 at 11:47 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Vasana said:

As we already touched upon, 'the front is long'. If you include the entire environmental movement..

Sherab Dorje said:

Which would be a fatal error, since Deep Ecologists go to great efforts to show that they are not "just" environmentalists. That is why they consider themselves "deep" and everybody else "shallow".

Malcolm wrote:

No, deep and shallow refer to respective approaches within the environmental movement. The late David Orton writes:

The distinction between “shallow” and “deep” ecology made by Naess, although perhaps an invidious comparison which some have called self-serving, nevertheless became a signature and part of the language of ecophilosophy and radical environmentalism. In fairness to Naess, he saw these two terms as “argumentation patterns” and not applied to people. (_Philosophical Dialogues: Arne Naess and the Progress of Ecophilosophy_, p. 444.) What is being called for in this age of ecology is that individuals need to define their “selves” as being part of the natural world. Naess defined the shallow ecology movement, which he says is more influential than the deep ecology movement, as “Fight against pollution and resource depletion. Central objective: the health and affluence of people in the developed countries.” The shallow approach takes for granted beliefs in technological optimism, economic growth, and scientific management and the continuation of existing industrial societies. Naess expressed it this way: “The supporters of shallow ecology think that reforming human relations toward nature can be done within the existing structure of society.” (_Selected Works_, Volume Ten, p. 16.)

Naess defined the “deep movement”, which seeks the transformation of industrial capitalist societies who have brought about the existing environmental crisis, by putting forward seven main points. The article is only a few pages long, but profound and showing the complexity of Naess. He pointed out that biological complexity required a corresponding social and cultural complexity. Outlined is an “anti-class posture” and how anti-pollution devices can, because of increasing the “prices of life necessities” increase class differences. He stressed local autonomy and decentralization.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 30th, 2016 at 6:24 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

boda said:

I didn't ask for perfection. I only ask for evidence of discipline, to a degree that it supersedes philosophizing at least.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not inside the head of everyone who professes deep ecological values. You would have to go out and survey everyone individually to arrive at some answer to your question. So, we can understand then that your question is as useless as it is purely rhetorical.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 30th, 2016 at 5:38 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

boda said:

This is blatantly against DE, being so anthropocentric, even if it were a reasonable view. There's no assurance at all that Mr. Abrams' children would grow up to support DE.

Malcolm wrote:

Do you somehow imagine that the deep ecological perspective means that no humans ever should again have children?

boda said:

If you look a few lines up you'll be able to see that I explicitly wrote "help to reduce the human population." No one is buying your straw men.

Malcolm wrote:

No one is buying your straw man. I just called you on it.

deepecology.org said:

The long-range deep approach involves redesigning our whole systems based on values and methods that truly preserve the ecological and cultural diversity of natural systems. If someone really possessed such values, in a world of 7 billion and growing, would they have children? Would they own a car? How is this discipline, that you claim DE is "first and foremost," expressed?

Malcolm wrote:

You work with circumstances as best you can. For example, I have no children. But I do have a car, use the internet, electricity, and so on.

In your case, you are allowing the perfect to be the enemy of the good.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 30th, 2016 at 2:56 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

boda said:

What does that even mean?

At a cursory google glance, the first on your list, David Abram, has two children. Does he lack the discipline to help reduce the human population?

Lukeinaz said:

If people like David Abram chose not to have children this would not help to reduce the human population. It would only reduce the number of children raised by intelligent parents. In fact, I would encourage the David Abrams of the world to have more children.

boda said:

This is blatantly against DE, being so anthropocentric, even if it were a reasonable view. There's no assurance at all that Mr. Abrams children would grow up to support DE.

Malcolm wrote:

Do you somehow imagine that the deep ecological perspective means that no humans ever should again have children? If so you did not understand the first point of the eight point platform:

The well-being and flourishing of human and nonhuman life on Earth have value in themselves (synonyms: inherent worth, intrinsic value, inherent value). These values are independent of the usefulness of the nonhuman world for human purposes.

This assumes the human life has inherent value, as does nonhuman life.

boda said:

As a mountaineer who had climbed all over the world, Naess had enjoyed the opportunity to observe political and social activism in diverse cultures. Both historically and in the contemporary movement, Naess saw two different forms of environmentalism, not necessarily incompatible with each other. One he called the "long-range deep ecology movement" and the other, the "shallow ecology movement." The word "deep" in part referred to the level of questioning of our purposes and values when arguing in environmental conflicts. The "deep" movement involves deep questioning, right down to fundamental root causes. The short-term, shallow approach stops before the ultimate level of fundamental change, often promoting technological fixes (e.g. recycling, increased automotive efficiency, export-driven monocultural organic agriculture) based on the same consumption-oriented values and methods of the industrial economy. The long-range deep approach involves redesigning our whole systems based on values and methods that truly preserve the ecological and cultural diversity of natural systems.

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.deepecology.org/deepecology.htm>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 30th, 2016 at 2:46 AM

Title: Re: What does it mean to pray to the guru?

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

I think praying to the guru, viewing guru as dharmakaya and guru yoga are all different things.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is all of a piece.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 30th, 2016 at 2:13 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Vasana said:

"Including indigenous people and others who have never heard the term "deep ecology." Which begs the question of whether you can be classed as being part of a movement you've never heard of simply by external categorization.

Malcolm wrote:

If you have something with spokes, rim and an axle you have a wheel, whether or not you have ever heard of a wheel.

Vasana said:

This is why I previously said that deep ecology is a species of the general environmental movement and not the other way around.

Malcolm wrote:

Did I disagree with you? As Naess said, "The front is long."

Vasana said:

One thing for sure is that in the future, there will be a definite need for a more unified environmental movement - I really don't think we need to burden ourselves with giving it a name just yet since the problems of the environment are both particular/local and global. Different sets of people are all working towards both specific and wider means even if we're not wearing the same colours and sports shirts /jerseys.

Malcolm wrote:

Deep ecology is a perspective on the environmental movement. I never argued it wasn't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 30th, 2016 at 2:10 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

Mahayana teaching is said to come from Dharmakaya for historically a lot of it was not spoken by the Buddha Sakyamuni .

Malcolm wrote:

Technically, the sambhogakāya has five certainties. One of them is the certainty of the teaching, which is always Mahāyāna.

Minobu said:

Take the Lotus Sutra , it's a given it was never actually told to people in like the way we go to concert and watch a performance.

and I believe it was first written hundreds of years after Sakyamuni historically left earth.

Malcolm wrote:

Traditionally it is held that when the Buddha taught Mahāyāna, it was collated by the bodhisattvas Mañjuśrī and Samantabhadra on a mountain in S. India and then hidden for several generations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 30th, 2016 at 2:05 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Deep ecology is first and foremost a personal discipline...

boda said:

What does that even mean?

At a cursory google glance, the first on your list, David Abram, has two children. Does he lack the discipline to help reduce the human population?

Malcolm wrote:

Some people have children. That does not prevent them from having a deep ecological perspective or discipline. This is just another shallow view on what it means to have a deep ecological perspective.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 30th, 2016 at 12:51 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

I see a couple of Earth First! people made your list...

Malcolm wrote:

Being an Earth Firster does not preclude one from having a deep ecological view. I don't think the organization as a whole is representative of a deep ecological perspective.

Sherab Dorje said:

In response to that list I would say: so what? Where is the mass movement that is going to save the current ecosphere from extinction? NOWHERE.

Malcolm wrote:

You seem to have a very narrow definition of "movement." It seems that if there isn't destruction of property, violence and demonstrations, you don't consider it a "movement."

Deep ecology is first and foremost a personal discipline which informs how we relate to the world and its beings. Many people who have a deep ecological perspective are at the forefront of the ecological movement, including indigenous people and others who have never heard the term "deep ecology."

This part of the conversation began when I noted that the failure of the Green Party is rooted in two things: 1) it's abandonment of a deep ecological framework (at least this is clearly the case with the dominant Green Party in the US) and 2) its subsequent adoption of Ecosocialism, which is purely green-washed old school Marxism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 30th, 2016 at 12:37 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

But unfortunately, no one reads Naess, so of course no one understands what he meant by "deep ecology."

Sherab Dorje said:

And those that listened to Naess are at the very pinnacle of success as we speak. Like I said before: (unfortunately for this planet) Deep Ecology is just an obscure and insignificant academic philosophical trend.

Malcolm wrote:

David Abram

Michael Asher

Judi Bari
Thomas Berry
Wendell Berry
Leonardo Boff
Fritjof Capra
Savitri Devi[8]
Michael Dowd
Vivienne Elanta
Warwick Fox
Chellis Glendinning
Edward Goldsmith
Félix Guattari
Paul Hawken
Julia Butterfly Hill
Derrick Jensen
Bernie Krause
Satish Kumar
Dolores LaChapelle
Gilbert LaFreniere
Pentti Linkola
John Livingston
Joanna Macy
Jerry Mander
Freya Mathews
Terence McKenna
W. S. Merwin
Arne Næss
Peter Newman
David Orton
Val Plumwood
Theodore Roszak
John Seed
Paul Shepard
Vandana Shiva
Gary Snyder
Timothy Sprigge
Richard Sylvan
Douglas Tompkins
Oberon Zell-Ravenheart
John Zerzan

There are many people on that list who have made enduring contributions to the ecology movement, such as Wendell Berry, Bill McKibben, Joanna Macy, John Seed, Vandana Shiva, etc.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, September 30th, 2016 at 12:12 AM
Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem
Content:
Sherab Dorje said:
Failed miserably...

Malcolm wrote:
They failed because they never read Naess. Naess was never about spiking trees or monkey wrenching bulldozers.

But unfortunately, no one reads Naess, so of course no one understands what he meant by "deep ecology."

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, September 29th, 2016 at 11:58 PM
Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
trumpella.jpg (109.56 KiB) Viewed 1230 times

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, September 29th, 2016 at 10:51 PM
Title: Re: Primordial Buddha
Content:
Minobu said:
lets leave it at Malcolm should be a little more carefull in stomping on us little people with what we post.

Malcolm wrote:
I didn't stomp on anyone.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, September 29th, 2016 at 10:13 PM
Title: Re: What does it mean to pray to the guru?
Content:
Boomerang said:
The question is in the title. Is it the same type of praying that Christians do? Or, is it different? How is it the same/different?

What does it mean to receive the guru's blessings?

They say that all success on the path comes from faith and devotion toward the guru.

What does that mean?

Malcolm wrote:

It means that all your success on the path comes from receiving teachings from the guru. Without a guru, no success on the path is possible. Why? Because in order to enter Vajrayāna, you must receive empowerments and so on. In recognition of the crucial importance of the guru, we have many supplications and visualizations where we receive blessings from them in the form of light. This is basically a symbol of receiving teachings.

There is however no mystical force which transfers from guru to disciple called "blessings." It is not like grace.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

Namdrol, how would you translate 'adhisthana' or 'chin lab'? Can you elaborate on their meanings and importance? Thanks!

Malcolm wrote:

The term really means to "confer power"

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 29th, 2016 at 9:26 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Earth First! is not in fact a true representative of deep ecology. They may have popularized the term, but for example, but Naess did not approve or sanction David Foreman's misanthropy at all:...

Sherab Dorje said:

While it is true that David Foreman lacked Naess's gift of the gab (being white, but not well-educated, or middle class enough), it is false to say that they were not representative of Deep Ecology.

Malcolm wrote:

In general, Earth First! was a movement following Edward Abbey's views. I would never characterize Edward Abbey as someone representative of deep ecology.

Of course, Bookchin accused Earth First of being racist ecofascists over Abbey's anti-immigration stance.

David Orton writes:

Foreman was one of the key figures in founding Earth First! He went on to do and promote crucial restoration ecology work in the magazine Wild Earth, which he helped found and on the Wildlands Project. Overall he has, and continues to make, a substantial contribution. He has never made any secret of his right-of-center original political views and often showered these rightist views in uninformed comments in print, on what he saw as "leftists" in the movement.

<http://home.ca.inter.net/~greenweb/Ecofascism.html>

Sherab Dorje said:

Earth First! (not just the original American chapter, but the global network of small activist cells) was the closest thing Deep Ecology had to a movement.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it really isn't.

Sherab Dorje said:

But being based on late 19th and early 20th century notions of the propaganda of the deed (rather than mass movement models) and because their activities were largely illegal (destroying private property) it made it easy for the police to target them, find them and (literally, in the case of Judi Bari) destroy them.

Malcolm wrote:

It has been my long held opinion that Earth Firsters in general do not have a good understanding of deep ecology.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 29th, 2016 at 4:58 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Vasana said:

Yeah i have no problem with that. I'm in agreement with Naess in that all three movements need to occur side by side. That of social justice, that of peace and that of the 'deep ecology movement.'

My 'issue' is simply the insistence on the self-proclaimed name of 'deep-ecology' as the definitive title of that third movement. The name and ethos evolved from the environmental movement in general and not the other way around. If you asked your average person if they simply knew of the existence of the environmental movement, most would say yes. If you asked your average person if they knew of the existence of the deep ecology movement, most would say no. Deep ecology is a species of the environmental movement and not the other way around. Environmental movements might have different ideologies but some will still remain consistent with the praxis of D.E and you can still effectively advocate for meaningful ecological progress without the need to lump things under a single title.

It would just be a case of 'a rose by any other name smelling just as sweet' if the deep ecology movement was synonymous with all forms of environmentalism but that doesn't seem to be so. Equally, there are thousands of environmental initiatives that are in alignment with the D.E view but have no association with them.

People are less concerned with the titles of movements and of the various 'isms' and more concerned with whether they actually function.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a matter of perspective, mainly:

You've been credited with having coined the expression "deep ecology." How exactly did the idea originate?

Well, I did not coin the term "deep ecology." I coined two terms. One is "supporter of the deep ecology movement" – a fairly long expression. And the other is "ecosophy." But this term "supporter of the deep ecology movement" was very soon abbreviated to "deep ecology" and supporters were called "deep ecologists."

How does "deep" ecology differ from "shallow" ecology?

Movements are always changing and one should be cautious in saying what strictly separates two movements, like the deep and the shallow. One marked difference is that the total argumentations of those who support the shallow movement are anthropocentric in the sense that everything done to protect and restore nature is seen as having benefit for future human generations. In deep ecology, future generations means future generations of all living beings, including rivers for example.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 29th, 2016 at 4:51 AM

Title: Re: What does it mean to pray to the guru?

Content:

Boomerang said:

I was inspired to make this thread after reading a passage in Not For Happiness by Dzongsar Jamyang Khyentse Rinpoche, in which he says:

There will also be times when none of the usual logic works and you find yourself incapable of accepting even the most patently obvious truth that death is imminent and inevitable, and not one living being—friend, family or even you yourself—can escape it. When such stubborn delusions take hold of your mind, pray to your guru, the buddhas and the bodhisattvas and beg them for help truly to accept the inexorability of death. And don't fall into the trap of imagining you should first learn to despise samsara and develop strong "renunciation mind" before you resort to such a prayer. As the great Jamgön Kongtrul Lodrö Tayé said, you should rely on your guru for everything, including the blessing of no longer hungering for samsara. In fact, you should pray to your guru and ask him to make sure that you pray!

This passage gives me the idea that praying to guru the activates some sort of force that helps you along the path. The force could be coming from outside of you, or it could be a matter of psyching yourself up to unlock your hidden potential.

Malcolm wrote:

Supplicating one's guru can be a method of recognizing the nature of the mind. But for that, one needs instructions from your guru.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 29th, 2016 at 4:20 AM

Title: Re: What does it mean to pray to the guru?

Content:

Boomerang said:

Thank you for your answers. Does that mean praying to the guru is synonymous with recollecting your motivation to practice the guru's teachings, or in other words, psyching yourself up?

Malcolm wrote:

When I supplicate my gurus, I am thanking them for giving me teachings. For me, at any rate, the act of offering supplications and petitioning blessings from my gurus is principally an act of mindfulness of the lineage.

Other people have different ideas about this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 29th, 2016 at 4:17 AM

Title: Re: What does it mean to pray to the guru?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is however no mystical force which transfers from guru to disciple called "blessings."

Fortyeightvows said:

Really not even a little ?

Isn't love and commitment a mystical force?

Malcolm wrote:

No, they are mental factors.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 29th, 2016 at 4:14 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yup. Because the problem is the means of production itself.

Sherab Dorje said:

You obviously have never worked in factories, coz if you had you would know that the vast majority of factory worker hate their job and do it merely to make ends meet. They would jump at the opportunity to do something useful and creative with the means at hand.

Malcolm wrote:

You obviously have no clue about me or my life, nor what I have done to make a living.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 29th, 2016 at 4:13 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Vasana said:

Even if people have qualms with deep ecology , I can't imagine there being much protest towards the core methodology required, that is, a systems-theory approach.

Malcolm wrote:

Statements from some of the Earth First!ers would give you the impression that the whole species is screwed up, but again, I think this is a minority dimension. Warwick Fox, a deep ecology theorist in Australia, says we have to distinguish between being misanthropic – hating humanity – and being anti-anthropocentric. There's a difference between saying we want to get rid of all human beings, and saying that humans aren't the most important species on the planet.

<http://www.context.org/iclib/ic22/zimmrman/>

Earth First! is not in fact a true representative of deep ecology. They may have popularized the term, but for example, but Naess did not approve or sanction David Foreman's misanthropy at all:

About another misunderstanding: what is your feeling about those who have used ecology to defend social Darwinism or Malthusianism? For example, David Foreman of Earth First! has been quoted as saying with regard to the Ethiopian famine, "The best thing would be to just let nature seek its own balance, to let the people there just starve."

Dave Foreman sometimes seems to speak without much carefulness and sometimes he's then quoted even less carefully making these statements. The only thing I can find there which can be said to be a supportable view is the opinion of many doctors who are treating Ethiopian starving children, when they say – not publicly – but when they say that the best thing for many of these children would be to die. But of course we cannot let them die. We have to, as physicians, try to heal them. Also because of the parents, we cannot let children die. Dave Foreman may have the opinion that it would be best for starving people to die, but ecological humanitarian norms among humans are such that we are extremely concerned about starvation. We have more responsibility toward humans than we do toward animals. If someone had to choose between saving a starving child and the possibility of killing the last rhinoceros, if there were no other means of saving the child, he should kill the rhinoceros and we would all think that correct. But it would be a scandal, especially among rich nations, not to help the poorer nations let living beings continue to live. In short, we are not social Darwinists.

And this is an important clarification by Naess:

Would deep ecology preclude concern for the issues of social justice, which have become part of the agenda of left Greens?

No, I think that in this century we have three great grassroots movements: that of social justice, that of peace and that of the deep ecology movement. Those three have to cooperate intimately. It's quite clear that the ecological crisis cannot be solved in isolation from social justice – for instance, to try to conserve rainforests without at the same time taking up the tremendous problem of what to do with relations between North and South. We have to take those problems – all of them – at once, and not say that one is more important than the others. So it's extremely important that the social justice movement is always taken into consideration. The peace movement is too obvious to talk about at all. The military – 900 billion dollars used every year for militarism – is one of the greatest polluters in the present day. Also any kind of warlike situation immediately tends to negate every kind of concern not only for civilians but for all living beings whatsoever. So those three movements must cooperate. What distinguishes the deep ecology movements is that it is practically 100% a grassroots movement, whereas the other two have some support among the governments.

And:

What do you think are our realistic prospects for the future – for humankind?

There will be no ultimate catastrophe involving all humanity or involving all higher organisms on the earth. But there may be a deterioration in the quality of life both in and outside cities. And there will be hundreds of catastrophes on the order of Chernobyl. I look forward to this trend changing in the 22nd century, at the earliest.

The 22nd century?

The next century – the 21st – I'm afraid won't see any great social and ecological progress.

<http://www.kyotojournal.org/the-journal/conversations/ecosophy-beyond-east-and-west-%E2%80%94-arne-naess-in-kyoto/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 29th, 2016 at 3:48 AM

Title: Re: What does it mean to pray to the guru?

Content:

Boomerang said:

The question is in the title. Is it the same type of praying that Christians do? Or, is it different? How is it the same/different?

What does it mean to receive the guru's blessings?

They say that all success on the path comes from faith and devotion toward the guru. What does that mean?

Malcolm wrote:

It means that all your success on the path comes from receiving teachings from the guru. Without a guru, no success on the path is possible. Why? Because in order to enter Vajrayāna, you must receive empowerments and so on. In recognition of the crucial importance of the guru, we have many supplications and visualizations where we receive blessings from them in the form of light. This is basically a symbol of receiving teachings.

There is however no mystical force which transfers from guru to disciple called "blessings." It is not like grace.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 29th, 2016 at 3:45 AM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

sillyrabbit said:

I do consider this work to be a labor of love because I value the well-being of my community, whose ancestors were kidnapped and brought here as slaves.

Malcolm wrote:

If you are from the African American community, in fact chances are that like many Africans sold into slavery, they were captured in battle as prisoners of war. Many African slaves were skilled soldiers. The history of Maroon communities from Brazil to Virginia should prove instructive.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 29th, 2016 at 3:23 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

i don't want to open up old wounds...but i think people see that you did use the wrong word and it did make me feel like everything i posted was moronic and non buddhist...it was like making fun of me....it hurt coming from you.

Malcolm wrote:
I was not making fun of you.

Minobu said:
... using the big bang which has nothing to do with what I was talking about is the same thing Malcolm it debased what i wrote and again it hurt..

Malcolm wrote:
I did not intentionally debase anything you said.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, September 29th, 2016 at 1:13 AM
Title: Re: Primordial Buddha
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
I didn't make a speculative comment. I used a simile. I am pretty sure that I write sufficiently clearly that my posts don't require your commentary in order to be understood.
Yes, Minobu, I knew you were not referring to Genesis, and neither was I. I was referring to the idea that there was an initial state of purity (edenic) from which we deviated. Not even the teachings of the Great Perfection in Tibet maintain this literally. Perhaps there is some Sino-Japanese Buddhist school that maintains some theory about "original enlightenment."

Queequeg said:
I'm sorry, its not at all clear you are referencing a simile. If you say so.

Moving along...

Malcolm wrote:
It is extremely clear had you bothered to read every post in sequence. "Edenic" is a simile. Yes, you should move along, since you are wasting your time better spend addressing moderation needs elsewhere.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, September 29th, 2016 at 1:12 AM
Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem
Content:

Vasana said:
I agree with all of those deep ecology pointers above but I think the carrying capacity of the earth is greater than even the present global population.

Malcolm wrote:

I think this is a very mistaken point of view.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 29th, 2016 at 12:37 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Queequeg said:

My statement was actually that, even in the most extreme interpretations of OE, there is no proposition of some original pure state, like an Eden.

Malcolm wrote:

I was earlier addressing Minobu's query about such a pure state.

Queequeg said:

And I was addressing your speculative comment. My comment was not directed at you necessarily - just making something clear for anyone who might read the thread, including Dave who might read something into your speculation.

Lighten up, dude.

Malcolm wrote:

I didn't make a speculative comment. I used a simile. I am pretty sure that I write sufficiently clearly that my posts don't require your commentary in order to be understood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 29th, 2016 at 12:24 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Queequeg said:

My statement was actually that, even in the most extreme interpretations of OE, there is no proposition of some original pure state, like an Eden.

Malcolm wrote:

I was earlier addressing Minobu's query about such a pure state.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 29th, 2016 at 12:24 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Considering that there is no biosphere we know of but this one, the issue of human beings destroying the planet and all other life along with it is very much a biocentric concern.

Sherab Dorje said:

No. A biocentric view would not give a flying f*ck about what happens to human beings during the transition to an ecology centered existence. Like the title of one of my favorite Deep Ecology groups says: Earth First! Human concerns don't get factored into the equation.

Malcolm wrote:

However inconvenient it may be to some, humans are also part of the biosphere. Deep ecology does not exclude human beings:

The well-being and flourishing of human and non-human life on Earth have value in themselves (synonyms: intrinsic value, inherent worth). These values are independent of the usefulness of the non-human world for human purposes.

Richness and diversity of life forms contribute to the realization of these values and are also values in themselves.

Humans have no right to reduce this richness and diversity except to satisfy vital needs.

The flourishing of human life and cultures is compatible with a substantially smaller human population. The flourishing of non-human life requires a smaller human population.

Present human interference with the non-human world is excessive, and the situation is rapidly worsening.

Policies must therefore be changed. These policies affect basic economic, technological, and ideological structures. The resulting state of affairs will be deeply different from the present.

The ideological change will be mainly that of appreciating life quality (dwelling in situations of inherent value) rather than adhering to an increasingly higher standard of living. There will be a profound awareness of the difference between bigness and greatness.

Those who subscribe to the foregoing points have an obligation directly or indirectly to try to implement the necessary changes.

<https://theanarchistlibrary.org/library/arne-naess-and-george-sessions-basic-principles-of-deep-ecology>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 29th, 2016 at 12:20 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

And one more thing to ponder: Do you really believe that if the proletarian class actually controlled the means of production they would choose continue to poison and destroy themselves making useless things designed to break down as quickly as possible?

Malcolm wrote:

Yup. Because the problem is the means of production itself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 28th, 2016 at 11:50 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Queequeg said:

I don't think even the most extreme views of Original Enlightenment propose an Eden.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh for lord's sake, literal much?

Queequeg said:

Does not compute.

Malcolm wrote:

Translation, "Oh" exclamatory remark; "for" is a preposition. "Lord's sake," used to be a meaningful Christian expression, now part of common vernacular meaning, "be serious." "Literal" means not understand the sense or context of a given statement or word. Much means "too much."

In other words, "Seriously? You are being way too literal."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 28th, 2016 at 11:48 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Sure, but your emotional appeal to change is based on the assumption that we will destroy the planet and that we will not have somewhere to live. That is hardly biocentric.

Malcolm wrote:

Considering that there is no biosphere we know of but this one, the issue of human beings destroying the planet and all other life along with it is very much a biocentric concern

Sherab Dorje said:

Not to mention the fact that a "movement", which is basically an extraordinarily small bunch of privileged white males, now feel that they are not only speaking on behalf of humans, but the whole freakin' planet.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not merely a small bunch of white males. There is an upwelling of indigenous people's voices proclaiming a biocentric viewpoint and protesting extractive practices from such viewpoint all over the planet .

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 28th, 2016 at 11:37 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

"original enlightenment."

Queequeg said:

I don't think even the most extreme views of Original Enlightenment propose an Eden.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh for lord's sake, literal much?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 28th, 2016 at 11:26 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

From what I wrote I ask the group "Is it possible i am mixing Vedic thought with Buddhist thought."

Has anyone ever heard of these views and could they please put them in context for me. Again I was not inferring in the slightest to Biblical anything, and as far as the quantum influx into it , I was personally comparing Quantum theory that everything in the universe is coming from something more akin to thought than hard atom molecule theory. Hence another view that i would like to be addressed.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, Minobu, I knew you were not referring to Genesis, and neither was I. I was referring to the idea that there was an initial state of purity (edenic) from which we deviated. Not even the teachings of the Great Perfection in Tibet maintain this literally. Perhaps there is some Sino-Japanese Buddhist school that maintains some theory about "original enlightenment."

Minobu said:

Is everything in this known universe arising from Karma. Or is Karma the cause for trees and air and planets and all that it is.

Malcolm wrote:

According to Vasubandhu, "The variety of the world arises from karma," and yes, the actions of all sentient beings in the last universe lead to the arising of this one.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 28th, 2016 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

The thing is, we seem to understand the word "socialism" differently.

Malcolm wrote:

I see Socialism as an economic system whose only real complaint with Capitalism is who owns the means of production. Democratic Socialism is just an attempt at reconciliation of this contradiction (between Socialism and Capitalism). But it is still capitalist in essence and so it does not address the real issues facing the planet.

As for the rest of it, I think we need to leave 19th century philosophers and their alternate socialisms behind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 28th, 2016 at 10:10 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

It is pretty simple, really — I told you that the technology that got us to where we are today cannot fix these problems because our whole economy, as well as the technology it produced, is based on resource extraction and exploitation. Somehow, you reject this idea since you imagine, naively, that technology is value free, the old "people kill people, guns don't kill people" argument.

Guns are designed and made for killing people. A production line can (for example) be used to make ecologically-sound recycled products.

treehuggingoctopus said:

Yes, but a part of the parcel is the role the worker plays there, the changes to their lifestyle such a role forces, the appearance of the social class in the long run... Not to mention the fact that production lines assume (and are possible in) a 100% androcentric culture, one which has the concept of "resources" (i.e., that which is what we use to create our world, which we are separate from and superior to, which is non-sentient, etc.) and thus also endorses a fundamentally androcentric (and instrumental) approach to the non-human world. Come to think of it, the seed of capitalism is there as well...

Malcolm wrote:

The whole point is that the technology we use shapes how we perceive the world. To a hammer, for example, everything is a nail. Class is nothing more nor less than divisions of society based upon who has the privilege of extracting and consuming more resources. Class is a symptom of extractive economics, not the cause of extractive economics. Therefore, thinking that we need to resolve class issues in order to resolve ecological issues is both far too human-centered, and is addressing a symptom instead of a cause. Indeed, the latter fact is largely the reason Socialist economies have been every bit as much extractive economies as Capitalist ones. As I pointed out already, Socialism never created a means of production on its own, and therefore it relies on the principles of extractive economics equally as much as Capitalism.

Nope, the only way to resolve the ecological crisis is to abandon a human centered approach to civilization, and adopt a biocentric approach. As far as we know, this is the only planet that can support life such as ours. We better stop f&8cking it up.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 28th, 2016 at 9:42 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

You don't read what I write and then decide what I wrote and start in with something else to just prove what you believe..

Malcolm wrote:

We do not have the same opinion of what transpired in our conversation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 28th, 2016 at 9:37 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

It is pretty simple, really — I told you that the technology that got us to where we are today cannot fix these problems because our whole economy, as well as the technology it produced, is based on resource extraction and exploitation. Somehow, you reject this idea since you imagine, naively, that technology is value free, the old "people kill people, guns don't kill people" argument.

Guns are designed and made for killing people. A production line can (for example) be used to make ecologically-sound recycled products.

Malcolm wrote:

The fact that we have recycled products mass produced on the scale that they are merely points to the fact that production line technology is extractive.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 28th, 2016 at 9:35 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I don't see how this is a criticism of Naess at all.

PuerAzelis said:

Whether domination of humans precedes domination of nature isn't relevant as to whether the best solution is social justice or a "total-field image" of the world?

Malcolm wrote:

I answered this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 28th, 2016 at 3:22 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I've been waiting for you to stop offering non-sequitor criticisms of deep ecology. The other point, which seem to fail to grasp is that what matters in the end is that we change how human beings relate to and think about the environment and there world.

Bookchin's analysis of dominance as the source of the trouble is not consistent with the Buddhist analysis of the problem [Aggañña Sutta in the Dighanikāya].

As this sūtra shows, dominance comes from hoarding resources. Resource hoarding does not come from dominance.

Sherab Dorje said:

Oh look, surprise-surprise, instead of answering the question you resorted to ad an ad hom and propped up another straw man...

The answer to your straw man argument is quite simple actually: chicken-egg-chicken-egg-ad nauseum...

Malcolm wrote:

It is pretty simple, really — I told you that the technology that got us to where we are today cannot fix these problems because our whole economy, as well as the technology it produced, is based on resource extraction and exploitation. Somehow, you reject this idea since you imagine, naively, that technology is value free, the old "people kill people, guns don't kill people" argument.

The first step in solving a problem is recognizing it to begin with. I don't think you recognize the problem since you insist that the technology and economy upon which it is based is not the problem. For you, class is the problem. I don't agree with this assessment. Class is a product of the economy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 28th, 2016 at 2:57 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

What do you propose we do while we wait for humanity to fall off its horse while travelling to Damascus?

Malcolm wrote:

I've been waiting for you to stop offering non-sequitor criticisms of deep ecology. The other point, which seem to fail to grasp is that what matters in the end is that we change how human beings relate to and think about the environment and there world. Bookchin's analysis of dominance as the source of the trouble is not consistent with the Buddhist analysis of the problem [Aggañña Sutta in the Dighanikāya].

As this sūtra shows, dominance comes from hoarding resources. Resource hoarding does not come from dominance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 28th, 2016 at 2:23 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

His dismissal was trite and lacking in substance. Bookchin was not a very deep thinker. He was a leftist reactionary. Like most on the left, ideological purity was more important to him than actually doing anything. Bookchin's Institute of Social Ecology is moribund.[/quote]Where did I say that Bookchin is the new messiah? This is in fact what is required to ameliorate climate change.

What do you propose we do while we wait for humanity to fall off its horse while travelling to Damascus? That does not mean you understand Naess's Ecosophy T.

Sherab Dorje said:

So anybody that disagrees with Naess does not understand him? What I am pointing out is that contrary to what you may believe, I am not clueless about Deep Ecology. Personally I was more impressed with earth First than the ivory tower brigade.

Malcolm wrote:

I have yet to see you once accurately describe deep ecology. I have seen you repeatedly borrow cliché invectives from Bookchin.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 28th, 2016 at 2:16 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

His dismissal is not trite, it is spot on.

PuerAzelis said:

Agree.

[A]ll our notions of dominating nature stem from the very real domination of human by human. [The] domination of human by human preceded the notion of dominating nature. Indeed, human domination of human gave rise to the very idea of dominating nature ... it is not until we eliminate domination in all its forms ... that we will really create a rational, ecological society.

Bookchin, Remaking Society, p.44.

I don't think this sounds like a trite dismissal.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't see how this is a criticism of Naess at all. Moreover, Bookchin's approach to ecology is completely androcentric.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 28th, 2016 at 1:49 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Queequeg said:

The time of the Buddha's enlightenment is earlier than his purported enlightenment in this world at Gaya.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course. This is discussed in many Mahāyāna sūtras and commentaries.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 28th, 2016 at 1:45 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You still don't understand deep ecology. It's ok. I don't have any pressing need for you to understand it. Many people have bought into Bookchin's trite dismissals. Their loss.

Sherab Dorje said:

His dismissal is not trite, it is spot on. The Deep Ecology movement is in a woeful state. Like it or lump my friend!

Malcolm wrote:

His dismissal was trite and lacking in substance. Bookchin was not a very deep thinker. He was a leftist reactionary. Like most on the left, ideological purity was more important to him than actually doing anything. Bookchin's Institute of Social Ecology is moribund.

Sherab Dorje said:

It is somewhat distressing, however, that you do not seem to understand that the biosphere crisis we are in will not be solved by the same kind of economic and technological thinking that put us in this crisis to begin with.

Oh, I understand this VERY well. Thing is that we currently have to work with what we have got, RIGHT NOW.

Malcolm wrote:

What we have right now isn't working at all. See above.

Sherab Dorje said:

Humanity is not about to do a sudden about face regarding technology, production and consumption. It is not about to have an ecological awakening.

Malcolm wrote:

This is in fact what is required to ameliorate climate change.

Sherab Dorje said:

As for the philosophical notions of Deep Ecology, I actually agree with a lot of what is being said, but politically it is just not happening, and the mass movement (which you are hoping will save us) happens to be a political movement. A movement of the polity.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not hoping anyone will save us. I merely pointing out what is necessary for halting total planetary desertification.

Sherab Dorje said:

PS I think I may have mentioned it to you before, but I used to help edit, layout and produce the Australian version of the magazine Deep Ecologist back in the early nineties.

Malcolm wrote:

That does not mean you understand Naess's Ecosophy T.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 28th, 2016 at 1:20 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Nothing can be promised to anyone other than a virtually lifeless, planetary desert if humanity does not abandon extractive economic practices. Since capitalism and its shadow, socialism, are both predicated on extractive economics, both are failures.

Sherab Dorje said:

Dude, you know how long millennialism of one variety or another has been around? The Nibiru theory has more followers than Deep Ecology. It is a mass movement with greater momentum. If Deep Ecology does not pick up it's act and start to assess why people don't give a shit about its largely philosophical, pseudo-religious and intellectual ramblings (given the direct action wing of the movement has vanished up its own rectum) it too will be sent to the garbage bin of history (along with post-modernism and post-structuralism) planetary disaster or no...

Malcolm wrote:

You still don't understand deep ecology. It's ok. I don't have any pressing need for you to understand it. Many people have bought into Bookchin's trite dismissals. Their loss.

It is somewhat distressing, however, that you do not seem to understand that the biosphere crisis we are in will not be solved by the same kind of economic and technological thinking that put us in this crisis to begin with.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 28th, 2016 at 1:06 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

The Cicada said:

. He might be an actual equivalent to Caesar, if only because so many of those who oppose him believe in authoritarianism more than democracy and are so easily willing to characterize those with whom they disagree as simply being "irrational."

Malcolm wrote:

If he gets elected, it will be because those ignorant fools who admire a man who has made public his fanboy admiration for authoritarian leaders like Putin and so on will turn out in greater numbers than rational voters who do not want a tyrant elected president of the USA.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 28th, 2016 at 12:29 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, you're a Marxist.

Sherab Dorje said:

Sometimes... And you seem to be blissfully unaware of the tensions that exist in society as a consequence of class.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, I just think they are not as important as the question of the environment.

Sherab Dorje said:

Of course there are desperate attempts to sublimate the tensions by promising proletarians the apparent opportunity to become members of the bourgeoisie, but as the stats (provided by boda) show: they ain't goin' nowhere!

Malcolm wrote:

Nothing can be promised to anyone other than a virtually lifeless, planetary desert if humanity does not abandon extractive economic practices. Since capitalism and its shadow, socialism, are both predicated on extractive economics, both are failures.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 27th, 2016 at 11:27 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is a recognition people with different value systems can arrive at the same conclusion and work together, the use the example of Buddhists and Christians who both oppose capital punishment.

This is why it is crucial to read Naess if one hopes to understand the core principles that underlie the deep ecological approach.

Sherab Dorje said:

Proletariat and Bourgeoisie together, fighting for the environment. Fat chance.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, you're a Marxist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 27th, 2016 at 11:26 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

again you decide what i am doing.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, it is really the other way around.

Minobu said:

well we could straighten that out by explaining to me why use edenic and the big bang thing the way you did.

if you really look at what i wrote i looked to you as some sort of teacher here....then it was like ignore totally what i write and insult the words with words to make it all look lame. i'm strictly talking here about the use of edenic and big bang.

also you ignore the main content of everything i write and just do some sort of troll thing to get reaction.

lol..it's actually amusing ...i lol about it all the time...your no light wieght in your thing.

d

(waits for a one liner from malcolm ignoring the crux of what i ask)lol

Malcolm wrote:

One) I did not troll your post. So stop saying that I did.

Two) I responded to what I thought were the essential points. We were discussing primordial buddhas. You kept insisting there was some pure state before samasara. I rejected this idea.

Three) The term edenic means "A state of purity before a fall."

Four) Quantum physics asserts that time and space are continua that can be mathematically described. This is fine as far as things go, but it really does not have anything to do with Buddhist concepts of space and time. Thus, your example of time as a circle is pretty irrelevant here.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 27th, 2016 at 11:05 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

again you decide what i am doing.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, it is really the other way around.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 27th, 2016 at 10:57 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

why are you going there?

Malcolm wrote:

You began to talk about the theory of time in quantum physics.

Minobu said:

At the end of my day my grappling with concepts of Primordial Buddhas, and keeping an open mind to something actually defining whether there was one outside of the concept of Dharmakaya only school of thought or not is not going to alter my dedication to mine and other's liberation.

I've spent my entire life absorbing different schools of thought, jumping into various Buddhist sects, so on and on and on.

I see Nichiren Shonin's Dharma as my best way of integrating myself with the Buddha's Dharma to help myself and other sentient.

So.....Am i going to let trolling an online forum really upset me ... i really thought highly of you Malcolm but this....

I have this serious discussion and Malcolm decides to ignore what i say and confer that is about some edenic view. That was an insult for I'm not on some Christian fundamentalist site trying to talk of eden, I'm discussing something akin to a Samadhi state and the like.

Something again I would like to talk about seriously. I chose you Malcolm to help me.

Then just because i use a little quantum physics and Stephen Hawking theory it becomes some big bang discussion. For me it's a troll and i truly hope you enjoyed the stage Malcolm , you know what you did and i know so seriously if it brings you some joy that indeed at the end of the day gives me pleasure.

I don't think me saying the verdict is out on such a subject will hinder me, but I do know trying to annoy others is not healthy.

Malcolm wrote:

I can see you are quite upset about insults which do not exist. I said nothing for which I deserve to be addressed as a troll. I answered you directly and honestly, and you did not like my reply. I am content to let it rest there. But now you are insisting on making this personal, and that is not called for.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 27th, 2016 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: Passion Bodhi

Content:

Kilaya. said:

Okay, so can we say that "passion bodhi" is passion energy and "rainbow-like mental body" is the illusory body?

ratna said:

ཐཱི་འཕགས་ཀྱི་འཕྲིན་ལྷན་པའི་སྐུ་མཁའ་ལ། །འདྲི་བའི་བྱང་ཆུབ་སྒྲ་ཚཱུལ་ཡོད།

I think it just means In general, there are various assertions regarding Bodhi for the beings in the three realms of Samsara.

R

Malcolm wrote:

In general, there are various awakenings asserted for the beings in the three realms of samsara.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 27th, 2016 at 9:08 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This really explains everything perfectly:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e = document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
```

document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 27th, 2016 at 9:01 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is quite practical since it accommodates other positive approaches to the environment and ecology.

Sherab Dorje said:

This is a political position known as populism.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is a recognition people with different value systems can arrive at the same conclusion and work together, the use the example of Buddhists and Christians who both oppose capital punishment.

This is why it is crucial to read Naess if one hopes to understand the core principles that underlie the deep ecological approach.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 27th, 2016 at 5:15 AM

Title: Re: The 5th Skandha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

What does zhi mean in Sanskrit?

Astus said:

It can be a translation of various words. According to the Buddhist Chinese-Sanskrit Great Dictionary (佛教漢梵大辭典):

√jñā, -jñā, jñāna, vi-√jñā, pra-√jñā, √vid, -vid, ava-√budh; ajyate, adhigata, adhi-√gam, adhigamana, anugata, anugama, anujñāpita, anu-pra-√viś, anupraviṣṭa, anu-√budh, anubodha, anumāna, anusāritva, anusmaraṇatā, antara-jñā, abhi-√gam, -abhijñā, abhi-√jñā, abhisambodhanatā, abhisambodhi, ava-√gam, avagama, ava-√gāh, avatāra, avatīrṇa, ava-√tṛ, avadhāraka, avabudhyanatā, avabodha, avabodhana, avê(√i), avêkṣ(√ikṣ), avetya, ā-√jñā, ājñā, ājñākhyā, ājñāta, ājñātāva, ājñāna, ājñēndriya, ājñeya, āsada, ucyate, udaya, upalakṣaṇa, upalakṣyate, upalabdhi, eṣṭavya, kovida, √kṣam, gatiṃ-gata, √gam, gamyate, gāmin, √gāh, √grah, grahaṇa, cetana, jānaka, jñāta, jñāpita, jñeya, dṛśyate, dṛṣṭvā, draṣṭavya, nidhyapti, nidhyāpta, niścaya, parāyaṇa, parikuśala, pari-cchid(√chid), pari-√ñā, parijñā, parijñāta, parijñāna, parijñānatā, parijñāyate, prajāna, prajānat*, prajñā, prajñāna, pratiñāyate, prati-√budh, pratibhāvayati, prativijñapti, prati-vi-√jñā, prativijñāna, pratividdha, prativibhāvayati, pratedha, prati-

√vyadh, pratisaṃvidita, pratisaṃvedana, pratī(√i), praty-anu-√bhū, pratyabhijñā, pratyabhijñāna, pra-vi-√ci, buddhi, budhyanatā, budhyanā, bodha, bhajana, mata, √man, manas, lakṣyate, labdha, va-√gāh, vicārayati, vi-√ci, vijñapti, vijñā, vijñāta, vijñāpana, vijñāyate, vidita, vidhi-jñā, vibuddhana, vibhāvayati, vibhāvita, vibhāvyate, vettṛ, veda, veditavya, vedin, saṃ-lakṣaya (den.), saṃ-√jñā, sam-anu-√dṛś, sam-anu-√paś, sam-anv-ā-√hṛ, sam-√āp, samudāgama, saṃ-√jñā, saṃ-pra-√dṛś, suniścita, smṛti.

Malcolm wrote:

What is the most common Sanskrit term it represents?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 27th, 2016 at 5:14 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The means of production are capitalist, and only exist because they were created by capitalists. There was never any industrial means of production that was not created by capitalism. Socialism merely wishes to replace the ownership of those means.

Sherab Dorje said:

A machine is a machine, it is neither capitalist or socialist. It is a bunch of nuts and bolts.

Malcolm wrote:

Not so, the nature of machinery is reflected of the kind of economy that produces it.

Sherab Dorje said:

The problem is the means themselves.

Hmmmmmm... And what if the means were used to produce ecologically sound products?

Malcolm wrote:

They can't be so used. That is point that everyone on both the left and the right fails to understand.

Sherab Dorje said:

That is why ecology will fail as a mass movement, because it does not directly appeal to the masses (who happen to be proletariat, or lumpen proletariat and or "coloured"). That is why it is a white middle class phenomenon.

Malcolm wrote:

Ecology will fail as a mass movement providing that people refuse to understand the peril that faces us collectively as biosphere.

One can be sure that Alt-right people are profligately ignorant of it, in fact.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 27th, 2016 at 1:36 AM

Title: Re: The 5th Skandha

Content:

Astus said:

There is no separate awareness.

Malcolm wrote:

This the basic problem with translated the term "rigpa" as "awareness."

It simply does not work.

treehuggingoctopus said:

Malcolm, do you think it would be better then to render it as "knowing" or "knowledge"?

The latter word too carries a lot of baggage...

Malcolm wrote:

In many cases yes. For example, in the commentary on one of the seventeen tantras, rig pa, vidyā, is defined in the following way:

Furthermore, based on the power of repelling the armies of samsara, vidyā (rig pa) is 1) the knowledge (vidyā) of names designated by words, 2) helpful, worldly knowledge such as healing, arts and crafts, and so on, 3) the five sciences (rig pa gnas lnga) of the treatises and so on, 4) knowledge of the link of consciousness, sharp and dull worldly knowledge and so on, and 5) the knowledge of the essence (snying po) that permeates all is this [knowledge] that is without ignorance, unobscured by the obscurations of ignorance and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 27th, 2016 at 1:35 AM

Title: Re: The 5th Skandha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

"Awareness" is a term which is next to useless in a Buddhist context.

Astus said:

What do you suggest? <https://books.google.com/books?id=bUgg9aWaAH8C> translated zhi 知 as "knowing".

Malcolm wrote:
What does zhi mean in Sanskrit?

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, September 27th, 2016 at 1:33 AM
Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Socialism is capitalism since it does not reject the capitalist mode of production.

Sherab Dorje said:
It is an industrial mode of production, not a capitalist mode.

The means of production are the same, the aims are slightly different.

Malcolm wrote:
The means of production are capitalist, and only exist because they were created by capitalists. There was never any industrial means of production that was not created by capitalism. Socialism merely wishes to replace the ownership of those means.

The problem is the means themselves.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, September 27th, 2016 at 12:50 AM
Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Socialism is capitalism.

Sherab Dorje said:
Sorry, but I think this is mistaken. It is like saying a zebra is a horse because they both have four legs, a tail and go "neigh".

It is this kind of thinking that has stunted US domestic policy and left movements since the McCarthy era.

Malcolm wrote:
Socialism is capitalism since it does not reject the capitalist mode of production.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, September 27th, 2016 at 12:50 AM
Title: Re: The 5th Skandha
Content:
Malcolm wrote:

This the basic problem with translated the term "rigpa" as "awareness."
It simply does not work.

Astus said:

Doesn't have to be "rigpa". Buddha-nature has been identified as awareness (zhi 知) by some Chan teachers as well. Interestingly, zhi 知 means both "to know" and "to be aware".

Malcolm wrote:

"Awareness" is a term which is next to useless in a Buddhist context.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 27th, 2016 at 12:31 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

why are you going there?

Malcolm wrote:

You began to talk about the theory of time in quantum physics.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 11:52 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

because then you exclude the effects of non-capitalist industrialisation.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no such thing. The world economy is and has been capitalist for three hundred years. Socialism is capitalism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 11:46 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

If you read what I have written i am saying samsara is of itself.

the key ingredient here is desire ,hence dependent origination. I'm not saying samsara is not beginningless just explaining to the modern public why this observation takes place.

Malcolm wrote:

The key ingredients of samsara are the afflictions. But those arise from ignorance. Samsara has an end, that end is called nirvana.

ahh even you agree that the goal is to end Nirvana ..what will be left then eh![/quote]

I did not say the goal was to end nirvana. I said, in contrast to your statement that samsara has no end that indeed samsara has an end. It ends (ends for you) when nirvana begins. Of course, the corollary is that nirvana has no end, but it does have a beginning.

possibly something that was before the introduction of desire into the picture.

There was no state prior to the arising of samsara because samsara is beginningless.

There is no "big bang" for samsara. The idea of a first big bang is not consistent with dependent origination, so it is either false or Buddha's teaching of dependent origination is false. The idea that the material universe contracts and expands without beginning however is perfectly consistent with dependent origination.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 11:28 PM

Title: Re: The 5th Skandha

Content:

Astus said:

There is no separate awareness.

Malcolm wrote:

This the basic problem with translated the term "rigpa" as "awareness."

It simply does not work.

Monlam Tharchin said:

I've always wondered what "rigpa" means to an average Tibetan person. Is it an everyday word with problematic associations like "awareness" in English, or is it a more narrow, specialized term?

Malcolm wrote:

It is an everyday word. It is the verb "to know," or the noun, knowledge. Rig pa po, for example, simply means "the knower."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 11:14 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

conebeckham said:

According to my dictionary, "primordial" can mean "existing at the beginning of time," but it can also mean "fundamental."

Time is illusory, just as all of samsara is illusory. There can therefore be no beginning of time, much less anything which exists at the beginning of time--but, from within a "closed system" of illusion, samsara, one could perhaps understand the primordial Buddha as the fundamental state. As Malcolm has said, this fundamental state is connate with the very non-knowing which obscures knowledge of the state. Time itself is a result of this non-knowing.

Queequeg said:

Fundamental Nescience - I don't know the Chinese. In Japanese its called 元本の無明 gampon no mumyo. I assume the Chinese is 元本無明

Its the level of ignorance overcome at the Buddha's enlightenment.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, in Sanskrit this is called saḥajāvidyā, connate ignorance. It is the most subtle knowledge obscuration that is the very last thing to be removed prior to mounting the stage of buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 11:04 PM

Title: Re: The 5th Skandha

Content:

Astus said:

There is no separate awareness.

Malcolm wrote:

This the basic problem with translated the term "rigpa" as "awareness."

It simply does not work.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 10:48 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

Samsara is beginningless due to mass .. mass creates time.

Malcolm wrote:

No, samsara is beginningless because of dependent origination. It has nothing to do with mass, time, the big bang or physics.

Minobu said:

time eventually bends upon itself creating a circle of time which has no beginning and no end. Hence the observation that Samsara has no beginning and no end

Malcolm wrote:

This idea of time has nothing to with the subject matter. This idea is from physics.

Samsara has an end, that end is called nirvana.

Minobu said:

samsara came into existence

Malcolm wrote:

Samsara did not come into existence at all because it is beginningless.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 10:30 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

glad you talking about the pure state before Samsara happening though.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it never existed because samsara is beginningless. This is basic.

Minobu said:

To deny time is just that.

Malcolm wrote:

Nāgārjuna pointed out that time is not established. This is also basic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 10:11 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

a subject that any educated Geshe would simply say " The verdict is still out on this one". No, it really isn't. We can call the dharmakāya the primordial buddha if we like, but the dharmakāya does not exist inside of time, so it is not really "primordial."

Minobu said:

Listen to what you just posted and answer me this. Define Primordial Buddha. You cannot , hence the verdict is still out. Your post is not a definition of anything , except in denying that it really has not been defined as in Sambhogakaya is well defined.

Malcolm wrote:

The Chandrakīrti citation I provided defines the two possibilities very well. It shows that one possibility, that of temporal first buddha, is impossible, while providing a usage for the term which is applicable to the dharmakāya. You further speculated about a pure mind that existed before samsara, and I rejected that possibility because ignorance is connate, arising together with the mind from the very beginning without being inherent to the mind in anyway. Even Samantabhadra had ignorance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 9:29 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

As you should know the one true difference between Hinduism and Buddhism is the concept of Atman. Where Hindus see a created transmigrating inherent soul ,we see mind through the knowledge of Sunyata.

Now take a glimpse of the whole concept of returning to Paramatman and you get a glimpse of what I am so ineffectual at pointing to for you malcolm. I am not saying Paramatman is accepted just using it to point to something other ,similar in INTENT.

Malcolm wrote:

I understand your point. There is no pure state to which to return. That is how I answered you.

Minobu said:

a subject that any educated Geshe would simply say " The verdict is still out on this one".

Malcolm wrote:

No, it really isn't. We can call the dharmakāya the primordial buddha if we like, but the dharmakāya does not exist inside of time, so it is not really "primordial."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 8:50 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

the original cause to create Samsara from this pure state I read in a book by a Tulku and asked a Tulku about and everything was fine until i said "If it was so pure how did we make such a big mistake and act on desire" not my original quote but it will do..

.

Malcolm wrote:

I understand your point. I replied. There was never any pure mind prior to samsara in time. Such a theory is utterly false and not consistent with Buddhadharma at all, even if some tulku enunciated it.

The Buddhist understanding of time is different than that of modern physics.

Minobu said:

When I get the book and the chapter on it I will post it.

I could be using the word purity and pure state when another word , which means the same thing , was used.

the Eden thing i took as a shot at trivializing my post. I will apologize and offer my hand. You might not have meant to ridicule. hopefully anyway..

i know im lousy at apologies when hurt.

as per Time and Buddhist understanding , like I already posted in this thread ...

A Nichiren ShoShu priest used his dinner plate to describe time and Hawking's theory .

A Tulku said it was a circle like Hawking's theory only each time around it is slightly different.

i dunno Malcolm , Ive been at this since i'm 15 and now 61 .. Ive met all kinds of people .

Had talks about stuff through a translator with His holiness the Ninth Khalkha Jetsun Dhampa of Mongolia.

He showed me how to bend the channels into the centre channel. I know name dropping sucks...but you don;t know me and you seem to just dismiss stuff after you actually agreed with it.

I think you might have reading disabilities, when it comes to reading me...

And yet you are a storehouse of knowledge and much more...i respect you...

Malcolm wrote:

Time is not established as truly existent. It is a perception for deluded sentient beings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 8:42 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

boda said:

Indeed, and isn't the Green Party on the front line? ... and not doing so hot.

Malcolm wrote:

The Green Party is just a green-washed party of the old left. This is why it is going nowhere.

boda said:

Is there any evidence that deep ecology is going somewhere?

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, of course it is.

boda said:

Deep ecology is far more akin to a religion than a practical solution to ecological imbalance, or rather, the survival of our civilization, if not our species.

Malcolm wrote:

It is quite practical since it accommodates other positive approaches to the environment and ecology. If you are going to continue to comment about deep ecology, I suggest you read Arne Naess' essay on Ecosophy T.

Now, this really is time for:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 11:20 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

the original cause to create Samsara from this pure state I read in a book by a Tulku and asked a Tulku about and everything was fine until i said "If it was so pure how did we make such a big mistake and act on desire" not my original quote but it will do..

.

Malcolm wrote:

I understand your point. I replied. There was never any pure mind prior to samsara in time. Such a theory is utterly false and not consistent with Buddhadharma at all, even if some tulku enunciated it.

The Buddhist understanding of time is different than that of modern physics.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 11:16 AM

Title: Re: Some towns in France ban burkinis

Content:

Fa Dao said:

this might revive the conversation...

<http://www.breitbart.com/london/2016/09/24/french-burkini-controversy-was-set-up-by-muslim-activist-family-in-concert-with-television-station/>

Malcolm wrote:

Breitbart, seriously?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 11:03 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

and using the word edenic state is really insulting. [/b]

Malcolm wrote:

I don't see how.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 11:02 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

[

There was a state before Samsara ...somehow desire crept into the picture which created the cause for attachment which created the cause for Karma.

]

Malcolm wrote:

No, there was never a pure state before samsara. If there was a pure state before samsara, one has to explain where samsara comes from, since it does not arise from itself. Even if you say that desire and other afflictions "creep in," and provide a cause for samsara, still they must have causes too, and cannot be self-originated.

We say that while the mind is inherently pure, since there is never any time the mind itself found this state of purity, ignorance is therefore connate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 10:35 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

How does one say there is no beginning ?

.

Malcolm wrote:

Because it contradicts dependent origination.

Minobu said:

if there is no desire and zero karma >pre Samsara, then there is no interdependent co arising of anything. there is just pure mind without any manifestation of anything.

.

Malcolm wrote:

Ignorance is connate, but not innate.

There is no temporal state of primeval purity. There is no edenic state from which we fell.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 10:31 AM

Title: Re: Blue robes/clothes

Content:

RikudouSennin said:

Was there ever a time that there was a "blue sangha"?

Malcolm wrote:

Mahasamghika monks wore blue robes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 10:19 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

boda said:

Deep ecology is defined as an ecological and environmental philosophy promoting the inherent worth of living beings regardless of their instrumental utility to human needs, plus a radical restructuring of modern human societies in accordance with such ideas.

Radically restructuring society somehow doesn't involve politics?

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a political program nor a party. It is philosophical framework about these issues and their solutions. But it is not exclusive of other approaches to the same questions. It does not make a pretense of being monolithic in its approach, i.e, "The front is long", as Naess remarked.

boda said:

Indeed, and isn't the Green Party on the front line? ... and not doing so hot.

Malcolm wrote:

The Green Party is just a green-washed party of the old left. This is why it is going nowhere.

But party politics do not change society, nor do elections. Only mass movements make change.

The present climate crisis is a result of industrial capitalism. It will not be solved by the kind of thinking that produced industrial capitalism in the first place.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 2:49 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Thinking that issues of class can be resolved alongside the resolution of environmental issues is a distraction. The environment is more important. Without dealing with the environment, the resolution of class issues will just be patches.

Sherab Dorje said:

A distraction??? You think that environmental issues do not (also) have to do with class, capital and profit???

Like I said: "They are not separate issues. That is why Deep Ecology failed politically."

I should add: "...and will continue to fail politically".

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a political position. It's a philosophical and ethical framework out of which decisions might be made. Since people seem never to read Naess, they never get what he is talking about.

Deep ecology is a way of arriving at a system of values, which can then be expressed through political action. The expression of those values may be no different in expression than the way so called Social Ecologists express their convictions. For example, most Buddhists are, by and large, opposed to capital punishment for any reason; so are many Catholics. The framework through which they arrive at their shared opposition to capital punishment are utterly different, but in terms of the movement that they share, the outcome desired is mutual.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 2:43 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

They are not separate issues. That is why Deep Ecology failed politically.

Malcolm wrote:

Thinking that deep ecology is a political movement is shallow.

boda said:

Deep ecology is defined as an ecological and environmental philosophy promoting the inherent worth of living beings regardless of their instrumental utility to human needs, plus a radical restructuring of modern human societies in accordance with such ideas.

Radically restructuring society somehow doesn't involve politics?

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a political program nor a party. It is philosophical framework about these issues and their solutions. But it is not exclusive of other approaches to the same questions. It does not make a pretense of being monolithic in its approach, i.e, "The front is long", as Naess remarked.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 2:35 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

How does one say there is no beginning ?

.

Malcolm wrote:

Because it contradicts dependent origination.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 2:33 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Thinking that deep ecology is a political movement is shallow.

Sherab Dorje said:

It is not even a political movement anymore due to its inability to garner a base of support larger than a small insular group of white Malthusian rednecks.

Malcolm wrote:

Deep ecology is not malthusian. The population explosion happened for two main reasons: yams and potatoes from the Colombian exchange, which addressed food scarcity issues in China and Europe respectively; followed by the petroleum age.

We do recognize that humans have well exceeded the carrying capacity of the planet—that is should we wish to preserve any species that are not immediately useful to us. What deep ecological thinking recognizes that standard leftist thinking does not, is that rivers, trees, birds, fish, nonhuman mammals etc., have rights, and that we should not feel we have the right to use more than we minimally need.

Sherab Dorje said:

Who said anything about "first" and "last"?

Malcolm wrote:

Thinking that issues of class can be resolved alongside the resolution of environmental issues is a distraction. The environment is more important. Without dealing with the environment, the resolution of class issues will just be patches.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 2:07 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Agreed. But this is all a distraction. The environment is more important.

Sherab Dorje said:

They are not separate issues. That is why Deep Ecology failed politically.

Malcolm wrote:

Thinking that deep ecology is a political movement is shallow.

Further, thinking that environmental issues will be resolved by resolving issues of class first is very mistaken. Socialism has no better a track record than capitalism with respect to the environment because socialism in all its forms never reject the capitalist mode of production. In fact, it is regarded as progressive.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 12:49 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

DGA said:

The emergence of the alt-right, the Brexit vote, the Trump situation... I think all these are in part a consequence of a refusal among liberal (center-left and neoliberal) programs and politicians to acknowledge class-based grievances, or to allow any discourse of class at all.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't agree with this. In fact, they are responding to a right-wing racist platform of class grievances.

DGA said:

My point is that the only lexicon they have to articulate a class grievance is a right-wing racist one, because the narrative of class grievance as such became taboo in the Reagan-Clinton years.

Malcolm wrote:

Agreed. But this is all a distraction. The environment is more important.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 26th, 2016 at 12:36 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

DGA said:

The emergence of the alt-right, the Brexit vote, the Trump situation... I think all these are in part a consequence of a refusal among liberal (center-left and neoliberal) programs and politicians to acknowledge class-based grievances, or to allow any discourse of class at all.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't agree with this. In fact, they are responding to a right-wing racist platform of class grievances.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 25th, 2016 at 11:01 PM

Title: Re: Does anyone recognise these text?

Content:

diamind said:

Do you know what these text are? Are they from kangyur? and the English name Toppoche (stobs po che)

Malcolm wrote:

This is the nineteenth chapter of the explanatory tantra of the dgongs pa zang thal, often referred to in English as the "Aspiration of Samantabhadra" (not to be confused with with sūtra text of similar name).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 25th, 2016 at 9:00 PM

Title: Re: I'm lost in my practice, someone can help enlighten me?

Content:

taidangau said:

I mean I still believe in Buddha and his teachings, BUT NOT TO SANGHA!!!!!! Despite the fact that I had taken refuge in front of the 3 jewels, Buddha of course, Dharma naturally, BUT SANGHA?

Malcolm wrote:

When you are a Mahāyānist, you only take refuge in the Ārya Bodhisattva Sangha, not the sangha of monks and nuns, nor even the Sangha of Ārya Śrāvakas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 25th, 2016 at 8:17 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

Frankly, you seem to fetishize power.

Malcolm wrote:

Most Trumpistas do. Which is bizarre, because their candidate is a weakling, a complete sissy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 25th, 2016 at 6:56 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

dreambow said:

I get your drift but I want to have a say. I don't want distant bureaucrats and politicians making policy on the run, unaware, possibly indifferent to the outcome. I want a referendum in each country, let the people speak. Don't trot out another so called expert...not interested. Let the man in the street have his say and if the media and the vested interests can shut up the people may have a voice and point the way forward.

Malcolm wrote:

We are talking about the fact that one out of roughly every twelfth person on the planet is a refugee.

<http://www.theatlantic.com/international/archive/2015/06/refugees-global-peace-> index/396122/

Inge said:

That is 1 out of 122 people according to the linked article.

Malcolm wrote:

Math is definitely not my strong suit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 25th, 2016 at 6:08 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Rakz said:

=you have pretty much no clue what you're talking about.

Malcolm wrote:

You pretty much are a victim of neoliberal propaganda. You should look at the pew world income research I provided.

And have you ever been to either country? I have. Indian "Middle class" is a relative term.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 25th, 2016 at 3:59 AM

Title: Re: Living with idle chatter all around you

Content:

Boomerang said:

All of my friends are nihilists. I don't think their views are going to corrupt me, but our entire relationships are based on indulging in idle chatter, and that upsets me.

Sometimes the thought arises that I should cut them out of my life, but that seems like an unrealistic and unkind way of dealing with samsara as a lay person. Besides my friends, I'll still have to regularly interact with idle talkers, Buddhist and non-Buddhist, for the rest of my life.

Yesterday while talking with a friend, I subtly tried to steer the conversation toward reflecting on compassion and ethics, but it was still 90% idle chatter.

I don't know how to turn this into a good thing. Should I just accept that as long as I'm a member of society I'll have to engage in idle chatter and then do purification practices?

Malcolm wrote:

Idle chatter can be one of the means of conversion. Mahāyāna permits what Hinayāna prohibits.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 25th, 2016 at 3:52 AM

Title: Re: Blue robes/clothes

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No one anymore. But Guru P's shirt is blue,

Losal Samten said:

Would that have been blue proper or the krsna blue/black?

Malcolm wrote:

Sky blue.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 25th, 2016 at 2:35 AM

Title: Re: Blue robes/clothes

Content:

RikudouSennin said:

What group of tantics wear blue?

Malcolm wrote:

No one anymore. But Guru P's shirt is blue, symbolizing he is a mantra practitioner.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 25th, 2016 at 2:17 AM

Title: Re: Goraksha

Content:

maybay said:

It seems strange that such an influential Mahasiddha shouldn't leave an actual instruction lineage.

Malcolm wrote:

He was not that influential among Buddhists.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 25th, 2016 at 2:14 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Rakz said:

India and China as big examples.

Malcolm wrote:

India and China are in fact superb examples of how difficult it is to recover from aggressive colonialism. It has little to do with Marx or other political theories.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 25th, 2016 at 1:49 AM

Title: Re: The levels of SMS training

Content:

florin said:

Can you give the titles and the order of the practices of the mind series as they are spread over the 3 levels ?

Malcolm wrote:

No, I cannot tell you that. You have to go through the levels to discover precisely what is practiced when and where. Or you can ask ChNN directly. But we are not supposed to discuss the content of the individual levels. Sorry.

florin said:

Why not ?

By listing titles you are not revealing the contents of the practices involved ?

I do not understand how sometime we can discuss tantras and their content related to view but sometime we cannot. Arent all dzogchen tantras supposed to be secret ?

Malcolm wrote:

There was once a man who was told by his teacher that he had something very secret to teach him. So, with much anticipation, he showed up on the appointed day, and was given a very common Vajrapani mantra to recite. With great disappointment he exclaimed, "This is very common, there is nothing secret about it at all." To which the Lama replied, "It is true that this is a very common mantra, but you must practice this very secretly, then you will gain siddhis."

Long and short of it, we were told by ChNN not to discuss the content of SMS training at all. But it common knowledge at this point that level one has a formal ngondro, refuge, bodhicitta and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 25th, 2016 at 1:46 AM

Title: Re: Goraksha

Content:

maybay said:

What of him? Does he continue in any Tibetan Buddhist lineages?

Malcolm wrote:

His empowerment is included in the empowerments of the 84 Mahasiddhas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 25th, 2016 at 1:06 AM

Title: Re: The levels of SMS training

Content:

florin said:

Can someone list the levels of SMS training as they are done in DC?

I only know the base level.

Malcolm wrote:

There are nine levels not including the base: three for the mind series; three for the space series; and three for the intimate instruction series. To my knowledge, no training has been held beyond the level 4.

florin said:

Can you give the titles and the order of the practices of the mind series as they are spread over the 3 levels ?

Malcolm wrote:

No, I cannot tell you that. You have to go through the levels to discover precisely what is practiced when and where. Or you can ask ChNN directly. But we are not supposed to discuss the content of the individual levels. Sorry.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 25th, 2016 at 12:41 AM

Title: Re: The levels of SMS training

Content:

florin said:

Can someone list the levels of SMS training as they are done in DC?

I only know the base level.

Malcolm wrote:

There are nine levels not including the base: three for the mind series; three for the space series; and three for the intimate instruction series. To my knowledge, no training has been held beyond the level 4.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 11:00 PM

Title: Re: are you someone special?

Content:

tomschwarz said:

identity...

Malcolm wrote:

...is not the problem. Clinging to it, or thinking it is real, is the problem.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 10:29 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Queequeg said:

None of it is trifling. It's all life and death serious. If any of this is trifling to Buddha, then Buddha is bull shit.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhas only see other buddhas. They do not perceive sentient beings at all, just buddhas. In other words, when a buddha looks at any being we would call sentient, all they see is a buddha.

.

Minobu said:

That really says a lot and is probably going to slowly work it's way into my being and change a whole paradigm.

Like I really needed that running in the background..lol.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that all worlds and buddhafiels, pure or impure, are contained within the body of the mahāsambhogakāya.

Minobu said:

Pure or impure Buddhafiels? If you have the time could you talk of this a little further , it might help in other ways as per it's meaning.

And when you say contained , can you use other words to push me into a better realization of what you are telling us.

d

Malcolm wrote:

A pure buddhafiels is Sukhavati, there is no suffering there at all. An impure buddhafiels is this Sahaloka, since there is suffering. All are contained with the body of the mahāsambhogakāya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 10:21 PM

Title: Re: Why is Amitabha absent in American Zen and TB?

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

Do you know what text this mantra is from?

Noone knows.

I'm guessing one of the lower tantras.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a Tibetan corruption of Om Amithbha hrih, according to the famed Sakya Kilaya master and polymath, Amyezhab.

BuddhaFollower said:

And where did Om Amithbha hrih come from?

Malcolm wrote:

It is a name mantra. It does not come from any tantra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 9:34 PM

Title: Re: I am the Father of this world

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is well established that Shakyamuni's buddhafiield is in fact this Sahaloka. See the Vimalakirti Sutra.

Coëmgenu said:

But my question is is this the only name for said land and is this the only way such a land can be understood to exist. Doesn't sahaloka mean "this world"? We call this world "the saha world". We call a world "loka" in Sanskrit.

Malcolm wrote:

Saha means "unbearable." It refers to this entire billion world system in which is found our world, which contains Jambudvipa (India).

Loka means world, sphere, universe. In this case Sahaloka means the Unbearable Universe because it is a place of misery and suffering.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 9:30 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Queequeg said:

None of it is trifling. It's all life and death serious. If any of this is trifling to Buddha, then Buddha is bull shit.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhas only see other buddhas. They do not perceive sentient beings at all, just buddhas. In other words, when a buddha looks at any being we would call sentient, all they see is a buddha.

Queequeg said:

本佛 revealed himself to us in the form of Shakyamuni. He could have revealed himself in any number of other ways, but this is the way he did. I can't see Mahavairocana's palm, hand, or even a ridge of his palm print. I don't hear Mahavairocana's voice. But I do hear Shakyamuni. I see his srarira. He appeared as Shakyamuni in response to my afflictions, my perfect upaya.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that all worlds and buddhafiels, pure or impure, are contained within the body of the mahāsambhogakāya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 9:27 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

. Candrakīrti's explanation is perfect:

As for the ādibuddha, some claim it does exist because a buddhahood without gathering accumulations is not reasonable; if there is no other buddha, the gathering accumulations itself is not reasonable; and because of beginninglessness, a single buddha is also not reasonable. Also many buddhas are not asserted because the dharmakāya is undifferentiated within the immaculate dhātu. Therefore, from the perspective of the dharmakāya, the time of full awakening and the time of being are not at odds. Therefore, from the perspective of the dharmakāya, it is also reasonable to present an ādibuddha, because ultimate nature of the dharmakāya is single."

Minobu said:

I have a problem with the bolded out text.

I started this thread due to the fact which I hold as essential to the whole concept of attaining Buddhahood.

One needed to be a samsaric being in the cycle of rebirth, amass Karma, do the right thing and acquire merit, and somehow attain Buddhahood.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Minobu said:

So A Primordial Being/ Buddha from the beginning of the beginning in the no beginning universe is at odds with the words above "because a buddhahood without gathering accumulations is not reasonable"

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because according to sūtra, a buddha needs to gather accumulations by respecting and honoring another buddha while that buddha is still on the bodhisattva path.

Minobu said:

Also the Dharma Kaya Body is produced upon enlightenment ...yes/no ????

Malcolm wrote:

The dharmakāya is seen when one mounts the stage of full buddhahood. The sambhogakāya is seen when one mounts the pure bhumis. The nirmanakāya is all that one can see while one is an ordinary person or a bodhisattva on the impure stages.

Minobu said:

also I don't think it is beginning less, for there is a teaching somewhere in Tibetan Buddhism where there was this pure state before Desire crept into the picture, and samsara was created.

Malcolm wrote:

That state does not exist in time, and so therefore, it does not contradict the beginninglessness of samsara.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 8:53 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

TreeHuggingOctopus said:

(Marx) was much less of a diehard materialist than the champions of neoliberalism are, truth be told.

Wayfarer said:

But it's not true. Marx was a dedicated, die-hard materialist, I wouldn't gild the lily - he did his doctoral thesis on Democritus' atomism and famously 'stood Hegel on his head'.

I agree with your other points, but the inconvenient truth is that capitalism alone has devised the means to harness the amazing power of modern science and to literally lift billions out of poverty.

Malcolm wrote:

Dude, you have checked world income levels? And what is your idea of poverty?

Capitalism has destroyed subsistence living for billions of people, sent them to the cities in search of employment since they are not capable to surviving in a cash economy on their traditional land, and forced billions of people into sweat shops, etc.

Here are some real stats for you the world population:

Poor = 15%

Low income = 56%

Middle income = 13%

Upper-middle income 9%

High income = 7%

The income groups are defined as follows: The poor live on $2 or less daily, low income on $2.01-10, middle income on $10.01-20, upper-middle income on $20.01-50, and high income on more than $50; figures expressed in 2011 purchasing power parities in 2011 prices.

Taken from <https://www.pewglobal.org/interactives/global-population-by-income/>

The poor and low income people make up an astonishing 71% of the world's population.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 11:25 AM

Title: Re: I am the Father of this world

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Do Buddhas' not generate their Buddha Fields?

Malcolm wrote:

Shakyamunis buddhafiield is this Sahaloka, not just vulture peak.

Coëmgenu said:

not just vulture peak

Is the Pure Land of Shakyamuni limited to one name? To one definition?

If Shakyamuni is the Primordial Buddha, is his Pure Land not the Primordial Pure Land as well, generated by the Primordial Buddha? I think the description of the Pure Land atop the Holy Eagle Peak seems to match the definitions of a "Primordial Buddha Field" to accompany the Primordial Buddha. But that is only something I think. I do not claim to be a Buddhadharma expert.

PS: I do not intend to be arrogant or aggressively insistent, if that's how I come across, I am aware that my insistent questioning can be tiresome, especially on the internet, where intentions are shrouded and often misinterpreted.

Malcolm wrote:

It is well established that Shakyamuni's buddhafiield is in fact this Sahaloka. See the Vimalakirti Sutra. Every planet in this billion world syestem has a Vajrasana, a Rajagriha, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 11:23 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

dreambow said:

I get your drift but I want to have a say. I don't want distant bureaucrats and politicians making policy on the run, unaware, possibly indifferent to the outcome. I want a referendum in each country, let the people speak. Don't trot out another so called expert...not interested. Let the man in the street have his say and if the media and the vested interests can shut up the people may have a voice and point the way forward.

Malcolm wrote:

We are talking about the fact that one out of roughly every twelfth person on the planet is a refugee.

<http://www.theatlantic.com/international/archive/2015/06/refugees-global-peace-index/396122/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 11:14 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

dreambow said:

I get your drift but I want to have a say. I don't want distant bureaucrats and politicians making policy on the run, unaware, possibly indifferent to the outcome. I want a referendum in each country, let the people speak. Don't trot out another so called expert...not interested. Let the man in the street have his say and if the media and the vested interests can shut up the people may have a voice and point the way forward.

Malcolm wrote:

The funny thing about people who distrust the media is that they get of their "trustworthy" information from the media.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 11:10 AM

Title: Re: I am the Father of this world

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Is the "this world" not the Pure Land of the Holy Eagle Peak? Isn't that the direct context of the verse-section, "my Pure Land is not destroyed" etc?

Malcolm wrote:

No.

Coëmgenu said:

Do Buddhas' not generate their Buddha Fields?

Malcolm wrote:

Shakyamunis buddhafiield is this Sahaloka, not just vulture peak.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 10:52 AM

Title: Re: I am the Father of this world

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Is the "this world" not the Pure Land of the Holy Eagle Peak? Isn't that the direct context of the verse-section, "my Pure Land is not destroyed" etc?

Malcolm wrote:

No.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 10:48 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Queequeg said:

Mahavairocana did not appear as a historical Buddha. This does not mean mahavairocana is not a legit Buddha. Just not the Buddha who appeared as Buddha for people of the Saha world in this age.

Malcolm wrote:

You don't get it. We live inside of the body of Mahavairocana. There are no budhafiields not included in Mahavairocana's body. We live in a world system which is contained in the palm of his hand, Kusumatalagarbha-alamkara. From that point of view, the goings on in our own little Sahaloka are but trifles.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 10:41 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

dreambow said:

'Until now, the Swedish media have concealed the problems associated with immigration. All those who tried to describe reality were intimidated and silenced by epithets such as “racist” and “Nazi”. For decades, the only legitimate view was the claim that immigration enriches Sweden. Each report that appeared in the public media, namely the liberal-leftist kind, concluded with such a statement'

Only recently — since ten thousand immigrants have been pouring into Sweden every week, and the government, police, customs authorities and Migration Agency have no idea how to manage the issue — has Sweden begun to talk openly about the reality.

Malcolm wrote:

The fact is that there are something like 64,000,000 displaced persons in the world right now, a little less than 10% of the world population. As such, all countries, especially first world nations, should just step up and absorb the social cost of their own capital expansion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 10:35 AM

Title: Re: Why is Amitabha absent in American Zen and TB?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Om Amidevi hriḥ is a very common mantra.

BuddhaFollower said:

Do you know what text this mantra is from?

Noone knows.

I'm guessing one of the lower tantras.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a Tibetan corruption of Om Amithbha hriḥ, according to the famed Sakya Kilaya master and polymath, Amyezhab.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 10:05 AM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

RikudouSennin said:

Is there a non buddhist philosophy that is closest to Vajrayana/Dzogchen?

Malcolm wrote:

No, for none of them truly comprehend emptiness even nominally. Since they don't truly comprehend emptiness, their perception of appearances is mistaken.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 7:53 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Admin_PC said:

[EDIT: Scotch-Irish are Presbyterian, but they are Celtic,

Coëmgenu said:

Even the social construction of "Scotch-Irish" is a neocolonial holdover from the rape and pillage of Ireland by the English. The so-called "Scotch-Irish" are really just the people of Ulster, the Celtic kingdom of north-most Ireland. Years of plantations and orangism made us ashamed to be Irish, so we made up a new identity that seemed more British. This is coming from a Scotch-Irish former Presbyterian. Not that that makes me more historically learned, being from a certain group, but I can feel tangibly the effects of British supremacy in my family to this day.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, there is virtually nothing Scottish about the so called Scotch-Irish. I'm a McNab, so I ought to know.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 7:52 AM

Title: Deep Ecology

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

[Moderator Note: Split from: <http://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=47&t=23754>]

Wayfarer said:

The world badly needs an alternative to capitalism that isn't communism, in my view.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it is called deep ecology/ left biocentrism, where "left" does not mean Marxist or even Socialist, but merely anti-capitalist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 7:50 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

MiphamFan said:

I am talking about the use of the term precisely by Naawaz, Ayaan Hirsi Ali et al. The "Left" which supports Neoliberalist trade policies, alliance with Saudi Barbaria and calls censure of Salafism "Islamophobia".

Malcolm wrote:

But it is islamaphobia. Salafism, like Calvinism, is a collection of bad ideas. But the censure of bad ideas never eradicates them. Instead, it just reinforces them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 7:48 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

French Canada

Queequeg said:

Je me souviens.

Why were they fighting with the Americans? Were they expecting independence, too?

Malcolm wrote:

They were enemies of the British Empire.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 4:11 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Queequeg said:

Meaning, we kicked those bastards to the curb by 1783. (No offense, I love you Brits, with your warm beer and crooked teeth.)

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually, they just got tired of subsidizing us and gave up. We did not kick anyone to the curb.

Queequeg said:

Will you stop it? You're like the evil uncle at the four year old's birthday party, popping all the balloons.

Malcolm wrote:

It is even worse, 85 percent of the colonial troops under Washington were from the New England states, with the rest coming from French Canada, and a few stragglers from here and there. Most people from New York south, were very content under British rule.

But we yankees were such a pain in the ass, they eventually allowed us to "win" and went home.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 3:31 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Queequeg said:

Meaning, we kicked those bastards to the curb by 1783. (No offense, I love you Brits, with your warm beer and crooked teeth.)

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually, they just got tired of subsidizing us and gave up. We did not kick anyone to the curb.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 3:25 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The best way to protect Western Liberal Values is to practice them, and accept the risks our open society entails, including protecting the rights of freedom of religion for everyone, including Muslims, fundamentalist or otherwise, and Christians, fundamentalist or otherwise.

Rakz said:

This kind of soft attitude has worked well for Europe. Far right nationalists are now more popular than ever before. What do you think is responsible for that?

Malcolm wrote:

This is not a soft attitude. It is just a harder standard to maintain since people actually have to live according to their Western Liberal Values rather than merely giving them lip service.

Rakz said:

Our WLVs are not protected by withdrawing into nationalist shells, and in fact that impulse towards nationalism inevitably results in tyrannies, as history shows. Trump is just the latest of the wannabe tyrants. And tyrants, we should all recall, only rise to power because of popular acclaim.

You may see him as a tyrant. I see him as a strong, masculine leader who deeply cares for his country. WLVs will not decline but flourish under his administration.

Malcolm wrote:

He is a pampered sissy. About as tough as a Pomeranian.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 3:23 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Admin_PC said:

British are typically implied.

Queequeg said:

Brits have nothing to do with White Culture.

Admin_PC said:

I have no clue what you're on about here, but southern US culture (especially on the plantations) is VERY heavily influenced by British culture.

Queequeg said:

Not really limited to the NorthEast.

There are no WASPS who would accept association with that Hilly Billy White Trash sh*t. Those people look down on everybody.

Admin_PC said:

Not the sum-total of "white" culture, nor were the "Hilly Billy"s at the forefront of racial segregation in the south. "Hillbillies" are actually associated with the Appalachians & the Ozarks rather than with the deep south. Think "Hatfield and McCoys" versus "Gone with the Wind". The later culture was more responsible for organizations like the KKK, while the former were more rural outsiders.

Malcolm wrote:

Not sure that this has to do with alt-right racist dipshits...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 2:31 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Rakz said:

I don't agree with many things that the alt right speak of but I support them in stopping Islamization (which has led to the rapid decline of Europe) and protecting western liberal values.

Malcolm wrote:

The best way to protect Western Liberal Values is to practice them, and accept the risks our open society entails, including protecting the rights of freedom of religion for everyone, including Muslims, fundamentalist or otherwise, and Christians, fundamentalist or otherwise. Our WLVs are not protected by withdrawing into nationalist shells, and in fact that impulse towards nationalism inevitably results in tyrannies, as history shows. Trump is just the latest of the wannabe tyrants. And tyrants, we should all recall, only rise to power because of popular acclaim.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 2:24 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Queequeg said:

He criticizes Shingon because Mahavairocana is disembodied Dharmakaya.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a false criticism, because Mahāvairocana is the nature of the five elements and is present through their presence in everyone and everything. In Shingon, the dharmakāya is imminent in all phenomena.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 2:03 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

WASP said:

White Anglo-Saxon Protestant (WASP) is an informal, sometimes disparaging term^[1] for a group of high-status and influential White Americans of English Protestant ancestry. The term applies to a group who control disproportionate financial, political and social power in the United States.

Malcolm wrote:

Mostly in the northeast, as that is where most of the money is in the US.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 1:53 AM

Title: Re: I am the Father of this world

Content:

Queequeg said:

I actually agree with the gist of what you are saying. I find it mistaken when people take these passages and reduce Buddha to some sort of Creator God by emphasizing "father" in a biological sense. Seems to me, the correct meaning should be taken as "I am like the father of all beings." I've always understood this statement as referring to the ideal of the father as contrasted with the ideal of the mother. Mother is loving, nurturing, compassionate; Father is the guide to what is correct and proper; the ideal of upright conduct; the protector.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I agree. The idea of Pitṛ Brahma, Brahma the ancestor, is indeed the idea of a progenitor; but like virtually all these brahmanical references, the Buddha and Buddhists reinterpreted them morally and socially since they did not take them literally.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 1:40 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

Queequeg said:

I'

Admin_PC said:

Originally associated with WASPs (which Scotch-Irish are not), and then has grown from there. The newest trend is to lump non-black latinos into "white" culture as well.

Queequeg said:

WASPS means... Anglos in the NorthEast. .

Malcolm wrote:

Yup.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 1:39 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

MiphamFan said:

The Regressive Left is just as much a problem that hasn't been pointed out in mainstream media.

Malcolm wrote:

Um, no. The term has become a right wing buzzword divorced from its origins:

http://rationalwiki.org/wiki/Regressive_left

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 1:36 AM

Title: Re: I am the Father of this world

Content:

Queequeg said:

The contexts in which these titles appear suggests that the paternal relationship is literal. Can you address that?

Malcolm wrote:

I did. In this context "father of the world", an epithet of Brahma, simply means "teacher of the world," and nothing more. Disciples are regularly referred to as children in Buddhist texts.

Queequeg said:

Not convinced. Neither am I disagreeing. There is, quite literally, more to it in this context and you haven't addressed the significance that these statements appear in the context of parables about fathers saving their children.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, lets look again at what the Sanskrit for that passage is:

emeva haṃ śārisutā maharṣī sattvāna trāṇaṃ ca pitā ca bhumiḥ putrāśca te prāṇina sarvi mahyaṃ

Śariputra, I, the great rishi, am the protector (trāṇaṃ), the father (pitā) and the support (bhumi) for all sentient beings, all those creatures are my children.

This shows a paternal relation, but it shows only that. And India, a guru was more important than your father, so the language of the father guru, the pitrguru, is very common.

The prodigal son parable is very compelling, but it is not original.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 1:08 AM

Title: Re: Why is Amitabha absent in American Zen and TB?

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

Amitabha...

Malcolm wrote:

Is a huge practice among Kagyus and Nyingmapas.

Oṃ Amidevi hriḥ is a very common mantra.

Monlam Tharchin said:

Why do you suppose then that in the months I attended at the local Kagyu center, Amitabha was not mentioned once in dharma talks, questions, chants, or in the day-long retreats?

Is it not considered suitable for a general audience?

Malcolm wrote:

Probably because Amitabha practice is a separate cycle, and not every center will focus on it. But for example, it is a very popular practice at KTD. And also, the longevity form of Amitabha, Amitayus, is also extremely popular, and many Tibetan Buddhists recite either one or both of these mantras daily.

There is also the practice of the transference of consciousness, and in 90 percent of such practices, the goal of transference is Sukhavati, and Amitabha is the main object of visualization.

So in fact, Amitabha is extremely important in all schools of Tibetan Buddhism, in one way or another.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 1:00 AM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

boda said:

What exactly is "white culture" in the U.S.? And genetically, there isn't much difference to begin with, aside from the racial mixing that's been going on for some time.

Queequeg said:

I suspect the people who talk about White Culture mean the culture of people descended from the Scotch-Irish, which people like Pat Buchanan claim is the largest minority in the U.S.

Malcolm wrote:

White culture:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 12:56 AM

Title: Re: I am the Father of this world

Content:

Queequeg said:

The contexts in which these titles appear suggests that the paternal relationship is literal. Can you address that?

Malcolm wrote:

I did. In this context "father of the world", an epithet of Brahma, simply means "teacher of the world," and nothing more. Disciples are regularly referred to as children in Buddhist texts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 24th, 2016 at 12:52 AM

Title: Re: Why is Amitabha absent in American Zen and TB?

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

Amitabha...

Malcolm wrote:

Is a huge practice among Kagyus and Nyingmapas.

Oṃ Amidevi hriḥ is a very common mantra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 23rd, 2016 at 10:14 PM

Title: Re: I am the Father of this world

Content:

Queequeg said:

Is it simply a matter of adopting one of Brahma's titles? Immediately before this he relates the story of the physician who finds his children drank poison and became deranged.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that in fact is how Indians reading this text would understand it. Vasubandhu's commentary understands "father" (pitṛ) to mean teacher, thus it would read in his rendition, "I am the self-originated teacher (ācārya) of the world."

I know there is a great deal of resistance among Sinosphere Buddhists to accept that Indian Buddhists actually understood their own texts, but there is it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 23rd, 2016 at 9:43 PM

Title: Re: The "Alt-Right" is a legitimate problem

Content:

DGA said:

the alt-right or "alternative right" is an increasingly mainstreamed political movement that has been touched on topically in the media but is, in my opinion, underestimated in its reach and its stench. This is a highly problematic situation.

...

Elsewhere I said that Trump represents a toxic, poisonous strain in US culture. I mean it: this is ignorance, hatred, and greed all crystallized into one nutty mess. Russia thinks its great, though.

Malcolm wrote:

The man is a fascist, as are many of his followers. The rest of them are just blind.

Wiemar, 1933 all over again.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 23rd, 2016 at 10:41 AM

Title: Re: I am the Father of this world

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

What is your interpretation of this famous line from Chapter 16 of the Lotus Sutra?

"I am the Father of this world."

Malcolm wrote:

I'd want to see the original text.

Coëmgenu said:

An orthodox answer that will be readily accepted by most Buddhists who don't excessively venerate the Lotus Sutra will be that he is saying he is the "Father" of his Pure Land. But I was more looking for personal responses.

I'm on a cell phone so I can't readily copy and paste, but I'll link you to the <http://www.nichirenlibrary.org/en/lsc/Content/16>. It appears in the verse-section near the end.

Malcolm wrote:

It's ok, the epithet is in Sanskrit:

yameva haṃ lokapitā svayaṃbhūḥ

cikitsakaḥ sarvaprajāna nāthaḥ|

"Lokapitā" is a title of Brahma, as is svayaṃbhūḥ, cikitsakaḥ, etc. Buddha frequently adopts the titles of Brahma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 23rd, 2016 at 10:23 AM

Title: Re: I am the Father of this world

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

What is your interpretation of this famous line from Chapter 16 of the Lotus Sutra?

"I am the Father of this world."

Malcolm wrote:

I'd want to see the original text.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 23rd, 2016 at 10:22 AM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Queequeg said:

That is a labored task.

Malcolm wrote:

Not really, it is pretty obvious. Then there is the well known phenomena of light skinned African Americans skipping over the color barrier.

Queequeg said:

Yeah, race is a big complicated issue in America... unless of course you want to cram it down into your personally acceptable categories. Which is just more complication of race.

Go figure.

Malcolm wrote:

This is why nationalism is bullshit:

Genetic tracing suggests this initial migratory pulse out of Africa happened around 72,000 years ago. The ancestors of indigenous Australians and Papuans split from this pioneering group around 58,000 years ago as they continued to make their eastward journey. (By comparison, European and Asian ancestral groups diverged around 42,000 years ago.)

https://gizmodo.com/aboriginal-australians-are-humanity-s-oldest-civilizati-1786940046?utm_campaign=socialflow_io9_facebook&utm_source=io9_facebook&utm_medium=socialflow_io9_facebook

m_medium=socialflow

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 23rd, 2016 at 9:51 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

-Andrew Jackson

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, another fine Indian killer and slave owner. Trump would fit right in with that lot.

The Cicada said:

It isn't fair to hold Jackson up to present standards.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course it is, just as it is fair to hold up Stalin, Hitler and Mao to modern standards.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 23rd, 2016 at 2:43 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Queequeg said:

Can you break this down a little?

What is meant by "gathering accumulations"?

Malcolm wrote:

Gathering accumulations means gather the accumulations of merit and pristine consciousness.

Queequeg said:

What is "time of being"?

Malcolm wrote:

There is no difference between when there was full awakening and the remainder of the career of the a buddha since there is no time in the immaculate dhātu at all.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, September 23rd, 2016 at 1:52 AM
Title: Re: Primordial Buddha
Content:

Queequeg said:
We identify the Primordial Buddha as Shakyamuni because that is how the Primordial Buddha last appeared in the form of a Buddha in the Saha World.

Malcolm wrote:
This is debatable.

The last time the "primordial buddha" appeared in this world system was in the person of nirmanakāya Garab Dorje. Prior to Garab Dorje, Śakyamuni appeared, prior to him, Abhisambodharāja, and prior to him, Buddha Kashyapa, and so on.

Queequeg said:
Some Nichiren Buddhists think Nichiren was such a Nirmanakaya. This is not a consensus view at all.

I dig the pointing finger.

Malcolm wrote:
Nichiren as nirmanakāya is a later view. Garab Dorje as a nirmanakāya is stated at the beginning of the tradition by himself. But the latter is not important here in this forum.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, September 23rd, 2016 at 1:41 AM
Title: Re: Primordial Buddha
Content:

Queequeg said:
We identify the Primordial Buddha as Shakyamuni because that is how the Primordial Buddha last appeared in the form of a Buddha in the Saha World.

Malcolm wrote:
This is debatable.

The last time the "primordial buddha" appeared in this world system was in the person of nirmanakāya Garab Dorje. Prior to Garab Dorje, Śakyamuni appeared, prior to him, Abhisambodharāja, and prior to him, Buddha Kashyapa, and so on.

However, this is not the important point. The important point is what ādibuddha actually means. Candrakīrti's explanation is perfect:

As for the ādibuddha, some claim it does exist because a buddhahood without gathering accumulations is not reasonable; if there is no other buddha, the gathering accumulations itself is not reasonable; and because of beginninglessness, a single buddha is also not reasonable. Also many buddhas are not asserted because the dharmakāya is undifferentiated within the immaculate dhātu. Therefore, from the perspective of the dharmakāya, the time of full awakening and the time of being are not at odds. Therefore, from the perspective of the dharmakāya, it is also reasonable to present an ādibuddha, because ultimate nature of the dharmakāya is single."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 23rd, 2016 at 1:07 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Queequeg said:

So are you saying that Abhidharmakosa itself is the root teaching on which all else depends? Or more specifically, this teaching on the arising and destruction of the worlds is the Root Gate?

Malcolm wrote:

It is the book in which all the foundational ideas of Sanskritized Buddhism are found, common to both Hinayāna and Mahāyāna. For example, without reading the Kośa and its commentary, it is very difficult to make heads or tails of the Mulamadhyamaka karikas, not to mention Yogācāra and Vajrayāna.

Queequeg said:

So, "Foundation" is different from "Root".

Malcolm wrote:

It is something like the anatomy and physiology of Dharma and its paths.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 23rd, 2016 at 12:48 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In this case it is a translation of ādibuddha.

Coëmgenu said:

I don't know what the English word "Primordial" is a translation of, but Primordial does not just mean "first". It also means "fundamental" or "basic", or even "foundational".

Queequeg said:

The term "Primordial Buddha" is this: 本佛. The character translated as "Primordial" is 本.

本 has a wide range of meanings - From the Digital Dictionary of Buddhism

Basic Meaning: root

Senses:

Source, origin, essence, basis. To be rooted in, to find the origin in (Skt. upâdāya; Tib. nye bar bzung nas). The Sanskrit mūla, pūrva, ādi ('root') is transliterated as 慕攞. (Skt. prakṛti; grantha; atyanta, ākara, aditas, uddeśa, eva, jātiya, dravya, nityam, purā, purāṇa, puri, purima, pure, pūrvaka, pūrva-kāla, pūrva-prahīṇa, pūrvam, pūrvānta, pūrvika, paurāṇa, paurāṇaka, paurvika, prakṛtyā, pradhāna, bimba, bhāva, mūla-yoni, maula, yoni, samam, saṃbhava, sarvathā, sva) [Charles Muller; source(s): Nakamura, YBh-Ind, Hirakawa]

In Buddhist texts, often found in such compound words as 'original nature' 本性, 'original enlightenment' 本覺, or 'original Buddhahood' 本佛, indicating the human mind which is in essence undefiled and enlightened. [Charles Muller]

Radical, fundamental, original, principal, one's own; the Buddha himself, contrasted with 蹟, traces left by him among men to educate them; also a volume of a book. [Charles Muller; source(s): Soothill]

Book, document. [Charles Muller]

Early Middle Chinese (Pulleyblank 1991, p. 31): 'Originally, in its origin' ; 'once,' past tense Adverbial use: sentential adverb, following the subject: 'originally,' derived from the nominal meaning 'origin, source' . Classical, Han period Chinese, Buddhist literature. [Barbara Meisterernst]

Aspecto-temporal adverb in the Buddhist literature: preceding the verb, i.e. in the syntactic position typical for aspecto-temporal adverbs (following modal adverbs, but preceding prepositional phrases and manner adverbs): 'past tense,' 'once' . In this position similar to céng 曾. [Barbara Meisterernst]

'Etiology' of a disease, as in the compound 病本 [Robert Buswell]

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 23rd, 2016 at 12:35 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Queequeg said:

But there are more direct teachings, aren't there? Why go all roundabout?

Malcolm wrote:

All good houses need solid foundations.

Queequeg said:

So are you saying that Abhidharmakosa itself is the root teaching on which all else depends? Or more specifically, this teaching on the arising and destruction of the worlds is the Root Gate?

Malcolm wrote:

It is the book in which all the foundational ideas of Sanskritized Buddhism are found, common to both Hinayāna and Mahāyāna. For example, without reading the Kośa and its commentary, it is very difficult to make heads or tails of the Mulamadhyamaka karikas, not to mention Yogācāra and Vajrayāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 23rd, 2016 at 12:19 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Buddhism exists in history. What is the history of the Primordial Buddha? We have a foretaste in the older tradition, but not the fullness.

Malcolm wrote:

There are plenty of ahistorical innovations in Buddhadharma. And for example, Candrakīrti explicitly offers a qualified negation of the idea of an adibuddha, along the lines of what I explained above.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 23rd, 2016 at 12:09 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

so what exactly are your views on this Primordial Buddha , i think it is a misnomer when placed before a Being.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no primordial buddha, since there was never a beginning. However, there have always been the three kāyas, since they too are without beginning and there is only one dharmakāya of the buddhas. So, we can say euphemistically that the dharmakāya is the primordial buddha in the sense that the dharmakāya is the nature of reality to be realized, and whether it is realized or not, reality is always there to be realized.

Coëmgenu said:

I don't know what the English word "Primordial" is a translation of, but Primordial does not just mean "first". It also means "fundamental" or "basic", of even "foundational".

There are three pieces of scripture, which are just scripture I know, but they shed some more light on this issue, at least from a historical perspective: Now, the Blessed One has said, "Whoever sees dependent co-arising sees the Dhamma; whoever sees the Dhamma sees dependent co-arising."

(MN 28 in the Pali Canon) Enough Vakkali! Why do you want to see this foul body? One who sees the Dhamma sees me; one who sees me sees the Dhamma. For in seeing the dhamma, Vakkali, one sees me; and in seeing me one sees the Dhamma.

(SN 22.87 in the Pali Canon again)

Not having a good handle on Chinese, I have little access to the āgamas, it is possible these quotes have parallels there. Nonetheless I found these quotes somewhat foundational for the Primordial Buddha discourse.

Malcolm wrote:

The Hinayāna dharmakāya as the doctrine of the Buddha does not really apply. Basically, this discussion is around the Nichirin identification of Buddha Śakyamuni as being the adibuddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 11:57 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

I've always respected your views. Have read you for years here .

As per 3 Kayas. How can there be a Nirmanakaya Body when there was a time when it was impossible due to the absence of sentient vessels/bodies in this realm.

[/qupte]

There are infinite realms, therefore, there are infinite opportunities for the nirmanakāya to manifest.

Also do you feel like your slumming in this section...that might sound really sadisticly sarcastic and caustic but hey...I've no filters when it comes to social situations.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. But I do watch people get hopelessly tangled up in quasi theistic ideas all the time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Too hilarious:

<https://www.theguardian.com/world/video/2016/sep/22/the-dalai-lama-does-his-donald-trump-impression-video?>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 10:40 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Queequeg said:

But there are more direct teachings, aren't there? Why go all roundabout?

Malcolm wrote:

All good houses need solid foundations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 10:36 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

-Andrew Jackson

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, another fine Indian killer and slave owner. Trump would fit right in with that lot.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 9:51 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Minobu said:

so what exactly are your views on this Primordial Buddha , i think it is a misnomer when placed before a Being.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no primordial buddha, since there was never a beginning. However, there have always been the three kāyas, since they too are without beginning and there is only one dharmakāya of the buddhas. So, we can say euphemistically that the dharmakāya is the primordial buddha in the sense that the dharmakāya is the nature of reality to be realized, and whether it is realized or not, reality is always there to be realized.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 9:02 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

You were just arguing tulkus were not literal reincarnations, which I agree with.

Sherab Dorje said:

Actually, in regards to ChNN's son, he just argued that he is a literal reincarnation.

Malcolm wrote:

I stated that ChNN believes it is so.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 9:00 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

Then why did he want his son to go to the monastery he is the tulku of?

Malcolm wrote:

He has genuine confidence in his son being the incarnation of his uncle. But that does not mean he has confidence in all, or even most, reincarnations.

BuddhaFollower said:

You were just arguing tulkus were not literal reincarnations, which I agree with.

Malcolm wrote:

No, I was not arguing that. Some tulkus, like ChNN are reincarnations of the people they were recognized as. But not very many.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 5:23 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Queequeg said:

I'm not sure your point... so contemplating on the destruction of the world as set forth in Abhidarmakosa is the right guide for contemplation?

I find as the years go by, I'm less and less imaginative. I don't see any benefit at this stage in contemplating the origin of the universe. I could die this afternoon, and thinking about beings in the 4th dhyana at the destruction of the universe sounds like a wasted session on the cushion.

Malcolm wrote:

If you understand the sequence of how the universe arises and perishes, you are in a much better position to understand what happens to you when you die. It's basically the same process.

Queequeg said:

But there are more direct teachings, aren't there? Why go all roundabout?

Malcolm wrote:

Let me know when your buddhahood is not just an intellectual theory about interpenetration of realms...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 4:41 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Queequeg said:

This approach strikes me as too literal, scholastic, theoretical. Guides contemplation off course.

Malcolm wrote:

Studying texts like the Kośa, and tenet systems in general is meant to eliminate concepts by introducing one to mistaken points of view. I regularly see participants on Buddhist boards engaging in all kinds of fantasies because they have not properly trained their minds in tenet systems. So they often have no idea what they are talking about since many of us here are uneducated dummies when it comes to Buddhadharma.

On the other hand, this is religion, so people can believe whatever the hell they like.

Queequeg said:

I'm not sure your point... so contemplating on the destruction of the world as set forth in Abhidarmakosa is the right guide for contemplation?

I find as the years go by, I'm less and less imaginative. I don't see any benefit at this stage in contemplating the origin of the universe. I could die this afternoon, and thinking about beings in the 4th dhyana at the destruction of the universe sounds like a wasted session on the cushion.

Malcolm wrote:

If you understand the sequence of how the universe arises and perishes, you are in a much better position to understand what happens to you when you die. It's basically the same process.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 4:17 AM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Queequeg said:

Malcolm, you're going to have to circulate an appendix with a list of recognized and permissible categories. The memo didn't get around.

Malcolm wrote:

Nationalism, whether American or any other kind, is bullshit. American Nationalism, in particular, is bullshit, since the "American Dream" is built on a foundation of ethnic cleansing, genocide and human trafficking.

Queequeg said:

Yeah, we've been over this already.

Malcolm wrote:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 4:10 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I gave you a reference in a book so you could decide for yourself how to understand these things. I did not tell you to go off and ask Orgyen Tenzin how to understand these things.

Sherab Dorje said:

The book is written by a Tibetan lama too, yah know?

Malcolm wrote:

I mentioned that book in order that you could discover the substance of the six points since I do not have time to translate Lhatsun's book at the present time. It is not a high priority for me. Read or don't read it --- it really depends on how much you want to know about Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 4:07 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Queequeg said:

This approach strikes me as too literal, scholastic, theoretical. Guides contemplation off course.

Malcolm wrote:

Studying texts like the Kośa, and tenet systems in general is meant to eliminate concepts by introducing one to mistaken points of view. I regularly see participants on Buddhist boards engaging in all kinds of fantasies because they have not properly trained their minds in tenet systems. So they often have no idea what they are talking about since many of us here are uneducated dummies when it comes to Buddhadharma.

On the other hand, this is religion, so people can believe whatever the hell they like.

Queequeg said:

Come, Kālāmas, do not go by oral tradition, by lineage of teaching, by hearsay, by a collection of scriptures, by logical reasoning, by inferential reasoning, by reasoned cogitation, by the acceptance of a view after pondering it, by the seeming competence of a speaker, or because you think: 'The ascetic is our guru.' But when you know for yourselves: 'These things are wholesome; these things are blameless; these things are praised by the wise; these things, if accepted and undertaken, lead to welfare and happiness,' then you should live in accordance with them.

Malcolm wrote:

The Kalamas people were non-Buddhists, who by the end of the sūtra, convert to Buddhism.

"Marvelous, venerable sir! Marvelous, venerable sir! As if, venerable sir, a person were to turn face upward what is upside down, or to uncover the concealed, or to point the way to one who is lost or to carry a lamp in the darkness, thinking, 'Those who have eyes will see visible objects,' so has the Dhamma been set forth in many ways by the Blessed One. We, venerable sir, go to the Blessed One for refuge, to the Dhamma for refuge, and to the Community of Bhikkhus for refuge. Venerable sir, may the Blessed One regard us as lay followers who have gone for refuge for life, from today."

Significantly, this sūtra merely shows a form of boosterism for the Buddha. It should be balanced with this from the Eastern Gatehouse Sutta:

"Excellent, Sariputta. Excellent. Those who have not known, seen, penetrated, realized, or attained it by means of discernment would have to take it on conviction in others that the faculty of conviction... persistence... mindfulness... concentration... discernment, when developed & pursued, gains a footing in the Deathless, has the Deathless as its goal & consummation; whereas those who have known, seen, penetrated, realized, & attained it by means of discernment would have no doubt or uncertainty that the faculty of conviction... persistence... mindfulness... concentration... discernment, when developed & pursued, gains a footing in the Deathless, has the Deathless as its goal & consummation."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 4:02 AM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Where do you make a concrete distinction between say, one promoting one's culture and it's perceived values (for instance, as Tibetans and others do), and Nationalism?

Malcolm wrote:

Not a big fan of Tibetan nationalism. It too is built on a tissue of historical fallacies and their own version of ethnic cleansing (in case any one ever wondered what happened to Zhang Zhung...)

Johnny Dangerous said:

Saying that all nationalism/patriotism is bullshit is not satisfactory answer to me,

Malcolm wrote:

That's ok. I still insist that nationalism, and patriotism, is bullshit.

Johnny Dangerous said:

...simply saying it's all bullshit requires one to then say that people should organize based on something other than a perceived shared culture, ethnicity, shared values etc.

Malcolm wrote:

How about a shared planet which is the only one we can reach (since we live on it) capable of sustaining human life, not to mention all other forms of life we presently know of.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 3:58 AM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Nationalism is bullshit, in any form.

Queequeg said:

Malcolm, you're going to have to circulate an appendix with a list of recognized and permissible categories. The memo didn't get around.

Malcolm wrote:

Nationalism, whether American or any other kind, is bullshit. American Nationalism, in particular, is bullshit, since the "American Dream" is built on a foundation of ethnic cleansing, genocide and human trafficking.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 1:16 AM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Queequeg said:

This points to American Nationalism being something fundamentally different than say, nationalism in the UK, or Germany, or Ukraine, or Russia, or whatever. Race or culture or religion does not matter to most of us as much as fundamental commitment to certain ideals, to a certain social contract.

The moment American nationalism becomes racial, I think it loses its meaning.

Malcolm wrote:

Nationalism is bullshit, in any form.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 1:10 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The aggregates of an arhat are not transformed because they have not realized dharmakāya.

maybay said:

I thought it was the rupakaya they don't realize?

Malcolm wrote:

They also do not realize the dharmakāya since they do not realize two fold emptiness, not to mention they do not realize emptiness free from all extremes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 1:03 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

ChNN has zero confidence in the tulku system, as a whole.

BuddhaFollower said:

Then why did he want his son to go to the monastery he is the tulku of?

Malcolm wrote:

He has genuine confidence in his son being the incarnation of his uncle. But that does not mean he has confidence in all, or even most, reincarnations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 12:50 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This says volumes, then of course there is Sthiramati's commentary on this work.

Astus said:

Does it? Sounds like the same argument used before.

Malcolm wrote:

Your qualms are clearly not going to be resolved without reading several hundred pages of detailed analysis. That won't happen here. So learn Tibetan or Chinese and do the reading yourself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 12:46 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

and Gayley says that Dudjom Rinpoche was the body emanation (sku sprul). Does anyone know what the deal is?

Malcolm wrote:

Quite honestly, is it very important at all?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 12:44 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

ChNN has zero confidence in the tulku system, as a whole. He has mentioned this quite often.

Sherab Dorje said:

I wasn't talking about the tulku "system" I was talking about the fact that he is a tulku. Does he also doubt that he is a tulku?

Malcolm wrote:

He certainly did, for many, many years. And I am quite certain if you asked him if he were the same person as Adzom Drugpa, he would look at you very strangely. But you can try.

Sherab Dorje said:

In any respect, I am perfectly capable of deciding for myself how to understand these things without needing to run to a Tibetan lama every time someone else has doubts. So, what's good for the goose is not good for the gander, coz 5 posts ago...

I will be chasing down the Big Red Book nonetheless, thanks for recommending it!

Malcolm wrote:

I gave you a reference in a book so you could decide for yourself how to understand these things. I did not tell you to go off and ask Orgyen Tenzin how to understand these things.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 12:28 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Definitely the view that they are not the same persons is correct since we do not believe, in Buddhism, in the continuity of personhood at all. If we do, we are making a mistake.

Sherab Dorje said:

Sure. But this means that there is not "this person" either. And yet here "I" am bugging the crap out of "you".

Anyway, you don't have to take my word on the matter, why don't you go ask your teacher? He's a tulku after all. I am 100% sure he knows a lot more than me about the issue. Or his son. He's also a tulku, isn't he?

Malcolm wrote:

ChNN has zero confidence in the tulku system, as a whole. He has mentioned this quite often. In any respect, I am perfectly capable of deciding for myself how to understand these things without needing to run to a Tibetan lama every time someone else has doubts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 22nd, 2016 at 12:27 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Arhats have an inferior conversion, according to Asanga, because arhats are afraid of transmigration and reject it since their realization of emptiness is confined to the selflessness of the person.

Astus said:

The Samgraha says nothing new on the matter, just that arhats know only personal emptiness while bodhisattvas the dual emptiness. It does not really discuss the aggregates in relation to the arhats. So, I don't think that work is of much help here.

"This conversion of support has six varieties: ... 5) inferior conversion— the realization by word-hearers of the non-self of persons, which completely turns away from transmigration and constitutes an eternal rejection of transmigration;

Malcolm wrote:

This says volumes, then of course there is Sthiramati's commentary on this work.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 11:17 PM

Title: Re: Do I have to meditate to be a Buddhist?

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

It's also impossible to experience a direct realisation of emptiness without practising formal sitting meditation on it because it is a very subtle object and we need powerful concentration and wisdom developed in formal meditation to realise it directly.

Malcolm wrote:

This isn't true.

Tsongkhapafan said:

I'm afraid it is.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it really isn't true.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 11:08 PM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Queequeg said:

That is a labored task.

Malcolm wrote:

Not really, it is pretty obvious. Then there is the well known phenomena of light skinned African Americans skipping over the color barrier.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 10:59 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That is what you might believe. I am comfortable with the idea of reincarnations (whether tertons or not) of being very separate persons from their predecessors. And, Dudjom Lingpa had more than one incarnation.

Sherab Dorje said:

So? Jamyang Khyentse Wangpo has five types of emanations, with more than one in emanation of some of the categories.

Sku

Dzongsar Khyentse Jamyang Chökyi Wangpo (1894?-1909)

Gsung

Karma Khyentse'i Ozer (1896-1945)

Second Beru Khyentse (Beru or Palpung Khyentse) (1946-)

Thugs

Sakya Punpo Khyentse (1900-1950)

Dilgo Khyentse Rabsal Dawa (1910-1991)

Se Phagchog Dorje (1854-1919), a son of Togden Shakya Sri

Yon tan

Dzogchen Khyentse Guru Tsewang (c.1897-c.1945)

Nangchen Khyentse Kunzang Drodul (1897-1946)

Phrin las

Katog Khyentse Jamyang Chökyi Lodro (1893-1959), later known as Dzongsar Khyentse Jamyang Chökyi Lodro

Like you don't have a problem considering them separate persons I don't have a problem considering them the same. Now who's view is correct is a point of contention that I am not really all that interested in.

Malcolm wrote:

Definitely the view that they are not the same persons is correct since we do not believe, in Buddhism, in the continuity of personhood at all. If we do, we are making a mistake.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 10:48 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha

Content:

Queequeg said:

This approach strikes me as too literal, scholastic, theoretical. Guides contemplation off course.

Malcolm wrote:

Studying texts like the Kośa, and tenet systems in general is meant to eliminate concepts by introducing one to mistaken points of view. I regularly see participants on Buddhist boards engaging in all kinds of fantasies because they have not properly trained their minds in tenet systems. So they often have no idea what they are talking about since many of us here are uneducated dummies when it comes to Buddhadharma.

On the other hand, this is religion, so people can believe whatever the hell they like.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 10:40 PM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Queequeg said:

Astus, see the first post in this thread.

I specifically addressed race or culture as basis for national identity and offered the American version as alternative.

Malcolm wrote:

Unfortunately, the trend in America is to attempt to become "white" (look at how Italians, Irish, Jews, etc., were excluded from being considered white until the sixties). Therefore, with Trump we have a white, fascist nationalism that is on the rise.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 10:34 PM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The aggregates of an arhat are not transformed because they have not realized dharmakāya.

The buddhas do not have cetana, because of the transformation of the saṃskara skandha.

Astus said:

So there are the upadana-skandhas, the anupadana-skandhas, and what is the third version?

Malcolm wrote:

Arhats have an inferior conversion, according to Asanga, because arhats are afraid of transmigration and reject it since their realization of emptiness is confined to the selflessness of the person.

You should read the Mahāyāna Saṃgraha before resuming this discussion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 10:10 PM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Anupadāna-skandhas are the transformed aggregates.

Astus said:

That's what arhats have. How is there any difference then between arhats and buddhas in terms of the aggregates?

Arhats may be without craving, but they still have cetana.

Since even buddhas can be described by aggregates without attachment, they have cetana too. Furthermore, cetana is a universal mental factor, necessary for any mental function.

Malcolm wrote:

The aggregates of an arhat are not transformed because they have not realized dharmakāya.

The buddhas do not have cetana, because of the transformation of the saṃskara skandha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 9:56 PM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

Btw, would say that Berzin is actually fairly kosher in his elucidation of rigpa's permanence expressed here:

Malcolm wrote:

I don't know. Vidyā is equated with vipaśyāna and knowledge in the old commentaries.

The more I study and translate the older layers of man ngag sde commentaries, the more I understand how much improvement there needs to be in how we translate things.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 9:02 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Well, yes. Dudjom Lingpa passed away in 1904. Dudjom Rinpoche was born in 1904.

Sherab Dorje said:

If you believe in reincarnation and tertons, then it is the continuation of the same mindstream. So I do not differentiate between the two.

Malcolm wrote:

That is what you might believe. I am comfortable with the idea of reincarnations (whether tertons or not) of being very separate persons from their predecessors. And, Dudjom Lingpa had more than one incarnation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 8:39 PM

Title: Re: Illuminating Quotes by Malcolm Namdrol-la

Content:

Kim said:

Wonderful. In which traditions? Given by who?

Malcolm wrote:

I completed a three year solitary retreat of mixed Sakya and Nyingma practices, between 1993 and 1997.

.

TaTa said:

May i ask where did you do the retreat? Im looking for ideas. Thanks

Malcolm wrote:

In Central MA, but the place, literally, no longer exists.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 5:48 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No one accepts that afflictions are a precondition for the arising of the mind, if one does, it renders the Pabhassara Sutta meaningless.

Astus said:

If that were the case, then no school could posit the disperse of the aggregates following parinirvana of the arhat. And that contradicts the accusation of the Hinayana schools' annihilationist view.

Malcolm wrote:

"Break up of the aggregates" generally refers to the separation of mind and body. But it does not mean that some Hinayāna schools did not posit that the "breakup of the aggregates" meant the utter cessation of the five aggregates altogether.

Astus said:

He just means upadana skandhas. For example, it well known that the mental aggregate transforms into the four pristine consciousness according to the Mahayānasamgraha. If aggregates without attachment may continue, then there is no point in their transformation, nor in changing vijñāna into jñāna.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a silly response. Anupadāna-skandhas are the transformed aggregates.

Astus said:

And nevertheless the Buddha has five aggregates.

Aren't they supposed to change into the four/five wisdoms?

Malcolm wrote:

Don't be so lazy, Astus. It is only the mental aggregate that transforms into the four pristine consciousnesses.

Astus said:

Arhats are supposed to be without all kinds of craving. And craving for existence (bhavatanha) or non-existence (vibhavatanha) are two basic types of desire.

Malcolm wrote:

Arhats may be without craving, but they still have cetana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 5:00 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Therefore, you are asserting that afflictions are a necessary precondition for the arising of the mind, period.

Astus said:

And apparently so does everyone else who accept the twelve nidanas as Buddhadharma.

Malcolm wrote:

No one accepts that afflictions are a precondition for the arising of the mind, if one does, it renders the Pabhassara Sutta meaningless.

Astus said:

Even the Uttaratantra states:

"It is true happiness, since [even] the aggregates of mental nature and their causes are reversed."
(v 38)

And DJKR comments:

"The dharmakaya has no aggregates, not even the subtlest aggregates, nor the cause of such aggregates, which is ignorance. When there is no ignorance and no result of ignorance, namely the aggregates, there is no suffering. That is transcendental bliss."
(p 46-47)

Malcolm wrote:

He just means upadana skandhas. For example, it well known that the mental aggregate transforms into the four pristine consciousness according to the Mahayānasamgraha: Buddhas are beyond the aggregates, but also they enter the aggregates; neither different from them nor the same, without abandoning them, they are well beyond the aggregates. This should put to rest any idea that the buddhas lack aggregates.

Astus said:

So you think buddhas are pieces of wood, inert, like rocks.
As the Uttaratantra states, they make no effort, and all activities are illusory.

"Here the meaning of the chapter is as follows:

The nine aspects of physical display and so on [show] that the Teacher has no birth and death, and yet perfectly manifests without any effort.
Something that, similar to Indra, the drum, clouds, Brahma, the sun, the precious king of wish-granting gems, an echo, space, and the earth, effortlessly and as long as existence may last fulfils others' benefit is only conceived of by [supreme] yogis."
(v 363-364)

Malcolm wrote:
And nevertheless the Buddha has five aggregates.

Astus said:
When vijñana loses the two obscurations and only jñana remains, what is it that maintains the continuity? If you say it's the aspirations, then those vows were added to vijñana and the continuity is not the result of the absence of defilements.

Malcolm wrote:
I mentioned before that these aspirations are prañidhānapāramitā. As such, since they are made free of the three wheels, they are an inexhaustible cause.

In the case of an arhat, what sustains their consciousness until they are aroused from the slumber of the samadhi of cessation is their intention to enter that samadhi.

Astus said:
Buddhahood is a supramundane jñana.
And what does that actually mean?

Malcolm wrote:
Supposedly you are an ācarya. I trust you can figure it out.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 4:26 AM
Title: Re: Difference in attainments
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
The idea that there is a hard distinction between conditioned and unconditioned phenomena is a form of realism. The Dzogchen point of view is best, IMO:

It may be said, "The way all this is produced is dependent origination, arising and ceasing."
Like a burnt seed, a nonexistent is not produced from a nonexistent; the cause and the result do not exist.

The mind that clings to entities and clings to cause and result itself appears as cause and condition, but because they are nondual, there is no arising and perishing.

Because there is no arising and perishing, there is no self and other. Because there is no death and transmigration, there is no permanence and annihilation.

Therefore there is no delusion or samsara. In fact, there is also no nirvana.

-- Mañjuśrīmitra.

treehuggingoctopus said:

Thanks. Isn't that at times the meaning of unconditioned when the term is used in (some translations of) Dzogchen texts?

Malcolm wrote:

You can describe it like that, sure.

In Original Mind, Mlpham makes this distinction between the view of sūtra and the view of Anuyoga:

Furthermore, the Avatamska Sūtra asserts that the kāyas and pristine consciousnesses of buddhahood are impermanent by nature, but permanent by continuum. Those who assert the kāyas and pristine consciousnesses as the nature of the emptiness that possesses the supreme of all aspects are asserting that the kāyas and pristine consciousnesses are permanent by nature, and are asserting that they are impermanent by nature in the mode of appearing to trainees, according to what is taught in the Sūtra that Gathers All Intentions.

As such, from the perspective of the way reality is, while any phenomena included in the three times never moves from being the same by lacking birth and cessation in the natural state, since there is no need to reject or accept one side or the other of this duality arising distinctly as all phenomena there are such as self and other, samsara and nirvana, conditioned and unconditioned, past, present and future and so on, those in whom meaning of noncontradictory two truths that are equivalent with the teachings of the principles of realization endowed with eight profundities will easily give rise to the doubtless certain knowledge that is the intention of the sūtras and tantras of Mahāyāna. He mentions in another text:

In both the example luminosity and the vidyā of the Great Perfection, the reflection of the sky-like meaning luminosity is an appearance for the water-like mind. Though emptiness is ascertained by the mind (that meditates on emptiness) to be unconditioned, while the mind (in which that aspect arises) is unconditioned, a mind and an emptiness that are discrete will not appear in experience, but will be distinguished in the subsequent knowledge, just like the form of the sky in the water.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 3:55 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Received lung for Dudjom Rinpoche's "Buddhahood Without Meditation" twice now

krodha said:

Not to be a pedant, but I believe you mean Dudjom Lingpa.

Buddhahood Without Meditation is the title for the book which is a translation of his Rang bZhin rDzogs pa Chen po'i Rang Zhel mNgon du Byed pa'i gDams pa ma sGom Sangs rGyas bZhugs so.

Sherab Dorje said:

Is there a difference?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, yes. Dudjom Lingpa passed away in 1904. Dudjom Rinpoche was born in 1904.

As far as the big red book goes, no, you don't need a lung, but it is good to receive it anyway.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 3:39 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Kelwin said:

As for the quote by Milarepa, I have no idea why that would refer to the Great Perfection? Is this the specific Tibetan terminology used here?

Malcolm wrote:

The term he uses for "prowess" is "nyams rtsal." The term is common enough, but the Lhasun is pointing out his use of it in connection with awakened mind, byang chub sems, which Lhasun apparently takes as a Dzogchen reference.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 3:28 AM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Queequeg said:

At this point, easier said than done.

Malcolm wrote:

If we keep saying it, it will get done.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 3:19 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

DGA said:

related: is there a meaningful distinction between prajna and jnana in Zen discourse?
this has come up as a problem before, for instance here

<http://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=107&t=22352#p331645> and elsewhere

Malcolm wrote:

No idea.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 2:44 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

"Pondering" means learning Dzogchen teachings throughly yourself. Reading Dudjom Rinpoche's Big Red Book will help that goal.

Sherab Dorje said:

Thanks for the tip. Do you need a lung for that one?

Received lung for Dudjom Rinpoche's "Buddhahood Without Meditation" twice now and plenty of tri, and it still has not shown me any specific points where Dzogchen (the state) differs from the state of Mahamudra.

Malcolm wrote:

The state of Prajñāpāramitā, Mahāmudra, and Mahasandhi are the same; their paths however, different, and of course in my opinion, are respectively more profound. YMMV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 1:25 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You have not even begun.

Sherab Dorje said:

I notice that you did not answer to my points though. So you are not helping my pondering.

Malcolm wrote:

"Pondering" means learning Dzogchen teachings throughly yourself. Reading Dudjom Rinpoche's Big Red Book will help that goal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 1:24 AM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Queequeg said:

For the principal that we act out of self interest? We can just proceed on Adam Smith's ideas. Makes no difference to me. Or Oliver Stone's Gordon Gecko - "Greed is Good!" The point is to pull some mental jiu-jitsu on that self interest by expanding the notion of self and turn it into a motivation for the common good.

Malcolm wrote:

I would rather just extend rights to the planet through giving it status as a legal person.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 1:11 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This does not show that the mind arises because of afflictions. It merely shows that mind is conditioned by afflictions.

Astus said:

When there is one, there is the other, when the one is not, then the other is not - that is the basic structure of dependent origination.

Malcolm wrote:

Therefore, you are asserting that afflictions are a necessary precondition for the arising of the mind, period.

Astus said:

Are you also proposing Buddhas are like pieces of wood? Without any consciousness at all?

"Buddha-activity is unceasing because it is devoid of conceptualising" (Uttaratantra 7.284, tr Holmes)

Malcolm wrote:

So you think buddhas are pieces of wood, inert, like rocks.

Astus said:

Beings experience buddhas and lands dependent on their perception. Buddhas are beyond thought and intention. What kind of consciousness is there to be for them?

Malcolm wrote:

Jñāna. The only difference between dualistic consciousness (vijñāna) and pristine consciousness (jñāna) is the presence and absence of the vi- prefix. They are both a kind of consciousness, however, and they exist on a continuum. With the removal of obscurations of both afflictions and knowledge, vijñāna gradually becomes jñāna. The Uttaratantra states:

Sentient beings, bodhisattvas and tathāgatas are described as Impure, impure and pure, and extremely pure, respectively.

And:

The dharmakāya is the pristine consciousness (jñāna, ye shes) of the Victor.

Astus said:

Is a buddha a consciousness?

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhahood is a supramundane jñāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 1:00 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

[

Is that enough pondering?

.

Malcolm wrote:

You have not even begun.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 12:58 AM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Queequeg said:

Yeah, and Buddhism is about undoing that, naming that as one of our main problems. 80,000 scriptures explaining why and how we should go about this. I think we can say, this is an intrinsic problem that we have... what if we harnessed it?

Malcolm wrote:

I don't share your enthusiasm for trying to apply Buddhist philosophical principles in legislation. I think it is an error to do so. Why? We are not all Buddhists.

Queequeg said:

the idea that we are going to redraft the constitution on that theory is science fiction.

Malcolm wrote:

We don't have to redraft the constitution. All we have to do is recognize the planet and its ecosystems as legal persons. For example:

In a landmark case for the Rights of Nature, officials in New Zealand recently granted the Whanganui, the nation's third-longest river, with legal personhood "in the same way a company is, which will give it rights and interests". The decision follows a long court battle for the river's personhood initiated by the Whanganui River iwi, an indigenous community with strong cultural ties to the waterway.

<http://www.treehugger.com/environmental-policy/river-new-zealand-granted-legal-rights-person.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 12:31 AM

Title: Re: Is the Dharmakaya unconditioned and uncaused?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Pretty straightforward: is the Dharmakaya unconditioned and/or uncaused?

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on who you ask.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 21st, 2016 at 12:30 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Reasons are given. Now that Dudjom Rinpoche is your paramaguru, perhaps you should read and ponder his arguments which make the same six points.

Sherab Dorje said:

Perhaps, and perhaps I can also apply some critical thinking and discriminatory wisdom too. It's actually encouraged, if I remember correctly.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, perhaps you should ponder his arguments, rather than just go to the kneejerk fake Rime response.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 20th, 2016 at 11:49 PM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Astus said:

A small reminder of the twelve nidanas then: ignorance -> formations -> consciousness -> name and form (name = consciousness) -> six ayatanas (sixth ayatana = consciousness).

"Only the skandhas, conditioned by defilement and action, go reincarnating themselves by means of the series of intermediate existences. As an example: the lamp."
(III.18a-d; vol 2, p 399)

Do you propose a consciousness beyond the five aggregates?

Malcolm wrote:

This does not show that the mind arises because of afflictions. It merely shows that mind is conditioned by afflictions.

Astus said:

We can know from many sources, including the Pabhassara Sutta, that afflictions are not inherent to the mind.

Afflictions are not inherent to the mind, and that's not been stated here. What is stated is that ignorance gives rise to birth, and birth includes the birth of consciousness.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhas are free from afflictive and uncontrolled birth. They, as well as bodhisattvas on the pure stages, appear wherever they like.

Are you also proposing Buddhas are like pieces of wood? Without any consciousness at all? Are you further proposing that afflictions are inherent to the skandhas?

Astus said:

If the mind arose from affliction, it could never be free of affliction

Wheat grows from the soil, but bread should not have soil in it. And there is the well known metaphor of the lotus. The whole world is said to arise from ignorance.

Malcolm wrote:

But it is never said that the mind arises from ignorance. Furthermore, your metaphor is mistaken. Bread may not have soil in it, but that is because bread is something refined from wheat. Wheat itself is inedible. It requires a great deal of processing to turn into bread.

The lotus example is used to describe how it is that the Buddha appeared in the swamp of samsara without being affected by it. The swamp is merely a condition, it is not a cause. The cause of a lotus is a lotus seed (bodhicitta). If you propose something which is a cause, like a wheat seed, it should produce a wheat plant, and not a lotus flower. Likewise, if the cause of the mind is ignorance (wheat seed) it is impossible that a mind could ever be awakened (lotus), since its nature and its continuum is inherently ignorant (wheat), since its cause is ignorance (wheat seed).

Astus said:

If we follow your idea, it would seem that all there is samsara, and ultimately, when the mind ceases, samsara ceases.

When there is no more birth there is no more samsara. I have not realised this is my idea.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, pay more attention to what you write.

Astus said:

Why?

I'm not asking to leave Dzogchen out, but simply to provide others who support it.

Malcolm wrote:

[/quote]

I prefer Dzogchen citations. Other people prefer sūtra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 20th, 2016 at 10:23 PM

Title: Re: Do I have to meditate to be a Buddhist?

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

It's also impossible to experience a direct realisation of emptiness without practising formal sitting meditation on it because it is a very subtle object and we need powerful concentration and wisdom developed in formal meditation to realise it directly.

Malcolm wrote:

This isn't true.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 20th, 2016 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Well if a Dzogchenpa says that Dzogchen is superior to every other system then it must be true...

Malcolm wrote:

Reasons are given. Now that Dudjom Rinpoche is your paramaguru, perhaps you should read and ponder his arguments which make the same six points.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 20th, 2016 at 10:15 PM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If ignorance were the ultimate or first cause of the mind (it isn't) than everything you say would make sense. But ignorance is not the ultimate or first cause of the mind, and in fact, ignorance is not inherent to the mind, as your query suggests. In fact, it is affliction in general that drives samsara, but afflictions do not drive the mind.

Astus said:

What Mahayana teaching is it that goes beyond the twelve links of dependent origination? The twelve is what establishes ignorance as the root cause...

Malcolm wrote:

In Chapter 3 of the Kośabhaṣyaṃ, Vasubandhu, representing the Sautrantika point of view, rejects the idea, quite decisively, that ignorance is the first cause of the 12 nidanas. And the Buddha never says anywhere that afflictions are the cause of the mind. Afflictions are merely the drivers of karma, and the result of karma is samsara. Further, people commonly make the error of not distinguishing between ignorance which is an affliction (the "first" link of the nidanas), and ignorance which is a knowledge obscuration which mistakenly apprehends a self — the two are not the same. The former, an affliction, arises from the latter.

Astus said:

and it is also what is given as the force driving both the mind and the whole of the world.

Malcolm wrote:

No, an afflicted mind results in karma, and karma results samsara, but it is never stated anywhere that afflictions are the cause of the mind. We can know from many sources, including the Pabhassara Sutta, that afflictions are not inherent to the mind. If the mind arose from affliction, it could never be free of affliction:

"Luminous, monks, is the mind. And it is defiled by incoming defilements."

"Luminous, monks, is the mind. And it is freed from incoming defilements."

If we follow your idea, it would seem that all there is samsara, and ultimately, when the mind ceases, samsara ceases.

Astus said:

(If possible please give something else as well, besides Dzogchen sources.)

Malcolm wrote:

Why?

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 20th, 2016 at 10:00 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Kelwin said:

Spaghetti monster tells me to say 'no'. Does it matter if it's him or me?

Termas are full of superiority complexes. I guess it kind of matters if it's 'just' individuals writing inspired poetry, or actually enlightened beings trying to guide us all to something better. It also gives a different perspective on the question whether Dzogchen is somehow superior to all other paths or not.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a very nice book composed by Lhatsun Namkhai Jigme which sets out to prove the superiority of Dzogchen. Perhaps I should translate it.

Kelwin said:

We've all read lots of texts saying it is superior. And lots of texts saying it is the same/similar. Personally, I like Tsele Natsok Rangdrol's perspective. Does Lhatsun Namkhai Jigme offer any new argument to the conversation that hasn't been translated before? I'd certainly be interested! Summary of the point he makes more than welcome.

Malcolm wrote:

He lists six points of superiority:

1. The Great Perfection is superior through its preliminary practice.
2. It is superior through its ripening empowerments.
3. It is superior through its physiology of nāḍīs, vāyus and bindus.
4. It is superior through the great transference rainbow body of the fourth vision of thögal.
5. It is superior through its method.

6. It is superior through its explanation of the measurement of liberation.

Indeed, he finds evidence that Milarepa practiced the preliminaries of the Great Perfection (ever a subject of controversy) in a verse from one of Mila's songs:

I, Milarepa, have gained prowess, prowess in the training in awakened mind.

Dudjom Rinpoche more or less cribs his arguments for the superiority of Dzogchen from this source.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 20th, 2016 at 9:39 PM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Queequeg said:

You have to assume personhood.

It's a fiction and it's demands too much abstract thought.

Malcolm wrote:

We assume personhood with regards to human beings all the time, even though it is a fiction.

Queequeg said:

Much better approach is take advantage of people's grasping at self and show them how their self encompasses the planet. Then they want to protect the planet out of self interest.

Malcolm wrote:

It has not worked so far. When people think they own something, they generally think they have the right to exploit it for their own interests.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 20th, 2016 at 9:36 PM

Title: Re: Cognitive obscurations, how can they be?

Content:

muni said:

Since that mindstream lacks the slightest partiality, there is no basis for a singularity; because there is no partiality in that, all the infinite worlds are my body.

My body also appears as the infinite worlds and bodies of living beings.

The mind and traces are not the same, not different, and are very hard to investigate.

The mind that clings to entities and clings to cause and result itself appears as cause and condition, but because they are nondual, there is no arising and perishing.

Because there is no arising and perishing, there is no self and other. Because there is no death and transmigration, there is no permanence and annihilation.

Therefore there is no delusion or samsara. In fact, there is also no nirvana.

Then how come, that our behaviour is often in contradiction of your wise sharing here? How come that partiality still is and so the basis of singularity is? There is no self and other. _/_ How come mind still clings in behaviour to entities?

Yes. Any clinging is our problem, just as clinging to cause and result. But when we do not know the cause of our suffering, we suffer the results and this not knowing is itself by the idea of a singularity its' confused clinging to entities/things and so it's actions = karma.

I think it is good to reflect and contemplate about what you shared here.

Malcolm wrote:

When we don't recognize our own state, we still perceive partiality, etc. There is no basis for singularity, since as it says above, there is no manyness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 20th, 2016 at 9:32 PM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, dependent origination is a mind-driven process. Isn't that plainly obvious?

Astus said:

Of course. What is it that drives the mind? The Hinayana position is that it is ignorance, and with the ignorance removed there is no reason for another birth. Mahayana follows that view, that's why it needs to exchange ignorance with aspirations, since that type of understanding comes from the Hinayana version of the bodhisattva path, in other words, all the Mahayana explanations are built to back up an already accepted model. And the problem I see here is that it lacks the explanation for why arhats could not simply end the process, thus questioning the assumption that the mind-stream is unceasing.

Malcolm wrote:

If ignorance were the ultimate or first cause of the mind (it isn't) than everything you say would make sense. But ignorance is not the ultimate or first cause of the mind, and in fact, ignorance is not inherent to the mind, as your query suggests.

In fact, it is affliction in general that drives samsara, but afflictions do not drive the mind.

Third, just because one no longer takes rebirth in the three realms does not mean that one's mind has ceased to exist. The mind does not exist in the three realms; the three realms exist in the mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 20th, 2016 at 10:23 AM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Queequeg said:

Expansive as that nominally is, it strikes me as ideological and ultimately false.

Why not just go all the way?

Buddha Dharma based constitution.

Malcolm wrote:

Because I am not into inflicting my religious beliefs on others and enshrining them into law.

But we do live in a biosphere, which ought to be treated as a person.

Queequeg said:

We hold these truths to be self evident... phenomena are empty; phenomena are conditional; phenomena are the middle way.

It is the duty of the State to Enhance the Freedoms and Advantages for all beings (basically, I think we can crib Nagarjuna's Jeweled Garland...)

Is Buddha Dharma religion? I thought it was reality...

Viewing biosphere as a person is as problematic as corporate personhood, though I'm more in favor of it, practically speaking.

But getting people to think of Gaia as a person... the misogynists will not let that happen, let alone the Christians.

I think we get further by encouraging the redefinition of people... without getting to emptiness, getting people to reflect on their dependently originated nature - even just at material levels - would probably be more effective than trying to convince people the Earth is a Person - whatever that could mean.

Malcolm wrote:

It means that she too has inalienable rights, the same as ours.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 20th, 2016 at 10:08 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

there are no buddhas who made no aspirations

Astus said:

Ignorance cannot be what sustains rebirth, because then arhats would be finished, as they are without aspirations. It also cannot be established that arhats grasp at non-existence and that's why they succumb temporarily to an inactive state, since they are without any form of identification with anything. Furthermore, if aspirations are necessary for the buddhas to remain functional, that in itself means that dependent origination is driven by mental effort.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, dependent origination is a mind-driven process. Isn't that plainly obvious?

As for your other qualms, they have been adequately addressed already.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 20th, 2016 at 7:52 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Kelwin said:

I guess that's a topic for a separate thread, but I'd be really interested to know how many people vote 'human invention', and how many people would vote 'deities teaching from another realm'. Possibly a bit of both.

Sherab Dorje said:

Is there a difference?

Kelwin said:

Spaghetti monster tells me to say 'no'. Does it matter if it's him or me?

Termas are full of superiority complexes. I guess it kind of matters if it's 'just' individuals writing inspired poetry, or actually enlightened beings trying to guide us all to something better. It also gives a different perspective on the question whether Dzogchen is somehow superior to all other paths or not.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a very nice book composed by Lhatsun Namkhai Jigme which sets out to prove the superiority of Dzogchen. Perhaps I should translate it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 20th, 2016 at 5:10 AM

Title: Re: Cognitive obscurations, how can they be?

Content:

tomschwarz said:

Please consider this and the vastness of reality's expanse when you feel anything categorical. It's bound to be wrong. No?

Malcolm wrote:

While I respect HHDL, I prefer Mañjuśrimitra's perspective more:

The mind that clings to entities and clings to cause and result itself appears as cause and condition, but because they are nondual, there is no arising and perishing.

Because there is no arising and perishing, there is no self and other. Because there is no death and transmigration, there is no permanence and annihilation.

Therefore there is no delusion or samsara. In fact, there is also no nirvana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 20th, 2016 at 4:23 AM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

biocentric perspective

Queequeg said:

Expansive as that nominally is, it strikes me as ideological and ultimately false.

Why not just go all the way?

Buddha Dharma based constitution.

Malcolm wrote:

Because I am not into inflicting my religious beliefs on others and enshrining them into law.

But we do live in a biosphere, which ought to be treated as a person.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 19th, 2016 at 11:12 PM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

Then you and CW are just talking past each other, are you not?

Astus said:

I do not see how. Consciousness, any kind, is necessarily conditioned. Nirvana is not a consciousness, but the final extinction of defilements. CW is of the opinion that somehow there can be an unconditioned consciousness. That I call illogical and impossible, because consciousness is always the awareness of something, and that means change, but change cannot happen to what is unconditioned.

treehuggingoctopus said:

Not quite. CW is of the opinion that all consciousness (vijñāna) is afflicted, unestablished and conditioned -- but there is also unafflicted cognition (aka as wisdom, jñāna) which is unestablished and unconditioned. Controversial?

Malcolm wrote:

The idea that there is a hard distinction between conditioned and unconditioned phenomena is a form of realism. The Dzogchen point of view is best, IMO:

It may be said, "The way all this is produced is dependent origination, arising and ceasing."

Like a burnt seed, a nonexistent is not produced from a nonexistent; the cause and the result do not exist.

The mind that clings to entities and clings to cause and result itself appears as cause and condition, but because they are nondual, there is no arising and perishing.

Because there is no arising and perishing, there is no self and other. Because there is no death and transmigration, there is no permanence and annihilation.

Therefore there is no delusion or samsara. In fact, there is also no nirvana.

-- Mañjuśrīmitra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 19th, 2016 at 11:11 PM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Our systems depends on every American having 45,000 people work for them. At the cost of the environment. Our country is the number leading cause of global warming. Yes, I was saying that this the number of people in the world per first world citizen, whose labor is required to keep even the poorest of us in the lifestyle to which we've become accustomed.

Inge said:

Population in the US is 324,227,000

(https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Demography_of_the_United_States)

$324,227,000 \times 45,000 = 14,590,215,000,000$

World population is 7,400,000,000

$14,590,215,000,000 / 7,400,000,000 = 1971.65$

Are there people amounting to 1971.61 times the world population working for the Americans?

What about the numbers?

Malcolm wrote:

I will find the source of the stat.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 19th, 2016 at 9:00 PM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

All phenomena are anicca

Malcolm wrote:

No, space and the two kinds of cessation are unconditioned and permanent.

Crazywisdom said:

Nominal designations. One could have said something else. Like space is conditioned by vastness or such. Cessations also could have been made to not fit into category of phenomena

Malcolm wrote:

They are called dharmas because they bear characteristics. They belong to the dharmadhātu/dharmāyatana. Cessation due to analysis is nirvana. Cessation without analysis is simple absence of a cause for arising. Unconditioned space is the absence of obstruction, as the name indicates, akaśa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 19th, 2016 at 8:52 PM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

It's enough to understand that the Khanda are Anatta, anicca and dukkha.

Malcolm wrote:

The skandhas do not include all phenomena.

Crazywisdom said:

All phenomena are anicca

Malcolm wrote:

No, space and the two kinds of cessation are unconditioned and permanent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 19th, 2016 at 8:49 PM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

the cause of the continuity of buddhas is the force of previously made aspirations. This is not controversial. Buddhas are beyond birth and death, as are bodhisattvas on the pure stages.

Astus said:

How can they be beyond rebirth when there is no end of birth?

Malcolm wrote:

They are beyond rebirth as a corollary of attaining power over birth through attaining patience for the non-arising of phenomena. Again, completely noncontroversial...the rest of your query is senseless, there are no buddhas who made no aspirations...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 19th, 2016 at 8:45 PM

Title: Re: Mahakala Namcho

Content:

AnthonyKing said:

Hello

I have a request to the forum participants.

We were coming to town Dzatrul Rinpoche. And I would like to ask him for the practice of Mahakala.

But I do not know what the transmission lines it owns. My friends said that he most likely has Namchö.

And I would like to ask members of the forum of Mahakala Sadhana Namchö cycle. The texts with translations into any European language.

With them, I will ask for the transmission of Rinpoche.

Thank you.

Malcolm wrote:

Dzatrul Rinpoche is principally a practitioner of Dudjom Tersar.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 19th, 2016 at 7:33 PM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

their continuums are sustained on infinite causes.

Astus said:

Ignorance is taught to be the root cause of birth. Saying that birth can never end means that ignorance cannot be the root cause. What is it then that sustains it?

Praṇidhāna-pāramitā.

For bodhisattvas and buddhas compassion is said to be the driving force so that they don't abandon beings. Such a condition is needed if birth can end. But since birth cannot end, there is no need for such an aspiration, and there is always either a deluded or an enlightened inclination that sustains birth, in which case both types of beings are subjects to birth and death. Thus nirvana is samsara.

Malcolm wrote:

Astus, the cause of the continuity of buddhas is the force of previously made aspirations. This is not controversial. Buddhas are beyond birth and death, as are bodhisattvas on the pure stages.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 19th, 2016 at 7:06 AM

Title: Re: Cognitive obscurations, how can they be?

Content:

tomschwarz said:

So please consider the question, do sentient beings have "being"? Because if they do, then they most definitely exist based on the dictionary definition (versus Buddhist definition) of "exist".

Malcolm wrote:

The buddhist definition is the only one of interest to me, since I am interested in reality, and not delusion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 19th, 2016 at 7:05 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

It's enough to understand that the Khanda are Anatta, anicca and dukkha.

Malcolm wrote:

The skandhas do not include all phenomena.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 19th, 2016 at 7:04 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Bakmoon said:

As mentioned previously, the Theravada school rejects the position that Nirvana is a cessation, and posits that Nirvana is a positive permanent phenomena, and that during the attainment of Nirvana, it is directly cognized by a supermundane consciousness.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, understood, in this respect their position is little different than Sarvastivada. The Sautrantika view, IMO, is in fact better. YMMV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 19th, 2016 at 6:21 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is not that they must, it is simply that they do.

Astus said:

That still makes it an eternalist interpretation. Beings are literally immortal.

Malcolm wrote:

No, since their continuums are sustained on infinite causes.

Astus said:

Aspirations.

That is? Ordinary beings have selfish aspirations, while noble beings have selfless aspirations?

Malcolm wrote:

Prañidhāna-pāramitā.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 19th, 2016 at 5:14 AM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Still it leaves us asking whether we should support demonstrably good things which came from demonstrably bad things, or go with something else.

Malcolm wrote:

The question we have to ask ourselves, is not what we want, but rather, what will people 7 generations from now want.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 19th, 2016 at 5:13 AM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

That's part of the paradox of all modernity, not just America.

Malcolm wrote:

I agree, this extends to all countries where we can find advanced capitalism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 19th, 2016 at 5:05 AM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

I'm not saying people should be silent at all, I'm simply stating that claiming that ignorance always = complicity is kind of pointless argument, as it means that individuals in every society on the planet ever are then guilty of the actions of it's power structures.

Malcolm wrote:

They are. There were no good Germans. It is not about guilt. It is about truth.

Johnny Dangerous said:

And grandstanding.

Being proud of some things within America (such as those mentioned in People's History which you cited) in no way means that people need to ignore the other things, in fact it should mean the opposite.

Malcolm wrote:

In fact, all the good things mentioned in PHUS came as a result of the rise of an economically privileged class in the colonies. All the rest of the good things in America are also the result of the increasing economic privilege of Americans which has come at the cost of the wholesale environmental crisis we are presently living through. When one takes the biocentric perspective, it shows the fallacy of any version of American exceptionalism, from hard to soft.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 19th, 2016 at 4:55 AM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Do we all need to be defined by the actions of our government and military apparatus?

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, I think we do. When we understand that we are viewed individually by the actions of our govt., then we can't take a "what, who, me?" attitude. Silence = consent.

Johnny Dangerous said:

I'm not saying people should be silent at all, I'm simply stating that claiming that ignorance always = complicity is kind of pointless argument, as it means that individuals in every society on the planet ever are then guilty of the actions of its power structures.

Malcolm wrote:

They are. There were no good Germans. It is not about guilt. It is about truth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 19th, 2016 at 4:43 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, since Sautrantikas assert that Nirvana is a nonexistence, it is definite that the highest Hinayāna view maintains that nirvana is a nonexistence. Other Hinayāna schools maintain that nirvana is some unconditioned phenomena, belonging to cessation due to insight.

Astus said:

I assume you're referring to this:

Malcolm wrote:

I was referring to another discussion on the nature of Nirvana in the Kośa, whether unconditioned Nirvana posited by the Sarvastivadins is critiqued and found wanting.

Astus said:

If the purified continuums of buddhas and bodhisattvas do not continue forever, it follows that they must somehow cease.

That is simply exchanging "self" for "continuum", and positing the extremes of existence and non-existence.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is not simply exchanging a self for a continuum. It is also not positing any extreme of either.

Astus said:

If they must somehow cease, this is an annihilationist position.

And if they must persist, it is the eternalist position.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not that they must, it is simply that they do.

Astus said:

If you argue it is merely a self within that continuum that does not cease because it does not exist, this still leaves us with the purified continuum of buddhas and bodhisattvas persisting forever since there is no condition by which such a continuum should cease given that there is no condition by which the continuums of sentient beings, the object of their compassion, will cease.

What is the maintaining force of that continuum? It cannot be ignorance, or defilements, nor can it be wisdom, or compassion. Then what?

Malcolm wrote:

[/quote]

Aspirations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 19th, 2016 at 4:35 AM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Do we all need to be defined by the actions of our government and military apparatus?

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, I think we do. When we understand that we are viewed individually by the actions of our govt., then we can't take a "what, who, me?" attitude. Silence = consent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 19th, 2016 at 1:23 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The latter leads to the former.

Astus said:

Not necessarily, because one can attain not only arhatship but also the state of the non-returner.

The Mahāyāna point is that arhats, when they pass away, enter that equipoise and remain there, since we do not accept that there can be an absolute cessation of the mind.

There is no arising, hence no cessation either. It is because all appearances are unborn that they are no different from nirvana. That's why the emptiness of phenomena is emphasised as the unique wisdom of bodhisattvas.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this emptiness of phenomena is a unique point of Mahāyāna unknown in to Hinayāna adherents. I know you are valiantly trying to save Hinayāna tenets from being hoisted on their own petard but...

Astus said:

However, it is a misinterpretation even in Hinayana to say that an arhat ceases to exist, for the same reason it is a mistake in Mahayana: there is nothing to cease.

Malcolm wrote:

No, since Sautrantikas assert that Nirvana is a nonexistence, it is definite that the highest Hinayāna view maintains that nirvana is a nonexistence. Other Hinayāna schools maintain that nirvana is some unconditioned phenomena, belonging to cessation due to insight.

Astus said:

At the same time, there is nothing to persist either. So, saying that the mind-stream continues on forever is at best a provisional teaching for those afraid of becoming nothing.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is the basis of stating that the supreme cessation is the non-abiding nirvana of buddhas and bodhisattvas. If the purified continuums of buddhas and bodhisattvas do not continue forever, it follows that they must somehow cease. If they must somehow cease, this is an annihilationist position. If you argue it is merely a self within that continuum that does not cease because it does not exist, this still leaves us with the purified continuum of buddhas and bodhisattvas persisting forever since there is no condition by which such a continuum should cease given that there is no condition by which the continuums of sentient beings, the object of their compassion, will cease.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 19th, 2016 at 12:55 AM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Queequeg said:

Its worth keeping, because, seriously, what's the better alternative? And how do we get there, if you even have an answer to that.

We have to stop careening down this unsustainable path. If we don't, there won't be much a world left for anyone, especially children.

We're talking about different things. You're focusing on the present economic system. I agree with you that the level of waste in our society is unsustainable. We do need to rethink many of our values and norms. I don't think that is accomplished, by say, eliminating the various freedoms that define America, or abandoning the basic model of government we have, or to retreat from our common assumption that we all should all have the space to pursue "happiness". My idea of what ought to be perpetuated is not the economic system.

Malcolm wrote:

Our economic system is predicated on the idea of happiness = property. The implication of this is that property = rights, and that those with less property are less entitled to rights, and therefore, are less entitled to happiness.

Queequeg said:

What we need is a change in thought and assumptions about what the good life is

Malcolm wrote:

First, we have to abandon the idea that property = happiness.

Queequeg said:

Dumping what's good about America because of what's bad is not a realistic approach.

Malcolm wrote:

We need to rewrite the constitution from a biocentric perspective.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 18th, 2016 at 11:27 PM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Abhidharmasammuvaya, pg. 135

Astus said:

That talks about nirodha, the third noble truth. I meant there nirodhasamapatti, the 9th dhyana. They are not the same.

Malcolm wrote:

The latter leads to the former. The Mahāyāna point is that arhats, when they pass away, enter that equipoise and remain there, since we do not accept that there can be an absolute cessation of the mind. For example, on the next page, Asanga notes that the supreme state of nirodha is the nonabiding nirvana of the Buddhas and bodhisattvas which allows them to continue to benefit sentient beings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 18th, 2016 at 11:09 PM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

There is a something not conditioned, if there weren't the path would be impossible.

Astus said:

I didn't say there is nothing unconditioned. I said that consciousness cannot be unconditioned. It is nirvana that is unconditioned.

treehuggingoctopus said:

Astus, out of curiosity: what do you mean by "consciousness"? Are you using it in the specific context of the skandhas, dhatus and ayatanas, or in the broadest possible sense, to designate all and any possible types of cognition?

Malcolm wrote:

He means the aggregate of consciousness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 18th, 2016 at 11:00 PM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Astus said:

If it (nirodha) were the same as nirvana, there would be no need to see it with discernment/wisdom. Furthermore, it could not be that one doesn't attain arhatship.

Malcolm wrote:

[4]What is it (nirodha) from the point of view of convention? It is the cessation acquired through the abolition of the seeds (bijanigraha) by means of worldly paths (laukikamarga). The Blessed One calls it a "partial Nirvāṇa" (tadaṃśikanirvāṇa)...

[6] What is its complete state (paripūri)? It is the cessation acquired by those who are no longer in training (aśaikṣa), such as the fruit of arhatship (arhatvaphala).

-- Abhidharmasammuvaya, pg. 135

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 18th, 2016 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: Cognitive obscurations, how can they be?

Content:

tomschwarz said:

in any case, "exist" is a simple english word, filled with all kinds of meanings, so to speak so concretely about it, we must understand what it means to us, what meaning we want it to have...

Malcolm wrote:

You really don't need to get all that complex about it. Exists means "something which can be established."

tomschwarz said:

))) OK. But please answer the two questions. And now a third, what does it mean to establish something? Again lots of meanings....which one would you like to use hear? E.g. Donald Trump was established as the Republican Candidate of this year's presidential race. So that worked.

White Lotus, great point.

Malcolm wrote:

In Buddhist parlance, "establish" means to prove something incontrovertibly. So in this sense, conventionally we can say Trump is the Republican nominee, since it accords with conventional perception. But even, so, it won't stand up to ultimate analysis (apart from his toupee, which appears to be the only inherently existent thing in the universe).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 18th, 2016 at 10:16 PM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Queequeg said:

Where do you get that?

Sherab Dorje said:

He is talking about how many people globally have to be deprived in regards to their basic needs (of resources) in order for one American to live their lifestyle, to enjoy their level of consumption. He doesn't mean actually working for you personally.

Have you ever visited a third world country?

Queequeg said:

I don't know if that's what he was saying.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I was saying that this the number of people in the world per first world citizen, whose labor is required to keep even the poorest of us in the lifestyle to which we've become accustomed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 18th, 2016 at 10:15 PM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Queequeg said:

I think my view is something like this: this is a pretty good system; as good as any that has ever been organized by human beings, on a scale that is unprecedented.

Malcolm wrote:

Our systems depends on every American having 45,000 people work for them. At the cost of the environment. Our country is the number leading cause of global warming.

Queequeg said:

Where do you get that?

Malcolm wrote:

Some analysis of the world labor cost required to keep our standard of living where it is; right now, I don't recall where I read it.

Queequeg said:

In any event, seriously, people exploiting people is not the real long term concern. We're going to be overwhelmed by automation sooner than later.

Malcolm wrote:

This is still people exploiting people.

Queequeg said:

Its worth keeping, because, seriously, what's the better alternative? And how do we get there, if you even have an answer to that.

Malcolm wrote:

We have to stop careening down this unsustainable path. If we don't, there won't be much a world left for anyone, especially children.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 17th, 2016 at 5:00 AM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Queequeg said:

I think my view is something like this: this is a pretty good system; as good as any that has ever been organized by human beings, on a scale that is unprecedented.

Malcolm wrote:

Our systems depends on every American having 45,000 people work for them. At the cost of the environment. Our country is the number leading cause of global warming.

Queequeg said:

Its worth trying to keep going.

Malcolm wrote:

At the price listed above, not a chance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 17th, 2016 at 4:55 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

TRC said:

Firstly, nirodhasamapatti has nothing to do with nirvana. Nirvana is not the cessation of perception and feeling. Secondly, nirodhasamapatti has nothing to do with “commoners”, it is only available to non-returners and above.

Malcolm wrote:

Nirvana, as conceived in Hinayāna, is indeed the utter cessation of one's stream based on analysis (pratisamkhyanirodha). Perceptions and feelings are included in everything that ceases. The Sauntranikas, according to the Kosha, even go so far as the assert that Nirvana is nonexistence.

Nirvana with remainder, of course, is does not involve death. Nirvana without remainder most certainly involves death.

The Mahāyāna criticism of these various positions is well known. No need to repeat it here.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 17th, 2016 at 4:31 AM

Title: Re: Flavors of Nationalism... and the wind tossed seas of Open Dharma

Content:

Queequeg said:

I get why you don't fly the colors. When I fly the colors, its acknowledgement of the good and bad, but also determination to make it better. Its about time we took that symbol back from the yahoos. We should make Woodie Guthrie's anthem our national anthem.

Malcolm wrote:

I just don't think the legacy of the USA has much in which one could justifiably take pride.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 16th, 2016 at 9:25 PM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The only difference between the two, as I already said, is whether it belongs to an ārya or not. In the case of an ārya, it leads to the elimination of afflictions, in the case of a commoner, it does not.

Astus said:

Both are available only to aryas. However, neither of them are nirvana. And the point is that nirodhasamapatti is not the destination of arhats.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, technically, nirodhasamapatti and nirvikalpa samadhi are the same, differentiated by whether one is a commoner or a buddha, and the latter is the vajropamasamadhi of a buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 16th, 2016 at 8:44 PM

Title: Re: Cognitive obscurations, how can they be?

Content:

tomschwarz said:

in any case, "exist" is a simple english word, filled with all kinds of meanings, so to speak so concretely about it, we must understand what it means to us, what meaning we want it to have...

Malcolm wrote:

You really don't need to get all that complex about it. Exists means "something which can be established."

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, September 16th, 2016 at 8:02 PM
Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All
Content:
Queequeg said:
Letter from a Birmingham Jail is America.

Malcolm wrote:
MLK was murdered by America.

Queequeg said:
Eugene Debs is America.

Malcolm wrote:
Imprisoned by America.

Queequeg said:
Ken Kesey is America.

Malcolm wrote:
Institutionalized by America.

Queequeg said:
Rock and Roll is America.

Malcolm wrote:
Stolen from black people by America.

Just face it, this country's history is one of ethnic cleansing, human trafficking, genocide, ecocide, and wars of aggression, one after another.

There are individuals who have come from America, like MLK, etc., who are worthy of admiration. But on the whole, our track record is pretty appalling.

I would no more hang the stars and stripes on my house than I would the stars and bars.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, September 16th, 2016 at 7:56 PM
Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All
Content:
Johnny Dangerous said:
...damned if I'm going to let these people define the American experience, personally.

Malcolm wrote:
They already have.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 16th, 2016 at 7:54 PM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Astus said:

As for vajropamasamadhi, that is the attainment eliminating all defilements that leads to nirvana (Kosha, vol 3, p 981-3, 1020-1021; Samuccaya p 174), so it is different from nirodhasamapatti that does not necessarily lead to the elimination of all defilements.

Malcolm wrote:

The only difference between the two, as I already said, is whether it belongs to an ārya or not. In the case of an ārya, it leads to the elimination of afflictions, in the case of a commoner, it does not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 16th, 2016 at 4:52 AM

Title: Re: Cognitive obscurations, how can they be?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

So the magical apparitions magically appear and do all the dharma actions, like build centers, stupas, translate texts, etc.?

Malcolm wrote:

Since that mindstream lacks the slightest partiality, there is no basis for a singularity; because there is no partiality in that, all the infinite worlds are my body.

My body also appears as the infinite worlds and bodies of living beings.

The mind and traces are not the same, not different, and are very hard to investigate.

-- Mañjuśrīmitra

Crazywisdom said:

So everything that appears including dharma actions belong to the Buddha's kayas?

Malcolm wrote:

The phenomena of āryas and commoners arise from one's mindstream and do not exist anywhere else.

Also, that diversity in the realms of the six beings is one's samadhi.

—— Mañjuśrīmitra

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 16th, 2016 at 4:44 AM

Title: Re: Cognitive obscurations, how can they be?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:
So who's teaching Dzogchen?

Malcolm wrote:
The magical apparitions of the teacher, of course.

Crazywisdom said:
So the magical apparitions magically appear and do all the dharma actions, like build centers, stupas, translate texts, etc.?

Malcolm wrote:
Since that mindstream lacks the slightest partiality, there is no basis for a singularity; because there is no partiality in that, all the infinite worlds are my body.
My body also appears as the infinite worlds and bodies of living beings.
The mind and traces are not the same, not different, and are very hard to investigate.
-- Mañjuśrīmitra

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, September 16th, 2016 at 4:40 AM
Title: Re: Cognitive obscurations, how can they be?
Content:

Crazywisdom said:
And how does such a one uphold a Buddha's vow to benefit sentient beings?

Malcolm wrote:
Since the awakening of the sugata does not exist, his magical apparitions appear to the deluded, similar to an illusion.
-- Mañjuśrīmitra

Crazywisdom said:
So who's teaching Dzogchen?

Malcolm wrote:
The magical apparitions of the teacher, of course.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, September 16th, 2016 at 4:30 AM
Title: Re: Cognitive obscurations, how can they be?
Content:

Crazywisdom said:
This isn't nihilism because...?

And one shouldn't perform auspicious actions for beings within the view bc...?

Malcolm wrote:
It may be said, "The way all this is produced is dependent origination, arising and ceasing."
Like a burnt seed, a nonexistent is not produced from a nonexistent; the cause and the result do not exist.
The mind that clings to entities and clings to cause and result itself appears as cause and condition, but because they are nondual, there is no arising and perishing.
Because there is no arising and perishing, there is no self and other. Because there is no death and transmigration, there is no permanence and annihilation.
Therefore there is no delusion or samsara. In fact, there is also no nirvana.
-- Mañjuśrīmitra

Crazywisdom said:
And how does such a one uphold a Buddha's vow to benefit sentient beings?

Malcolm wrote:
Since the awakening of the sugata does not exist, his magical apparitions appear to the deluded, similar to an illusion.
-- Mañjuśrīmitra

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, September 16th, 2016 at 3:59 AM
Title: Re: Cognitive obscurations, how can they be?
Content:
Crazywisdom said:
Interdependent actions and fruits?

Malcolm wrote:
Do not abandon or dwell in any Dharma at all, with or without doubt.
Since the meditator and the dharmadhātu do not exist, there is nothing to doubt and there is nothing to perceive as ultimate.
-- Mañjuśrīmitra

Crazywisdom said:
This isn't nihilism because...?

And one shouldn't perform auspicious actions for beings within the view bc...?

Malcolm wrote:

It may be said, "The way all this is produced is dependent origination, arising and ceasing."

Like a burnt seed, a nonexistent is not produced from a nonexistent; the cause and the result do not exist.

The mind that clings to entities and clings to cause and result itself appears as cause and condition, but because they are nondual, there is no arising and perishing.

Because there is no arising and perishing, there is no self and other. Because there is no death and transmigration, there is no permanence and annihilation.

Therefore there is no delusion or samsara. In fact, there is also no nirvana.

-- Mañjuśrīmitra

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 16th, 2016 at 3:39 AM

Title: Re: Cognitive obscurations, how can they be?

Content:

muni said:

If there is a complete nonexistence, it is nihilism, which is not possible by the union of the two truths.

:

Malcolm wrote:

The two truths do not exist, so how can they be in union?

Crazywisdom said:

Interdependent actions and fruits?

Malcolm wrote:

Do not abandon or dwell in any Dharma at all, with or without doubt.

Since the meditator and the dharmadhātu do not exist, there is nothing to doubt and there is nothing to perceive as ultimate.

-- Mañjuśrīmitra

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 16th, 2016 at 3:14 AM

Title: Re: Cognitive obscurations, how can they be?

Content:

muni said:

If there is a complete nonexistence, it is nihilism, which is not possible by the union of the two truths.

:

Malcolm wrote:

The two truths do not exist, so how can they be in union?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 16th, 2016 at 2:19 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Rakz said:

But if it did end then Buddhas would too enter into the samadhi of cessation like they already do temporarily after the universe gets destroyed.

Astus said:

Nirvana is not nirodhasamapatti (samadhi of cessation). Otherwise yes, that is one of the interpretations, and that's why bodhisattvas are said to delay the attainment of nirvana.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure it is, the only difference between vajropama-samadhi and nirodhasamapatti is whether one is an ārya or not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 16th, 2016 at 2:06 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Admin_PC said:

Many of the Tejano elite backed the abortive attempt to set up an independent Republic of the North in 1813. Later, Tejanos were ardent supporters of the successful Mexican revolt against Spain in 1821, only to grow as unhappy with Mexican rule as with Spanish rule.

"Norteños who had an iffy relationship with the Mexican Empire"

Malcolm wrote:

I don't see how these do anything but reinforce what I was saying. There was already native & norteños discontent. Maybe I misread your statement, but your comment sounded like it was nothing but anglos making a land grab.[/quote]

The state of Texas was a result primarily an Anglo land grab.

Admin_PC said:

It should also be noted that not all natives were indigenous to this area. The Comanches in particular migrated here after the anglo settlers.

So when you read about the Rangers fighting Comanches, it should be understood that the Comanches often raided outside their territory in a general migration south...

Malcolm wrote:

They were clan based nomads. Their territory was always fluid.

Texas History Online said:

Call Houston a drunk if you want to, but he did advise against joining the Civil War: Many Texans considered the election of Abraham Lincoln to the presidency (November 1860) as a threat to slavery. They urged Governor Sam Houston to call a convention of the people to determine what course of action the state should take. Houston, devoted both to Texas and the Union, paid little heed to these requests, refusing to take any step that might aid secession. The demands for a convention increased, however, with the secession of South Carolina in December 1860 and the calling of state secession conventions in Mississippi, Florida, Alabama, Georgia, and Louisiana in early January. A group of secessionist leaders, including O. M. Roberts, John S. (Rip) Ford, George M. Flournoy, and William P. Rogers, issued an address to the people calling for the election of delegates to a state Secession Convention in early January. Houston attempted to forestall the convention by calling a special session of the legislature and recommending that it refuse to recognize the convention. Instead, the legislature gave approval to the convention, on the condition that the people ratify its outcome by a final vote.

The convention, which assembled in Austin on January 28, 1861, was dominated by secessionists. On February 1 the delegates adopted an ordinance of secession by a vote of 166 to 8. This ordinance was approved by the voters of the state, 46,153 to 14,747, on February 23. The convention reassembled in early March, declared Texas out of the Union, and adopted a measure uniting the state with other Southern states in the newly formed Confederate States of America. Governor Houston, who refused to recognize the authority of the convention to take this action, refused to take an oath of allegiance to the new government, whereupon the convention declared the office of governor vacant and elevated Lieutenant Governor Edward Clark to the position. President Lincoln offered to send troops to assist Houston if he would resist the convention, but Houston rejected the offer rather than bring on civil conflict within the state. He retired to his home in Huntsville, where he died on July 26, 1863.

Malcolm wrote:

It appears he both rejected the Confederacy, as well as rejected help from Lincoln to restore order.

Anyway, my main point still stands, "I like where I live too. This does not blind me to the fact that I live here by virtue of the fact that English Settlers began a program of ethnic cleansing and genocide against native people beginning in the 17th century", etc. This is as true of Texas as it is true of everywhere else in the United States and Canada, i.e, the wherever there was an Anglo Hegemony. The Spanish hegemony in Mexico, etc., has its own analysis and problems.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 16th, 2016 at 1:37 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Texas was an incursion by slavers into what was a underpopulated Mestizo enclave made of largely of Norteños who had an iffy relationship with the Mexican Empire.

There was no Texas revolution, in others words. It was, from the beginning, a land grab by white settlers.

Admin_PC said:

Gross mischaracterization based on a total rewriting of history, in favor of pushing an apologetic narrative.

That's not how it went down.

<http://www.houstonculture.org/hispanic/alamo.html>

<http://www.houstonchronicle.com/news/columnists/native-texan/article/Tejanos-played-key-role-in-Texas-Revolution-5413847.php>

<https://www.tamu.edu/faculty/ccbn/dewitt/adp/archives/newsarch/tejano.html>

<http://www.tamu.edu/faculty/ccbn/dewitt/tejanoorigins.htm>

<http://www.tamu.edu/faculty/ccbn/dewitt/tejanopatriots.htm> As a proportion of the population, the active participation of Hispanic native and immigrant residents in the struggle for independence of Texas from Spain and Mexico was equal to or greater in specific battles than that of resident immigrants from the United States of the North--
Don Guillermo

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it is exactly how it went down, as your own documents show:

"underpopulated Mestizo enclave" and "slavers (pro-slavery whites like Sam Houston)"

Admin_PC said:

" In 1836, about 4,000 Tejanos lived north of the Nueces River, where settlement was concentrated. Anglos numbered about 35,000, most of them fairly recent arrivals from the United States, Poyo said.

Malcolm wrote:

"Norteños who had an iffy relationship with the Mexican Empire"

Admin_PC said:

There had been a pattern of resistance to the rule of central government from Mexico City since the Spanish period of the 1770s, he said. That feeling predated the dissatisfaction with the Anglos by 50 years, according to Poyo.

Malcolm wrote:

And:

Many of the Tejano elite backed the abortive attempt to set up an independent Republic of the North in 1813. Later, Tejanos were ardent supporters of the successful Mexican revolt against Spain in 1821, only to grow as unhappy with Mexican rule as with Spanish rule.

Dunbar-Ortiz writes:

The Republic of Mexico opened a door to US domination by granting land to Anglo immigrants. During the first decade of Mexican independence, some thirty thousand Anglo-American farmers and plantation owners, along with their slaves, poured into Texas, receiving development land grants. By the time Texas became a US state in 1845, Anglo settlers numbered 160,000.¹⁸ Mexico abolished slavery in 1829, which affected the Anglo-American settlers' quest for wealth in building plantations worked by enslaved Africans. They lobbied the Mexican government for a reversal of the ban and gained only a one-year extension to settle their affairs and free their bonded workers—the government refused to legalize slavery. The settlers decided to secede from Mexico, initiating the famous and mythologized 1836 Battle of the Alamo, where the mercenaries James Bowie and Davy Crockett and slave owner William Travis were killed. Although technically an Anglo-American loss, the siege of the Alamo served to stir Anglo patriotic passions, and within a month at the decisive Battle of San Jacinto, Mexico handed over the province. This was a great victory for the Andrew Jackson administration, for Jackson's brother, Mason, who was one of the Texas planters, and especially for the alcoholic settler-warrior hero Sam Houston. The former governor of Tennessee, Houston was made commander in chief of the Texas army and president of the new "Texas republic," which he helped guide to US statehood in 1845. One of the first acts of the pro-slavery independent government was to establish a counterinsurgency force that—as its name, the Texas Rangers, suggests—followed the "American way of war" in destroying Indigenous towns, eliminating Native nations in Texas, pursuing ethnic cleansing, and suppressing protest from Tejanos, former Mexican citizens.

Dunbar-Ortiz, Roxanne (2014-09-16). An Indigenous Peoples' History of the United States (ReVisioning American History) (pp. 126-127). Beacon Press. Kindle Edition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 16th, 2016 at 1:13 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Admin_PC said:

How? When there were indigenous tribes & people of majority indigenous blood making up both the Mexican side in the Mexican Revolution & the Texas side in the Texas Revolution?

Malcolm wrote:

Texas was an incursion by slavers into what was a underpopulated Mestizo enclave made of largely of Norteños who had an iffy relationship with the Mexican Empire.

There was no Texas revolution, in others words. It was, from the beginning, a land grab by white settlers.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 16th, 2016 at 1:07 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Admin_PC said:

But being accused of "American exceptionalism" just because I happen to like a few things about where I live .

Malcolm wrote:

I like where I live too. This does not blind me to the fact that I live here by virtue of the fact that English Settlers began a program of ethnic cleansing and genocide against native people beginning in the 17th century:

“REDSKINS”

Indigenous people continued to resist by burning settlements and killing and capturing settlers. As an incentive to recruit fighters, colonial authorities introduced a program of scalp hunting that became a permanent and long-lasting element of settler warfare against Indigenous nations. During the Pequot War, Connecticut and Massachusetts colonial officials had offered bounties initially for the heads of murdered Indigenous people and later for only their scalps, which were more portable in large numbers. But scalp hunting became routine only in the mid-1670s, following an incident on the northern frontier of the Massachusetts colony. The practice began in earnest in 1697 when settler Hannah Dustin, having murdered ten of her Abenaki captors in a nighttime escape, presented their ten scalps to the Massachusetts General Assembly and was rewarded with bounties for two men, two women, and six children.

Dustin soon became a folk hero among New England settlers. Scalp hunting became a lucrative commercial practice. The settler authorities had hit upon a way to encourage settlers to take off on their own or with a few others to gather scalps, at random, for the reward money. “In the process,” John Grenier points out, “they established the large-scale privatization of war within American frontier communities.” Although the colonial government in time raised the bounty for adult male scalps, lowered that for adult females, and eliminated that for Indigenous children under ten, the age and gender of victims were not easily distinguished by their scalps nor checked carefully. What is more, the scalp hunter could take the children captive and sell them into slavery. These practices erased any remaining distinction between Indigenous combatants and noncombatants and introduced a market for Indigenous slaves. Bounties for Indigenous scalps were honored even in absence of war. Scalps and Indigenous children became means of exchange, currency, and this development may even have created a black market. Scalp hunting was not only a profitable privatized enterprise but also a means to eradicate or subjugate the Indigenous population of the Anglo-American Atlantic seaboard. The settlers gave a name to the mutilated and bloody corpses they left in the wake of scalp-hunts: redskins.

Dunbar-Ortiz, Roxanne (2014-09-16). An Indigenous Peoples' History of the United States (ReVisioning American History) (pp. 64-65). Beacon Press. Kindle Edition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 16th, 2016 at 12:42 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Admin_PC said:

I'm sorry you neighbors from Oceana hate us so much, but maybe you should save your vitriol for when we actually do something wrong.

Malcolm wrote:

White people in OZ are us, and they are still brutalizing indigenous people in that country.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 16th, 2016 at 12:37 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Admin_PC said:

I would hardly say its "history is nothing more nor less than" its atrocities.

Malcolm wrote:

Our history, all the things we imagine are positive about the United States, is predicated upon on our systematic practices of ethnic cleansing, genocide and human trafficking, for example, Texas, California, etc.

Perhaps you can give some examples of the positive things about the US which are not predicated upon this legacy?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 16th, 2016 at 12:22 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Admin_PC said:

No, merely mentioning pride in our country...

Malcolm wrote:

As an American, I see no reason at all to be proud of the United States of America. Its history is nothing more nor less than a history of European colonial expansion made possible by ethnic cleansing, human trafficking, and genocide.

Required reading:

1492 and 1493

The People's History of the United States by Howard Zinn

The Indigenous People's History of United States by Roxanna Dunbar-Ortiz

The new Jim Crow by Michelle Alexander

Etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 15th, 2016 at 11:36 PM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Admin_PC said:

"In God we Trust"

Malcolm wrote:

...was only adopted as the US motto in 1956.

Admin_PC said:

All of this, I now think, is not quite right. "Deism" in its own day referred not to a superficial theological doctrine but to a comprehensive intellectual tradition that ranged freely across the terrain we now associate with ethics, political theory, metaphysics, the philosophy of mind, and epistemology. It was an astonishingly coherent and systematic body of thought, closer to a way of being than any particular dogma, and it retained its essential elements over a span of centuries, not decades. In origin and substance, deism was neither British nor Christian, as the conventional view supposes, but largely ancient, pagan, and continental, and it spread in America far beyond the educated elite. Although America's revolutionary deists lavished many sincere expressions of adoration upon their deity, deism is in fact functionally indistinguishable from what we would now call "pantheism"; and pantheism is really just a pretty word for atheism. While deism could often be associated with moderation in politics, it served principally to advance a system of thought that was revolutionary in its essence and effects. This essentially atheistic and revolutionary aspect of deism, I further contend, is central to any credible explanation of the revolutionary dimension of the American Revolution. In a word, America's founders were philosophical radicals.

Malcolm wrote:

Stewart, Matthew (2014-07-01). Nature's God: The Heretical Origins of the American Republic (pp. 5-6). W. W. Norton & Company. Kindle Edition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 15th, 2016 at 5:26 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Karma_Yeshe said:

To the way things are presented: I mean the "Garland of Views" is not taught by a Tibetan, but by Padmasambhava.

Malcolm wrote:

Maybe.

Karma_Yeshe said:

What makes you question the Padmasambhava's authorship?

Malcolm wrote:

Lack of provenance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 15th, 2016 at 1:06 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Rakz said:

True. The ultimate destination in Mahayana is cessation as well once samsara is emptied out.

Malcolm wrote:

No, because there is still Akaniṣṭha Gandavyuha, where the sambhogakāya enjoys (bhoga) the dharma together with (sam) the two retinuees; the retinuee he emanates, and the retinuee of bodhisattvas who take birth there.

Thus, nonabiding nirvana is the goal of Mahāyāna, i.e., a nirvana where one never abides in extremes of samsara or nirvana.

Crazywisdom said:

But the commentary on the Guhyagarbha says Samantabhadra's retinue is a self-reflection.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that is the retinue of his own nature. But there is also a retinue which is not his own nature, i.e., bodhisattvas on the irreversible stages who take birth there.

It also depends on which Akaniṣṭha you are talking about, Dharmakāya level or Sambhogakāya level.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 15th, 2016 at 1:05 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That very much depends on which Tibetans. The Sakyapas, especially the Ngorpas, certainly have the opposite attitude.

Just to add to this point — much of the polemics in Tibet are precisely about who is more faithful to the India tradition and who has departed from the Indian model.

Crazywisdom said:

Again I point out they are riffing about the monastic Tantra of late Indian Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, they are mainly arguing about how to properly interpret the Nalanda tantric tradition circa 1000 CE.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 15th, 2016 at 1:01 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Let's assume there are no sentient beings and no bodhisattvas, just Buddhas. There would be no point of form kayas. Compassion would be meaningless. What samadhi would a Buddha have then? I think it would have to be cessation.

Rakz said:

True. The ultimate destination in Mahayana is cessation as well once samsara is emptied out.

Malcolm wrote:

No, because there is still Akaniṣṭha Gandavyuha, where the sambhogakāya enjoys (bhoga) the dharma together with (sam) the two retinues; the retinue he emanates, and the retinue of bodhisattvas who take birth there.

Thus, nonabiding nirvana is the goal of Mahāyāna, i.e., a nirvana where one never abides in extremes of samsara or nirvana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 15th, 2016 at 12:54 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Remember the Tibetans want you to think their books are definitive and the Indian one's are provisional.

Malcolm wrote:

That very much depends on which Tibetans. The Sakyapas, especially the Ngorpas, certainly have the opposite attitude.

Just to add to this point — much of the polemics in Tibet are precisely about who is more faithful to the India tradition and who has departed from the Indian model.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 15th, 2016 at 12:02 AM

Title: Re: Michael James on Ramana

Content:

dreambow said:

Many people find Ramana Maharshi inspirational.

Malcolm wrote:

Great. Let them find him inspirational on the nonduality forum.

Karma Dorje said:

Yes, florin can't you see that this is a forum for feminist ranting about Asian culture?!

Stay on topic, man!

Down with the patriarchy!

Malcolm wrote:

If it was a matriarchy, one would have to rant about that, too.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 14th, 2016 at 11:50 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Karma_Yeshe said:

To the way things are presented: I mean the "Garland of Views" is not taught by a Tibetan, but by Padmasambhava.

Malcolm wrote:

Maybe.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 14th, 2016 at 11:50 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Remember the Tibetans want you to think their books are definitive and the Indian one's are provisional.

Malcolm wrote:

That very much depends on which Tibetans. The Sakyapas, especially the Ngorpas, certainly have the opposite attitude.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 14th, 2016 at 11:48 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

I don't agree the Indian tantras are provisional in meaning.

Malcolm wrote:

Ok, we can disagree on one whether gsar ma tantras, as well as mahāyoga tantras are provisional. Like everything, YMMV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 14th, 2016 at 9:47 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That does not mean they are of no interest. They are. But I don't have time to read everything.

Losal Samten said:

How many Dzogchen tantras would you guesstimate we have preserved?

Malcolm wrote:

14 volumes in the Rnying ma rgyud 'bum alone, not to mention hundreds of tantras in various terma cycles that have been revealed over the centuries.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 14th, 2016 at 10:57 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Sure Dzogchen texts have their own way of explaining stuff. Great. But that's all.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, Dzogchen tantras and texts explain their own approach to awakening. To me, Dzogchen tantras and texts are much more interesting than gsar ma tantra (as well as tantras of mahāyoga), because, including the Guhyagarbha, those tantras are provisional in meaning. That does not mean they are of no interest. They are. But I don't have time to read everything.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 14th, 2016 at 10:48 AM

Title: Re: Empowerments in different yantras

Content:

PuerAzaelis said:

The DI is not just in the syllable itself?

Which parts are which, awareness expression, expressive power of awareness, initiation of the display of awareness, etc?

Malcolm wrote:

Any direct introduction possesses three lineages: the aural lineage, the symbolic lineage and the lineage of the transcendent state.

You must be able to understand the first two in order to grasp the meaning, which is contained in the third.

All of this constitutes empowerment of the potentiality of vidyā (rig pa'i rtsal dbang).

This is why the Syllableless Tantra states:

[T]he dharmakāya is encountered in the intimate instruction.

The dharmakāya is the lineage of the transcendent state; the intimate instruction is the aural lineage and the symbolic lineage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 14th, 2016 at 6:31 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

maybay said:

But any kind of historical revisionism, or trying to wrap Dharma up in trigger warnings and safe spaces is going to introduce as much contention as it resolves.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

maybay said:

Buddhism is firstly a refuge from suffering. If people think they can start dumping on everyone else the moment they walk through the door then it ceases to be that refuge.

Malcolm wrote:

We need to understand how Buddhism at present is failing Buddhadharma as a refuge, that is the point. Buddhism and Buddhadharma are two different things.

maybay said:

They need to understand basic decency and give whoever's running the show the benefit of the doubt.

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually, the classical texts say the opposite. Students get the benefit of the doubt. Teachers should be held up to rigorous scrutiny.

maybay said:

There's no need to go charging off on some global movement.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure there is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 14th, 2016 at 5:38 AM

Title: Re: Empowerments in different yantras

Content:

PuerAzaelis said:

I understand how language is limited to causation. Malcolm, you have just used "result" to try to convey the opposite idea.

But what is the difference between what you have just described as a pointing, and the usual tantric empowerment?

Malcolm wrote:

Tantric empowerments only grant one a conceptual idea. They start with the idea that there are aggregates which in fact need to be transformed into buddha families, for example, like applying an elixir to a base metal to transform it into gold.

Dzogchen starts with the idea that there is nothing to transform, but maybe, one needs to do a little dusting.

PuerAzaelis said:

I've experienced a few of both now.

If both are non-linguistic, what is the difference?

And does this mean I could pick a stranger off the street and she would "get" the pointing out the same as the sangha old timers?

Malcolm wrote:
Who said they are non-linguistic?

In a direct introduction, one either understands what the guru explains, or not. In case of the latter, then there are indirect methods.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, September 14th, 2016 at 4:22 AM
Title: Re: Help identifying a star.
Content:
maybay said:
Kalacakra uses the tropical zodiac. The Jyotish system with lunar mansions based on sidereal zodiac is broken.

Malcolm wrote:
The Kalacakra root tantra uses a tropical zodiac, but the Vimalaprabha reintroduced the broken Siddhanta system, which is why the Tibetan calendar is so damn crazy.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, September 14th, 2016 at 4:07 AM
Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?
Content:
PuerAzelis said:
I understand how language is limited to causation. Malcolm, you have just used "result" to try to convey the opposite idea.

But what is the difference between what you have just described as a pointing, and the usual tantric empowerment?

Malcolm wrote:
Tantric empowerments only grant one a conceptual idea. They start with the idea that there are aggregates which in fact need to be transformed into buddha families, for example, like applying an elixir to a base metal to transform it into gold.

Dzogchen starts with the idea that there is nothing to transform, just something to point out. As Vimalamitra states in Buddhahood in this Life:
If it is objected, "If afflictions are liberated into dharmatā without antidotes, there is no need for purification on the path. Otherwise, liberation would require no effort," for what reason would those who do not understand be liberated? Asserting that those who understand are liberated merely by recognizing concepts as dharmatā is the fruit of one's wishes. As such, in order to recognize that concepts are dharmatā, the intimate instructions of the guru are important.
Supporting this perspective, the Self-Arisen Vidyā Tantra states:
because it exists to be explained,
the result is attained through the explanation.

If not explained, how can there be liberation?
There are no signs in the dharmas of the basis,
no grasping to the dharmas of the path,
and no attainment of the dharmatā of the result.
The basis of sentient beings and the basis of buddhahood is definitely differentiated by a sole difference.
For what reason is there a sole difference?
Why is it called "the sole difference?"
The basis of buddhahood is pristine consciousness;
the basis of sentient-beinghood is not pristine consciousness.
When both the pristine state (ye) and the consciousness (shes pa) of it are combined,
it is the sublime transcendent state of the buddhas.
Therefore, what other differences are there?
M

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, September 14th, 2016 at 2:22 AM
Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?
Content:
Norwegian said:
Crazywisdom,

In Dzogchen there is gzhi, lam, and 'bras bu, in other words base, path, and fruit. This is something Dzogchen teachers teach all the time.

There has to be a base, and a path, and a fruit, because it is a complete path lacking nothing. Otherwise if Dzogchen was only the result, it'd just begin and end with "the fruit", but that's really not the case.

Crazywisdom said:
I know what they say. Im challenging the conceptual regimen. Let's look at your statement. It contains some Tibetan words. Looks so scholarly. But wait, I see a non sequitur: there has to be a base, path and fruit because it is a complete path lacking nothing. This is like poetry, not reasoning.

Then you contradict Malcom, bc he said the result does not arise from a cause. So by his statements the result results the result. There might as well be a result, a result and a result. Because the base, path and result are inseparable, by the terms of that teaching.

Malcolm wrote:
Basis path and result has a different meaning in Dzogchen.

The basis here is not a cause, it is something one did not know.

The path is recognizing what that basis is, based on the teacher's instructions which result in direct perception.

The result is fully experiencing the qualities of that basis.

Thus, Dzogchen is the result that does not arise from a cause.

For example, let us imagine that we are living on an island of gold. But we have no idea what gold is, and so we make various discriminations between things on that island, liking this one, disliking that one, not recognizing their nature is the same.

Someone explains to us what gold is, and then tells us to look past our conceptual discriminations to see what is actually there in our direct perception, i.e., gold.

In the end, when we have ascertained that everything on the island is gold, then we have nothing left to do.

This both what "the result that does not arise from a cause" means, and also what the basis, path and result are in Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 14th, 2016 at 1:24 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This citation comes from one of the Aural Lineages of Vairocana in the the Pellucid Transcendent State of Samantabhadra (Kun tu bzang po dgongs pa zang thal).

There is a reason why Khyentse Wangpo proclaims the Gongpa Zangthal the most profound of all the snying thigs.

amanitamusc said:

There is a commentary in English on Gongpa Zangthal translated by Tulku Thondup Rinpoche.

Crazywisdom said:

It's only about ngondro

Malcolm wrote:

You mean the five nails commentary, yes there is that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 14th, 2016 at 1:24 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

I thought the 9 yana scheme came up in the terma group. What text is this quote from? For me pith instructions are experiential lessons about the tantras which are taught by the Buddha. They don't come from no where.

Malcolm wrote:

This citation comes from one of the Aural Lineages of Vairocana in the the Pellucid Transcendent State of Samantabhadra (Kun tu bzang po dgongs pa zang thal).

There is a reason why Khyentse Wangpo proclaims the Gongpa Zangthal the most profound of all the snying thigs.

amanitamusc said:

There is a commentary in English on Gongpa Zangthal translated by Tulku Thondup Rinpoche.

Malcolm wrote:

Not exactly.

<http://www.wandel-verlag.de/en/kun-bzang-dgongs-pa-zang-thal-boundless-vision/>

amanitamusc said:

This book contains the Tibetan original text, only in Tibetan language! As appendix it contains an outline of the different chapters contained in the text by Tulku Thondup, in English language. The book has been thoroughly edited and put in chapters following the outline for better accessibility.

Malcolm wrote:

This text is a commentary on a short text in volume 5.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 14th, 2016 at 12:52 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

It's not a coma bc one can come out of it when one pleases.

Malcolm wrote:

One must be roused from it. Once one enters arhat's final samadhi of cessation, one is stuck in it forever unless a Buddha intervenes.

Crazywisdom said:

The theras have a different way. They say you go into it with the intention to be in that for some period of time. Then one comes out of it at the set time.

Malcolm wrote:

This is while one is still in this life. After an arhat's body breaks up, they enter into a samadhi of cessation that is, for all intents and purposes, a coma, a state of nescience until they are roused from it by a buddha. Thus say many Mahāyāna sūtras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 14th, 2016 at 12:43 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

I thought the 9 yana scheme came up in the terma group. What text is this quote from? For me pith instructions are experiential lessons about the tantras which are taught by the Buddha. They don't come from no where.

Malcolm wrote:

This citation comes from one of the Aural Lineages of Vairocana in the the Pellucid Transcendent State of Samantabhadra (Kun tu bzang po dgongs pa zang thal).

There is a reason why Khyentse Wangpo proclaims the Gongpa Zangthal the most profound of all the snying thigs.

Crazywisdom said:

So it's from Gonpa Zangthal?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 14th, 2016 at 12:40 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

This doesn't say what's in the 9, but seems to say, beginning with a direct introduction, a non path begins. And GP is calling it a yana as in Karma Linpa's text.

Tilopa also says the path is no path. I suppose Togal, etc., is in this category outside the vehicle concept. I don't buy that. At minimum it's a quasi-path, bc it has all the markings of a path: something one intends to do for a spiritual purpose, one does a thing, like get into position for that purpose, the path has signposts, the end is clearly marked. If there were a method to go direct to the end, that would be the immediate non-path.

Malcolm wrote:

Śrī Siṃha again states:

The system of the nine yanas assert buddhahood is attained through gathering accumulations and purifying obscurations. The Pellucid Transcendent State of Samantabhadra asserts that buddhahood cannot be obtained through gathering accumulations and purifying obscurations through samsaric impediments. If one wishes to attain buddhahood, three recognitions are necessary. Those are: the result does not arise from a cause; buddhahood does not arise from mind; intimate instruction do not arise from scriptures.

Crazywisdom said:

I thought the 9 yana scheme came up in the terma group. What text is this quote from? For me pith instructions are experiential lessons about the tantras which are taught by the Buddha. They don't come from no where.

Malcolm wrote:

This citation comes from one of the Aural Lineages of Vairocana in the the Pellucid Transcendent State of Samantabhadra (Kun tu bzang po dgongs pa zang thal).

There is a reason why Khyentse Wangpo proclaims the Gongpa Zangthal the most profound of all the snying thigs.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 14th, 2016 at 12:37 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

It's not a coma bc one can come out of it when one pleases.

Malcolm wrote:

One must be roused from it. Once one enters arhat's final samadhi of cessation, one is stuck in it forever unless a Buddha intervenes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 13th, 2016 at 11:36 PM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

maybay said:

What is an eon to someone experiencing nirvana?

Malcolm wrote:

What is the difference between this and a coma? Nothing, actually.

Crazywisdom said:

Nirvana is the highest happiness. Coma is a dead mind.

Malcolm wrote:

The samadhi of cessation is a coma, it is a false nirvana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 13th, 2016 at 11:35 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Anyway the extra secret cycle is also atiyoga. Any path can be categorized. So it's a division of Ati.

Malcolm wrote:

It can be called that, but in general, ati yoga is a category which characterizes the indirect approach through the nine yānas.

Dzogchen stands outside the nine yānas. Śrī Siṃha states:

All Dharmas of the nine yānas are Dharmas of the path, but cannot attain the result.

When the pellucid transcendent state (dgongs pa zang thal) of the victors is shown, it is impossible that all sentient beings (to whom it is shown) will not fully awaken

Crazywisdom said:

This doesn't say what's in the 9, but seems to say, beginning with a direct introduction, a non path begins. And GP is calling it a yana as in Karma Linpa's text.

Tilopa also says the path is no path. I suppose Togal, etc., is in this category outside the vehicle concept. I don't buy that. At minimum it's a quasi-path, bc it has all the markings of a path: something one intends to do for a spiritual purpose, one does a thing, like get into position for that purpose, the path has signposts, the end is clearly marked. If there were a method to go direct to the end, that would be the immediate non-path.

Malcolm wrote:

Śrī Siṃha again states:

The system of the nine yanas assert buddhahood is attained through gathering accumulations and purifying obscurations. The Pellucid Transcendent State of Samntabhadra asserts that buddhahood cannot be obtained through gathering accumulations and purifying obscurations through samsaric impediments. If one wishes to attain buddhahood, three recognitions are necessary. Those are: the result does not arise from a cause; buddhahood does not arise from mind; intimate instruction do not arise from scriptures.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 13th, 2016 at 11:09 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Dzogchen is the result. It's cant be a path.

Malcolm wrote:

No, there is also a Dzogchen path, because it is yāna, and because the basis and the result are different.

Crazywisdom said:

Anyway the extra secret cycle is also atiyoga. Any path can be categorized. So it's a division of Ati.

Malcolm wrote:

It can be called that, but in general, ati yoga is a category which characterizes the indirect approach through the nine yānas.

Dzogchen stands outside the nine yānas. Śrī Siṃha states:

All Dharmas of the nine yānas are Dharmas of the path, but cannot attain the result.

When the pellucid transcendent state (dgongs pa zang thal) of the victors is shown, it is impossible that all sentient beings (to whom it is shown) will not fully awaken

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 13th, 2016 at 10:58 PM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You are referring to upādāna-skandhas? Anupādāna, non-addictive, simple means that these aggregates are not a cause for future rebirth. There is no implication that they are not regarded as being existent and so on. All that is being implied is that śrāvakas recognize that there is no person (pudgala) in the aggregates and therefore the aggregates are no longer addictive (upādāna).

Astus said:

Upādāna is the support, the fuel, and without it there is nothing to rely on, no burning. Since the aggregates are still there without clinging, at least until complete extinction, it can be said that they exist. On the other hand, because there is no identification nor appropriation (me, mine), there is no reliance on physical or mental appearances, hence no view clung to (diṭṭhupādāna), no attachment to the extreme of existence or non-existence. What is the basis then for any cognitive obscuration?

Malcolm wrote:

Just because there is no view regarding the person, does not mean that there does not still remain views regarding dharmas. Also, as pointed out, Arhats do not realize emptiness free from all four extremes of proliferation. Why? They realize only the emptiness of the person.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 13th, 2016 at 10:49 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Basically, the difference is that Atiyoga is the indirect path; Dzogchen is the direct path.

Crazywisdom said:

Dzogchen is the result. It's can't be a path.

Malcolm wrote:

No, there is also a Dzogchen path, because it is yāna, and because the basis and the result are different.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 13th, 2016 at 10:37 PM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Not so. When we say that "Arhats realize the selflessness of the aggregates," in fact they do not realize the selflessness of the aggregates themselves, rather, only the selflessness of the person imputed on the aggregates.

Astus said:

That is the usual definition of their attainment, that they take the aggregates real but not any self. Or in other words, they differentiate aggregates with attachment and aggregates without attachment, where the latter is considered the final attainment. Now, if they are not attached to the aggregates, then they cannot be attached to any view, because views are concepts, and concepts are within the aggregates.

Malcolm wrote:

You are referring to upādāna-skandhas? Anupādāna, non-addictive, simple means that these aggregates are not a cause for future rebirth. There is no implication that they are not regarded as being existent and so on. All that is being implied is that śrāvakas recognize that there is no person (pudgala) in the aggregates and therefore the aggregates are no longer addictive (upādāna).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 13th, 2016 at 9:55 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Incorrect question. My assertion is that our present institutions are hierarchical in so far as they maintain a patriarchal hierarchy, which is the present antithesis of equality and freedom.

DGA said:

Very good. Then what would future institutions that do not maintain a patriarchal hierarchy, but do support equal and free participation, look like? how would such institutions function for purposes of Dharma activity?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, for example, we need to ditch the rules that subordinate female ordinands to male ordinands; we need to remove the rules that prevent senior bhikṣunis from acting as full upādhyāyas for men and women alike; we need to eliminate probationary or śikasamana ordination for women ordinands; and this is just a start.

We need a global Buddhist truth and reconciliation movement to openly confront and resolve sexist, racist and classist tropes and images in Buddhism and Buddhist culture.

etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 13th, 2016 at 9:44 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Basically, the difference is that Atiyoga is the indirect path; Dzogchen is the direct path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 13th, 2016 at 8:48 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

maybay said:

You made an important qualification though "and that is all you are allowed to do". If a person can extend themselves without shirking their duties, then why not. The problem is that once someone has tasted another life (which with television is inevitable), duty is always going to look like a jail sentence, and they will either leave it undone, work themselves into the ground with duties and study, or they will live hating their duties and themselves. The doctrine being propagandised is one of fundamental inadequacy, the solution for which is to work harder. Under these conditions Dharma practice is impossible. Balance and contentment are an uphill battle.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, this is a certainly a patriarchal approach to Dharma, based on hierarchy and submission, rather than equality and freedom. The former works well for institutions. The later works well for people who wish liberation in this life or the bardo.

DGA said:

This leaves us with the question: what use is there for Dharma institutions of different kinds for the purpose of supporting people who wish liberation in this life or the bardo? (recognizing that the answer to this question may depend on the kind of institution one has in mind, and the needs of those people) my point is that, in Malcolm's formulation here, institutions and liberation seem to be terms in opposition. is that necessarily so? if not, how not? is it possible to imagine and build Dharma institutions that are nonpatriarchal, democratic, and functional? if so, what would such institutions look like--how would they be organized, &c?

Malcolm wrote:

Incorrect question. My assertion is that our present institutions are hierarchical in so far as they maintain a patriarchal hierarchy, which is the present antithesis of equality and freedom.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 13th, 2016 at 12:40 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

maybay said:

You made an important qualification though "and that is all you are allowed to do". If a person can extend themselves without shirking their duties, then why not. The problem is that once someone has tasted another life (which with television is inevitable), duty is always going to look like a jail sentence, and they will either leave it undone, work themselves into the ground with duties and study, or they will live hating their duties and themselves. The doctrine being propagandised is one of fundamental inadequacy, the solution for which is to work harder. Under these conditions Dharma practice is impossible. Balance and contentment are an uphill battle.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, this is a certainly a patriarchal approach to Dharma, based on hierarchy and submission, rather than equality and freedom. The former works well for institutions. The later works well for people who wish liberation in this life or the bardo.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 8:07 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

maybay said:

Sure. No-one wants to do anyone else's washing up, because, while CEOs are all reading books on "servant leadership", women are being told that washing and cooking for others is a degrading chore, rather than a valuable, dignified, and rewarding experience.

Malcolm wrote:

"...cooking for others is a degrading chore, rather than a valuable, dignified, and rewarding experience" is a degrading chore when that is what your life is confined to, and that is all you are allowed to do. It is "a valuable, dignified, and rewarding experience," when you decide to cook out of choice.

maybay said:

I enjoyed cooking for my tenant very much, and I enjoyed teaching her even more. But eventually she feels [my guess:] that she is getting into debt with me, while she feels challenged to be worthy of such service, and since all she can really do for me personally is the dishes, then it gets too much and she bails out and she decides that while we live together we will not share and care about each other.

Malcolm wrote:

That has everything to do you with, and not much to do with her. As far as I can tell, you are engaged in a lot of projection.

maybay said:

And yet the messages she's getting about the glorious age of women is telling her that that's not OK, that it would be taking a lower role in the hierarch

Malcolm wrote:

No, she is being told that she has choice and agency, and that men need to participate more in the unpaid, unrecognized labor of maintaining a home.

maybay said:

The problem with this new situation is they will have to work harder and earn a greater salary to enjoy such independence, and for that they must submit themselves to a bloody-minded system that couldn't care less about their individuality, which ironically is not a problem for women.

Malcolm wrote:

More sexist silliness. It makes me seriously question whether you understand that women are human beings also.

maybay said:

The problem for women was never a lack of independence. It was being different from other women, ie jealousy.

Malcolm wrote:

Even more sexist silliness.

maybay said:

The problem for men is that the bloody-minded system is strengthened by women's independence from their local communities, and it becomes even more bloody-minded against individuals and local cultures...which then becomes a problem for women.

Malcolm wrote:

Hahaha, this is even more sexist silliness.

maybay said:

The result is a work environment that is so inhospitable as to be a factory of pathological behaviour.

Malcolm wrote:

Ok, Roger Ailes.

maybay said:

And so while women emancipate themselves out of love and into what is effectively an Arhat-like existence,

Malcolm wrote:

Huh?

maybay said:

we have growing social discontent, and corporate and political malfeasance caused by morons that puts everyone at risk.

Malcolm wrote:

And walla, we have a total non-sequitor posing as rationality.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 7:58 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Vajrayana is the best and it's all Vajrayana.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I agree. It is a matter of differences in approach.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 5:54 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Btw, it is often not understood, especially by people coming from gsar ma backgrounds, like cloudburst, that Atiyoga of the nine yānas is one thing, but the Great Perfection is in fact something else, beyond Atiyoga.

DGA said:

Malcolm, would it be possible for you to elaborate on this point a bit for the purpose of clear discussion? i.e., what is the content of this distinction between Dzogchen and Atiyoga?

Malcolm wrote:

ChNN discusses this in Crystal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 5:47 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Astus said:

Since all appearances that occur are one of the five aggregates and six areas, there cannot be anything an arhat grasps as self or belonging to a self. Furthermore, belief in any kind of substance can occur only in the aggregates, and since no aggregate is grasped, no view can be grasped either.

Malcolm wrote:

Not so. When we say that "Arhats realize the selfless of the aggregates," in fact they do not realize the selflessness of the aggregates themselves, rather, only the selflessness of the person imputed on the aggregates. Gorampa points out:

Now then, if it is thought that one will be able to give up the grasping true existence of grasping the true existence in the aggregates with the unimpeded path of the śrāvakas, since apprehending the non-existence of true existence of the aggregates is not the main point, but apprehending the non-existence of the true existence of the person is the main point, there is no error. Likewise, since apprehending the non-existence of the true existence of the apprehended outer objects is the main point of the unimpeded path of the path of seeing of the pratyekabuddhas, it is possible to give up the grasping true existence of grasping the true existence in outer apprehended objects, but it is not possible to give up the knowledge obscuration beyond that.

Because apprehending the freedom from proliferation of the four extremes with the unimpeded path of the path of seeing of Mahāyāna is the main point, that is the point of being able to give up all knowledge obscurations.

...

In brief, primary object of realization of śrāvakas is the selflessness of the person but that realization grasps true existence in the aggregates. It is necessary to reject [such grasping to true existence] because grasping true existence of grasping the true existence in the aggregates has the unimpeded power to cause the actual grasping to the self of persons. The primary object of realization of pratyekabuddhas is [42/b] the non-existence of true existence in apprehended outer objects. Because the primary object of realization of Mahāyāna is freedom from all proliferations of dualistic grasping, the difference in views are vast.

In the context of the Abhisamayālaṃkāra, since the unshared path of the Mahāyāna is primarily explained, having considered that the realization of freedom from proliferation is the realization of the selflessness of phenomena, that is said not to exist for śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 5:40 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Btw, it is often not understood, especially by people coming from gsar ma backgrounds, like cloudburst, that Atiyoga of the nine yānas is one thing, but the Great Perfection is in fact something else, beyond Atiyoga.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 5:25 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

maybay said:

Justice What has this got to do with Dharma?

daelm said:

neither Malcolm nor I were speaking about justice. we're explaining how structural misogyny works. if you remember, this was in response to the original example that you took so much offence to. hope it clarified.

maybay said:

If you want to give an example of institutional misogyny to try persuade people against it you should choose a relationship that ends in ruin, like so many of today's patriarchy-free relationships. You've chosen a relationship where everyone came out the other end enlightened.

Malcolm wrote:

In fact, these relationships about which you speak that end in failure, are ending in failure because the pillar upon which patriarchy is founded, controlling women's access to education, etc., is crumbling.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 5:14 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

anjali said:

Here is how it is explained by Tulku Urgyen Rinpoche in As It Is, V2:

Astus said:

That is the same definition as in the Uttaratantra Shastra, and it can go back further to Yogacara's grasper/subject and grasped/object. An arhat that does not grasp at the aggregates cannot have those subtle concepts either. Primarily, because there is no attachment to concepts. Secondly, because an arhat has realised the lack of self, and without an owner/grasper there can be no owned/grasped either.

Malcolm wrote:

Arhats realize selfness of the aggregates only, they do not realize the selflessness of all phenomena because the aggregates do not include all phenomena, but only afflicted conditioned phenomena.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 5:13 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Astus said:

...knowledge of all modes does not come from lack of clinging.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Astus said:

Yes it does come from lack of clinging? Or yes, there is a different cause? If the latter, what is it?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it does not come from a lack of clinging.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 5:12 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

it is well known among Dzogchen practitioners that much of the war and conflict we experience in this age arises as a result of conflict between mamos.

maybay said:

Maybe there's a supernatural explanation for patriarchy too.

Malcolm wrote:

Maybe, but I doubt it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 4:21 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Astus said:

By the way, Shakyamuni tasted neither.

Malcolm wrote:

Sadly, he lived before the Columbian exchange.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 4:20 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Astus said:

...knowledge of all modes does not come from lack of clinging.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 4:18 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

They don't stop at that because they don't account for the appearances of kayas. This pristine cognition resembles the frozen states you deride.

Malcolm wrote:

Not sure I understand what you are attempting to say.

Crazywisdom said:

Resting in the space like pristine awareness is not the dharmakaya, because the appearance of the form kaya has to appear spontaneously if there is resting in dharmakaya. And this does not happen in a mere pristine cognition which is like a glaring motionless light. The tantras do arrive at dharmakaya because they don't dispense with mental body forms.

Malcolm wrote:

I only stated that where these three systems agreed was on one point. Where they part is based on their respective paths. For example, familiarity through 32 examples presented in the view of the inseparability of samsara and nirvana, i.e., resting in a moment of unfabricated consciousness (shes pa ma bcos pa), ordinary consciousness (tha mal gyi shes pa), or connate pristine consciousness (lhan gcig skye ye shes), is a necessary prerequisite in the system of Lamdre before one even embarks on creation and completion stage meditations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 4:12 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, they cannot be. There is no practice of thögal in any gsar ma system.

Astus said:

I said that the listed features can be true for Mahamudra as well.

Malcolm wrote:

No.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 3:55 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

[For example, it is well known among Dzogchen practitioners that much of the war and conflict we experience in this age arises as a result of conflict between mamos.

kirtu said:

And I have been meaning to ask this for some time: how can we pacify these mamos?

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

One has to get in touch with their bosses, Palden Lhamo, Ekajati, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 3:53 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Well, i think super technology is a fact, (not based on science fiction of alien hypothesis), but true exchanges made by government & aliens, as we allow them to abduct humans for their own experimentation...and they know how greedy we are for technology, so this is how we do business with them.

Malcolm wrote:

Guns and whiskey, huh?

Crazywisdom said:

My ex went to Lhasa. Her impression, "Whoa. It's super sci fi."

Malcolm wrote:

I've been to Lhasa. My impression? "Wow, a lot of Chinese cops."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 3:50 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

conebeckham said:

Saraha's Dohas can be understood as a path. They speak of methods, devaluing some and tangentially pointing toward others.

Malcolm wrote:

Kagyu Mahāmudra, Trekchö, the view of the inseparability of samsara and nirvana, etc., all have the same point: resting in a moment of unfabricated consciousness. Dzogchen goes beyond this point, that's all.

Crazywisdom said:

They don't stop at that because they don't account for the appearances of kayas. This pristine cognition resembles the frozen states you deride.

Malcolm wrote:

Not sure I understand what you are attempting to say.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 3:29 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This does not follow at all.

Astus said:

How so? If one grasps at concepts, that is identifying with at least some mental aggregates. If no mental phenomena is attached to, where can be any cognitive obscuration?

Malcolm wrote:

Absence of attachment does indicate absence of cognitive obscuration. For example, one may have no attachment to chocolate, and nevertheless be ignorant of the flavor of coffee. Likewise, arhats may be free of gross attachment to the three realms, but they are ignorant of all modes of awakening, among other things.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 3:19 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Kagyü Mahāmudrā, Trekchö, the view of the inseparability of samsara and nirvana, etc., all have the same point: resting in a moment of unfabricated consciousness. Dzogchen goes beyond this point, that's all.

Astus said:

In what way does it go beyond? For instance, the seven distinguishing features of thögal (Treasury of Precious Qualities, vol 2, p 269) can be valid for Mahamudra as well.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they cannot be. There is no practice of thögal in any gsar ma system. It does not exist. If you think so, it merely shows you have read something you do not understand, which you should not read, and for which you should find competent instruction if you do want to read it. Otherwise, you will just be another Kim Katami.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 3:10 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

What if the white people in question are neither American nor Anglo?

I'll drop the subject now though. It's not something important enough to warrant getting into a longer disagreement over.

Malcolm wrote:

It is just kind of stupid for non-Tibetans to adopt Tibetan names, as if it changes anything about them.

tiagolps said:

Like a tibetan calling himself John, Bob or Francisco...

Malcolm wrote:

Yup.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 2:52 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

I reject this ideology you espouse, that white people should stick to "normal" Anglo-American sounding names full-heartedly.

Malcolm wrote:

Have to agree with Nathan on this one.

Coëmgenu said:

What if the white people in question are neither American nor Anglo?

I'll drop the subject now though. It's not something important enough to warrant getting into a longer disagreement over.

Malcolm wrote:

It is just kind of stupid for non-Tibetans to adopt Tibetan names, as if it changes anything about them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 2:49 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Of course there is a difference; arhats possess non-afflictive ignorance. Buddha's don't. But if arhats want to realize Mahāyāna buddhahood, they must begin at the beginning, since they lack both accumulations.

Astus said:

Arhats cannot have cognitive obscuration, because that would mean attachment to mental aggregates.

Malcolm wrote:

This does not follow at all. This is like asserting that first stage bodhisattvas cannot have cognitive obscurations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 2:33 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Well, i think super technology is a fact, (not based on science fiction of alien hypothesis), but true exchanges made by government & aliens, as we allow them to abduct humans for their own experimentation...and they know how greedy we are for technology, so this is how we do business with them.

Malcolm wrote:
Guns and whiskey, huh?

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 2:32 AM
Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna
Content:
Crazywisdom said:
It just looks so stupid when white folks go by Tibetan names...

Coëmgenu said:
I reject this ideology you espouse, that white people should stick to "normal" Anglo-American sounding names full-heartedly.

Malcolm wrote:
Have to agree with Nathan on this one.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 2:19 AM
Title: Re: Difference in attainments
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
It is also true that the samadhi of cessation is not a true liberation.

maybay said:
Where is this explained?

Malcolm wrote:
The conduct that grasps nonattachment is the conduct of the vehicle of characteristics—śrāvakas, pratyekabuddhas and bodhisattvas.
In reality, they are bound by great attachment.
— The Tantra of the Clear Dimension

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 2:15 AM
Title: Re: Difference in attainments
Content:
maybay said:
What is an eon to someone experiencing nirvana?

Malcolm wrote:

What is the difference between this and a coma? Nothing, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 2:07 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

kirtu said:

It is true that their activity for sentient beings is cut while they are in nirvana. So their personal experience of peace is not much for all the others after death.

Malcolm wrote:

It is also true that the samadhi of cessation is not a true liberation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 2:04 AM

Title: Re: Phurba Practices?

Content:

pemachophel said:

Sherab Dorje,

You forgot to mention to the OP that, before doing Vajrakilaya (Yidam) practice, one typically has to finish ngondro.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, that very much depends on your teacher. For example, it is the system of Sakyapas to practice either Kilaya or Vajrapani before starting your ngondro, to remove obstacles.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 1:54 AM

Title: Re: Aliens (split from "Patriarchy in Vajrayāna")

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

So for you the First Noble Truth is: Existence is suffering and it is caused by aliens?

And what's the deal with those poor aliens always being on the wrong end of the stick? I mean why doesn't anybody ever say: Aliens are to blame for all our positive characteristics. It is because aliens control us telepathically and through implants that we display kindness, compassion, etc... No! The aliens are always the baddies!

Kunga Lhadzom said:

There are MANY different types of Aliens. Look at all the BILLIONS of galaxies "out there" (or is it ALL in our MIND ?)

Buddha, IMO, was trying to help us. He KNEW the truth. He knew how fragile the human mind was/is. He was trying to help us be in control of our own mind.

I'm still not done watching the video....

Malcolm wrote:

It is possible for nonhuman beings, called gdon in Tibetan, and also mi ma yin, literally nonhumans, to influence and interfere with humans. The problem with the alien hypothesis is that it is based on science fiction notion of the universe involving a super technology and so on. But that is not necessary to account for your intuition that physical events and beings on this planet are being controlled or interfered with. For example, it is well known among Dzogchen practitioners that much of the war and conflict we experience in this age arises as a result of conflict between mamos.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 1:49 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

conebeckham said:

Saraha's Dohas can be understood as a path. They speak of methods, devaluing some and tangentially pointing toward others.

Malcolm wrote:

Kagyu Mahāmudra, Trekchö, the view of the inseparability of samsara and nirvana, etc., all have the same point: resting in a moment of unfabricated consciousness. Dzogchen goes beyond this point, that's all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 1:37 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

kirtu said:

So from a note to the Uttaratantra & commentary by Jamgon Kongtrul and Khenpo Tsltrim Gyamtso, it is definitely asserted that Arhats attain the beginning of the 7th Bhumi upon arousal.

t

Malcolm wrote:

Gorampa disputes this point in his Differentiation of Views:

Moreover if it is inquired “If it is not possible to abandon the knowledge obscurations below the seventh stage, what object to give up would a śrāvaka Arhat entering the Mahāyāna path give up at the seventh stage?” It will be necessary to hide one’s head under a fur coat.

Some, wishing to avoid that error, claim “Śrāvaka Arhats enter from the eighth stage”, which is a truly inferior standpoint. If that were so, in order to accomplish Buddhahood from the very beginning it would be quicker to enter the śrāvaka path than the Mahāyāna path, since the latter must take wait two incalculable eons before attaining the eighth bodhisattva stage while the former can attain the state of an Arhat in three lifetimes through rapid effort, and afterwards it would then be sufficient to enter on the eighth stage. Also this appears to be a belittling affront to Mahāyāna

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 1:27 AM

Title: Re: Aliens (split from "Patriarchy in Vajrayāna")

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 1:25 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

According to the Mahāyāna sūtras, arhats and pratyekabuddha are eventually roused out of their samadhi of cessation, and inducted as beginners on the Mahāyāna path.

Sherab Dorje said:

Yup, having been lapped by us oh-so-compassionate-and-awakened Mahayana practitioners not only do they have to run the whole journey from the beginning, they have to do it twice to catch up with us...

Malcolm wrote:

The merit of an unawakened Mahāyāni is infinite compared to the merit of an arhat.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 12:59 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

This thread paints arhatship as quietism, unless I misunderstand.

Knowing peace, being unmoved by anything, one therefore does not rise to compassionate activity for the sake of other beings.

Is this a fair assessment?

Malcolm wrote:

Arhats, when they pass away, enter into a samadhi of cessation. This is not actually liberation, from a Mahāyāna POV.

Monlam Tharchin said:

What happens next, if it is not liberation? Rebirth once the conditions of this samadhi are exhausted?

Malcolm wrote:

According to the Mahāyāna sūtras, arhats and pratyekabuddha are eventually roused out of their samadhi of cessation, and inducted as beginners on the Mahāyāna path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 12:45 AM

Title: Re: Aliens (split from "Patriarchy in Vajrayāna")

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

You are frakin' joking, right?

Malcolm wrote:

No, I don't think she is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 11th, 2016 at 12:12 AM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Virgo said:

What's the use of attaining peace? There is no activity for sentient beings that way. It is useless from our Mahayana perspective aside from being a field of merit for others while the arhat etc lives. So much more precious to develop the true heart. There is nothing in peace.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed.

Monlam Tharchin said:

This thread paints arhatship as quietism, unless I misunderstand.

Knowing peace, being unmoved by anything, one therefore does not rise to compassionate activity for the sake of other beings.

Is this a fair assessment?

Malcolm wrote:

Arhats, when they pass away, enter into a samadhi of cessation. This is not actually liberation, from a Mahāyāna POV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 11:36 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 10:58 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

And yet Saraha propagated tantras.

Malcolm wrote:

At least one of them did.

Crazywisdom said:

Tilopa got every Tantra and completion practice and dumped it all on Naropa. Wasn't he a chakrasmvara author?

Malcolm wrote:

The person who, according to tradition, first revealed the Laghusamvara Tantra was Saraha I, Siddha Nāgarjuna's teacher. Luipa wrote the first sadhana of this tradition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 10:14 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

And yet Saraha propagated tantras.

Malcolm wrote:

At least one of them did.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 10:14 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, the citations miss the point.

Sherab Dorje said:

I fail to see how. Could you please explain?

Malcolm wrote:

Astus does not understand the point I am making, therefore, his citations miss the point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 10:12 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

florin said:

Those who practice tantra inside dzogchen transmission are able to see and experience the manifestation of the visualization as the rolpa energy of the primordial wisdom.

Malcolm wrote:

Intellectually.

florin said:

"... jf we do not understand that the whole of samsara and nirvana is the Rolpa (energy manifestation) of our vision, even jf we declare that we have discovered our Rigpa, know that it does not correspond to the real meaning because Knowledge means understanding and having the certainty that samsara and nirvana in the absolute are the na-ture of primordial purity. And since the view is also nothing other than this be sure to ascertain this profound point! "

Do you think that your teacher was talking here about intellectual understanding then ?

Malcolm wrote:

It is very possible to have an intellectual understanding of this point without having real knowledge of this point, and remain in that intellectual understanding rather than moving beyond it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 10:00 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

...but it really is missing the point.

Sherab Dorje said:
Virupa and Saraha are missing the point?

Malcolm wrote:
No, the citations miss the point.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 9:26 PM
Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
What in fact that Dzogchen tradition rejects is that the two stages are needed at all.
They can be used if desired, but they are not necessary.

Astus said:
Mahamudra works without them as well.

"Still others just meditate on mandala circles,
Some are fixed in explaining the purport of the fourth,
For some [reality] is conceptually visualized as space,
Still others would have [reality] possess emptiness.
In general they are fixed in contradiction."
(Ornamental Flower for the Dohas, v 45–49, Dreaming the Great Brahmin, p 136)

"No tantra, no mantra, nothing to meditate on, no meditative concentration.
These all are causes which delude your ego.
Do not corrupt your mind, whose nature is pure, with meditative concentrations.
Station the true self in bliss, and cause it no torment.
Basking in eating, drink, and sex
Fills the nodes again and again,
Through such a teaching, the ends of the earth are reached";
Stamp down such deluded defenders of the world and move on.
Those in whom the breath and mind do not move,
And the sun and moon are uninvolved,
Ignorant ones, you must rest your breath.
Saraha has taught all instructions and gone away."
(v 95–106, p 141-142)

Malcolm wrote:
The Mahāmudra described here is not a path, it's a state of realization. Virupa and other mahāsiddhas express identical sentiments, but it really is missing the point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 9:22 PM

Title: Re: Difference in attainments

Content:

Astus said:

Interestingly, if we compare the early teachings where one has to be free from identification with the aggregates, and teachings on the obscurations in Mahayana that block one from attaining buddhahood, it turns out that there should be no difference at all between arhats and buddhas.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course there is a difference; arhats possess non-afflictive ignorance. Buddha's don't. But if arhats want to realize Mahāyāna buddhahood, they must begin at the beginning, since they lack both accumulations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 9:16 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

...If you want to learn what this means, find a real Dzogchen master.

Sherab Dorje said:

Recruiting in the Mahamudra sub-forum are we?

Malcolm wrote:

Someone asked what the difference was.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 9:15 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Vasana said:

You can still apply Dzogchen view to the other practices.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but nevertheless, this still working with mind. It is not the main point.

florin said:

Those who practice tantra inside dzogchen transmission are able to see and experience the manifestation of the visualization as the rolpa energy of the primordial wisdom.

Malcolm wrote:
Intellectually.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 12:34 PM
Title: Re: Difference in attainments
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
Arhats, lacking Mahāyana bodhicitta begin at the beginning of the Mahāyāna path of accumulation. Otherwise, arhatship would be a shortcut to buddhahood. But it is not.

Virgo said:
What's the use of attaining peace? There is no activity for sentient beings that way. It is useless from our Mahayana perspective aside from being a field of merit for others while the arhat etc lives. So much more precious to develop the true heart. There is nothing in peace.

Malcolm wrote:
Indeed.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 12:16 PM
Title: Re: Difference in attainments
Content:

Astus said:
How do arahants progress to the mahayana path after attaining Nirvana?
They start on the 6th/7th bhumi.

It should also be remembered that arhats in Mahayana mainly represent those practitioners who think that annihilation is the solution, and they mistake meditative peace for enlightenment. That's why they need to be waken up from their false nirvana to continue the path.

Malcolm wrote:
Arhats, lacking Mahāyana bodhicitta begin at the beginning of the Mahāyāna path of accumulation. Otherwise, arhatship would be a shortcut to buddhahood. But it is not.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 10:38 AM

Title: Re: Colorado's anti-fracking measures didn't make the ballot

Content:

Lobsang Chojor said:

Is the economy not dependent on the environment?

Rakz said:

It is dependent on exploiting it unfortunately.

Malcolm wrote:

It is then not sustainable. To exploit something is to use it beyond its capacity to sustain itself. If we use the environment beyond its capacity to sustain itself, the economy that depends on such an environment will collapse when the environment it has destroyed collapses. This is the lesson of the rise and fall of world civilizations since we have had records with which to track these things.

We, sadly, have learned nothing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 10:25 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

tiagolps said:

I'd like to know, has anyone ever witnessed or been the victim of misogyny in shangas here in the west? Or anywhere else?

Malcolm wrote:

I have observed it repeatedly amongst men in Sanghas since I started studying with Tibetan Lamas. That said, I have observed misogyny everywhere I have traveled and lived all my life since I was aware that there was systematic dehumanization of women by men. So I don't think it is a problem specific to Vajrayāna, merely that the context of Vajrayāna is patriarchal. Men in particular are largely unconscious of it. When it is brought to their attention they often spend a lot of time a) in denial while continuing to treat women like shit and b) becoming reactionary, trying to justify tropes in Vajrayāna because they have brainwashed themselves into objectifying their religion as being something more than a narrative, a story.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 10:23 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Edit: it just occurred to me that the gendering-fetishization of noun classes 'into' genders is the very same patriarchy this thread is about.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, which was the point of my bringing up the fact that prajñā has all three genders when the issues was raised.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 10:21 AM

Title: Re: Michael James on Ramana

Content:

dreambow said:

Many people find Ramana Maharshi inspirational.

Malcolm wrote:

Great. Let them find him inspirational on the nonduality forum.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 10:15 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

cloudburst said:

It is interesting that this is being cited as support for the idea that there was a movement denying the importance of generation stage. To me it reads as an unequivocal statement in support of the need for generation stage, if there is to be a completion stage.

Kindly clarify your understanding please?

Malcolm wrote:

The reason why this debate exists in this tantra is because it reflects a debate on the ground in the 8th century between the Indian forbears of the Dzogchen tradition, Śrī Siṃha et al and other Indians invested in the formal process of what we have come to refer, in blanket terms, as the stages of creation and completion. The passage itself favors those Indians who favored the formal process of the two stages. But the mere fact that the question exists in this tantra (which emerged following the era in which Śrī Siṃha and co. lived) proves that this was a significant debate in Indian Vajrayāna circles as a relatively early time.

But the creation and completion stages, as envisioned for example in the system of Sakya Lamdre or Naro Khachöma, is completely irrelevant to Dzogchen theory and practice. There is simply no need to go through the conceptual exercise of transforming one's aggregates, sense bases and elements in a mandala of deities, nor is there any need to work with karma vāyus, or relative nāḍis and bindus in the manner of the various completion stage systems such as those found in Lamdre, the Six Dharmas of Naropa, etc.

It is for this reason that tantras like Hevajra are considered provisional in Dzogchen teachings.

What in fact that Dzogchen tradition rejects is that the two stages are needed at all. They can be used if desired, but they are not necessary. Further, another consequence of this is that yogas derived from so called "completion stage" repertoire can be used without needing to engage in creation at all.

There is simply no need at all, from a Dzogchen perspective, to engage in the conceptual exercise of substituting pure vision for impure vision when in fact the vision of pristine consciousness is constantly available to anyone to perceive at any time at all providing they have the proper instructions. If you want to learn what this means, find a real Dzogchen master.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 9:58 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Well, when we talk about the path of Dzogchen, it goes beyond this inert kind of emptiness of which you are so fond.

cloudburst said:

no such thing, no actual Buddhist school posits an inert emptiness, this is a philosophers fantasy

Malcolm wrote:

Astus does.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 5:01 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

cloudburst said:

The Dalai Lama says Dzogchen is called Maha-ati because one practices mahayoga and ati together unless one is a Tilopa or Padmasambhava, a genuine chigcarwa.

Malcolm wrote:

This a characteristically Sarma way of understanding things. This is not according to the system of Dzogchen itself.

cloudburst said:

This is really just a result of how the pie is sliced. Actual Mahamudra is also beyond cause and result, so if we classified HYT and Mahamudra the way the Nine yana system is set up, we would divide HYT into maha and anu and Mahamudra would correspond to Dzogchen

Malcolm wrote:

HYT does not go beyond mahāyoga. There is nothing that corresponds to anuyoga and atiyoga in gsar ma tantra.

From the point of view of Dzogchen, this is a deviation of the lower vehicles.

Same from the point of view of actual mahamudra. From this pov, there is no cause and result.

The state of Mahāmudra, Dzogchen, and Prajñāparamitā is the same state. What distinguishes these are their respective paths. Unlike Mahāmudra and Prajñāpāramita, the actual path of Dzogchen itself is beyond cause and result.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 3:56 AM

Title: Re: Colorado's anti-fracking measures didn't make the ballot

Content:

Lobsang Chojor said:

The sad thing is regulation is difficult because companies won't say what the fracking liquid is citing corporate secrets.

Malcolm wrote:

It is all poison. That is why they won't say.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 3:28 AM

Title: Re: Michael James on Ramana

Content:

florin said:

I have been listening to his talks on Ramana for a while and i found them very interesting and informative.

Here is a biography of him http://www.happinessofbeing.com/michael_james.html

And here one of a recording <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=rToxPytMgaQ>

anjali said:

Hi florin. Is there something specific in those links that you believe to be of relevance for a Buddhist forum? Unless there is something specific you have in mind, perhaps material like this might be best posted to the relatively new <http://dharmapaths.com/forum/>

florin said:

Whatever it is in those links it could be beneficial to some individuals in this forum but not necessarily to the forum in general.

This is lounge and here as you can see people post all kinds of things.

Before writing anything further, I would first like to emphasise that this website is not about me as a person, but is about the real 'me', which is the absolute reality, the one fundamental, essential, immutable, infinite, undivided and non-dual consciousness of our own being, which we each experience as 'I am'.

Malcolm wrote:

http://www.happinessofbeing.com/michael_james.html

This is an absolute fail.

Countless views of a self are included in two. Those are included in both the eternalist view and the annihilationist view. Countless views of self come from those two.

—— Self-Arisen Vidyā Tantra

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 3:22 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

conebeckham said:

If one engages in KyeRim, for instance, which is mind-based, but with one's Awareness of the Nature permeating all mental activities, is that a deviation, in the Dzogchen system?

Malcolm wrote:

If you think any mind based activity will result in buddhahood, it is a deviation from a Dzogchen POV.

conebeckham said:

Thus, for one who practices Dzogchen, deity practices are either deviations--if one understands those practices to be means toward Buddhahood--or not, if one practices with other "goals" or "mundane needs" in mind?

Malcolm wrote:

Mipham explains it well, in his commentary on Mañjuśrimitra's Meditation of Awakened Mind:

If it is asked, "What is the method of realizing the definitive meaning through the indirect method?" since nonactivity is illustrated with the activity of fabricated efforts, like pointing to the moon with the finger, also awakened mind correctly grasped through a symbol will accomplish awakening, because the Bhagavan Buddha, the teacher of devas and humans, has declared that it is "great awakening." Any unfortunate one who conceptualizes entities should make efforts in the indirect method of realization. This unfortunate one is anyone who has not discovered vidyā, or has difficulty doing so.

And:

If one meditates generating the thought that the samadhis and the mudras are dharmaṭā, and therefore are not different, the ultimate awakened mind arises from that. If one actualizes the meditation, one realizes that all phenomena do not exist apart from one's mind. The accumulations are gathered and obscurations are purified because of that meditation. One becomes realized through one's continuum being blessed by the deity of pristine consciousness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 1:58 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Others believe that practice is the means and Mahamudra is the result, which is not a wrong view, per se, either.

Malcolm wrote:

From the point of view of Dzogchen, this is a deviation of the lower vehicles.

conebeckham said:

If one engages in KyeRim, for instance, which is mind-based, but with one's Awareness of the Nature permeating all mental activities, is that a deviation, in the Dzogchen system?

Malcolm wrote:

If you think any mind based activity will result in buddhahood, it is a deviation from a Dzogchen POV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 1:40 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Prajñā is masculine, feminine and neuter.

Sherab Dorje said:

Is that grammatically possible in Sanskrit? Coz in Greek it is not.

Are there many Sanskrit words with this characteristic?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 1:39 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Others believe that practice is the means and Mahamudra is the result, which is not a wrong view, per se, either.

Malcolm wrote:

From the point of view of Dzogchen, this is a deviation of the lower vehicles.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 1:33 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

MiphamFan said:

So even magic from other traditions is OK? Hindu tantra, Kabbalah, Egyptian magic, ATR stuff (except where it involves animal sacrifice)?

Malcolm wrote:

If you are sufficiently bored, sure.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 1:31 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Astus said:

I doubt that. Intelligence/rationality is associated with masculinity by modern Westerners, not ancient Asians.

Sherab Dorje said:

Ironically gnosis (knowledge), sofia (wisdom), dianoia (intellectual brilliance) and logiki (rationality) are all feminine nouns in the Greek language...

dzogchungpa said:

Not to mention prajñā.

Malcolm wrote:

Prajñā is masculine, feminine and neuter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 1:28 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is because they are teaching Mahāmudra as a goal. Dzogchen (and actual Mahāmudra) is not a goal.

Sherab Dorje said:

Nope. They are not teaching that the goal of the practice is to achieve Mahamudra, they teach that all practice IS Mahamudra.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, what the Mahāsiddhas state is that everything is mahāmudra, it has nothing to do with whether one practices or not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 1:26 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

conebeckham said:

Well, I would interpret that they are teaching Mahamudra as a path. I agree it is not a "goal," but based on perspective, it may be seen as one.

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāmudra is generally approached as a goal to be realized through gathering the two accumulations and so on, no?

conebeckham said:

No.

Not in my experience--though of course, there is a presentation of Mahamudra as "fruition," and gathering the two accumulations, etc., as path practices, along with pretty much every other practice one can engage in, including the two stages, leads to a "goal," there is also a way of understanding Mahamudra as "Ground" and "Path."

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I understand the presentation to which you refer, but simply put, Mahāmudra is on a cause and result continuum or it isn't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 1:14 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Vasana said:

You can still apply Dzogchen view to the other practices.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but nevertheless, this still working with mind. It is not the main point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 1:09 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Okay, that is the point that needed clarification.

My teachers, so far, teach that all practice is ultimately Mahamudra practice.

Malcolm wrote:

This is because they are teaching Mahāmudra as a goal. Dzogchen (and actual Mahāmudra) is not a goal.

conebeckham said:

Well, I would interpret that they are teaching Mahamudra as a path. I agree it is not a "goal," but based on perspective, it may be seen as one.

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāmudra is generally approached as a goal to be realized through gathering the two accumulations and so on, no?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 1:02 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Well, when they are practicing HYT practices, they are not practicing Dzogchen.

Sherab Dorje said:

Okay, that is the point that needed clarification.

My teachers, so far, teach that all practice is ultimately Mahamudra practice.

Malcolm wrote:

This is because they are teaching Mahāmudra as a goal. Dzogchen (and actual Mahāmudra) is not a goal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 1:01 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but that depends on the power of your siddhi. So I would not give up that day job just yet, Astus.

Astus said:

So it's the fault of the user if it doesn't work. How convenient.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, as with everything.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 12:49 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Astus said:

Is it possible to exchange one's 8 hours job for a 30 mins prosperity ritual but maintain the same income level? Might need a new topic for that perhaps.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but that depends on the power of your siddhi. So I would not give up that day job just yet, Astus.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 12:39 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

IOS and OS X are not the same thing.

Astus said:

That's OK. I'm simply asking about those other special methods that work in all walks of life, like fixing IT problems. Practising patience is of course beneficial, but the machine cares not about your state of mind.

Malcolm wrote:

You will note I excluded IT problems. I also do not know of any mantras that can fix other inert things such as pots, wheels and so on, because they are inert.

Practices for healing, prosperity, increasing harvests and so on are abundant and useful since they relate to things that are alive, and not inert.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 12:32 AM

Title: Re: Empowerment Question

Content:

sangyey said:

Which empowerment?

Trekcho

Malcolm wrote:

There is no "empowerment" for trekchö. Trekchö actually means one understands the meaning of Dzogchen directly.

Do you mean you received direct introduction?

In any case, in order to practice some deity, you need the lung of the mantra and the description of the deity, instructions on how to practice and what to do.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 12:28 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

But they are, and are one of the reasons we have many methods of dealing with health, financial and other kinds of obstacles in the Vajrayāna tradition that Dzogchen practitioners can use as they see fit. If you get a Mac, you won't have computer problems, apart from hardware failures.

Astus said:

Really? Do you know a mantra perhaps for the problems caused by the current IOS upgrade on Apple devices? Could help a lot of people.

Malcolm wrote:

IOS and OS X are not the same thing.

Astus said:

If it is a method that is sufficient for liberation, why use anything else?

Malcolm wrote:

That's up to the individual person to decide for themselves.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 12:25 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

I get this, but it gets confusing when Dzogchen practitioners regularly make use of HYT practices..

Malcolm wrote:

Well, when they are practicing HYT practices, they are not practicing Dzogchen.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Simple enough I guess.

Malcolm wrote:

Basically, when someone who is a Dzogchen practitioner is using methods such as deity yoga, they are using mind to try and go beyond mind. This is a valid approach. However, actual Dzogchen practice means you have already understood what it means to go beyond mind, and have left that kind of practice behind as a path. At that point, practices involving mind are used to gather accumulations, deal with illness and obstacles, and so on, for example the practice of Sang offerings is useful with there are problems with local guardians and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 12:19 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

What differentiates practitioners of Mahamudra or HYT from Dzogchenpa, view, practice, both?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, Mahāmudra proper, like Dzogchen, is a path of self-liberation.

But in general, HYT is a result vehicle, where as Dzogchen is the vehicle beyond cause and result.

This is the simplest way to put it.

Johnny Dangerous said:

I get this, but it gets confusing when Dzogchen practitioners regularly make use of HYT practices..

Malcolm wrote:

Well, when they are practicing HYT practices, they are not practicing Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 12:17 AM

Title: Re: Empowerment Question

Content:

sangyey said:

I received a Dzogchen empowerment and I was wondering since it is Highest Yoga Tantra if I can practice other deity practices without having to get their empowerment?

Thank you.

Malcolm wrote:

Which empowerment?

But in general, you can practice any deity for which you have the mantra lung and the description of the practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 12:16 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

What differentiates practitioners of Mahamudra or HYT from Dzogchenpa, view, practice, both?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, Mahāmudra proper, like Dzogchen, is a path of self-liberation.

But in general, HYT is a result vehicle, where as Dzogchen is the vehicle beyond cause and result.

This is the simplest way to put it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 10th, 2016 at 12:12 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

let us say you are a Dzogchen practitioner, but you have a problem with alcohol. ... Let us say that you have a clear sign your life force is dwindling, then you might want to resort to various methods of cheating death and prolonging life.

Astus said:

Those issues are not related to the bodhisattva path. I wouldn't consider health, financial, or computer problems appropriately solvable with Buddhist methods, nor should they be seen as such.

Malcolm wrote:

But they are, and are one of the reasons we have many methods of dealing with health, financial and other kinds of obstacles in the Vajrayāna tradition that Dzogchen practitioners can use as they see fit. If you get a Mac, you won't have computer problems, apart from hardware failures.

Astus said:

the actual path of Dzogchen is never based on concepts and mind

That's great. No ideation, no self, no suffering. And that's why I raised the question about the need for doing anything else.

Malcolm wrote:

[/quote]

Well, when we talk about the path of Dzogchen, it goes beyond this inert kind of emptiness of which you are so fond.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 11:37 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Because people have relative circumstances.

Astus said:

What do you mean by that? Is Dzogchen not sufficient, or is it functional only for some people?

Malcolm wrote:

Astus, for example, let us say you are a Dzogchen practitioner, but you have a problem with alcohol. In order to overcome that problem, you might adopt the pratimokṣa vows until you overcome that problem.

Let us say that you have a clear sign your life force is dwindling, then you might want to resort to various methods of cheating death and prolonging life.

Dzogchen practitioners can use various methods in order to overcome problems that arise because of impure vision and karma, but the actual path of Dzogchen is never based on concepts and mind, unlike mahāyoga and anuyoga, and the rest of the Buddhist and non-Buddhist vehicles. This is all very straight forward and explained at length in the primary literature of Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 11:21 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen is a garuda that feasts on the naḡas of the incorrect views of the eight lower vehicles.

Sherab Dorje said:

I preferred the cannibal analogy.

Malcolm wrote:

You would.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 11:18 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

can practice whatever they like or need from the eight lower yānas.

Astus said:

Why would they do that if it's complete as it is?

Malcolm wrote:

Because people have relative circumstances.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 11:13 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, like Dzogchen is one body that can eat other bodies.

Sherab Dorje said:

Dzogchen is a cannibal?

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen is a garuda that feasts on the naḡas of the incorrect views of the eight lower vehicles.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 11:05 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

maybe having a rational mind that can think logically is what they mean by having a penis?

Astus said:

The female body has several drawbacks in Buddhism. First of all, there are the "five obstacles, three subordinations" ( 五障三從), that is, no woman can become brahma, indra, mara, cakravartin, or buddha; and they are subject to their father as a child, their husband as an adult, and their son as an old person. Furthermore, particularly in East Asian Buddhism, they are impure from menstruation (see: http://www.onmarkproductions.com/menstruation-sutra-

michael-kelsey.pdf and

<http://www.reed.edu/hellscrolls/scrolls/Aseries/A06/A06e.html>), and suffer from giving birth (see: <http://www.buddhanet.net/e-learning/filial-sutra.htm>). It is also a regular theme that women are overly passionate.

Here is a famous section from the Nirvana Sutra (tr Yamamoto, ch 16):

"All good men and women desire to be born as a man. Why so? Because females are the nests of evil. Also, it is as in the case of the water of mosquitoes and sawflies, which cannot moisten this great earth. In addition, the sensual appetite of females cannot ever be satisfied."

But eventually the scripture states:

"Any person who does not realise that he has the Buddha-Nature is a woman. If he does so realise, he is a man. If any woman knows that she has the Buddha-Nature, she is a man."

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, what a wonderfully enshrined ode to utterly sexist bias.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 10:57 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Creation and completion are not part of Dzogchen praxis. They belong to mahā and anuyoga.

Sherab Dorje said:

And yet Dzogchepna's practice them.

What you are saying is like: fingers and nipples are not part of the body, only the spleen is.

Malcolm wrote:

No, like Dzogchen is one body that can eat other bodies. Dzogchen is 100 percent independent of the eight lower yānas. Each yāna is a separate, self-contained path to buddhahood.

Nevertheless, a Dzogchen practitioner can practice whatever they like or need from the eight lower yānas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is. Creation and completion stage work with mind. Dzogchen practice does not.

Sherab Dorje said:

Not even the creation and completion stage work which is part of the Dzogchen praxis?

Malcolm wrote:

Creation and completion are not part of Dzogchen praxis. They belong to mahā and anuyoga.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 10:07 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

maybay said:

If I was a homosexual I might just be offended by this.

Malcolm wrote:

Why?

maybay said:

Because its an ironic association of something courageous, like declaring your sexuality, with something ugly, like misogyny.

Malcolm wrote:

I see, you were just passing gas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 9:57 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Anders said:

And so it came to pass, on page 9, that a topic for criticising patriarchy turned into a coming-out party for misogyny.

maybay said:

If I was a homosexual I might just be offended by this.

Malcolm wrote:

Why?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 9:49 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Boy, you really have a low opinion of women.

maybay said:

Its funny I've just had a tenant who, for the first 45 days of her stay couldn't stop telling me how happy she was to be here. Then her friend stays for a week, and after that she's cold as metal. I can't work out her change in behaviour until, with the exact number of days required to give me notice, she sends email saying she's moving. I made meals for her (she can't cook, and in fact makes a complete mess of the kitchen when she tries. Won't take advice either), made fires in the evening, gave her free piano lessons whenever she wanted, picked up her dog shize. I even offered to marry her so she could stay in the country. But she would rather go live with two friends - the one who stayed here who thinks she comes from noble ancestry, who wouldn't give my keys back for weeks after she left, and who hasn't a shred of integrity behind what she says (she told me no less than three times in writing she would pay deposit for moving in and just didn't-no communication). What of her other friend? She successfully lied to her parents for three years that she had terminal cancer. Nuff said.

In light of some of the other stuff I've experienced I don't think insatiable is unfair at all.

Anders said:

And so it came to pass, on page 9, that a topic for criticising patriarchy turned into a coming-out party for misogyny.

Malcolm wrote:

Maybay never fails to deliver.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 8:06 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

maybay said:

OK. I see these aspirational Buddha fields not the same as akanistha. Fine. But then we talking about unenlightened aspirations not reality (Mahayana!) What do women feel like when they hear Sukhavati only for men but they can go to abhirati with children and keep their form? My guess is they'd still want to go to Sukhavati. Are women ever satisfied?

Malcolm wrote:

Boy, you really have a low opinion of women.

maybay said:

Its funny I've just had a tenant who, for the first 45 days of her stay couldn't stop telling me how happy she was to be here. Then her friend stays for a week, and after that she's cold as metal. I can't work out her change in behaviour until, with the exact number of days required to give me notice, she sends email saying she's moving. I made meals for her (she can't cook, and in fact makes a complete mess of the kitchen when she tries. Won't take advice either), made fires in the evening, gave her free piano lessons whenever she wanted, picked up her dog shize. I even offered to marry her so she could stay in the country. But she would rather go live with two friends - the one who stayed here who thinks she comes from noble ancestry, who wouldn't give my keys back for weeks after she left, and who hasn't a shred of integrity behind what she says (she told me no less than three times in writing she would pay deposit for moving in and just didn't-no communication). What of her other friend? She successfully lied to her parents for three years that she had terminal cancer. Nuff said.

.

Malcolm wrote:

And you think this stands as an indictment of all women? Boy, are you bitter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 8:03 PM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

George Orwell went to Spain as a volunteer for a Trotskyist group (POUM) and fought and killed Fascists. Refer to "Homage to Catalonia".

Rosa Luxemburg was murdered and her body was unceremoniously dumped in a river, by the same type of people that then went on to support the Nazis.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think they would waver from their convictions about free speech. Orwell in particular, since he wrote this after his stint in Spain.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 7:44 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

maybay said:

I gotta admit its threads like this make me nostalgic for the sanity of the nikayas. But I persevere.

Malcolm wrote:

It's against bodhisattva vows to encourage you to return to the Hinayāna, but it is tempting.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 7:42 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

maybay said:

OK. I see these aspirational Buddha fields not the same as akanistha. Fine. But then we talking about unenlightened aspirations not reality (Mahayana!) What do women feel like when they hear Sukhavati only for men but they can go to abhirati with children and keep their form? My guess is they'd still want to go to Sukhavati. Are women ever satisfied?

Malcolm wrote:

Boy, you really have a low opinion of women.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 6:24 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It says they will have penises.

maybay said:

Beings in Buddhafields don't even rebirth again, never mind procreate, never mind have sex, since there are no females in Buddhafields.

Malcolm wrote:

That depends on the buddhafield. For example, in this buddhafield and Akoṣobhya's there are men, women, children.

Get off your butt, stop being obtuse, and do some independent reading.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 6:05 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

maybay said:

Sorry I can't accept that penises are a feature of a Buddhafield. Here's another version:

to abandon their female form, will, upon hearing my name, all be reborn as men. They will be endowed with noble features and eventually realize Unsurpassed Supreme Enlightenment.

Which sounds more like a sutra spoken by the Buddha, and which a version tailor made for patriarchal [insert adjective] Tibetans.

Malcolm wrote:

Dude, I don't care how some other translator glossed the text. I know what it says and what it means. It says they will have penises. It is a very common phrase in Tibetan and its meaning is just not ambiguous at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 5:35 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Any woman who has been afflicted by the one hundred faults of womanhood, despises the state of womanhood, and wishes to be completely free from the birth place of women, they will avoid the state of womanhood and will produce male genitalia until they reach final awakening.

maybay said:

Male means not female.

Malcolm wrote:

The phrase is very clear in Tibetan, skyes bu'i dbang po, a man's penis. But you said, inaccurately:

There is no distinction of sex in the buddhafiels.

So you are wrong, just admit it and move on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 5:18 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

maybay said:

So the monkey story was just bait for a point you were trying to make.

Malcolm wrote:

It was an example, a mirror in which a reflection could be shown.

maybay said:

That was no mirror. It has your opinion all over it.

Malcolm wrote:

We've been having these discussions for some time now. I don't think you're going to get anywhere with concepts alone.

Without the discussion, there will be no movement in a positive direction.

maybay said:

Anyone who starts a conversation with you looking for movement is in for disappointment. Take it as a compliment. It's just not your forte.

Malcolm wrote:

You really do have a problem with ad hominem remarks, you might want to get help with that. It's pretty sad.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 5:15 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

For example, when it says that there are no women in the buddhafiield of Amitabha or Bhaisajyaguru, how do you think women feel about this?

maybay said:

There is no distinction of sex in the buddhafiields.

Malcolm wrote:

You are quite simple wrong. For example, this buddhafiield, the buddhafiield of Śakyamuni Buddha, has women, as does Akṣobhya's. With regard to Bhaisajyaguru's ninth aspirations for the formation of his buddhafiield:

Any woman who has been afflicted by the one hundred faults of womanhood, despises the state of womanhood, and wishes to be completely free from the birth place of women, they will avoid the state of womanhood and will produce male genitalia until they reach final awakening.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 5:03 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

maybay said:

Now we have nuns scolding lay people for addressing them incorrectly.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, as well they should.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 5:00 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Queequeg said:

But, you seem to touch on another point... are you suggesting that the way to combat these groups is to ... regulate speech, regulate assembly, etc. etc.?

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, he thinks that everyone but right wing nut jobs should have free speech and right to assembly, unless he disagrees with what they too say, in which case they don't, since it is all down to what some imaginary committee in his head is going to define as acceptable speech for everyone. Orwell had it right when he said:

But freedom, as Rosa Luxembourg [sic] said, is 'freedom for the other fellow'. The same principle is contained in the famous words of Voltaire: 'I detest what you say; I will defend to the death your right to say it.' If the intellectual liberty which without a doubt has been one of the distinguishing marks of western civilisation means anything at all, it means that everyone shall have the right to say and to print what he believes to be the truth, provided only that it does not harm the rest of the community in some quite unmistakable way

And:

These people don't see that if you encourage totalitarian methods, the time may come when they will be used against you instead of for you. Make a habit of imprisoning Fascists without trial, and perhaps the process won't stop at Fascists.

<http://www.theorwellprize.co.uk/the-orwell-prize/orwell/essays-and-other-works/the-freedom-of-the-press/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 4:52 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

In which case free speech is based on the premise of an objective law system. It just gets worse by the minute...

Malcolm wrote:

And what, you would prefer it to determined by some "objective" committee?

At least the legal system in the US (which actually does work for most people) is an adversarial process and depends on the plaintiff's burden of proof.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 4:42 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

maybay said:

So the monkey story was just bait for a point you were trying to make.

Malcolm wrote:

It was an example, a mirror in which a reflection could be shown.

maybay said:

We've been having these discussions for some time now. I don't think you're going to get anywhere with concepts alone.

Malcolm wrote:

Without the discussion, there will be no movement in a positive direction.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 4:39 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

What is the criteria?

Sherab Dorje said:

I do believe that banning incitement to baseless discrimination and mass murder is a good start.

Yup, that would be high on my list of criteria.

Malcolm wrote:

There are of course laws banning incitement, since incitement to criminal actions is not protected speech. But in order to ban such speech, incitement has to be proven. In other words, someone can say, "We ought to go out and shoot some Mexicans," and this is protected speech as long as no one responds to it or takes it seriously, as several cases where idle threats made against the life of POTUS has shown.

But if someone responds to it, and it can be a) shown that the author of such speech actually intended harm, and b) some other parties went out and engaged in that harm, then it becomes incitement.

But what you are recommending is effectively thought policing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 4:34 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

As my man DJKR says: One cannot disassociate emptiness from vividness.

This inseparability I was told is the Guru.

Recognizing this should help me

Not to be stuck with depending on chauvinist lamas.

Malcolm wrote:

And chauvinist disciples.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 3:59 AM

Title: Re: Some towns in France ban burkinis

Content:

Fa Dao said:

heres the thing...I actually disagree with the "burkini ban", I think its ridiculous. Its like putting a bandaid on a bullet wound. And its not about whatever religion I agree with. The point was is that those nuns made a choice..the majority of women in the middle east do not have that same choice. I dont disagree that some do in fact choose to wear that as religious expression...cool..personal choice...great. BUT, that being said, it should be a CHOICE not a law that is forced upon them...period.

Malcolm wrote:

But there is no law in France forcing women to wear burkinis, only an ordinance preventing them from doing so if they wish so...?

And the fact that Catholic nuns are not similarly prohibited from wearing their habits at the beach, violating French secularism ordinances, means that the ordinance against burkinis is merely French anti-Muslim bias.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 3:57 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Queequeg said:

Really. I'm curious... can you share more details or direct me to sources?

Malcolm wrote:

These two guys I knew years ago (circa 1985) tied up a friend of theirs for fun (they were all shitfaced) and started hassling him for being Jewish.

They were primarily sentenced for violating the Jewish guy's civil rights by calling him a "Jew."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 3:39 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Saying "Stanley, you damn Jew" on the other hand is a civil rights violation, this will cause you to wind up in jail, since you are addressing Stanley directly.

Queequeg said:

How do you figure? Even if a state actor did that, I don't think they face jail time. There might be a Section 1983 claim.

Malcolm wrote:

Because I know someone who did serious time for such an offense (that fact that they tied him up didn't help).

Queequeg said:

An American football player named Colin Kaepernick has caused a firestorm because he refused to stand during the pre game singing of the national anthem.

Malcolm wrote:

Once I understood in third grade (1970) that I did not have to recite the pledge of allegiance, I stopped. Eventually, I stopped standing as well.

And the Star Spangled Banner is a song that glorifies slavery. I hate it.

And where is that band who so vauntingly swore

That the havoc of war and the battle's confusion,

A home and a country, should leave us no more?

Their blood has washed out their foul footsteps' pollution.

No refuge could save the hireling and slave

From the terror of flight, or the gloom of the grave:

And the star-spangled banner in triumph doth wave,

O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 3:13 AM

Title: Re: Negative Karma

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

The challenge has been encountering stories such as those I listed, or a certain infamous anecdote of a Tibetan teacher saying Holocaust victims were reaping their karma.

Malcolm wrote:

All suffering that everyone experiences is a result of karma, including the people killed in the Holocaust, the Native Americans murdered by Europeans by the millions, the African prisoners of war sold into European slavery, my Scottish ancestors who were ethnically cleansed from the Highlands to make room for sheep, you name it. All suffering is a result of karma. There is no suffering that is not a result of karma.

Monlam Tharchin said:

In what way does attributing these incidents to the victims' past negative karma benefit your practice?

I guess that's where I'm getting tripped up.

Malcolm wrote:

It helps one develop renunciation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 3:05 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Not in the slightest.

Malcolm wrote:

Most definitely.

Sherab Dorje said:

I explained why it doesn't, you want to explain why it does? If not, do you want to take my argument apart with logic, or are you happy with just being petulant and obstinate?

Malcolm wrote:

I am definitely not petulant, but I am happy to be obstinate.

The long and short of it however is this. When someone decides to control freedom of speech, this creates the issues of authority, "who can control speech?"

What is the criteria? Why do we decide to ban Mein Kampf, but to allow the publication of Mao's little Red Book? Or Naked Lunch? Lolita? etc.

"Hate" is too broad a criteria, just like obscenity.

One has to demonstrate that a specific act of speech has harmed someone; for example, in the US one can refer to someone as a Jew as in "Stanley is a Jew, I saw him at Temple the other day." This is not harmful speech, and no one would blink at it.

Saying to someone on an internet forum, "That Stanley is goddamn Jew," is unpleasant, but it is protected speech, at least in the US. Stanley would have to go out of his way to prove harm.

Saying "Stanley, you damn Jew" on the other hand is a civil rights violation, this will cause you to wind up in jail, since you are addressing Stanley directly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 3:01 AM

Title: Re: What if...

Content:

Footsteps said:

Do we really need the seal of mastery to discuss ethical and spiritual issues?

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. Anyway, who seals mastery? The question of who can legitimize authority is bankrupt. You are your own authority.

Sherab Dorje said:

How post-modern of you!

Malcolm wrote:

Well, just parroting Gendun Chopel, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 2:58 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Astus said:

Those who like to hear liberal things will receive it. Those who are inclined towards hierarchy will receive that.

Malcolm wrote:

We call these things "provisional teachings."

But the situation of patriarchal oppression is pervasive in this world among human beings. It is not skillful to teach patriarchal oppression in the name of "skillful means."

For example, when it says that there are no women in the buddhafiield of Amitabha or Bhaisajyaguru, how do you think women feel about this? How would you feel if you were devalued based solely on your genitalia?

conebeckham said:

Very good points.

What, by the way, should "Nuns" be called, if not "Ani-la?" I have seen the words "Ani Tsomo" but I don't know what that means as a title.....does Tibetan have a gender neutral title for the ordained? I am not sure if Getsul and Genyen are gender neutral....

Malcolm wrote:

I don't remember now what she advised us to say, but since she is in fact a gelongma, then Gelongma would be the right title.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 2:51 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This merely gives into the forces of oppression of which you complain.

Sherab Dorje said:

Not in the slightest.

Malcolm wrote:

Most definitely.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 2:45 AM

Title: Re: Negative Karma

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

The challenge has been encountering stories such as those I listed, or a certain infamous anecdote of a Tibetan teacher saying Holocaust victims were reaping their karma.

Malcolm wrote:

All suffering that everyone experiences is a result of karma, including the people killed in the Holocaust, the Native Americans murdered by Europeans by the millions, the African prisoners of war sold into European slavery, my Scottish ancestors who were ethnically cleansed from the Highlands to make room for sheep, you name it. All suffering is a result of karma. There is no suffering that is not a result of karma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 2:32 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This merely gives into the forces of oppression of which you complain.

Sherab Dorje said:

Americans have not had to struggle with the tangible outcomes of Fascist, Stalinist and Nazi (style) dictatorships since the early 1900's. In western Europe the last long-running regime of this type fell only recently (Portugal 1932-1974). In Greece we had a short lived Fascist military junta from 1968-1974.

The proponents of these political regimes utilised democracy and its tools (freedom of speech) in order to abolish democracy. They are doing the same thing now in many countries, especially in the former Eastern Bloc countries (cf Ukraine). And let's not forget the war in former Yugoslavia that reignited pro-Soviet era Nationalistic tendencies and lead to all sorts of horrific slaughters.

Now while you may believe that the American approach is a more "adult" approach, the reality is that a large proportion of the citizens within democracies are not political adults. This is why one sees, for example, the likelihood of Trump being voted into power. Or the Bush dynasty.

Free speech also assumes that everybody is being heard at an equal volume. This is also naive to the point of brain death.

If the playing field were level, then there could be freedom of speech. But as things stand, the notion of freedom of speech, especially somewhere like the US, is a farce and a scam.

Given all this, the least that a politically mature citizen can ask for is that hate speech is not allowed. Unfortunately the Chinese proverb: Kill the rooster to quiet the monkeys is very practical. Particularly when applied to the types of primates that run to the support of hate mongers.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 1:54 AM

Title: Re: Questions about Tulkus and Unrecognized Tulkus

Content:

Lukeinaz said:

Wonderful post.

Thank you Malcom.

Malcolm wrote:
Glad you enjoyed it.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 1:29 AM
Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
But the situation of patriarchal oppression is pervasive in this world among human beings. It is not skillful to teach patriarchal oppression in the name of "skillful means."

Astus said:
Patriarchal oppression does not happen to people, it is what people believe in.

Malcolm wrote:
Of course it happens to people. It happens to people all the time

Astus said:
It actually takes a very aware teacher to recognise the power invested in him and to handle it appropriately.

Malcolm wrote:
Hence the problem of people being unconscious of patriarchal power relations in which they are embedded.

Astus said:
For example, when it says that there are no women in the buddhafiield of Amitabha or Bhaisajyaguru, how do you think women feel about this? How would you feel if you were devalued based solely on your genitalia?
You might know women who say they accept the traditional values of patriarchy.

Malcolm wrote:
I don't actually.

Astus said:
Now consider women in the actual traditional culture. Most of them can only think that that's how the world works and there is nothing to be done about it.

Malcolm wrote:
I don't agree with this, and neither do they.

Astus said:

Women's lower status is just another form of karmic consequence, although not in the Nikayas but in the Mahayana scriptures.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and this points to a deficiency in some Mahāyāna teachings which should be openly explored and not defended as Buddhavacana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 1:25 AM

Title: Re: Some towns in France ban burkinis

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Who defines "provocatively"? You? Other men? Women should feel free to wear whatever the hell they want, wherever they hell they want, and not be subjected to immature male complaints about it.

Sherab Dorje said:

(Hetero) Men define provocative. They then design provocative (to hetero men) clothing and sell it to women to wear. Some women wear it for professional purposes (sex workers). Some women wear it to attract men for their personal/emotional benefit. Some women wear it because it is marketed as fashionable. Some women refuse to wear it. All those that wear it objectify themselves (purposefully, or not). Sometimes they wear it for their supposed benefit, but always for the sensory benefit of (hetero) men (whether the women like it or not).

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, my question was rhetorical.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 1:13 AM

Title: Re: Negative Karma

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

What is the purpose of such stories?

Malcolm wrote:

They are didactic just so stories to encourage people to be careful in their actions. Many are so ludicrous they need to be understood for what they are, just stories.

Monlam Tharchin said:

Karma in the day to day inspires me to cultivate practice and help others.

Karma on this broader scale provokes that reaction I've shared earlier here, that karma (i.e. a fundamental part of dharma) is a cruel understanding of the world which leads to stasis, the status quo, and not a call to compassionate action.

Malcolm wrote:

Karma in the broader sense is inexorable, like water wearing down rocks. Please go outside and look a spider in its web. Some action, who knows what, led to that sentient being to take that birth. On the one hand it seems a horrible birth, on the other hand, we need spiders, and they are indispensable creatures in our ecosystems, like all creatures.

All sentient beings are buddhas, save for their temporary obscuration. What is important is to see that point and help sentient beings realize their innate potential with various methods. The rest is fodder for perseveration.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 1:03 AM

Title: Re: Some towns in France ban burkinis

Content:

daelm said:

<http://globalnews.ca/news/2903036/people-share-photos-of-nuns-on-the-beach-in-response-to-burkini-ban-in-france/>

Fa Dao said:

Really? seriously? you are equating nuns who are basically monastics and have made the choice to go through years of training and prayer before they can take their vows and wear a habit to women in the middle east who are forced to be covered up under pain of imprisonment or even death from the time they enter puberty?

Malcolm wrote:

There is some justice in burqas after all:

The Islamic State group has reportedly issued an order banning burqas at security checkpoints in the city of Mosul.

Recently killings of Islamic State commanders by veiled women have forced the terror group to make an exception to its strict dress codes for women.

<http://www.washingtontimes.com/news/2016/sep/6/isis-issues-burqa-ban-at-mosul-security-centers-af/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 12:35 AM

Title: Re: Negative Karma

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

Nor can we sidestep the implications of karma by pretending it doesn't have a moral dimension.

That is, intentions defined as unwholesome (i.e. a moral dimension) lead to mental and bodily repercussions.

Moral is not a dirty word limited to certain other religions.

What I'm struggling with is understanding the repercussions of certain aspects of the teaching of karma, not some self-existent karma entity inflicting punishment on the world, which does not exist.

Malcolm wrote:

Karma is moral causality. Engage in positive deeds, expect a positive result in this life and the next. The opposite also applies.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 12:30 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Astus said:

Those who like to hear liberal things will receive it. Those who are inclined towards hierarchy will receive that.

Malcolm wrote:

We call these things "provisional teachings."

But the situation of patriarchal oppression is pervasive in this world among human beings. It is not skillful to teach patriarchal oppression in the name of "skillful means."

For example, when it says that there are no women in the buddhfield of Amitabha or Bhaisajyaguru, how do you think women feel about this? How would you feel if you were devalued based solely on your genitalia?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 9th, 2016 at 12:21 AM

Title: Re: Questions about Tulkus and Unrecognized Tulkus

Content:

Footsteps said:

That's why I posted the subject in the Tibetan Buddhism forum.

I'm beginning to see that the answers to these particular questions do not fall under the domain of the participants of this web forum...

I hope I am mistaken, but by the present indications, it is not likely.

Malcolm wrote:

We are all tulkus.

Footsteps said:

The purpose of this post is to settle a controversy [and perhaps create another] and remove a misunderstanding about so called "sprul skus" or reincarnations, that venerable institution that causes so much controversy in Tibetan Buddhism.

In the teaching of the great perfection there are two kinds of so called nirmanakāyas or tulkus. First, there are impure forward-progression [ma dag pa lugs 'byung] nirmanakāyas i.e. all sentient beings. These arise because of ignorance.

The second are pure reverse-progression [dag pa lugs ldog] nirmanakāyas: among these there are also two, those that come from the dharmakāya and sambhogakāya, nirmanakāyas of compassion if you will. The second are called nirmanakāyas of the attained result, these are sentient beings of pure karma, blessed by being seen by the buddhas, who make more and more progress, attaining higher and higher states of yogic understanding.

Thus we sentient beings are all nirmanakāyas -- differentiated only by our level of relative attainment and relative level of pure and impure karma.

The so-called "tulkus" of institutional Tibetan Buddhism are also sentient beings; some with higher yogic attainments, some with none, and others with some. Because they are sentient beings, some remember their rebirths well, and others not at all. Some achieve high levels of yogic understanding, some are great teachers, some are panditas, poets and artists. Some tulkus are mere politicians, some are gangsters, some are thieves. But they are all sentient beings. Not one of them was not born from the womb of a human mother.

Most tulkus are never "recognized" because anyone who practices Dharma sincerely is a tulku, no matter what level of "realization" they are reputed to have, whether or not they have been recognized. In this sense, a tulku is defined as someone who acts to help sentient beings inspired by the compassion of the buddhas for sentient beings.

We are all rinpoches, precious ones. Sentient beings are precious because their plight is the cause of the compassion of the buddhas. Buddhas are precious because they exist solely to aid sentient beings from suffering. I guess you could say it is rinpoches all the way down.

Some people crave recognition, wanting others to acknowledge their status -- consider yourselves acknowledged but don't expect a title. If you want people to consider you a tulku, act like one. If you must, fake it. Faking it may even lead to developing some real compassion which exceeds your petty narrow-minded grasping to titles and position.

Being a pure reverse-progression tulku means cherishing all sentient beings. Nothing is holding you back but your own selfishness.

The Dzogchen teachings acknowledge that all sentient beings are tulkus. But whether that is meaningful is not up to the buddhas, it is up to each one of us and our dedication to the path of awakening and benefitting our fellow tulkus.

In reality, tulkuhood is defined not by robes, titles, race, position, gender, education, or creed but by how we are able to apply wisdom and compassion in our efforts to aid sentient beings and alleviate their suffering.

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.atikosha.org/2011/01/we-are-all-rinpoches-nirmanakayas-and.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 11:58 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

conebeckham said:

I'd like to revisit an idea Malcolm raised early on this thread, and ask for some development and clarification....

In what way(s) do Terma reflect a less patriarchal system than, ostensibly,, Kama or Sarma Tantra?

Malcolm wrote:

They don't necessarily.

But the idea is that termas are produced with respect to the time of their revelation, as is their stated purpose.

conebeckham said:

Okay. In other words, methods of praxis, including tantras, sadhanas, and instructions, will reflect the environment of their gestation, or revelation, or whatnot. It seems to me that, with the exception of the very highest methods of practice, the majority of practice paths will have no choice but to represent the inequality present in that environment. I suppose the question is whether Vajrayana MUST reflect the power structures and dynamics of the environment, with respect to gender, and perhaps other factors-- whether such characteristics are essential to Vajrayana, in other words, or whether those dynamics and power structures can be corrected, equalized to a greater or lesser degree, etc., by practitioners or other sentient beings, thereby allowing practice paths and methods that reflect this less hierarchical, more "flat" (equal) environment.

Malcolm wrote:

The question is really, are Tibetan Buddhist practitioners in the West, who are otherwise in general pro-feminist, liberal, etc., unconsciously preserving antiquated patriarchal power relations in their attempts to be "good" disciples.

Once place where we see this struggle most acutely is in the desire of women to eliminate the patriarchal features imposed on female ordinands by Vinaya and Tibetan cultural mores. Karma Lekshey Tsomo once scolded my partner and I for addressing her as "ani-la," explaining that calling her "aunty" was in fact demeaning and rude.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 11:48 PM

Title: Re: What if...

Content:

Footsteps said:

Do we really need the seal of mastery to discuss ethical and spiritual issues?

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. Anyway, who seals mastery? The question of who can legitimize authority is bankrupt. You are your own authority.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 11:26 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

conebeckham said:

I'd like to revisit an idea Malcolm raised early on this thread, and ask for some development and clarification....

In what way(s) do Terma reflect a less patriarchal system than, ostensibly,, Kama or Sarma Tantra?

Malcolm wrote:

They don't necessarily.

But the idea is that termas are produced with respect to the time of their revelation, as is their stated purpose.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 10:46 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

daelm said:

frankly, i also understood it that way though i inclined towards Zorro or The Magnificent Seven. i hadn't thought of you that way before and made me think of past posts of yours in a different light .

Malcolm wrote:

Maybay is total throwback. He reads too many sword and sorcery and fantasy novels. It's all honor, damsels needing to be rescued, and jousting for him.

daelm said:

doesn't take away, though, i found it quite sweet and wondered if, in the past, when i found some of his posts objectionable, he hadn't been riding to someone's rescue. i can align with that impulse, even if i sometimes disagree with what he thinks rescuing consists of.

anyway.

Malcolm wrote:

He's always trying to save someone.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 10:40 PM

Title: Re: Negative Karma

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

.The teaching on karma isn't about trying to figure that out. The teaching on karma is about us doing good action and us abstaining from bad action, as this is what helps facilitate enlightenment. To put your attention elsewhere is to miss the point.

Malcolm wrote:

Either karma is an explanation of the world or it isn't.[/qupte]

What you need to know is this much: afflictions cause actions which result in suffering. Remove the affliction, the action won't be committed and the suffering is thereby forestalled.

Karma does explain the world, as Vasubandhu stated, "the variety of the world proceeds from actions."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 10:37 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

daelm said:

I bet you think knights on horses. That's just too much TV for you.

frankly, i also understood it that way though i inclined towards Zorro or The Magnificent Seven. i hadn't thought of you that way before and made me think of past posts of yours in a different light .

Malcolm wrote:

Maybay is total throwback. He reads too many sword and sorcery and fantasy novels. It's all honor, damsels needing to be rescued, and jousting for him.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 10:30 PM

Title: Re: Some towns in France ban burkinis

Content:

dreambow said:

"This has a ring of truth and so does the fact that some women in the west dress provocatively and then cry foul if they approached.

Malcolm wrote:

Who defines "provocatively"? You? Other men? Women should feel free to wear whatever the hell they want, wherever they hell they want, and not be subjected to immature male complaints about it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: Questions about Tulkus and Unrecognized Tulkus

Content:

Footsteps said:

It's too bad that a buddhist forum can't shed more light on the subject, after all "tulku-hood" is a buddhist subject.

Malcolm wrote:

It is more of a Tibetan cultural subject. Tibet is the only Buddhist culture with institutionalized reincarnations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 10:18 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

maybay said:

Trying to have a more visceral experience will not supply you with any more facts.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is not what it says about Chökyi Lödo, the point is what it says about those of us who are willing to rationalize these things away and perpetuate the social morays (the institution of the infallible guru) that produce such callousness.

Men need to have this discussion because we are the ones who are largely unaware of our own participation in the systems of patriarchy in Vajrayāna, both east and west.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 10:06 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

maybay said:

That's not true. If you docked an animal's tail today I wouldn't hold it against you the rest of your life.

Malcolm wrote:

Whose holding a grudge? I pointed it out initially as something I don't approve of. If you have ever been to Tibet, you would be pretty appalled at how callously Tibetans in general treat animals.

maybay said:

Man says cut off tail. Man cuts off tail. Man shows no remorse. You basically know nothing about it.

Malcolm wrote:

Fantastic way to rationalize something unpleasant away.

Yeah, who he repeatedly refused. Guess who was singing his praises up to the last. Sure, it is normal when someone falls in love that they sing praises to their loved one.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 9:58 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Anders said:

So, Vajrayana, and Buddhism in general, is soiled with patriarchy all over the place. Being aware of this and learning not to play into it is in itself step forward, but then what? What is the skilful way forward that avoids these errors then?

Malcolm wrote:

Awareness itself is the first step. Empowering women is the second. Maybay complained that there were no women (AFAWK) in this conversation, but that is ok. Women already know that Vajrayāna is a patriarchal system. The people who are ignorant of this fact are men, who are privileged by the system.

People complain about Western culture all the time, and much of their complaint has a base. But the one point where Western civilization has come to surpass others is in our recognition of women's rights. Indeed, most of the animosity aimed at the "profligate" nature of Western civilization is based on the freedom women here experience, compared to that in more "traditional" societies.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 9:53 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Vajrayāna quite clearly has been patriarchal system, which has primarily benefitted men and disadvantaged women, in terms of social and economic relations.

maybay said:

Vajrayana quite clearly has been practiced in patriarchal societies, which has primarily benefitted men and disadvantaged women... From a historical perspective we talk about Vajrayana including its societal manifestations, but in this sense it is not a system.

Malcolm wrote:

My friend, have you bothered to read the primary texts of what we call the Vajrayāna tradition?

maybay said:

If you say in the past vajrayana was patriarchal, and with terma it can be non-patriarchal, then clearly being patriarchal is not an essential characteristic.

Malcolm wrote:

There are no essential characteristics, only relational ones. That is the point, actually.

maybay said:

The only essential social element of Vajrayana is the guru disciple relationship. That is and has always been open to men and women.

Malcolm wrote:

It has not been open to women in any significant way (nuns in Tibet were and still are subject to be most horrendous shaming and pariah status -- Drukpa Kunleys bio has perfect examples of this) and even then access to the teachings has been largely class based in Tibet. We are in a unique position in the West because most of us who study and practice Secret Mantra systems including Dzogchen are middle-class, educated, white people with leisure and endowment. I am quite certain that we also have our own patriarchal cultural horizon we cannot see beyond, just as in the past.

maybay said:
...defend their honour.

Malcolm wrote:
How quaint.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 9:38 PM
Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna
Content:

maybay said:
I have nothing to say about the OP. The trouble started when he brought in the monkey story and made it personal.

Malcolm wrote:
I find these kinds of attitudes towards animals and their suffering to be perfect exemplars of how patriarchs are given to behave. The point is really that people are ready to excuse such actions in their transvalued guru figure, when they would never excuse such an action in a maybay or Malcolm.

What is most amazing to me, is that people do not even experience qualms over stories such as these.

That said, of course we cannot box Chökyi Lödo's life into one incident when he was an old man who just lost his country. But at least he had been assigned a devout teenage women to care for his needs (oh, wait, another patriarchal trope).

The point is really not the person, the point is the environment in which we operate. Vajrayāna has been a patriarchal system for all of its history, not just a part. Even its reliance on the trope, "dākinīs as reservoirs for wisdom" is a transgressive element in an otherwise male-dominated world that serves male needs.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 8:39 PM
Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna
Content:

maybay said:
Rather im refuting the idea of patriarchy as vajrayana. There are vajrayanists and then there is the ecosystem they inhabit.

Malcolm wrote:

Vajrayāna quite clearly has been patriarchal system, which has primarily benefitted men and disadvantaged women, in terms of social and economic relations.

[/quote]

Your criticisms amount to nothing more than a smear campaign against history—against the dead.[/quote]

They're dead, so they really don't mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 9:15 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

conebeckham said:

Samsara is about lack of perfect equanimity, innit? This should not excuse Dharma practitioners or even dharma "paths," which are also, I hasten to point out, Samsaric--right? But it should not surprise us that our inherited or adopted traditions, or even our teachers, should reflect this lack.

Malcolm wrote:

The point, Cone, is that there is a sad willingness on the part of Tibetan Buddhists in particular to equivocate or apologize for behavior which were we to know someone who engaged in these many actions we have discussed, we would understand that person to have a problem.

But strangely, in the domain of religion we readily dismiss sociopathy and psychopathy as signs of transcendence, rather than observe them for what they are: symptoms of pathological personality disorders of various kinds.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 9:11 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

The great patriarch of DW has spoken, mb. What more is there to say?

Malcolm wrote:

Oh hardly.

dzogchungpa said:

You have to admit, it's kind of true.

Malcolm wrote:
Not a chance.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 7:38 AM
Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna
Content:

maybay said:
No you haven't. Where does it say he took pleasure in that? And how can you know "mere object"? This is what you advocate, mere teachings sans devotion.

Malcolm wrote:
You can keep your sycophantic devotion. I don't need it.

dzogchungpa said:
The great patriarch of DW has spoken, mb. What more is there to say?

Malcolm wrote:
Oh hardly.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 7:32 AM
Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna
Content:
maybay said:
I don't just put posts out like I'm putting out the garbage.

Malcolm wrote:
You could have fooled me, considering the general content of your posts is pretty much effluvia.

You can't even mount a defense of patriarchy in Vajrayāna, much less come up with any rational objection to my criticism. You just whine about devotion like some lost puppy.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 7:31 AM
Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna
Content:

maybay said:
People who love making a stink about patriarchy, I wonder how long you would last in a matriarchy without your favourite piñata.

Malcolm wrote:

Did I ever once advocate for matriarchy? No.

You couldn't hit the broadside of a barn if its was three feet in front of you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 6:35 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

maybay said:

One subjective long shot at a time please. You still haven't shown docking tails and patriarchy.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure I did. Treating sentient beings as if they are mere objects for the pleasure of their "owners" is one of the hall marks of patriarchal relations.

maybay said:

No you haven't. Where does it say he took pleasure in that? And how can you know "mere object"? This is what you advocate, mere teachings sans devotion.

Malcolm wrote:

You can keep your sycophantic devotion. I don't need it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 6:02 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Karma Dorje said:

Rwa Lotsawa was simply a serial killer. Tilopa certainly tortured fish, .

Malcolm wrote:

BTW, I don't believe those stories. They are just tales invented to impress Tibetans who were a rather bloody minded lot.

And, the story of Naropa giving his consort to Tilopa neatly illustrates the patriarchal nature of Vajrayāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 6:01 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

maybay said:

Docking tails is a common practice. Please explain to me how people can breed an animal that will suffer every day just trying to breathe.

pug.jpg

People are easily shocked by abruptness and violence, but the suffering of degeneration is fated?

Malcolm wrote:

This kind of dog breeding is also a result of patriarchy.

maybay said:

One subjective long shot at a time please. You still haven't shown docking tails and patriarchy.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure I did. Treating sentient beings as if they are mere objects for the pleasure of their "owners" is one of the hall marks of patriarchal relations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 5:53 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

They took Helena Blavatsky seriously

Malcolm wrote:

Those were Mongolians, not Tibetans.

Alexandra David Neel would be a better choice for your example.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 5:52 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

maybay said:

Docking tails is a common practice. Please explain to me how people can breed an animal that will suffer every day just trying to breathe.

pug.jpg

People are easily shocked by abruptness and violence, but the suffering of degeneration is fated?

Malcolm wrote:

This kind of dog breeding is also a result of patriarchy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 5:51 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Karma Dorje said:

Rwa Lotsawa was simply a serial killer.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure. Definitely. But Chanchub Dorje was a greater practitioner, and that is why we say, "Vajrakilaya defeated Vajrabhairava."

Karma Dorje said:

Tilopa certainly tortured fish, by your estimation, and it is irrelevant that he was liberating their mindstreams as he did so.

Malcolm wrote:

A story emphasizes how horrified Naropa the Kashmiri Brahmin was at discovering him. I don't place much stock in the liberating the mind streams of fish story. YMMV.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 5:32 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Karma Dorje said:

Since the definition of torture relies in a large part on intention-- the intention to cause pain to coerce behaviour or to provide pleasure to the torturer, and it is unclear from the story that either of these was his motivation for cutting the monkey's tail l.

Malcolm wrote:

It is absolutely clear from the story that his motivation was " to coerce behaviour."

Karma Dorje said:

Khyentse Chokyi Lodro had a pet monkey, and someone once informed him that it would be a good idea to remove its tail, as it would no longer be able to be so mischievous. So one day, Khyentse Chokyi Lodro rather abruptly said, "We should cut off the monkey's tail right now."

No, you infer that is why he cut the monkey's tail off. There is no explanation why he did it at that particular point. Not knowing his mind, I will not hazard a guess as to his intention.

Malcolm wrote:

KD, if we talking about Joe EFing Schmo, you would not hesitate to agree. But because this person has been lionized because they are a famous guru, you are just making lame excuses. Come on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 5:20 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Karma Dorje said:

Since the definition of torture relies in a large part on intention-- the intention to cause pain to coerce behaviour or to provide pleasure to the torturer, and it is unclear from the story that either of these was his motivation for cutting the monkey's tail l.

Malcolm wrote:

It is absolutely clear from the story that his motivation was " to coerce behaviour."

Karma Dorje said:

Khyentse Chokyi Lodro had a pet monkey, and someone once informed him that it would be a good idea to remove its tail, as it would no longer be able to be so mischievous. So one day, Khyentse Chokyi Lodro rather abruptly said, "We should cut off the monkey's tail right now."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 5:09 AM

Title: Re: Where are the bodhisattvas?

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

But this seems to imply that a bodhisattva's help is no more efficacious than that of an ordinary person.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, if all you are interested in is food, clothing or medicine.

But if you are interested in Dharma teachings, they are much more helpful.

Monlam Tharchin said:

Without these things, beings cannot invest time or energy into the Dharma, can they?

Malcolm wrote:

That is why bodhisattvas give food, clothing and medicine, if that is more relevant to a person's situation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 5:05 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

if I were to say that a butcher was torturing his animals, we would think something rather different than that he was just butchering them.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, a butcher kills his animals, ideally, they die immediately.

When you cut off a monkey's tail, it suffers from the initial pain of having its tail sawed off, then it suffers for days and days while it heals. And it suffers for the rest of its life because its sense of balance is ruined. That is torture.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 5:02 AM

Title: Re: Where are the bodhisattvas?

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

But this seems to imply that a bodhisattva's help is no more efficacious than that of an ordinary person.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, if all you are interested in is food, clothing or medicine.

But if you are interested in Dharma teachings, they are much more helpful.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 4:59 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

In some technical sense I concede your point, but frankly I think it is a very misleading thing to say.

Malcolm wrote:

If someone technically cut off your arm, I think you would call it torture. Or are you so brainwashed as to excuse animal cruelty in a guy who supposedly is enlightened.

dzogchungpa said:

I am not excusing anything but with all due respect, I think you are tripping.

Malcolm wrote:

With all lack of respect, you are making excuses for cruelty to animals.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 4:58 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

maybay said:

In any case your suggestion that JKCL cut off the monkey's tail as an act of torture, and that this is somehow associated with patriarchy, is absurd.

Malcolm wrote:

I did not make that association. But since you bring it up, since a key feature of patriarchy is reducing living creatures to the level of objects, well yes, they are related.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 4:56 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

It's technically a mayhem.

Malcolm wrote:

Among lawyers. Ordinary people call it torture and maiming. In either case it is an extraordinarily cruel thing to do to a monkey (or a dog, or a cat.)

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 4:54 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

In some technical sense I concede your point, but frankly I think it is a very misleading thing to say.

Malcolm wrote:

If someone technically cut off your arm, I think you would call it torture. Or are you so brainwashed as to excuse animal cruelty in a guy who supposedly is enlightened.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 4:48 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In any case, the story can be found.

dzogchungpa said:

Here is the entire passage:

As I mentioned earlier, Khyentse Chokyi Lodro had a pet monkey, and someone once informed him that it would be a good idea to remove its tail, as it would no longer be able to be so mischievous. So one day, Khyentse Chokyi Lodro rather abruptly said, "We should cut off the monkey's tail right now." Tashi Namgyal held the monkey and I held the tail and Khyentse Chokyi Lodro cut off his tail with a kitchen knife. Afterward I thought that Khyentse Chokyi Lodro might change his expression somehow - that perhaps he would be sad or feel compassion for the monkey, but to my surprise he remained perfectly relaxed and normal.

(DKR is the narrator)

You feel that incident can be accurately described as "Jamyang Khyentse Chokyi Lodö's torturing of a monkey", to use your words?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, absolutely. If someone cut off your arm, for example, wouldn't you described this as torture? Monkeys use their tail as a limb.

The OED says:

torture |'tôrCHər|

noun

the action or practice of inflicting severe pain on someone as a punishment or to force them to do or say something, or for the pleasure of the person inflicting the pain.

- great physical or mental suffering or anxiety: the torture I've gone through because of loving you so.
- a cause of suffering or anxiety: dances were absolute torture because I was so small.

verb [with obj.]

inflict severe pain on: most of the victims had been brutally tortured.

- cause great mental suffering or anxiety to: he was tortured by grief.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 4:43 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

What differentiates practitioners of Mahamudra or HYT from Dzogchenpa, view, practice, both?

Astus said:

That sounds to me too broad a question. Practitioners are individuals, and people can use for practice all sorts of things, and approach the same method in many ways. As for the ideal part, there is creation stage, and there are various forms of completion stage:

six yogas, dzogchen, and mahamudra. All four could be combined, all four can be used separately, and in any other setting. Besides that, I guess you are already familiar with the general descriptions of those methods.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Yeah but most Dzogchenpa I know of (at least those that openly advertise as such) also do tantric creation and completion stage practices. In fact, seems like there is Dzogchen literature concerned with that. I'm just wondering if there's any real dividing line.

Malcolm wrote:

There is. Creation and completion stage work with mind. Dzogchen practice does not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 4:34 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Perhaps you mean "Brilliant Moon"? In that case, "torturing" is kind of hyperbolic, don't you think?

Just sayin'.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, blazing splendour.

maybay said:

There's no mention in Blazing Splendour. The story in Brilliant Moon was cutting off the monkey's tale.

Malcolm wrote:

In any case, the story can be found.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 3:54 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Perhaps you mean "Brilliant Moon"? In that case, "torturing" is kind of hyperbolic, don't you think?

Just sayin'.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, blazing splendour.

dzogchungpa said:

Really? I've read that book a few times and I think I would remember something like that.
Can you give a page number or something?

Malcolm wrote:

it is in the chapter on Chokyi Lödo.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 3:54 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

I like the Indian material just fine.

Malcolm wrote:

Both Saraha and Virupa derided sexual yogas. etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 3:51 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

maybay said:

It is the lesser of evils, if you accept that it was a consideration.

Malcolm wrote:

"The lesser of two evils is still evil."

-- Jerry Garcia.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 3:50 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

conebeckham said:

I don't know that story, and have a feeling I don't want to.....right?

Malcolm wrote:
Blazing Splendour.

dzogchungpa said:
Perhaps you mean "Brilliant Moon"? In that case, "torturing" is kind of hyperbolic, don't you think?

Just sayin'.

Malcolm wrote:
Nope, blazing splendour.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 1:04 AM
Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
You can find the reference in Yarnall's translation of the creation stage section of sngags rim chen mo of Tsongkhapa.

Astus said:
Alas, I don't have that one (<https://books.google.com/books?id=4cZyNwAACAAJ>).
I am quite certain that the reference refers to Śrī Siṃha.
So, was Sri Simha a member of the sahajayogin's group together with Saraha and Maitripa...

Malcolm wrote:
Much earlier, eight century, not tenth. (I said ninth, before, that was an error).

Astus said:
therefore dzogchen and mahamudra come from the same movement?

Malcolm wrote:
Not the same movement, similar skepticism though.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 12:59 AM
Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna
Content:
Crazywisdom said:
I don't agree these things are deprecated. These were always for a small group. And rare. These methods remain to most concrete and obvious pointers.

Malcolm wrote:

In Dzogchen? Of course they are, which is why Longchenpa derides sexual yogas as being for immature horny people to pass time until they are ready for real practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 12:19 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

conebeckham said:

Yes. And teachers who may in fact be "above it all" may in fact include such reflections, on the gradual paths. This would be skillful means.

Malcolm wrote:

Nice apologetic, but I am not buying it. No more than I find Jamyang Khyentse Chokyi Lodö's torturing of a monkey acceptable.

conebeckham said:

I don't know that story, and have a feeling I don't want to.....right?

Malcolm wrote:

Blazing Splendour.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 12:10 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is clearly an earlier, skeptical movement that can be directly traced back to Śrī Siṃha in India, and we have evidence for this in the work of Mañjuśrīkīrti, who mentions Śrī Siṃha by name, as well as other associates of Padmasambhava such as Bhikṣuṇī Nandi.

Astus said:

I've read some works of Mathes but don't remember any mention of Dzogchen there. Do you know which one it was? Or do you mean that Dzogchen has the same origin as Mahamudra in India?

Malcolm wrote:

No, this reference is not in Matthis. You can find the reference in Yarnall's translation of the creation stage section of sngags rim chen mo of Tsongkhapa. He is not so confident about the identity of the named figures because he is not very familiar with the sNying ma tradition and its history. But I am quite certain that the reference refers to Śrī Siṃha. Moreover, there was push back by the anonymous author of the Hevajra Tantra who places this debate in the mouth of Vajragarbha:

Vajragarbha asked:

“This yoga of the completion stage,
its joy is called great bliss.
Completion is not a meditation,
so why do creation?”

The Bhgavan replied:

“Incredible, the great bodhisattva, has lost the power of faith.
Where does bliss come from without the existence of the body?
Such bliss cannot be spoken of.
Joy pervades all migrating beings in the form of pervaded and pervader.

Just as the fragrance present in a flower, cannot be known without the flower’s existence.
In the same way, since form and so on won’t exist, also bliss itself won’t be perceived.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 8th, 2016 at 12:03 AM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

conebeckham said:

I would venture to say that there are more qualified female teachers now than ever, as well. Certainly a cause for rejoicing.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. Buddhadharma is not inherently patriarchal, but when the crystal ball of Dharma placed on the "sheet" of patriarchal culture, that culture shows through the crystal.

conebeckham said:

Yes. And teachers who may in fact be "above it all" may in fact include such reflections, on the gradual paths. This would be skillful means.

Malcolm wrote:

Nice apologetic, but I am not buying it. No more than I find Jamyang Khyentse Chokyi Lodö's torturing of a monkey acceptable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 11:56 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

conebeckham said:

I would venture to say that there are more qualified female teachers now than ever, as well. Certainly a cause for rejoicing.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. Buddhadharma is not inherently patriarchal, but when the crystal ball of Dharma placed on the "sheet" of patriarchal culture, that culture shows through the crystal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 11:54 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

Mahamudra as a separate system from HYT is a Tibetan invention.

Malcolm wrote:

That may well be the case, historically, but it cannot be denied that in the ninth century, in India, there was a skeptical movement with respect to creation stage ritualism, as well as sexual yogas and so on found in the so called highest yoga tantras that originated with Śrī Siṃha and his milieu, and was continued later by Saraha, etc. Indians like Vairocana and Vajrapani introduced Mahāmudra to Tibet as an independent tradition. This is well established now. Read Klaus Dieter Matthis.

conebeckham said:

And even if it were a "Tibetan invention," so what?

I am quite certain the same aspersions have been cast on Dzogchen on the past.

It gets quite tiresome, frankly.

EDIT: I see Astus has cast the same aspersions, LOL.

Malcolm wrote:

To whom is this addressed?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 11:53 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

Astus said:

Dzogchen as a separate method is a Tibetan invention as well...

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is clearly an earlier, skeptical movement that can be directly traced back to Śrī Siṃha in India, and we have evidence for this in the work of Mañjuśrīkīrti, who mentions Śrī Siṃha by name, as well as other associates of Padmasambhava such as Bhikṣuṇi Nandī.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 11:46 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

Mahamudra as a separate system from HYT is a Tibetan invention.

Malcolm wrote:

That may well be the case, historically, but it cannot be denied that in the ninth century, in India, there was a skeptical movement with respect to creation stage ritualism, as well as sexual yogas and so on found in the so called highest yoga tantras that originated with Śrī Siṃha and his milieu, and was continued later by Saraha, etc. Indians like Vairocanaśakya and Vajrapāṇi introduced Mahāmudra to Tibet as an independent tradition. This is well established now. Read Klaus Dieter Matthis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 11:43 PM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedānta

Content:

Derek said:

It provides additional evidence of the intermingling of Saivism and Buddhism at that time.

Malcolm wrote:

But this is really quite irrelevant to Dzogchen and Dzogchen tantras. Have you read any?

There is no intertextuality at all between Dzogchen tantras and non-Buddhist tantras.

Dzogchen is its own thing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 11:20 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:
maybay said:
A group of men discussing patriarchy in Vajrayana.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, it is all very patriarchal, which is my entire point.

maybay said:
Seems kind of unavoidable don't you think? I mean, men like talking about this stuff.
Woman generally don't. How is terma going to change that?

Malcolm wrote:
Women are not the voiceless class they used to be. There are plenty of women here who talk about all kinds of things.

As far as termas go, we can already see a shift. Within the past 100 years, there have already been four famous women tertons (three in the past 50) , whereas in the past 1000, I can think of only one (there may be others), Jomo Menmo.

M

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 11:08 PM
Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna
Content:
Sherab Dorje said:
Meta-discussion, much?

Malcolm wrote:
No, this a discussion. A metadiscussion is having a discussion about a discussion.
What we are discussing is patriarchy in Vajrayāna.

maybay said:
A group of men discussing patriarchy in Vajrayana.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, it is all very patriarchal, which is my entire point.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 11:06 PM
Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna
Content:
conebeckham said:
I dunno if this meta discussion--these are interesting topics, and recurring ideas, regarding Tantra as a subject--though I'm aware of whence this thread hath sprung.

Malcolm wrote:

True, I was replying in another thread, and as so frequently happens to me on DW, in the midst of my reply, the thread was closed. [Now this is a metadiscussion]. But I think this topic title is more apropos.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 11:01 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Meta-discussion, much?

Malcolm wrote:

No, this a discussion. A metadiscussion is having a discussion about a discussion. What we are discussing is patriarchy in Vajrayāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 10:58 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

conebeckham said:

Nor do I, and to be fair, I've not heard any commentary regarding those passages that attempts to make it so...but, you know, the gloss for "Guru Resides Always in the Bhaga," for instance--do you think it is only explicit meaning, and the implicit (or willfully construed) interpretations are apologetics, or somehow deflections from the literal?

Malcolm wrote:

No, there are of course various interpretive schemes for the Indian tantras, the six limits, and so on. It can be fun and interesting to read various attempts by Indian panditas to explain these things. And when it comes to the same tantra, different Panditas have wildly different explanations, meaning that there was very little consensus on just how to interpret these tantras. Of course, then there is the fact that Tibetans, in general, preferred violence to eroticism, which is why the more popular yidams among Tibetans are Vajrabhairava, Vajrakīlaya, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 10:55 PM

Title: Re: Negative Karma

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

Seeing Mary Turner, we sadly shake our heads, saying if only she hadn't committed great evil, this wouldn't have happened.

Malcolm wrote:

Seeing Mary Turner, we shake our heads in disbelief at human cruelty, and try to make a world where people like her and her husband can live free of terror and oppression.

Karma does not enter into it. Karma is an explanation from the point of view of Dharma language, not worldly language.

We abuse the doctrine of karma when we says things like, "That was their karma, too bad."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 10:45 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

The real ganapuja is realized when one eats ejaculate or shit with eyes wide open, like the Guhyasamaja says. Your lama said eat your cookie with nonduality. Good luck with that vague notion. The former is concrete exercise.

Malcolm wrote:

Ganapuja is cookies and milk. Ganacakra, well, that is something else altogether.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 10:32 PM

Title: Re: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

conebeckham said:

Okay, but don't we understand this as a reflection of larger cultural values of the time?

Malcolm wrote:

Why would that excuse it?

conebeckham said:

Which leads one to wonder if that was the skillful means of the Mahasiddhas (and Buddha, for that matter) who spoke or wrote the sutras and Tantras?

Malcolm wrote:

Are we certain that what we have in this or that text are the literal words of this or that Buddha, free from editing by human beings? I am not so certain. Are you?

This is one reason, that as a class of literature, I like Dzogchen tantras. They are, like the Dohas of Saraha and Virupa, largely free from, or explicitly critical of, all of this kind of imagery, apart from what they inherent from the Guhyagarbha in terms of the mandala of peaceful and wrathful deities. But in Dzogchen tantras, the so called "antinomian" aspects of the Guhyagarbha are so sublimated as to be nonexistent. This is another reason why Dzogchen is more appropriate today, because it has a place in a post-patriarchal society. Cakrasamvara, Hevajra, etc., will have a more difficult time.

conebeckham said:

And...a question, if I may. The levels of commentary re Tantra itself--with "twilight language," modes of explication as symbology vs. literal interpretation, etc.---do we think these were invented by apologists, or by prudish Tibetans or monastics?

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think that texts describing the breasts and genitalia of young women in order to ascertain their suitability for consort practice need to be understood as intentional language.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 10:29 PM

Title: Re: Negative Karma

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

If we say Mary Turner experienced karma of retribution for past negative deeds, do we not then shift the onus onto her instead of her attackers?

Malcolm wrote:

She was not responsible for their intention.

Monlam Tharchin said:

Didn't they do her a favor by dispensing with this particular karmic debt, of which we say she is now free?

Malcolm wrote:

It is true that for this person, that ripening will never again happen.

Monlam Tharchin said:

Where does the logic leap then to "Mary Turner committed such evil in the past that being killed in this way makes perfect sense"?

Malcolm wrote:

We cannot know what deed, small or large, that led to such a ripening. All we can know is that she experienced such a ripening.

Karma does not make senseless violence sensible, nor injustice just. The operations of karma are beyond sense and justice. They are relentless.

The ripening of karma is something which we all experience. For example, it could be the case that in the past, this person destroyed a spiders nest with juvenile spiders with some intense anger and hatred. What we consider small actions can have a very large result.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 10:09 PM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

the Manjusriyamulakalpa states that Saiva, Garuda and Vaisnava mantras were all taught originally by Manjushri.

Derek said:

It's just more evidence that "Tantric Śaivism and Tantric Buddhism borrowed freely from one another, creating marked parallelisms primarily in practice, and sometimes in thought as well." <http://www.sutrajournal.com/the-tantric-age-a-comparison-of-shaiva-and-buddhist-tantra-by-christopher-wallis>

Malcolm wrote:

Interesting article, but it is irrelevant to Dzogchen and its historical formation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 9:52 PM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

Believe in the translation? Believe in Sanderson's analysis?

Yes I believe the Manjusriyamulakalpa states that Saiva, Garuda and Vaisnava mantras were all taught originally by Manjushri.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that is not under dispute. The question was do you believe these things were actually taught by Mañjuśrī.

BuddhaFollower said:

Considering the Manjusriyamulakalpa is a major Indian text, you must believe.

Malcolm wrote:

Ummm, no. That level of credulity I leave for fundamentalists.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 9:48 PM

Title: Patriarchy in Vajrayāna

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Basically folks, Vajrayāna reflects male, patriarchal values. Just accept this is so and move on.

Does this mean that Vajrayāna cannot itself move beyond such values? Of course not (that's why we have terms).

But we do ourselves a disservice by pretending that some of the tropes in Vajrayāna which are deeply sexist do not exist, and are in fact based on the idea of women as disposable property. For example, one hears accounts of young women who died after being used during empowerments.

There is an inherent sexism in the trope of lower caste women being used by upper caste males.

While some revisionist scholars such as Miranda Shaw indulge in romantic fantasies about the origins of Vajrayāna being grounded in subaltern female gurus, we should shelve such interpretations for the fantasies that they are.

While it is true that there were female gurus in ancient India, and continuing on in Tibet, we still have Yeshe Tsogyal referring to herself over and over again as someone of lower birth (skye dman) and small intelligence (shes rab chung) merely because she is a woman.

The very fact that there is a samaya vow not to disparage women as being incapable of buddhahood is in fact proof of the depth of patriarchy and sexism which permeates the Buddhist environment in which Vajrayāna arose.

For example, there are literally hundreds of texts which describe the features of young women (generally between 15 and 25, but in Kalācakra, as young as 12) to be used for partners, the size of their breasts, buttocks and eyes, the shape of their vaginas, their smell, tone of their voice, etc, for use as consorts by men. But I have never seen a similar text for men in which they are analyzed for the size and shape of their penis, and so on, for their suitability to be used as consorts by women.

So ladies and gentleman, let us not pretend that Buddhism in general has not expressed itself historically as a patriarchal religion, and in particular, that Vajrayāna (from kriya tantra to anuyoga) does not have obvious and explicit patriarchal features.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 8:39 PM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You believe that?

BuddhaFollower said:

Believe in the translation? Believe in Sanderson's analysis?

Yes I believe the Manjusriyamulakalpa states that Saiva, Garuda and Vaisnava mantras were all taught originally by Manjushri.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that is not under dispute. The question was do you believe these things were actually taught by Mañjuśrī.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 12:08 PM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Dan74 said:

I was never offended by what Nicholas posted nor wanted him censored. The trouble I had was that he did not engage in discussion.

My mistake was that I had misjudged the volume of his other contributions. For that I apologise.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a good man who can recognize their error and apologize for it.

Thanks.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 10:00 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

As a homosexual, one of the groups most frequently accused of propagating "PC safe-space nonsense"...

Malcolm wrote:

Nah, that is mostly immature college kids who think they have a right not to be offended.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 9:56 AM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

Derek said:

5. Consciousness. In both traditions, the central focus is on consciousness, and in particular on pure consciousness.

Malcolm wrote:

No, the focus in Dzogchen is not on consciousness per se (the all-basis, the ālaya), it is on understanding the basis, which is inseparable emptiness and clarity.

Moreover, Trika is grounded in the modified Sāṃkhya of the Shaiva tradition; whereas Dzogchen has its feet firmly planted in Abhidharma and Madhyamaka.

BuddhaFollower said:

Even though Saiva tradition has a Sāṃkhya background, the Manjusriyamulakalpa states that Saiva, Garuda and Vaisnava mantras were all taught originally by Manjushri.

Malcolm wrote:

You believe that?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 2:20 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

[Yes, you did agree, and then we got lost in this hate speech discussion.

Sherab Dorje said:

I'll agree with you (again) on this point. But the issue is actually one about free speech, is it not? Or do you want to discuss Nicholas's "goodbye cruel forum" drama? Just in case you didn't notice: Nicholas DECIDED that instead of facing the consequences for posting discriminatory garbage, he would rather leave the forum.

Malcolm wrote:

I think that Dan's comment was unfortunate, and I think that liberal intolerance is just as damaging as "hate speech."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 1:52 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Admin_PC said:

On this we agree. I find a lot of value in Nick's posts on Buddhist doctrines, sutras, and history.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, that was my initial point, which was derailed by SD.

Sherab Dorje said:

BS! Go back and actually read what I said, you will find that I agreed with you.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, you did agree, and then we got lost in this hate speech discussion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 1:45 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I find it more unfortunate however that Dan chose to misrepresent Nick's over all contribution to the forum, which is what started this whole dialogue.

Admin_PC said:

On this we agree. I find a lot of value in Nick's posts on Buddhist doctrines, sutras, and history.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, that was my initial point, which was derailed by SD.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 1:40 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Admin_PC said:

In Nicholas' case, he was just posting links to discriminatory articles as authoritative statements, with absolutely no commentary. Furthermore, he became indignant when it was removed, claiming it was an authoritative statement. Criticizing discriminatory behavior is not the same as posting discriminatory behavior as authoritative.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, we can't know that, can we, since you removed the article, the link and the entire thread. And by doing so, you prevented people from protesting its discriminatory content, or rebuffing Nick in a proper way. Such are the consequences of censorship.

Admin_PC said:

Correction: "* you can't know that". People did protest its discriminatory content, both in the thread and by filing multiple reports. Sorry you missed it. Such are the consequences of not being able to read every thread on this forum as they happen.

Malcolm wrote:

I am familiar with the situation. I think it is unfortunate that you chose to delete the thread. I find it more unfortunate however that Dan chose to misrepresent Nick's over all contribution to the forum, which is what started this whole dialogue.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 1:32 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Admin_PC said:

In Nicholas' case, he was just posting links to discriminatory articles as authoritative statements, with absolutely no commentary. Furthermore, he became indignant when it was removed, claiming it was an authoritative statement. Criticizing discriminatory behavior is not the same as posting discriminatory behavior as authoritative.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, we can't know that, can we, since you removed the article, the link and the entire thread. And by doing so, you prevented people from protesting its discriminatory content, or rebuffing Nick in a proper way. Such are the consequences of censorship.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 1:20 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Admin_PC said:

No Discriminating Against Members on the Basis of their Gender, Sexual Preferences, Ethnic Group, Language, etc - pretty straightforward.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, that was not happening here.

Admin_PC said:

Discriminating against Transgenders is still discriminating against someone on the basis of Gender.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, that did not happen. Posting a link to an article than someone find discomforting does not amount to discrimination.

Then why, pray tell, do you allow such posts as this:

"Homosexual behavior, especially, is behavior that will put an end to nations and humanity. What does it mean by putting an end to nations? Someone who practices homosexuality will not care about their country, so that country will disintegrate. Homosexuals do not procreate, so the human race will vanish! This kind of behavior is forbidden by national law, universal law, and natural law. Those who do will fall into the hells no matter who they are. Every one of us must know this.

People cannot be oblivious to the basic responsibilities of human beings, otherwise we cannot even compare to animals. Notice how animals do not engage in homosexual behavior. Some may argue that same-sex lab rats practice homosexuality, but that is because you force these rats. Has anyone confined you so that you are only with those of your sex and make you practice homosexuality? This kind of behavior defies creation; it is wrong. Cultivators must be normal and not psychologically deranged."

the rest can be read here:

<http://www.gbm-online.com/online/dharma/avoid.html>

Or perhaps this is allowed to stand because it was posted before the present Safe Space regime?

Perhaps you ought to figure out what your actual policies are.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 1:16 AM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

The the Guhyasiddhi of Padmavajra, a work associated with the Guhyasamaja tradition, prescribes acting as a Saiva guru and initiating members into Saiva Siddhanta scriptures and mandalas.

Malcolm wrote:

The work begins however by saying:

Though indeed there are other tantras, any taught by the guide, the Buddha, possess definitive intimate instructions.
I shall now explain them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 1:13 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

By this stringent definition, anything can be defined as hate speech if it is speech you don't like.

Admin_PC said:

No Discriminating Against Members on the Basis of their Gender, Sexual Preferences, Ethnic Group, Language, etc - pretty straightforward.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, that was not happening here.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 7th, 2016 at 1:00 AM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Hahahaha, nice try. Who defines "hate speech?" Are we so fragile that we need censors deciding for us what constitutes hate speech? No thanks.

I cannot see the censored article now, so I cannot decide for myself if it constitutes "hate speech." This is the problem with censorship.

Admin_PC said:

If it does not affect you personally, then I hardly see how you're qualified to determine if it's hate speech.

Malcolm wrote:

By this stringent definition, anything can be defined as hate speech if it is speech you don't like.

Admin_PC said:

Disagreeing with someone's lifestyle choices may, in fact be a clear violation of the policies on discriminatory behavior.

Malcolm wrote:

But there are kinds of disagreements about people's lifestyle choices here, for example, "eat meat" vs. "don't eat meat"; "drink alcohol" vs. "don't drink alcohol", and so on. Given what you have said above, there is all kinds of discrimination going on here.

Admin_PC said:

It's very little to do with "pc police" and a lot to do with an agreed upon policy that's already in place.

Malcolm wrote:

No, you all are just the present regime in charge, and you decide things as you see fit, using the vaguely worded TOS to back up whatever arbitrary decisions you make. I accept that this is the case, but I will protest when I think you or another moderator speaking incorrectly, as did Dan above.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 6th, 2016 at 11:42 PM

Title: Re: Questions about Tulkus and Unrecognized Tulkus

Content:

Footsteps said:

These questions about Tulkus pertain to the realm of Unrecognized Tulkus.

Does the act of remembering past lives make one a tulku?

Does remembering the act of choosing one's birth prior to incarnation make one a tulku?

What are the definitive/indicative factors that determine whether or not an individual is an unrecognized tulku?

Malcolm wrote:

You have to get a Tibetan Lama to sign off on it, the higher, the better.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 6th, 2016 at 11:24 PM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Granted, but almost nobody refers to Rinpoche with that initialism.

Finney said:

That doesn't seem to be the case, unless this happens to be a very recent change. I know several of his students, two people who help run one of his organizations, and a few lamas who went to Dzongsar Institute and they all regularly refer to him as Dzongsar Khyentse Rinpoche, even just Khyentse Rinpoche. I'm not sure I've ever heard them use Dzongsar Jamyang Khyentse Rinpoche and I don't believe they're being at all disrespectful.

dzogchungpa said:

I was referring to the 'DKR', not what it abbreviates, "Dzongsar Khyentse Rinpoche", which indeed is in common use. I was just teasing Malcolm about what I take to be his reluctance to associate DJKR with Jamyang, i.e. Manjushri.

Malcolm wrote:

That is an awfully silly projection on your part, chung. Further, just for the record, 'jam dbyangs is Mañjughośa. 'jam dpal is Mañjuśrī.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 6th, 2016 at 11:16 PM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I get it now. You support censorship of opinions not in accord with your own. Good to know.

Sherab Dorje said:

No, you don't get it at all. I believe that freedom of speech does not apply to hate speech, whether the hate speech corresponds to my opinions or not.

Malcolm wrote:

Hahahaha, nice try. Who defines "hate speech?" Are we so fragile that we need censors deciding for us what constitutes hate speech? No thanks.

I cannot see the censored article now, so I cannot decide for myself if it constitutes "hate speech." This is the problem with censorship.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 6th, 2016 at 10:58 PM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Whereas it is tolerant to allow them to allow people to disgrace people on the basis of their gender, sexual preference, race etc...?

Malcolm wrote:

Speech is either free, or it isn't.

Sherab Dorje said:

There is no such thing as free. Everything comes at a cost.

Malcolm wrote:

I get it now. You support censorship of opinions not in accord with your own. Good to know.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 6th, 2016 at 10:56 PM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

I think it is a pretty fair assessment of his political threads.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not tolerant to shout down or marginalize people who are politically conservative.

Sherab Dorje said:

Whereas it is tolerant to allow them to allow people to disgrace people on the basis of their gender, sexual preference, race etc...?

Malcolm wrote:

Speech is either free, or it isn't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 6th, 2016 at 10:56 PM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

I take it that you did not see the last thread?

Malcolm wrote:

you mean this?

<https://www.dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=36&t=23504&p=352353#p352353>

Sherab Dorje said:

Nope. He started a thread in which he had a link to an article with a blanket condemnation of transgenderism.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. Some people think that it is wrong. They have a right to their opinion. They even have a right to express that opinion here, so I presume, unless we have become so dominated by EU PC nonsense that we no longer have the right to express opinions which do not fit the preconceptions of the moderating staff.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 6th, 2016 at 10:52 PM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

I think it is a pretty fair assessment of his political threads.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not tolerant to shout down or marginalize people who are politically conservative.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 6th, 2016 at 10:50 PM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Nevertheless, Nick's posts on the issues of transgenderism have been largely confined the trend in some areas to encourage children with gender dysmorphia to explore reassignment surgery. I agree with him that this is wrong headed.

Sherab Dorje said:

I take it that you did not see the last thread?

Malcolm wrote:

you mean this?

<https://www.dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=36&t=23504&p=352353#p352353>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 6th, 2016 at 10:48 PM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is an absolutely unfair assessment of Nick's posting history.

Sherab Dorje said:

Not absolutely unfair. I think it is a pretty fair assessment of his political threads.

Of course he does also contribute quite heavily to the Mahayana sections of the board. Without a doubt.

Malcolm wrote:

It is absolutely unfair. Dan said:

Most of what you contribute, Nicholas, has nothing to do with Mahayana and Vajrayana Buddhism, but not only that, you don't engage in discussion. So clearly this is not a good fit.

This is completely false. Therefore, it is absolutely unfair.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 6th, 2016 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Dan74 said:

Most of what you contribute, Nicholas, has nothing to do with Mahayana and Vajrayana Buddhism, but not only that, you don't engage in discussion. So clearly this is not a good fit.

If you find a forum with a subtitle that says "A soapbox for reactionaries who don't want to discuss but like to complain about all sorts of modern goings-on" that might be a perfect place for you.

Malcolm wrote:

This is an absolutely unfair assessment of Nick's posting history.

Dan74 said:

Then I apologise unreservedly and withdraw.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that you condemned him without even looking to see where and what he mostly posts about (sūtra studies). While it is true that of late he has posted on the issue of Transgender politics re: minors, in fact I agree with him that allowing minors to undergo elective gender reassignment surgery is quite wrong and misguided, not to mention the fact that from a BUDDHIST point of view, specifically, Abhidharma, it is not possible to change one's biological gender, whether male, female or intersexed. You cannot become a man by removing your breasts and sewing on a penis anymore than you can become a woman by taking hormones to grow breasts and castrating yourself. There is, in the women's community, a lot of discussion amongst women-born women about how to accommodate trans-women who will never (in this life) have the gendered experience of experiencing menstruation, childbirth and menopause, for example.

Having said this, I sympathize with people who experience gender dysmorphia, and if they are adults, it is not my job to approve or disapprove of their choices about lifestyle, surgery, and so on.

Nevertheless, Nick's posts on the issues of transgenderism have been largely confined to the trend in some areas to encourage children with gender dysmorphia to explore reassignment surgery. I agree with him that this is wrong headed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 6th, 2016 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: Fare Thee Well All

Content:

Dan74 said:

Most of what you contribute, Nicholas, has nothing to do with Mahayana and Vajrayana

Buddhism, but not only that, you don't engage in discussion. So clearly this is not a good fit.

If you find a forum with a subtitle that says "A soapbox for reactionaries who don't want to discuss but like to complain about all sorts of modern goings-on" that might be a perfect place for you.

Malcolm wrote:

This is an absolutely unfair assessment of Nlck's posting history.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 6th, 2016 at 5:38 AM

Title: Re: Buddha in God realm?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Indra.

Losal Samten said:

Are you basing that on something higher than Sutra? Mipham says in his MAV commentary that "The majority of [third bhumi bodhisattvas] are born as "Indra" and they are able to draw their subjects out of the mud of desire".

Malcolm wrote:

Shitro.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 6th, 2016 at 5:06 AM

Title: Re: Buddha in God realm?

Content:

Tirisilex said:

I heard that there is a Buddha in the God Realm trying to teach the Gods Buddhism. Anyone know what his name is?

Malcolm wrote:

Indra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 6th, 2016 at 4:23 AM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I have nothing against DKR. Having an aversion to someone is quite different than disagreeing with their view on this or that point. He has a lot of responsibilities thrust upon him. I would not want to be him or anyone like him, ever. Being recognized a tulku is a sure fire way to make sure that subject of the recognition will never have their own life.

dzogchungpa said:

OK, you're off the hook. From now on, though, could you please write 'DJKR' instead of 'DKR'?

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, when they update his name on his own website:

<http://khyentsefoundation.org/about-us/>

dzogchungpa said:

Khyentse Foundation is a nonprofit organization founded in 2001 by Dzongsar Khyentse Rinpoche to support all traditions of Buddhist study and practice. Since 2001, the foundation has supported individuals and institutions in more than 30 countries and has directly affected the lives of people around the world. Khyentse Foundation activities include major text preservation and translation projects, support for traditional monastic colleges in Asia, a worldwide scholarship and awards program, academic development of Buddhist studies in major universities, training and development for Buddhist leaders and teachers, Buddhist education for children, support for individual study and retreats, and more.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 6th, 2016 at 2:11 AM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

While I certainly applaud his openness in allowing specialists in non-Buddhist traditions teach in depth presentations of their tenets where Buddhists can listen to them...

dzogchungpa said:

You're applauding something about DJKR?

Malcolm wrote:

I have nothing against DKR. Having an aversion to someone is quite different than disagreeing with their view on this or that point. He has a lot of responsibilities thrust upon him. I would not want to be him or anyone like him, ever. Being recognized a tulku is a sure fire way to make sure that subject of the recognition will never have their own life.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 6th, 2016 at 1:55 AM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, this is his opinion. I think he is completely wrong and overstating the case.

dzogchungpa said:

Understood, I just wanted people to see that I wasn't making it up.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, we know you are not making it up:

<http://www.deerpark.in/programs/archive/the-vibration-of-consciousness-the-spanda-k-rik/>

While I certainly applaud his openness in allowing specialists in non-Buddhist traditions teach in depth presentations of their tenets where Buddhists can listen to them, I think it is somewhat strange to make the unequivocal assertion that Trika (which has three different systems: kūla, spanda, and pratyabhijñā) and Vajrayāna are identical in meaning. And, I don't see any Bonpo teachers offering teachings there. Which is a bit strange because the first Khyentse was quite close to Bon. Bon and Vajrayāna are in fact identical in meaning. Bon needs more support than Trika.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 6th, 2016 at 1:38 AM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

FWIW I recently heard Dzongsar Khyentse Rinpoche, whose Deer Park Institute regularly holds courses and seminars on Kashmir Shaivism, say that it is "very, very identical" with Vajrayana Buddhism

Derek said:

I've been reading Part III of John Reynolds' The Golden Letters...

dzogchungpa said:

BTW, you can see/hear what I was referring to here:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

It should start at the right place, but if not it's at 6:55.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, this is his opinion. I think he is completely wrong and overstating the case.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 5th, 2016 at 11:59 PM

Title: Re: Coping with Energetic Sensitivity

Content:

Footsteps said:

Some people are extremely sensitive to the energetic wavelengths around them...

How can a person overcome such sensitivities? What can one do to develop a better filter, or a better resistance to adverse effects of a given energetic landscape?

Malcolm wrote:

Such people have a vatta disorder. Treat accordingly.

Footsteps said:

How does one treat a vatta disorder?

Malcolm wrote:

see an ayurvedic specialist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 5th, 2016 at 11:07 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

gad rgyangs said:

its clearly saying that the teacher induces in the students various experiences simply by placing his awareness in front of them.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not clearly saying this at all. Why? This translation, " Now place your awareness right in the space in front of you, steadily without modification, fixedly without wavering, and clearly without a meditative object." is slightly mistaken.

What it is in fact is an instruction for the students, as indicated by the plural tense of the Tibetan, to place their own rig pa in the sky before them da khyed rang rnam rig pa mdun gyi nam mkha' la/ bzo med du ce re/ yengs med du hrig ge/ dmigs med du gsal le ba/ 'od ka'i ngang du zhog cig bya

"Now, you all [meaning the students] should look without artifice at [your] vidyā in the sky in front [of you]; vividly without distraction; clearly without support; resting in the state of radiance.

(nyi zla 'od zer . "dang po skye gnas bar do'i khrid yig kun gzhi rang grol ." In snyan brgyud khrid chen bcu gsum skor/. TBRC W30199. 7: 63 - 105. [kaH thog]: [kaH thog dgon pa], [2004?]. http://tbrc.org/link?RID=O00JR968%7CO00JR96800JR513\$W30199)

I hope this clears that misconception away.

Whenever I find something a little strange in a translation, I go look at the original text.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 5th, 2016 at 10:15 PM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

Derek said:

5. Consciousness. In both traditions, the central focus is on consciousness, and in particular on pure consciousness.

Malcolm wrote:

No, the focus in Dzogchen is not on consciousness per se (the all-basis, the ālaya), it is on understanding the basis, which is inseparable emptiness and clarity.

Moreover, Trika is grounded in the modified Saṃkhya of the Shaiva tradition; whereas Dzogchen has its feet firmly planted in Abhidharma and Madhyamaka.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 5th, 2016 at 5:05 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

gad rgyangs said:

what about this passage from the kar gling zhi khro?:

Have all your pupils sit in front of you in the posture bearing the seven attributes of Vairocana. Now place your awareness right in the space in front of you, steadily without modification, fixedly without wavering, and clearly without a meditative object. While so doing, given the differences in intellect, in some, a nonconceptual, unmediated, conceptually unstructured reality will arise in their mind-streams. In some there will be a steadiness of awareness. In some, there will be a steady, natural luster of emptiness that is not an emptiness that is nothing; and there will arise a realization that this is awareness itself, it is the nature of the mind. In some, there will arise a sense of straightforward emptiness. In some, appearances and the mind will merge: appearances will not be left outside and awareness will not be left inside. There will arise a sense that they have become inseparably equalized. It is impossible that some such kind of experience will fail to occur.

(from "Natural Liberation: Padmasambhava's Teachings on the Six Bardos" Wisdom Publications 1998, pg 120)

Malcolm wrote:

What about it? Experiences are always occurring, all the time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 5th, 2016 at 3:44 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Who takes the empowerment? You do. Empowerment is just another form of teaching.

Sherab Dorje said:

Dude, with all respect, you've made your point. Those that heard it and took it to heart... Those that didn't... No need to flog a dead horse!

Malcolm wrote:

There is always a need to flog a dead horse.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 5th, 2016 at 3:41 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Is the gar asking to send email requests for permission to attend?

Malcolm wrote:

No, you register on the website.

Crazywisdom said:

Melong.com?

Malcolm wrote:

Dzamling gar website:

<http://dzamlinggar.net/en/schedule/icalrepeat.detail/2016/12/28/6591/-/choegyal-namkhai-norbu-yangtig-retreat>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 5th, 2016 at 3:20 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Oh yeah one of my lamas said blessings in Tilo's song means if you have respect for teacher, lineage and teachings, and put hard efforts into it then you get the result.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course, blessings all come from you. Your respect, your efforts. Lamas can't do anything but give you teachings.

conebeckham said:

Though without empowerment, your respect and efforts are insufficient.

Malcolm wrote:

Who takes the empowerment? You do. Empowerment is just another form of teaching.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 5th, 2016 at 3:19 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

RikudouSennin said:

Is $1,500 enough to get me to Tenerife from Atlanta and back?

This is essentially all the money I have saved up, will just have to live at bare minimum for the next couple of months to add on to it.

Edit: Just looked at ticket prices, hotels, passports etc. I don't have a chance, enjoy.

Malcolm wrote:

Buy your plane ticket, start a go fund me. You will be able to find some place to stay with some kind person.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 5th, 2016 at 3:19 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Is the gar asking to send email requests for permission to attend?

Malcolm wrote:

No, you register on the website.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 5th, 2016 at 2:21 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

krodha said:

Well I'm open to having misspoke. In the end all we can do is acknowledge that Rinpoche's students are big boys and girls who are capable of making the right decision for themselves, and hope they will do so.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a very common thing in the community -- using personal communications with ChNN in the attempt to condition others.

krodha said:

Thanks, I wasn't aware it's common, luckily no one does this at our ling in Berkeley.

Malcolm wrote:

If you have ever been on the gakyil, you are more likely to experience this. I have seen every variety of trying to use ChNN's personal communications to manipulate others or promote one's own point of view. In general, I think it is disrespectful of CHNN, of others, and of the teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 5th, 2016 at 2:18 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

krodha said:

Come hell or high water I'll be in Tenerife in December. Hope to see some of you there.

Malcolm wrote:

See you there.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 5th, 2016 at 2:11 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

florin said:

But there is the undeniable fact that lots of rinpoches received whole cycles of advanced teachings when they were young and not yet ripe.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, like ChNN, by his own frequent admission.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 5th, 2016 at 2:02 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

krodha said:

.

Even if you don't plan to apply the teachings immediately, it is still good to receive it so you can when you are ready.

florin said:

As disappointing as it may seem, people shouldn't go if they are not ready .

I am afraid to say , rinpoche's advice does not allow for any interpretation.

I asked him a question about readiness and whether people can go to receive the teachings even if they are not ready but only practice yangti when they are ready and he wasn't very pleased.

No means no.

That's it.

krodha said:

Well I'm open to having misspoke. In the end all we can do is acknowledge that Rinpoche's students are big boys and girls who are capable of making the right decision for themselves, and hope they will do so.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a very common thing in the community -- using personal communications with ChNN in the attempt to condition others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 4th, 2016 at 9:54 PM

Title: Re: Coping with Energetic Sensitivity

Content:

Footsteps said:

Some people are extremely sensitive to the energetic wavelengths around them...

How can a person overcome such sensitivities? What can one do to develop a better filter, or a better resistance to adverse effects of a given energetic landscape?

Malcolm wrote:

Such people have a vatta disorder. Treat accordingly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 4th, 2016 at 9:40 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 4th, 2016 at 1:22 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is enough drama in the world, who needs more?

maybay said:

Asvaghosa, Abhinavagupta, Thangtong Gyalpo, Chogyam Trungpa, DJK, Ivo, Jundo Cohen, Kim, and me. And possibly Dzogchungpa.

Malcolm wrote:

Good luck.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 4th, 2016 at 1:22 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Devotion means you listen to their teachings, and then apply them. That's all. There is nothing more to true devotion than this. The idea that devotion is this big emotional drama is immature.

Tulku Urgyen Rinpoche said:

Recognize your essence in the moment of strong devotion, which is an emotion so powerful that tears come to our eyes and the hairs on the body stand on end. As the third Karmapa said, "In the moment of love, the empty essence dawns nakedly."

Malcolm wrote:

If that is what turns you on. Seems like unnecessary contrivance to me.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 3rd, 2016 at 10:49 PM

Title: Re: Rainbow Body in Hinduism

Content:

Rakz said:

Well according to Dzogchen every single living sentient being is already a rainbow body

florin said:

Yes that is how it is .

One just need to learn to distinguish between this body of light that is our five aggregates and the unchangeable natural state and develop capacity of how to rest in this state instead of the body of light.

Malcolm wrote:

Huh? You mean the five kāyas, five pristine consciousnesses, five lights, and so on are not our unchanging natural state?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 3rd, 2016 at 9:58 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

maybay said:

Another aspect of devotion with the intention of receiving blessings is the drama that it brings to the surface.

Malcolm wrote:

There is enough drama in the world, who needs more?

maybay said:

If you suspect that someone may have high realizations, and that they are in an extraordinary position to help beings such as yourself (where other learned teachers might just have stock teachings to impart), then devotion is an important way of framing your interactions. For example, with devotion, you are symbolically gesturing to the master that you see something in them beyond ordinary teachings. It is too often the case that teachers are approached by people with only a curious interest in them and their teachings. Devotion shows the master that you are not just taking another trip through the mall. Through acts of devotion you show you are prepared to commit to a practice, and therefore that they are not wasting their time imparting precious teachings instead of doing their own practice. Blessings, like merit, or even mundane currency, is an intangible and relative good of no ultimate value.

Malcolm wrote:

Devotion means you listen to their teachings, and then apply them. That's all. There is nothing more to true devotion than this. The idea that devotion is this big emotional drama is immature.

maybay said:

A fraudulent teacher will not have the capacity to manage the intensified consciousness produced by devotion, and his organization will show obvious signs of corruption. These signs of corruption are not just an unfortunate by-product of what might have been. They are a valuable warning to anyone else looking to enter the community, and for those inside it too. The more one is familiar with what devotion is, how it works, and what it looks like when it goes wrong, the more you will be able to distinguish authentic and inauthentic Dharma.

Malcolm wrote:

This is incredibly naive. It is also a horrible recommendation.

maybay said:

Devotion and the blessings that accrue should be seen as a practice. Something to be taken as seriously as any other practice. It is not a ticket to hysteria and forgetting oneself.

Malcolm wrote:

"Devotion" means practicing. "Blessings" means receiving teachings. Both only come from your side. If you don't receive teachings out of lack of interest, you can have all the emotional devotion you want, but you cannot practice. If you don't practice, you will experience no result.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 3rd, 2016 at 3:04 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Oh yeah one of my lamas said blessings in Tilo's song means if you have respect for teacher, lineage and teachings, and put hard efforts into it then you get the result.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course, blessings all come from you. Your respect, your efforts. Lamas can't do anything but give you teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 3rd, 2016 at 3:02 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

We need a rainbow body tally.

BTW ChNN says the GY in the Yangti-Shitro book is the most profound. In the end, the CN is like this.

Malcolm wrote:

Guru Yoga of White A and Ati Guru Yoga are not exactly the same.

The former (short form) is found in the Short Thun. The latter is the basis of all practices in the DC.

Crazywisdom said:

Referring to the triangle one... Is that what you meant?

Malcolm wrote:

The Guru Yoga of White A, the long form, is included in the collective practices book and the Shitro/Yanti book. This is the one of which ChNN has said belongs to anuyoga. I have some familiarity with it because I have done it in retreat and have received teachings on it (normal way in a group retreat).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 3rd, 2016 at 3:00 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

That's at the time of transfer. They talk of dharmakaya appearing as blueness and the form kayas are latent until sentient beings get involved when it can appear as any deity.

Malcolm wrote:

Also Saraha refutes this idea that Mahāmudra realization is the cessation of perception:

“For the knowledge of the ultimate, oh sir, look with your eyes! I didn’t realize anything more than this. If you want realization, that is everything.”

Also Kotalipa:

“From looking with the eye organ, non-dual wisdom is amazing!”

Yangonpa, the famed Drukpa Kagyu master states:

Luminous clarity is without appearances and free from extremes but mahāmudrā is fresh appearance and knowing, and because proliferation is self-liberated, it is different than luminous clarity.

He continues:

That is not the objects of focus or the creation of a deity form, luminous clarity, or emptiness, bliss, non-conceptuality, and so on. There might be a deity form, there might be a ghost. There might be bliss, there might be suffering. There might be appearances, there might be emptiness. There might be luminous clarity, [5/a] there might be signs. There might be conceptuality, there might be non-conceptuality, whatever it may be, it is not established in truth. It is enough in its own state.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 3rd, 2016 at 2:54 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Correct about what the book says. He's comparing against other cycles and wondering why CN gives a faster schedule than others. The only diff he saw was emphasis on guru, where it goes with Vimalamitra and then to CSW.

Malcolm wrote:

The Chetsun Nyinthig is not a Dzogchen practice, per se. It is a practice of anuyoga, supporting man ngag sde practice. It has some very brief instructions on rushen, trekchö and thögal, but very brief. Khenpo Namdrol might still be trapped in cause and effect vehicles, or he thinks that is what is useful for people, like ChNN.

The most effective practice is Ati Guru Yoga, ChNN style.

Crazywisdom said:
We need a rainbow body tally.

BTW ChNN says the GY in the Yangti-Shitro book is the most profound. In the end, the CN is like this.

Malcolm wrote:
Guru Yoga of White A and Ati Guru Yoga are not exactly the same.

The former (short form) is found in the Short Thun. The latter is the basis of all practices in the DC.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, September 3rd, 2016 at 2:18 AM
Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do
Content:

Crazywisdom said:
Khenpo Namdrol explained the Chetsun Nyimghig's promise of a swifter realization of rainbow body than other Dzogchen cycles is its emphasis on guru devotion. He said, other than that, it's not that different from other cycles. Perception of wisdom is being asserted as the slower way to go.

Malcolm wrote:
Well, no. Chetsun says in the cycle, that meditating on him is the most effective way in this day and age:
“E ma, e ma! Later on in the future, if yogis practicing the essential meaning of the Heart Essence wish for liberation in this life, they should meditate on me, Chetsun Siṃheśvara. This means doing the full sadhana, not just the ngondro.

Crazywisdom said:
Correct about what the book says. He's comparing against other cycles and wondering why CN gives a faster schedule than others. The only diff he saw was emphasis on guru, where it goes with Vimalamitra and then to CSW.

Malcolm wrote:
The Chetsun Nyinthig is not a Dzogchen practice, per se. It is a practice of anuyoga, supporting man ngag sde practice. It has some very brief instructions on rushen, trekchö and thögal, but very brief. Khenpo Namdrol might still be trapped in cause and effect vehicles, or he thinks that is what is useful for people, like ChNN.

The most effective practice is Ati Guru Yoga, ChNN style.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 3rd, 2016 at 2:16 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Reminder: Cessation of perception is what is being asserted as buddhahood.

Malcolm wrote:

In Hinayāna and Mahāyāna, perhaps. Not Vajrayāna, and definitely not Dzogchen.

Crazywisdom said:

It's in Tilo's song. And that's what the 4th vision is, cessation of phenomena, clarity or whatever. Some say there's a color... But that's about it...

Malcolm wrote:

There is no cessation of perception in the fourth vision. Concerning this Shabkar writes:

It so happens that in the past some practitioners of the Great Perfection have asserted that the kāyas and pristine consciousnesses do not exist within the state of original purity, but this is great error.

And:

The way that great transference body arises:

when all visions have gradually been exhausted, when one focuses one's consciousness on the appearances strewn about on the luminous maṇḍala of the five fingers of one's hand, the environment and inhabitants of the universe returning from that appearance are perceived as like the moon in the water.

One's body is just a reflection, self-apparent as the illusory body of pristine consciousness;

externally and internally pellucid; free from being harmed by the four elements;
one obtains a vajra-like body.

One sees one's body as transparent inside and out.

The impure eyes of others cannot see one's body as transparent, but only the body as it was before;

for example, when the hand of Mutri Tsanpo touched the body of Master Padmasambhava, according to account of their meeting.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 3rd, 2016 at 2:10 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

conebeckham said:

Who am I to know? I was just repeating the words of my Kagyu masters. I will grant that it comes across as somewhat triumphalist.

Malcolm wrote:

Some people like devotion. I prefer direct perception.

Crazywisdom said:

Khenpo Namdrol explained the Chetsun Nyimghig's promise of a swifter realization of rainbow body than other Dzogchen cycles is its emphasis on guru devotion. He said, other than that, it's not that different from other cycles. Perception of wisdom is being asserted as the slower way to go.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, no. Chetsun says in the cycle, that meditating on him is the most effective way in this day and age:

“E ma, e ma! Later on in the future, if yogis practicing the essential meaning of the Heart Essence wish for liberation in this life, they should meditate on me, Chetsun Simḥesvara. This means doing the full sadhana, not just the ngondro.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 3rd, 2016 at 1:55 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Reminder: Cessation of perception is what is being asserted as buddhahood.

Malcolm wrote:

In Hinayāna and Mahāyāna, perhaps. Not Vajrayāna, and definitely not Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 3rd, 2016 at 1:55 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

conebeckham said:

Who am I to know? I was just repeating the words of my Kagyu masters. I will grant that it comes across as somewhat triumphalist.

Malcolm wrote:
Some people like devotion. I prefer direct perception.

maybay said:
I like both.

Malcolm wrote:
Ok.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, September 3rd, 2016 at 1:53 AM
Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that
Content:

Crazywisdom said:
That's an interesting theory. But how do you support that? BTW if they Vajradhara isn't being identified as the guru, there's no blessing going to happen and the winds entering the heart will cause anger. It's not that one prays to anyone as a Buddha. Or just prays to Buddha. It has to be a lineage teacher as Vajradhara.

Malcolm wrote:
Or Sakya Paṇḍita, or Guru Rinpoche, or Tsongkhapa, or anyone else you believe has reached Buddhahood.

For myself, I prefer to visualize a white A in a thigle, since I think this is more direct. But the principle is the same. And by the way, I don't mean the heart organ -- if vatta enters that, it is a big problem, so called snying rlung; I mean in the heart center, the center of the body, below the heart and above the diaphragm, roughly between T9 and T8.

Crazywisdom said:
Tilopa just meant your heart, as in deep.

Malcolm wrote:
You can understand it that way, if you choose.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, September 3rd, 2016 at 1:18 AM
Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that
Content:

Vasana said:
I'll look up how to do that. For now, I've edited that post and quoted the excerpt in question from Merton.

Malcolm wrote:
<https://tinyurl.com>

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, September 3rd, 2016 at 1:11 AM
Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that
Content:
Vasana said:
A passage from Merton quoted in the foreword/Intro to Chattel Rinpoche's book, Compassionate action

[url]https://books.google.co.uk/books?id=ZlucT_y2C-sC&pg=PA10&dq=thomas+merton+chatral&hl=en&sa=X&ved=0ahUKEwiH5InUIPHOAhXL3SwKHfWJCIUQuwUIGTAC#v=snippet&q=thomas%20merton%20&f=false[/url]

Malcolm wrote:
Use a tiny URL

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, September 3rd, 2016 at 12:56 AM
Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that
Content:

Vasana said:
Dzogchen master Chatral Rinpoche and Catholic contemplative Thomas Merton got along very well and were apparently both quite impressed with each other too.

dzogchungpa said:
Yes, apparently Merton was not hurtin', spiritually speaking.

Vasana said:
Ha! Agreed.

Interestingly enough;

Yet, the most influential contact he [Merton] made was with the Buddhist teacher, Chatral Rinpoche, a monk who had spent more than thirty years in the solitary contemplation that was Merton's only real home in this world. It was Chatral Rinpoche who identified Merton as a pratyekabhudda, and with whom Merton would take a variant of the Bodhisattva's vows, in which he dedicated himself to do all he could to reach enlightenment for the benefit of all beings, in this lifetime or the next.

From :

<http://spiritualnotreligious.blogspot.co.uk/2011/05/thomas-merton-encounter-with-buddhism.html?m=1>

Malcolm wrote:

Hahahahaha, whoever wrote this blog however is an ignoramus:

The Buddha consistently said that his path was not the only path to enlightenment, and that every being must find his own path.

In fact the Buddha said the opposite.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 3rd, 2016 at 12:18 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

conebeckham said:

In my tradition, we say that "direct perception" or "naked seeing" can be best achieved if one places one's mind in a state of intense devotion, intense compassion, or intense bliss. It's about praxis. The goal is the same. Devotion on it's own is nice, but it's a means.....

Malcolm wrote:

In my tradition we say that direct perception is best achieved through direct introduction. But we may mean different direct perceptions. Caveat emptor always applies.

conebeckham said:

Indeed! We say direct introduction can be best given in the states mentioned, FWIW.....in fact, Shangpa Ga'uma works exactly that way. Kamtsang also has their methods of "pointing out" that are related to Tantric practice, and the Completion stage, separate from ChagChen Ngedon Gyamtso's path. But who knows if the object being pointed to is the same?

Malcolm wrote:

In this case, it means direct perception of the clarity and empty aspects of the mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 3rd, 2016 at 12:17 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

So it is roughly at the level of the xyphoid process, right?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 3rd, 2016 at 12:01 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

Jesus, what is T8 and T9? You do not mean thoracic vertebrae, do you?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, between those, in the center of the body. This is the rough location of the heart cakra.

treehuggingoctopus said:

As shown here? Roughly three-four fingers above the navel:

Lovely. I have been doing it wrong for almost a decade now

Malcolm wrote:

As shown there, T5 or so.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 11:56 PM

Title: Re: First words of Buddha after enlightenment

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The first words of the Buddha after awakening are reported in the Lalitavistara Sūtra:

The ambrosial Dharma I obtained is profound, immaculate, luminous, and unconditioned.

Even if I explain it, no one will understand.

I think I shall remain silent in the forest.

That which is free from words cannot be understood through words, likewise, the nature of phenomena is like space, totally free of the movements of mind and intellect.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 11:45 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

conebeckham said:

Who am I to know? I was just repeating the words of my Kagyu masters. I will grant that it comes across as somewhat triumphalist.

Malcolm wrote:

Some people like devotion. I prefer direct perception.

conebeckham said:

In my tradition, we say that "direct perception" or "naked seeing" can be best achieved if one places one's mind in a state of intense devotion, intense compassion, or intense bliss. It's about praxis. The goal is the same. Devotion on it's own is nice, but it's a means.....

Malcolm wrote:

In my tradition we say that direct perception is best achieved through direct introduction. But we may mean different direct perceptions. Caveat emptor always applies.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 11:43 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

And by the way, I don't mean the heart organ -- if vatta enters that, it is a big problem, so called snying rlung; I mean in the heart center, the center of the body, below the heart and above the diaphragm, roughly between T9 and T8.

treehuggingoctopus said:

Jesus, what is T8 and T9? You do not mean thoracic vertebrae, do you?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, between those, in the center of the body. This is the rough location of the heart cakra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 11:29 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

conebeckham said:

Who am I to know? I was just repeating the words of my Kagyu masters. I will grant that it comes across as somewhat triumphalist.

Malcolm wrote:

Some people like devotion. I prefer direct perception.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 11:21 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Kagyu believe in using two accumulations. Also in devotion being the best way to realization, as in the stanza from Tilopa about guru's blessing entering your heart. They are visualizing the guru as vajradhara when praying. Tilo also mentions followers of sutras and tantras can't realize Mahamudra.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, the Kagyus are Kadampa Gradualists. No problem with that.

Tilopa's stanza refers to i) doctrine from the Guhyasamaja, that a very effective way to cause the winds to enter the central channel is to focus on the anahata bindu (mi shig thig le) in the heart, visualized in the form of the guru. It actually has nothing to do with devotion, but everything to do with yogic praxis. ii) it refers to the fact that guru yoga is, for many people, a faster path than the two stages.

Crazywisdom said:

That's an interesting theory. But how do you support that? BTW if they Vajradhara isn't being identified as the guru, there's no blessing going to happen and the winds entering the heart will cause anger. It's not that one prays to anyone as a Buddha. Or just prays to Buddha. It has to be a lineage teacher as Vajradhara.

Malcolm wrote:

Or Sakya Paṇḍita, or Guru Rinpoche, or Tsongkhapa, or anyone else you believe has reached Buddhahood.

For myself, I prefer to visualize a white A in a thigle, since I think this is more direct. But the principle is the same. And by the way, I don't mean the heart organ -- if vatta enters that, it is a big problem, so called snying rlung; I mean in the heart center, the center of the body, below the heart and above the diaphragm, roughly between T9 and T8.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

conebeckham said:

Malcolm, why do you single out the Kagyupas? I'm not butt-hurt, lol, but curious!

Malcolm wrote:

Because they single themselves out. For example, Gyalpo Rinpoche writes:

The manner of explaining the strength, definition and qualities, and the view, meditation and behavior of devotion, etc., in this lineage does not resemble others...

He explained that devotion was a special point of the Kagyu lineage, following Dgongs gcig:

Devotion alone is the method of giving rise to all realization.

He polemically responds to Sakya Paṇḍita, saying the following:

How can there be any doubt, therefore, that supplication to the victorious fathers and sons of the Kagyus will cause the blessings to enter?

And then going on the quote Karma Chagme:

Because a Guru possessing all qualifications today is rare, supplicating the lineage of the victorious fathers and sons of the Kagyus is good on its own. The activity of the Buddhas arrives because of their intent.

So that is why I singled out the Kagyus.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 11:07 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Kagyu believe in using two accumulations. Also in devotion being the best way to realization, as in the stanza from Tilopa about guru's blessing entering your heart. They are visualizing the guru as vajradhara when praying. Tilo also mentions followers of sutras and tantras can't realize Mahamudra.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, the Kagyus are Kadampa Gradualists. No problem with that.

Tilopa's stanza refers to i) doctrine from the Guhyasamaja, that a very effective way to cause the winds to enter the central channel is to focus on the anahata bindu (mi shig thig le) in the heart, visualized in the form of the guru. It actually has nothing to do with devotion, but everything to do with yogic praxis. ii) it refers to the fact that guru yoga is, for many people, a faster path than the two stages.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 10:24 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

The pope doesn't run a 3 yr retreat. GR is a kagyü master with exceptional siddhis. If you pray to the pope nothing will happen. If you pray to GR you will receive profound lineage blessings.

monktastic said:

If you pray to a dog's tooth with enough devotion, you will "receive" blessings sufficient for realization. If you pray to the pope the full faith that he is a Buddha, methinks something will happen.

Crazywisdom said:

Hope

Malcolm wrote:

The idea that "blessings" come from supplicating gurus or from disciples offering supplications is both equally wrong. The dog tooth story is a perfect example of some of the hardcore silliness we can find in Tibetan Buddhism. It is a tale to silence inquisitive children.

Nevertheless, I will happily sing blessing supplications because I am grateful for the path that my gurus have shown me. But just as I don't really believe that gathering the two accumulations is necessary for buddhahood, likewise, I don't really believe in external blessings.

And the point of my example about the Pope is that he gives blessings a.k.a. benedictions, for a living. It is his main job. This is the Christian approach to spirituality in general, i.e., appealing to a higher power. But the Buddha is not a "higher" power -- he is merely someone who understood his own nature and became free of the afflictions that bound him to samsara. A guru is also not a higher power, he or she is someone that shows us the path. Meeting the path of Dharma is the real blessing, besides which all other so-called "blessings" pale into insignificance.

In any case, it is interesting to note that in the bka' 'gyur, the term byin rlab, brlabs and rlob occur infrequently in the sūtra division. There are 4 instances in the perfection of wisdom section; 51 instances in the Avatamska; 7 instances in the Ratnakuta collection and 53 instances in the general sūtra division. This is out of millions of words.

In the tantra division of course, because it is concerned with ritual actions, primarily, there are 740 instances of this term.

By way of comparison, the term emptiness occurs 27 times in Vinaya, 1000+ times in the PP section; 27 times in the Avatamska, 420 in the Ratnakuta, 1000+ in the general sutra division; and 464 in the tantra division.

When we run a comparative analysis on the tantra division with guru and blessing combined, we find that the "blessing" relationship between guru and disciple is framed as a contractual obligation, as in this passage from the Vajrāmṛta Tantra:

After the disciple fully offers his wealth to the guru, the blessings of the guru should be granted to the sadhaka.

But apart from this passage, there are no others in the tantras themselves. In the commentarial literature, the use of the term "blessings of the guru" are generally restricted to empowerment contexts. But of course, there are rare statements such as Virupa's:

Siddhi is obtained in an instant, based on the blessings of the guru.

Naturally, as we move down into the commentaries on lower tantra, yoga tantra on down, references to the blessings of the guru disappear.

Such references are only found in the anuttarayoga tantra commentaries because guru yoga is strictly an highest yoga tantra thing.

Finally, the term "guru endowed with the lineage of blessings" entirely refers, in Indian literature, to someone who is actually authorized to bestow this or that empowerment, i.e. someone who has the adhiṣṭhāna (n. standing by , being at hand , approach ; standing or resting upon ; a basis , base ; the standing-place of the warrior upon the car Sa1mavBr. ; a position , site , residence , abode , seat ; a settlement , town , standing over ; government , authority , power ; a precedent , rule ; a benediction Buddh.) of the lineage.

Now of course, things in Tibet are different, especially in the Kagyu school, and Tibetans overall have moved way beyond the limited notion of "blessings" found in the Indian canon, where we can see common Tibetans (the prayer wheel spinning types) placing fervent, often blind, devotion in tulkus, abbots, geshe, and so on., whether deserved or not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 9:17 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:
heart said:

Florin, I think you will be very surprised when you receive a full transmission of a Dzogchen cycle, in particular a Nyingtik cycle. You seem to be an idealist holding a banner for the ever evasive "pure Dzogchen". I am afraid that really don't exist in the way you think. Dzogchen is a lot more pragmatik than you think.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Florin, bless his heart, is a staunch Valbyista.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 9:15 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

florin said:

You are free to do dzogchen ngondro from a sutra perspective...

But in my opinion we should at least consider using them in their proper context.

Malcolm wrote:

Hahahaha, you are a really funny guy. You think you know Dzogchen even better than Longchenpa. Hahahahahaha. Longchenpa is just echoing Vimalamitra in the commentary on the sgra thal 'gyur. But I forgot, if it is isn't Semde, for you it is not really Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 9:07 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

maybay said:

You said that [blessings] have no function at all.

Malcolm wrote:

No, I actually said that "blessing" means to place the mind on profound Dharma topics according to definition given by Alak Kenkar Rinpoche (the reincarnation of Do Khyentse Yeshe Dorje) in his bod rgya tshig mdzod chen mo, or alternately, the activities that buddhas perform on our behalf; not the naive kind of "blessings" some people here believe in.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 9:03 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

If you pray to the pope nothing will happen. If you pray to GR you will receive profound lineage blessings.

Malcolm wrote:

How do you know. Did you try? After all, the Pope has millions of disciples.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 7:03 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

As far as Garchen Rinpoche goes. He is a very nice person who has benefitted many thousands of people. But then, so has the Pope, etc.

maybay said:

If this says anything its that function and substance are for the most part independent of one another.

Malcolm wrote:

Why? Who says that Garchen is not a bodhisattva, like the Pope.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 5:33 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Honestly, I always find guru fundamentalism astonishing in people who likewise consider themselves to have rejected blind faith ala Christianity, etc.

maybay said:

I don't think its the same thing. Christian faith is founded on one giant mistake. What you're suggesting is we pack up and go home on Garchen Rinpoche because of one out of a million things he's said. Or because his Sangha doesn't debate anymore.

Malcolm wrote:

I was not talking about them, I was talking about the more credulous here among us.

As far as Garchen Rinpoche goes. He is a very nice person who has benefitted many thousands of people. But then, so has the Pope, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 4:45 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

But the idea that we are actually removing someone else's negative karma is not the way things work, according to what I understand, and I have never seen a convincing explanation to the contrary.

maybay said:

Nevertheless, receiving blessings and creating a karmic connection with realized masters is a simple, powerful method that avoids the pitfalls of narrow thinking. Its like aiming for rebirth in Sukhavati. It may not be the final destination but its acceptable. If you have the capacity to do more then there's no problem here either.

Malcolm wrote:

We are not talking about avoiding the pitfalls of narrow thinking, rather we are avoiding the pitfalls of naive belief in things that have no function at all.

Honestly, I always find guru fundamentalism astonishing in people who likewise consider themselves to have rejected blind faith ala Christianity, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 1:57 AM

Title: Re: Abbott chops off finger as a devotional practice

Content:

Virgo said:

This kind of practice is very wrong. Buddha does not require your finger/s.

Virgo

Malcolm wrote:

Yup. Torturing the aggregates is definitely not the Buddha's intent.

dzogchungpa said:

Veganism is right out then, I guess.

Malcolm wrote:

i think so.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 1:41 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

florin said:

Dzogchen ngondro is for developing capacity to discover and rest in the natural state.

Malcolm wrote:

The different rushans have different purposes, and purify different things. They have both relative and ultimate benefits.

For example, the rushan of the body, according to Longchenpa, has the following benefits:

From the two necessities in the preliminary of the body, the common purpose is attachment to the body is reversed, and obstacles are pacified. Common to both of those, misdeeds of the body are purified.

The supreme purpose is that one will never enter into the city of the womb, be liberated as a nirmānakāya. Common to both of those, one will become non-dual with the vajra body of all the buddhas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 1:01 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

florin said:

That all phenomena are the energy of self-originated wisdom.

Malcolm wrote:

This is the common view of all the higher tantras.

florin said:

Although the higher tantras have some understanding of the real condition they consider that the phenomena of the aggregates and their corresponding consciousnesses are samsaric manifestations which require purification...

Malcolm wrote:

So does Dzogchen. What do you think rushen is for? It is a kind of purification for eliminating rebirth in the six realms.

Don't confuse the basis with the path and result. As the Single Son of All the Buddhas Tantra states,
The mind series is for the intellectual.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 12:58 AM

Title: Re: Abbott chops off finger as a devotional practice

Content:

Virgo said:

This kind of practice is very wrong. Buddha does not require your finger/s.

Virgo

Malcolm wrote:

Yup. Torturing the aggregates is definitely not the Buddha's intent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 12:40 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

florin said:

Sure.

But from what i could see in dzogchen the aggregates receive a different treatment and meaning than in the rest of approaches.

Malcolm wrote:

What do you mean?

florin said:

That all phenomena are the energy of self-originated wisdom.

Malcolm wrote:

This is the common view of all the higher tantras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 12:34 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

I am not going to throw in the towel just yet. When we practise Shitro with the intention of helping the deceased, we are actually purifying their karma, are we not? (Please see Teachings on Shitro and Yangti, pp. 86-87.)

Malcolm wrote:

What we are doing is creating a dependent origination for them to take rebirth in higher realms. But our practice is not going to overwhelm their karma. For example, if we do Shitro for Hitler, Stalin and Mao, people who hate the Dharma, do you really think there will be much effect?

We have to be sensible. For example, Rinpoche has said many times that reading the Tibetan Book of the Dead for someone who has not received and practiced Shitro is useless (as is reading it in Tibetan for English speakers, for example).

Because beings in the bardo have seven times more clarity, through their clairvoyance, they know when we are doing Shitro for them, and this can create a cause for their eventual liberation through mantra, etc., especially if they are a practitioner. But the idea that we are actually removing someone else's negative karma is not the way things work, according to what I understand, and I have never seen a convincing explanation to the contrary.

treehuggingoctopus said:

Thanks, Malcolm. I very much appreciate your candour.

Malcolm wrote:

All of these Shitro rituals for guiding the dead come from the Sarvadurgati-parishodana tantra, originally.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

florin said:

So are you saying that the naked experience of sensation, which is a direct perception, is still mind but a nonconceptual mind?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. This is also stated quite clearly in Dzogchen tantras.

florin said:

Sure.

But from what I could see in dzogchen the aggregates receive a different treatment and meaning than in the rest of approaches.

Malcolm wrote:

What do you mean?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 2nd, 2016 at 12:17 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

What about doing Mandarava for the sake of another person, though?

Malcolm wrote:

In this case you are trying to strengthen their five elements. Enhancing another's health through mantra and visualization is one thing. But removing their two obscurations is quite another. The former is done easily, the latter cannot be done at all.

treehuggingoctopus said:

I am not going to throw in the towel just yet. When we practise Shitro with the intention of helping the deceased, we are actually purifying their karma, are we not? (Please see Teachings on Shitro and Yangti, pp. 86-87.)

Malcolm wrote:

What we are doing is creating a dependent origination for them to take rebirth in higher realms. But our practice is not going to overwhelm their karma. For example, if we do Shitro for Hitler, Stalin and Mao, people who hate the Dharma, do you really think there will be much effect?

We have to be sensible. For example, Rinpoche has said many times that reading the Tibetan Book of the Dead for someone who has not received and practiced Shitro is useless (as is reading it in Tibetan for English speakers, for example).

Because beings in the bardo have seven times more clarity, through their clairvoyance, they know when we are doing Shitro for them, and this can create a cause for their eventual liberation through mantra, etc., especially if they are a practitioner. But the idea that we are actually removing someone else's negative karma is not the way things work, according to what I understand, and I have never seen a convincing explanation to the contrary.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 1st, 2016 at 11:21 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

florin said:

So are you saying that the naked experience of sensation, which is a direct perception, is still mind but a nonconceptual mind ?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. This is also stated quite clearly in Dzogchen tantras.

Sherab Dorje said:

In Theravada Abhidhamma too.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't care much about Abhidhamma, it is not relevant to my practice. Just saying...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 1st, 2016 at 11:07 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

florin said:

So are you saying that the naked experience of sensation, which is a direct perception, is still mind but a nonconceptual mind ?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. This is also stated quite clearly in Dzogchen tantras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 1st, 2016 at 11:00 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

conebeckham said:

Okay, so what, then, is this blessing that is "given" and "received?"

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 1st, 2016 at 10:25 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Sherab Dorje said:

Sensation does not require conceptualisation, but the experience of sensation (sweetness) does.

florin said:

And how is a sensation different from the experience of sensation ?

To me , when mind is engaged by saying "this is sweet" and restricting the appearance of sensation to this frame of reference , is what i would call conceptualization . But i would not say that the naked experience of sensation , which is prior to mind being engaged , is the conceptualization itself.

Malcolm wrote:

A direct perception is not prior to the mind, per se. A direct perception is a nonconceptual mind. A nonconceptual mind does however exist prior to the arising of the mental faculty, manas, which interprets that nonconceptual mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 1st, 2016 at 9:59 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

What about doing Mandarava for the sake of another person, though?

Malcolm wrote:

In this case you are trying to strengthen their five elements. Enhancing another's health through mantra and visualization is one thing. But removing their two obscurations is quite another. The former is done easily, the latter cannot be done at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 1st, 2016 at 5:06 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

maybay said:

What is Viṣṭadvaita [Krishnamācarya's view]?

Malcolm wrote:

Qualified nondualism, formulated by Ramanuja — characteristic of Vaishnava philosophy in general.

monktastic said:

I think it's missing a syllable: viśiṣṭādvaita.

Malcolm wrote:

yup

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 1st, 2016 at 5:04 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

You are too dismissive of other people's understandings and experiences.

Malcolm wrote:

You are too credulous.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 1st, 2016 at 5:03 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Perhaps you'd be better off trying to understand the views of a great master rather than disparaging them? You might learn something.

Malcolm wrote:

So you accept what Garchen Rinpoche is here presented as saying? Good for you. I don't.

Tsongkhapa said:

Have you really thought about how it might be true? It's no good just casually dismissing it. A great Master's words are worth considering because they don't say things for no reason, so why do you think he said this?

Malcolm wrote:

Buddha cannot enter a samadhi which causes people to realize selflessness. Why would we think anyone else would be able to?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 1st, 2016 at 1:14 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

What about this bit on the guru over deity? Is this the correct sense?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 1st, 2016 at 1:04 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

maybay said:

You've lumped colloquial language and grammatical lapses together like they are both faults.

Malcolm wrote:

No, Kumāṛila did -- get some glasses.

maybay said:

Ok, but why make a point of them unless they were an issue. Being critical of grammatical lapses is not a wrong view.

Malcolm wrote:

Kumāṛila was someone who argued the Vedas were perfect because their language perfect, and therefore, the teachings contained in them was perfect because the Vedas are considered to self-existing. On the other hand, the texts of the Buddhists and Jains, his thinking ran, were imperfect and their doctrines were imperfect because they used colloquial language and had bad grammar.

Google it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 1st, 2016 at 12:57 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

maybay said:

By the way, earlier in the thread I asked what you learnt from Krsnamacarya's student.

Malcolm wrote:

Yoga, Saṃkhya and Advaita [his own view], with a smattering of Viṣṭadvaita [Krishnamācārya's view].

maybay said:

What is Viṣṭadvaita [Krishnamācārya's view]?

Malcolm wrote:

Qualified nondualism, formulated by Ramanuja — characteristic of Vaishnava philosophy in general.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 1st, 2016 at 12:54 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Just recall, Dzogchungpa, you brought it up, so the response to this is on your head.

dzogchungpa said:

Um, no, gzodzilpa did.

Malcolm wrote:

He indeed brought it up, and asked a question, you brought it up as a challenge to my response to his post, as you often do.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 1st, 2016 at 12:52 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If we, in a state of delusion, think we are in fact really removing the illnesses and misery of others through gtong len practice, for example, we have not understood one word of what gtong len teachings are in actuality— a method of developing the courage necessary to make the leap from aspirational bodhicitta to engaged bodhicitta.

treehuggingoctopus said:

And yet we did the Chang Chog Shitro today, deluded oafs that most of us are...

Malcolm wrote:

Chang chog is a kind of rite where the ghandarva of a deceased person is summoned, and given instructions, as well as put through some empowerment -like procedures (but they are not actual empowerments) so that their obscurations are purified. But is not passive, you are not doing it FOR them, you are GUIDING them through the rites in the same way a guru guides you through visualizations in an empowerment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 1st, 2016 at 12:46 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is one of the key advantages of Dzogchen tantras, in that they go through the 60 wrong views prevalent in India, step by step, identifying people such as the founder of Advaita, Shankarācarya, and other Hindu polemicists, such as Kumārila Bhaṭṭa, an exponent of Purvamimamsa who studied directly with Dharmakīrti, who criticized Buddhists and Jains for using colloquial language and for grammatical lapses.

maybay said:

You've lumped colloquial language and grammatical lapses together like they are both faults.

Malcolm wrote:

No, Kumārila did -- get some glasses.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 1st, 2016 at 12:46 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

. I think what gets forgotten here is that what is being described might be beyond the understanding of ordinary people...

Malcolm wrote:

You mean the ordinary people who are supposedly freed from self-grasping because some yogi enters samadhi on mahāmudra? Just recall, Dzogchungpa, you brought it up, so the response to this is on your head. There is a reason why a master with students ceases to debate after a time. Your penchant for stirring controversy actually damages others.

maybay said:

Its ironic that you can speak from Dzogchungpa's experience, but deny Garchen Rinpoche that prerogative.

Malcolm wrote:

Not denying anyone anything. The way GR's statement is presented is as an actual objective fact "Do this, this happens." It was not presented as some kind of subjective path experience.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 1st, 2016 at 12:45 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

It gets translated as following the guru for a long time.

Malcolm wrote:

Time means the third empowerment. Whatever translation you read, the translator did not understand the sense of the passage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 1st, 2016 at 12:43 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, many students of Buddhadharma are insufficiently educated in non-Buddhist tenets, and thus do not observe wrong views that creep into their understanding.

maybay said:

By the way, earlier in the thread I asked what you learnt from Krsnamacarya's student.

Malcolm wrote:

Yoga, Saṃkhya and Advaita [his own view], with a smattering of Viṣṭadvaita [Krishnamācārya's view].

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 1st, 2016 at 12:00 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

florin said:

But how can G R's remarks be so heretical ?

Unless the people who are translating him dont understand his instructions...

treehuggingoctopus said:

They need not be heretical, you know. His saying that "the ground of our minds is the same" may be construed as perfectly orthodox (meaning there is just one nature of the mind, not that we are all a Brahman-like multientity) -- and the same applies to the instructions he has received from Khenpo Munsel (see here: <https://www.dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=40&t=16164&p=226936>).

Even this bit does not necessarily suggest that we are all Borg:

Garchen Rinpoche said:

[...]the essence of the suffering of the sentient beings of the three realms and the essence of our own suffering is the same. If you see them to be the same, if you see them as being non-dual, and then meditate on that suffering, in the mind's natural state, that suffering goes away. At that moment, you have been able to lessen the suffering of all sentient beings of the three realms, all at once.

treehuggingoctopus said:

I mean, if you can dedicate your practice for the benefit of others (and they do benefit from it somehow), why would you not be able to use tonglen like that? We are all connected, after all.

Malcolm wrote:

If we understand such instructions as being an experience on the path, with no real function outside of the practitioner's personal experience, there is no problem with such instructions. For example, it is well known that buddhas only see sentient beings as buddhas. But the fact that buddhas see us as buddhas does not diminish our own obscured experience, our own impure vision, one iota.

If we, in a state of delusion, think we are in fact really removing the illnesses and misery of others through gtong len practice, for example, we have not understood one word of what gtong len teachings are in actuality—a method of developing the courage necessary to make the leap from aspirational bodhicitta to engaged bodhicitta.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 11:50 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

. I think what gets forgotten here is that what is being described might be beyond the understanding of ordinary people...

Malcolm wrote:

You mean the ordinary people who are supposedly freed from self-grasping because some yogi enters samadhi on mahāmudra? Just recall, Dzogchungpa, you brought it up, so the response to this is on your head. There is a reason why a master with students ceases to debate after a time. Your penchant for stirring controversy actually damages others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 11:46 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Here's another thing about guru yoga. Sure Hevajra says blessing comes from making offerings to the guru and ones own merit. But I'd argue the effect or feeling you get from any guru yoga you can also get from visualization of one hand implement of a deity. So all these mandala offerings and beseeching prayers to transfer blessing are really doing something else: they are habituating you to want it so bad you won't quit. Dzogchen is doing GY like my hand implement. It's reasoning what is the essence of the guru and the lineage and boiling it down to a symbol. If a master can make all that clear, mother that's an amazing master. The others are running an outfit, with teaching policies and such, based only ancient attitudes, like Olympic repetitions.

Malcolm wrote:

Specifically, the Hevajra Tantra states:

Here there is no method and wisdom, the appearance of true reality can't be described by another, the connate cannot be found anywhere,
but one can understand it in dependence on the Guru, time and method, and from one's merit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

I agree. The texts are the only way to separate the teaching from the innovations that creep in to these little semi formal private interviews and intimate instructions.

maybay said:

"The texts" abound with controversy. The error is not in not fact checking teachings, its in drawing your own conclusions about their applicability based on your experience of them alone, a naïveté the Zen school is renowned for.

Astus said:

Isn't it the Dalai Lama who urges return to Nalanda style Buddhism when teachers were proficient in engaging with non-Buddhist thinkers? I think the error that seems to be in Garchen Rinpoche's teaching comes from being surrounded only by Buddhists. I see similar teachings in East Asian Buddhism as well that can be easily interpreted as a sort of substance/substratum doctrine. But again, I attribute the development of such terminology to the lack of an opposite party that teaches any type of eternal spirit theory, because without them there is no reason to be careful and strict in how one teaches the Dharma. Apparently in India they had to keep the sword of wisdom sharp to cut off all sorts of wrong views, and there was no place for anything that even resembles an atman.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, many students of Buddhadharma are insufficiently educated in non-Buddhist tenets, and thus do not observe wrong views that creep into their understanding. Combine this with the attitude that one's guru cannot possibly be incorrect with respect to any aspect of the Dharma, and one can see that there is a great possibility for many people to adopt many inferior views. This is one of the key advantages of Dzogchen tantras, in that they go through the 60 wrong views prevalent in India, step by step, identifying people such as the founder of Advaita, Shankarācarya, and other Hindu polemicists, such as Kumārila Bhaṭṭa, an exponent of Purvamimamsa who studied directly with Dharmakīrti, who criticized Buddhists and Jains for using colloquial language and for grammatical lapses.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 10:19 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Dzogchen?

Content:

JAC72 said:

Just curious what people think in terms of the practice and result. Do both Dzogchen and Mahamudra lead to the same kind of awakening?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. But their paths are quite different.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 10:02 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

GR said something similar to me in the past. I asked about guru yoga and why it works. He said bc the dharmakaya is all pervasive. I said that sounds like Hindu Brahman, which I knew something about. He said here we mean God is not a creator of that what Buddha means by God is cause and effect. They say he's realized. He definitely has special qualities.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha told us we must test any teachings the way a goldsmith tests gold. This does not pass my assay.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 8:18 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

gzodzilpa said:

In light of this discussion on the non-actual transference of things like "blessings", what does Garchen Rinpoche mean when he says:

"When you abide within a state of mahamudra without any grasping or thinking at all, within that nature the vows of the three levels of the path are one. And then there are sentient beings who have not realized that, so great compassion then arises for those sentient beings. And because our minds are connected and because you rest in the nature of the mind, if you pervade the mind of beings with bodhicitta then in each session of practice you can destroy the self-grasping of countless sentient beings. So developing the stages of practice will actually produce such a power, therefore I am very grateful for such a curriculum."

Malcolm wrote:

If this really was true, then there would no longer be any reason for samsara now, would there? So when a guru says something, even a guru as revered as Garchen Rinpoche, for whom I have great respect, we have to subject it to reasoning and not merely be content with nice sounding platitudes that make us feel warm and fuzzy.

The alternative explanation is that so few people are capable of such an equipoise, Buddhas included, as to render it meaningless.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Perhaps you'd be better off trying to understand the views of a great master rather than disparaging them? You might learn something.

Malcolm wrote:

So you accept what Garchen Rinpoche is here presented as saying? Good for you. I don't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 8:17 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Interest in Dharma doesn't exist from it's own side; even our interest develops from receiving Buddha's blessings.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a nonsense argument, a complete non sequitur.

Tsongkhapa said:

I'm not saying that Buddhas liberate us with no effort on our part, that's your misunderstanding of what I'm saying. It's a co-operative effort - the Buddhas provide teachings, blessings and emanations and we practise the path.

Malcolm wrote:

In other words, no matter what buddhas may do or not, it is of no use to us unless we practice the path they present.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 8:12 PM

Title: Re: Emptiness: the reality beyond reality

Content:

Stewart said:

To be fair, this teaching would most likely have been given by Rinpoche in Tibetan, translated into English, then was definitely edited by someone for his first book

Malcolm wrote:

Fair enough.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 11:08 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

gzodzilpa said:

When our local khenpo gets back from Tibet I'll ask him, he has some ties to Garchen and might have a novel interpretation.

dzogchungpa said:

Can you also ask him about this explanation of tonglen:

<https://www.dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=40&t=16164&p=226936>

and this statement: Ultimately, there is a single ground within which all beings are one.

Because we are connected to all beings on the ultimate level, we can pervade them with love. They can actually receive our love.

while you're at it?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this doctrine is equally problematical for so many reasons, not least of which are the personal obscurations sentient beings possess which would prevent them from receiving this all-embracing universal love via the basis.

I am not sure what it was in Tibetan Garchen Rinpoche might have said. Thus, while I can comment on the doctrine of those statements presented to me, I cannot comment on Garchen Rinpoche's actual point of view since I have never seen in his own writing such dictums, nor have I heard them spoken, in person or by recording. Thus are the vicissitudes of not listening to gurus in languages we understand and depending on others to interpret their words for us.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 6:48 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Yes, it is good that we have people like you to subject our teachers' statements to reasoning for us.

Malcolm wrote:

Someone has to, since, apparently, some of you won't.

But there are a great number of who prefer platitudes to liberation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 6:21 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

gzodzilpa said:

In light of this discussion on the non-actual transference of things like "blessings", what does Garchen Rinpoche mean when he says:

"When you abide within a state of mahamudra without any grasping or thinking at all, within that nature the vows of the three levels of the path are one. And then there are sentient beings who have not realized that, so great compassion then arises for those sentient beings. And because our minds are connected and because you rest in the nature of the mind, if you pervade the mind of beings with bodhicitta then in each session of practice you can destroy the self-grasping of countless sentient beings. So developing the stages of practice will actually produce such a power, therefore I am very grateful for such a curriculum."

Malcolm wrote:

If this really was true, then there would no longer be any reason for samsara now, would there? So when a guru says something, even a guru as revered as Garchen Rinpoche, for whom I have great respect, we have to subject it to reasoning and not merely be content with nice sounding platitudes that make us feel warm and fuzzy.

The alternative explanation is that so few people are capable of such an equipoise, Buddhas included, as to render it meaningless.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 3:24 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

conebeckham said:

Now we're getting somewhere!

The mind transformed from one state to another state---through the inspiration of holy beings....show me where something is transmitted from such holy beings to ourselves, to transform our minds. Whose inspiration are you speaking of? The inspiration we, as disciples, feel? The inspiration of our gurus? Think carefully about this.

Tsongkhapa said:

Inspiration is itself a product of receiving blessings from enlightened beings. How can we receive inspiration from holy beings if there's no FROM? Of course there is a transmission. You are right though, there are many different levels of meaning that need to be understood.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, any blessings you receive from a buddha comes from your own interest in the Dharma. If you are not interested, there is no way a Buddha can force you to be interested. As they say, you can lead a horse to water, but you cannot make him drink.

Buddhas are not like momma cats that pick their kittens up by the neck and carry them to a safe place. Again, that is a Christian view, not a Buddhist one.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 2:58 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, according to the sūtra abhisamaya presented by Maitreyanatha. But this is irrelevant to Vajrayāna and Dzogchen.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Completely mistaken. You will ever attain enlightenment without bodhicitta and without these levels. There is no enlightenment without bodhicitta, there are no Tantric realisations without it.

Malcolm wrote:

I never said we did not have to have bodhicitta. I said that the presentation of the paths and stage presented in the Abhisamayalamkāra, including the 22 bodhicittas are irrelevant to Vajrayāna and Dzogchen. The Abhisamayalamkāra is a presentation of the vehicle of the cause. It is not relevant the vehicle of transformation (general Vajrayāna) or the vehicle of self-liberation (Atiyoga).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 2:56 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Also, mere intellectual understanding of Dharma is never going to remove suffering and its causes from our minds. You can debate endlessly on this forum but it's never going to end samsara.

Malcolm wrote:

You can hope for all the blessings you want, but it will never end your samsara. Your view is fundamentally Christian, hoping for external blessings for your salvation. What a pity.

Tsongkhapafan said:

That's your mistaken interpretation of what I've said. You don't understand what blessings are so how can you discuss my view?

Malcolm wrote:

I know what the masters of the past have said blessings are, and what they say and what you say do not correspond. You are relying on your own unenlightened experience as a proof of your tenet. I am relying on the definitions provided to us by realized Indian Panditas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 2:48 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Also, mere intellectual understanding of Dharma is never going to remove suffering and its causes from our minds. You can debate endlessly on this forum but it's never going to end samsara.

Malcolm wrote:

You can hope for all the blessings you want, but it will never end your samsara. Your view is fundamentally Christian, hoping for external blessings for your salvation. What a pity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 2:47 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

[

There is something new.

Malcolm wrote:

No. Buddha qualities are not something new, added to a sentient being. They are revealed through the process of stripping away the two obscurations that make a sentient being a sentient being.

Tsongkhapafan said:

There's nothing 'added' to a sentient being, but it is new. Sangye means 'purified and gathered'

Malcolm wrote:

Sangs means purified it is true, but rgyas in fact means "to expand" -- hence sangs rgyas means "Purification of afflictions, expansion of pristine consciousness."

Tsongkhapafan said:

There are 22 levels of bodhichitta which are developed through training, so it's not merely a matter of purifying the mind.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, according to the sūtra abhisamaya presented by Maitreyanatha. But this is irrelevant to Vajrayāna and Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 2:36 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Wow, I'm completely amazed. You don't know what blessings are from your own experience but have to refer to dictionary definitions?

Malcolm wrote:

The works of the masters included in the bstan 'gyur serve to correct our (in this case your) mistaken interpretation of our experiences. I am surprised you a) do not know this b) do not accept this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 2:34 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

There's a nice discussion of this in chapter 6 of CTR's Profound Treasury volume 3, "Seven Aspects of Vajrayana: The Space before First Thought".

BTW, it appears that the entire chapter can be read here:

<https://books.google.com/books?id=0QHEAwAAQBAJ&pg=PT137>

florin said:

So basically, CTR is saying that the atmosphere of blessing is generated by one's own mind and comes about as a result of one's training.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup. That is why we are nang pas, insiders, not phyi pas, outsiders.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 2:33 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Byin means, according to Kenkar, "The ability or power of being able to transform the thoughts or vision of others."

Rlob means similarly, "granting or transforming."

I am not sure why people waste their time with Duff when they could just read what Kenkar says about these words.

By the same token, mos pa means "mental confidence or mental yearning"; gus pa "mental bowing."

conebeckham said:

Duff is on my Phone. I don't have Kenkar.

LOL

I should get Kenkar's work, I suppose, eh?

Malcolm wrote:

Basic problem with Duff is that he takes Das as reliable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 2:16 AM

Title: Re: Should emptiness be discussed online at all?

Content:

AlexMcLeod said:

Again, I'm only talking about the tendency to belittle the prerequisite practices and understandings by taking the stance that they don't matter because Emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

I just don't see that here.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 2:11 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

conebeckham said:

Interestingly, the Tibetan word byin.brlabs. is glossed as "Blessing" but Tony Duff glosses brlabs.pa/rlob.pa as "to be touched by something else from a distance and affected by it."

"Being affected by" is certainly a cornerstone of Dharma, interdependence, etc., but this does not mean something is transferred or transmitted from one entity to another.

My interpretation is that devotion is both cause and result. It is the result of hearing, reflecting, and meditating, and it is a contributing cause of realization.

Devotion is mos.gus., by the way. mos.pa meaning "longing" and gus.pa meaning "respect."

Malcolm wrote:

Byin means, according to Kenkar, "The ability or power of being able to transform the thoughts or vision of others."

Rlob means similarly, "granting or transforming."

I am not sure why people waste their time with Duff when they could just read what Kenkar says about these words.

By the same token, mos pa means "mental confidence or mental yearning"; gus pa "mental bowing."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 12:37 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

florin said:

Thanks.

And since Buddhas activities are unceasing means that for as long as we stay connected to the teachings we are by implication connected to their activities(blessings).

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. However, what is the highest and best activity of the buddhas? Giving teachings. So of course, we can regard the teachings of the Buddha as a blessing. But there is no force nor blessing that will allow us to realize the meaning of those teachings unless we ourselves put them into practice. So in reality, blessings still come from us, not from the buddhas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

What are blessings? Some kind of vibration?

florin said:

I don't know.You tell me.

They are present in tantra and dzogchen alike and i've heard it numerous times that they are responsible for the state of realization.

heart said:

Blessing means that you have a direct experience of what your master teach you or taught you which greatly inspires you. Nothing gets transferred.

/magnus

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 12:17 AM

Title: Re: Emptiness: the reality beyond reality

Content:

Ngwang tenzin said:

What's the difference between emptiness and clarity?

Malcolm wrote:

Emptiness is the absence of the four extremes in a mind stream. Clarity is the mind's capacity to illuminate objects. They are inseparable. Rocks don't have clarity, being inert, but they are empty.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 12:15 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

florin said:

I don't know.You tell me.

They are present in tantra and dzogchen alike and i've heard it numerous times that they are responsible for the state of realization.

heart said:

Blessing means that you have a direct experience of what your master teach you or taught you which greatly inspires you. Nothing gets transferred.

/magnus

florin said:

But what do they mean when they use expressions like "blessings of the lineage" ? Or the situation when people do GY and they say "all of a sudden i felt this or that , or this and that happen, which were none other than the blessings of my teacher " ?

Malcolm wrote:

Following my post above, it simple means that they practice a path through their own interest, and reaped some of the fruits that path offered, which in humility, they attribute to their teacher as the source of the teachings they practice. But there is no actual blessing "vibration" or "force," like the Hindus believe, for example, their shaktipat, etc. Nevertheless, people will continue to believe this silliness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 12:13 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

krodha said:

You seem to be arguing for no reason at this point.

Malcolm wrote:

It's a Greek thing.

Sherab Dorje said:

A Greek thing? Really?

Malcolm wrote:

By your own admission, many times.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 31st, 2016 at 12:13 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

florin said:

But the blessings get transferred.

If there are no blessings how can one realize the state of the real teacher ?

Malcolm wrote:

What are blessings? Some kind of vibration?

florin said:

I don't know.You tell me.

They are present in tantra and dzogchen alike and i've heard it numerous times that they are responsible for the state of realization.

Malcolm wrote:

As ChNN says, if you want a blessing, go get a lama to pat you on the head. But "blessings" of this kind are not something serious.

First, we have to look at what the word really means. According to Alak Kenkar's dictionary, Bod rgya tshig mdzod, "A blessing (byin brlabs, adhiṣṭhānam) is the power of dwelling on a topic of the Dharma of the noble path." In other words, if you dwell on the topics of Dzogchen teachings, or any of the Buddha's teaching, that in itself is a "blessing."

Alak Kenkar adds another entry, "the four blessings" (byin rlabs bzhi), which are the blessing of truth, the blessing of generosity, the blessing of pacification, and the blessing of wisdom.

The "blessing of wisdom," according to the only source in the bstan 'gyur which defines it, Dharmakīrti's Jātakamālaṭīkā, simply means that among the six perfections, those inclined towards wisdom maintain the perfection of wisdom.

So according to these definitions, blessings refer to one's own interest in the path.

The commentary on the Ratnavali has another good definition of "blessings":

A "blessing" is any activity performed by the buddhas for bodhisattvas or done by them for the benefit of sentient beings."

So here, a blessing means some activity buddhas do on behalf of bodhisattvas or sentient beings. But it certainly does not mean that buddhas and bodhisattvas have the capacity to transfer their own realization to another.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 30th, 2016 at 11:28 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

krodha said:

You seem to be arguing for no reason at this point.

Malcolm wrote:

It's a Greek thing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 30th, 2016 at 11:05 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Please present a statement from tantra where it says the Buddha can transfer his realization to another.

florin said:

But the blessings get transferred.

If there are no blessings how can one realize the state of the real teacher ?

Malcolm wrote:

What are blessings? Some kind of vibration?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 30th, 2016 at 10:08 PM

Title: Re: Emptiness: the reality beyond reality

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Stong pa translates śūnya. Nyid translates tā = śūnyatā. The first part means "empty," the tā suffix is equivalent to "ness" in English, hence the term "emptiness" is really the most accurate translation of that term into English.

Here, Mingyur Rinpoche is not carefully distinguishing two different things: 1) the experience of nonconceptuality, which is often termed "the experience of emptiness" in Tibetan texts, and 2) the emptiness which is the doctrine of the Prajñāpāramitā sūtras and Madhyamaka. The latter cannot be experienced in conceptually in meditation. The former can.

Lucas Oliveira said:

Emptiness: the reality beyond reality

Mingyur Rinpoche explains emptiness, "one of the most misunderstood words" of Buddhist philosophy

“The sense of openness people experience when they simply rest their minds is known in Buddhism as emptiness, which is probably one of the most misunderstood words in Buddhist philosophy. It is hard enough for Buddhists to understand the term, but Western readers have an even more difficult time, because many of the early translations of Sanskrit and Tibetan texts interpreted emptiness as “the Void” or nothingness—mistakenly equating emptiness with the idea that nothing at all exists. Nothing could be further from the truth the Buddha sought to describe.

While the Buddha did teach that the nature of mind—in fact the nature of all phenomena—is emptiness, he didn’t mean that their nature was truly empty, like a vacuum. He said it was emptiness, which in the Tibetan language is made up of two words: tongpa-nyi. The word tongpa means “empty”, but only in the sense of something beyond our ability to perceive with our senses and our capacity to conceptualize. Maybe a better translation would be “inconceivable” or “unnamable.” The word nyi, meanwhile, doesn’t have any particular meaning in everyday Tibetan conversation. But when added to another word it conveys a sense of “possibility”—a sense that anything can arise, anything can happen. So when Buddhist talk about emptiness, we don’t mean nothingness, but rather an unlimited potential for anything to appear, change, or disappear.

Source English: <http://inthefootstepsofthebuddha.com/an-exercise-in-emptiness/>

Source in Portuguese: <http://dharma-log.com/2016/07/27/mingyur-rinpoche-explica-vacuidade-filosofia-budista/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 30th, 2016 at 9:51 PM

Title: Re: Should emptiness be discussed online at all?

Content:

AlexMcLeod said:

Bringing Emptiness into conversation about ethics, for instance, is inappropriate, and possibly purposefully misleading. That is all I've been saying.

Malcolm wrote:

Not at all. Aryadeva states, for example, when confronted with a choice to choose ethics or choose emptiness, his choice is emptiness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 30th, 2016 at 8:43 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

[

There is something new.

Malcolm wrote:

No. Buddha qualities are not something new, added to a sentient being. They are revealed through the process of stripping away the two obscurations that make a sentient being a sentient being.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 30th, 2016 at 8:40 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Please present a statement from tantra where it says the Buddha can transfer his realization to another.

Tsongkhapa said:

It's not explicitly mentioned...

Malcolm wrote:

Then it is not mentioned.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 30th, 2016 at 5:27 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

It's not true that Buddha cannot bestow an awakened mind.

Malcolm wrote:

You mean you disagree with the Buddha's own statement?

"One cannot wash away misdeeds with water, nor remove suffering with one's hand. I cannot give you my realization, but I can teach you the path."

Tsongkhapa said:

I don't disagree with it, but Buddha taught different things to different groups depending on their karma and in accordance with his skilful means. It is possible to receive realisations through the power of blessings and faith in Guru Yoga. It is a co-operative process, so Buddha is correct - he cannot bestow them unless the recipient is co-operating and has created all the causes. It's not something he talked about in Sutra.

Malcolm wrote:

Please present a statement from tantra where it says the Buddha can transfer his realization to another.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 30th, 2016 at 12:35 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

conebeckham said:

...grandiose egotism parading as Dharma.

Malcolm wrote:

Kim's grandiose egotism has definitely been on display...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 30th, 2016 at 12:25 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Kim said:

OK. I think I've said enough.

Malcolm wrote:
Too much, actually.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, August 30th, 2016 at 12:18 AM
Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that Content:
Kim said:
For those people here who are against me...

Malcolm wrote:
Against you? Not a chance. Pity you and especially your followers? Absolutely.

Kim said:
I have criticised a lot of lamas and teachers but never (as) stupidly (as here) and without basis.

Malcolm wrote:
You have provided ample basis for understanding you are a sad, deluded man.

BTW, folks, here is what Kim's 9th bhumi looks like:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Honestly, I am amazed at the kind of schtick people on the internet will fall for.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, August 29th, 2016 at 11:07 PM
Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
The dude is a crazy person. Best ignored.

Kim said:
I am not a buddhist teacher, nor are Open Heart teachings buddhist...I don't see the relevance of my work as a teacher and Open Heart on a buddhist forum

gzodzilpa said:

Seems a little misleading, since in 2015 you were explicitly claiming to be a Buddhist teacher. Furthermore, how is what you are doing not a gross instance of appropriation? You are explicitly and extensively using Buddhist jargon, from beginning to end, from the refuge to the practices to the "goal". You can't on one hand say you are teaching "Tibetan Heart Yoga", "guru yoga", "Machig Labdron guru mantra", and "ati yoga" and then on the other pretend that you aren't trying to teach Buddhism or at least give an impression to your students that you are teaching Buddhism. What makes your Heart Yoga "Tibetan"?

Gross appropriation especially seems to be the case when you are willfully redefining terms, like "bhumi" as it pertains to the stages of a bodhisattva, to suit this end. On one hand it helps one market as if there was some relationship with traditional Bhumis, while on the other hand allows one to shield yourself from criticism since you just appeal to them being redefined. When you could of easily just used a completely different word altogether...It seems to me to be incredibly dishonest, this whole business of being "explicitly" non-Buddhist yet implicitly Buddhist.

Kim said:

For this reason I can teach what I have learned from my teachers, who have permitted me to do so.

gzodzilpa said:

Kim, at least some of the content you have gleaned from books and from having dialogue with Buddhist practitioners or hearing teachings from living Buddhist teachers. You ask questions under the guise of merely "verifying" what you "received" during meditation. More than one person has interacted with you and was left saddened by your insincerity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 29th, 2016 at 8:29 PM

Title: Re: Some towns in France ban burkinis

Content:

Wayfarer said:

So tolerance of dissenting views may be basic to Western liberalism, but it is alien to Islamic culture, generally.

Malcolm wrote:

This proves how very little you know of Islam, its history or its diversity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 29th, 2016 at 8:28 PM

Title: Re: Some towns in France ban burkinis

Content:

boda said:

For example, in the United States nudity is illegal

Malcolm wrote:

Not everywhere. For example, in the state of Vermont there is no anti-nudity law. In Brattleboro VT., one can be naked anywhere within city limits apart from two sidewalks on one block in the center of town, and near churches and schools.

<http://www.sevendaysvt.com/vermont/wtf-why-is-public-nudity-legal-in-vermont-but-public-disrobing-isnt/Content?oid=2804753>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 29th, 2016 at 3:46 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

maybay said:

Come on guys didn't you ever think u might have been on the bhumis? Its the sign of his efforts in meditation exceeding his experience. For what its worth, I thought at one point I must have been an Arhat, and I've still not read anything since to conclusively disprove that.

Malcolm wrote:

You post here, and that is sufficient to disprove it.

maybay said:

Posting here proves nothing.

Malcolm wrote:

It proves you are not even a stream entrant, much less an arhat. However, I am sure if you sign up for our friend Kim's bhumi mapping, he will sort you out for a small donation.

<http://www.en.openheart.fi/97>

He says:

If you are familiar with the Open Heart Bhumi Model, you may wish to get your bhumi mapped, if you are not sure about it yourself. You are welcome to send your photo (face and eyes clearly seen as in a passport photo) to Kim for bhumi analysis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 29th, 2016 at 3:14 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

maybay said:

Come on guys didn't you ever think u might have been on the bhumis? Its the sign of his efforts in meditation exceeding his experience. For what its worth, I thought at one point I must have been an Arhat, and I've still not read anything since to conclusively disprove that.

Malcolm wrote:

You post here, and that is sufficient to disprove it.

And, Maybay, once you hit the bhumis, then you don't leave them. The question is only, how long does it take you to reach the stage of irreversibility [eighth bhumi] and cease taking rebirth in the desire realm?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 29th, 2016 at 3:09 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Malcolm, once again you hit the nail on the head. I wonder how no one here seems to question, investigate and criticise what this man says. Based on your many posts and private messages with you, it seems like you can say anything and get away with it, without nobody making questions. Honestly, I think that you subtly manipulate discussions and push what you want to say. Doesn't anyone question this man or are his credentials too great to do that?

Wow, you really haven't paid much attention here..people argue with Malcolm all the time, I've done so myself. Malcolm can be abrasive for sure, but I've rarely seen him pull the "shut up I'm a teacher" thing.

Malcolm wrote:

You've never seen me do that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 29th, 2016 at 2:08 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

monktastic said:

Kim, on page one you say that a lecture by Alan Wallace (given Jun 2016) caused something to click for you re: recognizing rigpa. Doesn't that seem incommensurate with being a 9th bhumi bodhisattva?

Malcolm wrote:

Really, you are much too nice of a person.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 29th, 2016 at 1:19 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Norwegian said:

It's pretty sad.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, we live in a day full of self-deluded people, reincarnations of samaya breakers, who, with an internet connection, a facebook account, a blog, and a website, can easily set themselves up as gurus and spread their delusion around without any impediment.

If anyone doubted why restrictions on Dzogchen teachings have been imposed by Vajradhara, episodes such as this one should prove instructive.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 29th, 2016 at 12:15 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

gad rgyangs said:

it's hard to know what to make of a character like that. On the one hand, its hard to believe anyone short of a schizophrenic could actually believe that they were a 9th bhumi bodhisattva who has received teachings from Padmasambhava and Garab Dorje. But the other alternative is that he's a con man who is perfectly aware of the scam he is trying to pull. or maybe those dharmapalas he pissed off really fuked him up more than he realizes.

Malcolm wrote:

Provocations, anyone?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 29th, 2016 at 12:11 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 28th, 2016 at 10:47 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Kim said:

As I said I am just a student of buddhadharma, not a teacher of the tradition.

Malcolm wrote:

You are certainly acting like a teacher:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

And here:

<http://www.en.openheart.fi/33>

So I think your statement above is completely dishonest.

gad rgyangs said:

wow! at the bottom of his bio there is a link to a list of his teachers. under "teachers without a physical body" he claims hes received teachings directly from both Padmasambhava and Garab Dorje!

Malcolm wrote:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 28th, 2016 at 9:46 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Kim said:

As I said I am just a student of buddhadharma, not a teacher of the tradition.

Malcolm wrote:

You are certainly acting like a teacher:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

And here:

<http://www.en.openheart.fi/33>

So I think your statement above is completely dishonest.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 28th, 2016 at 9:05 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Kim said:

How will it harm anyone to speak openly about practical instructions and view for recognising rigpa?

malcolm said:

It will harm one's samaya and will create an obstacle for those people who have not entered the teachings in a proper way to enter the teachings at all.

Kim said:

Bullcrap. "Create an obstacle"? How religious one has to be to believe this stuff!? Seriously.

Malcolm wrote:

As far as this goes, I will remind you of your own words, on another forum:

The moment I got the book on secret dzogchen practices by Namkhai Norbu and started reading it, I was attacked by very aggressive and violent subtle entities. At first I couldn't figure out what was happening. I was under a very violent attack on three consecutive days, until I figured out that these entities were the dharma protectors (dharma palas) of this particular dzogchen tradition and rinpoche. These attacks were so violent that I couldn't see with my physical eyes properly and got bad headaches. My interpretation of what happened was that these beings, dharma palas went after me because they have been programmed to do so if anyone trespassed their territory. It was like being in the ring with a professional heavy weight boxer who is out to finish you and who doesn't stop until you're knocked out. It was very serious. When I figured what was going on I burned the book and instantly carried the ashes out. The attack stopped... which was great because I finally got to recuperate. It was like having to engage in mortal combat for three days, that serious. These "dharma protectors" had attacked me so hard that my vitality had gone very low.

<http://www.dharmaoverground.org/discussion/->

/message_boards/message/5854797#_com_liferay_message_boards_web_portlet_MBPortlet_message_5854241

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 28th, 2016 at 8:49 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

It's not true that Buddha cannot bestow an awakened mind.

Malcolm wrote:

You mean you disagree with the Buddha's own statement?

"One cannot wash away misdeeds with water, nor remove suffering with one's hand. I cannot give you my realization, but I can teach you the path."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 28th, 2016 at 3:44 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen teachings may only be openly shared and discussed with people who have received Dzogchen transmission in a proper way.

Kim said:

Fine. I disagree with all this secrecy.

Malcolm wrote:

It's your samaya, not mine. Personally, I find such an attitude disrespectful to the teachings themselves.

Kim said:

No, Guru Rinpoche never made such a prediction. What the Dzogchen tantras state is that Dzogchen was the first teaching at the beginning of this great eon, and will be the last to remain before this universe is destroyed.

You are wrong.

Malcolm wrote:

Wrong about the Guru Rinpoche quote? Maybe. I would want to see a reliably sourced citation.

Wrong about my statement, not a chance. It is clearly stated in the Single Son of the All the Buddhas tantra.

Kim said:

How will it harm anyone to speak openly about practical instructions and view for recognising rigpa?

It will harm one's samaya and will create an obstacle for those people who have not entered the teachings in a proper way to enter the teachings at all.

Bullcrap. "Create an obstacle"? How religious one has to be to believe this stuff!? Seriously.

Malcolm wrote:

Please make sure you tell any authentic teacher of Dzogchen from whom you are interested in receiving teachings that this is your attitude. There are guardians of the teachings who are responsible for punishing those who do not keep their samaya. Only a fool messes with this. As they say however, "Angels fear to tread..."

Kim said:

Rather, the discussion is on a superficial level.

Malcolm wrote:

Necessarily so. It is also good that this is so. But there are plenty of places on Facebook, for example, when people of rampant egotism boast about their paltry experience and blab about things of which they understand little. Perhaps you will find some like-minded people there.

Kim said:

I'm pretty sure that if I posted here instructions for doing this, it would not be allowed. Rightly so, such instructions are meant to be used by a qualified master in a live situation with students who have expressed sincere interest and devotion to the Dzogchen teachings.

Interest and devotion. Our true nature (rigpa) requires none of this. It doesn't and cannot accept followers or servants. A true master will accept none of this.

Malcolm wrote:

This is the approach of Jax and others like him.

Understanding Dzogchen requires the five faculties, just like any other teaching of the Buddha. What are the five? Faith, diligence, mindfulness, samadhi and wisdom.

Kim said:

What I am telling you is that apart from some western, self-appointed "Dzogchen" masters who imagine they can give direct introduction through email, no Dzogchen master worth their salt on the face of the planet thinks that it is sufficient to read some techniques derived from Dzogchen teachings and try to apply them without having been introduced to Dzogchen in a proper way. Of course, people will still chase after charlatans and fools, but there is little one can do to prevent that, apart from communicating the authentic requirements for entering Dzogchen teachings in a pure, guileless way.

I do not disagree with the fact that probably no one can recognise rigpa without a long committed practices, of various kinds. I recall two of my friends who are/have been very committed orthodox dzogchen-practitioners of well known and respected lineages. The other of them, who trained with his rinpoche for over 15 years, and received the highest empowerments in the tradition among other close circle students, while acknowledging the efficacy of some of it, said what many people out there say, that mostly people are seduced with foreign terms of "dzogchen" or "rigpa" but what they taught are boring lectures of emptiness and compassion that do not really explain what is talked about. Lamas are setting the carrots of "dzogchen" on front of donkeys and they start running, someday somehow hoping to be granted "dzogchen" whatever they understand it to be. Nobody explains this stuff to them, except after 12 years of a lot of doing this and that, to a small group of chosen students. This happened to my friend. He felt he'd been conned, while saying that a small part of all that he was taught during 15 years was actually of practical use. And he got the highest teachings after catching direct introduction. I've heard many such stories, also from vajrayana. So tell me, who is a fool and a charlatan? There is no transparency in orthodox dzogchen. This allows a lot of unhealthiness.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, if you are interested in Dzogchen teachings, you need to meet an authentic master of Dzogchen. There have never been more than a few in any generation, and they are dwindling.

That said, your friend gathered the two accumulations for fifteen years. This is not insignificant, and is a necessary prerequisite to any teaching belonging to Secret Mantra. It is not like his store of merit took a nose dive.

For example, Vimalamitra notes in his commentary on the root tantra of Dzogchen, the Realms and Transformations of Sound:

Prior to those preliminaries, those sublime persons did various methods of gathering accumulations.

It is very important for any Dzogchen practitioners to engage constantly in the practice of purification and accumulation.

As to some unscrupulous teachers using the name Dzogchen to attract students in the manner of setting out beef but selling dog meat, these kinds of teachers will meet their own unsavory ends.

We just need to keep reminding people to search out and follow authentic masters of Dzogchen teachings, and not to settle for anything less. If you study with someone who advertises themselves as a teacher of Dzogchen, but they never teach Dzogchen, there is no chain binding you to that teacher.

It is not the case that there is a "traditional" way of presenting Dzogchen, as opposed to a modern way. There is only one way, and that is the way Dzogchen has been promulgated in this world since the time of Garab Dorje.

Kim said:

I don't have a problem holding the teachings in high regard. "But they are the property of the whole human kind.

Malcolm wrote:

No, in fact they are the property, if you want to put it that way, of the guardians of the teachings, to whom the teachings were entrusted for care and safekeeping on behalf of those of us in this degenerate era who have the karmic good fortune to meet them and be devoted to them.

Not all human beings are interested in Dzogchen just as not all human beings have a precious human birth.

Even if you explained every detail of Dzogchen teachings to them they would be like, "What the hell, I don't believe in rainbow bodies, reincarnation, etc." If you don't accept rebirth, as in every other teaching of the Buddha, you won't be able to attain liberation through Dzogchen teachings in this lifetime, the bardo or in the next life — although, as my teacher said about such people, "Maybe they can relax a little bit."

Most people are not Buddhists. Among Buddhists, very few are interested in Secret Mantra teachings, as is well illustrated by this board. Of those who are interested in Secret Mantra teachings, very few of them are interested in Dzogchen teachings. Of those people who are interested in Dzogchen teachings, very few are really that interested in practicing and studying them more than superficially. There are even fewer people, such as translators like myself, who spend the majority of their time studying and practicing these teachings.

Dzogchen teachings are rare, not because they are kept away under lock and key, Dzogchen teachings are rare because very few people have the karmic disposition and fortune to receive them. That said, anyone who is truly interested in Dzogchen teachings can go out and find a qualified teacher. One can even tune into a webcast and receive them from a qualified master for free, like right now, this week.

Kim said:

All that talk about samaya and creating obstacles. Gimme a break. That's the real tragedy.

Malcolm wrote:

Understanding that samaya must be followed and that obstacles arise from not following samaya is an integral part of Dzogchen teachings, as it is in all Secret Mantra. Its not optional — well it is, in the sense that if someone chooses not to follow samaya, no human being has the power to do anything about it. But the ḍākinīs swiftly punish those who think samaya is of no consequence at all, especially when it comes to Dzogchen teachings. Understanding the importance of samaya is foundational in Dzogchen. This is why many chapters are devoted to explaining what samayas are, both relatively and ultimately, and why it is necessary to observe them. It is not a hardship.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 28th, 2016 at 1:50 AM

Title: Re: How to believe in rebirth

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You have to ask yourself where your mind comes from. If you think it is a product of the brain, well, there is no way to really convince someone that this is not true.

boda said:

You don't think it's possible to understand the evolution of a human mind, with it's biological and environmental dependencies? Who do you hangout with?

Malcolm wrote:

That's one narrative. There are others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 28th, 2016 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, I guess we're all screwed.

Malcolm wrote:

Speak for yourself.

dzogchungpa said:

Jeez dude, lighten up.

Malcolm wrote:

Tell us your real name, then I will lighten up.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 28th, 2016 at 12:54 AM

Title: Re: Mañjuśrī Sādhana

Content:

paël said:

Can anyone recite Manjusrinamasamgiti? Does it need empowerment/transmission?

Malcolm wrote:

It requires a lung.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 28th, 2016 at 12:00 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha could't do that

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

A student to whom Dzogchen should not be taught, is as follows:

... engaged in pointless activities ...

dzogchungpa said:

Well, I guess we're all screwed.

Malcolm wrote:

Speak for yourself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 27th, 2016 at 11:50 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha could't do that

Content:

Kim said:

Mystification. I feel it is mystification when things are not pragmatically explained open. I feel that the opinion that dzogchen-pointers for practice couldn't or shouldn't be talked about on internet boards is so 90's (and pre-90's). But hey, everyone is free to think whatever.

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen teachings may only be openly shared and discussed with people who have received Dzogchen transmission in a proper way.

Kim said:

Guru Rinpoche made a prediction that goes something along the lines that at some point the lower vehicles of buddhism will lose their popularity and atiyoga (dzogchen) will gain popularity. I don't think it will ever happen with this pre-90's style of sharing, whether online or in person.

Malcolm wrote:

No, Guru Rinpoche never made such a prediction. What the Dzogchen tantras state is that Dzogchen was the first teaching at the beginning of this great eon, and will be the last to remain before this universe is destroyed.

Kim said:

How will it harm anyone to speak openly about practical instructions and view for recognising rigpa?

Malcolm wrote:

It will harm one's samaya and will create an obstacle for those people who have not entered the teachings in a proper way to enter the teachings at all.

Kim said:

Well. How much discussion and (lack of) practical pointers here have helped you (or others) in recognising rigpa?

Malcolm wrote:

One cannot recognize the basis without a qualified master to introduce it to one.

Kim said:

I'm pretty sure that if I posted here instructions for doing this, it would not be allowed.

Malcolm wrote:

Rightly so, such instructions are meant to be used by a qualified master in a live situation with students who have expressed sincere interest and devotion to the Dzogchen teachings.

Kim said:

I'm just riffing here, being honest. I am not saying that I am a "dzogchen teacher". I am not but I simply don't think instructions, using different types of techniques, couldn't be shared here for the benefit of many.

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen is not a technique.

Kim said:

"Recognising rigpa" was an intended choice of words I made. I didn't meant anything malicious or negative with this but I admit I did use these words to see if you'd get caught in them. I am sorry if this hurts anyones feelings here but I did this just to point out Malcolm's way of communication. It's just negation, "It's not like that". Then I'd be in a situation with a authorised dzogchen lama to ask, "How it is then? Could you clarify?", to which he'd say a difficult phrase in Tibetan or "These things are not discussed online" or "Find a lama and ask him".

Malcolm wrote:

What I am telling you is that apart from some western, self-appointed "Dzogchen" masters who imagine they can give direct introduction through email, no Dzogchen master worth their salt on the face of the planet thinks that it is sufficient to read some techniques derived from Dzogchen teachings and try to apply them without having been introduced to Dzogchen in a proper way. Of course, people will still chase after charlatans and fools, but there is little one can do to prevent that, apart from communicating the authentic requirements for entering Dzogchen teachings in a pure, guileless way.

Kim said:

I certainly am not saying that how things are said in Tibetan are worthless. Of course not. It's just that clearly discussion here is getting caught on things that are practically not that important.

Malcolm wrote:

Receiving Dzogchen teachings in the proper way, i.e., through receiving empowerments, reading transmissions and guidance on those from a qualified master is the most important point of all, one that I share over and over again, and will continue to share for as long as breath does not leave my body. It is the most helpful observation one can make. Why? Because I have received the three series of Dzogchen teachings from four notable masters, one whom is still with us [ChNN], and I think they are the most precious and valuable possession of knowledge that humans beings possess and will ever possess. Therefore, I regard it as a tragic pity when people are impatient and do not take the time and effort to seek out the guidance of an authentic master, or worse, think that the tried and true method of promulgating Dzogchen teachings is, in your words, "medieval thinking."

The consequences of not entering Dzogchen teachings in the proper way are described in Dzogchen tantras as follows. The Self-Arisen Vidyā Tantra states:

The faults of not obtaining the empowerment are as follows: in the bardo one is alarmed, panicked, exhausted, impeded, and one can also lose consciousness.

While one has not yet left the body of traces, migrating beings will not see one as worthy of respect. One's merit will be small, one's life short, one's enjoyments of living will be few, one will be powerless, and many obstacles will occur. Nothing will be accomplished. Those are the faults of not obtaining the empowerment for the conduct of Secret Mantra. A yogin of Secret Mantra conduct must first obtain empowerment. If empowerment is not obtained, not even the Buddha will be able to turn the wheel on the stage of a tathāgata. If the wheel cannot be turned, then the nirmanakāya will not be able to benefit migrating beings with compassion. Therefore the empowerment of the conduct of Secret Mantra must be obtained.

It continues by warning of the faults of not maintaining samaya, which is at the root of this discussion:

These are the warning signs of broken samaya:

various misfortunes arise,
diseases are rampant and harmful, various contagious diseases occur,
and there are also provocations and misguiders.

If one is killed, one becomes a hell being.

One's eyes cannot see form.

One cannot hear and one's work cannot be done.

Leprosy and blistering diseases arise.

Thieves and royal punishments occur.

One contracts contagious diseases others do not get.

One's sons and daughters die.

The whole country arises as one's enemy.

One's activities become completely pointless.

Thus, this is why we should not be discussing Dzogchen teachings in any specific way online, apart from encouraging people to find qualified Dzogchen masters under which they may study and practice.

On the fault of not receiving empowerment, the Mind Mirror of Vajrasattva Tantra states: The demonstration of the fault of not obtaining the supreme empowerment is that the yogin, for example, will be like a boatman without an oar, unable to deliver [his passengers] to the other side. If the supreme empowerment is obtained, the secret mantra that is not accomplished will be accomplished. How will secret mantra be accomplished without relying on empowerment?

It continues by describing the unqualified master:

If the master is not authentic, his scriptures are like a monkey's. One will enter a false path, and one will practice corrupted Secret Mantra. Since he is a misguider, he should be avoided.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 27th, 2016 at 9:47 PM

Title: Re: how do things end?

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

"Reality" is such a singularly strange abstract noun...

Malcolm wrote:

In fact it means the "the state of being [ity] pertaining to [al] things [res]."

treehuggingoctopus said:

Saying "the state of being pertaining to things" is just as singularly strange

What the hell is "being"?

(And what are "things"?)

Malcolm wrote:

And what is "pertaining to."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 27th, 2016 at 8:39 PM

Title: Re: First meeting with guru

Content:

makewhisper said:

Any advice for how to best approach that first meeting? Is it appropriate to ask about receiving specific practices, like a ngondro or a set of prayers or a meditation practice?

In gratitude,

Eric

Malcolm wrote:

Until you have received a major empowerment, you do not have a guru. So relax, check out many teachers, then finally decide which one works for you and work with that person.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 27th, 2016 at 8:04 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen for beginners

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

If you could describe Dzogchen, from your perspective, and/or from others', in one forum post, how would you? (To someone who knows nothing about Dzogchen or Vajrayana/Tantrayana).

What links would you link said learner to? What resources would you suggest for them, in what way would you advocate, for them, the path that is described, in contemporary tongue, as "Dzogchen"?

Malcolm wrote:

You as well try to describe sight to the blind.

Find a proper Dzogchen master, then follow their instructions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 27th, 2016 at 7:27 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Kim said:

I think this is misleading. What you are saying is that some westerners or non-Tibetan knowing people can practice dzogchen, i.e. their recognition of rigpa is comprehensive enough and yet if they don't know Tibetan language they really can't teach it. This doesn't make any sense. Obviously knowing the original language is part of the equation but to go as far to say that one couldn't get people recognise rigpa, it is not reasonable statement.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no term in Tibetan, "recognize rigpa." Putting it in these terms is a huge fail. This misunderstanding exists because many people, translators included, think rig pa = awareness. Let me assure you, it does not.

Kim said:

As a general remark, I'm starting to feel that dzogchen is a bit mystified here at DW. On the other hand it seems that discussion on this forum isn't aimed at clarifying things, such as rigpa-practice, in a way that would help the participants and readers in their own practice.

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen is not mystified on this forum, at all.

Much of the discussion of Dzogchen on this forum concerns the elimination of errors of interpretation such as the one I refer to above. Honestly, Dzogchen, Lamdre, Mahāmudra, etc., should not be discussed on forums such as these at all. To the extent that Dzogchen is the least understood, but the most "popular" and "fashionable" teaching right now, because people have this mistaken notion that it is easy to understand, to that extent I discuss some issues and that is all. But practitioners of these teachings should not really be looking to internet boards for help. It is fine, as happens often enough, people are isolated and need references to information for this or that thing. But this is not a place for giving teachings or helping people with their "Dzogchen" practice. That is what a guru and vajra siblings are for.

So, if someone should want help with their practice, find a proper teacher of Dzogchen, follow the latter's instructions, and stop whinging about Tibetan culture, etc.

A proper student has the following qualities:

With strong faith and great diligence, great intelligence and without attachments, highly respectful, engaging in Secret Mantra conduct, without concepts, without mental distractions, possessing samaya, diligent in practice,
mindful and constant, diligent in practice, engaging in meditation which is clear and vivid,
doing whatever the master says,
not permitting indifference towards samaya, engaging in conduct that accords with others,
steadfastly respectful,
following a single phrase when indicated, moreover, engaged in his own benefit,
capable of keeping secrets,
never leaving the meaning of the vajra, giving explanations to those of great learning, never going beyond his personal benefit, [19/a] without harsh words, soft-spoken, in accord with the minds of others, regarding the master and the tathāgatas as being identical — those are the qualities of a disciple.

Such a disciple is said to be the proper vessel of the Great Perfection.
The meaning of the Great Perfection's intimate instructions cannot be poured into a common, inferior vessel.
If the faithful pour a little of that juice into an inferior vessel,
the juice is lost and both are ruined.
Therefore it must be kept secret from those who are not suitable vessels.
A student to whom Dzogchen should not be taught, is as follows:
Not making offerings or paying respect, practicing Secret Mantra incorrectly, without a good family, insincere, unintelligent,
ignoring kindness,
boasting of his own family,
wearing ornaments on his body, and engaged in pointless activities —
the unexamined disciple is the enemy of the master.
Do not explain the meaning of the Great Perfection to those who will not practice it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 27th, 2016 at 3:00 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Yeah, I get this. Practicing a thing well and teaching it well are two very separate things. To teach something you have to know enough of the underlying architecture of the teaching to do that, which is completely different than just explaining your own practice.

Truthfully, there is a lot of Western Buddhist 'teaching' in the second category - someone just explaining their own experiences and opinions, it has its value, but whether it constitutes actual Dharma teaching or something else is kind of debatable.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, when we are teaching we have to take into consideration the capacity of the student. We have to know how to address their needs, what they need to be taught. Frankly, understanding Dzogchen is not this simple idea of "Recognize the nature of the mind, then you're a buddha." This latter idea is very stupid and dangerous. Dzogchen teachings are subtle and not so easy to understand.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 27th, 2016 at 2:31 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Yes, because it is not clear if you are saying that it is necessary to know Tibetan to be even remotely qualified to transmit Dzogchen teachings at this time, or if there just does not happen to be, at this time, as far as you know, any people who don't know Tibetan and yet are so qualified.

Malcolm wrote:

At this particular juncture in time, it is necessary to be conversant in Tibetan in order to transmit Dzogchen teachings properly. However, you don't need to know much Tibetan, if any, to practice Dzogchen, etc. I have met a few westerners, illiterate in Tibetan, who I think have a very good understanding of Dzogchen. But I don't think they can teach it because to be a teacher has a different set of requirements, beyond merely having a good understanding for one's own practice. All of the people I am talking about agree. YMMV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 27th, 2016 at 2:02 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Um, I was just asking if you knew if Lama Drimed or Yeshe Namkhai know Tibetan. Do you? I don't and I would like to know.

Malcolm wrote:

I think you should ask them yourself.

dzogchungpa said:

OK, I guess you're working on your vajra coyness.

Anyway, just to clarify your earlier statement, if I ask a teacher if he or she knows Tibetan and the answer is no then, according to you, I can safely conclude that they are not even remotely qualified to transmit Dzogchen teachings?

Malcolm wrote:

Was there something unclear about what I said?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 27th, 2016 at 1:43 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

bump

Malcolm wrote:

There was something ambiguous about my statement? That said, I am not going to led into commenting on specific persons.

dzogchungpa said:

Um, I was just asking if you knew if Lama Drimed or Yeshe Namkhai know Tibetan. Do you? I don't and I would like to know.

Malcolm wrote:

I think you should ask them yourself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 27th, 2016 at 1:08 AM

Title: Re: Rig Pai Ye shes

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

Tashi delek DW members,

Rig-pa'i ye-shes - the knowledge which is immediate Awareness.

The above Dzogchen term is difficult to understand. Namely, the relation between knowledge and Awareness.

Mutsug Marro

KY.

Kim said:

Any term when they are not described from a living experience are difficult or impossible to understand.

Malcolm wrote:

This is what a master is for, to explain these terms from their experience of the teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 27th, 2016 at 12:55 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha could't do that

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

bump

Malcolm wrote:

There was something ambiguous about my statement? That said, I am not going to led into commenting on specific persons.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 26th, 2016 at 7:50 PM

Title: Re: how do things end?

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

"Reality" is such a singularly strange abstract noun...

Malcolm wrote:

In fact it means the "the state of being [ity] pertaining to [al] things [res]."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 26th, 2016 at 7:30 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

I don't know what Tenzin Palmo was intending when she made her statement but it's utterly ridiculous to say that Buddha cannot liberate living beings from suffering because that's the whole point of attaining enlightenment. Buddha showed many times during his life that he possessed all the skilful means to liberate others.

Malcolm wrote:

What she was referring to is the Buddha's statement that misdeeds cannot be washed away with water, suffering cannot be removed with the hand, that he cannot bestow liberation, but that he can teach a path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 26th, 2016 at 7:30 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Kim said:

No, she wasn't.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, actually that is exactly what she was saying. She was point out that it is our responsibility to follow a path. There is no collective method of waking up.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 26th, 2016 at 5:47 AM

Title: Re: Sitting next to a buddha and not knowing it

Content:

Kim said:

If a high lama or a living buddha was clad in normal clothes, sitting in a bus among other people, would anyone notice that there is buddha onboard?

Malcolm wrote:

Nope.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 26th, 2016 at 5:16 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Kim said:

You said above that "Dzogchen... are a very precise method of communicating a very specific kind of knowledge (rig pa)". What is it that makes this so amazingly and unique? What is so special?

Malcolm wrote:

If you understand Dzogchen teachings properly, you will never take rebirth in samsara again, guaranteed.

Kim said:

Right. So you were referring to trekcho, attainment of buddhahood. Or does this option become erased earlier on on the path of dzogchen? At some bodhisattva stage perhaps?

krodha said:

Kim, perhaps try splitting your responses up into multiple posts.

Kim said:

I would but it's not possible to edit one's posts here...

Malcolm wrote:

No, I was not referring Trekcho specifically.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 26th, 2016 at 3:52 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Kim said:

You said above that "Dzogchen... are a very precise method of communicating a very specific kind of knowledge (rig pa)". What is it that makes this so amazingly and unique? What is so special?

Malcolm wrote:

If you understand Dzogchen teachings properly, you will never take rebirth in samsara again, guaranteed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 26th, 2016 at 12:52 AM

Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest

Content:

MiphamFan said:

Does Saṃkhya yoga actually have channels, cakras in addition to asanas? I thought it was Shaivite thing?

Malcolm wrote:

Saṃkhya is one thing, Yoga another. Saṃkhya itself is pretty much intellectual. Yoga shares its view, but emphasizes the development of samadhi, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 26th, 2016 at 12:50 AM

Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I don't omniscience is a particular issues for Saṃkhya/yoga, since everything apart from puruṣa is just transformations of prakṛiti.

Losal Samten said:

What about in Saiva Trika?

Malcolm wrote:

No clue. Look in Lakshmani Joo's books.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 26th, 2016 at 12:38 AM

Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think so, since Saṃkhya adherents consider the Advaita view incorrect.

Losal Samten said:

In Advaita, omniscience is reserved for Isvara alone and not the yogin; is the same true in Trika?

Malcolm wrote:

I don't omniscience is a particular issues for Saṃkhya/yoga, since everything apart from puruṣa is just transformations of prakṛiti.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 26th, 2016 at 12:10 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha could't do that

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Then of course there is the guardians of the teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 26th, 2016 at 12:03 AM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha could't do that

Content:

Soma999 said:

I don't know Keith Downman, but trying to say "he is not a lama, who authorised him and so forth" can be a convenient way not to listen to him by saying he has no autorisation to speak and teach, even though we have not the slightest idea of his realisation and his inner life and integrity (it's not written on a diploma). This may be a strategy for avoiding to listen to a point of view which may make feel you uncomfortable - even though he may bring something of value : his own experience (which may not be adapted to everyone, of course).

Everyone is different, what works for someone may not work for another. I feel it's good to listen to people who do not necessarily share the same point of view, it helps to grow.

If we just want to stay with people who thinks exactly the same, it's comfortable, but maybe not very enlightening.

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen teachings are something very precise and specific. When someone is sufficiently educated in these teachings, then they can understand very well who is and who isn't a qualified person to give teachings on them. That said, this is neither a condemnation of Dowman nor an endorsement. I do not know him personally, and I am neutral as far as this goes. I will just reinforce the point that it is very important how one chooses from whom to learn Dzogchen teachings. It is much more critical, than for example, from whom one learns Lam Rim, Mind Training, etc., or even from whom one might receive pratimokṣa or bodhisattva vows.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 25th, 2016 at 11:20 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha could't do that

Content:

Kim said:

I have met and talked with many people who got fed up with the highly religious system of Tibetan buddhism taught by respected lamas. They expected to receive understandable instructions to illuminate their minds but this didn't happen. What they got were religious rituals and forms clad in Tibetan attire. "Do this for 500 k and you'll know", they were told. A pig in a poke.

Malcolm wrote:

People are lazy, and expect instant results.

People do not want to commit.

People expect liberation in a pill.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 25th, 2016 at 11:02 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Kim said:

Dzogchen view-wise I haven't spotted any mistakes there. What he seems to do in his teaching session is to avoid any Tibetan or Sanskrit terms. That's wonderful.

Malcolm wrote:

Are you quite sure you understand the meaning of Dzogchen? For example, do you understand clearly the distinction between the basis and the all-basis?

Kim said:

That can happen without any thangkas, Tibetan language or any of that external pomp.

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen tantras and teachings are a very precise method of communicating a very specific kind of knowledge (rig pa). The transmission of Dzogchen is in its infancy at this point. There isn't single person who is not conversant with Tibetan language that I would consider even remotely qualified to transmit Dzogchen teachings. Further, Dzogchen is very much bound up with Vajrayāna in general. People who do not understand Vajrayāna at all have no hope of really understanding the point of Dzogchen.

I don't know about the realization of any Westerner, or for that matter, any Tibetan teacher under 60, all tulkus included. But I do know about the realization of my guru, ChNN; my late guru, Kunzang Dechen Lingpa; as well as the realization of the late Khenpo Jigme Phuntsok, another of my gurus; and the realization of the late HH Taklung Tsetrul Rinpoche, yet another of my gurus. All four of these people are realized Dzogchen masters.

If you are going to study Dzogchen, it is better to find a person whom you feel has realized the meaning of those teachings. Such a person's qualifications are stated in the Dzogchen tantras as follows:

The master of the intimate instructions that possesses the vajra meaning has a positive attitude, is skillful in teaching, has obtained the empowerments, applies the meaning of Secret Mantra, understands all the inner and outer activities, is inseparable from the meditation deity, remains undistracted in samadhi, is knowledgeable in the secret tantras of Secret Mantra, possesses the meaning of the intimate instructions of the Great Perfection, engages in all outer and inner sadhanas, [18b] never leaves the meaning of the view, gives up outer, inner, and secret activities, is endowed with qualities like a precious jewel,
and enjoys an inexhaustible treasury.

With the cord of compassion unsevered and the stream of affection uninterrupted, the master and disciple are thus connected.

Such a master of the intimate instructions should be served with one's body, precious substances, and very rare items.

A master to avoid is described as follows:

A master lacking a connection with a lineage of scholars, who is self-important,
stupid, literal-minded,
who does not understand the meaning of Secret Mantra, has harsh words for others, is boastful, has entered false paths, has not seen the mandala of the empowerment, disregards samaya, [18/a] is unable to answer questions, has little learning, and great pride — such an unexamined master is a mārā for the disciple.

He is not a master who can teach Secret Mantra and is unable to teach the Great Perfection, Ati.

Do not associate with such a person.

As always, with any teacher, caveat emptor.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 25th, 2016 at 10:52 PM

Title: Re: Even the Buddha couldn't do that

Content:

Kim said:

He [Dowman] says that he is among those who have "gone through that whole circuit of oriental culture and Tibetan buddhism". So I suppose he has a solid vajrayana history. And yet he is of the opinion that all that is not needed.

Malcolm wrote:
It really depends on the student.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, August 25th, 2016 at 10:32 PM
Title: Re: Monism, Eternalism, etc
Content:
boda said:
I simply don't require this sort of religious narrative.

Malcolm wrote:
Well, bully for you!

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, August 25th, 2016 at 10:31 PM
Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Ramaswami taught on the Yoga Sūtras, and differentiated it's view from Advaita very clearly

Losal Samten said:
Do you know what the Yogis' take on Advaita is in general? Whilst different in terms of universal puruṣa, illusory prakṛiti etc., do they think Advaitans still attain liberation, or do they see them as thieving piss-takers?

Malcolm wrote:
I don't think so, since Saṃkhya adherents consider the Advaita view incorrect.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, August 25th, 2016 at 10:06 PM
Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
In the Yoga Sūtras, Īśvara is a special type of puruṣa, a being who never experienced the tattvas. But Īśvara is not a godhead nor is it creative, per se. While it is indeed said that through devotion to Īśvara one can obtain mukti, mukti still means turning away from prakṛiti. Not only this, but in the Saṃkhya/Yoga view there are infinite puruṣas, of which Īśvara is but one. Thus did my teacher of Yoga, Śrīvasta Ramaswami, teach.

DGA said:

If so, then it seems to me that some contemporary / modern yogic writers, such as Aurobindo Ghose, take a different tack from the yoga sutras. So it goes.

Malcolm wrote:

There is also an Advaita spin, based on Shankara's commentary. But the original Yoga Sūtras are fully Sāṃkhya in nature and do not go beyond that view. During our yoga course, six weeks, Ramaswami taught on the Yoga Sūtras, and differentiated it's view from Advaita very clearly. Ramaswami is one of the last remaining direct pupil of Krishnamācārya, and the only person to whom the latter taught his entire system.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 25th, 2016 at 9:46 PM

Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest

Content:

maybay said:

Realization may also come if one is oriented toward the ideal of pure awareness, Isvara.

Isvara is a distinct, incorruptible form of pure awareness, utterly independent of cause and effect, and lacking any store of latent impressions.

Its independence makes this awareness an incomparable source of omniscience.

Existing beyond time, Isvara was also the ideal of the ancients.

<https://en.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ishvara>

Malcolm wrote:

In the Yoga Sūtras, Íśvara is a special type of puruśa, a being who never experienced the tattvas. But Íśvara is not a godhead nor is it creative, per se. While it is indeed said that through devotion to Íśvara one can obtain mukti, mukti still means turning away from prakriti. Not only this, but in the Sāṃkhya/Yoga view there are infinite puruśas, of which Íśvara is but one. Thus did my teacher of Yoga, Śrīvasta Ramaswami, teach.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 25th, 2016 at 5:06 AM

Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.

Content:

boda said:

So you're talking about emptiness. Why didn't you just say so? Anyway, emptiness is only one aspect of reality.

Malcolm wrote:

Did I use the word emptiness anywhere?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 25th, 2016 at 12:42 AM

Title: Re: Dzongsar khyentse... monk?

Content:

Sonam Wangchug said:

Older lama's refer to Khyentse rinpoche as "Yangsi rinpoche" Such as Orgyen tobgyal rinpoche.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, for people who do not know, " yang srid " (punarbhāva) literally means "reincarnation" or "rebirth." In this case, the reincarnation of Dzongsar Khyentse II, Chökyi Lödo.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 25th, 2016 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

dzogchungpa said:

Now you're being ridiculous.

Malcolm wrote:

What? You mean you don't think this is a wry comment on the subject matters of tulkus?

Perhaps the lyrics will refresh you:

Fame, makes a man take things over

Fame, lets him loose, hard to swallow

Fame, puts you there where things are hollow

Fame

Fame, it's not your brain, it's just the flame

That burns your change to keep you insane

Fame

Fame, what you like is in the limo

Fame, what you get is no tomorrow

Fame, what you need you have to borrow

Fame

Fame, "Nein! It's mine!" is just his line
To bind your time, it drives you to, crime
Fame
Could it be the best, could it be?
Really be, really, babe?
Could it be, my babe, could it, babe?
Really, really?
Is it any wonder I reject you first?
Fame, fame, fame, fame
Is it any wonder you are too cool to fool

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 25th, 2016 at 12:19 AM

Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest

Content:

DGA said:

What makes yoga as a knowledge unique is its objective, union with one or another terms for Absolute Godhead.

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on the yoga tradition. This is certainly not the goal of the Yoga Sūtras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 25th, 2016 at 12:07 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Yuren said:

I'm really surprised to see there are so many Trump supporters on a forum like this!

Malcolm wrote:

Some people have no common sense at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 25th, 2016 at 12:02 AM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Malcolm wrote:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 11:58 PM

Title: Re: What are the requirements to be "lineage holders"?

Content:

Adamantine said:

Any thoughts on what terms may be translated as lineage-holder? And why there may be varying interpretations? (I.e. are different Tibetan terms being translated as the same term in English?)

In gTerma traditions, there is usually someone prophesied as carrying on and maintaining the gTerma lineage after the tertön has passed on. Is there a specific term for that?

Malcolm wrote:

lineage holder = brgyud 'dzin
holder of the teachings = bstan 'dzin
lord/owner of the treasure = gter bdag

Adamantine said:

Thank you. Can you please define each of these in English the best that you can? Do brgyud 'dzin and bstan 'dzin have significantly different meanings for example?

When you stated in this thread

<http://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=49&t=5037&start=20#top> that

Malcolm wrote:

Shenphen Rinpoche, who is one of my important masters, is indeed the primary lineage holder of Dudjom Tersar, and the keeper of Dudjom Rinpoche's seat in North America where Dudjom Rinpoche concealed many precious teachings.

Adamantine said:

what did you mean by "primary lineage holder"? Brgyud 'dzin, bstan 'dzin, or gter bdag? What is the Tibetan term translated as "regent"? One of these?

Sorry just would like to know what misunderstandings may have arisen from translation issues.

Malcolm wrote:

regent is rgyal tshab.

Here, I mean gdung sras, literally, "heir (sras) of the family lineage (gdung)." I guess he can be considered the interregnum gter bdag, but since there are two incarnations, I will let them hash it out between them. Since he is the keeper of Dudjom Rinpoche's seat (gdan sa) in NA, he could also be called a " bdag chen."

bstan 'dzin (sasanadhara) is usually reserved for monks. It means someone who holds the tripitika, in general.

brgyud 'dzin means someone who holds this or that lineage (brgyud, paramparā).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: What are the requirements to be "lineage holders"?

Content:

Adamantine said:

Any thoughts on what terms may be translated as lineage-holder? And why there may be varying interpretations? (I.e. are different Tibetan terms being translated as the same term in English?)

In gTerma traditions, there is usually someone prophesied as carrying on and maintaining the gTerma lineage after the terton has passed on. Is there a specific term for that?

Malcolm wrote:

lineage holder = brgyud 'dzin

holder of the teachings = bstan 'dzin

lord/owner of the treasure = gter bdag

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 11:10 PM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

My bad, should be quote marks.

dzogchungpa said:

We agree on something, at last.

Malcolm wrote:

Don't worry, I will find a way out of it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 11:04 PM

Title: Re: What are the requirements to be "lineage holders"?

Content:

Adamantine said:

Hmmmmnnn.... I haven't interpreted the term "lineage holder" as meaning anyone who happens to have permission to teach, or even anyone with the title "Lama", and so on. I have interpreted it to mean a great master, usually someone people refer to as "precious one" / Rinpoche, who has been given a mandate by the previous lineage holder, or terton, to oversee and work towards the preservation, continuation, maintenance and expansion of the lineage without any errors, misconduct, or degeneration of the purity of the essential transmissions. Foremost concern would be the pure samaya of the lineage holder, so that all transmissions are authentic and complete. Sometimes the lineage holder would have been given permission to alter or adjust aspects of the practices or revelations according to their own wisdom mind, responding to circumstances or need. Sometimes more than one can function as a lineage holder of the same tradition. . . Anyway, that's been my interpretation of the term. I can see that someone with permission and/or the realization and ability to give proper abisheka/wang/Vajrayana empowerment could be interpreted as functioning as a lineage holder, but I don't usually see the term commonly used that broader way. I don't know what the original Tibetan term would be that is sometimes translated as lineage holder—correctly or incorrectly—or if there are multiple terms that are translated this way—correctly or incorrectly. And I don't know if my interpretation (based on what I've gleaned from others' interpretation) is in fact correct. So I am happy to hear from anyone with more knowledge and who is familiar with Tibetan.

Malcolm wrote:

According to ChNN, everyone who has received the teachings is a "lineage holder." This does not mean they can teach, however.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 11:03 PM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The period should go inside of closing paranthesis, like this: "The tulku system and the people in it are currently demonstrating the 'suffering of change.'"

You should also lose the commas, as above, otherwise, it should be like this "The tulku system is currently demonstrating the 'suffering of change,' as well as the people in it."

smcj said:

Thanks Malcolm. I like the second rewrite better.

dzogchungpa said:

Those aren't parentheses, are they? Whatever they are, I don't think they are necessary.
My version: The tulku system is currently demonstrating the suffering of change, as are its constituents.

Malcolm wrote:

My bad, should be quote marks.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 10:45 PM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

We agree on something, at last.

Adamantine said:

Yet another example of impermanence.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed, since it will not last long, probably not the hour.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 10:26 PM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

maybay said:

The tulku system is sick. The tulku system is degenerate / degenerating.

Malcolm wrote:

We agree on something, at last.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 10:18 PM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

maybay said:

What you seem to want to say is that everything about the tulku system, from the ABC to the xyz, is a lesson in the 'suffering of change'.

smcj said:

I thought it awkward to say that a system was suffering rather than saying people were suffering. But yes, that was my point.

Malcolm wrote:

We can also say systems are suffering.

In fact, your favorite book, the Uttaratantra, states quite clearly that the Dharma is not a true refuge, and neither is the Sangha, because they are impermanent and compounded entities. Only the dharmakāya of the Buddha is a true refuge.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 9:53 PM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It depends on the plural or singular tense. Enclosing all punctuation inside of the closing parenthesis is hard to get used to, but it is indeed the standard approach now in academic and professional writing. I hate the editing process, and as a translator publishing books, dealing with different editors and different style sheets can be a hassle. The 84000 project has a very solid style sheet. It is worth looking at.

Losal Samten said:

Do you mean in academic and professional American writing? Using punctuation inside of the parentheses is standard GB grammar.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I mean after all, we are Rome. You Brits had your chance...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 9:42 PM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

smcj said:

Rinpoche could have simply and easily said, "The tulku system, and the people in it, are currently demonstrating the 'suffering of change'."

The rest is just describing the specifics of the karma that is ripening.

Any educated people out there? Did I punctuate that first sentence correctly?

Malcolm wrote:

The period should go inside of closing paranthesis, like this: "The tulku system and the people in it are currently demonstrating the 'suffering of change.'"

You should also lose the commas, as above, otherwise, it should be like this "The tulku system is currently demonstrating the 'suffering of change,' as well as the people in it.'"

smcj said:

Thanks Malcolm. I like the second rewrite better.

Malcolm wrote:

It depends on the plural or singular tense. Enclosing all punctuation inside of the closing parenthesis is hard to get used to, but it is indeed the standard approach now in academic and professional writing. I hate the editing process, and as a translator publishing books, dealing with different editors and different style sheets can be a hassle. The 84000 project has a very solid style sheet. It is worth looking at.

Naturally, the demands on writing things here is rather less substantial, and any review of my posts will find a rich assortment of typos and misspellings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 9:16 PM

Title: Re: Consequences of Rejoicing

Content:

Boomerang said:

When you rejoice in another's deeds, do you create the same karmic seed as the actor?
By rejoicing in another's generosity do you create the same karma for yourself? What if you rejoice in a soldier killing their enemies?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 8:51 PM

Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Reality is shown only in a nonconceptual direct perception accompanied by wisdom.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Is that the same as Primordial Awareness ?

And is this what is happening when ChNN gives a Direct Pointing out to the nature of your mind ?

And is this something understood intuitively ?

Malcolm wrote:

1. Yes
2. Yes
3. Intuitive in the philosophical sense of the term, "intuition," which means to know directly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 8:47 PM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

smcj said:

Rinpoche could have simply and easily said, "The tulku system, and the people in it, are currently demonstrating the 'suffering of change'."

The rest is just describing the specifics of the karma that is ripening.

Any educated people out there? Did I punctuate that first sentence correctly?

Malcolm wrote:

The period should go inside of closing paranthesis, like this: "The tulku system and the people in it are currently demonstrating the 'suffering of change.'"

You should also lose the commas, as above, otherwise, it should be like this "The tulku system is currently demonstrating the 'suffering of change,' as well as the people in it."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 8:45 PM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

Sonam Wangchug said:

He has already expressed his purpose for wearing robes, and I do not particularly think it makes him Sravaka because he is wearing maroon robes.

Malcolm wrote:

Absolutely no one said Dzongsar was a śrāvaka because he wears some kind of robes. What he himself has said in the past that he wears robes because for him, we now live in the era of the mere sign of the teachings. Adamantine asked me whether I agreed that we were in this era, and I replied, yes, at least as far as Śrāvakayāna teachings are concerned. Please read more carefully.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 10:49 AM

Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, that is not what I am saying.

boda said:

Indeed you're not saying.

You've stated that reality is not capable of showing itself in more than one way. So what is this one way?

Malcolm wrote:

Reality is shown only in a nonconceptual direct perception accompanied by wisdom.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 10:40 AM

Title: Re: how do things end?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

apart from a cup that has broken and a cup that has not broken, there is no breaking cup (at present).

vinegar said:

At the time of the cup there is no broken cup..

But only a thing can be broken. Unmade things can't be broken.. there is no such thing. Meaning it's not correct to say "there is no breaking cup (at present)", don't you think?

Malcolm wrote:

You need to read Nāgārjuna's analysis of motion...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 3:28 AM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Queequeg said:

Our choices are a buffoon and an utterly immoral scoundrel. Four years of bad hair and bad reality TV, or four years of impeachment hearings.

The Cicada said:

What was it Tarantino said about Clark Kent being Superman's critique of humanity? Trump's buffoonery is as much an act as Hillary's nice-white-lady act. Trump is a lion who loves glory and I think the real Donald Trump would actually be more than a little scary to most people—which could be bad in ways, but could also be good for the presidency and for America.

Malcolm wrote:

He is a puffed up idiot with bad hair and a small dick, for which he over compensates.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 3:27 AM

Title: Re: Rime

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Just wondering why Rime is not listed here, along with all the other schools of Tibetan Buddhism....

<http://rimebuddhism.com/khentrul-rinpoche/rime-philosophy/>

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a school, it is an attitude.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 3:10 AM

Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest

Content:

maybay said:

You learn so much its like you float around in a cloud. You see people and they might see you, but there's no contact.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it is so much better to be as illiterate as those around one.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 2:55 AM

Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.

Content:

gad rgyangs said:

perceived by whom? by us of course. and what are we? displays of reality.

Malcolm wrote:

No, we are displays of birth, aging, sickness, and death.

boda said:

So you're essentially saying that reality only displays impermanence.

Malcolm wrote:

No, that is not what I am saying.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 2:54 AM
Title: Re: DJK on tulkus
Content:

Adamantine said:
Hmmmnn.. but he is not a śravakayāna teacher.

Malcolm wrote:
Robes are the sign of the śravakayāna.

maybay said:
Robes are a sign of nobility, not exclusive to sravakas.

Malcolm wrote:
Not really. They are supposed to be a sign of renunciation, but since that did not work out so well, Buddha had to constantly make new rules for misbehaving bhikṣus.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, August 24th, 2016 at 2:52 AM
Title: Re: Should emptiness be discussed online at all?
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
It is not up to us to say who is ripe and who is not. We do not have that prescience.

AlexMcLeod said:
No, it is not. Even the Buddha deemed that most of his direct disciples were not ripe for it. Think you're smarter than him?

Malcolm wrote:
Huh? Don't be silly. The Buddha taught the three gates of liberation right from the beginning.

Anyway, I have a really good idea: we will talk about emptiness as much as we like, and you can ignore it, or just maintain silence. Trying to condition others is really annoying. Cut it out.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 11:31 PM
Title: Re: Should emptiness be discussed online at all?
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
It's the first taste I received, and as it says in the PP sūtra, when I first heard it, I was elated and delighted.

M

AlexMcLeod said:

But your mind was ripe for it. And most Sutra are far better teachers than any of us here. Exactly the opposite condition from that being caused by an open forum discussion.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not up to us to say who is ripe and who is not. We do not have that prescience.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 10:28 PM

Title: Re: Monism, Eternalism, etc

Content:

krodha said:

As for a Buddha being a "person", technically, a Buddha is not what we would call a "sentient being." From the standpoint of our afflicted, karmic perception we see Buddha's as a person (just as we perceive other sentient beings), but this is not what appears to a Buddha.

I cannot recall which sutta states this, but there is a text where Buddha Śākyamuni is asked whether he is a person, or a human being, etc., and he says he is not.

vinegar said:

The textbooks are full of discussion on how buddhas are persons, but not sentient beings/suffering beings (by definition not human)

Your campaign to reject any statement that even remotely resembles a downplaying of personhood, selves, etc., is a common theme in your posts. Perhaps something to look at.

Alas I'm just replying to quotes, I'd much rather be debating subtle points of pramana Buddhas are pure objects, pure persons, therefore it cannot be correct to say "persons are not products of delusion". Seems pretty straight-forward

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhas cannot be persons (gang zag) because they are not full (gang) of effluents (zag).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 10:25 PM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It depends on what vehicle one is talking about. If we are talking about śravakayāna, then yes.

Adamantine said:

Hmmmnn.. but he is not a śravakayāna teacher.

Malcolm wrote:

Robes are the sign of the śravakayāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 10:24 PM

Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.

Content:

gad rgyangs said:

perceived by whom? by us of course. and what are we? displays of reality.

Malcolm wrote:

No, we are displays of birth, aging, sickness, and death.

gad rgyangs said:

...and youth, health, creativity and joy as well. At least most people are. YMMV.

Malcolm wrote:

That's the aging part.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 9:45 PM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

maybay said:

DJK wears clothes as an expression of the teachings

Malcolm wrote:

Are you sure? You've asked him?

Adamantine said:

This comes back to his statement "In Buddhism, we talk about several different stages of degeneration. There's one degenerated time that Buddha called tagtsam zinpey du, the time when monastic robes are maintained just as a mark or symbol. That's where we are now. At least I'm trying to hold on to that symbol."

I am not sure if that qualifies as an expression of the teachings, as I doubt the teachings recommend doing this. It sounds like he is just referring to a prophecy which probably saw wearing monastic robes as a symbol without keeping the vows as being one type of degeneration. So that would bring it back to self-expression. But out of curiosity Malcolm, would you agree that we are in the time called tagtsam zinpey du? Are you familiar with the prophecy and statements he is citing? This seems like it would fall into your area of scholarly expertise.

Malcolm wrote:

It depends on what vehicle one is talking about. If we are talking about śravakayāna, then yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 9:26 PM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

maybay said:

DJK wears clothes as an expression of the teachings

Malcolm wrote:

Are you sure? You've asked him?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 8:58 PM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

Adamantine said:

If Lamas are teaching Westerners on thrones or on stages wearing special robes, and the disciples are discouraged from ever wearing these types of robes but only wearing their regular work clothes or sunday-best (i.e. church clothes from a Christian culture) it creates a wider gap-- separation between teacher and student.

Malcolm wrote:

Generally speaking, my teacher usually wears a track suit or Hawaiian shirts when he teaches and gives empowerments.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 8:19 PM

Title: Re: Should emptiness be discussed online at all?

Content:

AlexMcLeod said:

Emptiness doctrine should not be the very first taste of Buddhism a person should receive. It is advanced teaching.

Malcolm wrote:

It's the first taste I received, and as it says in the PP sūtra, when I first heard it, I was elated and delighted.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 6:58 PM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

Tulku system is not a meaningless tradition.

Tulku system is a method of preserving lineages.

Malcolm wrote:

A bad one.

BuddhaFollower said:

It has worked pretty well after the Chinese invasion.

Malcolm wrote:

It is even more corrupt now than ever before.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 6:56 PM

Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.

Content:

gad rgyangs said:

However, I would say that reality displays itself in infinite ways, including, but not limited to, everything we experience in this 3D realm.

Malcolm wrote:

No, reality is perceived in a myriad of ways. It does not, nor is it capable of showing itself in more than one way.

gad rgyangs said:

perceived by whom? by us of course. and what are we? displays of reality.

Malcolm wrote:

No, we are displays of birth, aging, sickness, and death.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 10:55 AM

Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.

Content:

gad rgyangs said:

thats a cop-out. Its a simple question: "How do you know that 'there is only one entry way to knowledge of reality'?"

Malcolm wrote:

The answer, simply put, is that reality does not, in reality, display itself in myriad ways.

gad rgyangs said:

the question was about your assertion that "there is only one entry way to knowledge of reality", not about how reality "displays itself".

However, I would say that reality displays itself in infinite ways, including, but not limited to, everything we experience in this 3D realm.

Malcolm wrote:

No, reality is perceived in a myriad of ways. It does not, nor is it capable of showing itself in more than one way.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 9:53 AM

Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.

Content:

gad rgyangs said:

how do you know?

Malcolm wrote:

The real question is why you don't.

gad rgyangs said:

thats a cop-out. Its a simple question: "How do you know that 'there is only one entry way to knowledge of reality'?"

Malcolm wrote:

The answer, simply put, is that reality does not, in reality, display itself in myriad ways.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 9:19 AM

Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest

Content:

gad rgyangs said:

what he's saying is perfectly clear and understandable.

Malcolm wrote:

So you think.

dzogchungpa said:

Perhaps you could give Rinpoche some pointers on how to express himself more clearly and understandably. I'm sure it would be much appreciated.

Malcolm wrote:

I would rather admonish you all about not studying properly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 9:09 AM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

..... DJKR seems to have no allegiance to the stodgy, stale tradition-for-traditions-sake-at-all-costs attitude, I greatly appreciate his point of view.

BuddhaFollower said:

Tulku system is not a meaningless tradition.

Tulku system is a method of preserving lineages.

Malcolm wrote:

A bad one.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 9:08 AM

Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest

Content:

gad rgyangs said:

umm... here's the context:

Malcolm wrote:

I wish people would understand the context from which he says stuff like this.

gad rgyangs said:

what he's saying is perfectly clear and understandable.

Malcolm wrote:

So you think.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 9:05 AM

Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest

Content:

gad rgyangs said:

I wish people would pay more attention when he says stuff like this.

Malcolm wrote:

I wish people would understand the context from which he says stuff like this.

gad rgyangs said:

umm... here's the context:

Malcolm wrote:

I wish people would understand the context from which he says stuff like this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 9:00 AM

Title: Re: how do things end?

Content:

AlexMcLeod said:

This person's misunderstanding is a direct result of the people of this forum ignoring their vows.

Malcolm wrote:

Seriously? Get real man.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 6:16 AM

Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest

Content:

gad rgyangs said:

I wish people would pay more attention when he says stuff like this.

Malcolm wrote:

I wish people would understand the context from which he says stuff like this.

maybay said:

How would that change the meaning in this instance? What good are teachings of definitive meaning if they're context dependent?

Malcolm wrote:

One should understand that there are five Samantabhadras, not only one.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 6:14 AM

Title: Re: how do things end?

Content:

vinegar said:

Consider a cup that is falling and a moment later breaks on the floor

The cup has to be there to break, in which case, its not broken/didn't break.

Then when does the cup break, if not at the time of its breaking?

Suppose someone says then, the cup doesn't have to be there to break, in which case, there's nothing there to break

Malcolm wrote:

It is the same as Nāgārjuna's analysis of motion: apart from a cup that has broken and a cup that has not broken, there is no breaking cup (at present).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 3:56 AM

Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

A text attributed to Padmasambhava through Yeshe Tsogyal, his Tantric disciple, wife-consort, and scribe, known as Self-Liberation By Meditation Upon the Peaceful and Wrathful Deities (subtitled): "The Yoga of Knowing the Mind, the Seeing of Reality, Called Self-Liberation," uncompromisingly emphasizes this view :

"There being really no duality, pluralism is untrue. Until duality is transcended and at-one-ment realized, Enlightenment cannot be attained. The whole Sangsara and Nirvana, as an inseparable unity, are one's mind."

<http://www.buddhistgeeks.com/2010/05/maha-ati-natural-liberation-through-primordial-awareness/>

Malcolm wrote:

I would not put a lot of emphasis on this translation. It is poorly edited, and the person (Evans-Wentz) in whose book this is found understood nothing about the subject matter that interested him

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 3:52 AM

Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I have never bothered to explain what ChNN means to people like you, since you basically do not give a shit what I say. So why would I bother?

dzogchungpa said:

OK, you're off the hook.

Malcolm wrote:

As far as I can tell, you are not even interested in Dzogchen.

dzogchungpa said:

I'm kind of curious about it.

Malcolm wrote:

You are not going to understand it through mere curiosity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 3:38 AM

Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest

Content:

gad rgyangs said:

I wish people would pay more attention when he says stuff like this.

Malcolm wrote:

I wish people would understand the context from which he says stuff like this.

dzogchungpa said:

Yes, it is good that we have people like you to explain Rinpoche's words for us.

Malcolm wrote:

I have never bothered to explain what ChNN means to people like you, since you basically do not give a shit what I say. So why would I bother? As far as I can tell, you are not even interested in Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 3:36 AM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I am being totally fair. Materialism doesn't "grow" in the way he suggests. You think our civilization is more materialistic than ancient Rome? Ancient China? Ancient India? Ancient Tibet? Please. I do recall a famous king in India who slaughtered many hundreds of thousands of people, and then got religion because he felt bad about it.

dzogchungpa said:

Whatevs, my point is that he was not suggesting that materialism and affluence had not found their way into Tibetan monasteries and religious institutions from the beginning.

Malcolm wrote:

What he said was:

The world's growing materialism and affluence have found their way into our monasteries and religious institutions...

The world's? Come on, be honest, DKR and put down your romanticism. Your Tibetan monasteries have been rife with materialism right from the beginning. Padmasambhava stated to Nyang Tingzin Zangpo:

Having assembled here, you all must listen well. The minds of all these Buddhists of Tibet, for the most part, have never been prepared. So in all of their religious activity thoughts of death and impermanence have not arisen in their minds. If it had arisen, this laziness and indolence would have never existed. They have never understood the characteristics of samsara. If they had understood, they never would have been attached to things. They have never contemplated the difficulty of obtaining leisure and wealth. If they had contemplated, these meaningful activities would have done at once. They have never understood this presentation of their minds. If they had understood it, they would have left non-virtue immediately. They have not seen the benefits and qualities of virtue. If they had seen it, distractions from gathering the two accumulations would have never occurred. They have never approached the profound path even a little. If they had approached it, they could not bear to be separate from meditation and practice. They have never approached the direction of the Mahāyāna bodhicitta. [3/a] If they had approached it, they would work on behalf of others without looking for their own advantage. They have no inclination for ultimate reality. If they had, this jealousy and pride would have never occurred. They have never heard nor contemplated the nine vehicles. If they had done so, they would understand the difference between higher and lower. They have never approached the direction of the view of secret mantra. If they had approach it, they would not accept and reject nirvana and samsara. They have never comprehended the view of reality. If they had, this ordinary grasping behavior would have never occurred. None of them ever desired to obtain complete buddhahood. If they had, they would have given up the activities of this life as unnecessary. Again, none of them have interest in Dharma apart from a few.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 3:23 AM

Title: Re: Dependent Origination and the Cosmological Argument

Content:

Jeff H said:

1. Dependent origination = own-being? How can that be? What does it mean to be “dependent on another in an absolute sense ”?

Malcolm wrote:

Dependent existence (parabhāva) is not the same thing as dependent origination (pratītyasamutpāda)

2. Miphamfan said, “the chain of causes is never-ending”; Wayfarer said, “[the chain of causes] ceases with ‘nirodha’, cessation”; Malcom said, “Cessation is simply the absence of causes for further arising”. Your (Malcolm’s) post sounds like you mean to contradict Wayfarer, but you seem to be saying the same thing. He didn’t mention the cessation of entities.

Confused.

[/quote]

The manner in which Wayfarer has stated this is such that it he appears to be saying that with nirodha, the chain of causation ceases.

What I am saying is that the absence of causes is nirodha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 3:09 AM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

Miroku said:

Do you think there really is a way in which tulku tradition could stay alive and actually become credible?

Malcolm wrote:

Nope.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 3:08 AM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

While there is much to applaud in DKR's missive, there are troubling blind spots, even still:

The world's growing materialism and affluence have found their way into our monasteries and religious institutions, where many high lamas and especially lineage holders now lead a lifestyle so lavish and estranged from ordinary realities that they could almost be emperors!

This is a farce. Materialism and affluence have found their way into Tibetan monasteries and religious institutions from the beginning. The reason Langdarma was assassinated was not because he was going to destroy the monasteries, it was because he decided that they were bleeding the Tibetan economy dry, and so decided to tax them.

Materialism and affluence have plagued Tibetan Buddhism from the beginning, so this is nothing new.

dzogchungpa said:

The very next sentence after the paragraph you quote reads: This may have worked – and I am not saying it did work – in Tibet, where few questions were asked and where there was little scrutiny and huge devotion.

so I don't think you are being fair, as he clearly acknowledges that it was also an issue in Tibet. I think what he is saying is that the materialism and affluence of the world is growing so that, while it was always a problem in Tibetan monasteries and religious institutions, it is now even more of a problem etc. Just sayin'.

Malcolm wrote:

I am being totally fair. Materialism doesn't "grow" in the way he suggests. You think our civilization is more materialistic than ancient Rome? Ancient China? Ancient India? Ancient Tibet? Please. I do recall a famous king in India who slaughtered many hundreds of thousands of people, and then got religion because he felt bad about it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 3:05 AM

Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

As ChNN says in "On The Nature Of Samantabhadra - A Conversation with Chogyal Namkhai Norbu": So what is called the primordial Buddha, or Adibuddha, is only a metaphor for our true condition.

gad rgyangs said:

I wish people would pay more attention when he says stuff like this.

Malcolm wrote:

I wish people would understand the context from which he says stuff like this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 23rd, 2016 at 3:04 AM

Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

As ChNN says in "On The Nature Of Samantabhadra - A Conversation with Chogyal Namkhai Norbu": So what is called the primordial Buddha, or Adibuddha, is only a metaphor for our true condition.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is called basis Samantabhadra, one of the five kinds of Samantabhadra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 10:27 PM

Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There are 84,000 afflictions, that is why there are eighty four thousands "gates of Dharma." But in reality, Buddha taught only three gates of liberation: emptiness, signlessness and wishlessness.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Ok, but i read somewhere that even Nirvana does NOT exist. (Nirvanalessness ?)

<http://theendlessfurther.com/the-three-gates-of-freedom/>

Malcolm wrote:

Nirvana is not a thing. It is a state where one is free of afflictions that cause further rebirth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 10:26 PM

Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

One can have all kinds of perspectives of a structure. But like a house with only a single door, there is only one entry way to knowledge of reality.

gad rgyangs said:
how do you know?

Malcolm wrote:
The real question is why you don't.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 10:19 PM
Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest
Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:
This is pretty clear to me, as is most stuff that i have read. I don't think I'm that delusional that i can't comprehend words and the concepts described reasonably well...but there's always a secret meaning to confuse those like me, that are not high on the list of initiates...lowly practitioners, like me that do not deserve to know the truth.....because i haven't done millions of anything to purify all my sins. So unless you are lilly white pure, you're screwed...

Malcolm wrote:
It is not the case that you are not deserving. There is no such thing. It may be the case that you do not have access to a good teacher.

You must remember that Buddhadharma is an oral tradition at heart. Without that oral lineage, you will not absorb the meaning of the teachings.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 10:08 PM
Title: Re: Illuminating Quotes by Malcolm Namdrol-la
Content:

Kim said:
I've also seen many wonderful quotes by Malcolm. Thank you for them.

May I ask if you/he has any formal qualification? Is he a holder of some lineage?

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, I have formal qualifications.

Kim said:
Wonderful. In which traditions? Given by who?

Malcolm wrote:
I completed a three year solitary retreat of mixed Sakya and Nyingma practices, between 1993 and 1997.

I was given the title "Ācarya" (slob dpon) by Khenpo Migmar Tseten, Buddhist Chaplain of Harvard, Sakya, in 2004.

I was encouraged to teach by the late Kunzang Dechen Lingpa in 2006, who confirmed my Ācarya title, and also conferred the formal Ngakpa ordination upon me.

I was given the title of "Lama" by Lama Ngawang Tsultrim of Dongag Tharling in New Orleans, Nyingma, in 2008.

I am a Doctor of Tibetan Medicine, having graduated from the Shang Shung Medical School in 2009.

I have a forthcoming book, a translation of a seminal text in the Dzogchen tradition, available from Wisdom Pub., Dec. 6th, 2016.

Any qualities I possess I derive from the kindness of my gurus.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 9:59 PM

Title: Re: Dependent Origination and the Cosmological Argument

Content:

Wayfarer said:

So clearly they diverge on that point, but I am interested in that aspect of similarity. Both are alike in saying that beings are not possessed of their own originating ground, cause or essence (= are empty of own-being).

Malcolm wrote:

Dependent existence is carefully articulated by Nāgārjuna to be a kind of "own-being." Thus, beings who are dependent on another in an absolute sense, have own-being.

MiphamFan said:

Dependent origination itself means that the chain of causes is never-ending. It might be never-ending in one sense, but in another sense, it ceases with 'nirodha', cessation, does it not?

Malcolm wrote:

The idea that an entity ceases is annihilationism. This is rejected by the Buddha. Cessation is simply the absence of causes for further arising. In this way there is cessation without any entity ceasing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 9:50 PM

Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

What about Longchenpa's statements of everything being equalalso a misleading statement and not to be taken literally ???

That's why i see so many discrepancies & my faith is dissolving...nearly everything i read and hold dear to my heart, i find out i misinterpreted it.

Malcolm wrote:

Then the fault lies in your interpretation and not in the material you read.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 9:37 PM

Title: Re: DJK on tulkus

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

While there is much to applaud in DKR's missive, there are troubling blind spots, even still:

The world's growing materialism and affluence have found their way into our monasteries and religious institutions, where many high lamas and especially lineage holders now lead a lifestyle so lavish and estranged from ordinary realities that they could almost be emperors!

This is a farce. Materialism and affluence have found their way into Tibetan monasteries and religious institutions from the beginning. The reason Langdarma was assassinated was not because he was going to destroy the monasteries, it was because he decided that they were bleeding the Tibetan economy dry, and so decided to tax them.

Materialism and affluence have plagued Tibetan Buddhism from the beginning, so this is nothing new.

He continues:

On the other hand, I also have genuine empathy for the labrang, monks, and others responsible for training our young incarnate lamas. They generally mean so well and have such good intentions, but they just don't know how to raise a child in today's world, and have simply not adapted to current conditions.

The real question arises: was there ever a system in Tibetan monasteries that properly raised children? I don't think so. Children are meant to be raised in families with mothers, fathers, brothers, sisters, cousins, aunts, uncles, and grandparents.

This last I whole heartedly agree with:

For this reason, I've also advised my friends, colleagues, and fellow Rinpoches time and again that, when they teach non-Tibetans, they should not encourage the wearing of Tibetan robes or any sort of Buddhist garb. By contrast, seeing a Buddhist practitioner in army uniform, suit and tie, or other normal dress sends the message that Buddhism can be practised by everyone.

The moment a lama imposes some sort of special robes, which is such a deeply ingrained habit, it immediately excludes others and creates a cultish atmosphere. In my view, one of the key reasons the number of Buddhists worldwide is decreasing while other religions like Islam are growing is our habit of introverted exclusivism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 8:34 PM

Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest

Content:

Kim said:

You missed the point. I am not talking about J Akhon Lhamo but about the confirmation given to her by a highly regarded buddhist lama.

Malcolm wrote:

Not all confirmations are what they appear to be.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 11:31 AM

Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

a house with only a single door, there is only one entry way to knowledge of reality.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Then why are there 84,000 gates ?

Malcolm wrote:

There are 84,000 afflictions, that is why there are eighty four thousands "gates of Dharma." But in reality, Buddha taught only three gates of liberation: emptiness, signlessness and wishlessness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 11:15 AM

Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

and what are you claiming is my "tenet"? I never said that all perspectives are "equally mistaken", I just said that they are perspectives, which by definition are limited. Limited, and therefore, mistaken regarding what they purport to describe.

gad rgyangs said:

if we are both looking at a house, we will see slightly different views of it based on our perspective. Are our views mistaken because they represent a perspective and not some kind of "god's eye" view of things? No, of course not: a sentient being is a perspective, that is what a sentient being is. get used to it. Now, all philosophies, religions and mythologies are products of sentient beings, ergo they are limited perspectives. They are not mistaken, just like poems are not mistaken but rather express the perspectives and experiences of sentient beings.

Malcolm wrote:

One can have all kinds of perspectives of a structure. But like a house with only a single door, there is only one entry way to knowledge of reality.

gad rgyangs said:

The point, when discussing reality, is that regardless of how many faulty descriptions there may be of it, the one correct description will allow one to realize it.

it would be a sad, impoverished reality that was completely capturable by the limited languages on this one particular planet.

Malcolm wrote:

There is but a single correct description of it in all languages, whatever they may be, whatever corresponds to "dependently originated," empty," and "natureless."

When you have discovered that, it is pointless to engage in a quixotic defense of "diverse expressions."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 10:34 AM

Title: Re: Illuminating Quotes by Malcolm Namdrol-la

Content:

Adamantine said:

He's got the qualification of having made nearly 20,000 posts here! Holy!

Malcolm wrote:

Among other things....yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 10:33 AM

Title: Re: Quality of Sanskrit Texts

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Only to westerners.

Astus said:

Why would that be? History is not a purely Western field of study. The Japanese are at the top level in Buddhist studies, and most Asian Buddhist countries are catching up. The historical perspective gained currency among Asian Buddhists in the 19th century, and has been found a valid method in researching past events. The Taisho Tripitaka compiled in 1924 is an obvious example. So it might be that only Tibetans have not yet caught up with the rest of the world.

heart said:

Or that the rest of the world haven't caught up with how it really is.

/magnus

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 10:32 AM

Title: Re: Quality of Sanskrit Texts

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Only to westerners.

Astus said:

Why would that be? History is not a purely Western field of study. The Japanese are at the top level in Buddhist studies, and most Asian Buddhist countries are catching up.

Malcolm wrote:

For all intents and purposes, they are a modern, western industrialized nation.

Astus said:

The historical perspective gained currency among Asian Buddhists in the 19th century, and has been found a valid method in researching past events. The Taisho Tripitaka compiled in 1924 is an obvious example. So it might be that only Tibetans have not yet caught up with the rest of the world.

Malcolm wrote:

Only the Tibetans have understood that narratives beings written by Buddhologists have nothing to do with the narratives they find meaningful because they don't really give a shit about Buddhologists, and neither do I.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 10:29 AM

Title: Re: Illuminating Quotes by Malcolm Namdrol-la

Content:

Kim said:

I've also seen many wonderful quotes by Malcolm. Thank you for them.

May I ask if you/he has any formal qualification? Is he a holder of some lineage?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I have formal qualifications.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 10:13 AM

Title: Re: Buddhism and bon

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

Loden Nyingpo revealed the myth of Tonpa Shenrab in the 14th century.

.

Malcolm wrote:

No, the first major bio of Tonpa Shenrab was revealed in the early 11th century by Shenchen Luga.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 10:03 AM

Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.

Content:

gad rgyangs said:

are poems true or false or mistaken? the only thing they are mistaken about is their triumphalism.

Malcolm wrote:

Your tenet is self-deafeating since it negates the function of conventional truth. As Nāgārjuna states:

The Dharma explained by the Buddha properly relies on two truths:
relative truth and ultimate truth.

Someone who does not know the distinction between those two truths does not know the profound principle of the teaching of the Buddha.

The ultimate cannot be explained without relying on convention.

Nirvana cannot be obtained without realizing the ultimate.

gad rgyangs said:

thats all well and good, but that passage only makes sense within the universe of Buddhist discourse (and even there it is not demonstrable, and must be taken on faith), and cannot be used in a meta-discussion about the validity of religious systems in general.

Malcolm wrote:

That is a nice sentiment, but I don't agree.

gad rgyangs said:

and what are you claiming is my "tenet"? I never said that all perspectives are "equally mistaken", I just said that they are perspectives, which by definition are limited.

Malcolm wrote:

Limited, and therefore, mistaken regarding what they purport to describe.

gad rgyangs said:

Claiming this does not "negate the function of conventional truth", it in fact affirms that all conceptually enunciated truths are conventional by definition and not definitive.

Malcolm wrote:

In order for a convention to be a convention, it must correspond to some function. The classic example is seeing one moon in the sky. When two moons are seen, this is not a conventional truth for those who are sober.

The point, when discussing reality, is that regardless of how many faulty descriptions there may be of it, the one correct description will allow one to realize it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 2:45 AM

Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

One thing I've noticed is that lamas are often more open-minded than their students.

Malcolm wrote:

That depends very much on the lama. And they are often too polite to let their students know what they really think.

dzogchungpa said:

It is good that we have people like you to let us know what they really think.

Malcolm wrote:

I've hung out with a lot of lamas. Their attitudes on many things often come as a major surprise to their students, you know, like supporting the invasion of Iraq by W.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 2:19 AM
Title: Re: Quality of Sanskrit Texts
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Which is relevant to whom, exactly?

Astus said:
Good question. I think it matters in case of interschool debates when historicity is brought into the argument.

Malcolm wrote:
Only to westerners.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 2:18 AM
Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest
Content:

Lhakpa said:
So I'm not saying that Seagal is a tulku...

Malcolm wrote:
He is indeed a tulku, recognized by Penor Rinpoche, in fact.

Lhakpa said:
I just meant I'm not trying to argue he is or isn't, just that he had a positive influence on me personally... which you of course don't have to be a tulku to do Still, I guess I'm less cynical about it than a lot of people I've seen.

Malcolm wrote:
David Carradine had a similar positive effect on me.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 2:16 AM
Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest
Content:
dzogchungpa said:
One thing I've noticed is that lamas are often more open-minded than their students.

Malcolm wrote:
That depends very much on the lama. And they are often too polite to let their students know what they really think.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 2:10 AM

Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest

Content:

Lhakpa said:

So I'm not saying that Seagal is a tulku...

Malcolm wrote:

He is indeed a tulku, recognized by Penor Rinpoche, in fact.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 1:27 AM

Title: Re: There's buddhadharma and then there the rest

Content:

Kim said:

I have no exposure to Jetsunma Akhon Lhamo except seeing one video of her. My first impression of her is that she is quite un-orthodox. Perhaps that's why to me she seemed fresh in her presentation.

Malcolm wrote:

One must take care with regards to teachers one finds on the internet, including those recognized as reincarnations.

Caveat emptor

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 1:24 AM

Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.

Content:

gad rgyangs said:

no, perennialism would say its dumb for them to argue because they're all saying the same thing, which they are not. But they are all talking about the same thing: the nature of reality. Each one describes it according to its perspective, but the nature of reality is beyond all attempts to delineate it once and for all with one or another system of concepts.

Malcolm wrote:

But the corollary you attempt to draw, i.e., that they are all equally mistaken concerning reality is false.

gad rgyangs said:

are poems true or false or mistaken? the only thing they are mistaken about is their triumphalism.

Malcolm wrote:

Your tenet is self-deafating since it negates the function of conventional truth. As Nāgārjuna states:

The Dharma explained by the Buddha properly relies on two truths:
relative truth and ultimate truth.

Someone who does not know the distinction between those two truths
does not know the profound principle of the teaching of the Buddha.

The ultimate cannot be explained without relying on convention.

Nirvana cannot be obtained without realizing the ultimate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 12:57 AM

Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.

Content:

gad rgyangs said:

isn't it comforting to know that the nature of reality is not beholden to Buddhists, Vedantins (and everyone else) arguing about which poetic metaphor best describes it?

krodha said:

A comforting thought for perennialists, perhaps.

gad rgyangs said:

no, perenialism would say its dumb for them to argue because they're all saying the same thing, which they are not. But they are all talking about the same thing: the nature of reality. Each one describes it according to its perspective, but the nature of reality is beyond all attempts to delineate it once and for all with one or another system of concepts.

Malcolm wrote:

But the corollary you attempt to draw, i.e., that they are all equally mistaken concerning reality is false.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 22nd, 2016 at 12:43 AM

Title: Re: Quality of Sanskrit Texts

Content:

Astus said:

= from a modern historical point of view...

Malcolm wrote:

Which is relevant to whom, exactly?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 21st, 2016 at 11:18 PM

Title: Re: Quality of Sanskrit Texts

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen teachings are the earliest Buddhist teachings, predating all others by eons and eons.

Astus said:

Dzogchen may teach that there was a first buddha. But I think everyone else says that there is no beginning of buddhas. So I guess infinite beats first.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, what Dzogchen teachings says concerning this is that in every eon from beginningless time, Dzogchen teachings appear first and disappear last.

So, we have our cake and can eat it too...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 21st, 2016 at 6:52 AM

Title: Re: Quality of Sanskrit Texts

Content:

jmlee369 said:

The notion that the Pali scriptures somehow capture the original words of the Buddha is a long discredited one in academia.

Astus said:

From a historical perspective, the Nikayas are still the closest to the original and the most accurate resource of the earliest teachings, as it has been confirmed through the comparative studies with the Chinese Agamas and fragments in other languages.

Malcolm wrote:

Absolutely not. Dzogchen teachings are the earliest Buddhist teachings, predating all others by eons and eons.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 21st, 2016 at 1:11 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

If a tertön (who is not on the bhumis) receives dream teachings, do these dream teachings come from an external source?

Malcolm wrote:

There is no such a thing as a tertön who is not on the bhumis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 20th, 2016 at 7:23 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

Tirisilex said:

It says here in the book "Medicine Buddha Teachings" by Khenchen Thrangu Rinpoche in the introduction page XIV "The Medicine Buddha, Vajrayogini, Tara, Vajradhara, Vajrasattva, or Chenrezig. And although it is said, from the standpoint of relative truth, that some, if not all, of these deities actually do exist as individual beings who can be supplicated, they exist as such because, and only because, the qualities that they embody were already inherent in the clear light nature, the buddha nature of their own minds."

So according to Khenchen Thrangu they do exist. Any more arguments to this statement?

Malcolm wrote:

I already answered this at length above.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 19th, 2016 at 9:53 PM

Title: Re: Choden Rinpoche on Chulen

Content:

maybay said:

The problem is they can't get the population up fast enough to handle what will happen when they make it legal. The sudden demand will be devastating. They know from experiences with ivory trade.

Malcolm wrote:

There is not a large demand for rhinoceros horn in Tibetan medicine. There is a larger demand for musk, bear bile and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 19th, 2016 at 10:24 AM

Title: Re: Choden Rinpoche on Chulen

Content:

maybay said:

Is anyone else bothered by that reference to rhinoceros horn on the page
<http://www.lamayeshe.com/article/taking-essence>

Don't people know what brutalities are committed in pursuit of rhino horn and other animal parts?

Malcolm wrote:

You don't understand. In Tibetan medicine, Rhinoceros horn is used in extreme small quantities, and from animals found deceased from natural causes.

On the other hand, musk is also used. Bear bile is used. Ox bile is used. In traditional medicine, when such animals were not killed in large numbers for sport, their byproducts are important materia medica.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 19th, 2016 at 6:06 AM

Title: Re: Choden Rinpoche on Chulen

Content:

maybay said:

And for good reason. If you do it incorrectly you might just cause drought or famine.

Malcolm wrote:

Ridiculous.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 19th, 2016 at 1:29 AM

Title: Re: Bön as the 5th Tibetan Tradition.

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

Unbelievable but i know you would have your reasons to claim this.

So bring some light into my ignorance, because i heard here and there bi lateral exchange of Dharma, but never heard it to the point.

So we have Sutra, Tantra and Dzogchen.

I think Bön ZZNG is 100% original Bön

So i guess Sutra like (Prasangika) Madyamika is not from Bön like the Prajnaparamita Sutras.

KY

Malcolm wrote:

Well, there is the fact that no Bonpo texts were even written down until the early eleventh century, apart from some Dunhuang finds. And Dunhuang finds about Tonpa Shenrab just do not support the elaborate bios found in the Mdo 'dus, etc.

I am happy to respect this and that narrative account as useful, inspirational chronicles, but we cannot confuse them with what we consider "history." History is secular, mundane, and injures Buddhist narratives just as much as it injures Bonpo ones.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 19th, 2016 at 12:41 AM

Title: Re: Bön as the 5th Tibetan Tradition.

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

Bön would be derived from the other Tibetan Traditions.

Malcolm wrote:

Largely, this is the case, but it is not entirely the case.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 18th, 2016 at 8:05 PM

Title: Re: Bönpo Guru Rinpoche

Content:

orgyen jigmed said:

I think it would have been much better if you used the actual Bon name of Pema Thotrong

Malcolm wrote:

It's actually Pema Thongdrol (Padma who liberates through seeing.)

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 18th, 2016 at 4:48 AM

Title: Re: Bönpo Guru Rinpoche

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

Well do you maybe think there was only one Guru Rinpoche ?
Or that both were ok maybe?

Malcolm wrote:

I think there was one Guru Rinpoche, and there are three different versions of his bio:

the Nyingma version, the Indian version, and the Bonpo version. They each served different needs of different communities.

kalden yungdrung said:

One thing is sure, the "GR" who did start a magical fight with a certain Bonpo, that is the one we know in Bon very well. He seems to be a Yogi from India.

That is never the same one we know in Bon.

It does not the matter which names we give to them.

Malcolm wrote:

At a certain point, you have to ask yourself, "What is the point of maintaining sectarian stories that unnecessarily alienate us from others?"

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 18th, 2016 at 4:06 AM

Title: Re: Bönpo Guru Rinpoche

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

Well do you maybe think there was only one Guru Rinpoche ?

Or that both were ok maybe?

Malcolm wrote:

I think there was one Guru Rinpoche, and there are three different versions of his bio: the Nyingma version, the Indian version, and the Bonpo version. They each served different needs of different communities.

BuddhaFollower said:

What Indian version?

Malcolm wrote:

The one related by Buddhaguptanatha to Taranatha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 18th, 2016 at 3:54 AM

Title: Re: Bönpo Guru Rinpoche

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

Well it is sure true that there are similarities between Bon and Vajrayana, but the lineage is different and sure if we take in consideration Bon Guru Rinpoche and the new Guru Rinpoche. So the core of the discussion is not to prove who owns what, but who did do what and under which name and certainly based on what motivation.

Malcolm wrote:

This is just a variant of the Gelug myth there was two Padmasambhavas, one bad, one good.

kalden yungdrung said:

Well do you maybe think there was only one Guru Rinpoche ?
Or that both were ok maybe?

Malcolm wrote:

I think there was one Guru Rinpoche, and there are three different versions of his bio: the Nyingma version, the Indian version, and the Bonpo version. They each served different needs of different communities.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 18th, 2016 at 3:41 AM

Title: Re: Loch Kelly

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I also see now that no less than my man Anam Thubten wrote a blurb for the book:
This is one of best contemporary books on the integration of meditation and nonduality.
Personally, I'm thankful to Loch for offering this gift to humanity at this crucial time when so many people are looking for living spirituality free from outdated paradigms.
Read this if you want to wake up to the beautiful mystery of life.

Malcolm wrote:

It's nice to have fans.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 18th, 2016 at 3:23 AM

Title: Re: Bönpo Guru Rinpoche

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

Well it is sure true that there are similarities between Bon and Vajrayana, but the lineage is different and sure if we take in consideration Bon Guru Rinpoche and the new Guru Rinpoche. So the core of the discussion is not to prove who owns what, but who did do what and under which name and certainly based on what motivation.

Malcolm wrote:

This is just a variant of the Gelug myth there was two Padmasambhavas, one bad, one good.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 18th, 2016 at 12:10 AM

Title: Re: The Nature of Language

Content:

Tao said:

Anyway it doesnt seem that all animals have idea of "self" or self-recognition, just a few with high mental capacities.

Malcolm wrote:

If they run away when threatened, they have a sense of self.

dzogchungpa said:

I don't see how that follows. I'd be surprised if they can't program robots to do at least primitive forms of that now. Just sayin'.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not the same. In order just to feel threatened, one must have a sense of self vs. other.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 17th, 2016 at 11:57 PM

Title: Re: Loch Kelly

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I don't hate Loch Kelly. I have never met him.

I was responding to some facts which are available to anyone, since someone brought up his career.

And in any case, my lack of sympathy towards "spiritual workshop" culture is well known. These teachings, sadly have no lineage to speak of, and will never last beyond the lifetime of their promulgators, whether or not they obtain the "endorsement" of this or that famous Lama, Hindu Guru or western self-proclaimed "awakened master."

dzogchungpa said:

That's really great. I still think the thread should be moved, but it doesn't really matter.

Malcolm wrote:

It would be a better idea to delete the thread in its entirety, since this is a forum for discussion of Buddhadharma, and not Milanese stews.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 17th, 2016 at 11:51 PM

Title: Re: Loch Kelly

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

... Caucasian Tibetan Buddhist teachers...never recognize the conceptualizing mind.

Malcolm wrote:

That is a huge overgeneralization, so huge as certainly to be false.

dzogchungpa said:

I don't know how huge it is, but it is certainly false.

Mods, since this thread seems to be turning into a "Let's All Hate On Loch Kelly" thread, perhaps it could be moved to a more appropriate forum?

Malcolm wrote:

I don't hate Loch Kelly. I have never met him.

I was responding to some facts which are available to anyone, since someone brought up his career.

And in any case, my lack of sympathy towards "spiritual workshop" culture is well known. These teachings, sadly have no lineage to speak of, and will never last beyond the lifetime of their promulgators, whether or not they obtain the "endorsement" of this or that famous Lama, Hindu Guru or western self-proclaimed "awakened master."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 17th, 2016 at 11:25 PM

Title: Re: Loch Kelly

Content:

BuddhaFollower said:

... Caucasian Tibetan Buddhist teachers...never recognize the conceptualizing mind.

Malcolm wrote:

That is a huge overgeneralization, so huge as certainly to be false.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 17th, 2016 at 9:52 PM

Title: Re: The Nature of Language

Content:

Tao said:

Anyway it doesn't seem that all animals have idea of "self" or self-recognition, just a few with high mental capacities.

Malcolm wrote:

If they run away when threatened, they have a sense of self.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 17th, 2016 at 9:12 PM

Title: Re: Loch Kelly

Content:

JAC72 said:

This is a pretty typical way to talk about whether the host can get enough people to attend for a teacher to accept an invitation to spend 5 days including travel. You can easily look at the fees on Loch's website which are reasonable and similar to other dharma teachers.

Malcolm wrote:

I have never heard of such arrangement being required by any Dharma teacher that I know of, up to and including HH Sakya Trizin. HH Dalai Lama is a different case, because, as a former head of state, he travels with an entourage.

In my opinion, apart from travel expenses, no Dharma teacher worth their salt should have any expectation of making a profit from their teachings. Making a profit from teaching Dharma is extremely gauche. Should students wish to make donations out of their devotion to this or that teacher, this is fine. When students understand that they must collaborate together to cover expenses and so forth in order to invite a teacher, this is also fine. But to set fees with the notion that teaching 1-5 students is too few in order to spend 5 days working with them is extremely saddening.

Now of course, if one is teaching inside of an institution like Omega or Kripalu, etc., these companies set a fee structure out of which a teacher will be paid. But the idea that someone decides to teach students based on whether there are "enough" students, especially in the case of teachings derived from the Tibetan and other traditions which have traditionally circulated in small groups, is exceedingly strange.

JAC72 said:

2. Loch is a wonderful person who has mainly done clinical social work in New York City with the severely mentally ill, the homeless and families of 9/11, where he was a first responder.

Malcolm wrote:

Being a Dharma teacher has a different set of qualifications than does being a wonderful person, etc. The latter is not necessarily commensurate with the former.

Of course, people are free and they can do what they like.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 17th, 2016 at 8:44 AM

Title: Re: Loch Kelly

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Well..what did he realize when he saw the morning star ?

In seeing the morning star and exclaiming, "I and all sentient beings on earth, together, attain enlightenment at the same time,"

<http://www.abuddhistlibrary.com/Buddhism/C%20-%20Zen/Modern%20Teachers/John%20Daido%20Loori%20-%20Dharma%20Talks/Dharma%20Discourse%20Trusting%20Buddha.htm>

Malcolm wrote:

This is a late Chan story. It is not to be taken literally.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 17th, 2016 at 7:56 AM

Title: Re: Loch Kelly

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. But more than that, the nonduality people like Kelley, etc., don't have the same idea of awakening as the one found in Buddhadharma.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

But didn't Buddha even say upon his Enlightenment, that everyone/everything was Enlightened simultaneously ?

You can't get more non-dual than that...

Malcolm wrote:

No, the Buddha never said this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 17th, 2016 at 7:40 AM

Title: Re: Loch Kelly

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It depends on what one means by the term awakening.

Kunga Lhadzom said:
So you can be awake but not fully Enlightened ?

Malcolm wrote:
Yes. But more than that, the nonduality people like Kelley, etc., don't have the same idea of awakening as the one found in Buddhadharma.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, August 17th, 2016 at 6:40 AM
Title: Re: Loch Kelly
Content:
Kunga Lhadzom said:
Who cares if it's Buddhadharma or not....I don't think Awakening is intended for only Buddhists...that's why there are 84,000 gates.
I loved his beautiful smile.
And I thought he was sincere.
And I watched the whole video.

Malcolm wrote:
It depends on what one means by the term awakening.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, August 17th, 2016 at 4:06 AM
Title: Re: Loch Kelly
Content:
dzogchungpa said:
Here's an interview:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e =
document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); }
https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

I haven't watched it yet but I've often found these BATGAP interviews to be a good way to get a sense of where someone is coming from.

Malcolm wrote:
Spirituality Lite™. It's less filling!

Seriously though, his idea about awakening has nothing to do with Buddhadharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 17th, 2016 at 2:34 AM

Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Well, sure, since Advaita is knock off version of Yogacara Madhyamaka with an eternalist slant.

Losal Samten said:

As in Shantarakshita's YC-MA? Or you mean Yogacara's Madhyamaka exegesis. Isn't Advaita basically Yogacara with a transpersonal perfected nature?

According to this, Ratnakirti actually expressed that view; dunno if it has any basis:

<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ratnak%C4%ABrti>

Malcolm wrote:

As in Gaudapada's Agama Shastra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 16th, 2016 at 7:33 AM

Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.

Content:

Simon E. said:

Ok let's ask him. Did you Malcolm?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, sure, since Advaita is knock off version of Yogacara Madhyamaka with an eternalist slant.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 15th, 2016 at 9:49 AM

Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Zag bcas is an adjective, emotion is a noun. Definitely a poor translation choice. But hey, since DKR is a tulku, he can ride roughshod over any language he likes, right?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 15th, 2016 at 3:31 AM

Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.

Content:

gad rgyangs said:
what translation? im sure he was speaking english.

Simon E. said:
But he translated from the Tibetan or used an existing translation.

gad rgyangs said:
are you saying he doesnt know the difference between a "klesha" and an "emotion"?

Malcolm wrote:
He may not. ChNN uses the term "emotion" for kleśa (nyon mongs) regularly.

OED:
Emotion:

a natural instinctive state of mind deriving from one's circumstances, mood, or relationships with others:
Monier-Williams

gad rgyangs said:
kleśa:

kleza m. pain , affliction , distress , pain from disease , anguish S3vetUp. Mn. Ya1jn5. MBh. &c. ; (in Yoga phil. five Kles3as are named , viz. %{a-vidyA} , ` " ignorance " , %{asmi-tA} , egotism " , %{rAga} , ` " desire " , %{dveSa} , ` " aversion " , and %{abhiniveza} , tenacity of mundane existence " Yogas. Prab. Sarvad. ; the Buddhists reckon ten , viz. three of the body [murder , theft , adultery] , four of speech [lying , slander , abuse , unprofitable conversation] , three of the mind [covetousness , malice , scepticism] Buddh. Sarvad.) ; wrath , anger L. ; worldly occupation , care , trouble (= %{vyavasAya}) L.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, August 15th, 2016 at 3:29 AM
Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.
Content:
dzogchungpa said:
Nope.

Malcolm wrote:
So which of the four do not accept? Why? Barring inadequate translation issues (like emotion = kleśa, etc.)

gad rgyangs said:

what translation? im sure he was speaking english.

Malcolm wrote:

"all afflictions are suffering" (sarvakkleśasādukkham) /= "all emotions are painful"

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 14th, 2016 at 11:01 PM

Title: Re: What Makes You NOT A Buddhist. A reminder.

Content:

Simon E. said:

'What makes you not an informed student of the Buddhas Dharma' works just as well.

Remember that there are no 'ists' or 'isms' in Tibetan.

So Dzogchungpa, D.K.R's four points, do you accept them or not?

dzogchungpa said:

Nope.

Malcolm wrote:

So which of the four do not accept? Why? Barring inadequate translation issues (like emotion = kleśa, etc.)

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 14th, 2016 at 4:58 AM

Title: Re: Socialism makes people selfish

Content:

conebeckham said:

Nicholas, your agenda is showing, and it's not pretty. Further, your sources are innaccurate and flawed, and here, on this Buddhist forum, you should reflect on the Dharma which teaches cause and effect. Socioeconomic systems in the real world, to say nothing of theoretical systems which cannot be realized, are codependently originated along with sentient beings, and are as much a result as a cause of behavior.

There are elements of socialism, and elements of free market capitalism, in all current societies. This windmill you keep tilting at, however, does not exist, even as a functioning appearance.

Malcolm wrote:

While indeed I think our friend Nick's crusade is indeed quixotic, he does have one good point, which is that Marxist socialism has been an abject failure, and ought to be relegated to the dustbin of history, along with a lot of other bad ideas. Which is not to say that all of Marx's ideas are bad, rather the system that arose out of them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 13th, 2016 at 8:15 PM

Title: Re: Loch Kelly

Content:

Kim said:

He's been studying with these rinpoche's for a few decades.

Malcolm wrote:

What does this mean?

Sorry, but at minimum, someone who is teaching Dzogchen or Mahāmudra should at least have rudimentary grasp of Tibetan. For example, we have this fellow in Sweden who has claimed he was authorized to teach Dzogchen by TUR, but when such claims are investigated, the basis upon which they are made seems to evaporate like morning mist when the sun rises.

heart said:

Sweden? You probably mean Denmark, right?

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Right, but all you Scandinavians look alike.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 13th, 2016 at 8:14 PM

Title: Re: Very clear statements about the Dzogchen path- Tulku Urgyen Rinpoche

Content:

anjali said:

In the course of conversation with a learned man who asked about Purusha and Prakriti, Sri Bhagavan said: Purusha and Prakriti are only the bifurcation of the one Supreme. They are surmised because the student has the sense of duality deep rooted.

Malcolm wrote:

Which is completely consistent with Advaita.

anjali said:

Which is contrasted with statements like,

Unless one knows oneself as the witness, ignorance, which takes the form of the ego, will not be removed.

The apparent contradiction is resolved with teaching instructions such as,

Malcolm wrote:

Which is completely consistent with Sāṃkhya and Advaita.

anjali said:

He must first discern consciousness from insentience and be the consciousness only. Later let him realise that insentience is not apart from consciousness.

Malcolm wrote:

[/quote]

Which is completely consistent with Advaita.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 13th, 2016 at 9:42 AM

Title: Re: Very clear statements about the Dzogchen path- Tulku Urgyen Rinpoche

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, I didn't bring it up, I was just responding to Astus.

Malcolm wrote:

Rebutting something you are not prepared to actually rebut? Well, I guess it is just the internet after all...

dzogchungpa said:

I said his statement was not correct. Why? Because I don't see how it could be established. I can provide more quotes that I feel support the idea that RM would not have accepted an "ultimate observer", but why bother? If this issue is important to you, why don't you contact an expert like David Godman? I'm sure he would respond.

Malcolm wrote:

No proper Saṃkhya or Advaitan would accept an ultimate buddhi/mahat. Buddhi, etc., is relative, and nonsentient.

Purusha, on the other hand, is a passive, disengaged "enjoyer" which "lights up" the tattvas from buddhi down to the element of earth.

When Purusha recognizes buddhi down to the element of earth as not being its own state, it takes the name Jñā, the knower.

The difference between Saṃkhya and Advaita is the Saṃkhya recognizes infinite separate puruṣas, whereas Advaita recognizes only one. In both cases, puruṣa is eternal.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 13th, 2016 at 7:55 AM

Title: Re: Very clear statements about the Dzogchen path- Tulku Urgyen Rinpoche
Content:

dzogchungpa said:
Well, I didn't bring it up, I was just responding to Astus.

Malcolm wrote:
Rebutting something you are not prepared to actually rebut? Well, I guess it is just the internet after all...

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, August 13th, 2016 at 7:53 AM
Title: Re: Very clear statements about the Dzogchen path- Tulku Urgyen Rinpoche
Content:

dzogchungpa said:
BTW, which Gelugpa savants conflated the two?

Malcolm wrote:
Sumpa Khenpo, etc.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, August 13th, 2016 at 6:54 AM
Title: Re: Very clear statements about the Dzogchen path- Tulku Urgyen Rinpoche
Content:

dzogchungpa said:
M.: 'Witness' is applicable when there is an object to be seen. Then it is duality. The Truth lies beyond both. In the mantra, sakshi cheta kevalo nirgunascha, the word sakshi must be understood as sannidhi (presence), without which there could be nothing. See how the sun is necessary for daily activities. He does not however form part of the world actions; yet they cannot take place without the sun. He is the witness of the activities. So it is with the Self.
Anyway, like I said I don't want to get into an argument about it.

Malcolm wrote:
This is just standard Shaiva view, ultimately rooted in the Saṃkhya notion of Puruṣa/Jñā.

People who study tenet systems and Dzogchen view properly would recognize this instantly. Frankly, people who do not study tenets and Dzogchen view in a proper frequently conflate the two, as have a number of Gelugpa savants.

Finally, if you don't want to get into arguments about this or that, don't bring it up.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 13th, 2016 at 5:06 AM

Title: Re: Very clear statements about the Dzogchen path- Tulku Urgyen Rinpoche

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

As far as a meditation instruction? All over the place iirc. I've seen the same instruction in Mahamudra writings I'm certain, heck..I think I even read some Thai Forest people and Zen people with the instruction to observe the observer, know the knower etc. Not saying it's the same thing exactly in those contexts of course...

Astus said:

Mahamudra vipasyana instruction starts with first observing the mind, then thoughts, then external phenomena. As for Zen, it is one of the first questions (huatou) given: Who is it?; or in China especially: Who is reciting the name? (i.e. asking this while chanting Namu Amituo Fo). By the way, Neo-Advaita has this method as well, particularly in Ramana's community, since they actually believe in an ultimate observer.

dzogchungpa said:

Gnothi seauton and all that. I don't want to get into a big argument about this as it is off-topic, but your statement about Ramana and his "community" is not correct.

Malcolm wrote:

Can you substantiate this? Quite frankly, many claims are made about RM, but when one reads what he has actually written on this and that subject, one gets the sense that his view does not go beyond normative Hindu tropes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 13th, 2016 at 5:04 AM

Title: Re: Loch Kelly

Content:

Knotty Veneer said:

When Dharma becomes your source of income...

fckw said:

Well, that's true for pretty much all Tibetan monks and nuns, as well as for ChNN and a whole series of other highly respected teachers, isn't it?

I believe that Westerners have this odd reverse prejudice against Westerners charging money for Dharma. The idea that "it should be free" actually comes from an entirely different culture where a monastic lifestyle was in a much higher regard than it is in the West. Furthermore, it's quite well known that some mahasiddhas charged their students outrageous amounts of money for transmission of a certain teaching cycle, yet others again gave teachings to their students for free.

Malcolm wrote:

ChNN has a pension.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 13th, 2016 at 2:20 AM

Title: Re: Loch Kelly

Content:

Kim said:

He's been studying with these rinpoche's for a few decades.

Malcolm wrote:

What does this mean?

Sorry, but at minimum, someone who is teaching Dzogchen or Mahāmudra should at least have rudimentary grasp of Tibetan. For example, we have this fellow in Sweden who has claimed he was authorized to teach Dzogchen by TUR, but when such claims are investigated, the basis upon which they are made seems to evaporate like morning mist when the sun rises.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 13th, 2016 at 2:15 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

Anders said:

What makes one method 'manjushri method', another 'Vajrapani' method, a third 'Tara' method and a fourth 'Vajra Dakini' method?

Malcolm wrote:

Lineage, and the disposition of the one to be tamed.

Dzogchen's use of "Samantabhadra" in a similar context makes this point fairly clear (and also that there is no relation to the mahasattva "Samantabhadra")

Anders said:

But your explanation here doesn't address the 'how and why' of what looks to me like a very deliberate ongoing correlation made between the continuum mahasattvas and the yidams correspondingly named all across the board but-not-really-deities.

Malcolm wrote:

Some people are attracted to the result, Mañjuśrī, so there is a path where one identifies as Mañjuśrī to realize that result. It is very straightforward and not at all complicated.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 13th, 2016 at 2:09 AM

Title: Re: Loch Kelly

Content:

Kim said:

A person like that doesn't become new age overnight simply because the lama's permission isn't there after all.

Malcolm wrote:

A person becomes new age when, instead of teaching Dharma, they teach a sort of Milanese Stew:

He studied Buddhism with Professor Lily de Silva at the University of Kandy, Sri Lanka, Insight Meditation with Godwin Samararatne and at the Theravada monasteries, Inter-Spiritual Contemplative Meditation with Fr. Bede Griffiths and Anthony de Mello, Advaita at Sri Ramana Ashram, and Dzogchen and Mahamudra Meditation with Tulku Urgyen Rinpoche in Nepal.

Dzogchen and Advaita (not to mention Mahāmudra) are as incompatible as day and night.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 11th, 2016 at 9:29 PM

Title: Re: List five books everyone must read

Content:

Lazy Monk said:

Oh, but entertaining novels belong in the other derailed thread I started...

Agree though that Bataille was a dirty good writer. But if anyone is prepping for the dark side, I rather recommend the academic book "Serial Murderers and Their Victims", by Eric Hickey at California State University. And a book about forensic science, but only know a Norwegian book about this topic. It's certainly darker than what any novelist has managed to write.

Malcolm wrote:

But you asked for five books that everyone must read, and think these satisfy the bill.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 11th, 2016 at 8:57 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dude, you are such a pretentious guy. Stop telling other people how they should behave when you don't even have a handle on your own behavior.

smcj said:

If by suggesting that someone should seek out a traditional teacher for clarification on an important question such as this has offended people, I apologize.

Malcolm wrote:

You are being incredibly presumptuous.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 11th, 2016 at 8:56 PM

Title: Re: List five books everyone must read

Content:

Lazy Monk said:

Malcolm, your books are too onesided and not dark enough to be considered the top five essential books for mental prepping.

Malcolm wrote:

The point was neither darkness nor mental prepping, the point was literary quality and entertainment value.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 11th, 2016 at 8:54 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Jeff H said:

A third ticket of Stein/Sanders (or Sanders/Stein) would have, at least, provided a realistic referendum about what Americans actually want.

Malcolm wrote:

While for the time being I am going to vote for Stein, I have serious reservations about the US Green Party's adopting "eco-socialism" as the party's political ideology. I have studied it fairly closely, and as a deep green/left biocentric, I have found that it is just green washed old-school Marxism. The policies of their leading thinkers, like the Trotskyism of the past, will lead to eco-gulags, or alternately, an Eco-Stalinism, when and if Green parties gain power, and discover again that their attempt to induce a world revolution will be confined to a single country.

If people truly value the Green parties, they must resist these regressive marxist tendencies within the environmental movement. Marxist Socialism, like Capitalism, cannot solve the problems it has created.

Queequeg said:

Can you elaborate on this? Or links?

Malcolm wrote:

http://www.gp.org/green_party_moves_towards_declaring_itself_eco_socialist:

In a major development, the Green Party took a key step towards declaring itself Eco-socialist. The party's National Committee voted Sunday night to approve a proposed amendment to the party's platform entitled "Ecological Economics." The proposed platform position declares that the Green Party is anti-capitalist and in favor of a decentralized vision socialism.

Queequeg said:

The proposal to amend the 2016 platform will go to the Green Party National Convention for a final vote. The convention will be held in Houston, Texas, August 4-7, a week after the Democratic Party's National Convention. Almost 78 percent of the National Committee voted in favor of sending the proposal to the convention (76 voted "yes," 22 voted "no," with 9 voting to "abstain," on Proposal 835).

The proposal would have the Greens go on the record, for the first time, that they want to go beyond reforms intended to make capitalism greener, in favor of a democratic and decentralized conception of green socialism. The proposal, "addresses the economic inequalities, social inequalities, and productivism of both capitalism and state socialism and emphasizes grassroots democracy in the workplace. This workplace grassroots democracy has been largely absent from the Green platform, and many believe it is the way forward for a truly ecological economy and a new system...The Green Party seeks to build an alternative economic system based on ecology and decentralization of power, an alternative that rejects both the capitalist system that maintains private ownership over almost all production as well as the state-socialist system that assumes control over industries without democratic, local decision making. We believe the old models of capitalism (private ownership of production) and state socialism (state ownership of production) are not ecologically sound, socially just, or democratic and that both contain built-in structures that advance injustices...Production is best for people and planet when democratically owned and operated by those who do the work and those most affected by production decisions." <http://gp.org/cgi-bin/vote/propdetail?pid=835>

Andrea Mérida Cuéllar, the National Co-Chair of Green Party, told IndyBay, "The themes of the left that we saw develop in the early parts of the 20th century are timely again because of the economic, social and environmental upheaval wrought by late-stage capitalism. Even though these themes have been co-opted by the political center, it's clear that the working class in this country is ready for revolution. As the true left discusses reform vs. revolution, the Green Party is now uniquely positioned to finally be the electoral tactic of grassroots movements ... we are now ready to finally become the party of the 99 percent and be worthy of the attention of an anti-oppressive and leftist worker cadre."

Malcolm wrote:

The late David Orton expresses his own, milder, reservations about Ecosocialism:
David Orton on Deep Ecology and Ecosocialism

[This message was posted on the EI-Network yahoogroup on December 21, 2008. To make reading easier, I have divided several long paragraphs, but otherwise the text is unchanged. The original is here.]

Greetings ecosocialists and deep green fellow travelers:

I would like to sign on to the Belém Ecosocialist Declaration (see <http://www.ecosocialistnetwork.org/>), whose spirit I am very sympathetic to, but unfortunately I cannot. There is much I agree with, as for example the critique of the market assumptions of the climate change debate (unfortunately embraced by the Green Party in Canada and Elizabeth May, the current leader). Several people who I respect, because of their work for the natural world and for social justice, including some left biocentrists, have signed on to the Declaration.

I describe myself as someone on the socialist/communist side of the political spectrum. But I am also someone who has embraced the philosophy of deep ecology, first outlined by the Norwegian philosopher Arne Naess. This is the understanding that humans have to come into a fundamentally new ecocentric relationship with the natural world, which rejects a supposed human domination over nature. Nonhuman life and the Earth itself are to be valued independently of their usefulness for human purposes. Also, in order to thrive, human and nonhuman life need “a substantial decrease of the human population”, as the eight-point Deep Ecology Platform outlines.

This does not mean that I and other deep greens “hate socialism” as one of the signers of the declaration has alleged (Joel Kovel, The Enemy of Nature, second edition, p. 302). It does mean, however, that a socialist/communist perspective fundamentally influenced by deep ecology does not share some of the assumptions of this Ecosocialist Declaration.

What are some of these assumptions?

— I think the use of the term “ecosocialism” excludes options and implies that post-industrial societal models of sustainability (based on the socialist/communist tradition) already exist and can be adopted and modified. This is foolish and unfortunate Left arrogance, given the historical record. The environmental legacies of “actually existing” socialist and communist societies are quite negative. (The possible exception here would be Cuba, which has shown leadership, by example, in small plot intensive urban gardens and in developing alternatives to fossil fuel-based rural agriculture, and in the protection of the island’s natural biodiversity.)

It seems to me that “socialism” or “ecosocialism”, as a description of a future deep ecology-inspired and socially just post-capitalist society, is not adequate or inspirational. The type of future ecocentric and socially just social formations is up for discussion. There are no worked out social models that can be simply adopted. Socialism is in many ways an expression of the industrial proletariat, and while its legacy of social justice remains valid, and indeed needed for a future ecocentric society, it is not correct to say that “ecosocialism” will describe the future post-industrial ecocentric society. The features of such a society are a work in progress for all of us to engage with.

I am sympathetic to the view expressed by Saral Sarkar in his book Eco-socialism or Eco-capitalism? that “There is no contradiction between socialism and a truly ecological economy if the former can be conceived of as a non-industrial society...” (p. 5)

— Stan Rowe (1918-2004), a Canadian eco-philosopher, was also a socialist. But he noted in his writings that we are first Earthlings, part of mother Earth, and only in second place human beings. For Stan, both capitalism and socialism as social systems express the basic problem of species selfishness. As he pointed out in his first book of essays Home Place, “Neither philosophical liberalism championing liberty nor philosophical socialism championing equality will save us from ourselves. Human history will end in ecology, or nothing.” (p. 7)

The Belém Declaration is unfortunately people-centered, not Earth-centered. Where is the advocacy for wilderness preservation and other species? Nonhuman species appear to be an afterthought. Social justice for humans is of course necessary, but it must be subordinate to Earth justice for all species. As Rowe has said, although socialism and capitalism share a common “rapacious” anthropocentric view towards Earth exploitation, “socialism has the virtue of extending the circle of care beyond the selfish individual, at least turning our vision outward in the right direction.” (p. 193) But social justice for humans cannot be at the expense of the ecology. “Community” has to include not just humans but other animals, plants and the Earth itself.

— There is no mention of population reduction in the Declaration. This should be a priority for an ecocentric socially just society. It is not only wrong from a human-welfare perspective - there are far too many of us - but it shows that the habitat needs of other life forms are not considered important.

— The Declaration assumes that it is capitalism, not industrialism, which is the main problem. Left biocentrists see industrial society’s social and technological formation as the main problem, and it can have a capitalist or a socialist face.

— The Declaration assumes “full employment for all” in the new ecosocialist society. This statement conveys that the transition will be painless, and implies that production and consumption will continue. Nothing could be further from the truth. To live sustainably will mean living with much less, along with serious redistribution of wealth to those who are economically marginalized. As has been said, the ecology movement is the first social movement in history to promise a lower material standard of living.

— I feel that generally the Declaration underplays the primary contribution of the environmental and green movements, which have not, in the main, been driven by a socialist consciousness. Socialists have mainly been in the wings, not in the activist vanguard.

— The Declaration says nothing about the need for a new Earth-centered ethics, as part of a green politics, which ends the spiritual separation of most people from the natural world.

— I think that an “Anti-Capitalist Belém Declaration” would be a more appropriate and encompassing name. The endless growth and consumerism of capitalism has no respect for the ecological limits of the Earth or concern for fundamental social justice for all citizens. This could be a banner to rally a wide variety of opposition forces, and it could allow the needed discussion about the nature of a future Earth-friendly and socially just world society. This discussion is pre-empted by using the term “ecosocialist”.

The above should not convey that I am hostile to the Belém Ecosocialist Declaration, because I am not. I regard this Declaration as a positive development and wish to maintain a dialogue with those who sign the Declaration. There is not just one path forward for the Ecocentric Left. As Naess has said, “the front is long.” Perhaps the Declaration will be modified in a more Earth-centered direction at the forthcoming January 2009 meeting in Brazil, a vast country with a rich diversity of plant and animal life, as well as peoples from many ethnic and racial backgrounds.

For the Earth,
David Orton

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 11th, 2016 at 8:47 PM

Title: Re: Loch Kelly

Content:

Kim said:

What the hell is going on here... Someone shouts from the bushes a oneliner saying about a "misunderstanding" that Loch Kelly isn't an authorised mahamudra teacher and doesn't proof this claim in any way. And already Loch Kelly is thought of as big of a hoax as Jackson Peterson. Hello..?.

Malcolm wrote:

Let's put it this way, Kim. If someone asked me if they should study with him, I would ascertain if they were truly interested in Dharma or preferred new age workshops before issuing my recommendation. But that's just me.

Guruitis is a very serious inflammation of the brain.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 11th, 2016 at 12:22 PM

Title: Re: POTUS 2016, part 3

Content:

Jeff H said:

A third ticket of Stein/Sanders (or Sanders/Stein) would have, at least, provided a realistic referendum about what Americans actually want.

Malcolm wrote:

While for the time being I am going to vote for Stein, I have serious reservations about the US Green Party's adopting "eco-socialism" as the party's political ideology. I have studied it fairly closely, and as a deep green/left biocentric, I have found that it is just green washed old-school Marxism. The policies of their leading thinkers, like the Trotskyism of the past, will lead to eco-gulags, or alternately, an Eco-Stalinism, when and if Green parties gain power, and discover again that their attempt to induce a world revolution will be confined to a single country.

If people truly value the Green parties, they must resist these regressive marxist tendencies within the environmental movement. Marxist Socialism, like Capitalism, cannot solve the problems it has created.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 11th, 2016 at 12:12 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

Sounds like you have your own interpretation.

Malcolm wrote:

Not at all, for example, the refuge prayer of Khenpo Jigphuns treasure, the Throat Locket Kilaya begins, rang rig lha la khyabs su mchi, i.e. "I go for refuge to the deity, my own vidyā." When he explained this, he explained that the deity was nothing other than the nature of one's mind, vidyā or rig pa.

smcj said:

Other Guru-Yogas do start with your human guru, go through various levels of sophistication, and end up as you say. However even what it means for your human teacher to be the focus of Guru-Yoga is usually badly misunderstood. It's not creating a cultish fixation on his personality.

The interpretations you speak of are later stages of Guru-Yoga. If your instructor has given that to you, then fine. If not, consider verifying your understanding of the subject with him. Misapplying an interpretation in the context of your practice can be an obstacle. It's not like seeing something on a menu you like and ordering at a restaurant.

Malcolm wrote:

Dude, you are such a pretentious guy. Stop telling other people how they should behave when you don't even have a handle on your own behavior.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 11th, 2016 at 3:00 AM

Title: Re: List five books everyone must read

Content:

MiphamFan said:

I think the statement in that commentary should be contextualised; most likely he is referring to different tirthika philosophies (Samkhya, Advaita etc) and in the context of writing polemics in India. I think it is rather absurd if you take it literally; you end up with lamas who claim that Abhidharma cosmology must be true because it is said in the sutras and who reject modern cosmology because it is a "tirthika" thing... but Buddhists need to realise that science is just a method, a way to work with inference and induction, something which is perfectly justified even in Buddhist epistemology.

Losal Samten said:

Not to get into this, but abhidharma cosmology is perfectly viable relatively when seen via the valid cognition of pure vision

Malcolm wrote:

Umm, no. It is just the distorted picture of the planet Earth seen through early medieval Indian Buddhist eyes.

Pure vision and blurred vision should not be conflated.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 11th, 2016 at 2:38 AM

Title: Re: List five books everyone must read

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

In no particular order:

I Am That - Nisargadatta

Nothing Ever Happened - David Godman

Time, Space and Knowledge - Tarthang Tulku

The Profound Treasury of the Ocean of Dharma - Chogyam Trungpa

The Mahabharata

Malcolm wrote:

Hippy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 11th, 2016 at 2:27 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

chimechodra said:

I think I probably know the answer to this question already, but figured it can't hurt to ask:

Is Ati Guru Yoga by itself able to maintain/strengthen your connection with the guardians/dharmapalas? Or, in order to build this relationship, is more elaborate practice absolutely necessary? Obviously I do what I can when I can, but I'm not sure I've read anything speaking one way or the other about this point as it pertains to the DC specifically.

Malcolm wrote:

As ChNN says often, the protectors are in you. So yes, Guru yoga is sufficient.

Crazywisdom said:

The Protector is another name for a Buddha. Since that is one's own nature, Guru Yoga is invoking the protector.

Malcolm wrote:

Here, I am referring to dharmapālas, not the Nātha [mgon po], a title of the Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 11th, 2016 at 2:23 AM

Title: Re: List five books everyone must read

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

(Oh and Buddhahood in this Life by Panchen Vimalamitra)

Lobsang Chojor said:

Should we buy the copy translated by Malcolm Smith

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think there is another translation coming out anytime soon...so...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 11th, 2016 at 1:38 AM

Title: Re: List five books everyone must read

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Story of the Eye by Bataille

Diary of a Drug Fiend by Crowley
Maldoror by Lautrement
Philosophy in the Bedroom by De Sade
Nomadology by Deleuze and Guattari

(Oh and Buddhahood in this Life by Panchen Vimalamitra)

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 11th, 2016 at 1:04 AM

Title: Re: Wisdom Books UK RIP

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

Is there a connection with Wisdom Publication in Boston?

Malcolm wrote:

Many years ago. But not for a couple of decades.

Wisdom Publications is a nonprofit and sustain themselves through fundraising as much as book sales (I was an employee back in the early '90's) AFAIK.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 11th, 2016 at 1:00 AM

Title: Re: Loch Kelly

Content:

philji said:

I have now discovered that his authorisation to teach by Mingyur Rinpoche is going to be removed from his website...a misunderstanding he says!!!!

Malcolm wrote:

Jax II

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 11th, 2016 at 1:00 AM

Title: Re: Loch Kelly

Content:

philji said:

I am not too comfortable with his comments.. "I do feel that I get most everything they are pointing to and so I trying to convey but I try to update them where the practices at times seem archaic and too formal and miss the how-to pieces which I try to fill in in different ways."

As for fees well????!!!!

Kim said:

I'd recommend anyone to check out how he teaches mahamudra practices.

But for sure, there is a business interest there. He charges 7700 USD per weekend, plus flights, hotels and meals. He said it's perfectly fine with organisers in the US. He failed to understand that in remote European countries like the one where I live, he is practically unknown so taking a financial responsibility like that wasn't something I wanted to take. In regards to his fee, there was no mention of charity projects etc.

Malcolm wrote:

That is f$&king outrageous.

Kim said:

He also mentioned his teacher, Mingyur, charges more than him. I don't know what to make of that.

Malcolm wrote:

I highly doubt that this is the case.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 10th, 2016 at 7:58 PM

Title: Wisdom Books UK RIP

Content:

Unknown said:

Resolutions for Winding-up

WISDOM BOOKS (DISTRIBUTION) LIMITED

(Company Number 02425147)

Registered office: 25 Stanley Road, Ilford, Essex, IG1 1RW

Principal trading address: 25 Stanley Road, Ilford, Essex, IG1 1RW

Notice is hereby given that the following resolutions were passed on 29 June 2016 as a Special Resolution and an Ordinary Resolution respectively:

“That the Company cannot, by reason of its liabilities, continue its business, and that it is advisable to wind up the same, and accordingly that the Company be wound up voluntarily and that Lee Anthony Green and Andrew Anderson Kelsall, both of Larking Gowen, King Street House, 15 Upper King Street, Norwich, NR3 1RB, (IP Nos: 015610 and 009555) be appointed as Joint Liquidators for the purposes of such voluntary winding up.”

Further details contact: Lee Green, Email: <mailto:lee.green@larking-gowen.co.uk>, Andrew Kelsall, Email: <mailto:andrew.kelsall@larking-gowen.co.uk>, Tel: 01603 624181. Alternative contact: Kerry Horne, Email: <mailto:kerry.horne@larking-gowen.co.uk>

Lee Anthony Green, Liquidator

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.thegazette.co.uk/notice/2567056>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 10th, 2016 at 7:51 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

I pray to you Lama Chenrezig.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because the guru, in order to introduce you to the practice of Avalokiteśvara, must generate himself as well as vase and so on, in the form of Avalokiteśvara.

smcj said:

I pray to you Yidam Chenrezig

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because this the path the guru has introduced you to.

smcj said:

I pray to you Perfect Noble Chenrezig.

I pray to you Lord Protector Chenrezig

I pray to you Lord of Love Chenrezig

Great Compassionate Victor, please hold us with your compassion...please bestow the blessing to obtain omniscient Buddhahood.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because Avalokiteśvara is a tenth stage bodhisattva, who is a being who has a separate continuum from you.

But for example, Hevajra was never a bodhisattva on the paths and stages, per se, there is no being with a separate continuum "Hevajra". The Hevajra mandala is a method taught by Vajradhara in the Hevajra Tantra to the tenth stage bodhisattva Vajragarbha.

Anders said:

What then is the relationship between Avalokiteśvara the mahasattva and Avalokiteśvara the yidam? Giving them similar names would imply shared identity on some level.

Malcolm wrote:

I explained this above already, but again: Avalokiteśvara the mahasattva is an independent being with his own continuum. Avalokiteśvara the yidam is the means by which oneself may realize that same state.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 10th, 2016 at 7:49 PM

Title: Re: Loch Kelly

Content:

Kim said:

I

I invited him to teach in my country too but once he informed me of his fee demands all I could say was, "That's not OK for any dharma teacher". He got offended and never replied to me again.

Malcolm wrote:

[P]ermitting someone with gifts in the gate, stopping the one without gifts outside the gate—supporting relatives by feeding them with devotional offerings;
Also leave great meditator's Dharma and go!
— Jetsun Dragpa Gyaltzen

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 10th, 2016 at 12:42 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

chimechodra said:

I think I probably know the answer to this question already, but figured it can't hurt to ask:

Is Ati Guru Yoga by itself able to maintain/strengthen your connection with the guardians/dharmapalas? Or, in order to build this relationship, is more elaborate practice absolutely necessary? Obviously I do what I can when I can, but I'm not sure I've read anything speaking one way or the other about this point as it pertains to the DC specifically.

Malcolm wrote:

As ChNN says often, the protectors are in you. So yes, Guru yoga is sufficient.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 10th, 2016 at 12:40 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

Miphamfan said:

smcj, this is what Padmasambhava himself said.

smcj said:

If I may ask, do you have a traditional meditation instructor?

Malcolm wrote:
Hahahahahha. Don't be a ninny. Of course he does.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, August 10th, 2016 at 12:37 PM
Title: Re: Yidams
Content:
Malcolm wrote:

But for example, Hevajra was never a bodhisattva on the paths and stages, per se, there is no being with a separate continuum "Hevajra". The Hevajra mandala is a method taught by Vajradhara in the Hevajra Tantra to the tenth stage bodhisattva Vajragarbha.

Fa Dao said:
ok, so how does Dorje Drolo fit into all of this Malcolm?

Malcolm wrote:
Drollo is a manifestation of Guru P. Drollo is also a yidam. They are not the same thing. The former is the result; the later is a path. Yidam practice is the method of taking the result as the path.

Hevajra, for example, is a heruka. Vajradhara manifested as Hevajra in order to tame the eight worldly gods. In this respect, Hevajra represents the result. Practicing Hevajra as a yidam is the path, in this case too, the result is taken as the path.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, August 10th, 2016 at 3:15 AM
Title: Re: Yidams
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
That is a nice thing for you to say.

That said, I still say you have no idea what you are talking about. Perhaps, SMCJ, it is better for you to be a practitioner rather than a teacher giving explanations.

smcj said:
I am raising questions and encouraging people to seek out traditional teachers to answer them. That is a far cry from appointing myself teacher.

Malcolm wrote:
Honestly, appeals to authority are just not the Buddhist way, without being backed up by citation and reasoning. Otherwise, it just amounts to gossip.

The funny thing is, everything I stated, all my opinions, are grounded in traditional teachings. Actually, I am a much more traditional practitioner than you. I don't mix any western ideas or tendencies into my Dharma practice. Zero.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 10th, 2016 at 2:41 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

I have an enormous amount of respect for Malcolm's accomplishments. And I have huge regard for his sincerity. Those two things form a firm basis for a practice. However I disagree with many of his interpretations, which should be obvious over many threads.

Malcolm wrote:

That is a nice thing for you to say.

That said, I still say you have no idea what you are talking about. Perhaps, SMCJ, it is better for you to be a practitioner rather than a teacher giving explanations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 10th, 2016 at 2:40 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

Simon E. said:

Dont you know Dzogchungpa?

dzogchungpa said:

In general, no, but believe it or not, the question was raised at the first major empowerment I attended. At first the Lama himself was unsure, but it seems the answer is black in this case.

Malcolm wrote:

It depends on the Yidam. Śākyamuni's eyes are blue. But often enough, they are black.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 10th, 2016 at 2:19 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

I pray to you Lama Chenrezig.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because the guru, in order to introduce you to the practice of Avalokiteśvara, must generate himself as well as vase and so on, in the form of Avalokiteśvara.

smcj said:

I pray to you Yidam Chenrezig

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because this the path the guru has introduced you to.

smcj said:

I pray to you Perfect Noble Chenrezig.

I pray to you Lord Protector Chenrezig

I pray to you Lord of Love Chenrezig

Great Compassionate Victor, please hold us with your compassion...please bestow the blessing to obtain omniscient Buddhahood.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because Avalokiteśvara is a tenth stage bodhisattva, who is a being who has a separate continuum from you.

But for example, Hevajra was never a bodhisattva on the paths and stages, per se, there is no being with a separate continuum "Hevajra". The Hevajra mandala is a method taught by Vajradhara in the Hevajra Tantra to the tenth stage bodhisattva Vajragarbha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 9th, 2016 at 8:28 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

Anders said:

To be honest, the emphasis I catch from this thread is very much of a 'po po if you take the deity to be real' in a way much stronger than you'd ever see for all our casual, but far less skilful, 'reals' like 'myself', 'my family', etc. If it's ok to treat those as conventionally real, surely the same rule applies to the deity in roughly similar measure?

Malcolm wrote:

No, a Yidam is not a sentient being possessing its own continuum. It is a method, that is all. People who do not understand this point, whether Tibetan or Western, do not understand Vajrayāna.

In other words, yidams exist as methods, but not as sentient beings. There is no external Kalacakra existing somewhere whom we petition for blessings when we do a Kalacakra sadhana.

M

smcj said:

Yidams are Sambhogakaya expressions of enlightenment.

Malcolm wrote:

If you mean a yidam is a method taught by the Sambhogakāya, sure, no problem.

The problem here, is that you are not properly distinguishing what is a method and what is not.

For example, when Buddha demonstrated to King Indrabhuti the Guhyasamaja Mandala, that mandala display was being demonstrated as a method to Indrabhuti. It was not being displayed as some external being to whom Indrabhuti was supposed to make offerings and petition for blessings. It was being shown to Indrabhuti to illustrate the pure appearances of the aggregates, sense bases and sense elements of Indrabhuti's own continuum. The latter understood this, and attained Buddhahood on the spot, and in turn, taught the Guhyasamaja Mandala to his kingdom. This can be applied to all instances of the communication of yidam methods in the tantras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 9th, 2016 at 7:59 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

Anders said:

To be honest, the emphasis I catch from this thread is very much of a 'po po if you take the deity to be real' in a way much stronger than you'd ever see for all our casual, but far less skilful, 'reals' like 'myself', 'my family', etc. If it's ok to treat those as conventionally real, surely the same rule applies to the deity in roughly similar measure?

Malcolm wrote:

No, a Yidam is not a sentient being possessing its own continuum. It is a method, that is all. People who do not understand this point, whether Tibetan or Western, do not understand Vajrayāna.

In other words, yidams exist as methods, but not as sentient beings. There is no external Kalacakra existing somewhere whom we petition for blessings when we do a Kalacakra sadhana.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 9th, 2016 at 7:56 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:
smcj said:

I assume you guys are hip to the fact that HHDL consults an oracle, right? That entails a man going into a trance and being possessed by some sort of spirit. It's not an enlightened deity, just some sort of spirit-thingy. The spirit gives HHDL cryptic predictions.

Malcolm wrote:

A worldly protector like the Nechung oracle (Dorje Dragden) is a sentient being continuing in samsara. Nechung is not a Yidam.

A transcendent protector like Mahākala is a sentient being who is beyond samsara. When you make offerings to him, you are making offerings to an external entity. Mahākala also has yidam practices.

But when you practice Mahākala as a yidam, in this case, one is not making offerings and so on to an external being, one is using Mahākala as a path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 9th, 2016 at 10:55 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

haha said:

Nairatma is a deity; a method to recognize their own mind. But Yogeswor Virupa received empowerment and guidance from her.

Malcolm wrote:

The Nairatma from whom Virupa received teachings is clearly stated to have been a nirmanakāya, in other words, a human woman.

haha said:

The version have heard or read said that the Nairatma appeared in his dream.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, she appeared in his dream after he tossed his mala in the toilet, but he received empowerment and so on the following day from the nimanakaya Nairatma whom he met in person.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 9th, 2016 at 1:56 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

conebeckham said:

Malcolm, if I recall, Kunzang Dechen Lingpa conversed directly with Padmasambhava. In dreams? Or in waking life?

Malcolm wrote:

Both. His communication with Padmasambhava was part of his own experiential vision. But he also was a person who was highly realized bodhisattva (IMO) on the paths and stages, and so his vision was not confined to the (impure) nirmanakāya level of perception, as is ours.

But if you ever told him his experience of Padmasambhava was real, he would have had a good chuckle at that notion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 8th, 2016 at 8:34 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

haha said:

Nairatma is a deity; a method to recognize their own mind. But Yogeswor Virupa received empowerment and guidance from her.

Malcolm wrote:

The Nairatma from whom Virupa received teachings is clearly stated to have been a nirmanakāya, in other words, a human woman.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 8th, 2016 at 11:16 AM

Title: Re: Perdurabo - biography of Aleister Crowley

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I'm not really sure why you say that.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and I am afraid that you never will.

dzogchungpa said:

Jeez, what is this, Hate On Dzogchungpa Day?

Well, I like to read about stuff and if you were actually familiar with the fairly large number of memoirs available concerning Gurdjieff and his students, I doubt you would consider them to have been crashing bores. .

Malcolm wrote:

Virtually everyone is a crashing bore when you get right down to it.

dzogchungpa said:
Surely not the "awesome" Crowley.

Malcolm wrote:
Oh, uncle Al had his moments, but if you have never read his autobiography, you really ought to -- he dictated it to his mistress while using extraordinary amounts of cocaine. It is really hilarious, ego-inflated, outrageous and generally entertaining.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, August 8th, 2016 at 3:55 AM
Title: Re: Yidams
Content:

smcj said:
So let us go through it by the numbers with the guru, who is obviously a separate human being from us, and come to an understanding of how it can truly be said that one's mind is the guru. Then we can plug that definition back into the idea of a Yidam.

Malcolm wrote:
Yidams are not beings. They are a kind of method. That's all. That method must be received from a guru. If you don't receive a yidam from a guru, you cannot practice it at all.

Kelwin said:
And just to be completely clear, how do we reconcile that with their historical appearing?

Malcolm wrote:
I suggest you read some Tantras. Then you will understand perfectly the origin of this and that yidam. In short, Vajradhara taught these yidam practices as methods.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, August 8th, 2016 at 3:42 AM
Title: Re: Perdurabo - biography of Aleister Crowley
Content:

dzogchungpa said:
Well, I like to read about stuff and if you were actually familiar with the fairly large number of memoirs available concerning Gurdjieff and his students, I doubt you would consider them to have been crashing bores. .

Malcolm wrote:
Virtually everyone is a crashing bore when you get right down to it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 8th, 2016 at 3:39 AM

Title: Re: Perdurabo - biography of Aleister Crowley

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I'm not really sure why you say that.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and I am afraid that you never will.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 8th, 2016 at 3:29 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

So let us go through it by the numbers with the guru, who is obviously a separate human being from us, and come to an understanding of how it can truly be said that one's mind is the guru. Then we can plug that definition back into the idea of a Yidam.

Malcolm wrote:

Yidams are not beings. They are a kind of method. That's all. That method must be received from a guru. If you don't receive a yidam from a guru, you cannot practice it at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 8th, 2016 at 12:21 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

As a Shentongpa, I understand that the emptiness the deity arises from as being empty of anything other than Buddha Qualities.

Malcolm wrote:

And therefore, you invalidate the path...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 8th, 2016 at 12:19 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Frankly, who gives a flying f%#k what some Tibetan says.

dzogchungpa said:

Well, I guess it would depend on the Tibetan.

Malcolm wrote:

It very much would, indeed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 7th, 2016 at 9:21 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

The point of the completion stage is to eliminate the idea that the deity you imagine yourself as is real.

So since you don't think it's real before you start does that mean you don't need to do the completion stage?

Malcolm wrote:

The creation stage and completion stage, ideally, are merged from the start. However, to directly address your question, the issue is not real/unreal, the issue is impure/pure.

The creation stage exists to break attachment to impure appearances, that's all.

Nothing more. The completion exists to break attachments to pure appearances, nothing more.

Further, this is the point of starting out from emptiness. The deity arises from emptiness. That means even at the beginning of the practice you must realize the deity is unreal. If you do not realize from the start that the deity is unreal, the process of transforming your vision from impure to pure will never happen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 7th, 2016 at 12:18 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Ultimately, there is no deity, just as there is no person. All of these methods are just skillful means to cut clinging to impure appearances by training in pure appearances.

The point of the completion stage is to eliminate the idea that the deity you imagine yourself as is real. This is why you dissolve the deity into the state of emptiness at the end of a sadhana. Why? Impure appearances are not real and pure appearances are not real.

smcj said:

So therefore you conclude that you do not have to believe that the deity is present during practice. This is a classic example of why I've been saying that it is necessary to go ask a Tibetan. I don't think anything you just said, while technically correct, mitigates the need for faith and believing in the presence of a deity.--at all. Ultimately, there is no deity, just as there is no person

As I've said, the higher teachings can become a refuge from Dharma for the quasi-secular.

Flip that around: just as there is a person, there is a deity, which is exactly what Chime R. was quoted as saying: "Tara is as real as you are".

Hey, kick back and enjoy the show. Let people ask Tibetans like I said. Let's see if Tibetans say that there is no need to believe that the deity is present. Who knows, maybe some will agree with you?

Malcolm wrote:

Frankly, who gives a flying f%#k what some Tibetan says.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 7th, 2016 at 12:15 PM

Title: Re: Perdurabo - biography of Aleister Crowley

Content:

Wayfarer said:

There are plenty of counter-cultural figures I like and admire. I have even discovered a magician, John Michael Greer, a Druid, whom I think is really interesting and worth knowing about (blog <http://thearchdruidreport.blogspot.com.au>). Always had a bit of time for Gurdjieff and Ouspensky (albeit no contact with the schools). But Crowley gives me the creeps. 'Beware the dark side, Luke'.

Malcolm wrote:

Gurdjieff was a lightweight. Crowley, despite his many flaws, actually understood yoga, Etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 7th, 2016 at 5:45 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

What I believe is incorrect is:

Malcolm wrote:

You do not have to believe a deity is present — that is dualistic. You have to be the deity.

smcj said:

If no deity is present, there is nothing for you to become.

Malcolm wrote:

Ultimately, there is no deity, just as there is no person. All of these methods are just skillful means to cut clinging to impure appearances by training in pure appearances.

The point of the completion stage is to eliminate the idea that the deity you imagine yourself as is real. This is why you dissolve the deity into the state of emptiness at the end of a sadhana. Why? Impure appearances are not real and pure appearances are not real.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 7th, 2016 at 5:41 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

What makes you think that Tibetans did not import their own cultural prejudices and misinterpretations?

smcj said:

Because their culture has been saturated with Vajrayana for over a millennia.

Malcolm wrote:

Then you clearly have spent absolutely no time reading Vajrayāna polemics if you imagine there is some uniform, correct, vetted, curated, massaged, Tibetan view of Vajrayāna practice.

In fact, the different schools of Tibetan Buddhism disagree with each other over Vajrayāna practice even more than they disagree with each other over sūtra teachings like Madhyamaka.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 7th, 2016 at 5:15 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

...and then say, "So all that means that I don't have to believe that there is a deity actually present when I do sadhana, right?"

Malcolm wrote:

You do not have to believe a deity is present — that is dualistic. You have to be the deity.

Sadly, it is quite useless conversing with you, because you just misinterpret what everyone says and make really off the wall remarks.

smcj said:

The thrust of what I am saying is go to ask a Dharma question of an authority that lacks any possibility of corruption due to cultural prejudice and misinterpretation. At the very least that will encourage people to have active communication with the living tradition of Dharma. You should be joining me in encouraging people to do that.

Malcolm wrote:

What makes you think that Tibetans did not import their own cultural prejudices and misinterpretations?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 7th, 2016 at 5:01 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

...and then say, "So all that means that I don't have to believe that there is a deity actually present when I do sadhana, right?"

Malcolm wrote:

You do not have to believe a deity is present — that is dualistic. You have to be the deity.

Sadly, it is quite useless conversing with you, because you just misinterpret what everyone says and make really off the wall remarks.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 7th, 2016 at 4:46 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

No. Tibetans have a different culture than we do. The way they hear and understand Dharma is different than what we hear. If you ask a Tibetan if the deities are real and you ask a Westerner if the deities are real, you will get two different answers. Since the topic at hand is how to understand the deities in the original context, the proper procedure is to ask an expert that has not corrupted the teachings with their quasi-secular interpretations that misapply the higher teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

Lets see, who has corrupted what teachings with interpretation. Please be specific.

smcj said:

So I proudly say again, with absolutely no qualms about being accused of racism, that in order to get the correct answer people should ask a lama of Tibetan heritage so as to not get a corrupted answer.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, because other people who have practiced as long or longer don't know shit.

smcj said:

The simplest way I can think to ask the question is, "Should I believe that the deity is actually present when I do my sadhana practice?" Then when the answer is yes say, "But aren't they all the nature of emptiness? (Or non-duality, or provisional, or nature of my own mind, or whatever your favorite idea that discounts their nature might be) The answer will be yes. So then go back and say, "So therefore I do not have to believe they are really present when I do my practice." Let me know what your Tibetan lama says.

Malcolm wrote:

When you do the sadhana, you are supposed to be the deity, it is not actually conceived as some external entity to which you are making an appeal. For example, when one makes offerings, prostrations and praises in a sadhana to whom is one making offerings, prostrations and praises? One is making offerings, prostrations and praises to oneself as the deity.

You arrogantly have elected yourself the defender of the tradition against what you perceive to be corrupting influences, but as far as I can tell, you have not actually understood the tradition you imagine you are defending.

smcj said:

...someone will have gone to the effort to have contact with the living tradition of the Vajrayana.

Malcolm wrote:

You do realize that I am someone who was appointed by a real, live Tibetan to be an Ācārya within the Sakya school, and someone who was entitled Lama connected with a Nyingma monastery (Donak Tharling) by another, real live Tibetan? And yet, somehow you seek to cast aspersion on us all who actually made connections with the living tradition of Vajrayāna because we don't accept your very skewed ideas of what this tradition states.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 6th, 2016 at 11:09 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

And, as far as this thread is concerned, I'd like to see the question posed to Tibetan lamas that were raised and trained in Tibet over the ones in India too.

dzogchungpa said:

I've heard Anam Thubten, who meets this criterion, address this question. His answer was a bit more subtle than what I've heard so far on DW.

Malcolm wrote:

Don't be a tease, do tell.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 6th, 2016 at 11:00 PM

Title: Re: Ancient Chinese Flood

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

Evidence that it did happen, not just a legend:

<http://www.popularmechanics.com/science/environment/a22195/scientists-confirm-truth-ancient-chinese-flood/>

Malcolm wrote:

You are connecting this event to Noah's Ark?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 6th, 2016 at 10:58 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

That's the reason why I say ask an Asian.

Malcolm wrote:

Your fan boyism for "Asian Lamas" is not charming, and it is pretty racist, actually.

smcj said:

Actually you are even worse. You not only specify Tibetan lamas as being superior, but Tibetans that are still in Tibet above the ones in India. And, as far as this thread is concerned, I'd like to see the question posed to Tibetan lamas that were raised and trained in Tibet over the ones in India too. But that is putting too far out of reach and it might be interpreted as avoiding getting an answer.

Malcolm wrote:

I think it is still the case that there are more realized Tibetans in Tibet than in India. For example, when is the last time you ever heard of a rainbow body in India? (Answer: never).

But my point, simply put, is this: there is nothing magical about Tibetans educated in the monasteries that renders their understanding of the two stages and so on necessarily superior to the understanding of the same among say, Chinese, American or Europeans. It really depends on the person. I have met many "Lamas" who are quite ignorant of the principles behind the rituals they practice. When I say your point of view is racist it is because unwittingly you are invoking the trope of the "Asian sage."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 6th, 2016 at 10:38 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

That's the reason why I say ask an Asian.

Malcolm wrote:

Your fan boyism for "Asian Lamas" is not charming, and it is pretty racist, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 6th, 2016 at 10:36 PM

Title: Re: Perdurabo - biography of Aleister Crowley

Content:

Wayfarer said:

Why would a Buddhist admire a satanist?

Malcolm wrote:

He was a very interesting person. Definitely not a saint, but who needs saints? Saints are boring.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 6th, 2016 at 10:28 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

But in any case ask an Asian lama. Make sure they understand you don't accept that the deities are actually present when you practice. See what they say.

Malcolm wrote:

You seem, erroneously, to think that merely because one understands that in the process of the creation stage yidams are conceptual, mental constructs (which are generated and dismantled), that this also means one thinks that there are no sentient beings who, relatively speaking, mounted the paths and stages, no beings that swore themselves to the protection of Dharma and so on, no beings that taught methods of the two stages, etc.

It is your failure to make this distinction yourself that is the root of your confusion and the reason why you keep making up faults in others where none exist.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, August 6th, 2016 at 10:22 PM
Title: Re: Yidams
Content:

smcj said:
A while ago I introduced the idea of Shentong here at DW...

Malcolm wrote:
You flatter yourself, and it isn't true.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, August 6th, 2016 at 6:23 AM
Title: Re: Perdurabo - biography of Aleister Crowley
Content:

MiphamFan said:
His reputation as a "black" magician is vastly overstated, partly because he himself loved the notoriety and also because cultural Christianity was stronger then. His magic is no more or less objectionable than that of different tirthika tantras.

Malcolm wrote:
Crowley was awesome.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, August 6th, 2016 at 6:21 AM
Title: Re: Yidams
Content:

dzogchungpa said:
No doubt due to the intense, rather public, squabbling of a certain group of dimwits.

Malcolm wrote:
Specifically one dimwit who took the Maharshi epithet as ChNN's endorsement of the same.

dzogchungpa said:
Which one was that?

Malcolm wrote:
Mustang Cave...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 6th, 2016 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Oh, that! But that book is not a presentation of Rinpoche's teachings. Furthermore the offending material was not "slipped in" to anything but rather was chosen as an epigraph for the book by one of the translators...

Malcolm wrote:

And withdrawn in the next edition...

dzogchungpa said:

No doubt due to the intense, rather public, squabbling of a certain group of dimwits.

Malcolm wrote:

Specifically one dimwit who took the Maharshi epithet as ChNN's endorsement of the same.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 6th, 2016 at 12:55 AM

Title: Re: Is Tobacco an obstacle to practice?

Content:

Sādhaka said:

There's a story about a Lama who took a student's cigarette, took a drag, and blew smoke from his skin pores, and then said (paraphrased) 'When you can do this, then you can smoke without any problems'.

Malcolm wrote:

It was Dudjom Lingpa, and he used tobacco regularly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 6th, 2016 at 12:53 AM

Title: Re: 5 precepts. Alcohol?

Content:

JinpaRangdrol said:

I just don't think poo-pooing the idea of not killing, etc., simply because it can be viewed as a "vow," is actually productive.

Malcolm wrote:

The point I am addressing, and it is a very normative view in Buddhism, is that taking vows makes our virtue more virtuous. But this is actually quite silly if you really put on your thinking cap.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, August 6th, 2016 at 12:50 AM
Title: Re: Yidams
Content:
dzogchungpa said:
When was that?

florin said:
The marvelous primordial state.

dzogchungpa said:
Oh, that! But that book is not a presentation of Rinpoche's teachings. Furthermore the offending material was not "slipped in" to anything but rather was chosen as an epigraph for the book by one of the translators...

Malcolm wrote:
And withdrawn in the next edition...

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, August 6th, 2016 at 12:03 AM
Title: Re: 5 precepts. Alcohol?
Content:
JinpaRangdrol said:
But the first three are pretty indispensable, and I'd be highly skeptical of any Buddhist who saw refraining from killing, stealing, and lying (even without officially holding vows against them) as erroneous behaviors.

Malcolm wrote:
He does not kill, he does not steal, and he does not lie. So for what reason does he need vows to refrain from these actions?

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, August 5th, 2016 at 11:09 PM
Title: Re: family line versus reincarnation
Content:
Jeff H said:
Materiality cannot arise from consciousness and consciousness cannot arise from materiality...

Malcolm wrote:
In fact, Vasubandhu maintains that matter arises from consciousness, and this is a standard position in Buddhadharma from Sautrantika all the way to Dzogchen.

Jeff H said:
I appreciate the correction, but I thought that was just a Cittamatrīn view. Perhaps I am over-interpolating what Geshe Tashi Tsering wrote:

Geshe Tashi said:

There is a very close connection between mind and body. But there is no way one can replace the other or be transformed into the other. Mind cannot become material and material cannot become mind. Mind is mere experience, nothing more, and experience is not the same as brain function. There is nothing physical about it at all. It is supported by the physical – the eye consciousness is supported by our physical eye and the nerves etc. – but the mind itself is mere clarity and knowing. No more than that. This is a very important point.

Jeff H said:

I think you're saying that even though mind is completely non-material and matter is completely non-experiential, so that they cannot transform into one another, nevertheless matter originally arose from consciousness.

Assuming I got that specific point wrong, does it negate my general point, that family lineage is derived from a process of physical causality and rebirth refers to the karmic process of mental causality? In other words, birth is the merging of these two different processes, and rebirth refers to the continuity of mental moments being re-associated with different forms.

Malcolm wrote:

It is very simple. From consciousness arises space; from space, air; from air, fire; from fire, water; and from water, earth.

The reality of it is the consciousness and matter are completely inseparable. This substance dualism that some Western Buddhists latch onto is not at all the intention of the Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 5th, 2016 at 11:07 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

The lama HHK 16 assigned to our center told me that from the time he was a toddler his parents told him that the 3 Jewels would never fail him. So according to you his parents ruined him as a practitioner!

As an example of his faith, here's a story. He went on retreat in 1948, well before there were problems. The first he knew that there was something wrong was when the Chinese attacked his monastery. He broke down his cell door to find explosions, gunfire, flames, screams and death. So after 11 years of retreat, with no riot warning whatsoever of an immanent life and death crisis, how did he react? Did he take the Mahamudra approach and say, "It's all mind"? No. He said to himself "The 3 Jewels will not fail me" and took off running. No provisions, no planning, just faith and his feet.

I get one story from the teachers of my lineage and a different story from you.
HMMMM....

Malcolm wrote:

What about all the people murdered by the Chinese who also took refuge in the Three Jewels? No higher power helped them. And no higher power helped your lama friend. He escaped because he had two legs and luck.

smcj said:

The way to have direct experience is to work with a guru from whom one can receive direct introduction. That's the point.

Well, yes, if that's appropriate for your karma. However very few people are karmically ripe enough for that to work. That is true even if they have access to an authentic Dzogchen master.

Malcolm wrote:

It may be the case that not everyone has the karma to meet Dzogchen teachings, that I can accept. But, every person who has the karma to meet Dzogchen teachings and is interested enough to pursue them has the capacity for them — which is proven by their interest in them to begin with. In Dzogchen teachings we do not make a distinction between sharp and dull in faculties.

smcj said:

That is why Ati is normally taught by most Dzogchen teachers as the 9th yana.

Malcolm wrote:

Ati (the path of self-liberation) is taught as a ninth vehicle to contrast it with the vehicles of cause (paths of renunciation) and result (paths of transformation), not because it is the result of a gradual progression through the nine yānas. However, this is a common misunderstanding even promulgated widely in the Nyingma school.

cone said:

Two Stages are somehow "lesser."

Basically, the position of ancient Dzogchen masters in India such as Śrī Siṃha is that the creation stage is unnecessary.

Would it be accurate to say that this position is something of an outlier?

Malcolm wrote:

Śrī Siṃha was the Dzogchen guru of Padmasambhava, Vairocana and Vimalamitra. So, I think we can say with certainty that this is the normative position of Dzogchen teachings. As I mentioned before, it is not the case that it is impossible to realize Dzogchen through deity practice, as Mañjuśrīmitra notes, however, deity yoga is not necessary on the Dzogchen path, and moreover, as Padmasambhava states in the Khandro Nyinthig, developing a detailed samadhi of a deity is completely unnecessary. It is sufficient to merely think you are the deity, that's it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 5th, 2016 at 9:25 PM

Title: Re: family line versus reincarnation

Content:

Jeff H said:

Materiality cannot arise from consciousness and consciousness cannot arise from materiality...

Malcolm wrote:

In fact, Vasubandhu maintains that matter arises from consciousness, and this is a standard position in Buddhadharma from Sautrantika all the way to Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 5th, 2016 at 7:30 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

It's a lot simpler than that.

Basically Malcolm (and a few others) don't like or accept anything like a "higher power" or the idea of faith.

Malcolm wrote:

Faith is fine; but you are right, I think the idea of a "higher power" is horse shit. It does not belong in Buddhadharma. Buddhahood is not given from outside, it is discovered inside.

There are three kinds of faith. I don't accept the kind of blind faith you advocate, and no practitioner should.

smcj said:

The way to transition from outer to inner to direct experience requires faith. That's the point.

Malcolm wrote:

The way to have direct experience is to work with a guru from whom one can receive direct introduction. That's the point.

cone said:

Two Stages are somehow "lesser."

Malcolm wrote:

Basically, the position of ancient Dzogchen masters in India such as Śrī Siṃha is that the creation stage is unnecessary.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 5th, 2016 at 4:59 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

Nothing is accepted as definitive by everybody, not even Dzogchen view.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course. On the other hand, people who do not understand Dzogchen teachings will not consider them definitive. Meanwhile, everyone who does, does.

dzogchungpa said:

It must be really great to understand Dzogchen teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 5th, 2016 at 4:24 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

However the Uttaratantra is considered definitive.

Malcolm wrote:

By some, not by others And definitely it is not definitive with respect to Dzogchen teachings.

smcj said:

Nothing is accepted as definitive by everybody, not even Dzogchen view.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course. On the other hand, people who do not understand Dzogchen teachings will not consider them definitive. Meanwhile, everyone who does, does.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 5th, 2016 at 2:15 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

The Uttaratantra says that the Buddha Activity is ceaseless, and that it is only our karmic limitations that do not allow us to see it.

Malcolm wrote:

And from a relative [deluded] point of view, this is all fine.

smcj said:

However the Uttaratantra is considered definitive.

Malcolm wrote:

By some, not by others And definitely it is not definitive with respect to Dzogchen teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 5th, 2016 at 12:57 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

Kelwin said:

To what degree then does the relative cease to exist, when we realise the absolute?

Malcolm wrote:

If the relative ceased to exist, this would be annihilationism. If the relative arose, this would be eternalism. As the Guhyagarbha Tantra states:

E ma ho, what an amazing wonderful Dharma!

The secret of all perfect buddhas

is that everything arises from nonarising,

when it arose it did not arise.

Kelwin said:

Right, so what is the problem with divine beings teaching compassion or pointing out the absolute? Or, blessing our practice for that matter?

Malcolm wrote:

Nothing wrong with it at all, as long as you understand it is all a delusion, a mistaken perception.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 5th, 2016 at 12:46 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

The Uttaratantra says that the Buddha Activity is ceaseless, and that it is only our karmic limitations that do not allow us to see it.

Malcolm wrote:

And from a relative [deluded] point of view, this is all fine.

Kelwin said:

To what degree then does the relative cease to exist, when we realise the absolute?

Malcolm wrote:

If the relative ceased to exist, this would be annihilationism. If the relative arose, this would be eternalism. As the Guhyagarbha Tantra states:

E ma ho, what an amazing wonderful Dharma!

The secret of all perfect buddhas
is that everything arises from nonarising, it did not arise when it arose.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 5th, 2016 at 12:25 AM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

And who wrote the preface?

dzogchungpa said:

Now, now guys, there's no need to make an Aunt Sally of poor smcj.

Since ChNN and Tara have come up, I thought you all might enjoy reading this passage from his preface to "Guru Arya Tara and Her Twenty-One Praises": Across cultures and eras in this human experience, we have sensed the existence of a force or fundamental energy that we have come to represent in the form of various female divinities. The ancient people of Shang Shung, for example, recognised this energy by the name Namchi Kungyal, the Grandmother or Ancestor Queen of Heaven. The central female divinity in the pre-Buddhist Bon pantheon, Loving Mother or Chamma, is very similar to Arya Tara in the Buddhist tradition. The American Indians and Australian Aborigines still call this force Mother Earth; the ancient Greeks called it Athena and the ancient Egyptians Great Mother.

The external forms embodying this divine energy are just as diverse as the names and characteristics attributed to it in cultures throughout time. While some populations, such as American Indians and Australian Aborigines, have maintained their ancient traditions throughout processes of change and evolution, others have modified or substituted their ancient religious systems, identifying the essence of this force or energy with a saint or divinity.

One of the most widely known personifications of this maternal and generative energy is found in the Christian tradition, venerated in the form of Mary, considered the Mother of Christ and later called Our Lady or the Madonna, particularly in Latin countries.

The cult of St. Sophia is a good example of the evolution of an ancient religious system.

In ancient Greece, sophia, wisdom, was initially one of the chief attributes of the goddess Athena. Later, this quality was personified in a female saint by the same name. The ancient tradition also personified wisdom in female form, for example in the Mahayana, with Yum Chenmo, the Great Mother, the source of all the tathāgatas or buddhas.

...

Whether we consider her a goddess, saint, or buddha, and by whatever name we call her, the Great Mother is the compassionate wisdom that nurtures us on the path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 4th, 2016 at 11:39 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

Malcolm doesn't buy that.

Malcolm wrote:

Neither does Mipham:

Because the awakening of the sugata does not exist, his magical apparition, while a false appearance, appears to the deluded, similar to an illusion.

And the Buddha states in the PP Sūtra in 8,000 lines, etc:

Son of a good family, the tathāgatas neither come nor go. Son of a good family, for example, an illusory group of elephants, group of horses, group of chariots, or group of soldiers neither come nor go. Son of a good family, the kāya of the tathāgata also neither comes nor goes.

Son of a good family, for example, a person who has gone to sleep sees one, two, three, four, five, ten, twenty, thirty, forty, fifty tathāgatas or more in his dream; but when he awakes from sleep he does not even see one tathāgata.

Son of a good family, what do you think? From where do those tathāgatas come? To where do they go? Sadaprarudita, son of a good family, the phenomena in a dream are not established. Dreams are false, they are not real.

If the previous two statements are understood properly, one will understand all the key points of creation and completion stage. In other words, creation stage is the dream, waking is the completion stage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 4th, 2016 at 10:39 PM

Title: Re: Buddhism and bon

Content:

philji said:

If one has taken refuge in three jewels, is it breaking one's refuge vow to practice teachings within Bon, such as given online by Tenzin WNgal Rinpoche which may be useful for healing?

Malcolm wrote:
Many sectarian lamas will say so.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, August 4th, 2016 at 10:38 PM
Title: Re: Yidams
Content:
smcj said:

You advocate that we should not make up our own version of Dharma. Since HHST is the head of your sect, and your view is not compatible with his, you might want to reconsider your opinions on this matter.

Malcolm wrote:
I am certain my point of view is compatible both with HHST and ChNN, despite whatever conciliatory things they say to those who are transitioning to Buddhadharma and have unresolved doubts.

Second, I don't belong to a school, not Sakya, not Nyingma, etc.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, August 4th, 2016 at 10:34 PM
Title: Re: Yidams
Content:
smcj said:

Regardless of the semantics (and I'd like to point out how the focus here has been on the offensive word with its root of "theism"), HHST is clearly affirming that that "a divine compassion or a divine wisdom, manifest in the form of a deity" is part of the tradition. However you want to characterize that, with or without an English word with a root of "theism", that idea is part of Buddhadharma. He is not ambiguous about the idea at all.

Malcolm wrote:
God isn't anything at all since it does not exist (like the son of a barren women, etc.). As I said, these kinds of statements are for the benefit of ex-theists like yourself who are struggling with absence of God in Buddhadharma.

You wonder about my background: I was not raised in any religion, was never baptized, and my parents are confirmed atheists. I have only been to a Christian service three times in my life, all as an adult: High Episcopalian Xmas masses twice, and a Congregationalist service.

I remain bewildered at why people need such a concept in their lives. And since there is no concept in any traditional Buddhadharma text, I really fail to see why it is so hard to understand that HHST and ChNN are attempting to speak to those people from theistic backgrounds.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 4th, 2016 at 10:19 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

I guess these guys don't understand their traditions either. They need to join DW so that they can get straightened out.

Malcolm wrote:

No, you are the one who needs straightening out.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 4th, 2016 at 10:03 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

I am discussing what is taught by the tradition.

Malcolm wrote:

You are discussing your impressions of some tradition you think you understand.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 4th, 2016 at 10:01 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

The Uttaratantra says that the Buddha Activity is ceaseless, and that it is only our karmic limitations that do not allow us to see it.

Malcolm wrote:

And from a relative [deluded] point of view, this is all fine.

smcj said:

I do have an antipathy towards the importation of theism into our religion.

Ah yes, the old bugaboo "theism". And the reason for that antipathy would be because...?

Malcolm wrote:

It does not belong in Buddhadharma. It is an outsider tenet.

smcj said:

And if so, why did you not use your editorial discretion and correct HHST's quotation in that book? Is it because you would have had to communicate that decision to him and you knew it would not fly?

Malcolm wrote:

I contributed to Treasures of the Sakya Lineage, but I did not edit it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 4th, 2016 at 7:38 PM

Title: Re: Yidams

Content:

smcj said:

But compassion and wisdom in Buddhadharma does not come from a god. It flows out of the empathy and understanding of human beings, and is perfected in the case of a buddha.

