

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 31st, 2018 at 3:21 AM

Title: Re: Pittsburgh massacre

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

The state of American public education is in tatters.

Malcolm wrote:

Primarily because conservatives undermined funding for education.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 31st, 2018 at 2:57 AM

Title: Re: Pittsburgh massacre

Content:

Grigoris said:

When was the last time you saw a left-wing extremist engage in mass murder for political ends? As such this equating of one side with the other is ingenious and dangerous and is generally used by supporters of extreme-right views to justify their actions.

Queequeg said:

Stalin? Mao? Pol Pot?

I'll take a wild guess that I'm woefully ignorant and these guys weren't left-wing extremists at all.

Malcolm wrote:

We are not talking about conditions in the Soviet Union in the 1920's, China in the 1940's. or Cambodia in the 1970's. We are talking about conditions in the USA in 2018.

At its height, there were never more than a few hundred Weatherman, maybe a 100,000 or so Panthers. There are more than 300,000 "so-called" sovereign citizens and supporters in this country, all of whom believe the US Government is illegal:

If there is an insurgency-in-waiting, it will likely be drawn from the hundreds of antigovernment groups across the country, many of which were readying for civil war in 2016 in the event of a Hillary Clinton presidency. One of the most extreme examples is an ideological subculture made up of "sovereign citizens," who believe that citizens are the sole authority of law. Ryan Lenz, a senior investigative reporter for the Southern Poverty Law Center, has been researching them for nearly eight years. It's been a terrifying eight years. A 2011 splc report pegged the number of the sovereign citizens, a mix of hard-core believers and sympathizers, at 300,000. The movement, Lenz believes, has grown significantly since then.

<https://thewalrus.ca/americas-next-civil-war/>

Queequeg said:

Not all tax protesters are sovereign citizens, and many newer recruits to the sovereign life did not start out as tax protesters. But based on the available evidence, a reasonable estimate of hard-core sovereign believers today would be 100,000, with another 200,000 just starting out by testing sovereign techniques for resisting everything from speeding tickets to drug charges, for a total of 300,000. As sovereign theories go viral throughout the nation's prison systems and among people who are unemployed and desperate in a punishing recession, this number is likely to grow.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.splcenter.org/fighting-hate/intelligence-report/2010/sovereign-citizen-kane>

There are approximately 11 million Americans with alt-right views.

Queequeg said:

But new research from the University of Alabama's George Hawley, published by UVA's Institute for Family Studies, suggests this isn't the case. According to Hawley, a political scientist who specializes in demography and the far right, roughly 5.64 percent of America's 198 million non-Hispanic whites have beliefs consistent with the alt-right's worldview. Whether or not they would describe themselves as alt-right, Hawley argues, they share the movement's belief in a politics that promotes white interests above those of other racial groups.

If Hawley is right, then the alt-right's constituency isn't a tiny fringe. It's about 11 million Americans.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.vox.com/2018/8/10/17670992/study-white-americans-alt-right-racism-white-nationalists>

How many people have been killed by Antifa?

Queequeg said:

Long story short: the number of deaths currently attributable to Antifa is zero, and there aren't really left-wing groups that engage in political violence to match their counterparts on the right. The reality is that since the end of the Vietnam era, left-wing political violence is far outweighed by its right-wing counterpart:

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.quora.com/How-many-people-have-been-killed-in-the-USA-by-Antifa-or-other-left-wing-group-I-do-not-live-in-the-USA-but-I-often-hear-about-left-wing-terrorism-It-seems-hard-to-find-such-data>

Queequeg said:

In the real world, since the end of the Vietnam era, the overwhelming majority of serious political violence—not counting vandalism or punches thrown at protests, but violence with lethal intent—has come from the fringes of the right. Heidi Beirich, director of the Southern Poverty Law Center's Intelligence Project says that "if you go back to the 1960s, you see all kinds of left-wing terrorism, but since then it's been exceedingly rare." She notes that eco- and animal-rights extremists caused extensive property damage in the 1990s, but didn't target people.

Meanwhile, says Beirich, "right-wing domestic terrorism has been common throughout that period, going back to groups like to The Order, which assassinated [liberal talk-radio host] Alan Berg [in 1984] right through to today." Mark Pitcavage, a senior research fellow at the Anti-Defamation League's Center on Extremism, told NPR that "when you look at murders committed by domestic extremists in the United States of all types, right-wing extremists are responsible for about 74 percent of those murders."

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.thenation.com/article/why-does-the-far-right-hold-a-near-monopoly-on-political-violence/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 31st, 2018 at 2:27 AM

Title: Re: Pittsburgh massacre

Content:

Grigoris said:

How's the French thinking it is Iraq... I guess they didn't translate the question properly into French.

DGA said:

I think it's the Syrian flag there, not the Iraqi one.

Grigoris said:

Yes, I do believe you are right.

Still a silly choice as Syria as a country (like Iraq) cannot threaten world peace, the people funding the proxy war are the one's threatening world peace.

Malcolm wrote:

You mean the US, the Russians, the Iranians, and the Saudis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 31st, 2018 at 12:15 AM

Title: Re: Pittsburgh massacre

Content:

drodul said:

Grigoris, what is the flag that is superimposed on Canada and the USA on the map you posted?

Malcolm wrote:

The Saudi flag.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 30th, 2018 at 5:55 AM

Title: America's Next Civil War

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<https://thewalrus.ca/americas-next-civil-war/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 30th, 2018 at 5:29 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Pero said:

The latter.

Malcolm wrote:

You are still conscious.

Pero said:

I'm sorry but I don't understand.

Malcolm wrote:

If you can remember your dream, it shows you were conscious. You cannot remember anything from when you were unconscious.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 30th, 2018 at 1:59 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Pero said:

But if I don't know I am dreaming, how can you say that I am conscious?

Malcolm wrote:

You mean if you do not remember your dreams, or do you mean being unaware that in a dream you are dreaming?

Pero said:

The latter.

Malcolm wrote:

You are still conscious.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 29th, 2018 at 10:55 PM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In general, what Buddhism considers latent are afflictions (kleṣa), termed in their latent form, anuśaya. There are 6 basic anuśaya: attachment, anger, pride, ignorance, false views, and doubt.

Losal Samten said:

Do you know why we generally see jealousy replace false views and doubt? Do false views and doubt correspond to the generation of the human and asura manifestations?

Malcolm wrote:

Not in the this schemata. You are really talking about a Vajrayāna scheme.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 29th, 2018 at 9:46 PM

Title: Re: whatnow727 message to Lamas

Content:

PeterC said:

I think this is a really bad idea.

Malcolm wrote:

Agreed. This is a really bad idea.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 29th, 2018 at 9:39 PM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

My point was simply that there were, in the view of Buddhadharma, no such thing as unconscious memories, i.e. data that is storied somewhere in some medium to be called forth later.

Wayfarer said:

It seems to me that this is hard to reconcile with:

As a matter of interest, what is the translation/etymology of the term 'alaya' in the compound 'alaya-Vijñāna'?

Malcolm wrote:

Ā means all. Laya means, in this context, a place of repose, residence, etc. It is glossed by the Tibetans as gzhi, i.e. a basis.

Wayfarer said:

Bill Waldron's book, The Buddhist Unconscious, shows in detail the doctrinal requirements that resulted in the development of the Alaya-Vijñāna or 'storehouse consciousness'. I don't think you need to reify it as any kind of entity or over-arching 'one mind', if that is the concern. But I don't think it's feasible to deny that there is such a concept, either.

Malcolm wrote:

You are not really understanding the intent of the doctrine. The idea is that appearances of the universe are a result of karmavipaka. How does that karmavipaka ripen? The Yogacāra school theorized a process called cittasaṃtanāparināma, the transformation of the mind stream. This comes about because it is held that when we engage in an action, this creates an impression, called a vāsanā, literally, "perfume," in Tibetan, bag chags. This is also called a bija or seed. These seeds are held to be stored in a consciousness called the ālayavijñāna, which upon the elimination of all the seeds then vanishes. An impression or seed, when it meets its special condition for transformation of ripening, then gives rise to an appearance that corresponds to the action which produced it.

Asanga argues that this ālayavijñāna is the same thing as the Theravāda bhavaṅga, or linking consciousness. On the other hand, the ālaya does not have objects it does not operate through the senses. It is the object, however, of the kliṣṭamānas, the afflicted mind. The other senses consciousnesses are products of the ripening of these seeds which create the appearances of outer objects such as the universe and so on.

So, it really does not, in the Yogacāra theory, function like an unconscious mind.

Wayfarer said:

And I think as a practical matter, any Buddhist has to acknowledge that there are 'latent tendencies' which are not always fully conscious but which manifest (or 'come to fruition') in response to circumstances or stimuli (I know I certainly do). I find it a bit hard to understand why those wouldn't be understood in terms of being un- or sub-conscious tendencies.

Malcolm wrote:

But here we are talking about memory. Memories are active concepts of the seven consciousnesses. This is basic to all Buddhist thinking on the issue. The question concerned whether Buddhism acknowledged what we term unconscious mental processes. It doesn't. The distinction made in Buddhism is a distinction between nonconceptual and conceptual cognitive processes: for example direct perceptions on the one hand, and the identification of direct perceptions as objects on the other. We are not necessarily aware, in a conscious sense, of all that we directly perceive because direct perceptions are by nature nonconceptual, and to be conscious of a given thing requires us to have a concept about it. In other words, the first moment of cognition is nonconceptual; in the second moment, mental factors such as perception jump in and allow us to discriminate the blue object we are having a direct perception of as a blue cup. When we have direct perceptions of unfamiliar entities, we struggle to discriminate them, and often, we do not bother to discriminate them at all. But we cannot become conscious of a given thing of which we have not had a direct perception-- this does not bar us from having an imagination, but in reality our abstract imagination is predicated on bits and pieces of newly arranged direct perceptions. The Buddhist theory of cognition, as has been noted, is in general a) nominalist and b) resembles, somewhat, Hume's pov in the Inquiry into Human Understanding. The outlier is Yogacāra, which bears some similarities to Berkely's thought.

In general, what Buddhism considers latent are afflictions (kleṣa), termed in their latent form, anuśaya. There are 6 basic anuśaya: attachment, anger, pride, ignorance, false views, and doubt. These anuśayas are not subconscious tendencies. These six then gets further divided into a total of 98. If you want to know more about them, their number and so on, consult chapter 5 of the Koshabhasyam.

Karma can never be latent, why? Because karma is caused by afflictions. According to Madhyamaka, a karma continues without ceasing until it meets its condition for ripening; according to Yogacāra, a karma makes an impression, then ceases; and when that impression meets its special condition for ripening, it does.

If you want to understand in more detail how this all works in Yogacāra, one should consult the Mahāyāna Samgraha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 29th, 2018 at 5:30 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

My point was simply that there were, in the view of Buddhadharma, no such thing as unconscious memories, i.e. data that is storied somewhere in some medium to be called forth later. Memory, in Buddharma, is simply the ability to recall objects that the mind has experienced. The power of that memory is commensurate with one's level of concentration. To repeat, no medium was ever proposed in which memories are stored. Essentially, from the point of view of Buddhadharma, we do not have unrecalled memories. If we do not remember something, it is not a memory. A memory can only be called a memory if there is a recollection of some past experience we have recalled in the present through a conceptual operation related to the seven dhātus of consciousness. An unrecalled memory is a nonmemory in Buddhadharma.

Grigoris said:

Six of one, half a dozen of the other...

Malcolm wrote:

Not really.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 29th, 2018 at 5:29 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

When you dream, you are conscious, but what you are experiencing is the activation of traces.

Pero said:

But if I don't know I am dreaming, how can you say that I am conscious?

Malcolm wrote:

You mean if you do not remember your dreams, or do you mean being unaware that in a dream you are dreaming?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 29th, 2018 at 5:27 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

My point was simply that there were, in the view of Buddhadharma, no such thing as unconscious memories, i.e. data that is storied somewhere in some medium to be called forth later.

Wayfarer said:

As a matter of interest, what is the translation/etymology of the term 'alaya' in the compound 'alaya-Vijñāna'?

Malcolm wrote:

Ā means all. Laya means, in this context, a place of repose, residence, etc. It is glossed by the Tibetans as gzhi, i.e. a basis.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, October 29th, 2018 at 4:28 AM
Title: Re: Pittsburgh massacre
Content:

Crazywisdom said:
To make them tap out here: this type of speech could be treated as aiding a terrorist group and prosecuted as such.

Malcolm wrote:
That kind of speech should be legislated as illegal.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, October 29th, 2018 at 4:22 AM
Title: Re: Psychoanalysis
Content:
Malcolm wrote:

...

The model used, if one can call it a model, is clarity vs. cloudiness, distracted vs. undistracted. That is If your mind is clear/concentrated, you can remember more, if your mind is cloudy/distracted, you remember less. But in this model, no storage medium was ever proposed or even intimated.

Pero said:
In other words, theoretically, one does not remember everything that one ever experienced due to obscurations but in reality it's all "there"?

Also, could you please answer how (non-lucid) dreams are not an unconscious working of the mind?

Malcolm wrote:
When you dream, you are conscious, but what you are experiencing is the activation of traces.

Simply put, when you have more clarity, you can remember more of your experience. You don't need to worry "where" those experiences are stored.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, October 29th, 2018 at 4:15 AM
Title: Re: Psychoanalysis
Content:
Grigoris said:

The other point is that non-distraction means that the mind is not drawn away from something, an object of the mind. Thus we come back to the point you refuted earlier of wrongly considering memories as phenomena.

Malcolm wrote:

Memories are mental concepts possessed by any of seven dhātus of consciousness of external or internal objects with which we are familiar. This is the basic definition.

My point was simply that there were, in the view of Buddhadharma, no such thing as unconscious memories, i.e. data that is storied somewhere in some medium to be called forth later. Memory, in Buddhism, is simply the ability to recall objects that the mind has experienced. The power of that memory is commensurate with one's level of concentration. To repeat, no medium was ever proposed in which memories are stored. Essentially, from the point of view of Buddhadharma, we do not have unrecalled memories. If we do not remember something, it is not a memory. A memory can only be called a memory if there is a recollection of some past experience we have recalled in the present through a conceptual operation related to the seven dhātus of consciousness. An unrecalled memory is a nonmemory in Buddhadharma.

But in modern parlance, we have become accustomed to referring to things we have not recalled as "memories" because we recall things we have forgotten, and so we infer, we must have unconscious memories because we are very conditioned by pop Freudianism, and imagine there is such a thing as an unconscious mind, also rejected in Buddhadharma, which stores memories and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 29th, 2018 at 3:57 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhism explains memory perfectly well. It does just not explain memory with the present-day metaphor of data stored in a storage medium for later recall. Instead it describes memory as a function of mental nondistractedness.

Grigoris said:

Before the present day metaphor there were other non-technological metaphors that pointed in the same direction/towards the same notion.

Malcolm wrote:

Not in Buddhism.

Grigoris said:

Also this idea of memory as non-distractedness does not even come near to explaining what I said earlier: You are talking about recalling/remembering. I personally do not walk around with a conscious recollection of every single one of my memories during every single moment of the day. It would be impossible to do so. Ergo...

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhadharma does not have the word "memory" as you are using it here. This is the problem. You are framing memories as data (familiar or strong experiences) which is stored somewhere (the body, consciousness, etc.). This metaphor is absent in Buddhadharma whether we use the notion of marks on a piece of paper or data on a drive. This may be because the semantic field of the Buddhadharma ideas of memory/recollection predate and never later accommodated a model of data storage based on writing things down on paper.

The model used, if one can call it a model, is clarity vs. cloudiness, distracted vs. undistracted. That is If your mind is clear/concentrated, you can remember more, if your mind is cloudy/distracted, you remember less. But in this model, no storage medium was ever proposed or even intimated.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 29th, 2018 at 3:14 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Grigoris said:

Then I would have to say that "Buddhism" needs to reassess its theories on memory. I guess the Yogacarins tried to do it with the Alaya Vijnana, but met with resistance from the dominant theoretical thread of Madhyamaka.

Malcolm wrote:

The definitions I provided to you above from strictly from Yogacāra and its antecedents.

Grigoris said:

Regardless, quite clearly the current position does not adequately explain memory and how it functions. Not by a long shot. It does not answer any of the questions/hypothetical points I posed to you. Keep in mind that these points are based on practical observations, so it is going to take a little more than a few Sanskrit terms being thrown around to convince me of something different.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhism explains memory perfectly well. It does just not explain memory with the present-day metaphor of data stored in a storage medium for later recall. Instead it describes memory as a function of mental nondistractedness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 29th, 2018 at 3:03 AM

Title: Re: Pittsburgh massacre

Content:

Grigoris said:

Do people still want to insist . . . that Fascism can be countered by peaceful resistance?

clyde said:

The Buddha is reported to have said, "Hatred does not cease through hatred at any time. Hatred ceases through love. This is an unalterable law."

Malcolm wrote:

Karl Popper wrote:

Less well known is the paradox of tolerance: Unlimited tolerance must lead to the disappearance of tolerance. If we extend unlimited tolerance even to those who are intolerant, if we are not prepared to defend a tolerant society against the onslaught of the intolerant, then the tolerant will be destroyed, and tolerance with them. —In this formulation, I do not imply, for instance, that we should always suppress the utterance of intolerant philosophies; as long as we can counter them by rational argument and keep them in check by public opinion, suppression would certainly be unwise. But we should claim the right to suppress them if necessary even by force; for it may easily turn out that they are not prepared to meet us on the level of rational argument, but begin by denouncing all argument; they may forbid their followers to listen to rational argument, because it is deceptive, and teach them to answer arguments by the use of their fists or pistols. We should therefore claim, in the name of tolerance, the right not to tolerate the intolerant.

John Rawls:

While an intolerant sect does not itself have title to complain of intolerance, its freedom should be restricted only when the tolerant sincerely and with reason believe that their own security and that of the institutions of liberty are in danger.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 29th, 2018 at 2:11 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Grigoris said:

When I am talking about smaskara I am referring to karmic formations, to (put it simply) habits.

Malcolm wrote:

Then you are not talking about the samskara skangha, you are talking about second link in the twelve links of dependent origination.

In Tibetan Buddhism, we don't use this lingo. This lingo comes from Goenka's Vipassna.

What are you are talking about is bag chags or vāsanā. This is a term derived from Yogacāra theory. They are impressions upon consciousness which are activated through a specific cause and condition which causes them to generate a karmic appearance.

Vasubandhu defines memories as concepts connected with the seven mental elements: i.e. eye through mental consciousness as well as the manodhātu.

Asanga defines memory as the absence of forgetting an object with which the mind is familiar. He further defines affliction as the basis of a distracted memory, as does Vasubandhu in his treatise on the five aggregates.

Basically, they both define the mechanism of memory as being free from mental distractions. The more undistracted one is, that is free from affliction one is, the better one's memory will become. But there is no definition of memory having some matrix, or memories existing in some latent form. Memories are simply knowing some familiar entity that one experienced in the past. This also explains why we do not remember and will never remember most of what we experience on a day to day basis. Most of what we experience is either too trivial to recall or it is an object with which we have no repeated familiarity.

Grigoris said:

I do not think that neuroscience will be able to adequately explain memory, mainly because neuroscience deals with brain and not mind. I believe that the explanation found in Buddhism based on the idea of the alaya-vijnana, or of samskara (as habits based on past volitional actions) is more fitting.

Malcolm wrote:

That explanation which you seek does not exist in Buddhist texts. You are fabricating it. If you examine Abhidharma, Madhyamaka, Yogācāra, etc., you will never find the definition of memory presented in the terms you describe. One does not even see memory described in terms of bag chags.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 28th, 2018 at 10:48 PM

Title: Re: Dudjom Yangsi Dorje Drollö empowerment Toronto

Content:

Tlalok said:

Emaho!

Would this <http://vimalatreasures.org/the-daily-practice-of-the-secret-sadhana-of-dorje-drollod.aspx> be the appropriate sadhana text then, based off the empowerment(s) we recieved?

Malcolm wrote:

In general, probably. Usually, one does the outer drollö sadhana, for which there is a retreat manual, then one does Pema Sogdrub.

Those who are doing KDL's drollo don't have to do anything different as KDL's drollo and DR's drollo are related.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 28th, 2018 at 5:09 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Bill Waldron said:

Although there was no explicit concept of unconscious mind in early Buddhism (roughly 5th-2nd centuries BCE), there was an awareness of processes that later Buddhists, like many modern scholars, would consider descriptively unconscious. These included not only the various cognitive processes that subserve all ordinary perception, but also our ongoing emotional dispositions and sense of self-identity.

Wayfarer said:

Also, I would have thought that the fact that yogis are able to suspend their respiration and other metabolic processes, in a way which the untrained can definitely not do, arises from their awareness of and mastery over autonomic and semi-autonomic functions, which for most people are unconscious.

Malcolm wrote:

I think Bill Waldron is reading too much into his sources.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 28th, 2018 at 5:01 AM

Title: Re: I wish to marry a Dakini

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Dakini type women are rocket fuel to your olive oil.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, there are no wisdom ḍākinīs in human lands.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 28th, 2018 at 4:55 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Wayfarer said:

the reality of unconscious and subconscious is indubitable, in my view.

Malcolm wrote:

These things do not exist, and you cannot explain their mechanism.

Wayfarer said:

bringing to light unconscious memories can be very challenging

Malcolm wrote:

There are no such thing as unconsciousness memories. If you are not conscious of a mental event, it is not a memory. That is just not how the brain works, if you like neuroscience explanations, and it definitely is not how Buddhadharma explains memory.

Wayfarer said:

William Waldron has a book, The Buddhist Unconscious: The Alaya-vijñāna in the context of Indian Buddhist Thought:

This is the story of fifth century CE India, when the Yogacara tested the awareness of unawareness, and became aware of human unawareness to an extraordinary degree. They not only explicitly differentiated this dimension of mental processes from conscious cognitive processes, but also offered reasoned arguments on behalf of this dimension of mind. This is the concept of the 'Buddhist unconscious', which arose just as philosophical discourse in other circles was fiercely debating the limits of conscious awareness, and these ideas in turn had developed as a systematisation of teachings from the Buddha himself.

Malcolm wrote:

The ālayavijñāna is not actually a separate consciousness. It is a name for consciousness in its role as a repository of traces, vāsanās (a theory of the Yogacārin the Madhyamaka find very faulty).

In the Yogacāra system, the ālayavijñāna does not perform any cognitive function at all, not even as an unconscious. In the Yogacāra presentation, it is basically inert, which is why Madhyamakas tend to reject their presentation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 28th, 2018 at 4:52 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Wayfarer said:

The question could be asked, why Gautama suddenly recalled all of his past lives during the third watch (I think it was) of the night of his Enlightenment. It is said that detailed knowledge of all of these lives was suddenly recalled at this time. So, why didn't he already know it, and where had these memories been residing before they had been recalled?

Malcolm wrote:

He recalled his past lives sequentially, not all at once, in a reverse sequence. Memories are not stored anywhere. There does not need to be a storage medium, in fact, one cannot exist. The past does not exist, the future has yet to come to be, the present is already gone. The emptiness of the mind itself is sufficient cause for memory recollection.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 28th, 2018 at 4:47 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You are imagining that memories are entities that have some existence somewhere in your mind of which you are unaware, like data records.

It is not how memory works.

Grigoris said:

A dependently arisen mental phenomenon. Yes. If there were no memories, then mentally/emotionally we would always be starting from scratch. We quite clearly don't.

Malcolm wrote:

No, that is not how memory works, either in neuroscience or Buddhism.

In neuroscience, the subject of memory is a big topic. There are many types of memories.

In Buddhadharma, memory is also a mental factor, dran pa. It always accompanies consciousness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 28th, 2018 at 4:37 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Unknown said:

Is blinking a non-conceptual or an unconscious activity? What about pulling away one's hand when they touch a overly hot object?

Malcolm wrote:

Nonconceptual.

Unknown said:

All samkaras are activities related with being conscious. They are not unconscious events.

Yes, they are formed by volitional actions, as are habits, but over time the need for volition disappears and yet the actions continue to manifest. An example would be exaggerated startle responses to non-threatening phenomena. These are rarely conscious or motivated. Another example is chronic anxiety.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think you understand. The caittas are mental factors that assist or are associated with consciousness perform functions for consciousness in various activities. They are not "habits." Volition is one of those mental factors, one of the ten neutral mental factors. I don't you are using samskaras in the proper sense here. Samskaras as the link after ignorance refers to the karmas performed in the past life, generally speaking.

Unknown said:

They are conscious, but they may not be conscious of, I think this is where we are disagreeing.

Malcolm wrote:

They are conscious of something, even if it is not what they ought to be conscious of. This called distraction.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 28th, 2018 at 3:39 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You are not being precise. I am. Be precise.

Grigoris said:

I have been clear and precise, you are reading things into my statements to support your counter-position. What do you mean by lack of awareness? Generally, to lack awareness means to be unconscious, as in deep sleep, or under anesthesia. If you are awake, you are both conscious and aware.

Actions based on habit. When I am sparring in Muay Thai (for example) I constantly do things that are programmed, without me being conscious of doing them, nor having to be motivated to do them. They come out automatically. If there is awareness there it is subtle and REALLY fast. Faster than the finger click that Buddhist models of consciousness say exists between specific moments of consciousness.

Malcolm wrote:

You are confusing "non-conceptual" with "unconscious."

Grigoris said:

What do you mean by samskara? Are you referring to the skandha or the link in dependent origination.

Skhandas.

Malcolm wrote:

All samkaras are activities related with being conscious. They are not unconscious events.

Grigoris said:

Everyone knows that they are angry when they are angered, desirous when they desire, and ignorant when they don't know something.

No they don't. People act without awareness due to habit. You do it. I do it. We all do it.

Malcolm wrote:

Not in reality. People are always aware of something. They may be distracted, they may not be focusing on what they are "doing," but it is never the case that when a person is awake they are unaware.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 28th, 2018 at 3:33 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

These are not unconscious memories. If there is a memory, it is in consciousness.

Grigoris said:

You are talking about recalling/remembering. I personally do not walk around with a conscious recollection of every single one of my memories during every single moment of the day. It would be impossible to do so. Ergo...

Malcolm wrote:

You are imagining that memories are entities that have some existence somewhere in your mind of which you are unaware, like data records.

It is not how memory works.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 28th, 2018 at 2:29 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

Thanks!

Malcolm wrote:

In Buddhadharma, there is nowhere any discussion of an unconscious mind which performs functions below the level of awareness. This is a modern idea from modern psychology. It comes originally from the 19th century German philosopher Schiller, was taken up by the poet Coleridge, and placed into its modern usage by Freud.

Brentano rejected the idea, as well as Satre, Fromm, Searle, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 28th, 2018 at 2:13 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

ignorant when they don't know something

Monlam Tharchin said:

Can you unpack this for me, Malcolm? My impression is that one of the many reasons samsara is perpetuated is because people DON'T know that they don't know.

Malcolm wrote:

Ignorance is actually a kind of knowing, a mistaken knowing, if you will. It is never, however, an unconsciousness state.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 28th, 2018 at 2:11 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There are no such thing as unconsciousness memories.

Grigoris said:

What are you talking about dude? Have you met and talked to trauma survivors? Especially survivors of childhood trauma?

Malcolm wrote:

These are not unconscious memories. If there is a memory, it is in consciousness.

Grigoris said:

They don't remember shit. Their experiences colour their current mental state and yet they are in some cases completely unaware of the experience that formed the current behaviour.

Malcolm wrote:

That is not memory.

Grigoris said:

People that suffer severe trauma can lose almost all memory of any details of what happened to them.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. of course.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 28th, 2018 at 2:08 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In Buddhadharma, none of this is predicated on a subconsciousness. The whole idea of an subconsciousness is antithetical to Buddhadharma.

Grigoris said:

I did not mention a sub-conscious, I mentioned a lack of awareness of the basis of many of our actions.

Malcolm wrote:

You are not being precise. I am. Be precise.

What do you mean by lack of awareness? Generally, to lack awareness means to be unconscious, as in deep sleep, or under anesthesia. If you are awake, you are both conscious and aware. People do not accumulate action while they are unconscious.

Grigoris said:

Are you saying we are aware of everything in our samskara? I certainly am not.

Malcolm wrote:

What do you mean by samskara? Are you referring to the skandha or the link in dependent origination.

Grigoris said:

Anders' statement is false. People are aware of what they do and they are aware of their mental life.

You have obviously never met a psychotic.

Malcolm wrote:

Many in fact, and they were all quite conscious at the time, aware of what they were doing within the constraints of their delusions.

Grigoris said:

They act as they do because of afflictions. But they are actually aware of those afflictions. When someone gets angry, they can tell you their state of mind is angry, etc. I disagree. Generally, when I get really angry, the last thing I think about is my afflicted mental state. In retrospect? I can analyse my mind state, what I felt, how I acted, etc... and call it anger. But when I am peaking...

Malcolm wrote:

Everyone knows that they are angry when they are angered, desirous when they desire, and ignorant when they don't know something.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 28th, 2018 at 12:31 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Wayfarer said:

the reality of unconscious and subconscious is indubitable, in my view.

Malcolm wrote:

These things do not exist, and you cannot explain their mechanism.

Wayfarer said:

bringing to light unconscious memories can be very challenging

Malcolm wrote:

There are no such thing as unconsciousness memories. If you are not conscious of a mental event, it is not a memory. That is just not how the brain works, if you like neuroscience explanations, and it definitely is not how Buddhadharma explains memory.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 28th, 2018 at 12:30 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Grigoris said:

Karmic propensity, arising from past karma and its outcomes, is (largely) not a conscious process.

Malcolm wrote:

It is entirely a conscious process.

Grigoris said:

We are 99% unaware of why we think or act like we do because we are unaware of the Tathagagarbha and karma viapkka.

Malcolm wrote:

No, we do not know why we think or act as we do because our consciousness is contaminated with afflictions—desire, hatred, and ignorance—but none of it is subconscious or unconscious. Tathāgatagarbha is completely irrelevant here.

Grigoris said:

So it would be a lie to say that our current thoughts and actions are not (unbeknownst to us) influenced by our inherent capacity for liberation, or the effect of past karma.

Malcolm wrote:

In Buddhadharma, none of this is predicated on a subconsciousness. The whole idea of an subconsciousness is antithetical to Buddhadharma.

Anders said:

This is not the same as saying that there is a sub-conscious mind, but it is the same as saying:

There is an active complex mental life happening in all humans that most people are largely unaware of...

Malcolm wrote:

Anders' statement is false. People are aware of what they do and they are aware of their mental life. They act as they do because of afflictions. But they are actually aware of those afflictions. When someone gets angry, they can tell you their state of mind is angry, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 27th, 2018 at 10:57 PM

Title: Re: How would you translate this?

Content:

Josef said:

de la kha dog dbyibs mthong na mtshan ma rig pa' gnas la gol

I have a document that translates it as:

If you see shapes and colors you have strayed from rigpa's presence.

This translation seems to be missing something to me. Any insight would be appreciated.

Malcolm wrote:

If in that/in that case, you see color and shape, characteristics are a deviation in vidyā's place.

However, I need to see the preceding line as well for context.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 27th, 2018 at 10:53 PM

Title: Re: Guruyoga with one's enemies?

Content:

climb-up said:

Hi,

First of all, my apologies, I may have asked this in the past. If I hadn't, then I had meant to, but I cannot find it through the search function.

I recently read (in "Beyond Words" by Judith Allen and Julia Lawless) that one of the Dzogchen Tantras recommends the practice of guru yoga with one's enemies as a practice to overcoming attachment and aversion. I've heard of this practice before.

Does anyone know what the Tantra is and if it is translated in English?

Malcolm wrote:

I have no idea what they are talking about.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 27th, 2018 at 3:49 AM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Neo-liberalism requires democracy. It does not function well in countries like Venezuela, which are anti-Democratic in the extreme. You may argue that China is anti-Democratic, but they are undergoing a liberal revolution. Fairly soon, the newly generated middle class in China is going to demand a political voice, just as in the 19th century, the newly generated middle class in Europe demanded a political voice.

DGA said:

Neoliberalism was first mobilized in Chile under Pinochet.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, not exactly. It is a complex term with a complex history.

DGA said:

It was implemented by Deng Xiaoping.

Malcolm wrote:

Sort of, but in fact China's economy is mercantilist.

DGA said:

Remember that the Reagan Revolution (neoliberalism...) was made possible in part by the disenfranchisement and mass incarceration of many, starting with Nixon. That ain't democratic.

Malcolm wrote:

This is an unsupportable claim.

DGA said:

Finally, neoliberalism isn't a thing in Venezuela. Chavez-ism is nothing but a nationalistic response to neoliberalism.

Malcolm wrote:

Which by definition makes it a "thing" in Venezuela.

DGA said:

Neoliberalism is an economic policy. It doesn't have much to do with liberal cultural or social values. It's an economic and political project.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it has every thing to do with culture and social values. This is more what I have in mind:

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Neoliberalism_%28international_relations%29

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 26th, 2018 at 11:38 PM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:
neoliberalism...

Malcolm wrote:

...has in fact lifted a billion people on the planet out of chronic poverty. It just hasn't done good things for the American working class. But America First, right? In other words, what I mostly see here is people obsessing about American jobs and American politics, but there is a much wider context to consider here.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Obviously, it is deeply a question of opinion and spin to claim neoliberal economic doctrines "lifted a billion people out of poverty", and there are people all over the world who disagree, especially those who have faced the military enforcement end of it.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.theguardian.com/business/2018/sep/19/world-bank-reports-slower-progress-on-extreme-poverty>

Johnny Dangerous said:

At any rate, my criticism was leveled at it's effect on democracy specifically, not it's ability to create wealth...for someone or other. The underlying assumption is that somehow an improved economic situation (well, for some people anyway) justifies the hollowing out of the commons, and the deficit to democracy...

Malcolm wrote:

Neo-liberalism requires democracy. It does not function well in countries like Venezuela, which are anti-Democratic in the extreme. You may argue that China is anti-Democratic, but they are undergoing a liberal revolution. Fairly soon, the newly generated middle class in China is going to demand a political voice, just as in the 19th century, the newly generated middle class in Europe demanded a political voice.

Johnny Dangerous said:

I am not an isolationist, but i'm not in favor of multinational corporations subverting and reducing the power of democratically elected governments and getting to decide the direction of the world economy with little or no input from the people at the bottom who generate their wealth.

Malcolm wrote:

These why we need more democratic initiatives. Business cannot function in countries where trust is very low. The reason why businesses function well in the US, Canada, Western Europe and so on, is that laws are followed for the most part, and trust levels are very high. This is only possible in a true democratic system.

Johnny Dangerous said:

I find it really interesting that both the right and the left in this country are retreating into isolationism.

And I find it interesting how many liberals and progressives have discovered their deep and abiding love of the status quo since Trump was elected

Malcolm wrote:

The status quo was better for the world economy than this state of affairs. If things continue in this way for much longer, we are in for a hell of a world wide depression.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 26th, 2018 at 10:58 PM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Anders said:

There is an active complex mental life happening in all humans that most people are largely unaware of

Malcolm wrote:

Nope.

Grigoris said:

Yup. It is called karma and karma vipakka...

and/or Tahagatagarbha...

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. Tathāgatagarbha, is not a consciousness, unless you take Lanka-avatara point of view and consider it to be the ālaya-vijñāna, And even here, the ālaya-vijñāna does not engage in any mental operations at all. It is merely a name for consciousness in its role of a repository of traces.

There is no "subconscious" in Buddhadharma. Derived karma are actions which result from conscious volitions— and there are no such a thing as unconscious volitions, at least, not in Buddhadharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 26th, 2018 at 10:48 PM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

MiphamFan said:

There is nothing wrong with protectionism to build up your country's industry, every single nation which successfully industrialized did that while those who embraced the World Bank et al's policies of free trade remain stuck to this day.

Malcolm wrote:

Protectionism amounts to taxing your own people for buying foreign goods.

MiphamFan said:

US industry has been eaten up by Asia. All the unemployed would have been factory workers in former times.

Malcolm wrote:

In the words of David Chapelle, we don't want Nikes that are made here, they would cost $3000.

MiphamFan said:

Today, with automation taking away even more manual jobs, I think it's honestly insane that anyone would support an open border policy. How many people, whether immigrants or locals, are going to be AI scientists and engineers?

Malcolm wrote:

The fact of the matter is that most US manufacturing jobs have been eliminated by automation, not by foreign labor markets.

MiphamFan said:

The crazy thing about US trade is that your tax dollars even subsidize small imports from China.

Malcolm wrote:

Global markets are global because money flows do not obey border controls, and they never have.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 26th, 2018 at 4:21 AM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:
neoliberalism...

Malcolm wrote:

...has in fact lifted a billion people on the planet out of chronic poverty. It just hasn't done good things for the American working class. But America First, right? In other words, what I mostly see here is people obsessing about American jobs and American politics, but there is a much wider context to consider here.

I find it really interesting that both the right and the left in this country are retreating into isolationism.

Queequeg said:

Prioritizing the well being of oneself and one's neighbors does not amount to isolationism. Insisting that terms of international engagement be rebalanced is not isolationism. Those kinds of policies can be called a lot of things, but not necessarily isolationism.

Malcolm wrote:

In fact, they are isolationist. What we are seeing is a return to the discredited and bankrupt American System, from Merriam-Webster:
: the policy of promoting industry in the U.S. by adoption of a high protective tariff and of developing internal improvements by the federal government (as advocated by Henry Clay from 1816 to 1828)

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 26th, 2018 at 2:04 AM

Title: Re: Lung always given at time of empowerment?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In general, the lung for the sadhana is included in a given empowerment/blessing/permission rite, since the visualization read by the lama for the students is taken directly from the sadhana, as are the refuge, etc. prayers one recites in the empowerment, etc.

However, for any given deity cycle there can be several different sadhanas of different lengths with different details, so one needs generally to get the lung for these separately. But in some case, giving the lung for the longest sadhana is considered to be sufficient for the shorter sadhanas as well. It depends somewhat on the master and the tradition.

In general, however, for permission rites, there is only one sadhana, and in this case, usually the permission rite is sufficient, all one needs following that is the explanation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 26th, 2018 at 1:57 AM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:
neoliberalism...

Malcolm wrote:

...has in fact lifted a billion people on the planet out of chronic poverty. It just hasn't done good things for the American working class. But America First, right? In other words, what I mostly see here is people obsessing about American jobs and American politics, but there is a much wider context to consider here.

I find it really interesting that both the right and the left in this country are retreating into isolationism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 25th, 2018 at 9:28 PM

Title: Re: Is there a Tibetan translation of The awakening of faith

Content:

nudnavda said:

Would anyone know whether there exists a translation of The awakening of faith in the Tibetan canon?

Feels strange to me that this text, though quite influential in China, Korea ,Japan etc., has not been transmitted to Tibet.

One possible explanation (to me, as a non-academic) might be the Tibetan predominant orientation towards India.

But then, this orientation has only been firmly established after the debate around 750, and this "shastra" appeared already in the 7th century.

And Zongmi, active around the time of the debate, has appreciated and promoted The awakening of faith.

Thanks for any help!

Malcolm wrote:

It was never translated into Tibetan. Most likely, it was regarded as inauthentic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 25th, 2018 at 11:27 AM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Nemo said:

Parties are for chumps. Get a grassroots chunk of votes and make demands. They listen real fast when you target ridings that won by less than a thousand votes. That was my secret.

Malcolm wrote:

Dude, you really don't expect anyone to take your chest thumping seriously, right?

Nemo said:

Meh, politics treated me well. The days of ministers calling me at home are over. Once you are told how the system actually works it does it's own magic. You'll figure it out eventually. Don't conflate being articulate in a very particular fashion with understanding politics. Professors rarely win elections.

Malcolm wrote:

The first mistake is thinking that any system made up of humans behaves rationally. The idea that the system is rigged is an error stemming from the first misconception. The idea that the system is rigged is just another comforting conspiracy theory which explains away one's feeling of powerlessness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 25th, 2018 at 8:44 AM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Nemo said:

Parties are for chumps. Get a grassroots chunk of votes and make demands. They listen real fast when you target ridings that won by less than a thousand votes. That was my secret.

Malcolm wrote:

Dude, you really don't expect anyone to take your chest thumping seriously, right?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 25th, 2018 at 4:48 AM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Apparently Malcolm read books where there's no tiger. Everyone active I know of gives the tiger seat.

Malcolm wrote:

There are quite a few Drollo Cycles where there is no tiger.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 25th, 2018 at 4:47 AM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Nemo said:

You are missing that in politics no one cares what you think.

Malcolm wrote:

"You can't do anything. You are powerless." This is all you are saying.

And it's true, you are Canadian, shaking your fist in impotent rage against a system in which you have no say.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 25th, 2018 at 12:07 AM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

Anyone know some answers?

Malcolm wrote:

As for your third question, A ti is not "ati." A ti Mu wer is Zhang Zhung language.

As for your first question, there are many Drollo cycles where he does not stand on a tiger.

javier.espinoza.t said:

Also good to know, but i was asking for dorje drollo's name. Dorje is tibetan but khro dalokottara is sanskrit, no? I learned from you that gro bo lod comes originally from sanskrit.

Malcolm wrote:

Gro bo lod, according to Situ Panchen, is an Apabrahmsa corruption of khro dalokottara.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 24th, 2018 at 10:27 PM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

So i doubt greatly that a Bön Dharmakaya aspect can become a servant in the form of a tigress for riding , but that is a Yungdrung Bön vision which does not reflect to the visions done here by the adherents of Namkhai Norbu.

Ati Muwer is still inside the Refuge Tree of Bön as such and has never left Yungdrung Bön, so if there would be power in the rituals of the tigress as Ati Muwer, that is what i greatly doubt, seen in the visions of Yungdrung Bön.

Malcolm wrote:

In this thread, the Bonpo point of view is irrelevant, as has been pointed out to you several times.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 24th, 2018 at 10:24 PM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

i don't want to troll but, i have maybe a few naive questions

1) ¿why this yidam must have only one mount?

2) the yidam is riding, not stepping over. the mount is an active part, bonpos should be honored about the ChNN commentary ¿no?

and finally

3) ¿is tibetan and sanskrit is mixed in it's name? ¿why?

Anyone know some answers?

Malcolm wrote:

As for your third question, A ti is not "ati." A ti Mu wer is Zhang Zhung language.

As for your first question, there are many Drollo cycles where he does not stand on a tiger.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 24th, 2018 at 9:27 PM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:

Ignorant_Fool said:

Noob question:

Where can I learn more about this Buddha "Powerful Heroic Youth" (Gzhon nu Dpa' bo stobs ldan) - which I'm guessing is Shyönnu Pawo Tobden, sixth of the 12 founding Dzogchen masters? Are there any literatures that explain more about this Buddha and his nirmanakaya field?

I'm still making my way through the first few chapters - going back and re-reading them over and over. Baby steps, I guess ...

Malcolm wrote:

Nyoshul Khenpo's book on the history of Dzogchen will have some information.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 24th, 2018 at 10:15 AM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Wayfarer said:

David Brooks' current <https://nyti.ms/2R7Chgh>:

the Democratic campaign is inadequate to the current moment. It offers no counter-narrative to Trump, little moral case against his behavior, no unifying argument against ethnic nationalism. In politics you can't beat something with nothing. Democrats missed the Trumpian upsurge because while society was dividing into cultural tribes, they spent 2008 through 2016 focusing on health care. Now that the upsurge has happened, they are still pinioned to health care.

...

It has now become evident that Republicans are better at politicizing cultural issues and Democrats are better at offering economic benefits to those who are struggling. If you think voting behavior is primarily motivated by material appeals, the Democratic strategy is fine. But if you think it's motivated by cultural identity, a desire for respect, a sense of what's right, loyalty to a common story, the Democratic strategy leaves a lot to be desired.

Bristollad said:

And that's what I don't get about American attitudes to health care, that you think it's all about economics. The National Health Service in the UK was instituted after the Second World War because of a sense of what's right, a desire for respect for those who had served and suffered, because people were motivated by the desire to change the status quo and not simply return to how things were before. It's become a treasured part of our cultural identity that even Mrs Thatcher dared not privatise.

“The astonishing fact is that Bevan’s vision has stood both the test of time and the test of change unimaginable in his day. At the centre of his vision was a National Health Service, and sixty years on, his NHS – by surviving, growing and adapting to technological and demographic change – remains at the centre of the life of our nation as a uniquely British creation, and still a uniquely powerful engine of social justice.”
Gordon Brown talking about Nye Bevan who was the Health Minister in 1948 when the NHS started.

Malcolm wrote:

I support single payer. Always have. The HMO system was started by Nixon. It sucks.

As Kenneth Apple, a conservative economist, pointed out in the 60’s, markets only can function if people can make reasoned choices based on good information so they can make informed choices. Since this is not possible with regard to healthcare decisions, free market theory does not function in healthcare.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 24th, 2018 at 2:16 AM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Nemo said:

I don't think you understand how good cop, bad cop works. It means the cops collude to put on a show that makes you think one is good and the other is bad. But really they are tricking you and both work for the same boss. The good cop is only pretending to be your friend.

Malcolm wrote:

This is very lazy thinking.

Nemo said:

Keep trying that lesser evil strategy. That's not a con either

Malcolm wrote:

The greater evil is shrugging one's shoulders in apathy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 24th, 2018 at 2:04 AM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

Mantrik said:

The fact that you personally express ChNN's transmission as 'problematic', doubt its veracity, advise others to treat it with caution, not to see it as a matter of trust, etc etc, whilst weirdly claiming not to do so, is the problem here. If you have received that empowerment from that 'someone who comes on and makes a claim' it is a most unfortunate path to take..

michaelb said:

Honestly, David, i find your emotional over reaction way too much. Malcolm came on here and claimed the Tiger is Ati Muwer.

Malcolm wrote:

I did indeed, based on an oral communication from ChNN.

michaelb said:

But i am interested in where stories come from and how they emerge.

Malcolm wrote:

Perfectly understandable.

michaelb said:

we NONE OF US actually know why ChNN taught it. Sure, we can speculate, but we don't really know.

Malcolm wrote:

No, we do know why-- he is a great historian, he must have came to the conclusion that the version of the yum story is rather late (it is), and he found a earlier source where A ti Mu Wer manifested as the tiger and found that account more credible than the later tradition. In other words, he believed the version he found to be more credible than later sources, including what is found in the 'Od gsal gsang mdzod cycle.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 24th, 2018 at 12:24 AM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

michaelb said:

We would have to look at older texts that deal with Drolo in the various terma traditions, and there are quite a lot of those. One thing is for sure, though, the Drolo texts in the termas as Adzom Drukpa's and Dudjom Tersar include mention of the tigress as the consort rather than as a subjugated Bon deity.

Malcolm wrote:

The texts that refer to the tiger/tigress as a yum all seem to post-date Taksham's revelations. I can find no evidence of this in any bio of Padmasambhava, Yeshe Tosgyal, or any terma cycle that dates earlier than Taksham's bio of Tsogyal.

The collection of eight manifestations sadhana in the Northern Treasures states:

stag mo drud ma'i gdan la bzugs. The verb "'drud pa" means to carry, so probably pregnant, as in "carrying" cubs. No mention of being a yum.

The earliest independent sadhana I know of is in the Drigung Yangzab, which again has no mention of a tigress as a yum. Yangzab was revealed in the first half of the 16th century.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 23rd, 2018 at 4:50 AM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

Mantrik said:

Could ChNN have encountered Ati Muwer as a Zhang Zhung Tibetan being to which Bonpos then ascribed one set of characteristics, and Buddhists another? I'm also wondering if there were perhaps two totally different figures of that name in Zhang Zhung.

Malcolm wrote:

It basically boils down to the difference between the Buddhist, and largely western academic view, that the Bon of the time of the imperial period, 800 and before was a completely different religion from the Bon that emerged during the 10th and eleventh century under the influence of Buddhism. This is also Chogyal Namkhai Norbu's point view. From this perspective then, the Ati Mu wer that we see pictured in the Gekhod cycle is a later innovation, only nominally related to the A ti mu wer who was an important protective deity of Zhang Zhung.

That fact that Buddhists do not accept Bonpo accounts of history in general is always going to be a sore spot between Buddhism and Bon. As far as the majority of Buddhists are concerned, modern Bon is basically an imitation of Buddhism. However, in many Bonpo ritual texts, and even some kinds of ritual texts preserved by Buddhists, such as lha bsang offerings and so on, we can see evidence of the real pre-Buddhist religion of Tibet. Most of the Buddhist worldly protectors are originally pre-Buddhist local deities, btsan, rgyalpos, and so on.

Bonpos, naturally, will be unhappy with these opinions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 23rd, 2018 at 1:31 AM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

michaelb said:

Adzom Drukpa calls the tigress the consort.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, in his Drollo ter cycle, the medium length sadhana refers to the tigress as the sbyor yum, "the consort for union," who is a passionate (ngar ma) bengal tigress (rgya stag). In another place, a long praise, the tigress is referred to as the "sgrol yum," the consort for liberation" who is a brilliant red, wrathful tigress. In the Kha thang literature, the union consort is generally understood to be Tsogyal, the liberation consort is generally understood to be Tashi Kyidren. In yet another place, the mount is a red and black terrifying bengal tigress with iron claws.

Overall however, the liberation consort is generally identified as Ekajati, and as in the Bio of Tsogyal, Tsogyal is identified as Ekajati, while the tigress is Kyidron. However, as I specified before, this identification arrives in a terma of the later period, and it seems that it spread widely, since Taksham's bio of Tsogyal paints a far more comprehensive lifestory of Tsogyal than other, earlier bios which make no mention of this episode at Paro Taksang.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 22nd, 2018 at 10:59 PM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

michaelb said:

I half suspect it was through historical research and textual analysis. ChNN's knowledge of how Bon and Buddhism related to one another was second to none.

Malcolm wrote:

I think the most likely explanation is that the legend of Khyidron being the consort is quite late (I can find no reference to it earlier than the Taksham bio of Tsogyal -- it is not mentioned in any earlier bio of Tsogyal-- I looked), and that ChNN was referring to earlier historical sources he had available to him that are now obscure, since as you mention, it seems no one asked him for a source, including myself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 22nd, 2018 at 6:04 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community Naga Rite

Content:

Grigoris said:

Does the DC practice have a torma?

Malcolm wrote:

No. It is a kind of sang with offerings of milk, etc

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 22nd, 2018 at 5:06 AM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

So, we find this in the Taksham Namthar of Tsogyal:

Riding the upon the tigress, into which the girl, Khyidren had been transformed, the Guru in union with Yeshe Tsogyal remained absorbed in the samadhi of Vajrakila...
-- Lady of the Lotus Born, pg. 96

This is without doubt the source of the identifications with one of Guru Rinpoche's consorts. It's fairly late, however. Taksham Nuden Dorje was active in the latter half of the 17th century. I am failing to find any reference to this idea earlier than this one.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 22nd, 2018 at 1:40 AM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

michaelb said:

Most terma traditions say that the tigress is female and one of the transformed consorts of Guru Rinpoche (usually Tashi Chidren as she has a Bhutan connection...

Malcolm wrote:

This is not certain. I have read many Drollo cycles. Actually, I have never seen any Drollo cycle explicitly identify the nature of the tigress in either a sadhana or an empowerment. Not ruling it out, I have not read everything, but apart from popular references I have seen no actual text from a terma that actually states this identification of the tigress as a consort of Guru Rinpoche. So I am going to hold you to your own standard. Show us the text.

michaelb said:

but sometimes Yeshe Tsogyal or Shakyadevi). Visualising a fully enlightened dakini has, to my mind, a different set of meanings to visualising a subjugated Bon god.

Malcolm wrote:

1. In what other sadhana have you ever seen the main deity riding the consort? If you think about it, it really does not make any sense.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 21st, 2018 at 10:28 PM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:

Vasana said:

I forgot to tune in. Was it recorded via Zoom or elsewhere?

Malcolm wrote:

I am afraid it was not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 21st, 2018 at 9:19 PM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

Unknown said:

Tersar lamas don't teach that Drolu is "the essence of Vajrakilaya".

Malcolm wrote:

Obviously, there are Tersar Lamas that do, which I have already shown.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 21st, 2018 at 12:53 PM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Total success. ChNN always gave transmissions exactly as he got them. So if you found a contradiction in Adzom's writings, now

Is the time to put up or shut up. Why? The onus is on you because you raised the issue.

Everyone else trusts their teacher.

michaelb said:

as I really can't be arsed to find where he says the tigress is a realised consort like Yeshe Tsogyal or Tashi Chidren.)

Malcolm wrote:

I've read the whole thing— there is no mention of such an identification.

In any case, ChNN has far greater mastery of Tibetan History and literature than any other Tibetan of his generation. It goes without saying then that his expertise in these far outstrips yours or mine. So, if he asserts that Drolu's mount is a manifestation of Ati Muwer, he must have had adequate cause to say so.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 21st, 2018 at 6:33 AM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

According to the late SHENPHEN DAWA RINPOCHE, HH Dudjom Rinpoche's son by his second wife, Drollo and Putri Regpung both share Namchag Putri as the source for their further Dzogchen instructions. If you don't believe him, or you doubt my testimony about what he said to me personally, what else can I say? I asked him very specific and detailed questions about the subject in 2005.

michaelb said:

I have no doubt that people who mainly practice DT Drolo would go elsewhere for dzogchen teachings, as there are only limited dzogchen teachings in the Drolo cycle. I would even accept that they would go to Namchak Putri as there are more extensive dzogchen teachings there. But that does not entail that therefore Drolo is "the essence of Vajrakilaya", whatever that is supposed to mean

Malcolm wrote:

Have it your way dude. I provided citations and so on, but you clearly don't care.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 21st, 2018 at 5:25 AM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Nemo said:

I don't think you understand how good cop, bad cop works. It means the cops collude to put on a show that makes you think one is good and the other is bad. But really they are tricking you and both work for the same boss. The good cop is only pretending to be your friend.

Malcolm wrote:

This is very lazy thinking.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 21st, 2018 at 4:35 AM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

michaelb said:

I agree that the dzogchen teachings in the DT Drolo cycle are limited (to one short text - <http://www.lotsawahouse.org/tibetan-masters/dudjom-rinpoche/light-of-primordial-wisdom>) and that would entail looking elsewhere for more extensive Dzogchen teaching in the terma tradition, but there is no reason that can't be from Throma, for example, rather than Phurba.

Malcolm wrote:

According to the late SHENPHEN DAWA RINPOCHE, HH Dudjom Rinoche's son by his second wife, Drollo and Putri Regpung both share Namchag Putri as the source for their further Dzogchen instructions. If you don't believe him, or you doubt my testimony about what he said to me personally, what else can I say? I asked him very specific and detailed questions about the subject in 2005.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 21st, 2018 at 4:31 AM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

michaelb said:

I think we should treat the claim with care.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't. He is my guru. he was a tertön. YMMV.

He maintained the same point of view from 1992 when I first heard this, to the only time he ever taught Drollo, a few years ago.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 21st, 2018 at 4:30 AM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Palden Gyatso (17th century) writes in his History of Kilaya:

At the cave of the Glorious Tiger's Lair in Paro, he engaged in the practice of Vajrakīlaya and Vajra Wrath (rdo rje khro bo) rode the tiger and liberated all māras and samaya breakers with the magic power of piercing and conquering the assembly of obstructors with his vajrakīla.

This event occurred when Guru Rinpoche was practicing Vajrakīlaya at Paro Taktsang. Thus, this is what it means to say "Drollo is the essence of Vajrakīlaya." Drollo is the personification of the khrodavajra, the vajra of wrath, "Rdo rje gro bo lod." This manifestation arises directly out of Guru Rinpoche's realization of Vajrakīlaya.

michaelb said:

Yes, but that's not how I've heard it explained in Dudjom Tersar.

Malcolm wrote:

But this is how I have heard it explained in Dudjom Tersar by more than one guru. YMMV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 21st, 2018 at 1:39 AM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

michaelb said:

This is not something I've ever heard from any tersar lama, and I've specifically asked after Malcolm made that claim. Whereas it is true that Dudjom Tersar Drolu does not have extensive dzogchen teachings, and, if you want to practice dzogchen you might have to take teachings from Namchak Putri or wherever, all DT lamas I've ever asked reject the idea that Drolu is "considered something like the essence of Kilaya." Some dedicated DT Phurba and Drolu practitioners I've asked have no idea what Malcolm was actually going on about.

Malcolm wrote:

Palden Gyatso (17th century) writes in his History of Kilaya:

At the cave of the Glorious Tiger's Lair in Paro, he engaged in the practice of Vajrakīlaya and Vajra Wrath (rdo rje khro bo) rode the tiger and liberated all māras and samaya breakers with the magic power of piercing and conquering the assembly of obstructors with his vajrakīla.

This event occurred when Guru Rinpoche was practicing Vajrakīlaya at Paro Taktsang. Thus, this is what it means to say "Drolu is the essence of Vajrakīlaya." Drolu is the personification of the khrodavajra, the vajra of wrath, "Rdo rje gro bo lod." This manifestation arises directly out of Guru Rinpoche's realization of Vajrakīlaya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 20th, 2018 at 11:02 PM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

lelopa said:

In jatson Nyingpos terma the tigress is Yeshe Tsogyal...

Malcolm wrote:

There is no mention at all of a tigress in the Konchog Chidu Drolu sadhana or empowerment, much less the tigress being identified as Tsogyal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 20th, 2018 at 10:37 PM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

Aryjna said:

What is the problem with the tigress being the Bon deity? You are the one perceiving it as a humiliation, that does not mean it is humiliating in the first place. In other explanations it is his own consort. It is not a servant or something like that.

kalden yungdrung said:

Guess you miss the core of the discussion here.

Bon-sku Atimuwer is a Dharmakaya aspect first and second it is in Bön never known as a tigress.

Malcolm wrote:

Ati Mu wer, for Buddhists, it is a powerful worldly god, not a Dharmakāya. As pointed-out already, Pehar is not a scorpion, but appeared as a scorpion at Samye where he was tamed by Guru Rinpoche. Norbu Rinpoche consistently has pointed out that Ati Mu wer manifested as a tigress and that Guru Rinpoche subdued Ati Muwer. You don't have to believe it, but this the tradition I received from my teacher. Likewise, you received a tradition that Tonpa Shenrab lived 18,000 years ago— something which I don't believe at all. Since Bonpos have nothing to do with Guru Rinpoche anyway, I find it difficult to understand your interest in this thread. Guru Rinpoche defeated the Bonpos, as did Milarepa, and so on. If you take a western text critical view of these things, you will find that equally harmful to Cño and Bon, actually, more harmful to Bon-- because the western scholarly consensus is that modern Bon is just a form of Buddhism that arose in the 11th century, around the same time as the treasure tradition.

When it comes to these conflicts, it is better that people part ways.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 20th, 2018 at 5:57 AM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Anders said:

There is an active complex mental life happening in all humans that most people are largely unaware of

Malcolm wrote:

Nope.

Anders said:

Most of our deep-seated neuroses are rooted in childhood events,

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. But it is nice to blame our parents.

Anders said:

Talking therapy is a viable method for unlocking and working with these neuroses by exploring their origins and for making conscious much of the mental life we are typically unaware of.

Malcolm wrote:

Talk therapy is useless.

Anders said:

Free association works well in such sessions

Malcolm wrote:

Mere proliferation. And, it is not as free as you might think.

Anders said:

Dreams are, though encoded, an unfiltered information system about the actual state of affairs of our psyche.

Malcolm wrote:

Probably not.

Anders said:

Sure things like the oedipus complex, anal/oral phases etc have mostly fallen into disuse, but the gist of it, though not universal, is still highly prevalent. Psychodynamic psychotherapy is in many ways the modern descendant of Freudian psychoanalysis and is based on many of Freuds original tenets concerning the psyche and how to work with it.

Malcolm wrote:

It's all bollocks, just another way to separate fools from their money.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 20th, 2018 at 5:51 AM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

michaelb said:

Not sure I follow. So because Drolo is Vajra Khroda Lokottara this connects him with Vajrakilaya because of རྩེ་ཁྲོ་པ་ཞེས་པ་ཅོད་?

Could you give me a page reference for the Paro Taktsang bit?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Dudom Rinpoche's collected works, vol 15; ppg. 115-116, beginning on the bottom of 115.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 20th, 2018 at 5:47 AM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

michaelb said:

=

Regarding another characteristic that you mention, the tigress is most often described as pregnant rather than "in heat."

Malcolm wrote:

This is not correct, actually Kunzang Dechen Lingpa, a tertön and another direct disciple of Dudjom Rinpoche made it very clear that not only was the tigress in heat, it was in its first heat. Not only this, but in 1992, I separately heard this from Bakha Tulku.

michaelb said:

but it's weird if idiosyncratic ideas like Ati Muwer being the tigress is the only view presented here rather than it being explained as the uncommon story it is.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not weird at all. It just does not correspond to other traditions you heard. The first time I heard the Ati Muwer identification was in 1992, personally, not in a teaching, from ChNN when I showed him a small image of Drollo which he blessed. You never know with CHNN, it might be something he learned in his dreams. One never knows.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 20th, 2018 at 4:52 AM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

michaelb said:

all DT lamas I've ever asked reject the idea that Drollo is "considered something like the essence of Kilaya." Some dedicated DT Phurba and Drollo practitioners I've asked have no idea what Malcolm was actually going on about.

Malcolm wrote:

According to the DT Drollo chronicle, while at Paro Taktsang, Guru Rinpoche manifested the vajrakhrodasamadhi, the samadhi of vajra wrath, out of which he arose in the form of Dorje Drollo. If you examine any Kilaya sadhana, you will discover a line that says, "Vajra wrath severs hatred" or something of this nature. The source of this idea of mine is the late Yeshe Phunstog, an American who was a very close disciple of Dudjom Rinpoche, and Gyatrul Rinpoche's right hand man for many years. His main practice was Dudjom Drollo. He informed me of this on the occasion Ngakpa Yeshe Dorje's bestowal of the Dudjom Drollo in Boston, Ma., 1992, when asked, Ngakpa Rinpoche confirmed this. "Gro bo lod" is a corruption of krodhalokottāra, which is why the main sadhana of Dorje Drollo in the DT begins with "Namo mahāguru vajra krodhalokottāraye."

Now, then, I know what Shenphen Rinpoche told me, and I know what Ngakpa Rinpoche said, and I know what Yeshe Phuntsog said. I don't know, nor do I much care, what other Lamas say. You are free, of course, to follow anyone's opinion you find more credible than mine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 20th, 2018 at 1:59 AM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Queequeg said:

BRI is an amazing initiative.

Malcolm wrote:

Lhasa, 1959.

Nemo said:

Economics has changed a lot since 1944 and geopolitics since 1959.

"It doesn't matter whether a cat is black or white, as long as it catches mice." -- Deng Xiaoping

Malcolm wrote:

The character of the Chinese government hasn't changed one little bit.

Lhasa, 1959. That is what letting the Chinese build a road to your door gets you, as Asia will find out, much to its regret.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 20th, 2018 at 1:31 AM

Title: Re: Independent investigation confirms "physical, sexual, emotional abuse" by Sogyal Rinpoche

Content:

fckw said:

I have long been wondering to what degree tantric deities are or are not comparable with Jungian archetypes. Saying that they are "same" is obviously not correct. Saying they are completely different somehow does not seem right neither to me.

Malcolm wrote:

Deity yogas are, fundamentally speaking, dramatized narratives of awakening.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 20th, 2018 at 1:01 AM

Title: Re: Independent investigation confirms “physical, sexual, emotional abuse” by Sogyal Rinpoche

Content:

Anders said:

Yeah. Sure there are not as many Freudian practitioners of psychoanalysis as there used to be (though they are not as extinct as one might think either) but the fundamentals of psychoanalysis are as current as ever.

Malcolm wrote:

Psychoanalysis is bollocks. It is not scientific, it is based on the fantasies of one Austrian guy with a penchant for Greek mythology, cocaine, and cigars.

fckw said:

I love the spirit. I pointed out already above why it's quite irrelevant whether psychoanalysis is bullocks or not. It has been hugely influential on Western psychology for the better or worse. So, we have to deal with the heritage whether we like it or not.

Furthermore, it might not be so much bollocks as you are inclined to think. Or rather: the siddhas seem to have had certain types of insights more than 1000 years ago before psychoanalysis arose in Western culture. See <https://books.google.ch/books?id=2av2Sul8PpoC&pg=PR13&lpg=PR13&dq=religion+philosophy+yoga+a+selection+of+articles&source=bl&ots=sLM2ArVnbX&sig=91mtwfgl8yBjf7ptxArqUG3RFhk&hl=de&sa=X&ved=2ahUKEwiJmdWR85LeAhXLKsAKHYE2BDIQ6AEwB3oECAIQAQ#v=onepage&q=oedipus&f=false>.

Malcolm wrote:

It's an interesting imagery, but it has nothing to do with the story of Oedipus— as you recall, Oedipus is unaware of his own identity.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 20th, 2018 at 12:45 AM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Queequeg said:
BRI is an amazing initiative.

Malcolm wrote:
Lhasa, 1959.

Queequeg said:
Its not the road that's bad... its the dudes who come down that road... which brings me back to - I don't think we want China dominating international affairs. Give it time, that road will also bring the world into China... that's another effect.

Malcolm wrote:
Lhasa, 1959. Dream on.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, October 20th, 2018 at 12:15 AM
Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators
Content:

Queequeg said:
BRI is an amazing initiative.

Malcolm wrote:
Lhasa, 1959.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, October 20th, 2018 at 12:13 AM
Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
I frankly see no compelling arguments that negate Hayek's basic thesis here, despite whatever faults his other work may bear.

kirtu said:
re: " The Road to Serfdom" - It's dated (it's a complete reaction to the rise of fascism in the 20 and 30's) and both Hayek's assumptions and conclusions are false. That should be sufficient reason to reject Hayek.

Then we have actual data points that show that post-WW2 social democracy (which of course Hayek would have been skeptical of) doesn't restrict freedom and guarantees (or virtually guarantees) the social good and maximizes individual freedom (of course most Americans and all European Liberals would deny this but they share the same cultic thinking).

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

These economies you mention are not centrally planned. I still have yet to find anyone who can raise compelling arguments against Hayek's basic thesis in Road to Serfdom. Basically, what you are calling "social democracies" are, in the parlance of modern economists, termed "Coordinated Market Economies" as opposed to the US, Britain, Canada, and Australia, which are termed "Liberal Market Economies."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 19th, 2018 at 11:33 PM

Title: Re: Psychoanalysis

Content:

Anders said:

Yeah. Sure there are not as many Freudian practitioners of psychoanalysis as there used to be (though they are not as extinct as one might think either) but the fundamentals of psychoanalysis are as current as ever.

Malcolm wrote:

Psychoanalysis is bollocks. It is not scientific, it is based on the fantasies of one Austrian guy with a penchant for Greek mythology, cocaine, and cigars.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 19th, 2018 at 11:29 PM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Queequeg said:

I'm not particularly down on the ideals of full socialist economies...

Malcolm wrote:

I am. Give "Road to Serfdom" a good read. See if you can poke holes in Hayek's arguments. I don't think you can.

Nemo said:

So you haven't read enough Hayek to know he was for free public healthcare, a basic income and radical free education where knowledge was completely accessible for everyone.

Malcolm wrote:

Awfully presumptuous of you. That said, a person may be mistaken in one area of their thinking without being totally mistaken in all areas of their thinking. Take yourself for example.

Nemo said:

But most of his economic theories turned out to be a bust. China and the business models of Walmart and Amazon refute them completely.

Malcolm wrote:

Umm, no. Amazon and Walmart are monopolies that need to be broken up, just as Standard Oil was broken up. Hayek, in his book, speaks of the dangers of permitting monopolies to form.

Nemo said:

As does all of Europe, Canada, Australia NZ, etc not turning into totalitarian states because they have government planning.

Malcolm wrote:

I guess you don't really get the gist of Hayek's argument, so I will reproduce it here for your edification:

The dispute between the modern planners and their opponents is, therefore, not a dispute on whether we ought to choose intelligently between the various possible organizations of society; it is not a dispute on whether we ought to employ foresight and systematic thinking in planning our common affairs. It is a dispute about what is the best way of so doing. The question is whether for this purpose it is better that the holder of coercive power should confine himself in general to creating conditions under which the knowledge and initiative of individuals are given the best scope so that they can plan most successfully; or whether a rational utilization of our resources requires central direction and organization of all our activities according to some consciously constructed "blueprint."

Hayek, F. A.. The Road to Serfdom: Text and Documents--The Definitive Edition: Text and Documents--The Definitive Edition (The Collected Works of F. A. Hayek, Volume 2) (p. 85). University of Chicago Press. Kindle Edition.

Nemo said:

Road to Serfdom was reactionary to the Commies of his day trying to do top down state capitalism and calling it communism. Even Hayek would admit it was his worst and most ideological work. Keynes is the one who economics proved was right.

Malcolm wrote:

Keynes was quite fond of Road to Serfdom, in fact, and praised it when it was published, despite the fact that the two were often at loggerheads. Keynes even wrote to Hayek in 1944:

"morally and philosophically I find myself in agreement with virtually the whole of it; and not only in agreement with it, but in a deeply moved agreement."

Hayek, F. A.. The Road to Serfdom: Text and Documents--The Definitive Edition: Text and Documents--The Definitive Edition (The Collected Works of F. A. Hayek, Volume 2) (pp. 23-24). University of Chicago Press. Kindle Edition.

Road to Serfdom does little in the way of offering proposals and solutions. Indeed, one of the main criticisms of the book is that it is primarily focused on right and left-wing collectivism in general.

With respect to things like universal health care, free education, and so on -- these things are not within the purview of what Hayek is defining as "central planning" or "collectivism."

So again, for those who are willing to be seduced by the term "socialism," I think a review of Hayek's little book is important. Reading it does not necessarily entail subscribing to Van Mises' Austrian School of Economics and so on. But Road to Serfdom certainly points out the deficiencies of centralized planning of whole economies:

We must centrally direct economic activity if we want to make the distribution of income conform to current ideas of social justice. "Planning," therefore, is wanted by all those who demand that "production for use" be substituted for production for profit. But such planning is no less indispensable if the distribution of incomes is to be regulated in a way which to us appears to be the opposite of just. Whether we should wish that more of the good things of this world should go to some racial élite, the Nordic men, or the members of a party or an aristocracy, the methods which we shall have to employ are the same as those which could insure an equalitarian distribution.

Hayek, F. A.. The Road to Serfdom: Text and Documents--The Definitive Edition: Text and Documents--The Definitive Edition (The Collected Works of F. A. Hayek, Volume 2) (p. 84). University of Chicago Press. Kindle Edition.

This is the consequence of centralized planning of economies:

It is the price of democracy that the possibilities of conscious control are restricted to the fields where true agreement exists and that in some fields things must be left to chance. But in a society which for its functioning depends on central planning this control cannot be made dependent on a majority's being able to agree; it will often be necessary that the will of a small minority be imposed upon the people, because this minority will be the largest group able to agree among themselves on the question at issue. Democratic government has worked successfully where, and so long as, the functions of government were, by a widely accepted creed, restricted to fields where agreement among a majority could be achieved by free discussion; and it is the great merit of the liberal creed that it reduced the range of subjects on which agreement was necessary to one on which it was likely to exist in a society of free men. It is now often said that democracy will not tolerate "capitalism." If "capitalism" means here a competitive system based on free disposal over private property, it is far more important to realize that only within this system is democracy possible. When it becomes dominated by a collectivist creed, democracy will inevitably destroy itself.

Hayek, F. A.. The Road to Serfdom: Text and Documents--The Definitive Edition: Text and Documents--The Definitive Edition (The Collected Works of F. A. Hayek, Volume 2) (p. 109-110). University of Chicago Press. Kindle Edition.

I frankly see no compelling arguments that negate Hayek's basic thesis here, despite whatever faults his other work may bear.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 19th, 2018 at 10:34 AM

Title: Re: What is the point of vajra songs?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

A true vajra song is an expression of the sound of dharmata.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, October 19th, 2018 at 12:33 AM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Queequeg said:

This comes to another point - The US has to become confident in our way of doing things again, because that is what motivates us to help other countries develop in our mold. US influence in Latin America is a mess and the US has historically not done right in the region. There is, however, plenty of potential to do it right. That path is a whole discussion itself. One thing, to make that happen, Latin Americans have to stop this tendency to nationalize industries. Nothing turns off investment like the looming threat that everything can just be seized by fiat.

PeterC said:

You may have inadvertently chosen the wrong words there. The world absolutely does not need other countries developing in the mold of the US. You won't find a single other country out there that aspires to having a healthcare system, education system, justice system, infrastructure, domestic politics, racial politics, etc. that look like the US - and that was before Trump.

Queequeg said:

I guess my response is two fold.

The shortcomings are there. Your position seems to ignore all the things that are going right.

Start with the rule of law. There is no way we would have a country this big, this diverse, functioning this well if the rule of law was not as robust as it is. This not only includes enforcement of property and contract rights, the fair and peaceful resolution of disputes, peaceful and democratic transfers of power.

Malcolm wrote:

Works well for white people, not so much for others.

Queequeg said:

Not everyone has access to decent healthcare. That needs to be fixed. At the same time, when healthcare is good, its great. There's a reason why there is so much resistance to universal healthcare - because what we have is working well for many people and they myopically don't want to mess with it.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, "I've got mine, screw you if you don't have yours."

Queequeg said:

Our approach to higher education, putting the financial burden on individuals instead of viewing education as the cultivation and development of the most valuable resource we have, is clearly a mistake.

Malcolm wrote:

Thanks to the GOP.

Queequeg said:

And we definitely need to address the uneven quality of primary education across the country. This is a big issue with national implications but is fundamentally a state and local matter. The Dept. of Ed. can set the pace, which they did with Common Core, but implementation is fragmented.

Malcolm wrote:

GOP again.

Queequeg said:

Infrastructure - everyone knows it needs to be fixed, but nobody wants to bite the bullet (if infrastructure is something to emphasize, Cuomo is worth considering for president. The guy has initiated and completed some of the biggest public works projects in over a generation in this notoriously sclerotic State, and it would be amazing to see that approach brought to the national level). I am optimistic we are coming around to a robust effort soon. Someone is going to discover that public works programs, when done well, are politically, wildly popular. I suspect we will have another problem when it comes time to wind down the infrastructure programs, but that's another issue.

Malcolm wrote:

As long as the GOP is in power, this will never happen.

Queequeg said:

At least we're not shooting each other in the streets over politics. That's better than a lot of places.

Malcolm wrote:

Give it time.

Queequeg said:

I left race as the last issue. We have never fully dealt with the legacy of slavery. Also part of this, I would add, we have never dealt with the genocide that marked the founding of our society on this land. We still have the myths racial superiority and inferiority, about cowboys and indians. I don't think there is a political solution to this. This is a spiritual matter. I jokingly posted a link to an article about perceiving oneness as the cure for our divisions... I actually don't think there is any other way. This unresolved injury, for everyone involved - the descendants of the perpetrators and the descendants of the victims. IMO, there's a practical reason as part of our right livelihood we're not supposed to be butchers - the act of killing leaves deep marks on the one's doing the killing - comparable to the survivors of the carnage, not to mention the death process as Buddhists understand it. Race is implicated in poverty, inequality, injustice... almost all the failures of our society implicate race. We need to do something about this... I think there is a reason why the Civil Rights movement, led by religious leaders, was so successful and would not have been as successful if it was just a secular movement.

All that is to say, you have a point, and these are not things we would want anyone to emulate. But we also have a lot of good things going on which are really really good.

Right now, we have a moron as our spokesperson who doesn't get what we do. His whole political strategy is to get people feeling bad about how things are. "Carnage" he says. That kind of talk from the Bully Pulpit is not constructive. That just exacerbates pessimism and fear and is not conducive to cooperatively trying to fix our problems. By the same token, the pessimism from the left is also unproductive past a point.

Malcolm wrote:

The GOP invented this fantasy that we are in a post-racial era, then when that fantasy failed them, they coopted far-right white identity politics.

Queequeg said:

I'm not particularly down on the ideals of full socialist economies...

Malcolm wrote:

I am. Give "Road to Serfdom" a good read. See if you can poke holes in Hayek's arguments. I don't think you can.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 18th, 2018 at 11:24 PM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Basically, no one has any f*&^ing idea of what is going on or what to do about it -- and frankly, no one ever has.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 18th, 2018 at 9:49 PM

Title: Re: Guru Rinpoche As...

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

Then please explain the meaning of Dorje Drollo, who is sitting on a tiger.

Agree there are a lot of interpretations and some are valid and some not.

Seems to be that this emanation of Guru Rinpoche is one of the most unclear guises of him.

Malcolm wrote:

Drollo is a variant of Guru Dragpo, this evident from the raised vajra and the scorpions emanating from his left index finger.

The tiger is the Bon deity Ati Muwer.

gro bo lod is a corruption of khro dalokottara.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 18th, 2018 at 12:52 AM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Nemo said:

In Canada when I was younger our immigration was a policy of tap on/tap off. Every January our department of labour would do a labour market study and then inform parliament to tailor immigration to current economic conditions. If there was a skills shortage that area could be opened up. If students could not find summer jobs it could be tightened. If employers were exploiting skilled immigrants the tap was turned off. So the immigrants from that time found employment in their area of expertise and became incredibly successful. Employers could not trap PhD's in jobs driving cabs and making fast food. Students and the lower class would get training and could find work easily instead of competing with doctoral degree foreigners. When I was 16 during the last tap off period I could find a job in 3 hours. Tap on all the time is neoliberalism and only benefits the rich. Tap off is perhaps unrealistic with our aging populations without massive automation and wealth redistribution. To think it is either/or permanently is a level of oversimplification that does more harm than good.

Queequeg said:

Holy moly. That just makes too much sense.

Scaling it up for the US might require that those reports be bi-annual, but that sounds great.

Does Canada not do it that way anymore?

Nemo said:

When Brian Mulroney/Ronald Reagan introduced free trade he started a tap on all the time policy. Now student jobs are a fairy tale and I get my coffee from PhDs. My housekeeper is a lawyer.

Malcolm wrote:

Illegal immigrants are not competing for professional positions in the US. Q has no fear of losing his job to a migrant apple picker in Upstate NY.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 18th, 2018 at 12:50 AM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Queequeg said:

Open borders are simply not an option.

Malcolm wrote:

Wow, Trump really did win. Sad!

Nemo said:

Your opinion is very American and indicative of your unsophisticated political options. In Canada when I was younger our immigration was a policy of tap on/tap off. Every January our department of labour would do a labour market study and then inform parliament to tailor immigration to current economic conditions. If there was a skills shortage that area could be opened up. If students could not find summer jobs it could be tightened. If employers were exploiting skilled immigrants the tap was turned off. So the immigrants from that time found employment in their area of expertise and became incredibly successful. Employers could not trap PhD's in jobs driving cabs and making fast food. Students and the lower class would get training and could find work easily instead of competing with doctoral degree foreigners. When I was 16 during the last tap off period I could find a job in 3 hours. Tap on all the time is neoliberalism and only benefits the rich. Tap off is perhaps unrealistic with our aging populations without massive automation and wealth redistribution. To think it is either/or permanently is a level of oversimplification that does more harm than good.

Malcolm wrote:

Reality check time: Fortress America is just not an option. People will continue to stream north, depending on the conditions in their country, until such time everyone in NA has a comfortable middle class life with proper benefits, educational opportunities, and so on. Anything short of this is merely shortsighted. Canada is buffered by the US, and your southern border is not fortified, nor is our northern border. In any case, the immigration "problem" in the US is not from planes and boats, it is comes these days from disenfranchised people fleeing state and nonstate violence in Central America. NAFTA is working for Mexico, which is why illegal immigration from Mexico fell off a cliff.

Not only this, we are a nation of 350+ million, Canada has one tenth of the population of the US.

Right now, because of Trump's policies, crops are rotting in fields in Bakersfield, CA. because they cannot find farmworkers.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 17th, 2018 at 10:59 PM

Title: Re: Why did you choose vajrayana buddhism?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Karma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 17th, 2018 at 10:58 PM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

PeterC said:

I have no idea why, though, someone like Bezos or Dwayne Johnson would want to be president. It doesn't pay, the job doesn't bring that much power, and it makes your life hell unless you are a chronic amoral narcissist.

For the same reason Bloomberg ran for mayor - civic duty.

How about Mattis? In a debate with Trump he'd be able to voice some of the thoughts that flashed across his face when they had that public cabinet meeting and all those secretaries were groveling and genuflecting toward Trump. LOL

Really there's no shortage of good candidates. However when you exclude those who wouldn't want the job, and those who wouldn't be acceptable to the democrat caucus, you end up with people like Warren who will only lose.

Queequeg said:

Or Booker, or Harris, or Gillenbrand. Ugh.

I'd vote for Cuomo. I like the way he uses his brass knuckles. Debate with Trump would be a Queens grudge match, though, that would only play to Trump's game. I think the debate would have to be with a grown up who means business... or a Jewish grand father who can cause a bout of shame with stern look... Bernie

Tulsi Gabbert... though she's too young and the Hare Krishna background will bite her.

Malcolm wrote:

I'd vote for anyone who can get this mother*&^%#$ out of the Whitehouse.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 17th, 2018 at 10:54 PM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Queequeg said:

Open borders are simply not an option.

Malcolm wrote:

Wow, Trump really did win. Sad!

Queequeg said:

Its a mistake to give Republicans all the ground on fixing immigration. "No" is not a workable policy. Immigration has been a problem needing fixing for over 2 decades. The issue has been forced. Let's deal with it.

Or are you actually suggesting that "Abolish ICE" is a feasible policy?

Malcolm wrote:

Let's just deal with reality for a change and understand that North America is one economic block. United, it would very, very powerful. No chance China would outcompete the United States of North America.

The present immigration issue is non-issue.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 17th, 2018 at 10:02 PM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Actually if you're going by counties Trump won approximately 2,600 counties to Clinton's 500 with 304 electoral votes to her 227, but losing the popular vote by almost 3 million. Many are now saying that we need to abolish the electoral college and go by the popular vote. The problem with this is that California, New York, and Texas would decide all future election...the rest of the country may as well not even vote at all. This is why the electoral college was established in the first place to give each state a voice. Up until this point (not including Bush/Gore) the electoral college has served the US well. And no...I did NOT vote for Trump, I voted for Bernie...but people need to face up to the facts and if they don't like things the way they are come up with a better platform than "Trump is (fill in the blank) evil, racist, misogynistic, homophobic etc etc. as well as come up with a better candidate than Hillary.

Malcolm wrote:

All the electoral college does is disenfranchise millions of voters, acting as a force multiplier for voters in small states like Wyoming. And frankly, having California and NY determine all future elections would not be a bad thing at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 17th, 2018 at 9:20 PM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Queequeg said:

Open borders are simply not an option.

Malcolm wrote:

Wow, Trump really did win. Sad!

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 14th, 2018 at 2:47 AM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Queequeg said:

redoing NAFTA and resetting trade with China and Europe is the right move.

Malcolm wrote:

This is an error, IMO.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, October 14th, 2018 at 2:46 AM

Title: Re: Democrats are compulsive self mutilators

Content:

Queequeg said:

<https://www.nytimes.com/2018/10/12/opinion/liberals-trump-midterms-2020-election.html>

Bernie laid out the map. Just cut to the basics that affect all of us and hammer, hammer, hammer: medicare for all, affordable college, infrastructure paid for with taxes on the rich, fix immigration (stop with the abolish ICE crap), and adopt what's working with the economy - yeah, redoing NAFTA and resetting trade with China and Europe is the right move.

Cut the histrionics that play for spectacle and cheap thrills of the choir.

Malcolm wrote:

Bret Stephens is just the NYT's pet "conservative" op ed guy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 13th, 2018 at 6:44 AM

Title: Re: Zen and the Art of Political Correctness

Content:

narhwal90 said:

There is no need to make these things a basis for entertainment. Dogen did not attempt to make his instruction wrt cleanliness and sanitation in the zendo humorous. From reading the various followups I get the hint that Mr Brown has a history of at least occasional awkward/unfortunate/inappropriate comments. If he cannot learn to control his speech in his capacity of Chief Priest after (apparently) a number of events then maybe it is time for him to go learn to do so.

Queequeg said:

Well, that's the question. What is and is not appropriate in the context of teaching. No Jokes? Or just not certain kinds of jokes?

SFZC can do whatever they want. They should just say what they mean and cut this hemming and hawing. The way they handled this, though, was a clusterf*ck from the start. Everything went wrong - the complaint that prompted all this was factually wrong but they went full bore on it without any effort to investigate it until a broader meeting of abbots said due diligence was necessary before they axed the guy. Then, they were on unsteady footing because now they were committed to some course of action and unwilling to reset. By the time they got the facts and realized the complaint was not factually correct, too much crap had transpired.

Brown is not innocent here. He did tell some dumb, off color jokes that were throwaways. He seemed embarrassed by the subjects and tried to deflect with humor. I can see someone who is really sensitive getting upset... He contributed to the escalation when he went public, making sure for this to turn into an embarrassment for SFZC.

Malcolm wrote:

Some people were just waiting to be offended.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, October 11th, 2018 at 8:57 PM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<http://tsegyalgar.org/localcenters/tsegyalgareast/tsegyalgareastcale/book-signing-and-talk-with-malcolm-smith/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 10th, 2018 at 11:02 PM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:

jnanasutra said:

Footnote 580 in chapter 40 (The Praise) says that, "The innumerable sentient beings of the six realms of samsara are innate seeds within one's heart center."

Hmm, that is very interesting. I would like to understand this better. Is this literal or figurative or something else all together?

Malcolm wrote:

It refers to the bijas in consciousness that generate the appearances of the six realms.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 10th, 2018 at 4:47 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Mantrik said:

Since questioning SS Publications's wisdom is so heinous I'll leave it to those who clearly know much more about such things:

Malcolm wrote:

The request for silence refers only to posting memorials and so on of CHNN's passing. It has nothing to do with the normal day to day business of the gars. They are still running programs, hosting SMS teachers, and so on.

We don't all just stop still because our teacher has left this mortal coil.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 8th, 2018 at 7:55 PM

Title: Re: Mara experiences, temptation, possession.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Maras, in classical Dharma, are of four kinds: Mara of afflictions, skandhas, death, and the Devaputra Mara.

The last is equivalent to Kamadeva, the highest deva in the desire realm.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 8th, 2018 at 4:05 PM

Title: Re: Purifying disdain and negative thoughts towards spiritual teachers

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Completion stage practice is the best purification.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, October 6th, 2018 at 9:58 PM

Title: Re: Can a Stream Enterer believe in silly things?

Content:

Sherab said:

I was taught that according to the Buddha, the most difficult obstacle to overcome is clinging to a view. This has made a deep impression on me as it appears to be something unique to Buddhism. So when Malcolm made this comment:.... there are a lot of renowned Buddhist savants in history who have put forward some pretty bad arguments -- like Sapan's argument that ants lack eyes. Just embarrassing. <https://dharma.wheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=53&t=29203&start=40#p461254> it caught my eye.

Then I saw this video <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=IWY1FBArO7c...> and I wondered, can a stream enterer, one who is on the path of seeing, or someone beyond the path of seeing but still on the path, still believe in silly ideas. Going by Malcolm's comment, it would seem the answer is yes. Surprising? Or not?

WeiHan said:

Ants do have two compounded eyes but these eyes are only good for detecting acute movements and do not have good image resolution. Perhaps, Sapan is making a point that ants don't see well..

Malcolm wrote:

No, he is saying they do not have any eyes at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 3rd, 2018 at 3:45 AM

Title: Re: Innately present primordial wisdom

Content:

dharmafootsteps said:

I'm trying to figure out a Tibetan phrase that Khenpo Sonam of Lhundrup Chöling

Dharma Center translates as innately present primordial wisdom, or innately abiding wisdom.

It sounds like 'len shes rgyas pa'i yeshe' but that doesn't make any sense so can't be right. Can anyone figure out what the actual Tibetan would be? The context was 'what we need to understand to bring forth realisation' in a Dzogchen talk.

Malcolm wrote:

Probably lhan cig skyes ye shes, sahajajnana

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, October 3rd, 2018 at 3:44 AM

Title: Re: Innately present primordial wisdom

Content:

dharmafirststeps said:

I'm trying to figure out a Tibetan phrase that Khenpo Sonam of Lhündrup Chöling Dharma Center translates as innately present primordial wisdom, or innately abiding wisdom.

It sounds like 'len shes rgyas pa'i yeshe' but that doesn't make any sense so can't be right. Can anyone figure out what the actual Tibetan would be? The context was 'what we need to understand to bring forth realisation' in a Dzogchen talk.

Malcolm wrote:

Probably khan cig skyes ye shes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 2nd, 2018 at 4:48 AM

Title: Re: Does Consciousness Continue After Cessation?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Ignorance is a cause of defiled body and mind. Aspirations and merit are the cause of a Buddha's body and mind. Those causes are limitless therefore the series never ceases.

Astus said:

Arhats eliminated ignorance, but lack aspirations and merit, hence no cause for continuation.

Malcolm wrote:

They did not eliminate all traces and the knowledge obscuration, therefore they have not eliminated all causes. Ergo, they have causes which sustain their continuum's.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, October 2nd, 2018 at 1:49 AM

Title: Re: Does Consciousness Continue After Cessation?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

since these arhats will not arise from this samadhi of cessation without intervention, their samadhi is for all intents and purposes, permanent (but not eternal).

Astus said:

Proposing a permanent mind is the very opposite of the doctrine of impermanent composites. But if it is interrupted, it is not permanent, nor is it the type of arhat that does not switch to the bodhisattva path.

The nonabiding nirvana of a buddha means that the continuum of a buddha never ceases, all that ceases for them is the two obscurations.

What is the cause of body and mind if not ignorance?

Malcolm wrote:

Ignorance is a cause of defiled body and mind. Aspirations and merit are the cause of a Buddhas body and mind. Those causes are limitless therefore the series never ceases.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, October 1st, 2018 at 9:33 PM

Title: Re: Does Consciousness Continue After Cessation?

Content:

Astus said:

If arhats of a fixed nature - i.e. no change to the bodhisattva path - are in a mental body that is permanent, then that is actually an eternalist interpretation.

Malcolm wrote:

No, the nature of any given mind stream itself is partless moments, hence, not eternal; but since these arhats will not arise from this samadhi of cessation without intervention, their samadhi is for all intents and purposes, permanent (but not eternal).

The nonabiding nirvana of a buddha means that the continuum of a buddha never ceases, all that ceases for them is the two obscurations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 29th, 2018 at 2:11 AM

Title: Re: Latest report on Shambala abuse just released.

Content:

PeterC said:

From a lineage perspective the defining feature of the Shambhala organization was the terma system it propagated.

Malcolm wrote:

The Shambhala teachings were never meant to be mixed with Buddhist teachings at all, and they were never meant to be part of a guru transmitted system. I know this because I know people who "were there" when they were originally produced and when Shambhala training was first organized. I myself did the first three levels under the old system.

Indeed, there are older Shambhala students who will, eventually, continue the old system outside the present Shambhala International. The Shambhala teachings themselves are interesting.

PeterC said:

Malcolm - could you say more about how the older system differed from what they're doing now?

The few Trungpa students I know had a fairly conventional Kagyu training and parted company with it before the Shambhala phase - the only shambhalians I know then got involved post-OM.

Malcolm wrote:

It was literally supposed to be two separate traditions, related, but separate, As Simon said, the idea in Shambhala was an idea of warriorship as a personal path, and in addition to his termas, Trungpa drew principally from mundane paths such as the worldly Bon vehicles like Phyva Bon and also Confucianism, according to his own account. His idea was that Shambhala training was a place where anyone could go and learn the principles of meditation-based spiritual warriorship, predicated on the model of Buddhist kings, etc., without having to sign up, take refuge, and so on. In the old days, people could do the ten levels, without ever thinking that they ought to make the jump into Buddhism-- I met several such people back in the late 80's. Of course, at that time, if one made it through the ten levels, went to Warrior Assembly and so forth, one might be strongly encouraged to then proceed along the Buddhist path, but the pure Shambhalians I knew then were quite certain they were following a complete and independent path that was not Buddhism per se. Then Osel Mukpo started giving refuge names like Crystal Spear Warrior and so on, and within a few years, he merged the two systems, many people think to the detriment of the Shambhala teachings themselves.

You asked before about the Scorpion Seal teachings. Well, they are not Osel Mukpo's invention per se, but rather his commentary on the original Scorpion Seal terma of his father. But the people I spoke to about this recently really did not think they were worth much, content wise. Mukpo has no training.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 28th, 2018 at 10:24 PM

Title: Re: Latest report on Shambhala abuse just released.

Content:

PeterC said:

From a lineage perspective the defining feature of the Shambhala organization was the terma system it propagated.

Malcolm wrote:

The Shambhala teachings were never meant to be mixed with Buddhist teachings at all, and they were never meant to be part of a guru transmitted system. I know this because I know people who "were there" when they were originally produced and when Shambhala training was first organized. I myself did the first three levels under the old system.

Indeed, there are older Shambhala students who will, eventually, continue the old system outside the present Shambhala International. The Shambhala teachings themselves are interesting.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 28th, 2018 at 9:21 PM

Title: Re: Chogyal Namkhai Norbu Has Attained Parinirvana

Content:

Tongnyid Dorje said:

who is Khenpo Namdrol?

Crazywisdom said:

He is one of a few lamas under Khenpo Jigme Phuntsok who teaches around the world. He is based in Pharping, Nepal. He has given Empowerments and complete transmissions of Guhyagarbha and Chetsun Nyingthig and others in Alameda, CA at Orgyen Dorje Den.

Tongnyid Dorje said:

and has he recieved CNNR transmissions in full, so he can continue our Rinpoches work and lineage?

Malcolm wrote:

No, but that is not the point. The point is he is a highly qualified teacher of Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 28th, 2018 at 12:47 PM

Title: Re: Chogyal Namkhai Norbu Has Attained Parinirvana

Content:

Tenma said:

Who is left in this modern world now? One of the great masters has gone off. We have Lama Tsultrim and Garchen Rinpoche left of the modern world from what I know, and perhaps his successor. Is there anyone else out there left of this era?

Malcolm wrote:

Khenpo Namdrol.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 28th, 2018 at 12:31 PM

Title: Re: Chogyal Namkhai Norbu Update

Content:

SwampyFool said:

Does anyone know if we can still purify our samaya with Rinpoche while he is in this samadhi state?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 28th, 2018 at 5:51 AM

Title: Re: Politics and Toxicity

Content:

Queequeg said:

"part of". Not the whole. And not the whole of the bodhisattva path.

Malcolm wrote:

You did not qualify your statement, hence my observation. Had you said, "being solely concerned with purification of the self," I would not have said anything.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 28th, 2018 at 2:12 AM

Title: Re: Politics and Toxicity

Content:

Queequeg said:

This is where Nichiren takes us on a different path. This is precisely the fatalism rejected.

I understand your point but you give up on this precious human life too easily. Some will call this attachment. I'll say it's the fact that we still have opportunity to act until this body is ash.

Following up on this... looking inward and being concerned with purification of the self is Hinayana in outlook.

Malcolm wrote:

No it isn't. As Shantideva points out, a bodhisattva is obligated to protect themselves in order to help others. Purification is part of that self-protection.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 27th, 2018 at 11:22 AM

Title: Re: Gil Fronsda - The Bodhisattva and the Arhat: Walking Together Hand-in-Hand

Content:

kirtu said:

...there are actually an infinite variety of Buddhadharma paths

Malcolm wrote:

There are really only two: the paths based on sems (citta), and the path based on ye shes (jñāna).

kirtu said:

That's true but I am referring to the forms taken within the paths. Also within the discussion of the apparent dichotomy of the Bodhisattva and Arhat paths this statement is irrelevant since both ultimately result in the yeshe path.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

The paths based on citta are variegated, since the term citta is derived from citra, to be variegated. But the path based on ye shes is the sole vehicle. The point of view of the paths based in mind are predicated on cause and effect. The path based on ye shes is beyond cause and effect.

Of course, when one is functioning from the point of view of mind, and not ye shes, then all the usual warning labels apply.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 27th, 2018 at 6:52 AM

Title: Re: Gil Fronsdaal - The Bodhisattva and the Arhat: Walking Together Hand-in-Hand

Content:

Virgo said:

I find it interesting that he redefined the terms to suit his own lack of acceptance or lack of understanding of them, and then set up straw-man caricatures of the traditional definitions to make his own definitions seem more credible or viable. But I am not surprised. I knew he was going to do that the second I read the title.

Rely on the meaning, not on the words;

kirtu said:

...there are actually an infinite variety of Buddhadharma paths

Malcolm wrote:

There are really only two: the paths based on sems (citta), and the path based on ye shes (jñāna).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 27th, 2018 at 6:51 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

ChNN is no further away from you than the recognition of your own primordial state.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 26th, 2018 at 9:02 AM

Title: Re: Disassembling Dharma Books

Content:

Motova said:

Is there anything wrong with disassembling dharma books to scan them?

Thank you.

Malcolm wrote:

It is like killing sentient beings, if you can restore them whole and perfect, no problem. But if you can't....

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 26th, 2018 at 8:51 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Miroku said:

I had 2 chances to go to Merigar I guess I should have gone to it ... yet my life prevented me from going there ... I just cannot leave my boyfriend and go away for a week, Man, sometimes it would be easier to be single.

Malcolm wrote:

If it interferes with Dharma, lose the boyfriend. He is not worth it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 25th, 2018 at 6:40 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

javier.espinosa.t said:

GY of GD appears in the secondary practice booklet, but truly there isn't a better GY, it should be the main <3

Mantrik said:

Guruyoga is Guruyoga, surely. You are expressing an individual preference.....or less kindly, a limitation. Mine is Nangsi Silnön

Malcolm wrote:

There is without doubt a specific reason we have been asked to do guru yoga of white A. I am sure this instruction comes from Rinpoche personally.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 25th, 2018 at 1:38 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Finney said:

Rec'd via email:

I admit I don't know if this is good news (Rinpoche is recovering) or sad news (sent home to be comfortable during final hours).

Back to Guru Yoga...

Malcolm wrote:

We have all been asked by the family to maintain silence on social media platforms from this day forward apart from official news such as you have shared.

Finney said:

Malcolm, are you saying that I shouldn't have shared this email (info from Merigar)? Didn't think it was different from other official emails shared here, but if it was inappropriate I'll remove it asap.

Malcolm wrote:

Finney, if you read carefully, what I said was that apart from communications which you shared, we should maintain silence, according to a request that can be found in the mirror on Facebook— so no worries.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 25th, 2018 at 12:59 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Finney said:

Rec'd via email: Cari tutti, il Maestro è arrivato questo pomeriggio alle ore 17,30 alla sua residenza di Gadeling, Merigar.

Le pratiche continuano regolarmente come da programma.

Dear all,

our precious Master arrived at 5:30 pm. at his residence at Gadeling, Merigar.

We continue to perform the practices as programmed.

I admit I don't know if this is good news (Rinpoche is recovering) or sad news (sent home to be comfortable during final hours).

Back to Guru Yoga...

Malcolm wrote:

We have all been asked by the family to maintain silence on social media platforms from this day forward apart from official news such as you have shared.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 25th, 2018 at 12:12 AM

Title: Re: Only thirteen buddhafiels?

Content:

jhanapeacock said:

In mahayana there is an inmeasurable number of nirmanakaya and sambhogakaya buddhafiels, but in dzogchen there are only thirteen buddhafiels (zhing khrams) is this correct?

Malcolm wrote:

There are thirteen buddhafiels apart from this one where Dzogchen teachings may be found. This is the meaning. It is meant to point out how rare Dzogchen teachings are.

Out of the countless buddhafiels in the universe/s, there are only thirteen buddhafiels that possess these teachings, and ours is one of them.

Aryjna said:

Are the names of these buddhafiels and any more information available somewhere?

Malcolm wrote:

This information can be found in the sgra thal gyur.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 24th, 2018 at 3:59 AM

Title: Re: Only thirteen buddhafiels?

Content:

jhanapeacock said:

In mahayana there is an inmeasurable number of nirmanakaya and sambhogakaya buddhafiels, but in dzogchen there are only thirteen buddhafiels (zhing khrams) is this correct?

Malcolm wrote:

There are thirteen buddhafiels apart from this one where Dzogchen teachings may be found. This is the meaning. It is meant to point out how rare Dzogchen teachings are. Out of the countless buddhafiels in the universe/s, there are only thirteen buddhafiels that possess these teachings, and ours is one of them.

Dorje Shedrub said:

Is there significance for the specific number of 13?

DS

Malcolm wrote:

None of which I am aware.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 24th, 2018 at 3:27 AM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama, visiting the Netherlands, gets tough with abusers

Content:

Queequeg said:

Right now, young people are not showing interest in Buddhism.

Fortyeightvows said:

You really think that's true? I'm not sure about all of that.

Queequeg said:

It's documented that young people in developed countries show decreasing levels of interest in religion across the board. Anecdotally, it's commonly observed that Western sanghas are graying. Are there some where this is not so? We need to take note of these.

Malcolm wrote:

This is mainly the case in the US (West coast being a notable exception), England, etc. Young people in China and Europe are deeply enthusiastic for Dharma.

It is mainly in English-speaking countries where Dharma communities seem to be graying, and ironically, English is now the primary lingua franca of Buddhist studies.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 24th, 2018 at 3:03 AM

Title: Re: Only thirteen buddhafiels?

Content:

jhanapeacock said:

In mahayana there is an inmeasurable number of nirmanakaya and sambhogakaya buddhafiels, but in dzogchen there are only thirteen buddhafiels (zhing khrams) is this correct?

Malcolm wrote:

There are thirteen buddhafiels apart from this one where Dzogchen teachings may be found. This is the meaning. It is meant to point out how rare Dzogchen teachings are. Out of the countless buddhafiels in the universe/s, there are only thirteen buddhafiels that possess these teachings, and ours is one of them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 24th, 2018 at 2:52 AM

Title: Re: Jay Garfield and Guy Newland on Metaphors in Buddhism

Content:

Queequeg said:

Following metaphors can get you wet, too.

kirtu said:

What??? Porque?

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

Metaphors can be misleading, like misreading GPS machines.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 22nd, 2018 at 7:41 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 21st, 2018 at 5:50 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Aryjna said:

I mean that the individual meanings of the the two parts trul and khor do not seem to be able to lead to a meaning of 'posture'. Unless this is often not a factor in Tibetan.

Malcolm wrote:

The Sanskrit equivalent is yantra. Thus it is an inept translation.

Aryjna said:

Thanks, I am just asking out of interest about how this generally works in Tibetan, as I am looking into the language more lately.

Malcolm wrote:

A འཇུག་འཁོར་ is a machine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 21st, 2018 at 2:56 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Aryjna said:

Is there some reasoning in the meaning based on the two parts of the word in such cases, or is it mostly unrelated?

Malcolm wrote:

It is a bad translation.

Aryjna said:

I mean that the individual meanings of the the two parts trul and khor do not seem to be able to lead to a meaning of 'posture'. Unless this is often not a factor in Tibetan.

Malcolm wrote:

The Sanskrit equivalent is yantra. Thus it is an inept translation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 21st, 2018 at 1:46 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Aryjna said:

http://rywiki.tsadra.org/index.php/sprul_pa%27i_%27khor_lo Looks like it may mean navel center or something related in this case after all

Malcolm wrote:

It means machine, device, posture, etc.

Aryjna said:

Is there some reasoning in the meaning based on the two parts of the word in such cases, or is it mostly unrelated?

Malcolm wrote:

It is a bad translation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 21st, 2018 at 1:22 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Aryjna said:

I hadn't noticed that trulkhor means magical wheel. It sounds much cooler now.

Malcolm wrote:

It doesn't.

Aryjna said:

http://rywiki.tsadra.org/index.php/sprul_pa%27i_%27khor_lo Looks like it may mean navel center or something related in this case after all

Malcolm wrote:

It means machine, device, posture, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 20th, 2018 at 11:27 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

The Primal Rosary of Precious Stones:

A Long Life Prayer for His Eminence Chögyal Namkhai Norbu Rinpoché

ལྷ་སྐྱུ་བཅུ་མེ་ཆོས་རྒྱལ་ན་མ་མཁའ་ཉོན་ལུ་རིན་པོ་ཆེ་ལ་བརྟན་གསོལ་རིན་ཆེན་དང་པོའི་ཕྱིང་

Aryjna said:

I hadn't noticed that trulkhor means magical wheel. It sounds much cooler now.

Malcolm wrote:

It doesn't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 18th, 2018 at 12:45 PM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:

Ignorant_Fool said:

This looks amazing, and I would love to get it, but is it something a fledgling practitioner would be able to comprehend?

Malcolm wrote:

You will understand somethings and not others. But if you have Dzogchen transmission then you should have this book.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 16th, 2018 at 10:54 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

"Dear friends,

we would like to inform you that the health of the Master is in decline due to natural causes. We are not aware of the time left to him. The Master has a peaceful appearance and does not feel pain. - Namkhai family"

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 15th, 2018 at 11:55 PM

Title: Re: Dungse Rigzin Dorje Rinpoche

Content:

kirtu said:

A mutual friend told me that the issue was that DHS classified all the people (the monks and nuns) who are with him in Assam as potential terrorists. The issue being that DHS has simply decided to blanket classify people from Assam in this way.

If it were merely an issue of not being able to travel with another person then that could be remedied (although he might not want to do that since it would mean leaving his monastics in India). He could travel with a group of western students.

Unless you mean that the US is insisting that he literally has to travel completely by himself - which is not a travel restriction I have ever heard of.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

I am very familiar with the matter. When the Obama Admin came in, they placed heavy restrictions in religious workers visas, contra the Bush era policies which were surprisingly forgiving. Thus, they would not approve the Dungsey Rinpoche's chod group, and would issue no more than two visa. One person beside himself was not sufficient for the healing chod tour, and the legal fees were mounting into the thousands. Thus, they dropped the issue.

amanitamusc said:

What was up obama's ass? Just making nice with china?

I know he canceled meetings with HHDL.

I noticed i saw more of my overseas Lama's when bush was in and when obama came in the doors were closed.

Malcolm wrote:

Hillary.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 15th, 2018 at 10:49 PM

Title: Re: Dungse Rigzin Dorje Rinpoche

Content:

kirtu said:

Unfortunately he is currently forbidden from teaching in the United States (and has been for years) because of issues that DHS has with classifying people who live in Assam.

Hopefully he has been able to teach elsewhere in the past few years.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is because they won't let him travel with more than one other person.

kirtu said:

A mutual friend told me that the issue was that DHS classified all the people (the monks and nuns) who are with him in Assam as potential terrorists. The issue being that DHS has simply decided to blanket classify people from Assam in this way.

If it were merely an issue of not being able to travel with another person then that could be remedied (although he might not want to do that since it would mean leaving his monastics in India). He could travel with a group of western students.

Unless you mean that the US is insisting that he literally has to travel completely by himself - which is not a travel restriction I have ever heard of.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

I am very familiar with the matter. When the Obama Admin came in, they placed heavy restrictions in religious workers visas, contra the Bush era policies which were surprisingly forgiving. Thus, they would not approve the Dungsey Rinpoche's chod group, and would issue no more than two visa. One person beside himself was not sufficient for the healing chod tour, and the legal fees were mounting into the thousands. Thus, they dropped the issue.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 15th, 2018 at 10:44 PM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama says 'Europe belongs to Europeans'

Content:

Astus said:

The current issue of the 'migrants' looks very much like the same old racist and antisemitic fear mongering. It is unfortunate if the Dalai Lama has little understanding of what slogans like 'X-land belongs to X-people' means to the majority.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 15th, 2018 at 1:59 PM

Title: Re: Dungse Rigzin Dorje Rinpoche

Content:

kirtu said:

Unfortunately he is currently forbidden from teaching in the United States (and has been for years) because of issues that DHS has with classifying people who live in Assam.

Hopefully he has been able to teach elsewhere in the past few years.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is because they won't let him travel with more than one other person.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 15th, 2018 at 3:30 AM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama says 'Europe belongs to Europeans'

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This kind of essentialism results in holocausts.

cyril said:

You are assuming that because people think in a certain manner (or within certain conceptual frameworks) in our era that they did so 5000 years ago. Well they don't. I am not assuming anything. I gave you the example of Herodotus but you chose to trivialize it. Here is the quote in the context:

<http://perseus.uchicago.edu/perseus-cgi/citequery3.pl?dbname=GreekFeb2011&query=Hdt.%208.144.2&getid=1>

"...and next the kinship of all Greeks in blood and speech, and the shrines of gods and the sacrifices that we have in common, and the likeness of our way of life..."

This is a 400 BC Greek talking about Hellas and about Greeks as a whole. To me, it shows awareness of a Pan-Hellenic national identity despite the diversity within. To you, it looks like a possible hidden political agenda. Oh, well..

You are trying to convince me that there is a single European identity and your only evidence of this is that there are various national identities? I am giving you ample examples of how even the idea of a national identity is false. Where is your evidence for a unified European identity? NOWHERE

Likewise, there is kinship of all Europeans in the shared Greco-Roman foundation of their cultural heritage, Enlightenment values, Christian values, democracy, individual freedom and reason. There are also other things which, unfortunately, I cannot quite put my finger on; the fabric of the European identity is intricate and often very subtle. Nevertheless, they tie together the various European cultures together despite the obvious diversity and make the European identity being more than a social construct or the sum of the various national identities.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 15th, 2018 at 12:22 AM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama says 'Europe belongs to Europeans'

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It should be obvious that given we humans populate a tiny little planet floating in vast space, arguing that human beings can really be divided into nationalities is an incredibly pre-modern and regressive idea.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 14th, 2018 at 11:03 PM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama says 'Europe belongs to Europeans'

Content:

Grigoris said:

None of this answers the question as to why anybody should care what HHDL's view on European migration policy is.

Norwegian said:

His Holiness the Dalai Lama is a major international figure. That usually means whatever such a person says or does, is viewed with interest. He is a Nobel Laureate (the Nobel Peace Prize, which he received back in the days when that prize meant something).

Moreover he is a major Buddhist teacher, so certainly he has the attention from those who are interested in, sympathetic with, or actually are Buddhists (certainly those who are Indo-Tibetan Buddhists). He is a refugee himself, since 1959, and is considered a leader of his people, so he certainly has knowledge and experience of how it is to be a refugee. Then, from the point of view of Vajrayana itself, he certainly is the guru of many gurus (that we have), so that's one thing. Another is that he's considered to be an emanation of Avalokiteshvara himself.

I am sure there are many more factors as to why anybody are interested in his views on either this or that. And so yes, these things explain the why-question of yours above.

Malcolm wrote:

The reason why HHDL states this is obvious: he wants Tibet for Tibetans. Unfortunately, that ship has sailed. Otherwise everything that Grigoris points out is absolutely correct. Nationalism is the wrong way.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 14th, 2018 at 10:39 PM

Title: Re: Signs from the Dakinis?

Content:

Void said:

Until then, I prefer to rely on my superior intelligence and understanding (repeatedly scientifically proven IQ near 160) and on my extensive interdisciplinary studies (mostly dzogchen and mahamudra texts) and my personal practice efforts.

Malcolm wrote:

This is the reason no one takes you seriously. You do not have transmission. You do not have a guru. You have not made a relation with the dharmapālas. So no one is willing to talk to you about these recondite matters. In any case, forums like these are not very suitable for discussing such matters.

FYI, the body of light is an option, not a certainty, and as the Buddha pointed out in the Vajracchedika, and as Rongzom Pandita cites, if you think you can see a tathāgata by virtue of their signs, you are very mistaken.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 14th, 2018 at 10:30 PM

Title: Re: Longchenpa's refuge prayer

Content:

Spelare said:

Does anyone know the source text for the following refuge prayer attributed to Longchenpa? Did he compose it or was it received from an earlier source? I've transcribed it from a recording of Adriano Clemente, who was taught it by Namkhai Norbu Rinpoche (sorry for any transcription errors):

Longchen Rabjam said:

Namkhai nassu namkha khangwa yi

Lama yidam pawo khandro

Tso sangye chö dang pha bai gendün la

Da sum dro kun ku be kyab su kyi

Spelare said:

Also, does anyone have access to an English translation? I understand bits of it but not the whole thing. Thanks!

Malcolm wrote:

We migrating beings all go for refuge to the guru, deva, viras, ḍākinīs, and so on,

and to the Buddha, the Dharma, and the Noble Sangha, filling the sky in the abode of space

The official DC translation can be found in the Precious Vase.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 11th, 2018 at 10:51 PM

Title: Re: What Shamatha tradition best prepares one for Dzogchen?

Content:

dharmafirststeps said:

It sounds to me like ChNN is probably quite similar in this respect to TUR. Does anyone know if that's the case?

Aryjna said:

At first I thought ChNNR's approach may be a bit different because I didn't know what other teachers do, but the more I learn about other teachers, those who teach Dzogchen at least so Alan Wallace may differ because he comes primarily from a different background, the more it seems they all have the same approach, first the DI and then you practice for purification/accumulations and for clarifying doubts. It seems even the Kadampa masters, who are often mentioned as mainly sutra practitioners, did the same thing according to Dilgo Khyentse Rinpoche:

The Heart Treasure of the Enlightened Ones said:

According to the pith-instructions of the precious Kadampa teachers, you are first introduced to the nature of the mind, absolute bodhichitta, and you then cultivate compassion for all beings, relative bodhichitta.

Malcolm wrote:

Early Kadampas were all from Nyingma families...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 11th, 2018 at 10:45 PM

Title: Re: Are sun salutations a good substitute for Tibetan-style long prostrations?

Content:

MiphamFan said:

What about that yoga history book which said that sun salutations are actually relatively modern and adapted from some exercise drills by some Maharaja IIRC?

I guess the historical context isn't that important, but it's still a good, healthy movement?

Malcolm wrote:

IMO, it is a very good way to protect your back, knees and do prostrations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 10th, 2018 at 10:44 PM

Title: Re: The Three Yanas, Ringu Rinpoche

Content:

philji said:

This idea of checking out a teacher for 8 or 12 years is fine and dandy... but time is running out.. Do we really have the luxury of time...????

MiphamFan said:

If you meet the wrong teacher you could spend kalpas in vajra hell, so 12 years is little compared to that.

Of course this is just speaking in theory.

In practice, with the internet and social media it is harder for bad teachers to continue on without backlash, this is one good thing. You can crowdsource your 12 years.

Malcolm wrote:

Sapan points out that while this may be ideal, it is often not practical.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 10th, 2018 at 10:14 PM

Title: Re: Independent investigation confirms “physical, sexual, emotional abuse” by Sogyal Rinpoche

Content:

DGA said:

Put in more banal terms, would you argue that liberal democracy and fascism are equally enlightened? I would not, and for this reason, I would say that failures to try for enlightenment in society (we can debate that definition) also end in tears.

Malcolm wrote:

Liberal Democracy never aimed at creating an enlightened society at all. It aimed at creating a society that was based on the recognition of common rights of human beings. Fortunately, its premises allowed the notion of who was a human being to expand, and thus under Liberal Democracy, rights have been increasingly extended towards those whose rights were not recognized under its original formulation. But the creation of an enlightened society was never at its base. Fascism and Socialism, on the other hand, have pretensions towards transcendence and enlightenment.

Coëmgenu said:

We are talking about "corporations as people", right?

Malcolm wrote:

No, I had in mind the 13th amendment, the 14th amendment, etc., recognizing the rights of women to vote, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, September 10th, 2018 at 12:08 PM

Title: Re: Receiving both Buddhist & Bön Dzogchen teachings?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The main problem you will have is reconciling the mutually exclusive historical viewpoints of Bon and Buddhadharma. Otherwise, there is no conflict.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 9th, 2018 at 1:15 PM

Title: Re: Independent investigation confirms “physical, sexual, emotional abuse” by Sogyal Rinpoche

Content:

DGA said:

Put in more banal terms, would you argue that liberal democracy and fascism are equally enlightened? I would not, and for this reason, I would say that failures to try for enlightenment in society (we can debate that definition) also end in tears.

Malcolm wrote:

Liberal Democracy never aimed at creating an enlightened society at all. It aimed at creating a society that was based on the recognition of common rights of human beings. Fortunately, its premises allowed the notion of who was a human being to expand, and thus under Liberal Democracy, rights have been increasingly extended towards those whose rights were not recognized under its original formulation. But the creation of an enlightened society was never at its base. Fascism and Socialism, on the other hand, have pretensions towards transcendence and enlightenment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 9th, 2018 at 12:48 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpa International - Vajrayana Training

Content:

smcj said:

Sangye Khandro

Malcolm wrote:

Sangye Khandro

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 9th, 2018 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: Independent investigation confirms “physical, sexual, emotional abuse” by Sogyal Rinpoche

Content:

kirtu said:

So Changchub Dorje's commune ended in tears due to the inappropriate actions on their part or Changchub Dorje's inappropriate actions?

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

Changchub Dorje's village was not an attempt to create an enlightened society. It was just a small community gathered around a teacher, and no one knew he was a teacher. Everyone thought he was a doctor. His community still exists, it is called Khampa Gar mow.

kirtu said:

Everyone (or every adult) in his commune knew he was a teacher. It was a de facto attempt to create an enlightened society because Changchub Dorje was trying to help everyone attain enlightenment (acknowledging that the language presents a barrier here). I had thought that basically everyone there took rainbow body? I was not aware that in some way it still continues (certainly not as a Dzogchen community though).

At any rate I presented a valid counterexample even though you will refuse to put the label on it so I think any reasonable person will have grounds to conclude that "attempts to create enlightened societies" do not always end in tears. Just most of the time. Because the teachers are not enlightened in some form and/or because the students are not capable of following through.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:
we will agree to disagree.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 8th, 2018 at 10:38 PM

Title: Re: Independent investigation confirms “physical, sexual, emotional abuse” by Sogyal Rinpoche

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Attempts to create enlightened societies always end in tears.

kirtu said:

So Changchub Dorje's commune ended in tears due to the inappropriate actions on their part or Changchub Dorje's inappropriate actions?

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

Changchub Dorje's village was not an attempt to create an enlightened society. It was just a small community gathered around a teacher, and no one knew he was a teacher. Everyone thought he was a doctor. His community still exists, it is called Khampa Gar mow.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 8th, 2018 at 10:36 PM

Title: Re: Independent investigation confirms “physical, sexual, emotional abuse” by Sogyal Rinpoche

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The behavior of Harvey Weinstein, etc., and Osel Mukpo, Sogyal, Trungpa, Joshu Sasaki, Eido Shimano, etc., was aided and abetted at all levels by people who depended upon them for power, money, or status, or all three.

Grigoris said:

You forgot about Patriarchy. That had a role to play as well.

Malcolm wrote:

No, I didn't forget. Adding it was too pat, too easy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 8th, 2018 at 2:12 PM

Title: Re: Neo nazi's march in DC

Content:

Queequeg said:

The Tea Party movement showed what can be done...

Malcolm wrote:

with massive funding from the Kochs, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 8th, 2018 at 2:11 PM

Title: Re: Ratna Lingpa Vajrakilaya - Essence of Concerned Activity

Content:

TrimePema said:

"Flesh colored Dogyal in the thigh"

Can somebody please help me out on this one? Is this THE Dogyal? What should we do about that...

Has anybody asked Garchen Rinpoche or any other lamas about this? Been looking for an answer to this since I first did the practice - your input would be a huge help.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not Dol rgyal, it is 'Dod rgyal, aka Takkiraja.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 8th, 2018 at 1:39 PM

Title: Re: Independent investigation confirms "physical, sexual, emotional abuse" by Sogyal Rinpoche

Content:

gb9810 said:

I don't remember hearing anyone claiming Harvey Weinstein was displaying crazy wisdom.. his victims may have been silenced/stayed silent for various reasons but I doubt any of them felt his exploitation was a display of kindness for their benefit. That to me differentiates cult vs. not. (Of course cultish behavior is not mutually exclusive with the presence of abuse of power of various forms..)

Malcolm wrote:

"Crazy wisdom" is exclusive to Tibetan Buddhism. It was a term coined by Trungpa. It is pretty modern.

The idea that one must tolerate unusual behavior from one's guru is well established. What is not so well established is that converts tend to bring a certain fanaticism with them into the new faith to which they have converted. Is this idealism exploited? Yes, but this is little different than new recruits in an army who suffer all kinds of abuse at the hands of the powers that be to turn them into malleable foot soldiers. So, I still argue that power and its abuse is the real issue here, and claims of "Cultishness" are a distracting red herring.

It is not surprising at all that Trungpa created an army, the Vajra Guard, and that it remains the chief expression of Shambhala International's will to power. Attempts to create enlightened societies always end in tears.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 8th, 2018 at 12:45 PM

Title: Re: Are sun salutations a good substitute for Tibetan-style long prostrations?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes

MiphamFan said:

Malcolm said this once long ago.

Malcolm, do you still agree with this?

I have on and off knee and calf issues and the "long" prostrations that Tibetans do make me uncomfortable. In particular I find the "sliding out" from a kneeling position rather problematic. The sun salutation way is to jump backwards, into a pushup position, similar to burpees, which seems much healthier to me.

I never had a teacher who was really strict about prostrations of course, in fact, my teachers (besides ChNN of course) gave alternatives like even sitting prostrations if I do ngondro, although they said I could try doing some prostrations and see how it goes.

I am thinking of starting a complete ngondro starting next year, once I make a career change and complete the current practice accumulations I am doing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 8th, 2018 at 10:00 AM

Title: Re: Independent investigation confirms "physical, sexual, emotional abuse" by

Sogyal Rinpoche

Content:

Queequeg said:

What is sad about all this to me is that these people must have really wanted to connect with Dharma to put up with this crap.

Their sincere efforts are not lost, I hope. The prognosis for the charlatans is dire. In the least they should be pariahs for the rest of their lives. The good old Brahma Penalty - ostracism.

Malcolm wrote:

There has always been room for Mahāyāna teachers to engage in conduct that seems to not conform to lower Buddhist ethics. Of course, some people use this laxity as an excuse to indulge their afflictions. This is not the intention of the situational ethics of Mahāyāna.

We should not differentiate this kind of behavior engaged in by religious leaders from the same behavior committed by people in secular settings. When we find the same kind of behavior happening in corporate settings, we don't label such behavior "cult behavior." We call it what it is: abuse of power.

The behavior of Harvey Weinstein, etc., and Osel Mukpo, Sogyal, Trungpa, Joshu Sasaki, Eido Shimano, etc., was aided and abetted at all levels by people who depended upon them for power, money, or status, or all three.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 8th, 2018 at 8:54 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa International - Vajrayana Training

Content:

Ogaf said:

And this was the last time you all discussed this:

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=40&t=16819&hilit=Pema+Khandro%5Burl%5D>][/url]

O

DGA said:

I'm confident her group is having more fun than we are at this very moment. I hope they are.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, no doubt. Of course, being a serious teacher isn't any fun at all. So I hope she is not having too much fun.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 8th, 2018 at 7:59 AM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:

SangyeYeshe said:

Nice work, Malcolm! Got the two volume set today. Looks great!

--> Nova

Malcolm wrote:

Thanks Nova!

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 8th, 2018 at 6:02 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa International - Vajrayana Training

Content:

florin said:

Indeed in order to have realisation one needs to rely on a lineage. Whether that realisation will manifest in this life or sometime in future lives is unknown at this point. But if it manifests in the future lives it may manifest outside of a lineage.

Malcolm wrote:

And such a person is called a pratyekabuddha, and such persons do not teach, since they manifest in a time and a place where there is no extant lineage of Buddhadharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 8th, 2018 at 2:09 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa International - Vajrayana Training

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

These qualifiers do not prove anything.

Grigoris said:

In which case there is no reason why I should listen or trust you since your qualifications mean nothing at all?

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, unless you have ascertained what I say to be reliable through your own direct perception, there is no reason to take what I say merely because I have a title.

Grigoris said:

They pick the teachers with whom they have karma, qualifications actually have very little to do with it.

I disagree. My habitual tendencies makes me seek out teachers with credentials and qualifications. So their qualifications are a conditioning factor.

Malcolm wrote:

You have accepted the testimony of a bunch of people of whom you have no direct knowledge of their actual inner qualities. You decided to trust someone's testimony based on hearsay, and nothing more. Now then, it may be the case you have decided that your present teacher has the correct qualifications to be your teacher, but that is your decision and is based solely on your own authority.

Grigoris said:

Nothing we say about this woman has any relevance to her or her students.

That goes without saying, I have seen people drawn to all sorts of quackery. No, I am not saying she is a quack, just saying...

Malcolm wrote:

Since you like authority, ask your teacher.

Grigoris said:

She found a Tibetan lama to back her, learned Tibetan, gained academic credentials, etc.

Generally speaking, that is exactly how one goes about becoming a lama. If she has done this (which apparently she has) then she IS a genuine teacher.

Malcolm wrote:

She is a genuine teacher for some people, a fraud for others, or so they say.

Grigoris said:

...and learning...

I think that is what we have been talking about the whole time. A teachers credentials and qualifications are based on their learning.

Malcolm wrote:

It seems that in some circles endorsements are more important than personal qualities.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 8th, 2018 at 12:38 AM

Title: Re: Independent investigation confirms "physical, sexual, emotional abuse" by Sogyal Rinpoche

Content:

Sherab Rigdrol said:

Wow... I'm on the physical abuse part of the report. What a piece of shit....

Malcolm wrote:

Makes one view backscratchers in a different light.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 8th, 2018 at 12:34 AM

Title: Re: Is lineage enough?

Content:

Grigoris said:

A Mahasiddha, for example, is not bound by conventional models of moral discipline.

Malcolm wrote:

I doubt the courts will agree.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 8th, 2018 at 12:25 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa International - Vajrayana Training

Content:

Sonam Wangchug said:

However if a student swears by their benefit, what can I say?

Malcolm wrote:

In the end, it all comes down to what oneself accepts and rejects.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 8th, 2018 at 12:21 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa International - Vajrayana Training

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

And yet, even so, there are still lamas who think ChNN is totally wrong and not qualified.

Grigoris said:

And there are people that think the Pope is infallible. So what?

The point is that he was recognised by the head of a lineage and received traditional training from members of recognised lineages.

Malcolm wrote:

ChNN was actually first recognized by his uncle as the reincarnation of Adzom Drukpa. He was also recognized as the reincarnation of a Sakya Khenpo. The 16th Karmapa recognition came much later. And, as we know, his appointment by the 16th Karmapa to teach in Italy did not render ChNN immune from intense criticism within the Tibetan ecclesiastical hierarchy, criticism which continues to this day.

Grigoris said:

The point is that YOU chose your teachers on the basis of these types of qualifiers, yet here it seems you are telling people that these qualifiers are not actually valid. You are tacitly advocating that people ignore valid qualifiers and follow whoever they feel is fit.

Malcolm wrote:

These qualifiers do not prove anything. I know people recognized by this or that lineage head, trained in the great monasteries, who are absolute frauds and scoundrels in every respect.

But that is not my point. For example, no one recognized Ngala Changchub Dorje as a great tertön until decades after he passed away. Everyone thought he was just a doctor. It was only after he attained rainbow body that people took note.

Indeed, in a real sense, most Lamas in traditional Tibet lacked these very qualifications that are so prized in the West. Even so, if these qualifications were not so prized in Tibet as well, people would not feel the need to pester high lamas into recognizing their children as Yangsi X and Tulku Y.

Grigoris said:

That's pretty rich coming from an Acharya.

Malcolm wrote:

You still don't get it. Students make the teacher. We see this over and over again. Gather enough students, someone will grant you recognition. We have seen this among westerners several times already.

Grigoris said:

The fact that people choose unqualified teachers merely underlines the need for reliance on lineage. It does not annul it.

Malcolm wrote:

They pick the teachers with whom they have karma, qualifications actually have very little to do with it.

If you do not have the karma to study with this or that "highly qualified" lama, no matter what you do, you will never be able to attend their teachings. It is sort of like the conception of a child. If the gandhāvāra, the bardo being, does not have proper karma with a certain set of parents, there is no basis for a conception.

Nothing we say about this woman has any relevance to her or her students. She found a Tibetan lama to back her, learned Tibetan, gained academic credentials, etc. In order to question her credentials, you have to question his, and so on and so forth.

In the end, it all comes down to what oneself accepts and rejects.

The tantras do not say, "Examine master so and so for his lineage recognitions, endorsements, associates, etc." What do they say? They mention nothing about lineage heads, etc. They only mention the personal qualities and learning of the prospective master in question.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 7th, 2018 at 11:43 PM

Title: Re: Ngakpa International - Vajrayana Training

Content:

Sonam Wangchug said:

I know having met great teachers you really 'can't just believe they are only involved in murky politics "working with circumstances" but that they do have the wisdom eye to know who is who, easily at that.

Malcolm wrote:

I love the former Penor Rinpoche, have taken teachings from him, etc. However, there is no way that I ever believed nor do I now believe that Osel Mukpo is reincarnation of Ju Mipham. Just so we are clear.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 7th, 2018 at 11:49 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa International - Vajrayana Training

Content:

Sonam Wangchug said:

So how exactly will students receive the lineage practices independent of the lineage masters? Of course we know there are individuals who give wangs who are not authorized to.

Unless if one is fortunate to encounter a teacher like Dudjom lingpa, Exercise extreme caution.

Malcolm wrote:

One of my teachers, ChNN, was considered "unauthorized" for decades, What changed?

Sonam Wangchug said:

The 16th gyalwang karmapa recognized Rinpoche when he was a child, as a wisdom emanation of Shabdrung ngawang rinpoche, did he not?

Rinpoche had traditional training and studied with many eminent lineages holders of his time, did he not?

That's not a teacher who is coming out of no where without the proper recognition and training.

Malcolm wrote:

And yet, even so, there are still lamas who think ChNN is totally wrong and not qualified.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 7th, 2018 at 11:34 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa International - Vajrayana Training

Content:

Sonam Wangchug said:

Well if the said teacher has a "lineage" then there will be a "lineage-head" or several lineage holders to refer to..

Here are a few

Minling tradition Minling trichen dungse dalha rinpoche, Minling khandro rinpoche

Dudjom Tersar, Dudjom yangsi sangye pema zhepa rinpoche, Dudjom yangsi tenzin yeshe dorje. Dungse Garab dorje rinpoche, Dzongsar khyentse rinpoche, Kathok situ rinpoche, Namgyal dawa rinpoche,

Payul Nam cho: Karma kuchen rinpoche, Mugtsang rinpoche, Gyangkhang Rinpoche

Chokling tersar, Tsikey chokling rinpoche, Neten chokling rinpoche

Kathok Kathok moktsa rinpoche, Kathok loga rinpoche, Kathok situ rinpoche

Drikung kagyu Drikung chetsang rinpoche, Drikung chungtsang rinpoche, Garchen rinpoche

Karma kamtsang The gyalwang karmapa, Tai situ rinpoche, Gyaltsab rinpoche, Jamgon kongtrul rinpoche.

Drukpa kagyu The Gyalwang drukpa, Thuksey rinpoche, khamtrul rinpoche

Sakya tradition The 41st and 42nd sakya trizin rinpoche's and the other members of the khon family

It's simple really.. it's good to exercise extreme caution with self made teachers, or those recognized by those who are not major lineage holders.

Does it mean there has never been any politics or complications in lineages? no? .. however we receive our practices through the lineages themselves so of course we must defer to the lineage holders.

Malcolm wrote:

And yet, people continue to adopt teachers who do not have institutional backing. Your chain of authority is only as good in so far as you buy it.

Sonam Wangchug said:

So how exactly will students receive the lineage practices independent of the lineage masters? Of course we know there are individuals who give wangs who are not authorized to.

Unless if one is fortunate to encounter a teacher like Dudjom lingpa, Exercise extreme caution.

Malcolm wrote:

One of my teachers, ChNN, was considered "unauthorized" for decades, What changed?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 7th, 2018 at 11:27 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa International - Vajrayana Training

Content:

conebeckham said:

Sure. Nonetheless, claims have been made, and it is reasonable to ask for verification or confirmation. "Examine well the potential Guru," etc., right?

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, but if we subject all claims made to scrutiny, very few will really stand up. No? Recognitions, confirmations, etc., are all pretty much politics in my book.

Sonam Wangchug said:

"are all pretty much politics" ???

that is implying that the lineage heads lack either A) integrity, or B) wisdom.

Malcolm wrote:

Or c) work with circumstances as best they can

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 7th, 2018 at 11:25 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa International - Vajrayana Training

Content:

Grigoris said:

Sorry man, but I am calling you out on this one.

Are you telling me that you did not choose your teachers on the grounds of their qualifications and recognised abilities and qualities?

It's a rhetorical question...

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, it is up to the student decide who is a qualified teacher. Who else can make that decision for anyone?

Sonam Wangchug said:

Well if the said teacher has a "lineage" then there will be a "lineage-head" or several lineage holders to refer to..

Here are a few

Minling tradition Minling trichen dungse dalha rinpoche, Minling khandro rinpoche

Dudjom Tersar, Dudjom yangsi sangye pema zhepa rinpoche, Dudjom yangsi tenzin yeshe dorje. Dungse Garab dorje rinpoche, Dzongsar khyentse rinpoche, Kathok situ rinpoche, Namgyal dawa rinpoche,

Payul Nam cho: Karma kuchen rinpoche, Mugtsang rinpoche, Gyangkhang Rinpoche

Chokling tersar, Tsikey chokling rinpoche, Neten chokling rinpoche

Kathok Kathok moktsa rinpoche, Kathok loga rinpoche, Kathok situ rinpoche

Drikung kagyu Drikung chetsang rinpoche, Drikung chungtsang rinpoche, Garchen rinpoche

Karma kamtsang The gyalwang karmapa, Tai situ rinpoche, Gyaltsab rinpoche, Jamgon kongtrul rinpoche.

Drukpa kagyu The Gyalwang drukpa, Thuksey rinpoche, khamtrul rinpoche

Sakya tradition The 41st and 42nd sakya trizin rinpoche's and the other members of the khon family

It's simple really.. it's good to exercise extreme caution with self made teachers, or those recognized by those who are not major lineage holders.

Does it mean there has never been any politics or complications in lineages? no? ..

however we receive our practices through the lineages themselves so of course we must defer to the lineage holders.

Malcolm wrote:

And yet, people continue to adopt teachers who do not have institutional backing. Your chain of authority is only good in so far as you buy it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 7th, 2018 at 10:46 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa International - Vajrayana Training

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You are free. You can do whatever you want. Everyone else does. It's up to students to decide who is a qualified teacher. It is also up to teachers to decide who is a qualified student.

Grigoris said:

Sorry man, but I am calling you out on this one.

Are you telling me that you did not choose your teachers on the grounds of their qualifications and recognised abilities and qualities?

It's a rhetorical question...

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, it is up to the student decide who is a qualified teacher. Who else can make that decision for anyone?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 7th, 2018 at 8:31 AM

Title: Re: Neo nazi's march in DC

Content:

Queequeg said:

No doubt that horrible things have been done in the name of this religious authority or that, including Buddhism. This is indisputable. Its another to say that these horrors have their beginning in Dharma.

I'll add this to my reading list.

Malcolm wrote:

Dharma and Buddhism are two different things, as I have long argued.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 7th, 2018 at 2:05 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa International - Vajrayana Training

Content:

conebeckham said:

Sure. Nonetheless, claims have been made, and it is reasonable to ask for verification or confirmation. "Examine well the potential Guru," etc., right?

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, but if we subject all claims made to scrutiny, very few will really stand up. No? Recognitions, confirmations, etc., are all pretty much politics in my book.

Grigoris said:

So, according to your book, I can claim to be a tulku and authorised to give Dzogchen empowerments and you are cool with that? I mean I can probably bribe Pema Khandro to put an official signature to my claim.

Malcolm wrote:

You are free. You can do whatever you want. Everyone else does. It's up to students to decide who is a qualified teacher. It is also up to teachers to decide who is a qualified student.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 7th, 2018 at 1:23 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpa International - Vajrayana Training

Content:

conebeckham said:

Needs collaboration.

Malcolm wrote:

Pema Khandro has students, that makes her a teacher by fiat.

conebeckham said:

Sure. Nonetheless, claims have been made, and it is reasonable to ask for verification or confirmation. "Examine well the potential Guru," etc., right?

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, but if we subject all claims made to scrutiny, very few will really stand up. No? Recognitions, confirmations, etc., are all pretty much politics in my book.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 7th, 2018 at 1:20 AM

Title: Re: Neo nazi's march in DC

Content:

Queequeg said:

That's a damning thing to suggest genocide found its genesis in Buddha Dharma.

Malcolm wrote:

Try giving the Mahāvamsa a read. It is one of the great documents of the founding of a religious country based upon the dehumanization and eradication of an indigenous population. The original sin of Theravada, if you will.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 7th, 2018 at 1:06 AM

Title: Re: Neo nazi's march in DC

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Thurman's Shangrila is a total fantasy. Any cursory review of the political history of E. Asia, SE Asia, and Central Asia should be sufficient to discover this fact.

Queequeg said:

"Total fantasy" goes too far. Buddhism has a pretty good track record of having a pacifying effect on the societies where it takes root.

Malcolm wrote:

We will agree to disagree. I think the historical record shows otherwise, from Sinhalese ethnic cleansing in the Mahāvamsa to the ethnic cleansing of Bonpos in Central Tibet, to the modern day ethnic cleansing of Bhutan and Burma, I think Buddhism actually has a very shitty record of bring peace to countries in general. Not to mention the endless religious wars in Tibet and Japan.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, September 7th, 2018 at 12:41 AM

Title: Re: Neo nazi's march in DC

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Thurman's Shangrila is a total fantasy. Any cursory review of the political history of E. Asia, SE Asia, and Central Asia should be sufficient to discover this fact.

Grigoris said:

Utopias are always unrealistic, but if you don't aim high you generally fall short of the mark.

Malcolm wrote:

The problem with Thurman's Inner Revolution is he sells his quasi-Jeffersonian version of Democracy as if somehow Tibetan culture was representative of this.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, September 7th, 2018 at 12:38 AM
Title: Re: Ngakpa International - Vajrayana Training
Content:
conebeckham said:
Needs collaboration.

Malcolm wrote:
Pema Khandro has students, that makes her a teacher by fiat.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, September 6th, 2018 at 10:11 PM
Title: Re: Neo nazi's march in DC
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Thurman's Shangrila is a total fantasy. Any cursory review of the political history of E. Asia, SE Asia, and Central Asia should be sufficient to discover this fact.

Dan74 said:
Can't the energies of the angry frustrated people be sublimated into something more wholesome than fascism?

Queequeg said:
Dan, you sure give people the benefit of the doubt. Me? I consider stupidity to be a terminal trait affecting most of humanity not leaving a whole lot of hope. Most people are motivated by petty impulses grounded in fear and selfishness, and these Alt-Right are pure fear and selfishness.

Talking to these bozos to get them to walk back their motivation, while a nice idea, won't get anywhere because the reason faculty is clearly compromised in them, either because they are congenitally stupid or because they've thought themselves too far down this path already. These idiots have built a whole ecosystem of meaning based on their impulses. You're not going to bring that down with an earnest conversation at a kissing booth.

We need leaders who offer a compelling alternative. Just talking a good game is not enough. Its got to be demonstrated in a way of life. Toynbee (a flawed person who had some compelling ideas) argued that societies flourish or die because of how they manage the challenge-and-response dynamic. He argued, the way this plays out - its not that all the members of society somehow spontaneously rise to the challenge before them, but rather, a creative minority emerges who comes up with a solution to a particular challenge. The rest of the masses then follow along through the process of mimesis. Their ability is limited to seeing a good idea and copying it.

What compelling alternative is there for these guys? Our creative minority, the tech crowd, the ascendant cohort with the money, the fame, and exciting function in society, actually thinks like them. On a whole, tech bros lean libertarian in that dickish Ayn Rand sort of way. Its not going out on a limb to say there is considerable overlap between the tech crowd and 4chan /pol/. Peter Thiel, aside from being gay, is only a few degrees removed from Richard Spencer in terms of his overall attitude. Tim Draper, the silicon valley bozo who wants to break California up into different states, demonstrates this impulse to segregate - that's what breaking up the state is all about - segregation. The difference his criteria is political and economic rather than racial and cultural.

I assume most readers here are Buddhist, so I'd recommend Bob Thurman's Inner Revolution. He points out the effect that Buddhism, particularly monastic Buddhism, had on India and Asia in general. Basically, it led to pacification. He argues its better for young men to bang their heads against the wall conquering their "self" than unleashing that energy on society. He argues the drawback for Buddhism is that Buddhism gets infused with machismo, but overall, society is better when young men are occupied with Dharma. That's sublimation of that energy in the best way so far. Thurman goes on to describe a society that is devoted to peace and life of the mind and proposes ways to do that. His proposal is a pipe dream, of course, but its thought provoking.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 6th, 2018 at 6:47 AM

Title: Re: The Retreat Map--from Kongtrul's Retreat Manual

Content:

pemachophel said:

IME, as one progresses in their practice one needs less and less sleep.

Sonam Wangchug said:

True.

Malcolm wrote:

As one gets older one needs less and less sleep. This is very normal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 6th, 2018 at 2:23 AM

Title: Re: Source of Om Mani Padme Hum

Content:

Queequeg said:

I've read references to texts translated into Chinese much earlier that make reference to six-syllable dharani associated with the six forms of Avalokitesvara. Are there such texts in the Kangyur?

Is there significance to there being six syllables?

In Japan, the chant I've heard associated with Avalokitesvara is "Namu Kanzeon Bosatsu".

Malcolm wrote:

In general, six syllables stands for the six lokas.

This dharani text was translated from Chinese into Tibetan:

ārya-bodhisattva-avalokiteśvara-sahasra-bhujanetāsaṅga-mahākāruṇika-citta-vistara-paripūrṇa-nāma-dhāraṇī (千手千眼觀世音菩薩廣大圓滿無礙大悲心陀羅尼經)

These dharani texts exist in both Tibetan and Chinese:

ārya-avalokiteśvara-ekadaśamukha-nāma-dhāraṇ (十一面觀世音神呪經) ārya-avalokiteśvara-hayagrīva-dhāraṇī (陀羅尼集經) ārya-avalokiteśvara-mātā-nāma-dhāraṇī (觀自在菩薩母陀羅尼經) ārya-avalokiteśvara-nāma-aṣṭaśataka (聖觀自在菩薩一百八名經)

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 6th, 2018 at 1:41 AM

Title: Re: Source of Om Mani Padme Hum

Content:

dharmapdx said:

I'm really not trying to be cute here. LOL. Given that this is a Tibetan chant.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is not a "Tibetan" chant. It's source is the Ārya-karaṇḍavyūha-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, a sūtra which entered the Chinese canon rather late (983).

More info here:

Author: Studholme, Alexander

Title: The Origins of Oṃ Maṇipadme Hum: A Study of the Kāraṇḍavyūha

Publ. Date: 2002

Publ. Details: Albany: State University of New York Press

Queequeg said:

Is this one of those texts that made its way to Tibet via China? Or was that text also transmitted directly to Tibet also?

The first place I heard that chant was at Wutaishan.

Malcolm wrote:

Direct, translated into Tibetan earlier than China.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, September 6th, 2018 at 12:28 AM

Title: Source of Om Mani Padme Hum

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Mod Note: Split from "<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=59&t=29382>"

dharmapdx said:

I'm really not trying to be cute here. LOL. Given that this is a Tibetan chant.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is not a "Tibetan" chant. It's source is the Ārya-karaṇḍavyūha-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, a sūtra which entered the Chinese canon rather late (983).

More info here:

Author: Studholme, Alexander

Title: The Origins of Om Maṇipadme Hum: A Study of the Kāraṇḍavyūha

Publ. Date: 2002

Publ. Details: Albany: State University of New York Press

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 5th, 2018 at 11:59 PM

Title: Re: Tibetan Culture and History

Content:

Queequeg said:

Yes. That makes sense.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, no it does not. These issues were quite consuming for Tibetans, and there is an entire literature devoted to such cosmological questions as identifying the actual Akaniṣṭha, and so on, based on Indian sources.

Queequeg said:

But surely these fellows who were master philosophers also understood the import of their stories. Without end, without limit. Infinity... All these possibilities were available to them. Going to this degree of unfathomable but putting it in a way that leaves a question about finality or infinality itself likely was on purpose.

Malcolm wrote:

Tsuglag Trengwa (Gtsug lag 'phreng ba 1504-1566) writes in his Feast For Paṇḍitas (mkhas pa'i dga' ston):

A billion fields of Kusumatalagarbhāṣṇakāra exists in each pore of Vairocanasagara.

Every particle of his body is similar.

Every particle of that field is as numerous.

Vairocana is the sambhogakāya of Śākyamuni.

Where ever that kāya and buddhafield reside, that buddhafield combines all into one,
said to be the field of every sambhogakāya.

In this manner, where ever space pervades, also the buddhafield and kāya of the victor exists.

In the absolute definitive meaning, however, the kāya and buddhafield are immeasurable, and no limit can be apprehended.

The above is standard late Indian Buddhist cosmology, and has come to be the standard Mahāyāna cosmology of Tibet.

You can search how it is treated in Chinese Buddhism with this:

華藏莊嚴

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 5th, 2018 at 10:58 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen for busy people!

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Whatever one may do, Dzogchen requires 100% commitment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 5th, 2018 at 7:30 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Culture and History

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The Flower Filled World is Kusumatalagarbhāṣṇakāra. This world system, the Sahaloka is contained within Kusumatalagarbhāṣṇakāra, which rests in the palm of the hand of Vairocana Jñānasagara, the mahāsambhogakāya, within whose body all of the cosmos resides.

Losal Samten said:

Are there infinite Vairocana Jñānasagaras (or equivalents)?

Malcolm wrote:
Good question. When you find out, let us know.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, September 5th, 2018 at 6:37 AM
Title: Re: Tibetan Culture and History
Content:
Aryjna said:
There is a somewhat amusing twist in the book by Jamgon Kongtrul:

Malcolm wrote:
The Flower Filled World is Kusumatalagarbhākāra. This world system, the Sahaloka is contained within Kusumatalagarbhākāra, which rests in the palm of the hand of Vairocana Jñānasagara, the mahāsambhogakāya, within whose body all of the cosmos resides.

Queequeg said:
For reference, can you direct us to the source of this?

Turning to the substance of the teaching, does it make sense to ask what is outside of Vairocana's body? Or is Vairocana a sort of Mobius Strip limit?

In certain respects, these statements appear to be a series of one-up claims. Is there a point where one surrenders to infinity?

Malcolm wrote:
This is standard Mahayana cosmology based on the Flower Ornament Sutra.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, September 5th, 2018 at 4:50 AM
Title: Re: Tibetan Culture and History
Content:

Queequeg said:
What is the 3000 fold universe above? How is that number arrived at?

Malcolm wrote:
The Tibetan term is stong gsum, literally "three one thousands," or trisāhasra in Sanskrit. But 3000-fold is not a good translation equivalent. I render it "a billion world universe."

It refers to $1000 * 1000 * 1000 =$ a billion.

There are a billion planets in the Sahaloka. Each planet has a Mt. Meru, 4 continents, sun and moon., etc.

See <http://www.rigpawiki.org/index.php?title=Trichiliocosm>:

Mantrik said:

Depends which Billion we mean. When first coined, 1 Billion was 1 million x 1 million, but as a modern translation your version is OK. Is the '1 Billion' planets of the Sahaloka referring to the original or the amended 'short' Billion, or just meaning 'infinite' or 'a lot' as the term did not exist until recent centuries.

Malcolm wrote:

Stong gsum refers to 10 to ninth power. It is a very specific number in Indian mathematics.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 5th, 2018 at 3:54 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Mantrik said:

Are you expressing a personal view or from ChNN himself?

Malcolm wrote:

Both.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 5th, 2018 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: The Retreat Map--from Kongtrul's Retreat Manual

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

According to Tibetan Medicine, one needs 8 hours of sleep. One should try to be asleep by 10, and one should rise at six. But since I am a terrible practitioner, I never follow even this advice. I am usually asleep by midnight, and awake between 8 or 9.

The best pure vision approach is original purity, that includes everything.

Practitioners are liberation through seeing by nature, whether they sleep alot or not, and whether they practice 30 seconds a day or 24 hours.

pemachophel said:

Hugger,

"I hope he also took full responsibility for such things as car accidents caused by exhausted and sleep-deprived students of his, trying to work, practice and have a family life at the same time -- essentially, trying to live two lives at the same time, one of a dharmic "profesional," the other of a Western regular joe."

Have you tried dag-nang (pure vision) yet?

The five transformations when listening to the Dharma:

1. The Teacher as whatever Buddha is associated with the teaching or as Shakyamuni, Guru Rinpoche, etc. In other words, if the teaching is about Manjushri, then the Teacher is Manjushri. If the teaching is about Avalokiteshwara, then the Teacher is Avalokiteshwara. If the teaching is originally by Guru Rinpoche, then the Teacher is Guru Rinpoche.
2. The place as that Buddha's field, e.g., Potala, Sukhavati, Pema Od
3. The time as the fourth time, i.e., the time beyond past, present, and future
4. Those other listeners as that Buddha's Bodhisatva/Bodhisatvi disciples or as Pawos and Dakinis
5. The Teaching as the highest, most precious Teaching which is most applicable directly to you

IME, if one listens to the Dharma with one's ordinary discursive mind filled with dualism and doubt, maybe yes, maybe no, hard to get much traction.

Similarly, hard to make much progress if one is "trying to live two lives," one Dharmic and the other samsaric. In my experience, the trick is to live one's life Dharmically regardless of the activities one is engaged in. There does not need to be any separation. There's a way to make any activity a Dharmic activity as long as it is not inherently non-virtuous. That's the skillful means of Vajrayana. But it all depends on dag-nang and, moment by moment, implementing those skillful means. As they say, practice makes perfect. Granted, this is easier said than done, but who said attaining perfectly complete, unsurpassed Enlightenment was easy

treehuggingoctopus said:

I think we are talking past each other here.

I wholeheartedly agree that we have to make as much of our life as possible (all of it, ultimately) into Dharma activity. There is plainly no other way.

Then there is the question of our formal practice -- a type of Dharmic activity which, while entirely necessary for us Western householders, poses a particular challenge. To illustrate: in the traditional framework, a committed practitioner (the, for the lack of better words, "Dharmic professional") goes into retreat, which will last at least three years and during which he or she probably will not have any non-religious duties (hence the opportunity to focus almost solely on formal practice, doing a complete ngondro in three months, etc). I can readily imagine that if one is relatively healthy, and enjoys a community support (or at least the support of a culture which on some level recognises the validity of that sort of endeavour) one could sleep very little indeed. Those of us who already have families and are forced to have regular, 9-5 jobs find themselves in an entirely different situation -- our non-religious duties consume the better part of our lives, and finding time for regular formal practice will be often very difficult indeed. We also need our sleep (and food, decent health, etc.) -- and yes, it is a tightrope walk, precisely the one which I had in mind when I wrote of us struggling to lead two lives at the same time. The fact that the Western world (which at least a part of our family, friends, neighbours very, very much belong to) perceives what we do as either a form of insanity or a eccentric leisure activity does not help either, euphemistically put.

I can allocate between two and three hours a day to my formal practice. At least once in a fortnight, on average, I am so tired that I literally fall asleep on the cushion. Cutting down on sleep would be just plainly irresponsible, to put it mildly. (Actually, I have discovered that not exceeding two hours of formal practice a day and allowing myself to skip sessions when I am really tired both increases the quality of my formal practice and greatly helps the Dharma to seep into my post-session life.)

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 5th, 2018 at 1:01 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Aryjna said:

I think it is not that strange that it is considered better in person, simply as a stronger connection may be created, as in any other connection it may be stronger if you meet someone in person than if you talk a little over the internet, in the end it may not matter depending on capacity and diligence.

As for a different empowerment for the same deity being irrelevant, isn't that a bit strange, it is not like it is a completely different deity because it comes from a different terma. It is still the same attributes etc. It is something I have thought about before, so it would be good if there was some authoritative answer on the matter.

Pero said:

Well for example I think Malcolm mentioned somewhere that if you get an empowerment into a mandala of one cycle, you can't do practices of another cycle even if it's the same deity, because it's a completely different mandala. However occasionally I see that when there are requirements for receiving some teachings it may be something like "any empowerment of Guru Rinpoche".

treehuggingoctopus said:

I have heard from a few people who were there that when ChNN was first giving the donwang of Jnanadakini (~2005), Khyentse Yeshe reported that the Boss had told him that the donwang is exactly the same (bells and whistles aside) as the more traditional Longsal Root Initiation; they are both equally valid, and if ChNN did not give the donwang previously it was because he had not received it himself yet. Still, since then Rinpoche has given the LRI at least twice, in 2010 and in 2014.

Pero said:

In essence yeah but it's not just "bells and whistles" that are different as far as I can recall.

treehuggingoctopus said:

Possibly (much to my dismay, I have not received the LRI, just the donwang) but functionally they are the same. Which begs the question why Rinpoche keeps giving both.

Malcolm wrote:

Longer empowerments are for those with less faith.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 5th, 2018 at 12:59 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Culture and History

Content:

Aryjna said:

There is a somewhat amusing twist in the book by Jamgon Kongtrul:

The total number of world-systems comprising one Flower-Filled World is calculated by progressively multiplying by factors of one billion: One billion great thousand third-order thousand world-systems constitutes the world-system Infinite Links. A billion of those is the world-system Infinite Continuums. A billion of those is the world-system Oceanic Infinity. One billion of those is the extent of one Flower-Filled World. Each world-system rests on its own great ocean and is encircled by a rim. At the same time, one great rim encircles them all.

One [arrangement] of such dimension constitutes the sphere of influence of a single supreme manifest dimension of awakening. To those of limited intelligence, [the sphere of influence] is taught to be only a third-order thousand world-system.

Malcolm wrote:

The Flower Filled World is Kusumatalagarbhāṃkāra. This world system, the Sahaloka is contained within Kusumatalagarbhāṃkāra, which rests in the palm of the hand of Vairocana Jñānasagara, the mahāsambhogakāya, within whose body all of the cosmos resides.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 5th, 2018 at 12:51 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Culture and History

Content:

Queequeg said:

What is the 3000 fold universe above? How is that number arrived at?

Malcolm wrote:

The Tibetan term is stong gsum, literally "three one thousands," or trisāhasra in Sanskrit. But 3000-fold is not a good translation equivalent. I render it "a billion world universe."

It refers to $1000 * 1000 * 1000 =$ a billion.

There are a billion planets in the Sahaloka. Each planet has a Mt. Meru, 4 continents, sun and moon., etc.

See <http://www.rigpawiki.org/index.php?title=Trichiliocosm>:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, September 5th, 2018 at 12:40 AM

Title: Re: Path of Joining and Emptiness

Content:

Bristollad said:

This is covered in Chapter 1, topic 3 of the Exalted Knower of All Aspects: Mahayana Path of Preparation in the Abhisamayalamkara.

From course notes:

On the Mahayana path of accumulation of those of definite Mahayana lineage: there is a fully qualified application in complete aspects and wisdoms arisen from meditation observing impermanence, suffering, unattractiveness, etc. However, there is no wisdom arisen from meditation that observes emptiness.

When the wisdom arisen from meditation observing emptiness is initially generated, someone who is of definite Mahayana lineage transfers to the Mahayana path of preparation.

Note: It is (according to this system) not very common but some hearers and solitary realizers also realize the emptiness of true existence. These may then later enter the Mahayana path and proceed along to Buddhahood. Such practitioners already possess a wisdom arisen from meditation that observes emptiness before they enter the Mahayana path of preparation. Therefore, unless we only speak about Bodhisattvas of definite Mahayana lineage, there is no pervasion that the path of preparation starts with the first generation of a wisdom arisen from meditation that observes emptiness.

Three wisdoms

Wisdom arisen from hearing: a wisdom arisen mainly from hearing (or reading) the meaning of the scriptures.

Wisdom arisen from contemplation: a wisdom arisen mainly from the contemplation of the meaning of the scriptures that one has heard (or read) before.

Wisdom arisen from meditation: a wisdom arisen mainly in dependence on familiarizing with the understanding that has been generated during contemplation with a mind that is based on a union of calm abiding and special insight.

Three types of wisdom observing emptiness

Question: What are the differences between the three types of wisdom observing emptiness?

Response: Wisdom arisen from hearing or wisdom arisen from contemplation: although a meaning generality of emptiness dawns well, the object and the object-possessor appear as though unrelated due to being together with very coarse dualistic appearances.

Wisdom arisen from meditation: although there are dualistic appearances, due to having overcome the coarse dualistic appearances as in the previous two cases, it appears as if one has penetrated the object.

Such a dawning of the meaning-generality of emptiness is described as “dharmata appearing clearly” due to being transformed in a manner of water placed in water.

Nevertheless, this is not a clear appearance that is free from conceptions. Instead, at the time of the Mahayana path of preparation of somebody of definite Mahayana lineage, there is a clear appearance of a meaning-generality during a conceptual realization of emptiness which is a wisdom arisen from meditation; there is not yet a clear appearance of emptiness at that time.

Malcolm wrote:

This needs some modification, mostly because the translated terms are overly literal.

Bristollad said:

Three types of wisdom observing emptiness

Question: What are the differences between the three types of wisdom observing emptiness?

Response: Wisdom arisen from hearing or wisdom arisen from contemplation: although a generic object of emptiness dawns well, the object and the subject appear as though unrelated due to being together with very coarse dualistic appearances.

Wisdom arisen from meditation: although there are dualistic appearances, due to having overcome the coarse dualistic appearances as in the previous two cases, it appears as if one has penetrated the object.

Such a dawning of the generic object of emptiness is described as “dharmata appearing clearly” due to being transformed in a manner of water placed in water.

Nevertheless, this is not a clear appearance that is free from conceptions. Instead, at the time of the Mahayana path of preparation of somebody of definite Mahayana lineage, there is a clear appearance of a generic object during a conceptual realization of emptiness which is a wisdom arisen from meditation; there is not yet a clear appearance of emptiness at that time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 4th, 2018 at 7:06 AM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:

Arnoud said:

Thank you very much Malcolm. Truly extraordinary. How long did it take you to translate the whole text? Must have been a few days.

BTW, if anyone has lack of funds but has the requirements to read this text, please let me know. I will pay for three sets and shipping for those who can't afford it. It would be best if that was in the US as shipping overseas gets very expensive but let me know and I can see what I can do.

I still have one left to give away. Don't hesitate to contact me.

Thanks again Malcolm for this wonderful set. Truly something that will withstand the test of time.

Malcolm wrote:

Thanks Arnoud, that is quite generous of you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, September 4th, 2018 at 1:06 AM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:

amanitamusc said:

Do you have others of the 17. ready to roll out?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, two more root texts WITH commentaries.

amanitamusc said:

Do you get a potential time frame from wisdom as to when they will give the go ahead? What are these other two?

Thanks.

Malcolm wrote:

Spring 2020.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 2nd, 2018 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:

amanitamusc said:

Do you have others of the 17. ready to roll out?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, two more root texts WITH commentaries.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 2nd, 2018 at 11:30 PM

Title: Re: Latest report on Shambala abuse just released.

Content:

Norwegian said:

If this is what she said to the woman, then that is completely disgusting.

Queequeg said:

Which is why the authors had a responsibility to not run the account without corroborating. That is a serious charge.

Malcolm wrote:

There is nothing criminal about the alleged statement by made PC. It's just a bit appalling, if true. If PC thinks it is libelous, she can take it to court. In Canada, she might even win.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 2nd, 2018 at 11:29 PM

Title: Re: Latest report on Shambala abuse just released.

Content:

Queequeg said:

It is irresponsible. Whether they had a responsibility to do anything, they undertook the responsibility when they claimed they were being responsible.

Malcolm wrote:

They clearly felt they had a higher responsibility to make these various allegations known and the names of those accused, which in fact are found throughout all three reports. The only names that are redacted are the alleged victims and reporters of the allegations. Whether this is "proper" or not, it is clearly a response to what appears to be pervasive and systematic shielding of elite Shambhalians from the consequences of their actions. It is clear they are trying to stimulate prosecutorial interest in these cases.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, September 2nd, 2018 at 9:17 AM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:
Virgo said:
Malcolm, does the publisher always choose the release date?

Kevin...

Malcolm wrote:
Yup.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, September 2nd, 2018 at 3:49 AM
Title: Re: Dzogchen and psychedelics?
Content:

passel said:
'Datura' seems the same- no nightshades outside the New World pre-Columbus.

Malcolm wrote:
"Datura" in Indian texts refers to Datura Metel. It is related to Datura Stramonium, etc., which are native to the new world. All datura species belong to the Solanaceae family.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, September 2nd, 2018 at 2:02 AM
Title: Re: Dzogchen and psychedelics?
Content:

fckw said:
There's also this guy who speculates that even the historical buddha might have made use of psychoactive substances: <https://palisuttas.wordpress.com/2014/05/24/was-the-buddha-a-shaman/>. However, personally am not convinced at all by this claim and think this is too much of a stretch. In all, I don't think he is a reliable source of information.

And then, there is this guy:
<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?t=17576>
And his book:
<https://www.amazon.com/Secret-Drugs-Buddhism-Mike-Crowley/dp/0692652817> as well as <http://secretdrugs.net/>
On the internet there are claims that he is a Kagyu lama. I could not verify this. Although I don't subscribe to all his claims made (for example this stuff I consider quite far off: <https://www.tandfonline.com/doi/abs/10.1080/1751696X.2015.1026028>), I immediately subscribe to his claim that amrita used in tantric initiations originally contained psychedelic substances.

Malcolm wrote:

You can subscribe to whatever baseless nonsense you choose, but it is nonsense.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 1st, 2018 at 9:53 PM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:

pael said:

E-book?

Malcolm wrote:

It will be out sometime next year.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, September 1st, 2018 at 5:36 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and psychedelics?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The study you cite is so poorly constructed as to be laughable.

DGA said:

Before I attended my first Buddhist teaching, I ate some enchiladas. This gave me the energy to ride my bike over the bridge and to the Dharma center.

Ergo, enchiladas were my chemical gateway to Dharma.

YMMV.

Arupajhana7 said:

Research indicates high doses of psilocybin show similar brain scan results to meditation. The research also indicates that highly experienced meditators who had never done psychedelics prior to the research reported many similarities in their psilocybin experience to their peak experiences in long retreats.

<https://www.psymposia.com/magazine/john...editators/>

Is there similar research on enchiladas?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 31st, 2018 at 11:29 PM

Title: Re: What Shamatha tradition best prepares one for Dzogchen?

Content:

florin said:

Wallace, in his book on shamatha from Dudjom Lingpa's revelation, suggests that the tremendous potential that can be developed by extensively training in shamahta, can become infinitely more powerful if on that basis we continue to train in vipashyana, generation, treckchod, thogal, etc.

treehuggingoctopus said:

One controversial statement I have heard Wallace make is that you cannot sufficiently develop shamatha through mantra recitation (as in ngondro or deity practice). It is even stranger considering the fact that he claimed he is repeating what Dudjom Lingpa had to say on the issue -- all the Dudjom Tersar teachers I have come across argue that the opposite is true.

Malcolm wrote:

As does Mañjuśrimitra and Rongzom Chokyi Paṇḍita. This is also contradicted by Saroruhavajra's presentation of the nine stages of śamatha in the context of the Hevajra sadhana and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 31st, 2018 at 10:31 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and psychedelics?

Content:

haha said:

Actually, one might use Hallucinating Substances to assert everything as mind. But it could be a part of Vipassana, not to space out or bliss out. Nor it is for run away from samsara in different zone. I remembered an example from Tripal Tantra and it was one of the eight examples to assert mind. Those examples were used for meditation.

Malcolm wrote:

The explanation of the inseparability of samsara and nirvana through the 32 examples in triple tantra does not recommend actually taking datura. It is used as an example only.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 31st, 2018 at 10:30 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and psychedelics?

Content:

jmlee369 said:

The hippies were rebelling against Western society and searching for alternatives, a new way of life, something more spiritual, you might even say the truth, the Dharma, and many came to India and Nepal. However, what happens and whom you meet when you come to the East is totally up to your karma. You might be looking for something meaningful but what you find is up to karma.

Many of those people were taking drugs, but in some cases drugs could have been the Buddha's skillful means to help break those people's concepts. They had such unbelievably fixed minds, fixed ideas—strong, unchangeable beliefs that there was just this one life; no understanding that the mind can exist without the body. Their thinking was unbelievably gross. People like this needed something external to break their concepts and enable them to see things more deeply. Drugs gave them many experiences such as the mind being able to travel without the body, which shocked and surprised them, because it was completely opposite to what was taught and believed in the West.

<https://www.lamayeshe.com/article/how-kopan-courses-began>

Malcolm wrote:

Lama Zopa seems to have a lack of understanding of the history of European occult and mystical interests.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 31st, 2018 at 10:28 PM

Title: Re: Swat Valley/Oddiyana

Content:

Tongnyid Dorje said:

Im curious, if there is any evidence of vajrayana being practiced in Swat valley and Tajik, ectr, or not?

As for Shambala: in text is Shambala described north to Oddiyana. Actually, there is a city in Orissa called Shambalpur till today...

Malcolm wrote:

Shambhala was likely the region of modern day Balkh.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 31st, 2018 at 4:09 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and psychedelics?

Content:

fckw said:

Drugs, whether we like it or not, have always been intimate part of tantric ritual (it seems not of Dzogchen, though). Cannabis, but of course also other drugs. And yes, we're talking both of various "hindu" and buddhist tantric traditions. See here for a long list of sources to study on the subject: http://vajrayana.faithweb.com/rich_text_5.html.

Malcolm wrote:

I have looked at these sources and this document is extremely misleading. None of these sources indicate that psychedelics play a role in rituals. Most of the uses datura described in these sources employ datura because it is a poison.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 31st, 2018 at 2:19 AM

Title: Re: Latest report on Shambala abuse just released.

Content:

Queequeg said:

What about the overall culture? Culture is a strong influence but its basically passive. #metoo is a movement seeking to change the overall culture in the West in the area of sexual abuse and discrimination, particularly the United States. I am sure what is happening at Shambhala now is influenced by #metoo.

Grigoris said:

It seems to me that #grabthembythepussy is currently winning the culture war in America.

Malcolm wrote:

No, that is not the case. At this point, there is a 72% chance that Dems win the House, according to 538.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 30th, 2018 at 4:42 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and psychedelics?

Content:

DGA said:

That's a different matter from claiming that such substances can be or are supports on any Dharma path at all

Arupajhana7 said:

I wonder how many people got into the Dharma because of an experience on a psychedelic.

Malcolm wrote:

None. People "get into the Dharma" because they have the merit to meet the Dharma, period. Has everyone completely forgotten the eighteen freedoms and endowments in this thread?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 30th, 2018 at 1:52 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and psychedelics?

Content:

Fa Dao said:

On the other hand MDMA also known as ecstasy is now in phase 3 clinical trials as a "breakthrough cure" for PTSD and possibly other mental health related disorders:

<https://maps.org/research/mdma>

Difficult to meditate/be in the state etc when you're having severe panic attacks etc

DGA said:

Yes, and ketamine is now prescribed in some instances for severe depression. I spoke with someone who was convinced that clinically-supervised use of ketamine saved her life (she suffered from soul-crushing depression). I certainly wouldn't rule out some medical use for substances such as DMT or mescaline or psilocybin.

That's a different matter from claiming that such substances can be or are supports on any Dharma path at all, much less Dzogchen.

Malcolm wrote:
Indeed.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, August 29th, 2018 at 9:14 PM
Title: Re: Dzogchen and psychedelics?
Content:
Matylda said:
are you using psychodelics???

monktastic said:
Not recently. I did many times when younger, and discussed my experiences with my guru. This forum seems like the wrong place to share anything about those conversations.

Malcolm wrote:
I also used these substances many times when I was young. They have no value on the path.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, August 29th, 2018 at 4:14 AM
Title: Re: Dzogchen and psychedelics?
Content:
pemachophel said:
Loppon-la,

Do you know if Caro Maestro has actually taken LSD Himself or is this an opinion based on His observation of others?

I'm not sure that it is correct to lump LSD, mushrooms, and ayahuasca together in this discussion. It's possible that each has its own mechanisms of action within the body, corresponding results, and adverse reactions.

Malcolm wrote:
I have had patients who have experienced gdon zin/bhūtagraha as a result of taking ayahuasca. That shit definitely messes with one's winds.

Shrooms, in my opinion, are the least impactful; that said, they have no use on a path. LSD messes with one's mind pretty severely.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 29th, 2018 at 12:29 AM

Title: Re: Realization

Content:

florin said:

When we have a concrete vision due to misunderstanding, that will be impermanent.

Malcolm wrote:

So vision due to understanding will be permanent?

florin said:

Although concrete and separate we are still able to have an understanding of its arising and passing. We are still able to observe impermanence from the standpoint of someone who is separate from the display. But while in the dzogchen state what can be said about the display since the entire diversity of manifestations is seen and understood as the pure display of wisdom?

Malcolm wrote:

Are those manifestations permanent or impermanent?

florin said:

Is wisdom impermanent?

I thought that it is very clear already and not up to debate that wisdom is understood to be beyond the four conceptual limits.

Malcolm wrote:

If the manifestations are impermanent, how can wisdom be permanent? A permanent entity (wisdom) can not give rise to an impermanent manifestation (display). Further, if wisdom is free from the four extremes, also its product, the display, must be free from the four extremes, not established in any way, being itself similar to an illusion or a mirage.

Further, you make it sound as if there are two phases: being in the dzogchen state and not being in the dzogchen state. Since there is nothing that is not in the dzogchen state, how can there be a phase of being in the dzogchen state and not being in the dzogchen state?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 29th, 2018 at 12:12 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and psychedelics?

Content:

pemachophel said:

Loppon-la,

"LSD, Mushrooms, etc., all cause agitation and completely interfere with one-pointedness."

Is this statement based on personal experience, Tibetan medical theory, or both? If Tibetan medical theory, based on what evidence and/or whose opinion? Just curious from a professional point of view.

Years ago, I floated a possible Chinese medical mechanism for LSD's psychedelic effects. I'd be very interested in hearing the TTM description of exactly what happens when one "drops acid."

Malcolm wrote:

ChNN asserts that these substances "charge one's energy," meaning in translation, cause a disturbance or agitation in one's rlung. An ordinary person cannot maintain one pointedness if their rlung is disturbed. If the rlung is agitated, the mind will be agitated. Agitation is actually a product of excess rlung, just as lethargy is a produce of deficient rlung.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 10:36 PM

Title: Re: Realization

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Understanding here refers to go ba, which in Tibetan means "intellectual understanding." Experience is "nyams," and experience comes from applying in practice that which one has understood intellectually. That results in realization [rtogs pa]. Practice in Tibetan is "nyams len," "to take into experience."

Rick said:

Nice and clear, thanks.

This is from Keith Dowman, in Natural Perfection, Longchenpa's Radical Dzogchen:

"In the Dzogchen view there is no prescriptive practise in which to engage in order to attain rigpa, and there is nothing that we can do to induce that view. Dzogchen 'nonmeditation' is a spontaneous noncontingent continuity—a timeless synchronistic awareness."

Assuming it is true that there is no prescriptive practice to attain rigpa, what does 'nyams len' consist of?

Also, now that I've brought it up, what in livin' tarnation does this mean :

"Dzogchen 'nonmeditation' is a spontaneous noncontingent continuity—a timeless synchronistic awareness."

Malcolm wrote:

Is this his commentary, or is this his translation of Longchenpa. If so, which chapter is this from.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 9:48 PM

Title: Re: Realization

Content:

florin said:

Yes i am just a baby.

You never dissappoint Magnus.

heart said:

You are hardly a baby Florin. Primordial purity and impermanence are closely connected and because of that contemplating impermanence is very important in Dzogchen.

/magnus

florin said:

I would say impermanence "happens" before dzogchen. It is when we conventionally have "things" that appear to arise, decay and pass out of existence.

Impermanence is something that is observed when one hasn't yet understood the real "essence" of one's state.

"When my nature is not understood and the phenomena that manifest from me become the object of judgement, desire and attachment give rise to the creation of concrete vision that is impermanent and destined to vanish like a magical apparition, and one becomes like a blind man who does not know what is happening."

"Self-arising wisdom, the essence of all the Buddhas, exists prior to the division of samsara and nirvana and is beyond the limits of transmigration and liberation. As it transcends the four conceptual limits and is intrinsically pure, this original condition is the uncreated nature of existence that has always existed, the ultimate nature of all phenomena. It cannot be identified with a stable and eternal substance allowing the assertion "It is thus!" and is utterly free of all the defects of dualistic thought, which is only capable of referring to an object other than itself. It is given the name ineffable and inconceivable "base of primordial purity" KG

Malcolm wrote:

These passages do not mean that phenomena are not impermanent. Anything that manifests is a product, and any product is impermanent, like sound.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 9:28 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and psychedelics?

Content:

monktastic said:

Not enlightenment, but you certainly can trip your way into the form and formless dhyanas.

Malcolm wrote:

No, one cannot. Entering and sustaining these dhyānas, for a person physically located in the desire realm, necessarily involves disciplined concentration in which specific mental factors are systematically dropped. LSD, Mushrooms, etc., all cause agitation and completely interfere with one-pointedness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 7:56 AM

Title: Re: Realization

Content:

Rick said:

can realizations arise out of intellectual/contemplative experiences?

Wayfarer said:

Realisations generally arise from an innate understanding...

Malcolm wrote:

No, in Dzogchen, realization arises from an explanation which one has understood, and applied in practice. Please pay attention to the forum you are posting in.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 7:54 AM

Title: Re: Realization

Content:

Rick said:

What does it mean to 'realize' something?

Malcolm wrote:

Understanding + experience = realization.

Rick said:

1. Understanding is an experience. (In common parlance, at least. Perhaps not in Dzogchen?) So can the experience of understanding, if sufficiently powerful, be the 'experience' in the above formula?

2. Slightly different: Understanding can spark an experience (separate from the experience of understanding itself). For example, if a sufficiently 'ripe' student reads about emptiness, it could spark an experience of the emptiness of the reading and reader (and read). Can this be the 'experience' in the formula?

Malcolm wrote:

Understanding here refers to go ba, which in Tibetan means "intellectual understanding." Experience is "nyams," and experience comes from applying in practice that which one has understood intellectually. That results in realization [rtogs pa]. Practice in Tibetan is "nyams len," "to take into experience."

This definition was given by Lama Karma, the resident lama at Tara Mandala. I think it is a very useful definition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 7:35 AM

Title: Re: Realization

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

A pratyakṣa (mngon sum) is a simple impression upon the senses, a direct perception or a cognition, take your pick, since they are synonyms. These are defined as nonconceptual in Buddhadharma. Since you are posting in the Dzogchen forum, you need to understand this word and concept is critically important in Dzogchen teachings, as well as important in Buddhadharma in general. For example, the direct, nonconceptual cognition of the ultimate truth is called yogapratyakṣa, yogic direct perception, etc.

Concepts are assembled out of these direct perceptions by the mental factors. For example, in the first moment of observing a blue cup, there is no concept of cup or blue, etc, there is only a naked cognition of a blue shape. The fact that one is perceiving a blue cup is assembled by the saṃjñā skandha. The vijñāna skandha is always nonconceptual consciousness by nature.

Bundokji said:

I can relate to what you are saying even though i am not very familiar with the terminology. The presence of experience is what i tend to call un-defiled consciousness. Consciousness is a necessary condition for attention and attention is the necessary condition for conceptual knowledge. The constant correlation between the three is what led to the defiled "self consciousness". The very arising of knowledge gives the false impression that there is knower. This is my current understanding.

Malcolm wrote:

Conventionally, there is knower, a self, a person, and so on. Ultimately, no knower, self, person, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 7:34 AM

Title: Re: Realization

Content:

Grigoris said:

No, I want scripture. I also have all sorts of cock-eyed ideas of what reality is, doesn't mean they are correct though. AND I am talking about scriptural sources for your view that self-view is the cause of impermanence and causality. It doesn't accord with anything I have ever read. But then again I have not read everything. Maybe you would like to share where you read it?

Bundokji said:

Why do you think in the following sutta, the Buddha made a distinction between dependent co-arising & dependently co-arisen phenomena?

Malcolm wrote:

He didn't make such a distinction in this sutta.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 4:32 AM

Title: Re: What Shamatha tradition best prepares one for Dzogchen?

Content:

falcon said:

Thank you for the thorough response.

Any contending word to that of Alan Wallace's stance that the Vissudhimagga should be the standard?

Malcolm wrote:

The Visuddhimagga should not, under any circumstance, be regarded as the standard for defining these things in Dzogchen teachings. Dzogchen is squarely within the Sarvastivada/Sautrantika Abhidharmakośa tradition. Therefore, its definitions are the ones salient to Dzogchen practice and concepts.

falcon said:

Since Kamalashila is the Tibetan standard for shamatha, should I, or one interested in developing the mental faculty to support the practice of Dzogchen look there for instructional guidance and mile markers of progress?

I say this as one who wants to develop shamatha as well as work in Dzogchen.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. Actually, you should learn the four yoga of mahāmudra as a preparation. Learning the four yogas of mahāmudra is a common step people take when learning Dzogchen teachings. It is invaluable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 4:24 AM

Title: Re: Realization

Content:

LolCat said:

Now without referring to a memory of A1 and S1, A2 cannot directly infer change, and thus change is not directly experienced but inferred?

Bundokji said:

Is not our ability to recall thing and use this knowledge to predict the future is what gives us the impression that there is an unchanging self through time and space?

Malcolm wrote:

Not all uses the term "self" imply that one is subject to the fetter of satkāyadr̥ṣṭi.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 4:23 AM

Title: Re: Realization

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

When you say that change cannot be perceived directly, are you referring to a pratyakṣa, a nonconceptual direct cognition? If so, please define your terms more carefully.

Bundokji said:

"a non-conceptual direct cognition" is an oxymoron. Why?

Cognition is the mental action or process of acquiring knowledge and understanding through thought, experience, and the senses.

If there is such a thing as non-conceptual direct cognition as you are claiming, then it cannot be conceptualized as non-conceptual.

Malcolm wrote:

A pratyakṣa (mngon sum) is a simple impression upon the senses, a direct perception or a cognition, take your pick, since they are synonyms. These are defined as nonconceptual in Buddhadharma. Since you are posting in the Dzogchen forum, you need to understand this word and concept is critically important in Dzogchen teachings, as well as important in Buddhadharma in general. For example, the direct, nonconceptual cognition of the ultimate truth is called yogapratyakṣa, yogic direct perception, etc.

Concepts are assembled out of these direct perceptions by the mental factors. For example, in the first moment of observing a blue cup, there is no concept of cup or blue, etc, there is only a naked cognition of a blue shape. The fact that one is perceiving a blue cup is assembled by the samjñā skandha. The vijñāna skandha is always nonconceptual consciousness by nature.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 3:32 AM

Title: Re: Realization

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Huh? This does not make any sense at all. It is because there is no self and nothing that belongs to a self that there is impermanence.

Bundokji said:

I explained how the perception of change is a conclusion and why change cannot be perceived directly. Did you have any problem with my explanation?

The explanation is easy to refute by the way if there is a clear refutation. It is two premises and one conclusion. If you think i had it wrong, where?

By the way, I respect your and Gregoris's seniority on this forum, so if i am crossing any red lines, please let me know and i will stop

Malcolm wrote:

When you say that change cannot be perceived directly, are you referring to a pratyakṣa, a nonconceptual direct cognition? If so, please define your terms more carefully.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 3:16 AM

Title: Re: Realization

Content:

Bundokji said:

Self view.

Grigoris said:

Self view is the cause of impermanence? How so?

Bundokji said:

You can refer back to my answer. I have nothing more to add. If you find something missing in my answer, then please state it clearly.

Malcolm wrote:

Your answer is false and unsupportable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 3:13 AM

Title: Re: Realization

Content:

Grigoris said:

What is the cause/condition of impermanence?

Bundokji said:

Self view.

Malcolm wrote:

Huh? This does not make any sense at all. It is because there is no self and nothing that belongs to a self that there is impermanence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 3:04 AM

Title: Re: Realization

Content:

florin said:

And i thought permanence-impermanence are conceptual obscurations only.

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on whether one is discussing things from the point of view of the relative or the ultimate. And before you go tossing out the two truths, the Mdo bcu states:

By means of relative words and syllables
the ultimate is realized to be inexpressible, therefore, the relative and ultimate are connected.

This is identical to what Nāgarjuna states about the relation between the relative and ultimate in MMK. Also the Kun byed rgyal po states:

By means of both the ultimate and the relative both the definitive scriptures and the provisional scriptures are explained with example, meaning, logical sign, and argument.

florin said:

Sure .But for me these passages only make sense with regards to pointing out the connection between the teoretical ideas presented during the oral transmission, where certain ultimate truths are expressed and the ultimate meaning of our nature and how one can connect these ideas with actual experience.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that is the point.

florin said:

Since" impermanence " is a concept of sutra i do not see how the above passages point to a connection between conceptuality and the so called experience of "impermanence".

Malcolm wrote:

The idea that polarities such as impermanent and permanent are concepts that are not ultimately valid is also a key tenet of Mahāyāna sūtras, and Dzogchen does not go beyond Mahāyāna in this respect.

florin said:

I do not see how the conceptuaity of " impermanence" can lead one beyond itself where one experiences "impermanence " as "impermanence" without the involvement of the partial mistaken apprehension by the deluded mind .

Malcolm wrote:

You are not distinguishing the two kinds of relative. A mind perceiving a conventional truth may be confused about essences (but not necessarily), but it is not confused about aspects. A delusion is confusion about aspects, such as perceiving two moons in the sky, or seeing white as yellow, and so on.

Because a mind that is not confused about aspects may be led to realization through words and meanings, there is no reason to invalidate conventions such as impermanent and so on, since they validly describe conventional phenomena.

florin said:

What i am trying to say is that "impermanence " becomes a characteristic, an atribute and i dont see how one can escape that, so in the end impermanence remains a label.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, impermanence is a label we impose upon things we observe which undergo change-- anything that is a product. As long as we do not label impermanent things permanent, or permanent things impermanent, there should be no problem.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 2:41 AM

Title: Re: Latest report on Shambala abuse just released.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Umm, this website is based in the US, and libel charges are incredibly hard to bring in the US. It is not like England, etc.

Grigoris said:

This is quite irrelevant. Just because it may difficult to be prosecuted for it, does not mean that a statement is not libelous.

Malcolm wrote:

Libel is a legal standard that must be met in a court of law. In other words, PC or anyone else must prove the statement damaged their reputation. In US law, that is very hard to prove, and there is no way any statement here could be construed as libel.

Since the statement as included in a report by a third party investigator, it is not libelous at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 2:33 AM

Title: Re: Latest report on Shambala abuse just released.

Content:

Grigoris said:

Be warned: generally these discussions become a festival of rumor and gossip, often crossing the line into libel.

Malcolm wrote:

Umm, this website is based in the US, and libel charges are incredibly hard to bring in the US. It is not like England, etc.

For context, this is the charge listed in the third report:

"I was raped at the age of 21 by a Shambhala Center director. This led to a pregnancy and then a miscarriage. About a year later I approached Pema Chödrön to disclose what had happened. As a respected practitioner and also as a woman, it was my expectation that I would find an ally.

Instead, Ani Pema told me bluntly, "I don't believe you." I was shattered. After further discussion with her, Ani Pema then said, "Well, I wasn't there, but if it's true I suspect that you were into it."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 2:31 AM

Title: Re: Latest report on Shambala abuse just released.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Right, this is a consistent account in the reports. That does not mean he is impugning PC directly.

Grigoris said:

Impugning indirectly. Hinting at. Alluding to. Indicating. Suggesting. Etc...

Malcolm wrote:

So what? PC was directly accused in the reports of telling some women who complained to her of being sexually assaulted by a teacher that the women in question enjoyed her assault, after first denying that a sexual assault could have happened. If true, seriously gross. In any case, Emmets point stands -- everyone who is in the upper echelon of Shambhala International is going to have their reputation damaged. As it stands now, the organization is damaged goods.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 2:24 AM

Title: Re: Latest report on Shambala abuse just released.

Content:

Grigoris said:

the consistent accounts of several others of how high-ranking officials in the organization allegedly aided and abetted in a pattern of exploitation and cover-up, including sexual assault and statutory rape

Malcolm wrote:

Right, this is a consistent account in the reports. That does not mean he is impugning PC directly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 2:18 AM

Title: Re: Latest report on Shambala abuse just released.

Content:

Emmet said:

What do folks think about the comments related to Pema Chodron...

Dana is not confined to dropping a dollar in the box at the door to the practice hall, it's also generosity of spirit; giving people the benefit of the doubt, and thinking the best of them. Private conversations are impossible to corroborate, and I'm committed to the old-fashioned notion that someone's innocent until proven guilty. What I find disturbing about this is when considered in toto; the consistent accounts of several others of how high-ranking officials in the organization allegedly aided and abetted in a pattern of exploitation and cover-up, including sexual assault and statutory rape, how several accounts spoke of this as an "open secret" in the upper echelons of the organization, and Ethan Nichtern's statement detailing how promotion and advancement within the organization was inextricably linked to personal loyalty and devotion, not to the organization, but to the leader himself; a cult of personality. Pema Chodron is a high-ranking leader in that organization, and innocent or guilty, when this shit hits the fan everyone in that inner circle is going to get splattered, justly or otherwise. If nothing else, it's illustrative of how the consequences of our actions can ripple outward on a macro scale, having unintended consequences for good or ill far beyond our limited knowledge and immediate circle.

Grigoris said:

So you are accusing Venerable Pema Chodronin covering up the abuse? That's a pretty serious accusation.

Now back it up.

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty sure he is only saying that everyone in the upper reaches of the Shambhala organization is going to suffer a hit to their reputations, whether directly involved or not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 2:14 AM

Title: Re: Realization

Content:

Bundokji said:

You cannot experience impermanence directly...

Malcolm wrote:

Of course one can.

florin said:

And i thought permanence-impermanence are conceptual obscurations only.

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on whether one is discussing things from the point of view of the relative or the ultimate. And before you go tossing out the two truths, the Mdo bcu states:

By means of relative words and syllables
the ultimate is realized to be inexpressible, therefore, the relative and ultimate are connected.

This is identical to what Nāgarjuna states about the relation between the relative and ultimate in MMK. Also the Kun byed rgyal po states:

By means of both the ultimate and the relative both the definitive scriptures and the provisional scriptures are explained with example, meaning, logical sign, and argument.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 1:55 AM

Title: Re: Realization

Content:

Bundokji said:

You cannot experience impermanence directly...

Malcolm wrote:

Of course one can.

Bundokji said:

Is not the mind that moves?

Malcolm wrote:

Why is mental movement a problem in experiencing impermanence directly?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 1:27 AM

Title: Re: Realization

Content:

Bundokji said:

You cannot experience impermanence directly...

Malcolm wrote:

Of course one can.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 1:25 AM

Title: Re: Realization

Content:

Rick said:

What does it mean to 'realize' something?

Malcolm wrote:

Understanding + experience = realization.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 28th, 2018 at 12:33 AM

Title: Re: What Shamatha tradition best prepares one for Dzogchen?

Content:

LoveFromColorado said:

Shamatha/Vipassana are found in other spiritual traditions (Hindu, Jain, etc.). That said, I don't think it is counterproductive necessarily to engage in these practices but (in my opinion) is not a prerequisite or a mandatory thing.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, but a correction is in order here. Vipāśyāna is strictly Buddhist. And since you are conversing within the Tibetan tradition, you should not mix up Theravada Abhidhamma concepts with their counterparts in Sarvastivāda, which forms the basis of the Indo-Tibetan tradition.

Kamalaśīlas Middle Bhavanakrama, this the presentation most commonly referenced in Tibetan Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 27th, 2018 at 11:26 PM

Title: Re: What Shamatha tradition best prepares one for Dzogchen?

Content:

falcon said:

Thank you for the thorough response.

Any contending word to that of Alan Wallace's stance that the Vissudhimagga should be the standard?

Malcolm wrote:

The Visuddhimagga should not, under any circumstance, be regarded as the standard for defining these things in Dzogchen teachings. Dzogchen is squarely within the Sarvastivada/Sautrantika Abhidharmakośa tradition. Therefore, its definitions are the ones salient to Dzogchen practice and concepts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 27th, 2018 at 11:24 PM

Title: Re: What Shamatha tradition best prepares one for Dzogchen?

Content:

weitsicht said:

What is that?

Vitarka -- initial engagement

Malcolm wrote:

Initial engagement with the object of meditation, i.e., vitarka.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 27th, 2018 at 11:11 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and psychedelics?

Content:

Matylda said:

I think teachers involved in this are complete idiots..

Malcolm wrote:

I agree.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 27th, 2018 at 4:17 AM

Title: Re: "Mercy" killing of a dying animal - moral doubts

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

These are part of throwing karma...

Grigoris said:

What is the Sanskrit term for this?...and all nonvirtue ripens as pain in the body and all virtue ripens as pleasant feelings in the mind.

Do you have an abhidharma source for this please?

And what, on the basis of this theory, is the source of pleasant bodily feeling then?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, you can find this in the Ahidharmakoshabhasyam, pg. 632, Poussin/Pruden:

4:57 Sensation, the result of a good action free from vitarka, is exclusively mental.

Sensation, the result of a bad action, is exclusively physical.

Vasubandhu explains very clearly that mental distress is actually caused by imbalances of the elements and humors where not caused by demonic forces.

Also see verses 4:45-49, from page 620 onward.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 27th, 2018 at 2:41 AM

Title: Re: "Mercy" killing of a dying animal - moral doubts

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is just not how karmavipaka works.

Grigoris said:

I am talking about reality, not theory. Are you saying that you do not experience bodily pleasure or mental suffering? Do these experiences not arise as a consequence of karmavipaka?

Isn't beauty, long life and good health (bodily attributes) a consequence of positive karma vipaka?

Malcolm wrote:

These are part of throwing karma, but the actual sensations we feel in these existences that are a result of karma are differentiated on the basis of whether their cause is virtuous or nonvirtue, and all nonvirtue ripens as pain in the body and all virtue ripens as pleasant feelings in the mind.

This is one reason that in Tibetan Medicine, for example, mental suffering is dealt with as a physical problem.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 27th, 2018 at 2:11 AM

Title: Re: "Mercy" killing of a dying animal - moral doubts

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

IN general, karma that ripens on the body is only nonvirtuous karma, resulting in pain. The karma that ripens on the mind is only positive karma, resulting in happiness.

Grigoris said:

I don't know about you, but I often feel bodily pleasure and mental suffering.

Malcolm wrote:

This is just not how karmavipaka works.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 27th, 2018 at 12:46 AM

Title: Re: "Mercy" killing of a dying animal - moral doubts

Content:

Jeff H said:

My understanding of the teaching on karma is that the primary factor is one's state of mind at the moment of death, compounded by the habitual actions and predominant experiences over one's lifetime. When LZR teaches about death, he advises us to make our loved ones' passing as calm and positive as we can for that reason.

I have been involved in euthanizing a cat and my observation was that it was done with the utmost respect. She had people who cared for her around her helping to make her feel at ease and I saw no evidence that the lethal injection was anything but painless, gentle, and swift.

Is it not better for their karma that a being should die in a peaceful state of mind than wracked with physical pain?

Also, no one addressed Greg's point about easing physical pain in general. If the reason not to euthanize is that this cycle of the being's ripening karma must be allowed to play out "naturally", then why is it ok to intervene in any suffering situation?

Malcolm wrote:

IN general, karma that ripens on the body is only nonvirtuous karma, resulting in pain. The karma that ripens on the mind is only positive karma, resulting in happiness.

I am pretty sure that a cat suffering from a great amount of pain, near death but not quite there, would still resist your attempts to kill it, as would every creature.

So in general, I am pretty sure euthanizing pets, for example, is not a course I would recommend. However, if an animal is rabid, there is little choice in the matter. I don't think there is any reasonable objection to killing diseased animals or animals that carry diseases harmful to humans, such as mosquitos, ticks, and so on. This is just common sense.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 26th, 2018 at 5:32 AM

Title: Re: Catuṣkoṭi analysis used by the Buddha himself

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Two or more interpenetrating dhaatava.h are characteristic by being both identical and different.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they would have to be neither the same nor different.

Coëmgenu said:

Either description is valid IMO. R is not B and B is not R for the ends of the line segments that do not intersect. At the intersection there is no difference between R and B. Representing the area of intersecting congruency as P/purple is a graphical convention. It is both R and B.

So it's really up to the perceiver to decide where the identity of the intersecting dhaatava.h is measured from. Do we look at the whole and decide that "same" does not apply because of the differentiated ends of the segments? Do we look at the whole and decide that "different" does not apply because of their congruent segments? Do we look at the whole and decide that "not same" does not apply because substantial parts of it are the same? Do we look at the whole and decide that "not different" does not apply because the two segments are different?

Malcolm wrote:

In Buddhist thinking, continuity is only accounted for by the logic of "neither the same nor different." For example, if a seed is utterly different than a sprout, there is no causal relationship between the two; so they cannot be utterly different. Since a sprout will not arise if it is the same as the seed, a seed and a sprout cannot be the same.

It doesn't apply to drawings of overlapping red and blue lines.

With respect to Ziporyn, I find his brand of rhetoric tedious and unconvincing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 26th, 2018 at 4:59 AM

Title: Re: Catuskoṭi analysis used by the Buddha himself

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Two or more interpenetrating dhaatava.h are characteristic by being both identical and different.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they would have to be neither the same nor different.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 26th, 2018 at 4:58 AM

Title: Re: Catuskoṭi analysis used by the Buddha himself

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

All that nonsense above is leftovers from me trying to figure out what tenfold interpenetration is actually supposed to "be".

Malcolm wrote:

One moment of thought, or so I've been told.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 26th, 2018 at 4:13 AM

Title: Re: "Mercy" killing of a dying animal - moral doubts

Content:

kirtu said:

Unfortunately Karmapa OTD does not live in the United States and he's not a vet.

In the United States there is practically no effective administration of pain killers for humans. This is because many medical personnel are afraid of creating an addictive situation (even in the case of terminal illness!!!!). This is an objective fact (although it has begun to change somewhat).

Malcolm wrote:

What do you mean by effective?

kirtu said:

Yes. That's quite the question isn't it? Except to many patients (who haven't been listened to).

The over administration of pain management medicines such as Oxycontin has created an wide spread opioid addiction epidemic in the US, it is only with the past 5 years that medical personal have started to severely limit the amount and duration in the administration of pain management meds.

That's not what happened. For decades, maybe generations, doctors restricted pain medication severely in apparently most cases (at least a lot of cases) acting out of skepticism and fear.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they saw that a certain percentage of people on opiate-based medicines developed serious addictions.

kirtu said:

Then we had a change in treatment followed by Mammon worshipers flooding patients with a vast oversupply which is where your comment comes in.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, in the mid 90's when Oxycontin was advertised as nonaddictive and treatment protocols in medicine began to view pain as bad.

kirtu said:

We still do not generally have effective pain management in the United States. The entire subject is controversial (except for the fact that the Mammon worshipers pumped up another drug epidemic).

Just one paper (amongst many) to back up my basic argument that pain treatment is substandard : <http://www.jabfm.org/content/14/3/211.full.pdf>

Barriers to Effective Pain Management

Undertreatment of Pain

In a recent study of 805 chronic pain sufferers, it was reported that more than 50% found it necessary to change physicians in their quest for pain relief. Specific reasons for changing physicians included lack of physicians' willingness to treat the pain aggressively, failure to take the pain seriously, and lack of knowledge about pain management.³ In a study of 1,308 outpatients with metastatic cancer, 11 67% (871) of the patients reported that they had pain or had taken analgesic drugs daily during the week preceding the study, and 36% (475) had pain severe enough to impair their ability to function. Forty-two percent of those with pain were not given adequate analgesic therapy. A discrepancy between patient and physician in judging the severity of the patient's pain was predictive of inadequate pain management. One third of practitioners reported that they would wait until the patient had less than 6 months to live before starting the maximal tolerated analgesia for severe pain.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

[/quote]

From the CDC:

Sales of prescription opioids in the U.S. nearly quadrupled from 1999 to 2014,¹ but there has not been an overall change in the amount of pain Americans report.^{2,3} During this time period, prescription opioid overdose deaths increased similarly.

The supply of prescription opioids remains high in the U.S.⁴ An estimated 1 out of 5 patients with non-cancer pain or pain-related diagnoses are prescribed opioids in office-based settings.³ From 2007 – 2012, the rate of opioid prescribing has steadily increased among specialists more likely to manage acute and chronic pain. Prescribing rates are highest among pain medicine (49%), surgery (37%), and physical medicine/rehabilitation (36%). However, primary care providers account for about half of opioid pain relievers dispensed. ³

<https://www.cdc.gov/drugoverdose/data/prescribing.html>

kirtu said:

MONDAY, July 31, 2017 (HealthDay News) -- More than one out of three average Americans used a prescription opioid painkiller in 2015, despite growing concerns these medicines are promoting widespread addiction and overdose deaths, a new federal study shows.

Nearly 92 million U.S. adults, or about 38 percent of the population, took a legitimately prescribed opioid like OxyContin or Percocet in 2015, according to results from the National Survey on Drug Use and Health.

"The proportion of adults who receive these medications in any year seemed startling to me," said study co-author Dr. Wilson Compton, deputy director of the U.S. National Institute on Drug Abuse.

"It's an awful lot of people who take these, mostly for medical purposes, but within that a significant percentage end up misusing them," he added.

The survey found that 11.5 million people, or nearly 5 percent of the population, misused prescription opioids they'd obtained through illicit means.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.webmd.com/pain-management/news/20170731/doctors-still-overprescribing-opioids-in-us#1>

So, I am still not sure what you mean by effective, but since one out of three Americans used a prescription opioid in 2015...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 26th, 2018 at 3:05 AM

Title: Re: "Mercy" killing of a dying animal - moral doubts

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, their pain does not stop. Being in the bardo is generally a painful experience for most beings, apart from practitioners. It is filled with terror, fear, and panic. You are just sending such animals from one painful experience into another.

Grigoris said:

Pain is a body sensation, it ends when the body stops functioning. Suffering is a mental sensation, it ends with Buddhahood. A being suffering bodily pain that is euthanised and a being suffering bodily pain which is allowed to die in pain will both still suffer the bardo. The difference between the two is that one will not suffer bodily pain (and the suffering associated with it) as long as the other.

Malcolm wrote:

Killing causes physical pain. One has a body in the bardo. That also experiences pain.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 26th, 2018 at 3:04 AM

Title: Re: "Mercy" killing of a dying animal - moral doubts

Content:

Sonam Wangchug said:

If animals are in pain we can administer pain killers.

kirtu said:

Unfortunately Karmapa OTD does not live in the United States and he's not a vet.

In the United States there is practically no effective administration of pain killers for humans. This is because many medical personnel are afraid of creating an addictive situation (even in the case of terminal illness!!!!). This is an objective fact (although it has begun to change somewhat).

Malcolm wrote:

What do you mean by effective?

The over administration of pain management medicines such as Oxycontin has created an wide spread opioid addiction epidemic in the US, it is only with the past 5 years that medical personal have started to severely limit the amount and duration in the administration of pain management meds.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 26th, 2018 at 2:19 AM

Title: Re: "Mercy" killing of a dying animal - moral doubts

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, we are putting them out of our current misery.

Grigoris said:

Not necessarily. Their misery does not cease, it only increases.

Their pain stops, their suffering continues. We don't know if it increases or decreases.

Malcolm wrote:

No, their pain does not stop. Being in the bardo is generally a painful experience for most beings, apart from practitioners. It is filled with terror, fear, and panic. You are just sending such animals from one painful experience into another.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 26th, 2018 at 12:57 AM

Title: Re: "Mercy" killing of a dying animal - moral doubts

Content:

Emmet said:

Am I prolonging life, or am I prolonging needless suffering? I know nothing about past or future lives or the karmic debt of swallows, but I've seen an awful lot of suffering and death. I believe that sometimes under some circumstances my Mahayana vow to save all beings might be best practiced by saving them from any further suffering.

Malcolm wrote:

The idea that we can save any being from further suffering is something of a delusion.

When we euthanize an animal, we are not putting them out of their misery, we are putting them out of our own misery.

Grigoris said:

We are putting them out of their current misery.

Malcolm wrote:

No, we are putting them out of our current misery. Their misery does not cease, it only increases.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 26th, 2018 at 12:17 AM

Title: Re: "Mercy" killing of a dying animal - moral doubts

Content:

Emmet said:

Am I prolonging life, or am I prolonging needless suffering? I know nothing about past or future lives or the karmic debt of swallows, but I've seen an awful lot of suffering and death. I believe that sometimes under some circumstances my Mahayana vow to save all beings might be best practiced by saving them from any further suffering.

Malcolm wrote:

The idea that we can save any being from further suffering is something of a delusion. When we euthanize an animal, we are not putting them out of their misery, we are putting them out of our own misery.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 25th, 2018 at 11:50 PM

Title: Re: Catuskoṭi analysis used by the Buddha himself

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Incidentally, the "Noble Silence" itself is position 4, the eel-wiggler's.

The difference is that the amaravikṣepa has no thesis, and the Buddha, allegedly, has a thesis, which is dependent origination.

That is really the only thing separating the Buddhas and the eel-wrigglers.

Of course, above, when I said, "the Buddha, allegedly, has a thesis," the "a position, Vacchagotta, is something that the Tathāgata has done away with" (severe paraphrase) quote came to mind.

Is "no thesis" itself a thesis?

Wayfarer said:

I presume you're familiar with the fact that Nāgārjuna says that he maintains no thesis of his own? [Which is the point of 'the emptiness of emptiness'.] The point of the tetralemma is wholly deconstructive i.e. to show the contradictions in the opponent's view. But, he says, this can be done without actually advancing a view of one's own. Or so I understand.

Malcolm wrote:

The proposition to which Nāgārjuna was referring was a proposition about inherent existence, svabhāva, in the Vīṇābhāṣya.

The passage follows an argument where Nāgārjuna is proving the nonexistence of the inherent existence Nāgārjuna's non-Buddhist opponent is proposing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 25th, 2018 at 10:36 AM

Title: Re: Apang Tertan texts - English Translation?

Content:

TrimePema said:

Does anybody know of an english translation of the text containing the Apang Tertan 7 line prayer practices?

I have received the wang, lung, and tri from HHST but some ritual aspects were not fully explained, although he said they were explained in the lung (I figure this means if we're serious we should just read the text).

I know the tibetan text can be purchased from Vimala and then can be translated by someone-somewhere-maybe-if-I-pay-them but am hoping someone-somewhere has already done this.

Feel free to PM if necessary.

Malcolm wrote:

Lama Karma just did a retreat on this at Tara Mabdaja. Contact them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 25th, 2018 at 1:37 AM

Title: Re: TIPS? ADVICE? Leaving one sangha, looking for another, interested in Tergar/Mingyur

Content:

Arupajhana7 said:

Thank you so much everyone for all of the replies.

It seems that many people trust Mingyur in particular and the Tergar community in general.

.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, we do.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 25th, 2018 at 1:09 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Project Sunshine Phase 3 Final Report (Shambhala/Sakyong Mipham/etc)

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It looks like some people may be going to jail over this, if any of the allegations can be proven in court. As it stands, I don't see how Shambhala survives this without firing Mukpo, etc.

Karma Dorje said:

It's hard to see how they survive even if they fire Mukpo. If any civil suits are launched they could end up bankrupt.

Not to mention the entire Shambhala organization is premised on a "monarch" that is now radioactive. They can't just 'splain their way out of this one.

Malcolm wrote:

True.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 25th, 2018 at 12:25 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Project Sunshine Phase 3 Final Report (Shambhala/Sakyong Mipham/etc)

Content:

PeterC said:

I suspect what prompted the change in tactics was the report explicitly naming members of the cabal, rather than just pointing the finger at Mukpo - I.e. it finally sunk in that they may face liability too, and hence the pretence of 'peace and reconciliation' was dropped.

TheSynergist said:

Yeah, this is what I'm what I'm thinking, too. The enablers in the org were likely hoping to throw Mipham under the bus and move on, but now they are worried that might not be good enough.

Malcolm wrote:

It looks like some people may be going to jail over this, if any of the allegations can be proven in court. As it stands, I don't see how Shambhala survives this without firing Mukpo, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 24th, 2018 at 11:20 PM

Title: Re: TIPS? ADVICE? Leaving one sangha, looking for another, interested in Tergar/Mingyur

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is a Tergar group in Groton, Ma.

<https://tergar.org/communities-and-practice-groups/find-a-center-or-group/groton-practice-group/>

Description of Tergar curriculum.

<https://tergar.org/programs/what-is-the-path-of-liberation/>

Arupajhana7 said:

A former Shambhala member here,

I am fortunate that although I was close to taking Samaya with the Sakyong, I had not yet done so. So I am spared the devastating questions about whether I would be breaking Samaya by leaving the community. (Though I hope those I know who did are able to leave)

So I want to know what people think about changing to a new community. What should I consider? Have you ever done this? How long should one wait before diving all the way in to a new sangha?

I got the online Dzogchen transmission from Namkai Norbu some years back, but I also appreciate a structured approach. I recently restarted doing the very short daily practice he recommends to keep the connection to the transmission. But I am interested in doing a traditional Ngyondro.

I am impressed by Mingyur Rinpoche, both his history of practice, and his strong statements against abusive teachers. I think this is one of the main things I will be looking for now, I really only want to study with a teacher who has made strong statements against abuse and not made any that could be considered a defense of abusers (which is how I interpreted some of Dzongsar Kyentse's statements, for example).

I live in Massachusetts but not near any Tergar community. There are Zen and Insight Meditation places near me. Would doing Tergar's online program be legitimate? And once I get to the Vajrayana, can anyone tell me if the Sadhanas will be in English? I feel like this is important. To understand what I will be saying during a Sadhana practice, excluding the mantras.

I would probably be able to make trips to see Mingyur Rinpoche in NYC when he travels through once in a while.

Thank you!

Any tips and help will be much appreciated.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 24th, 2018 at 10:31 PM

Title: Re: Buddhist Project Sunshine Phase 3 Final Report (Shambhala/Sakyong Mipham/etc)

Content:

smcj said:

At this point I think it safe to say the courts will have a great deal of influence on how the Dharma comes to the West.

Malcolm wrote:

The state has always had a major influence over Buddhist schools in every country in which Buddhism has spread, including kingdoms in India.

The Tibetan state chose Vajrayāna over Chinese Mahāyāna. Various states in Southeast Asia chose Theravada over Mahāyāna. The Chinese Gvt. for centuries regulated entry into monastic life as well as the monasteries. The same is true in Japan.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 24th, 2018 at 7:00 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Project Sunshine Phase 3 Final Report (Shambhala/Sakyong Mipham/etc)

Content:

Wayfarer said:

Shambhala has issued a statement.

In a statement Thursday, Shambhala International rejected the report's findings.

"These allegations are not only unfounded, but they each are based on speculative and unsubstantiated claims made by a single unnamed source," the Buddhist organization said of one series of allegations in the report.

"For Project Sunshine to publish such salacious and defamatory information is grossly irresponsible."

The statement is a departure from the organization's response to earlier reports, which recognized that Shambhala was part of a "broader cultural reckoning in contemporary society."

<https://www.stcatharinesstandard.ca/news-story/8856866-new-allegations-against-buddhist-leader/>

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. So what. They cant be believed. Mukpo needs to be investigated by US authorities.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 24th, 2018 at 4:01 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

Aryjna said:

There's all kinds of shit in this one. Some of them, which are not sex-related, would be quite funny under different circumstances.

Edit: A lot of the material is really terrible. It is blatantly obvious that there is not the slightest room for doubt that he is a terrible choice for a teacher and should be in jail.

Malcolm wrote:

Not only is Mukpo going down, but if true, so is Pema Chodron:

"I was raped at the age of 21 by a Shambhala Center director. This led to a pregnancy and then a miscarriage. About a year later I approached Pema Chödrön to disclose what had happened. As a respected practitioner and also as a woman, it was my expectation that I would find an ally.

Instead, Ani Pema told me bluntly, "I don't believe you." I was shattered. After further discussion with her, Ani Pema then said, "Well, I wasn't there, but if it's true I suspect that you were into it."

To be not believed, and then to have it suggested to me that I was being untruthful about something so difficult, was retraumatizing to say the least. To this date, and despite having had opportunities, Pema Chödrön has never apologized to me for these comments.

What I would like to know is: what are Pema Chödrön's intentions in joining the Transition Team? If other survivors come forth with their stories, will she believe them? Will she discourage others from speaking out? Will she suggest to others that they secretly enjoyed it?

Through speaking out, it is my intention and wish that this may incite meaningful change and be of benefit to all beings."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 24th, 2018 at 3:37 AM

Title: Re: Materials on Namchö Zhitro

Content:

Dharmaswede said:

Ah, ok. I am curious about the practice because Lama Tsultrim Allione will give transmission for it online on September 9.

Malcolm wrote:

ChNN has a whole book on it. If you have ever attended a CHNN retreat, you already have it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 24th, 2018 at 3:17 AM

Title: Re: Materials on Namchö Zhitro

Content:

Dharmaswede said:

As the subject line says... I am looking for materials on the Namchö Zhitro.

Thank you.

Malcolm wrote:

The practice is only a single folio long, and it is mainly practiced in Dzogchen Community.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 24th, 2018 at 3:08 AM

Title: Re: Sapan on distinctions and diversity

Content:

passel said:

Ok. Wouldn't he have a problem w any assertion that didn't observe his criteria for canonicity? So any terma? Why limit the criticism to the KC?

Malcolm wrote:

I didn't. But the KC is the only terma that I have read that addresses the issue of the authenticity of termas in general in the way that it does.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 24th, 2018 at 3:06 AM

Title: Re: Jerusalem syndrome

Content:

cyril said:

Would it be accurate to ascribe this type of madness to gyalpo provocation?

Malcolm wrote:

Definitely a kind of provocation. Fascination with purity, etc., indicates devabhutagraha, i.e., possession by demonic devas.

cyril said:

So, what could possibly induce the provocation? Are those devas offended in any way, do they have an agenda, or one could be affected simply by being within their sphere of influence?

Malcolm wrote:

The general cause of provocation illnesses are non-virtuous actions, remaining isolated, etc. there are many causes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 24th, 2018 at 2:09 AM

Title: Re: Sapan on distinctions and diversity

Content:

Pero said:

What's wrong with Konchok Chidu?

Malcolm wrote:

The eight chapter tantra in the Konchok Chidu root texts asserts that Padmasambhava's treasure teachings are better than translations from Sanskrit since they are the direct voice of the sambhogkāya in Tibetan language.

passel said:

Do Sayapas practice Konchok Chidu? I thought it was a Nyingma terma cycle, so wonder what the problem would be for a Sakyapa- wouldn't they just expect that non-Sakya teachings would not meet Sakya criteria for authorship?

Malcolm wrote:

I am saying that Sapan would have a problem with this assertion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 24th, 2018 at 1:38 AM

Title: Re: Jerusalem syndrome

Content:

cyril said:

Would it be accurate to ascribe this type of madness to gyalpo provocation?

Malcolm wrote:

Definitely a kind of provocation. Fascination with purity, etc., indicates devabhutagraha, i.e., possession by demonic devas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 24th, 2018 at 1:04 AM

Title: Re: When is Bardo 1st day?

Content:

Miroku said:

What about khorwa tongtrug? And why can Zhitro work only for people who have done some Zhitro? Shouldn't it work as purification and also giving them a contact with the teachings?

Malcolm wrote:

Imagine reading the wrathful deities to your old catholic granny -- she will freak out.

Miroku said:

Oh yeah. Also I probably misread it. Here we are talking about recitations of bardo prayers and Barö thödol, not the practice of Zhitro right?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, we are. The Bardo Thodol is a book to be read for practitioners of less capacity to ensure they take rebirth in the nirmanakāya buddhafiels.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 24th, 2018 at 1:01 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

chimechodra said:

For anyone who is curious, Project Sunshine just released a third report. It's really bad. Especially this part:

During the summers of 2004-2005, Ann worked in the Sakyong's household at SMC. Where she was working, Ann had a clear view of the people who came to wait for their appointments with the Sakyong. Ann saw lots of people come, but she began to notice that there were parents bringing young teenage girls. The girls seemed nervous. The parents occasionally said something like, "This is such an honor for you to have this experience." Then a kusung would come for the girl and the parents would leave. Ann worked directly below the Sakyong's bedroom and since there was no air conditioning, in the summer the windows were open. Ann could hear what sounded distinctly like sexual encounters.

There were talks of having him return after his 1 year break from teaching. I don't think he'll be coming back from this.

Malcolm wrote:

These are serious felonies. If true, he is facing a lot of time in jail, eight years for each charge.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 24th, 2018 at 12:57 AM

Title: Re: Sapan on distinctions and diversity

Content:

dechenpa said:

Sapan's consistent point is to purify corruptions of the dharma by always pointing back to the sutras, sastras and tantras as sources of truth and exposing whatever does not appear in those sources as Tibetan innovations.

Malcolm wrote:

One wonders what Sapan would have made of Konchok Chidu, etc. And Lamdre itself is not immune to charges of Tibetan innovation.

Pero said:

What's wrong with Konchok Chidu?

Malcolm wrote:

The eight chapter tantra in the Konchok Chidu root texts asserts that Padmasambhava's treasure teachings are better than translations from Sanskrit since they are the direct voice of the sambhogkāya in Tibetan language.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 23rd, 2018 at 11:52 PM

Title: Re: Sapan on distinctions and diversity

Content:

dechenpa said:

Sapan's consistent point is to purify corruptions of the dharma by always pointing back to the sutras, sastras and tantras as sources of truth and exposing whatever does not appear in those sources as Tibetan innovations.

Malcolm wrote:

One wonders what Sapan would have made of Konchok Chidu, etc. And Lamdre itself is not immune to charges of Tibetan innovation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 23rd, 2018 at 11:38 PM

Title: Re: When is Bardo 1st day?

Content:

pemachophel said:

Tulku Yeshe Gyamtsho said a couple of months ago that reciting the Bardo prayers for someone else requires (at least) lung to be effective. Khenchen Tsultrim Lodro says that one should also have done ngondro and received (Zhi Thro) empowerment.

Malcolm wrote:

And ChNN states that in order for such recitations to be of benefit to the deceased, the deceased should have done some Zhitro practice in this life.

Changchog rites are a more effective way to assist those people in the bardo who have done no practice.

Miroku said:

What about khorwa tongdrug? Andy why can Zhitro work only for people who have done some Zhitro? Shouldn't it work as purification and also giving them a contact with the teachings?

Malcolm wrote:

Imagine reading the wrathful deities to your old catholic granny -- she will freak out.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 23rd, 2018 at 10:50 PM

Title: Re: When is Bardo 1st day?

Content:

pemachophel said:

Tulku Yeshe Gyamtsho said a couple of months ago that reciting the Bardo prayers for someone else requires (at least) lung to be effective. Khenchen Tsultrim Lodro says that one should also have done ngondro and received (Zhi Thro) empowerment.

Malcolm wrote:

And ChNN states that in order for such recitations to be of benefit to the deceased, the deceased should have done some Zhitro practice in this life.

Changchog rites are a more effective way to assist those people in the bardo who have done no practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 23rd, 2018 at 10:41 PM

Title: Re: Sadhana

Content:

Grigoris said:

From the introduction to the translation of Tantra of the Great Liberation (Mahanirvana Tantra) by Arthur Avalon:

"Whilst sadhana is, as stated a process for the stimulation of sattva guna (constructive qualities), it is evident that one form of it is not suitable to all. It must be adapted to the spiritual condition of the sishya (disciple), otherwise it will cause injury instead of good. Therefore persons who are not competent may not only be fruitless of any good result, but may even lead to evils which sadhana as a general principle is designed to prevent. Therefore it is said that it is better to follow one's own dharma than that, however exalted it be, of another."

Malcolm wrote:

What does this have to do with Buddhist sadhana practice?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 23rd, 2018 at 12:22 PM

Title: Re: When is Bardo 1st day?

Content:

Tenma said:

What does one do on the last day of the bardo? What prayers does one recite?

Malcolm wrote:

There is an entire literature devoted to just that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 23rd, 2018 at 2:35 AM

Title: Re: When is Bardo 1st day?

Content:

Tenma said:

Is it the day one dies? Or the day after?

Malcolm wrote:

Generally, the third day after outer respiration ceases, inner respiration ceases. In the case of some yogis however, inner respiration can continue for quite a number of days. When the inner respiration ceases, a tiny bit of mucous and blood leave the nostrils, signifying that one's consciousness has separated from the body.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 22nd, 2018 at 5:16 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Noriaki cites this example, from the Shōbōgenzō shizen bhikkhu, as presented in Pruning the Bodhi Tree, pg. 123:

Some people say that, because the enlightenment of the Buddhas and Tathagatas encompass the whole world, even a speck of dust manifests that enlightenment. Because that enlightenment encompasses both subject and the object, mountains, rivers, earth, sun, moon, stars, and the four illusions and three poisons express it as well. To see mountains and rivers is to see the Tathagathas, and the four illusions and three poisons are the Buddha-dharma. To see a speck of dust is to see the dharma-dhatu and each spontaneous act is a manifestation of supreme enlightenment. They say this is the great understanding and call it a Patriarchal transmission. In latter-day Sung China, those who subscribe to this view are as numerous as rice plants, hemp, bamboo, and reeds. Their [religious] lineage is unknown, but it is clear they do not understand Buddhism.

All and all an interesting book, quite relevant to the present discussion.

...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 22nd, 2018 at 4:37 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

passel said:

CB folks see original enlightenment (hongaku) and b.n. of the insentient as Panglossian justifications for fascism.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, their critique has echoes of Adorno.

Another interesting thing they do is try to show is that Dogen had a change of heart and rejected hongaku and BNI late in his life.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 22nd, 2018 at 3:53 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Sentient Light said:

This is a very long article in the Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy on Tiantai Buddhism that is quite thorough and good:

<https://plato.stanford.edu/entries/buddhism-tiantai/>

It showed me that the whole concept of the Buddhanature of insentient beings

Malcolm wrote:

If you read the Critical Buddhist folks, they are convinced that doctrines like this are completely outside of pale of Buddhadharmā and open the doorway to all kinds of deviations.

With respect to Zhanran's blanket identification of buddhadhātu with suchness, this presents some critical problems as well, not least of which is that BNI categorically denied in the Nirvana Sūtra, despite his attempt to justify it based on the same sūtra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 22nd, 2018 at 2:54 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Incidentally, we can call this a catuṣkoti; but we cannot call it a tetralemma, because one is not forced to pick one of these four alternatives. For example, a dilemma is where one must choose two different choices, one to the exclusion of the other.

Coëmgenu said:

Then why do we call the so-called "negative tetralemma" a tetralemma?

We don't choose one of these options from the list:

nasvato nāpiparato nadvābhyāṃ nāpyahetutaḥ

Malcolm wrote:

We do so because long ago a western translator was struggling for a term to describe a four-fold negation, and that is what he or she came up with.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 22nd, 2018 at 2:43 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

All in all, it offers an elegant solution, but if I may nitpick this one point:

The commentary says "everything is true" because the Buddha explains the invariable characteristic of absence.

Is this really an example of "everything is true"? Is the invariance of this characteristic of everything the same thing as everything being "true" in and of itself? And if the invariance is the only thing that is true, when why say "everything" is true?

Malcolm wrote:

It is true that everything lacks a self. That is the truth of everything.

Coëmgenu said:

It is true that everything is false. That is what I'm seeing that as, essentially.

It's coherent, but it's not really "everything is true". It's "everything is untrue is true".

Malcolm wrote:

You are missing the broader point here: which is the abandonment of the afflictive obscuration that results from imputing a self onto conventionally valid phenomena.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 22nd, 2018 at 2:31 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Further, "everything is true" is valid because the Bhagavan explains the invariable characteristic of the absence of I and mine as knowable in order to abandon the afflictive obscuration.

Coëmgenu said:

All in all, it offers an elegant solution, but if I may nitpick this one point:

The commentary says "everything is true" because the Buddha explains the invariable characteristic of absence.

Is this really an example of "everything is true"? Is the invariance of this characteristic of everything the same thing as everything being "true" in and of itself? And if the invariance is the only thing that is true, when why say "everything" is true?

Malcolm wrote:

It is true that everything lacks a self. That is the truth of everything.

Incidentally, we can call this a catuṣkoti; but we cannot call it a tetralemma, because one is not forced to pick one of these four alternatives. For example, a dilemma is where one must choose two different choices, one to the exclusion of the other.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 22nd, 2018 at 2:02 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

You need to demonstrate that.

If you claim that these are a list of perspectives the Buddha has taught in very specific contexts the first step would be saying what those contexts were, and then maybe outlining which edifying results they lead to in their context, if you were feeling particularly generous.

Malcolm wrote:

You can read the commentaries on this point.

Coëmgenu said:

And they don't really say,

Malcolm wrote:

sarvaṃ tathyaṃ na vā tathyaṃ tathyaṃ cātathyameva ca|

naivātathyaṃ naiva tathyametadbuddhānuśāsanam

They do. For example, the Akutobhya states:

What is the way of explaining in mundane convention? It is explained here:

Everything is true; untrue; true and untrue;
and neither true nor untrue: that is the Buddha's doctrine.

"Everything is true" because the sense bases such as the eye and so, and the objects such as form and so on, do not contradict the truth of convention (vyavahāra). "[Everything is] untrue" because based on ultimate truth, whatever appears does not exist in that way because its nature is totally unestablished like an illusion. "[Everything is] true and untrue" because of depending on the aspects of the two truths. "[Everything is] neither true nor untrue" because at the time of realization, the yogi does not conceptualize the suchness of all phenomena in all aspects.

Further, "everything is true" is valid because the Bhagavan explains the invariable characteristic of the absence of I and mine as knowable in order to abandon the afflictive obscuration. "[Everything is] untrue" is valid because he describes an agent who hears, reflects, and meditates because there is a characteristic of consciousness that is endowed with a sense of "I have" and a sense of "mine." "[Everything is] true and untrue" is valid with respect to the conventions of the world and the śāstras. "[Everything is] neither true nor untrue" is valid because the ultimate nonarising of all phenomena is the domain of both conceptual and nonconceptual consciousnesses, however, any entities discriminated as false and discriminated as true do not exist that way.

"That is the doctrine of the Buddha" means whatever teaching is introduced by those four steps in order to truly obtain the benefit of sentient beings, that is a teaching by the Bhagavān Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 22nd, 2018 at 12:09 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Queequeg said:

FYI

<https://northwestern.academia.edu/JianeShi>

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, thanks. I've read those.

This is the problem:

Among the Chinese Buddhist thinkers, Jingxi Zhanran (711-782) in the Tiantai School is the strongest advocate of insentient beings possessing Buddha-nature. He provides his rationale primarily from the perspective of the all-pervasive quality of Buddha-nature, which he considers synonymous with suchness. This is where Zhanran goes off course.

Queequeg said:

Zhiyi's statements—"ignorance is identical to dharma nature" (wuming ji faxing 無明即法性) and "delusion is identical to bodhi” (fannao ji puti 煩惱即菩提)—are good examples of the third category of identity, although he never deals with the issue of insentient things’ Buddha-nature

Malcolm wrote:
Backs up my point.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, August 21st, 2018 at 11:01 PM
Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?
Content:
Queequeg said:
Simply put...

Malcolm wrote:
It is very clear that BNI is a later addition to the Tien tai school, and is not found in the writings of Zhi Yi.

You certainly have not shown that it can even be inferred from Zhi Yi's writings.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, August 21st, 2018 at 9:08 PM
Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?
Content:

Coëmgenu said:
No, it's four lemmata. You can't just pretend something isn't what it is.

You need to argue your points.

Malcolm wrote:
No. Those four are not arguments in a proof. That is the point.

Coëmgenu said:
You need to demonstrate that.

If you claim that these are a list of perspectives the Buddha has taught in very specific contexts the first step would be saying what those contexts were, and then maybe outlining which edifying results they lead to in their context, if you were feeling particularly generous.

Malcolm wrote:
You can read the commentaries on this point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 21st, 2018 at 11:32 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

一切實非實 亦實亦非實

All is real, all is unreal, all is both real and unreal

非實非非實 是名諸佛法

All is neither real nor unreal, this is called all Buddhas' dharma

(T1564.23c16 Āryanāgārjunasya Mūlamadhyamakakārikāyām Ātmaparīkṣā)

Ven Zhiyi probably read this positive tetralemma from Ven Nāgārjuna.

Malcolm wrote:

That is not a tetralemma. It is a list of perspectives the Buddha has taught in very specific contexts.

Coëmgenu said:

No, it's four lemmata. You can't just pretend something isn't what it is.

You need to argue your points.

Malcolm wrote:

No. Those four are not arguments in a proof. That is the point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 21st, 2018 at 11:08 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The point of the tetralemma is not to make assertions. All you done here is now make four equally faulty identity propositions "a rock is a; is not a; is both a and not a; and is neither a nor not a." This is just not how the tetralemma is used in Buddhist texts by anyone. The tetralemma, used properly, is a structured negation.

Coëmgenu said:

一切實非實 亦實亦非實

All is real, all is unreal, all is both real and unreal

非實非非實 是名諸佛法

All is neither real nor unreal, this is called all Buddhas' dharma

(T1564.23c16 Āryanāgārjunasya Mūlamadhyamakakārikāyām Ātmaparīkṣā)

Ven Zhiyi probably read this positive tetralemma from Ven Nāgārjuna.

Malcolm wrote:

That is not a tetralemma. It is a list of perspectives the Buddha has taught in very specific contexts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 21st, 2018 at 6:43 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Notwithstanding, the reference to the quote does address the issue of "rock is suchness"/"ultimate is relative".

If you think that passage is about samatha and vipasyana, you're missing the full import. Again, that passage is a conclusion of a significantly more involved argument. At this point, samatha and vipasyana are not distinguishable from reality itself... that's what the reference to thoughts integrated with reality refers to.

Malcolm wrote:

No, the passage is about śamatha and vipaśyāna unified from the start, not as in some presentations, one alternating with the other. In āryan equipoise, the mind cannot be distinguished from the ultimate which is its object.

Queequeg said:

The two truths are not independent realities— every object possesses two natures which are the objects of veridical and nonveridical cognitions respectively -- ultimate truth is the object of a veridical cognition of a given thing, such as a rock; relative truth is the object of a nonveridical cognition of a given thing, such as a rock (we don't need to address here the difference between conventional truth and delusion).

Relative truth is not nonveridical. It is relative.

Malcolm wrote:

A relative truth by definition is the object of a false or nonveridical cognition. A false cognition of what, you might ask? There are two kinds of false cognitions in this respect; false with respect to natures but not with respect to aspects. An example would be a realists assertion that atoms truly exist. Then there is delusion -- seeing two moons in the sky. Conventional truths are the former kind of relative truth.

Queequeg said:

For example, if one perceives the hardness and solidity of a rock, one is not perceiving the suchness of the rock. If one is perceiving the suchness of the rock, its emptiness, absence of inherent existence, etc., one is not perceiving the conventional attributes of a rock. The gist of the complete statement above is that when one is in āryan equipoise, all sense datum are perceptions of the ultimate nature of things. This is perfectly fine.

No one can have a problem with this who understands Mahāyāna Buddhism.

In Zhiyi's Sudden and Perfect, the distinction you draw between relative perceptions and ultimate perception are not there, they are simultaneous. This is what he means by the Middle - the complete identity of relative and absolute. To distinguish the two modes of perception is the definition of the Separate or Distinct Truth.

I understood the point of the passage. I agree with the point of the passage -- when one is āryan equipoise, all experience is the experience of the ultimate, smelling a flower, being hit on the head with a rock, and so on. In that equipoise, there is nothing that is not an experience of the ultimate. Some other schools may imagine that conventional things disappear in such an equipoise, but that is not correct. It still does not mean your identity proposition is defensible.

The identity is actually the point of one of the central Tiantai teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

As you state it, it is incoherent, since you keep making identity propositions which do not stand up to analysis.

Queequeg said:

The point of the tetralemma is not to make assertions. All you done here is now make four equally faulty identity propositions "a rock is a; is not a; is both a and not a; and is neither a nor not a." This is just not how the tetralemma is used in Buddhist texts by anyone. The tetralemma, used properly, is a structured negation.

Indeed. After that this was my conclusion:

We come to the conclusion that rocks are inconceivable.

Malcolm wrote:

[/quote]

But that is not what happens in your use of the tetralemma, you just make four mutually exclusive statements. You do not end up in inconceivability, you end up with four propositions about a rock. You'd get laughed out of Nalanda.

Your use is like this: "A rock is water; a rock is not water; a rock is both water and not water; a rock is neither water nor not water." These are not four negations, which is what the tetralemma is supposed to be. These are four affirmations.

A proper tetralemma is, for example, the tetralemma that refutes arising in the MMK:

An existence does not arise from an existent.

An existent does not arise from a nonexistent.
A nonexistent does not arise from an existent.
A nonexistent does not arise from a nonexistent.
Where can there be arising?

This kind of properly formed tetralemma results inexpressibility/inconceivability because it leads one to it through negation, not through affirmation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 21st, 2018 at 5:42 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

"Whatever is made to be the object [of contemplation], it is the Middle; there is nothing that is not truly real [ultimate]."

-Mohezhikuan

By the way, there is no middle, asserting a middle is a mistaken conclusion.

Queequeg said:

LOL.

Really, you don't know what you are talking about at this point when it comes to Tiantai. Seriously.

Malcolm wrote:

Just saying, asserting a middle is an error.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 21st, 2018 at 5:38 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

When one take ultimate reality as one's contemplation, of course there is nothing that is not ultimate in that contemplation. That contemplation itself is focused upon the ultimate. Such sentiments as this are simply not controversial at all in Indian Buddhism, etc.

Queequeg said:

LOL. You're the one arguing with everything I write. I posted that quote in full in my second post in this thread and that frames everything I've written.

However, this passage cannot be used to support the contention, "a rock is suchness."

This is merely a statement on unified śamatha and vipaśyāna.

I never made that claim. Please stop doing that....

Malcolm wrote:

Then there is no point to your bringing it into the discussion.

Queequeg said:

The two truths are not independent realities— every object possesses two natures which are the objects of veridical and nonveridical cognitions respectively -- ultimate truth is the object of a veridical cognition of a given thing, such as a rock; relative truth is the object of a nonveridical cognition of a given thing, such as a rock (we don't need to address here the difference between conventional truth and delusion).

For example, if one perceives the hardness and solidity of a rock, one is not perceiving the suchness of the rock. If one is perceiving the suchness of the rock, its emptiness, absence of inherent existence, etc., one is not perceiving the conventional attributes of a rock. The gist of the complete statement above is that when one is in āryan equipoise, all sense datum are perceptions of the ultimate nature of things. This is perfectly fine. No one can have a problem with this who understands Mahāyāna Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, Zhiyi does critique that approach.[/quote]

Which approach? The idea that the two truths not independent realities? That they different kinds of cognitions? Be more precise.

Queequeg said:

That passage we've both quoted actually critiques the proposition of a contemplation dwelling exclusively on the ultimate. Its an inferior contemplation that does not lead to awakening. Its not spelled out here - you'd have to refer to the context of that passage. That passage does not mean what you think it means.

Malcolm wrote:

I understood the point of the passage. I agree with the point of the passage -- when one is āryan equipoise, all experience is the experience of the ultimate, smelling a flower, being hit on the head with a rock, and so on. In that equipoise, there is nothing that is not an experience of the ultimate. Some other schools may imagine that conventional things disappear in such an equipoise, but that is not correct. It still does not mean your identity proposition is defensible.

Queequeg said:

But this still does not mean that your identity proposition—rocks are suchness— is valid at all.

I did not propose that. That is an incomplete representation of what I keep writing. You'd have to also go through the other three assertions of the tetralemma. Rocks are not suchness. Rocks are both suchness and not suchness. Rocks are neither suchness nor not suchness.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't have to guess at what you might write, I have only to deal with what you do write. This is the first time in this conversation that you have brought up the idea of a tetralemma (and in so doing, abused it completely, committing yet another error). The point of the tetralemma is not to make assertions. All you done here is now make four equally faulty identity propositions "a rock is a; is not a; is both a and not a; and is neither a nor not a." This is just not how the tetralemma is used in Buddhist texts by anyone. The tetralemma, used properly, is a structured negation. This is why we see the Buddha rejecting tetrallemmas formed as identity propositions in other schools.

Your on firmer ground if you said something like "Matter is empty; emptiness is matter; there is no matter apart from emptiness; there is no emptiness apart from matter." This kind of identity proposition is absolutely faultless. You can substitute rock if you like with no harm at all: "A rock is empty; emptiness is a rock; there is not rock apart from emptiness; there is no emptiness apart from rock." This points to the fact that any given thing's ultimate nature is mutually inclusive with its relative nature -- the two are inseparable. But this still does not mean that "the buddhanature of insentient things" is a valid Buddhist doctrine.

Queequeg said:

We come to the conclusion that rocks are inconceivable. Saying that they have Buddhanature is a conditioned statement that is ultimately inconceivable. It doesn't mean what you think it means. I keep saying this over and over.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a statement that cannot be accepted at face value at all.

Queequeg said:

But I'll take the rest of your comment:

If rocks are suchness, there could be no nonveridical perceptions of rocks at all and therefore the distinction Zhi Yi is making here becomes meaningless. It becomes meaningless to talk about a "perfect and sudden calming-and-contemplation" that from the very beginning takes ultimate reality as its object, because if every relative thing was suchness and not different at all from suchness, then all perceptions would be "The perfect and sudden calming-and-contemplation."

You might actually be catching on here. Even a completely mistaken perception about a rock is real.

Malcolm wrote:

It is conventionally real, of course. Even the contemplation of the ultimate is merely something conventional, not actually ultimate per se.

Queequeg said:

That does not mean it is wholly lacking in reality - just not the reality that the mistaken person might think it is.

Malcolm wrote:

This why all entities bear two natures: one ultimate, the other relative, including buddhahood. It is also merely a convention, not actually real.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 21st, 2018 at 4:44 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Unknown said:

"Whatever is made to be the object [of contemplation], it is the Middle; there is nothing that is not truly real [ultimate]."

-Mohezhikuan

Malcolm wrote:

By the way, there is no middle, asserting a middle is a mistaken conclusion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 21st, 2018 at 4:41 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

A rock or a stone, or whatever you want to call a mineral composite does not have buddhanature because it is not the function of a rock to attain buddhahood since a rock has no mind and is not sentient. A sentient being has a mind, and so is capable of the function of attaining buddhahood, not because there is some ultimate buddhaness. If there were ultimate buddhaness then we could claim that rocks have buddhanature. There is no ultimate buddhaness, thus, claiming a rock has buddhanature is no better than asserting that water is dry.

Queequeg said:

I know. Based on your criteria, you're right. Yes. Yes.

Malcolm wrote:

Not my criteria— conventionality is the criteria of what is known to the world. That is the criteria by which arguments are made or broken.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 21st, 2018 at 4:38 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

And as I pointed out, prior to you making your identity proposition, it is conventionally acceptable to do so. But it is not conventionally acceptable to assert the identity proposition "A rock is suchness." It's like saying, "the relative is ultimate."

Queequeg said:

This may be a point of impasse.

"Whatever is made to be the object [of contemplation], it is the Middle; there is nothing that is not truly real [ultimate]."

-Mohezhikuan

Malcolm wrote:

You did not provide the beginning of the passage, so this is a misleading citation.... Here is the complete passage:

The perfect and sudden calming-and-contemplation from the very beginning takes ultimate reality (shih-hsiang) as its object. No matter what the object of contemplation might be, it is seen to be identical to the middle. There is here nothing that is not true reality (chen-shih). When one fixes [the mind] on the dharmadhātu [as object] and unifies one's mindfulness with the dharmadhātu [as it is], then there is not a single sight nor smell that is not the middle way.

When one take ultimate reality as one's contemplation, of course there is nothing that is not ultimate in that contemplation. That contemplation itself is focused upon the ultimate. Such sentiments as this are simply not controversial at all in Indian Buddhism, etc.

However, this passage cannot be used to support the contention, "a rock is suchness." This is merely a statement on unified śamatha and vipaśyāna.

Queequeg said:

...You seem to be working from a perspective where the Two Truths are distinct and arranged in some manner or another. Whatever your approach, this is explicitly considered an inferior teaching in Tiantai. This is the criticism inherent in the teaching on the Threefold Inclusive Truth.

Malcolm wrote:

No, that is not the perspective I am working from.

The two truths are not independent realities— every object possesses two natures which are the objects of veridical and nonveridical cognitions respectively -- ultimate truth is the object of a veridical cognition of a given thing, such as a rock; relative truth is the object of a nonveridical cognition of a given thing, such as a rock (we don't need to address here the difference between conventional truth and delusion).

For example, if one perceives the hardness and solidity of a rock, one is not perceiving the suchness of the rock. If one is perceiving the suchness of the rock, its emptiness, absence of inherent existence, etc., one is not perceiving the conventional attributes of a rock. The gist of the complete statement above is that when one is in āryan equipoise, all sense datum are perceptions of the ultimate nature of things. This is perfectly fine. No one can have a problem with this who understands Mahāyāna Buddhism.

But this still does not mean that your identity proposition—rocks are suchness—is valid at all. If rocks are suchness, there could be no nonveridical perceptions of rocks at all and therefore the distinction Zhi Yi is making here becomes meaningless. It becomes meaningless to talk about a "perfect and sudden calming-and-contemplation" that from the very beginning takes ultimate reality as its object, because if every relative thing was suchness and not different at all from suchness, then all perceptions would be "The perfect and sudden calming-and-contemplation."

Queequeg said:

You can cite all the scripture you want... Tiantai makes a break.

Malcolm wrote:

Not so far.

Queequeg said:

Again, I'll refer you to Zhiyi's expositions on the Threefold Inclusive Truth.

Malcolm wrote:

What you have presented so far does not justify your identity proposition: "rocks are suchness." So at this point, I have to conclude this is your specific misunderstanding, not Zhi Yi's.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 21st, 2018 at 3:03 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Sigh. This is what I've been saying all along. You can invoke convention, but no one else can. Got it.

Malcolm wrote:

An example of a convention is something which is functional in the world. Arguments which do not stand up to convention are false arguments.

Claiming that a rock has buddhanature violates convention because rocks do not have minds. It is that simple.

For example, claiming that water is dry is a violation of convention; claiming there are four moons in the August night sky on planet Earth is a violation of convention; claiming that the pink elephants you see because of detoxing on alcohol are real is a violation of convention.

Queequeg said:

Right. See Anders' post above as an example. Compare the meaning of Arya before and after the Buddha redefined the term.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a non-argument. You can certainly call a dog a lion, but it will never roar, only bark. Diachronic changes in language do not impact the argument that conventions are called conventions because they describe functions. For example, we call an assemblage of mechanical parts a car due to its function, not because we think there is some ultimate carness. You can call it a motorized buggy, etc., but the point is that a car is car because it functions like a car. A rock or a stone, or whatever you want to call a mineral composite does not have buddhanature because it is not the function of a rock to attain buddhahood since a rock has no mind and is not sentient. A sentient being has a mind, and so is capable of the function of attaining buddhahood, not because there is some ultimate buddhaness. If there were ultimate buddhaness then we could claim that rocks have buddhanature. There is no ultimate buddhaness, thus, claiming a rock has buddhanature is no better than asserting that water is dry.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 21st, 2018 at 2:56 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Your statement suffers from the problem of not distinguishing dharmin and dharmatā. While one cannot claim that dharmin and dharmatā, in this case a rock and its suchness, are absolutely different, neither can one claim they are identical.

Queequeg said:

And your statement suffered from distinguishing them.

Malcolm wrote:

And as I pointed out, prior to you making your identity proposition, it is conventionally acceptable to do so. But it is not conventionally acceptable to assert the identity proposition "A rock is suchness." It's like saying, "the relative is ultimate."

Queequeg said:

However, it is a category error to assert that the ultimate is the specific characteristic (svalakṣaṇa) of a given relative entity.

Its only an error if you assert that the ultimate is exclusively the specific characteristic.

Malcolm wrote:

A svalakṣaṇa cannot be a samanyalakṣaṇa and vice versa by definition. Thus, the characteristic of the ultimate is exclusively a general characteristic.

The Buddha demonstrates this by stating, "All the characteristics of the compounded cannot become the general characteristic, the characteristic of the ultimate...the characteristic of the ultimate cannot be designated as the characteristic of the universally afflicted, because all characteristics of the compounded would become the general characteristic, the characteristic of the ultimate."

Queequeg said:

Its also error to reify the distinction.

Malcolm wrote:

But it is not an error to make this necessary distinction. Why? Because otherwise, as pointed out in the Samdhinirmocana sūtra, if one does not make a distinction, all nonveridical cognitions become cognitions of the ultimate, and this is a very negative consequence. It is not as simple as the summary statement makes it seem. The Buddha explain four reasons why stating the ultimate and relative are the absolutely same are faulty, as well as four reasons why stating they are absolutely different is faulty; but in reality, the first four faults are more grave than the latter four.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 21st, 2018 at 1:42 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In the realm of convention

Queequeg said:

Sigh. This is what I've been saying all along. You can invoke convention, but no one else can. Got it.

Malcolm wrote:

An example of a convention is something which is functional in the world. Arguments which do not stand up to convention are false arguments.

Claiming that a rock has buddhanature violates convention because rocks do not have minds. It is that simple.

For example, claiming that water is dry is a violation of convention; claiming there are four moons in the August night sky on planet Earth is a violation of convention; claiming that the pink elephants you see because of detoxing on alcohol are real is a violation of convention.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 21st, 2018 at 1:36 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Here, we're talking about two broad and deep Buddhist traditions that broke off and evolved separately in response to the needs of different groups of people who speak different languages and have different cultures. Insisting a word can have only have one meaning in this context evinces a lack of flexibility and is doomed to go no where.

Malcolm wrote:

Insisting that rocks literally possess buddhadhātu, tathāgatagarbha, etc., because they also, like sentient beings, are permeated by suchness is a major fail.

Queequeg said:

Not permeated. They are suchness. Are you positing that suchness is something distinct from the thing that exhibits suchness? This is not just an idle critique.

Malcolm wrote:

Your statement suffers from the problem of not distinguishing dharmin and dharmatā. While one cannot claim that dharmin and dharmatā, in this case a rock and its suchness, are absolutely different, neither can one claim they are identical.

The Buddha discusses this problem in detail in the Samdhinirmocana Sūtra, in Chapter Three. One must distinguish between the ultimate and the compounded, but this does not mean they have no relation, like a sun and its rays. As the Buddha says in the Samdhinirmocana, the ultimate is the general characteristic (samanyalakṣaṇa) of the relative.

However, it is a category error to assert that the ultimate is the specific characteristic (svalakṣaṇa) of a given relative entity. But even worse, if you assert the identity proposition "rocks are suchness," you are asserting that a compounded thing, a rock, is ultimate. That makes you a realist.

The Buddha asserts that stating an absolutely identity or difference between the ultimate and the relative are both problematical. He concludes this chapter by stating:

The characteristic of compounded entities and the ultimate is the characteristic of being neither the same nor different; those who conceive sameness and difference are improperly oriented.

On the other hand, the Buddha states nowhere that making conventional distinctions between dharmin and dharmatā is similarly fraught. In fact, as you know, Nāgārjuna points out that it is a great fault not to recognize the distinction between the two truths.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 21st, 2018 at 12:31 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Queequeg said:

What is the difference between an emanation and its source?

Malcolm wrote:

The sun and its rays. The rays depend on the sun, the sun does not depend on its rays.

Queequeg said:

This posits a source distinct from its manifestations.

That's intellectually awkward.

Malcolm wrote:

In the realm of convention, there is nothing awkward about it at all. A impression depends on a seal, but a seal does not depend on an impression. Ultimately, sources and manifestations do not survive analysis, but this does not prevent us from drinking water from wells.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 20th, 2018 at 11:39 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Here, we're talking about two broad and deep Buddhist traditions that broke off and evolved separately in response to the needs of different groups of people who speak different languages and have different cultures. Insisting a word can have only have one meaning in this context evinces a lack of flexibility and is doomed to go no where.

Malcolm wrote:

Insisting that rocks literally possess buddhadhātu, tathāgatagarbha, etc., because they also, like sentient beings, are permeated by suchness is a major fail. It has nothing to do with cultural needs, and arguing from cultural needs makes for very poorly Dharmology.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 20th, 2018 at 11:34 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

Rocks can be emanations of Buddha but rocks do not possess Buddha nature because they do not possess minds, thus they cannot be enlightened.

Queequeg said:

What is the difference between an emanation and its source?

Malcolm wrote:

The sun and its rays. The rays depend on the sun, the sun does not depend on its rays.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 20th, 2018 at 11:03 PM

Title: Re: Jayarava's New Thesis on Heart Sutra: Sanskrit Version Deliberate Forgery by Tang Chinese

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Then of course there is this from Wonchu's commentary on the Heart Sutra:

In other words, when Wonchuk wrote this, there were already two translations of the Heart Sūtra in circulation, an "old" one, and one revised on the basis of a Sanskrit original by Hsuan Tsang. This fact is mentioned by Wonchuk four times.

Antiochus said:

I believe Jayarava did "address" this part in the first and second essays linked above. Essentially he agrees by the late 7th century Wonchuk does have a Sanskrit version. But since Wonchuk never avowed the Indian authenticity of that Sanskrit text openly, one way or the other, in his Heart Sutra commentary, it appears suspicious.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, in fact Wonchuk does avow the authenticity of the Sanskrit copy with which he is familiar by pointing out flaws in the earlier translation at his disposal. This itself is a testimony to the fact that Wonchuk regards the text as authentic. If he did not think it authentic, he never would have bothered composing a commentary. Esteemed paṇḍitas like Wonchuk don't waste their time writing commentaries on texts they regard as of questionable provenance. There is also the fact that he addresses the Heart Sūtra in his commentary on the Saṃdhinirmocana Sūtra when he discusses the different names used at the beginning of sūtras:

Some are also called by two names, such as the Mtshams sbyor nam par grol ba'i mdo (unidentified) and Prajñāpāramitā-hṛdaya...The Prajñāpāramitā-hṛdaya is called two names [Bhagavāti and Prajñāpāramitāhridaya] because the compiler condensed it from the extensive texts.

Here, the sdud pa po, the compiler, refers to the hearer, "Thus have I heard...", i.e. Ananda. Whether we accept this or not, for Wonchuk, this text was compiled out of the extensive PP literature by Ananda himself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 20th, 2018 at 10:34 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

in general, tathāgatagarbha is identified as the dharmakāya encased in afflictions. This is not novel at all.

Coëmgenu said:

I think the italics shines throughout the world was being interpreted as the dharmakāya encased in "the world/loka", as in an insentient dharmakāya, or at least one shining through insentience. But I do not want to make too many assertions about what Yuren meant. I'm not him. That's just how I took it.

Yuren said:

You interpreted it perfectly. That was exactly the intention behind the italics.

Malcolm wrote:

The question isn't your intention, the question is the intention of the text you are citing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 20th, 2018 at 10:18 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Your questions are irrelevant because they do not address the distinction between a sentient being (sattva) and an insensible thing (acetana).

Sherab said:

The questions are relevant if sunyata is the same as dependent arising.

Why? Because dependent arising is the reason why there is the phenomena of sentient beings and inanimate things. If you disagree with this, please explain why you disagree. Malcolm, I shall assume that your silence means that you are unable to disagree with my statement above. If so, then since for you suchness is sunyata and since sunyata is dependent arising (assumed by your above-mentioned silence), please respond if you can to my earlier questions reproduced below for your convenience:

If by suchness, you meant dependent arising, then your statement above implies that both inanimate things and sentient beings are dependently arisen. No problem here.

But when you say that the difference between inanimate things and sentient beings is that sentient beings are permeated with consciousness, are you saying that consciousness is not dependently arisen? If yes, then how does consciousness exist? Beyond suchness?

If you say that consciousness is dependently arisen, then is that dependent arising process distinct from the dependent arising process for inanimate things? If you say they are not distinct, then what is consciousness can become inanimate through the same dependent arising process and what is inanimate can become conscious through the same dependent arising process. Is this your position?

If you say that the dependent arising process is distinct, then the realm of phenomena necessarily is a duality of the inanimate and the conscious. Is this your position?

By answering the above questions, readers can then decide whether your arguments on the distinction between a sentient being and an insensible thing make sense or not. As it stands, your arguments appear to reflect an internally inconsistent or incoherent position on sentient being and insensible thing.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this not the case. And your questions are still irrelevant. They do not address any substantive topic I have raised.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 20th, 2018 at 9:26 AM

Title: Re: Jayarava's New Thesis on Heart Sutra: Sanskrit Version Deliberate Forgery by Tang Chinese

Content:

MiphamFan said:

He's been spinning bullshit for years and hasn't even learned Chinese. What I can see from the citations above basically seems like he is looking up dictionary definitions and arbitrarily picking them to suit his needs.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 20th, 2018 at 4:42 AM

Title: Re: Jayarava's New Thesis on Heart Sutra: Sanskrit Version Deliberate Forgery by Tang Chinese

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Then of course there is this from Wonchu'ks commentary on the Heart Sutra:

As for the “Kuan-zizai Bodhisattva”, the first part of [the sūtra], [that is, from “Kuan-zizai Bodhisattva ... ” to “crosses over all sufferings and calamities”] may be subdivided in two [ways]: first, by indicating the person who can contemplate; second, by illustrating the essence of the contemplating wisdom. [The “Kuan-zizai Bodhisattva”] refers to the first [approach], to indicate the person who can contemplate. According to the old version of the translation [of the Praj@2p2ramit2-s^tras], the Kuan-shi-yin is designated as the one who contemplates the sounds of the world. By calling the name of [Kuan-shi-yin] Bodhisattva, accompanied with verbal deeds, [sentient beings] are saved from all disasters. This is how the name is established and called Kuan-shi-yin. Yet the power to contemplate bodily and mental deeds is not revealed [in the name of Kuan-shi-yin]. However, the “Kuan-zizai” mentioned in this scripture refers to the one who internally realizes the twofold emptiness while externally contemplating the three deeds effortlessly and acting at his/her unrestricted discretion. Therefore [he/she] is named “Kuan-zizai.”

Here, he makes a point about the difference in translating Avalokiteśvara's name between the old translation and the revised version done by Hsuan Tsang.

And:

A version [of the Heart Sūtra] states that “[The Bodhisattva] illuminatingly sees that the five aggregates, etc., are all empty.” Although there are two different versions, the latter [that is, the new version] is the correct one because the word “etc.” is found in the original Sanskrit scripture. [The meaning of] “etc.”described in the latter [version] should be understood based on [the doctrine of Dharmapāla].

And here is another example where an old and revised version are mentioned:

(i) In interpreting the name, the old [version] called it nirvāṇa in Sanskrit or niwon, which may be translated as “tranquil extinction” in [the Chinese] language. Hsüan-tsang of T'ang China called it parinirvāṇa, which means “perfect stillness” because it is ultimately free from obstructions, saṃsāra and disturbances. Yet in order to preserve the name [used] in the old [version], it is called nirvāṇa.

And:

The translation of [“Śāriputra”] into “shen-tzu (身子)” in the old version is an incorrect one.

-- An English Translation of the Banya paramilda simgyeong chan: Wonch'uk's Commentary on the Heart Sūtra, B. Hyun Choo.

In other words, when Wonchuk wrote this, there were already two translations of the Heart Sūtra in circulation, an "old" one, and one revised on the basis of a Sanskrit original by Hsuan Tsang. This fact is mentioned by Wonchuk four times.

Jayarava also misrepresents this text, in a characteristic manner:

The wording used by Woncheuk is 簡 "selected, gleaned" from 諸般若 "various Prajñā(pāramitā sūtras)" (T 33.543.b.18).

But this is not what Wongchuk says. What he actually says is:

Since [this text] selects the essential outlines from all the Prajñāpāramitāsūtras, it has only the main chapter, without introduction and conclusion, just as the Kuan-yin ching (Avalokiteśvara-saṅgraha) is not composed of three sections.

This is a completely different assertion than what Jayarava presents.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 20th, 2018 at 3:47 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Coemgenu said:

There is another precedent for the Buddhahood of Insentient[ce], but instead of coming from India, it comes from Theravāda modernism:

Malcolm wrote:

Lot of Theravadin materialists out there these days, thanks to Buddhadasa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 20th, 2018 at 3:06 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Zen on enlightenment and post-enlightenment

Content:

florin said:

There are lots of dzogchenpa's that hold the following view:

When the mind is deluded, that is cyclic existence.

If the mind is undeluded, that is called enlightenment.

Unfortunately this is completely incorrect .

krodha said:

Such a view is not incorrect. The fact that phenomena are already liberated does not mean you possess a working knowledge of this.

Vairocana:

At the time of vidyā, wisdom arises as the dhātu; at the time of avidyā, wisdom appears as samsara.

florin said:

The idea was that the view from that passage does not represent the teaching of dzogchen.

You cannot hold that view and yet consider yourself a dzogchenpa .

Malcolm wrote:

Of course one can accept Vairocana's statement. Otherwise, there is no purpose at all in distinguishing sems and rig pa, etc. It is an entirely different statement than the one being critiqued by TNR. Here "wisdom" is ye shes, a synonym of byang chub sems.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 20th, 2018 at 3:03 AM

Title: Re: Jayarava's New Thesis on Heart Sutra: Sanskrit Version Deliberate Forgery by Tang Chinese

Content:

Queequeg said:

The canon also repeatedly tells us: its all stories, all upaya.

PeterC said:

Well, yes, but that doesn't mean we don't care where teachings come from, or that we have no criteria for deciding whether something is or isn't the dharma. Jayarava's goals are not without merit. However his focus on this sutra is somewhat pointless, since even if he succeeded in proving his thesis, it wouldn't change our understanding or practice.

Malcolm wrote:

Not only this, but it is not like Hsuan Tsang had no contemporaries who would have pilloried him. For example not only did Wongchuk, Husan Tsang contemporary and colleague, write a commentary on the Heart Sutra, he mentions it at least twice in his massive Great Commentary on the Saṃdhinirmocana Sūtra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 20th, 2018 at 2:00 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Yuren said:

The Awakening of Faith in the Mahayana has the following passage, which I believe is very relevant to this discussion:

In its very origin suchness is of itself endowed with sublime attributes. It manifests the highest wisdom which shines throughout the world, it has true knowledge and a mind resting simply in its own being. It is eternal, blissful, its own self-being and the purest simplicity; it is invigorating, immutable, free... Because it possesses all these attributes and is deprived of nothing, it is designated both as the Womb of Tathagata and the Dharma Body of Tathagata.

Malcolm wrote:

in general, tathāgatagarbha is identified as the dharmakāya encased in afflictions. This is not novel at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 19th, 2018 at 2:13 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Zen on enlightenment and post-enlightenment

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

The qualities of a master upon whom to rely... He must be expert in meditation and practice, know how to explain the four branches of approach and accomplishment, and have produced skills in repelling disturbances with mantras of exhortation, curses, and slaying.

-Buddhahood in This Life

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. A Dzogchen master ought to be a master of Vajrayāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 19th, 2018 at 12:59 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Zen on enlightenment and post-enlightenment

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

So... buddha's Four actions? How does primordially liberated "yogi" do?

Malcolm wrote:

Activities are effortless

due to the natural perfection of awakening,

-- Kun byed rgyal po.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 19th, 2018 at 12:20 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Sherab said:

If by suchness, you meant dependent arising, then your statement above implies that both inanimate things and sentient beings are dependently arisen. No problem here.

Malcolm wrote:

By suchness, I mean emptiness, śūnyatā. The rest of your questions are irrelevant.

Sherab said:

My questions are irrelevant because sunyata is not the same as dependent arising?

Malcolm wrote:

Your questions are irrelevant because they do not address the distinction between a sentient being (sattva) and an insensible thing (acetana).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 19th, 2018 at 12:00 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Queequeg said:

We are emphasizing different things. It is correct to say, "in a way" in the context of Tiantai thought because dependent origination is not the whole story, except, in a way, from a particular vantage point. Like light being particles, absolutely, in a way, but also being waves, absolutely, in a way.

Malcolm wrote:

The six causes and four conditions precede dependent origination.

Queequeg said:

OK. More succinctly: we're not actually communicating. Yogacara is not really an influence of Tiantai. Its not clear how yogacara would relate.

Malcolm wrote:

The teaching on the six causes and four conditions is fundamental Buddhism, theories in which Chih I was quite expert.

In fact, the whole of the first chapter of the MMK is explicitly about them and how they are merely conventions.

Queequeg said:

Chih I's writings never imply this doctrine of insentient buddhanature at all.

Says you? Is that your actual knowledge? Or are you borrowing the opinion of Robert Sharf without attribution?

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, I am basing my opinion on the consensus of a number of scholars, Paul Swanson chief among them. And then there is this:

As we recall, Daosheng believes that all icchantikas can become Buddhas and Zhiyi believes that Buddha-nature includes inherent evil. But neither speaks about Buddha-nature and insentient beings.

https://academiccommons.columbia.edu/download/.../Ma_columbia_0054D_10217.pdf

Queequeg said:

Zhanran says differently.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, he does. That does not mean he is right.

Queequeg said:

So you are saying the bodhimaṇḍa is found in a moment of thought itself Or are you saying it is found in the dharmatā of that moment of thought?

If I understand your question correctly, both. 一念三千

Malcolm wrote:

A thought is a concept. Buddhahood is by definition free of concepts. Nevertheless, even concepts also have suchness. If one realizes the dharmatā of a concept, then one can say the seat of awakening can be found in a concept; but if one does not realize the dharmatā of a concept, one cannot say that the seat of awakening can be found in a concept.

Any given entity can be the object of a veridical perception that accords with suchness, or the object of a non-veridical perception that does not accord with suchness. But the same perception cannot be both veridical, in accordance with suchness, and non-veridical, not in accordance with-- it must one or the other.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 18th, 2018 at 11:38 PM

Title: Re: Two Truths Sauvignon Blanc

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The real question is -- do you drink it all at once, or gradually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 18th, 2018 at 4:15 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Zen on enlightenment and post-enlightenment

Content:

Temicco said:

What does it come from, then?

Malcolm wrote:

Liberation does not come from anywhere. Everything is already liberated, just as it is.

Crazywisdom said:

Sure. But defiled beings have to get into some method.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure. But that has nothing to do with liberation, from a Dzogchen perspective.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 18th, 2018 at 3:52 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Zen on enlightenment and post-enlightenment

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen is not a sudden school. It argues that liberation does not come from realization.

Temicco said:

What does it come from, then?

Malcolm wrote:

Liberation does not come from anywhere. Everything is already liberated, just as it is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 18th, 2018 at 1:42 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Queequeg said:

I'm not familiar with Karana-hetu, but all phenomena are indeed causes of all others, in a way.

Malcolm wrote:

Not in a way, directly.

Queequeg said:

We are emphasizing different things. It is correct to say, "in a way" in the context of Tiantai thought because dependent origination is not the whole story, except, in a way, from a particular vantage point. Like light being particles, absolutely, in a way, but also being waves, absolutely, in a way.

Malcolm wrote:

The six causes and four conditions precede dependent origination.

Dependent origination is a separate topic.

This account is Chih I's four fold dependent origination is very lucid:

<https://journals.ub.uni-heidelberg.de/index.php/jiabs/article/download/8729/2636>

Nothing really remarkable out of ordinary for a Mahāyāna author.

Queequeg said:

The problem is not buddhas in hell realms, the problem is buddhas experiencing the suffering of hell realms, or any other realm, for that matter.

The Buddha was born. Possibly caesarean. But in any event, it wasn't the myth where Maya grasped a branch while Gotama just miraculously emerged from her side. He also didn't take 7 steps and declare he was the greatest being. He was a helpless infant, like all of us at birth. The Buddha died of what sounds like food poisoning. It was miraculous enough that he lived to 80 at that time.

If you chose to believe those myths about his birth and death literally, the fabrics of our realities probably don't match up.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a non-sequitar.

Queequeg said:

The Buddha appears in the Saha world and toils just like the rest of us.

Malcolm wrote:

No.

Queequeg said:

All those stories about Pure Lands... ways to help people who can't unsee the futility of this world to conceive of purity and bliss without being forced to reconcile the real pain and suffering they've endured.

Malcolm wrote:

No.

Queequeg said:

The point of Trees and Rocks having Buddhanature is to locate the struggle for enlightenment, here and now, in this moment.

Malcolm wrote:

Chih I's writings never imply this doctrine of insentient buddhanature at all. Since you never define your terms, I have no idea what you mean by "struggle for enlightenment."

Queequeg said:

Despite Zhanran's denial of the ultimacy of the Nirvana Sutra's explicit identification of Buddhanature exclusively with sentient beings, there are other aspects of the Nirvana Sutra that inform this.

Malcolm wrote:

Such as?

Queequeg said:

The Nirvana Sutra actually includes an assertion of True Self - something that goes against pretty much all of the Buddha's teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

It does not contain an assertion that this self is the self of rocks and trees.

Queequeg said:

When the Buddha utters teachings, he's always addressing some excess, not directly revealing his wisdom.

Malcolm wrote:

???

Queequeg said:

The Nirvana also teaches that all true dharmas, non-Buddhist and Buddhist, are Buddhadharma.

Malcolm wrote:

The Nirvana Sūtra teaches there are non-Buddhist true dharmas? How are you using the term, "true dharma"?

Queequeg said:

The point is that any dharma when fully contemplated ends in awakening. How is that possible? Because all dharmas have the BuddhaNature. If they didn't, contemplating them would not end in awakening.

Malcolm wrote:

Again, how are you using the term dharma here? Do you mean an entity which bears characteristics such as form, sound, etc.?

Queequeg said:

Again, the point is not rocks being buddhanature.

Malcolm wrote:

We have already established this is not a doctrine present in Chih I's writings, but it is a later idea added on.

Queequeg said:

The point is, this thought-moment is the seat of enlightenment.

Malcolm wrote:

So you are saying the bodhimaṇḍa is found in a moment of thought itself Or are you saying it is found in the dharmatā of that moment of thought?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 17th, 2018 at 10:44 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

PeterC said:

What Chinese writers said on the topic is not relevant to that particular question.

Malcolm wrote:

It is only relevant in so far as it was not a universally held principle in Sinitic Buddhism, even though it appears to be very widely diffused among Japanese Sects.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 17th, 2018 at 9:36 PM

Title: Re: Dharma government?

Content:

Grigoris said:

Take the U$ for example:

73.3% of the population identifies as Christian and only 18.2% identify as having no religion.

The effect of this statistic is that although there is a split between church and state, in reality the U$ functions as a Christian nation.

Malcolm wrote:

This does not mean they are Christians in any active sense.

These stats are informative:

<https://www.pewforum.org/religious-landscape-study/attendance-at-religious-services/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 17th, 2018 at 9:31 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Not quite. The article suggests that the Hua-yen view sidesteps the issue in order to remain literally faithful to the Mahaparinirvana.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they do not sidestep the issue at all. They make a well known distinction, also made by Indian Buddhists, between the suchness of inanimate things and sentient beings, the suchness is the same, but sentient beings are also permeated with consciousness.

Sherab said:

If by suchness, you meant dependent arising, then your statement above implies that both inanimate things and sentient beings are dependently arisen. No problem here.

Malcolm wrote:

By suchness, I mean emptiness, śūnyatā. The rest of your questions are irrelevant.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 17th, 2018 at 5:37 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, Chang is mistaken. It is very clear that Hua Yen rejects this idea.

http://buddhism.org/kr/koan/Robert_Sharf-e.htm

Queequeg said:

Not quite. The article suggests that the Hua-yen view sidesteps the issue in order to remain literally faithful to the Mahaparinirvana.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they do not sidestep the issue at all. They make a well known distinction, also made by Indian Buddhists, between the suchness of inanimate things and sentient beings, the suchness is the same, but sentient beings are also permeated with consciousness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 17th, 2018 at 5:27 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Had to step out for a moment... Now, substance.

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on which Indian Buddhist view we are discussing. There is for example, Karana-hetu, the principle that all phenomena are causes of all other phenomena apart from themselves.

This still does not make rocks capable of buddhahood. Nor does it make a mind a function of a rock. Your thesis amounts to saying that since there is a container universe and inhabitants, their mutual dependence means that the awakening of the latter necessitates the awakening of the former, even though it is conventionally insentient. But this also bears the consequence that buddhas can become sentient beings just as sentient beings can become buddhas. This is very terrible consequence.

Queequeg said:

I'm not familiar with Karana-hetu, but all phenomena are indeed causes of all others, in a way.

Malcolm wrote:

Not in a way, directly.

Queequeg said:

Are you familiar with the Tiantai slogan, Even Buddhahood includes Hell? The implications are what you think is so terrible. But why is that terrible? Because it doesn't conform to what people say a Buddha is or what Buddhahood is? What do those distinctions even mean to a Buddha? I don't think the Buddha cares. We care, because we have our sacred cows, because we think these particular stories are capital T True and will lead to awakening; I mean, we've devoted so much time and effort to these ideas... THEY BETTER BE TRUE! I'm being facetious to make a point.

Malcolm wrote:

The problem is not buddhas in hell realms, the problem is buddhas experiencing the suffering of hell realms, or any other realm, for that matter.

Queequeg said:

What this really gets to is the kinds of teachings that appear in the Vimalakirti and Lotus Sutras that I quoted above - This Saha World is a Buddhaland, and the Saha World includes all the beings, along with the environments from which they cannot be separated, including this darn rock that we can't agree has Buddhanature or not.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, this doctrine, that insentient beings possess buddhanature, is not in Zhi Yi's writings. See Swanson, CSQI, vol. 1, pg. 58. He states that Zhi Yi really treads lightly around the tathagātagarbha theory.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 17th, 2018 at 4:07 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Anders said:

The thesis originated with Jizang, one of the seminal masters of the Sanlun/Madhyamika tradition, who originally wrote of it:

“Not only sentient beings have buddha-nature; grasses and trees also have buddha-nature”

Malcolm wrote:

Justifiable perhaps on the basis of the MMK:

Whatever is the Tatāgata's nature, that is the world's nature;
as the Tatāgata has no nature, the world also has no nature.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 17th, 2018 at 4:04 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Tell, what is your point in including this throwaway line? Don't be an ass.

Malcolm wrote:

I am stating that perhaps some of Zhi Yi's arguments, as presented by you, are not as sound as you think they are. That they don't stand up to analysis and criticism as well as his exponents imagine. Bad arguments can't be excused simply as "upaya."

Queequeg said:

No, no, no. Don't be like that.

Malcolm wrote:

Make better arguments.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 17th, 2018 at 4:03 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Yuren said:

Thank you Queequeg for the in depth explanation, very useful.

I would emphatically say "cannot be traced to Indian roots" does not equal false.

It's derived from an Indian basis via some further philosophical speculation, which is very subtle.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is not derived from any Indian basis at all.

Also this doctrine was rejected by many Chinese Buddhists as well. It appears to be a special feature of the Tienta'i school, but was rejected by Hua Yen scholars (justifiably, in my opinion).

Arguing that the container world appears as buddhafiield when one attains buddhahood does not bear the correlation that rocks are capable of attaining buddhahood on their own.

Coëmgenu said:

Interestingly, The Buddhist Teaching of Totality: the Philosophy of Hwa Yen Buddhism by Garma C. C. Chang makes literally the opposite claim, that it is a Huáyán doctrine.

So no one can really make up their mind.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, Chang is mistaken. It is very clear that Hua Yen rejects this idea.

http://buddhism.org/kr/koan/Robert_Sharf-e.htm

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 17th, 2018 at 3:16 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

passel said:

I think I'm only responding to myself but maybe somebody else will bite:

Dogen being the most prominent later exegete of this doctrine, isn't his point not that the insentient HAVE buddha nature, but that they ARE buddha nature?

Which I take just to mean that the phenomenal world is implicated in and inseparable from awakening.

Seems to me that that project is quite different from quasi-abhdharmic divvying up of of the world into what has and doesn't have buddha nature?

Malcolm wrote:

Dogen was fully within the Tientai tradition, philosophically speaking, so that makes his ideas less radical then they appear on first glance.

Then the second problem one has to parse is what exactly does on mean by "buddhanature," if not tathāgatagarbha?

If by buddhanature, one means that everything is awakened intrinsically, then one has to parse exactly what awakening means, if not the absence of afflictions through insight into the reality of things.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 17th, 2018 at 1:50 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Maybe, maybe not. there are a lot of renowned Buddhist savants in history who have put forward some pretty bad arguments -- like Sapan's argument that ants lack eyes. Just embarrassing.

Queequeg said:

Tell, what is your point in including this throwaway line?...

Malcolm wrote:

I am stating that perhaps some of Zhi Yi's arguments, as presented by you, are not as sound as you think they are. That they don't stand up to analysis and criticism as well as his exponents imagine. Bad arguments can't be excused simply as "upaya."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 17th, 2018 at 1:29 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Queequeg said:

What does it really mean to say that rocks have buddhanature?

Malcolm wrote:

As far as I can tell, not much. It's a pretty meaningless statement. You might as well ask, does Zyklon B have buddhanature?

Queequeg said:

The implications drawn from these different meanings might lead to different ends. I guess that's the whole debate about "Are Dzogchen, Mahamudra and Zen the same awakening or different?"

Malcolm wrote:

They are the same awakening. There is only one kind of awakening.

Queequeg said:

It doesn't mean that rocks are sentient. It does have some interesting implications about the path to Buddhahood and derivatively, practice.

Malcolm wrote:

Maybe, maybe not. there are a lot of renowned Buddhist savants in history who have put forward some pretty bad arguments -- like Sapan's argument that ants lack eyes. Just embarrassing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 17th, 2018 at 1:25 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Queequeg said:

In Tiantai, the full blown mutuality between beings and their environment is brought out in Mohezhikuan.

In the Indian view, the world arises from the mind. So, rocks are defined as functions of the mind. In the Tiantai view, the mind is also a function of the rock.

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on which Indian Buddhist view we are discussing. There is for example, Karana-hetu, the principle that all phenomena are causes of all other phenomena apart from themselves.

This still does not make rocks capable of buddhahood. Nor does it make a mind a function of a rock. Your thesis amounts to saying that since there is a container universe and inhabitants, their mutual dependence means that the awakening of the latter necessitates the awakening of the former, even though it is conventionally insentient. But this also bears the consequence that buddhas can become sentient beings just as sentient beings can become buddhas. This is very terrible consequence.

Queequeg said:

This can be said because there is no self - no center from which to say that one thing arises from the other. Where does the rock begin? Where does the mind begin? The rock and the mind are, when we broaden the scope, aspects of a single complex.

Malcolm wrote:

This is addressed by the six causes and four conditions taught by the Sarvastivadins.

It is basic Madhyamaka to point out that things do not arise from self, other, both, or without a cause. Nevertheless, this does not mean that a tree attains buddhahood since it lacks a basis for attaining buddhahood, a mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 17th, 2018 at 1:08 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Not so, mutuality is addressed by the container traces in the minds of sentient beings which produce the appearances of all six realms. Since we have these traces, we have mutual appearances of trees, rocks, etc., or river of pus and blood, etc., or hell guardians, etc.

Queequeg said:

This is what I mean. You don't address mutuality as it was taught in Tiantai.

Malcolm wrote:

Summarize the principle concisely, using an example, and I will see if I agree with it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 17th, 2018 at 12:37 AM

Title: Re: Dharma government?

Content:

Queequeg said:

The Oculus is, hands down, the greatest architectural achievement in NYC, ever (IMO).

Malcolm wrote:

I would argue that the great architectural achievement in NYC, ever, is Central Park.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 17th, 2018 at 12:09 AM

Title: Re: Dharma government?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Since it depends on the munificence of kings, it does not really go very far at all.

Queequeg said:

Yes. This is a problem with it.

The values, though, could be drawn out as a political policy.

One of the recommendations that struck me when I first read it, and its still a point of fascination to me - He tells the king to build roads and line them with trees so that travelers are shaded. Its about going further than just function and considering the comfort of people.

Malcolm wrote:

Philosophers have all kinds of advice for rulers.

Queequeg said:

Maybe it strikes me because so much public architecture where I am is just moderately functional and there is no indication that the designers considered that human beings would be using it.

Malcolm wrote:

New York is not a well designed city. In fact it was not designed at all -- it just sort of happened over the past hundred years. The same with LA, etc. Of course, there are exceptions, but mostly, urban planning in America has been something of an afterthought.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 17th, 2018 at 12:04 AM

Title: Re: Dharma government?

Content:

Queequeg said:

I am advocating the introduction of Buddhist ideas and values into the public sphere and by extension into the political process and government policies.

Malcolm wrote:

Such as?

Queequeg said:

One of the problems with the secular governments we have now is that they are fundamentally materialist. There are historical reasons for this retreat. Little or no account is taken of the spiritual life, and this has been to our collective detriment. There were some bad ideas about spiritual life that needed to be pushed back, but in throwing everything out, we were left with materialism.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, the constitution was written largely by colonial materialists[aka "Deists"] who were enamored of Epicureanism via Lucretius' De Natura Rerum. Jefferson himself owned 13 copies of the text.

Queequeg said:

One thing that bringing Buddhism into the political sphere would do is to have at least one voice asserting that there is more to life than atoms bouncing off each other. If Buddhism has a voice, obviously other would too.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't want my government advocating any views at all not grounded in empiricism and science.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 11:58 PM

Title: Re: Dharma government?

Content:

Queequeg said:

I was pointing out that there are many moving parts. We don't really know what is going wrong. I tend to think that Islam is not particularly good as a personal or social value system, but that is admittedly an opinion, based on observation and experience.

Malcolm wrote:

Most of us here are pretty ignorant of Islam in general, so none of us are really in a reasonable place to offer much of an opinion about whether Islam is not a particularly good personal or social value system. But a third of the world adheres to Islam, so it is working for someone.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 11:54 PM

Title: Re: Dharma government?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That's the point -- it is a Mahāyāna polemical treatise—— not even all Buddhists would go along with it.

Queequeg said:

And under a government implementing the Jeweled Garland they'd have the liberty to disagree and pursue their dharmas. They'd even be encouraged and supported.

But I'm not particularly interested in getting everything right. I full well accept that things will go wrong. I just want to push things in the right direction - more love, more compassion, more kindness, more smiling people. I'm a whole lot more pragmatic than other posters here, I think.

Malcolm wrote:

The Ratnavali proposes some good ideas for rulers, but it does not propose anything that goes beyond say, the bill of rights, etc. Since it depends on the munificence of kings, it does not really go very far at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 11:51 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I disagree. If you think I did not address your point, you should point out what point I did not address. Be concise.

Queequeg said:

You just stated views you hold. But let's go on.

Mutuality, for one.

Malcolm wrote:

Not so, mutuality is addressed by the container traces in the minds of sentient beings which produce the appearances of all six realms. Since we have these traces, we have mutual appearances of trees, rocks, etc., or river of pus and blood, etc., or hell guardians, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 11:48 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Queequeg said:

When the Buddha appeared in India, he had to work with the language and ideas current around him. As the Dharma is transmitted to people of different cultures, its expression changes. The ills of the people are different and so their cures differ.

Malcolm wrote:

Not really. Everyone suffers from same three afflictions.

Queequeg said:

Before we judge and condemn the cures people have developed for themselves, one might want to consider their illness first.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not the case that this idea of plants, etc., attaining buddhahood was universally accepted in China. It has caught the imagination of Western Academics however, which is why we are discussing it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 11:24 PM

Title: Re: Dharma government?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The Ratnavali is Mahāyāna polemical text.

Queequeg said:

I never said it wasn't.

Malcolm wrote:

That's the point -- it is a Mahāyāna polemical treatise—— not even all Buddhists would go along with it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 11:23 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Are you explaining Tiantai views? East Asian?

Take note where you are posting.

Malcolm wrote:

The question originally was open. The doctrine is strictly East Asian, and finds no basis in Indian Buddhism at all.

Specifically, your presentation does not add up, which is why I rebutted it.

Queequeg said:

You didn't actually address what I presented.

Malcolm wrote:

I disagree. If you think I did not address your point, you should point out what point I did not address. Be concise.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 11:22 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Yuren said:

Thank you Queequeg for the in depth explanation, very useful.

I would emphatically say "cannot be traced to Indian roots" does not equal false.

It's derived from an Indian basis via some further philosophical speculation, which is very subtle.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is not derived from any Indian basis at all.

Also this doctrine was rejected by many Chinese Buddhists as well. It appears to be a special feature of the Tiantai school, but was rejected by Hua Yen scholars (justifiably, in my opinion).

Arguing that the container world appears as buddhahood when one attains buddhahood does not bear the correlation that rocks are capable of attaining buddhahood on their own.

Queequeg said:

Nobody and nothing attains Buddhahood on their own.

Malcolm wrote:

Ultimately yes; relatively, no. Relatively everyone who attains buddhahood (which is only something relative) does so based on their own effort. Ultimately, there is no buddhahood at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 11:06 PM

Title: Re: Dharma government?

Content:

Queequeg said:

In the absence of a creed, philosophy, ideology, religion, etc. as a paradigm through which to organize the world and provide a map for life, some iteration will emerge and become the defacto creed, philosophy, ideology, religion, etc. This is true for the individual as it is for society.

Better to select a better one that takes into account our tendencies to defeat ourselves and deal with the imperfect execution than to just go through life haphazard like flotsam and jetsam.

Might as well try to put Nagarjuna's Jeweled Garland into practice. Better than The Prince, or Secularism, or any other number of political philosophies that have been proposed and implemented over the centuries. Better than whim.

Malcolm wrote:

I prefer HHDL's POV:

Today, however, any religion-based answer to the problem of our neglect of inner values can never be universal, and so will be inadequate. What we need today is an approach to ethics which makes no recourse to religion and can be equally acceptable to those with faith and those without: a secular ethics....the reality of the world today is that grounding ethics in religion is no longer adequate. This is why I believe the time has come to find a way of thinking about spirituality and ethics that is beyond religion.

https://www.huffingtonpost.com/2011/12/02/beyond-religion-dalai-lam_n_1125892.html

Queequeg said:

The jeweled Garland is braver than that without seeking to impose any particular dharma.

Malcolm wrote:
The Ratnavali is Mahāyāna polemical text.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 9:59 PM
Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?
Content:
Yuren said:
Thank you Queequeg for the in depth explanation, very useful.

I would emphatically say "cannot be traced to Indian roots" does not equal false.

It's derived from an Indian basis via some further philosophical speculation, which is very subtle.

Malcolm wrote:
No, it is not derived from any Indian basis at all.

Also this doctrine was rejected by many Chinese Buddhists as well. It appears to be a special feature of the Tienta'i school, but was rejected by Hua Yen scholars (justifiably, in my opinion).

Arguing that the container world appears as buddhafiield when one attains buddhahood does not bear the correlation that rocks are capable of attaining buddhahood on their own.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 9:53 PM
Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Rocks are appearances that ripen from container world traces sentient beings hold in common. Rocks still don't have minds in this scheme.

Queequeg said:
When we say that Rocks share Buddhanature with Sentient Beings, this is a statement about the nature of reality, not Buddhanature as the sort of simplified idea of the literal Buddha Seed (tathagatagarbha).

Malcolm wrote:
Sentient beings and rocks are both empty, but since the former have minds and the latter are mere projections of minds, the former can become buddhas where the latter cannot.

Queequeg said:

Are you explaining Tiantai views? East Asian?

Take note where you are posting.

Malcolm wrote:

The question originally was open. The doctrine is strictly East Asian, and finds no basis in Indian Buddhism at all.

Specifically, your presentation does not add up, which is why I rebutted it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 9:49 PM

Title: Re: Dharma government?

Content:

Nemo said:

Kings are not the only choice for a Dharma government. Iran has an interesting model where they have a clergy with an ethical veto on a democratically elected government. Applying the very dynamic and situational ethics Buddhism is famous for as a check against the inevitable oligarchy and plutocracy that are hallmarks of democracy could be a very nice incremental improvement on the current system.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, looked how that has worked out for Iran. Not well.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 9:34 PM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Well, nation states are not going anywhere anytime soon.

Grigoris said:

And that is one of the major sources of our current problems (globally).

Malcolm wrote:

Not much is going to change, I am afraid. It is a situation we are stuck with for the foreseeable future. The only alternative is to create communities whose decision making operates outside state structures, but parallel with them, in such a way that latter does not see the former as threats.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 9:30 PM

Title: Re: Dharma government?

Content:

Queequeg said:

In the absence of a creed, philosophy, ideology, religion, etc. as a paradigm through which to organize the world and provide a map for life, some iteration will emerge and become the defacto creed, philosophy, ideology, religion, etc. This is true for the individual as it is for society.

Better to select a better one that takes into account our tendencies to defeat ourselves and deal with the imperfect execution than to just go through life haphazard like flotsam and jetsam.

Might as well try to put Nagarjuna's Jeweled Garland into practice. Better than The Prince, or Secularism, or any other number of political philosophies that have been proposed and implemented over the centuries. Better than whim.

Malcolm wrote:

I prefer HHDL's POV:

Today, however, any religion-based answer to the problem of our neglect of inner values can never be universal, and so will be inadequate. What we need today is an approach to ethics which makes no recourse to religion and can be equally acceptable to those with faith and those without: a secular ethics....the reality of the world today is that grounding ethics in religion is no longer adequate. This is why I believe the time has come to find a way of thinking about spirituality and ethics that is beyond religion.

https://www.huffingtonpost.com/2011/12/02/beyond-religion-dalai-lam_n_1125892.html

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 6:53 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Zen on enlightenment and post-enlightenment

Content:

passel said:

Lankavatara is old news in Chan as near as I can tell- supplanted.

Malcolm wrote:

Nevertheless, the sudden approach comes from it.

ItsRaining said:

As far as I know, it's generally accepted the Sudden approach originated with Zhu Daosheng and Zhi Daolin before the translation of the Lankavatara. And the Lanka although used in hagiographies isn't really focused on as the topic of other Chan writings like those about practice. With no commentaries from early a Chan practitioners. Early works like the Two Practices and Four Entrances make no reference of any Sutra like the Lanka.

Malcolm wrote:

Do Daosheng's ideas have any impact on Chan?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 6:48 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Zen on enlightenment and post-enlightenment

Content:

passel said:

Lankavatara is old news in Chan as near as I can tell- supplanted.

Malcolm wrote:

Nevertheless, the sudden approach comes from it.

passel said:

Is dzogchen not 'sudden' then, since it has its own sources, or are there multiple origins for 'sudden' teachings?

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen is not a sudden school. It argues that liberation does not come from realization.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 6:41 AM

Title: Re: Dharma government?

Content:

pemachophel said:

"May I emanate as endless Chakravartins

To fulfill the hopes of beings and guard the Dharma domain,

And, gaining dominion over all realms equaling space,

Establish all sentient beings in happiness."

Malcolm wrote:

Chakravartins conquer without force of arms.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 4:48 AM

Title: Re: Dharma government?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dharma kings don't go on military campaigns.

Grigoris said:

In samsara they do.

Malcolm wrote:

Then they are not Dharma kings, just kings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 4:38 AM

Title: Re: Dharma government?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Abdicated his crown upon becoming a Buddhist:

And afterwards, taking delight in the wisdom of the Elder, he handed over his kingdom to his son, and abandoning the household life for the houseless state, grew great in insight, and himself attained to Arahatsip!

Grigoris said:

The Milindapanha is not a historical account. According to Plutarch Menander ruled Bactria until his death in 130BC during a military campaign. His remains were divided up and placed in stupa all across his kingdom.

Malcolm wrote:

Dharma kings don't go on military campaigns.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 4:37 AM

Title: Re: Dharma government?

Content:

Grigoris said:

So undeniably there have been and are attempts at Dharma government.

Malcolm wrote:

In our tradition, Greg, there is a distinction between Mi chos, literally "human dharma," which principally involves secular ethics, and "Lha chos," higher Dharma.

The former is not at all grounded in Buddhism on any level.

The Tibetans always got into trouble the instant they tried to implement lha chos as mi chos.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 4:21 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Zen on enlightenment and post-enlightenment

Content:

passel said:

Lankavatara is old news in Chan as near as I can tell- supplanted.

Malcolm wrote:

Nevertheless, the sudden approach comes from it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 4:16 AM

Title: Re: Dharma government?

Content:

Queequeg said:

.

As Buddhists you ought to understand that only Dharma will end the suffering.

Malcolm wrote:

On an individual level, yes, but there is no such thing as a Dharma government. Nor could there be.

Grigoris said:

Should I bring up the obvious example of Asoka? Or is it too obvious?

Malcolm wrote:

Ashoka did not have a Dharma government. He was an Indian king, novel in that he created a parliamentary democracy, but he did not institute Buddhism as a state religion.

Grigoris said:

King Menander of Bactria?

Malcolm wrote:

Abdicated his crown upon becoming a Buddhist:

And afterwards, taking delight in the wisdom of the Elder, he handed over his kingdom to his son, and abandoning the household life for the houseless state, grew great in insight, and himself attained to Arahatsip!

Grigoris said:

pre-Chinese occupation Tibet?

Malcolm wrote:

Awesome example of how Dharma cannot run a country.

Grigoris said:

Bhutan?

Malcolm wrote:

You call the forcible expulsion of a population of Nepali immigrants Dharmic? It may have been necessary from the point of view of the Bhutanese who wanted to preserve Bhutanese culture, but Bhutanese culture is not Dharma, and neither is Tibetan culture.

Grigoris said:

Thailand?

Malcolm wrote:

Thailand was a constitutional monarchy on the British model. However, it is now a military dictatorship and has been since 2014.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 4:03 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Rocks have Buddhanature because they are integrated with Buddha. Rocks also have hell nature because they are integrated with beings suffering in hell.

I should add, Buddha has rock nature because Buddha is integrated with rock.

Malcolm wrote:

Sounds cool, but no.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 4:02 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Queequeg said:

The perfect-and-sudden [method of practicing cessation-and-contemplation] involves taking the true aspects [of reality] as the object

What Zhiyi seems to be pointing out is that for Vasubandhu, the dharmadhatu, the phenomenal world, is a function of the Mind, and the various dharmas are actually mere aspects of the Mind.

Malcolm wrote:

Rocks are appearances that ripen from container world traces sentient beings hold in common. Rocks still don't have minds in this scheme.

Queequeg said:

When we say that Rocks share Buddhanature with Sentient Beings, this is a statement about the nature of reality, not Buddhanature as the sort of simplified idea of the literal Buddha Seed (tathagatagarbha).

Malcolm wrote:

Sentient beings and rocks are both empty, but since the former have minds and the latter are mere projections of minds, the former can become buddhas where the latter cannot.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 16th, 2018 at 3:57 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Zen on enlightenment and post-enlightenment

Content:

passel said:

That chan is sutra is a straw dog argument, however well founded in exalted traditional schemes.

Sutra could be a suitable basis for Chan, but it's not limited to sutra. Nor is Chan tantra; it is not deficient dzogchen either

Malcolm wrote:

Sure it is. It is based on the sudden awakening approach exemplified in the Lankāvatara Sūtra.

In the translation of Bodhidharma's words we have in Tibetan, his point is simple, "Once the view is confirmed, do not rely on scriptures." Sound advice.

The approach of Chan is superior to that of the gradual path advocated by Kamalashila.

On the other hand, both Longchenpa and Jigme Lingpa express skepticism about Tibetan treatments of Chan. Tulku Thundup discusses this in his Dzogchen Book.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 15th, 2018 at 10:20 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood of Insentient Beings Exclusively East-Asian?

Content:

Yuren said:

A dispute arose in Chinese Buddhism with regard to whether insentient beings possess a Buddha nature, but the view that Buddhahood exists as a potential in all things and phenomena prevailed in China. This idea also became widespread in Japan. (See also enlightenment of plants.)

I am very interested in this teaching of "Buddha-nature of insentient beings" - my question is, is it exclusive to China (and by extension, Korea & Japan)? Is there anything close to this teaching to be found in any school of Tibetan Buddhism or in any Indian text?

Malcolm wrote:

No. Tathāgatagarbha strictly belongs to sentient beings (sattvas) in Indian and Tibetan Buddhism.

The self the Nirvana Sūtra is referring to is the dharmakāya. The dharmakāya pervades all phenomena because it is by definition the realization of the emptiness of all phenomena. This does not mean, however, that rocks possess tathāgatagarbha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 15th, 2018 at 10:05 PM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Direct democracy does not scale. In New England, we also have direct democracy at the town level. But get to the county level, it begins to show signs of weakness.

Grigoris said:

It does not scale in nation states. Direct democracy requires a confederate system to function properly. It can work within the context of a confederation, if one takes advantage of current communication technology.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, nation states are not going anywhere anytime soon.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 15th, 2018 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Direct democracy does not scale. In New England, we also have direct democracy at the town level. But get to the county level, it begins to show signs of weakness.

Grigoris said:

It does not scale in nation states. Direct democracy requires a confederate system to function properly. It can work within the context of a confederation, if one takes advantage of current communication technology.

Before "skype conferencing" was available (during the Spanish Civil War, or the Makhnoist liberation of the Ukraine, for example) a community could send a representative to a confederate meeting, but the delegate was not allowed to make decisions on behalf of the community.

But I have to agree with Dan that for a system like this to really work, the citizens have to be aware and willing to cooperate. This (inherent quality to cooperate) is something that requires education/training/encouragement. Just like the (inherent) tendency towards individualism has to be trained and habituated.

Malcolm wrote:

For Democracy of any legitimate kind to work, the citizenry needs to be literate, educated, interested, and self-informed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 15th, 2018 at 8:20 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Dan74 said:

Down here, in this 'shit hole' of a country called Switzerland (thanks Amanita), we have the closest thing to a direct democracy

Malcolm wrote:

Direct democracy does not scale. In New England, we also have direct democracy at the town level. But get to the county level, it begins to show signs of weakness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 15th, 2018 at 8:18 AM

Title: Re: Neo nazi's march in DC

Content:

Queequeg said:

There is nothing in Nagarjuna's counsel that suggests Buddhism should be a state-mandated religion. So your principle is not violated. I have never been impressed that Nagarjuna was an idealist.

Malcolm wrote:

It was not Nāgārjuna's counsel I was rejecting, it was yours, "A dharma government would be one that enabled dharma practice and dharma culture."

Queequeg said:

I did write that.

You introduced the term "dharma government" to this discussion. I was following up with that.

Nagarjuna counseled on how to rule according to dharma. That's all I meant by Dharma government. Looking back I don't know what you meant, but we don't mean the same thing, obviously.

Malcolm wrote:

A government where Buddhism is instituted as a legal system. Buddhism is not equipped to handle such issues.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 15th, 2018 at 8:14 AM

Title: Re: Existence

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The Tibetans created a technical language to handle Buddhist terminologies.

Seeker12 said:

If I may, if the word 'emptiness' were not well established in English and you were doing a fresh translation, how would you translate tongpa nyi? Either in concise form or in more extensive explanation? I have read that this term was basically used by Vairochana during the first translation, and for example Dzongsar Khyentse Rinpoche states that tongpa nyi is a richer term than the English "emptiness".

Malcolm wrote:

Maybe in Sanskrit, śūnyatā, but not in Tibetan. Vairocana probably translated śūnyatā as "ye 'byams", which means something like "primordial infinity."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 15th, 2018 at 5:04 AM

Title: Re: HAM and A-shad

Content:

Jeff H said:

I'm trying to clarify two references for visualizations.

First the letter HAM: Someone at Tsegyalgar East said it looks like this: ཧྲ, but I found an old <https://dharma.wheel.net/viewtopic.php?t=6188#p72551> where he said it looks like this: ཧྲ. Which is correct?

Second is an "A-shad" (or A-shay?): It is described as, "the final part of the Tibetan letter A, shaped like a triangle. The triangle, that represents fire, should be visualized pointing upward." I can't find a Unicode character or a symbol on the Tibetan keyboard that looks like that, but I'm guessing it's like this:

A shad .png

(Edit: Had some trouble uploading the image attachment.)

Malcolm wrote:

The first one.

Just visualize a narrow triangle, pointing up.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 15th, 2018 at 4:56 AM

Title: Re: Neo nazi's march in DC

Content:

Queequeg said:

That is something up for debate, I think. Nagarjuna counseled a king on how to promote Dharma through government. A dharma government would be one that enabled dharma practice and dharma culture. One that creates the ideal conditions for Bodhisattvas to appear... like making bird houses and putting out feed to attract song birds to sing. Like ChNN's teacher's gar...

Malcolm wrote:

On principle, I reject state-mandated religions, Buddhism included. I also reject Utopianism, even Buddhist Utopianism.

Queequeg said:

There is nothing in Nagarjuna's counsel that suggests Buddhism should be a state-mandated religion. So your principle is not violated. I have never been impressed that Nagarjuna was an idealist.

Malcolm wrote:

It was not Nāgārjuna's counsel I was rejecting, it was yours, "A dharma government would be one that enabled dharma practice and dharma culture."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 14th, 2018 at 2:05 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Dan74 said:

Yes, fascists/alt-right are big on memes and that screenshot proves nothing.

But your second comment is telling. I don't think most voters in the US thought about it this way, but the fact that all the various faults of Trump on full public display were not enough of a deal-breaker should be a huge wake-up call to the those in the political establishment who still manage to believe in something other than filling their own pockets.

The Left has failed in the West. Dismally. Bernie Sanders and Jeremy Corbyn are the death throes of the once healthy and inspirational body of progressive politics. What is to come after I can only shudder to think..

Grigoris said:

I don't think the "left" has failed, I think representative democracy has died (long ago) and all that is left is the corporatist worms feeding on it's moldering corpse.

Dan74 said:

It's been subverted, yes. "Failed" is too strong a word for me. There are still aspects of it that function to some extent. There is some rule of law (compare to absolute monarchies, for example), there is some responsible government (due to the opposition trying to dig up dirt on it and the media sufficiently free and happy to publish the said dirt), there is some protection of some Human Rights (compare with other places again, not rights such as not to live in poverty, to have meaningful employment, etc) and there is also some separation of powers and checks and balances. It even governs for the people sometimes, I've even seen some of these people (to corrupt an old Soviet joke).

For me, the question is how to preserve the good aspects of democracy and rebuild.

Malcolm wrote:

The US is still a country of laws. As long as that remains the case, things will be fine. The problem with trump is that he and his followers do not actually respect laws. This why Trumpism is a form of fascism and must be opposed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 14th, 2018 at 1:56 AM

Title: Re: Neo nazi's march in DC

Content:

Queequeg said:

.

As Buddhists you ought to understand that only Dharma will end the suffering.

Malcolm wrote:

On an individual level, yes, but there is no such thing as a Dharma government. Nor could there be.

Queequeg said:

That is something up for debate, I think. Nagarjuna counseled a king on how to promote Dharma through government. A dharma government would be one that enabled dharma practice and dharma culture. One that creates the ideal conditions for Bodhisattvas to appear... like making bird houses and putting out feed to attract song birds to sing. Like ChNN's teacher's gar...

Malcolm wrote:

On principle, I reject state-mandated religions, Buddhism included. I also reject Utopianism, even Buddhist Utopianism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 13th, 2018 at 10:43 PM

Title: Dharma government?

Content:

Queequeg said:

.

As Buddhists you ought to understand that only Dharma will end the suffering.

Malcolm wrote:

On an individual level, yes, but there is no such thing as a Dharma government. Nor could there be.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 13th, 2018 at 2:16 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Dan74 said:

What do you think are the right tactics to combat the alt-right, Cone?

conebeckham said:

Outing them individually.

This is what the reporters have done, and I believe it has had an effect.

Maintaining resistance, and continually calling out Trump and any other elected official when the racists are being defended by government officials.

Dan74 said:

To me, this is no different to the witchhunts of McCarthyism, when outing people for their beliefs ruined careers and lives. Of course, we could say the beliefs are poles apart, so that the tactic is justified. And yet to me this methodology smells bad both on a personal level and as a principle. There is a reason why freedom of thought is guaranteed in your constitution and curbing it by punishing people for their beliefs is an attack on something fundamental, is it not?

But the worst part to this approach seems to me to be the implied defeatism. "We cannot beat this ideology, so let's go after the people 'infected' with it. Let's punish them, make them suffer for their beliefs, make them even more resentful of the mainstream and the status quo, let's persecute them, drive them out. " Sounds familiar? Last thing I would want to make out of the fascists and the neo-Nazis, is martyrs.

I am sure I am missing a lot here, Cone, so please bear with me and if you can be bothered, set me straight.

Malcolm wrote:

Dan, perhaps it escaped your attention, but active members of the Communist party and Nazis are barred from immigrating to the US because of their beliefs.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 12th, 2018 at 10:09 AM

Title: Re: Sh#t is f@cked up and bull sh*t

Content:

justsit said:

3)"It's now commonplace to observe that the United States is living through a Second Gilded Age." Not really sure where that comes from, I have never heard that term applied to this era. It may be a gilded age for the wealthy, but not so much for the rest of us.

Malcolm wrote:

That is the point, the gilded age was one of the eras in US history when wealth disparity was at its height.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 12th, 2018 at 3:51 AM

Title: Re: Swat Valley/Oddiyana

Content:

Grigoris said:

He also mentioned quite a bit of archaeological evidence of Mahayana activity in Orisa, that he went and saw first hand during his research.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no doubt that in South India, on the eastern side, Andhra Pradesh there was considerable Mahāyāna activity. It is equally certain that Zahor was in the southeast, not where Tso Pema is located today. It is equally certain that Sarma accounts of the origin of Vajrayāna place it in the south east of India, as do accounts of the origin of Mantrayāna in Shingon. None of that is at issue.

What is at issue is the location of Oḍḍiyāna, and the northwest corner of India has always been considered the location of Dakinis, perhaps because in that region there were many people with red hair, a legacy of Alexander.

You might wish to read this:

Based on Orgyen Rinchenpal's description, it is in Swat.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 12th, 2018 at 2:20 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Queequeg said:

You've been threading an argument arguing the need for violent confrontation of "fascists", without actually supporting it.

I don't know, man. I don't know.

Kessler himself admitted on an alt-right podcast that many of the attendees at last year's rally were "people who aren't used to being out of the internet," and who didn't recognize that their identities being public would lead to real-world problems.

No wonder, then, that in his post denouncing the second rally, neo-Nazi Andrew Anglin wrote that to go to a post-Charlottesville Unite the Right rally would potentially be life-ruining. "Getting doxed as a neo-Nazi street fighter will ruin your live [sic], forever."

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.vox.com/2018/8/10/17670996/alt-right-unite-the-right-nazis-charlottesville>

Dan, Ken Cormier, one of the PP guys, is a guest speaker at this weekend's DC Unite the Right 2018 rally. This rally will be attended by such lovelies as Hammer Skins, David Duke (again), etc.

Dan74 said:

Malcolm, apart from David Duke, I don't know who these people are. I am not sure we want to spread 'guilt by association' especially when association is being in the same place. But knowingly giving platform to a fascist is not on. People are of course free to attend rallies - how can you control that really?

Malcolm wrote:

You don't really seem to know who you are talking about here.

Dan74 said:

The rallies and the buffoons are the manifestation. I say we go for the root cause.

Malcolm wrote:

Sometimes, often actually, if you don't address the symptoms, the symptoms themselves are fatal. If the patient dies, there is no root cause to remove.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 12th, 2018 at 1:34 AM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

High quality.

Malcolm wrote:

I try my best.

Crazywisdom said:

It's shows, honestly. So very clear.

Malcolm wrote:

Publishing is a team effort. And thanks.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 12th, 2018 at 1:31 AM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Cool

Malcolm wrote:

However, Wisdom makes sure my translations are peer reviewed. That is the benefit of working with a major publisher, rather than self-publishing.

Crazywisdom said:

High quality.

Malcolm wrote:

I try my best. I also have two editors, plus Wisdom's editor, Laura Cunningham, as well as someone to go through Sanskrit terms, and so on. Though my name is on the translation, in reality many people touch the books.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 12th, 2018 at 1:15 AM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Cool

Malcolm wrote:

However, Wisdom makes sure my translations are peer reviewed. That is the benefit of working with a major publisher, rather than self-publishing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 12th, 2018 at 1:13 AM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Are you planning to translate the entire set of Dzogchen tantras?

Malcolm wrote:

Just the 17, they are the most important.

Crazywisdom said:

So is Tulku Dakpa overseeing your translation?

Malcolm wrote:

No. I don't need anyone to oversee my translations. But he certainly is willing to help when I have questions or doubts, as is Lama Chonam, Sangye Khandro's husband.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 12th, 2018 at 12:07 AM

Title: Re: Swat Valley/Oddiyana

Content:

Grigoris said:

So, spoke to Rinpoche and he told me that he is not the only scholar that disagrees with the placement of Oddiyana in Swat Valley.

Rinpoche was influenced in this decision by the research of N.K. Sahu, whom he met. Sahu wrote an apparently well researched, but now difficult to find book: Buddhism in Orissa, Utkal University, 1958, ASIN: B01C9Y13LO Rinpoche believes that Sahu was correct in locating Oddiyana in Orissa and his own research has verified it for him.

Malcolm wrote:

It certainly does not correspond with the Longde histories on the location of Oḍḍiyāna. One, it holds Garab Dorje was a central Indian:

Now then, there was a Dharma protecting king of the Śākya clan named *Vimalacuḍa Śākyabhadra, his queen, Sublime (Dam pa). They gave birth to very beautiful and radiant daughter who has very attractive and entrancing. Her name in Sanskrit was Sarani.

Second it holds that Oḍḍiyāna was to the west:

When Garab Dorje reached eight years, he said, “Mother, you are happy here. To the west of here in the land of Oḍḍiyāna is Dhanakośa Island on the shores of the great outer ocean.

Third, there is the testimony of Orgyenpa Rinchenpal who visited Oḍḍiyāna in person in the 13th century. In order to get to Oḍḍiyāna he first traveled to Jalandhara in the Punjab. Oḍḍiyāna is described as being to the northwest of that city, and at the time of the thirteenth century, is described as being dominated by "Mongolians" speaking a Tajik language.

In fact, as far as I can tell, Oḍḍiyāna is the Tibetan name for the region of Pakistan in general.

Moreover, the Chinese traveler Faxian travelled to a place called Udyān, north of Peshwar, where people practiced mantra and what he considered a debased form of Mahāyāna.

Also it does not correspond with seven line prayer.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 11th, 2018 at 11:33 PM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I am not making a case. You are. Not interested in your case. I am just stating as a matter of principle that fascism cannot be allowed to flourish and when fascists show up to spread their ideology in public, they should be opposed.

And as group 43 illustrates, sometimes you just have to punch fascists, and that is the most effective way at stemming their influence...

Queequeg said:

You've been threading an argument arguing the need for violent confrontation of "fascists", without actually supporting it.

I don't know, man. I don't know.

Kessler himself admitted on an alt-right podcast that many of the attendees at last year's rally were "people who aren't used to being out of the internet," and who didn't recognize that their identities being public would lead to real-world problems.

No wonder, then, that in his post denouncing the second rally, neo-Nazi Andrew Anglin wrote that to go to a post-Charlottesville Unite the Right rally would potentially be life-ruining. "Getting doxed as a neo-Nazi street fighter will ruin your live [sic], forever."

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.vox.com/2018/8/10/17670996/alt-right-unite-the-right-nazis-charlottesville>

Dan, Ken Cormier, one of the PP guys, is a guest speaker at this weekend's DC Unite the Right 2018 rally. This rally will be attended by such lovelies as Hammer Skins, David Duke (again), etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 11th, 2018 at 9:16 PM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Dan74 said:

Going back to PP, with Joey Gibson describing himself as a Conservative Libertarian, what evidence is there that the group is indeed fascist and that antifa's tactics are justified on these grounds?

Malcolm wrote:

Gibson is a fellow traveler on the right. He associates with Chapman, the Proud Boys, etc. For example, Ezra Pound claimed he was not a fascist, but by his actions, he proved he was and later admitted that his great fault was the suburban bias of anti-semitism.

Dan74 said:

Where do we draw the line between supporting a violent opposition to a group spreading a fascist ideology that has been shown to be dangerous to democracy and violent opposition to a group whose ideology we happen to disagree with?

Malcolm wrote:

While Gibson has tried to disavow white nationalism, etc., he continues to openly associate with such people. It is part of the Guns and Jesus trip in the US. Ted Nugent is probably his favorite band.

Dan74 said:

As Antifa initiate violence at counterprotests against largely mild groups like PP (as they did according to many reports) , they lose both their credibility and their moral high ground, IMO. Fascism is not a few dozen PP members, it is a way of thinking. And Antifa violence does absolutely nothing to challenge it. Rather the opposite - they make it look more attractive with folks who lack the background looking on in sympathy at the 'poor bastards getting attacked'.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, but Gibson provides a forum for fascists to show up. He can claim all he likes that he is not a racist, and so on, but the fact is that white nationalists, etc., regularly show up at his rallies. Further, members of his group also belong to the Proud Boys, a definite hate group.

Dan74 said:

Yes, I am not American, but I've been around, having lived in 3 very different countries. Maybe this gives me some perspective, or maybe it just muddies it, but either way, I think your case is far from made. I will let mine rest, since it starts feeling repetitive, but thank you for all the interesting links and thoughts on the subject.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not making a case. You are. Not interested in your case. I am just stating as a matter of principle that fascism cannot be allowed to flourish and when fascists show up to spread their ideology in public, they should be opposed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 11th, 2018 at 7:53 PM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Are you planning to translate the entire set of Dzogchen tantras?

Malcolm wrote:

Just the 17, they are the most important.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 11th, 2018 at 8:20 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Queequeg said:

There's a big difference between direct action and punching fascists.

It takes guts to remain non-violent. We're not talking about being a principled coward.

Malcolm wrote:

And as group 43 illustrates, sometimes you just have to punch fascists, and that is the most effective way at stemming their influence...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 11th, 2018 at 6:29 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Dan74 said:

Malcolm, I worry not only about people getting hurt but this tactic backfiring. I think it already has delivered some PR coups to the alt-right/fascists.

Your quote seems to touch on this in the last sentence, but I don't see an argument. Maybe it follows - I will have a look later, it's bedtime here.

Malcolm wrote:

From the same article:

What changed? In truth, nothing. We are observing a phenomenon that Martin Luther King, Jr. noted well in his 1963 Letter from Birmingham Jail. We are dealing with “the white moderate, who is more devoted to ‘order’ than to justice; who prefers a negative peace which is the absence of tension to a positive peace which is the presence of justice; who constantly says: ‘I agree with you in the goal you seek, but I cannot agree with your methods of direct action.’” There is no shortage to the irony that the white moderates of today invoke MLK to decry antifa tactics as violent, but I believe (if one can so speculate) they would have been critical of his radical non-violence, predicated as it was in provoking a violent spectacle. It is a great liberal tradition to stand on the wrong side of history until that history is comfortably in the past.

And:

After I left Berlin, I visited my 82-year-old grandfather in southern Spain. He’s a British expat with a vast repertoire of embellished anecdotes, a purpling tan, and the occasional reactionary bent. One lunchtime, I asked him: “Do you think it’s okay to punch neo-Nazis?”

I asked him in particular because I was seeking a certain response, from a certain generation, at a certain distance. I wanted an incredulous “yes” and a confused expression, as if I’d asked whether fire burns or if he’d like another drink. He’s the sort of man who sees the world as if moral facts were just there, as obvious and immovable as mountains—not the constant ethical navigation of anti-fascisting we need. But I wanted my aging grandfather—whose politics are not my own—to place neo-Nazi-punching in his blunt taxonomy of right and wrong. I wanted to beg my own question.

He replied without pause: “Who could have a problem with that?”

And:

In response, the anti-fascists of the 43 Group made it their business to identify, surveil, and physically confront, disrupt, and shut down fascist organizing in London and across Britain. They used knives, knuckledusters, and crowbars. "We're not here to kill. We're here to maim," they would say. The group disrupted over 2,000 meetings over five active years and is widely credited for neutralizing postwar Britain's fascist movement. "We defended the community by making it impossible for the fascists to terrorize us," one member, Jules Konopinski, told the Guardian in 2009 when he was 79 years old. The group's militancy drew some contemporary censure from parts of the British Jewish establishment, but for the most part its place in history is either overlooked or lauded by historians, Holocaust memorial institutions, and anti-racist groups. Famed hairdresser Vidal Sassoon was an active fighter among the group—when he died in 2012, mainstream media obituaries described him as an "anti-fascist-warrior" who was "fighting back against fascist oppression."

And:

Antifa do not bring violence; the violence was there in the DNA of fascism and our world through which it permeates. Our violence is counter-violence in history's unbroken dialectic of violence and counter-violence. Why not end the cycle? I repeat here the words of late philosopher Bernard Williams, who noted that "to say peace when there is no peace is to say nothing." The question then is not one of necessary violence, but impossible non-violence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 11th, 2018 at 6:10 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Dan74 said:

What I see as paramount is to defeat fascism as an ideology once and for all. To win the battle for the hearts and minds of the ordinary folks. Much harder than bashing a few heads in at a rally, but much more important, IMO.

Malcolm wrote:

Dan, you are focusing on the wrong things. You are criticizing Anti-fascists when you should be supporting them, all because you are worried that someone might get hurt. Look at who is inflicting actual damage on human beings.

Dan74 said:

Any discussion about violence and antifa must note that since 1990 there have been 450 deaths caused by white supremacist violence, compared to only one believed to be related to far-left activity in the US. While property damage, minor clashes and a few neo-Nazi black eyes drew cries of leftist extremism in the last year, a white supremacist traveled to New York with the aim to murder black men. He succeeded in stabbing and killing a homeless man. Another white supremacist in Portland killed two men who were standing up for two Muslim women on a train. A Milo Yiannopolous fan in a Make America Great Again cap shot and wounded an anti-fascist counter-protester in the stomach outside a Milo talk in Seattle. To name a few. In the ten days that followed Trump's election alone, the Southern Poverty Law Center reported 900 separate incidents of bias and violence against immigrants, Latinos, African Americans, women, LGBT people, Muslims, and Jews.

Antifa activists are criticized for responding with counter-violence. Centrist liberals urge that we follow Michelle Obama's gracious direction: "When they go low, we go high." They urge debate with fascists, and decry violent or confrontational intervention.

...

Liberal appeals to truth will not break through to a fascist epistemology of power and domination—these are Spencer and his ilk's first principles. And it is this aspect of fascism that needs to be grasped to understand the necessity of antifa's confrontational tactics.

Malcolm wrote:

<http://evergreenreview.com/read/anti-fascist-practice-and-impossible-non-violence/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 11th, 2018 at 5:44 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is hopeful:

And that's big, according to Hanks, because those still left are not down with the rally. Many posts about DC's Unite the Right rally call it a "lawsuit trap." Remember, there was a civil rights suit brought against the organizers of Unite the Right, and the judge has issued an opinion that the organizers had conspired to violate the civil rights of Charlottesville citizens, a conspiracy that could legally be tied to the death of Heather Heyer. "If I were the folks thinking about participating, I could be quite worried that my participation could link me to violent activity that violates civil rights," says Richard Schragger, who specializes in Constitutional and local government law at the University of Virginia School of Law. "Even if you're exercising your First Amendment rights, you're responsible for the outcomes."

The DC Unite the Right rally is shaping up to be a public announcement of a new, more cautious alt-right zeitgeist. It's fuchsia and teal website looks like an '80s video game. The organizer, Jason Kessler—who, according to Hanke, is now something of a pariah—has banned the swastikas and the other symbols of white supremacy that so many objected to at the last rally. Kessler is trying to massage the movement into something (somewhat) more palatable, similar to the surviving organizations Identity Evropa and Patriot Front. Identity Evropa claims to protect cultural heritage, Patriot Front claims their prejudice is patriotism, and Kessler claims to be a civil rights advocate for white people.

All of which are lies that tell the truth: the open racism we all saw at Charlottesville is being slowly pushed underground.

But of course, then there was this yesterday:

And David Duke's tweet:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 11th, 2018 at 5:38 AM

Title: Re: Gaden Mahamudra

Content:

Lobsang Chojor said:

Hi all,

I've received received a HYT empowerment and the lama indicated the importance of practicing mahamudra and said we had permission to practice it. My question is, is the lung of the 1st Panchen Lama's mahamudra root text vital before you start the practice of mahamudra in the gelug tradition?

Malcolm wrote:

A qualified guru is vital.

Astus said:

Can't say anything about the Gelug setup, but in HYT the fourth empowerment is mahamudra

Malcolm wrote:

No.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 11th, 2018 at 5:35 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Back in the 80's in New York there was a group called Missing Foundation. I was a little too young at the time, but from what I understand, they were basically the squatters in the East Village. They were involved with the Tompkins Sq. riots and clashes with police at the squats around there. They had some slogan, "We won't be civilized in this f*cking city!" They were straight up gutter punk anarchists.

Malcolm wrote:

You were a little too young to understand that incident. The police cause that riot.

Queequeg said:

New York City's Police Department deserves no praise for its handling of a demonstration in Tompkins Square Park in the early morning of Aug. 7. But Commissioner Ward and Police Department officials who prepared a report on the incident deserve credit for candor.

The document makes clear that what occurred was indeed the "police riot" some have charged. As the confrontation began to escalate, a panicky captain, finding himself in command because his deputy chief had left the scene, issued a "10-85 forthwith" radio call for help.

"This call is widely interpreted as being of an extreme emergency nature," the report says. Hundreds of police flooded into the area, though they "had not been briefed about the event . . . were not equipped for such an encounter . . . were not under the direct supervision of a superior officer."

Once they arrived, no one sought to form them into teams and supervise their deployment. "Some officers obviously responded badly to these conditions," the report says, "taking excessive independent actions and attempting to evade accountability by concealing their identities."

Mr. Ward has forced the retirement of Deputy Chief Thomas Darcy, who left the scene; the transfer of Deputy Inspector Joseph Wodarski, and the retraining of Capt. Gerald McNamara, who issued the 10-85 call. The Civilian Complaint Review Board, meanwhile, has recommended departmental charges against two officers and will continue to sift 100 more complaints.

But the report makes clear that the riot reflected problems beyond individual conduct. It called for more training in crowd control and special units for riot duty. It also pointed to the department's recent rapid expansion. Thousands of new recruits lack experience on the street; the ranks of seasoned supervisors remain thin.

Those problems pose profound challenges for police management. The riot showed how dangerous the failure to recognize and confront them can be. The report suggests a commendable willingness to do so.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.nytimes.com/1988/08/26/opinion/yes-a-police-riot.html>

The Missing Foundation was an industrial music band. KMFDM used to be part of that band for a short while. Pretty horrendous music. They were four guys. Not an anarchist collective. They were involved with anti-gentrification movement.

As of 2005, Missing was a homeless guy in NYC.

http://thevillager.com/villager_119/artistwhowasoncethecenter.html

Now apparently he lives in Denver and has art in over 30 museums.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 11th, 2018 at 5:13 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

He deliberately sent children into the streets of Alabama, on purpose, knowing it would provoke violence. He did it with full recognition of what he was doing, as a deliberate strategy.

Queequeg said:

This is different than "sowing disorder." I'm pushing back on your imprecise language.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, he pretty much sowed disorder, all right.

Queequeg said:

You should review the judgement in a Charlottesville case where one of the alt-right guys charged an protestor with assault, and it was found that the defendant was rightly not guilty of assault because he was defending a third person against an assault by the plaintiff upon that third person.

There's a lot of subtlety in the laws. You're talking about that black kid who was getting beat up in the parking lot. I don't know the details, but the kid was already getting beat up, he had no where to run to, so when those other people came to his rescue, that's a different set of facts. There must be some defense in the VA penal code.

Malcolm wrote:

Naw, it was a different case. Not the case with the young man who was brutally beaten in the garage.

Queequeg said:

Again, rule of law must be preserved. If we lose that, then we lose the whole thing.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that is what we were told in the 1930's. Bollocks to that mate. If the "rule of law" leads to further growth of the alt-right, it will not be a country we want to live in anymore.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 11th, 2018 at 4:19 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

He is wrong, on this score. The people who assembled last week in Portland were fascist thugs.

Queequeg said:

That article is from 2017. He was talking about another event.

Malcolm wrote:

Ok, even so.

Queequeg said:

MLK deliberately sowed disorder to create this situation, to expose the racist violence that was being used against black people.

No. This mischaracterizes MLK Jr. He did not sow disorder. He non-violently disobeyed laws which he and his colleagues identified as unjust. They did it in an orderly fashion.

Malcolm wrote:

He deliberately sent children into the streets of Alabama, on purpose, knowing it would provoke violence. He did it with full recognition of what he was doing, as a deliberate strategy.

Queequeg said:

But the civil rights movement wasn't seen as nonviolent in its day — and for good reason. The most jarring evidence of this came just a month after King's Birmingham jail letter. In May 1963, movement organizers assembled black children, some still in pigtails, to march through the streets of Birmingham and confront Bull Connor's violent police force. It was a controversial tactic within the movement, but organizers must have known that images of jailed, beaten and cowering children would affect hearts, force a response from officials and move the movement toward its goals.

"They couldn't have been ignorant of the terrible response," says King biographer and New York University historian David Levering Lewis. "King and his inner circle appreciated the probable certainty of violence on the part of the establishment to trigger responses that they wanted, in terms of legislation and policies." The children called it "D-Day."

Connor didn't disappoint. He attacked the marchers with German shepherds and baton-wielding policemen. Connor's army funneled hundreds of children and teenagers into overcrowded jail cells. Still, the kids returned to the streets the next day. And the day after that. Malcolm X, whom history treats as the movement's violent alter ego, criticized King for the event, saying that "real men don't put their children on the firing line." King, on the other hand, called it "one of the wisest moves we made."

The Children's Crusade changed the way the movement was covered by the press. Where the crushing effects of segregated schools hadn't won hearts, where brutal, state-sanctioned beatings of hymn-singing black men and women hadn't gained sympathy, the nation couldn't ignore the images of children recoiling from the raised batons of sneering police officers. Only the most distressing type of violence worked.

Malcolm wrote:

https://www.washingtonpost.com/posteverything/wp/2015/10/01/dont-criticize-black-lives-matter-for-provoking-violence-the-civil-rights-movement-did-too/?utm_term=.73a6b988bdb0

Queequeg said:

There must be civil disobedience against these assemblies of fascists, and these people ought to be met in the street. If they provoke violence, which in fact is their chief aim, people have a right to defend themselves and those around them, as a recent court case connected with Charlottesville found.

Protesting against these groups may or may not be civil disobedience. If for instance, Unite the Right plans a march, people can go protest. If permits are required to protest and the municipality refuses to give a permit, then showing up would be civil disobedience.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, that is what I am talking about, and screw permits.

Queequeg said:

In any event, the right to self defense is again a distinct issue. Depending on the state, self defense has certain formalities. For instance, in most states that more or less follow common law, one must first retreat before resorting to force. This is different in places like Florida where they have "Stand your Ground" statutes.

Malcolm wrote:

You should review the judgement in a Charlottesville case where one of the alt-right guys charged an protestor with assault, and it was found that the defendant was rightly not guilty of assault because he was defending a third person against an assault by the plaintiff upon that third person.

Queequeg said:

If the rule of law fails, then one might need to resort to any number of options - civil disobedience would be an option. Secession is another.

Malcolm wrote:

Under this president, the rule of law is being perverted and failing. Civil disobedience is a must.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 11th, 2018 at 2:06 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Queequeg said:

The people preventing Republicans from safely assembling on the streets of Portland may consider themselves fierce opponents of the authoritarianism growing on the American right. In truth, however, they are its unlikeliest allies.

That's also Beinart.

Malcolm wrote:

He is wrong, on this score. The people who assembled last week in Portland were fascist thugs.

Queequeg said:

The problem is that Antifa's tactics undermine the rule of law, which is fine for Antifa since many are anarchists. That's not good for the rest of us. The weakening of the state actually brings us closer to the kinds of conditions where violent groups could actually take advantage. Anarchy actually just opens the way for thugs to be violent. It would be a tragedy if the violence actually does spiral out of control - that's the opportunity an authoritarian group would look for. Cops pulling back and letting the fight rage will end with bodies in the street. Violence has a tendency of escalating with revenge and recrimination. The state would need to come down even harder to bring order back.

Malcolm wrote:

MLK deliberately sowed disorder to create this situation, to expose the racist violence that was being used against black people. Fascists are allowed right of free assembly, but peace groups are restricted to "free speech zones." This is not what founders intended at all.

The government is derelict in its duties to prevent assemblies of fascist thugs. Since they are derelict in this respect, the citizenry must stand up against them, and the police, if necessary.

Queequeg said:

We have a serious problem in that the Federal government has been hijacked by a fascist enabler, possibly an actual fascist, though I can't imagine that he would actually understand what that means. We have a Republican party that has completely sold out.

We need a responsible government, one that will bring the weight of the Justice Department down on these thugs. They can say what they want, but the moment they commit crimes, bring RICO down on the entire operation. There are ways to crack down - we need the political will to do that.

Malcolm wrote:

There must be civil disobedience against these assemblies of fascists, and these people ought to be met in the street. If they provoke violence, which in fact is their chief aim, people have a right to defend themselves and those around them, as a recent court case connected with Charlottesville found.

Now, if a nazi feels they've been unfairly punched in the face, give them their day in court so the full, disgusting facts of their perverted beliefs can be aired, as also happened in Charlottesville. I think they will have a hard time finding a jury willing to convict the assailant in many places in the US.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 11th, 2018 at 1:35 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 10th, 2018 at 9:55 PM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Dan74 said:

Greg, I am all for robust action. Not a fence-sitter or apologist here (yes, maybe a mod shouldn't engage in ad homs, come on!), had my share of activism, though not violence, at least not against living beings. I am just 1. not at all sure that violent tactics will lead to desired results 2. not sure it is the right thing to do anyway. Mostly for me it's about 1., but 2 is also a factor, because people who can be helped will get hurt when the lines between right wing "buffoons" and fascists and neo-Nazis get blurred, when everything becomes so black-and-white, and a fellow like me becomes an apologist ("with us or against us"). For a hammer, everything looks like a nail, and to some of us, sadly, every rightwinger is a Nazi.

Malcolm wrote:

No Dan, not every person with right wing views is a fascist. William Buckley, for example, was not a fascist. Ronald Reagan was not a fascist. The GOP is not a fascist party, even though they are utterly gutless these days.

Donald Trump, however, is a fascist, and it is clearly evident in his deeds and words.

Fascists are bad for the world in every way possible. They should be, as Q points out, doxxed, outed, shamed, etc. And if they ever become serious force, they should be opposed with serious force. Why? They don't believe in Democracy and democratic values. They exploit the latter to overthrow the former. In the meantime, I am not going to lose sleep over Antifa showing up and shutting down these fascist pricks. Why? I think it is a good thing that Antifa routes these people. This weekend marks the anniversary of the murder of Heather Heyer, a nonviolent protester. She was murdered by these pitiful excuses for human beings:

With respect to Q's opinion that the Alt-right is just a bunch of clowns in Portland, this really underestimates the real situation in our country. Peter Beinart wrote last year: Second, antifa activists don't wield anything like the alt-right's power. White, Christian supremacy has been government policy in the United States for much of American history. Anarchism has not. That's why there are no statues of Mikhail Bakunin in America's parks and government buildings. Antifa boasts no equivalent to Steve Bannon, who called his old publication, Breitbart, "the platform for the alt-right," and now works in the White House. It boasts no equivalent to Attorney General Jefferson Beauregard Sessions III, who bears the middle name of a Confederate general and the first name of the Confederacy's president, and who allegedly called the NAACP "un-American." It boasts no equivalent to Alex Jones, who Donald Trump praised as "amazing." Even if antifa's vision of society were as noxious as the "alt-right's," it has vastly less power to make that vision a reality.

<https://www.theatlantic.com/politics/archive/2017/08/what-trump-gets-wrong-about-antifa/537048/>

So, I am glad that Antifa shows up and shows that in the America, fascists do not get a pass. Their views are noxious, and in my opinion, are not protected speech when they are brought into the commons. If people wish to have sick Hitlerian fantasies in their double wides and chatrooms, I can't do anything about that. But at least we can keep their hateful speech out of public spaces. And until our legal system catches up with the 21st century, until that time I am glad there is a solid Anti-Fascist movement in this country, just as there was in the 1920's and 30's, when the ugly face of Fascism first reared its head in the world.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 9th, 2018 at 9:10 PM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Dan74 said:

How do you guys square it with

"Hatred does not cease through hatred at any time. Hatred ceases through love. This is an unalterable law."

Please don't give me the BS that "punching out a Nazi" is done with love and no hatred, that you are a wrathful manifestation of blahblah, that only Hinayanists understand this literally. An honest heartfelt answer please.

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāyāna ethics are based on intention, not on some particular set of vows. If by punching Nazis you intend to protect others, then this is a positive and meritorious act. And, if by punching a Nazi, you protect others, you also protect the Nazi from themselves.

Pretty sure Antifa is on the right side of history, here.

Rinchen Samphel said:
So...?

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha sat on a hillside under a dead tree watching Kapilavastu being sacked and his relatives being enslaved by King Ajatasatru after having dissuaded Ajatasatru on an earlier occasion from invading.

What we do in Mahāyāna in response to pure evil is keep our eyes open and act as witnesses.

You still did not understand. Picking sides is what causes one to go to lower realms.

It depends on your understanding the real situation of samsara. If you don't understand—you join in, pick sides, and go to three lower realms. This is called having a one-lifetime view.

Did I ever once say that Buddhists should run around punching Nazis?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 9th, 2018 at 8:51 PM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Dan74 said:

How do you guys square it with

“Hatred does not cease through hatred at any time. Hatred ceases through love. This is an unalterable law.”

Please don't give me the BS that "punching out a Nazi" is done with love and no hatred, that you are a wrathful manifestation of blahblah, that only Hinayanists understand this literally. An honest heartfelt answer please.

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāyāna ethics are based on intention, not on some particular set of vows. If by punching Nazis you intend to protect others, then this is a positive and meritorious act. And, if by punching a Nazi, you protect others, you also protect the Nazi from themselves.

Pretty sure Antifa is on the right side of history, here.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 9th, 2018 at 8:40 PM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Dan74 said:

As much as I don't doubt (and even rejoice in) your good intentions, you know what they say about the road to hell? In this case, I don't mean your rebirth but the future of your country.

Malcolm wrote:

We have a long tradition of punching Nazis in this country, going back to the Spanish Civil War.

Interestingly, Elle Reeve, who covered Charlottesville for Vice, was on CNN this morning, and she said that Antifa is so well organized via the internet, they really have managed to route the vast majority of Alt-right events, and that the Alt-right is very frustrated by Antifa.

Good job Antifa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 9th, 2018 at 12:09 PM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Sometimes you just have to punch Nazis. It is a solid American bodhisattva tradition. But you're not American, so I guess you just don't get it.

Dan74 said:

OK, let me try it another way. Let's break down the proantifa argument step by step.

1. PP, Proud Boys and the like are fascists or proto-fascists.

I've seen some whacky views expressed by individual members and roguish behaviour, but does that mean the whole group can be determined to be fascists, let alone neo-Nazis? Shouldn't the views of the leaders, as well as the entirety of what they put out be considered? Any group will have some loons. And Tiny apparently assaulting a guy after a heated exchange is adduced as evidence that the groups he belongs to are fascists?? Hmm...unconvincing, but not the weakest of the bunch.

2. They might be small and insignificant now, but so was NSDAP or its progenitors. And look where that led to.

Argumentum ad Hitlerium. There are so many differences between the US and Weimar Republic, but even this could perhaps hold. It is conceivable that such groups will grow, mutate and attempt to undermine the very democratic order that they currently say they are standing up for. Yes, PP repeatedly say they are big on freedoms, right, etc. Not exactly Mr Hitler and his Munich buddies, but hey, very unlikely but possible.

3. If we don't nip them in the bud, with violence and whatever means necessary, this is what's bound to happen.

This, to me, is by far, the weakest link. It betrays a lack of belief not only in the 1st Amendment but in democracy itself - the power of non-violent action, civic discourse and a fundamental distrust of the voters. The choice is painted as being between antifa violence and non-action. Organising a powerful grassroots alternative to corrupt polities and rightwing loons is not on the cards, is it? Winning over people's hearts and minds with coherent and fair policies, better arguments and a sensible compassionate ideology is just a pipe dream, is it? So it's goodbye democracy then. It is indeed a sad indictment of your society if it's best minds turn to this sort of thinking. It won't take much to undermine the democratic order when it already is so weak. Vigilantes, taking law into your own hands, is all fair game. Next time people turn out to protest Trump like they did in 2016 many refusing to accept the outcome of the democratic election, the Trumpistas can organise and beat the crap out of them, since they judge them to be a danger to society. Oh boy, good luck and gawd bless America..

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 9th, 2018 at 9:23 AM

Title: Re: Ngondro vs. Yidam?

Content:

Tenma said:

What is the difference between Ngondro practice and yidam practice?

Malcolm wrote:

If you really understand ngondro, nothing at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 9th, 2018 at 9:17 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Queequeg said:

So, you believe in punching fascists as a presently necessary strategy.

Malcolm wrote:

No, that's just catharsis.

Interestingly, if you apply to become an American citizen, they still ask you two things: 1) are you a member of the Nazi Party. 2) Are you a member of the Communist Party?

Answer yes to either of those two questions, you are not going to get your naturalization papers.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 9th, 2018 at 6:23 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Still think there is no problem?

Queequeg said:

Reading comprehension, my friend.

Please go back and see.

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, I could say that same thing to you.

Who said it was a strategy? I just don't see anything particularly wrong with the act. If anyone deserves to be punched, it's fascists. It is better than breaking shop windows.

Now then, what I do think is that the recently reinvigorated forces of intolerance in our society need to be curtailed, and if they will not be curtailed through reasoned discussion, then I think it a necessary social obligation to curtail them through force.

Nonviolence does not work against these people. Never has, never will.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 9th, 2018 at 4:41 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Queequeg said:

You keep losing credibility. Comparing the US to Germany is just lazy. Even Greg recognizes a difference.

Malcolm wrote:

The point was it does not take a large number of people to start a movement that can take over a country and murder millions. Look at the Bolsheviks for a left wing example.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 9th, 2018 at 4:40 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Queequeg said:

You guys are panting like Patriot Prayer, that drew, what, a few hundred people, to Portland, Oregon, is a threat to the rule of law in the United States. A group that had to draw on a large geographical area, to get a few hundred people out, is an existential threat.

Grigoris said:

It does not take more than a couple of hundred well armed people (with police or army backing, or non-involvement) to stage a coup.

Queequeg said:

Bro, you're out of your element. No offense, but your commentary about the United States is often tone deaf and off the mark. This is no exception. Just because Malcolm is here doubling down in parallel to you doesn't give your insight any more credibility.

There are many things I worry about in this country - a coup by some yahoos based in the Pacific Northwest is not one of them.

Granted that the conditions that allowed this to happen are not the same as those that exist now, but do not underestimate the power of hatred.

I don't. Which is why I try to steer clear of it in my thoughts, words, and actions.

Things are very different here. If things go down, it won't look like anything that happened in Europe.

We've had terrorist states in this country pretty much since the beginning. We've even had some of their politicians serve as president.

Frankly, I'm more concerned that some military or paramilitary might pull off a coup than anyone else, and the way they'd do it and the explanation they would have would probably be much easier for the powers that be to swallow than these "Fascists."

It won't be Spartacus. It will be the Praetorian Guard.

Malcolm wrote:

If you think these clowns are not civilians proxies for fascists in uniform, within our armed forces and police...well...

Queequeg said:

The 18-year-old, excited by his handiwork at the bloody rally in Charlottesville, Virginia, last summer, quickly went online to boast. He used the handle VasillistheGreek.

"Today cracked 3 skulls open with virtually no damage to myself," the young man wrote on Aug. 12, 2017.

Vasillios Pistolis had come to the now infamous Unite the Right rally eager for such violence. He belonged to a white supremacist group known as Atomwaffen Division, a secretive neo-Nazi organization whose members say they are preparing for a coming race war in the U.S. In online chats leading up to the rally, Pistolis had been encouraged to be vicious with any counterprotestors, maybe even sodomize someone with a knife. He'd responded by saying he was prepared to kill someone "if shit goes down."

...

Last year, nearly 25 percent of active-duty service members surveyed by the Military Times said they'd encountered white nationalists within the ranks. The publication polled more than 1,000 service members.

The results are jarring in a number of ways, not least because each branch of the armed forces has regulations that bar service members from joining white supremacist organizations. Army policy, for example, forbids soldiers from participating in "extremist groups" that foster "racial, gender, or ethnic hatred or intolerance." The Marine Corps has a similar regulation, Order 1900.16, which mandates swift penalties for Marines caught engaging in "extremist or supremacist activities."

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.propublica.org/article/atomwaffen-division-hate-group-active-duty-military>

Queequeg said:

California police investigating a violent white nationalist event worked with white supremacists in an effort to identify counter-protesters and sought the prosecution of activists with "anti-racist" beliefs, court documents show.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.theguardian.com/world/2018/feb/09/california-police-white-supremacists-counter-protest>

Still think there is no problem?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 9th, 2018 at 3:47 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Seriously? I just have to step back a moment.

You guys are panting like Patriot Prayer, that drew, what, a few hundred people, to Portland, Oregon, is a threat to the rule of law in the United States. A group that had to draw on a large geographical area, to get a few hundred people out, is an existential threat.

Malcolm wrote:
Beer Hall Putsch, 1923.

Queequeg said:
You say it is in fact such a threat that violence against them is justified.

Malcolm wrote:
You have to kill fascism in the cradle.

Queequeg said:
To listen to you, you'd think there were full blown riots in the street. C'mon, man. This wasn't Rodney King.

Malcolm wrote:
If we listen to you, that day is not far off.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, August 9th, 2018 at 3:38 AM
Title: Re: Who is America ?
Content:
Dan74 said:

It sounds to me like people's beef is fundamentally with the 1st Amendment. Then you should work to change it rather than advocating violence, breaking the law, assaulting people on the basis of their (perceived) beliefs and such.

The dude with swastika would be breaking the law in Germany but the 1st Amendment protects him. PP, from what I've seen of them, have largely been within their right to peacefully rally, but you don't like what you think they stand for, so you want them bashed and chased off the streets. The thing is, this cuts both ways. You start abridging people's right and your turn will come.

There are certain well-defined and narrowly limited classes of speech, the prevention and punishment of which have never been thought to raise any Constitutional problem. These include the lewd and obscene, the profane, the libelous, and the insulting or "fighting" words--those which by their very utterance inflict injury or tend to incite an immediate breach of the peace. It has been well observed that such utterances are no essential part of any exposition of ideas, and are of such slight social value as a step to truth that any benefit that may be derived from them is clearly outweighed by the social interest in order and morality.

Malcolm wrote:
Chaplinsky vs. New Hampshire, 1942.

Not all speech is protected speech. I have no problem with driving hate speech off the streets of the USA.

These are the people you earlier described as "...conservative chest thumping patriotic folks, not racist (they have prominent members who are black and pacific islander), not exclusively Christian, but mostly."

Dan74 said:

A man from Portland, Oregon says he was attacked by a member of the far-right Proud Boys group who has links to a Republican Senate candidate in Washington state.

Tim Ledwith, 34, said he was punched by Tusitala "Tiny" Toese, 22, who is aligned with the Proud Boys, a "western chauvinist" group founded by Gavin McInnes, a co-founder of the Vice Media empire.

Toese is also a prominent member of Vancouver, Washington-based Patriot Prayer, a group that has staged rallies that have often turned violent in the Pacific north-west over the past year. Patriot Prayer is led by Joey Gibson, a Republican candidate in the US Senate primary in Washington.

Tim Ledwith's injuries following the alleged attack by Tsuitala 'Tiny' Toese.

Tim Ledwith's injuries following the alleged attack by Tsuitala 'Tiny' Toese. Photograph: Handout

Ledwith said the attack happened in a busy shopping area in Portland at around 2.30pm on Friday 8 June. Toese and two other men had been yelling at strangers from a truck, he said.

"They were yelling: 'Support Trump, build the wall,'" Ledwith said.

Ledwith responded with a profanity, he said, and the men stopped their vehicle. Ledwith said Toese and another man, Proud Boys and Patriot Prayer supporter Donovan Flippo, got out.

"They were calling me a faggot and slinging epithets at me," Ledwith said. "Tiny walked over calmly and ... punched me in the face. I'm like, half his size. I was not a threat to them. I'm 34 years old, not 17. This is not a thing that happens to me day-to-day."

Ledwith said the punch knocked him to the ground and opened a gash in his lip. He was treated at hospital, he said, receiving several stitches.

A witness, who did not wish to be identified, told the Guardian she saw the attack from a block away. Toese, she said, punched Ledwith. Flippo, she said, stood beside Toese but was not physically involved. Ledwith offered no physical provocation, the witness said, and did not respond violently.

Photos showed Ledwith's injuries and Flippo walking towards the pickup truck, wearing a T-shirt marked "Antifa Removal Service". The pickup, which carries Washington plates, is registered to Russell Schultz of Vancouver, Washington, a known attendee at Patriot Prayer rallies.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.theguardian.com/world/2018/jun/16/portland-proud-boys-alleged-attack-man-patriot-prayer-joe-gibson>

All kinds of Nazis, white supremacists, and so on show up at these rallies.

The Southern Poverty Law Center has a page just for the Proud Boys.

<https://www.splcenter.org/fighting-hate/extremist-files/group/proud-boys>

You can find Kyle Chapman's crazy statements here as well:

"I am not afraid to speak out about the atrocities that whites and people of European descent face not only here in this country but in Western nations across the world. The war against whites, and Europeans and Western society is very real and it's time we all started talking about it and stopped worrying about political correctness and optics."

—Kyle Chapman, who formed the Fraternal Order of Alt-Knights, a wing of the Proud Boys, Unite America First Peace Rally, Sacramento, California, July 8, 2017

It is not your country Dan, it is mine. And I think these kinds of people need to be met with opposition, forceful opposition if necessary. They do not believe in a liberal open society. Like Popper points out, there is only so much room a tolerant society can have for the intolerant.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 9th, 2018 at 2:31 AM

Title: Re: General Question Regarding Vajrayana Etiquette and Samaya

Content:

CicadaCanto said:

This is a general question.

Suppose one has a vajra relationship with a teacher (even a group of teachers) and a karmic connection to a cycle of teachings that one has committed to the practice of.

What that might look like is receiving empowerments, instructions and transmissions from a teacher or group of teachers and actively engaging in the practices. Doing the ngondro, accomplishing different practices by numbers or signs, doing certain types of training.

What about taking teachings from another teacher in that context?

My teacher wouldn't really care. As long as I practice purely and hold the lineage teachings.

But having considered this for some time, going and receiving these other teachings, it makes me wonder about my motivation. I have already been given a complete path. It comes down to, in pragmatic terms, whether I wish to receive these other teachings, or engage in retreat on my main practices. There is only so much time and money.

-CC

Malcolm wrote:

If you are interested in the teacher, then go. If it is only the teaching you are interested in, then do not go.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 9th, 2018 at 2:27 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Unknown said:

February 20, 1939. Original Caption: Fight For The Flag... Anti Nazis Battle Cops. Mounted Policemen and rabid Anti Nazis battle for an American flag outside Madison Square Garden. The Anti-Nazis were parading outside the Garden in protest of the German American Bund "Americanization" rally being held there. This was only one of the night's many clashes between the demonstrators and heavy force of policemen who were on hand to preserve order. #

Malcolm wrote:

Not much as has changed:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 9th, 2018 at 2:14 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 9th, 2018 at 1:37 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Queequeg said:

You're talking about indulging in anger and intimidating people to go back into their closets.

Malcolm wrote:

You say I am talking about indulging in afflicted anger. I am not. The impulse to eliminate fascism and its proponents is righteous, not afflictive.

Queequeg said:

That's not fascist, but that definitely sounds like a totalitarian impulse. That path sounds terrible, too.

Malcolm wrote:

In The Open Society and Its Enemies, Popper wrote:

Less well known is the paradox of tolerance: Unlimited tolerance must lead to the disappearance of tolerance. If we extend unlimited tolerance even to those who are intolerant, if we are not prepared to defend a tolerant society against the onslaught of the intolerant, then the tolerant will be destroyed, and tolerance with them. —In this formulation, I do not imply, for instance, that we should always suppress the utterance of intolerant philosophies; as long as we can counter them by rational argument and keep them in check by public opinion, suppression would certainly be unwise. But we should claim the right to suppress them if necessary even by force; for it may easily turn out that they are not prepared to meet us on the level of rational argument, but begin by denouncing all argument; they may forbid their followers to listen to rational argument, because it is deceptive, and teach them to answer arguments by the use of their fists or pistols. We should therefore claim, in the name of tolerance, the right not to tolerate the intolerant.

This is where we are at with burgeoning fascist movement in this country. The line outlined in red certainly sounds like our dear leader, and his followers are responding just as expected, with fists and pistols:

Queequeg said:

California, Uber Alles

Malcolm wrote:

Dead Kennedies were poseurs. Horrible band.

Queequeg said:

He wrote that in the midst of the Civil Rights struggle, while he was daily staring down what you might call "fascists". He declared himself an extremist for love, led a radically non-violent movement, and I'd say, won some major fights for love, through love. He was killed for this. So were others. And the final chapter in the struggle for justice is not yet written. We carry that baton right now, and what we do will impact how this struggle plays out in the future. Buying into the Anarchist MO... Tell, when has that worked out?

Malcolm wrote:

The Civil Rights issue is a distraction. We are not talking about suppressed minorities struggling for civil rights after 400 years of systematic brutalization — though that will be an eventual issue again if the political direction of this country continues in the way it is going.

We are talking about a movement to the far right in the United States driven by racists and fundamentalist Christians that would make a movement such as the Civil Rights movement impossible without protracted and bloody civil war. (But wait, the history of US politics has always been about slavery, since day one -- that's what the second amendment and the electoral college were designed to protect, slavery, and we already fought a bloody civil war that made MLK and the Civil Rights movement possible.)

Think Handmaiden's Tale without the costumes. Think of Christian Dominionists taking howitzers to the stupas in Leverett and Grafton. This is a different kind of issue with different stakes.

As Wallace wrote in the Times, in 1944:

American fascism will not be really dangerous until there is a purposeful coalition among the cartelists, the deliberate poisoners of public information, and those who stand for the K.K.K. type of demagoguery.

...

Still another danger is represented by those who, paying lip service to democracy and the common welfare, in their insatiable greed for money and the power which money gives, do not hesitate surreptitiously to evade the laws designed to safeguard the public from monopolistic extortion. American fascists of this stamp were clandestinely aligned with their German counterparts before the war, and are even now preparing to resume where they left off, after "the present unpleasantness" ceases:

The symptoms of fascist thinking are colored by environment and adapted to immediate circumstances. But always and everywhere they can be identified by their appeal to prejudice and by the desire to play upon the fears and vanities of different groups in order to gain power. It is no coincidence that the growth of modern tyrants has in every case been heralded by the growth of prejudice. It may be shocking to some people in this country to realize that, without meaning to do so, they hold views in common with Hitler when they preach discrimination against other religious, racial or economic groups. Likewise, many people whose patriotism is their proudest boast play Hitler's game by retailing distrust of our Allies and by giving currency to snide suspicions without foundation in fact.

The American fascists are most easily recognized by their deliberate perversion of truth and fact. Their newspapers and propaganda carefully cultivate every fissure of disunity, every crack in the common front against fascism. They use every opportunity to impugn democracy. They use isolationism as a slogan to conceal their own selfish imperialism...They claim to be super-patriots, but they would destroy every liberty guaranteed by the Constitution. They demand free enterprise, but are the spokesmen for monopoly and vested interest. Their final objective toward which all their deceit is directed is to capture political power so that, using the power of the state and the power of the market simultaneously, they may keep the common man in eternal subjection. Sound like someone we know?

Queequeg said:

Seems love does work. Love takes sacrifice, endurance and patience.

Malcolm wrote:

It didn't seem to help Gay people, Jews, Gypsies, and so on in Nazi Germany very much. They didn't stand a chance. The world stood by and watched.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 9th, 2018 at 12:06 AM

Title: Re: Garchen giving Ratna Lingpa's Vajrakilaya

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

The Khön kilaya is the extant kahma lineage. AFAIK

Malcolm wrote:

There are several extant Kama Vajrakilaya lineages, not just the Khon Kilaya. What sets the Khon Kilaya apart is that its lineage has been continuous in a single family. But it has no completion stage practice.

Crazywisdom said:

Which are the other Kama lineages?

Malcolm wrote:

There are several: The Tantra tradition, largely arranged and preserved by Jigme Lingpa; Ronzom's tradition; Rog's tradition, and the Tsogyal Aural Lineage,

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 8th, 2018 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Naww Q...Malcolm and Greg are absolutely right! As practitioners of Buddhadharma, whenever and wherever we find these alt-right/fascist/neo-nazi bastards we should immediately walk up and punch them in the face! They must be stopped at all costs!! I mean, its not like they are sentient beings who were our own mothers at one time and should have our practice dedicated to them so they can see past their fears and anger or anything...

(now awaiting the comebacks of ego bruised rationalizations and severe condemnations...)

Malcolm wrote:

They are deluded mothers who are better off having their continuums liberated into the dharmadhātu before they can wreck more havoc. Pacifying, enriching, and subjugation does not seem to be have much effect on fascists. Their continuums are too afflicted.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 8th, 2018 at 11:39 PM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

We are already in a time of real violence. Just open your eyes. Racist violence is happening everyday to people of color across the US.

...

Things have gotten worse under this administration, not better, since so many white Americans have found their inner Klansman.

Queequeg said:

Its always nice to be lectured about the impact of racism by a white person.

Malcolm wrote:

Information is information. It does not have a color.

Queequeg said:

You don't need to tell me about the increase in racism since Trump was elected. I live it. Its kind of back to the way it used to be. The inflection is different this time around.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it is more ideologically driven. Before, it was just the status quo.

Queequeg said:

We made real progress under Obama. While I'm dismayed at how things are going, I have hope and confidence that a decent person in the White House can have a profound impact on this. I understand very well the importance of that Bully Pulpit.

Malcolm wrote:

This Genii is not going to be stuffed back in the bottle so easily since it is precisely a reaction to Obama.

Queequeg said:

Study after study is actually showing that violence is on the decline across the globe.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is a benefit of globalization. The backlash to globalization is an worldwide increase in nationalism, however.

Queequeg said:

Depending on how you define, "a time of real violence", I don't think the current circumstances are anything new. In some ways, racist violence in the US has ameliorated - we don't have widespread lynching anymore, for instance. In many respects, its still the same - being black still increases the chance of death by cop.

Malcolm wrote:

It is true the civil rights movement put an end to informal lynchings because of the passage of the civil rights act, etc. That has not ended the daily violence people of color endure, unfortunately, because racism is generally learned from one's parents, even though it is no longer enshrined by laws.

Queequeg said:

What we do have, and what causing the current state of agitation is that we have NFL players inconveniently reminding people about police violence against blacks. We have major sports heroes blowing off invitations to the White House. We have major celebrities being outspokenly black.

Malcolm wrote:

This is not the cause of racist violence against people of color. Racism is the cause of racist violence against people of color.

Queequeg said:

Animosity does not eradicate animosity.
Only by loving kindness is animosity dissolved.
This law is ancient and eternal.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed, but this is not a recommendation to be pacifists.

You seem to think Fascism can be loved out of existence. History has shown this is a mistake.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 8th, 2018 at 11:08 PM

Title: Re: Teacher Qualities

Content:

LoveFromColorado said:

Hey everyone,

I have a few basic questions that would help my understanding of Dzogchen a little bit. I have not yet received a transmission or pointing out instructions and my questions stem from my current situation:

1. How does one know that a teacher is indeed a realized Dzogchen teacher?

Malcolm wrote:

You can't. So you should select your teacher based on their qualities of learning, practice, retreat, compassion, and kindness. When you take someone as a guru, you are to regard them as being the Buddha in person, even if they are not a realized person themselves.

LoveFromColorado said:

2. How does one become a teacher?

Malcolm wrote:

Students ask you to teach.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 8th, 2018 at 10:45 PM

Title: Re: Garchen giving Ratna Lingpa's Vajrakilaya

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

The Khön kilaya is the extant kahma lineage. AFAIK

Malcolm wrote:

There are several extant Kama Vajrakilaya lineages, not just the Khon Kilaya. What sets the Khon Kilaya apart is that its lineage has been continuous in a single family. But it has no completion stage practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 8th, 2018 at 10:36 PM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Queequeg said:

The justification to "punch fascists" as a political statement is premised on the assertion that "fascists" only understand violence.

There is a huge assumption there. It also doesn't stand up to analysis.

This rationale sounds more like an excuse to act out anger and frustration.

Nothing convinces me that violence is the right way to deal with this. Not at this time. It seems to me this actually brings us closer to real violence.

Malcolm wrote:

We are already in a time of real violence. Just open your eyes. Racist violence is happening everyday to people of color across the US.

Queequeg said:

We need de-escalation. Not escalation.

Malcolm wrote:

Things have gotten worse under this administration, not better, since so many white Americans have found their inner Klansman.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 8th, 2018 at 9:57 PM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Queequeg said:

If no one obliges his invitation to rumble, he just looks like a spastic star wars cosplayer.

Takes two to tango.

You have not convinced me that a wall of silence is not a better protest.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 8th, 2018 at 9:34 PM

Title: Re: Confused about nature of mind introduction

Content:

Pema Rigdzin said:

Jehanne, the event Seeking Wisdom was talking about is in fact free, and it involves a master with true knowledge of the natural state giving clear, thorough instructions on how to go about getting to know something about one's own mind and gaining knowledge of its true nature for oneself. Attending such teachings, and the attendant transmission, is the best possible way to go about gaining knowledge first hand for oneself.

Jehanne said:

Ok, sorry I mixed up the issue about payment. Definately worth going there then, but still also important to actually do the practise at home, too

My favourite quote of the month from Alan Wallace: "(There are) two approaches to identifying the mind. We can receive pointing out instructions from a qualified master, or we can just do the practice."

Malcolm wrote:

One cannot practice any kind of real Dzogchen practice without empowerment. Alan Wallace knows this, which is why he gives empowerments to the more advanced people in his program.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 8th, 2018 at 9:31 PM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Queequeg said:

I agree there is no moral equivalence.

The question is not whether to respond, but how. It is a very difficult question for me. I am very conflicted about it.

Are we at that point that we need to put on armor and take up arms? Can we de-escalate and reset with Gandhi/King commitment to non-violence?

I would be interested to see this question discussed fully by fellow DharmaWheelers.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not that conflicted. I am not advocating war, but these fascist bastards need to understand they are in the extreme minority and that decent people are not going to put up with their crap.

Dan74 said:

When 'the fascist bastards' act more like 'decent people' than the ones who most visibly oppose them, then we hand them the biggest PR coup they could possibly dream of.

Malcolm wrote:

I am talking about real fascist bastards, like this one:

Dan74 said:

To be brutally honest, I think many on the Left in the Anglophone West have become so intolerant that they scream 'Nazi' the moment anyone mentions a remotely conservative idea.

Malcolm wrote:

First of all, most people on the left would not characterize me as a leftist. At best, you might characterize me as an eco-Keynsian with left-libertarian inclinations.

Secondly, I know the difference between real fascists and conservatives. William Buckley was a conservative. Anne Coulter is a fascist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 8th, 2018 at 5:10 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Queequeg said:

I don't see why "punching fascists" should be a strategy.

Grigoris said:

1. Because neo-Nazis rely on fear, when you punch them in the face publicly, it shows everybody that they bleed, just like everybody else. It shows that they are as fragile as everybody else. 2. Neo-Nazis believe they are invincible. Punching them in the face reminds them of their mortality.

Punching fascists is not an end in itself, it is a means to an end.

The other thing that punching fascists does, is it keeps them busy, so they cannot go off and terrorise defenseless innocents (as they are want to do). It draws their attention away from their victims. Actually: white people punching fascists is probably one of the best uses of their white privilege.

Malcolm wrote:

Punching fascists is indeed a privilege. It should be a right, too.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 8th, 2018 at 3:13 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Queequeg said:

You are a man of convictions, thankfully with rectified moral compass. A worthy and admirable trait. I'm conflicted until I commit, and on the method of confronting the hard right I see no clear path, except that I still hold out that a non-violent approach would be the preferred, and I'll further assert, the correct path.

Malcolm wrote:

Fascists don't understand nonviolence. They are not common soldiers being asked to shoot into unarmed crowds, they are ideologically committed.

Queequeg said:

From reports, Antifa numbers are far greater than the right wingers. I don't see why "punching fascists" should be a strategy.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not my strategy, but I don't lose any sleep when harmful people who are enemies of the Dharma get punched. Maybe it's a Vajrayāna thing. When enemies of the Dharma on the left suffer the same fate, for example, in China, I also lose no sleep. If Muslim, Christian, or any enemies of the Dharma are stopped, this is a good thing.

Queequeg said:

What is won? What's the reasoned justification for dressing up like you're going to some urban riot cosplay and getting into fights?

Malcolm wrote:

I think the point is to make fascists afraid again. In my view, not a bad thing at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 8th, 2018 at 2:26 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Queequeg said:

King's legacy was washed out. SNCC's story prevailed. Why? Because anger is easier than love.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it is easier to be afflicted than non-afflicted. Nevertheless, in general, there is no moral equivalence between Antifa and the Alt Right. The latter need to be shut down hard, with force if necessary. The 1930's should have taught us that, no?

Queequeg said:

I agree there is no moral equivalence.

The question is not whether to respond, but how. It is a very difficult question for me. I am very conflicted about it.

Are we at that point that we need to put on armor and take up arms? Can we de-escalate and reset with Gandhi/King commitment to non-violence?

I would be interested to see this question discussed fully by fellow DharmaWheelers.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not that conflicted. I am not advocating war, but these fascist bastards need to understand they are in the extreme minority and that decent people are not going to put up with their crap.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 8th, 2018 at 2:18 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The latter [alt-right] need to be shut down hard, with force if necessary.

Rick said:

Hope you don't mind my butting in for a beat?

1. Can you think of a reasonably possible scenario in which this might happen?
2. Say it does happen ... wouldn't the backlash from the shut-downees be horrifying?

Malcolm wrote:

1. Anywhere they show up and spew hate.
2. The alternative is far worse.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 8th, 2018 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Queequeg said:

King's legacy was washed out. SNCC's story prevailed. Why? Because anger is easier than love.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it is easier to be afflicted than non-afflicted. Nevertheless, in general, there is no moral equivalence between Antifa and the Alt Right. The latter need to be shut down hard, with force if necessary. The 1930's should have taught us that, no?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 8th, 2018 at 1:03 AM

Title: Re: Fire Suppression Sadhanas?

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

All over the West USA fire danger is growing. When people are in mortal danger is there any practice that can turn aside or stop a big fire?

City of 10 Thousand Buddhas, in Talmage California is in such peril right now.

Malcolm wrote:

From the Effortless Accomplishment of Wishes

SA CHU ME LUNG JUNG WEY BAR CHEY KYI/

When fearful times come and there is danger for the illusory body

GYU LUS NYEN CHING JIG PEY DU JUNG TSE

because of obstacles of the elements of earth, water, fire and air;

YID NI THE TSOM MEY PAR SOL WA DEB

by offering a supplication without second thoughts or doubt

ORGYEN JUNG WA ZHI YI LHA MOR CHEY

to Padmasambhava with the goddesses of the four elements

JUNG WA RANG SAR ZHI WAR THE TSOM MEY

without doubt the elements will be naturally pacified:

ORGYEN PADMA JUNG NEY LA SOL WA DEB

I supplicate Padmasambhava of Oddiyāna

SAM PA LHUN GYI DRUB PAR JIN GYI LOB bless us that our wishes be effortlessly accomplished!

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 7th, 2018 at 10:48 PM

Title: Re: Ngondro: A Stand Alone Practice For You?

Content:

Terma said:

This is mainly a question for those who have finished their ngondro or at the very least a good chunk of the way through.

Do you think it is better to do ngondro as a stand alone practice, meaning focusing only on that and not doing any other daily practices? Or do you feel there is some benefit to doing a short daily practice along with doing the accumulations?

Everyone is different and every teacher gives different advice. Having said that, how you go about it?

Thanks.

Malcolm wrote:

Ngondro is sufficient by itself as a daily practice, since it contains all the essentials of creation and completion stage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 7th, 2018 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: Tibetan medicine is quack and cultural baggage

Content:

Toenail said:

Tibetan doctors think worms (parasites) are made out of mud, prescribe medicine with heavy metal in it or bird shit. How can anyone take it seriously? There is just anecdotal evidence. How come they say it does not work because of the missing karmic link to the doctor, but an Aspirin works every single time? They say they purify [sic] the mercury, but the way it is purified [sic] is peeing on it and burying it while doing mantras on full moon. That seems crazy and not even lifestyle californians [sic] should think it is a cool thing to try out that stuff.

Malcolm wrote:

You could not be more ignorant about Tibetan Medicine if you tried. Who told you that Tibetan doctors think parasites are made of mud? Who told you that mercury was processed by peeing on it? Who taught you how to spell?

I have studied Tibetan Medicine for many years, read Tibetan quite well, and everything you have stated here is utter crap.

Matylda said:

I do not want to take sides, since I have poor knowledge of TB, let's say I know nothing about it. But one thing... I met one lama, who was very sick. And I was told that he was poisoned by heavy intake of TB pills. Anyway he was poisoned by mercury. I was very surprised of course. He told me that he was treated by some famous TB doc and was himself very upset by this what happened to him, and was very angry with the doc. After a few years of some other treatment probably WM, he got better.

So I wondered at that time about safety of those TM pills. I have no idea how they are produced etc. and if there is any control over the whole process. I am used to WM and traditional Japanese medicine but only as patient, not an expert. TJM schools in Japan are under strict control, and there are serious limits for those with a license to have an access to needles, and other medical stuff for safety reasons. How is it with TM docs? and who controls their medications?

Malcolm wrote:

There are not that many TM pills that have mercury sulfide. The reason is that mercury sulfide is hard to prepare and the knowledge of its preparation is rare these days. There are only a few senior physicians who have the know how to make it, mercury sulfide preparation requires large teams working 24/7, for a period of three months, and it is dangerous work.

Matylda said:

Cinnabar-containing traditional medicines are generally relatively non-toxic at therapeutic doses. The correct preparation methods, appropriate doses, disease status, age and drug combinations are important factors impacting cinnabar toxicity (1, 8, 31).

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC2755212/>

There are GMP plants for Tibetan Medicine in China, but these processes make medicine that is much inferior to the quality of handmade Tibetan medicine crafted in small pharmacies. Traditionally, herbs are stone ground, but in these plants, everything has to be made of steel, which adds heat that destroys the essential oils which are the active ingredient in the herbs. Not only this, but these plants source inferior herbs from lower altitudes. It is a known fact that plants that grow at altitude where there is less oxygen are more mineral rich etc. This is why Himalayan herbs are superior to their lowland counterparts.

It is possible the lama you are referring to was given improperly prepared medicine. The risks of mercury sulfite compounds is well known in Tibetan Medicine and the warnings about misuse and poor preparation of them are quite stern.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 7th, 2018 at 11:25 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The difference is that Antifa want to protect people, where as Nazis get off on hurting people

Grigoris said:

Thing is though that Antifa are just childish, whereas these right-wing nuts are plain dangerous. Mainly because they are armed to the teeth too.

Take the recent Patriot Prayer rally. Police colluded with the neo-Nazis, allowing them to go to the protest armed (with firearms) while shaking down Antifa counter-protesters and arresting them for possession of non-existent weapons. They then proceeded to gas and beat the crap out of Antifa while leaving their neo-Nazi mates unperturbed.

In Greece the neo-Nazis used to blow off their pent-up sexual energy beating up migrants (killed a couple) and then one day decided to kill a Greek Antifa (knifed him to death). Then the Antifa got real serious and raided and shot-up a neo-Nazi gathering killing two people and seriously wounding a third.

It took the arrest of key neo-Nazis to stop an all out urban war happening in Athens.

How long is it going to be before one of these trigger-happy "silly men" or "buffoons" makes the mistake of shooting somebody and starting a civil war?

I remember a short time ago one of them pulled a gun and shot warning rounds in the ground in front of Antifa counter-protesters, so it is not going to be long before something REALLY stupid happens. And then things will no longer be funny at all...

And the first people to justify what will happen will be these "silly men" and "buffoons" and, of course, every intellectually-challenged American's favorite president...

lord-turner-donald-trump-is-a-racist-sexist-buffoon-and-a-threat-to-world-peace.jpg

Remember: He endorsed the sexual predator in the Cohen video, so I am sure he will have no problem supporting the neo-Nazis when they start their killing rampage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 7th, 2018 at 5:31 AM

Title: Re: Existence

Content:

↑ said:

all things are clearly apparent yet do not truly exist ... all these manifestations are temporary, adventitious phenomena.

tomschwarz said:

Leaving aside the super interesting debate about translation, because i bet this translation of tibetan to english is quite bad/incorrect, please in your own voice, based on your own understanding haha, questions:

1) What does truly exist (other than our beloved dependent origination)? Does the planet earth exist (for 4 billion years so far)?

2) Can something go in and out of existence? Like the human being sidartha gauthama?

3) is everything an illusion? If no, what is not an illusion? Is happiness an illusion? Fyi in standard english illusion means:

an instance of a wrong or misinterpreted perception of a sensory experience. So if all of buddha dharma does not exist, if its all an illusion, then is perception as a whole the wrong way to go?

Malcolm wrote:

The term in Tibetan is sgyu ma, which in Sanskrit is māya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 7th, 2018 at 4:41 AM

Title: Re: Existence

Content:

Rick said:

Interesting, thanks.

Sanskrit has a lot of rich idiosyncratic "spiritual" terms that don't translate all that well into English. How do they translate into Tibetan? Or does Tibetan actually use Sanskrit words in their texts?

Malcolm wrote:

The Tibetans created a technical language to handle Buddhist terminologies.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 7th, 2018 at 2:08 AM

Title: Re: ripples in the Net

Content:

Supramundane said:

in this vale of tears no truly pure action is possible.

Malcolm wrote:

Not so, practicing the path is a pure karma that never leads to suffering, but rather, away from it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 7th, 2018 at 1:44 AM

Title: Re: Existence

Content:

Rick said:

Okay then forget the "comparatively."

In your experience, are Tibetan dharma teachings difficult to translate into English? Is Tibetan a highly nuanced language, the meaning is in the eye of the beholder kinda thing? Or is it more mechanical, attain a reasonable degree of fluency and the translation takes care of itself.

Malcolm wrote:

Tibetan is a relatively simple language with a relatively simple grammar. The most difficult thing about it is that it lacks synonyms, so the same words pull multiple duties depending on context. On the other hand, the language of Dzogchen texts is fairly straightforward, if a bit wordy sometimes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 7th, 2018 at 12:38 AM

Title: Re: Existence

Content:

Rick said:

Aha.

Hey Malcolm, I'm gonna assume you've done some translation from other (European) languages to English, yes? Would you say that (dharmic) Tibetan is comparatively difficult to translate?

Malcolm wrote:

No. I only know Tibetan and English, smattering of Sanskrit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 7th, 2018 at 12:33 AM

Title: Re: Existence

Content:

Rick said:

Oy ... that explains a lot.

Malcolm wrote:

Others would translate the term as "illusion."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 7th, 2018 at 12:27 AM

Title: Re: Existence

Content:

Rick said:

What is a "phantom emanation?"

Malcolm wrote:

You are.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 6th, 2018 at 11:55 PM

Title: Re: Does Consciousness Continue After Cessation?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Nevertheless, since arhats have traces of ignorance, this is sufficient to maintain their continuums, albeit not as a birth in any of the three realms.

Astus said:

I'm not arguing to prove that the Yogacara interpretation is correct, only to show that they had no problem accepting what is taught by sravakayana schools about the destination of arhats.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they do have a problem with it, otherwise Asanga would not have written what he wrote. The fault is that śravakas enter into a mental body in a permanent cessation with no chance of escape without intervention. Otherwise, the yogacarins too would be at fault for accepting cessation as an extreme.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 6th, 2018 at 11:32 PM

Title: Re: Tibetan medicine is quack and cultural baggage

Content:

Toenail said:

Tibetan doctors think worms (parasites) are made out of mud, prescribe medicine with heavy metal in it or bird shit. How can anyone take it seriously? There is just anecdotal evidence. How come they say it does not work because of the missing karmic link to the doctor, but an Aspirin works every single time? They say they purify [sic] the mercury, but the way it is purified [sic] is peeing on it and burying it while doing mantras on full moon. That seems crazy and not even lifestyle californians [sic] should think it is a cool thing to try out that stuff.

Malcolm wrote:

You could not be more ignorant about Tibetan Medicine if you tried. Who told you that Tibetan doctors think parasites are made of mud? Who told you that mercury was processed by peeing on it? Who taught you how to spell?

I have studied Tibetan Medicine for many years, read Tibetan quite well, and everything you have stated here is utter crap.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 6th, 2018 at 9:46 PM

Title: Re: Does Consciousness Continue After Cessation?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that the pure aggregates do not cease contra your assertion.

Astus said:

The pure form of the aggregates are present during sopadhisesa-nirvana - that is what the word means - but its other part, nirupadhisesa, means exactly that there is no support (upadhi), i.e. skandhas present. However, Yogacara works discuss the transformed skandhas only for buddhas (Mahayanasutralamkara 9.41-45; Mahayanasamgraha 10.5), but not mentioned for those of the two vehicles. Xuanzang also discusses the issue as <https://dharma.wheel.net/viewtopic.php?p=459641#p459641>. Also, arhats without nirupadhisesa-nirvana can only fit into the system of ekayana, but not of the five gotras where sravakas and pratyekabuddhas reach a final and definite goal. As Vasubandhu notes in his commentary to the Lotus Sutra (Tiantai Lotus Texts, BDK ed, p 135): "It is not the case that those who have not originally produced the thought of enlightenment, such as ordinary people and the disciples who are fixed [in the Small Vehicle], are able to attain it."

Malcolm wrote:

Nevertheless, since arhats have traces of ignorance, this is sufficient to maintain their continuums, albeit not as a birth in any of the three realms.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 6th, 2018 at 11:30 AM

Title: Re: Existence

Content:

Rick said:

I'm confused (as usual). I thought dependent origination meant that nothing exists inherently?

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, that is what it means. Everything arises based on causes and conditions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 6th, 2018 at 8:53 AM

Title: Re: Existence

Content:

Rick said:

Per Buddhism, what does "to exist" mean? Can this be answered (satisfactorily) without reference to the two truths? If so, please do.

Malcolm wrote:

to be dependently originated...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 6th, 2018 at 6:09 AM

Title: Re: Does Consciousness Continue After Cessation?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Śravaka arhats take on a mental body due to their traces of ignorance, as Asanga explains clearly in the Mahāyānottaratantraśāstravyākhyā

Astus said:

Such a mental body is fine if it is not considered the final destination of an arhat, hence it is of the undetermined category who moves on to the bodhisattva path. After all, the Ratnagotravibhaga is about the buddha-gotra. So unless you say that Yogacara does not posit the doctrine of different gotras, arhats and pratyekabuddhas must attain true nirupadhisesa-nirvana.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that the pure aggregates do not cease contra your assertion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 6th, 2018 at 2:40 AM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Bill Maher says similar all the time. Libs have no sense of humor.

Malcolm wrote:

Bill Maher should talk...talk about no sense of humor...

Grigoris said:

I actually like his sense of humor...

Malcolm wrote:

His jokes are ok, if a bit rough, but he a pretty humorless guy, actually...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 6th, 2018 at 1:52 AM

Title: Re: Does Consciousness Continue After Cessation?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

So, therefore your idea that Yogacara advocates a total cessation for arhat is completely unfounded based on the reasoning you gave, i.e., that there is no continuation upon the cessation of the ālaya.

Astus said:

Why would that be? Just because the alayavijnana ceases for both arhats and buddhas, it does not mean that their attainment is the same. For buddhas there are the causes accumulated over the bodhisattva path to generate the buddha-bodies. But the causes are absent for arhats, hence there is no cause for the emergence of anything.

"Samanantarapratyaya, a condition qua antecedent, means that the eight actual consciousnesses (darsana and samvittibhaga) and their Caittas (to the exclusion of Rupa, the Viprayuktas, the Bijas, and the Asamakrtas) constitute a preceding group which passes away to give place to a subsequent group of the same species, opening the way to that group and acting in such a way that it immediately comes into being. ... At the moment of entry into Nirupadhisesanirvana (Final-Nirvana-without-residue, i.e., Nirvana without vestiges of reincarnation), the mind is extremely weak and, in consequence, has not 'the strength to open the way and lead'. Further, it does not produce a subsequent dharma of a similar nature. Hence it is not Samanantarapratyaya. How do you explain this?

It has been truly said in the Yogasastra that 'if, immediately after the former consciousness-associates, the latter consciousness-associates are born, then the former are the Samanantarapratyaya of the latter.' (Yogasastra, 3 and 51, and VIKHYAPANA, 18)."

(Cheng Weishi Lun, 4.1.2, p 537-539)

Malcolm wrote:

Again, this is not the case. Śravaka arhats take on a mental body due to their traces of ignorance, as Asanga explains clearly in the Mahāyānottaratantraśāstravyākhyā

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 5th, 2018 at 11:18 PM

Title: Re: Does Consciousness Continue After Cessation?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The ālaya contains the seeds of affliction, so of course during liberation it reverts in everyone, thus even the Tathāgata is an arhat.

Astus said:

According to the Cheng Weishi Lun, arhat there refers to arhats, pratyekabuddhas, and buddhas equally.

Malcolm wrote:

So, therefore your idea that Yogacara advocates a total cessation for arhat is completely unfounded based on the reasoning you gave, i.e., that there is no continuation upon the cessation of the ālaya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 5th, 2018 at 10:17 PM

Title: Re: Does Consciousness Continue After Cessation?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Yeah. But better.

Malcolm wrote:

According to the commentaries on Dzogchen, Dzogchen and secret mantra in general, falls in the Adhishthana pitika.

Crazywisdom said:

I recall you mentioning this previously. Which is why I was surprised by KN's. I guess that's Longchenpa. So. Guhyagarbha is the general Dzogchen tantra. Says it's mantra basket. Dzogchen tantras say Adhishthana. So for me this point is cancelled. It's not important. What is important is tantra is about practicing with channels. However that's done, with mandalas of deities, bijas or whatever the result of Buddhahood is revealed this way. It's like the eyes. They see 360, they see wisdom, they hear, they smell, they eat, they are light, they are mandalas of deities.

Malcolm wrote:

These sorts of categorizations are not of the essence.

Topics like these are not really for the internet. People really get the wrong idea and think they can do Shitro without empowerments, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 5th, 2018 at 10:06 PM

Title: Re: Yuthok nyingthik (your views?)

Content:

MatthewAngby said:

I'll love to know about you guys' opinion.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a cycle principally for doctors of Tibetan Medicine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 5th, 2018 at 9:55 PM

Title: Re: Does Consciousness Continue After Cessation?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Mantrayana is almost beyond Mahayana due to this bardo of Hinayana in the abhidharma. We are going to favor the 3rd Turning sutras, demote abhidharma and go with the meanings in mandalas

Malcolm wrote:

A hem, examine the purities of any sadhana, and all you will find is Abhidharma.

Crazywisdom said:

Yeah. But better.

Malcolm wrote:

According to the commentaries on Dzogchen, Dzogchen and secret mantra in general, falls in the Adhidharma pitika.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 5th, 2018 at 9:34 PM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Bill Maher says similar all the time. Libs have no sense of humor.

Malcolm wrote:

Bill Maher should talk...talk about no sense of humor...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 5th, 2018 at 9:14 PM

Title: Re: Does Consciousness Continue After Cessation?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Mantrayana is almost beyond Mahayana due to this bardo of Hinayana in the abhidharma. We are going to favor the 3rd Turning sutras, demote abhidharma and go with the meanings in mandalas

Malcolm wrote:

A hem, examine the purities of any sadhana, and all you will find is Abhidharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 5th, 2018 at 9:13 PM

Title: Re: Does Consciousness Continue After Cessation?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Nevertheless, Yogācāra does not teach that the aggregates utterly cease.

Astus said:

It would not be remainderless nirvana if aggregates remained. The alayavijnana ceases for arhats, as Vasubandhu says in the 5th stanza of the Trimsika.

Malcolm wrote:

The passage here does not mean what you have taken it to mean.

The ālaya contains the seeds of affliction, so of course during liberation it reverts in everyone, thus even the Tathāgata is an arhat.

Vinitadeva writes in the Triṃśikāṭīkā, commenting on this verse, that the person in whom the ālayavijñana reverts is nominally called an arhat because the reversion of the ālaya is a term for being free from the basis which is endowed with the seeds of affliction. He continues, at this time of the reversion of the ālaya, the one who obtains the vimuktikāya, the body of liberation, or the dharmakāya, is termed an "arhat."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 5th, 2018 at 7:30 PM

Title: Re: Via Negativa

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is a Mahāyāna forum. Pure aggregates continue in buddhahood. See Mahāyānasamgraha. In Mahāyāna, there is also so-called nonabiding nirvana.

Astus said:

The issue is related to the Theravadin view of nirvana, where all conditioned dharmas must cease at the end, as they are the products of ignorance.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is also wrong. What about rocks, are they products ignorance in the Theravada view? No.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 5th, 2018 at 7:27 PM

Title: Re: Does Consciousness Continue After Cessation?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Nevertheless, Yogācāra does not teach that the aggregates utterly cease. Madhyamaka rejects the doctrine of fixed gotras.

In Mahāyāna, it is certainly the case, for example, the Lanka Sutra.

Astus said:

Only those of the undetermined lineage change to the bodhisattva path.

"[The Buddha] has taught a single vehicle to lead word-hearers of undetermined [lineage], other bodhisattvas [of undetermined lineage], and [bodhisattvas] of determined lineage into the Great Vehicle."

(Mahayanasamgraha 10.32, BDK ed, p 115-116)

Here is Xuanzang's explanation on the state of nirupadhisesa-nirvana (Cheng Weishi Lun, book 9, chapter 4, part 5, section 1.2.2, p 761-763, tr Wei Tat):

"The Sravakas and the Pratyekabuddhas, you say, are in possession of the Nirupadhisesa. Is there not a Sutra which teaches that they are not in possession of Nirupadhisesa? If they are in possession, why is it said that they are not? But the same Sutra [the Srimala Sutra] teaches that they do not in any way possess Nirvana. Is one going to maintain that Sopadhisesa is also lacking in them? In fact, as long as their 'body and intelligence' (i.e., their body and their mind) remain, the Sravakas and other saints of the two Vehicles - that is to say, the niyatagotras (saints of indeterminate nature) - have Jneyavarana. The duhkhopadhi (that is to say, 'that which serves as support for suffering') not having been exhausted, the principle of Parinirvana remains latent. It may therefore be said that they are not possessed of Nirvana.

This does not mean that they are really devoid of Sopadhisesa Nirvana, that is to say, the 'Reality' or Tathata revealed by the exhaustion of Klesavarana.

But, since they have not yet realized the complete Parinirvana, one says that they have not the Nirupadhisesa: this does not mean that, later, when their body and intelligence have been destroyed, they will not suffer the exhaustion of dukkhopadhi and the resultant Nirupadhisesa Nirvana.

In other words, if the Srimalasutra teaches that the saints of the two Vehicles are not possessed of Nirvana, one should understand that this refers to the fourth Nirvana, i.e., the Apratisthitanirvana, in which the Bodhisattva does not stay or reside, not the first three.

Furthermore, this declaration that the saints of the two Vehicles have not the Nirupadhisesa refers only to the aniyatagotras (saints of indeterminate nature) : these Arhats, at the very moment of their attainment of Sopadhisesa Nirvana, determine to turn their mind towards the supreme Bodhi. By the power of their pure meditation and contemplation and of their pious vows and resolutions, which proceed from compassion, they 'conserve' their bodies and continue their residence for long periods of time in Samsara instead of entering into the Nirupadhisesa as do the niyatagotra saints of the two Vehicles.

The latter, i.e., the niyatagotra saints whose mind is fixed on arhatship, and not on Buddhahood, have a great predilection for Parinirvana. They obtain the contemplation of pudgalasunyata, thus realizing immediately the Bhutatathata which results from this sunyata; they completely destroy the Klesavarana, the cause of rebirth, thereby attaining the Sopadhisesa Nirvana which is revealed on the basis of 'Reality'. The klesas which produce rebirth for these saints having been exhausted, there is no reason for a new existence to be produced, especially when the actual dukkhopadhi (the physical body) comes to perish spontaneously. The other samskrtadharmas (active, functioning dharmas), since they no longer serve as a supporting basis (upadhi), are abandoned at the same time as the dukkhopadhi. As a result of this, the Nirupadhisesa Nirvana which supports itself on Reality will be manifested. Although at this moment (when the dukkhopadhi has come to an end) the body and intelligence of the two Vehicles no longer exist, nevertheless, as these saints have previously effected the destruction of this dukkhopadhi, one can attribute Nirupadhisesa to them.

At this moment, [in view of the complete disappearance of all cittanimitta,] there remains only the pure Tathata (the first of the ten Tathatas set out at the beginning of this section), exempt from the ten nimittas, placid, tranquil, non active, beatified. From the point of view of Tathata, it is said that the saints of the two Vehicles are not different from the Buddhas; but since they are not possessed of Bodhi and those activities that are directed to the salvation of others, it is said that they are different from the Buddhas."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 5th, 2018 at 5:59 AM

Title: Re: Via Negativa

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Correction, there is no coming about of the upādāna-skandhas.

Astus said:

Further extension then, that there is the saupadisesa-nibbanadhatu and the anupadisesa-nibbanadhatu, as per the <https://suttacentral.net/iti44/en/ireland> and others. The aggregates without clinging remain only until parinirvana.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a Mahāyāna forum. Pure aggregates continue in buddhahood. See Mahāyānasamgraha. In Mahāyāna, there is also so-called nonabiding nirvana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 5th, 2018 at 5:58 AM

Title: Re: Does Consciousness Continue After Cessation?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This the extreme of cessation. Not acceptable in Mahāyāna as CW points out.

Astus said:

It is not acceptable for a bodhisattva to go for total cessation, but it was not an agreed concept that the sravaka nirvana is only a temporary samadhi, as it is apparent in the five-gotra teaching of Yogacara.

Malcolm wrote:

In Mahāyāna, it is certainly the case, for example, the Lanka Sutra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 5th, 2018 at 2:28 AM

Title: Re: Via Negativa

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Unless they just don't do that. People hold all sorts of nonsense views. People nowadays think we're reflections of an 11-dimension crystal. No one exists. We're all just this crystal in motion.

Malcolm wrote:

They all do that, including you. But you have not really thought carefully about the ramifications of the statement -- i.e. there is no such thing as a nonexistent.

Coëmgenu said:

I've actually thought about this for a very long time. I have to say I disagree.

Nonexistence is a nonextant, but it is extant as a theoretical suggestion posited by the human mind. And it need not be a transformation. The human mind can easily imagine nihilism.

Furthermore, believe in fundamental nihilism does not require the destruction of something that "once was".

Malcolm wrote:

I don't know you mean by "fundamental nihilism."

The human mind cannot imagine nothing without something. They are relative concepts that cannot function in isolation. Absence cannot be conceived without presence, short cannot be conceived with long, etc.

A given thing cannot become nothing in a real sense, just as the destruction of a pot does not entail the shattering of all of the atoms of which it is composed. We say the pot no longer exists, but we certainly cannot say that the material composing it is also destroyed. This is the kind of "nonexistence" (abhāva) being referred to consistently in Madhyamaka texts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 4th, 2018 at 11:06 PM

Title: Re: Does Consciousness Continue After Cessation?

Content:

Matt J said:

I found this interesting article between B. Allan Wallace and Bhikkhu Bodhi about what happens to an arhat after death. I thought it did an excellent job of answering for me whether or not Theravada Buddhism is annihilationist. According to Bhikkhu Bodhi, some say yes and some say no. I also noticed other topics that often arise here.

Some highlights include:

- a professed similarity between Buddhist and Advaita concepts
- a split in Theravada Buddhism between annihilationists and others
- how the suttas on the luminous mind don't point to a substantial self of any sort
- the difference between Dzogchen and Theravada concepts of what happens when one dies post-nibbana https://www.sbinstitute.com/sites/default/files/What%20Happens%20to%20an%20Ar%20ahant%20at%20Death_BB-BAW_BB-Revised.pdf

Malcolm wrote:

This whole interview is a fail. BAW is quizzing BB using Dzogchen terms and concepts the former has never been introduced to.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 4th, 2018 at 10:58 PM

Title: Re: Does Consciousness Continue After Cessation?

Content:

Matt J said:

what happens to an arhat after death

Astus said:

No ignorance, no consciousness, no birth.

Malcolm wrote:

This the extreme of cessation. Not acceptable in Mahāyāna as CW points out.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 4th, 2018 at 10:38 PM

Title: Re: Via Negativa

Content:

Astus said:

So if it is accepted that the five aggregates come about because of ignorance, when ignorance ceases there is no cause for the becoming of aggregates, and without the aggregates there is no being to talk of in any sense.

Malcolm wrote:

Correction, there is no coming about of the upādāna-skandhas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 4th, 2018 at 9:50 PM

Title: Re: Via Negativa

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

No. Nonononono.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, yes, yes yes, yes, yes, yes, yes.

Why?

If an existent is not established,
a nonexistent will not be established.

The transformation of an existent into another is what people term a "nonexistent."

-- MMK

Coëmgenu said:

Unless they just don't do that. People hold all sorts of nonsense views. People nowadays think we're reflections of an 11-dimension crystal. No one exists. We're all just this crystal in motion.

Malcolm wrote:

They all do that, including you. But you have not really thought carefully about the ramifications of the statement -- i.e. there is no such thing as a nonexistent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 4th, 2018 at 7:08 AM

Title: Re: Charging for Dharma

Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

Milarepa said to Marpa, "I have created heavy negative karma, so I have now come to practice Dharma. I have nothing to offer you but my body, speech and mind. Please give me the Dharma and also food and clothing." Milarepa asked for food and clothing because he didn't have anything at all.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and Marpa taught Milarepa nothing for years...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 4th, 2018 at 7:05 AM

Title: Re: Charging for Dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Lets see, two pints of gold dust costs approximately $40,000 in todays money.

Nemo said:

So that is what Dharma teachings are worth? Is that their exact monetary value?

Malcolm wrote:

It is an example. Rwa Lotsawa had a menu on his door, this much for the wang, this much for the sadhana, this much for the instruction, and so on. But on the other hand, no one says you have to pay the initiation fee for this or that teaching demanded this by or that guru. You are free to pass up any teachings you don't feel inclined to pay for.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 4th, 2018 at 5:00 AM

Title: Re: Charging for Dharma

Content:

Nemo said:

Old days teachers gave too much. Now many in the new generation treat it like a business. Some can't wait to get upstairs and count the money.

Did the Buddha charge for teachings? Probably not considering he forbade monks from touching money. Capitalism is a revolutionary force. Everything has a value in money and the thought that something can't have a price put on it is scandalous. The solution is of course to squeeze money out of people to be taught something no one owns that is the birthright of every sentient being. How will we charge the birds that hear the tinkling bells on the stupa? They are stealing the blessing for free!

Malcolm wrote:

How we forget:

"Then Vairocana and Legdrup offered Shri Singha a two pints of gold dust and a finger sized golden ingot and made a request, "The king of Tibet has comprehended the Dharma of cause and result. Since he has send us to seek the Dharma that transcends cause and result, please grant our request for the Dharma beyond cause and effect."

Lets see, two pints of gold dust costs approximately $40,000 in todays money. Guess those Indian masters were really scandalous...and they had not even received any teachings...

Queequeg said:

I don't think you guys are talking about the same "old days."

Malcolm wrote:

I think here we are talking about Vajrayāna teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 4th, 2018 at 4:24 AM

Title: Re: Charging for Dharma

Content:

Nemo said:

Old days teachers gave too much. Now many in the new generation treat it like a business. Some can't wait to get upstairs and count the money.

Did the Buddha charge for teachings? Probably not considering he forbade monks from touching money. Capitalism is a revolutionary force. Everything has a value in money and the thought that something can't have a price put on it is scandalous. The solution is of course to squeeze money out of people to be taught something no one owns that is the birthright of every sentient being. How will we charge the birds that hear the tinkling bells on the stupa? They are stealing the blessing for free!

Malcolm wrote:

How we forget:

"Then Vairocana and Legdrup offered Shri Singha a two pints of gold dust and a finger sized golden ingot and made a request, "The king of Tibet has comprehended the Dharma of cause and result. Since he has send us to seek the Dharma that transcends cause and result, please grant our request for the Dharma beyond cause and effect."

Lets see, two pints of gold dust costs approximately $40,000 in todays money. Guess those Indian masters were really scandalous...and they had not even received any teachings...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 4th, 2018 at 2:41 AM

Title: Re: Charging for Dharma

Content:

Quay said:

Good point. And as more than one Vajrayana Lama has said, "Vajrayana is not a democracy." There are Dharma paths where the consensus of the group is key and there are those others. To each their own desire.

Malcolm wrote:

Vajrayāna is also not socialist.

Quay said:

I would agree that no -ists or -isms apply.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, the social and political model of Vajrayāna is the family. Guru and consort are the parents, disciples are the children. One cannot belong to some family simply because one demands admittance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 4th, 2018 at 2:31 AM

Title: Re: Via Negativa

Content:

Rick said:

Nor can non-existence be established.

?

Malcolm wrote:

Nonexistence is a form of existence.

Coëmgenu said:

No. Nonononono.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, yes, yes yes, yes, yes, yes, yes.

Why?

If an existent is not established,
a nonexistent will not be established.
The transformation of an existent into another is what people term a "nonexistent."

-- MMK

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 4th, 2018 at 1:28 AM

Title: Re: Via Negativa

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

This Asian debate is pastimes for bored monks.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 4th, 2018 at 12:44 AM

Title: Re: Via Negativa

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No form of existence can be ultimately established.

Rick said:

Nor can non-existence be established.

Nagarjuna said:

Through his knowledge of entities and nonentities,

In the instruction for Katyayana,
The Victor has refuted
Both [their] existence and nonexistence.

Rick said:
?

Malcolm wrote:
Nonexistence is a form of existence.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, August 3rd, 2018 at 9:52 PM
Title: Re: Charging for Dharma
Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:
I think that many people here never experienced real poverty.

To be very clear, I wasn't turned out from the teachings by the teacher in questions, but by an organizer, who is sufficiently well off himself. I didn't even have the option of approaching the teacher directly.

Malcolm wrote:
That is called an obstacle. Your karma.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:
Another important point, I'm willing to pay the whole money, I don't have the actual value just now. I'm willing to offer what I have now, my labor capacity and any skill, plus the actual monetary value as soon as I get it! I'm in no way willing to go on "bargaining" Dharma teachings.

Malcolm wrote:
Apparently, they did not require your services. Would you have been willing to offer them even if no Dharma teachings were forthcoming from your efforts? If so, you should go back, and offer your services to this Dharma center, with no expectations other than merit gained.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:
I also seem that some people here never experienced poverty, in a poor country (in a poorer region within it), where you don't have your own money, and the few you have in our pocket is used for buying your medicine and food for daily survival.

Malcolm wrote:
There are any number of Dharma teachings which I would have liked to attend, but did not for lack of money and merit to go.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 3rd, 2018 at 10:48 AM

Title: Re: Charging for Dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

My point is that no one has any cause to complain.

Quay said:

Good point. And as more than one Vajrayana Lama has said, "Vajrayana is not a democracy." There are Dharma paths where the consensus of the group is key and there are those others. To each their own desire.

Malcolm wrote:

Vajrayāna is also not socialist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 3rd, 2018 at 10:45 AM

Title: Re: Charging for Dharma

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Yes, the social situation was entirely different, What's your point?

I'm not arguing that individuals should not be willing to sacrifice material wealth to encounter Vajrayana, i'm simply stating that there is an institutional and cultural setup, including commodification and bureaucracy, that has very little to do with the traditional stories regarding giving large sums of gold to one's Guru.

Malcolm wrote:

My point is that no one has any cause to complain.

Johnny Dangerous said:

You think all financial setups in Vajrayana in terms of paying for teachings are simply beyond reproach?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Why doesn't this logic also apply to abusive Gurus?

Malcolm wrote:

One consents to pay for this or that teaching, or not -- it is up to you. By definition, no one consents to abuse.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 3rd, 2018 at 5:36 AM

Title: Re: Charging for Dharma

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

With the traditional stories, few of the masters in question seem to have had huge organizations or infrastructure that would have factored into the decision of costs, etc. as they do today.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and they charged far more money for Vajrayāna teachings in those days, compared to now.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Yes, the social situation was entirely different, What's your point?

I'm not arguing that individuals should not be willing to sacrifice material wealth to encounter Vajrayana, i'm simply stating that there is an institutional and cultural setup, including commodification and bureaucracy, that has very little to do with the traditional stories regarding giving large sums of gold to one's Guru.

Malcolm wrote:

My point is that no one has any cause to complain.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 3rd, 2018 at 4:07 AM

Title: Re: Charging for Dharma

Content:

Sherab Rigdrol said:

ChNN's recent retreat policy change is pretty amazing. Retreats are free and the one's who organize (and who can afford it) foot the bill. Then each student pays what they can. That's the why it should be in the west at least.

Malcolm wrote:

This is something that should be up to each and every guru's individual discretion, including making some people pay and allowing some people to attend for free, even for the same teaching.

Sherab Rigdrol said:

I agree 100% that it should be up to the teacher, but you and I both know that sometimes, especially in larger organizations, that crusty, rich old white people use cost setting as a way to keep new students away from their dear Rinpoche.

Malcolm wrote:

Just another obstacle to overcome, and if you really, really, really want that teaching from that guru, you will overcome it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 3rd, 2018 at 4:06 AM

Title: Re: Charging for Dharma

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

With the traditional stories, few of the masters in question seem to have had huge organizations or infrastructure that would have factored into the decision of costs, etc. as they do today.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and they charged far more money for Vajrayāna teachings in those days, compared to now.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 3rd, 2018 at 3:04 AM

Title: Re: Charging for Dharma

Content:

Sherab Rigdrol said:

ChNN's recent retreat policy change is pretty amazing. Retreats are free and the one's who organize (and who can afford it) foot the bill. Then each student pays what they can. That's the way it should be in the west at least.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Yep, ChNN (as with many things) is deeply generous, and IMO the DC way of allowing people access to the teachings while having a second tier that delivers extra benefits for paying for membership is actually a great model.

Malcolm wrote:

It was not always this way, per ChNN's specific instructions. Once the community became more wealthy in general, then he changed his policies. But it used to be the case, no cash, no admission. Ask Oldbob.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 3rd, 2018 at 3:02 AM

Title: Re: Charging for Dharma

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Lets phrase this a different way:

Do teachers have any obligation to make teachings affordable, or is charging large amounts ok because it keeps out people who don't "want it bad enough"?

Malcolm wrote:

Gurus have no obligation to make teachings available, let alone affordable. This is just not how Vajrayāna works.

Johnny Dangerous said:

I get what you are saying but..

The idea that the cost of teachings is just about a Gurus will or prerogative alone strikes me as kind of questionable, the cost of teachings often has lots of do with larger administrative questions, especially in large organizations.

Malcolm wrote:

A bit of the study of history is in order here. When translators went to India, they took large amounts of gold with them, took incredible risks to bring the teachings back to Tibet, and so on. The thirteen Golden Dharmas of Sakya are called "Golden" because at one time they cost money in gold, not because they are very nice.

Frankly, these days, students complaining about spending some money for their path of ultimate liberation just sounds like disgruntled bitching.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 3rd, 2018 at 2:58 AM

Title: Re: Charging for Dharma

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

So if a sick and poor person or someone who has limited time left to their life wants to attend a ceremony or teaching....

Malcolm wrote:

That is up the discretion of the guru in question.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 3rd, 2018 at 2:00 AM

Title: Re: Charging for Dharma

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Lets phrase this a different way:

Do teachers have any obligation to make teachings affordable, or is charging large amounts ok because it keeps out people who don't "want it bad enough"?

Malcolm wrote:

Gurus have no obligation to make teachings available, let alone affordable. This is just not how Vajrayāna works.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 3rd, 2018 at 1:57 AM

Title: Re: Charging for Dharma

Content:

Sherab Rigdrol said:

ChNN's recent retreat policy change is pretty amazing. Retreats are free and the one's who organize (and who can afford it) foot the bill. Then each student pays what they can. That's the why it should be in the west at least.

Malcolm wrote:

This is something that should be up to each and every guru's individual discretion, including making some people pay and allowing some people to attend for free, even for the same teaching.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 2nd, 2018 at 10:48 PM

Title: Re: Six Munis

Content:

Seeker12 said:

There's often little to no response for such obscure questions, but I'm wondering if anyone by chance knows of any scriptural references for the "Six Munis" (http://www.rigpawiki.org/index.php?title=Six_Munis), listed on that site as,

1. Indra Kaushika (Skt.; Tib. དབང་པོ་བརྒྱ་ཕྱིན་, Wangpo Gyajin; Tib. ལྷ་འོ་དབང་པོ་བརྒྱ་ཕྱིན་, Wyl. dbang po brgya byin) for the god realms
2. Vemachitra (Skt. Vemacitra; Tib. ཐགས་པ་བཟང་འིས་, Taksangri; Tib. ཐག་པ་བཟང་འིས་, Wyl. thags bzang ris) for the demi-gods or asura realms
3. Shakyamuni (Tib. ལྷ་མཁའ་པ་སྐུ་ཐུབ་པ་, Wyl. shAkya thub pa) for the human realm
4. Shravasingha or Dhruvasiṃha (Skt.; Tib. སེང་གེ་རབ་བརྟན་, Sengé Rabten; Wyl. seng ge rab brtan) for the animal realm
5. Jvālamukhadeva (Skt.; Tib. ཁ་པར་དེ་བ་, Khabar Dewa; Wyl. kha 'bar de ba) for the preta realms
6. Dharmarāja (Skt.; Tib. ཆོས་ཀྱི་རྒྱལ་པོ་, Chökyi Gyalpo; Wyl. chos kyi rgyal po) for the hell realms

Thanks.

Malcolm wrote:

It is from the peaceful and wrathful mandala cycle of Guhyagarbha Tantra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 2nd, 2018 at 8:41 PM

Title: Re: Shar Khentrul Rinpoché Jamphel Lodrö

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Cool deal. Thanks. Are you familiar with this lama?

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, contact Michael.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 2nd, 2018 at 8:29 PM

Title: Re: Feel like an interchangeable cog

Content:

MiphamFan said:

Yeah I don't want to work for a charity. I want to work for a green startup or other kind of tech company working on problems that can really help the world.

Malcolm wrote:

Dream on -- all our problems come from thinking technology can save us. All technology does is solve one problem only to replace it with another.

Attain realization, that will really solve many people's problems.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 2nd, 2018 at 8:20 PM

Title: Re: Relationship between Dzogchen tantras and Nyingthiks

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The Lung for the 17 tantras (as well as the Vima and Khandro Nyinthigs) still exists and is still transmitted. The 17 tantras themselves and related material are also termas, though considered part of kama, revealed during the two decades prior to Atisha's death, somewhere in the early 1040's.

treehuggingoctopus said:

If I understand you correctly, it means that prior to Atisha's death there were no Dzogchen tantras (in this world) at all?

Malcolm wrote:

You did not understand correctly. The 18 Sem sde lungs are present in Tibet from the late 8th and early 9th century. The Kun byed rgyal po is probably not a translation, but a compilation and expansion of the five sems sde lungs. The rmad du 'byung ba tantra is similar, but ancient. There are many other Dzogchen tantras that were written down in the 9th and 10th century, but dating them is difficult.

Then there is the Brahmin cycle, revealed as terma during the late tenth, early eleventh.

Atisha seems to have passed around 1055. The 17 tantras were revealed 15 or 20 years before this date. According to tradition, the seventeen tantras were concealed in a temple about 30k north of Lhasa by Nyangban Tingzin Zangpo. The oral lineage was passed on separately from the texts. These were reunited when Dangma Lungyal removed the 17 tantras from their place of concealment. He then passed the texts onto Chetsun Senge Wangchuk around 1065. Senge Wangchuk in turn transmitted them to Chegom Nagpo. Chegom Nagpo transmitted them to Zhangton Tashi Dorje in roughly 1108. Zhangton revealed the Vima Nyinthik when he was 21, in roughly 1118.

According to the Nyingthig history, Atisha attained his realization through practicing Dzogchen, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 2nd, 2018 at 8:11 PM

Title: Re: Shar Khentrul Rinpoché Jamphel Lodrö

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

My red flag came from watching his videos where he says to the effect, only Jonang has the full Kalachakra teachings, others only have pieces.

Malcolm wrote:

This is true. As a lineage, only they have preserved the entire creation and completion stage teachings as an integral whole. The Gelugpas preserve Kalacakra more as a state ritual. If one is seriously interested in Kalacakra, one must study the Jonang lineage of Kalacakra. Of course, that exists outside Jonang, HH Chogye Trichen, the late head of the Tsarpa subschool of Sakya, was expert in this lineage, as was Kalu Rinpoche. The Jonang lineage of Kalacakra spread from Jonang to Nyingma in the 18th century, then to Kagyu and then from Kongtrul, into all schools. However, outside of Jonang, there is little practice of the complete system. So your best bet to study this system in its entirety is to find a Jonang master.

The person to ask about this Lama's qualifications is Michael Sheehy. You can contact him here: <http://michaelsheehy.com/contact/>

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 2nd, 2018 at 8:08 PM

Title: Re: Shar Khentrul Rinpoché Jamphel Lodrö

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

My red flag came from watching his videos where he says to the effect, only Jonang has the full Kalachakra teachings, others only have pieces.

Malcolm wrote:

This is true. As a lineage, only they have preserved the entire creation and completion stage teachings as an integral whole. The Gelugpas preserve Kalachakra more as a state ritual. If one is seriously interested in Kalachakra, one must study the Jonang lineage of Kalachakra. Of course, that exists outside Jonang, HH Chogye Trichen, the late head of the Tsarpa subschool of Sakya, was expert in this lineage, as was Kalu Rinpoche. The Jonang lineage of Kalachakra spread from Jonang to Nyingma in the 18th century, then to Kagyu and then from Kongtrul, into all schools. However, outside of Jonang, there is little practice of the complete system. So your best bet to study this system in its entirety is to find a Jonang master.

The person to ask about this Lama's qualifications is Michael Sheehy.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 2nd, 2018 at 8:51 AM

Title: Re: Charging for Dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is the custom of secret mantra, described in the tantras themselves, that a fee is charged for initiation. End of story. If a teacher is willing to grant empowerment and instructions free of charge, one should feel blessed, and make offerings of whatever wealth one has for the teachings. This is how the dignity of secret mantra is upheld.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

Isn't also a downfall to refuse teachings for sincere seekers? A downfall that would fit maybe the two levels of teaching, secret mantra and sutra?

Malcolm wrote:

In the case of secret mantra, no, it is not a downfall to insist on certain things from students. Sometimes, if you want a teaching badly enough, you will overcome any obstacle to receive the teaching.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 2nd, 2018 at 6:59 AM

Title: Re: Relationship between Dzogchen tantras and Nyingthiks

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The Khandro Nyinthig is considered part of Terma, revealed in the early 14th century, and is a commentary and practice cycle upon a tantra called the Longsal Barma Nyima Gyud, which organizes the material in the 17 tantras into a progressive path, which includes general preliminaries such as Vajrasattva, practices related to Anuyoga, as well as Dzogchen specific practices.

treehuggingoctopus said:

Ah, so that is why Dzogchen terma cycles feature practices belonging to all the three inner yanas (and are said to necessarily involve a tantric ngondro)! Thank you, Malcolm, most useful!

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but also the Dzogpa Rangjung Tantra, often referred to as the empowerment tantra, is largely concerned with practices connected to Hayagriva, repelling obstacles from Nagas and so, guiding practitioners through the Bardo, etc. It is considered to be the tantra of useful methods.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 2nd, 2018 at 3:27 AM

Title: Re: Relationship between Dzogchen tantras and Nyingthiks

Content:

mandog said:

What is the relationship between the 17 Dzogchen tantras and the Khandro/Vima Nyingthik? Are the latter two technically commentaries on some of the former 17? Is there actually still a tradition of giving lung/tri for the 17 tantras, or at this point, is the transmission of these texts largely inactive?

Malcolm wrote:

Magnus's answer is correct, but there is a bit more detail to add.

The Vima Nyinthig is a commentary on the material belonging to the 17 tantras, being a portion of the 119 intimate instructions, most of which are presently lost. The Vima Nyinthik is commonly considered "Kama," although it in fact is a terma revealed by Zhangton Tashi Dorje in the early 12th century.

The Khandro Nyinthig is considered part of Terma, revealed in the early 14th century, and is a commentary and practice cycle upon a tantra called the Longsal Barma Nyima Gyud, which organizes the material in the 17 tantras into a progressive path, which includes general preliminaries such as Vajrasattva, practices related to Anuyoga, as well as Dzogchen specific practices.

The Lung for the 17 tantras (as well as the Vima and Khandro Nyinthigs) still exists and is still transmitted. The 17 tantras themselves and related material are also termas, though considered part of kama, revealed during the two decades prior to Atisha's death, somewhere in the early 1040's.

These teachings are the most important teachings of the Nyingma School.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 2nd, 2018 at 2:15 AM

Title: Re: Charging for Dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is the custom of secret mantra, described in the tantras themselves, that a fee is charged for initiation. End of story. If a teacher is willing to grant empowerment and instructions free of charge, one should feel blessed, and make offerings of whatever wealth one has for the teachings. This is how the dignity of secret mantra is upheld.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 1st, 2018 at 11:02 PM

Title: Re: Charging for Dharma

Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

Has anyone here also experienced being turned down from receiving teachings because of lack of funds? I was recently barred from receiving teachings on Phowa (don't wish to disclose which specific teacher or lineage, but it's a Nyingma Lama), because of my lack of a proper budget. I do understand that teachers ought to receive our help in order to keep teaching, etc. But, does Dharma needs a tag price in order to make itself available to all who have the connections and wish to practice? What're your experiences, opinions? Thank you all!

Malcolm wrote:

Apparently you did not have a connection...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 1st, 2018 at 6:59 AM

Title: Re: Importance of Secrecy in Secret Mantra

Content:

Empty Desire said:

But then at the same time, I'm sure we would all like to provide a benefit to others.

Malcolm wrote:

that is why we send folks to teachers we believe to be qualified to give these teachings, rather than parceling out the information to people ourselves.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 1st, 2018 at 1:28 AM

Title: Re: Importance of Secrecy in Secret Mantra

Content:

Rinchen Samphel said:

In my eyes, it is almost impossible to keep the details of Vajrayana secret without keeping the totality of Vajrayana secret.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, August 1st, 2018 at 1:27 AM
Title: Re: Importance of Secrecy in Secret Mantra
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
If you really believe as you say, then why is it an unwritten policy here to shut down conversations about such topics as thögal? Be consistent.

Johnny Dangerous said:
I didn't say we had no policy on it. I'm perfectly happy not supporting people in breaking samaya, and I think that is certainly necessary for the forum. I think it's more about trying to adhere to the spirit than the letter of the law though, in practical moderation terms.

The point I am addressing is students sharing restricted material about Vajrayāna practices on this forum.

When I say the internet is not a proper forum for disseminating this material, I mean it is not a proper place for students with samaya to share information with those who lack samaya.

That's fair, but again there are lots of places where it becomes quite murky in practice how to actually do this, especially on a forum where the whole point is Dharma discussion.

Malcolm wrote:
Again, you are missing the point -- the issue is people with samaya (students not teachers) publicly sharing material on this forum with those who do not have samaya. Not only does it harm those with samaya, it harms those without samaya. This has nothing to do with Garchen Rinpoche, for example, making available to his students teachings on a website the general public could access if they wanted to, or Shang Shung illustrating their books with deity images on their covers, which might be seen by some ordinary person who stumbles on their site. I am not discussing anything about that at all. That is something removed from this issue here.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, August 1st, 2018 at 12:35 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

weitsicht said:

The sangha to be taken refuge in has a different meaning from the sangha that groups together for teachings, Puja etc.

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāyāna refuge sangha is only ārya bodhisattvas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 31st, 2018 at 10:20 PM

Title: Re: Importance of Secrecy in Secret Mantra

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Right, so, is it sane and logical that we Vajrayāna practitioner abide by the basic requirement expected of Vajrayāna practitioners, which is to keep secret that which should be kept secret from those who do not have samaya? The excuse, "well, it is posted on the internet" is not sufficient warrant for people who have samaya to share with people who do not. For example, just because there are a million pictures of Vajrayogini on the internet, does not mean it is ok or correct for someone who has samaya to share such an image with someone who does not.

Grigoris said:

So, guard your samaya like your eyes, caution and advise others to do the same. Can't really do much more than that.

From there on it is the responsibility of the "other" to choose how they will proceed. Ultimately samaya is a personal issue.

Malcolm wrote:

This is not an adequate policy for the forum.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 31st, 2018 at 8:50 PM

Title: Re: Importance of Secrecy in Secret Mantra

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you really believe as you say, then why is it an unwritten policy here to shut down conversations about such topics as thögal? Be consistent.

Grigoris said:

Why be consistent when you can be hypocritical?

But seriously: Some conversations are shut down due to member's requests, not due to policy. Weirdly enough we sometimes respect member's requests (ie when they are sane and logical).

Malcolm wrote:

Right, so, is it sane and logical that we Vajrayāna practitioner abide by the basic requirement expected of Vajrayāna practitioners, which is to keep secret that which should be kept secret from those who do not have samaya? The excuse, "well, it is posted on the internet" is not sufficient warrant for people who have samaya to share with people who do not. For example, just because there are a million pictures of Vajrayogini on the internet, does not mean it is ok or correct for someone who has samaya to share such an image with someone who does not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 31st, 2018 at 8:16 PM

Title: Re: Importance of Secrecy in Secret Mantra

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

y own conduct in this regard to the very best of my ability. However, I don't see where anything he says makes me the policeman of other people's samaya...

Malcolm wrote:

If you really believe as you say, then why is it an unwritten policy here to shut down conversations about such topics as thögal? Be consistent.

The point I am addressing is students sharing restricted material about Vajrayāna practices on this forum.

When I say the internet is not a proper forum for disseminating this material, I mean it is not a proper place for students with samaya to share information with those who lack samaya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 31st, 2018 at 10:46 AM

Title: Re: Importance of Secrecy in Secret Mantra

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

This begs the question what is the proper use of the internet with the teachings, and one can simply observe that different teachers have different opinions here. That being the case, the best a person can do is abide by what their teacher says personally.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course this is just false.

Johnny Dangerous said:

What part of it is false? Even you should probably qualify what you say when having to speak down to us mere mortals, though I'm sure it's a real pain to do so, especially when we peskily disagree.

Malcolm wrote:

Samaya is not just something teachers are able to abrogate on their mere say so. Since you are a student of ChNN you should understand his POV about secrecy and the teachings, which is rather strict, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 31st, 2018 at 9:42 AM

Title: Re: Importance of Secrecy in Secret Mantra

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

What causes the downfall of the Vajrayana is when people misuse the practice for power, reputation, etc, In other words, out of self-cherishing and attachment. It is not revealing the methods that causes degeneration but misuse.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a proper way to disclose these kinds of teachings and the internet is not it...

Johnny Dangerous said:

This begs the question what is the proper use of the internet with the teachings, and one can simply observe that different teachers have different opinions here. That being the case, the best a person can do is abide by what their teacher says personally.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course this is just false.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 31st, 2018 at 8:01 AM

Title: Re: Importance of Secrecy in Secret Mantra

Content:

Grigoris said:

Somehow I don't think that some pencil-necked-geek hacking into a three hour Dharma teaching on the nature of mind, is going to bring about the downfall of the Vajryana...

Malcolm wrote:

No, but people volunteering the substance of vajrayāna practices, mantras, images of yidams, protectors, and so on certainly will.

Tsongkhapafan said:

What causes the downfall of the Vajrayana is when people misuse the practice for power, reputation, etc, In other words, out of self-cherishing and attachment. It is not revealing the methods that causes degeneration but misuse.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a proper way to disclose these kinds of teachings and the internet is not it...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 31st, 2018 at 5:54 AM

Title: Re: Importance of Secrecy in Secret Mantra

Content:

Grigoris said:

Sure.

But I have enough problems keeping my samaya without running around and policing everybody else's...

Malcolm wrote:

If you don't take responsibility, who will?

Karma Dorje said:

The dharmapalas, for one.

Malcolm wrote:

Great, lets just let it all hang out then...after all, it seems no one cares anymore.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 31st, 2018 at 5:47 AM

Title: Re: Importance of Secrecy in Secret Mantra

Content:

Grigoris said:

Somehow I don't think that some pencil-necked-geek hacking into a three hour Dharma teaching on the nature of mind, is going to bring about the downfall of the Vajryana...

Malcolm wrote:

No, but people volunteering the substance of vajrayāna practices, mantras, images of yidams, protectors, and so on certainly will.

Grigoris said:
Sure.

But I have enough problems keeping my samaya without running around and policing everybody else's...

Malcolm wrote:
If you don't take responsibility, who will?

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, July 31st, 2018 at 5:46 AM
Title: Re: Importance of Secrecy in Secret Mantra
Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:
I think it depends on context. If Secret Mantra is practised within the context of Sutra, for example within the context of Lamrim teachings, then secrecy is not necessary because the practice will be correctly intentioned and not misused. It must be presented within the context of a complete path to enlightenment. Traditionally within Tibetan Buddhism though, Secret Mantra is very secret.

Malcolm wrote:
Secret mantra is called secret because it is supposed to be kept secret, period.

Tsongkhapafan said:
It's called secret because there are no outward signs of the practice.

Malcolm wrote:
It is called secret because the practices may not be disclosed to those who lack the ripening empowerments. This is why the seventh root downfall concerns not disclosing the secrets of the practice of Mantrayāna to those who are unripened.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, July 31st, 2018 at 3:48 AM
Title: Re: I wish to marry a Dakini
Content:

Motova said:
I wish to marry a Dakini.

Please pray for me and recite mantras for me and dedicate merit to me so that I may receive my wish.

Thank you kindly.

Malcolm wrote:

Only dakas can marry dakinis. Ordinary men can't handle it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 30th, 2018 at 11:27 PM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong
Mipham

Content:

Gatinho said:

But it seems to me that I am being given authority to do a practice myself and I know it is very popular (encouraged even) to hang around lamas basking in the ambience - for me I have no inclination to do so. I avoid dharma centres and only go for specific teachings every few years or so. I'm not sure if this makes me very unusual - but I think that examining one's teacher for many years, receiving instructions for practice and going away and doing it, is more traditional than what seems the standard now of receiving dozens of teachings and empowerments (while idolising one's lama as a saviour) and joining a 'community'.

Motova said:

Being a part of The Community is very important in Dharma... especially Vajrayana.

PeterC said:

I don't think so.

Malcolm wrote:

I think so, the second samaya concerns one's relationship with one's vajra siblings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 30th, 2018 at 10:29 PM

Title: Re: Who is America ?

Content:

Grigoris said:

But seriously: how fracked in the head would you have to be to believe that anybody under the age of 18 (I would say 21) should be allowed to legally possess and carry a firearm???

Malcolm wrote:

I was taught to shoot when I was seven, and allowed to use firearms from that point on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 30th, 2018 at 9:50 PM

Title: Re: Via Negativa

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Cessations are not nonexistences, since in cessation there is no existence of which one may speak of a nonexistence.

Astus said:

Cessation refers to the end of afflictions, so it is in a way the non-existence, or annihilation of afflictions. What it is not the annihilation of is the self, since that has never existed in the first place.

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on which cessation we are discussing, analytical or nonanalytical: even so, when there is no cause for a given thing to arise, speaking of its nonexistence is also inappropriate, as the Buddha points out in the Sutta Nipatta.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 30th, 2018 at 9:08 PM

Title: Re: Via Negativa

Content:

boundless said:

That's was the point that I was making, i.e. that not all Budddhists went as far as the Madhyamaka (and the Sautrantika) in their negation of ontological status of Nirvana (and of "dharma" in general).

Astus said:

Ontologically talking is perhaps going a bit too far, as the meaning of "dharma" is more along the line of category than substance.

in Shravakyana the anatman teaching does not rule out the possibility of something unconditioned and not unreal

Being a cessation does not make it unreal.

"is called Nibbāna because it is a departure from craving, which is an entanglement. Though Nibbāna is onefold according to its intrinsic nature, by reference to a basis (for distinction), it is twofold, namely, the element of Nibbāna with a residue remaining, and the element of Nibbāna without the residue remaining. It is threefold according to its different aspects, namely, void, signless, and desireless."

(A Comprehensive Manual of Abhidhamma, p 258-259)

"In fact nibbāna, as an unconditioned reality, has simply the nature of cessation called "the characteristic of peacefulness" (santilakkhaṇā). It is the cessation of the defilements and the rounds of suffering. Or, it is the nonexistence of conditioned phenomena (saṅkhāra), the cessation of conditioned phenomena, and the opposite of what is conditioned."

"If the nibbāna element does not exist, then the cessation of the mental and physical processes or the aggregates could not happen. Thus it is not true that the nibbāna element is nothing, like the concept of nonexistence. Being the object of path and fruition, it is obvious in an ultimate sense. And because it is so obvious, the constantly arising mental and physical processes or aggregates in a person who practices correctly do not arise anymore after that person's parinibbāna. Then, they are able to cease forever. It means that the cessation is something that can be obvious."

(Mahasi Sayadaw: Manual of Insight p 454, 456)

Malcolm wrote:

Cessations are not nonexistences, since in cessation there is no existence of which one may speak of a nonexistence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 30th, 2018 at 9:04 PM

Title: Re: Importance of Secrecy in Secret Mantra

Content:

Grigoris said:

Somehow I don't think that some pencil-necked-geek hacking into a three hour Dharma teaching on the nature of mind, is going to bring about the downfall of the Vajryana...

Malcolm wrote:

No, but people volunteering the substance of vajrayāna practices, mantras, images of yidams, protectors, and so on certainly will.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 30th, 2018 at 7:02 AM

Title: Re: Importance of Secrecy in Secret Mantra

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

I think it depends on context. If Secret Mantra is practised within the context of Sutra, for example within the context of Lamrim teachings, then secrecy is not necessary because the practice will be correctly intentioned and not misused. It must be presented within the context of a complete path to enlightenment. Traditionally within Tibetan Buddhism though, Secret Mantra is very secret.

Malcolm wrote:

Secret mantra is called secret because it is supposed to be kept secret, period.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 30th, 2018 at 5:56 AM

Title: Re: Importance of Secrecy in Secret Mantra

Content:

Empty Desire said:

I wanted to start a thread about this important subject that keeps re-occurring in various threads.

Secret Mantra began in India with Mahasiddhas like Tilopa and was transmitted to Tibet by Marpa and Padmasambhava and others.

Tibet is a mountain-locked country, historically difficult to access, where Esoteric Teachings like Tantrayana/Vajrayana were as I read were often transmitted and practised in secret and remote locations at night in some cases.

Now with the advent of the Airplane, Globalism, Smartphones and Macs. Tantrayana is accessible in a way that hitherto hasn't been possible.

Also, we live in a Global Village where Privacy is a thing of the past, Data on all kinds of aspects is recorded and finally we are encouraged by Social Media to document every last facet of our lives for everyone to see.

The aspect of Secrecy is important so I wonder what are the most important things practitioners should keep in mind?

I'm not asking anyone to divulge anything that needs to be private it's more of a meta-discussion.

Malcolm wrote:

"“During the degenerate age, the last five hundred years...it is an age when mantrikas are unable to keep secrets."

--Rig pa rang shar.

So, crucially important.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 30th, 2018 at 3:07 AM

Title: Re: Via Negativa

Content:

Rick said:

So your understanding is that Advaita says brahman cannot be said to existent, but it can be experienced to be existent?

(Careful, trick question!)

Malcolm wrote:

No, he is saying that Advaita claims brahmin can be known/realized directly through a nonconceptual intuition that cannot be expressed in words or symbols.

Rick said:

What I've been taught is that enlightenment is an event in the mind after which you know that the scriptures are true: You are atman, atman is brahman, brahman is the one without a second. Any subjective experience of realization (or anything else) is considered to be mithya. Not sure how that jibes with what you said?

Malcolm wrote:
Think about it.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, July 30th, 2018 at 12:43 AM
Title: Re: Via Negativa
Content:
Rick said:
how do we reconcile

Astus said:
Your quote refers to the difference between conceptual and experiential, learning and realisation.

Rick said:
So your understanding is that Advaita says brahman cannot be said to exist, but it can be experienced to be existent?

(Careful, trick question!)

Malcolm wrote:
No, he is saying that Advaita claims brahmin can be known/realized directly through a nonconceptual intuition that cannot be expressed in words or symbols. If it can't be known through such a nonconceptual intuition, there is no possibility of liberation, and Advaita would be pointless.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, July 29th, 2018 at 11:43 PM
Title: Re: Via Negativa
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
The Buddha's response to this is simple:

" Matter is empty, emptiness is matter. Apart from matter there is no emptiness, apart from emptiness there is no matter."

Rick said:
You don't translate it as "Form is empty, emptiness is form." Is 'matter' a more accurate English term in this context than 'form?'

Malcolm wrote:
The matter in question is the material aggregate, composed of the four elements.

Rick said:
The two truths are inseparable. There are no phenomena apart from conventional phenomena, conventional phenomena themselves are empty, and there is no emptiness apart from conventional phenomena.

Gotcha. Thing is, emptiness is way harder to get your head around than brahman. (Unless you're OCD like me and worry the c'hell out of the 'exact' nature of brahman.) So, as a teaching methodology, brahman is (I'm guessing) more effective for more students than sunyata. It's a bit like a fairy tale vs. a sober dissertation ... both of which are, ultimately, just buncha concepts flying around and pushing human buttons.

Malcolm wrote:

People like to believe the ultimate is something, even if that something is inexpressible. Since in Buddhadharma there is no ultimate apart from the relative, emptiness is only hard to understand for those who wish there to be some permanent, ultimate something which is not dependently originated. Awakening in Buddhadharma comes from understanding the ultimate nature (emptiness) of relative phenomena (dependent origination). There is nothing to realize other than this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 29th, 2018 at 11:16 PM

Title: Re: Via Negativa

Content:

Rick said:

If brahman cannot be expressed as existent or non-existent, it cannot be (rightly) said that brahman is the single existent being.

But, yes, the Vedas say o'er and o'er a-gain that brahman exists.

I asked my teacher about the inherent Catch-22 in speaking/thinking of a non-thing that has zero attributes. He acknowledged the problematic nature of this but asked me: How else can one teach that the conventional consensus reality phenomenological world (world of form) was not all-there-is? And thus, at the highest (non-)level of realization, even atman/brahman are seen for what they truly are: metaphors, symbols on the map.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha's response to this is simple:

" Matter is empty, emptiness is matter. Apart from matter there is no emptiness, apart from emptiness there is no matter."

The two truths are inseparable. There are no phenomena apart from conventional phenomena, conventional phenomena themselves are empty, and there is no emptiness apart from conventional phenomena.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 29th, 2018 at 5:14 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

heart said:

You recognized the natural state "in dependence on the Guru" and spent 20 years applying the methods your Guru gave you and now he suddenly is no real Guru. What do you do?

Malcolm wrote:

Leave and find a better guru.

heart said:

You can leave, you can find an other Guru, but you are still in great debt to the Guru that introduced you to the natural state. You can't ever really turn your back on him/her as you are bound by Samaya, the Samaya of the natural state. Possibly you can arrive at what Pema Chödrön call "no right, no wrong", and that is my whole point.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Honestly Magnus, your going on and on about hypothetical gurus is a little strange. Your guru is the nicest person imaginable, and there is no doubt he is quite beyond such behavior himself. So why even bring it up? It is not like you yourself are facing such an issue.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 29th, 2018 at 5:03 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

heart said:

Possibly you can arrive at what Pema Chödrön call "no right, no wrong", and that is my whole point.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh yes, "I got mine" and screw everyone else.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 29th, 2018 at 1:50 AM

Title: Re: Tummo and Tsa Lung Meditation

Content:

Palzang Jangchub said:

But by all means, continue to believe that this is more damaging to Vajrayana Dharma than the actual abuse of students by teachers, sexually, physically, emotionally, and mentally. You are backed up by the traditional texts, but they were operating in the same culture of patriarchy that allowed for (and I daresay even supported) such abuse.

Malcolm wrote:

Vajrayāna will survive sex scandals. It won't survive samaya breakage, such as when students randomly share secret teachings with strangers on the internet in the mistaken belief they are being "helpful." Samaya breakage was the reason Vajrayāna disappeared in India, it is the reason why Tibet fell, and it is the reason why Vajrayāna in the world today is merely a faint reflection in the mirror.

Palzang Jangchub said:

While you're at it, please tell us which precise empowerment needs to be obtained by those interested in the OM AH HUNG vajra recitation so that they can engage in the practice properly.

Malcolm wrote:

Guhyasamaja, etc., any niruttarayoga empowerment, or any empowerment from the three inner tantras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 29th, 2018 at 1:15 AM

Title: Re: Tummo and Tsa Lung Meditation

Content:

Palzang Jangchub said:

Malcolm, these are publicly posted teachings available online, with no mention of restrictions or empowerment. The OM AH HUNG vajra recitation is given freely and even in public settings. The teachings on the Six Yogas are general and don't involve actual practice instructions from what I remember, hence Eric has shared them on his website. If Garchen Rinpoche says I'm not breaching samaya, I'm confident that I'm not breaching it. I can appreciate it that your stance is more conservative than mine, as there are many different interpretations of samaya and how strictly we should keep things secret.

Malcolm wrote:

If you are a teacher, then you can take responsibility. But these things are secret and should remain so. "Secret" means not sharing them with people who have no empowerment.

The reason why Vajrayāna is decline is not sex scandals with gurus, it because people do not keep secret what is supposed to be secret. Vajra recitation is a completion stage practice. It is therefore secret.

If you want to share secret vajrayāna instructions with people you don't know over the internet, who state very clearly they have no empowerments, no guru, and thus no samaya and little understanding, and in the process break your own samaya, please do so by private message.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 29th, 2018 at 12:47 AM

Title: Re: Turning daily life into retreat

Content:

Sennin said:

Of course allocating time to practice is not the same as boundaried retreat; due to constant distraction and concerns. Even so I'm interested in the possibility of accomplishing sadhana in daily life.

How much time (and of course diligence, patience etc.) is needed to pull this off? Would one focus more on practicing until signs, instead of by number or time? Is it even possible?

Malcolm wrote:

Work nine to five, practice 7-11, rinse repeat.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 29th, 2018 at 12:35 AM

Title: Re: Tummo and Tsa Lung Meditation

Content:

Palzang Jangchub said:

These might help:

Lamp flame meditation and OM AH HUNG vajra recitation, including video:

<http://garchen.tw/English/News/NewsInPage/8>

<https://www.facebook.com/garcheninstitute/posts/vajra-recitation-of-om-ah/468999119816198/>

Garchen Rinpoche on the Six Yogas of Naropa:

<http://www.buddhavisions.com/wp-content/uploads/2015/10/Garchen-Rinpoche-on-the-Six-Dharmas-of-Naropa.pdf>

Malcolm wrote:

These practices are restricted to those with empowerment. Sharing them with those who do not have empowerment is by definition a breach of samaya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 28th, 2018 at 11:04 PM

Title: Re: Taking Empowerment as a Blessing

Content:

tranides said:

Otherwise why would we have Ngondro - instead we just could receive the same (or other) abhishekas each day and it would give the same effect.

Malcolm wrote:

This, in fact is the Lamdre approach. Practicing the Time of the Path sadhana with the full empowerments is considered more essential than doing ngondro repetitions. Not that ngondro is bad, it just isn't as essential.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 28th, 2018 at 10:49 PM

Title: Re: Via Negativa

Content:

Rick said:

Per Advaita, brahman cannot be negated. But brahman cannot be said to exist or not to exist. So it's complicated ...

Just as a reminder, I am NOT a qualified expert on Advaita, so what I say about it should not be taken as 'certified.'

Malcolm wrote:

The fact that brahmin is immune to negation means it is an inherent existent, meaning it is sat, real. To say that it cannot be said to exist or not exist means conventionally. Brahmin is beyond such conventions, and therefore, it, according to its exponents, cannot be negated through conventional reasoning. This is very unacceptable from a buddhist pov.

Rick said:

Since brahman is not knowable, findable, experienceable, how can you know that it is not just a fairy tale? You can't, directly. You need to believe the word of the sages in the Upanishads. (Advaita is an astika teaching methodology, it accepts the ultimate authority of the Vedas.) Eventually, I am told, you come to rest in the knowledge that you are brahman ... but since I'm not there (yet), I can't say anything definitive about it.

Yes, very different from Buddhism, which afaik is a nastika methodology.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, Buddha negated sruti as a pramana.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, July 28th, 2018 at 9:48 PM
Title: Re: Via Negativa
Content:

Rick said:
Advaita does pretty much the same thing.

Malcolm wrote:
According to you, Advaita insists that one cannot negate being. According to Buddhadharma, being cannot be established.

Rick said:
Per Advaita, brahman cannot be negated. But brahman cannot be said to exist or not to exist. So it's complicated ...

Just as a reminder, I am NOT a qualified expert on Advaita, so what I say about it should not be taken as 'certified.'

Malcolm wrote:
The fact that brahmin is immune to negation means it is an inherent existent, meaning it is sat, real. To say that it cannot be said to exist or not exist means conventionally.
Brahmin is beyond such conventions, and therefore, it, according to its exponents, cannot be negated through conventional reasoning. This is very unacceptable from a buddhist pov.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, July 28th, 2018 at 9:30 PM
Title: Re: Via Negativa
Content:

Astus said:
Buddhism does not debate conventional reality. It only points out that it is merely conventional, that is, conceptual fabrication.

Rick said:
Advaita does pretty much the same thing.

Malcolm wrote:
According to you, Advaita insists that one cannot negate being. According to Buddhadharma, being cannot be established.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, July 28th, 2018 at 9:20 PM
Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong

Mipham

Content:

heart said:

You know what I am talking about Malcolm. You yourself have said here a number of times that these Gurus are no real Gurus since they abused someone.

Malcolm wrote:

As have a number of esteemed lamas such as Migyur Rinpoche, and so on.

heart said:

You recognized the natural state "in dependence on the Guru" and spent 20 years applying the methods your Guru gave you and now he suddenly is no real Guru. What do you do?

Malcolm wrote:

Leave and find a better guru.

heart said:

I think "keeping the blinders on" isn't viable possibility. This is a genuine horror show that somehow don't seem to be a part of this discussion.

Malcolm wrote:

In the contrary, it has been part of the discussion.

heart said:

I also would like to say that I have been around Vajrayana for a long time and heard all kind of stories of about all kind of Gurus and if having sex with a student always is abuse...

Malcolm wrote:

As in any thing, the perception of harm depends on the student. And mind we are only talking about women students (Male students do not generally find themselves receiving unwanted attentions of their male gurus. It does happen, as in the case of the Regent, but it is exceedingly rare. Though with more westerners adopting the guru role, it is certain to become more common as more gay men become Vajrayāna teachers). Back to the point, you live in Sweden -- Swedish laws around sexual misconduct are very strict. Much of the behavior we hear about is quite definitely actionable criminal behavior under Swedish law. Namkhai Norbu Rinpoche has a very sensible approach to these issues -- rather than insisting that Vajrayāna masters are above normal moral, legal, and ethical constraints, he observes that if one follows Dzogchen rules, one is likely to get arrested in Italy. So in Italy, one follows Italian rules, not Dzogchen rules. If Vajrayāna gurus do not have enough sense to understand the place where they live or are traveling, this calls into question both their wisdom and their skillful means. Of course, from some people's POV I am being a "moralist" and should "just go back to Mahāyāna" because I "can't handle Vajrayāna."

heart said:

then no-one here seems to be as safe as they think they are.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, it is definitely the case that the day where Vajrayāna masters could prey on their women disciples with impunity has come to an end, so yes, Vajrayāna masters are not as safe as they once were. They are going to have to shape up and understand that Western women, in increasingly, Tibetan women, are not going to stand for the continuation of the patriarchal exploitation in Tibetan Buddhism and Buddhism in general. #Timesup

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 28th, 2018 at 11:23 AM

Title: Re: Help needed!

Content:

PeterC said:

A Gelugpa lama who is a friend of mine recently gave me an unexpected and extremely generous gift. I want to reciprocate with something he needs - I asked his students and they said that a few times he's mentioned wanting a Tibetan copy of the complete works of Tsonkhapa. Does anyone know where I could procure a good quality print edition? Cost is not an issue.

Thanks!

Malcolm wrote:

tibetbook.net

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 28th, 2018 at 9:21 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

conebeckham said:

Well, tendrel implies something beyond self-sufficiency, Malcolm.

Malcolm wrote:

It is called rang 'byung ye shes for a reason.

Beyond that, if one cannot recognize abuse as abuse, one has ethical challenges.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 28th, 2018 at 7:24 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

smcj said:

What I am doing is saying that the present dramas do not invalidate the principle of Guru Yoga.

Aryjna said:

This is absolutely irrelevant. What does Guruyoga have to do with this matter.

heart said:

It has a lot to do with it. Imagine that the Lama you feel introduced you to the nature of mind is suddenly called an abuser, what would you do? It is pretty strange that the discussion here not even touch on this subject since this is supposed to be a Vajrayana forum. Do you invalidate your recognition based on what someone else tell you about your masters behavior? Just think about it will you.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

If the person who introduces you to the nature of mind the abuses people, then he or she abuses people. You can either continue to keep your blinders on or you can acknowledge the truth. It won't change your recognition one way or another.

On the other hand, many people fool themselves into believing they have encountered the mind essence, and equally, there are unscrupulous teachers who have no qualifications to evaluate such an encounter, who lie to their students in order to appeal to the latter's egos.

Since you bring up the fact that this is a Vajrayāna forum, these points of view must also be considered. The reality, Dear Magnus, is that no one can introduce one to the mind essence. You must discover it on your own, a guru is merely a guide who helps you with the process of self-discovery, but the actual recognition is your job.

Here there is no method and wisdom, the appearance of true reality, can't be described by another, the connate cannot be found anywhere, but one can understand it in dependence on the Guru, time and method, and from one's merit.
-- Hevajra Tantra

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 28th, 2018 at 4:40 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

smcj said:

I've speculated elsewhere that perhaps Vajrayana should not be taught to westerners. If it comes to the point where secularism triumphs over Vajrayana view I will feel certain of it.

Malcolm wrote:

This is called closing the barn door after the horses have escaped.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 27th, 2018 at 12:54 PM

Title: Re: Via Negativa

Content:

Rick said:

Per process philosophy what 'exists' are dynamic events. Madhyamaka refutes the existence of fixed substances, not of dynamic events. Or?

Astus said:

Does that dynamic event exist in the present, the past, or the future? If it is in the past or the future, it is non-existent. If it is in the present, how is it an event?

Rick said:

Per process philosophy, there are no enduring substances, only 'momentary events of experience' called actual entities which unfold over time (as a process unfolds over time). So, to your question:

> Does that dynamic event [actual entity] exist in the present, the past, or the future?

I couldn't find a definitive answer to this. According to the process philosophy savvy people I spoke with, it's a subtle and tricky question.

Actual entities play out over time, so past present future are all involved. But the existence part is where things get fuzzy. I'd say actual entities exist, but not in the conventional way of existing. The flow exists, but there is no-thing (no substance) that is flowing. (This reminds me of the causal non-substance flow of Pratītyasamutpāda.)

Malcolm wrote:

This does not go beyond Sautrantika tenets.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 27th, 2018 at 6:34 AM

Title: Re: Egg-shaped vase-like thing next to Garab Dorje in images

Content:

Pema Rigdzin said:

Out of curiosity, anyone know what the egg-shaped, vase-like things is to the right of Garab Dorje (and many other Dzogchen lineage masters) is?

<https://i.pinimg.com/736x/dc/02/b5/dc02b59b6e6735feaec074569d0d1c50.jpg>

Malcolm wrote:

It is a basket.

Pema Rigdzin said:

Does it symbolize holding the whole Dzogchen teachings, ie "Dzogchen pitaka"? If not, what does it symbolize? I only remember seeing it next to Dzogchen masters.

Malcolm wrote:

It's where you store your stuff.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 27th, 2018 at 6:18 AM

Title: Re: Egg-shaped vase-like thing next to Garab Dorje in images

Content:

Pema Rigdzin said:

Out of curiosity, anyone know what the egg-shaped, vase-like things is to the right of Garab Dorje (and many other Dzogchen lineage masters) is?

<https://i.pinimg.com/736x/dc/02/b5/dc02b59b6e6735feaec074569d0d1c50.jpg>

Malcolm wrote:

It is a basket.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 27th, 2018 at 1:35 AM

Title: Re: rtsal, shared samsaric vision, "other" sentient beings

Content:

LoveFromColorado said:

Thanks Kevin. I'm in Colorado Springs so that is about a five hour trip one way. With wife, kids, and work it can be a challenge to make such a trip regularly. There is a Nyingma sangha in Denver that is about an hour away but even that can be tough to get to with my schedule. Still trying... I wish a sangha would formulate in Colorado Springs - it seems the more remote scenic vistas are where they tend to be.

Malcolm wrote:

There are Lamas who teach Dzogchen all over Colorado. You just have to look harder. Colorado, like CA, is Nyingma central in the USA.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 26th, 2018 at 11:11 PM

Title: Re: Taking Empowerment as a Blessing

Content:

SilenceMonkey said:

So..... back to topic.

To reframe the question:

To take an empowerment without the intent to practice it... Or maybe without the intent to practice it continually until attainment. Should this be avoided? I'm sure many practitioners have received 10s if not 100s of transmissions and empowerments over the years. But there's no way anyone can practice all of that each day. So then, what's the point?

Malcolm wrote:

Tendrel.

SilenceMonkey said:

I assume that it would be to create a positive connection to Dharma (that teaching and teacher and lineage). Is this not what it means to "take empowerment as a blessing?"

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

SilenceMonkey said:

Is it advisable to take empowerments outside of your own lineage, if only to establish a connection?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, if you have a sincere interest in the teacher in question.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 26th, 2018 at 11:10 PM

Title: Re: rtsal, shared samsaric vision, "other" sentient beings

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This more consistent with the mind series. The Man ngag sde series maintains that appearances are the rtsal or potential of vidyā (rig pa). This potential becomes the mind when it mixes with the karmavāyu from our breathing. This point is discussed in the Treasury of the Dharmadhātu.

LoveFromColorado said:

Thanks Malcolm! I am new to some of these terms, so please pardon my ignorance here. To restate in my own small terms, would it be safe to say that what you stated regarding the Man ngag sde series could be coarsely interpreted to say that when the potential of rigpa (which I get) mixes with with the energy of our past actions that it then becomes appearances? I'm new to the concept of karmavāyu but am certainly interested.

Malcolm wrote:

You should study these teachings systematically under a qualified teacher. Not piecemeal from debates on the internet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 26th, 2018 at 10:57 PM

Title: Re: rtsal, shared samsaric vision, "other" sentient beings

Content:

krodha said:

The view is that the so-called external world is not mind, nor is it other than mind.

Adepts such as Longchenpa were very cautious in their explanation of this issue and are in no way advocating for a concrete, artifact-like external world.

LoveFromColorado said:

Can someone summarize the explanation of this point? Sorry if this is an intrusion. In my studies of Alan Wallace's introduction to Dzogchen, he seems to articulate that space and everything we experience is a manifestation of our own pristine awareness. I'm curious how this coincides here with this point.

Malcolm wrote:

This more consistent with the mind series. The Man ngag sde series maintains that appearances are the rtsal or potential of vidyā (rig pa). This potential becomes the mind when it mixes with the karmavāyu from our breathing. This point is discussed in the Treasury of the Dharmadhātu.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 26th, 2018 at 10:38 PM

Title: Re: rtsal, shared samsaric vision, "other" sentient beings

Content:

florin said:

The tatagatagarbha chapter from Longhenpa's trilogy of rest explains...

Malcolm wrote:

I directed you to look at the Tshig don mdzod, chapter three. He introduces the chapter saying, "Then, the explanation of how buddhagarbha permeates the sattvadhātu and the way it exists.

He begins by quoting the Mirror of the Essence of Vajrasattva above. He then cites the Fine Inlay of Jewels:

Just as oil has always been naturally present in sesame or mustard seed, within the deceptive appearance of the bodies of sentient beings the seed of the tathāgatas appears with matching light.

The Sound Tantra states:

The pristine consciousness of one's vidyā abides in the body, like oil in sesame seed.
The glow and brightness of the body has always been permeated with the moistness of pristine consciousness.

And the Self-Arisen Vidyā:

The transcendent state of perfect buddhas exists in the forms of kāyas and pristine consciousness in the personal continuums of all sentient beings.

Having introduced these citations, he turns to sūtras and tantras of the common vehicles, citing long passages from the Nirvana Sūtra, Hevajra, the Dohas and so on, concluding that all of these citations together, including those from the man nga sde tantras above, demonstrate the existence of the sugatagarbha element in the continuums of sentient beings. He then goes on to criticize those who maintain that sugatagarbha is merely the emptiness of the mind itself, and so on. He then goes on to describe how the tathāgatagarbha doctrine is definitive, and so on. Finally describing how sugatagarbha is present as five kāyas, five pristine consciousnesses, the five lights, the five families, the five vāyus of pristine consciousness, the five qualities of essence, nature, and compassion, the five afflictions, the five aggregates, the five elements, the five sense organs, the five desirable objects, and the five qualities of the three doors, citing the String of Pearls Tantra which explains all of this.

For Longchenpa the pristine consciousness of vidyā is nothing other than tathāgatagarbha. And according to ChNN, there is no Tibetan whose writings on the Great Perfection are more definitive than Longchenpa's. So we can understand the above to be ChNN's own view as well.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 26th, 2018 at 2:43 PM

Title: Re: rtsal, shared samsaric vision, “other” sentient beings

Content:

jnanasutra said:

Also, interesting to note that Malcolm refers to the basis as the “seed of budhahood,” i.e. the Sugatagarbha or Tathagatagarbha, in deluded sentient beings. Interesting thought, an individual’s basis as a seed. I believe the gelugpas would agree

florin said:

I don't think that tatagathgarba view has much in common with dzogchen view.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a bit of an overstatement to claim the view of Dzogchen has nothing in common with tathāgatagarbha view. Longchenpa would strongly disagree with you. After all, he spends the entirety of chapter three of the Tshig don mdzod explaining the precise relevance of tathāgatagarbha view to Dzogchen.

Further, the entire subject of chapter 39 of the Kun byed rgyal po is tathāgatagarbha, called here "jinagarbha."

florin said:

Then, bodhicitta, the All-Creating King, taught that his nature was the jinagarbha, lacking deviation and obscuration in everything.

Malcolm wrote:

Further, the Mirror of the Essence of Vajrasattva states:

The tathāgatagarbha exists intrinsically in all sentient beings. That exists just as sesame seeds are permeated with oil. Its basis — it is based on the material aggregate. It’s location — it is located in the center of the heart.

The Mind Mirror of Samantabhadra states:

The diverse miraculous display arises from state of inseparability, the ultimate sugatagarbha.

The Self-arisen Vidyā Tantra states:

The meaning of utter purity and sugatagarbha is nondual, the same.

The Wheel of Life states:

If play arises within limitations, it is the sugatagarbha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 26th, 2018 at 3:41 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong

Mipham

Content:

Palzang Jangchub said:

The ThinkProgress article read like he was only accused, not that he'd given an admission of guilt. If i missed tat somehow, please post the link(s).

Also, "plead guilty" makes it sound like he admitted this after being finally charged by the law and having his day in court.

Rinzler was "heartbroken" over the "real mistakes" he made with Amy, Simmer-Brown wrote

Malcolm wrote:

This is what he was "heartbroken" about, the "real mistake" he made:

In a last-ditch effort to get through to Rinzler, she told him again that she didn't want to have sex, and when he asked why, she revealed that she'd been sexually abused in the past. Instead of offering understanding and empathy, Amy said, Rinzler suggested that sleeping with him could help her break through the trust issues from her past trauma.

Then he began to touch her again, and she froze. She felt paralyzed, she said in an interview — as if she wasn't in control of her own body. Tired, drunk, and dissociated, she said that she performed oral sex on Rinzler in the hope it would make him stop.

"I thought, 'OK, I'm doing this to get him off of me without having to have sex with him and just survive,'" she said.

This guy is a boundary-less creep. Not someone who can be trusted with with students.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 26th, 2018 at 2:19 AM

Title: Re: Via Negativa

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No form of existence can be ultimately established. There is no being to negate.

Rick said:

I.e. Sunyata 101: Nothing exists inherently.

?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, since nothing exists inherently, there is no being to negate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 26th, 2018 at 1:05 AM

Title: Re: How to Make Long-Life Prayer More Effective?

Content:

Jangchup Donden said:

Do you think we wouldn't be better off if Shakyamuni Buddha were still physically present with us today? Or if Guru Rinpoche was still physically present with us?

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, because we would not take impermanence to heart.

Jangchup Donden said:

Yet the Buddha would have remained with us until the end of the Kalpa if Ananda had asked. Isn't that simply a case of lack of merit/interdependence?

Is Amitabha not doing his pure land any favors by sticking around so long?

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha demonstrated nirvana in order to teach us impermanence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 26th, 2018 at 12:51 AM

Title: Re: Via Negativa

Content:

Rick said:

Is there anything that cannot be negated in Buddhism? Can one's existence be negated? Or would it be right-er in Buddhism to say: I neither am, nor am not, nor neither, nor both? To what extent does the answer depend on the Buddhist school/tradition?

Malcolm wrote:

More to the point, no form of existence can be ultimately established.

Rick said:

What about the kind of existence with which a process is said to exist? (As in process philosophy.) An ever-changing web of dynamic intercausality kind of (non-substance) thingie ...

Lemme guess: Since, ultimately (paramartha), there is no causality, no processes, no interdependent webs, my question is a non-starter. Close?

Malcolm wrote:

No form of existence can be ultimately established. There is no being to negate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 26th, 2018 at 12:47 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

chimechodra said:

So ultimately I noticed that for myself and other folk, if you were genuinely interested in the teachings, often times that would help prove the impetus to break free of Shambhala. But by the time genuine devotion for the teachings has arisen, it has been intermingled with loyalty to Shambhala and the institution and all the myths surrounding Trungpa and the Sakyong, and then teachers around you will often advise against "spiritual shopping" with the intent of keeping you locked into Shambhala.

Malcolm wrote:

This is called "Corporate Dharma."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 26th, 2018 at 12:34 AM

Title: Re: How to Make Long-Life Prayer More Effective?

Content:

Jangchup Donden said:

Do you think we wouldn't be better off if Shakyamuni Buddha were still physically present with us today? Or if Guru Rinpoche was still physically present with us?

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, because we would not take impermanence to heart.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 26th, 2018 at 12:18 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The Dharma can never be tainted.

Rinchen Samphel said:

For some reason this solves my worry from my previous post too, thanks Malcolm.

Karma Dorje said:

That's true, but the conditions for it to manifest in this world can definitely disappear. I think that wrongdoing by Dharma teachers is far more injurious to these conditions than any attempts by naysayers to tear down religious institutions out of malice.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, the Buddha said Dharma can only be destroyed from within.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 25th, 2018 at 11:51 PM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

Palzang Jangchub said:

I keep coming back to the fact that legitimate Dharma teachings can be given by messed up individuals.

Malcolm wrote:

But they have no blessings.

Palzang Jangchub said:

Incidentally, is there any legit Buddhadharma on not leaping to judgment when an individual is accused of misconduct? How about defamation of character?

Malcolm wrote:

One complaint, reserve judgment. Two complaints, raise eyebrow. Multitude of complaints -- pitchfork and torches time.

Palzang Jangchub said:

I guess it boils down to not wanting Lodro Rinzler to be guilty of this.

Malcolm wrote:

He pleaded guilty to being a creep and intimidating a woman into giving him head, who repeatedly said no to him. Worse, he tried to convince her a sexual experience with him would help her get over her own sexual abuse issues. This is called "date rape,"

Palzang Jangchub said:

How many enemies of Dharma will see this as a golden opportunity to falsely accuse others out of malice towards these individuals and the organizations they're associated with? I think this is a question worth asking ourselves. False accusations can be just as damaging, and it's quite hard to change public opinion, even when claims can be proven false. Narratives tend to take on a life of their own once they're out in the ether...

Malcolm wrote:

The Dharma can never be tainted.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 25th, 2018 at 8:23 AM

Title: Re: Taking Empowerment as a Blessing

Content:

kausalya said:

Appearances can be deceiving. We can't read people's minds, nor can we know anything about their experience. This is basic.

Malcolm wrote:

Pro tip: the Buddha accepted inference as a valid form of knowledge.

kausalya said:

My mind is unreliable; I play it safe by being an idiot.

Malcolm wrote:

Whoever sold you that bill of goods did you a disservice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 25th, 2018 at 8:19 AM

Title: Re: Taking Empowerment as a Blessing

Content:

kausalya said:

Appearances can be deceiving. We can't read people's minds, nor can we know anything about their experience. This is basic.

Malcolm wrote:

Pro tip: the Buddha accepted inference as a valid form of knowledge.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 25th, 2018 at 7:27 AM

Title: Re: Taking Empowerment as a Blessing

Content:

kausalya said:

Meanwhile, all I see myself doing is being cautious about judging the actions/appearances of others

Malcolm wrote:

It is pretty easy to see who is worldly, who is not, who is virtuous, who is not, etc. If you can't discern even such basic things...it is unlikely you can discern who is a proper teacher and who is not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 25th, 2018 at 6:32 AM

Title: Re: Taking Empowerment as a Blessing

Content:

kausalya said:

As students, we can't say much.

Malcolm wrote:

For a student who can't say much, you sure have a lot to say.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 25th, 2018 at 6:31 AM

Title: Re: Taking Empowerment as a Blessing

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You think karma relieves you of choice?

Losal Samten said:

Volition is karma isn't it?

Malcolm wrote:

He means karma in the sense of vipaka, ripening.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 25th, 2018 at 6:15 AM

Title: Re: Taking Empowerment as a Blessing

Content:

kausalya said:

Negating what?

Malcolm wrote:

Reread the thread, friend.

kausalya said:

If I've ignored something, it's to refocus on what I consider to be important, which is "not to deter from tantric practice anyone having confidence in it."

Malcolm wrote:

I see, so its all about you and what you consider important. Got it. Good to know.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 25th, 2018 at 5:24 AM

Title: Re: Taking Empowerment as a Blessing

Content:

kausalya said:

I've got about as little choice as you do, given the state of my karma.

Malcolm wrote:

You think karma relieves you of choice?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 25th, 2018 at 5:16 AM

Title: Re: Taking Empowerment as a Blessing

Content:

kausalya said:

Why worry about what others are doing?

Malcolm wrote:

Why do you?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 25th, 2018 at 5:16 AM

Title: Re: Taking Empowerment as a Blessing

Content:

kausalya said:

I just realize I have no control over anything, so that's how it goes. I can only practice to be better at living, and communicate with those who see something valuable in what I say.

Malcolm wrote:

While uselessly negating the valuable things others say...get the picture?

kausalya said:

Negating what?

Malcolm wrote:

Reread the thread, friend.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 25th, 2018 at 5:00 AM

Title: Re: Taking Empowerment as a Blessing

Content:

kausalya said:

I just realize I have no control over anything, so that's how it goes. I can only practice to be better at living, and communicate with those who see something valuable in what I say.

Malcolm wrote:

While uselessly negating the valuable things others say...get the picture?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 25th, 2018 at 4:58 AM

Title: Re: Taking Empowerment as a Blessing

Content:

kausalya said:

Not so. Your karma dictates what you see.

Malcolm wrote:

It is so, just open your eyes and look around you.

kausalya said:

I do! Hello to you.

My behaviour is my only concern. As for others, I only have compassion.

Malcolm wrote:

That is very nice for you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 25th, 2018 at 4:46 AM

Title: Re: Taking Empowerment as a Blessing

Content:

kausalya said:

From our perspective, we don't know who is a dharma person and who is not.

Malcolm wrote:

It is evident from people's behavior.

kausalya said:

Not so. Your karma dictates what you see.

Malcolm wrote:

It is so, just open your eyes and look around you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 25th, 2018 at 4:29 AM

Title: Re: Taking Empowerment as a Blessing

Content:

kausalya said:

From our perspective, we don't know who is a dharma person and who is not.

Malcolm wrote:

It is evident from people's behavior.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 25th, 2018 at 4:28 AM

Title: Re: Taking Empowerment as a Blessing

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you have a attachment to this life, you are not a Dharma person.

-- Mañjuśrī to Sachen Kunga Nyingpo.

Jangchup Donden said:

Then wouldn't you have to be enlightened to be a Dharma person?

Malcolm wrote:

No, you merely need to understand there is more than just this life and act accordingly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 25th, 2018 at 4:19 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong

Mipham
Content:

Josef said:

Not at all surprising.

Having met Rinzler I have always been shocked that he is considered a teacher and has been able to get published.

The vetting process for "teachers" in Shambhala is absurdly vacuous.

conebeckham said:

I don't disagree, but.....what vetting process? For any teacher? Including Tibetan Lamas?

I mean, yes, some centers, esp. those established by major lineage figures, have appointed teachers and there is vetting going on, but these days there are many centers that have been set up by people, of any race/ethnicity/background, with no "vetting process."

Shambhala, being a more established institution, should have had checks and balances in place of course, but at the end of the day.....students need to have Eyes Wide Open.

Josef said:

I was primarily referring to the "acharyas" within the organization.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, we should not paint them all with the same brush.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 25th, 2018 at 4:18 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

Terma said:

On another level, do you think that lack of merit can be a cause for someone to get involved with these kinds of organizations and "teachers"?

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha predicted the rise of counterfeit Dharma, and so did Padmasambhava. Counterfeit Dharma existed during the time of the Buddha in the form of Devadatta's teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 25th, 2018 at 3:20 AM

Title: Re: Taking Empowerment as a Blessing

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

when common people goes around for blessing from an empowerment I would say they want a mundane blessing.

kausalya said:

Mundane blessings are what some people need.

Malcolm wrote:

Then they should ask for a pat on the head and a blessing cord, not an empowerment.

javier.espinoza.t said:

they want the world, they don't want to free themselves.

if this isn't degeneration I don't know what is it.

kausalya said:

Not degeneration.

Malcolm wrote:

If you have a attachment to this life, you are not a Dharma person.

-- Mañjuśrī to Sachen Kunga Nyingpo.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 25th, 2018 at 2:24 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

Terma said:

If one is really serious about their practice, then isn't it best to seek out authentic Master's from authentic lineages?

Malcolm wrote:

People think Trungpa was an authentic master, given the sheer amount of accolade he is accorded by highly respected Tibetan masters such as Dzongsar Khyentse and so on. Since they think Trungpa is authentic, it is not hard to understand why they think Shambhala is authentic. Since they think Shambhala is authentic, they think the teachers in Shambhala are authentic.

Trungpa is kind of the third rail in Tibetan Buddhism. Many people do not actually approve of him, but since he built a very successful organization, no one in the Tibetan hierarchy will directly criticize him. For this reason, people will continue to be attracted to Shambhala. They have turned Trungpa into a very successful brand.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 24th, 2018 at 1:59 AM

Title: Re: Taking Empowerment as a Blessing

Content:

SilenceMonkey said:

I'm somewhat new to Tibetan style Buddhism. As I'm navigating this world of empowerments and gurus, I'm a little confused about the nature of public teachings. Some people say it's a great opportunity, that you need empowerment to be able to practice, etc... Others say all it is is symbolic and is basically just a blessing, no real empowerments are given at these big teachings. Others say it's a waste of time, just take empowerments from your own guru (and lineage).

I've looked around a bit, and haven't found much yet about what it means to "take empowerment as a blessing." It seems Kalu Rinpoche has said one can take empowerment with the intention 1) To take it merely for blessing, 2) To practice at some point in the future, 3) To practice immediately. Is intention all that is needed to make an empowerment either a blessing or an initiation? How does one go about "taking empowerment as a blessing" (say, if one does not wish to actually practice it every day or at all)?

Is it wise to take many empowerments as blessings, perhaps to create good karmic links with many teachers and lineages? Or would it merely confuse the mind and the spirit?

Malcolm wrote:

Take empowerments because you are interested in the teacher, if you are only interested in the teaching, don't go.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 24th, 2018 at 12:10 AM

Title: Re: Dudjom Yangsi Dorje Drollö empowerment Toronto

Content:

Kunzang Tobgyal said:

I talked to Rinpoche yesterday and he himself wasn't exactly sure. So I think at this point if we really want to find out we have two options;

1: see if we can contact the translator. She may know.

2: contact the office of Dudjom Yangsi Rinpoche and see if we can find out directly from him.

I still have the feeling that it's the Sogdrub based on a few things Dudjom Yangsi mentioned. But we just don't know.

At this point just say the mantra as much as you can. And visualize etc.

Malcolm wrote:

The regular drollo is s full empowerment, Sogdrub is a torwang, and yes contact Chris Munson she is the translator.

Kunzang Tobgyal said:

Fantastic. How would we contact her?

Malcolm wrote:

Christina Monson, try and contact her through facebook I do not have her email.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 24th, 2018 at 12:08 AM

Title: Re: Via Negativa

Content:

Rick said:

In Advaita, the only thing that cannot be negated (seen to be ultimately un-real) is one's own existence: I Am. (I'm not opening a conversation about Advaita vs. Buddhism. Been there, done that! I just used Advaita as an example of a tradition that relies on via negativa negation.)

Is there anything that cannot be negated in Buddhism? Can one's existence be negated? Or would it be right-er in Buddhism to say: I neither am, nor am not, nor neither, nor both? To what extent does the answer depend on the Buddhist school/tradition?

Malcolm wrote:

More to the point, no form of existence can be ultimately established.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 23rd, 2018 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: Dudjom Yangsi Dorje Drollö empowerment Toronto

Content:

Kunzang Tobgyal said:

Interesting. I'll try to find out later today from Sonam Rinpoche who requested the empowerment.

On a side note, but somewhat related; what would the Dorje Drollö we received from Kunzang Dechen Lingpa be regarded as? Inner or outer?

Tlalok said:

Could you relay what you learn from Khenpo Sonam Rinpoche? I was also at this empowerment and I would love to put this into practice.

Kunzang Tobgyal said:

I talked to Rinpoche yesterday and he himself wasn't exactly sure. So I think at this point if we really want to find out we have two options;

1: see if we can contact the translator. She may know.

2: contact the office of Dudjom Yangsi Rinpoche and see if we can find out directly from him.

I still have the feeling that it's the Sogdrub based on a few things Dudjom Yangsi mentioned. But we just don't know.

At this point just say the mantra as much as you can. And visualize etc.

Malcolm wrote:

The regular drollo is a full empowerment, Sogdrub is a torwang, and yes contact Chris Munson she is the translator.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 23rd, 2018 at 1:56 AM

Title: Re: Dudjom Yangsi Dorje Drollö empowerment Toronto

Content:

Kunzang Tobgyal said:

On a side note, but somewhat related; what would the Dorje Drollö we received from Kunzang Dechen Lingpa be regarded as? Inner or outer?

Malcolm wrote:

Inner. It and the Pema Sogthig are basically the same, however, Pema Sogthig is a bit more elaborate. Mantras are different. Also, there is no separate empowerment for KDL's inner Drollo sadhana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 23rd, 2018 at 12:57 AM

Title: Re: Dudjom Yangsi Dorje Drollö empowerment Toronto

Content:

Kunzang Tobgyal said:

He mentioned it was Dudjom Rinpoche's Mind Terma which would make it the Dudjom Traktung Pema Sokdrub Zabmo. You can get it here;
<http://www.dharmatresasures.com/dorje-drollo-thrak-thung/>

Malcolm wrote:

Probably not Pema Sogthig. Probably the outer Drollo sadhana, both are mind treasures.

Kunzang Tobgyal said:

Hmmmm... i wonder. He mentioned it was Dudjom Rinpoche's heart practice as well as his own. Are the root mantras the same? That would be one way to determine.

Malcolm wrote:

Identical. I have received them both. Pema Sogthig is generally practiced after having done the outer sadhana. The daily practice is called yang gsar bdud 'dul gro lod kyi rgyun khyer snying por dril ba.

Also, Pema Sogthig has its own brief torma empowerment. Sometime both forms are combined together for convenience. All of the activities however, are connected with the more general form.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 22nd, 2018 at 1:08 PM

Title: Re: Dudjom Yangsi Dorje Drollö empowerment Toronto

Content:

Kunzang Tobgyal said:

<https://mailchi.mp/f27fdd425cfe/hh-dudjom-sangye-pema-shepa-rinpoche?e=f4a440f763>

RoadToPines said:

Can you please say what text we were working from for the Dorje Drolo empowerment? The translator went so fast I missed the author and title of the text. Or is there a site where I can read the sadhana?

Kunzang Tobgyal said:

He mentioned it was Dudjom Rinpoche's Mind Terma which would make it the Dudjom Traktung Pema Sokdrub Zabmo. You can get it here;
<http://www.dharmatresasures.com/dorje-drollo-thrak-thung/>

Malcolm wrote:

Probably not Pema Sogthig. Probably the outer Drollo sadhana, both are mind treasures.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 22nd, 2018 at 6:25 AM

Title: Re: What's the meaning of "life is duhhka"?

Content:

Happiness said:

The first noble truth is life is duhhka,

Malcolm wrote:

No, the first truth of āryas is sarvadukkha, suffering is everywhere.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 22nd, 2018 at 5:57 AM

Title: Re: Immutable Nature of the Primordial State

Content:

smcj said:

Historically the whole Shentong thing started when a Sakya scholar met a group of Kalachakra practitioners that had gained realization.

Malcolm wrote:

The Jonangpas would take exception to Dolbupa being called a Sakyapa.

smcj said:

They said emptiness was not at all the way it was presented in Madhyamaka. So the scholar took it upon himself to take what these guys were saying and then went back and reinterpreted a bunch of classic texts from their perspective so as to legitimize what they were saying to a greater audience.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and in the process, rather than legitimizing their view, he caused it to be subjected to further criticisms based on errors others perceived in his presentation of Yogacara, and just maybe too, because of his rather self-congratulatory style of writing.

That said, the version of gzhan stong followed today in Kagyu more resembles the Sakya scholar Sakya Chogden than Dolbupa. Gzhan stong itself also has a number of variations, as any mature tradition is likely to have.

But I am pretty sure also that Kalacakra is off topic in the Dzogchen forum...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 22nd, 2018 at 4:04 AM

Title: Re: Saraswati Terma Masters All Gone?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:
Saraswati is precious deity for wisdom and artistic creativity.

Grigoris said:
Does she have a wrathful aspect?

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, the wrathful form of Saraswati is Magzor Gyalmo.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, July 22nd, 2018 at 4:02 AM
Title: Re: Yidam and Dzogchen
Content:

heart said:
If you say so, but I don't see how that matters actually. Sems sde is also Dzogchen.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:
According to ChNN, sems sde must be practiced in conjunction with regular creation and completion stage, that is the point I am making. Sems de, unlike man ngag sde, is not an independent system of practice.

heart said:
I never heard him say that, but I have no reason to don't believe you. Anyway the "man ngag sde", in particular the "yang sang lana mepé kor" (the nyingtik), have a lot of deity practices that connected to those teachings. I am not really trying to prove something here, but it is just kind of obvious.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, as a support for practitioners, one can use any deity, not just "nyingma" deities. But deity yoga is not the main path for man ngag sde, unlike sems sde.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, July 22nd, 2018 at 3:12 AM
Title: Re: Yidam and Dzogchen
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
According to ChNN, sems sde must be practiced in conjunction with regular creation and completion stage, that is the point I am making. Sems de, unlike man ngag sde, is not an independent system of practice.

Miroku said:

Why is that so that it has to be paired with creation and completion stage?

Malcolm wrote:

One cannot attain rainbow body with sems sde alone.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 22nd, 2018 at 2:54 AM

Title: Re: Yidam and Dzogchen

Content:

heart said:

Yes, that is a good point. But Longchenpa doesn't really put it like that, he just insist that they are necessary preliminaries,

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

This set of books is about sems sde, and was also written before he met Kumaraja.

heart said:

If you say so, but I don't see how that matters actually. Sems sde is also Dzogchen.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

According to ChNN, sems sde must be practiced in conjunction with regular creation and completion stage, that is the point I am making. Sems de, unlike man ngag sde, is not an independent system of practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 22nd, 2018 at 2:52 AM

Title: Re: Immutable Nature of the Primordial State

Content:

Matt J said:

I wasn't able to find the analysis in prior posts. Is there a link?

Are you all suggesting that the Dzogchen taught by Kagyu masters (i.e Thrangu, Mingyur, Tsoknyi, Dzogchen Ponlop etc. Rinpoches) is compromised somehow by a Shentong stance? The heart of Dzogchen as far as I understand is not a conceptual view.

Malcolm wrote:

gzhan stong is an analytical approach. Dzogchen is a vajrayāna system; the former is coarse, the latter is subtle. The latter does not depend on any analytical system at all; it depends on the introduction by a qualified master.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 21st, 2018 at 1:35 PM

Title: Re: Immutable Nature of the Primordial State

Content:

smcj said:

I have really come around to the Shentong presentation via the Kagyu presentation. If you're really interested, Brunnhölzl's "When Clouds Part" is an excellent read on the subject. He has a whole section with summaries of how various Karma Kagyu masters have interpreted Shentong over the centuries. It is scholarly, long, and expensive, but well worth it if you're interested.

BTW the "Rangtong Ma-yin-gag" is the view that I'm leaning towards now. It has self-emptiness but with the universal positive qualities of Buddha Nature also—if I understand it correctly. There's no separate Reality, which is the offensive Hindu heresy. It is mentioned in Situ R's "Creation and Completion".

To me the positive intrinsic qualities of Buddha Nature are what is important. Saying it is separate and Real is just adding emphasis.

Malcolm wrote:

If I had a thesis

I would be at fault,

Since I alone have no thesis,

I alone am free from fault.

— Nagarjuna

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 21st, 2018 at 4:25 AM

Title: Re: rtsal, shared samsaric vision, "other" sentient beings

Content:

jnanasutra said:

Hi all!

So, if all appearances are rtsal manifestations of the basis of each individual, then is it the case that the rtsal manifestations are shared "vision" among samsaric sentient beings?

Also, if all appearances are the energy of the basis of each individual, then how are appearances shared by sentient beings and how are sentient beings (with their individual consciousnesses) apparent to other sentient beings? Wouldn't the appearance of other sentient beings only be the rtal manifestations of one's own basis?

Thanks!

Dorje Shedrub said:

I had the understanding that there is one basis not many, and that sentient brings each perceive the play of rtal through their own obscurations.

DS

Malcolm wrote:

This is a mistake

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 21st, 2018 at 3:35 AM

Title: Re: Leslie Hays says Akong R kidnapped and tortured SMR

Content:

Simon E. said:

I am reluctant to give this thread with it's loaded agenda any more oxygen, but it may be worth pointing out vis-a-vis Knotty Veneer's good post that the majority of CTR's American circle would probably have no first hand knowledge of Akong Rinpoche at all. Most of them never visited Samye-Ling and Akong R. did not visit CTR's centres in the US. So any view of Akong R. would come from CTR's beleaguered and defensive students. most of whom never met him.... and Mrs. Mukpo.

I will leave those interested to do the background research in that particular area.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, you can always count on Dzogchen how to stand up for the little guy, widows, stray pets, and gurus with questionable ethical compasses.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 21st, 2018 at 3:31 AM

Title: Re: Immutable Nature of the Primordial State

Content:

Matt J said:

I struggle to see any difference between shentong and a Madhyamaka-Yogacara synthesis. If I recall correctly, Brunnholz makes the argument that what is called shentong is simply that.

krodha said:

In any case, gzhan stong as a view in itself is at odds with Dzogchen... however describing Dzogchen as a Madhyamaka-Yogācāra synthesis is perfectly acceptable.

Malcolm wrote:

Well. The actual difference is that the Yogācāra Madhyamakas do not use the three own natures doctrine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 20th, 2018 at 1:27 PM

Title: Re: Immutable Nature of the Primordial State

Content:

krodha said:

Mine or smcj's?

Malcolm wrote:

smcj's...his claim that Dudjom R subordinates Dzogchen to sutrayāna madhyamaka of any kind.

smcj said:

I do not claim that he “subordinates” Dzogchen at all.

I claim he uses Great Madhyamaka/Shentong to declare the superiority of Dzogchen.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no need to do this. This is like saying a lion's roar needs to be amplified by a dog's bark.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 20th, 2018 at 9:54 AM

Title: Re: Immutable Nature of the Primordial State

Content:

smcj said:

Is the “third turning” gzhan stong or just Yogācāra? Seems only Yogācāra is being referenced in the excerpt despite the assertion that his use of “third turning” is supposed to be a reference to gzhan song

3rd Turning can be interpreted as Mind Only or Empty of Other.

Malcolm wrote:

It can also be understood as restatement of the second turning, i.e., I said this was definitive, and yes, it is definitive.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 20th, 2018 at 9:52 AM

Title: Re: Immutable Nature of the Primordial State

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Nine of these passages support your claim.

krodha said:

Mine or smcj's?

Malcolm wrote:

smcj's...his claim that Dudjom R subordinates Dzogchen to sutrayāna madhyamaka of any kind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 19th, 2018 at 11:25 PM

Title: Re: Immutable Nature of the Primordial State

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Nine of these passages support your claim.

smcj said:

Page 300 of "The Big Red Book" in the chapter titled "Superiority of Atiyoga". Remember, he is not discussing sutra here. He is discussing Dzogchen and why it is superior to the lower 8 yantras.

Also worthy of note is the fact that he says that Nagarjuna/2nd Turning and Asanga/3rd Turning are both contained in Dzogchen. That is to be expected and does not negate my point. All Shentong view includes Nagarjuna. Elsewhere he explains that his interpretation of the 3rd Turning is "Great Madhyamaka" (a.k.a Shentong). Interestingly he includes the Dharmadhaturstava ("In Praise of Dharmadhatu") as one of Nagarjuna's. It certainly is not like Nagarjuna's other writings.

Now concerning this natural expression of the Great Perfection: The Sugata, during the intermediate promulgation of the transmitted precepts*, did not reveal the structure of the fundamental reality, though he did extensively teach the inconceivable, abiding nature without referring to symbols of elaborate conception. And, during the final promulgation, though he did reveal the structure of the fundamental reality, he did not teach the characteristic path through which it is actualized. Therefore, the conclusive intention of the Two Promulgators actually abides without contradiction in the nature of the Great Perfection. This intention comprises the unaltered intention of the Collection of Madhyamaka Reasoning,, which consists of the commentaries on the intermediate promulgation by the sublime and supreme Nagarjuna; and his [Collection of Eulogies] including the Eulogy to the Expanse of Reality *, and the commentaries by the regent Maitreya, the sublime and supreme Asanga, and his brother [Vasabandhu] and so forth, which together form the intention of the final [promulgation]. If one were to ask why this is the case, it is because these masters did not claim anything other than the profound abiding nature of natural reality, and because the Great Perfection itself is none other than that.

(bolding/underlining mine)

So he says, "... during the intermediate promulgation of the transmitted precepts, did not reveal the structure of the fundamental reality".

But he then say of Asanga/Vasabandhu, "...because these masters did not claim anything other than the profound abiding nature of natural reality...,"

So he accepts the 3rd Turning as being "profound abiding nature of natural reality, and because the Great Perfection itself is none other than that.

So Dudjom R. had no problem utilizing the 3 Turning paradigm to explain and define how Dzogchen is superior to the other yanas. Since he saw it as appropriate, so do I.

*a.k.a. The 2nd Turning of the Wheel of Dharma a.k.a. The 3rd Turning of the Wheel of Dharma
 Nagarjuna and Asanga
*Available in English as "In Praise of Dharmadhatu"

All this is in regards to Dudjom R's interpretation of Dzogchen. Evidently he is an outlier in this among Nyingmapas. However Kongtrul also has a Shentong view of Dzogchen, and he is not an outlier among Karma Kagyupas. So at least one major school supports that idea within the context of Dzogchen specifically.

krodha said:

Is the "third turning" gzhan stong or just Yogācāra? Seems only Yogācāra is being referenced in the excerpt despite the assertion that his use of "third turning" is supposed to be a reference to gzhan stong.

In any case, gzhan stong as a view in itself is at odds with Dzogchen... however describing Dzogchen as a Madhyamaka-Yogācāra synthesis is perfectly acceptable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 19th, 2018 at 1:23 PM

Title: Re: Leslie Hays says Akong R kidnapped and tortured SMR

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

If by "all of this" you mean Hays' statement re Akong R my view is that I don't know what actually happened. My point in making this thread is to stimulate discussion concerning Hays' statement, possibly turning up relevant information.

PeterC said:

The bar for these claims to be credible is extraordinarily high, given Akong R's character and integrity. Unless Hays has better proof than is in that post, we probably aren't helping anyone by repeating them.

dzogchungpa said:

I don't actually know much about Akong R but it seems that Leslie Hays is considered to be a reliable source of information these days, so I thought it was worth discussing.

Malcolm wrote:

She seems reliable with respect to her first hand accounts of what she personally saw, as to what she heard second hand...no one alive can say one way or another

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 19th, 2018 at 9:30 AM

Title: Re: Leslie Hays says Akong R kidnapped and tortured SMR

Content:

smcj said:

You guys do know that beatings were common in pre-PRC monasteries, right?

Malcolm wrote:

As well as pre 1959 elementary schools in the USA...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 19th, 2018 at 2:46 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra and Dzogchen

Content:

haha said:

I cannot tell anything about whom I don't know, (Dezhung Ajam).

If I remember Lamdre correctly, there are purifications of past, present and future life and intermediate stage in development stage, and one actually understands real lamdre view in completion stage.

In dzogchen, if the student has authentic realization of view, then he stabilizes it instead of purifying anything. There is nothing to purify in pristine awareness. If I am wrong, I will be happy to be corrected.

Malcolm wrote:

If what you understand is correct there is no need for thogal and Dzogchen is no different than chan. However, what you say is not true because trekcho is related to the basis, not the path.

Trekco is knowing that there is pure gold in ore, thogal is refining the gold from the ore.

haha said:

If it is the case, then thogal is like purification. Am I correct?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this why in general it held one cannot attain rainbow from trekco alone

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 19th, 2018 at 2:23 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra and Dzogchen

Content:

haha said:

Agree!

Actually, I have a doubt on this statement: "The basis of purification of Dzogchen is pristine consciousness."

If something that is pure and perfect from very beginning, what is there one purifies?

Malcolm wrote:

You can doubt the statement, but it is a statement made by the great Lamdre exegete Dezhung Ajam, who also studied Dzogchen under Adzom Drukpa. To answer your question, temporary afflictions are purified, in the same way impurities in gold ore are separated from the gold. Lamdre by contrast transforms the aggregates into the Buddha families etc., like the example of the philosopher stone transforming base metal into gold.

haha said:

I cannot tell anything about whom I don't know, (Dezhung Ajam).

If I remember Lamdre correctly, there are purifications of past, present and future life and intermediate stage in development stage, and one actually understands real lamdre view in completion stage.

In dzogchen, if the student has authentic realization of view, then he stabilizes it instead of purifying anything. There is nothing to purify in pristine awareness. If I am wrong, I will be happy to be corrected.

Malcolm wrote:

If what you understand is correct there is no need for thogal and Dzogchen is no different than chan. However, what you say is not true because trekcho is related to the basis, not the path.

Trekcho is knowing that there is pure gold in ore, thogal is refining the gold from the ore.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 19th, 2018 at 1:33 AM

Title: Re: Immutable Nature of the Primordial State

Content:

smcj said:

Dzogchen masters do not privilege sūtra views over Vajrayāna views -- this is a point you seem to have never understood.

In his "Big Red Book" Dudjom R. explains that Dzogchen is superior specifically because it has the Great Madhyamaka/Shentong view. We have had that discussion before.

I have quoted it before. You know it. I do not accept your dismissal that I do not understand it.

Malcolm wrote:

Chapter and verse?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 19th, 2018 at 1:27 AM

Title: Re: Leslie Hays says Akong R kidnapped and tortured SMR

Content:

Miroku said:

I honestly find that hard to believe. This is bit too much. But still shows how f-ing messy the whole situation is. Kinda reminded me of a passage where Dianna says Akong R. bullied her and CTR when they still were in Samye-ling. But still really? This is a horrible mess.

Stewart said:

I knew Akong Rinpoche for 20 years... believe me, he was no bully. He did however, put up with a lot of shit and slander from Shambhala, despite the fact he personally, and quietly, financially supported the Trungpa Tulku and Surmang monastery for years, Shambhala gave them nothing, eventually they realised that having the heritage of Surmang could be a good thing and suddenly started showing an interest.

Malcolm wrote:

And guess what, even Trungpa's claim he was the supreme abbot of Surmang turns out to be complete bullshit...that would be this guy:

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Zurmang_Gharwang_Rinpoche

Trungpa never taught the Zurmang tradition in Vajradhātu — he taught Karma Kagyu lineages.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 19th, 2018 at 1:23 AM

Title: Re: Immutable Nature of the Primordial State

Content:

smcj said:

Dudjom R. have a Shentong/Great Madhyamaka view.

Malcolm wrote:

When it comes to sūtra, yes. Not when it comes to Dzogchen. Jigme Lingpa follows Tsongkhapa when it comes to sūtra, but not when it comes to Dzogchen. Dzogchen masters do not privilege sūtra views over Vajrayāna views -- this is a point you seem to have never understood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 19th, 2018 at 1:20 AM

Title: Re: Immutable Nature of the Primordial State

Content:

smcj said:

Actually, the assertion that there is no basis is precisely the meaning of Dzogchen, Mahāmudra, and Prajñāpāramitā.

With Prajnaparamita yes. With Mahamudra and Dzogchen it depends on who you talk to.

In "Myriad Worlds" Kongtrul writes: What is the fundamental nature of the original primordial ground of being, before buddhas appear by realizing it and before sentient beings appear by not realizing it? To answer this the tradition of Great Perfection states that the claims concerning the ground based on the perspectives of persons who adhere to philosophical tenets are mistaken.

Make no mistake, this book is about Kongtrul's cosmology. He starts with Abhidharma, then the Kalachakra cosmology, then the above is the beginning of his Dzogchen cosmology.

Malcolm wrote:

Kongtrul's review of Dzogchen "cosmology" is rather incomplete in the Encyclopedia (he gives a more detailed and complete overview in other places). Also the term "ground of being" has no correlate in Tibetan. It is an erroneous translation of the simple term "gzhi," that is, basis.

Also, the nature of the original basis is ka dag, original purity, i.e., emptiness free from extremes. There are several presentations of the basis in Dzogchen, the only non-erroneous one is that the basis is originally pure. Original purity is a special term for emptiness which has never been contaminated by ignorance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 19th, 2018 at 1:16 AM

Title: Re: Immutable Nature of the Primordial State

Content:

Pema Rigdzin said:

Malcolm,

Usually we speak of the Sutrayana paths as the causal vehicles, and the mantrayana paths as the resultant vehicles; but does Dzogchen consider Anuyoga and Mahayoga "resultant"?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 19th, 2018 at 12:59 AM

Title: Re: Immutable Nature of the Primordial State

Content:

LoveFromColorado said:

p

Malcolm wrote:

There is no primordial state.

LoveFromColorado said:

Hi Malcolm, unless you are referring to emptiness, then I don't understand what you mean. Throughout The Supreme Source by Chogyal Namkhai Norbu the Base is continually referred to as "the primordial state" (for example, on page 85). Would you mind clarifying?

Malcolm wrote:

"Primordial state" is how ChNN translates the term "gzhi." "Gzhi" simply refer to something we have not realized. If there is some real primordial state, then how does it exist, in whom does it exist, and in what way does it exist, without falling into the four extremes. If it does not exist by way of any of the four extremes, for what reason then it is a fault to say there is no basis? Actually, the assertion that there is no basis is precisely the meaning of Dzogchen, Mahāmudra, and Prajñāpāramitā.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 19th, 2018 at 12:43 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra and Dzogchen

Content:

haha said:

If one knows the Dzogchen before receiving Love andre, those instructions of the lamdre at the time of empowerment would be very profound. It is my personal opinion. Certainly, what they emphasize to purify is different.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no doubt that Lamdre and Dzogchen are compatible, but one has to understand how their paths differ.

haha said:

Agree!

Actually, I have a doubt on this statement: "The basis of purification of Dzogchen is pristine consciousness."

If something that is pure and perfect from very beginning, what is there one purifies?

Malcolm wrote:

You can doubt the statement, but it is a statement made by the great Lamdre exegete Dezhung Ajam, who also studied Dzogchen under Adzom Drukpa. To answer your question, temporary afflictions are purified, in the same way impurities in gold ore are separated from the gold. Lamdre by contrast transforms the aggregates into the Buddha families etc., like the example of the philosopher stone transforming base metal into gold.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 19th, 2018 at 12:35 AM

Title: Re: Leslie Hays says Akong R kidnapped and tortured SMR

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I decided to look through the comment thread on Hays' cat story FB post, and there are many interesting comments but https://www.facebook.com/permalink.php?story_fbid=1866927776941356&id=100008724543238&comment_id=1867199120247555&reply_comment_id=186728045357275

5 especially caught my eye:

Then Sakyong Mipham rinpoche (smr or the Sawang as he was known then) was kidnapped by Akong Tulku, and he was tortured- locked in a closet & he showed me the scars on his cheek from being whipped with a bamboo whip. I am not sure why CTR & Dianna didn't go get him immediately. But he was wounded too. Tagi and Gesar both experienced abuse too-now Gesar is an abuser as well. This is the cycle of violence, and I am a victim of it

I don't really know what to make of it but I thought it was worth pointing out. Does anyone know how old SMR would have been at that time?

Malcolm wrote:
6 -8 or so.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, July 18th, 2018 at 2:18 PM
Title: Re: Mahamudra and Dzogchen
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
One cannot practice Lamdre from a Dzogchen point of view. Why? The basis of purification is different. The basis of purification of Lamdre is the five aggregates. The basis of purification of Dzogchen is pristine consciousness.

haha said:
If one knows the Dzogchen before receiving Lamdre, those instructions of the lamdre at the time of empowerment would be very profound. It is my personal opinion. Certainly, what they emphasize to purify is different.

@ passel
If you have heard the Gelug masters presentation, they can very precisely remark the experience of Dzogchen and Tantra in particular stage.
If you have read "The Supreme Source(The Kunjed Gyalpo)", you can figure out the subtle level of grasping in other lower vehicles.

Malcolm wrote:
There is no doubt that Lamdre and Dzogchen are compatible, but one has to understand how their paths differ.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, July 18th, 2018 at 12:57 PM
Title: Re: Immutable Nature of the Primordial State
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
There is no primordial state.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, July 18th, 2018 at 1:20 AM

Title: Re: Big messages to deplorables ???

Content:

Rick said:

What's the realistic alternative? Vote for Nader and boot Gore out of the White House?

Johnny Dangerous said:

I actually did heh, and I feel justified in doing so.

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, that worked out real well for America.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 18th, 2018 at 12:45 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra and Dzogchen

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Anyone wants Rainbow body these days has to practice Guru Singhishwara.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is just standard Vajrayāna hyperbole. Even if you practice this, there is no guarantee of rainbow body. Rainbow body depends on the practitioner, not the practice.

Crazywisdom said:

I believe Khenpo Namdrol

Malcolm wrote:

The notion comes from a line in the root text. The Hevajra tantra says, "Buddhist tīrthikas who do not know Hevajra will never attain buddhahood."

As I said, Vajrayāna hyperbole. For example, Khenpo Acho, student of Dudjom Rinpoche, attained rainbow body in the late nineties through the practice of Vajrakīlāya. His other main practice was Naro Khachoma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 18th, 2018 at 12:19 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra and Dzogchen

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Then it becomes Dzogchen. Very pure lineage.

Malcolm wrote:

Even so, the basis of purification of Dzogchen is not the five aggregates.

Crazywisdom said:

Anyone wants Rainbow body these days has to practice Guru Singhishwara.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is just standard Vajrayāna hyperbole. Even if you practice this, there is no guarantee of rainbow body. Rainbow body depends on the practitioner, not the practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 18th, 2018 at 12:09 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra and Dzogchen

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

First half of Sadhana is essentially tummo. As purification and accumulation

Malcolm wrote:

Chetsun Nyinthig sadhana is not Dzogchen, it's anuyoga, specifically, employing devotion to the guru as the path.

Crazywisdom said:

Then it becomes Dzogchen. Very pure lineage.

Malcolm wrote:

Even so, the basis of purification of Dzogchen is not the five aggregates.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 17th, 2018 at 11:58 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra and Dzogchen

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

But so is Chetsun N

Malcolm wrote:

Huh?

Crazywisdom said:

First half of Sadhana is essentially tummo. As purification and accumulation

Malcolm wrote:

Chetsun Nyinthing sadhana is not Dzogchen, it's anuyoga, specifically, employing devotion to the guru as the path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 17th, 2018 at 11:37 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra and Dzogchen

Content:

passel said:

I think this question is on point, but maybe it could be a new thread- there were a few different thread with similar titles, and I think a bunch of posts or even a thread got deleted? Idk

If one held the view that mahamudra and dzogchen have the same basis and the same fruit, that just the paths are distinct (but lets be honest overlapping- cf. J Ling Lion's Roar on stillness movement noticing in Dzogchen as but one of kotis of examples), then does that just boil down to two distinct sets of texts, instructions, practices, practice communities?

Malcolm wrote:

One cannot practice Lamdre from a Dzogchen point of view. Why? The basis of purification is different. The basis of purification of Lamdre is the five aggregates. The basis of purification of Dzogchen is pristine consciousness.

Crazywisdom said:

But so is Chetsun N

Malcolm wrote:

Huh?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 17th, 2018 at 12:29 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra and Dzogchen

Content:

passel said:

hm. Is that a straight Lamdre statement, or is it a way of harmonizing Lamdre and Dzogchen?

Malcolm wrote:

In Lamdre, the basis, path, and result are identical. But the basis of purification is samsara. That is not true of Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 17th, 2018 at 9:41 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra and Dzogchen

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

One cannot practice Lamdre from a Dzogchen point of view. Why? The basis of purification is different. The basis of purification of Lamdre is the five aggregates. The basis of purification of Dzogchen is pristine consciousness.

passel said:

Fantastic, thank you. I'm afraid I've never met a Sakyapa in the flesh, so my knowledge of the Lamdre system is less than meager, thanks for the response. I was really thinking of Kagyu/Nyingma synthesis, just since that's all I've really ever had any depth of exposure to (and some straight Nyingma, straight Kagyu, though neither has really clicked). Interesting, though, in that I made some quasi-perennialist statements above without even considering a Lamdre view. The impression I get is that Kagyu Mahamudra and Sakya Lamdre could be the hardest view/practice systems to reconcile. Jampa Thaye does it, I guess, Karma Thinley. Ka-Nying and Nyinga/Sakya syncretism though seem to be more common. But 5 aggregates as the basis does make Lamdre hard to reconcile w Dz as well, at least to uninstructed worldlings like yours truly.

(Context: I had in mind a statement on a deleted? thread that MM and Dz have same basis, same fruit, different paths- which I gather does not jibe w the view of Lamdre) Wonder if Lamdre-Dz practitioners would conceive of the two as parallel practice milieu that should be engaged, simultaneously or in sequence, or whether those practitioners find a way to fit one set of instruction/practices within the other. I guess those are not mutually exclusive responses- you could subsume one system within the other in sequence. Simultaneously would be hard.

Re-reading your quote above though makes me think that a practitioner of some capacity could practice Lamdre from a Dz point of view, but not vice versa. Unless different bases can have the same fruit, though I don't recall coming across that idea before..

Malcolm wrote:

The basis is the same, the basis of purification is different.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 17th, 2018 at 8:08 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra and Dzogchen

Content:

passel said:

I think this question is on point, but maybe it could be a new thread- there were a few different thread with similar titles, and I think a bunch of posts or even a thread got deleted? ldk

If one held the view that mahamudra and dzogchen have the same basis and the same fruit, that just the paths are distinct (but let's be honest overlapping- cf. Jling Lion's Roar on stillness movement noticing in Dzogchen as but one of kotis of examples), then does that just boil down to two distinct sets of texts, instructions, practices, practice communities?

Malcolm wrote:

One cannot practice Lamdre from a Dzogchen point of view. Why? The basis of purification is different. The basis of purification of Lamdre is the five aggregates. The basis of purification of Dzogchen is pristine consciousness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 17th, 2018 at 4:13 AM

Title: Re: Chakrasamvara Root Tantra

Content:

haha said:

Yes, you can read. Even before receiving, you can read it for academic purpose but you can't practice it.

Norwegian said:

This is wrong.

Nowhere in Buddhadharma is it explained that you can read for "academic purposes". The thing is, academics don't give a damn about what Buddhadharma says, because they use the excuse that they are academics, therefore they read, and do whatever they feel like in this context.

But if you've not received a relevant empowerment and transmission, it's a different story. Then you should wait until you do get the relevant empowerment and transmission.

Malcolm wrote:

This is not saying that the OP has permission necessarily, it is merely recognition of that fact that yes one can read it if one wants.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 17th, 2018 at 12:50 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong

Mipham

Content:

Crazywisdom said:
Caveat emptor.

Malcolm wrote:
Apparently, we need lemon laws. Anyway, empowerments granted by gurus with no realization have no force anyway.

Crazywisdom said:
I hear what you're saying, but it seems what matters is empowerment come from someone with instructions from the lineage.

"Homage to Vajrakumāra"

"Please bestow..."

"Firstly,... in general, power falls into four categories: the power that is attained even without empowerment is the best, comprising that power that is gained by the mind as a result of correctly realizing the view. Power is not attained, even without the ritual empowerment, when the guru has no lineal instructions and the disciple has no vows. Power attained through empowerment is gained by a disciple who has accepted vows from a guru who possesses lineal instructions. And one who has not received the empowerments, although the empowerments have been bestowed upon him, and has gained nothing, even though it has all been given, is like someone whose mind is completely black."

-Bolt of Lightning from the Blue, p. 303

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, as well as having done the retreats, etc. Nevertheless, giving samaya to students requires having an iron belly for dealing with broken samaya, and a guru who has no realization will just be ruined if they are not careful.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 17th, 2018 at 12:40 AM

Title: Re: What's the point of abusive gurus?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

The topic is loaded question. Like, why do you abuse your wife? There is room for a guru to make you feel bad, confuse you, impeach you...

Malcolm wrote:
The thing is, Nathan, is that there is a flaw in the way the narrative of guru devotion is being communicated, and that leads to serious abuse of students by putative teachers of Buddhadharma, and mistaken defenses of these teacher's actions. This has nothing to do with Mahāmudra, etc.

Crazywisdom said:

In that case, the tantras make things pretty clear: teacher w lineage gives ritual; if actual consort is not possible, visualize; go accumulate 10 mil mantras. Perhaps if there's a particularly advanced mantrin who's nut won't crack, some secret extreme measures have to go on w the client's consent.

Malcolm wrote:

The point of abuse comes when unrealized gurus lacking experience and realization take advantage of the "unconventional" behavior clause, and rather than acting with spontaneous conduct, act out of rampant defilements aggravated by their position over vulnerable students.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 17th, 2018 at 12:32 AM

Title: Re: What's the point of abusive gurus?

Content:

Unknown said:

We have to be clear about what we're going to do at the very beginning so that there will be no problems or confusion later.

Malcolm wrote:

The problem with this statement by Lama Zopa is that there is no certifying authority for gurus, and it is extremely hard for people, when they are beginners, to actually be able to tell who is a valid guru and who is a charlatan.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 17th, 2018 at 12:30 AM

Title: Re: What's the point of abusive gurus?

Content:

haha said:

Be careful at the beginning , because once the relationship has been established nothing can be changed unless the guru gives you permission to no longer regard him as your guru. Once the relationship has been formed there is no heavier karma than giving up the guru, renouncing the guru as an object of devotion. It is a much heavier negative karma than committing the five uninterrupted negative actions. Among all heavy karmas, this is the heaviest.

Malcolm wrote:

This is only valid in the case of a guru who has not betrayed the fundamental terms of the relationship, putting the benefit of students above their own. It does not apply at all to someone from whom one has never received any empowerments.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 17th, 2018 at 12:25 AM

Title: Re: What's the point of abusive gurus?

Content:

haha said:

But there are some statements in mahanana sutra which may be a factor to people could act in such manner. The Vimalakirti Sutra:

Then the Licchavi Vimalakirti said to the patriarch Mahakasyapa, "Reverend Mahakasyapa, the Maras who play the devil in the innumerable universes of the ten directions are all bodhisattvas dwelling in the inconceivable liberation, who are playing the devil in order to develop living beings through their skill in liberative technique.

Reverend Mahakasyapa, all the miserable beggars who come to the bodhisattvas of the innumerable universes of the ten directions to ask for a hand, a foot, an ear, a nose, some blood, muscles, bones, marrow, an eye, a torso, a head, a limb, a member, a throne, a kingdom, a country, a wife, a son, a daughter, a slave, a slave-girl, a horse, an elephant, a chariot, a cart, gold, silver, jewels, pearls, conches, crystal, coral, beryl, treasures, food, drink, elixirs, and clothes - these demanding beggars are usually bodhisattvas living in the inconceivable liberation who, through their skill in liberative technique, wish to test and thus demonstrate the firmness of the high resolve of the bodhisattvas. Why? Reverend Mahakasyapa, the bodhisattvas demonstrate that firmness by means of terrible austerities. Ordinary persons have no power to be thus demanding of bodhisattvas, unless they are granted the opportunity. They are not capable of killing and depriving in that manner without being freely given the chance.

Malcolm wrote:

These bodhisattvas are bodhisattvas on the stages, not ordinary people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 17th, 2018 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: What's the point of abusive gurus?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

The topic is loaded question. Like, why do you abuse your wife? There is room for a guru to make you feel bad, confuse you, impeach you...

Malcolm wrote:

The thing is, Nathan, is that there is flaw in the way the narrative of guru devotion is being communicated, and that leads to serious abuse of students by putative teachers of Buddhadharma, and mistaken defenses of these teacher's actions. This has nothing to do with Mahāmudra, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 16th, 2018 at 12:33 PM

Title: Re: What's the point of abusive gurus?

Content:

anjali said:

Ok. Lots of posts removed. Some of them may find there way into a split off topic (or not). I don't have the time to sift through them this evening so see if there is anything worth salvaging. For now, carry on with the discussion of what's the point of abusive gurus?

Malcolm wrote:

Not really worth saving....

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 16th, 2018 at 6:09 AM

Title: Re: Kyabgon Gongma Trichen Rinpoche is the Mind Emanation of Guru Rinpoche

Content:

fckw said:

In Tibet they don't seem to have a problem to have several Padmasambhavas around.

yan kong said:

Why would they? It's a perfectly orthodox opinion to hold.

fckw said:

You know, for any odd reason in Tibet tulkus are or were born in rich and influential families with much higher probability than in poor and not so influential ones. Now, perhaps tulkus generally just seem to have an unexplained preference to be born in rich and influential families? Or it's their fortunate karma?

Or then, perhaps the explanation is by far less romantic.

Hence: My point of having several Padmasambhavas around was not so much about the number of them, but rather about the point that there seems to be a certain level of, well, let's call it "arbitrariness" to it.

Malcolm wrote:

Tulkus are recognized in all kinds of families.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 16th, 2018 at 2:05 AM

Title: Re: Kyabgon Gongma Trichen Rinpoche is the Mind Emanation of Guru Rinpoche

Content:

Motova said:

Apparently so is Sogyal Lakar.

Malcolm wrote:

Recognized by his mother, but not really enthroned, or recognized by anyone else as such.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 15th, 2018 at 7:23 AM

Title: Re: What's the point of abusive gurus?

Content:

heart said:

I also want to say that I really disagree with the title of this thread, I would never post in such a thread.

Virgo said:

Magnus, you just did.

Kevin...

Malcolm wrote:

He is referring to the fact that while I was writing my post, the other thread was locked.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 15th, 2018 at 3:31 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong

Mipham

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Do what to remedy?

Malcolm wrote:

Lets start by not pretending that everything advanced in the name of Vajrayāna actually corresponds with Vajrayāna Dharma on any level. Lets also stop pretending, in the name of "samaya," that bestowing empowerments is a free pass to abuse students, sexually, financially, and emotionally.

Crazywisdom said:

Caveat emptor.

Malcolm wrote:

Apparently, we need lemon laws. Anyway, empowerments granted by gurus with no realization have no force anyway.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 15th, 2018 at 3:30 AM

Title: Re: What's the point of abusive gurus?

Content:

heart said:

I think we have to accept that these stories are a part of our Vajrayana heritage, all lineages included, and that they do have point.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is generally lost on people who might come to Vajrayāna teachings, but lose faith in the Vajrayāna before they have even begun. Vajrayāna, after all, is part of Mahāyāna, not an elite club for boys.

heart said:

Is it good, is it bad, it is very difficult to say. Somehow these stories don't make people loose faith in the Dharma because in that case neither you nor me would still be feeling that Dharma is the most important thing in our life as we in fact do, both of us, after all these years.

Malcolm wrote:

I do not think the Dharma is important because there are a few stories of outrageous behavior by Indian or Tibetan masters. I personally think western students focus on these examples too much because they are titillating and exotic.

heart said:

My example was just meant to show the strange lack of the most important point in Vajrayana, the direct introduction, seems to be missing in these discussion and I find that very odd. Because that is really the only reason to accept unusual behaviour from a master. If it isn't about recognising the natural state, then what is it about?

Malcolm wrote:

My point is that these stories are exceeding rare, and perhaps not the best examples for beginning students of Tibetan Buddhism. I think this is caused by the anachronistic nostalgia some people have for the good old days of Trungpa. But I think people are beginning to find out that it was not all good.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 15th, 2018 at 3:11 AM

Title: Re: What's the point of abusive gurus?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:
May the fat wallet lamas be the real deal.

Malcolm wrote:
Sadly, this is generally not the case.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, July 15th, 2018 at 3:10 AM
Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong
Mipham
Content:

Crazywisdom said:
I'm saying there's too much finger pointing going on here. It's enough to make this point.
After a while the scale tips towards disparaging samaya holders.

Malcolm wrote:
No, there is no finger pointing -- there is mere acknowledgement that we have a religious tradition which is in deep denial about harmful abuses which it allows to happen to children, women, and others.

Crazywisdom said:
Do what to remedy?

Malcolm wrote:
Lets start by not pretending that everything advanced in the name of Vajrayāna actually corresponds with Vajrayāna Dharma on any level. Lets also stop pretending, in the name of "samaya," that bestowing empowerments is a free pass to abuse students, sexually, financially, and emotionally.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, July 15th, 2018 at 3:04 AM
Title: Re: What's the point of abusive gurus?
Content:

Crazywisdom said:
Apparently, you like the heat. Vajrakilaya tantras have some pointed things to say about this.

Malcolm wrote:
My point is that if you do not like the conversation, you are not required to participate.

The Tibetan tradition is not perfect, it has problems, mostly having to do with abuse of power, money, sexism, and position, and exploiting the teachings to support worldly positions of power, to gain money, exploit women, and to preserve position. The ancient mahasiddhas had no interests in preserving power structures of Indian kings, Buddhist and otherwise, nor the worldly power of the monastic institutions, nor with maintaining patriarchal power over women. Instead, they abandoned all of this. It is for this reason I find it ironic that antinomian stories are being used to uphold the very institutions for which these ancient mahasiddhas had no use. Don't you find this odd?

Crazywisdom said:

Yes. It is odd. Vajrayana is odd.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a lot of fake Vajrayāna out there and lot of gurus using Vajrayāna to fatten their wallets.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 15th, 2018 at 3:02 AM

Title: Re: What's the point of abusive gurus?

Content:

heart said:

I am a little surprised at this discussion and several others recently. Vajrayana (including Dzogchen) is not really about finding a nice teacher that can teach you nice things, right? It is about recognising the natural state, decide on that and gain full realisation in the natural self liberation and that will leave nothing of our current like and dislikes, hopes and fears and so on. It will utterly destroy the unrealised people that we are.

Malcolm wrote:

The notion that there is a person to destroy is pernicious and false. This is annihilationism.

heart said:

Malcolm, I am not saying there is a "person to destroy" I am saying that the natural state is not our ordinary state of confusion. The distinction between mind and rigpa.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Do you think you have to destroy the mind to be in a state of knowledge of one's natural state? I hope not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 15th, 2018 at 1:53 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong

Mipham

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

I agree w HHST

Malcolm wrote:

Glad we cleared that up.

Crazywisdom said:

I'm saying there's too much finger pointing going on here. It's enough to make this point. After a while the scale tips towards disparaging samaya holders.

Malcolm wrote:

No, there is no finger pointing -- there is mere acknowledgement that we have a religious tradition which is in deep denial about harmful abuses which it allows to happen to children, women, and others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 15th, 2018 at 1:47 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong

Mipham

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Ok. Also keep in mind mantrins who hold samaya. Disparagers become the object of ritual slaying.

Malcolm wrote:

Better make sure you can stab your wooden kīla into a rock before you attempt such feats. Otherwise, you just harm yourself.

BTW, at Lamdre, recently, His Holiness Sakya Trizen 42 made it quite clear that the guru/disciple relationship was not one of total, slavish obedience. That if one's guru asked one to do things that contradicted the Dharma, one should disobey.

Crazywisdom said:

I agree w HHST

Malcolm wrote:

Glad we cleared that up.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 15th, 2018 at 1:43 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Ok. Also keep in mind mantrins who hold samaya. Disparagers become the object of ritual slaying.

Malcolm wrote:

Better make sure you can stab your wooden kila into a rock before you attempt such feats. Otherwise, you just harm yourself.

BTW, at Lamdre, recently, His Holiness Sakya Trizen 42 made it quite clear that the guru/disciple relationship was not one of total, slavish obedience. That if one's guru asked one to do things that contradicted the Dharma, one should disobey.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 15th, 2018 at 1:32 AM

Title: Re: What's the point of abusive gurus?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

There is way too much vajra guru slamming going on here. You all should know you're walking on thin ice.

Malcolm wrote:

Vajra gurus do not have the immunity of papal infallibility. If you do not like the heat...

Crazywisdom said:

Apparently, you like the heat. Vajrakilaya tantras have some pointed things to say about this.

Malcolm wrote:

My point is that if you do not like the conversation, you are not required to participate.

The Tibetan tradition is not perfect, it has problems, mostly having to do with abuse of power, money, sexism, and position, and exploiting the teachings to support worldly positions of power, to gain money, exploit women, and to preserve position. The ancient mahasiddhas had no interests in preserving power structures of Indian kings, Buddhist and otherwise, nor the worldly power of the monastic institutions, nor with maintaining patriarchal power over women. Instead, they abandoned all of this. It is for this reason I find it ironic that antinomian stories are being used to uphold the very institutions for which these ancient mahasiddhas had no use. Don't you find this odd?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 15th, 2018 at 1:19 AM

Title: Re: Karma, "soulmates" etc

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

So, I'm curious what anyone's take, including the actual Buddhist official outlook is on "soul mates", chance encounters, predestined relationships and all that. My understanding is that our karma determines just about everything, so when we meet people it's due to our karma? But what exactly does that mean?

Some new agey ideas are that people somehow agree before they are born they will meet again in this life in order to either complete something important or the proverbial "learn an important life/spiritual lesson."

And how does Tibetan astrology look at these things. I imagine considering how important it is, they must have a notion about this stuff.

Malcolm wrote:

In general, all relationships we have with each other are a result of karma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 15th, 2018 at 1:17 AM

Title: Re: What's the point of abusive gurus?

Content:

Quay said:

And when they do come up, as in another thread, and when they're about certain contemporary teachers, Chatral Rinpoche in this case,

Malcolm wrote:

In fact, I have a friend who is a close student of the late Chatral Rinpoche, who spent, over the years, many months at a time in close proximity to him. According to my friend, Chatral Rinpoche was never anything but unfailingly kind to students, and when westerners came to see him for teachings, he would kindly explain that unless they learned Tibetan, there was no point in him giving them teachings. This is not to say that there are no tales of Chatral Rinpoche expressing anger, for of course there are those stories as well. But my friends experience of him was one of nothing but complete kindness and care.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 15th, 2018 at 1:11 AM

Title: Re: What's the point of abusive gurus?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

There is way too much vajra guru slamming going on here. You all should know you're walking on thin ice.

Malcolm wrote:

Vajra gurus do not have the immunity of papal infallibility. If you do not like the heat...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 15th, 2018 at 12:16 AM

Title: Re: What's the point of abusive gurus?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Kagyu bashing garbage. Pls shut up.

Malcolm wrote:

No, Nathan, I am pointing out that 1) Tsang Nyon Herukas 15th century bio of Milarepa is just a religious novel, with little basis in fact. 2) That this narrative of Tilo/Naro being held up as the model of guru/disciple relationship is not healthy nor sound, since Naropa was already a highly advanced Vajrayāna practitioner. 3) The fact that Naropa did not achieve buddhahood in his lifetime because he disobeyed Tilopa over the issue of debate is preserved in the early Sakya tradition, 12th century, so only a century after Naropa passed. Tsang Nyon's bio of Naropa is also unreliable as history. 4) Naropa's tradition of Vajrayogini is one of the most important Sakya teachings, so no disrespect to either master is intended. 5) I will never shut up. You should have figured that out by now.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 14th, 2018 at 11:58 PM

Title: What's the point of abusive gurus?

Content:

heart said:

I am a little surprised at this discussion and several others recently. Vajrayana (including Dzogchen) is not really about finding a nice teacher that can teach you nice things, right? It is about recognising the natural state, decide on that and gain full realisation in the natural self liberation and that will leave nothing of our current like and dislikes, hopes and fears and so on. It will utterly destroy the unrealised people that we are.

Malcolm wrote:

The notion that there is a person to destroy is pernicious and false. This is annihilationism.

heart said:

I am pretty sure none of you think that Naropa let Tilopa abuse him to the point of death without Naropa getting some realisation, some awakening in the process. That would be very stupid on his part and I think we all know that Naropa wasn't stupid.

Malcolm wrote:

1) Naropa was already an advanced Vajrayāna practitioner when he sought out Tilopa.

2) Naropa did not realize buddhahood, because in the end, he disobeyed Tilopa over the issue of debating Hindus.

3) Tilopa did not actually personally abuse Naropa. He put Naropa in situations where Naropa acted out his egotism and got into trouble as a result.

4) These stories are comparatively rare. In fact, in the entire history of the Sakya tradition, filled with masters who attained the highest realizations, none of these stories exist. I cannot think of any similar stories in the Gelug, Jonang, or Nyingma traditions either. For some reason, however, the Kagyu tradition's take on guru devotion, using Tilopa/Naropa, Marpa/Mila narratives, is frankly unhealthy and leads students the wrong way. I also cannot think of any stories like this in the Kagyu tradition following Milarepa, in fact. So why do Tibetans and westerners constantly invoke the Tilopa/Naropa refrain? It makes no sense and merely promotes a sense that if you guru does not beat you, you are not making progress. Beyond this, there is the fact that Milarepa story is a complete fiction, as the research of Peter Alan Roberts clearly shows based on the earliest bios of Milarepa.

For example, let us take the case of Virupa. Virupa was a monk, Shri Dharmapāla, abbot of Nalanda, who practiced Vajrayogini for twenty years. He thought he was not getting anywhere. So one night he decided to quit and tossed his māla in the toilet. He had a dream of Nairatma, and she told him that he had erred, and that he needed to retrieve his māla from the latrine and wash it. You see, he had received empowerments of Cakrasamvara, but his master had died before Dharmapāla could receive intimate instructions related to experiences on the path. So he misinterpreted his experiences of heat on the path of application, and further, he was practicing the wrong yidam. So the next day, he encountered nirmanakāya Nairatma and her band of yoginīs, received the Hevajra empowerment and instructions, and achieved one bodhisattva bhumi after another for six consecutive nights, realizing the sixth bhumi. Now, Virupa was definitely a crazy yogi, everywhere he went he challenged people's expectations, but he did it with kindness, not anger— though when he reversed the Ganges, he might have flooded a hut or two, and when he stopped the sun in the sky, he might have damaged some crops. In his dealings with Dombhi Heruka and Kanha, it is recorded he showed them nothing but kindness. It is well known that among the 84 mahāsiddhas, when it came to manifesting magical powers, Virupa was the greatest. Finally, people became a little too freaked out by Virupa's displays of power, so Avalokiteshvara intervened and asked Virupa to stop. Of course Virupa assented, having converted thousands of Hindus to Buddhadharma and the practice of Avalokiteshvara in particular, and when he passed, it is recorded that he dissolved his physical body into a statue of Avalokiteshvara in South India. The point of all of this is that there is more than one model of guru/disciple relationships.

Another of the root downfalls is causing people to lose faith in the Dharma. You are going to have to explain to me exactly how it is that promulgation of these few narratives does Vajrayāna more good than harm, considering they are exceptions and not the rule.

And further, those of us who extol such stories as that of Tilo and Naro, think carefully, could you handle Tilopa as your guru? And if you answer honestly, you will admit there is no way you can handle this. And if you can't handle this, for what reason do you hold this up as an ideal model of a guru and student relationship?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 14th, 2018 at 2:55 PM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

pemachophel said:

We're talking as if the branding of Jetsun Shuksep by Lama Pema Gyatsho was a great transgression and a crime against females. Having been Jetsun Shuksep's student in my last life and one of Her present Tulku's shabji for almost 20 years in this life, I don't see it that way. Just with Marpa and Milarepa, I feel quite confident that Jetsun Shuksep would've said Lama Pema Gyatsho's acts were skillful means for the purification of Her bad karma. Did She suffer terribly? Of course She did. Besides branding, She was kicked out of Her Teacher's community, beaten, and told to walk naked around the Barkor. But She was willing to undergo these trials for the sake of Enlightenment. If, within Vajrayana, these were considered wrong or shameful acts on the part of Her Guru, they would not have been included in Her namthar. Her namthar is a record of Her Liberation and everything in it is meant as a description of what led to that Liberation. Would I like to be branded on my forehead? No way... but then I don't have Jetsun Shuksep's bravery and perseverance on the path to Liberation.

We moderns (with our liberal, humanist, relativist views) need to understand that the Vajrayana is an inherently dangerous path where all safety nets have been discarded. There are no limits to what a real Guru might do to insure the Liberation of Their student. In Alexandra David-Neel's Magic & Mystery in Tibet, there's a story where she comes across a Lama whose student is practicing chod every night and is so scared that David-Neel cautions the Lama that the student is on the verge of dying. The Lama says that the student has only to realize the inherent nature of his own mind and all fear will evaporate. The Teacher did not intervene in the student's nightly chod.

One of my own Teachers deliberately caused me immense mental and emotional pain. After years of suffering through this, She said that it was in order to insure that my mind stayed in the View every minute of every day. Harsh? Absolutely. But don't hang out with Wisdom Dakinis (a.k.a. Mamos) if you can't take the heat.

Chatral Rinpoche, one of this Teacher's Root Gurus, was also famous for doing outrageous things, making outrageous requests of students. There is a well-known story of Chatral Rinpoche shitting on a plate and asking a Western student who was requesting teachings on one taste to eat that shit. The student decided he didn't need those teachings after all. Another time, a Tibetan disciple of Chatral Rinpoche was near death. This disciple (or former disciple) had broken samaya which had never been confessed and repaired. Seeing the writing on the wall, he was now afraid he was going to Narm Hell. He invited Chatral Rinpoche out to a fashionable restaurant and bought Him dinner. He said how sorry he was and asked if Chatral Rinpoche would pardon him. Chatral Rinpoche told the man to offer absolutely every single one of his possessions to Him. If I remember correctly, the man ran out of the restaurant. I was told this story by Jetsun Shuksep's Tulku as an example of how serious Vajryana samaya is as well as how, as a Vajrayana Guru, Chatral Rinpoche "played for keeps." Today, everyone likes to say they were a student of Chatral Rinpoche. But the truth is that, for years, most people stayed away from Chatral Rinpoche out of fear.

Similar with Kunzang Dorje Rinpoche Whose bio was recently posted on this site in another thread. I personally know a well-known Western Dharma practitioner who asked Kunzang Dorje to become His student. Kunzang Dorje took out a piece of copper wire, straightened it out a bit, and told this Westerner to insert it up his penis. The Westerner decided he was needed elsewhere.

Then there's Kusum Lingpa Who gleefully shoplifted in drag while His students shuddered in a combination of embarrassment and fear of being immanently arrested. And that's only one example of this Teacher's outrageous, iconoclastic behavior.

My point being, if you (we, me) are not willing to risk everything on the Vajrayana path, maybe you/we/me should not follow this path. The pervasive contemporary attempt to water down the Vajrayana to make it palatable to us moderns and profitable to its purveyors risks, as one of my Dharma brothers recently wrote, turning it into "Tibetan Presbyterianism." The 84 Mahasiddhas of India did not tell Their Gurus what They could and couldn't do in terms of Their teaching methods.

Many people gravitate to Gurus who are always nice, always kind, always "compassionate" in our everyday version of that word. We pick Gurus who we like and are easy to get along with, Who we are comfortable with. For some of us, this is all we can handle. But when you're with a highly Realized Teacher, it can be very, very scary. To Them, this world is a fiction, a dream, an illusion, and Their job is to wake us up out of that fiction as quickly and completely as possible. For this kind of Teacher, nothing is "off the table" in terms of skillful means. When confronted with this sort of Teacher, you may not be able to take the heat.

I totally understand the problem with sexual abuse that is causing so much anguish and upsetment in our Tibetan Buddhist world. One of my own Teachers was well-known for having sex with His female students. So I have some first-hand experience of this situation. But I would caution we Tantrikas to be very careful in jumping to pervasive modernist conclusions about all this. It is very, very difficult to tell who is a true Guru and who is not, and our tightly cherished notions of right and wrong don't apply in the world of the Swift Path. That's what makes Vajrayana so damn dangerous. This path is not for everyone. The fact that it's being marketed to everyone without the proper warning labels on the side of the package is part of the degenerations of the Kali Yuga.

I'm sure I'm going to catch flak for this post, but, in my opinion and experience, this whole situation is not as easy and straightforward as many seem to think. For anyone thinking about entering the Vajrayana, all I can say is caveat emptor.

mandog said:

Wow. Thank you for sharing this, I think there is a lot of benefit from people hearing these stories. Do you believe that "peaceful" gurus necessarily offer a sort of slower path than "wrathful" gurus as a rule?

Malcolm wrote:

These stories help no one. Why? None of the people advocating this behavior would put up with it themselves for a second.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 14th, 2018 at 2:51 PM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

pemachophel said:

We're talking as if the branding of Jetsun Shuksep by Lama Pema Gyatsho was a great transgression and a crime against females. Having been Jetsun Shuksep's student in my last life and one of Her present Tulku's shabji for almost 20 years in this life, I don't see it that way. Just with Marpa and Milarepa, I feel quite confident that Jetsun Shuksep would've said Lama Pema Gyatsho's acts were skillful means for the purification of Her bad karma. Did She suffer terribly? Of course She did. Besides branding, She was kicked out of Her Teacher's community, beaten, and told to walk naked around the Barkor. But She was willing to undergo these trials for the sake of Enlightenment. If, within Vajrayana, these were considered wrong or shameful acts on the part of Her Guru, they would not have been included in Her namthar. Her namthar is a record of Her Liberation and everything in it is meant as a description of what led to that Liberation. Would I like to be branded on my forehead? No way... but then I don't have Jetsun Shuksep's bravery and perseverance on the path to Liberation.

We moderns (with our liberal, humanist, relativist views) need to understand that the Vajrayana is an inherently dangerous path where all safety nets have been discarded. There are no limits to what a real Guru might do to insure the Liberation of Their student. In Alexandra David-Neel's Magic & Mystery in Tibet, there's a story where she comes across a Lama whose student is practicing chod every night and is so scared that David-Neel cautions the Lama that the student is on the verge of dying. The Lama says that the student has only to realize the inherent nature of his own mind and all fear will evaporate. The Teacher did not intervene in the student's nightly chod.

One of my own Teachers deliberately caused me immense mental and emotional pain.

After years of suffering through this, She said that it was in order to insure that my mind stayed in the View every minute of every day. Harsh? Absolutely. But don't hang out with Wisdom Dakinis (a.k.a. Mamos) if you can't take the heat.

Chatral Rinpoche, one of this Teacher's Root Gurus, was also famous for doing outrageous things, making outrageous requests of students. There is a well-known story of Chatral Rinpoche sitting on a plate and asking a Western student who was requesting teachings on one taste to eat that shit. The student decided he didn't need those teachings after all. Another time, a Tibetan disciple of Chatral Rinpoche was near death. This disciple (or former disciple) had broken samaya which had never been confessed and repaired. Seeing the writing on the wall, he was now afraid he was going to Narm Hell. He invited Chatral Rinpoche out to a fashionable restaurant and bought Him dinner. He said how sorry he was and asked if Chatral Rinpoche would pardon him. Chatral Rinpoche told the man to offer absolutely every single one of his possessions to Him. If I remember correctly, the man ran out of the restaurant. I was told this story by Jetsun Shuksep's Tulku as an example of how serious Vajrayana samaya is as well as how, as a Vajrayana Guru, Chatral Rinpoche "played for keeps." Today, everyone likes to say they were a student of Chatral Rinpoche. But the truth is that, for years, most people stayed away from Chatral Rinpoche out of fear.

Similar with Kunzang Dorje Rinpoche Whose bio was recently posted on this site in another thread. I personally know a well-known Western Dharma practitioner who asked Kunzang Dorje to become His student. Kunzang Dorje took out a piece of copper wire, straightened it out a bit, and told this Westerner to insert it up his penis. The Westerner decided he was needed elsewhere.

Then there's Kusum Lingpa Who gleefully shoplifted in drag while His students shuddered in a combination of embarrassment and fear of being immanently arrested. And that's only one example of this Teacher's outrageous, iconoclastic behavior.

My point being, if you (we, me) are not willing to risk everything on the Vajrayana path, maybe you/we/me should not follow this path. The pervasive contemporary attempt to water down the Vajrayana to make it palatable to us moderns and profitable to its purveyors risks, as one of my Dharma brothers recently wrote, turning it into "Tibetan Presbyterianism." The 84 Mahasiddhas of India did not tell Their Gurus what They could and couldn't do in terms of Their teaching methods.

Many people gravitate to Gurus who are always nice, always kind, always "compassionate" in our everyday version of that word. We pick Gurus who we like and are easy to get along with, Who we are comfortable with. For some of us, this is all we can handle. But when you're with a highly Realized Teacher, it can be very, very scary. To Them, this world is a fiction, a dream, an illusion, and Their job is to wake us up out of that fiction as quickly and completely as possible. For this kind of Teacher, nothing is "off the table" in terms of skillful means. When confronted with this sort of Teacher, you may not be able to take the heat.

I totally understand the problem with sexual abuse that is causing so much anguish and upsetment in our Tibetan Buddhist world. One of my own Teachers was well-known for having sex with His female students. So I have some first-hand experience of this situation. But I would caution we Tantrikas to be very careful in jumping to pervasive modernist conclusions about all this. It is very, very difficult to tell who is a true Guru and who is not, and our tightly cherished notions of right and wrong don't apply in the world of the Swift Path. That's what makes Vajrayana so damn dangerous. This path is not for everyone. The fact that it's being marketed to everyone without the proper warning labels on the side of the package is part of the degenerations of the Kali Yuga.

I'm sure I'm going to catch flak for this post, but, in my opinion and experience, this whole situation is not as easy and straightforward as many seem to think. For anyone thinking about entering the Vajrayana, all I can say is caveat emptor.

Malcolm wrote:

Dude, you need help if you think branding people is acceptable on any level.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 14th, 2018 at 2:46 PM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It was. If you don't see that, you are not fit to call yourself a lama, much less teach Dharma to anyone.

pemachophel said:

We're talking as if the branding of Jetsun Shuksep by Lama Pema Gyatsho was a great transgression and a crime against females. Having been Jetsun Shuksep's student in my last life and one of Her present Tulku's shabji for almost 20 years in this life, I don't see it that way. Just with Marpa and Milarepa, I feel quite confident that Jetsun Shuksep would've said Lama Pema Gyatsho's acts were skillful means for the purification of Her bad karma. Did She suffer terribly? Of course She did. Besides branding, She was kicked out of Her Teacher's community, beaten, and told to walk naked around the Barkor. But She was willing to undergo these trials for the sake of Enlightenment. If, within Vajrayana, these were considered wrong or shameful acts on the part of Her Guru, they would not have been included in Her namthar. Her namthar is a record of Her Liberation and everything in it is meant as a description of what led to that Liberation. Would I like to be branded on my forehead? No way... but then I don't have Jetsun Shuksep's bravery and perseverance on the path to Liberation.

We moderns (with our liberal, humanist, relativist views) need to understand that the Vajrayana is an inherently dangerous path where all safety nets have been discarded. There are no limits to what a real Guru might do to insure the Liberation of Their student. In Alexandra David-Neel's Magic & Mystery in Tibet, there's a story where she comes across a Lama whose student is practicing chod every night and is so scared that David-

Neel cautions the Lama that the student is on the verge of dying. The Lama says that the student has only to realize the inherent nature of his own mind and all fear will evaporate. The Teacher did not intervene in the student's nightly chod.

One of my own Teachers deliberately caused me immense mental and emotional pain. After years of suffering through this, She said that it was in order to insure that my mind stayed in the View every minute of every day. Harsh? Absolutely. But don't hang out with Wisdom Dakinis (a.k.a. Mamos) if you can't take the heat.

Chatral Rinpoche, one of this Teacher's Root Gurus, was also famous for doing outrageous things, making outrageous requests of students. There is a well-known story of Chatral Rinpoche sitting on a plate and asking a Western student who was requesting teachings on one taste to eat that shit. The student decided he didn't need those teachings after all. Another time, a Tibetan disciple of Chatral Rinpoche was near death. This disciple (or former disciple) had broken samaya which had never been confessed and repaired. Seeing the writing on the wall, he was now afraid he was going to Narayana Hell. He invited Chatral Rinpoche out to a fashionable restaurant and bought Him dinner. He said how sorry he was and asked if Chatral Rinpoche would pardon him. Chatral Rinpoche told the man to offer absolutely every single one of his possessions to Him. If I remember correctly, the man ran out of the restaurant. I was told this story by Jetsun Shuksep's Tulku as an example of how serious Vajrayana samaya is as well as how, as a Vajrayana Guru, Chatral Rinpoche "played for keeps." Today, everyone likes to say they were a student of Chatral Rinpoche. But the truth is that, for years, most people stayed away from Chatral Rinpoche out of fear.

Similar with Kunzang Dorje Rinpoche Whose bio was recently posted on this site in another thread. I personally know a well-known Western Dharma practitioner who asked Kunzang Dorje to become His student. Kunzang Dorje took out a piece of copper wire, straightened it out a bit, and told this Westerner to insert it up his penis. The Westerner decided he was needed elsewhere.

Then there's Kusum Lingpa Who gleefully shoplifted in drag while His students shuddered in a combination of embarrassment and fear of being immanently arrested. And that's only one example of this Teacher's outrageous, iconoclastic behavior.

My point being, if you (we, me) are not willing to risk everything on the Vajrayana path, maybe you/we/me should not follow this path. The pervasive contemporary attempt to water down the Vajrayana to make it palatable to us moderns and profitable to its purveyors risks, as one of my Dharma brothers recently wrote, turning it into "Tibetan Presbyterianism." The 84 Mahasiddhas of India did not tell Their Gurus what They could and couldn't do in terms of Their teaching methods.

Many people gravitate to Gurus who are always nice, always kind, always "compassionate" in our everyday version of that word. We pick Gurus who we like and are easy to get along with, Who we are comfortable with. For some of us, this is all we can handle. But when you're with a highly Realized Teacher, it can be very, very scary. To Them, this world is a fiction, a dream, an illusion, and Their job is to wake us up out of that fiction as quickly and completely as possible. For this kind of Teacher, nothing is "off the table" in terms of skillful means. When confronted with this sort of Teacher, you may not be able to take the heat.

I totally understand the problem with sexual abuse that is causing so much anguish and upsetment in our Tibetan Buddhist world. One of my own Teachers was well-known for having sex with His female students. So I have some first-hand experience of this situation. But I would caution we Tantrikas to be very careful in jumping to pervasive modernist conclusions about all this. It is very, very difficult to tell who is a true Guru and who is not, and our tightly cherished notions of right and wrong don't apply in the world of the Swift Path. That's what makes Vajrayana so damn dangerous. This path is not for everyone. The fact that it's being marketed to everyone without the proper warning labels on the side of the package is part of the degenerations of the Kali Yuga.

I'm sure I'm going to catch flak for this post, but, in my opinion and experience, this whole situation is not as easy and straightforward as many seem to think. For anyone thinking about entering the Vajrayana, all I can say is caveat emptor.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 14th, 2018 at 7:42 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

BTW, what was the name of the master who branded Shuksep Lochen Chönyi Zangmo?

ratna said:

Pema Gyatso.

dzogchungpa said:

Does the autobiography say whether he ever branded ever any of his male students?

Malcolm wrote:

Would this make his actions any less cruel and abusive to this woman? Or are you merely trying to show that cruel and abusive behavior was a norm for Tibetans and therefore, we should not be concerned about Osel Mukpo's sexual assaults on woman since he is Tibetan?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 14th, 2018 at 3:33 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, at least SMR doesn't seem to have branded anyone.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that makes his growing record of sexual assaults so much more palatable. Then of course, there are the invisible brands of bearing the scars of being victims of sexual assault and child abuse by powerful males in an organization that is more interested in protecting their reputation than the spiritual goals of their female aspirants.

dzogchungpa said:

Easy, big guy. Is the record actually growing? Winn mentioned three incidents in her report, and I haven't heard of any new ones although I am not following very closely.

Malcolm wrote:

Pay closer attention, the Chilean women also told her story and more women have contacted the Boulder lawyer with further allegations which are under review.

dzogchungpa said:

BTW, what was the name of the master who branded Shuksep Lochen Chönyi Zangmo?

Malcolm wrote:

That is a question for Sten, he read the autobiography in question.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 14th, 2018 at 2:37 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, at least SMR doesn't seem to have branded anyone.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that makes his growing record of sexual assaults so much more palatable. Then of course, there are the invisible brands of bearing the scars of being victims of sexual assault and child abuse by powerful males in an organization that is more interested in protecting their reputation than the spiritual goals of their female aspirants.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 14th, 2018 at 2:12 AM

Title: Re: How to End Samaya?

Content:

AlexanderS said:

What do you do then if you like me have become psychically and mentally unwell to practice?

Malcolm wrote:
You get a pass.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 14th, 2018 at 12:15 AM

Title: Re: Big messages to deplorables ???

Content:

Rick said:

Ah yes, this editorial has the final quote I was searching for, thanks for finding it for me:

"Any student of history knows that it is moments like this summit that set in motion chains of events that are difficult to stop. The democratic alliance that has been the bedrock of the American-led liberal world order is unraveling. At some point, and probably sooner than we expect, the global peace that that alliance and that order undergirded will unravel, too. Despite our human desire to hope for the best, things will not be okay. The world crisis is upon us. "

Is this alarmist ... or soberly realistic?

Malcolm wrote:
Realistic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 13th, 2018 at 1:10 PM

Title: Re: How to End Samaya?

Content:

PeterC said:

I can't find the reference - if someone knows it please let me know - but there is an text talking about this that says that that if the guru breaches samaya then there's no way of mending it, both guru and disciple are going to vajra hell.

It is possible, however, to decide that the guru was unqualified and therefore samaya never existed in the first place. In some of the recent scandals that's a completely reasonable conclusion to reach. If that happens then - to use an analogy - it's an annulment rather than a divorce.

If "leaving" your guru means you no longer contact or seek teachings from them, that doesn't have to entail any breach of samaya, provided you maintain pure perception of them, and avoid negative speech and actions with respect to them.

Malcolm wrote:
Rigpa rangshar tantra makes this statement.

PeterC said:

Thanks Malcolm. It states that there's no means of expiation, and both will take rebirth in vajra hell, not just the guru?

Malcolm wrote:

It states that disciples can always purify their samaya, but when a guru breaks samaya, it is irreparable. Thus, I take this to mean that disciples always have the option of finding another guru. I also take this to mean that gurus who break their samaya have no remorse.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 13th, 2018 at 12:12 PM

Title: Re: How to End Samaya?

Content:

PeterC said:

I can't find the reference - if someone knows it please let me know - but there is a text talking about this that says that if the guru breaches samaya then there's no way of mending it, both guru and disciple are going to vajra hell.

It is possible, however, to decide that the guru was unqualified and therefore samaya never existed in the first place. In some of the recent scandals that's a completely reasonable conclusion to reach. If that happens then - to use an analogy - it's an annulment rather than a divorce.

If "leaving" your guru means you no longer contact or seek teachings from them, that doesn't have to entail any breach of samaya, provided you maintain pure perception of them, and avoid negative speech and actions with respect to them.

Malcolm wrote:

Rigpa rangshar tantra makes this statement.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 13th, 2018 at 7:52 AM

Title: Re: Big messages to deplorables ???

Content:

Rick said:

Frickin' homo sapiens! Enlightenment is wasted on 'em!

Let's widen the field a bit: What % of Trump supporters are striving to do the right thing for the entire world rather than just America? And what % care about doing what's right for the entire country rather than just their personal tribes?

Malcolm wrote:

0%

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 12th, 2018 at 10:12 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

Sonam Wangchug said:

So, you are insinuating based on this story that it was CTR, as if there aren't any other alcoholic lama's in Asia (there are plenty.)

That's quite irresponsible to do.

dzogchungpa said:

Now, now, SW, let's not disturb Josef's mind with any inconvenient facts.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, after all, it is much more important to preserve the status quo.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 12th, 2018 at 9:02 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

chimechodra said:

The pronouns here are very confusing, is this Chatral Rinpoche telling attendants to remove a photo of CTR/SMR? Or are we talking about the Australian lama? I'm assuming the former.

Josef said:

He's definitely telling them to get the photos out of his room.

Quay said:

it is probably worth noting that neither Chatral Rinpoche nor any of his heart sons/daughters endorsed this book, Compassionate Action. Indeed several have stated that Rinpoche left no written words.

Malcolm wrote:

No, he did, published under pseudonyms.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 12th, 2018 at 9:01 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The Chilean woman's story:

http://andreamwinn.com/project_sunshine/Memorandum_II_on_Sexual_Misconduct.pdf

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 12th, 2018 at 2:29 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Hiltzik was a Miramax employee for nearly a decade.

dzogchungpa said:

Yes. So what?

Malcolm wrote:

He knew what HW was up to.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 12th, 2018 at 1:18 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

smcj said:

I read it, the law firm is based in Halifax, Olive Branch is not.

Shambhala is in Halifax. The sentence is badly written. In its letter to the Shambhala community, the council also announced that it has hired a law firm in Halifax, Nova Scotia, the group's international headquarters, to do an independent investigation of the allegations against Sakyong Mipham, which were made most prominently in a report last week from Buddhist Project Sunshine.

Also, what is the connection with Weinstein?

None that I know of.

dzogchungpa said:

OK, I looked into it. Apparently the law firm is Wickwire Holm and the PR firm is Hiltzik Strategies. It should be noted that the connection between Hiltzik and Weinstein was before 2008.

See e.g.: <https://thinkprogress.org/leadership-of-buddhist-organization-steps-down-amid-sexual-misconduct-scandal-d2e979aadc3b/> and https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Matthew_Hiltzik

Malcolm wrote:

Hiltzik was a Miramax employee for nearly a decade.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 11th, 2018 at 11:11 PM

Title: Re: Disagreeing with Guru

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I never stated such a thing. The traditional recommendation is to observe a guru for 12 years before taking empowerments.

Grigoris said:

12 years. Thank you. I was not sure if I remembered correctly. Once one has taken empowerment, that person is one's guru whether one has studied then for 12 years or one day.

I have had teachers that came closer to fulfilling the role of the guru than quite a few of those that gave me empowerments (ie turned up one time, gave some empowerments and vanished).

Malcolm wrote:

Nevertheless, the definition of a guru is very precise in Vajryana. The guru is one from whom empowerment and samaya is received.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 11th, 2018 at 8:26 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Well, he is welcome to say what he wants. It would not exactly be earth shattering news that 1) an alcohol problem was related to a story of abuse, or 2) that someone with such a problem hid it, or tried to hide from those closest to him.

Mind you, that does not preclude the possibility that he -has- pretty much quit drinking, I just wouldn't be that credulous about it, personally.

dzogchungpa said:

Hey, not much surprises me, I just like to get the facts straight. Everyone seems to be taking it as a given that he currently has a drinking problem, so I'm trying to find out what the basis for this assumption is.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Likely his report of past use combined with the current situation. Like I said, he could just be abusive too, but when a guy who has had trouble with alcohol in the past is the center of an abuse scandal..well, it'd almost be surprising if indeed he -had- successfully quit or significantly cut down.

Additionally, an alcoholic" does not need to drink heavily to have a problem, some people have major problems (e.g. abusive/dangerous/destructive behavior etc.) without drinking that much. It's the loss of control, and the use despite persistent negative consequences that defines it, not simply how much someone drinks.

Malcolm wrote:

The there is the gene.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 11th, 2018 at 7:09 AM

Title: Re: Disagreeing with Guru

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I was responding to your assertion that you do not have a guru.

Grigoris said:

Would it be more suitable for me to assert that I do not feel like I have a guru? Or maybe to assert that for me merely satisfying some spiritual bureaucratic conditions is not enough to make me feel like a teacher is my guru? Would that make you feel better? Also your assertion that it takes 15 years for someone to become your guru is just incorrect.

I seem to remember you saying it somewhere. So how many years is it?

Malcolm wrote:

I never stated such a thing. The traditional recommendation is to observe a guru for 12 years before taking empowerments. Once one has taken empowerment, that person is one's guru whether one has studied then for 12 years or one day.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 11th, 2018 at 7:06 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Is it actually clear that he still has a problem with alcohol?

Malcolm wrote:

Seems pretty clear to several women in his community.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 11th, 2018 at 4:06 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

A Shambhala person in Boulder immolated himself over this crisis. Hard to understand, very sad.

Adamantine said:

This sounds awful.

Link to the report, source?

Doesn't seem like something that wouldn't have any mention on news or social media yet there's no trace...

Malcolm wrote:

From a fellow named Stephen Futral:

5:30pm this Thursday in Crestone we will have the Sukhavati at the Baca Grant Shrine room, not sure of time in Boulder...

I'm hearing a Sukhavati is shaping up for this Thursday in both Boulder and Crestone, will post when time, etc is firmed up!

From Judy Sachs Judy Sachs Sullivan

I got a message and photo to Ponlop Rinpoche and he did prayers for him. Tonight we will have tonglen session with the many old Vajradhatu members here and even some who did not know him. Giovanina is leading this session

Sensitivity warning:

This post is about suicide...

My heart is broken and my condolences go out to all that knew Bill, his family his followers, folks on his blog and his friends and his Sangha.

Between the recent passing of our friends Kunga Dawa and more recently Zanto aka Terry Mason we are being reduced to the basic common denominator: being Alone. And now to think my dear poet friend and heart connection has taken his life as some sacrifice of self-immolation amidst the utter disheartening news of our Shambhala Sangha rife with sexual misconduct and the stepping down of the Sakyong Mipham Rinpoche and all of the Kalapa Council.

Our world is changing, our lives are changing but the teachings of the Buddha, the Dharma and the Sangha, our three jewels will still shine through because the recipe has been handed down in our lineage and the bread has been baked fresh as the Vidyadhara used to say.

May Karuna and Prajna continue to lead us and uplift us in these dark dark moments.
'Although I live in the slime and muck of the dark age, I still aspire to see your face.
Although I live in the thick black fog of materialism, I still aspire to see your face.'

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 11th, 2018 at 3:42 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

smcj said:

A Shambhala person in Boulder immolated himself over this crisis. Hard to understand, very sad.

OMG. You sure? No hits from Google yet.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, quite sure.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 11th, 2018 at 3:41 AM

Title: Re: Disagreeing with Guru

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Thus means you think you have no samaya. But if you have samaya, you have a guru since former is dependent on the latter.

Grigoris said:

I have samaya, definitely, that is (one reason) why I continue to do some of the practices that were given to me.

Having said that (as I said in another thread): Practicing guru yoga one maintains their samaya with all their guru, since their nature is the same.

Practicing one Yidam...

Practicing...

Also it seems that you overlooked this statement that I made: "If you keep the links with the Dharma that they shared with you..."

Malcolm wrote:

I was responding to your assertion that you do not have a guru. Also your assertion that it takes 15 years for someone to become your guru is just incorrect.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 11th, 2018 at 3:11 AM

Title: Re: Disagreeing with Guru

Content:

Tenma said:

How was your search for your guru and did you manage to do so?

Grigoris said:

Who said I have a guru?

Crazywisdom said:

I thought the 50 verses on guru devotion spoke of examining for five years.

Grigoris said:

I remember 15 years.

I don't think 5 years is enough.

For example: I was following one teacher (my Refuge lama) for about 7 years. Then one day I asked if he could impart an empowerment (he is authorised to) and he started to say some stuff about not wanting to form those sorts of links with students, etc... Why would I want a teacher that is not willing to risk seriously devoting themselves to their students? I had to travel to the other side of Greece for almost a decade to take teachings from him, I invited him and put in up in my home, etc... Not only me, but other people in the group he was teaching to. So it seemed kind of weird to me that he was not willing to put in the effort...

So I started looking for another teacher.

I am with my current teacher 3 years now and am in no rush to take him as my guru yet, since I do not think it is long enough. I am willing to wait another 7+ years before completely devoting myself, I prefer this to rushing in and regretting the decision and then racking myself with guilt, or pointing fingers, as seems to be the fashion right now.

Malcolm wrote:

Thus means you think you have no samaya. But if you have samaya, you have a guru since former is dependent on the latter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 11th, 2018 at 3:05 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

A Shambhala person in Boulder immolated himself over this crisis. Hard to understand, very sad.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 11th, 2018 at 3:00 AM

Title: Re: "You need to know Tibetan to achieve enlightenment in this life"

Content:

Mantrik said:

The example raises an interesting point.

Is accuracy defined 'as in the original Sanskrit' or 'as the Tibetan master gives it'?

(I have been using exactly what was transmitted, whether for example 'Benza, Banza, or even Benzra'.)

Malcolm wrote:

Sapan indicates that mantras should be pronounced in accordance with Sanskrit. Pronunciations like bajra/bazra have Indic justifications, for example these pronunciations reflect Kashmiri lineages. Sapan notes such Indic regional variations. Personally I follow Sapan on this point, with certain exceptions where Tibetan or Apabramsa words are part of the mantra.

Benza, etc., are wrong and reflect Tibetan pronunciations of the Tibetan vowel 'a' before consonants.

Mantrik said:

Thanks. Is it that the Tibetan text is accurate in reflecting the Sanskrit but is sometimes mispronounced?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, in general Tibetan texts represent Sanskrit perfectly fine. The issue is that it has been many centuries since Tibetans made serious study of Sanskrit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 11th, 2018 at 12:16 AM

Title: Re: "You need to know Tibetan to achieve enlightenment in this life"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Sapan's actual view is that mantras pronounced incorrectly may yield some result, but that it takes far longer than mantras pronounced with accuracy.

This story should not be regarded as a canonical justification.

haha said:

Here is a story:

Mantrik said:

The example raises an interesting point.

Is accuracy defined 'as in the original Sanskrit' or 'as the Tibetan master gives it'?

(I have been using exactly what was transmitted, whether for example 'Benza, Banza, or even Benzra'.)

Malcolm wrote:

Sapan indicates that mantras should be pronounced in accordance with Sanskrit. Pronunciations like bajra/bazra have Indic justifications, for example these pronunciations reflect Kashmiri lineages. Sapan notes such Indic regional variations. Personally I follow Sapan on this point, with certain exceptions where Tibetan or Apabramsa words are part of the mantra.

Benza, etc., are wrong and reflect Tibetan pronunciations of the Tibetan vowel 'a' before consonants.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 10th, 2018 at 11:13 PM

Title: Re: "You need to know Tibetan to achieve enlightenment in this life"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Sapan's actual view is that mantras pronounced incorrectly may yield some result, but that it takes far longer than mantras pronounced with accuracy.

This story should not be regarded as a canonical justification.

haha said:

Here is a story:

(As it is vol. 1 and 2 Tulku Urgen Rinpoche)

Sakya Pandita said: "Oh, no! That's the wrong mantra; it's supposed to begin with OM BENZA That's where the real meaning lies, in the words: 'Vajra Kilaya with consort, the Ten Sons and all the Eaters and Slayers.' They are contained within the sounds of the mantra." The meditator replied: "No, no, the words are not as important as the state of mind. Pure mind is more important than pure sound. I said CHILI CHILAYA in the past and that's what I will continue to say in the future. No doubt about that! You, on the other hand, will need my phurba."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 10th, 2018 at 1:18 PM

Title: Re: "You need to know Tibetan to achieve enlightenment in this life"

Content:

conebeckham said:

Well, as a traditionalist, until a highly realized being translates into English from Tibetan, I think there is blessing in the Tibetan language. (If you feel there are English translations that bear the same blessing, or translations into any other language, that's fine.....keep on practicing them and we'll see if they bear fruit!). The first Tibetans practiced in other languages before translating, I believe...

Johnny Dangerous said:

Just my personal take, but I suspect that the blessing of singing in Tibetan is as much about the melody and sonic quality than the conceptual linguistic stuff, though maybe they are connected.

practitioner said:

One reason I love chanting sadanas in Tibetan is because it is poetry. I often find English translations clunky and awkward in comparison.

When practicing alone however, I will recite the English translation as well until I become very familiar with a practice as I don't read Tibetan.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not poetry. It is metered lines which do not in any sense resemble what we think of as poetry.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 10th, 2018 at 10:21 AM

Title: Re: Lama Pema Dorje

Content:

pemachophel said:

Kye ma! Kye hu!

The Dujom ngakpa, Lama Pema Dorje, entered parinirvana this morning.

A great loss to the Dudjom lineage as well as to all Nyingmapa.

Lama Pema Dorje was Lama Dawa Chodrak's older brother.

mandog said:

Who are the most experienced masters of the Tersar left in the West? It seems like all of the old Dudjom lamas teaching in the United States have passed away.

Malcolm wrote:
HH Dudjom Yangsi.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 10th, 2018 at 4:49 AM

Title: Re: "You need to know Tibetan to achieve enlightenment in this life"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you are only going to practice, no, it is not necessary. If you are going to be teacher, however, then some command Of Tibetan is necessary.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 9th, 2018 at 12:45 AM

Title: Re: Strategies for Keeping Practice in the West

Content:

Grigoris said:

If, when one is introduced to the nature of mind they "get it" and can "maintain it", of what value is formal practice?

Granted this is a HUGE "if".

Malcolm wrote:

Nature of mind is basis for practice, not a path.

florin said:

When the practitioner lives in the knowledge of the primordial state the base path and fruit are identical.

Malcolm wrote:

That is a big "when."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 8th, 2018 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: Strategies for Keeping Practice in the West

Content:

Aryjna said:

The view that if you practice during daily life you do not need many hours of formal practice as well. It goes without saying that you should always be practicing during other activities.

Grigoris said:

If, when one is introduced to the nature of mind they "get it" and can "maintain it", of what value is formal practice?

Granted this is a HUGE "if".

Malcolm wrote:

Nature of mind is basis for practice, not a path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 8th, 2018 at 10:02 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

People are free to impose whatever limitations upon themselves they like.

smcj said:

You do not need to ask permission to take teachings from other lamas. You do not need approval to leave their company and move on either.

Terma said:

This may be your own view, but I don't think this is always the best way to go. If you are fortunate enough to find a teacher that you have a good degree of faith and trust in, then I think that this is a must in terms of the relationship one has developed thus far with that particular teacher. As you also said, it is a matter of respect but much more than that. If you truly trust them then although you may not like the answer they give, you have to have trust that they have your best interest at heart. Of course, this is where it can get tricky but time and time again we have been advised to investigate those teachers with whom we wish to enter such a relationship with.

In my case, I did exactly such a thing. I explained to my guru that I felt a close connection to a particular cycle from a different lineage, that I wished to receive the appropriate empowerments and transmissions, and from whom. In my case he did agree and gave me his blessing. I couldn't imagine approaching the situation any other way to be honest.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 7th, 2018 at 12:37 PM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

Sādhaka said:

It's over boyos.

Malcolm wrote:

What's over is that men in positions of power in Buddhist organizations will need to use more care in their treatment of women. Why anyone thinks this a negative thing is beyond me, especially since treating women well is in fact a samaya. Get a clue, boyos.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 7th, 2018 at 8:06 AM

Title: Re: Western Monastic - reasons why she left

Content:

buddhagirl said:

Given the mindset required for day-trading, it doesn't seem very compatible with Dharma practice. Actual jobs where you leave home & interact with other humans require positive attitudes & behaviours such as teamwork, a pleasant demeanour, being responsive & non-judgemental when dealing with clients/customers particularly when you're advocating on their behalf.

Whereas daytrading seems based on avarice, pure & simple - even if such endeavours are conducted in the service of one's Dharma practice, surely the seeds of desiring to accumulate wealth would be prominent in one's daily motivation.

It's always amused and horrified me how Westerners, particularly Americans, manage to merge the Dharma into their capitalist worldview. Looking at you, Shambhala and Rigpa!

Roughly a handful of years ago the Dalai Lama reiterated his support for communism as a political system that distributes abundance in a more equitable fashion - people at the Vajradhatu Sun seemed bewildered at this and wrote an editorial, if memory serves, along the lines of "what on earth is the Dalai Lama talking about, we don't get it, do you?"

Malcolm wrote:

The problem with centrally planned economies, is well, centralized planning. Markets can be regulated but not planned.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 6th, 2018 at 2:40 AM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

greenvajrapani said:

I have no problem with staying with one teacher and one teacher only.

We have heard the tales of Milarepa and his Guru Devotion.

Guru devotion and I mean true Guru devotion is the very heart of Vajrayana.

Malcolm wrote:
Mila had eleven gurus.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, July 6th, 2018 at 12:14 AM
Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham
Content:
chimechodra said:

From how it was explained to me, apparently some years back Osel Mukpo was frustrated at how lots of older Trungpa students would have several teachers and would come to the Scorpion Seal Garchens but then end up doing their own thing or not engaging with his teachings enough. It then seems like he asked folks to prioritize him as a teacher if they were coming to the retreats, and then they highly discourage or outright forbid newer students from having other teachers. I wonder what would happen to someone who already has multiple teachers and wants to engage with Shambhala's restricted teachings. In either case, it doesn't seem like this is a totally followed by everybody, as I know that some folks like Ethan Nichtern have other teachers (or seem to at least), but it's definitely a thing.

I remember when I mentioned I was interested in Namkhai Norbu Rinpoche to my meditation instructor at the time, I got severe backlash and the whole spiel about needing to commit to one path wholeheartedly. There was this idea that if you have anything more than one teacher, you're trying to walk two paths simultaneously, that you're basically dilly-dallying and not committing and that your practice will never go anywhere. While I can understand the argument of lacking focus, it felt really negative and unnecessary at the time and that's more or less when my split really started to crystallize.

Malcolm wrote:
The meditation instructor business in Shambhala is really problematical. Lots of abuse and power trips there going back decades.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, July 6th, 2018 at 12:11 AM
Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham
Content:

Mr. G said:
What? Yes, it's incredibly weird and nonsensical that Shambhala makes their students vow not to have any other teachers.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a strategy of containment and damage control.

Mr. G said:

Do you think that strategy was specifically meant to contain sex scandals/abuse allegations, or just damage control as a whole for any potential scandal that could come up?

Malcolm wrote:

Damage control as a whole.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 5th, 2018 at 11:36 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra and Dzogchen

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Let's avoid confusion. You can learn some stuff before taking teachings. For example, let's say you want to know Geluk. Then you can learn you will learn step by step from sutra, logic, etc., and then come to receive initiation in like Guhyasamaja and practice that step by step. Or you can go to a Kagyu lama and learn they are giving pith instructions or some dakini initiation. Or to a Dzogchen teacher who is giving introductions according to intimate instructions. You can google what these are about and prepare. Then one should consider carefully where you are and how you are, what you are ready to do.

Malcolm wrote:

The teacher is more important than the teaching, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 5th, 2018 at 11:35 PM

Title: Re: Jetsunma Tenzin Palmo & Lama Tsultrim Allione: Shambhala's Sakyong Mipham

Content:

Mr. G said:

What? Yes, it's incredibly weird and nonsensical that Shambhala makes their students vow not to have any other teachers.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a strategy of containment and damage control.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 5th, 2018 at 11:34 PM

Title: Re: Best Masters of Mahamudra

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

I would urge you find a Mahamudra/Great Perfection Master who teaches according to actual tantras, like Hevajra. A lot of folks fancy themselves ready to skip stages and go straight to pith instructions, but I have it on good authority that this is a mistake.

Malcolm wrote:

And for that, on this globe today, there is no one better than HH Sakya Trichen for the former and ChNN for the latter. This is not to say that there aren't many other excellent teachers, but these two are supreme. See them while you still can.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 5th, 2018 at 4:29 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra and Dzogchen

Content:

Sennin said:

I think this is a good idea, to generally know what practice/instructions one will be committing to.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course, in Vajrayana you can't know until you take teachings.

Crazywisdom said:

Take them all. It can help to have an idea what you want. For example, in my case gaining access to original Indian tantric practice was important. So I went after the oldest Unbroken lineages.

Malcolm wrote:

Didn't know you were a Sakyapa.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 5th, 2018 at 2:09 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra and Dzogchen

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Before connecting w a teacher research all the lineages. Research their primary methods of instruction. Research their methods of practice. Then, follow your heart. Your heart will become inspired, awed and transfixed somehow. Find that guru and give it your all. You can practice Mahamudra and/or Mahasandhi. These areas are deep and vast. They are amazing.

Sennin said:

I think this is a good idea, to generally know what practice/instructions one will be committing to.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course, in Vajrayana you can't know until you take teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 9:40 PM

Title: Re: Sakya Trichen's Views?

Content:

greenvajrapani said:

I have been told by my Lama that many people that attend his empowerments will not follow up with the proper practice.

He allows them to attend and considers that they are there for a "Blessing" not an "Empowerment".

Malcolm wrote:

That very Much depends on the empowerment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 11:25 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

PeterC said:

Recall Milarepa's comment on the fox and the lion. He was referring there to living the life of a householder - and saying that he wasn't up to it.

dzogchungpa said:

Um, Milarepa may not have been "up to it" but many contemporary well respected lamas seem to be, ChNN for example, so I guess they all have greater capacity than him, right?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, perhaps. Not everyone is under the apprehension that Mila achieved complete Buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 9:30 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

PeterC said:

You believe that his actions do not constitute sexual abuse and potentially attempted rape?

Snowbear said:

Mipham's case is not rape. It is sexual misconduct.

Malcolm wrote:

In fact, the possibility that he may have raped a women in Chile was brought up, but for lack of evidence, other than rumors in Shambhala that he was "bad" in Chile, there is no other proof. Rumors do not constitute sufficient grounds for prosecution. However, that there are such rumors in itself troubling.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 9:28 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

So even "monks" sometimes treat others like cum dumps. smh

Malcolm wrote:

One cannot dismiss lightly the nonvirtue of one person by invoking the nonvirtue of another.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 3:54 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

Of course. It happens with monastics too, worse.

yan kong said:

You did the math?

Snowbear said:

Screw the math. Molesting young boys is worse than consenting adult women.

Malcolm wrote:

It is similar the fagging system in English Public Schools, ala Tom Brown's Schooldays.

There were/are all kinds of systematic problems with the Tibetan monastic system, but I think another thread is needed for that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 3:52 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

florin said:

This is what i want to know.

Is there a basis in scripture in asserting that a monk can be a better vajrayana teacher than non-monastics.

Since all the riches were found in or around monasteries isnt this a veiled effort at preserving the vajrayana monastic status quo over the laity ?

I cant help but think that there might be something here...

Malcolm wrote:

Florin, the scriptural basis were already cited above.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 3:50 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I am sure you accept that there can be no lawful consent between doctors, health providers, social workers, psychologists, etc., and their patients/clients. Why should it be any different with students of Dharma teachers?

Snowbear said:

You're 110% right, and it should be like that, but it's not like there is a professional ethics course for Lamas. It really requires education and training.

Malcolm wrote:

Then you have your solution.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 3:44 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The supreme vajrayana guru is a fully ordained monk. This is taught very clearly in tantras such as Kalacakra. Westerners are enamored of upasaka gurus, the most inferior kind, with predictable results.

Grigoris said:

How do you square this with the fact that your main teacher is a lay person?

Just a reminder: mine are too.

This is not a dig, I am actually truly interested because, it seems to me, that if one were to embrace this logic it would lead to a fair amount of dissonance.

Malcolm wrote:

Karma, I guess. I have two gurus who were fully ordained monks, the rest, for the most part, have been ngakpas. M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 2:53 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

florin said:

Shocking...

<https://www.elephantjournal.com/2013/06/what-lies-beneath-the-robles-are-buddhist-monasteries-suitable-places-for-children-adele-wilde-blavatsky/>

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but a separate issue from scandals in Western Dharma centers. CHNN has often spoke openly about sexual predation that he witnessed at his monastery as a young tulku.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 2:51 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

smcj said:

You would think so, but apologists for the male abuse of women will create very tangled rationales in their heads for why it is anyone's fault but the abuser's.

This can also be taken to an extreme. For instance, in the Lama Norlha scandal it was put to us that in all cases the relationship is inappropriate, and that in all cases it is the clergyman's fault for letting it happen.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a legal fact in some states.

smcj said:

This includes if the woman initiated it and willingly participated for years. She still bears zero responsibility even then. And that means both he and his organization are legally liable in a lawsuit.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, so, if you are a teacher, keep your hands off your students.

smcj said:

However it also means that adult women are given the same status as a child in that they are deemed to not have the power of consent at all. The idea that adults can have zero responsibility for their actions is, well, something. I can't think of the right word for it right now.

Malcolm wrote:

I am sure you accept that there can be no lawful consent between doctors, health providers, social workers, psychologists, etc., and their patients/clients. Why should it be any different with students of Dharma teachers?

We are not saying that Lama X should under no circumstances date a man or a woman; it is just that man or woman ought not be someone training under Lama X.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 2:37 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Snowbear, you've got to understand that for a lot of guys on this board Malcolm is like some kind of god and whatever he says is gospel, even when it contradicts other things he's said.

Josef said:

Or those of us who actually know Malcolm and consider him a friend respect the decades of his life that he has dedicated to the dharma and his generosity to people on this board.

Malcolm wrote:

Haters gonna hate, that is just a fact of life.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 2:35 AM

Title: Re: Scary Liberal Views and Policy Positions?

Content:

kirtu said:

Which is one reason why I will be voting with my feet in a few years. The US is at its core a socially fascist nation and will be so through my lifetime.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

Kirt, the white demographic is on the decline.

kirtu said:

Which certainly wins the non sequitur award.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

Not at all-- the white demographic is declining, and millennials are socialist-oriented, even in conservative parts of the nation. They know they will never experience the prosperity of their grandparents, and they are looking at a world that is poisoned, etc. If anyone can change things, they can.

But the white people in the South and the Midwest are racist to the core, not even knowing it, in many cases.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 2:29 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Of interest:

Yet when we look closely at the men described as serious and serial offenders—the ones indicted or convicted of sexual crimes (Weinstein, Bill Cosby, Larry Nassar), or the ones accused of being repeat predators, gropers and exhibitionists (among them Louis C.K., Steve Wynn, Mark Halperin, Kevin Spacey, James Levine)—there's also something strangely stylized about their behavior. It's as if they were following a script available only to them, their victims forced to improvise in an awful, repetitive drama. The hotel rooms. Their surprise appearance in a bathrobe. (So many men have reportedly relied on the unbelted robe, from Weinstein to Charlie Rose to architect Richard Meier, that it could now be called the pervert's uniform.) And the masturbation! So much masturbation! Behind desks, on women's legs, inside their own pants. Their alleged predations are shocking in their brazenness, breadth and damage: At least 85 women have accused Weinstein; more than 50 have accused Cosby; more than 200 have accused writer-director James Toback. At Nassar's sentencing, prosecutors identified more than 265 victims.

...

The therapists also describe a pattern of sexual behavior called "avoidant attachment." People with avoidant attachment patterns, they write, often have difficulty forming adult relationships. Even if these individuals are in a primary romantic relationship, they are more likely to seek sex elsewhere. Meanwhile, people with unconventional turn-ons may feel shame or embarrassment, so they avoid exploring their desires with a partner, preferring the reliability of masturbation. They can engage in out-of-control sexual behavior to regulate the threat of emotional closeness. Or, as Morin wrote, "Lust is most likely to turn destructive when it is split off from the rest of life, where it festers and grows hostile."

<https://highline.huffingtonpost.com/articles/en/harvey-weinstein-psychology-sexual-predators/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 2:23 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

You did the math?

Malcolm wrote:

I've been in the Buddhist scene for 35 years. I've done the math. I know about scandals you have never heard of and never will. Not from my lips.

Snowbear said:

Fine, but that's not math.

Malcolm wrote:

The issue, here, incidentally, is Osel Mukpo's failure as a teacher who has the best interest of all his students at heart.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 2:22 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I've been in the Buddhist scene for 35 years. I've done the math. I know about scandals you have never heard of and never will. Not from my lips.

Snowbear said:

Fine, but that's not math.

yan kong said:

Your demand of some sort of proof is ironic as you made little effort to back up your own remarks.

Malcolm wrote:

And he can't. Classic "whataboutism."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 2:10 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

I'm sure scandals happen with monastics too, man.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, they do, but not with such frequency.

Snowbear said:

You did the math?

Malcolm wrote:

I've been in the Buddhist scene for 35 years. I've done the math. I know about scandals you have never heard of and never will. Not from my lips.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 2:08 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Norwegian said:

This is very easy to understand. At least it should be.

Malcolm wrote:

You would think so, but apologists for the male abuse of women will create very tangled rationales in their heads for why it is anyone's fault but the abuser's.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 2:04 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

I'm sure scandals happen with monastics too, man.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, they do, but not with such frequency.

Snowbear said:

Keep in mind these lay gurus in the West are often put into that role by heads of lineages. If you want to point fingers, blame them.

Malcolm wrote:

Really? Who put Sogyal in charge (answer, no one)? Mukpo inherited his position, he does not really belong to any of the four schools. Even of the lineage heads are awakened, as some must be, that does not mean they are omniscient.

In general, in the West, it is open center first, get permission later.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 1:53 AM

Title: Re: Scary Liberal Views and Policy Positions?

Content:

kirtu said:

... Most of the US can legally refuse to provide goods and services to LGBTQ people....

Quay said:

Yes it can and often does. I live in one of those states where it is perfectly legal to do so and have been the victim of such discrimination in more than one setting, including a medical one at a hospital. It's completely tragic how some lives are seen as worth less than others by some people.

kirtu said:

Which is one reason why I will be voting with my feet in a few years. The US is at its core a socially fascist nation and will be so through my lifetime.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

Kirt, the white demographic is on the decline.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 1:47 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

See: <https://www.ahdictionary.com/word/search.html?q=indolent>

Moral indolence and apathy, both Babbitt and Weaver stress, are forces of gravity that need to be quelled if one is to fly beyond the nets of naturalism and temperamental excesses.

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.theimaginativeconservative.org/2013/05/irving-babbitt-and-richard-weaver.html>

dzogchungpa said:

LOL. Dude, if you meant "morally indolent" you should have said:

Correct, women are human beings with dignity who should not be treated like cum dumps for spoiled, entitled, morally indolent men.

Malcolm wrote:

Keep grasping at reeds.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 1:47 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Honestly this whole "monks do it better" thing is kind of an absurd digression. The best guru is one who can really benefit you. To take some obvious examples, are ChNN or HSTT somehow inferior gurus because they are not monks?

Malcolm wrote:

They both qualify as glorious gurus, palden lamas.

And it is not an absurd digression at all. If people stopped lionizing ngakpas simple because they are lay persons, a lot of this nonsense would be forestalled. You might have noticed that these scandals are most prominent in organizations run by lay gurus. Wonder why? If you do, you are an idiot.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 3rd, 2018 at 1:41 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There are all kinds of indolence -- moral indolence is the the worst, far worse than physical indolence.

dzogchungpa said:

See: <https://www.ahdictionary.com/word/search.html?q=indolent>

Moral indolence and apathy, both Babbitt and Weaver stress, are forces of gravity that need to be quelled if one is to fly beyond the nets of naturalism and temperamental excesses.

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.theimaginativeconservative.org/2013/05/irving-babbitt-and-richard-weaver.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 2nd, 2018 at 11:52 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Traduce him all you want, but the guy is not indolent, I mean, he runs marathons.

Malcolm wrote:

Lots of indolent people are into fitness. They have the time for it since they do not work.

dzogchungpa said:

Honestly, I just don't think that someone who runs marathons can reasonably be said to be indolent. Have you ever run one? It's no joke and takes a lot of training.

Malcolm wrote:

There are all kinds of indolence -- moral indolence is the the worst, far worse than physical indolence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 2nd, 2018 at 11:06 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Gatinho said:

Thanks - it would seem that the 'attainment of stages of awakening' is the key - otherwise we are talking about monastic hierarchy (?).

Malcolm wrote:

Look carefully:

Unless he has attained the stages of awakening,

A layman is not to be venerated as a [tantric] master, [not even] by a king.

This says nothing about monastics.

Gatinho said:

The next line does.

Malcolm wrote:

It's not relevant bhikshu gurus.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 2nd, 2018 at 9:24 PM

Title: Re: "Instant presence"

Content:

Marc said:

I think that ChNN coining the term "instant presence" refers to a Longchenpa teaching of Garab Dorje that defines Rigpa as "Kétchik Dangpo Shépa" ཀེའི་ཆེན་པོ་ཤེཔ་པ་ "the first moment/instant of cognition".

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 2nd, 2018 at 9:09 PM

Title: Re: Scary Liberal Views and Policy Positions?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhadharma is about liberation, all kinds of liberation, since all kinds of liberation require giving up some measure of affliction, whether towards, class, race, rank, etc. Hence Buddhadharma is inherently liberal. Historically, it also flourished most widely in the merchant castes. Modern Liberalism was an expression of the drive to political power of the disenfranchised bourgeoisie in Europe.

Grigoris said:

People define liberation in all sorts of ways though. National Socialists consider themselves liberators, albeit of the master race.

Malcolm wrote:

"since all kinds of liberation require giving up some measure of affliction"

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 2nd, 2018 at 8:42 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Gatinho said:

Thanks - it would seem that the 'attainment of stages of awakening' is the key - otherwise we are talking about monastic hierarchy (?).

Malcolm wrote:

Look carefully:

Unless he has attained the stages of awakening,

A layman is not to be venerated as a [tantric] master, [not even] by a king.

This says nothing about monastics.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 2nd, 2018 at 8:40 PM

Title: Re: Scary Liberal Views and Policy Positions?

Content:

Wayfarer said:

Personally I think there isn't necessarily an automatic agreement between traditional Buddhism and Western liberal and libertarian philosophies. Identity politics itself, I would have thought, be hard to reconcile with Buddhist values. After all Buddhism originated as a renunciate philosophy, so the notion of a 'constructed social identity' would not naturally align with that, as it is presumably amongst the things that is to be renounced.

Malcolm wrote:

And yet, Buddha appears to have spearheaded a movement that among other things, cast down brahmins. So there is a social and class aspect to Buddhism that cannot be ignored. There is clear evidence in the Hinayana canon of class prejudice and Buddha's negative reaction to it.

Wayfarer said:

It's just that in the context of modern Western culture, Buddhism often appears as an alternative or counter-cultural movement, so naturally finds itself aligned with liberal and libertarian politics in the West, but I think traditional Buddhism could easily be more inclined much more towards social conservatism - as it sometimes is, for instance, in Japanese politics.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhadharma is about liberation, all kinds of liberation, since all kinds of liberation require giving up some measure of affliction, whether towards, class, race, rank, etc. Hence Buddhadharma is inherently liberal. Historically, it also flourished most widely in the merchant castes. Modern Liberalism was an expression of the drive to political power of the disenfranchised bourgeoisie in Europe.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 2nd, 2018 at 11:18 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

That's a broad declaration. As far as I know, karmamudra was necessary in Kagyu. Gampopa attaining enlightenment without a woman was a rare exception. There are many lineages with different oral traditions and lay yogis with accomplishments. In sum, I really have no idea what you are talking about.

Malcolm wrote:

No one denies that lay people are capable of attaining Buddhahood. But that was not the substance of your claim. The fact is that in Indian and Tibetan history the vast majority of gurus have been monks. Simply put, being a qualified Vajrayana master takes a lot of education and training, and that training is generally undertaken at tantric colleges by monastics.

Evidence of this may be found in the fifty verses of guru devotion where monks are given a pass for not prostrating to lay gurus. It is also clearly explained here too that monks who maintain all three vows are the best sort of gurus.

Karmamudra is not required for levels of awakening up to the tenth bhumi.

It is completely unneeded in Dzogchen and certain lineages from Naropa.

Snowbear said:

Verses, sure. But what percentage of lineage holders in each of the schools were monks vs lay?

Malcolm wrote:

Dude, read some lineage lists. I am not going to do your homework for you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 2nd, 2018 at 11:03 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

History doesn't support that.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, actually it does. By far and away in the history of India and Tibet, the majority of qualified gurus have been fully ordained monks. Try reading some history for a change rather than making embarrassingly mistaken assertions about things of which you are clearly ill-informed.

Snowbear said:

That's a broad declaration. As far as I know, karmamudra was necessary in Kagyu. Gampopa attaining enlightenment without a woman was a rare exception. There are many lineages with different oral traditions and lay yogis with accomplishments. In sum, I really have no idea what you are talking about.

Malcolm wrote:

No one denies that lay people are capable of attaining Buddhahood. But that was not the substance of your claim. The fact is that in Indian and Tibetan history the vast majority of gurus have been monks. Simply put, being a qualified Vajrayana master takes a lot of education and training, and that training is generally undertaken at tantric colleges by monastics.

Evidence of this may be found in the fifty verses of guru devotion where monks are given a pass for not prostrating to lay gurus. It is also clearly explained here too that monks who maintain all three vows are the best sort of gurus.

Karmamudra is not required for levels of awakening up to the tenth bhumi.

It is completely unneeded in Dzogchen and certain lineages from Naropa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 2nd, 2018 at 10:41 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

Vajrayana gurus aren't "clergymen." That's a Western conception.

Malcolm wrote:

The supreme vajrayana guru is a fully ordained monk. This is taught very clearly in tantras such as Kalacakra. Westerners are enamored of upasaka gurus, the most inferior kind, with predictable results.

Snowbear said:

History doesn't support that.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, actually it does. By far and away in the history of India and Tibet, the majority of qualified gurus have been fully ordained monks. Try reading some history for a change rather than making embarrassingly mistaken assertions about things of which you are clearly ill-informed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 2nd, 2018 at 10:28 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

smcj said:

Maybe there should also be reform for "yes women" culture and romanticization of men. The reason this is an issue here and not with rock stars and their groupies is that the clergyman holds a position of trust. So even though the phenomenon of guru groupies does exist, you're not going to be able to sort out responsibility on a case by case basis in court. It's too messy. So eventually some rule will eventually be imposed that nobody likes but is necessary in order to manage the court cases.

Snowbear said:

Vajrayana gurus aren't "clergymen." That's a Western conception.

Malcolm wrote:

The supreme vajrayana guru is a fully ordained monk. This is taught very clearly in tantras such as Kalacakra. Westerners are enamored of upasaka gurus, the most inferior kind, with predictable results.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 2nd, 2018 at 10:25 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, women are human beings with dignity who should not be treated like cum dumps for spoiled, entitled, indolent men.

dzogchungpa said:

Translate him all you want, but the guy is not indolent, I mean, he runs marathons.

Malcolm wrote:

Lots of indolent people are into fitness. They have the time for it since they do not work.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 2nd, 2018 at 9:53 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

Can anyone explain to me what this woman thought was going to happen next when she went to his room? I'm sure she wasn't stupid. She also shares responsibility.

kirtu said:

Perhaps she thought she was going to receive a personal teaching or private empowerment or encouragement or advice or an opportunity to serve her teacher in a legitimate way.

Kirt

Snowbear said:

Kirt, women aren't children.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, women are human beings with dignity who should not be treated like cum dumps for spoiled, entitled, indolent men.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 2nd, 2018 at 9:47 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

I witnessed the steady stream of attractive women that were invited into his quarters and I longed to be the one that he fell in love with and was worthy of being his wife.

During a program you could often tell who the Sakyong was going to pursue that night by who he made eye contact with during the teaching or feast. One night I received a call from his kusung at 11pm or 12pm saying that the Sakyong would like to see me and that I should come to his suite. I was thrilled and nervous. When I got there, he was dressed solely in a robe with no clothes underneath. We chatted for a while. Then he led me into his room and began kissing me and removing my clothes. I said that I couldn't have sex with him. He seemed stunned. He thought for a while and then pushed my face down towards his penis and said "Well you might as well finish this." I was so embarrassed and horrified I did it. He rolled over in bed and didn't say another word to me. Can anyone explain to me what this woman thought was going to happen next when she went to his room? I'm sure she wasn't stupid. She also shares responsibility.

Malcolm wrote:

Victim blaming much? Perhaps the dress she was wearing was too short, or her blouse cut too low.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 2nd, 2018 at 7:24 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

It's important to consider that Mipham R. has a way to justify it in his mind.

Malcolm wrote:

So do wife-beaters, serial killers, and pedophiles.

Snowbear said:

I don't see any violence, stalking, or child sex in the reports. In fact, when one woman finally spoke up and said no, he apologized, left, and ended the relationship.

Malcolm wrote:

Forcing someone's head onto your penis isn't violent?

Btw, HW frequently apologized to victims of his sexual assaults. I guess that makes them ok in your mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 2nd, 2018 at 5:46 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Snowbear, you've got to understand that for a lot of guys on this board Malcolm is like some kind of god and whatever he says is gospel, even when it contradicts other things he's said.

Malcolm wrote:

"A foolish consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds."

—Emerson

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 2nd, 2018 at 5:42 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

No problem: hold them accountable. But trying to narrow interpretations to demonstrate that the problem is "quite clear" is disingenuous.

Josef said:

It's good thing it's quite clear that isn't what's happening.

Snowbear said:

It's important to consider that Mipham R. has a way to justify it in his mind.

Malcolm wrote:

So do wife-beaters, serial killers, and pedophiles.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 2nd, 2018 at 3:55 AM

Title: Re: Vajrapani and ChNN

Content:

Mantrik said:

In the text of the Naga Rite, and apparently even in the Thuns, ChNN originally has Vajrapani as Yidam.

What was the course of events which led to his replacement in Thuns etc?

Malcolm wrote:

Cancer.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 2nd, 2018 at 3:55 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Gatinho said:

I get what you are saying but I think I'll follow the teachings I have been given on the Root Downfalls, the notes to which seem to support my interpretation, but maybe I should check with the Lama on this - so it's helpful to have your view.

Malcolm wrote:

I've checked and I read Tibetan, including the text you referenced (we are referencing the same source, BTW). But everyone has to make up their own mind, even if their decision is, in the end, in error.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 1st, 2018 at 11:48 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Huh. Do you think CTR was awakened?

Malcolm wrote:

I don't know. All I can tell you is that he is not a teacher I would have ever sought out, because I have my doubts. Mahāsiddhas do not usually die of complications resulting from alcoholism, nor do they have expensive cocaine habits, as far as I know.

Of course he had a lot of teachings, and it is very possible he attained realization in the bardo, but that is not very impressive, in fact.

dzogchungpa said:

Well, I don't know either but as the awakened being Ato Rinpoche said: No other teacher who comes to the West is like Trungpa Rinpoche. His teachings have benefited Western people so much—particularly his view on mahamudra and maha ati. He was really special.

So, I try to give him the benefit of the doubt.

Malcolm wrote:

I understand that in the Karma Kagyu hierarchy, it is very difficult to criticize Trungpa. He put them on the map.

But then there is Thomas Rich, Osel Mukpo, and so on...it seems Trungpa's successors have not had the same level of impact, and in some respects, may have severely blunted it.

From my point of view, no teacher has done more to spread Dzogchen in the west than ChNN. Trungpa never really taught Dzogchen to anyone. He just talked about it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 1st, 2018 at 11:14 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

This should not be a topic for public discussion.

Mantrik said:

Since no practice detail is being discussed, it is perfectly OK. Let me guess, your inner tantra troll is awakening.

Pubic and public discussions are quite common here, in fact.

Snowbear said:

Discussions about your sex life should be had with your Dharma teacher, not here with internet personalities.

Malcolm wrote:

Why are you having the discussion then? What are you. Some kind of Dharma cop? Arbiter of the right and the true? If you don't like the discussion, piss off.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 1st, 2018 at 11:14 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

Considering "inner tantra" does not apply to most of us, this conversation is irrelevant and can be misleading.

Malcolm wrote:

There are many practitioners of inner tantra here. People who are not practicing Anuttarayoga Tantra or the three inner tantras do not have to be concerned with this specific issue. But then, such people do not have gurus in the sense meant in Anuttarayoga tantra, since guru yoga is a specific practice in HYT/Inner tantras and does not exist in the three lower tantras at all, nor to the 22 root and branch samayas.

Snowbear said:

This should not be a topic for public discussion.

Malcolm wrote:

But discuss it we must since the pretext for much the egregious behavior of these teachers is precisely preying on the fantasies people have about karmamudra, tantra, and the like.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 1st, 2018 at 11:12 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāsiddhas do not usually die of complications resulting from alcoholism, nor do they have expensive cocaine habits, as far as I know.

Snowbear said:

Hagiographies aren't the best sources for historical info.

Malcolm wrote:

Alcoholics don't generally make it that far.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 1st, 2018 at 11:03 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I can't remember his name right now, but isn't (or wasn't) there a well respected lama living in England who was married to a Christian woman? I beleive it was mentioned on this forum.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, indeed there is such a person, Ato Rinpoche. But of course, people on the actual transcendent paths and stages cannot break samaya. Samaya is for us, not for such awakened beings.

It is crucial to understand the difference between the conduct of ordinary people like us, and awakened people (by all accounts) of the man to whom you refer.

dzogchungpa said:

Huh. Do you think CTR was awakened?

Malcolm wrote:

I don't know. All I can tell you is that he is not a teacher I would have ever sought out, because I have my doubts. Mahāsiddhas do not usually die of complications resulting from alcoholism, nor do they have expensive cocaine habits, as far as I know.

Of course he had a lot of teachings, and it is very possible he attained realization in the bardo, but that is not very impressive, in fact.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 1st, 2018 at 10:57 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

Considering "inner tantra" does not apply to most of us, this conversation is irrelevant and can be misleading.

Malcolm wrote:

There are many practitioners of inner tantra here. People who are not practicing Anuttarayoga Tantra or the three inner tantras do not have to be concerned with this specific issue. But then, such people do not have gurus in the sense meant in Anuttarayoga tantra, since guru yoga is a specific practice in HYT/Inner tantras and does not exist in the three lower tantras at all, nor do the 22 root and branch samayas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 1st, 2018 at 10:53 PM

Title: Re: Scary Liberal Views and Policy Positions?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The civil rights movement in this country was fought in part because whites refused to serve blacks at restaurants and hotels all over the US. Businesses do not have a right to discriminate.

Mantrik said:

Maybe I'm beyond redemption, but I feel It is not reasonable to specifically target a couple running a B&B known to hold deeply Christian beliefs against homosexuality, book a room and turn up at the door as a gay male couple, then have them prosecuted for politely turning you away. That is just malicious and unnecessary.

Malcolm wrote:

In the United States, this is a violation of civil rights. If you advertise hotelier services, and refuse to book gay people in your hotel/BB merely because they are gay, you are opening yourself up for a civil suit. The case law about this is extremely clear. Opinions don't matter.

Mantrik said:

I suspect a Moslem butcher would not be prosecuted for refusing to make a pork pie for a customer, and that is when we realise that we have lost sight of the very basis of the law - what is fair, consistent and reasonable.

Malcolm wrote:

Muslim Butchers don't sell pork. Irrelevant example. If they did sell pork however, and refused to sell it to someone who was gay because they were gay, or black, because they were black, they would have a very real lawsuit on their hands, they would lose, and rightly so.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 1st, 2018 at 10:45 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I can't remember his name right now, but isn't (or wasn't) there a well respected lama living in England who was married to a Christian woman? I beleive it was mentioned on this forum.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, indeed there is such a person, Ato Rinpoche. But of course, people on the actual transcendent paths and stages cannot break samaya. Samaya is for us, not for such awakened beings.

It is crucial to understand the difference between the conduct of ordinary people like us, and awakened people (by all accounts) of the man to whom you refer.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 1st, 2018 at 9:00 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Gatinho said:

Just as a point of clarification (I hope!) looking at Sakya Panditas Vajrayani Mula Pati (Dorje Thegpa Tsa-wa'i Tungwa) the First Branch Downfall is:

'If one takes on the path a consort who has not had the initiation, by relying on her as a mental object, one commits the first branch downfall.'

What this means is that if you are practicing completion stage Anuttarayoga such as the 'path of messengers' you cannot do this with the physical consort who has not received empowerments or with the mental image of them as the yidam. Since for this practice you are relying on the consort it must be an appropriate one.

Malcolm wrote:

It is tempting to read it this way. But is not the case. If someone is engaged in HYT practice, it is not like they are allowed to put down their practice to engage in a bit of mundane sport, and then pick up their practice after having smoked a cigarette.

Gatinho said:

So the mistake would be to confuse ordinary sexual relations with yoga involving a consort.

Malcolm wrote:

Someone practicing inner tantra should never be involved in ordinary sexual relations. It is a downfall, easily repaired, but a downfall nevertheless. Since most people practice mother tantra, one should consult the 8 special samayas related to mother tantra.

Gatinho said:

Thus it is perfectly normal and pleasant to fall in love with a non-initiate, have a sexual relationship, feel the earth move, settle down, have children and argue over breakfast and so on but do not confuse this samsaric experience with the liberating effect of yoga tantra. That would be the branch downfall.

This is how I read it.

Malcolm wrote:

You are entitled to your reading, but there is sufficient commentarial evidence contra this interpretation.

Gatinho said:

This is quite a different issue to the precept on 'sexual misconduct' - which by the way is the most poorly defined of the five lay precepts. And it is also a different issue to sex as an antinomial/transgressive act in tantra generally.

Malcolm wrote:

If one is referring to the practice of taking low caste consorts like ḍombinis, and so on; this is part of vratacārya, brtul zhugs spyod pa. We do not have a cultural context for this in the West, any longer. Though of course the outrage in some quarters at Henry marrying Meghan Merkel approaches it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 1st, 2018 at 8:48 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

You think enlightenment erases a person's humanness? I don't.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, completely, if by human one means being in an afflicted state.

Snowbear said:

Do you think there is any person alive today that does not have sexual feelings? Other than, of course, abnormal clinical cases.

Malcolm wrote:

Sexual urges are not necessarily afflictive, anymore more than the urge to eat. One however need not act on sexual urges at all, or overindulge them in the case of lay people. Indeed, for practitioners, it is better to avoid having children, no matter what level of the Dharma one practices.

It is pretty clear that in Tibetan Buddhism there are any number of male teachers who are more than willing to exploit naive and unqualified female students.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 1st, 2018 at 10:49 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

Regarding the samaya of not having sex with non-practitioners:

What are those of us who have relationships with non-practitioners to do, divorce or otherwise leave our partners? We're told that being Buddhist is a matter of karma and thus, we don't proselytize and convert others if they don't have the same karma. Yet, we (okay, I) had the karma to get involved with another who is not cut from the same cloth...

And, if one breaks a branch samaya, what can one do? Usually, the remedy is to vow to never do it again, but what if one is married or falls in love. Not so easy.

I'm okay with not ever engaging in higher yoga practice, if that's what it takes. I just find it slightly off putting that the Dharma, would be so rigid when it comes to something which has nothing to do with unkindness.

this is giving me the notion I may have to give up my lifelong spiritual beliefs because it doesn't fit into the "rules". But, I would rather think it simply bullshit, like whomever told Tara she could not become enlightened in female form.

Malcolm wrote:

This what vajrasattva is for. No one expects you to abandon your spouse. It is a branch downfall, not a root downfall. In any case, samaya is easily purified, unlike lower yana vows. However, Buddhадharma is probably the least sentimental path there is.

TharpaChodron said:

Thanks for the clarification. Being sentimental is unavoidable for most humans, so we do our best. But being sentimental isn't a bad thing and I am not sure Buddhism isn't.

Malcolm wrote:

The minute one thinks Buddhism is sentimental, review karma and its results. Being sentimental is not necessarily bad, it is largely absent in Buddhism

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 1st, 2018 at 10:45 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

I'm more interested in a definition in your own words. To me, teachers/gurus are normal human beings.

Jangchup Donden said:

,

So you're saying there's no enlightenment to be had? No qualities of realization? Or that there isn't any more (hooray kali yuga)?

Snowbear said:

You think enlightenment erases a person's humanness? I don't.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, completely, if by human one means being in an afflicted state.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 1st, 2018 at 10:44 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

Regarding the samaya of not having sex with non-practitioners:

What are those of us who have relationships with non-practitioners to do, divorce or otherwise leave our partners? We're told that being Buddhist is a matter of karma and thus, we don't proselytize and convert others if they don't have the same karma. Yet, we (okay, I) had the karma to get involved with another who is not cut from the same cloth...

And, if one breaks a branch samaya, what can one do? Usually, the remedy is to vow to never do it again, but what if one is married or falls in love. Not so easy.

I'm okay with not ever engaging in higher yoga practice, if that's what it takes. I just find it slightly off putting that the Dharma, would be so rigid when it comes to something which has nothing to do with unkindness.

this is giving me the notion I may have to give up my lifelong spiritual beliefs because it doesn't fit into the "rules". But, I would rather think it simply bullshit, like whomever told Tara she could not become enlightened in female form.

Malcolm wrote:

This what vajrasattva is for. No one expects you to abandon your spouse. It is s branch downfall, not a root downfall. In any case, samaya is easily purified, unlike lower yana vows. However, Buddhadharma is probably the least sentimental path there is.

Snowbear said:

Vajrasattva for marrying a non-Buddhist? Come on, man.

Malcolm wrote:

Did I say that? No.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 1st, 2018 at 9:44 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

Regarding the samaya of not having sex with non-practitioners:

What are those of us who have relationships with non-practitioners to do, divorce or otherwise leave our partners? We're told that being Buddhist is a matter of karma and thus, we don't proselytize and convert others if they don't have the same karma. Yet, we (okay, I) had the karma to get involved with another who is not cut from the same cloth...

And, if one breaks a branch samaya, what can one do? Usually, the remedy is to vow to never do it again, but what if one is married or falls in love. Not so easy.

I'm okay with not ever engaging in higher yoga practice, if that's what it takes. I just find it slightly off putting that the Dharma, would be so rigid when it comes to something which has nothing to do with unkindness.

this is giving me the notion I may have to give up my lifelong spiritual beliefs because it doesn't fit into the "rules". But, I would rather think it simply bullshit, like whomever told Tara she could not become enlightened in female form.

Malcolm wrote:

This what vajrasattva is for. No one expects you to abandon your spouse. It is a branch downfall, not a root downfall. In any case, samaya is easily purified, unlike lower yana vows. However, Buddhadharma is probably the least sentimental path there is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 30th, 2018 at 11:43 PM

Title: Re: Scary Liberal Views and Policy Positions?

Content:

MiphamFan said:

I think "liberal" immigration laws are meant to exploit the poor and destroy the native working class.

Grigoris said:

There is no "native" working class in America. Have no issue with the rest except what it means to "support LGBT. I think private businesses have the right to say they can't decorate a cake with LGBT messages.

So if a Black american asked for a "Black" message on their cake, do you think the private business should have the right to refuse?

Mantrik said:

Let's examine the flip side:

Can a lesbian cafe sue a customer who refuses to eat there? I suspect that things have become mad enough for that to happen. Whose rights are more important? Which needs protection most - someone's livelihood or someone's hurt feelings because Snowflake Diddums can't force someone to make them a cake.

I don't have to sell you my car if I don't like the look of you, or your attitude, so why can't a small trader be as free?

Forcing shops and hotels to sell to people is not liberalisation, it is compulsion, bullying pure and simple. You can't have different laws for different groups in that way what if a Trump supporter, or an NRA supporter or an extreme IS fanatic wanted their message on a cake? Should they be able to sue if you refuse?

What if the message denigrates women, threatens murder of one etc. and you are a Vajrayana practitioner - should you be forced by law to write their message?

Should a B&B be forced to accept everyone in their own home, regardless? How would you like to be forced to take in a few Nazis?

Guess what - if I want to take my dog I find a place that welcomes dogs. If I wanted to take kids, same applies. If I want to smoke, same applies.

The BLT sandwich has got too fat, too bloated with overblown self-importance and the entitlement mentality of ever tinier minorities who want the world to make massive and expensive changes for them. Here's the news - they can buy the sodding cake from someone else, and they can book a different B&B.

In times of huge UK social deprivation, money is being spent in schools on creating toilets or reconfiguring existing ones at huge cost for tiny kids who say yes when questioned if they would like gender transitioning. Meanwhile, other kids in the same school can't get food and teachers are being made redundant.

This isn't liberal. This is pandering to a tiny self-important minority at the expense of others, with no evaluation of cost/benefit or whose human rights need protecting the most. Yes, most of that list makes sense. The LGBTUGVJW nonsense is pandering to loud campaigners, not those truly in desperate need, by means of 'liberal' oppression.

Malcolm wrote:

The civil rights movement in this country was fought in part because whites refused to serve blacks at restaurants and hotels all over the US. Businesses do not have a right to discriminate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 30th, 2018 at 10:54 PM

Title: Re: Advaitin vs. Buddhist takes on awareness/reality

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Knowing something one has not experienced is liking knowing there is sugar without having ever tasted it. That kind of knowledge is conceptual.

Rick said:

I understand.

Advaita's response to this (afaik) is: Brahman cannot be experienced, it's tasteless.

Buddhism is laser-focused on the ending of suffering ... and Advaita is more focused on the knowing of (what they take to be) truth. Experiential benefits are secondary, more or less icing on the cake. That's what I was taught, in any case.

Thanks, Malcolm, for always pushing me to look critically at my belief system, much of which is (of course!) unconscious, unseen by me.

Malcolm wrote:

Mahayana Buddhism is focused on both liberation and the two kinds of omniscience: omniscience concerning the real nature of all phenomena and omniscience concerning all aspects of all that is. The direct perception of shunyata is required for both liberation and omniscience.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 30th, 2018 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: Advaitin vs. Buddhist takes on awareness/reality

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Then of what possible relevance would it be to liberation?

Rick said:

Enlightenment per Advaita is knowing, not experiencing.

Of course one could argue that "knowing" IS experiencing. But I don't think that's what Buddhists have in mind when they talk about experiencing.

Malcolm wrote:

Knowing something one has not experienced is like knowing there is sugar without having ever tasted it. That kind of knowledge is conceptual.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 30th, 2018 at 10:02 PM

Title: Re: Advaitin vs. Buddhist takes on awareness/reality

Content:

Rick said:

There's so much deeply impassioned fighting about Advaitin vs. Buddhist views. And within each tradition, there is so much infighting. And within each subtradition more fighting, sub-sub-tradition, all the way down to the individual, in whose mind the war rages on.

I guess it's in the nature of humans to defend, tooth and nail, what they believe in.

Once in a while someone appears who is open to the essential "truth" in all views ... and they are like a breath of bracing fresh air!

Malcolm wrote:

The only essential truth is that all views are a source of faults.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 30th, 2018 at 9:56 PM

Title: Re: Advaitin vs. Buddhist takes on awareness/reality

Content:

DharmaChakra said:

Namaste Rick,

Rick said:

Namaste DharmaChakra. To your original question. Firstly Brahman as per Advaita Vedanta cannot be conceptualized or named or brought into any idea. There is a way to understand how this works and is understood. It will depend on your understanding of Advaita Vedanta, there are many systems, the modern neo advaita is far from it.

Yes. Vijnana is not the same as Brahman vi is in insight or when mind turns inwards, to get experiential knowledge of what is Brahman, through vijnana, vijnana is indirect or state of consciousness when one acquires direct understanding/experience of the nature of brahma~Absolute Reality,

My understanding is that brahman cannot be directly experienced. "Direct experiences of brahman" are mithya, not paramartha satya. I guess you could make an argument for indirect experiences of brahman in the sense of everything (we experience) is, ultimately, brahman.

Malcolm wrote:

Then of what possible relevance would it be to liberation?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 30th, 2018 at 6:57 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Jangchup Donden said:

Personally, I'd like to shy away from a blanket "a guru should never take a student as a karmamudra ever, ever" as Guru Rinpoche didn't follow that example. On the other hand, I'm pretty comfortable saying a guru should not be having mundane sex with a student.

Grigoris said:

So teachers should only get laid via Tinder?

I imagine that many teachers have lasting and loving relationships with students. I cannot see why that is a problem. Not all sex is abusive, after all...

Malcolm wrote:

It is a question of professional ethics, in my estimation.

Teachers should not sleep with their students. There is too much evidence that in Tibetan Buddhism, the relationship is too unequal to satisfy the criteria of adult consent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 30th, 2018 at 6:53 PM

Title: Re: Scary Liberal Views and Policy Positions?

Content:

boda said:

Last night Sean Hannity (Fox News contributor) said, "many are hailing Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez as a rising star on the political landscape but in reality, her views, her policy positions, are actually downright scary." And then showed a graphic outlining her platform:

“Medicare For All”
“Housing As a Human Right”
“A Federal Jobs Guarantee”
“Gun Control / Assault Weapons Ban”
“Criminal Justice Reform, End Private Prisons” “Immigration Justice / Abolish ICE”
“Solidarity with Puerto Rico”
“Mobilizing Against Climate Change”
“Clean Campaign Finance”
“Higher Education for All”
“Women’s Rights”
“Support LGBTQIA+”
“Support Seniors”
“Curb Wall Street Gambling: Restore Glass Steagall”

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 30th, 2018 at 3:38 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 30th, 2018 at 2:25 AM

Title: Re: Lots of questions about Dharmapalas & Yidams

Content:

Pumo said:

Also, take in account I'm a novice practitioner, I don't even practice Tantra, I'm a beginner at meditation and I'm mainly focused on the study of Sutras.

Malcolm wrote:

This information is not proper for you to be concerned with then.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 30th, 2018 at 1:33 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Virgo said:

I have a woodchuck in my back yard. I named him Favio.

Kevin...

Grigoris said:
But how much wood could your woodchuck chuck?

Malcolm wrote:
...if a woodchuck could chuck wood.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, June 29th, 2018 at 11:08 PM
Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:
Content:

Miroku said:
Western fascination with karmamudra is quite interesting. I have read/heard some statements that karmamudra is actually mostly for those who have not recognized the state of rigpa and are of lower capacity.

Malcolm wrote:
This is not correct. In order to practice karmamudra one must be very stable in the experiential view.

Miroku said:
I see. But isn't it also used as a form of semdzin for lower capacity students?

Malcolm wrote:
No. This is a misunderstanding that comes from misconstruing some instructions concerning cultivating the experiences of bliss, clarity, and nonconceptuality.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, June 29th, 2018 at 10:34 PM
Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:
Content:

Miroku said:
Western fascination with karmamudra is quite interesting. I have read/heard some statements that karmamudra is actually mostly for those who have not recognized the state of rigpa and are of lower capacity.

Malcolm wrote:
This is not correct. In order to practice karmamudra one must be very stable in the experiential view.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, June 29th, 2018 at 10:12 PM
Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:
Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

I think it's a mistake to abandon the idea of practising Highest Yoga Tantra in Western society because of the sexual misconduct of some prominent Teachers. Karmamudra has a specific purpose and is only meant to be engaged in after many generations and completion stage realisations have already been attained. HYT is also meant to be practised in the context of Sutra teachings on renunciation, compassion, bodhicitta and the correct view of emptiness. If HYT is practised with a firm foundation of Sutra then there is no danger of it being misused.

Furthermore, although karmamudra is practised in the common lineage of Mahamudra instructions, there are some lineages of Mahamudra instructions where it is not necessary, therefore it is possible to complete the path to enlightenment using solitary meditation with a wisdom mudra without an action mudra at all.

Malcolm wrote:

We don't often agree, but what you say here is true.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 29th, 2018 at 8:45 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

smcj said:

One of the requirements for karmamudra is that both partners should be experienced in creation and completion stage practice to a very high degree.

Yeah, but how do you demonstrate that to a woman?

Malcolm wrote:

Both partners, not just one. If both partners are experienced, they can easily tell.

Classically, in India, one would train a partner personally, taking them through Hinayāna, Mahāyāna, and finally present them to one's guru for abhisheka, and then support their training until they were sufficiently well trained to engage in karmamudra practice-- in the meantime one would rely on a jñānamudra.

We live in a degenerate era, so these procedures and safeguards are not being followed in many cases.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 29th, 2018 at 8:40 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

chimechodra said:

All this news has had me very discouraged and deeply saddened. Shambhala was where I started my path. I still go to the local center every now and then and have tons of friends at all different levels of involvement in Shambhala. Hell, the last few months I'd been contemplating the idea of doing some more classes and retreats with them since I remember experiencing so much growth in my early days when I did the levels. Now I'm disgusted and I'm not sure how I feel about even stepping into another Shambhala center.

I always found Osel to be pretty bland and uninspiring, but I never imagined he could be a sexual predator on the level of Sogyal. I can't say I'm surprised in hindsight, but it's really demoralizing to know that he couldn't rise to the occasion and not fall into the same darkness of his father. Ugh. I'm just glad I met ChNN and a few other teachers I can really trust and confide in and never went deeper into Shambhala. Feeling really sad for some of my friends who are in deep, and I'm not even sure how to reach out to them as I'm worried some will simply lash out and say that the women didn't understand, or that pure vision must be cultivated, or some other nonsense.

Grigoris said:

You gonna keep that baby or are you gonna throw it out with the bath water? Coz if you are...

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty clear now that Shambhala International, along with Rigpa, etc., are toxic organizations from which new students should be discouraged. This is instructive: "Our lineage is led by human Sakyongs. They have offered us profound teachings, and as humans they can cause harm," Stay very far away from this shite.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 29th, 2018 at 8:38 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

smcj said:

It seems obvious to me that any Lama at the head of a sizeable community who was intending to practice HYT with a consort would easily be able to select and approach a potential candidate (or even more than one) , train them, empower them, explain the purpose and benefits of such practice and in a totally consensual but private manner Highest Yoga Tantra is a classification which incorporates 3 types of tantras. Karmamudra is a specific practice that looks like two people having sex.

It should be said that in order to accomplish karmamudra there are specific yogic accomplishments that the male should be able to demonstrate. If women knew what that was, and insisted he show proof he could do karmamudra beforehand, then there would be a whole lot less of this pretext being used.

Malcolm wrote:

One of the requirements for karmamudra is that both partners should be experienced in creation and completion stage practice to a very high degree.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 29th, 2018 at 8:11 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

smcj said:

I cannot say whether they agree as regards Sogyal as I cannot discern what DJK's position is

His position is twofold:

1. Sogyal R's students (most likely) do not have binding samaya with Sogyal R because of multiple reasons. So in his case the issue is moot.
2. However if they actually had formed authentic samaya, then they would have committed themselves to seeing everything he did as pure. This is a necessity component of HYT and not subject to western cultural review.

That being the case, and given the rampant abuse of that idea as a pretext for abuse, maybe best to not teach or practice HYT in the West. There aren't enough highly realized lamas around anyway so that it can be done without double-think anyways.

Malcolm wrote:

There is actually no explicit samaya to regard all of one's guru's actions as pure.

It is a training, not a commitment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 29th, 2018 at 7:19 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Wienstein:

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

With respect to the branch downfalls, the first branch downfall is having sexual intercourse with a women or man who does not possess samaya, that is, someone who is unripened by empowerment, or someone who has broken their samaya.

sillyrabbit said:

All the sources I can find connect this downfall to activities related to a certain practice, not in general. Is this your way of saying that the certain practice should be constant or is it really this confusing...?

Malcolm wrote:

It is not confusing at all. The first branch samaya could not be more clear. This is why I made the distinction that I did -- relying on an unripened partners for karmamudra practice, which has certain procedures, is a root downfall. Relying on a women or a man as a sexual partner who has not been ripened is a branch downfall.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 29th, 2018 at 5:35 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Wienstein:

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is this conclusion, which I agree with:

In addition to questioning the Sakyong, there are kusung and other leaders who have been specifically named by women as allegedly participating in or condoning this conduct. KC members, current kusung and several kusung no longer in the community should be interviewed for their knowledge of this allegation. If true, this points to a remarkably predatory, institutionalized abuse of women that should not be tolerated in any organization, no less one with spiritual goals.

And it is true.

Additionally, Osel Mukpo really ought to seek professional help for his very evident alcoholism.

During the time I spent in Dharmadhatu communities in the late '80's and early 90's, I witnessed an amazing amount of alcoholism in the Dharmadhatu culture. I have observed the same behavior in other communities, mostly Nyimingma, including Dzogchen Community (though here it is actively discouraged by Chogyal Namkhai Norbu). Alcoholism is a fairly widespread problem in Tibetan Buddhism, at least in the Nyingma tradition, and it leads to many of the problems we see here. I know of at least three Tibetan Buddhist teachers who have died due to problems related to drinking, including CTR. It is time we acknowledge that in some Tibetan Buddhist communities there is a very unhealthy relationship with alcohol. There are at least three translators that I know who are chronic alcoholics.

All in all it is a serious issue.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 29th, 2018 at 3:21 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Wienstein:

Content:

Simon E. said:

I meant Malcolm, that part of the 'clan' which is Mukpo Inc. USA.

Malcolm wrote:

There is actually so much bullshit mythology in Shambhala Inc., it would take teams of scholars to unravel it all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 29th, 2018 at 3:06 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Wienstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

All of us in this thread know what denigrating women means. However, we need to understand what that meant traditionally for Tibetans.

Malcolm wrote:

The tantras and commentaries are really quite clear on this point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 29th, 2018 at 3:04 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Wienstein:

Content:

Simon E. said:

He has been raised in the Mukpo clan..with all that implies in terms of perceived entitlement. Its a family firm which is loosely based on selling Dharma flavoured snack food.

Malcolm wrote:

Tibetans clans are not like Scottish clans with a laird, etc., though CTR appropriated the latter.

The Mukpo tribe, located in Kham, is part of the a larger tribe, the sDong.

Of course, the founder of the Khon clan, Namlha Yuring, tamed all the eighteen branches of the sDong, and made them vassals. This is why the Khon are really the bosses of all sDong, including the Mukpos.

With respect to the Mukpo tribe, all this business about CTR being head of this tribe is nonsense.

Of course, there is a saying about the Mukpos:

"The descendants of the Mugpo Dong race think only of conquering other peoples."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 29th, 2018 at 2:37 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Wienstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

Pema Karpo cites the following lines of the Subahu Tantra concerning unworthy actions:

A mantrin should always shun

Offensive speech, slander,

Sexual relations with married women,

Just "married women" here.

...(3) Not to engage in adultery means to abstain from sexual relations with an inappropriate partner, such as another's spouse, whether or not one has taken the vow of celibacy;
Again.

...(2) Not to engage in sexual union with the consort of one's master;

Again. They all seem to be saying "untaken" women is fine.

Malcolm wrote:

With respect to the root downfall, to use an unripened woman or man for actual karmamudra practice is a root downfall, covered in the seventh root downfall, declaring secrets. Then of course there is the fourteenth root downfall, denigrating women, who are the nature of wisdom. Treating women poorly, not displaying loving kindness towards them, etc., is not only a breaking the fourteenth root downfall, but also the fourth, not to abandon love for sentient beings.

With respect to the branch downfalls, the first branch downfall is having sexual intercourse with a woman or man who does not possess samaya, that is, someone who is unripened by empowerment, or someone who has broken their samaya.

Actually, engaging in conduct that contradicts the Buddha's teachings is itself a root downfall, the second.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 29th, 2018 at 12:31 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Wienstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

Malcolm, I don't see your reference in Kongtrul's book. Can you quote it?

Malcolm wrote:

Look at the 14 root and 8 branch samayas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 29th, 2018 at 12:19 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Wienstein:

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

For a vajrayana practitioners, sleeping with ordinary partners who have not been ripened by empowerment is sexual misconduct

Snowbear said:

Is there a reference I can look up?

In Mipham's case, had these women received empowerments from him?

Malcolm wrote:

It is not clear these women were his vajra disciples. Even so, gurus are not permitted to rape their students.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 29th, 2018 at 12:18 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Wienstein:

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

For a vajrayana practioners, sleeping with ordinary partners who have not been ripened by empowerment is sexual misconduct

Snowbear said:

Is there a reference I can look up?

In Mipham's case, had these women received empowerments from him?

Malcolm wrote:

I thought you were quite expert in HYT. In any case Buddhist Ethics by Kongtrul addresses this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 29th, 2018 at 12:16 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Wienstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

It is, in HYT.

Virgo said:

Oh, so when the Sakyong Mipham Rinpoche pushed that women's head towards his penis and told her to "finish it off" even though she expressed that she did not want to engage in sexual activity with him (nevermind all the other women's allegations) he was engaging in teaching her dharma?

Snowbear said:

In his eyes, I suspect he may have thought he was.

Edit: no not teaching her dharma...that he was "practicing" dharma for himself.

Malcolm wrote:

You mean he was masturbating with the mouth of an unwilling, frightened young woman?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 29th, 2018 at 12:15 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Wienstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

I don't think the tantras recognized "sexual abuse." but sexual acts with women are in there.

Malcolm wrote:

The tantras very clearly recognize the existence of sexual misconduct, and samaya breakage through relying on unripened partners.

Snowbear said:

What do they say "sexual misconduct" is?

Malcolm wrote:

For a vajrayana practitioners, sleeping with ordinary partners who have not been ripened by empowerment is sexual misconduct, beyond that, the standard definitions apply. For example, the rape allegation against Mipham would be covered under this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 29th, 2018 at 12:06 AM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Wienstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

It is, in HYT.

Malcolm wrote:

In what tantra does it instruct students to willingly submit to sexual abuse?

Snowbear said:

I don't think the tantras recognized "sexual abuse." but sexual acts with women are in there.

Malcolm wrote:

The tantras very clearly recognize the existence of sexual misconduct, and samaya breakage through relying on unripened partners.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 28th, 2018 at 11:53 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Wienstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

Not making a judgement on that, just saying "don't flatter yourselves" by not expecting it in one's teachers.

Virgo said:

But is it a dharma teaching or is it not?

Snowbear said:

It is, in HYT.

Malcolm wrote:

In what tantra does it instruct students to willingly submit to sexual abuse?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 28th, 2018 at 11:49 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Wienstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

In my opinion, they all do it.

Malcolm wrote:

Even fully ordained Khenpos and geshees?

Snowbear said:

If they practice HYT, they are more likely to be doing it, and probably doing it Mipham style.

Malcolm wrote:

They all practice HYT. So, in the end can we conclude that in your opinion it is just fine that all these sexual predators should be permitted to continue unchecked?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 28th, 2018 at 11:44 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Wienstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

Because I think it's important not to be too sure that one's own teachers aren't doing the same.

Malcolm wrote:

So on your opinion, most Tibetan Lamas are sexual predators of the Harvey Weinstein variety?

Snowbear said:

In my opinion, they all do it.

Malcolm wrote:

Even fully ordained Khenpos and geshees?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 28th, 2018 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Wienstein:

Content:

Snowbear said:

Maybe they were doing a good job.

Aryjna said:

Why do you insist on littering this forum with aimless crap like this?

Snowbear said:

Because I think it's important not to be too sure that one's own teachers aren't doing the same.

Malcolm wrote:

So in your opinion, most Tibetan Lamas are sexual predators of the Harvey Weinstein variety?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 28th, 2018 at 11:37 PM

Title: Re: Mipham Rinpoche channels Wienstein:

Content:

PeterC said:

Is what they teach even the dharma?

PSM said:

A good chunk of it seems to be similar to play-acting. The notion of putting someone in a 'stockade' should be a red flag, especially post-Stanford prison experiment

Snowbear said:

I feel this is nitpicking now. If there were no sexual allegations, you and PeterC probably wouldn't think much of any of that. I don't think this due to Shambhala's "weirdness." I actually think most Tibetan Lamas, even the ones with "wisdom, bodhicitta, and warmth," do the same as Mipham.

Malcolm wrote:

What evidence have you for this? What does "most" mean? 70%, 80%, 90%+?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 28th, 2018 at 11:14 PM

Title: Re: Advaitin vs. Buddhist takes on awareness/reality

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The real point is that advaita rejects dependent origination.

Rick said:

I don't think that's accurate.

It's more like Advaita accepts the conventional (vyavahara/mithya) truth of dependent origination, as it accepts karma and rebirth.

But, ultimately (paramartha/satya), neither dependent origination, karma, or rebirth are seen as true/real. This is true in Buddhism too, yes? Dependent origination, causality, karma, rebirth ... these are all conventional teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

No, conventionally it asserts creation of the world by Ishvara.

Further, not all conventions are relative truths, some conventions are simply the mere relative.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 28th, 2018 at 11:13 PM

Title: Re: Advaitin vs. Buddhist takes on awareness/reality

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The real point is that advaita rejects dependent origination.

Rick said:

I don't think that's accurate.

It's more like Advaita accepts the conventional (vyavahara/mithya) truth of dependent origination, as it accepts karma and rebirth.

But, ultimately (paramartha/satya), neither dependent origination, karma, or rebirth are seen as true/real. This is true in Buddhism too, yes? Dependent origination, causality, karma, rebirth ... these are all conventional teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

No, conventionally it asserts creation of the world by Ishvara.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 28th, 2018 at 10:34 PM

Title: Re: Advaitin vs. Buddhist takes on awareness/reality

Content:

Rick said:

If true, then that's a nontrivial disconnect between Advaita and Buddhism.

The term nirvana, btw, is rarely (if ever) used in Advaita teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

The real point is that advaita rejects dependent origination.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 28th, 2018 at 8:53 PM

Title: Mipham Rinpoche channels Weinstein:

Content:

Unknown said:

"Another woman alleges that she was called by a kusung at 11 or 12 pm to come to the Sakyong's suite after a program. When she got there, he was undressed except for a robe. "Then he led me into his room and began kissing me and removing my clothes. I said I could not have sex with him. He seemed stunned. He thought for a while and pushed my face down towards his penis and said, 'Well you might as well finish this.' I was so embarrassed and horrified I did it." (Stories of Women Survivors in the BPS Report).

Malcolm wrote:

http://andreamwinn.com/project_sunshine/Buddhist_Project_Sunshine_Phase_2_Final_Report.pdf

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 28th, 2018 at 11:26 AM

Title: Re: CTR, polygamy, cocaine, etc: Discuss

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Was his substance abuse also a Dharma teaching?

Snowbear said:

Of course.

Malcolm wrote:

Of what kind?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 28th, 2018 at 11:25 AM

Title: Re: CTR, polygamy, cocaine, etc: Discuss

Content:

Snowbear said:

Second, his promiscuity was a part of his teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

What did his promiscuity teach? What Dharma teaching did it embody?

Snowbear said:

The "one taste" part.

Malcolm wrote:

Really? How so?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 28th, 2018 at 11:23 AM

Title: Re: CTR, polygamy, cocaine, etc: Discuss

Content:

Snowbear said:

Second, his promiscuity was a part of his teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

What did his promiscuity teach? What Dharma teaching did it embody?

Was his substance abuse also a Dharma teaching?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 28th, 2018 at 4:10 AM

Title: Re: CTR, polygamy, cocaine, etc: Discuss

Content:

Karma Dorje said:

I am surprised that you equate the use of intoxicants, which is a matter for an individual to decide, with sexual abuse which causes direct harm to another.

Grigoris said:

Yes, that is the typical Protestant attitude.

It seems that the Buddha, on the other hand, thought otherwise:

<https://www.accesstoinight.org/tipitaka/an/an04/an04.099.than.html>

Both in terms of self and other and in terms of abstinence from intoxicants and sexual misconduct.

But let us get something straight: sexual abuse is based on lack of consent (as is sexual misconduct); where, in the opening account, does the writer speak about lack of consent?

Malcolm wrote:

She subscribes to the idea the power differential makes consent impossible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 28th, 2018 at 3:46 AM

Title: Re: CTR, polygamy, cocaine, etc: Discuss

Content:

Grigoris said:

I also don't see anybody getting all outraged about the alcohol and drugs, the consumption of which is actually a violation of a Buddhist precept.

Malcolm wrote:

Only if you have undertaken to follow the fourth precept.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 27th, 2018 at 11:10 PM

Title: Re: Advaitin vs. Buddhist takes on awareness/reality

Content:

Rick said:

Aha, thanks, I hadn't realized 4 was considered an extreme.

Going back to this:

Nirguna brahman can neither be said to exist or not-exist.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and thus it falls into the third extreme.

Rick said:

But my point is that Advaitins often consider nirguna brahman to exist, indeed to be the only real existent ... but that this view is false.

Malcolm wrote:

From the point of view of convention, It alone is real. From the point of view of analysis it is held to be devoid of existence and no existence as a perceptible object, it that does not mean advaitans hold bhraman to be nonexistent, they consider it to ineffable, and beyond convention.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 27th, 2018 at 10:21 PM

Title: Re: Advaitin vs. Buddhist takes on awareness/reality

Content:

Rick said:

Not sure I get you, Malcolm.

Saguna brahman = Ishvara does not exist ultimately, it only "exists" on the level of vyavahara. It is mithya, a provisional belief/teaching.

Nirguna brahman can neither be said to exist or not-exist.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and thus it falls into the third extreme.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 27th, 2018 at 8:55 PM

Title: Re: Crazy Wisdom

Content:

Mantrik said:

but where does it come from?

Malcolm wrote:

It was a term CTR connected with Dorje Drollo.

It has been since coopted to describe unconventional behavior by realized yogins, as well as by grifters who try to bilk naive aspirants.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 27th, 2018 at 8:52 PM

Title: Re: Advaitin vs. Buddhist takes on awareness/reality

Content:

Rick said:

That said, a lot of Advaitins and neo-Advaitins talk about brahman as if it were real, perhaps even believe it is real. This reifies brahman and makes it sound/feel like a magical fairy-tale universal inherently existing field. Which is not what "brahman" actually points to.

Malcolm wrote:

The above is a description of nirgunabrahman. It does not address sagunabrahman.

Shankara borrowed Buddhist arguments to try and one up his fellow Vedantins.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 27th, 2018 at 11:07 AM

Title: Re: CTR, polygamy, cocaine, etc: Discuss

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

This statement says it all Yes, I will do this strange thing. It was only later when I learned of power differentials and feminism that I truly understood how totally wrong it all was. And now I am triggered by all things Tibetan.

Malcolm wrote:

Apparently you think the meaning of this statement is self-evident, but you do not share your conclusion concerning what exactly it is you find self-evident. Care to share?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 27th, 2018 at 10:24 AM

Title: Re: CTR, polygamy, cocaine, etc: Discuss

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

Sounds like she is accusing his son, Sakyong Mipham, of abuse of women, but what exactly he's ever done, I don't know and somehow find him an unlikely candidate for misbehavior.

I'm not an apologist, but I think one can "sometimes" separate the person from the art or work they produce. Woody Allen is a pervert, imo, and as much as I detest his character, I still like a lot of his films.

Malcolm wrote:

Apparently the accusations are going to drop Thursday, Mipham Rinpoche has issued an apology in advance.

TharpaChodron said:

To the Shambhala Community:

I write to you with great sadness, tenderness, and a mind of self-reflection.

It is my wish for you to know that in my past there have been times when I have engaged in relationships with women in the Shambhala community. I have recently learned that some of these women have shared experiences of feeling harmed as a result of these relationships. I am now making a public apology.

In addition, I would like you to know that over the years, I have apologized personally to people who have expressed feeling harmed by my conduct, including some of those who have recently shared their stories. I have also engaged in mediation and healing practices with those who have felt harmed. Thus I have been, and will continue to be, committed to healing these wounds.

As the lineage holder of Shambhala, I want to demonstrate how we can move toward a culture of kindness in line with our legacy of teachings. Kindness can sometimes begin with acknowledging the ways we have harmed others, even if we did not intend to do so. Thus, with the strong support of my wife, the Sakyong Wangmo, I am now entering a period of self-reflection and listening. I have worked with, and at times struggled with, how to be a teacher and a human being. I have found that there is no easy solution to navigating these responsibilities. Like all of you, I am human and on the path. It is important to me that you know I am here, continuing to do my best. We

Above all, it is important to me that we continue to create a caring community where harm does not occur. It is my fervent wish that we be a community that relates to each other with compassion and kindness, so I have offered teachings and written practices to support such a culture. I want to encourage our community to completely immerse itself in caring and kindness. This is not easy work, and we cannot give up on each other. For me, it always comes back to feeling my own heart, my own humanity, and my own genuineness. It is with this feeling that I express to all of you my deep love and appreciation. I am committed to engaging in this process with you.

With love,

Sakyong Mipham Rinpoche

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 27th, 2018 at 8:14 AM

Title: Re: CTR, polygamy, cocaine, etc: Discuss

Content:

Aryjna said:

There is the argument, which has been mentioned in other similar threads, that you can tell whether something is actually 'crazy wisdom' by the results. If someone is hurt or driven to suicide for example, it is not enlightened activity. This makes sense of course.

On the other hand, I was just reminded of this sutra

<https://www.accesstoinight.org/tipitaka/sn/sn54/sn54.009.than.html> where many monks kill themselves because of a teaching by the Buddha. The circumstances are clearly different, but it seems to suggest that even enlightened activity can in some cases have terrible results for some.

Then again, I have no way of knowing what kind of activity what is described in the post is.

Malcolm wrote:

Apparently one of his sangyums offed herself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 27th, 2018 at 4:46 AM

Title: CTR, polygamy, cocaine, etc: Discuss

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Tabi: Trigger warning--this is not a nice, devotional story about CTR.

The first time I met His Majesty Chögyam Trungpa Rinpoche was at encampment in the late summer of 1983. I was attending a dathün (month long sitting practice) at Rocky Mountain Dharma Center. This retreat is supposed to be mostly silent, but I was never good at holding my tongue. During the retreat, some of my new friends and I plotted a raid on encampment, which was a military-style program that was simultaneously happening on the land. We decided to raid encampment and attempt to steal the flag. Our plan was simple: we could create a diversion and while the attention was on us, our cohorts would sneak around the perimeter and steal the flag. Three of us drove through the tori gates in a convertible blaring Michael Jackson's Beat It while the rest tried to sneak around and steal the flag. We were all immediately caught and locked up in the stockade. CTR came by that night to check out the prisoners. I noticed that he flirted shamefully with all the women/girls who were in the lock-up and totally and completely ignored me.

But I really met CTR in the backyard wedding of sangha members in Boulder in late January of 1985. I had been prepped by the family I nannied for for weeks in advance of the wedding. It appeared to work because I caught CTR's eye and he asked me to marry him the next day. Then there was so much activity! We had our charts read by Larry Laughlin who found the most "auspicious" day for our wedding. Given the tremendous constraints of marrying six women in a five months, there was some wiggle room with the dates. The first wedding I attended was Karen Lavin's. Next was Valerie Lorig Sanford, which happened on May 10th. Then Lady Cynde Grieves married him on May 13, Wendy Friedman was on May 17th, I was the fifth on June 12th, Ciel followed on her 18th birthday, and then Agness had her wedding in December of 1985.

There was so much to be done—especially for me as a new student who only completed through level four Shambhala training. I received stroke, lungta and werma transmission. I read Born in Tibet, and studied the Letter of the Golden Key Which fulfills desire, The Golden Dot, The Letter of the Black Ashe, Sacred World, the Practice of Warriorship, and Court Vision and Practice. I was on the fast track to learning and absorbing everything he'd ever created. I studied the texts themselves as well as the commentaries. Our ceremonies required correctly answering a direct question from CTR and the preceptor, who in my case was the regent. (Mine was the only ceremony with him as the preceptor—people said I should be honored—but I was not.) We were told to study the Six Ways of Ruling in particular, as it was rumored this would be one of the questions.

When I wasn't with CTR, I was completing my tasks as a nanny. And I was introduced to the Shambhala lodge with a party in my honor. I attended Karen, Cynde, Wendy and Valerie's ceremonies prior to mine. These all happened at the court in Boulder. We had dinners together where we were taught elocution by both Ashley Playfair and Carolyn Gimian. We had one dinner with CTR and the five of us Sangyum (Karen, Cynde, Wendy, Val and I), where we were served white fish with bones in it, green peas and white rice, and copious amounts of sake. We were learning how to eat like the British—holding our fork upside down in our left hand and our knife in the right to shovel the food onto the fork, not an easy task with that meal. During meals we usually played the qualities game, a parlor game CTR enjoyed.

One day I arrived at the court for a shift and I was told I was to receive another transmission from Marty Janowitz. I assumed this was to be like the others, perhaps he was giving me TGS transmission early. Marty told me this transmission was extremely sacred and was only known to a few close students. He then pulled out a vial filled with a white powdery substance. Marty told me it was ground up vitamin D or something. (I really can't remember exactly what he said it was). He put a bit of it on the spoon and told me to rub it on my gums, which I did. It was not cocaine. It was part of our job description to always carry a vial of "Tabi" which was the code name for cocaine. Due to his paralysis, CTR only had the use of one hand, so when he called for tabi it was our job to go into the bathroom with him, keep him steady, help him get his penis out before he wet his pants and put the coke on a spoon for him to inhale. It was also our job to keep his nose clean, and as you can tell from the picture, we were not always successful. Later, when I went to the bathroom alone, I put some on my gums. It was definitely cocaine.

This is another secret I have kept for over 30 years. I can no longer keep it. I believe it is not of benefit to anyone to keep this secret anymore. I believe it's important for the followers of Shambhala to know what really happened in the "inner circle" of the court. We all—every one of us—didn't know how to say "no" to CTR. We were so busy tripping over each other to do his bidding that we never questioned why an enlightened mediation master would need copious amounts of cocaine and alcohol every day. We never questioned why he spoke of every woman or young girl in sexual terms. It was supposed to be a great honor to sleep with him. No one wondered if his sexual appetite for his female students might be unhealthy.

I started wondering about it shortly after Ciel's suicide. Could this sexualized idea of women be unhealthy? Could this lack of boundaries eventually result in rage and self-hatred? Why did I think marrying a man with seven other wives, a serious drug addiction, alcoholism and suicidal tendencies shown as severe bulimia would be a good idea? I was 23 and vulnerable. And I said yes. Yes, I will do this strange thing. It was only later when I learned of power differentials and feminism that I truly understood how totally wrong it all was. And now I am triggered by all things Tibetan. I will never enter Karma Dzong again. It's too painful to see the hero worship and the enshrinement of this deeply disturbed man. And for those of you who might have spent a few nights with him or more and feel they knew all there was to know about him, I ask you to dig deeper. And for those of you who never met him yet still follow his teachings, you might want to ask hard questions of those in the know.

The most shocking thing for me through this whole process of sharing my truth is the sheer number of people who are lying now, and denying that sexualized violence has a negative effect on women. This continued minimization of the real, undeniable scars that are left from sexual assault and harassment is shocking. Shambhala has had choices every step of the way since we have begun talking about the neglect and child rape and abuse that is the legacy CTR left his close students. And this deplorable view of women continues through his sons. Time's Up Now.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 27th, 2018 at 4:32 AM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It means not mixing everything up like puttanesca sauce.

Grigoris said:

Puttanesca sauce is yummy: Garlic, tomato, capers, olives and anchovies. A whores delight!

Malcolm wrote:

Real puttanesca was made of whatever leftovers a girl brought home...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 27th, 2018 at 2:09 AM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

pemachophel said:

Please listen to Loppon/Malcolm. What he's saying is very true. Posting such materials on-line or in public in general is a breach of samaya and is one of the mechanisms for the decline and lack of efficacy of the Vajrayana in this degenerate age. Also as Loppon said, what others do is their own business (and their own karma). We should not think that, because "the cat is out of the bag," we have license to follow suit. Although the world is "going to hell in a hand-basket," without looking to the right or the left, each of us should practice the Dharma as purely as possible in order to slow that process.

The Vajrayana is a double-edged sword. When practiced correctly, it can quickly cut through eons of sin and obscuration. If mis-used, it can also just as quickly cut through our health, wealth, life-span, and happiness as well as all hope for liberation in this life or the bardo. You can't have it both ways.

This is absolutely no joke.

Malcolm wrote:

And the dharmapalas do punish samaya breakers.

Mantrik said:

I'm confused. Do you mean one should not have practices from different schools, such as Gelug and Nyingma, or even from different lineage masters within the same school - say Dzogchen Rinpoche (Mindroling) and LOTR (Dudjom) ?

Or do you mean that one should not create a hybrid practice?

Malcolm wrote:

It means not mixing everything up like puttanesca sauce.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 26th, 2018 at 11:49 PM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

Tlalok said:

Does this prohibition on mixing include supplementary practices as preliminaries to a particular practice, such as more elaborate refuge, intention and dedication prayers?

Malcolm wrote:

There should be no reason to do this.

Vasana said:

The reason is usually the inclinations of differing people. Some people have transmission for higher or more unelaborate practices but may also find useful other more elaborate practices like Ngondro from different traditions.

Malcolm wrote:

You misunderstand my point. The masters of the past have provided perfect practices in each lineage already, with nothing missing. If you are doing some sadhana, for example, there is no reason to add anything to it not already included in that tradition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 26th, 2018 at 11:14 PM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

pemachophel said:

Please listen to Loppon/Malcolm. What he's saying is very true. Posting such materials on-line or in public in general is a breach of samaya and is one of the mechanisms for the decline and lack of efficacy of the Vajrayana in this degenerate age. Also as Loppon said, what others do is their own business (and their own karma). We should not think that, because "the cat is out of the bag," we have license to follow suit. Although the world is "going to hell in a hand-basket," without looking to the right or the left, each of us should practice the Dharma as purely as possible in order to slow that process.

The Vajrayana is a double-edged sword. When practiced correctly, it can quickly cut through eons of sin and obscuration. If mis-used, it can also just as quickly cut through our health, wealth, life-span, and happiness as well as all hope for liberation in this life or the bardo. You can't have it both ways.

This is absolutely no joke.

Malcolm wrote:

And the dharmapalas do punish samaya breakers.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 26th, 2018 at 10:21 PM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That is very bad, not allowed, and the Dharmapālas of both systems will become unhappy and punish the offender.

Grigoris said:

Just when you thought that Abrahamic concepts about the divine had gone out of fashion...

And over at the opposite end of the scale...

With text as well...

Malcolm wrote:

If people want to break their samaya by posting such things and thus cutting off the possibility that they will realize the result in this life or in the bardo, it is sad, but I won't participate in such samaya breakage myself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 26th, 2018 at 7:31 AM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is how we roll in Vajrayāna. If you mix systems, it is considered very bad. The point is to understand how each system agrees with the others in terms of meaning, but practice just that system without mixing other elements into it from other lineages. Even when you have broad heterogeneous systems like Lamdre, which assembles its practice out of nine separate upadesha transmissions, one does not just add the Naro Chodruk system to make a tenth. That is very bad, not allowed, and the Dharmapālas of both systems will become unhappy and punish the offender.

Tlalok said:

Does this prohibition on mixing include supplementary practices as preliminaries to a particular practice, such as more elaborate refuge, intention and dedication prayers?

Malcolm wrote:

There should be no reason to do this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 26th, 2018 at 7:28 AM

Title: Re: Big messages to deplorables ???

Content:

Sādhaka said:

I don't think you're incorrect on that point.

My point is, who would trump get replaced with? Only another bush, obama, or clinton?

Yea people like Bernie Sanders, Cynthia McKinney, Ron Paul, and Ralph Nader might be a little better than all of the above; but I still think we're going to have to do even better than that, to slow down the crash course that we're on. Perhaps as Dharma practitioners, or aspiring ones, leaving politics alone altogether for now is the best course.

Or mostly focus on the issues that I mentioned in my previous post.

Malcolm wrote:

The reality is that we have to curb the power of the presidency. It has become unbalanced. This is the problem.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 26th, 2018 at 3:33 AM

Title: Re: So, Anthony Bourdain...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Apparently, he was offed by Hillary and Harvey Weinstein, according to the internet..,

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 25th, 2018 at 5:05 AM

Title: Re: Shentong view

Content:

Dharmasherab said:

Which schools of Tibetan Buddhism/Vajrayana share the Shentong view?

Malcolm wrote:

Karma Kagyu and Jonang, with some adherents in Nyingma too.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 24th, 2018 at 8:17 PM

Title: Re: Big messages to deplorables ???

Content:

Wayfarer said:

But one way to start might be to stop the hysterical attacks on Trump.

Malcolm wrote:

Attacks on Trump are justified. The man is a fascist and he is systematically destroying the US.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 23rd, 2018 at 3:47 AM

Title: Re: Thoughts on Dzogchen without buddhism?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Here we go back on topic. Dzogchen without Buddhism, without an unbroken lineage of realization, transmission and practice is populated by demons and will break your heart, your mind and ruin your life.

Malcolm wrote:

Or it is a car without an engine.

The interesting thing about the flintstone's car is that there is nothing to prevent the rear roller from falling off the frame...kind of like Dzogchen without Buddhism...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 23rd, 2018 at 2:35 AM

Title: Re: Big messages to deplorables ???

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<https://twitter.com/realDonaldTrump/status/1009916650622251009>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 22nd, 2018 at 11:48 PM

Title: Re: Dharma Wheel (Engaged)

Content:

egon said:

Hello everyone! I'm pretty active on DWE and I've registered here at DWM in an effort to explore the Mahayana tradition... which I only have a very basic understanding of. My practice is only a few months old, so really I only have a basic understanding of the whole shebang. Mostly modern Insight movement stuff, but I'm curious and open-minded. I didn't register in DWM to talk about DWE but I saw this thread and now here I am.

So, I'd like to invite everyone to give DWE a try if you're interested in social and ecological engagement. If you've visited and made up your mind, you might have a different experience. If you haven't, maybe now is the time. And maybe not! All good in the hood. I'd like to address one concern that's been addressed in this thread:

Malcolm wrote:

Far as I can tell, the place is filled with the Buddhist version of the alt-right. Wankers.

egon said:

I am completely unfamiliar with retrofuturist's ideas, so please forgive me my ignorance. However, the small but active DWE community doesn't seem to espouse any alt-right views in the slightest. In fact, very little (if any) right-wing ideology is endorsed whatsoever. If the "Malcolm" that I've quoted above is the same "malcolm" that posted in DWE, I really hope that they give it another try some day.

Ssshhh... don't tell 'em I told you... it's gettin a little stale over there and we need some new voices!

Malcolm wrote:

That was my initial assessment, not my final one.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 22nd, 2018 at 3:13 AM

Title: Re: Dharmapalas and Consorts

Content:

conebeckham said:

In Kamtsang Bernakchen and Palden Lhamo most often practiced together. There are several forms of Mahakala that are Yabyum, of course. So it's seems pretty clear that Enlightened protectors can have consorts.

There are worldly protectors, as well, that have consorts, as noted here. In fact, some worldly protectors have taken practitioners as consorts. That's about all I'll say about the matter.....I'd recommend not messing with Worldly protectors in general, unless you've accomplished the siddhi of your yidam, etc.

Mantrik said:

Thanks.

I wasn't aware of that Mahakala practice. I assume Maning is exempted, being 'gender unified'.

Hmm...did I just invent a new category for gender discrimination activists?

Yes, we should have no interaction with any Dharmapala practices unless guided by a Guru we can trust.

Malcolm wrote:

Maning here means nondual, not neuter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 21st, 2018 at 10:40 PM

Title: Re: Thoughts on Dzogchen without buddhism?

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Here we go back on topic. Dzogchen without Buddhism, without an unbroken lineage of realization, transmission and practice is populated by demons and will break your heart, your mind and ruin your life.

Malcolm wrote:

Or it is a car without an engine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 21st, 2018 at 3:22 AM

Title: Re: Will america reelect a wanna be dictator

Content:

tingdzin said:

...and not a member of the economic elite, they (and we) have a chance.

Grigoris said:

Trump is not a member of the U$ economic elite???

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. Nouveaux riche slum lord who resents the cultural elites who have always dismissed him as inconsequential.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 20th, 2018 at 9:40 AM

Title: Re: Thoughts on Dzogchen without buddhism?

Content:

Grigoris said:

Well my teacher, Loppon Ogyan Tenzin Rinpoche, gives DI, fourth empowerment, preliminaries, sadhana, you name it.

Actually, come to think of it, he is a big fan of preliminaries and supporting practices for the realisation of Dzogchen.

Malcolm wrote:

So is ChNN.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 19th, 2018 at 7:38 PM

Title: Re: Thoughts on Dzogchen without buddhism?

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

My teacher said in Europe there are teachers who may give Dzogchen teachings without any Buddhist prerequisites, but in our lineage (Nyingma) "where the breath of Dakinis is still warm", we believe in practicing the preliminaries, i.e. Ngondro, first. That's what I follow. He also said any intellectual confusion will be resolved through practice.

Sounds to me like some of Wibur's issues with Buddhadharma are a result of not entirely understanding dharma. Many of us have been there, too. The solution is not in silencing or ignoring our minds' confusion, but continuing to delve into it. I've personally found the more I investigated, the more Buddhist teaching rang true. The fact that the result has such profound veracity kind of validates the path, I gather?

Malcolm wrote:

The issue is not prelims. .

TharpaChodron said:

I'm not saying it's prelims specifically, but as you mentioned the Buddhist teachings are somewhat inseparable from Dzogchen.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, it is also an independent yāna which can be practiced by itself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 19th, 2018 at 9:32 AM

Title: Re: Thoughts on Dzogchen without buddhism?

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

My teacher said in Europe there are teachers who may give Dzogchen teachings without any Buddhist prerequisites, but in our lineage (Nyingma) "where the breath of Dakinis is still warm", we believe in practicing the preliminaries, i.e. Ngondro, first. That's what I follow. He also said any intellectual confusion will be resolved through practice.

Sounds to me like some of Wibur's issues with Buddhadharma are a result of not entirely understanding dharma. Many of us have been there, too. The solution is not in silencing or ignoring our minds' confusion, but continuing to delve into it. I've personally found the more I investigated, the more Buddhist teaching rang true. The fact that the result has such profound veracity kind of validates the path, I gather?

Malcolm wrote:

The issue is not prelims. .

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 19th, 2018 at 3:45 AM

Title: Re: Bön Sarma

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

H.H. Kundrol Drakpa Rinpoche - 016.jpg

According Jean Huang,

Have unofficial translation as follows:

Bön and Nyingma both the heart of Dharma.

Kagyü is such as the eyes of the Dharma.

Gelug is such as ornaments of the Dharma.

Therefore I don't have any Partiality.

H.H. Kundrol Darkpa Rinpoche is non - sectarian, because he was follower of Bön Sarma, but had no function / role for Sakya in his poem , very remarkable.

Malcolm wrote:

Fault of the translator:

The teaching of Nyingma and Bon are the life of the doctrine,

The mind, the all-creating king, is totally independent.
The Drukpa Kagyu Dharma is the eye of the doctrine, which, in general, guide ignorance sentient beings.
The Glorious Sakyapa and Gelugs are the ornaments of the doctrine, transforming the appearance of sentient beings whose minds know nothing.
Therefore, there is freedom from bias about schools.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 19th, 2018 at 2:48 AM

Title: Re: Thoughts on Dzogchen without buddhism?

Content:

Snowbear said:

How in the world can anyone receive a DI that early?

Malcolm wrote:

Good karma.

Snowbear said:

No, in the DC case it's just because of the massive public events.

Malcolm wrote:

It is good karma to attend those "massive public events."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 19th, 2018 at 2:45 AM

Title: Re: Thoughts on Dzogchen without buddhism?

Content:

Snowbear said:

Seriously? I'd like to know which Lama said this.

Malcolm wrote:

Me. Or does it have to be a Tibetan? A Western, classically-trained ācārya is not good enough for you?

Snowbear said:

No. I need a lineage holder.

Malcolm wrote:

So, Tulku Orgyen, Chogyal Namkhai Norbu, and Kunzang Dechen Lingpa are not good enough for you?

Or would you prefer someone who caters to your obvious preconceptions?

I think you fundamentally misunderstand somethings about Dzogchen teachings:

If this is practiced, all will be liberated;
there is no distinction between sharp and dull capacity.
If one practices, even a cowherd will be liberated.
If one understands the significance of the luminosity of one's mind through a direct perception, the rhetoric of scholars is not necessary here;
just as when one eats sugar,
there is no need for an explanation of the taste of sugar.
Without understanding this, even a paṇḍita will be deluded.

-- Flight of the Garuda, Zhabkar

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 19th, 2018 at 2:44 AM

Title: Re: Thoughts on Dzogchen without buddhism?

Content:

Snowbear said:

Seriously? I'd like to know which Lama said this.

Mantrik said:

If you attend a retreat with ChNN and receive DI, are you saying that before it can have effect you must first have learned about Buddhism, or taken Refuge....?

Snowbear said:

How in the world can anyone receive a DI that early?

Malcolm wrote:

Good karma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 19th, 2018 at 2:43 AM

Title: Re: Thoughts on Dzogchen without buddhism?

Content:

Snowbear said:
How in the world can anyone receive a DI that early?

Mantrik said:
By turning up. The effect that DI transmission may have will vary, of course, but receiving it has no prerequisites that I know of other than the master being willing to give it and the disciple being willing to receive it at the same time.

Snowbear said:
OK. It sounds like Namkhai Norbu is unconventional. I'd like to know which conventional lineage holders of Dzogchen say that.

Malcolm wrote:
Tulku Orgyen used give direct introduction to non-Buddhists whenever they showed up. So did the great tertön, Kunzang Dechen Lingpa.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, June 19th, 2018 at 2:41 AM
Title: Re: Thoughts on Dzogchen without buddhism?
Content:

Snowbear said:
Who said this?

Mantrik said:
He did. lol :
But I'm sure he has a good basis for saying it, if that's what you are seeking.

Snowbear said:
Seriously? I'd like to know which Lama said this.

Malcolm wrote:
Me. Or does it have to be a Tibetan? A Western, classically-trained ācārya is not good enough for you?

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, June 18th, 2018 at 9:58 PM
Title: Re: Thoughts on Dzogchen without buddhism?
Content:
Widur said:
Are there any ways to verify the recognition more thoroughly?

Malcolm wrote:

You need to study with a realized Dzogchen or Mahāmudra teacher. Otherwise, you will always be in doubt.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 18th, 2018 at 9:19 PM

Title: Re: Meditate and grow your ego

Content:

Queequeg said:

Meditation and yoga seem in some cases to inflate the ego. Like a cyst that needs to reach a certain size to be lanced maybe there's art to the practice?

What say you, Dharmawheelers?

<https://qz.com/1307380/yoga-and-meditation-boost-your-ego-say-psychology-researchers/>

Snowbear said:

A well-made point.

Malcolm wrote:

Not at all, the author keeps discussing yoga and meditation without defining which yoga, which meditation, and vaguely addressing all of it to the doorstep of Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 18th, 2018 at 8:36 PM

Title: Re: Meditate and grow your ego

Content:

Queequeg said:

Meditation and yoga seem in some cases to inflate the ego. Like a cyst that needs to reach a certain size to be lanced maybe there's art to the practice?

What say you, Dharmawheelers?

<https://qz.com/1307380/yoga-and-meditation-boost-your-ego-say-psychology-researchers/>

Malcolm wrote:

The article is predicated on this misnomer:

"[S]piritual Buddhist practices like yoga and meditation may not do what proponents typically say they do, according to the study authors."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 18th, 2018 at 8:33 PM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

PeterC said:

If we're talking about Dzogchen, then the answer is; not many. Classification of practitioners by capacity is based on application, not intelligence. Numerous instructions exist offering the same sentiments as the 'old dogs' text.

florin said:

But the capacity for dzogchen is dependent, among other things on a reasonably good grasp of emptiness teachings.

PeterC said:

Yes, but define “reasonably good” in this context...

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, inferential understanding.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 18th, 2018 at 8:32 PM

Title: Re: Thoughts on Dzogchen without buddhism?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is no such thing as Dzogchen without Buddhism.

Grigoris said:

You are going to have to substantiate this, as I have seen you argue the complete opposite in the past and wish to know what the new justification is.

Malcolm wrote:

I have never argued there is Dzogchen without Buddhism. I have argued that one can directly enter Dzogchen teachings directly without first formally declaring oneself a Buddhist. But once one enters Dzogchen teachings, one is defacto a Buddhist since all the assumptions about the basis, path, and result are Buddhist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 18th, 2018 at 7:51 PM

Title: Re: Thoughts on Dzogchen without buddhism?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is no such thing as Dzogchen without Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 18th, 2018 at 2:35 AM

Title: Re: My new neighbor

Content:

Jim1 said:

Of course I'd feel the same way.

And way to pile on here man. Very Buddhist of you.

Malcolm wrote:

You brought it up. I just asked you some questions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 18th, 2018 at 2:32 AM

Title: Re: Which consciousnesses exist in the bardo?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

"Being projected by the same action that projects the pūrvakālabhava, an intermediate being has the form of this being." <-- does this mean that, for the sake of example, a being to be embodied as a cat has something of a form of a cat in the bardo? Or an asura, to use a more conventional example?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Coëmgenu said:

Then the depictions of gandharvāni or gandharvāḥ as somewhat angelic winged people playing instruments is Indic fancy?

Malcolm wrote:

No, there are two kinds of gandharvas, one, a type of demigod, the other, a name for a bardo being.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 18th, 2018 at 2:05 AM

Title: Re: Which consciousnesses exist in the bardo?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

"Being projected by the same action that projects the pūrvakālabhava, an intermediate being has the form of this being." <-- does this mean that, for the sake of example, a being to be embodied as a cat has something of a form of a cat in the bardo? Or an asura, to use a more conventional example?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 18th, 2018 at 12:41 AM

Title: Re: Which consciousnesses exist in the bardo?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

We're dead, so I am assuming that the sense-media, in their traditional understanding, either do not apply or apply very differently.

Which consciousnesses are operative before embodiment?

Malcolm wrote:

all, since we have complete aggregates, sense bases, and sense elements in the bardo.

Coëmgenu said:

Is there form in the bardo?

Malcolm wrote:

There is a subtle body. See the Kosha. Chapter three, near the beginning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 18th, 2018 at 12:04 AM

Title: Re: Which consciousnesses exist in the bardo?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

We're dead, so I am assuming that the sense-media, in their traditional understanding, either do not apply or apply very differently.

Which consciousnesses are operative before embodiment?

Malcolm wrote:

all, since we have complete aggregates, sense bases, and sense elements in the bardo.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 17th, 2018 at 10:24 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Sakya is amazing. I took Khön Vajrakīlaya from HHST. I really value it a lot. What I mean to say is one not so self directed w Kagyu.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, HHST is a supreme gem of the three realms.

As to self-direction, I guess so. I guess the main difference is that in Sakya, the names mahāmudra and dzogchen are reserved for the result. The Kagyus and Nyingmapas teach them as a paths, respectively.

Crazywisdom said:

I agree. And one point it seems most experienced practitioners I've heard have come around to the realization that in the end the result and path are indivisible.

Malcolm wrote:

Basis, path and result are indeed indivisible. This is a key point of Sakya teaching.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 17th, 2018 at 9:48 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

most people will have more opportunities for Dzogchen nowadays. And honestly there are so so many ways to advance in Dzogchen. Mahamudra is a bit more limited in terms of transmission and practice. Not so easy to get the big thumbs up from a lama due to being tied up with monk life.

Malcolm wrote:

The experiential view of Kagyu mahāmudra, Sakya indivisibility of samsara and and nirvana, Dzogchen trekchö, etc., are the same.

The differences in how these schools manifest the body of light aka jñānakāya, lay in differences in their completion stages, but the result is the same.

In terms of advancement, all require intense dedication, years of solitary retreat, and so on in order to manifest buddhahood in one lifetime. All also offer the prospect of liberation at the time of death or in the bardo for those of us who are less diligent.

Crazywisdom said:

Sakya is amazing. I took Khön Vajrakīlaya from HHST. I really value it a lot. What I mean to say is one not so self directed w Kagyu.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, HHST is a supreme gem of the three realms.

As to self-direction, I guess so. I guess the main difference is that in Sakya, the names mahāmudra and dzogchen are reserved for the result. The Kagyus and Nyingmapas teach them as a paths, respectively.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 17th, 2018 at 9:13 PM

Title: Re: My new neighbor

Content:

Jim1 said:

Any shred of respect that I had for her is now completely gone.

Malcolm wrote:

Perhaps they have an open relationship. Maybe she is polyamorous. Maybe the first guy is gay and they hang out a lot, sleepovers even.

If this were a guy seeing multiple woman, would you feel the same way?

If not, examine yourself for sexist attitudes.

And, it is none of your business.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 17th, 2018 at 8:59 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

most people will have more opportunities for Dzogchen nowadays. And honestly there are so so many ways to advance in Dzogchen. Mahamudra is a bit more limited in terms of transmission and practice. Not so easy to get the big thumbs up from a lama due to being tied up with monk life.

Malcolm wrote:

The experiential view of Kagyu mahāmudra, Sakya indivisibility of samsara and and nirvana, Dzogchen trekchö, etc., are the same.

The differences in how these schools manifest the body of light aka jñānakāya, lay in differences in their completion stages, but the result is the same.

In terms of advancement, all require intense dedication, years of solitary retreat, and so on in order to manifest buddhahood in one lifetime. All also offer the prospect of liberation at the time of death or in the bardo for those of us who are less diligent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 17th, 2018 at 10:51 AM

Title: Re: Triskandhadharmasutra - The Three Heap Sutra

Content:

kirtu said:

This is a Mahayana sutra for purification through confession and prostrations to the 35 Buddhas listed in the sutra. Lama Zopa says in his instructions that the seven Buddhas of the Medicine Buddha Sutra can be appended to the list of the 35 Buddhas.

This sutra is also called the Sutra of the Three Heaps. The practice is also called the Confession to the 35 Buddhas and similar names.

Here is one link to the sutra:

<http://www.thubtenchodron.org/PrayersAndPractices/35Buddhas.pdf>

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

It is actually an extract from a sutra in the ratnakuta collection.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 17th, 2018 at 5:49 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

Aryjna said:

One of the texts Magnus posted above mentions two different kinds of Mahamudra.

<http://www.lotsawahouse.org/tibetan-masters/jamgon-kongtrul/mahamudra-swift-lord-of-realization>

The Dharma is vast and it has many forms,
But the teachings that bring Buddhahood in a single lifetime
Are the two ultimate systems of Mahāmudrā and Dzogchen.
The Mahāmudrā of bliss and emptiness on the path of means
Is the actual practice of secret mantra,
But those who practise it are few and far between.
The Mahāmudrā of the innate on the path of liberation
Is an easier practice offering great reward at little risk,
And is of benefit to all, regardless of capacity.

Malcolm wrote:

Sahaja Mahāmudra also requires empowerment, usually termed "the descent of the wisdom vajra." The gradual style of pointing out is appropriate to so-called "Sūtra mahāmudra.," which is mahāmudra in name only.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 17th, 2018 at 5:45 AM

Title: Re: Western Monastic - reasons why she left

Content:

weitsicht said:

Right now, Tibetan monastics have employment status. They are granted income, bank account, car, mobile phone, pension.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is paid for by their families and or patrons.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 17th, 2018 at 5:40 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

weitsicht said:

Is it correct that Dzogchen starts off with DI and develops on the basis of that whereas Mahamudra offers a gradual part in which the guru is NOT directly and unmistakably showing the nondualist view to the student?

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is not correct to say this.

Miroku said:

Is guru in mahamudra giving sorts of DI like in dzogchen at the beginning or is it showing it during the practice based on students experience?

Malcolm wrote:

Which Mahamudra are you talking about? The result of the two stages is real mahāmudra. In any empowerment, direct introduction is given during the fourth empowerment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 17th, 2018 at 4:43 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

weitsicht said:

Is it correct that Dzogchen starts off with DI and develops on the basis of that whereas Mahamudra offers a gradual part in which the guru is NOT directly and unmistakably showing the nondualist view to the student?

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is not correct to say this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 17th, 2018 at 4:42 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

WeiHan said:

Rigpa in a non-conceptual perception of emptiness which corresponds to path of seeing.

Malcolm wrote:

That is not rigpa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 17th, 2018 at 12:50 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

WeiHan said:

So Dzogchen is name of a path as well as name of the fruit? The path that can be followed and practiced by non-aryans are practices like those in Rushens...

Aryjna said:

Yes, it seems so. In any case, ChNNR always says that Dzogchen is a separate path.

Malcolm wrote:

Can be, but not necessarily, and the 17 tantras state one should practice the three inner tantras in union.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 16th, 2018 at 7:41 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Can you explain the Bon position here? I am not sure I understand it, do they assert different Buddhahoods, or simply claim that vehicle below Dzogchen do not lead to full Buddhahood?

From footnotes: Translation and commentary by Lopon Tenzin Namdak, "Heart Drops Of Dharmakaya"

...Mahamudra is the union of emptiness and bliss, and as Tsongkhapa explained very clearly the emptiness referred to is that of the Madhyamika view; this is not the view of emptiness referred to in Dzogchen.

Many schools have terms and propositions which are very similar to those of Dzogchen, and this has led to some confusion when this label has been applied to other systems.

For example, Sakya Pandita was very explicit in condemning Dzogchen as not being a Buddhist view at all. All the Dzogchen texts make special mention of the need to separate out all the other views in order to make clear the meaning of the terms in the context of Dzogchen alone.

At the very beginning you must know the other views, but they are to be discarded as this is the highest and best vehicle. Many Dzogchen teachers at present are teaching that Mahamudra and Madhyamika and Dzogchen views are not different. But this is not found in the literature at all.

Many teachings seem very similar to Dzogchen, but all teachings are bounded by thought. If you go back to their origin there are always precepts that say this is the right way and that is the wrong way. Once you have this background you are bounded by thoughts. But Dzogchen has no background; this is difficult to explain as everything Dzogchen says is for the practitioner with capacity. This difference of view is very important to understand.

Lopon comments that this means not hesitating or meditating, and this is why many Buddhist masters criticized Dzogchen. For example, Tsongkhapa asserted that the natural state in Dzogchen is just like being unconscious. Far from that, this awareness is very bright and clear. But the Indian commentators on the Prajnaparamita, such as Nagarjuna, did not understand this awareness that is present after thoughts have stopped. They do recognise something similar, the undeluded direct cognition of sunyata (void). This cognition is inseparable from its object and undeluded; but it is not the same.

"But according to this system we don't accept any teachings of theirs; we don't think that their teachings are either good or bad—we don't care. Why? Because we are completely outside of the judgement of their points. There is no point in arguing or judging; we don't care. Like the elephant—if he is thirsty no one can stop him from going to the water! All these different views have been bounded by thought and so are grasping."

In Mahamudra, for example, the body disappears and the illusory body is realized. It is not that the physical becomes the illusory body; the physical body dies as in the normal case but the mind realizes the illusory body.

The Bonpo philosophy has a background completely independent of the Indian and is much earlier. Later it found its way to India and the Indians accepted some of its concepts.

haha said:

It can provide his basic assertions. You can check more on that book or on other sources.

Probably, it is uniqueness of the Bonpo Dzogchen as they hold such position. It also shows the different aspects in Buddhist Dzogchen and Bonpo Dzogchen, even though they both share similar terminology, methods and theory. Everyone likes to hold his or her position is correct, and others are mistaken. It is natural.

Malcolm wrote:

The above notes by Reynolds bear errors. Among them, he is mistaken about Sakya Pandita. Sakya Pandita does not dismiss Dzogchen as being nonbuddhist anywhere in his writings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 16th, 2018 at 7:35 AM

Title: Re: Hevajra Sadhana and Bodhisattva Vows Renewal

Content:

WeiHan said:

Hi,

Is reciting and practicing the Hevajra Sadhana, either Unmistaken meaning or The Six Limbs, renews the Bodhisattvas vows?

Thankyou.

Malcolm wrote:

yes, of course.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 16th, 2018 at 7:34 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

Yeh, insulting other ones teachers and also here the members in public that should always be avoided, out of respect, so i have learned that by the years. But sometimes it happens.

Malcolm wrote:

I have nothing but respect for Loppon Tenzin Namdak, but I think the Bonpos are mistaken on this particular point. YMMV.

CHNN also considers the result of (tantric) mahāmudra and Dzogchen to be the same, as shown above.

kalden yungdrung said:

That is a different statement, which can be accepted.

In the beginning you insinuated that Lo pon Tenzin Namdak was mistaken and so it was.

Malcolm wrote:

You brought it up, not me. I merely pointed out that I think LTN is mistaken on this point in response to your sectarian statement that the Buddhahood of Dzogchen is "higher" than the result of practicing the two stages of Secret Mantra. No Buddhist accepts this point of view— not in Sakya, not in Gelug, not in Nyingma, and not in Kagyu.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 16th, 2018 at 5:42 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

Yeh, insulting other ones teachers and also here the members in public that should always be avoided, out of respect, so i have learned that by the years. But sometimes it happens.

Malcolm wrote:

I have nothing but respect for Loppon Tenzin Namdak, but I think the Bonpos are mistaken on this particular point. YMMV.

CHNN also considers the result of (tantric) mahāmudra and Dzogchen to be the same, as shown above.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 16th, 2018 at 4:26 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but that takes three incalculable eons, not in one lifetime.

WeiHan said:

But the point of contention has been whether sutrayana method can or not and not about the length of time each methods will require.

That said, I have been wondering the stance that sutrayana takes three incalculable eons to attain perfect Buddhahood is the view of Tantrayana or that is the view of sutrayana itself.

dzogchungpa said:

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=GDNJIRfFNnw&feature=youtu.be&t=919>, DJKR quotes the Buddha to the effect that the three incalculable eons required for Buddhahood is actually even shorter than the time it takes for a spark to come out from a fire.

Malcolm wrote:

In a universe where a billion universes can be included in an atom, three incalculable eons can fit in a second. But for you, it will still be three incalculable eons, not the time it takes a spark to jump out of a fire.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 16th, 2018 at 4:24 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

WeiHan said:

Answer by DKR: Can. There are various methods to attain rainbow body, it can also be attained by practicing six or ten paramitas, even if one practices the Mahayana bodhisattva path, rainbow body can similarly be attained.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but that takes three incalculable eons, not in one lifetime.

WeiHan said:

But the point of contention has been whether sutrayana method can or not and not about the length of time each methods will require.

That said, I have been wondering the stance that sutrayana takes three incalculable eons to attain perfect Buddhahood is the view of Tantrayana or that is the view of sutrayana itself.

Malcolm wrote:

Sutrayāna itself.

The point is whether one can achieve buddhahood in one lifetime or not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 16th, 2018 at 3:50 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

WeiHan said:

Answer by DKR: Can. There are various methods to attain rainbow body, it can also be attained by practicing six or ten paramitas, even if one practices the Mahayana bodhisattva path, rainbow body can similarly be attained.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but that takes three incalculable eons, not in one lifetime.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 16th, 2018 at 2:41 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

bryandavis said:

Greetings,

Malcolm wrote: Sakya Pandita asserts in the Muni's Intent that that Dzogchen is the name of the result of the nine Yānas of the Nyingma school, Mahāmudra is the name of the result of the new tantras. ChNN agrees with Sakya Pandita's perspective on this, so when he states that the result of Mahāmudra and Dzogchen are the same, he is referring to Mahāmudra as it is understood in the Sakya school, not the Kagyu school.

Malcolm, how would resultant Mahamudra be presented in the Kagyu fold compared to Sakya or Gelug? Is this due to using Gompopas four yogas or Ganges Mahamudra upadesha as explanation?

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāmudra as a result of the two stagesgyu in Ka is identical with the above. Sūtra mahāmudra does not have the same result because it is well, sūtra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 15th, 2018 at 6:59 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

haha said:

Basis of Mahamudra, or Dzogchen is same. Path is different; it is different because of different inclination of sentient beings. Sentient beings have different disposition; so the path is different in that respect. Result is the same; that is attaining Complete Buddhahood; not only rainbow body. Inclining to different path does not change the base; fruition is just full development of potentiality of the base. (PO)

But CNNR, "Dzogchen Teachings"

The Sutra teaching has never recognized rigpa as explained in the Dzogchen teaching.

....This is why Madhyamika, which is a philosophical system, negates the existence of the Base completely. In Dzogchen, the Base does not mean a concrete object or concept, but rather our real condition.

People who have learned a little about Sutra and then study the Dzogchen teaching often confuse the Base in Dzogchen with the concept of the "base" in the Yogachara system. The Yogachara system uses the term kunzhi, kun meaning "all," and zhi meaning "base."

...the Yogachara scholars posited the kunzhi, the "base of all," where karma-producing seeds, as potentiality, are maintained. They considered that the base exists for this purpose.

Nagarjuna refuted the Yogachara concept of kunzhi and never accepted it. He could not understand the Dzogchen view of the Base, and thus his Madhyamika philosophy rejected that as well.

In Tantra there is the idea that something is transformed into something else, and that concept is fundamental to Tantric practice.

The idea of impure and pure vision is absent right from the beginning in the process of learning about Dzogchen.

Jamgön Kongtrul said that Mahamudra corresponds to the Semdé teachings of Dzogpachenpo. (<http://www.rigpawiki.org/index.php?title=Mahamudra/url>)

If that is the case how can one get the fruit of Dzogchen Upadesh by practicing just Mahamudra(i.e. similar to semde)?

Malcolm wrote:

That Mahāmudrā is not the result mahamudra taught in Sakya and Gelug.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 15th, 2018 at 8:01 AM

Title: Re: TRUCK FUMP

Content:

Dan74 said:

Did you check any of this, Mantrik? At least half looks like fake news to me on a cursory search. I think we should be very careful not to help spread fake news around - it inevitably serves an agenda that is very different to what it pretends to care about.

Malcolm wrote:

Dan, did you read his caption?

Dan74 said:

Meanwhile, courtesy of your friendly local Russian Troll Farm, some click bait posted on frak:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 15th, 2018 at 2:49 AM

Title: Re: Western Monastic - reasons why she left

Content:

Virgo said:

In general TB is having a hard time adapting to the West.

Kevin...

Malcolm wrote:

I don't agree, actually. It is better for the west than Sutric Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 15th, 2018 at 1:52 AM

Title: Re: Western Monastic - reasons why she left

Content:

Grigoris said:

The economic aspect is spot on. Here in Greece if you don't have a sponsor, or an independent source of income, you can forget monkhood.

Malcolm wrote:

The situation in Tibet was the same. Monastics were generally supported by their families. The more poor the family, the less likely there would be a monk in the family.

Poor monks were workers, cooks, stable hands, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 14th, 2018 at 8:29 PM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

conebeckham said:

I agree-Mipham was clearly not opposed to analysis. Nor was Karmapa Mikyo Dorje, or a host of other Kagyu and Nyingma commentators. But it's the ability to recognize the limits of such an approach, and to foster other valid approaches, that constitutes those Kagyu and Nyingma lamas. But that's tangential to this thread.

Malcolm wrote:

The difference was explained recently by HHST at Lamdre.

The example wisdom of analysis is the description, "a moon is something round and white, with a cool glow."

The example wisdom of empowerment is showing a moon in the water.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 14th, 2018 at 8:19 AM

Title: Re: Korean War Over?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

35227998_1697184630402163_765011216757161984_n.jpg (90.08 KiB) Viewed 758 times

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 14th, 2018 at 7:57 AM

Title: Re: Korean War Over?

Content:

shaunc said:

Except of course a chance at peace.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that there is no deal. Kim got to meet with the president of the US without having to give up a thing; while Trump agreed, without consulting anyone, that we were going to cancel military exercises with S Korea, oh, and he got to show Kim a ridiculous movie trailer.

Queequeg said:

One US Citizen won... Trump gets to tweet about what a great accomplishment that he sat down with Kim and got to know him well enough to assure Americans that a deal is forthcoming. The rubes who watch Hannity will all think Trump got the greatest deal ever, and his favorability ratings will get a bump. String enough of these photo ops together and there is the making of a reelection campaign.

SMH

Malcolm wrote:

Not so sure:

Fifth, Trump is a sucker. Kim is not. Say what you will about the North Korean despot, but consolidating power in his vipers' nest regime, fielding a credible nuclear arsenal, improving his economy without easing political controls, playing nuclear brinkmanship with Trump and then, within weeks, getting the prestige of a superpower summit are political achievements of the first order. Machiavelli smiles from the grave.

As for Trump, the supposed success of the summit after the debacle in Quebec appeals to innate love of drama. He is where he loves to be: at the center of a stunned world's attention.

But he is also in the place where he always gets himself, and everyone else in his orbit, into the worst trouble: panting for the object of his desire. That's been true whether it's the Plaza Hotel, Stormy Daniels and now the "ultimate deal" with Pyongyang. Oilman T. Boone Pickens had the smartest line on this when on Monday he tweeted: "Negotiating advice 101. When you want to make a deal real bad you will make a really bad deal." <https://www.nytimes.com/2018/06/12/opinion/trump-north-korea-diplomacy-reagan.html?rref=collection%2Fsectioncollection%2Fopinion-columnists>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 14th, 2018 at 6:54 AM

Title: Re: Korean War Over?

Content:

shaunc said:

So far not a shot has been fired and considering where we were a few months ago I'd have to say that it's not a bad outcome. Of course only time will tell.

Malcolm wrote:

The US got nothing in this deal at all.

shaunc said:

Except of course a chance at peace.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that there is no deal. Kim got to meet with the president of the US without having to give up a thing; while Trump agreed, without consulting anyone, that we were going to cancel military exercises with S Korea, oh, and he got to show Kim a ridiculous movie trailer.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 14th, 2018 at 4:18 AM

Title: Re: Korean War Over?

Content:

shaunc said:

So far not a shot has been fired and considering where we were a few months ago I'd have to say that it's not a bad outcome. Of course only time will tell.

Malcolm wrote:

The US got nothing in this deal at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 14th, 2018 at 4:06 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

florin said:

I have read LTN's arguments on the matter but i am still unclear on the reasons why he believes that there are differences in results.

Anyway, he clearly rejects the idea that the budhahoods of sutra and tantra are identical to that of dzogchen.

But he says something interesting about the reason why some might think that tantra and mahamudra is identical with dzogchen. He thinks that it has something to do with the way the rime movement of Kongtrul and Wangpo was influenced by the dzogchen view and how in the end, these days, most kagyu people would present their teaching as dzogchen when in actuality is just the mahamudra of Gampopa, system that was severely criticised by Sakya Pandita and other scholars.

Malcolm wrote:

Sakya Pandita asserts in the Muni's Intent that that Dzogchen is the name of the result of the nine Yānas of the Nyingma school, Mahāmudra is the name of the result of the new tantras. ChNN agrees with Sakya Pandita's perspective on this, so when he states that the result of Mahāmudra and Dzogchen are the same, he is referring to Mahāmudra as it is understood in the Sakya school, not the Kagyu school.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 14th, 2018 at 3:38 AM

Title: Re: TRUCK FUMP

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 14th, 2018 at 1:53 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

WeiHan said:

If he can't explain, maybe i can help him. Only Thogal practice which is present in Atiyoga can achieve body of light. This body of light, sometimes called Great Transference body (GTB) is different from the kind that the body just shrink in size or even disappear. "Body of light" mentioned by Sachen Kunga Nyingpo in Chakrasamvara, as Malcolm mentioned, refers to the second type which the body shrink in size or disappeared but it is not the first type of Great Transference Body.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it refers to the first kind.

WeiHan said:

If you disagree completely, then other stances are possible. Other paths such as tantras and sutras can attain GTB too except that they do not mentioned it explicitly. This is the possibility that I attempted to play a role in by quoting chapter 16 in Lotus sutra in a preceding post.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no body method in sūtra, so that result is not available to sūtra practitioners.

Further, that mahāmudra and dzogchen are equivalent is stated by Karma Charmed in his Mountain Dharma:

Mahāmuda and Mahāsandhi are different names, but do not differ in meaning.

Many other great masters make the same observation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 13th, 2018 at 11:06 AM

Title: Re: Boston-area teachings: Changchub Dorje's Atiyoga

Content:

amanitamusc said:

Malcolm what is your take on this?

Malcolm wrote:

I don't know Lama Lena, so I have no opinion one way or another.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 13th, 2018 at 3:39 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

Marc said:

@Kalden Yungdrung & @Malcolm

Hi guys,

Could it be that we have some semantic problem here?

Do Bönpo, Nyingma & Sarma really refer to exactly the same thing when they speak of Mahamudra ?

As far as Madhyamika is concerned and (as little as I know) "Bön Madhyamika" is very close / similar to "Guelug Madhyamika"... Hence the strong "critic" from the point of view of "Bön Dzogchen". However does that critic really apply to the "Nyingma Madhyamika" as well ? Not sure at all...

Could there be something similar going on here in this discussion about Mahamudra ?

@Malcolm specifically:

Don't Nyingma Dzogchen Tantras ever claim some uniqueness to the fruit of Dzogchen ?

Isn't it said that 10th Bhumi = "Sutra Buddhahood" / 13th Bhumi = "Tantra Buddhahood" / 16th Bhumi = "Dzogchen Buddhahood" ?

Thx

Malcolm wrote:

Hi Marc, there is no result higher than anuttarasamyaksambuddhahood.

The thirteenth Bhumi described in Nyingma texts is not the same as the thirteenth Bhumi described in sarma tantras, where it is the equivalent of the Nyingma 16th Bhumi.

As we have seen above, it is the opinion of Buddhist masters that the result of mahamudra (two stages) and Dzogchen are the same.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 12th, 2018 at 8:36 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Correct.

kalden yungdrung said:

If this is so "correct" as you state that is what i doubt greatly.

florin said:

"In other traditions of Tantrism, there's also something we often call jalu. There are manifestations after death in these other levels of Tantrism where the body disappears. But the method is different. It employs always what's called (sgyu-lus).....

.....But its characteristic of Tantrism where much is said about gyulu (sgyu-lus), the mayic body, the principle here is explained in this way, that the state of consciousness unites with the subtle prana, vital energy, and out of this arises a kind of body made only of prana, of vital energy." CNNr

Malcolm wrote:

This in fact is how the Gelukpas explain illusory body in relation to the Guhyasamaja tradition. The way it is explained in Sakya by Gorampa Sonam Seng-ge is different. Here too he explains the illusory body as the actual transformation of the physical body, not a new body that arises after death. So there is a great difference here.

However, Sachen's explanation does not use the term rainbow body, and uses the term 'od kyi sku, aka body of light.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 12th, 2018 at 9:03 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

It means,that without Thögal one can attain the Light Body?

Malcolm wrote:

Correct.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 12th, 2018 at 5:20 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

rang.drol said:

That would imply that the realization of mahamudra would equal the attainment of rainbow body, which is uncommon in dzogchen too (to be attained by application of certain specific practices only).

So might we rather say: the realization of dzogchen trekchod is the same as in mahamudra, while the attainment of rainbow body is (or at least manifests) somewhat different?

Malcolm wrote:

No, also the body of light is realized in the result, mahamudra.

rang.drol said:

My memory may mislead me, but if I'm not mistaken I remember ChNN stating that the body of light attained in certain other traditions doesn't equal the rainbow body, which as stated previously is uncommon for dzogchen standards too. Many great dzogchen masters did not manifest rainbow body despite their high level of realization.

So if the result of dzogchen, mahamudra and what else particular vajrayana tradition one reckons to be ultimate would be the same, why emphasize the particular methods associated with it as well as its rather rare occurrence?

Also from a dzogchen point of view the base is defined in different ways in the context of trekchod and thogal: from that angle one might as well stated that although the base is the same, the 'depth' (I think the texts talk of gting in tibetan if my memory doesn't fail) of understanding is different, hence the path is different, so why exclude a different 'depth' in the result?

Malcolm wrote:

The Cakrasamvara instructions of Sachen Kunga Nyimgpo clearly describe the body of light as the reversion of the physical body into ye shes.

This is identicle with the way the body of light attainment is described in Dzogchen tantras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 12th, 2018 at 3:55 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The emptiness realized by all is the same, the difference is omniscience.

WeiHan said:

The body of light is also realised in sutrayana since ultimate view in sutras maintained that Buddha Sakyamuni has never enter Mahaparinirvana, it is due to obscuration of beings that we see otherwise.

kalden yungdrung said:

Oh that is brand new to me that Arhats can attain the Body of Light without remains. Change right on from Dzogchen to Sutrayana, guess i have made the wrong choice somehow.

Johnny Dangerous said:

In Mahayana, the realization of Arhats is not the same as the realization of Bodhisattvas, much less a SamyaksamBuddha..however, both categories (Hinayana and Mahayana) are labelled "Sutra"...so I don't think the above really addresses the issue. Even Mahayana Sutras such as the Lankavatara etc. express that the realization of Arhats is not the same as those who have entered the Mahayana path, therefore, including this argument does not make sense to me, as everyone would agree that Arhats do not share this realization, minus Theravadins. Obviously, on a Mahayana forum you will probably find pretty consistent agreement on this point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 12th, 2018 at 3:53 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

rang.drol said:

That would imply that the realization of mahamudra would equal the attainment of rainbow body, which is uncommon in dzogchen too (to be attained by application of certain specific practices only).

So might we rather say: the realization of dzogchen trekchod is the same as in mahamudra, while the attainment of rainbow body is (or at least manifests) somewhat different?

Malcolm wrote:

No, also the body of light is realized in the result, mahamudra.

WeiHan said:

The body of light is also realised in sutrayana since ultimate view in sutras maintained that Buddha Sakyamuni has never enter Mahaparinirvana, it is due to obscuration of beings that we see otherwise.

Malcolm wrote:

No, since there is no body method.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 12th, 2018 at 12:53 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, also the body of light is realized in the result, mahamudra.

kalden yungdrung said:

Before you go on with your private opinions, we / ego, like to know Namkhai Rinpoches statements on paper regarding Dzogchen = Mahamudra.

At least, for the minimum, we follow and compare the Master´s voice.

Again, for the good order, the statement was that:

- if the Path is different the Fruit is also different.

florin said:

CNNr speaking about anuyoga says the following:

"...when they arrive at the ultimate stage or arrival point of their transformation practice, they call it Dzogchen. The ultimate stage or arrival point of Anuyoga, they call Dzogchen. Whereas the arrival point or ultimate stage of all of Mahayoga, that is, all of the path of transformation which proceeds through gradual visualization, is always called Mahamudra. It is clear that this changes nothing since the ultimate point in Mahamudra and Dzogchen are one and the same thing. But the path taken to arrive there, the method used, are not the same.....

.....Many people often ask "'What's the difference between Dzogchen and Mahamudra?'" Certainly when one has fully grasped it and finds oneself in that state, whether we call it of Dzogchen or of Mahamudra, then there's no difference. But we've ahead, understood that the way of getting there, the method, is a different one. Sometimes we find in the songs, for example of the Mahasiddhas who practiced Mahamudra, we find that they're saying the very same things as Dzogchen. They're saying the principles of Dzogchen. But it's not said that necessarily they're using terms that are Dzogchen or that are necessarily Mahamudra. They may be using terms that come from still another source like the Madhyamika philosophy. Knowledge is always knowledge of the same principle. But the methods, the techniques of getting there, are all different. Nor are we to understand, when we speak of different methods, that one is better quality, one is less good quality. Nothing of that kind. But it is extremely important to discriminate and understand the characteristics of particular methods. Otherwise you can't use them. You muddle them. So here we're talking the viewpoint of Dzogchen, the way of seeing of Dzogchen, and it says "Everybody from the very beginning, all beings, ate totally illuminated....." CNNR-Talks in Conway.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 12th, 2018 at 12:41 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

Sorry, no valid answer.

Malcolm wrote:

Ask some other ChNN student, they will confirm what I say.

kalden yungdrung said:

Sorry no valid answer again, maybe we should better stop this discussion, guess its better for you.

In the meanwhile we maintain that if the Path is different the Fruit is also different, if you don't mind it.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I am aware of what Bonpos maintain. Buddhists disagree, all of them, including ChNN.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 12th, 2018 at 12:31 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

Which page please ?

Malcolm wrote:

I don't have book with me, but it is there use index

kalden yungdrung said:

Sorry, no valid answer.

Malcolm wrote:

Ask some other ChNN student, they will confirm what I say. Right now I am on the road.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 12th, 2018 at 12:16 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

Before you go on with your private opinions, we / ego, like to know Namkhai Rinpoches statements on paper regarding Dzogchen = Mahamudra.

At least, for the minimum, we follow and compare the Master ´s voice.

Again, for the good order, the statement was that:

- if the Path is different the Fruit is also different.

Malcolm wrote:

ChNN states this in Crystal, all Buddhist Dzogchen masters maintain the same perspective as ChNN.

kalden yungdrung said:

Which page please ?

Malcolm wrote:

I don't have book with me, but it is there use index

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 12th, 2018 at 12:02 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

rang.drol said:

That would imply that the realization of mahamudra would equal the attainment of rainbow body, which is uncommon in dzogchen too (to be attained by application of certain specific practices only).

So might we rather say: the realization of dzogchen trekchod is the same as in mahamudra, while the attainment of rainbow body is (or at least manifests) somewhat different?

Malcolm wrote:

No, also the body of light is realized in the result, mahamudra.

kalden yungdrung said:

Before you go on with your private opinions, we / ego, like to know Namkhai Rinpoches statements on paper regarding Dzogchen = Mahamudra.

At least, for the minimum, we follow and compare the Master ´s voice.

Again, for the good order, the statement was that:

- if the Path is different the Fruit is also different.

Malcolm wrote:

ChNN states this in Crystal, all Buddhist Dzogchen masters maintain the same perspective as ChNN.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 11th, 2018 at 11:30 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

Tashi delek,

Bön Dzogchen has Trekchöd and Thogal

Mahamudra can be seen as equal to Trekchöd, practised in Bön Dzogchen

Teached in Bön Dzogchen by our Yongdzin Rinpoche that if the Path is different, the fruit will be also different.

Hope this helps

Mutsuk Marro

KY.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a mistake -- the only the result can be different is if the basis is different. The basis in Dzogchen, Mahamudra, etc., is the mind.

rang.drol said:

That would imply that the realization of mahamudra would equal the attainment of rainbow body, which is uncommon in dzogchen too (to be attained by application of certain specific practices only).

So might we rather say: the realization of dzogchen trekchod is the same as in mahamudra, while the attainment of rainbow body is (or at least manifests) somewhat different?

Malcolm wrote:

No, also the body of light is realized in the result, mahamudra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 11th, 2018 at 8:00 PM

Title: Re: Achi Chökyi Drolma and Bön

Content:

Summers said:

Was Achi Chökyi Drolma originally a Bön diety? She is depicted in the style of one, which is interesting considering Jigten Sumgön's anti-Bön stance.

Malcolm wrote:

No, she was Jigten Sumgon's great grandmother.

<http://www.rigdzindharma.org/achi-chokyi-drolma.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 11th, 2018 at 7:54 PM

Title: Re: Yidam and Dzogchen

Content:

heart said:

Sorry for the resurrection of this thread but I recently read this interesting little book.

Longchenpa insist, in this book, that one have to practice these four preliminaries before engaging in proper Dzogchen practice.

1. Impermanence
2. Bodhicitta
3. Yidam practice
4. Guru Yoga

The way he introduce the natural state are with bliss, clarity and non-thought. These practices are also described in much detail. Very interesting book.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because Sem side is the completion stage of Maha and anuyoga. This is also how ChNN teaches the practice sems side in a practical sense.

heart said:

Yes, that is a good point. But Longchenpa doesn't really put it like that, he just insist that they are necessary preliminaries,

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

This set of books is about sems sde, and was also written before he met Kumaraja.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 11th, 2018 at 7:51 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

Tashi delek,

Bön Dzogchen has Trekchöd and Thogal

Mahamudra can be seen as equal to Trekchöd, practised in Bön Dzogchen

Teached in Bön Dzogchen by our Yongdzin Rinpoche that if the Path is different, the fruit will be also different.

Hope this helps

Mutsuk Marro

KY.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a mistake -- the only the result can be different is if the basis is different. The basis in Dzogchen, Mahamudra, etc., is the mind.

kalden yungdrung said:

Dear Malcolm,

Lets start with that what our Bön Yongdzin Rinpoche states is NEVER a mistake!

Malcolm wrote:

Chogyal Namkhai Norbu can also never be mistaken, and he clearly explains that the result of mahamudra and dzogchen are the same.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 11th, 2018 at 9:02 AM

Title: Re: World Bee Day

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

a-yaksha, because the report was "typically overblown, overhyped sensationalist science reporting" I see no value in the claims of the report, it is just a way try to get more funding to pester, even vivisect sweet bees.

I did think it was interesting, for whatever bee-son, they discerned a way to get their sucrose.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 11th, 2018 at 7:43 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

Dear,

Can you help me to understand the differences and similarities between Dzogchen and Mahamudra?

Thanks.

Tashi delek,

Bön Dzogchen has Trekchöd and Thogal

Mahamudra can be seen as equal to Trekchöd, practised in Bön Dzogchen

Teached in Bön Dzogchen by our Yongdzin Rinpoche that if the Path is different, the fruit will be also different.

Hope this helps

Mutsuk Marro

KY.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a mistake -- the only the result can be different is if the basis is different. The basis in Dzogchen, Mahamudra, etc., is the mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 11th, 2018 at 5:10 AM

Title: Re: Yidam and Dzogchen

Content:

heart said:

Sorry for the resurrection of this thread but I recently read this interesting little book.

Longchenpa insist, in this book, that one have to practice these four preliminaries before engaging in proper Dzogchen practice.

1. Impermanence
2. Bodhicitta
3. Yidam practice
4. Guru Yoga

The way he introduce the natural state are with bliss, clarity and non-thought. These practices are also described in much detail. Very interesting book.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because Sem side is the completion stage of Maha and anuyoga. This is also how ChNN teaches the practice sems side in a practical sense.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 10th, 2018 at 8:51 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Mahamudra: differences and similarities

Content:

Unknown said:

Dear,

Can you help me to understand the differences and similarities between Dzogchen and Mahamudra?

Thanks.

Malcolm wrote:

The basis is the same, the clear and empty nature of the mind.

The path is different.

The result is the same.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 10th, 2018 at 8:48 PM

Title: Re: Dharma Wheel (Engaged)

Content:

Ayu said:

I registered yesterday and haven't seen any alright views yet.

Fruitzilla said:

They are there. Not nearly as much as in dhammawheel though it seems. Just the fact that Retrofuturist has registered himself under the username SethRich and has a conspiracy site in his tagline is enough for me to never ever register there.

This thread has some (including some Paul Joseph Watson verbal vomit):

<https://dharma.wheel.org/viewtopic.php?f=16&t=76&start=10>

Malcolm wrote:

Klm O'Hara says:

SethRich has now deleted his account and is no longer a member here.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 10th, 2018 at 9:44 AM

Title: Re: World Bee Day

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

Today 20 May is a day to appreciate and do what we can to help our busy little friends.

<https://worldbeeday.org/en/>

Malcolm wrote:

Stop the Trump regime.

Nicholas Weeks said:

Oh you silly boy.

Malcolm wrote:

I would rather be silly than support fascism, under the spell of which the GOP seems too have hopelessly fallen.

Nicholas Weeks said:

EPA Targets Already Depleted Bee Population

Agency Close to Approving Mass Pesticide Spraying That Will Harm Helpful Insects

The administrator of Trump's Environmental Protection Agency is now taking steps that could promote expanding the use of insecticides that are helping befuddle and kill off bees.

Neonicotinoids, the world's most popular insecticides, affect the central nervous systems of insects, causing paralysis and death. The European Union imposed a partial ban on three neonicotinoids in 2013 because of the harm the insecticides can do to bees and butterflies that pollinate plants. Honeybee colonies have fallen by 59% in North America.

EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt is considering allowing a type of neonicotinoid, thiamethoxam, manufactured by Syngenta, to be sprayed directly on about 165 million acres of wheat, barley, corn, sorghum, alfalfa, rice and potatoes. Thiamethoxam is currently used as a seed coating.

“If the EPA grants Syngenta’s wish, it will spur catastrophic declines of aquatic invertebrates and pollinator populations that are already in serious trouble,” said Lori Ann Burd, director of the Center for Biological Diversity’s environmental health program.

Former President Barack Obama ordered the EPA in 2014 to assess the effect of pesticides, including neonicotinoids, on bees and other insects that pollinate plants. The EPA has been evaluating imidacloprid and clothianidin, manufactured by Bayer; thiamethoxam; dinotefuran, developed by Mitsui Chemicals; and acetamiprid, sold by Nisso Chemical.

Trump met with Bayer CEO Werner Baumann before he even took office, and a former lobbyist for the pesticide industry, Rebeckah Adcock, is now a top official at the Department of Agriculture. CropLife America, the trade group for the pesticide industry, has spent about $1.9 million on federal lobbying so far in 2017.

Syngenta CEO Erik Fyrwald has defended his company’s pesticides.

“There are numerous things impacting bee health,” Fyrwald said. “One of the very minor elements there is pesticides.”

The Trump-Pruitt EPA, which has decided it is OK to use pesticides that cause brain damage in children, was reluctant under Obama to take action on neonicotinoids. In January, the agency released draft risk reviews of dinotefuran, clothianidin and thiamethoxam that downplayed potential risks of the pesticides to bees.

Syngenta’s proposal was released on the same day in December that the EPA also released new assessments of risks from neonicotinoids to aquatic insects.

The Natural Resources Defense Council sued the EPA and EPA administrator Scott Pruitt in October, saying the agency hadn’t evaluated the impact of neonicotinoids on threatened and endangered species. The lawsuit claimed that the EPA violated the Endangered Species Act by approving products containing neonicotinoids without consulting federal wildlife officials on the potential risks to endangered species.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 10th, 2018 at 8:21 AM

Title: Re: Deciphering Tibetan Buddhist titles?

Content:

paradox524 said:
Dzongsar / Jamyang Khyentse / Rinpoche

Malcolm wrote:
Dzongsar Monastery, Incarnation lineage, honorific or paradox524 said:

Dilgo / Khyentse / Yangsi / Rinpoche

Malcolm wrote:
Family name / incarnation lineage / descriptive (rebirth) / honorific paradox524 said:

or

Katok / Situ / Chökyi Gyatso

Malcolm wrote:
Monastery, incarnation lineage, personal name

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, June 9th, 2018 at 8:38 PM
Title: Re: So, Anthony Bourdain...
Content:

amanitamusc said:
Well said CW.
There are Ketamine clinics popping up after some amazing test results for multiple mental health conditions.

Malcolm wrote:
Shrooms are excellent for depression, but only under supervised use.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, June 8th, 2018 at 8:31 PM
Title: Re: Awakening in the Bardo
Content:

Virgo said:
Do individuals who awaken in the bardo (or the moment of death) attain 13'th-16'th bhumis at that time or only up to the 12'th?

Thanks,

Kevin...

Malcolm wrote:
total buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 8th, 2018 at 10:42 AM

Title: Re: Dharma Wheel (Engaged)

Content:

Dorje Shedrub said:

The emphasis at DWE will be engaged Buddhism, so political and news discussions need to incorporate some aspect of Dharma. The forum is both Theravada and Mahayana, so there will be a variety of views. Some interesting conversations have started. I hope that members from Dharmawheel will visit and share their wisdom.

DS

Malcolm wrote:

Far as I can tell, the place is filled with the Buddhist version of the alt-right. Wankers.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 8th, 2018 at 10:36 AM

Title: Re: World Bee Day

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

Today 20 May is a day to appreciate and do what we can to help our busy little friends.

<https://worldbeeday.org/en/>

Malcolm wrote:

Stop the Trump regime.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 8th, 2018 at 9:08 AM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Jeff H said:

I would take this one step further to point out that, personally, I don't think it matters in the least whether the historical Bhavaviveka actually held to truly existent nature, even unconsciously.

Malcolm wrote:

A point that is systematically missed in these discussions is that there were Madhyamakas who adhered to the position that Tsongkhapa criticizes, they just never existed in India.

conebeckham said:

In other words, a species of nihilism?

Malcolm wrote:

No, such Tibetan Madhyamakas are first criticized by Rongzom for having a realist view with respect to relative truth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 8th, 2018 at 7:18 AM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Jeff H said:

I would take this one step further to point out that, personally, I don't think it matters in the least whether the historical Bhavaviveka actually held to truly existent nature, even unconsciously.

Malcolm wrote:

A point that is systematically missed in these discussions is that there were Madhyamakas who adhered to the position that Tsongkhapa criticizes, they just never existed in India.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 6th, 2018 at 6:35 AM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

I guess it's the karma of the tradition, mainly due to the 5th Dalai Lama's sectarian suppression of other traditions.

Malcolm wrote:

You need to learn some history.

The Fifth Dalai Lama did not suppress the Karma Kagyus and Jonangpas out of sectarianism. He did so because these two lineages were patronized by the King of Tsang, Karma Tenkyong Wangpo (1606-1642), who, along with the Karma Kamstang in general, was himself personally an committed enemy of the Gelugpa school. In other words, he did so in order to defend the Gelug school.

I suggest you do some reading the history of Tibetan Buddhism before making rash and baseless claims.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 5th, 2018 at 7:21 AM

Title: Re: How Does One Purify the Five Heinous Crimes in Sutra?

Content:

PeterC said:

It's possible today, but you would need to cause a certain number of members of the ordained Sangha to oppose others on a specific doctrinal topic - so basically it's very unlikely that you would have achieved this without consciously trying to do so

Malcolm wrote:

No, WeiHan is correct, in fact, just the other day during the Lamdre Triple vision teachings, HH Sakya Trizin mentioned this specifically.

Astus said:

Vasubandhu writes about the schism that causes birth in Avici for a kalpa:

"Where does schism take place?

100b. Elsewhere.

Not where the Tathagata is found Schism is impossible where the Master is to be found, for the Tathagata cannot be conquered and his word is full of authority."

(AKB 4.100, vol 2, p 683)

Malcolm wrote:

This means not in his direct presence. The person who went to Avici for causing a schism is Devadatta.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 4th, 2018 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: How Does One Purify the Five Heinous Crimes in Sutra?

Content:

WeiHan said:

5. Splitting the Sangha - I have read that this is also impossible unless you lived in Buddha's time.

PeterC said:

It's possible today, but you would need to cause a certain number of members of the ordained Sangha to oppose others on a specific doctrinal topic - so basically it's very unlikely that you would have achieved this without consciously trying to do so

Malcolm wrote:

No, Weihang is correct, in fact, just the other day during the Lamdre Triple vision teachings, HH Sakya Trizin mentioned this specifically.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 4th, 2018 at 8:29 PM

Title: Re: authorization

Content:

clyde said:

Malcolm; Thank you. Of course monastic vows are administered (not conferred) by a teacher. And I won't discuss so-called "secret" mantras or practices.

Malcolm wrote:

I am using "administered" in the sense of "The doctor administered medicine to the patient."

clyde said:

Yes, the traditional way of taking refuge is before a teacher. But a sincere lay person who has studied the Dharma and undertaken the practice can take refuge with or without a teacher, authorized or not. Taking refuge is an act of commitment by the person, not the teacher.

Malcolm wrote:

This is certainly fine in the case of a lay person, but it will not work for monastic ordination, nor for secret mantra.

clyde said:

Let's say a sincere student takes refuge with a skillful teacher whom they believe to be authorized (whatever that may mean) and years later discovers that their teacher was not authorized. What of that student and their years of practice?

Malcolm wrote:

Any lay person who has received refuge vows can confer them, since this mode of conferring refuge vows is one of the preliminaries of monastic ordination.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 4th, 2018 at 3:22 AM

Title: Re: Dorje Yudronma safe or not?

Content:

Mantrik said:

Sorry to reawaken an old thread, but I have a relevant question.

Yudronma has an oracle.....I've seen a video of the oracle at Nechung Monastery.

Is she enlightened?

If so, how can she have an oracle?

Thanks.

Malcolm wrote:
Yudronma is a mundane emanation of Vajrayogini.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, June 3rd, 2018 at 11:57 PM
Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka
Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:
I found The Two Truths Debate to be more accessible and modern. What's your view of that if you've read it?

Malcolm wrote:
Sonam Thakchoe does not really make an effort to understand Gorampa, he is mostly interested in making an apology for Lama Tsongkhapa's views.

Norwegian said:
Malcolm, do you know how this publication compares to Cabezón's publication?

Gorampa's " Distinguishing the Views: Moon Rays Illuminating the Crucial Points of the Excellent Vehicle ", translated by Khenpo Jamyang Tenzin and Pauline Westwood of the Chödung Karmo Translation Group.

<https://www.amazon.com/dp/993762326X/>

Malcolm wrote:
have not read it.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, June 3rd, 2018 at 11:12 PM
Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
<https://www.wisdompubs.org/book/freedom-extremes>

Tsongkhapafan said:
Thanks, I saw this book and bought it some time ago but didn't find it to be a very user friendly format...

Malcolm wrote:
Guess I should revisit my translation and publish it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 3rd, 2018 at 11:11 PM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

I found The Two Truths Debate to be more accessible and modern. What's your view of that if you've read it?

Malcolm wrote:

Sonam Thakchoe does not really make an effort to understand Gorampa, he is mostly interested in making an apology for Lama Tsongkhapa's views.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 3rd, 2018 at 9:23 PM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Karma Dondrup Tashi said:

It was actually a very specific question: How to Gelugpas deal with Mipham? His arguments are very specific, I assume their responses are also very specific.

Bristollad said:

In my experience, the Gelug school doesn't deal with Mipham. He simply isn't studied at an institutional level.

For individuals, some try to ignore, some try to incorporate, some try to refute, some conclude Tsongkhapa's position was completely wrong and start studying Dzogchen or whatever. The Geshe I study with, if asked say that they haven't studied it and so can't give an opinion - at most, they say it's contrary to Tsongkhapa and Gelug explanations. Our Geshe from Sera Je is far more concerned with refuting particular points of explanation that differentiate Sera Je from Sera Mey or Drepung Loseling and Drepung Gomang.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Thanks for this, I also haven't come across Mipham or Gorampa's criticisms of Je Tsongkhapa but it would be interesting to know what they are and to attempt to formulate a refutation in the same way that the Prasangika view is arrived at by understanding what is flawed in the understandings of the lower schools. Please note I'm not saying that these refutations are incorrect; I'm not familiar with them so I cannot say one way or the other.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.wisdompubs.org/book/freedom-extremes>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 3rd, 2018 at 8:17 PM

Title: Re: authorization

Content:

clyde said:

I meant “vow” as “a solemn promise, pledge, or personal commitment”. (See: <http://www.dictionary.com/browse/vow>) What do you mean by “vow”?

My original questions about authorization wasn't restricted to vows, but to all practices (e.g. - meditation practices, etc.). And as I reflect on this, I wonder about Dharma friends, even on forums, who assist (teach) others.

Malcolm wrote:

In Buddhadharma, vows are solemn commitments, pledges, and promises made during ordination rites in the presence of a master, who acknowledges one's promises and confers the desired level of vows.

clyde said:

As I noted in an earlier post, I understand the value of making vows before a teacher and sangha, but what do you mean by “confers”? In what way does a teacher confer a vow upon a student?

Malcolm wrote:

For example, when going for refuge, the student repeats the formula of going for refuge three times after the teacher. The teacher then explains the vows and commitments of going for refuge, and in this way the student formally becomes a follower of Buddhadharma and also received lay vows.

Monastic vows, bodhisattva vows, and the vows of secret mantra are administered the same way.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 3rd, 2018 at 10:48 AM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Karma Dondrup Tashi said:

It was actually a very specific question: How to Gelugpas deal with Mipham? His arguments are very specific, I assume their responses are also very specific.

Malcolm wrote:

Just as they never mounted an effective defense against Gorampa, they never mounted an effective defense against Mipham.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 3rd, 2018 at 9:56 AM

Title: Re: authorization

Content:

clyde said:

I meant “vow” as “a solemn promise, pledge, or personal commitment”. (See: <http://www.dictionary.com/browse/vow>) What do you mean by “vow”?

My original questions about authorization wasn't restricted to vows, but to all practices (e.g. - meditation practices, etc.). And as I reflect on this, I wonder about Dharma friends, even on forums, who assist (teach) others.

Malcolm wrote:

In Buddhadharma, vows are solemn commitments, pledges, and promises made during ordination rites in the presence of a master, who acknowledges one's promises and confers the desired level of vows.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 3rd, 2018 at 2:40 AM

Title: Re: Vajra Hell

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

This may be the state; from page 66 of Words:

1.1.8 The Hell of Ultimate Torment

This is an immense edifice of blazing hot metal, surrounded by the sixteen Neighbouring Hells. In it Yama's henchmen toss incalculable numbers of beings into the centre of a mountain of pieces of red-hot iron, glowing like live coals. They whip up the flames with bellows of tiger and leopard-skin until the bodies of their victims and the fire become indistinguishable. Their suffering is tremendous. Apart from the cries of distress, there is no longer any indication of the presence of actual bodies. They constantly long to escape, but it never happens. Sometimes there is a small gap in the fire and they think they can get out, but the workers hit them with spears, clubs, hammers and other weapons and they are subjected to all the agonies of the seven previous hells, such as having molten bronze poured into their mouths.

Lifespan here is a whole intermediate kalpa. It is called the Hell of Ultimate Torment because there could be no worse torment elsewhere. It is the hell where those who have committed the five crimes with immediate retribution, and practitioners of the Mantrayana who develop adverse views regarding the Vajra Master, are reborn. No other actions have the power to cause rebirth here.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 3rd, 2018 at 2:37 AM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

So things exist in some kind of Twilight Zone between existence and non-existence.....um, right....that's conceptually elaborated by scholars and unrelated to the experiences of worldly people fo sho!

Inherent existence is how people see things. To put it more simply, they are the things that people normally see.

You're right that perception per se does not prove existence, but valid perception does.

conebeckham said:

Inherent existence is not the object of negation, no matter how you would like it to be.....it's also not "how people see things," and perception, whether valid or not, does not prove anything. It is the mental consciousness which elaborates perceptions and misconstrues existence.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Okay, that's fine. This is a difference in our spiritual traditions so we simply agree to disagree.

Malcolm wrote:

What cone is saying is that inherent existence is not an object that can be negated because it is like the son of a barren women, what is negated is the erroneous perception of inherent existence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 3rd, 2018 at 2:33 AM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

One does not negate the perceptions of ordinary people; one leads them, through analysis, to understand the things they imagine are real and inherent are illusory and dependent.

Tsongkhapafan said:

I totally agree.

Malcolm wrote:

At least we agree on this much.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 3rd, 2018 at 1:10 AM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Okay, great. If we let appearances be, they appear to possess their own characteristics and nature which are reliably known by worldly people.

conebeckham said:

No one ever said otherwise. But once any assertion is made regarding ontological status of phenomena, worldly people cling to existing phenomena, and this is incorrect, and in fact, the mistake at which Madhyamaka takes aim. Not an "inherent existence" which is somehow parsed from the phenomenon itself, but the mere phenomenon.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Denying existence is once again denying the valid perceptions of worldly people. If something is established by valid cognition, it exists and functions.

Malcolm wrote:

One does not negate the perceptions of ordinary people; one leads them, through analysis, to understand the things they imagine are real and inherent are illusory and dependent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 3rd, 2018 at 1:04 AM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

There's nothing about nature that implies that it has to be inherent. For example, emptiness is the ultimate nature of phenomena but it's not inherent or inherently existent. It's ignorance that believes that anything is inherent.

Malcolm wrote:

Then not only are you ignorant of the English language, but you are ignorant of Candrakīrti where, in the Prasannapāda, he states that the only nature is the natureless nature, emptiness.

Then, if it is asked what is this dharmatā of phenomena, it is the essence of phenomena. If it is asked what is an essence, it is a nature [or an inherent existence, rang bzhin]. If it is asked what is an inherent existence [or nature], it is emptiness. If it is asked what is emptiness, it is naturelessness [or absence of inherent existence]. If it is asked what is the absence of inherent existence [or naturelessness], it is suchness [tathāta]. If it is asked what is suchness, it is the essence of suchness that is unchanging and permanent, that is, because it is not fabricated it does not arise in all aspects and because it is not dependent, it is called the nature [or inherent existence] of fire, etc."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 3rd, 2018 at 12:50 AM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is so beautiful when opponents refute themselves with the Buddha's word.

Tsongkhapa said:

Firstly, I'm not your opponent. Secondly, Buddha's words require interpretation.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course you are my opponent. Secondly, you are interpreting the Buddha's word incorrectly, as usual.

Tsongkhapa said:

All this sutra passage means is those who perceive a nature in entities are mistaken about their real nature. It is not an assertion that there are valid conventional natures. What this sutra passage means is that those who perceive an inherent nature in phenomena are mistaken as phenomena are mere appearances inseparable from their emptiness. It doesn't deny a conventional nature.

Malcolm wrote:

All natures are inherent -- use a dictionary.

Tsongkhapa said:

Dude, anybody can prove that the nature of fire is hot and burning by putting their hand in it.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they cannot prove the nature of fire is hot with such an experiment. Fire and heat are only nominally distinguishable, they cannot be distinguished as separate essences.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 3rd, 2018 at 12:46 AM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Lack of inherent nature, yes, lack of nature, no. Conventionally things have a nature and that nature cannot withstand analysis, of course, because it's a mere appearance to mind and does not exist inherently. It nevertheless is established by valid cognition.

Malcolm wrote:

The term used by Candrakīrti, Bhavaviveka, etc., is rang bzhin, i.e. nature. There is no separate term in Tibetan for a nature vs. an inherent nature. Some people translate the term rang bzhin, svabhāva, as intrinsic existence. Moreover, in English, any nature at all is inherent.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Nature, definition 2:

2 [in singular] the basic or inherent features of something, especially when seen as characteristic of it: helping them to realize the nature of their problems | there are a lot of other documents of that nature.

- the innate or essential qualities or character of a person or animal: it's not in her nature to listen to advice | I'm not violent by nature.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 3rd, 2018 at 12:30 AM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The idea that things have natures is refuted by Nāgārjuna in the MMK, etc., Bhavaviveka, Candrakīrti, etc., in short by all Madhyamakas.

A "non-inherent nature" is a contradiction in terms.

The error of mundane, conventionally-valid perception is to believe that entities have natures, when in fact they do not, being phenomena that arise from conditions. It is quite easy to show a worldly person the contradiction in their thinking. Wetness and water are not two different things; therefore wetness is not the nature of water. Heat and fire are not two different things, therefore, heat is not the nature of fire, etc. For example, one can ask them, "Does wetness depend on water, or water on wetness?" If they claim wetness depends on water, ask them, where is there water that exists without wetness? If they claim the opposite, that water depends on wetness, ask them, where is there wetness that exists without water? If there is no wetness without water nor water without wetness, they can easily be shown that wetness is not a nature of water, but merely a name for the same entity under discussion. Thus, the assertion that wetness is the nature of water cannot survive analysis. The assertion of all other natures can be eliminated in the same way.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Conventionally things have a nature. The nature of things is a manifestation of karma.

Malcolm wrote:

Sloppy argument.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Wetness and water can be conceptually distinguished as mere names. From a practical point of view, they are one object but they are nominally distinct.

Malcolm wrote:

Glad you agree, since I said, "wetness is not a nature of water, but merely a name for the same entity under discussion."

Tsongkhapafan said:

In Gone to Lanka Sutra, Buddha says:

Conventionally things are produced,

Ultimately they have no nature.

That which is mistaken with respect to this lack of nature

Is said to be conventional with respect to reality.

Malcolm wrote:

It is so beautiful when opponents refute themselves with the Buddha's word.

Tsongkhapafan said:

This means that phenomena conventionally have an illusory nature, but ultimately they do not. Those who grasp at the illusory nature as inherently existent are wrong, but it is equally incorrect to assert that phenomena have no nature at all, conventionally.

Malcolm wrote:

All this sutra passage means is those who perceive a nature in entities are mistaken about their real nature. It is not an assertion that there are valid conventional natures.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Surely you're not denying that fire is hot and that water is wet?

Malcolm wrote:

Fire is hot because heat and fire are the same entity, to which you have already assented, etc. But you have not shown, nor can you show that heat is the nature of fire, or that fire is the nature of heat since such claims are completely inarticulate and do not stand up even to mundane analysis, let alone ultimate analysis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 3rd, 2018 at 12:24 AM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

As Chandrakirti says in Guide to the Middle Way:

And worldly people's things exist.

Malcolm wrote:

Of this line, Candrakīrti's autocommentary states:

"Since the entities of the worldly are established without analysis, they exist, thus everything is established."

The key point here is that the entities that the worldly perceive are not analyzed, and thus in this way, they are established only prior to analysis.

But this is not an argument that conventionally valid entities possess natures.

Indeed, in the root text, Candrakīrti states very clearly:

Likewise, entities lack a nature (rang bzhin) indeed, but saying "existence" is shown to be the provisional meaning.

And:

The absence of a nature in phenomena is the so-called emptiness shown by the wise.

Bhāvaviveka agrees in the Blaze of Reasoning:

Once it is accepted that entities do not arise intrinsically (rang bzhin gyis), they are termed "non-arisen." Since the truth is the absence of a nature (rang bzhin med), nothing arises intrinsically (rang bzhing gyis).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 2nd, 2018 at 10:34 PM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is quite false. Please provide a citation from Bhavaviveka, Jñānagarbha, etc., which support this absurd claim.

It's not false, Svatantrikas assert that phenomena lack true existence (true existence is existing wholly independent of conceptual thought) but they still assert inherent existence, as all schools below the Prasangika do.

It is false, and you cannot provide any citation which supports your claim from any Indian Madhyamaka work.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Great, prove me wrong then.

Malcolm wrote:

Since you are the one making the assertion, it is up to you to provide evidence for your claim. If you cannot, it is better for you to remain silent.

Tsongkhapafan said:

What do you mean by "nature?" Most people mean something that is intrinsic to a given thing. For example, common people assume the nature of fire is heat, the nature of water is wetness, and so on.

Bhavaviveka, etc., do not accept that things have natures. If they did, they could not be included even in Mahāyāna, let alone Madhyamaka.

Of course things have natures, otherwise you are contradicting the valid cognizers of worldly beings. Valid cognition sees that fire is hot, water is wet, and so forth. If you disagree then as Chandrakīrti says, you and worldly should debate on this and we will rely upon the stronger. Things have non-inherent natures.

Are you saying nothing exists and that nothing can be validly known by worldly people (i.e., people who have not realized emptiness)?

Malcolm wrote:

The idea that things have natures is refuted by Nāgārjuna in the MMK, etc., Bhavaviveka, Candrakīrti, etc., in short by all Madhyamakas.

A "non-inherent nature" is a contradiction in terms.

The error of mundane, conventionally-valid perception is to believe that entities have natures, when in fact they do not, being phenomena that arise from conditions. It is quite easy to show a worldly person the contradiction in their thinking. Wetness and water are not two different things; therefore wetness is not the nature of water. Heat and fire are not two different things, therefore, heat is not the nature of fire, etc. For example, one can ask them, "Does wetness depend on water, or water on wetness?" If they claim wetness depends on water, ask them, where is there water that exists without wetness? If they claim the opposite, that water depends on wetness, ask them, where is there wetness that exists without water? If there is no wetness without water nor water without wetness, they can easily be shown that wetness is not a nature of water, but merely a name for the same entity under discussion. Thus, the assertion that wetness is the nature of water cannot survive analysis. The assertion of all other natures can be eliminated in the same way.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 2nd, 2018 at 9:27 PM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Gelugpas are not crypto-Svatantrikas because they assert that phenomena do not exist inherently, whereas Svatantrikas assert inherent existence conventionally.

Malcolm wrote:

This is quite false. Please provide a citation from Bhavaviveka, Jñānagarbha, etc., which support this absurd claim.

Tsongkhapafan said:

It's not false, Svatantrikas assert that phenomena lack true existence (true existence is existing wholly independent of conceptual thought) but they still assert inherent existence, as all schools below the Prasāṅgika do.

Malcolm wrote:

It is false, and you cannot provide any citation which supports your claim from any Indian Madhyamaka work.

Tsongkhapafan said:

It really isn't. In dreams phenomena have their own individual natures. These natures exist only for the dreamer because they are mere appearances to the dreaming mind.

Malcolm wrote:

What do you mean by "nature?" Most people mean something that is intrinsic to a given thing. For example, common people assume the nature of fire is heat, the nature of water is wetness, and so on.

Bhavaviveka, etc., do not accept that things have natures. If they did, they could not be included even in Mahāyāna, let alone Madhyamaka.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 2nd, 2018 at 8:08 PM

Title: Re: authorization

Content:

clyde said:

A vow is a commitment one undertakes; a teacher can't give it and a student can't receive it.

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on what one means by "vow." In Buddhadharma, pratimokṣa vows, bodhisattva vows, and Vajrayāna samaya are all received from a teacher.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 2nd, 2018 at 7:45 PM

Title: Re: Vajra Hell

Content:

Anders said:

AFAIK Vajra hell is a special feature of Vajrayana - only practitioners who break samaya in ways gruelling enough to go there can end up in the vajra hells, which is below even avici (although I believe there are some who say that it is more like an aspect of the avici hells).

Aryjna said:

Avici and the vajra hell are the same thing. You can read more about it in Words of my perfect teacher.

Fortyeightvows said:

I don't have that text available now, but I'll check it out later.

It seems to me though that avici hell and vajra hell wouldn't be the same thing because ordinary people and those who do the five major sins can end up there. On the other hand, vajra hell is usually conceived of as being specifically or only or particularly for vajrayana practitioners who have broken samaya.

Malcolm wrote:

They are in fact the same hell.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 2nd, 2018 at 7:41 PM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Karma Dondrup Tashi said:

The Svatantrika Madhyamaka - which is just below the most profound school in the Madhyamaka philosophy, the Prasangika Madhyamaka - uses a term called nominal ultimate reality. A working definition of the word "nominal" is "in name only," as in something that is just merely labeled as ultimate reality, without examination. Mipham Rinpoche says that the nonaffirming negative is really nominal ultimate reality, since it does not rise to the level of true uncontrivance.

Anyen Rinpoche, Journey to Certainty, The Quintessence of the Dzogchen View, An Exploration of Mipham's Beacon of Certainty <https://tinyurl.com/yalc48ko>

Does this mean that Mipham believed all Gelugpas to be Svatantrikas?

Ayu said:

At least the Gelugs define themselves as Prasangika Madhyamikas. Therefore I believe, this whole discussion is in vain as many other discussions of this kind on DW are. If you search for information about A, ask A and not B who has secondhand information only.

Malcolm wrote:

Sakyas, Nyingmas, and Gelugs all maintain their view is "Prasangika." But Sakyas and Nyingmas vehemently reject Gelugpa views and vice versa, leaving it up for debate as to a) what exactly is Prasangika, and b) who deserves the label.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 2nd, 2018 at 7:37 PM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Crypto-svatantrikas

Tsongkhapafan said:

Gelugpas are not crypto-Svatantrikas because they assert that phenomena do not exist inherently, whereas Svatantrikas assert inherent existence conventionally.

Malcolm wrote:

This is quite false. Please provide a citation from Bhavaviveka, Jñānagarbha, etc., which support this absurd claim.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Phenomena do hold their own nature, but this nature is merely imputed and does not exist ultimately.

Malcolm wrote:

This statement is internally contradictory.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 2nd, 2018 at 8:30 AM

Title: Re: Big changes over at DW (Theravada) and new forum

Content:

Sādhaka said:

And their polar opposite, the sjw's, aren't really any better.

Malcolm wrote:

Really? People concerned about social justice are not better than Nazis and White Supremacists? Get a clue dude. Next you are going to be telling us that some of the right wing marchers in Charlottesville were "good people."

In case you forgot:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 2nd, 2018 at 7:47 AM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Karma Dondrup Tashi said:

I wasn't precise enough, let me try to parse out the question.

The Gelugpas say: The cup is not empty of its own [conventional] essence [as it appears to ordinary persons], but it is empty of having a truly established nature. (Anyen Rinpoche).

This is a non-affirming negative.

Malcolm wrote:

It's actually an affirming negation, reverse extrinsic emptiness, as Khenpo Appey quips.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 2nd, 2018 at 2:52 AM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Karma Dondrup Tashi said:

Which seems clear. Yet they call themselves prasangikas and [deleted] they do not admit that conventional truth can withstand analysis (which is the logical flaw of the svatantrikas).

So how can that be?

Malcolm wrote:

Svatantrikas do not admit that conventional truth can withstand logical analysis, apart from some early Tibetan pre-Candra Madhyamakas who made this error.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 2nd, 2018 at 1:37 AM

Title: Re: Mipham: Gelug = Svatantrika Madhyamaka

Content:

Karma Dondrup Tashi said:

The Svatantrika Madhyamaka - which is just below the most profound school in the Madhyamaka philosophy, the Prasangika Madhyamaka - uses a term called nominal ultimate reality. A working definition of the word "nominal" is "in name only," as in something that is just merely labeled as ultimate reality, without examination. Mipham Rinpoche says that the nonaffirming negative is really nominal ultimate reality, since it does not rise to the level of true uncontrivance.

Anyen Rinpoche, Journey to Certainty, The Quintessence of the Dzogchen View, An Exploration of Mipham's Beacon of Certainty <https://tinyurl.com/yalc48ko>

Does this mean that Mipham believed all Gelugpas to be Svatantrikas?

Malcolm wrote:

Crypto-svatantrikas

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 2nd, 2018 at 12:59 AM

Title: Re: Five Heinous Crimes = Samaya Breaker ?

Content:

Wicked Yeshe said:

But still i will find out.

Malcolm wrote:

Not likely.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 2nd, 2018 at 12:25 AM

Title: Re: Five Heinous Crimes = Samaya Breaker ?

Content:

Wicked Yeshe said:

But you're basically saying that higher samaya is worse to break than the basic precepts?

Malcolm wrote:

Of course.

Wicked Yeshe said:

Can you explain why? It seems as if the basic ones are the foundation and samaya is extra. Why is the pyramid upside down so to speak? It would seem that a basic vow not to kill is heavier than let's say a vow not to eat garlic. But theoretically eating garlic can be worse than eating meat? How is it so?

Malcolm wrote:

Its not actually your business since you have zero interest in Vajrayāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 1st, 2018 at 10:55 PM

Title: Re: Five Heinous Crimes = Samaya Breaker ?

Content:

Wicked Yeshe said:

But you're basically saying that higher samaya is worse to break than the basic precepts?

Malcolm wrote:

Of course.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 1st, 2018 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: Five Heinous Crimes = Samaya Breaker ?

Content:

Wicked Yeshe said:

Hey! What is this?

https://en.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/Samaya#Shingon_Buddhism

Malcolm wrote:

Lower tantra samaya.

Lobsang Chojor said:

Are they just the same commitments as the bodhisattva vows?

Malcolm wrote:

basically.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 1st, 2018 at 10:10 PM

Title: Re: Five Heinous Crimes = Samaya Breaker ?

Content:

Wicked Yeshe said:

Hey! What is this?

https://en.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/Samaya#Shingon_Buddhism

Malcolm wrote:

Lower tantra samaya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 1st, 2018 at 9:55 PM

Title: Re: Five Heinous Crimes = Samaya Breaker ?

Content:

Motova said:

Why would someone who receives an empowerment and fails to practice and maintain their samaya be reborn in Avici Hell along with sentient beings who have committed the five heinous crimes?

Malcolm wrote:

failing to practice is not a problem. Failing to maintain samaya, however, is.

You need to review the fourteen root downfalls.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 1st, 2018 at 9:54 PM

Title: Re: Five Heinous Crimes = Samaya Breaker ?

Content:

Wicked Yeshe said:

They both lost faith in vajrayana and obviously abandoned their samaya but were still saved by the grace of Amida.

Malcolm wrote:

They did not have samaya in highest yoga tantras since it never existed in Japan.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 1st, 2018 at 10:14 AM

Title: Re: is a home made statue acceptable?

Content:

liuzg150181 said:

But i notice that different regions uses different proportions for Buddha statues,no? I find that the different is more prominent if one compares, for example, those of Tibetan Vajrayana Buddha statues and Theravadin ones.

Malcolm wrote:

Every tradition uses precise measurements.

liuzg150181 said:

As in same precise measurements,or different tradition(say Tibetan Vajrayana vs Theravada) uses different kind of measurements?

Malcolm wrote:

They all use the golden mean to determine proportions

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 1st, 2018 at 9:48 AM

Title: Re: is a home made statue acceptable?

Content:

Mantrik said:

This thread seems to be going round and round. What are 'properly formed images' as defined in Theravada and Pure Land traditions, please? (This is what the OP is practising.)

Malcolm wrote:

The Pratibimbamānalakṣaṇa-nāma or Characteristics of the Proportions of Images by the master Ātreya is a text which describes the qualities of properly proportioned images, and the faults and consequences of improperly formed images. For example, one fault described is that poorly formed images result in the destruction of the wealth of a whole region; if an image is inferior in width and height, it will cause famines and invasions of the region, etc.

Therefore, we need to defer to the wisdom of ancient masters on such issues, and not our own artistic whims.

M

liuzg150181 said:

But i notice that different regions uses different proportions for Buddha statues,no? I find that the different is more prominent if one compares, for example, those of Tibetan Vajrayana Buddha statues and Theravadin ones.

Malcolm wrote:
Every tradition uses precise measurements.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, June 1st, 2018 at 1:18 AM
Title: Re: is a home made statue acceptable?
Content:

Ayu said:
So, it depends on which tradition we are talking about.
In Vajrayana, making statues is a wonderful thing. Tsatsa making is even a practice.

And it sounds rather like a joke, if Buddhists have statues everywhere, but those who made them are doomed? I fail to understand the intention of this teaching that forbids making statues. Sounds rather absurd to me. But I can't judge it, because I can't read Chinese.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes. making properly formed images is wonderful. That's why we hire skilled craftsman to make them. Tsatsas are made with molds.

Mantrik said:
This thread seems to be going round and round. What are 'properly formed images' as defined in Theravada and Pure Land traditions, please? (This is what the OP is practising.)

Malcolm wrote:
The Pratibimbamānalakṣaṇa-nāma or Characteristics of the Proportions of Images by the master Ātreya is a text which describes the qualities of properly proportioned images, and the faults and consequences of improperly formed images. For example, one fault described is that poorly formed images result in the destruction of the wealth of a whole region; if an image is inferior in width and height, it will cause famines and invasions of the region, etc.

Therefore, we need to defer to the wisdom of ancient masters on such issues, and not our own artistic whims.

M

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, May 31st, 2018 at 8:05 PM
Title: Re: is a home made statue acceptable?
Content:

Ayu said:
So, it depends on which tradition we are talking about.
In Vajrayana, making statues is a wonderful thing. Tsatsa making is even a practice.

And it sounds rather like a joke, if Buddhists have statues everywhere, but those who made them are doomed? I fail to understand the intention of this teaching that forbids making statues. Sounds rather absurd to me. But I can't judge it, because I can't read Chinese.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. making properly formed images is wonderful. That's why we hire skilled craftsman to make them. Tsatsas are made with molds.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 29th, 2018 at 5:01 AM

Title: Re: Is Tobacco an obstacle to practice?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Tobacco is a stupid habit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 29th, 2018 at 12:10 AM

Title: Re: is a home made statue acceptable?

Content:

Ayu said:

The Lamrim teachings say: firstly, Buddha statues cannot be judged by outward appearance. Every statue is worth the due respect.

And secondly, it is a very meritorious deed to make a statue or paint a picture of a Buddha or a diety.

Malcolm wrote:

It is very demeritorious to make images of the Buddha, etc., that do not correspond to the proper proportions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 29th, 2018 at 12:09 AM

Title: Re: is a home made statue acceptable?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In general, this is a bad idea.

gingercatni said:

Hi everyone,

I have 3 large buddha statues at home and recently I have been wanting to have a female presence on my shrine table. I am only beginning to understand the role kwan yin has and I have decided to add her to my shrine. I don't want a tiny statue as it would look odd next to my very large buddha statues so I've been looking at similar sized kwan yin statues online, very eye watering prices attached to them ranging from $399 to $799 for a 16" figure. So I was thinking about sculpting my own, I'm no artist but I did dabble with sculpting in clay when I was younger. Is it ok to put a homemade image on a shrine table is it disrespectful?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 28th, 2018 at 11:34 AM

Title: Re: Karmic consequences of suicide in the tibetan tradition

Content:

amanitamusc said:

There are certain Vajrayana practices you can do to hastens someones demise and as i remember it was not Kilaya. I won't say more on this on the board. Only that it could be done by an ordinary practitioner. For ones who were suffering and were close to death.

Malcolm wrote:

Doing Shitro for a person near death can either forestall their death, or ease their suffering, which sometimes means dying a little sooner.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 28th, 2018 at 11:03 AM

Title: Re: Karmic consequences of suicide in the tibetan tradition

Content:

amanitamusc said:

There are many situations in any ones death.

Malcolm wrote:

But here we are talking about a Vajrayāna practitioner who deliberately takes their own life...even doing phowa too soon is a fault...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 28th, 2018 at 3:29 AM

Title: Re: Karmic consequences of suicide in the tibetan tradition

Content:

amanitamusc said:

I can tell you that HHDL has said that all religions including Buddhist use fear. He said it is wrong and does not approve.

Malcolm wrote:

When one who is a Vajrayana practitioner commits suicide, one is literally killing one's aggregates, whose real nature is the five Buddha families. Hence, you completely break Samaya.

paël said:

When consequences of this will be exhausted? Can they still achieve enlightenment in some future lives?

Malcolm wrote:

As to your first question, countless millions of eons. As to your second question, yes, eventually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 28th, 2018 at 12:07 AM

Title: Re: Karmic consequences of suicide in the tibetan tradition

Content:

amanitamusc said:

There is much symbolism in Tibetan Buddhism.

Tenma said:

If there is symbolism to vajra hell, what is it? How does it come from suicide?

amanitamusc said:

I can tell you that HHDL has said that all religions including Buddhist use fear. He said it is wrong and does not approve.

Malcolm wrote:

When one who is a Vajrayana practitioner commits suicide, one is literally killing one's aggregates, whose real nature is the five Buddha families. Hence, you completely break Samaya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 28th, 2018 at 12:04 AM

Title: Re: Karmic consequences of suicide in the tibetan tradition

Content:

AlexanderS said:

What are the karmic consequences of suicide in the tibetan tradition?

Malcolm wrote:

Vajra hell.

amanitamusc said:

Would be the same for killing ones parents?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 27th, 2018 at 3:59 AM

Title: Re: Karmic consequences of suicide in the tibetan tradition

Content:

AlexanderS said:

What are the karmic consequences of suicide in the tibetan tradition?

Malcolm wrote:

Vajra hell.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 25th, 2018 at 11:15 PM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You speak with a forked tongue.

This is predicted on your mistaken assumption that Buddhist and nonbuddhist traditions aim to climb the same mountain — that's why kyle termed you a perennialist

Spelare said:

I was tweaking the classic "paths up the mountain" image in a somewhat subversive way, not endorsing it as it is commonly understood. The mountain I repurposed to refer to the existential situation we discover ourselves and the rest of humanity to share. Some traditions have well-tested maps and guidebooks. A live guide is better if you can find one you trust. But some traditions (or pseudo-traditions) may be so confused as to invert the picture and think they're in a valley instead of on a mountain! Perhaps you, too, have met people trying to go down into a valley that is actually a mountain. They're strangely common.

PeterC said:

And you should talk to some professional chefs. Their training involves spending an enormous amount of time doing menial tasks exactly to instructions.

Spelare said:

I have spoken to professional chefs. But the thing is, not everyone has to train to be a professional. Most of us just need to know how to cook for the nourishment of ourselves and whatever guests come our way. For that, sometimes it's better to learn from someone who has an intimate intuitive mastery of the subject but isn't necessarily part of a formal training program. We don't all have to attend the Cordon Bleu.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 25th, 2018 at 7:34 PM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Spelare said:

Whereas what I am suggesting is more like an extension of the rimé approach to our contemporary globalized context. You explore different approaches while keeping an understanding of what is distinctive about each. And you may commit yourself especially to a particular tradition, as I have.

Malcolm wrote:

This is predicted on your mistaken assumption that Buddhist and nonbuddhist traditions aim to climb the same mountain — that's why kyle termed you a perennialist

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 25th, 2018 at 9:25 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This thread should have been put down weeks ago.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 25th, 2018 at 8:29 AM

Title: Re: Why Eastern Tibet?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Kathog, Dzogchen, Shechen, and Palyul are all in Eastern Tibet. The two Nyingma monasteries in Central Tibet are Mindrol Ling and Dorje Drak.

The Geluk Hegemony in Central Tibet stifled the other three schools very heavily. In Kham there was more distance, and thus, more life for Sakya, Kagyu and Nyingma.

Spelare said:

Thanks, that's helpful. Aside from the monasteries, was there also a higher prevalence of ngakpas and lay practitioners in Kham?

Malcolm wrote:

Not especially.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 25th, 2018 at 8:28 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Cave men had no idea about God...

Malcolm wrote:

Are you quite sure? And how did you come to this astonishing conclusion?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 25th, 2018 at 7:54 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Aryjna said:

The point is, God, as seen by the Christians, does not exist, as can be proven by very basic logic

Kunga Lhadzom said:

If you were evolved a million times more than you are now....would your logic be the same ?

Malcolm wrote:

Logic is logic, no matter how evolved one is, just as $2+2 = 4$ in all math.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 25th, 2018 at 7:53 AM

Title: Re: Why Eastern Tibet?

Content:

Spelare said:

Why are nearly all the contemporary Dzogchen masters known in the Western world, not to mention a large proportion of Nyingma and Kagyu lamas in general, from Eastern Tibet? Especially from the region of Kham, it seems. There are exceptions, but name a lama in one of these traditions and odds are they're from Kham.

Does this date specifically from the Rimé (eclectic/non-sectarian) movement, whose major exponents were from Kham, or was this a trend even before the 19th century? I recall reading that Kham has been relatively diverse in terms of lineages for many years.

I'm also wondering whether it's that proportionally more Kham lamas are teaching in exile, due to the burden of the Chinese occupation falling especially heavily on Eastern Tibet? I don't know if that's true. Maybe there are other factors I haven't noticed.

All if this kind of makes me want to learn more about the geography and culture of Eastern Tibet. It would be nice to learn about what seems to have been a veritable crucible of realized masters.

Malcolm wrote:

Kathog, Dzogchen, Shechen, and Palyul are all in Eastern Tibet. The two Nyingma monasteries in Central Tibet are Mindrol Ling and Dorje Drak.

The Geluk Hegemony in Central Tibet stifled the other three schools very heavily. In Kham there was more distance, and thus, more life for Sakya, Kagyu and Nyingma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 25th, 2018 at 7:47 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Spelare said:

He's in good company when we look at what Buddhist tantrikas did from early on.

Malcolm wrote:

No. Buddhist Vajrayāna, and even Mahāyāna, use of nonbuddhist figures was done in the context of conquest, domination and appropriation, not fitting them pleasantly into a Buddhist scheme. The same applies to Tibetan chthonic gods that wound up as Buddhist protectors.

After crushing Bhairava, Heruka appropriates his garb. This is not borrowing, or even repurposing as PeterC suggests, this is outright subjugation.

Spelare said:

Sure, but that's specifically when it comes to deity cults and their related practices, which is in the imaginal or symbolic realm.

Malcolm wrote:

The subjugation of Mahādeva is a historical fact for Vajrayāna Buddhists, not merely some jungian archetype thingy.

Spelare said:

The lived social reality of human beings contemporaneous to those scriptures seems to have been one of relative peace.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this period was marked by intense persecution of Buddhists by Shaiva kings.

Spelare said:

Meanwhile, it is almost certain that Indian yogis of various backgrounds and lineages learned techniques from each other in an eclectic environment, across sectarian lines.

Malcolm wrote:

This has more to do with a) Ayurvedic concepts of the body b) the fact that Hatha Yoga begins in Buddhism.

Spelare said:

And there still are strong resemblances, in spite of centuries of divergent development!

Malcolm wrote:

The view is different, this marks the difference in result.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 25th, 2018 at 7:43 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

PSM said:

Can refuge be taken in such figures if they are understood to be emanations and the Buddhist view is maintained?

Malcolm wrote:

No.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 24th, 2018 at 8:09 PM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Spelare said:

He's in good company when we look at what Buddhist tantrikas did from early on.

Malcolm wrote:

No. Buddhist Vajrayāna, and even Mahāyāna, use of nonbuddhist figures was done in the context of conquest, domination and appropriation, not fitting them pleasantly into a Buddhist scheme. The same applies to Tibetan chthonic gods that wound up as Buddhist protectors.

After crushing Bhairava, Heruka appropriates his garb. This is not borrowing, or even repurposing as PeterC suggests, this is outright subjugation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 23rd, 2018 at 8:08 PM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Spelare said:

And suppose a formally Christian, Jewish, or whatever person does study Buddhist philosophy and then has a spontaneous realization of emptiness in their direct experience.

Malcolm wrote:

not possible. now ask why.

Spelare said:

Actually, though. There are many people whose adherence to Christian doctrine, for example, is really quite shallow. Such people don't have a strong conviction in the eternalist view they learned by rote as catechism, so they might be ready to abandon it after their first taste of emptiness. There are millions of people in our culture who fit that description. For many, continued adherence to Christianity is a mere vestige, and it doesn't have a determining role in how they order and interpret their perceptual experience.

Malcolm wrote:

The why is: unless one understands dependent origination as the Buddha taught it, one will not realize emptiness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 23rd, 2018 at 9:03 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Spelare said:

And suppose a formally Christian, Jewish, or whatever person does study Buddhist philosophy and then has a spontaneous realization of emptiness in their direct experience.

Malcolm wrote:

not possible. now ask why.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 22nd, 2018 at 8:35 AM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The second amendment was originally instituted in order ensure the right of southern militias to fetch escaped slaves.

Minobu said:

i always thought it was a snub towards the British who outlawed civilians to have guns during the revolution.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. It was an amendment designed to appease slave owners.

<https://www.rawstory.com/2016/07/the-second-amendment-was-ratified-to-preserve-slavery/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 21st, 2018 at 9:09 PM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The second amendment was originally instituted in order ensure the right of southern militias to fetch escaped slaves.

The Cicada said:

I dunno, Greg. I mean, it seems like countries with greater gun constraints also have more constraints on other things, too. Aussies have more constraints on both guns and on the internet, for example. I think that essentially equals less freedom.

Grigoris said:

Children scared of being shot dead while trying to learn is not a constraint on freedom? The only other countries where children fear being shot to death in their class rooms are those populated by "Islamic" extremists. Let that sink in a while. Young people weren't choosing to lash out in these bizarre ways until recently. What we ultimately have in the US is a sociological problem.

I agree it is a social problem, but it is being abetted by the presence of easily available military grade weapons.

The Cicada said:

Those are good points and I'm not sure I have an adequate response to that. It may be something we all have to consider soon, and it's going to be something that many people aren't going to take well—or rather, rationally—if there are no other answers.

I'm not sure how far this rabbit hole goes. The second amendment is explicitly for the purpose of defending the country and, I guess implicitly, for the purpose of fighting the government itself if it becomes tyrannical. That sounds criminal, but that's the way many people understand it. The irony is that the very thing contributors here are worried about, a tyrannical regime, is the exact reason kooky survivalists go and buy military grade weapons. A good portion of those guys are vets.

Your reasoning here is sound, but the issue itself seems to be a figurative minefield. Obviously the younger generation graduating secondary school and being able to vote will likely feel differently.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 20th, 2018 at 9:29 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

And thus begins the program of interpreting sūtras and tantras according to what one wishes they said

emaho said:

Malcolm, when I have to choose whom I trust, either you or the realized Tibetan masters from whom I have received teachings on phowa and the bardo, I choose the realized Tibetan masters. Deal with it.

The implication of your interpretation is that the most basic teachings you'll receive in every phowa course are nonsense, because they send the students on a million years detour when they could reach enlightenment in a couple of human rebirths. That's just plain nonsense. Insult me all you want. That doesn't change a thing.

Malcolm wrote:

Such courses are not nonsense, but teachers rarely draw out the implications of nirmanakāya phowa to Sukhavati, even though the facts as I have outlined them are clearly stated in Karma Chagme's aspiration and so on. I suggest you do more research.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 20th, 2018 at 8:58 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

emaho said:

PS: not saying it has to be interpreted this way, I'm just saying those passages don't necessarily have to be taken literally.

Malcolm wrote:

And thus begins the program of interpreting sūtras and tantras according to what one wishes they said, instead of what they actually say and what authentic masters such as Karma Chagme state about them:

"The duration of one whole fortunate kalpa is just one day in Sukhavati."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 20th, 2018 at 8:55 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

All that was stated was that it will take millions of human years to attain buddhahood once one is reborn there, if one is an ordinary person.

emaho said:

I understood you very clearly. And that is what I refuse to believe...

Malcolm wrote:

Then you refuse to believe what sūtras say on the subject, and in that case, there is no help for you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 20th, 2018 at 4:52 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

emaho said:

Sorry guys, but all teachers from whom I have received Phowa and Bardo teachings agree that being led to a pure land is favourable to a human rebirth, including the passage by Thrangu Rinpoche I've quoted earlier:

When we are about to be reborn and enter a new existence, it is best to close the doorway to the womb and to meditate the yidam deity, to pray to Amitabha or Avalokiteshvara, so that we don't enter the new existence but be led to a pure realm. That is ideally the best thing to accomplish. If we can't do this, then it is said we should pray to be reborn before Padmasambhava, in the presence of Avalokiteshvara or in a good land where we will be able to practice the dharma.

Malcolm wrote:

Nobody said that being reborn in Sukhavati is negative. All that was stated was that it will take millions of human years to attain buddhahood once one is reborn there, if one is an ordinary person.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 20th, 2018 at 3:08 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, after millions and millions of human years have gone by.

emaho said:

Why would it take millions and millions of years?

Aryjna said:

<http://www.kagyulibrary.hk/uploads/scripture/file/58-en.pdf>

This aspiration prayer also has information. According to the translation one kalpa is one day there. It is quadrillions of kalpas if you add up what is described in the text and possibly much more until you reach buddhahood, though it's not clear if that is human or Sukhavati time, and I don't know if there is different information in sutras or other texts.

Malcolm wrote:

This is why pure land practice also is neither a short nor a quick path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 20th, 2018 at 2:20 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, after millions and millions of human years have gone by.

emaho said:

Why would it take millions and millions of years?

Malcolm wrote:

Have you any idea of how long a day in Sukhavati is in human years? One day in Sukhavati equals one kalpa of the Bhadrakalpa.

emaho said:

In another simple explanation, there are four different lengths of kalpas. A regular kalpa is approximately 16 million years long (16,798,000 years[5]), and a small kalpa is 1000 regular kalpas, or about 16 billion years. Further, a medium kalpa is roughly 320 billion years, the equivalent of 20 small kalpas. A great kalpa is 4 medium kalpas, or around 1.28 trillion years.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 20th, 2018 at 12:13 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Motova said:

What about phowa?

Virgo said:

That's only going to a pure land, that is not being liberated.

emaho said:

Yes, but the main reason you want to go to a pure land is not that it's some kind of spiritual Disneyland where you can enjoy yourself, it's because that's where you'll reach enlightenment.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, after millions and millions of human years have gone by.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 20th, 2018 at 12:10 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The reason why the Tibetan tradition refers to practitioners of Buddhadharma as “insiders” is that there is no theory of salvation by an external savior in Buddhadharma.

Temicco said:

Whoa, where did you learn this from?

Malcolm wrote:

HH Sakya Trichen, HH Dalai Lama and many others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 19th, 2018 at 11:37 PM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

smcj said:

Even telling them to focus on an activity deity such as Jambhala is of no benefit, since these activity deities are not complete paths. Only bodhisattvas like Mañjuśrī, Avalokiteśvara, Tāra, and so on will function in this way for ordinary people who have no regular yidam practice.

If they have “the ring of faith” for the hook of compassion to latch onto that is.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, correct.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 19th, 2018 at 11:15 PM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Spelare said:

So, to be clear, the party line is that every being who has ever been liberated has realized the Dzogchen view (which we could say = Prajñāpāramitā = Mahāmudrā, except in manner of presentation and practice; same result, except for the varieties of rainbow body)? And this regardless of the level of teachings attributed to them in the literature? So, if they did not teach that view, it was not that they did not realize it but that there was not yet a suitable place, retinue, and occasion?

Malcolm wrote:

No. Every liberated person has realized the absence of self, i.e., emptiness, and in so doing, has ceased being under control of afflictions. Degrees of liberation are determined by remainder of afflictive obscuration one must eradicate.

Dzogchen is simply one path among many to accomplish this aim. As the Self-Arisen Vidyā Tantra states:

If someone does not dwell in words and does not dwell in names, that is Prajñāpāramitā,
the transcendent state of buddhahood itself;
it is obtained with wisdom and is liberated from all affliction.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 19th, 2018 at 11:07 PM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That is just not how things work in the bardo.

Spelare said:

Isn't one's experience of the bardo conditioned by culture and prior training or lack thereof?

Malcolm wrote:

First, we have to distinguish between the common bardo (antarabhāva) teaching found in Abhidharma, and so on, with the bardo presentation found exclusively in the Great Perfection Tantras of the Upadeśa class and their instructions.

Second, the question of near-death experiences will follow after that.

In all Buddhist traditions, the moment of the death ('chi kha) is a crucial point at which through recognizing the way the one's elements and so on dissolve into luminosity, there is an opportunity for one to recognize one's own state and wake up. All Tibetan Buddhist traditions recognize that this ends when the red and white bindu separate once the inner vāyu ceases in the body. After this is the so-called bardo of dharmatā, which is not a culturally conditioned experience in any way at all.

However, when someone has practiced the Zhitro mandala in this lifetime, it is possible for them to be guided through a process of reminding them of the significance of the experience of the bardo of dharmatā through the Shitro mandala, as in the Liberation through Hearing in the Bardo.

With respect to the first bardo, the bardo of the time of death, they are given instructions, whispered into their ear, from their guru or samaya sibling which helps them recognize the experiences they are undergoing -- this must be done after the outer vāyu (breath) ceases and before the inner vāyu ceases. It is best done immediately after the outer breath ceases.

If they do not wake up then, they can be reminded of the significance of the sounds, lights, and rays they experience during the the bardo of dharmatā case in terms of the peaceful and wrathful deities. However, practitioners of thögal will not require such a reminder, since such practitioners become familiar with and cultivate dharmatā in this lifetime, and in the bardo of dharmatā, are like children climbing into their mother's lap.

If the person fails to recognize the bardo of dharmatā, then there is the section for guiding rebirth in bardo of rebirth.

The reason that we have the Liberation through Hearing in the Bardo and other similar manuals is to provide instructions on these issues.

This is all predicated on the fact that at least for the first three weeks, or 21 days, after the bardo of death has finished, the bardo being has a mental body with all complete faculties and is capable of seeing relatives, family, and so on, once they have been reminded they are dead, they can still listen to teachings, and so on while in the bardo of rebirth until the 49th day, or after the end of their seventh bardo rebirth. However, the caveat is that it is generally only during the first three rebirths in the bardo that sentient beings still have body and memories of their previous existence. After the 21st day, they begin to fall under the strong traces that impel their next rebirth, and turn their attention to appropriating a new birth.

Spelare said:

Since the overwhelming majority of accounts of the bardo are from Tibetan Buddhists (I'm guessing there are also Indian and Bön ones), is it implausible that Christian or other "outsider" accounts would diverge drastically? Wouldn't near-death experiences throughout history be explicable as bardo experiences?

One of the things that most appealed to me about Tibetan teachings concerning death was that they could account for the afterlife experiences of non-Buddhists, including Christian (i.e. Abrahamic) heaven and hell realm experiences, Hindu lokas, etc.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhist teachings account for the death and afterlife experience of all sentient beings, since we are all composed of the five elements and consciousness. But it does not account for the death and afterlife experiences in the terms you imagine. For example, the teaching on the bardo of dharmatā is a unique feature of Dzogchen teachings. If you have never received teachings on it, you will never recognize the bardo of dharmatā since you will not have developed the proper corresponding meditative experience in this life to recognize it— it will flash by in an instant. In other schools such as Lamdre, they have different methods attaining liberation at the time of death and in the bardo, but they do not make a distinction of the bardo of dharmatā, let alone the four or six bardos we have in the Great Perfection teachings.

Hinduism, while eternalist, nevertheless shares with Buddhadharma the concept that liberation consist of being free from afflictions (which they term samskaras) and karma. However, since their view is based in the idea of the true existence of an ultimate self, their ultimate idea of liberation is very different from that of the Buddha. They do not have a concept of the antarabhāva, or bardo. Since they have an eternalist view of a self and what belongs to a self, they never eradicate all afflictions and thus are never truly liberated; and they never achieve omniscience.

The near-death experience Hindus, Christians, Muslims, etc. is what we consider "the moment of death experience." Why? Very simply put, the so-called near-death experiences of people are experiences where consciousness has not in fact left the body since the indestructible bindu in the heart center of the body has not separated into its white and red elements. That does not happen with the cessation of the outer vāyu (breath). That only happens with the cessation of the inner vāyu, and that generally requires three days.

What follows is a reasonably accurate presentation of the now standardized model of Hindu afterlife ideas:

According to the Hinduism, upon death, a soul or Self proceeds along one of the three paths suggested in the Vedas. As death nears and a person begins to lose consciousness, the Self gathers up the breaths (pranas) and the deities (devatas) hidden in the organs of the body, and enters into the heart (hridayam). From there, through an opening in the heart, it travels upwards along the channel of up breath (udana) and reaches the head.

There through an aperture in the top head, it escapes into the air or the mid-region called antrariksham (interstellar space). Breaths and the deities who accompany the Self return to their spheres in the macrocosm. As the body is cremated in the final sacrifice of life (antima kriya), the elements in the body (bhutas) return to the elements in the world.

From here on karma (net result of past actions) catches up. Liberated souls, or those who have burned their karmas and latent impressions, travel along a path called the northern path (uttarayana) and enter into a timeless eternal zone in the sphere of the sun. From there they are led by divine beings to the highest, immortal heaven of Brahman, known variously as Vaikuntha, Parandhama or Kailasa.

Those who are not liberated, but lived virtuous and dutiful lives according to the laws of God, go by another path called the southern path (daksinayana) to the ancestral world located in the sphere of the moon, where they stay until their karmas are exhausted. Then they fall down to the earth through rains and enter into plants, from plants into food, either as plant food or animal food, and through food into semen and then through semen into the wombs where they are reborn again according to their previous actions.

Now there is a third path, the path to the hell in the subterranean worlds (adhogati) reserved for those who indulge in serious sins and demonic actions. Upon exhausting their karmas they are born as worms, insects and other low life forms.

<http://www.hinduwebsite.com/hinduism/death.asp>

One thing to keep in mind here, Hindus want to cremate the body within 24 hours of death. Buddhists consider this terrible, since according to Buddhadharmā, it takes three days for the consciousness of a person to vacate their body. From our point of view, Hindus do not account for the inner breath upon the cessation of the outer breath. For them, once one stops breathing, one is dead. Their concept of rebirth too, while interesting, bears no relationship with the idea of rebirth or punarbhāva found in the Buddha's teachings, and certainly there is nothing like the antarabhāva, or period between lives.

Spelare said:

Such experiences could be integrated into a teaching that placed liberation as a preferable outcome. In fact, I think I've heard lamas acknowledge the possibility.

Malcolm wrote:

As Āryadeva puts it, realization depends on view. Further, liberation depends on realization. Thus, if one's view is wrong, one realization will be faulty, and if one's realization is faulty, liberation is not a possibility in this life, the bardo, or the next, unless or until one meets the Dharma and discovers the right view by depending on a virtuous mentor.

Such lamas and teachers, are either naive, or in the attempt to be kind to those who come to Buddhadharmā with strong clinging to their past religious upbringing, can actually do a disservice to their students by making such statements. The experience of the dissolution of the body that sentient beings have during the death process are generic, and the hallucinations that people have during this process are irrelevant to the process itself. See 226-234 of Gyurme Dorje's translation, The Tibetan Book of the Dead: the First Complete Translation.

For example, on page 233, for those people without a yidam, it says "Meditate on the Lord of Great Compassion," which any Tibetan will readily know how to do. But since Jesus, Mary, Krishna, Shiva, etc. are not buddhas, and are not connected to a Buddhist path through being defined as an excellent yidam, there is no ultimate benefit in telling people to focus on these religious figures during their death process, apart from giving them comfort. Giving a dying person comfort is a desiderata of course, but in this it is merely a palliative, and will at best lead them to rebirth again in the three higher realms. This is not a bad thing, but let us not kid ourselves into thinking such an experience "could be integrated into a teaching that placed liberation as a preferable outcome."

Even telling them to focus on an activity deity such as Jambhala is of no benefit, since these activity deities are not complete paths. Only bodhisattvas like Mañjuśrī, Avalokiteśvara, Tāra, and so on will function in this way for ordinary people who have no regular yidam practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 19th, 2018 at 12:43 PM

Title: Re: Question on the Amitabha mantra

Content:

Jingang said:

Just a question on the Amitabha mantra. The most common one is Om Amideva Hrih. However I also read it by Tulku Thondup Rinpoche as Om Amitabha Hrih.

Is anyone familiar with the latter?

Malcolm wrote:

The former is a Tibetan corruption of the latter, however it is so diffuse now as to have become canonical.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 19th, 2018 at 11:36 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

emaho said:

???

Praying to enlightened beings to lead you to a pure land while you're in the bardo is one of the standard teachings in Tibetan Buddhism. See for instance this quote:

Thrangu Rinpoche, The First Twelve Days of the Bardo p.21:

same text, p.22:

<http://www.rinpoche.com/teachings/bardo.pdf>

Are you saying this is not compatible with the Buddha's teachings?

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty clear here one is not being liberated by someone else

emaho said:

Good thing I haven't been speaking of liberation then, isn't it? Seriously, Malcolm, I've been intentionally avoiding this term the entire time.

What I did indeed say was:

Malcolm wrote:

(...) Even supposing Jesus and his mom were emanations of Avalokiteśvara and Tārā, respectively, this does not mean that they were able to teach a liberative path in those forms. (...)

emaho said:

Except that if Jesus was an enlightened being then praying to him in the bardo will have exactly the same effect as praying to any other enlightened being in the bardo.

And later:

Also, you will have no problem to believe that he'll be able to transfer you into a pure land when you pray to him in the bardo. Sorry, Malcolm, I really don't see what sense it makes to start some discussion about the question if this is called liberation or not. If one reaches liberation immediately in the bardo or later in the pure land really makes no difference here.

The reasons why I have avoided the word "liberation" is 1. because Jesus himself didn't speak of Liberation, he spoke of Salvation, and 2. if you're being led to a pure land by an enlightened being then that's where the actual liberation will take place some time later, the mere act of being led into the pure land is not yet liberation itself, but it will lead to your liberation. And I'm sure that I've heard lots of Buddhist teachings about the bardo where praying to an enlightened being in the bardo is referred to as a chance for liberation. So actually the Tibetan tradition isn't as nitpicky as you.

You, on the other hand just very clearly rejected the idea of being saved by another being as contradicting the Dharma. But if somebody leads you to a place where you will for sure reach enlightenment that pretty much counts as that being "saving you".

Malcolm wrote:

The reason why the Tibetan tradition refers to practitioners of Buddhadharma as "insiders" is that there is no theory of salvation by an external savior in Buddhadharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 19th, 2018 at 11:09 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Spelare said:

What if the "other" to whom you pray liberates you not as a reward for your faith but through revealing to you that you were never really bound? That He is actually the basis of all you have ever experienced? That "you" are a temporary appearance manifesting in, as, and through Him?

krodha said:

Hopefully "his" name is Papaji and "he's" teaching neo-Advaita replete with all the scare quotes over first, second and third person singular pronouns... because that is what it sounds like.

Spelare said:

Did you notice that the quotation marks expand as the implications of emptiness are more and more fully realized? If you read the context, the conversation I butted into was about a hypothetical encounter with an apparition in the bardo to whom one prays for liberation.

Malcolm wrote:

That is just not how things work in the bardo.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 19th, 2018 at 10:10 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The idea that one can be saved by another is an externalist, eternalist, theistic view. It is not compatible with the Buddha's teachings.

emaho said:

???

Praying to enlightened beings to lead you to a pure land while you're in the bardo is one of the standard teachings in Tibetan Buddhism. See for instance this quote:

Thrangu Rinpoche, The First Twelve Days of the Bardo p.21:

We can pray to Amitabha Buddha or Avalokiteshvara to take us to the pure realms, so it is important at this time not to fall under the influence of the disturbing emotions.

same text, p.22:

When we are about to be reborn and enter a new existence, it is best to close the doorway to the womb and to meditate the yidam deity, to pray to Amitabha or Avalokiteshvara, so that we don't enter the new existence but be led to a pure realm. That is ideally the best thing to accomplish. If we can't do this, then it is said we should pray to be reborn before Padmasambhava, in the presence of Avalokiteshvara or in a good land where we will be able to practice the dharma.

<http://www.rinpoche.com/teachings/bardo.pdf>

Are you saying this is not compatible with the Buddha's teachings?

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty clear here one is not being liberated by someone else

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 19th, 2018 at 10:06 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No one can hand liberation to you. The idea that one can be saved by another is an externalist, eternalist, theistic view. It is not compatible with the Buddha's teachings.

Spelare said:

What if the "other" to whom you pray liberates you not as a reward for your faith but through revealing to you that you were never really bound? That He is actually the basis of all you have ever experienced? That "you" are a temporary appearance manifesting in, as, and through Him?

Suppose "you" then ask Him whether He himself really exists, and He confesses that He does not. That "He", too, is a dreamlike emanation whose role is to guide you to freedom from within your own mind, from which "He" has never been separate. Before "you" can raise a final objection on the basis of scriptural argumentation, "He" clarifies that "your mind" is also empty. Through this knowledge, "He" empowers "you" to free "others" from "their" own illusory predicaments.

All good, right?

Malcolm wrote:

It is a good fantasy, but nothing more.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 19th, 2018 at 6:33 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

emaho said:

Also, you will have no problem to believe that he'll be able to transfer you into a pure land when you pray to him in the bardo. Sorry, Malcolm, I really don't see what sense it makes to start some discussion about the question if this is called liberation or not. If one reaches liberation immediately in the bardo or later in the pure land really makes no difference here.

Malcolm wrote:

Liberation is defined as being free from affliction. If one is afflicted, one is not liberated no matter what external conditions might prevail or what prayers one might recite.

No one can hand liberation to you. The idea that one can be saved by another is an externalist, eternalist, theistic view. It is not compatible with the Buddha's teachings.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 19th, 2018 at 4:36 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Practitioner to Amitabha-like Buddha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Basically, even the worst Dzogchen practitioner is guaranteed birth in the four natural nirmanakāya buddhafiels, 125 human years in each, at the end of which time (500 hundred human years), one will attain full buddhahood in the Amoghasiddhi's buddhafiels. This is much better than the endless millions of years one needs to spend in Amitabha's buddhafiels in order to attain full buddhahood.

cyril said:

I guess that depends on your definition of the worst Dzogchen practitioner. Apparently, receiving Dzogchen teachings and practicing them to the best of your abilities does not necessarily make you a Dzogchen practitioner albeit of the worst kind.

A couple of days before we left, Khenpo arranged for his brother, Kyali Loli, to have an interview with the Chatralwa. Loli was neither a scholar nor an accomplished meditator. Anyhow, he had already received Dzogpa Chenpo teachings and had practiced them after completion of his common practices and preliminaries. But when he met Chatralwa it was disappointing for him. It is not because he wasn't doing well with his Dzogpa Chenpo meditation, but that he wasn't even ready to start it.

On that day, one of the most important days of his life, Kyali Loli went to see Chatralwa. Loli was a very courageous person and nothing would intimidate him. So Loli explained his practice, especially concerning his Dzogpa Chenpo experiences, and he requested instructions and clarifications. Chatralwa, without making any remarks about Loli's presentation, said:

"You should first try to say with devotion the "name prayer" of Amitabha Buddha 100 times a day, then increase it to 200, and so on. One day there might be a time when whatever you are doing, you will always be united with the expression of the "name" of the Buddha and the feeling of the presence of the Buddha. If that happens, when you die, you will die with the expression and feelings of the Buddha Mind presence of the Buddha. Then, because of your merits and the blessings of the Buddha, perceptions will manifest as the Buddha-field, and your future will be in peace and happiness. Then you will be equipped to serve others".

Then he wrote down a few lines, a quotation from a sutra which reveals the merits and benefits of the "recitation of the name of Amitabha Buddha." Kyali Loli was disappointed because he didn't get any Dzogpa Chenpo teachings, and it broke his proud heart. But, now thinking back, I can understand how these teachings were perfect for him, and how it will be beneficial if he or anybody uses those instructions. It is important for the teacher to be fair, frank, certain, and clear, and for the disciple to be realistic, careful, tolerant, and open, as a line says:
"Having the Dzogpa Chenpo as teachings is not enough, The person needs to become Dzogpa Chenpo."

Tulku Thondup - The practice of Dzogchen of Longchen Rabjam

Malcolm wrote:

When an interested student does not understand the teachings of Dzogchen, this is the fault of the teacher. On the other hand, it is said very clearly that even someone who merely has devotion to Dzogchen will certainly be liberated within three lifetimes. So I wouldn't worry about Kyali Loli very much.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 19th, 2018 at 12:16 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Practitioner to Amitabha-like Buddha

Content:

Wicked Yeshe said:

Sounds promising. But Sukhavati seems so pleasant I wouldn't mind being there for that long time.

Malcolm wrote:

Then your bodhicitta is weak.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 18th, 2018 at 11:43 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Practitioner to Amitabha-like Buddha

Content:

Wicked Yeshe said:

You can attain rebirth in the eastern paradise of medicine buddha. But it is a lot more difficult than the western pure land. Gives a lot of stuff for thought. Also this world is considered an impure buddha field that can be turned into a full pure land. Potentially at least. Who knows how and when?

Malcolm wrote:

Basically, even the worst Dzogchen practitioner is guaranteed birth in the four natural nirmanakāya buddhafields, 125 human years in each, at the end of which time (500 hundred human years), one will attain full buddhahood in the Amoghasiddhi's buddhafield. This is much better than the endless millions of years one needs to spend in Amitabha's buddhafiield in order to attain full buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 18th, 2018 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Practitioner to Amitabha-like Buddha

Content:

Motova said:

How long would it take a Dzogchen practitioner to make a Pure Land better than Buddha Amitabha's?

Thanks.

Malcolm wrote:

One could not purify a buddhafiield "better" than Amitabha's per se, but since buddhafiields do not exist apart from one's own state, one ought not worry about it.

Motova said:

Are you saying that all Buddhas have the potential to manifest as Amitabha?

Malcolm wrote:

No, I am saying that buddhafiields are not something outside you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 18th, 2018 at 10:32 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Practitioner to Amitabha-like Buddha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Nice joke.

Grigoris said:

Ye of little faith!

Malcolm wrote:

Who needs faith when one has the evidence of one's eyes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 18th, 2018 at 10:21 PM

Title: Re: Trump's Movement to Unilateralism

Content:

Rick said:

Like 99% of Americans these days, I choose my news/opinion sources to support my views: liberal, left-leaning, anti-Trump.

I've tried to include non-left-leaning news/opinion sources in my reading list ... but never really found anything/anyone that clicked with me.

Can anyone here recommend some good non-left-leaning sources (bipartisan, centrist, right-leaning) I might check out?

Malcolm wrote:

Wall Street Journal. The opinion page might make you vomit, but otherwise, it is good journalism. The Economist as well, is quite good; European style conservatism, which puts it somewhere between conservative Democrat and moderate Republican.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 18th, 2018 at 8:38 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Practitioner to Amitabha-like Buddha

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Finally, a truly practice-related question.

Malcolm wrote:

Another dzogchungpa (tm) putdown.

Grigoris said:

I do believe that, for once, he is being serious.

Malcolm wrote:

Nice joke.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 18th, 2018 at 8:17 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Pema Rigdzin said:

the Mahayoga sadhanas of which are based on the Guhyagarbha tantra.

Malcolm wrote:

Not necessarily, for example, there are sadhanas in the Choling tersar that are based on the Mahayoga yoginī tantra, the Buddhasamyoga Tantra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 18th, 2018 at 8:15 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Practitioner to Amitabha-like Buddha

Content:

Motova said:

How long would it take a Dzogchen practitioner to make a Pure Land better than Buddha Amitabha's?

Thanks.

Malcolm wrote:

One could not purify a buddhafiield "better" than Amitabha's per se, but since buddhafiields do not exist apart from one's own state, one ought not worry about it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 18th, 2018 at 6:53 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Practitioner to Amitabha-like Buddha

Content:

Motova said:

How long would it take a Dzogchen practitioner to make a Pure Land better than Buddha Amitabha's?

Thanks.

dzogchungpa said:

Finally, a truly practice-related question.

Malcolm wrote:

Another dzogchungpa (tm) putdown.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 17th, 2018 at 10:56 PM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

There are so many missing text books in Buddhism

Malcolm wrote:

Let's see, 108 volumes in the bKa' 'gyur, the translated word of the Buddha...are you quite sure that in 108 volumes there is something missing?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 17th, 2018 at 9:11 PM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:
Yes.

Also....there are 84,000 "Gates" (Doors)....and other religions could be included, as there are so many types of personalities, cultures, planets, etc. The key is, your heart & intensionsthe "all knowing ones" KNOW your heart & intensions.....

https://dhammadawiki.com/index.php?title=84,000_Dhamma_doors

Malcolm wrote:
No, they are not included, since the Buddha did not teach them.

dzogchungpa said:
I have it on good authority that anything at all that is well spoken is the word of the Buddha.

Malcolm wrote:
Indeed, but “well-spoken” is misapplied by you with sarcasm, so when you use the term, it actually means the opposite.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, May 17th, 2018 at 1:09 PM
Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?
Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:
What if you saw ChNN walking on water. Would you think it was because of his attainments or just something anyone could do ?

Virgo said:
Non Buddhist spiritual practitioners (who have no Buddhist attainments) can gain siddhis. ChNN is a Buddhist master, so I would think it was because of that.

Kevin...

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Yes.

Also....there are 84,000 "Gates" (Doors)....and other religions could be included, as there are so many types of personalities, cultures, planets, etc. The key is, your heart & intensionsthe "all knowing ones" KNOW your heart & intensions.....

https://dhammadawiki.com/index.php?title=84,000_Dhamma_doors

Malcolm wrote:

No, they are not included, since the Buddha did not teach them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 17th, 2018 at 1:06 PM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Jesus performed many miracles....just like Enlightened Yogis. So he must have been Enlightened.

Malcolm wrote:

Siddhis do not equal enlightenment.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Yes...but Enlightened Buddhas can do all these things, and then some....

Do siddhis indicate levels of attainment or bhumi. ?

Malcolm wrote:

No. Such powers can be cultivated by worldly meditators.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 17th, 2018 at 10:19 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Spelare said:

So, why must we insist so strongly on foreclosing the mere possibility of any non-Buddhist being liberated to any degree?

Malcolm wrote:

One excellent reason might be the fact that the Buddha himself excluded the possibility.

Spelare said:

How do we determine that this is the definitive meaning, and not a provisional teaching for a particular time, place, and retinue? Who can determine that?

I suspect that there are buddhas other than the ones we've all heard of, who have taught beings far from the limits of the South and East Asian cultural spheres. Perhaps the notion of lands to which a buddha has not appeared is mere parochialism codified by scholastics according to the limits of their knowledge.

Assuming the realization of emptiness to be a sine qua non:

If there are Mahāyāna practitioners who formally assent to emptiness without ever realizing it experientially, could there not also be others who realize emptiness experientially without ever formally assenting to it? In that case, there could be Theravadins, for example, who did in fact realize emptiness fully rather than partially, but who never adopted or defended it publicly. Why could there not then be Buddhists (or bodhisattvas or buddhas) in all but name who realized emptiness to some degree or fully, without the need for formal instruction?

Malcolm wrote:

Emptiness realized by śrāvaka arhats, pratyekabuddhas, and buddhas is the same emptiness. The difference between buddhas and the former two is omniscience about paths, not liberation. In terms of liberation, all three are equal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 17th, 2018 at 10:15 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Jesus performed many miracles....just like Enlightened Yogis. So he must have been Enlightened.

Malcolm wrote:

Siddhis do not equal enlightenment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 17th, 2018 at 6:54 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Aryjna said:

How is it polemic? I am pretty sure it is consistent with the descriptions of the bardo in Vajrayana.

emaho said:

It's polemic because Christians have forms of mind training, too. They have prayers, meditations, contemplations, confessions and whatnot. Of course there are differences to Buddhist mind training, they don't have the same meditation techniques as we do, but they do have forms of mind training. Of course not everybody practices as they're supposed to, but that's just normal and can be said about Buddhists, too. I mean, just look at us,

<https://www.facebook.com/jambandsruinedmylife/posts/1827257353973298> The least thing a practicing Christian is required to do is repeat certain standard prayers throughout the day. If somebody does that for years he will have established a habit of praying that will help him in the bardo - if Jesus is an enlightened being. Of course, you don't agree with that precondition, I get that.

Malcolm wrote:

What they do not have is the view of dependent origination and emptiness. Further, no one can give you liberation, not even the Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 17th, 2018 at 5:53 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

amanitamusc said:

There will always be those that believe all religions are paths that lead to the top of the same mountain.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, damn perennialists!

Spelare said:

We're all on the same mountain, whether we know it or not. Some are climbing it, and others are circling the base.

Some paths are more direct, others gradual, and still others quite tortuous. Some reach dead ends, which require one to go back the way they came and take another path.

The shortest path is to recognize that one is only ever on the mountain. Then even a foot that strays from "the path" remains on the path.

Malcolm wrote:

No, different traditions are actually climbing different mountains, with different bases, paths and results.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 17th, 2018 at 4:03 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

amanitamusc said:

There will always be those that believe all religions are paths that lead to the top of the same mountain.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, damn perennialists!

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 17th, 2018 at 3:38 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

Btw, Garchen Rinpoche shares ChNN's opinion on Jesus and Mary, too. As does Tenzin Wangyal Rinpoche. And at least one of TUR's sons. And, at least when it comes to Mary, Lopon Ogyan Tenzin Rinpoche. I could go on, but of course there is no point. Those who reject these equivalencies/similarities/affinities will continue rejecting them, those who are OK with them will obviously be still OK with them.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, Deshung Rinpoche used to offer regular tormas to the Liberty Statue, a small representation of which he carried about with him everywhere.

As mentioned above, the idea that bodhisattvas manifest as teachers to nonbuddhists is not novel. Even the Buddha, the Pali Canon reports, would manifest as a brahmin and teach brahmins and so on. But he was not teaching them Buddhadharma. For example, in the Medicine Tantra, it is reported that when the Medicine Buddha manifested the the teacher Vidyajñāna, he manifested four Vidyajñānas, who were each perceived by the four retinue— devas, rishis, tīrthikas, and buddhists— to be teaching the medical texts of their own traditions.

Even supposing Jesus and his mom were emanations of Avalokiteśvara and Tārā, respectively, this does not mean that they were able to teach a liberative path in those forms. What it does mean is that that beings who were to be tamed by such forms, would be tamed by Avalokiteśvara and Tārā manifesting in those forms to teach them. Avalokiteśvara manifests in the form of a buddha to teach those to be tamed by a buddha, manifests in the form of a pratyekabuddha to teach those to be tamed by a pratyekabuddha, manifests in the form of an arhat to teach those to be tamed by an arhat, or even manifests in the form of a piścaci to teach those to be tamed in the form of a piścaci.

One's ability to meet the Dharma, the only source of liberation on this globe, depends on attaining the eight freedoms and ten endowments of a precious human birth. As Dzogchen practitioners, this should be axiomatically understood. Just in case anyone has forgotten what these are:

http://rywiki.tsadra.org/index.php/Eight_Freedoms http://rywiki.tsadra.org/index.php/%27byor_ba_bcu

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 17th, 2018 at 3:11 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Spelare said:

So, why must we insist so strongly on foreclosing the mere possibility of any non-Buddhist being liberated to any degree?

Malcolm wrote:

One excellent reason might be the fact that the Buddha himself excluded the possibility.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 17th, 2018 at 3:02 AM

Title: Re: Trekchod/pointing out instructions

Content:

florin said:

Formally a dzogchen teacher would not introduce these when introducing dzogchen teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

Don't be silly. Of course they would. It is for this reason that Longchenpa wrote a long commentary on just the eight examples of illusion, the sgyu ma'i ngal gso.

florin said:

You misunderstood.

I see a difference between introducing the examples of illusions as the main and final point of the teaching and introducing them as a means or as a pedagogical device with the view to help students rest in the knowledge of primordial state.

As I said in my earlier intervention, a dzogchen teacher would use any dimension of understanding, whether is sutra or tantra with their examples and devices, to introduce disciples to their real nature. So when it comes to means of introducing knowledge of the real state nothing is excluded.

There is no splitting hairs here is just offering a necessary distinction in what constitutes the elements of training in order to be able to develop stability, presence and understand with utmost certainty what the real primordial state is.

Malcolm wrote:

Is the "real" primordial state something other than emptiness free from extremes? If so, is it empty or not empty? If it is empty, is it completely empty, or partially empty? If it is not empty, how is it not a self?

florin said:

I am not going to discuss details about primordial state and what this is. It would mean discussing details of the three transmissions. However, we have different understanding of what primordial state means. I see this as a futile exercise and quite possibly one that would raise the ire of Ekajati. I can't deal with these kind of things anymore. You ask these questions of yourself on the cushion in the process of prajna development to see what's what for yourself. These questions are not for others or for forging a way to a victory in a pointless debate.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a little strange to give advice, and then refuse to answer questions about what your advice might entail. Copout.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 16th, 2018 at 11:00 PM

Title: Re: Trekchod/pointing out instructions

Content:

florin said:

There is no splitting hairs here is just offering a necessary distinction in what constitutes the elements of training in order to be able to develop stability, presence and understand with utmost certainty what the real primordial state is.

Malcolm wrote:

Is the "real" primordial state something other than emptiness free from extremes? If so, is it empty or not empty? If it is empty, is it completely empty, or partially empty? If it is not empty, how is it not a self?

The meaning of Dzogchen is not even slightly different than the meaning of the Prajñāpāramitā. The means may differ; the meaning, however, is the same.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 16th, 2018 at 10:23 PM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

krodha said:

... but look at the massive scale of bloodshed that has occurred as a result.

emaho said:

Hmm, ja, of course there have been horrible things done in the name of Christian Churches, but Tibetan history isn't all lovey-dovey either, and you wouldn't stop being a Buddhist because of what's happening now in Burma.

Frankly I don't think it works this way around. The way it works is rather that the powers that be use whatever ideology, religion or philosophy the populace believes in and twist and turn it so they can abuse it for their own needs. Just look at the ideas of Marx and what that has been turned into in history. The fact that Marx was atheist was no protection against that.

P.S.: just look at the Chinese "cultural revolution" and the atrocities committed in order to "free" people from religion, including the still ongoing genocide on Tibetans.

Malcolm wrote:

This is all completely beside the point. ChNN certainly does not think Christianity, etc., are liberative traditions — if he did, it would be clear in the Game of Liberation. In fact, in that game, the only way "out" is through Buddhist paths. Arguing over whether or not Jesus was a bodhisattva is fruitless because even if he was, his teachings do not lead to liberation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 16th, 2018 at 9:47 PM

Title: Re: Trekchod/pointing out instructions

Content:

florin said:

You are asking sutra level questions (selflessness, illusion, ego, etc...) in a topic with a dzogchen title.

krodha said:

Selflessness, illusion, etc., are core Dzogchen principles.

florin said:

Formally a dzogchen teacher would not introduce these when introducing dzogchen teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

Don't be silly. Of course they would. It is for this reason that Longchenpa wrote a long commentary on just the eight examples of illusion, the sgyu ma'i ngal gso.

florin said:

A dzogchen teacher introduces the student to knowledge of their primordial state through the three types of transmission.

Malcolm wrote:

The basis (primordial state, aka the nature of the mind) is without self, is not a self, and does not belong to a self. Hence selflessness is a core teaching of Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 16th, 2018 at 7:08 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

it is explained that it is not an object nor a subject.

emaho said:

I know. I'm just not aware that Meister Eckart speaks of this soul's spark as a substance, and just because he calls it unconditioned doesn't mean it has to be wrong or completely opposed to the Dharma, because Buddha-nature is also unconditioned.

Malcolm wrote:

Are you making the assertion that use of the term “unconditioned” renders all traditions that use the term compatible? The sugatagarbha doctrine has a few variations, for example, the Lanka equates it with the all-basis consciousness. As I understand the term, tathagatagarbha refers to the union of the mind’s clarity and emptiness. That union is unconditioned, but the mind itself is conditioned. Just this is the “god” ChNN is referring to, and nothing else, since the basis is just this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 16th, 2018 at 6:58 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This business about the soul’s spark is exactly the atman Buddha refuted. Surprised you don’t get that. There is no dependent origination here, no emptiness, etc, just an assertion of an unconditioned substance called a soul.

emaho said:

Are you saying that Buddha-nature is dependent on causes and conditions?

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhanature depends on sentient beings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 16th, 2018 at 3:26 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In the end, why do we give a flying f*&k about any of this? The Buddha was very clear: outside of his Dharmavinaya, the four kinds of āryas— stream entrants, once returners, never returners, and arhats— do not exist.

dzogchungpa said:

Acharya, I was thinking about this eloquently phrased comment and, as the main pro-tirthika guy on the board, I would like to ask you a question. Consider the experiences ChNN reports here:

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=40&t=23279&p=349373#p349373>.

Why, in your opinion, did he give a flying f*&k about any of that?

Malcolm wrote:

Nyams are nyams, nice, but in the end, not the main point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 16th, 2018 at 2:17 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If they ask, we can share.

If you don't discuss the teachings with those who are not interested, there is no risk of being seen as a narrow minded sectarian.

With respect to dhyana and so on, these mental states are not in and of themselves liberative. In fact, without right view they merely create paths of samsaric rebirth. Further, improper meditation blocks right view.

Spelare said:

Because we interact with non-Buddhists on a daily basis. So, we have at least three options:

a) we don't talk to them about Dharma

Malcolm wrote:

This is the best thing, unless they ask.

Spelare said:

I mean, isn't that a little bit at odds with the spirit of Mahāyāna? Obviously, we're not going to talk about advanced teachings we're not authorized to share with someone who wouldn't benefit from them anyway. But things like śamatha, for example, can benefit everybody, even non-Buddhists. Lamas like Chökyi Nyima Rinpoche and Alan Wallace have said it would be lacking in compassion not to share general teachings that can help alleviate suffering, relatively if not ultimately. We are enjoined to rejoice even in the samsaric happiness of sentient beings.

Are other traditions profound? How so? How do they lead to something other than higher birth in samsara?

Even if you don't believe another tradition leads to anything beyond favorable rebirth, you're not going to get anywhere when engaging with a knowledgeable adherent of that tradition if you are willfully ignorant of it. They will notice when you misconstrue it and rely on strawman caricatures of non-Buddhist teachings, brought out only to be summarily dismissed without serious investigation. If you have actually studied different systems with sincerity and are still convinced that only Buddhist vehicles are valid, and that of those Atiyoga is the undisputed pinnacle, then they will respect your judgment more than if you come across as a narrow sectarian.

The only thing similar between Buddhadharma and other traditions is that we all emphasize compassion; but even here, the compassion of other traditions is limited in its scope.

I think the cultivation of attention, along the lines of śamatha, has parallels in the Hindu, Christian, and Sufi traditions; perhaps in others. Nowadays it is taught even in secular contexts. Not that these approaches are in every respect identical, but that ethically neutral meditative practice is fairly universal in the major world traditions. Someone who has cultivated their attention well, even if in a non-Buddhist context, might be better prepared to receive the View. That compassion you mentioned couldn't hurt either, even if it isn't Great Compassion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 15th, 2018 at 8:32 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Virgo said:

Guys this is all tirthika stuff, a serious waste of time. Wouldn't we better off talking about something more relevant to our lives like was Rush more of a progressive rock band or a more of a metal band, in your opinion? I think that would be more of a stimulating conversation, rather than talking about samsaric pathways. If it leads to rebirth, it is just uninteresting.

Kevin...

Malcolm wrote:

Take it up with Dzogchungpa, he is the main pro-tirthika guy on the board.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 15th, 2018 at 8:10 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

smcj said:

,,,not to mention his affinity for the apophatic approach. None of this resembles Dzogchen or Buddhism in general in any way.

Nāgārjuna isn't apophatic?

Malcolm wrote:
Nope.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 15th, 2018 at 7:59 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In the end, why do we give a flying f*&k about any of this? The Buddha was very clear: outside of his Dharmavinaya, the four kinds of āryas— stream entrants, once returners, never returners, and arhats— do not exist.

Spelare said:

Because we interact with non-Buddhists on a daily basis. So, we have at least three options:

a) we don't talk to them about Dharma

Malcolm wrote:

This is the best thing, unless they ask.

Spelare said:

b) we talk about it from the perspective of not understanding the profundity of their tradition

Malcolm wrote:

Are other traditions profound? How so? How do they lead to something other than higher birth in samsara?

Spelare said:

c) We've done our homework, and can recognize what is genuinely similar and what is non-negotiably different

By studying these other doctrines, we also clarify to ourselves what is truly distinctive about Buddhism and its vehicles.

Malcolm wrote:

The only thing similar between Buddhadharma and other traditions is that we all emphasize compassion; but even here, the compassion of other traditions is limited in its scope.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 15th, 2018 at 7:12 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I had thought the relevance of CTR saying that the "concept of the nonexistence of the divinity principle outside of one's existence" was understood "fully and completely" by at least some Christians would be obvious, considering that the topic of this thread is the following quote:

Losal Samten said:

Cool, fair enough. I would disagree that it would be taken as a given though, even by former insiders; for some reason the mystical aspects aren't widely taught about in Catholic churches at least here in the UK, it's up to oneself to discover that. I don't know if the Orthodox churches/countries are better, since they have a greater tradition of institutionalised mysticism.

Malcolm wrote:

In the end, why do we give a flying f*&k about any of this? The Buddha was very clear: outside of his Dharmavinaya, the four kinds of āryas— stream entrants, once returners, never returners, and arhats— do not exist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 15th, 2018 at 7:07 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

The essence of Buddhist teaching is Dzogchen, which is the final teaching of the Buddha Shakyamuni. Through Dzogchen we can really understand what George is and we don't have to worry if there is a George or not. George always exists as our real nature, the base, for everybody."

Malcolm wrote:

Because, you know, he has also said the basis was "George."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 15th, 2018 at 6:53 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Spelare said:

Fair enough. Would it, however, be undue speculation to suppose that some non-Buddhists like Eckhart encountered the ālaya-vijñāna and then tried to articulate their experience in theistic language? I thought that's what thousands of Hindus are supposed to have been doing all these years.

Malcolm wrote:

The ālaya-vijñāna is not an object of consciousness. The basic error nonbuddhist make is that they hold consciousness, whether dualistic like the Samkhya, or nondually like Advaita, to be permanent, unconditioned and so on. This is Eckhart's flaw as well. They do this because they do not have the view of dependent origination.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 15th, 2018 at 6:27 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Ignorance also has a cause in Dzogchen. There are no first causes. And even Samantabhadra possessed ignorance.

Malcom said:

There is no first cause in Buddhadharma, including Dzogchen.

Spelare said:

Suppose we aren't speaking of the entire cosmos, but of the dualistic samsaric perception of an individual. I thought that arose due to ignorance. Or is there a sense in which that is not accurate to say in Dzogchen?

I know that samsara is said elsewhere to be beginningless. I've never been certain how to reconcile those accounts. I usually do so in a general way with the concepts of timelessness and transcendence of cause-and-effect, but I'd like to do so more precisely.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 15th, 2018 at 6:13 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You are engaged in a top down reading.

Losal Samten said:

Divine light, uncreated, nonconceptual, etc. is standard talk regards to tirthika metaphysics and mysticisms.

Spelare said:

Pretty remarkable for a medieval German, though, isn't it?

But Eckhart went further in deconstructing the very idea of God. He talked about something called "the essence of God":

Eckhart, Sermon 87 said:

While I yet stood in my first cause, I had no God and was my own cause: then I wanted nothing and desired nothing, for I was bare being and the knower of myself in the enjoyment of truth. Then I wanted myself and wanted no other thing: what I wanted I was and what I was I wanted, and thus I was free of God and all things. But when I left my free will behind and received my created being, then I had a God. For before there were creatures, God was not 'God': He was That which He was. But when creatures came into existence and received their created being, then God was not 'God' in Himself—He was 'God' in creatures.

Therefore I pray to God to make me free of God, for my essential being is above God, taking God as the origin of creatures. For in that essence of God in which God is above being and distinction, there I was myself and knew myself so as to make this man. Therefore I am my own cause according to my essence, which is eternal, and not according to my becoming, which is temporal. Therefore I am unborn, and according to my unborn mode I can never die. According to my unborn mode I have eternally been, am now, and shall eternally remain. That which I am by virtue of birth must die and perish, for it is mortal, and so must perish with time. In my birth all things were born, and I was the cause of myself and all things: and if I had so willed it, I would not have been, and all things would not have been. If I were not, God would not be either. I am the cause of God's being God: if I were not, then God would not be God. But you do not need to know this.

Spelare said:

Now you can see why he was investigated for heresy by the Papal authorities! That quotation sounds totally arrogant and presumptuous if you read it as simply a delusional human being. But if the "I" speaking there is the same "I" that in our own tradition's scriptures says "I am primordial self-originating wisdom. I am the primordial source of all phenomena. I am the all-creating king, pure perfect presence," what he has said is the opposite of arrogance or presumption.

The story of an "I" reposing in its first cause and then giving rise to creation sounds very much like the accounts we've heard of dualistic samsaric experience arising through non-recognition and the arising of false knowledge on the basis of ignorance. In fact, I would suggest that that is what Eckhart is trying to get at. But he phrases it in the language of "creation" that was known to everyone in his culture the same way that Buddhist accounts of how dualistic consciousness arises would be familiar to Buddhists. Eckhart saw the need to go back to the ground from which all conceptual proliferation arises.

Does he have to have fully realized and integrated that awakening in order for us to suspect he had a genuine glimpse? Of course we won't find Buddhist words coming out of his mouth, because he was unacquainted with Buddhism. However, if we take seriously the teaching that all sentient beings have buddha-nature . . . very possible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 15th, 2018 at 6:02 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Losal Samten said:

Divine light, uncreated, nonconceptual, etc. is standard talk regards to tirthika metaphysics and mysticisms.

Spelare said:

Pretty remarkable for a medieval German, though, isn't it?

But Eckhart went further in deconstructing the very idea of God. He talked about something called "the essence of God":

Eckhart, Sermon 87 said:

While I yet stood in my first cause, I had no God and was my own cause: then I wanted nothing and desired nothing, for I was bare being and the knower of myself in the enjoyment of truth. Then I wanted myself and wanted no other thing: what I wanted I was and what I was I wanted, and thus I was free of God and all things. But when I left my free will behind and received my created being, then I had a God. For before there were creatures, God was not 'God': He was That which He was. But when creatures came into existence and received their created being, then God was not 'God' in Himself—He was 'God' in creatures.

Therefore I pray to God to make me free of God, for my essential being is above God, taking God as the origin of creatures. For in that essence of God in which God is above being and distinction, there I was myself and knew myself so as to make this man. Therefore I am my own cause according to my essence, which is eternal, and not according to my becoming, which is temporal. Therefore I am unborn, and according to my unborn mode I can never die. According to my unborn mode I have eternally been, am now, and shall eternally remain. That which I am by virtue of birth must die and perish, for it is mortal, and so must perish with time. In my birth all things were born, and I was the cause of myself and all things: and if I had so willed it, I would not have been, and all things would not have been. If I were not, God would not be either. I am the cause of God's being God: if I were not, then God would not be God. But you do not need to know this.

Spelare said:

Now you can see why he was investigated for heresy by the Papal authorities! That quotation sounds totally arrogant and presumptuous if you read it as simply a delusional human being. But if the "I" speaking there is the same "I" that in our own tradition's scriptures says "I am primordial self-originating wisdom. I am the primordial source of all phenomena. I am the all-creating king, pure perfect presence," what he has said is the opposite of arrogance or presumption.

The story of an "I" reposing in its first cause and then giving rise to creation sounds very much like the accounts we've heard of dualistic samsaric experience arising through non-recognition and the arising of false knowledge on the basis of ignorance. In fact, I would suggest that that is what Eckhart is trying to get at. But he phrases it in the language of "creation" that was known to everyone in his culture the same way that Buddhist accounts of how dualistic consciousness arises would be familiar to Buddhists. Eckhart saw the need to go back to the ground from which all conceptual proliferation arises.

Does he have to have fully realized and integrated that awakening in order for us to suspect he had a genuine glimpse? Of course we won't find Buddhist words coming out of his mouth, because he was unacquainted with Buddhism. However, if we take seriously the teaching that all sentient beings have buddha-nature . . . very possible.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no first cause in Buddhadharma, including Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 15th, 2018 at 5:58 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This business about the soul's spark is exactly the atman Buddha refuted. Surprised you don't get that. There is no dependent origination here, no emptiness, etc, just an assertion of an unconditioned substance called a soul.

Spelare said:

Here is an example of what I am talking about. If you read this, don't only scan for specific words that prove this author didn't realize the nature of mind (though you are, of course, free to do that). Try to get a sense of what state he might be trying to communicate to his audience through the skillful means of the Biblical and Greco-Roman philosophical literature they would have been familiar with:

Meister Eckhart, Sermon 60 said:

I have sometimes spoken of a light that is in the soul, which is uncreated and uncreatable. I continually touch on this light in my sermons: it is the light which lays straight hold of God, unveiled and bare, as He is in Himself, that is, it catches Him in the act of begetting. So I can truly say that this light is far more at one with God than it is with any of the powers with which it has unity of being. For you should know, this light is no nobler in my soul's essence than the humblest, or the grossest of my powers, such as hearing or sight or any other power which is subject to hunger or thirst, cold or heat, and that is because being is indivisible. And so, if we consider the powers of the soul in their being, they are all one and equally noble: but if we take them in their functions, one is much higher and nobler than the other.

Therefore I say, if a man turns away from self and from all created things, then—to the extent that you do this—you will attain to oneness and blessedness in your soul's spark, which time and place never touched. This spark is opposed to all creatures: it wants nothing but God, naked, just as He is. It is not satisfied with the Father or the Son or the Holy Ghost, or all three Persons so far as they preserve their several properties. I declare in truth, this light would not be satisfied with the unity of the whole fertility of the divine nature. In fact I will say still more, which sounds even stranger: I declare in all truth, by the eternal and everlasting truth, that this light is not content with the simple changeless divine being which neither gives nor takes:

rather it seeks to know whence this being comes, it wants to get into its simple ground, into the silent desert into which no distinction ever peeped, of Father, Son or Holy Ghost. In the inmost part, where none is at home, there that light finds satisfaction, and there it is more one than it is in itself: for this ground is an impartible stillness, motionless in itself, and by this immobility all things are moved, and all those receive life that live of themselves, being endowed with reason. That we may thus live rationally, may the eternal truth of which I have spoken help us. Amen.

Spelare said:

In this passage, he is not using the words "God," "soul," "reason," "eternity," or even "truth" according to the commonly understood definitions of his own time (or ours). They seem to have been the nearest approximations he hoped would be intelligible to his audience. And often they still didn't understand, as he often comments in his writings! Eckhart sought the ground prior to God, prior to being, and he sought it in himself, not in a distant separate entity above the sky. Clearly, he had some recognition, even if we cannot be certain how to classify it. Of course, that might be an interesting exercise, but I think his poetic evocation was intended to awaken his listeners.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 15th, 2018 at 3:12 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Spelare said:

It should not be in the least surprising if high-aptitude individuals in the non-Buddhist world stumbled upon the ground or basis, in spite of the surrounding theistic mainstream that misconstrued it as a God who is a separate, transcendent being (in three persons in its Christian flavor).

dzogchungpa said:

Jesus himself may have been one such individual

Malcolm wrote:

We have already established you will believe anything.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 15th, 2018 at 3:12 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

Spelare said:

It should not be in the least surprising if high-aptitude individuals in the non-Buddhist world stumbled upon the ground or basis

Malcolm wrote:

It would be very surprising, since there is no evidence anyone in the non-buddhist world has correctly realized the nature of their own minds. Any assertion to the contrary is mere speculation, which cannot be confirmed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 15th, 2018 at 2:16 AM

Title: Re: Trump's Movement to Unilateralism

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Trump will be able to manipulate class to his advantage until it becomes a central part of the political conversation on the left again.

Rick said:

Makes sense. So maybe one can see The Donald as a kind of necessary, if painful, course correction? A bit of:

See what happens when we let social/cultural/financial inequity go (relatively) unchecked!

Johnny Dangerous said:

I don't know, I try not to assign emotional values to events like these. I think that his presidency is revealing things we would take a close look at, if we are smart. So far though, people on the left appear to not be smart, and it is only a small, less vocal minority who take the view that Trump is a wake up call..the mainstream still just wants to focus on him and how awful he is, without cleaning up their own backyard. Until that happens, I feel like Trumpism is here to stay.

Malcolm wrote:

Face it Trump is a fascist, and wants to be Dear Leader for life.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 15th, 2018 at 2:07 AM

Title: Re: Trump's Movement to Unilateralism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is all just worldly bullshit, a result of karma, a product of an endless cycle of attachment and aversion. That said, the GOP is no friend of Dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 14th, 2018 at 9:29 AM

Title: Re: If the Mahayana Sutras were not spoken by the Buddha what authority do they hold?

Content:

krodha said:

In Mahāyāna the tathāgata is not considered to be name and form, therefore the word of the Buddha is not tied to the statements of any specific historical figure.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 14th, 2018 at 1:22 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

emaho said:

God always exists as our real nature, the base, for everybody.

What is ChNN referring to with "base" here? I mean, which Tibetan term corresponds to it?

Malcolm wrote:

Gzhi, not kun gzhi.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 14th, 2018 at 1:08 AM

Title: Re: Quote by ChNNR about Dzogchen and God - where is it from?

Content:

emaho said:

Not sure if I'm getting your point here, Karma_Yeshe. What I said was that some, or actually quite a few Christian Theologians have an understanding of God that is compatible with Buddhist teachings about the alaya / kun gzhi. If you say that some others don't, OK, it doesn't really contradict me, does it? And if you're implying their view isn't relevant, yeah well, that's your opinion. Comparing them to Stephen Batchelor is just polemics, not an argument.

Malcolm wrote:

With respect to Dzogchen, the alaya is the fundamental ignorance. Otherwise, the alaya is not a transpersonal consciousness, it is personal. There is no xtian theology that is compatible with Buddha's teaching.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 12th, 2018 at 7:54 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

MiphamFan said:

What if you think a historical war was a necessary evil to prevent a greater one, such as supporting the WW2 allies?

Malcolm wrote:

I refer you to the Buddha on this point.

"When a warrior strives & exerts himself in battle, his mind is already seized, debased, & misdirected by the thought: 'May these beings be struck down or slaughtered or annihilated or destroyed. May they not exist': If others then strike him down & slay him while he is thus striving & exerting himself in battle, then with the breakup of the body, after death, he is reborn in the hell called the realm of those slain in battle. But if he holds such a view as this: 'When a warrior strives & exerts himself in battle, if others then strike him down & slay him while he is striving & exerting himself in battle, then with the breakup of the body, after death, he is reborn in the company of devas slain in battle,' that is his wrong view. Now, there are two destinations for a person with wrong view, I tell you: either hell or the animal womb."

— SN 42.3

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 12th, 2018 at 7:27 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

Javierfv1212 said:

It says united with the intent to kill but if one is not united in their intent to kill but merely wishes to heal then you are not affected by their karma. Moreover, the last part proves my point that one can be in an army and not share their karma as long as one has the resolution "Even in order to save my life, I shall not kill a living being."

Malcolm wrote:

Did you have a point to prove?

Javierfv1212 said:

That you can be part of an army and keep your precepts / not be affected by their karma.

Malcolm wrote:

Being a soldier, from the beginning, is a wrong livelihood. Beyond that, there are not many people who join an army without intending to be engaged in some form of activity that involves killing sentient beings. Even conscripts are often patriotic, and are willing to shoot where they are told to aim. Your point is an exception that proves the rule, in other words. Further, you cannot take sides in a war and maintain your precepts, it is impossible. Thus, your point is pointless.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 12th, 2018 at 7:22 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Abhidharmakośabhaṣya, chapter 4, where the question of a soldier's karma is discussed.

When many persons are united with the intention to kill, either in war, or in the hunt, or in banditry, who is guilty of murder, if only one of them kills?

72c-d As soldiers, etc., concur in the realization of the same effect, all are as guilty as the one who kills.

Having a common goal, all are guilty exactly as he who among them kills, for all mutually incite one another, not through speech, but by the very fact that they are united together in order to kill

But is the person who has been constrained through force to join the army also guilty?

Evidently so, unless he has formed the resolution, "Even in order to save my life, I shall not kill a living being."

Javierfv1212 said:

It says united with the intent to kill but if one is not united in their intent to kill but merely wishes to heal then you are not affected by their karma. Moreover, the last part proves my point that one can be in an army and not share their karma as long as one has the resolution "Even in order to save my life, I shall not kill a living being."

Malcolm wrote:

Did you have a point to prove? In fact you agree with what I said, but instead of asking for a clarification, you took an antagonistic position. Taking sides in a war means of approving of the killing that occurs, either out of malice, greed, or ignorance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 12th, 2018 at 7:03 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Karma is volition, and what proceeds from volition. That's it.

Javierfv1212 said:

Exactly, and if your volition is to heal others in a battlefield, for example, it doesn't matter that you're technically part of an armed forces.

Malcolm wrote:

Unless you support the side you are on, that's the point of not taking sides. That is why I said you had not understood my post.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 12th, 2018 at 6:54 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

Javierfv1212 said:

That's seems awfully excessive, source?

Malcolm wrote:

Abhidharmakośabhaṣya, chapter 4, where the question of a soldier's karma is discussed.

Javierfv1212 said:

Also, what do you mean by 'support'? If by support you mean intentionally approve of the killing being done by one side, then perhaps that would accrue bad karma, but if you mean just serving in the military for a non combat role like the ones I mention above such as medic with the sole intention of helping to relieve suffering, I don't see how that would lead to bad karma.

Malcolm wrote:

Even you are a civilian, for example, an accountant with no combat role at all, if you support a war, you also gain the same negative karma.

Javierfv1212 said:

No. One is obligated to follow the laws of the country in which one lives. One has to pay taxes, but one may dissent from the purpose for which they are being used. Your taxes are still being used for war, even if you don't want them to be. You aren't intentionally supporting the war, but you are supporting it materially whether you like it or not, that was my point.

Malcolm wrote:

Karma is volition, and what proceeds from volition. That's it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 12th, 2018 at 6:25 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

Javierfv1212 said:

So is paying your taxes

Virgo said:

Only if you are a Republican.

Kevin...

Javierfv1212 said:

If you pay taxes in any state currently conducting military actions, you are indirectly supporting war with those taxes.

Malcolm wrote:

No. One is obligated to follow the laws of the country in which one lives. One has to pay taxes, but one may dissent from the purpose for which they are being used.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 12th, 2018 at 6:21 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

Javierfv1212 said:

Ultimately you are correct of course, but this does not invalidate what I said, these options are open for Buddhists in wartime to help beings on a relative level.

Malcolm wrote:

You still did not understand. Picking sides is what causes one to go to lower realms.

Javierfv1212 said:

What are you basing this on, if I may ask?

Also, in many cases, you don't "pick sides", a war comes to your part of the world and you just have to respond, in many cases, its impossible for someone not to be already identified with a certain ethnic or national group by merely being born in it, speaking a language, etc. If one can do good by being a medic, providing relief for others etc in a military organization, then there is nothing wrong with this.

If one keeps a mind of bodhicitta towards all beings, it doesn't matter what "side" one happens to be on really.

Malcolm wrote:

If you support one side in a war, you accrue all the negative karma of all people who support the killing in that war. It does not matter if you personally never fire a shot.

If you are there merely to treat the wounded of either side, that's different.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 12th, 2018 at 3:38 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

Javierfv1212 said:

Ultimately you are correct of course, but this does not invalidate what I said, these options are open for Buddhists in wartime to help beings on a relative level.

Malcolm wrote:

You still did not understand. Picking sides is what causes one to go to lower realms.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 12th, 2018 at 12:09 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You did not understand my statement. Read it again.

It depends on your understanding the real situation of samsara. If you don't understand— you join in, pick sides, and go to three lower realms. This is called having a one-lifetime view.

Javierfv1212 said:

I'd like to add that its not as black and white as this makes it sound. That is, there are many things a bodhisattva can do during a war besides sit there that does not break the precepts or the injunction to right livelihood.

In fact, any role in a military, government agency or NGO which helps people during a war is admissible for a bodhisattva as long as it does not involve killing, convincing others to kill or lying (for example propaganda and so on) and dealing with weapons (weapons manufacture, research, munitions management, etc).

IMO any of the following roles in the armed forces would be admissible as long as one keeps the precepts: field medic, doctor, cook, chaplain, therapist, disaster relief, etc.

There are probably several roles which are pretty grey area, like transportation (where in some cases you might have to transport weapons and munitions) which I would steer clear from.

And of course one can work for NGOs providing relief and so on.

Even if one is somehow put in a combat role due to circumstances outside of one's control (this is not as rare historically as one might imagine, forced conscription and so on), one could still keep the precepts, just aim and shoot over the heads of the enemy with no intention to harm. Its still a really difficult position to be in of course. Hopefully things don't get that bad in my lifetime that I am forced into a position like this, but it has happened historically (Germany and Soviet Union during WW2 is one example).

Due to these possibilities, bodhisattvas in states which have conscription laws should research the status of Conscientious objectors in their countries and understand how the law works, should the need arise to claim such status.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 11th, 2018 at 12:30 AM

Title: Re: "Ripening" empowerment = ?

Content:

Palzang Jangchub said:

What precisely is being referred to when an initiation is listed as a "ripening" empowerment?

Would this be rendered back into Sanskrit properly as vipāka abhiśeka? The term in Tibetan seems to be smin byed kyi dbang (see attachment).

Screenshot_20180510-005447.jpg

By that definition, aren't all initiations considered ripening empowerments, or am i missing something? Are there empowerments that don't ripen as such, but perform some other function?

Incidentally, doesn't this mean that Mindrolling monastery is literally "the Island of Ripening and Liberating" or "the Island of Maturation and Liberation"?

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on school, but no school considers a jenang a ripening empowerment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 10th, 2018 at 8:58 AM

Title: Re: Did the 84 mahasiddhas authorize others to teach?

Content:

Josef said:

This notion of explicit permission is something that seems to mostly apply to non-Tibetan practitioners.

If one was living in a valley in the Himalaya's, had received empowerment, instructions, and applied the practices diligently, there would be nobody questioning whether or not said individual could "teach" or transmit the practices they have a lineage connection to.

I find it extremely unlikely that the Mahasiddhas had some kind of certificate or explicit permission to benefit beings through offering them dharma. The notion is a bit silly.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, they had to renew their teaching license every five years with the BRUB (Board of Really Uptight Buddhists).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 9th, 2018 at 9:32 AM

Title: Re: According to the Prasangika, what is wrong with statement that the two truths are two ways of looking at one object?

Content:

Jeff H said:

I think you need to share more of Hopkins' context because, on the surface, what you are saying sounds correct. Perhaps he is making a different point.

prsvrnc said:

I wasn't able to attach a picture of the page but on pages 16 and 17 it lists out 32 positions that are refuted in the book. He prefaces the list by saying that "Almost all contemporary renderings of Madhyamika run contrary to Ge-luk-ba authors such as Jam-yang-shay-ba on many central points. It should be clear by the end of this book that the traditional interpretation given here does not agree with, and in fact refutes, all of the following positions with respect to Prasangika-Madhyamika..."

#9: The two truths are two ways of viewing the same object.

So I guess that means #9 is a position that I might not be able to find support for elsewhere, outside of Jam-yang-shay-ba (among others) for instance.

Malcolm wrote:

This directly contradicts Chandrakirti, "All entities have two natures, one false, the other true."

So how can it be Prasanga at all?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 9th, 2018 at 4:04 AM

Title: Re: According to the Prasangika, what is wrong with statement that the two truths are two ways of looking at one object?

Content:

Queequeg said:

What does that mean?

Malcolm wrote:

An ultimate truth is an ultimately veridical cognition. Among the two kinds of relative truth, both are degrees of false cognitions: true relative truth is a cognition which is conventionally unmistaken but is mistaken about the true nature of its object; a false relative truth is completely mistaken.

Queequeg said:

Is cognition the same or different than view? Let me know if I need to flesh that question out a little more.

Malcolm wrote:

A false view is a false cognition. A correct view is a correct cognition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 9th, 2018 at 3:48 AM

Title: Re: According to the Prasangika, what is wrong with statement that the two truths are two ways of looking at one object?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Right. It sounds like the confusion in the original question is that: two truths = two views (of the same object). Truth is not a view. The nominal two truths are descriptions of the way things are, not views.

Malcolm wrote:

The two truths (satyas) are cognitions, actually.

Queequeg said:

What does that mean?

Malcolm wrote:

An ultimate truth is an ultimately veridical cognition. Among the two kinds of relative truth, both are degrees of false cognitions: true relative truth is a cognition which is conventionally unmistaken but is mistaken about the true nature of its object; a false relative truth is completely mistaken.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 9th, 2018 at 3:14 AM

Title: Re: According to the Prasangika, what is wrong with statement that the two truths are two ways of looking at one object?

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

Queequeg wrote:

Object is illusory, so how can there really be any views, let alone two or more views of the same object.

Guess we have here the relative and ultimate truth.

Queequeg said:

Right. It sounds like the confusion in the original question is that: two truths = two views (of the same object). Truth is not a view. The nominal two truths are descriptions of the way things are, not views.

Malcolm wrote:

The two truths (satyas) are cognitions, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 3rd, 2018 at 3:55 AM

Title: Re: Padmasambhava Visualization?

Content:

Tenma said:

How does one visualize a universally enormous Padmasambhava inside a tiny palace the size of a sesame seed? I can visualize a tiny Padmasambhava in a huge palace, but not vice versa. Could someone please help in this visualization?

Malcolm wrote:

Same way you visualize the universe in an atom

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 30th, 2018 at 9:19 PM

Title: Re: Illusion in Dzogchen

Content:

Lukeinaz said:

"In non dual contemplation there is neither experience or experiencer. This itself is real experience."

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and this is just the message of the Prajñāpāramitā Sūtras, since of course, the meaning of the Great Perfection is exactly the same as the Prajñāpāramitā Sūtras, the only difference is the method of arriving at that meaning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 29th, 2018 at 9:11 PM

Title: Re: Garchen Rinpoche Chakrasamvara Empowerment & Ganges Mahamudra

Content:

Mantrik said:

Is it normal in the Kagyu to give the Vajrayogini empowerment first?

In Gelugpa the Heruka empowerment usually precedes the Vajrayogini in HYT.

Lhasa said:

I don't know the answer to your question, but in information I read about this Vajrayogini empowerment, it is necessary in order to practice Powa. Vajrayogini is the deity one transforms into during the practice. And they taught Powa in the days after this empowerment.

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on the phowa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 29th, 2018 at 8:58 PM

Title: Re: Fantasy

Content:

beer said:

I havent seen to many people exploring the issue I raised let alone offering any solutions.

Malcolm wrote:

Most likely, then, you can assume that is because inferring from a particular instance to a general population is a fallacy. That is what racists do.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 29th, 2018 at 9:04 AM

Title: Re: Fantasy

Content:

The Cicada said:

Q-Raj does have a point. Why don't Buddhist charities in the West work more actively and conspicuously so that they can convert and save savage and benighted mind-streams?

Malcolm wrote:

Precious human birth is a function of karma, not conversion.

The Cicada said:

According to your school, good friend. Nichirenites, and probably Pure Landers as well, aren't likely to agree with you that only certain human births (the "precious" ones) can be positively affected by Buddhist teaching.

Malcolm wrote:

If someone becomes interested in Dharma, this itself is proof of a precious human birth. Failure to sustain interest in Dharma even after ample exposure is proof some element of a precious human birth is absent. For example, there are many people raised in Buddhist countries who squander it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 29th, 2018 at 5:27 AM

Title: Re: Fantasy

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Well, no, they were inspired by a desire to convert heathens. Most so-called Christian charity work arose as a means of conversion, to save benighted savages.

The Cicada said:

Q-Raj does have a point. Why don't Buddhist charities in the West work more actively and conspicuously so that they can convert and save savage and benighted mind-streams?

Malcolm wrote:

Precious human birth is a function of karma, not conversion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 29th, 2018 at 3:49 AM

Title: Re: Fantasy

Content:

Queequeg said:

I'm not going to try and refute your claims about monasteries in Tibet. I've also heard of the Dalai Lama looking for monastics to do more outreach, and I've heard Thurman remark along the same lines. Also, Tibet is not representative of all Buddhist societies.

Malcolm wrote:

The same applies to Thailand, Cambodia, Vietnam, Burma, etc.

Queequeg said:

There is extensive research and commentary on this as well coming out decidedly questioning why Buddhists do not do as much outreach.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddhisms these studies examine are post-colonial Buddhisms in societies where the integration of Buddhism into the social fabric was badly disrupted. Vietnam, Cambodia, Sri Lanka, Korea, and even Japan to some extent are examples of this.

I reject your claim, since you have advanced no evidence to support it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 29th, 2018 at 3:44 AM

Title: Re: Fantasy

Content:

Queequeg said:

These Christian orders arose inspired by Jesus.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, no, they were inspired by a desire to convert heathens. Most so-called Christian charity work arose as a means of conversion, to save benighted savages.

Queequeg said:

Muslims look after others as a teaching of Mohamed.

Malcolm wrote:

Muslims mostly look after each other. It is not like there are huge Muslim charities out there dispensing aid to all and sundry. Really, dude, you are reaching here.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 29th, 2018 at 1:55 AM

Title: Re: Fantasy

Content:

Queequeg said:

There are no orders of renunciates dedicated to caring for the poor. There are no Dominicans or Franciscans. No Red Cross, no Salvation Army.

Malcolm wrote:

This was the job of kings, not mendicants. Hence, the systematic appeal by Buddhist authors to secular leaders to provide such services the poor and needy.

And of course, in Tibet at any rate, the monasteries were the source of social services, etc., which in times of peace, were supplied abundantly. Not sure why we need to have a Buddhist order of Franciscans. Monasteries in Tibet have been taking care of the poor since the beginning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 29th, 2018 at 12:34 AM

Title: Re: Fantasy

Content:

beer said:

I cant find any reason why he didnt try to stop the guy hurting the dog. He could have and should have done something.

Malcolm wrote:

Give it some thought. Perhaps the dog ran away after being kicked (the usual reaction). You are so caught up in a fit of self-righteous indignation it is blinding you to the realities of the situation.

Do you have a one lifetime view or a multiple lifetime view?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 28th, 2018 at 11:41 PM

Title: Re: Fantasy

Content:

beer said:

Stopping the guy kicking the dog or at least trying to stop him is perfectly reasonable and probably achievable with the right frame of mind and physicality

Malcolm wrote:

You missed the point of anecdote. And what about the fish?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 28th, 2018 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: Fantasy

Content:

Queequeg said:

Thinking oneself into complacency in the face of suffering that can be alleviated and calling it a spiritual perfection is abhorrent, imo. Across Asia where Buddhism has penetrated, we see a correlation with an anemic social charity movement.

Malcolm wrote:

Evidence? For all 2500 years of its existence?

Queequeg said:

Buddhists could learn a thing or two from Christians and Muslims on this point.

Malcolm wrote:

No, I don't think this is true on any level at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 28th, 2018 at 9:22 PM

Title: Re: New school opening in Woodstock, NY

Content:

kirtu said:

In this case Woodstock has some major advantages starting with a highly educated but unfortunately upper class clientele in the Buddhist communities in the area.

Malcolm wrote:

Bit of unnecessary editorializing there, friend.

"Student, beings are owners of karmas, heirs of karmas, they have karmas as their progenitor, karmas as their kin, karmas as their homing-place. It is karmas that differentiate beings according to inferiority and superiority."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 28th, 2018 at 8:34 PM

Title: Re: Fantasy

Content:

beer said:

I could say that some of the responses to my comments are judgemental, that people are using critical intelligence to decide what is right or wrong etc etc and I would be correct, and there is nothing wrong with you all doing that, because it is necessary. I'm glad that Malcolm is eating popcorn also.

When the child was run over I yelled out to the crowd to ring an ambulance. I grabbed people and asked if they knew the number for an ambulance.. One person knew the number but didn't call. I should have done more. I didn't run over to the kid. I should have though.

No shit, we have to work on ourselves. No shit being hypocritical is stupid and shameful. But no one needs a license to think and act critically and if one does it with a good intention then that is great in my book.

If we are trying to get to the truth then we need to do it.

Look, we can be wise about it and stupid about it.

I don't consider myself a practitioner but I have been involved in Buddhism for nearly twenty years. . I'm not here to start shit with people. I say what I have seen over the years and I do it because I'm concerned and I've been in the guts of it.

Sorry for the poor spelling etc, no glasses.

Malcolm wrote:

There are four immeasurables: love, compassion, sympathetic joy, and equanimity. It is a fault to allow equanimity to become indifference, nevertheless, of the four, equanimity is the most important.

Mahākāśyapa was walking through a town one day and saw a man eating a fish and kicking a dog to keep it away from his meal. Kāśyapa started laughing at the sight and his student, frankly, was a little shocked. "Why are you laughing at that man kicking a dog?" he asked. Kāśyapa replied, "I am laughing because unbeknownst to that man, he is eating his mother and kicking his father. Samsara is a terrible place."

You should not concern yourself too much with what others do. Why? There is little one can do. You should focus on your bodhisattva path, and feel compassion for everyone, even those deficient Buddhists who don't call ambulances for injured children in Katmandu.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 28th, 2018 at 7:25 PM

Title: Re: Fantasy

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 28th, 2018 at 3:40 AM

Title: Re: Immeasurable, Yet No Bigger than Your Thumb: The Tshon Gang in Bon

Dzogchen - Keutzer

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

No, the position he is referring to says it IS just a symbol, which doesn't make much sense. Anyway, to repeat:

Malcolm wrote:

It clearly isn't just a symbol if it has anatomical relevance in terms of development of the body.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 28th, 2018 at 3:24 AM

Title: Re: Immeasurable, Yet No Bigger than Your Thumb: The Tshon Gang in Bon

Dzogchen - Keutzer

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, I don't have time to read the paper again right now, but it seems that he thinks there is more to tson gang than what you are describing, see e.g. the section:

"Philosophical Speculations on the Nature of the tson gang".

Malcolm wrote:

And?

dzogchungpa said:

He says there:

The wisdom tshon gang is paradoxical. What sense does it make for something to be simultaneously immeasurable and yet given a particular size and location in the physical heart? The Bon tradition has its own ways of dealing with this paradox.

Principally there is the position that the tshon gang is merely a symbol for the natural state, Reality Body and other equivalents. However, it is not just a passive symbol, like the symbol of the g.yung drung or svastika is a symbol for the everlasting. As we saw, the wisdom and the light tshon gang can perform a particular function in the evolution of the human body such as being the source of the wind of space.

Is the mi zhigs thig le a symbol?

As we saw, the wisdom and the light tshon gang can perform a particular function in the evolution of the human body such as being the source of the wind of space.

Malcolm wrote:

So, it is not just a symbol.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 28th, 2018 at 2:48 AM

Title: Re: Immeasurable, Yet No Bigger than Your Thumb: The Tshon Gang in Bon Dzogchen - Keutzer

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I am aware that Kurt does not mention the mi zhigs thig le, but they are the same thing. ...

dzogchungpa said:

Well, I don't have time to read the paper again right now, but it seems that he thinks there is more to tson gang than what you are describing, see e.g. the section:

"Philosophical Speculations on the Nature of the tson gang".

Malcolm wrote:

And?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 28th, 2018 at 1:11 AM

Title: Re: Immeasurable, Yet No Bigger than Your Thumb: The Tshon Gang in Bon Dzogchen - Keutzer

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is just the Bonpo version of the mi shigs thig le (anahatabindu). There is no difference in meaning.

For example, the Rangshar says:

Regarding all unrealized sentient beings:

in humans, [the five lights] are the size of a thumb joint;

dzogchungpa said:

He doesn't seem to mention the mi shigs thig le but he does discuss the "Hindu" notion of the aṅguṣṭhamātra quite a bit. He does mention the tshon sna lnga'i gru gu, or five-colored ball of yarn, and quotes the Union of Sun and Moon tantra regarding it: In the heart of embodied beings there is a radiant drop (thig le) of light, that is like a ball of five-colored yarn.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I am aware that Kurt does not mention the mi zhigs thig le, but they are the same thing. For example, when the Hevajra Tantra states:

Great wisdom is present in the body, perfectly free from all concepts,
pervading all things,
present in, but not arising from the body.

Or for example, in Buddhahood, Vimalamitra is quoted as saying:

The ultimate bindu of light,
the size of a mustard seed, arises clearly;
its self-illuminating light exists as round, immaculate, and beyond the extremes of permanence and annihilation.

The tīrthika view is held to be as following in the Rangshar:

The view that the cause is permanent holds that there is a substantial cause in the center of one's heart center that is round, white, the size of a bean, does not come from the father, does not grow through the condition of the mother, and is held to be permanent.

In Buddhadharma however, the mi zhigs thig le is composed of elements from one's father and mother. This is very clearly described here by Padmasambhava in the Kandro Nyingthig:

[T]o begin with, the material bindu of the father and mother is created by it [vidyā], [they] are inseparable. On the other hand, the kāyas and pristine consciousnesses are a luminous emptiness not established as some kind of entity, and are free of birth and death. But this body created by a cause is perishable. [438] If one thinks there is contradiction with the former characteristic, that has not been understood. Since that critical point of luminous empty vidyā was not recognized, grasping onto that [luminous empty vidyā] produced the five elements, and the material bindu [was produced] from the refined part of those [five elements].

Basically, the Bonpo "tshon gang" is just talking about this, and when it is being discussed from the point of view of Dzogchen practice it is talked about one way, and when being talked about from the point of view of general tantric anatomy, it is discussed another way.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 28th, 2018 at 12:27 AM

Title: Re: Vinaya probation exemptions...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think the point is what they worshipped, the point is that they were already stable renunciates.

Grigoris said:

Are you actually going to discuss the issue, or are you just going to set up straw men to knock over?

Yes, I know that was the point, it is pretty clear in the text, my question would be why would he pick the particular type of practitioners, surely there were other types of practitioners that were also stable renunciates (your friends the Parsee, for example)

Malcolm wrote:

They probably already accepted rebirth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 28th, 2018 at 12:22 AM

Title: Re: Immeasurable, Yet No Bigger than Your Thumb: The Tshon Gang in Bon Dzogchen - Keutzer

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Just looked through this last night and I found it quite interesting and enjoyable:
http://himalaya.socanth.cam.ac.uk/collections/journals/ret/pdf/ret_44_07.pdf

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is just the Bonpo version of the mi shigs thig le (anahatabindu). There is no difference in meaning.

For example, the Rangshar says:
Regarding all unrealized sentient beings:
in humans, [the five lights] are the size of a thumb joint;

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 27th, 2018 at 11:27 PM

Title: Re: Vinaya probation exemptions...

Content:

Grigoris said:

Well given that worship of Agni is noted in the Rigveda (which precede Shakyamuni Buddha by some 400+ years), I see no reason why we should take the Parsee tangent.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think the point is what they worshipped, the point is that they were already stable renunciates.

Grigoris said:

Yes, Hindu is an anachronistic term here, which is why I initially made mention of the worship of a particular deity.

Malcolm wrote:

Why did you use it then?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 27th, 2018 at 10:50 PM

Title: Re: Vinaya probation exemptions...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

However, here, "fire-worshippers" are probably not Hindus, but rather more like Parsees.

dzogchungpa said:

The whole notion of 'Hindu' is kind of anachronistic in this context, as you know, but I don't see why you would think they were more like Parsees. Many sadhus have sacred fires.

Malcolm wrote:

Many sadhus do the five fire thing, but they do not worship these fires nor make oblations to them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 27th, 2018 at 9:39 PM

Title: Re: Vinaya probation exemptions...

Content:

Grigoris said:

The discussion is from the other wheel, but I thought it would be of interest here too as it seems to break the Hindu/Buddhist cross-fertilisation aversion.

Malcolm wrote:

No, not at all. as I understand the passage, these fellows are stable mendicants, used to the homeless life. It has nothing to do with what their view is, it has to do with their conduct. Vinaya, after all, relates solely to conduct.

There is very good reason to be averse to cross fertilization between Hinduism and Buddhism. However, here, "fire-worshippers" are probably not Hindus, but rather more like Parsees.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 27th, 2018 at 9:28 PM

Title: Re: Vinaya probation exemptions...

Content:

Grigoris said:

"Monks, if those come who are fire-worshipping matted-hair ascetics they may be ordained, probation should not be given to these. What is the reason for this? These, monks, affirm deeds, they affirm what ought to be done. If, monks, there come a former member of another sect who is a Sakyan by birth, he may be ordained, probation should not be given to him. I, monks, will give this special privilege to (my) relations."

<https://legacy.suttacentral.net/en/pi-tv-kd1>

Nepotism aside, I wonder why worshipers of Agni would be exempt? (I am assuming this is the matted-hair ascetics the Buddha is referring to).

Malcolm wrote:

Better asked on the other wheel.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 27th, 2018 at 7:07 PM

Title: Re: Samantabhadra, Samantabhadri, and the Basis

Content:

☯ Fimbul ☯ said:

I just had a quick question about the attributions of Samantabhadra and Samantabhadri to the basis. I was curious if they each represent the basis as a whole or if they represent the 'empty' and 'clear' aspects respectively, their union then representing the 'compassion' aspect as the indivisible union of emptiness and clarity?

Thanks

Malcolm wrote:

There is one Samantabhadra called Samantabhadra of the basis: but you have to understand there are five Samantabhadras talked about in Dzogchen tantras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 27th, 2018 at 10:33 AM

Title: Re: DNA TESTS

Content:

MiphamFan said:

How much Neanderthal DNA do you all have?

Malcolm wrote:

1.3 percent. People call me "blond," but I am really a redhead.

Mantrik said:

Which test shows that Neanderthal element up?

Malcolm wrote:

Geno

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 26th, 2018 at 10:05 PM

Title: Re: DNA TESTS

Content:

Ogyen said:

haven't done the testing myself, but a family member has, so based on what I was told, our Indian family is shockingly NOT "the Indian we thought it was," but a mix of Ladakhi and Romany (this by the highest percentage.... Oukei we're gypsies) ... The facility for language is clear in the history of translators and Brahmin academics we know of and on modern times lots and lots of engineers and judges/lawyers/doctors. The Italian family o vaguely remember something about Slavic, Jewish, and romany (more gypsy).

tingdzin said:

Now that's interesting.

Malcolm wrote:

Submit? They can take it anyway.

tingdzin said:

Well, I did say "willingly". I know the police state is getting more advanced than Hitler or Stalin would have dreamed possible.

Malcolm wrote:

Our bodies shed DNA all the time. Our DNA can show up on things we have never even come into contact with through secondary transference.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 26th, 2018 at 6:59 AM

Title: Re: The bardo and akanistha

Content:

jhanapeacock said:

Someone said that the Bardo is just another name for akanistha? is this true? i always thought that the Bardo was the transmigrassion realm and that akanistha was another different heavenly realm.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is not even remotely true.

However, the bardo is not a "transgression realm." It is just the space between lives.

Also, the doctrine around Akaniṣṭha is complicated since it is understood differently in sūtra, tantra, and the Great Perfection.

Greg: the four or six bardos is a doctrine exclusive to Dzogchen Man ngag sde (that is, it is not found in sems sde or klong sde, or anu or mahāyoga). In the new schools, there is only one bardo.

Sennin said:

Interesting. Is there any correlation between the one bardo of the new schools, and any of the bardos in Man ngag sde?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, bardo of time of death has equivalent as the moment of death, there is no explicit equivalent for bardo of dharmatā, but in general, the bardo is the srid pa'i bardo.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 26th, 2018 at 4:45 AM

Title: Re: DNA TESTS

Content:

Queequeg said:

Are you telling us you have dysentery?

tingdzin said:

But seriously, folks, as interesting as the results of DNA testing might be, I would under no circumstances willingly submit such personal information to a faceless corporation which can be counted on to use it in deleterious ways in the future. People thought Facebook was harmless, too.

Malcolm wrote:

Submit? They can take it anyway. We have no more right to our DNA than we have right to our shit once we have passed it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 25th, 2018 at 11:32 PM

Title: Re: How do you know you're not just making karma worse??

Content:

Ogyen said:

Quotes compiled from collective karma thread

Malcolm wrote:

But dependent origination, when reduced to its essential components, simply means: where there is affliction, there is a cause for action; where there is action there is a cause for suffering; and where there is suffering, there is a condition for further affliction. Without affliction, there is no cause for action; without action, there is no result, suffering.

A Buddhas deeds are not based on affliction (desire, hatred, and ignorance); they are based on wisdom. Hence, they do not result in suffering.

A buddha's mind stream is conditioned and relative; it is however free of affliction and endowed with omniscience.

Ogyen said:

From this thread

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen mainly describes how samsara begins (with an aim to reverse it), but the “mechanics” of samsara are the same: affliction—> action —> suffering —>affliction as infinitum unless one breaks the chain at affliction.

An action always has a result. An affliction does not need to have a result.

Ogyen said:

Two definition questions:

What is the definition (in the context of Dharma) of an affliction?

Malcolm wrote:

A painful mental state, i.e., desire, hatred, and ignorance, or anything that is conducive to a painful mental state, i.e., impure conditioned phenomena.

Ogyen said:

What is the definition (in the context for Dharma) of an action?

Malcolm wrote:

Volition is action, this produces verbal and physical acts.

Ogyen said:

Per the mechanism illustrated in the sequence above, WHY is it that affliction does not need to have a result?

Is it because:

A. As we remain in a state of Vidya we discern what "action" to take from wisdom on how to act (free of affliction?)

B. The "action" is performed without cetana, so its source is wisdom and not ignorance

Malcolm wrote:

Afflictions do not necessarily produce volitions. When we are aware of our afflictive state, we can disengage our minds from actions related towards afflictive objects. This is why we practice śamatha, actually, so that we are aware of our mind's afflictive state. Being aware of our mind's afflictive state is called mindfulness and attention. Being unaware of our mind's afflictive state is called being mindless and inattentive.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 25th, 2018 at 8:40 PM

Title: Re: The bardo and akanistha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Also, the doctrine around Akaniṣṭha is complicated since it is understood differently in sūtra, tantra, and the Great Perfection.

chimechodra said:

Thank you for the illuminating knowledge as always, Malcolm. Could you expand on how Akaniṣṭha is understood in the Great Perfection? Thank you!

Malcolm wrote:

the dharmadhātu.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 25th, 2018 at 6:41 AM

Title: Re: An interesting book...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

He was a nutjob:

".... Samael Aun Weor is my true name as a Bodhisattwa. Samael is the name of my Monad! I am perfectly cognizant of the dawn of life in this Solar System! I saw the dawning of Creation! I am here with this humanity, from the very first moment, since the heart of this solar system started to palpitate after the long Cosmic Night. I came here (to this planet) because my Internal God, my Father who is within me, sent me! My only purpose is to serve and help this humanity! This is why I am serving my fellowmen. This is why I am working for the sake of this humanity! ..."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 24th, 2018 at 8:51 PM

Title: Re: Check my understanding of dran pa/smrti

Content:

MiphamFan said:

If we are beginners, then our smrti is weak, and will get distracted by thoughts.

Samprajnya is the caitasika dharma which "guards" our smrti, as we progress through the nine stages of shamatha, our samprajnya develops and helps redirect our mind-vijnana to the object whenever it wanders more and more quickly, and our smrti also gets stronger, so it doesn't leave the object. Samjna helps us distinguish the object of our shamatha from e.g the feeling of our legs on the meditation seat, the wind etc.

Apramada is what makes us care about returning to the object of our shamatha if our samprajnya finds that our mind-vijnana is distracted. So as a rough metaphor, let's say we are using a telescope to look at the moon, we want it to be fixed on the moon, and we have lenses that bring the moon into focus if it loses it, a homing lens on the moon and so on.

So basically all these other caitasika dharmas accompanying smrti are completely normal and even desirable in shamatha. I was under the impression that they were "thoughts" and a sign that my shamatha was still very shallow, but from what I understand now, they are not problems at all. They are not additional objects of mind-vijnana, which is the real problem e.g. a song lyric appearing in my head, and then I go after the song, think about where I last heard it, the life of the singer, and so on. Subtle thoughts about the object are also a problem such as e.g. thinking about where the Buddha statue came from etc and should not be confused with the caitasika dharmas.

The common Western understanding of "mindfulness" in daily life is closer to the Vaibhasika/Theravadin idea as opposed to Asanga's definition, and involves applying smrti to each moment of cognition. But aside from that, the same caitasika dharmas also arise and are fine.

Is this correct? This is for shamatha with an object.

Malcolm wrote:

Mindfulness is one of the path dharmas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 24th, 2018 at 8:47 PM

Title: Re: The bardo and akanistha

Content:

jhanapeacock said:

Someone said that the Bardo is just another name for akanistha? is this true? i always thought that the Bardo was the transmigrassion realm and that akanistha was another different heavenly realm.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is not even remotely true.

However, the bardo is not a "transgression realm." It is just the space between lives.

Also, the doctrine around Akaniṣṭha is complicated since it is understood differently in sūtra, tantra, and the Great Perfection.

Greg: the four or six bardos is a doctrine exclusive to Dzogchen Man ngag sde (that is, it is not found in sems sde or klong sde, or anu or mahāyoga). In the new schools, there is only one bardo.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 24th, 2018 at 9:36 AM

Title: Re: How do you know you're not just making karma worse??

Content:

Ogyen said:

We talk about karma in principle, and I am fixed (determined) on understanding it in its correct view. But not to just understand and talk about it. I want this to be done already. I'm fed up with being ignorant.

Malcolm wrote:

Since you read French, you can get Valle-Poussin's original translation of the Abhidharmakośa. It is also available in two different English translations. One by Leo Pruden, and another:

Abhidharmakośa-Bhāṣya of Vasubandhu

The Treasury of the Abhidharma and its (Auto)commentary

Translated into French by Louis de La Vallée Poussin

Annotated English Translation by Gelong Lodrö Sangpo

Then you need to read four hundred verses of Aryādeva in order to cultivate a perfect view of relative truth. That should sort you out.

Ogyen said:

Awesome, just found the first two. Are there any differences I should bear in mind between the French and English translations?

The second translation with English translation by Lodrö Sangpo is proving a tougher find.

I'm finding various versions of the 400 verses on Google results... Anyone in particular to start with? Amazon recommends Geshe Sonam Rinchen's version.

Malcolm wrote:

Pruden's is fine. It is what I learned from. Sonam Rinchen's is also fine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 24th, 2018 at 9:16 AM

Title: Re: DNA TESTS

Content:

DNS said:

It shows how we're all inter-connected genetically and that there is no pure race.

Queequeg said:

Recently read an article describing the hand wringing among alt right boobs who discover heritage they've avowed to hate. You can imagine, it really hurts when they find out they're Jewish or black. Idiots.

Mantrik said:

Yes, I've forgotten which UK white racist group's leader took a DNA test and discovered a significant black ancestry.

Malcolm wrote:

In reality of course, all of our distant ancestors were black.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 24th, 2018 at 8:36 AM

Title: Re: How do you know you're not just making karma worse??

Content:

Ogyen said:

We talk about karma in principle, and I am fixed (determined) on understanding it in its correct view. But not to just understand and talk about it. I want this to be done already. I'm fed up with being ignorant.

Malcolm wrote:

Since you read French, you can get Valle-Poussin's original translation of the Abhidharmakośa. It is also available in two different English translations. One by Leo Pruden, and another:

Abhidharmakośa-Bhāṣya of Vasubandhu

The Treasury of the Abhidharma and its (Auto)commentary

Translated into French by Louis de La Vallée Poussin

Annotated English Translation by Gelong Lodrö Sangpo

Then you need to read four hundred verses of Aryādeva in order to cultivate a perfect view of relative truth. That should sort you out.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 24th, 2018 at 4:52 AM

Title: Re: How do you know you're not just making karma worse??

Content:

Grigoris said:

Karma is the driving force behind where one is born in samsara.

Yup, that is past karma. In the meantime though one is busy accruing vipaka with their current actions too.

Malcolm wrote:

However, karma does not form ideologies and philosophies. If you believe this, then you will be forced accept the consequence one's beliefs are predetermined.

Grigoris said:

What are you talking about? Given what you said above it is you that could be accused of determinism.

Malcolm wrote:

No, basically. If your karma is to be born a wealthy family, you will never be able to take rebirth in the womb of a poor mother. Why? Just as a fruit tree cannot flourish in poor soil, but various kinds of other plants can easily grow, a poor mother lacks the conditions to support the karmic causes one has accumulated if one has the karma to be born in a more materially fortunate position, on the other hand, your parents might be absolutely awful people, whereas your poor mother might be a saint. Karma is complex.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 24th, 2018 at 4:18 AM

Title: Re: How do you know you're not just making karma worse??

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Karma supersedes all political, social, and economic theories, rendering them all pretty meaningless, in fact.

Grigoris said:

I think you will find that it is karma that is the driving force behind social systems and karma which forms ideologies and philosophies. I would say it is karma that renders them meaningful.

Malcolm wrote:

Karma is the driving force behind where one is born in samsara.

However, karma does not form ideologies and philosophies. If you believe this, then you will be forced accept the consequence one's beliefs are predetermined. At best, all one can say that one's karmic predispositions towards certain ways of thinking one held in past lives may color what religion, if any, one might seek out in this life. And if one does not have a precious human birth with eight freedoms and ten endowments, what does not matter what one believes. One is not going to get out of samsara anytime soon. Given this is so, all these worldly political theories and social systems are irrelevant. It is one's personal actions that determine where one takes rebirth. For nonbuddhists, to the extent which their religious or moral beliefs compel them to engage in positive deeds of body, voice, and mind and avoid negative deeds, to that extent they will take rebirth in higher realms in samsara. But it really does not matter what religious or social beliefs they hold as long as they engage in the ten virtuous actions and avoid the ten nonvirtuous actions. Even so, without having a precious human birth, they are not getting off the train of samsara.

Of course, one of the reasons it is hard for nonbuddhist to get off that train is that they all engage in the mental nonvirtue of ignorance. This also the case for buddhists. If we do not cultivate correct mundane view, then we won't get off the train either.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 24th, 2018 at 2:53 AM

Title: Re: DNA TESTS

Content:

Mantrik said:

Which test shows that Neanderthal element up?

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, it is higher, 1.5. I guess the max is 5%.

Mantrik said:

Was it a separate test, or in there with the data on geographical origins? Some companies seem to go into far more detail than others.

Malcolm wrote:

I did the Geno thing like Cone.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 24th, 2018 at 2:37 AM

Title: Re: DNA TESTS

Content:

MiphamFan said:

How much Neanderthal DNA do you all have?

Malcolm wrote:

1.3 percent. People call me "blond," but I am really a redhead.

Mantrik said:

Which test shows that Neanderthal element up?

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, it is higher, 1.5. I guess the max is 5%.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 24th, 2018 at 2:36 AM

Title: Re: DNA TESTS

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I am related to all Native American men on both continents.

The Cicada said:

My late paternal grandmother, like many Anglo-Americans, claimed to be part Native American. Cherokee, IIRC. Claims of Native American ancestry are fairly common in the States by people of whatever stock. ...When it comes to bragging about it, however, this takes the proverbial cake.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, it is mostly surprising because there are no Indians in the woodpile in our family story.

Anyway, it is branch L232

The Cicada said:

The frequency of the lineage in Europe is highest in Scandinavian countries. It is 4 to 5 percent of male lineages in Iceland and Norway. It is about 6 percent of the male population in Sweden. The frequency across most of the rest of Europe is low and seldom reaches above 1 percent.

In the Americas, where it was a founding lineage, most pre-Columbian males are from this line. In Mexico, it is 82 to 91 percent of male lineages. It is 83 to 98 percent of the male population of Panama. In Greenland, it is over 80 percent of male lineages.

Malcolm wrote:

Be nice to me, I am your cousin.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 24th, 2018 at 1:30 AM

Title: Re: Definitely not the best time to come back as a donkey

Content:

The Cicada said:

It seems that we live in interesting times.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, I just want to make sure no one intrudes on my white, anglo, imperialist privilege.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 24th, 2018 at 1:27 AM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I assume by everything you mean the realization of emptiness. If so, yes, below the path of seeing the ultimate truth of things is an inferential ultimate only. This also applies to Dzogchen and has been discussed by Khenpo Ngachung among others.

cloudburst said:

yes, that was sloppily put, I am typing in a rush

I am wondering if your understanding is that this necessarily means that there is a don spyi or if there is a different type of object of a conceptual mind

Malcolm wrote:

Can emptiness be a samanyārtha? This is the big argument between Sakya and Gelug. In the former, emptiness below the path of seeing is an inferential exclusion devoid of an object. It seems in Gelug, it takes the form of a universal, and is a conceptual object.

cloudburst said:

intriguing, thanks.

I'll admit, "an inferential exclusion devoid of an object" does sound a little Hashang-y to my Gelug ear ... Do you know of any Nyingma and/or (non-Sakya) Dzogchen pov's on the matter?

Malcolm wrote:

What it means is that "emptiness" below the path of seeing is a result of analysis via the four extremes. Since four extremes are not valid for entities in the relative, there is nothing in the ultimate that exists by way of the four extremes either.

On this point, there is no difference between Sakya and Nyingma.

It is summarized by Śāntideva in this way (paraphrase) "when neither an entity nor a nonentity remain before the mind, there being no other alternative, the mind is pacified."

The misrepresented Hashang means trying to have no thoughts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 24th, 2018 at 1:08 AM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

cloudburst said:

I am interested in your perspective vis a vis a thread I was just reading regarding dzogchen. Maybe I can take up that thread later, but in brief it seems you accept that everything below path of seeing is conceptual, an inference.

Malcolm wrote:

I assume by everything you mean the realization of emptiness. If so, yes, below the path of seeing the ultimate truth of things is an inferential ultimate only. This also applies to Dzogchen and has been discussed by Khenpo Ngachung among others.

cloudburst said:

I am wondering if your understanding is that this necessarily means that there is a don't spyi or if there is a different type of object of a conceptual mind

Malcolm wrote:

Can emptiness be a samanyārtha? This is the big argument between Sakya and Gelug. In the former, emptiness below the path of seeing is an inferential exclusion devoid of an object. It seems in Gelug, it takes the form of a universal, and is a conceptual object.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 23rd, 2018 at 11:56 PM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

"The cognition in which there is no conceptual construction is perception."
(Dignaga: Pratyaksapariccheda, in Dignaga on Perception, p 25, tr Hattori)

cloudburst said:

can you clarify please: what is this "conceptual construction?"

all conceptual, ie non-direct perceptions must have them, is there there a conceptual construction that is not a don spyi?

Malcolm wrote:

You will have to ask Astus, he cited this passage, not me.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 23rd, 2018 at 10:58 PM

Title: Re: DNA TESTS

Content:

MiphamFan said:

How much Neanderthal DNA do you all have?

Malcolm wrote:

1.3 percent. People call me "blond," but I am really a redhead.

Coëmgenu said:

Was your red always lighter or was it particularly redder when you were younger?

Malcolm wrote:

I was a towhead when little. Then my hair shifted red. If my mother is any example, I won't go grey until my late 70's. My brother on the other hand, had much redder hair than mine, and his hair went shocking white in his 40's.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 23rd, 2018 at 9:55 PM

Title: Re: DNA TESTS

Content:

MiphamFan said:

How much Neanderthal DNA do you all have?

Malcolm wrote:

1.3 percent. People call me "blond," but I am really a redhead.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 23rd, 2018 at 9:33 PM

Title: Re: DNA TESTS

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Irish/French

Of course, a DNA test would show what we all already know: "French" and "Irish" are not genetic markers, rather they are cultural markers.

My dad is possible the child of a crypto-Jew of sorts. We found some documents of his mother's that identify her last name as "Zinkerstein" then it gets changed to "Zinston" then "Selleck".

This would "technically" make him Jewish, but he wasn't raised Jewish and has no knowledge of Judaism. Funny that.

Malcolm wrote:

My DNA test was rather surprising, apart from confirming my Dutch, English, Scots, Norwegian heritage with a small sprinkling of Italian, apparently, due to some Scandinavian branch of my family branching off about 45,000 years ago in Central Asia, I am related to all Native American men on both continents.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 23rd, 2018 at 8:56 PM

Title: Re: Definitely not the best time to come back as a donkey

Content:

tingdzin said:

For some reason this does not get labeled as colonialism by another name.

Malcolm wrote:

Only white people get to be imperialists and colonialists. You know that. Jeez.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 23rd, 2018 at 8:50 PM

Title: Re: How do you know you're not just making karma worse??

Content:

Ogyen said:

Any suggestions on how to verify one's karma, any tells that can help navigate what to consider, what to ignore??? What are the post signs along the road I should be paying attention to?

Malcolm wrote:

All happiness in this life is a result of good actions performed in the past. All suffering in this life is a result of negative actions performed in the past. This is your simple test.

Karma supersedes all political, social, and economic theories, rendering them all pretty meaningless, in fact.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 23rd, 2018 at 8:34 PM

Title: Re: How do you know you're not just making karma worse??

Content:

amanitamusc said:

Then what got Garab Dorje in so much trouble with his Grandpa if not the karmaless path? Was this not one of the main reasons Manjushrimitra was called from India?

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?t=20474>

Malcolm wrote:

The point Garab Dorje was making was essentially the same as Nagarjuna, “nothing here to add, nothing here to remove...” etc. The main difference is that Dzogchen explains how samsara begins and it ends. Lower yantras don't really explain how sentient beings became deluded.

amanitamusc said:

He caused all that commotion over how samsara begins and ends.

Kids, always stirring things up.

I wonder how his debate with Manju changed things at Nalanda? It seemed to have changed Manjushrimitra. Everything pure from the beginning .

Malcolm wrote:

Even the Prajñāpāramitā sūtras teach us that all phenomena are pure from the start. Those very words occur within them. But I see where our misunderstanding comes from. Garab Dorje, aka Vajraprahe (as his name is given in the tantras) told Mañjuśrīmitra that awakening was beyond cause and effect. But cause and effect are a different topic that karma and dependent origination. Why is awakening beyond cause and effect in Dzogchen? Because it exists to be introduced, but without that introduction, it will never be discovered. This is why Dzogchen is part of secret mantra and not sūtra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 23rd, 2018 at 8:20 PM

Title: Re: How do you know you're not just making karma worse??

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen mainly describes how samsara begins (with an aim to reverse it), but the “mechanics” of samsara are the same: affliction—> action —> suffering —> affliction as infinitum unless one breaks the chain at affliction.

Ogyen said:

So the reason that we always focus to understand the nature of our condition is the first step to breaking that chain at affliction??

Malcolm wrote:

An action always has a result. An affliction does not need to have a result.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 23rd, 2018 at 8:19 PM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Vasana said:

Here is a segment from Distinguishing Phenomena from Their Intrinsic Nature: Maitreya's Dharmadharmatavibhanga with Commentaries by Khenpo Shenga and Ju Mipham. To me it seems to reconcile the points made in this thread. Saying that, I don't fully grasp the meaning of sentient beings mutually causing each other as a 'ruling condition' as it seems to state below.

Malcolm wrote:

This is the dominant condition (adhipati pratyaya) which is identical to karana hetu, the universal cause -- that is, all phenomenon are the cause of every other phenomena other than itself. Refer to the second chapter of the Kosha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 23rd, 2018 at 7:10 PM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is what we mean when we say that one can have a direct perception of another's mind.

Astus said:

In that case, knowing other's mind is not a counter-example to all experiences being within the scope of individual karma.

Malcolm wrote:

Astus, I was not responding to this question.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 23rd, 2018 at 11:22 AM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Grigoris said:

Doesn't conditioning imply/require ignorance? Conditioned means dependently arisen and dependent arising has ignorance as it's lynch pin.

Malcolm wrote:

Simply put, no. Being conditioned is not commensurate with being contaminated. For example, path dharma are conditioned, but they are pure.

The dependent origination you describe is the dependent origination of bondage. But there is also a dependent origination of freedom. Conditioned by knowledge, merit arises; conditioned by merit, etc.

Coemgenu said:

This looks to slightly resemble the "dependent cessation" of sravakayana.

I don't think it can be the "same thing", because that would imply that bodhisattvas are headed the way of arhats when they realize it, but it is at least vaguely similar, inasmuch as "two modalities", if we can forgive that dreadful tirthika language, are being explored of DO.

Malcolm wrote:

There is only one kind of liberation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 23rd, 2018 at 11:04 AM

Title: Re: How do you know you're not just making karma worse??

Content:

Ogyen said:

Amanitamusc, is this a Dzogchen question? I didn't know the viewpoint of karma changes based on the vehicle... Unless I misread something.

Excuse my ignorance.

I look forward to the event in Santa Fe!!

Malcolm wrote:

The view of karma is the same in Dzogchen as it is in lower vehicles.

amanitamusc said:

Then what got Garab Dorje in so much trouble with his Grandpa if not the karmaless path? Was this not one of the main reasons Manjushrimitra was called from India?

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?t=20474>

Malcolm wrote:

The point Garab Dorje was making was essentially the same as Nagarjuna, "nothing here to add, nothing here to remove..." etc. The main difference is that Dzogchen explains how samsara begins and it ends. Lower yanas don't really explain how sentient beings became deluded.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 23rd, 2018 at 10:46 AM

Title: Re: How do you know you're not just making karma worse??

Content:

Ogyen said:

Amanitamusc, is this a Dzogchen question? I didn't know the viewpoint of karma changes based on the vehicle... Unless I misread something.

Excuse my ignorance.

I look forward to the event in Santa Fe!!

Malcolm wrote:

The view of karma is the same in Dzogchen as it is in lower vehicles.

Dzogchen mainly describes how samsara begins (with an aim to reverse it), but the "mechanics" of samsara are the same: affliction—> action —> suffering —>affliction as infinitum unless one breaks the chain at affliction.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 23rd, 2018 at 3:11 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but it will just get worse under a socialist government.

Grigoris said:

No. And then you would end up exactly like Venezuela, which has centrally controlled pricing.

We used to have centrally controlled pricing in Greece during the 80's, and it worked just fine. Actually, the 80's were a peak period for Greece's economy.

Malcolm wrote:

Greg, the Greek economy stalled out in the 80's.

Grigoris said:

Real per capita GDP growth was 0.23% a year in the 1980s, versus 7.9% in the 1960s and 4.64% in the 1970s.

In 1980, the average Greek had a standard of living that was 7% below their European peers; by 1989, the gap was 24% below.

Unemployment rose from 2.7% in 1980 to 6.7% in 1989.

Real compensation per employee was flat in the 1980s, while it had grown 4% in the 1970s.

Public debt climbed from 22.3% of GDP in 1980 to 64.2% in 1989.

Total factor productivity, an admittedly nebulous measure of how efficiently an economy combines inputs to generate output, fell by 0.85% a year in the 1980s versus a 6% average annual growth in the 1960s and 2.53% growth in the 1970s.

Net fixed capital formation, a measure of how much fixed capital was invested in the economy after depreciation of existing assets is taken into account, declined by an annual average of 0.17% in the 1980s, while it had grown by 16% on average in the 1970s.

Industrial production grew by a mere 1.3% a year in the 1980s while it had grown by 10% a year in the 1970s.

Average inflation in the 1980s was 19.5% versus 2% in the 1960s and 12.3% in the 1970s.

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.greekdefaultwatch.com/2010/09/did-1980s-ruin-greece.html>

You must have meant the 70's.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 23rd, 2018 at 1:32 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, if you want the UK to wind up like Venezuela, go for it. Oh wait, you live in Greece, you are already well on the way.

Grigoris said:

Yes, well... If you think Greece ended up in it's current mess because of socialist policies you are sadly mistaken. It wasn't the socialist policies, it was because of corruption and nepotism.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but it will just get worse under a socialist government.

Grigoris said:

*For example: a product may have been 100 drachma (around 30 euro cents) and people started to sell it for 1 euro (around 300 drachma). If we had stricter controls over the market (like during Greece's socialist phase where pricing was centrally controlled)...

Malcolm wrote:

And then you would end up exactly like Venezuela, which has centrally controlled pricing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 22nd, 2018 at 10:41 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

With all due respect Todd, Corbyn is an idiot.

Grigoris said:

There are idiots and then there is the President of the U$. I'll take my chances with the idiots, if you don't mind!

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, if you want the UK to wind up like Venezuela, go for it. Oh wait, you live in Greece, you are already well on the way.

We'll deal with Trump -- looking like he is very possibly going to be brought down by a porn star...fitting for such a man.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 22nd, 2018 at 10:36 PM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Astus, surely you know what a pratyakṣa is and what it entails.

Astus said:

"The cognition in which there is no conceptual construction is perception."

(Dignaga: Pratyaksapariccheda, in Dignaga on Perception, p 25, tr Hattori)

However:

"By the power of meditation the yogin can have such clear representations that they appear to him almost like the specific forms of the mind of another person, just as deities will bestow grace on a person by appearing in their dreams etc. So even the yogin does not directly grasp another person's mind through his representations. He can be said to know another person's mind only in the sense that the representations which appear in his own mind have the same form as those in another person's mind. therefore yogipratyakṣa is called perception only for the sake of convenience."
(Dharmakīrti: Samtanantara-siddhi, in Mind Only, p 217-218, tr Wood)

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is what we mean when we say that one can have a direct perception of another's mind.

What you cite here is not even slightly different than what I said. Therefore, one can know another's thoughts, because thoughts have characteristics and so forth, which are perceptible to those who possess the abhijñā of knowing the minds of others.

Apprehending the blue vase in another person knows, for such people, is exactly the same as direct perception of a blue vase; first the blueness, etc, of the representation in the mind of another is apprehended, and then it is constructed as the blue vase they have perceived in one's own mind. The process is identical. This is not hard to understand.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 22nd, 2018 at 10:33 PM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Grigoris said:

So you believe a Buddha's mind is conditioned and thus cannot see things for what they are. You believe that a Buddha is afflicted by ignorance.

Malcolm wrote:

A buddha's mind stream is conditioned and relative; it is however free of affliction and endowed with omniscience.

Grigoris said:

Doesn't conditioning imply/require ignorance? Conditioned means dependently arisen and dependent arising has ignorance as it's lynch pin.

Malcolm wrote:

Simply put, no. Being conditioned is not commensurate with being contaminated. For example, path dhammas are conditioned, but they are pure.

The dependent origination you describe is the dependent origination of bondage. But there is also a dependent origination of freedom. Conditioned by knowledge, merit arises; conditioned by merit, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 22nd, 2018 at 10:20 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

mañjughoṣamaṇi said:

Fair enough. I think the science reporting is related to this. I see these as more interrelated, especially in a time of resurgent race based fascism. The CBC did a documentary on the completely discredited Solutrean hypothesis and literally within a day of it was getting cited widely by those on the right.

Malcolm wrote:

You and I both know, racism/tribalism is never very far from the surface in human beings. And as buddhists, we all know why: false reification of self and other.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 22nd, 2018 at 8:25 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

mañjughoşamañi said:

Opinion sections are edited and are part of the media output of a given organization. When only one perspective is presented (I'm not arguing for 'both sides', but for more perspectives) that is a bias in platforming and a failure in journalistic integrity as it presents one side as normative and unchallenged.

Malcolm wrote:

These are good points, but I don't think they really affect what Maggie Haberman, etc. is doing. OTH, nothing can be all things to all people. This is why we read news from both liberal and conservative journalists.

mañjughoşamañi said:

The NYT is horrible at this, and quite frankly their publishing on the biological sciences in their journalistic output is quite bad too. They had race science weirdo Nicholas Wade as their science editor for years.

Malcolm wrote:

Just because the guy wrote a stupid book does not mean he was terrible in every way. That said, I don't read the times for science stories.

I read the papers mainly for news about politics, wars, money, etc. Disaster porn, mainly.

mañjughoşamañi said:

I didn't bring up their cheerleading of the Iraq War but I think that is relevant here too.

Malcolm wrote:

A significant journalist failure, and one they've acknowledged as such.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 22nd, 2018 at 7:40 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

mañjughoşamañi said:

There are different types of ways the media is biased. Chinese state media is obviously a tool of a particular political party and government that has no interest in adversarial journalism except to shut it down. People know (including in China) that there is no freedom in this media.

There is still bias in the media of liberal democracies. The NYT was brought up earlier. As an example of bias, they continue to platform racist pseudo-science while refusing right of response to dissenting voices. One can look at the oped published by Reich recently. A large number of race scholars in biological fields and population genetics contacted the paper to note that he was far outside of the scientific consensus and asked to be given a space to respond. They were not. They had to publish on buzzfeed.

The coverage of Corbyn was brought up because there were several easily accessible reliable studies published on the topic.

Malcolm wrote:

Hi Todd, opinion pieces are not journalism. For example, I read the journal, because it is good at economic journalism, etc. It's opinion page however is atrocious.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 22nd, 2018 at 12:41 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

mañjughoṣamaṇi said:

Current and Topical:

<http://www.bbc.com/news/stories-43754737>

"For decades the BBC denied that job applicants were subject to political vetting by MI5. But in fact vetting began in the early days of the BBC and continued until the 1990s. Paul Reynolds, the first journalist to see all the BBC's vetting files, tells the story of the long relationship between the corporation and the Security Service."

PeterC said:

The BBC goes out of its way to be critical of government in order to demonstrate its independence, which is a condition of its license. Citing it as a tool of the state is frankly a bit silly.

mañjughoṣamaṇi said:

There are longstanding connections between the state security services and the BBC, and beyond that groupthink is as common in the UK media as it is in the USA. Look at the recent reaction to Owen Jones' critiques of the British media. Or look at the biased coverage of Labor in recent years as Corbyn's popularity skyrocketed.

To praise the BBC and then dismiss its own reporting on its past connections to the security services is what is kind of silly.

Malcolm wrote:

With all due respect Todd, Corbyn is an idiot.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 22nd, 2018 at 6:33 AM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Astus said:

By the way, the standard list of what kinds of minds are perceived includes whether it is liberated or not.

Malcolm wrote:

A liberated mind still has images when it perceives characteristics, but when it is in a signless samadhi it doesn't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 22nd, 2018 at 6:32 AM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

an image is a representation. All perceptions of characteristics are representational.

Astus said:

Then why do you call that a direct perception?

Malcolm wrote:

Astus, surely you know what a pratyakṣa is and what it entails.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 22nd, 2018 at 5:11 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Ogyen said:

Sorry Manju!!!!

Mantrik said:

it's the usual pattern - good relevant suggestions offered and then things move along. You have to admit, Malcolm gotcha there ! lol

Ogyen said:

Totally got me and kept me in check!! It's what made me verify what I thought I knew before spouting off some additional nonsense...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 22nd, 2018 at 5:10 AM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Grigoris said:

So you believe a Buddha's mind is conditioned and thus cannot see things for what they are. You believe that a Buddha is afflicted by ignorance.

Malcolm wrote:

A buddha's mind stream is conditioned and relative; it is however free of affliction and endowed with omniscience.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 22nd, 2018 at 5:08 AM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

can perceive the intrinsic characteristics of the conceptual image existing in the other person's mind. It does not mean they share the same "thought."

Astus said:

That is a perception of a reflection, a copy, a simulacrum of those characteristics, in other words, a representation. Why? Simply because it is the god's perception of a characteristic, not that other being's. To make it not merely a representation, there should be thoughts apart from minds.

Malcolm wrote:

Astus, of course an image is a representation. All perceptions of characteristics are representational.

For example, there is a story of a monk of whom devas were fond. They cast their mind forth one day, looking for this monk, and unable to locate him, they went to the Buddha and asked what had become of him. The Buddha replied, "Why, he became an arhat, he is sitting right there in samadhi."

What had happened? The arhat in samadhi was not grasping any signs, and so his mind disappeared from the mental sight of these devas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 22nd, 2018 at 2:55 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Manju said:

Hello everyone,

a few minutes ago:

US and allies started launching strikes on Syria.

If you know about any `spiritual efforts towards world peace` then please write it here (Sutra recitation etc.what is appropriate ?)

I am sitting in Kathmandu and want to recite something.

Manju

Ogyen said:

So this was the OP. The rest of this discussion has been a hijacked thread in many different directions ... While interesting... I don't think anyone has stayed on topic.

Malcolm wrote:

True, I think it was hijacked right about here when someone brought up their doubts about Assad gassing civilians.

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=47&t=28339#p443772>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 22nd, 2018 at 2:51 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Grigoris said:

PS I wonder what is happening in Afrin, don't see much of that on the news, do you?

Malcolm wrote:

!3 minutes ago, on Reuters:

Turkey, rebel allies have lost hundreds in Afrin fighting, Erdogan says

ISTANBUL (Reuters) - Turkey and its Syrian rebel allies have lost “hundreds” of fighters in total since the start of a campaign in northwest Syria three months ago, President Tayyip Erdogan said on Saturday, with the rebels suffering the bulk of the losses.

Turkey and its Free Syrian Army (FSA) allies launched the operation, dubbed “Olive Branch” by Ankara, in January and have since swept the Syrian Kurdish YPG from the Afrin region.

Erdogan has previously threatened to push further east, a move that would ratchet up tension in Syria’s multi-sided conflict.

“Alongside our 56 martyrs, the FSA army had hundreds of martyrs,” Erdogan told Turkey’s NTV in an interview broadcast live.

Turkey sees the YPG as an extension of the outlawed Kurdistan Workers Party (PKK), considered a terrorist group by the United States and Europe. The PKK has waged a three-decade insurgency in Turkey’s largely Kurdish southeast that has left some 40,000 people dead.

The United States has trained and backed the YPG militia in the fight against Islamic State in Syria. That support has infuriated Erdogan and strained ties between Washington and Ankara, both NATO allies and members of the coalition against Islamic State.

<https://www.reuters.com/article/us-mideast-crisis-syria-turkey-erdogan/turkey-rebel-allies-have-lost-hundreds-in-afirin-fighting-erdogan-says-idUSKBN1HS0O2>

NY Review of Books, 4/11/18

Grigoris said:

Mohammed is not his real name. He asked me not to share personal details, fearing retaliation from the fighters he passes when he walks around his city. I can say only that Mohammed is a Kurd living in Afrin, a city in northern Syria that was held for more than five years by Kurdish-led forces until it was, about three weeks ago, overrun and occupied by the Turkish army and its proxy forces fighting under the umbrella of the Syrian National Army (SNA), formerly known as the Turkish-backed Free Syrian Army (FSA).

To be a Kurd in Afrin, once a majority Kurdish city, Mohammed says, is now to find oneself a member of a despised group, suspected of disloyalty, and liable to be robbed, beaten, put to flight, or worse. In its seventh year, the Syrian civil war has seen the warring parties and their foreign sponsors foster and exploit ethnic and sectarian divisions in order to realize their strategic ends. The looting and ethnic cleansing of Afrin by Turkish-backed militias is the latest ugly episode of this grim and cynical logic.

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.nybooks.com/daily/2018/04/11/how-turkeys-campaign-in-afirin-is-stoking-syrian-hatreds/>

Human Rights Watch, 4/8/18

Grigoris said:

(Beirut) – Syrian government forces are blocking some civilians fleeing the Turkish-led military actions in Afrin from entering territory under government control, Human Rights Watch said today. The civilians are stranded in areas with limited food, clean water, and medical supplies. Syrian government authorities should facilitate freedom of movement and aid delivery for the affected civilians.

At the same time, Human Rights Watch has documented that armed groups working with Turkish forces are looting and destroying civilian property in the city of Afrin and surrounding villages, exacerbating the plight of civilians there. Turkish forces and non-state armed groups in control of Afrin should halt the looting and hold those responsible for the damage accountable.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.hrw.org/news/2018/04/08/syria-afrin-residents-blocked-fleeing-aid>

The NY Times, 3/22/18:

Emboldened Turkey Pushes Deeper Into Syria, but Risks Abound

KILIS, Turkey — After two months of uncertain fighting, Turkey appears suddenly to be riding high in its military campaign to take control of a larger piece of northern Syria.

Along the border, studded with spring flowers and pistachio and olive groves, the artillery guns and fighter jets that until recently pounded the low mountains have fallen silent since Turkish forces captured the enclave of Afrin last weekend.

<https://www.nytimes.com/2018/03/22/world/middleeast/turkey-syria-afrin.html>

Grigoris said:

And I don't see anybody sending Tomahawk missiles to take out the Israeli snipers killing unarmed Palestinian protectors on a daily basis. Weird that.

Malcolm wrote:

And under the Trump administration, you won't hear a peep from our Gvt. But the news is different.

Grigoris said:

JERUSALEM — They came in smaller numbers. But the outcome was still deadly, and the victims this time included a 15-year-old boy.

Palestinians protested for a fourth Friday along the security fence dividing Gaza from Israel, some of them burning tires, hurling rocks or flying kites with flaming tails in the hope of setting ablaze the fields of Israeli rural communities on the other side. The Israeli military distributed a photograph of one kite with a scrawled swastika.

The military estimated the number of participants at about 3,000 in five locations along the Gaza border, down from at least 30,000 on March 30, when the protest campaign started.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.nytimes.com/2018/04/20/world/middleeast/gaza-protest-deaths.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 22nd, 2018 at 2:23 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Grigoris said:

I fail to see how bringing up verifiable facts is "poisoning the well", unless you somehow think that following the trail of money and influence is not important.

Malcolm wrote:

The facts you brought up were germane to CORE only, not to Freedom House.

Grigoris said:

Another example: You state that the BBC is a reputable source. The BBC is funded by the UK state. Its executive board reads like a pedigree of English political and economic inbred nepotism. And yet you believe that an organisation like this is capable of objectively reporting facts and does not fall prey to political and economic pressure to "inform" people in a particular manner.

Malcolm wrote:

Journalism is a discipline. It requires training and education to do properly. BBC news, etc., hire real journalists.

Grigoris said:

My opinion is that there is no such thing as independent and objective large scale (or mainstream) media. It's a fantasy.

Malcolm wrote:

Real journalists make mistakes and issues corrections. However, these days, many people mistaken opinion for journalism. Well, as the old saw goes, "One is entitled to one's own opinions, one is not entitled to one's own facts." Journalism is about uncovering facts and then reporting on them.

Grigoris said:

Unfortunately many small scale independent media outlets tend to fall prey to their own political bias.

Malcolm wrote:

This is because they are not doing journalism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 22nd, 2018 at 2:16 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Mantrik said:

...spouting the words of the Russian troll factories...

yagmort said:

you do realise that the whole "russian troll factories" can very well might be just as brainwashing as you think lckes ideas can be, don't you? did you see the "Sinclair's script for stations" video? Please watch it and ask yourself how is that possible if they are not controlled and obeyed to deliver the same script? did you see Eva Bartlett's report? no need to answer and confront me, i just ask you and everyone else - please, re-think what do you know and who provide you the information.

here s another one:

US journalist Pearson Sharp reports from Douma hospital

Pearson Sharp to OAN: No sign of a chemical attack at the Douma hospital where White Helmets filmed their video.

https://www.liveleak.com/view?t=uCzjV_1524322998 and once again - who is advocating war?

Malcolm wrote:

OAN is a very fine purveyor of lies and fake news. Bat shit crazy, Pro-Trump, right wing media onanism at its finest.

This is not journalism. Pity you believe this shite.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 22nd, 2018 at 2:03 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

...qualified journalism, and not conspiracy theorists...

yagmort said:

Eva Bartlett's "conspiracy theorists"? yeah, right on UN...

Malcolm wrote:

Eva Bartlett is not a journalist. Patrick Worrall of Channel 4 debunks her here:

Eva Bartlett is a Canadian citizen who describes herself as an “independent writer and rights activist”.

She writes a blog for the state-funded Russian media outlet Russia Today and is candid about her support for the regime of Bashar al-Assad, who is fighting Syrian rebels with Russian and Iranian help.

<https://www.channel4.com/news/factcheck/factcheck-eva-bartletts-claims-about-syrian-children>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 22nd, 2018 at 1:55 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This, Greg, is exactly the logical fallacy called "poisoning the well." Check your facts first.

Grigoris said:

All your "fact" digging does is try and poison the well further.

Are any of the facts reported by the website I posted false?

Is it false that Freedom House was instrumental in Dewey's creation of SUNY?

Is it false that Bayard Rustin was chairman of Freedom House?

Is it false that Roy Wilkins was part of Freedom House?

Is it false that Freedom House was against isolationism and America First?

Is it false that Freedom House was opposed to McCarthyism?

If none of these facts are false, then Richard Berman's CORE is completely irrelevant to them. They are basically lifted from this Wiki page which also contains criticisms of the organization:

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Freedom_House

As a 501(c)3 in the US, their books are completely open to public scrutiny. A large percentage of their funding comes from the US State Department. This, for me, is no problem. Since they are grounded in an anti-communist perspective, for you they will be a big problem.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 22nd, 2018 at 1:37 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

yagmort said:

nbc, bbc etc are all liers.. they are all controlled by deep state:

Malcolm wrote:

This is what a brain looks like on conspiracy theories.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 22nd, 2018 at 1:06 AM

Title: Re: LARGE BRONZE OFFERING THINGY

Content:

Mantrik said:

WHAT IS THIS PLEASE?

A goblet or vase atop a bowl atop a plate. Clearly for offerings or ritual celebrations of some kind. It is huge (and a bit wonky) at 18 inches high and 16 across. It is like a very Serkyem and reminds me of stacking up offerings for Tsog/Ganapuja.

Malcolm wrote:

Where is you find this? It is clearly not Tibetan.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 11:38 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Even so, gun issues in the US are not relevant to this topic.

Ogyen said:

My bad for not being clear, my reference wasn't towards gun issues, but life lost and the mobilizing of forces for x-amounts of lives lost or at stake.

Every intervention is a huge cost both in resources and manpower. Aside from the unrelated legislative politic, and the different contexts for conflicts, I was merely considering this (or trying to) from a numbers standpoint of innocent people killed, and related expenditures of time energy and resources to meet those.

It was not a thought in linear logic.

Malcolm wrote:

We have, as a world, agreed that guns are "legal" weapons of military violence. We have, as a world, agreed that chemical weapons are not legal weapons of military violence. It is solely for this reason this discussion is important.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 11:17 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

And a UN info graphic depicting where and by whom chemical weapons have been used in Syria, according to reliable evidence the UN was able to gather. As the legend notes, it does not cover all reported instances of chemical weapons used in Syria.

Ogyen said:

I'm vaguely shocked what reported in this graphic is less in frequency than the american mass school shootings in 2018 alone, let alone since 2013.. having a moment of cognitive dissonance.

Malcolm wrote:

These are merely the instances of uses of chemical weapons for which the investigators could gather actual evidence. There are many more.

Even so, gun issues in the US are not relevant to this topic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 11:00 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

yagmort said:

there is no evidence that Assad ever used gas on his own people. it's all fabricated to justify usa actions. the recent video has been shot with guys/kids who been forced to do a video and have been paid with food after. iraq, lybia, syria, yemen... how many more lies do you need to see the same pattern?

Malcolm wrote:

You have some corroboration for your claim? I suppose the Parkland kids are all crisis actors too.

In any case, for those who actually follow qualified journalism, and not conspiracy theorists of the right and the left:

<http://www.bbc.com/news/world-middle-east-24130181>

Then there is this report from Human Rights Watch:

https://www.hrw.org/sites/default/files/reports/syria_cw0913_web_1.pdf

And a UN info graphic depicting where and by whom chemical weapons have been used in Syria, according to reliable evidence the UN was able to gather. As the legend notes, it does not cover all reported instances of chemical weapons used in Syria.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 10:42 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Ogyen said:

A huge problem is... How many people know/don't know this.... Free press doesn't mean much if it's hard to identify. The majority isn't sufficiently educated to distinguish between free press and MSNBC. So CNN, Fox, MSNBC may as well be the de facto news source to a huge number of people.

This very thread illustrates clearly the confusion in a tiny random population sample... Ok maybe not so random, there are some definite criteria to being a Buddhist....

1230.jpg

Source: https://www.theguardian.com/media/2017/aug/09/four-uk-news-sources-among-top-10-most-trusted-in-us-survey?CMP=share_btn_link

Malcolm wrote:

You will note that CNN, etc are on the less trusted side.

Ogyen said:

Oh I did, AND I was a little surprised the NYT is on the barely over 50% trusted. Somehow I expected it to rank closer to the economist...

Malcolm wrote:

Well, the poll was run in England, not the US. In the US, because of Trumpistas, the "Failing" New York Times would be even lower.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 10:08 PM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The above is mistaken, and is posited on a realist perspective.

Astus said:

What do you mean by direct perception of others' minds then?

Malcolm wrote:

If you have the abhijñā of knowing the minds of others, for example, devas, when someone perceives something, it is perceived by a characteristic. A person with such abilities can perceive the intrinsic characteristics of the conceptual image existing in the other person's mind. It does not mean they share the same "thought."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 10:03 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Grigoris said:

Freedomhouse: when your government tells you that you are free.

You guys crack me up.

Malcolm wrote:

Freedom House is independent, not part of the US govt.

Grigoris said:

Questionnaire:

How independent can an organisation set up by a President of the U$ be?

- A) Not independent at all.
- B) Really not independent at all.
- C) Manipulated as hell.
- D) Really manipulated as hell.

Malcolm wrote:

This, Greg, is exactly the logical fallacy called "poisoning the well." Check your facts first.

Grigoris said:

The organization was originally founded to counter American isolationism during World War II, and played a role in pushing the United States to get involved. Formed to confront Nazism, Freedom House expanded its role after World War II, promoting trans-Atlantic partnerships and vehemently opposing McCarthyism.

In 1947, Freedom House urged New York Governor Thomas E. Dewey to create a state university that would "accept all qualified students regardless of race, color or place of habitation." (Dewey would later sign legislation that created the State University of New York.) This marked the beginning of the role Freedom House would play in the civil rights movements.

Bayard Rustin, the organizer of the March on Washington, served as the chairman of Freedom House's Executive committee, and was part of the organization throughout the '70s and '80s. Also among Freedom House's leadership was the notable civil rights leader Roy Wilkins, executive director of the NAACP during the critical years of the Civil Rights movement.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.activistfacts.com/organizations/503-freedom-house/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 8:07 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Clinton was not brought down. He served the maximum term a president can serve— 8 years.

Grigoris said:

Yup. Afetr being impeached and then having the decision overturned by the Senate.

Bush II was elected because Gore was an incompetent candidate, and was unable win a clear margin in the polls.

Seems the Democrats have a nasty habit of running incompetent candidates at the worst possible times...

Malcolm wrote:

As for the first point, Clinton was impeached for perjury and obstruction of justice. The House rightly found him guilty, and he was acquitted on appeal to the Senate. It was, in my opinion, a bad decision. But it is History.

The Democratic Party has no ideological core, unlike the GOP. They generally only win in recessions and depressions. When people are fat and content, they usually vote in the GOP to cut taxes, a recession inevitably ensues, and the Dems find themselves back in office.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 7:57 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Grigoris said:

Freedomhouse: when your government tells you that you are free.

You guys crack me up.

Malcolm wrote:

Freedom House is independent, not part of the US govt.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 7:53 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

We have a free press in the US. CNN, Fox, MSNBC are not the press.

Ogyen said:

A huge problem is... How many people know/don't know this.... Free press doesn't mean much if it's hard to identify. The majority isn't sufficiently educated to distinguish between free press and MSNBC. So CNN, Fox, MSNBC may as well be the de facto news source to a huge number of people.

This very thread illustrates clearly the confusion in a tiny random population sample...

Ok maybe not so random, there are some definite criteria to being a Buddhist....

1230.jpg

Source: https://www.theguardian.com/media/2017/aug/09/four-uk-news-sources-among-top-10-most-trusted-in-us-survey?CMP=share_btn_link

Malcolm wrote:

You will note that CNN, etc are on the less trusted side.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 7:49 PM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

minds can appear directly to each other without the need for some intermediary. This is what the ability to know the minds of others shows us. Thus is not an ability restricted to awakened folks.

How does it work? A mind which grasps signs is something which can appear to the mind of others.

Astus said:

It is exactly direct perception that cannot happen, as that would mean having the same state of mind. What might be said is that one can conceive a representation of another mind, just as one can see only representations of physical objects.

"[Consciousness] is only said to perceive the minds of others because it is like a mirror in which appear seemingly external objects. It cannot immediately perceive [others' minds]. What it immediately perceives are its own transformations. Therefore, a scripture says, "There is not the slightest dharma that is capable of seizing other dharmas. It is just that when consciousness is born, it appears resembling images and is said to seize things." As with having the minds of others as objects, so with form, etc."

(Cheng Weishi Lun, ch 7, in Three Texts on Consciousness Only, BDK ed, p 239; in Tat: p 523; http://21dzk.l.u-tokyo.ac.jp/SAT/T1585_,31,0039c15:1585_,31,0039c16.html)

Malcolm wrote:

The above is mistaken, and is posited on a realist perspective.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 7:32 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Dan74 said:

Again the unnecessary comparison to Russia only underscore the paucity of the argument. Russia does not have free media, no one seriously pretends that it does. But intelligent people like Malcolm still apparently think that the US media are free.

The groupthink they exhibit on a whole host of issues is clearly a result of freedom of thought... yeah..

Malcolm wrote:

We have a free press in the US. CNN, Fox, MSNBC are not the press.

Dan74 said:

Oh you mean as long as you have no perceptible influence, you can say what you want. Russia has such freedoms as well. See Novaya Gazeta, for instance.

Again, overall the US has more freedoms, no doubt for me, but...

Maybe worth it for folks to look up Domhoff (who runs America) and Chomsky's Manufacturing Consent.

Malcolm wrote:

Dan, the NYT is the most influential newspaper in the world. People don't watch CNN etc., for news, they watch it for sport and cheerleading, opinion pages on steroids perhaps, but they are not news.

With respect to Chomsky, he is just a radical celebrity, not a journalist, free if the obligation to fact check his sources— Hannity of the left, also given to unsound conspiracy theories and so on.

As for Domhoff, it is no mystery that Anglo—American Liberal Democracy and Capitalism go hand in hand.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 7:23 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This obviously has not happened.

Grigoris said:

Bush: just happened to be the longest running director of the CIA and then by chance got his son elected after bringing down Clinton because he had extra-marital sex. No deep state here people, just move along.

Malcolm wrote:

Clinton was not brought down. He served the maximum term a president can serve— 8 years.

Bush II was elected because Gore was an incompetent candidate, and was unable win a clear margin in the polls.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 7:17 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Snowbear said:

It's always difficult to balance free press and national security for a democracy, but I think national security should trump free press almost every time.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't, that path leads to fascism.

Snowbear said:

I think the US is balancing it fairly well.

Malcolm wrote:

With respect to whistle blowing, the gvt. has to prove harm, but the press should never be stifled no matter what happens to whistleblowers. That is why the first amendment in the Bill of Rights is first.

On the other hand revealing sources and methods is not protected by free speech, nor should it be.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 7:09 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is why free press is essential to liberal democracy.

Snowbear said:

It's always difficult to balance free press and national security for a democracy, but I think national security should trump free press almost every time.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't, that path leads to fascism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 7:02 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Snowbear said:

From: <https://rsf.org/en/united-states>

The Obama administration waged a war on whistleblowers who leaked information about its activities, leading to the prosecution of more leakers than any previous administration combined.

They note this as "bad," but leaks and whistleblowing seriously undermines national security. I side with the Obama admin on this one.

Malcolm wrote:

That depends, sometimes people leak things which turn out to be in the national interest, like the pentagon papers. Exposing clear evidence of government and corporate corruption and malfeasance is never a bad thing. This is why a free press is essential to liberal democracy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 6:03 AM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The material aggregate is defined as all physical sense organs and AND objects made of the four elements.

Astus said:

There are both sense-faculties and sense-objects for all 6 sense-fields, and from their meeting arises the respective sense-consciousnesses. Or this can be looked at from the experiential perspective, where there are sense-consciousnesses conceptually split into faculties and objects.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes. So?

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 5:29 AM
Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria
Content:
Dan74 said:

Again the unnecessary comparison to Russia only underscore the paucity of the argument. Russia does not have free media, no one seriously pretends that it does. But intelligent people like Malcolm still apparently think that the US media are free.

The groupthink they exhibit on a whole host of issues is clearly a result of freedom of thought... yeah..

Malcolm wrote:
We have a free press in the US. CNN, Fox, MSNBC are not the press.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 5:02 AM
Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria
Content:
WuMing said:

Malcolm, with all due respect, but I think here you're wrong, and in my opinion it does not have anything to do with far-right/left conspiracy theory.

There is a Swiss historian who is doing research on the "deep state" (among others), unfortunately I can't find any source of his research in English about that, but anyway, here is a good <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=dsfROmgVN5U&ytcChannel=TEDx%20Talks> of this historian, worth to watch.

And here an <http://www.voltairenet.org/article169316.html>

Malcolm wrote:
I will be frank. The deep state theory is essentially accusing career employees of the US government of hijacking the US government. This obviously has not happened. It is a myth that only serves the forces of illiberalism in the world, and is basically a modern version of the Protocols Of the Elders of Zion type of belief.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 4:01 AM
Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

WuMing said:

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=jY1MiNfwcRg&ytbChannel=Democracy%20Now!>

Malcolm wrote:

Like I said, the deep state meme is far-right/left conspiracy theory.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 3:54 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

WuMing said:

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=kTyvLpNpa9E&ytbChannel=acTVism%20Munich>

Malcolm wrote:

There is no deep state in the US. The term is being misapplied by far right guys like Snowden, and the far left, in short by the forces of illiberalism. The deep state refers to the way in some countries, the military runs the political agenda. That is not happening in US.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 21st, 2018 at 12:15 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Once Upon A Time Long Ago Truth Was Important by Paul Craig Roberts said:

Today reporters no longer have to check sources, because there is no longer journalism in America. When the Clinton regime in compliance with the Deep State that made the Clintons super-rich permitted 90% of the independent and diverse US media to be concentrated in the hands of six political companies, pthat was the end of journalism in America.

Ogyen said:

Dunno about Deep State but this (bolded part) actually happened. This is history if anyone wants to look it up, you'll find this was a historic event which changed the way journalism is used. I remember because I was close to people up close and personal with this historic event. It was to them the moment they Titanic hit the iceberg. Sadly.

I get if it sounds crazy, but I remember this clearly happening at the time.

Malcolm wrote:

People at the Times, Wapo, and even the WSJ still do their jobs in a proper way. The same is true of papers like London Times, Guardian, Le Monde and other papers if record. News does not come from TV. It also does not come from RT, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 11:56 PM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Queequeg said:

You equate the perception of an appearance with "having thoughts put into one's mind"

Astus said:

Perception exists in consciousness. If one can make another's consciousness perceive something, that is no different from being able to put a thought into another's mind, as it means one can control another's mind.

Do we need to break down how that is silly?

Please do.

Malcolm wrote:

Simply put, minds can appear directly to each other without the need for some intermediary. This is what the ability to know the minds of others shows us. Thus is not an ability restricted to awakened folks.

How does it work? A mind which grasps signs is something which can appear to the mind of others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 11:48 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

WuMing said:

here are two interesting articles by Paul Craig Roberts

<https://www.paulcraigroberts.org/2018/04/16/upon-time-long-ago-truth-important/>

<https://www.paulcraigroberts.org/2018/04/17/crisis-beginning-stages/>

Malcolm wrote:

Deep state? This man just lost all credibility by defending Tucker Carlson, a hack of the first order.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 9:49 PM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Astus said:

We are interacting in our own minds. We each have the concept of communicating with another person, but it all happens within the scope of separate minds. Experience is individual, as there are no shared sense-fields, and the interpretation applied to experience is also individual.

Grigoris said:

Ridiculous. of course there are shared sense fields, even if we experience them individually. When I walk into a room with you and switch on a light, it is not that the light sensed by my eyes is my light and the light sensed by your eyes is your light. There is light and each one of us senses it separately. According to your theory, if I switch the light on, only I will see it, since the "switching on" and the light are merely my mental constructs.

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty sure what Astus means is that there are no shared āyatanas. Your eye is your eye, my eye is my eye. My eye object is mine, yours is yours, they are not shared in that sense, even if there is only one light in the room.

However, where he is incorrect is on the skandha level. The material aggregate is defined as all physical sense organs and AND objects made of the four elements.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 9:44 PM

Title: Re: Garchen Nyingtig Yabshi Germany 2018 Questions

Content:

bryandavis said:

Anybody have 2cents to say about Yumkha Dechen Gyalmo Wang? Any unique features etc?

narraboth said:

Strictly speaking, it's not a 'Wang', but it should be given only to people who have received Wang. Similar to the case of Vajrayogini in Sakya and Gelug.

Malcolm wrote:

This is called a Jinlab (byin rlabs).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 8:49 PM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Grigoris said:

So we are not interacting?

Astus said:

We are interacting in our own minds. We each have the concept of communicating with another person, but it all happens within the scope of separate minds. Experience is individual, as there are no shared sense-fields, and the interpretation applied to experience is also individual.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, Astus, the traces of other minds are sufficiently strong to generate appearances for ours. For example, the old women who meditated upon herself as a tiger caused a village to panic at the appearance of a tiger in their midst, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 7:55 AM

Title: Re: Are There Different Categories of Buddha's ?

Content:

yan kong said:

Then I must misunderstand something. My understanding is that they are all liberated but that they do not seek to liberated others like Buddhas, nor are they omniscient like Buddhas.

Malcolm wrote:

No, you understood correctly. The point is that, as Candrakīrti points out, the dharmadhātu is one, and therefore, the liberation of śrāvakas, pratyekabuddhas, and buddhas are the same. Omniscience, well, that is another matter. But a buddha is not defined by omniscience, rather they are defined by liberation.

Virgo said:

The one point I never understood is about śrāvakas returning to samsara to continue the path. Is it that they have a liberation, which is only temporary, until they become Full Buddhas (since they must return)?

Kevin

Malcolm wrote:

They don't return to samsara per se, in the sense that they must endure suffering, but they must accumulate merit in order to manifest the rūpakāya and accumulated wisdom for omniscience.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 6:08 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

The only thing that got me so wound up in this discussion was because people were acting so negatively, and thinking she was a scammer/fraud/ignorant.....when there wasn't empirical proof....

Malcolm wrote:

Generally ignorant? No. She is clearly educated. Ignorant of Tibetan Buddhism? Absolutely.

Claiming that Heruka is related to the god Horus is completely ignorant, lacking anything even remotely resembling the truth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 5:56 AM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Ogyen said:

THANK YOU. Determinism completely missed the point... We don't have castes in Buddhadharma... Right??

Malcolm wrote:

No, we do not promote class in Buddhism, but we also do not ignore it. We accept as a matter of course, that people with positive karma are born more attractive, healthy, long-lived, intelligent, moral, access to wealth and so on. People with negative karma are less attractive, healthy, long-lived, intelligent, moral, access to wealth and so on. And of course, based on the mixture of karma we possess, we are all mixtures of these things; some people born into high positions in society are ugly, immoral, not so smart, etc. Others born into lower positions are attractive, long lived, moral, etc.

The position into which one is born is not a guarantee of future returns. IN samsara, one day a king, the next day a beggar. This is common.

Ogyen said:

So what you're saying also means that while it's acknowledged and accepted "as a matter of course", it's like points earned in a game of suffering, so it doesn't attach superiority to these conditions. The points will run out and back to scratch. Or even in a hell where it is really really hard to come out of.

Malcolm wrote:

Higher stations have no moral value attached to them in and of themselves, unlike Hinduism, where being born a brahmin immediately confers social privileges categorically denied others; the only value of high stations and higher rebirths is the ease with which one will likely live one's life. But if someone has the karma to be poor, even if you give them a wishgranting jewel they will either lose it or have it stolen. Karma is unerring.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 5:41 AM

Title: Re: Are There Different Categories of Buddha's ?

Content:

yan kong said:

Then I must misunderstand something. My understanding is that they are all liberated but that they do not seek to liberate others like Buddhas, nor are they omniscient like Buddhas.

Malcolm wrote:

No, you understood correctly. The point is that, as Candrakīrti points out, the dharmadhātu is one, and therefore, the liberation of śrāvakas, pratyekabuddhas, and buddhas are the same. Omniscience, well, that is another matter. But a buddha is not defined by omniscience, rather they are defined by liberation.

PSM said:

So when we say "buddha", we're probably actually meaning "samyaksambuddha", buddha being a wider category?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 5:40 AM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Ogyen said:

This is a subtle change of subject and a definite twisting of my words and the context in which my statement is quoted. Also what you note does not contradict the spirit of what I wrote while quoting me out of context.

Malcolm wrote:

Idiot theory of karma is "tit for tatism": I raped someone in a past life, now in this life they will rape me.

Actual theory of karma is not deterministic but based on probability. If you have negative dominant karma and are born in a war torn country based on the criteria given above, your chances of having a short life and a violent death are increased exponentially.

Ogyen said:

THANK YOU. Determinism completely missed the point... We don't have castes in Buddhadharma... Right??

Malcolm wrote:

No, we do not promote class in Buddhism, but we also do not ignore it. We accept as a matter of course, that people with positive karma are born more attractive, healthy, long-lived, intelligent, moral, access to wealth and so on. People with negative karma are less attractive, healthy, long-lived, intelligent, moral, access to wealth and so on. And of course, based on the mixture of karma we possess, we are all mixtures of these things; some people born into high positions in society are ugly, immoral, not so smart, etc. Others born into lower positions are attractive, long lived, moral, etc.

The position into which one is born is not a guarantee of future returns. IN samsara, one day a king, the next day a beggar. This is common.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 4:44 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Snowbear said:

It's actually really cool that Grigoris is Greek and has a first-hand take on left wing Greek politics. Even cooler that he is willing to have discussions with us evil Americans. How many Greeks are interested (or have the English skills) in doing that?

Malcolm wrote:

We all appreciate his humanitarian work. As for his English, he is an Aussie.

Snowbear said:

While I'm not convinced that us Americans are the cause of the world's problems, one can't deny that Greeks are suffering and their gripes with the international world order are worth listening to.

Malcolm wrote:

The world is suffering. Everyone's position is impermanent, and this is the reason why I object to all this privilege rhetoric.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 4:37 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Think twice next time before you are tempted to throw someone under the DW bus.

dzogchungpa said:

Says the bus, lol. I was, and am, legitimately interested in this story.

Malcolm wrote:

Maybe this will interest you as well:

I present: Pink Oshun!!!

dzogchungpa said:

PINK OSHUN is the 21st Century Priestess in me. She is the modern woman, having the ability to both plug in and out of the matrix. As a business woman, I have the opportunity and freedom to follow my passions, while pursuing my spiritual journey and funding projects designed around community building and healing.

Pink Oshun is the Feminist Goddess in me that challenges patriarchy from the standpoint that tracing our roots to the ancestry of our blood line is an essential part of healing the traumatic injuries that white supremacy requires that we, black and white, honor our African roots. The journey of the Pink Oshun within is about bringing forth the healer within me to assist our community towards healing from our oppression.

She leads us on a modern eclectic path with the disciplines of prayer, meditation, and the creative arts. She guides me in building an intentional community that is sustainable and a diverse African culture centric place for you. If you are interested in finding out who you are, discovering the Ancestral African bloodline within and beginning the journey of healing and self discovery; then Pink Oshun may very well resignate with you as well.

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.oshuntalks.com/maat-tantra>

Wishing you well on your afrocentric tantric journey...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 4:31 AM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Ogyen said:

This is a subtle change of subject and a definite twisting of my words and the context in which my statement is quoted. Also what you note does not contradict the spirit of what

I wrote while quoting me out of context.

Malcolm wrote:

Idiot theory of karma is "tit for tatism": I raped someone in a past life, now in this life they will rape me.

Actual theory of karma is not deterministic but based on probability. If you have negative dominant karma and are born in a war torn country based on the criteria given above, your chances of having a short life and a violent death are increased exponentially.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 4:24 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Grigoris said:

quit the meta-discussion and get back to the bunfight.

Ogyen said:

I knew it was time for more!!!

Snowbear said:

The meta-discussion was important in the sense that when we catch ourselves seeing our opinions as mirroring reality more accurately than others, we need to pause and question it.

Malcolm wrote:

I was basically just arguing that the Western Press is actually journalism, and not fascist propaganda like that generated by Syrian and Russian state media. For this I was attacked for indulging in my "white privilege," being an American (this charge is certainly true), and castigated for not understanding what it is like to be a target of racism (which is actually untrue).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 4:19 AM

Title: Re: Are There Different Categories of Buddha's ?

Content:

yan kong said:

To my understanding these are not Buddhas, even if one has Buddha in the name.

Malcolm wrote:

The liberation of the three is the same. They are all Buddhas.

yan kong said:

Then I must misunderstand something. My understanding is that they are all liberated but that they do not seek to liberate others like Buddhas, nor are they omniscient like Buddhas.

Malcolm wrote:

No, you understood correctly. The point is that, as Candrakīrti points out, the dharmadhātu is one, and therefore, the liberation of śrāvakas, pratyekabuddhas, and buddhas are the same. Omniscience, well, that is another matter. But a buddha is not defined by omniscience, rather they are defined by liberation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 3:56 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Sennin said:

Mukhagama Commentary by Master Vitapada:

There is no transgression [in seeking to become] superior to the gods;
bodhisattvas are superior to them, buddhas are superior [to bodhisattvas], and the great Vajradhara who has the seven unions is superior [to buddhas].

Malcolm wrote:

Perfect.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 3:25 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Snowbear said:

...but you're positing yourself in a more advantageous position.

Malcolm wrote:

We call this, "Socialist privilege."

Snowbear said:

Yep, always the self-righteous types.

Malcolm wrote:

If only Grigoris would read Rawls as well as Nozick's Anarchy, State, and Utopia.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 3:21 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Snowbear said:

You are indirectly saying here that your POV has risen above the conditioning, but other's (who don't agree with you) haven't.

Grigoris said:

I am saying that our conditioning influences our views. Having been conditioned outside of the particular view it is easier for me to see it's effect and then try to use this to not replicate the same mistakes.

Snowbear said:

...but you're positing yourself in a more advantageous position.

Malcolm wrote:

We call this, "Socialist privilege."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 3:20 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Grigoris said:

It is a more amplified version of the mechanics/effects of inequality which we live out in the human realm.

Malcolm wrote:

Inequality will never be solved by external impositions of power on social relations. It is a result of karma, plain and simple. Of course we do not leave things in this way, we try to provide means for the less fortunate and so on; but there is no social theory, no theory of government, that will eliminate inequality in any absolute way.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 3:16 AM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Ogyen said:

Thank you for such clarity... This is crystal clear. We're all alone in this, together. So is this why teachers like Thich That Hanh stress the importance of interbeing?

Malcolm wrote:

Interbeing is an extension of dependent origination, based on East Asian ideas.

But dependent origination, when reduced to its essential components, simply means: where there is affliction, there is a cause for action; where there is action there is a cause for suffering; and where there is suffering, there is a condition for further affliction. Without affliction, there is no cause for action; without action, there is no result, suffering.

Ogyen said:

So a Buddha's actions don't cause karma and therefore suffering (further affliction) because they are no longer bound to the cycle of dependent origination?

Malcolm wrote:

A Buddhas deeds are not based on affliction (desire, hatred, and ignorance); they are based on wisdom. Hence, they do not result in suffering.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 3:10 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Ogyen said:

Is personalizing this discussion really relevant?

Malcolm wrote:

Of course it isn't, which is why when Greg goes this route it is completely unproductive. And quite frankly, every damn time this kind of loggerhead happens here, it is because Greg shoots off his mouth about someone being white, American, etc., as if this disqualifies their POV. That logical fallacy is called "poisoning the well."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 3:08 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:
Can't they just have an intelligent conversation ?

to

Malcolm wrote:
No, dear. Spirits like that are only interested in mortals as servants, not as advisors.

Kunga Lhadzom said:
Well....maybe Yeye should renounce Osun, if Osun still wants bloodthirsty ritual sacrifice. ...
And just stick with Buddha.....who was against ritual sacrifice.

Malcolm wrote:
That would require her to take refuge in the Buddha, Dharma, and Sangha, of which I have seen no evidence.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 3:02 AM
Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
The only person here that has been making ad hom arguments is you. This is in fact your general approach to people on the forum. Its abusive.

Grigoris said:
I am going to say it one more time: I am not making personal attacks against you.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, which is what the Klansman told the African American -- "It isn't personal, friend, we just lynch everyone who looks like you."
An attack is an attack, it does not really matter whether it is intended to be "personal."
You constantly attack myself and others on the forum with whom you have political differences for being white, for being American, Anglo, etc. Everyone knows that you do this. The only person blind to it is you, because your level of aggression and self-righteousness has led you to believe this is acceptable behavior. Keep it up and I will lodge a formal complaint.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 3:01 AM
Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria
Content:

Snowbear said:
Uh, huh...your hand waving to transform your POV into "reality" is noted.

Grigoris said:

So you are positing a nihilist position then?

Snowbear said:

When did being humble about one's opinions become nihilism? I feel like you're trolling.

Malcolm wrote:

Grigoris is best ignored. When you respond to him, like clockwork he resorts to personal attacks.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 2:59 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I was, and am, legitimately interested in this story.

Malcolm wrote:

You must have been aware that it would have provoke criticism.

dzogchungpa said:

Meta-discussion much? Friend, almost everything remotely interesting provokes criticism.

Malcolm wrote:

Most of that which is "interesting" is not Dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 2:57 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Grigoris said:

Ummmm... No. If you ask a victim of racism whether they perceive a difference between what YOU describe as "simple" and systemic racism, well, I won't talk on their behalf. Go and do it yourself and see what the answer will be.

Man, it is not my problem if you do not want look past your conditioning to see the reality of your position in society. I can't force you to do that. It is not something personal against you, it is a white thing.

Malcolm wrote:

Pathetic and trite.

Grigoris said:

I try to constantly check my privilege as a Greek living in Greece. It is pernicious and a easy role to slip into, especially when I have to deal with refugees to Greece (which I do on a daily basis). Some people ignore the power their position affords them and just go about their business as usual, whilst unknowingly riding roughshod over the "others". Other people take advantage of it and use it to bolster their position of advantage and compensate for their lack of power as the lowest Greek members of Greek society (racists, neo-Nazi types, frothing nationalists, etc...). Some maintain their position of power and use this to play the role of the great humanitarian saviors. Etc...

Malcolm wrote:

This is all such incredible bullshit. You are entitled to believe it. I don't. It has nothing to do with Dharma and is not a Dharma view.

Grigoris said:

But it is not a personal attack. Trust me.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, which is exactly what Bolsheviks said to their victims as they were gunning them down. At least Fascists are more honest in their hatred.

Grigoris said:

Well you convinced me of the veracity of your view using your finely honed argument consisting of appeals to authority, ad hom and reductio ad stalinum (that's the McCarthyist version of reductio ad hitlerum).

Malcolm wrote:

The only person here that has been making ad hom arguments is you. This is in fact your general approach to people on the forum. Its abusive.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 2:49 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There, that's refreshing. You do in fact recognize there is a difference between racism and systemic racism. Good for you.

Grigoris said:

Ummmm... No. If you ask a victim of racism whether they perceive a difference between what YOU describe as "simple" and systemic racism, well, I won't talk on their behalf. Go and do it yourself and see what the answer will be. The rest of your post is quite typical of the diatribes you have become accustomed to making against members on this forum, due to your position of power and impunity as a moderator. Check your own privilege, dude.

Man, it is not my problem if you do not want look past your conditioning to see the reality of your position in society. I can't force you to do that. It is not something personal against you, it is a white thing.

Malcolm wrote:

Pathetic and trite.

Grigoris said:

I try to constantly check my privilege as a Greek living in Greece. It is pernicious and a easy role to slip into, especially when I have to deal with refugees to Greece (which I do on a daily basis). Some people ignore the power their position affords them and just go about their business as usual, whilst unknowingly riding roughshod over the "others". Other people take advantage of it and use it to bolster their position of advantage and compensate for their lack of power as the lowest Greek members of Greek society (racists, neo-Nazi types, frothing nationalists, etc...). Some maintain their position of power and use this to play the role of the great humanitarian saviors. Etc...

Malcolm wrote:

This is all such incredible bullshit. You are entitled to believe it. I don't. It has nothing to do with Dharma and is not a Dharma view.

Grigoris said:

But it is not a personal attack. Trust me.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, which is exactly what Bolsheviks said to their victims as they were gunning them down. At least Fascists are more honest in their hatred.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 2:45 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

tell Osun to go vegan now

Malcolm wrote:

Um, it rather works the other way around. The Orisha dictates to the medium.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Can't they just have an intelligent conversation ?

to

Malcolm wrote:

No, dear. Spirits like that are only interested in mortals as servants, not as advisors.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 2:45 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I was, and am, legitimately interested in this story.

Malcolm wrote:

You must have been aware that it would have provoke criticism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 2:24 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

tell Osun to go vegan now

Malcolm wrote:

Um, it rather works the other way around. The Orisha dictates to the medium.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 2:07 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

I was daydreaming again.....and thought...maybe she will be the one to put an end to ritual sacrifice in the culture.

Maybe that's the reason this happened....sometimes one intention is not what you think....maybe her subconscious. ..or wisdom intuition....had a higher plan for her....

I know....i'm an idealist.....

Malcolm wrote:

If wishes were fishes...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 2:01 AM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You cannot gather karma for me, I cannot gather it for you. "Collective karma" assumes that groups share karma. This is true only insofar as similar actions bear similar results. But for example, claiming that Jews in the holocaust suffered from collective karma is wrongheaded.

Ogyen said:

Thank you for such clarity... This is crystal clear. We're all alone in this, together. So is this why teachers like Thich That Hanh stress the importance of interbeing?

Malcolm wrote:

Interbeing is an extension of dependent origination, based on East Asian ideas.

But dependent origination, when reduced to its essential components, simply means: where there is affliction, there is a cause for action; where there is action there is a cause for suffering; and where there is suffering, there is a condition for further affliction. Without affliction, there is no cause for action; without action, there is no result, suffering.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 1:56 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Speaking of Kali Ma, a certain other Kali Ma turned out to be a Rinpoche...

Malcolm wrote:

Recognized by whom? Recognitions are relatively inexpensive, and prove nothing. Steven Segal, anyone?

dzogchungpa said:

.

Are you suggesting that the ex Kali Ma in question may have purchased her title? Anyway, my point is that people can develop, so perhaps we should wait and see where this goes before coming to a definitive conclusion.

Malcolm wrote:

I am suggesting that recognitions are pretty meaningless.

As for the other thing, you started it. Maybe you should not have posted that. In the end, all you really did was provide a condition for that poor lady to become distressed when she was a subject of justified criticism. You know quite well what happens when you stir the pot on DW. So, are you now satisfied that your idle sport has born regrettable fruit? Think twice next time before you are tempted to throw someone under the DW bus.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 1:17 AM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Is the "container universe" collectively conjured or not?

Conjured? No. Does it arise from the total aggregate of all sentient beings actions, yes.

Queequeg said:

Is it incorrect to then say that it is collective karma? Do you see a problem with characterizing it that way? If so, can you elaborate on those pitfalls?

Malcolm wrote:

You cannot gather karma for me, I cannot gather it for you. "Collective karma" assumes that groups share karma. This is true only insofar as similar actions bear similar results. But for example, claiming that Jews in the holocaust suffered from collective karma is wrongheaded.

Sometimes around here, we see some people throwing around irresponsible claims such as black people being angry and wishing to harm white people is the result of the karma of white oppression, which is absurd. It is just as absurd as the claim that black people suffering from oppression is from racial karma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 1:02 AM

Title: Reference list in response to "Anti-War" memes about Syria circulating April 2018

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 12:59 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Jeff H said:

Surely you can't be saying that anyone who hasn't felt some affinity for buddhadharma in this life will never meet Buddha, except by improbable dumb luck. Or that non-buddhists who exhibit genuine loving compassion are not generating positive karma which could, eventually, be greatly cultivated and refined by subsequent exposure to the Dharma.

Malcolm wrote:

Surely I am not saying that; but what I am saying is that if one does not meet the Dharma, one is merely spinning on a wheel.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 12:56 AM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The dominant result is said to ripen as the container universe where one is born and lives. For instance, due to taking life, one must be born and live in a bleak region with ravines and so on that are harmful to life. Likewise, due to taking what has not been given, frost and hail will arise, fruit will not form on trees, and famines will arise. Due to improper desire, one must live in a place with thick dust and where there are many unpleasant things such as feces, urine, swamps and so on. Due to lying, one must live in a place that is polluted and foul-smelling, one's wealth will not be stable, and the country will be frightening. Due to calumny, one is born in a region that is uneven, with ravines and gorges. Due to harsh words, one is born in an unhappy place that is salty and so on. Due to idle speech one is born in a place where rice does not grow; even if one farms, the seasons are not constant; and so on. Due to greed, one lives in a place where the harvest is damaged, the grain is small, and one is born during a bad time. Due to malice, one is always frightened, there are frequent injuries, and one is born in a place where the grains have a bitter taste. Due to wrong view, even though the grain is not small, [136/a] there is little wealth, and one is born without refuge and defenders.

The Ratnavali sums it up:

Though those engaged in nonvirtue desire happiness,
but where ever they go,
they are crushed by suffering
because of that nonvirtue then and there.

Queequeg said:

Is the "container universe" collectively conjured or not?

Malcolm wrote:

Conjured? No. Does it arise from the total aggregate of all sentient beings actions, yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 12:28 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Speaking of Kali Ma, a certain other Kali Ma turned out to be a Rinpoche...

Malcolm wrote:

Recognized by whom? Recognitions are relatively inexpensive, and prove nothing. Steven Segal, anyone?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 12:18 AM

Title: No, the BBC is not reporting the end of the world

Content:

Unknown said:

A fictional video reporting the onset of thermonuclear war and featuring BBC News branding has been shared widely.

It is not real but alarmed viewers have contacted the BBC, apparently convinced it is true.

On YouTube, the company behind the video clearly stated it was fiction before their account was removed.

But on WhatsApp, where the video has been passed on without that clarification, some users were fooled.

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.bbc.com/news/blogs-trending-43822718>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 12:12 AM

Title: Syria war: The online activists pushing conspiracy theories

Content:

Unknown said:

Inspectors from the Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW) are attempting to access the previously rebel-held town of Douma, where medical organisations and rescue workers say President Bashar al-Assad's forces dropped bombs filled with toxic chemicals in an attack on 7 April, killing more than 40 people.

The Syrian government and its key ally, Russia, say the incident was staged. But the US, UK and France - who support the opposition to Mr Assad - say they are confident that chlorine and possibly a nerve agent were used.

Despite the uncertainty about what happened in Douma, a cluster of influential social media activists is certain that it knows what occurred on 7 April.

They've seized on a theory being floated by Russian officials and state-owned media outlets that the attacks were "staged" or were a "false flag" operation, carried out by jihadist groups or spies in order to put the blame on the Assad government and provide a justification for Western intervention.

The group includes activists and people who call themselves "independent journalists", and several have Twitter followings reaching into the tens or hundreds of thousands.

The activists call themselves "anti-war", but as they generally back the Syrian government's military operations against rebel forces seeking to overthrow Mr Assad and Russian air strikes carried out in support, it might be more accurate to describe them as "anti-Western intervention" or "pro-Syrian government".

According to their narrative, international media organisations across the political spectrum, along with human rights organisations, are somehow covertly aligned with Western governments, Saudi Arabia, the Islamic State group and al-Qaeda and taking part in a secretive plot to take over Syria.

...

White Helmets

The Sarah Abdallah account is, according to a recent study by the online research firm Graphika, one of the most influential social media accounts in the online conversation about Syria, and specifically in pushing misinformation about a 2017 chemical weapons attack and the Syria Civil Defence, whose rescue workers are widely known as the "White Helmets".

The White Helmets operate in rebel-held areas. They have been one of the sources that Western media outlets, including the BBC, have quoted about alleged chemical attacks in Syria. With regard to the incident in Douma, the BBC has not been able independently to verify the group's reports.

Graphika chief executive John Kelly says his company's analysis showed distinct patterns emerging.

"When you're looking at these disinformation campaigns, a lot of the same characters show up for every party," he told BBC Trending.

Graphika was commissioned to prepare a report on online chatter by The Syria Campaign, a UK-based advocacy group organisation which campaigns for a democratic future for Syria and supports the White Helmets. The White Helmets have been the subject of two Oscar-nominated documentary films and have been nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize.

Graphika found 20 million messages about the White Helmets, split between tweets in support and in opposition. Among the opponents, Kelly says, Sarah Abdallah was "by far the most influential", followed by Vanessa Beeley.

The firm found that Sarah Abdallah's account was primarily followed by a number of different interest clusters: supporters of pro-Palestinian causes, Russians and Russian allies, white nationalists and those from the extremist alt-right, conservative American Trump supporters, far-right groups in Europe and conspiracy theorists.

These groups were instrumental in making the hashtag #SyriaHoax trend after the chemical weapons attack in the rebel-held town of Khan Sheikhoun in April 2017.

That hashtag, pushed by Sarah Abdallah and influential American conservative activists, became a worldwide trend on Twitter. Many of those tweeting it claimed that the chemical weapons attack was faked or a hoax.

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.bbc.com/news/blogs-trending-43745629> #

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 20th, 2018 at 12:09 AM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Ogyen said:

Again. Regardless of what you personally call it, this is a gross misunderstanding of the principle of karma. There are no "unrelated events" just ignorance and the ability to see or not see them. Everything existing has a causality. Sometimes causalities meet. Like and intricate outlet systems of rivers. I may not be responsible for being raped by my stepfather (per previous example) and now my karma is to manage all the sequence of events that comes out of it.

Malcolm wrote:

Just to inject some definition into this discussion: the Buddha, Naḡārjuna, and Vasuabandhu in one voice proclaim, "Karma is volition (cetana) and what proceeds from volition."

Then there is karma vipaka, of which there are three kinds: 1) the ripened result, 2) the result that corresponds to the cause, and 3) the dominant result.

With respect to the first, the Ratnavali states:

One is born in hell through hatred;
one is born into the preta realm through desire;
and one is generally born as an animal through confusion.

As for the second:

Due to taking life, life is short.
Due to stealing, one is impoverished.
Due to sexual impropriety, one has enemies.
Due to lying, one is criticized.
Due to calumny, one is separated from friends.
Due to harsh words, one hears unpleasantness.
Due to gossip, one's word has no value.
Due to greed, one's hopes will be dashed.
Due to malice, one will have fear.
Due to wrong view, one's view will be bad.

As for the third, the dominant result, Khenpo Ngalo states (and this is all very standard):

The dominant result is said to ripen as the container universe where one is born and lives. For instance, due to taking life, one must be born and live in a bleak region with ravines and so on that are harmful to life. Likewise, due to taking what has not been given, frost and hail will arise, fruit will not form on trees, and famines will arise. Due to improper desire, one must live in a place with thick dust and where there are many unpleasant things such as feces, urine, swamps and so on. Due to lying, one must live in a place that is polluted and foul-smelling, one's wealth will not be stable, and the country will be frightening. Due to calumny, one is born in a region that is uneven, with ravines and gorges. Due to harsh words, one is born in an unhappy place that is salty and so on. Due to idle speech one is born in a place where rice does not grow; even if one farms, the seasons are not constant; and so on. Due to greed, one lives in a place where the harvest is damaged, the grain is small, and one is born during a bad time. Due to malice, one is always frightened, there are frequent injuries, and one is born in a place where the grains have a bitter taste. Due to wrong view, even though the grain is not small, [136/a] there is little wealth, and one is born without refuge and defenders.

The Ratnavali sums it up:

Though those engaged in nonvirtue desire happiness,
but where ever they go,
they are crushed by suffering
because of that nonvirtue then and there.

Ogyen said:

If my karma is reallllly bad I might rape back. If it is really good I might make it my mission to protect children in the world. My karma has as much to do with the conditions I've cultivated to handle inevitable pain. Regardless of "who seems at fault", the event placed my being in that time and space and according to previous aspirations and karmic conditions that led me there, and then the choices I have, at the point of needing to take actions, are all based on my awareness (cultivated qualities) that will permit me to decrease or increase suffering as a result of that karma. If I don't know how to manage rape and abuse I might fetishise it as a child and grow up repeating this scenario to others. If I realize there ARE tools like therapy and meditation and learn all about the cycle of violence, my capacity to learn this is also a karma from cultivated conditions. My own ignorance is my transparent cage. You think you have a choice... But much of your choice really is self determined by what qualities you habituate/cultivate.

This is why it is so important to cultivate the positive qualities. Not because of moral ground, because what you know is how you suffer. The more you integrate, the less any relative event sways you into suffering.

Malcolm wrote:

As the Ratnavali states:

This Dharma liberates one from hell realms, preta realms, and animal realms.
and one attains an increase of happiness, wealth, and political power among devas and humans.

The Buddha said:

The correct mundane view exists in one who is great; that prevents going to lower realms for a thousand eons.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 10:47 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

People who do not meet the Buddha's path, no matter how good their karma is, are like a wasp in a jar.

Jeff H said:

Where does the karma to meet the Buddha's path come from?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, I am sure you have heard the Buddha's teaching that is more likely for a blind sea tortoise who rises to the surface of the ocean every one hundred years to put his head into a golden yoke, than it is for a sentient being to take rebirth as a human being with the eight freedoms and ten endowments.

This leisure and endowment, so hard to acquire is the attainment of a person's goals;
but if it is not put to good use in the present,
later on where will this true endowment exist?
-- Bodhicaryāvatāra

As to the wasp thing, the Buddha states:

The three planes of existence blaze with suffering of aging and illness, here there is no protection from the intensely blazing fire of death, migrating beings born in the world are always confused, revolving like bees stuck in a pot.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 10:18 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Unknown said:

While much about the attack remains unclear, a New York Times review of more than 20 videos of its aftermath, an examination of flight records compiled by citizen observers, and interviews with a dozen residents, medics and rescue workers suggest that during a military push to break the will of Douma's rebels, pro-government forces dropped charges bearing some kind of chemical compound that suffocated at least 43 people and left many more struggling to breathe.

"You imagine yourself on Judgment Day, and there is death all around you," said Mr. Hanash, the student. "It was a scene that you don't want anyone to have to see: old men, women and children screaming and suffering."

Regardless of the munitions used, the attack worked. Hours later, as rescuers lined up bodies in the street, the rebels agreed to hand over the town and be bused with their families to another rebel-held area.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.nytimes.com/2018/04/11/world/middleeast/syria-chemical-attack-douma.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 10:07 PM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

R said:

Is Yeye sacrificing animals tho? In some of the Krodhikali temples people behead goats even though that wasn't the original thing there.

Malcolm wrote:

Kalima and Krodhakali (Black, wrathful Vajrayoginī) are entirely different. The former is a worldly goddess, the later, well, Vajrayoginī.

As for whether or not she engages in this practice, you will have to ask her personally. However, it is standard.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 9:57 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If we painted our political discussions in terms of karma and its ripening, these conversations would be very different, not so much filled with blame of others as sadness that karma is unerring and foolish sentient beings continue to just build more negative karma over time unless they meet the Buddha's path.

Ogyen said:

... So to your point, I would love to see this discussion (and many others) taken from the standpoint you propose, one of understanding the nature, the causes and the release of suffering

Jeff H said:

I just wanted to bump these comments. But to add that I think it's sectarian to insist that only those who meet the Buddha's path can improve their karma. Anyone who applies the truths of Buddha's path, in terms of loving compassion, is generating positive karma whether they know the Buddha or not. Eventually they will meet Buddha. I think this is HHDL's most important message for the world.

Malcolm wrote:

People who do not meet the Buddha's path, no matter how good their karma is, are like a wasp in a jar.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 9:45 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Sure on can and one should. Read a dictionary.

Grigoris said:

We have had this discussion before and I recommended you go ask a black person or a Native American about the distinction between simple and systemic racism.

Malcolm wrote:

There, that's refreshing. You do in fact recognize there is a difference between racism and systemic racism. Good for you. '

The rest of your post is quite typical of the diatribes you have become accustomed to making against members on this forum, due to your position of power and impunity as a moderator. Check your own privilege, dude.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 8:46 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No. Use the dictionary, shaunc is quite correct. What you are talking about is systemic racism, and that is different than simple racism.

Grigoris said:

No. You cannot separate the two.

Anyway, you should also ask yourself who wrote the definition and for whom.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure on can and one should. Read a dictionary.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 7:08 PM

Title: Re: Are There Different Categories of Buddha's ?

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

I think she's asking about shravakas and preteyeka buddhas.

yan kong said:

To my understanding these are not Buddhas, even if one has Buddha in the name.

Malcolm wrote:

The liberation of the three is the same. They are all Buddhas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 7:06 PM

Title: Re: On Buddhism and Nominalism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That dies not make Dharmas universals. A universal is cowness, for example.

Astus said:

But the dharmas could be called universals for actual instances of experience, however, I don't know of anyone who conceived a theoretical list of dharmas existing separately from dharmas as experience, hence they are not universals.

Malcolm wrote:

Son you in fact agree, Dharmas are particulars, not universals.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 7:01 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Grigoris said:

Racism is the application of power on this basis. An Aborigine cannot be racist towards you because you have state and social mechanisms working in your favour

Malcolm wrote:

No. Use the dictionary, shaunc is quite correct. What you are talking about is systemic racism, and that is different than simple racism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 6:37 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Let me outline the main difference between Fascist bullshit and Socialist bullshit for you:

Fascist bullshit always runs along the lines of: the Jews, The Mexicans, the Blacks, the [insert foreign bogeyman here] is causing all our problems.

Socialist bullshit always runs along the lines of: The Corporations, The Capitalists, the Man, the US, the Imperialists, the [insert systemic bogeyman here] is causing all our problems.

Grigoris said:

I imagine that to a white, highly educated, middle-class male living in a largely democratic state in one of world's richest and most powerful imperialist nations, it would seem that way.

Everything looks great through white tinted glasses.

In the other 95% of the world things are a little different. It is all just karma and the ripening of karma. Got great karma, you will be born in a wealthy first world family, free of war and conflict. If your past karma sucks, the slums of Mumbai. If you karma really sucks, Douma in Syria or [insert terrestrial hellhole here].

Which is fine except that it ignores the suffering being caused by the current karma of those in the wealthy first world... Of course for somebody in your position, it is to be expected that they would ignore (or be unaware of) that aspect.

Malcolm wrote:

Karma does not work that way. There is no such thing as collective karma. If what you are asserting is correct, then even the poorest humans are complicit in the suffering of all animals.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 6:17 PM

Title: Re: On Buddhism and Nominalism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

All buddhist tenets (Sautrantika on up) apart from Sarvastivada, subscribe to Anya-apoha theory, which is the Buddhist refutation of truly existent universals.

Astus said:

It's not a question if they take those dharmas as empty or not, but whether they are conceived as elements behind conventional appearances. They are considered a background layer, even if there are other layers beyond.

Malcolm wrote:

That does not make Dharmas universals. A universal is cowness, for example.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 6:14 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

PeterC said:

Nowhere in China will you find that, apart perhaps from a small district in the village of Maotai.

Malcolm wrote:

Or the city of Xining, in which I spent many months.

PeterC said:

Only if you are extremely selective about where you wall around there. Ive been to xining several times since my first visit a few decades ago, and though it is far from my favorite city, its really not that bad

Malcolm wrote:

I was all over the city, but mainly near the old university and Tibetan hospital

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 12:34 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Grigoris said:

Yes, I imagine we will. Just that here in Greece we are living the dream to the fullest: as the U$ aircraft carriers that launched the missile attacks refuel and re-supply in American bases in Greek ports, refugees fleeing the bombings arrive on our shores seeking protection. It's a grand situation!

Malcolm wrote:

Let me outline the main difference between Fascist bullshit and Socialist bullshit for you:

Fascist bullshit always runs along the lines of: the Jews, The Mexicans, the Blacks, the [insert foreign bogeyman here] is causing all our problems.

Socialist bullshit always runs along the lines of: The Corporations, The Capitalists, the Man, the US, the Imperialists, the [insert systemic bogeyman here] is causing all our problems.

But its all bullshit because all of this does not involve an understanding of karma.

pothigai said:

Would you also say that liberalism and conservatism are bullshit because they don't involve an understanding of karma?

Malcolm wrote:

Oh absolutely.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 12:34 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In these countries, liquor stores outnumbered grocery stores 30 to 1, similar with the way it is in poorer parts of China today. Why? Drunks are easier to control.

PeterC said:

Nowhere in China will you find that, apart perhaps from a small district in the village of Maotai.

Malcolm wrote:

Or the city of Xining, in which I spent many months.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 7:38 AM

Title: Re: On Buddhism and Nominalism

Content:

MiphamFan said:

What exactly is a "real" number?

I'm still studying discrete mathematics in the context of computer science but I find things such as the set-theoretic definition of numbers strikingly reminiscent and compatible with Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

A real number is by definition something that must be defined on the basis of that fact that it excludes any other quantity. 2 can never be 4, 4 can never be two, or any other number. This accounts for numbers much better than sort platonic absolute number idea.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 6:20 AM

Title: Re: On Buddhism and Nominalism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Only in Sarvastivada.

Astus said:

How so? Who says that conventional phenomena are not based on dharmas?

Malcolm wrote:

All buddhist tenets (Sautrantika on up) apart from Sarvastivada, subscribe to Anya-apoha theory, which is the Buddhist refutation of truly existent universals.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 6:04 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is all just karma and the ripening of karma. Got great karma, you will be born in a wealthy first world family, free of war and conflict. If your past karma sucks, the slums of Mumbai. If you karma really sucks, Douma in Syria or [insert terrestrial hellhole here]. Is it a sentence? No. Is it "fair." No. But karma, while not "fair," is unerring. If one does not cultivate within oneself positive qualities, getting angry at the fact that others do not cater to one's moral outrage at the suffering in the world never earned anyone any merit any where ever. If we painted our political discussions in terms of karma and its ripening, these conversations would be very different, not so much filled with blame of others as sadness that karma is unerring and foolish sentient beings continue to just build more negative karma over time unless they meet the Buddha's path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 5:58 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If America did not provide security for NATO for the past 80 years, ya'll would have been Crimea on steroids back in Stalin's era.

Grigoris said:

Maybe, maybe not. If you travel to former eastern bloc countries like Croatia or the Czech Republic (for example) you may be surprised with what you will see. Not all the former eastern bloc countries turned out like Bulgaria or Albania (which was aligned with China anyway, as was the former Yugoslavia).

Malcolm wrote:

Umm, I know many, many people through the DC who were raised under Communism in the eastern bloc, they all report it was horrible.

In these countries, liquor stores outnumbered grocery stores 30 to 1, similar with the way it is in poorer parts of China today. Why? Drunks are easier to control.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 5:50 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

We will agree to disagree on the value of the US Hegemony in world history.

Grigoris said:

Yes, I imagine we will. Just that here in Greece we are living the dream to the fullest: as the US aircraft carriers that launched the missile attacks refuel and re-supply in American bases in Greek ports, refugees fleeing the bombings arrive on our shores seeking protection. It's a grand situation!

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, Greece needs to get paid too (that is cynicism, in case you don't get it). They are after all part of NATO whether you personally like it or not. On the other hand:
Greece and Turkey Are Inching Toward War:

The relationship between Greece and Turkey has never been easy. The neighboring countries have been at war with each other several times in the 20th century and were close to military conflict over the Greek islet Imia in 1996, before the United States stepped in to avert disaster.

The NATO allies are now at the brink again, goaded by populists on both sides — and this time, Washington is nowhere to be found.

<http://foreignpolicy.com/2018/04/18/greece-and-turkey-are-inching-toward-war/>

And this situation is unfortunately the result of the idiot we have in office in the US.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 5:45 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

We will agree to disagree on the value of the US Hegemony in world history.

Grigoris said:

Yes, I imagine we will. Just that here in Greece we are living the dream to the fullest: as the U$ aircraft carriers that launched the missile attacks refuel and re-supply in American bases in Greek ports, refugees fleeing the bombings arrive on our shores seeking protection. It's a grand situation!

Malcolm wrote:

If America did not provide security for NATO for the past 80 years, ya'll would have been Crimea on steroids back in Stalin's era.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 5:42 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

We will agree to disagree on the value of the US Hegemony in world history.

Grigoris said:

Yes, I imagine we will. Just that here in Greece we are living the dream to the fullest: as the U$ aircraft carriers that launched the missile attacks refuel and re-supply in American bases in Greek ports, refugees fleeing the bombings arrive on our shores seeking protection. It's a grand situation!

Malcolm wrote:

Let me outline the main difference between Fascist bullshit and Socialist bullshit for you:

Fascist bullshit always runs along the lines of: the Jews, The Mexicans, the Blacks, the [insert foreign bogeyman here] is causing all our problems.

Socialist bullshit always runs along the lines of: The Corporations, The Capitalists, the Man, the US, the Imperialists, the [insert systemic bogeyman here] is causing all our problems.

But its all bullshit because all of this does not involve an understanding of karma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 5:35 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Bunch of socialist bullshit.

Grigoris said:

Well that is an intelligent comeback if I have ever seen one. Very similar to the type of response one would expect to receive on the Stormfront site (or any other alt-Right social network).

Talking about socialists: Roosevelt, now there was a socialist.

Malcolm wrote:

Roosevelt was not a socialist per se. He however understood the need for social security, etc., and set up social programs to support the elderly, small farms, etc.

What he did not do was set up a centralized, planned economy, which is characteristic of true (Marxist) Socialist governments in general, a model that has proven to be an utter and total failure.

By socialist bullshit, what I am referring to the kneejerk reaction to paint everything about the US in a negative light. It is characteristic of Socialist Newspapers in this country, who would not last five seconds elsewhere, people like Chomsky, etc. I am happy they voice their perspective because it necessary for them to speak freely so the terrible ideas they sometimes espouse can be torn apart and exposed. The same goes for the right. Sunlight is the best purifier. Fascist and socialist bullshit is all pretty much the same to me.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 5:23 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

A Buddha will never ask animals to be sacrificed.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Ok...why didn't you say this earlier...i would of stopped in my tracks if i knew this.

Malcolm wrote:

One assumes that people are aware that Yoruba, Santeria, Candomble, Voodoo, Afro-Caribbean religions in general, are based on blood sacrifice of animals. It is a major reason that these regions of the world are continually wracked with violence and oppression.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 5:18 AM
Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
This is a bad thing? You are crazier than I thought.

Grigoris said:
You do not think that an organisation that claims to be about freedom and yet was set up by the president of the world's most powerful nation in order to satisfy his political and military agenda is somewhat hypocritical? You do not find that strange at all, and yet you consider me crazy???

US involvement in the European theater of WWII was for imperialist purposes, purposes which the repercussions of which are still being played out in Europe RIGHT NOW and will continue to be played out for some time yet.

Don't be naive Malcolm.

Malcolm wrote:
We will agree to disagree on the value of the US Hegemony in world history.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 5:18 AM
Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
The US is a Republic.

Grigoris said:
Which is just the Latin word for the Greek term Democracy.

Malcolm wrote:
Synchronic definitions are misleading.

Grigoris said:
The press is not free, it sold itself out ages ago. It is a slave to the $, so how can it be free?

Malcolm wrote:
False equivalency. Selling ads to pay for paper, ink, offices and staff =/ compromise.

I have far greater trust in private media like the NYT, Post. etc., than gov. run media like RT, and so on.

YMMV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 5:11 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Grigoris said:

Freedom House was established in 1941 in New York City. Its creation was a result of a merger of two groups that had been formed, with the quiet encouragement of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, to encourage popular support for American involvement in World War II at a time when isolationist sentiments were running high in the United States.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a bad thing? You are crazier than I thought. There is no scenario in which Britain, France and Russia could have fended off the Nazis without American involvement in the war.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 5:04 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Grigoris said:

You don't need to kill journalists in the US, they are silenced via media monopolies.

Malcolm wrote:

This is also total nonsense.

Grigoris said:

Whereas your fetishisation of the constitution is not nonsense? Next thing you are going to do is tell me that the US is a democracy (not a plutocratic oligarchy based on a military imperialism).

Malcolm wrote:

The US is a Republic. As for "empire," one of the reasons we are so bad at it is our free press, a fact that drives Herr Trump crazy. He would shut down the press tomorrow if he thought he could. Frankly, we like the press more than we like guns. Want to really get people out on the streets in the US? Just try limiting freedom of the press. The fact that we value a free press is why all these crazy lunatic conspiracy theorists on both the right and the left are given free reign to air the febrile contents of their Ids. You've never lived in a country with freedom of speech built into the bones of the country. That does not exist in commonwealth countries such as Britain, OZ, NZ, Canada, etc.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 5:01 AM
Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria
Content:

Ogyen said:
And also found this:
https://en.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/List_of_journalists_killed_in_the_United_States

Malcolm wrote:
None however, were killed by the US Gvt. This cannot be said of Russia, etc., where the execution of journalists who oppose the state is the status quo.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 4:46 AM
Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye
Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:
Is that why everyone is so upset.

Malcolm wrote:
No one is upset by you. And you are being entirely too credulous.

Kunga Lhadzom said:
I didn't mean upset by me...I ment upset about this woman & what she is advertising about herself.i don't see it as a new age scam. ...I actually believe this is legit. It took a year to prepare for this.
The photos. ...
Also there will be a documentary about this comming out soon....

I know there are scams like this a dime a dozen...but i feel in my heart this is not a scam....

Malcolm wrote:
KL, the depth of this person's lack of understanding is colossal. She is claiming that a BLOODTHIRSTY, MUNDANE, SAMSARIC WATER SPIRIT IS A BUDDHA. If you don't understand how utterly mistaken this is...and let's not even get into the rest of her so-called "research."

Further, animals are sacrificed to Oshun, water animals in particular. In Candomble, frog, ducks, are offered to her.

In Santeria, castrated goat, hens, pigeons and guinea hen, and pheasants

In Yuruba: Castrated goat, chicken and pigeon.

A Buddha will never ask animals to be sacrificed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 3:56 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The US government does not kill journalists. We actually have a free press. It is built into our constitution. So, that is a clue about whose "lies" one should find more reliable.

Grigoris said:

You don't need to kill journalists in the US, they are silenced via media monopolies.

Malcolm wrote:

This is also total nonsense.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 3:52 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

conebeckham said:

really means nothing, though, unless one is actively engaged in practice using these systems.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Is that why everyone is so upset.

Malcolm wrote:

No one is upset but you. And you are being entirely too credulous.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 1:38 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and the Russian State is so reliable, strong believers in a free press:

A Russian journalist who reported on political scandals linked to President Vladimir Putin's associates and the death of Russian mercenaries in Syria has died in hospital after a mysterious fall from his apartment. CBS News partner network BBC News reports that neighbors found Maxim Borodin badly injured on the ground outside his fifth floor apartment in Yekaterinburg on April 12.

<https://www.cbsnews.com/news/russian-journalist-maxim-borodin-dies-mysterious-fall-yekaterinburg/>

Grigoris said:

CBS news? So it all basically comes down to who's lies you want to believe.

Well I ain't buying either side's lies.

Malcolm wrote:

The US government does not kill journalists. We actually have a free press. It is built into our constitution. So, that is a clue about whose "lies" one should find more reliable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 1:03 AM

Title: Re: On Buddhism and Nominalism

Content:

Astus said:

Buddhism is filled with universals, they are known as dharmas. The dharmas are not considered derivatives of particulars, it's the other way around.

Malcolm wrote:

Only in Sarvastivada.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 12:40 AM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Revolutions, punitive actions, as well as deliberate oppression, only lead one way: to lower realms.

cyril said:

What about the underlying intention? What if one leads a revolution out of genuine love for his suffering fellow men?

"... When I think of all the misfortunes in life that lie in wait for a man, of the fact that a man is so often deprived of all he is most attached to, my thoughts again tell me that in life one has to love with all one's heart and soul that which is not transitory, that which cannot be taken away from a man and thanks to which his attachment to individuals and things becomes possible....Love for suffering, oppressed mankind, the eternal longing in the heart of everyone for beauty and happiness, strength and harmony, urges us to seek a way out and to find salvation here, in life itself, and shows us the way out. "

- fragment from a letter of Felix Dzerzhinsky.

Yup, that Dzerzhinsky. So what about a guy like him who, while definitely blinded by ignorance, is nevertheless driven by a genuine compassion?

Malcolm wrote:

Non-virtuous deeds of voice and body are driven by three things, malice, greed, or ignorance.

As St. Benedict observed, "Hell is full of good intentions."

Often people think they are acting out of compassion, when all they are doing is accumulating causes for birth in lower realms.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 12:37 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Grigoris said:

Everybody involved has a reason to lie.

Theresa May is being taken to task by the opposition in the UK parliament for ordering the attack without getting consent from the Members of Parliament. Seems that her husband is the major stock holder in the arms company that produced the rockets used in the attack and his (hers? their?) stocks jumped through the roof of the exchange following the attack. <https://www.rt.com/uk/424392-may-husbands-capital-group/>

You still want that bridge?

Malcolm wrote:

You already bought it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 19th, 2018 at 12:35 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Grigoris said:

I don't.

Well I have a bridge for sale if you are looking for one.

Just read a news article in the Greek press (sourcing Sveta TV) saying that the Russians have found a chemical weapons laboratory in Douma with ingredients for mustard and chlorine gas. The quoted chemical warfare expert Alexander Rodionof says the laboratory was under rebel control up until the liberation of Douma by Syrian State Forces. <http://tvxs.gr/news/kosmos/apothiki-me-oysies-gia-paraskeyi-ximikon-oplon-entopisan-oi-rosoi-stin-ntoyma>

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and the Russian State is so reliable, strong believers in a free press:

A Russian journalist who reported on political scandals linked to President Vladimir Putin's associates and the death of Russian mercenaries in Syria has died in hospital after a mysterious fall from his apartment. CBS News partner network BBC News reports that neighbors found Maxim Borodin badly injured on the ground outside his fifth floor apartment in Yekaterinburg on April 12.

<https://www.cbsnews.com/news/russian-journalist-maxim-borodin-dies-mysterious-fall-yekaterinburg/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 18th, 2018 at 10:59 PM

Title: Re: Collective karma

Content:

shaunc said:

At the moment in South Africa there's political parties calling for the killing of white people. Considering white South Africa's previous treatment of black people couldn't this be a case of collective karma ripening.

Astus said:

It rather sounds like anger.

"He abused me, he struck me, he overpowered me, he robbed me." Those who harbor such thoughts do not still their hatred.

(<https://www.accesstoinight.org/tipitaka/kn/dhp/dhp.01.budd.html.3>)

Grigoris said:

Indeed. The actions of white people in the past is ripening as anger against them. The anger of the African people in the present will ripen as...

Malcolm wrote:

The anger, desire and ignorance of those people in less fortunate positions in samsara will lead to their lower birth in samsara if they act on it and carry out nonvirtuous deeds. Just as the anger, desire, ignorance of people in more fortunate positions in samsara will likewise lead to their lower birth in samsara. However, the patience, compassion, and wisdom of people in less fortunate positions in samsara will lead to their higher birth in samsara, just as the patience, compassion, and wisdom of people in more fortunate positions in samsara will lead to their higher birth in samsara.

Karma is unerring. While one's birth in more or less fortunate places in samsara is a result of one's past karma, one's future place in samsara is assured by one's actions in this life. Thus, actions due to hatred, desire, and ignorance inevitably take one but one way: down.

Revolutions, punitive actions, as well as deliberate oppression, only lead one way: to lower realms.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 18th, 2018 at 10:40 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Grigoris said:

I find it hard to believe.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 18th, 2018 at 10:05 PM

Title: Re: Help on shamatha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Samadhi/dhyāna is a natural mental factor, we all have it. The problem is that we naturally allow this mental factor to rest on afflictive objects such as HBO, books, video games, etc.

Śamatha practice is the discipline of harnessing our natural predisposition for concentration, and shifting it from afflictive conditioned phenomena to nonafflictive conditioned phenomena, i.e., the phenomena of the path. We do this in order to create a well tilled field for the growth of vipaśyāna. Śamatha ultimately allows us to have mental stability and suppresses afflictive mental factors so that we may eventually give rise to authentic insight into the nature of reality. While it is possible to have vipaśyāna without cultivating śamatha, it is typically quite unstable and lacks the power to effectively eradicate afflictive patterning from our minds. Therefore, the basis of all practice in Buddhadharma, from Abhidharma to the Great Perfection, is the cultivation of śamatha as a preliminary practice for germination of vipaśyāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 18th, 2018 at 8:36 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

she has no understanding at all of what Tibetan Buddhism is

Kunga Lhadzom said:

This is all new to her...she is learning ?

Malcolm wrote:

How can an emanation of a Buddha be held to be learning what Buddhism is?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 18th, 2018 at 5:56 AM

Title: Re: 'Dharmas do not arise'

Content:

Wayfarer said:

By the way - here's a tip for those of European background with some knowledge of the Western philosophical tradition - T R V Murti, The Central Philosophy of Buddhism. Murti was an Indian scholar trained in Western philosophy. This book was published in the nineteen fifties but in my opinion is an excellent book although somewhat deprecated by current Buddhist scholarship. But it was a formative book for my spiritual development, and also my first encounter with Kant.

boundless said:

Hello again,

thank you for the suggestion!

Why it is criticized by current scholarship?

Malcolm wrote:

Murti mistook Madhyamaka for a form of Kantian Idealism, rather than the austere nominalism which in fact it is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 18th, 2018 at 5:25 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

conebeckham said:

I find this whole idea of the recognition of Yeye to be contrived--I'll allow that there may be good motivations, perhaps, but in the end so much of this is just speculative and "wrong." I mean, really, "dreams coinciding"---this sort of thing is easily fabricated, and impossible to objectively ascertain. It tests credulity.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Yet.. SHE had the KARMA to meet him, and discuss their dreamsand HE was convinced enough that SHE IS THE emanation of Mamaki...and took ONE year to prepare for this elaborate thing....don't you think something could have or would have stopped this if it wasn't valid ? Do you think the Oracle of Tibet is ignorant ?

Malcolm wrote:

Ummm, there is only one person reporting this, herself, and given her other statements online which clearly show she has no understanding at all of what Tibetan Buddhism is and what "emanation" means...well, you put two and two together. After all, what do we know, we are just a bunch of white colonial oppressors trying to keep the indigenous people down...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 18th, 2018 at 5:23 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Also did it ever occur to you that we are intoxicated with the thinking, culture and religion of the indigenous people of Tibet ?

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhadharma is a universal religion, and it certainly is not indigenous to Tibet. It was important from India.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 18th, 2018 at 1:57 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Indigenous" people use cars, plastic, etc., at basically the same rate every one else does.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Yeah, but before they were influenced, corrupted, and CONDITIONED by Western modernization.....they were living more harmonious with the earth.....

Malcolm wrote:

So were we.

Do you want to know why there is a Sahara desert. Humans made it from grazing goats. You want to know where all the megafauna in N. America went, they were killed off thousands of years ago by "native" Americans.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 18th, 2018 at 1:54 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Grigoris said:

Do you ever answer questions?

Malcolm wrote:

What's the fun in that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 18th, 2018 at 1:53 AM

Title: Re: Academic learning is not directly proportional to realization

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Serious much?

Astus said:

A monk asked, "What do you say about finding meaning in speech?"

Baofu said, "What speech is that?"

The monk looked down and didn't answer.

Baofu said, "The sword of function is like lightning. Thinking about it is futile!"

(Zen's Chinese Heritage, p 302)

Malcolm wrote:

Definitely too serious.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 18th, 2018 at 1:47 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You realize that all human beings are "indigenous" to the earth, right? People everywhere are the same: driven by desire, hatred, and ignorance.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

What I'm trying to say is....it's modern man, that has wrecked the Earth with his advanced technology and industrialization...people that respect the earth and live closer to it ...have more respect and damage it less....

Ask any indigenous shaman.....i'm sure you have known a few....

Malcolm wrote:

"Indigenous" people use cars, plastic, etc., at basically the same rate every one else does.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 18th, 2018 at 1:29 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Is there an echo in here?

dzogchungpa said:

More like a mirror, friend. Have to run.

Malcolm wrote:

You should find a better mirror, one that isn't damaged.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 18th, 2018 at 1:28 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

PeterC said:

. If I were a climate scientist, I would probably be a bit upset that there are people out there who think that the self-appointed goddess of whatever's dream is more valuable than their years of research.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

The indigenous people of the Earth are not the destroyers of it.....only the so called "civilized ", modern society..... with all its scientists, etc., that care more about politics and prestige ...

Malcolm wrote:

You realize that all human beings are "indigenous" to the earth, right? People everywhere are the same: driven by desire, hatred, and ignorance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 18th, 2018 at 12:58 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Dude, you are, like, totally conditioning me.

Malcolm wrote:

How so?

dzogchungpa said:
Serious much?

Malcolm wrote:
Is there an echo in here?

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, April 18th, 2018 at 12:48 AM
Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye
Content:

dzogchungpa said:
I don't know, but a serious response to such a question would require definitions of, e.g., 'manifest', 'trance medium' etc. I can imagine there might be a good reason to speak that way at times, though.

Malcolm wrote:
Serious responses don't seem to be part of your repertoire these days.

dzogchungpa said:
Dude, you are, like, totally conditioning me.

Malcolm wrote:
How so?

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, April 18th, 2018 at 12:40 AM
Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye
Content:

dzogchungpa said:
Mamaki is a symbol representing the purity or, dare I say it, sacredness of water so, no.

Malcolm wrote:
Do symbols, let alone buddhas, manifest through trance mediums?

dzogchungpa said:

I don't know, but a serious response to such a question would require definitions of, e.g., 'manifest', 'trance medium' etc. I can imagine there might be a good reason to speak that way at times, though.

Malcolm wrote:

Serious responses don't seem to be part of your repertoire these days.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 18th, 2018 at 12:38 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

People are constantly having dreams of cataclysms.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Yes but their dreams MATCHED PERFECTLY IN THE SAME DETAILS.....like twin dreams....

Malcolm wrote:

You are free to attach your beliefs to whatever people and ideas you like. Just don't expect others to grant them the same credulity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 18th, 2018 at 12:16 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Well..I think it's pretty AUSPICIOUS , that they BOTH HAD THE SAME DREAMat the same time or within days.....

Malcolm wrote:

People are constantly having dreams of cataclysms. I think it is a little late for these guys:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 18th, 2018 at 12:13 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

She is clearly not a Buddhist.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Is Mamaki a Buddhist ?

dzogchungpa said:

Mamaki is a symbol representing the purity or, dare I say it, sacredness of water so, no.

Malcolm wrote:

Do symbols, let alone buddhas, manifest through trance mediums?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 17th, 2018 at 11:45 PM

Title: Re: Academic learning is not directly proportional to realization

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If that is the case, than you and I have been found out for the frauds that we are.

Astus said:

Quotes are meant to lend credibility to the content, thus avoiding the misperception of being considered the source. It is also standard academic (and Buddhist) procedure.

E.g. Shinran's Kyogyoshinsho is like 90% quotes. Therefore I can keep drinking Coke, etc., without worrying about what I share on FB.

Malcolm wrote:

Serious much?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 17th, 2018 at 9:21 PM

Title: Re: Academic learning is not directly proportional to realization

Content:

Ogyen said:

The point is to not confuse academic learning for realization, which happens a lot.

Malcolm wrote:

people read some eloquent words and think the person who wrote them is a great realizer

Astus said:

It is just forgetting not to rely on the person but rely on the teaching. A common mistake. On the other hand:

'It's through discussion that a person's discernment may be known, and then only after a long period, not a short period; by one who is attentive, not by one who is inattentive; by one who is discerning, not by one who is not discerning'

(<https://www.accesstoinsight.org/tipitaka/an/an04/an04.192.than.html>)

Malcolm wrote:

If that is the case, than you and I have been found out for the frauds that we are.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 17th, 2018 at 9:14 PM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Have at it Yeshe. Save the world. As far as the Aro thing goes, my story had exactly zero effect on anyone. And no matter what one thinks of Chogyam, in general, Aro students are decent folks, more like creative anachronism enthusiasts than a cult, like NKT.

Mantrik said:

Oh, I think you underestimate.....I learned a lot about Aro, for example the Dudjom link, and it certainly changed my view to a more positive one, not because of 'conditioning' but simply because of the new information.

The same would be true here. I still ask of anyone knows why the Kuten performed this odd ritual, if the Lama really is what she says she is, etc. because that information will help people decide whether to get involved with them. I think that is something DW does quite well.

It's the old wear a shoe and don't try and cover the world with leather principle, for sure, but it doesn't hurt to help a few other people find a good pair of shoes or avoid using ones with no soles.

Malcolm wrote:

She is clearly not a Buddhist. This will be obvious to anyone within 5 seconds. I suspect that the Kuten was just involved trance medium diplomacy. Probably has no idea about what she will do with any of this at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 17th, 2018 at 7:13 PM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Aren't you conditioning Mantrik by saying this?

Malcolm wrote:

He is quite free to do as he wishes. What I am referring to is the inevitable campaign to route out people of whom we disapprove. If I was into that, I would start with you. But, then, who would post irrelevancies and cute nothings to challenge our patience?

Mantrik said:

I don't believe anyone is being conditioned by being presented with facts, in this case that the claims being made show little understanding of Vajrayana. I don't think it is conditioning anyone to ask why a Kuten would get involved or indeed a 3 year retreat Lama with decades of Vajrayana practice. That is not a witch hunt, and on DW I think one of the useful functions members can perform is to point out uncomfortable truths. As you say, people can do as they wish, but many do so having been better informed from reading DW discussions.

I used to 'condition' my hands by punching straw and concrete as a kid, from 'Teach Yourself Karate' (Bruce Tegner?). It would have been better to have a good teacher and guidance to 'condition' my mind. Sometimes, it is a bit like that here, as we see people engaged in things which are pointless, painful or harmful.... Helping them reach a point where they can make a more informed decision is not 'conditioning' them, except to the extent that anyone may read anything and be affected by it. Hopefully, some of the threads here are useful in informing us all, as with the Aro g'Ter one, where your own input was extensive and very useful in enabling those interested to form their own views.

Malcolm wrote:

Have at it Yeshe. Save the world. As far as the Aro thing goes, my story had exactly zero effect on anyone. And no matter what one thinks of Chogyam, in general, Aro students are decent folks, more like creative anachronism enthusiasts than a cult, like NKT.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 17th, 2018 at 7:12 PM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Sonam Wangchug said:

A hot mess.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed, however, there is no world in which a campaign to inform everyone she is suffering from severe misconceptions will have any effect on anyone who has the (sad) karma to wind up being her student.

And, Dorje Drakden may be engaged in bringing Oshun to heel. After all, even though Pehar was tamed by Guru P, it took many successive episodes of taming by the mahāisiddhas of Tibet to fully bring him to heel as well.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 17th, 2018 at 7:06 PM

Title: Re: Academic learning is not directly proportional to realization

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, people read some eloquent words and think the person who wrote them is a great realizer, when what latter really do when not engaged in logorrhea is smoking butts, eating junk food, drinking Coke (cause it's the real thing), and chasing tail.

Grigoris said:

And what exactly is wrong with this sort of behaviour? This was a path for some Mahasiddhas.

Malcolm wrote:

Are you accusing mahāsiddhas of engaging in empty logorrhea? How dare you. Incidentally, engaging in the other behaviors means mahāsiddhas have no use for path any longer.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 17th, 2018 at 7:05 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Aren't you conditioning Mantrik by saying this?

Malcolm wrote:

He is quite free to do as he wishes. What I am referring to is the inevitable campaign to route out people of whom we disapprove. If I was into that, I would start with you. But, then, who would post irrelevancies and cute nothings to challenge our patience?

dzogchungpa said:

Hey, now you're conditioning me!

Malcolm wrote:

That is not possible, you are like the Id of Dharmawheel gone amuck.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 17th, 2018 at 6:51 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Mantrik said:

What on earth are the Nechung Kuten and a supposedly experienced Lama both doing then?

Either they know this is nonsense and are supporting it or, following your point, they don't know enough about TB to know it is nonsense. The third option is that the Kuten was a bit casual about such things, and the Lama deluded or willing to exploit the new age spiritual marketplace this way. Which version do you favour?

Either way, I'm not sure being gentle is going to eradicate the exploitation of saviour-seeking new agers.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not our job to condition other people.

dzogchungpa said:

Aren't you conditioning Mantrik by saying this?

Malcolm wrote:

He is quite free to do as he wishes. What I am referring to is the inevitable campaign to route out people of whom we disapprove. If I was into that, I would start with you. But, then, who would post irrelevancies and cute nothings to challenge our patience?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 17th, 2018 at 6:08 AM

Title: Re: Academic learning is not directly proportional to realization

Content:

Ogyen said:

You can learn from anything. The point is NOT how you learn OR that academic discussion is useless. The point is to not confuse academic learning for realization, which happens a lot.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, people read some eloquent words and think the person who wrote them is a great realizer, when what latter really do when not engaged in logorrhea is smoking butts, eating junk food, drinking Coke (cause it's the real thing), and chasing tail.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 17th, 2018 at 5:40 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

PSM said:

People might find the info on this site useful for context:

<https://wikispooks.com/wiki/Syria>

Whatever actually is going on over in Syria, it's obviously being used as a chessboard by many actors.

Malcolm wrote:

A nice list of unsound, conspiracy-theory minded crapola.

US Foreign Policy incompetence is not a conspiracy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 17th, 2018 at 5:30 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I doubt this is a fabrication, and frankly, I do not suspect the people involved of running a con. Their motivation seems sincere. They just know very little about the trance medium tradition in Tibet, they know almost nothing of Tibetan Buddhism in general, and they certainly do not understand the concept of worldly entities being emanations, or messengers, or servants, of awakened beings. So, with that in mind, we should be a little gentle with these people.

Mantrik said:

What on earth are the Nechung Kuten and a supposedly experienced Lama both doing then?

Either they know this is nonsense and are supporting it or, following your point, they don't know enough about TB to know it is nonsense. The third option is that the Kuten was a bit casual about such things, and the Lama deluded or willing to exploit the new age spiritual marketplace this way. Which version do you favour?

Either way, I'm not sure being gentle is going to eradicate the exploitation of saviour-seeking new agers.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not our job to condition other people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 17th, 2018 at 5:12 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Chemical Weapons Experts Blocked From Site of Syria Attack, Officials Say

LONDON — Western officials accused Syria and Russia on Monday of preventing weapons inspectors from reaching the site of a suspected chemical attack by the Syrian government that led to airstrikes by the United States and its allies over the weekend.

Inspectors from the Organization for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons arrived in Syria on Saturday, but two days later, they still had not reached Douma, the Damascus suburb where about 70 people were killed in the attack on April 7. Syrian and Russian forces have captured the area from rebels.

The inspectors are going to the scene to take samples and interview people, but “they are currently being prevented from doing so by the regime and the Russians,” Prime Minister Theresa May of Britain said in Parliament on Monday afternoon.

Even as the war in Syria exacts a fearful toll on the ground, discussion of the suspected chemical attack, like so much of the international posturing about the war, was wrapped in a fog of contradiction and confusion. Nations made charges and countercharges, claiming to have damning but secret evidence about each other’s conduct, with Russia in particular spinning an array of theories of varying degrees of plausibility.

Syrian and Russian officials have told the O.P.C.W. team “that there were still pending security issues to be worked out before any deployment could take place,” Ahmet Uzumcu, the organization’s director general, told its executive council on Monday. The meeting was held in private, but the organization released the prepared statements of Mr. Uzumcu and some other officials.

The British delegation to the organization wrote on Twitter: “Russia & Syria have not yet allowed access to Douma. Unfettered access essential. Russia & Syria must cooperate.” Other Western diplomats confirmed that Syria and Russia were impeding the team.

Senior Russian diplomats said it was the United Nations, not Syria or Russia, that had prevented inspectors from entering Douma. “The problem was the absence of the U.N. Secretariat security department’s approval for O.P.C.W. experts to visit Douma,” Sergei A. Ryabkov, deputy foreign minister of Russia, told reporters, according to the news agency Interfax.

A spokesman for the United Nations, Stéphane Dujarric, disputed the Russian explanation. “The U.N. has given them all the necessary clearances,” he said by telephone. “We’re supporting the team as much as we can.”

Later at his regular noon briefing, Mr. Dujarric said of the O.P.C.W. experts: “We’ve not denied them any sort of clearance.”

Mr. Dujarric declined to say whether Secretary General António Guterres would demand that Russia and Syria provide the experts with access to the Douma site. But the spokesman said Mr. Guterres wanted the investigation to move forward “so we can have a full picture of all the facts.”

The O.P.C.W. declined to comment, and did not even say whether its inspectors had reached Douma, saying in a statement, “We are unable to share operational details.”

The United States ambassador to the organization said at the meeting on Monday that Russia could be trying to conceal evidence of chemical weapons.

“It is our understanding the Russians may have visited the attack site,” the ambassador, Kenneth D. Ward, said. “We are concerned they may have tampered with it with the intent of thwarting the efforts of the O.P.C.W. fact-finding mission to conduct an effective investigation.”

In an interview with the BBC, Sergey V. Lavrov, the Russian foreign minister, said, “I can guarantee that Russia has not tampered with the site.”

The United States and its allies Britain and France used missiles on Saturday to strike targets in Syria that they said had been involved in producing chemical weapons, which President Bashar al-Assad’s government denies having used.

Even before the O.P.C.W. inspectors arrived in Syria, the Western allies said they had ample evidence that the country had dropped a chemical agent on Douma, and that it had used chemical weapons many times during the seven-year civil war.

East-West tensions have been high since Britain accused Russia of using a powerful nerve agent to poison a Russian former spy living in England and his daughter. The Kremlin has denied the accusation, which set off the expulsion of hundreds of diplomats and a series of economic measures against Russia.

“It is the style of today’s London to blame Moscow for everything and ascribe certain actions to which we bear no relation whatsoever,” Mr. Ryabkov said.

Russian and Syrian officials have suggested that the chemical attack in Douma never occurred, or that it was staged by rebel forces or Western powers as an excuse for attacking Syria. Mr. Lavrov accused Britain of playing a part in the alleged ruse.

The Syrian military, with help from its Russian and Iranian allies, this month retook control of eastern Ghouta, a suburban area that was the last major rebel-held enclave near Damascus. Douma was the last part of the region to fall."

<https://www.nytimes.com/2018/04/16/world/middleeast/syria-douma-chemical-attack.html?smid=fb-nytimes&smtyp=cur>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 17th, 2018 at 1:20 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, Stalin traded Greece to Churchill in return for Romania in 1944.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Percentages_agreement

Grigoris said:

On paper, yes.

Malcolm wrote:

My point was that Greece, like the rest of eastern Europe and the Balkans, were like cards to be traded.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 17th, 2018 at 12:51 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Communists and Fascists in the end amount to the same thing: concentration camps and mass killings. Don't forget, Stalin abandoned Greece.

Grigoris said:

I can't say for sure if this is true. You see: Communists did not occupy Greece, execute tens of thousands of people, deport the vast majority of the Jewish population to death camps and purposefully starve tens of thousands of the non-combatant population to death. The Nazis did. I don't know if the Communists would have done this had they gained power, but I know the Nazis did. So...

And Stalin did not abandon Greece. The Greek Communist Party was being supplied with weapons and support via Yugoslavia, when Tito broke off ties with the USSR and sided with Mao, the supply route through Yugoslavia was cut off. You could ask: Why did they not continue to supply the Greek Communist Party through Bulgaria? Well, because Bulgaria and Greece were involved in a war with each other since Greece was expelling the Bulgarian Nazi collaborationist government from Greek territories. Don't forget that Bulgaria did not join the Eastern Bloc until after 1946. We also have to remember that Bulgaria and Russia never got on well, not even before the East-West divide, which is why they sided with Germany in both World Wars. And Greece and Bulgaria had been at conflict since the collapse of the Ottoman Empire. By the time Stalin sold out Greece, the situation was beyond redemption anyway.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, Stalin traded Greece to Churchill in return for Romania in 1944.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Percentages_agreement

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 17th, 2018 at 12:04 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The Allies, Britain specifically, propped up a Hard Right government in Greece following WWII, in the early days of the first Cold War (we are in a second, now).

Grigoris said:

Hard right? That is an understatement! A government composed of Nazi collaborators! The British then brought in a Bavarian based royal family and ruled Greece via them for 3 years, before the far-right (Amerikan backed) military junta took over power for 6 years. Let us also not forget Britain's role in the invasion and (ongoing) partition of Cyprus.

And even before all of this there was the Italian Fascist attempted invasion and occupation (finally pulled off with help from their friends the German Nazis). And the German Nazi occupation which (together with the Italians and Bulgarians) lead to the largest number of Greek deaths in modern history (barring the liberation from the Ottoman Empire and the subsequent displacement of Greeks from Asia Minor): around 70,000 people were executed. That figure does not include the number of Greeks that died during the enforced starvation during the occupation (around 50,000 dead).

As you can see, the only major European power that Greece does not have a (direct) issue with is France.

Malcolm wrote:

Communists and Fascists in the end amount to the same thing: concentration camps and mass killings. Don't forget, Stalin abandoned Greece.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 16th, 2018 at 11:27 PM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

You'd think this event would also be publicised in prominent Tibetan news papers, websites, etc. Also Indian news sources....

I haven't investigated that yet..but it would of popped up in other Google searches. ...

conebeckham said:

Unless it's total and complete fabrication, in which case legit media would steer clear.

Malcolm wrote:

I doubt this is a fabrication, and frankly, I do not suspect the people involved of running a con. Their motivation seems sincere. They just know very little about the trance medium tradition in Tibet, they know almost nothing of Tibetan Buddhism in general, and they certainly do not understand the concept of worldly entities being emanations, or messengers, or servants, of awakened beings. So, with that in mind, we should be a little gentle with these people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 16th, 2018 at 8:10 PM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed the Buddha gives teachings in three ways: directly with his own voice, by blessing, or by permission.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Thank you for your reply. I personally do not understand why oracles are necessary, especially if the majority of beings who speak through them are worldly beings. Why seek the advice of a worldly being? It is better to rely upon the Three Jewels and upon wisdom.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not merely a majority, all entities who speak through mediums are worldly beings. Buddhas have no need of depending on trance mediums.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 16th, 2018 at 7:40 PM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Kaung said:

I wouldn't regard someone posting such a thing as being knowledgeable in vajrayana. Now, I'm very convinced that she's just part of that new age family who wants to use vajrayana for their own ends.

cyril said:

Oh, c'mon, they have Dorje Legba in Vajrayana and they have Papa Legba in Voodoo; can't you see the connection?

PeterC said:

Absolutely. And the connections go further: Sekhmet is clearly the same as Simhamukha, both are connected to Lions and start with the letter S. Thoth is connected with scribes, and he holds a staff that might from the right angle look a bit like a weapon, similar to a sword perhaps, so obviously he's Manjushri. Before we know it we will have discovered an entire Afro-Indo-Tibetan pantheon!

Malcolm wrote:

New addition to Liber 777. More seriously, though, this kind of syncretism, (aka cultural appropriation) is to be expected. The Tibetans did it too, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 16th, 2018 at 7:15 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Perhaps, but I do hope that we can keep arguing about the oracle stuff.

Malcolm wrote:

Predicted response: Sherab will argue that precedence is not sufficiently reasonable.....

Sherab said:

This is really uncalled for since I have already stated that it is both unskillful and unnecessary for a Buddha to manifest through a medium. But that does not imply that the Buddha does not have the power to manifest through a medium. The absence of evidence of a Buddha manifesting through a medium can support the claim that such a manifestation would be unskillful and unnecessary but it does not support the claim that the Buddha does not have the power to manifest through a medium.

Malcolm wrote:

In other words, as I predicted, you are arguing that precedence is not sufficiently reasonable to eliminate the claim the Buddha can speak through a trance medium. Sigh.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 16th, 2018 at 7:11 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Sherab said:

So how does that makes it impossible for a Buddha to manifest specifically through a medium since having no intentions does not preclude the Buddha from manifesting as as anything anyway.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure it does, a buddha cannot manifest as a mara, for example. All the activities of a buddha are determined by a buddha's prior path aspirations.

Sherab said:

Are you implying that a Buddha MUST BE manifesting as a mara if he manifests through a medium?

Are you also implying that there is no possibility for the Buddha to manifest as a mara in specific instances that are consistent with the Buddha's prior path aspirations?

Malcolm wrote:

You really do have the strangest way of putting things. How can a Buddha manifest as the personification of delusion and self-grasping? As a general rule, anything or person that offers a distraction from the three trainings of the path— discipline (śīla), one-pointed concentration (samadhi), and wisdom (prajñā) — can also be regarded as a personification of Mara. Thus, how can a buddha offer distractions from the path of awakening? For what possible reason?

Any entity which manifests through a trance medium and claims to be either a buddha or an āryabodhisattva is necessarily a māra, and further, anyone who claims an entity who manifests through a trance medium is a buddha or āryabodhisattva is either mistaken due to ignorance or is deluded.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 16th, 2018 at 5:25 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Snowbear said:

@Grigoris, It sounds like Greeks are tolerant of US-EU only out of practical realities. Why are Greeks ambivalent towards the US-EU?

Malcolm wrote:

The Allies, Britain specifically, propped up a Hard Right government in Greece following WWII, in the early days of the first Cold War (we are in a second, now).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 16th, 2018 at 5:16 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

dzogchungpa said:
BTW, it looks like this page has been taken down.

Malcolm wrote:
That was wise of them.

dzogchungpa said:
Perhaps, but I do hope that we can keep arguing about the oracle stuff.

Malcolm wrote:
Predicted response: Sherab will argue that precedence is not sufficiently reasonable.

Tsongkhapa fan will bring up the fact that Tsongkhapa seems to have used two mediums in his career: a Nyingmapa Lama through whom he had a conversation with Vajrapani to remove his doubts about Dzogchen teachings; and Lama Umapa, through whom he had conversations with Mañjuśrī and clarified his doubts about Madhyamaka. Frankly, in my reading of these accounts, it actually appears that it was on account of Tsongkhapa's own pure vision that he perceived these masters as Vajrapani and Mañjuśrī, since the former was someone whose main practice was Vajrapani Maṇḍalacakra, and the latter was someone whose main practice was Vajrabhairava, respectively. However, the way that Khedrupje composed the secret bio of Tsongkhapa, it is made to appear as if Tsongkhapa relied on Umapa as a sku rten, a trance medium, and this is surely a mistake. There is no fault at all in having pure vision of one's master as this bodhisattva or that, or even as Buddha Vajradhara in person. But there is a very great fault in suggesting that buddhas and bodhisattvas on the stages resort to trance mediums to speak the Dharma.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, April 16th, 2018 at 4:56 AM
Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye
Content:
dzogchungpa said:
This is interesting:
<https://www.vajrayanaworld.com/long-bits/nechung-oracle-recognizes-yeye-omileye>

BTW, it looks like this page has been taken down.

Malcolm wrote:
That was wise of them.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, April 16th, 2018 at 4:50 AM
Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye
Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Sure it does, a buddha cannot manifest as a mara, for example. All the activities of a buddha are determined by a buddha's prior path aspirations.

cyril said:

I imagine that, if Buddhas emanate into the preta realm, they would do so in a form able to communicate Dharma to the pretas. I therefore assume that such a preta nirmanakaya would actually manifest as a preta just like Buddhas manifested in the human realm in the form of human nirmanakayas. I also imagine that such a preta nirmanakaya would possess all the physical abilities of a regular, non-enlightened preta in the same way Sakyamuni, Padmasambhava, Garab Dorje were capable of doing all the normal physical actions of a non-enlightened human being. Now, if this line of reasoning is correct, it follows that a preta nirmanakaya should also be able to possess mediums and oracles, just like non-enlightened spirits do. But since the general consensus is that such thing does not happen, I wonder what is wrong with the reasoning above.

Malcolm wrote:

Jvalamukha teaches the Dharma to pretas in their own form. Śākyamuni Buddha teaches Dharma to humans in their own form, etc. Also, this doctrine is very specific to the mandala of peaceful and wrathful deities, and should not be confused with the Buddha's actual career. The Buddha himself, during his sojourn in this world, appeared in the hell realms to beings there, and also the deva realms to the beings there.

As mentioned above, the mode of teachings of the Buddha has been ascertained to be three and three only: the vacana of his own voice, blessed vacana, and permitted vacana, and no fourth kind has ever been mentioned or ascertained such as vacana through trance mediums, channelers, tarot cards, seances, and so on. This is distinct from the Tibetan custom of the using trance mediums of reliable, mundane entities such as Nechung, Tseringma, and so on for oracular predictions about worldly matters.

The invocation of āryas such as Mañjuśrī, Śrī Devi, and so on for divinations must be understood as an invocation of their blessing, not their presence through mediums — thus it is completely different and must not be confused with the possession of trance mediums by worldly spirits.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, April 16th, 2018 at 4:44 AM
Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye
Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

Can someone explain coherently and with valid reasons why a Buddha cannot speak through another living being?

There is the classic example of the Heart Sutra being delivered by Buddha through Avalokiteshvara, for example. This is an example of Guru Yoga.

If a worldly spirit can communicate through an oracle - in other words, if such a spirit can enter their body - then it goes without saying that Buddhas can do so too. Buddhas are not limited beings, their speech has extraordinary qualities that cannot be understood by ordinary beings. Their words can be heard as the sound of the wind through trees, from Buddha's ushnisha and in the Pure Land, even the birds make the sound of Dharma, so why isn't it possible for a Buddha to communicate through another living being?

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed the Buddha gives teachings in three ways: directly with his own voice, by blessing, or by permission.

However, there isn't a single example in the sūtras or tantras where the Buddha gives teachings by literally possessing and then speaking through the body of another being in the manner of being a channelled entity. Further, these three modes of teaching were confined to the duration during which the Buddha was physically present in his nirmanakāya in this world, 2500 years ago. For this reason, apart from teachings of the sambhogkāya revealed by the mahāsiddhas of India and Tibet, there have been no new Dharmas in the world since then.

You might suppose, "In the world other buddhas have arisen, albeit not supreme nirmanakāyas, what is to prevent them from possessing the bodies of others and speaking through them."

1) No more than three modes of the Buddha's granting teachings have been identified in the sūtras by the paṇḍitas of India and Tibet. 2) There is no example in sūtra or tantra of such an occurrence, in other words, there is not a single example of Buddha giving teachings through a medium (sku rten). 3) Since the Buddha's nirmanakāya is no longer present in the world, also the three kinds of teachings are complete. 4) Among the beings the Buddha blessed or permitted to teach Dharma, it is only āryaśrāvakas and āryabodhisattvas who received such blessing or permission. 5) By inference, worldly devas and humans are not proper vehicles to be given permission to speak for the Buddha via blessing and permission since there is no example of Buddha giving such worldly people blessing or permission to speak for him. 6) Māra can appear in any guise, including that of a buddha or a bodhisattva, so it is unsound to consider the utterances of trance mediums to be valid Dharma. How is one to determine whether such teachings have a valid source or not? We have already seen the negative effects in Tibet of mistaking worldly entities who possess mediums as buddhas.

Therefore, the idea that buddhas can speak through trance mediums must be utterly rejected both because it is an irrational supposition and because if it is accepted that such a phenomena is valid, many distorted teachings will enter the world, as is already the case with respect to those insufficiently wise to avoid such spurious teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 16th, 2018 at 1:24 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

Queen Bey is not my bag. I have issues with her being equated to a modern day Angela Davis.

Malcolm wrote:

Only posted for the Oshun relevance. I prefer much Bonobo, and anonymous ambient/dub/electronica in general. But then, I have terrible taste in music.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 15th, 2018 at 11:49 PM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

"Venerable Yeye Omileye She is a model of love and compassion who works tirelessly to alleviate the suffering of others and restore balance and harmony with our Mother Earth. She is a living Oracle and Emanation of Mamaki, first Tibetan Water Goddess and Water Female Buddha in modern history."

She really is promoting herself. At first I thought maybe it's a good thing because she could introduce Vajrayana Buddhism to the African Americans, but it looks to me like this is such a misrepresentation, it will do more harm than good.

Malcolm wrote:

She really has a misunderstanding.

TharpaChodron said:

And that Beyonce as Oshun, ugh. Beyonce's message to girls as power= violence, vanity, destruction, I think it's grotesque.

Malcolm wrote:

Interesting take.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 15th, 2018 at 9:34 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It has to do with mustard gas in WWI and Zyklon B in WWII, etc.

Grigoris said:

Still doesn't make sense though. Killing people is killing them...

Malcolm wrote:

War has it's own insane logic, indeed, and you're right, it does not make sense.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 15th, 2018 at 7:42 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Ogyen said:

This was made a month and a half ago...

It has subtitles in English.

I speak French fluently the subtitles don't do his speech justice.

Malcolm wrote:

BTW, this person is part of the Far-Right in France:

<https://www.nouvelobs.com/rue89/rue89-sur-les-reseaux/20161215.RUE6000/dans-sa-nouvelle-vie-pierre-le-corf-defend-le-regime-syrien-sur-facebook.html>

He is closely associated with Benjamin Blanchard and Far-right Christians in France:

<http://civilsociety-centre.org/paper/france-and-eastern-christians-beneath-controversial-mobilisation>

It is basically right wing agitprop. That being said, there is bloodshed on all sides.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 15th, 2018 at 7:30 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

...permit the use of chemical or biological agents on people.

Grigoris said:

I always find this sort of reasoning strange. It's okay to shoot people, bomb them (or generally just blow them up using various devices) but it's just not on to gas them, or use diseases to kill them.

Just not sporting, really!

Malcolm wrote:

It has to do with mustard gas in WWI and Zyklon B in WWII, etc. Just for the record, I am against bombing sentient beings, shooting them or otherwise causing their death or injury in war or for any other reason. But I don't run the world.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 15th, 2018 at 7:30 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Allied fecklessness aside, the international community cannot standby and permit the use of chemical or biological agents on people.

Grigoris said:

There was an official investigation into the presence and use of chemical weapons happening, nice of the allies to destroy the evidence. Fits their agenda just fine...

Malcolm wrote:

I think it is demonstrable that Assad was gassing his own people. Just how much evidence does one need?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 15th, 2018 at 7:00 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Allied fecklessness aside, the international community cannot standby and permit the use of chemical or biological agents on people.

PeterC said:

Completely agree - their banning has been one of the few enduring successes of jus in bello. Though I'm certain that that was not why Trump chose to attack at this point.

Malcolm wrote:

He didn't choose anything, the putz -- this was pure Mattis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 15th, 2018 at 6:18 PM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Sherab said:

Why?

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhas have no intentions.

Sherab said:

So how does that makes it impossible for a Buddha to manifest specifically through a medium since having no intentions does not preclude the Buddha from manifesting as anything anyway.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure it does, a buddha cannot manifest as a mara, for example. All the activities of a buddha are determined by a buddha's prior path aspirations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 15th, 2018 at 6:11 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Grigoris said:

Assad and the Kurdish forces eliminated ISIS, not the West. Actually, except for throwing some money and guns at the conservative Kurdish forces of northern Iraq the West has done nothing for the people fighting ISIS in Syria. As a matter of fact they have given free licence to NATO backed Turkish forces (and Islamist militias) to attack and destroy the very forces responsible for driving ISIS out of north Syria (theYPG and PKK).

As for France: you do know they will be replacing the U$ in Manjib, right? So the "no interest in invading" trope is pretty ragged.

Malcolm wrote:

Iraqi Forces were led by US and other NATO advisors the whole time and still are. We don't want to have a standing army in the Mideast anymore, and have not had one there since 2014. As for pipeline conspiracy theories and so, well. And, we don't want a hot war with Russia.

PeterC said:

The underlying issue - well, one of the many underlying issue - is that for decades, the loosely-defined 'coalition' hasn't had a clear, consistently-pursued strategy that lasted more than a few months. This goes back at least as far as GHB's bait-and-switch in 1991 with the Iraqis, but frankly that was just the continuation of a pattern of behavior dating back to before WWII. US/UK/EU governments have been consistently unable to decide what they want, partly because they are politicians and their voters have never bothered to understand the situation enough to decide what they want. This is never going to change. We at least know what 45 wants, which is a new shiny little distraction from the dumpster fire which is his domestic administration. But he's not really that much worse than his predecessors. One doesn't need conspiracy theories when there is ample evidence of collective idiocy.

Malcolm wrote:

Allied fecklessness aside, the international community cannot stand by and permit the use of chemical or biological agents on people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 15th, 2018 at 6:08 PM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Ogyen said:

This was made a month and a half ago...

It has subtitles in English.

I speak French fluently the subtitles don't do his speech justice.

Malcolm wrote:

I suggest you look up Arwa Damon's reporting.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 15th, 2018 at 10:34 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Of course not. The US, Britain, and France have no interest in invading Syria, beyond the troops we have there to try and eliminate the remnants of ISIS.

Grigoris said:

Assad and the Kurdish forces eliminated ISIS, not the West. Actually, except for throwing some money and guns at the conservative Kurdish forces of northern Iraq the West has done nothing for the people fighting ISIS in Syria. As a matter of fact they have given free licence to NATO backed Turkish forces (and Islamist militias) to attack and destroy the very forces responsible for driving ISIS out of north Syria (the YPG and PKK).

As for France: you do know they will be replacing the US in Manjib, right? So the "no interest in invading" trope is pretty ragged.

Malcolm wrote:

Iraqi Forces were led by US and other NATO advisors the whole time and still are. We don't want to have a standing army in the Mideast anymore, and have not had one their since 2014. As for pipeline conspiracy theories and so, well. And, we don't want a hot war with Russia.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 15th, 2018 at 10:30 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Jeff H said:

This may be a naive question, but doesn't bombing chemical weapons plants release the chemicals?

justsit said:

Apparently not, per this report in the Guardian dated April 14.

<https://www.theguardian.com/world/2018/apr/14/trumps-attack-on-syria-is-not-without-risk-but-its-not-world-war-three>.

"Another potential risk that failed to materialise was that an attack on chemical weapons might spread the poison, engulfing Syrian military personnel and civilians. Chemical weapons inspectors suggested such an outcome was unlikely, as a missile would blow up chemical weapons."

No additional scientific explanation was given.

Malcolm wrote:

Isimply put, blowing up ingredients is not the same as blowing munitions

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 15th, 2018 at 9:22 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Sherab said:

The post I was responding asserted that a Buddha CANNOT manifest through oracle.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, they cannot.

Sherab said:

Why?

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhas have no intentions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 15th, 2018 at 9:10 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Sherab said:

The post I was responding asserted that a Buddha CANNOT manifest through oracle.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, they cannot.

Tenma said:

So the Guan Yin mediums are all fake?

Malcolm wrote:

Of course.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 15th, 2018 at 6:40 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Sherab said:

The post I was responding asserted that a Buddha CANNOT manifest through oracle.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, they cannot.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 15th, 2018 at 4:02 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

He probably stated that he felt Oshun was an emanation of Mamaki, not Oshun = Mamaki, not unlike the way that the Gyalpo Kunga are considered worldly emanations of the five families.

Norwegian said:

Right, that would make sense. The other stuff, not so much.

tingdzin said:

What I said.

Malcolm wrote:

However, it is pretty clear the women in question, lacking any real knowledge of these things, thought he was saying "Oshun = Mamaki." Thus, no typo, and massive misunderstanding.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 15th, 2018 at 3:13 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Grigoris said:

I was reading in a Greek article today that ISIS has taken advantage of the strikes against Assad to launch an offensive. I guess that means ISIS is included in the allies launching strikes?

Malcolm wrote:

Of course not. The US, Britain, and France have no interest in invading Syria, beyond the troops we have there to try and eliminate the remnants of ISIS. This action, as I understand it, was strictly a response to the gassing of civilians last week.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 15th, 2018 at 1:50 AM

Title: Re: US and Allies Launch Strikes on Syria

Content:

Ogyen said:

Is there any evidence (not media hearsay) that Syria used chemical weapons? There was no evidence last year ...

I did see articles with videos of dead women and children - too gruesome. However, there were no dead men there and some were posted by the white helmets (a joke... terrorists playing hero). Makes me think the rebels dumped all the bodies in one house on top of each other and blamed it on the government... with things like this, and with what I am reading, all you can say is there are these dead bodies. You can't say how they died or who killed them. Certainly not enough evidence to be conclusive to attack another country!

The sequence of events is certainly suspicious... like more effective propaganda for more of the same. Maybe Putin will retaliate, the media will love Trump for a few days and we have the beginning spark for a massive world war. Or it's just more noise and more suffering.

Poor people.

Guru dragphur. Yes.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, there is plenty of evidence Assad gassed his own people.

<https://www.hrw.org/news/2017/05/01/syria-new-evidence-shows-pattern-nerve-agent-use>

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/United_Nations_Mission_to_Investigate_Alleged_Uses_of_Chemical_Weapons_in_the_Syrian_Arab_Republic

The US, Britain, France, and other signatories have treaty obligation to respond militarily to destroy weapons manufacturing facilities when when chemical weapons are used in combat or against civilians if the offending party persist in their unlawful activities. Syria is a signatory to the CWC and is bound by its rules.

Article XII of the <https://www.cwc.gov/cwc.html> states:

1. The Conference shall take the necessary measures, as set forth in paragraphs 2, 3 and 4, to ensure compliance with this Convention and to redress and remedy any situation which contravenes the provisions of this Convention. In considering action pursuant to this paragraph, the Conference shall take into account all information and recommendations on the issues submitted by the Executive Council.
2. In cases where a State Party has been requested by the Executive Council to take measures to redress a situation raising problems with regard to its compliance, and where the State Party fails to fulfil the request within the specified time, the Conference may, inter alia, upon the recommendation of the Executive Council, restrict or suspend the State Party's rights and privileges under this Convention until it undertakes the necessary action to conform with its obligations under this Convention.
3. In cases where serious damage to the object and purpose of this Convention may result from activities prohibited under this Convention, in particular by Article I, the Conference may recommend collective measures to States Parties in conformity with international law.
4. The Conference shall, in cases of particular gravity, bring the issue, including relevant information and conclusions, to the attention of the United Nations General Assembly and the United Nations Security Council.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 15th, 2018 at 1:30 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Norwegian said:

I wonder if there's the possibility of a misunderstanding or miscommunication having taken place here. That the Nechung Kuten never said that she is an oracle of Mamaki. Or that this was poorly communicated. Or that this woman is deliberately marketing herself as such, when she never really was said to be that.

Because this is all very strange.

Malcolm wrote:

He probably stated that he felt Oshun was an emanation of Mamaki, not Oshun = Mamaki, not unlike the way that the Gyalpo Kunga are considered worldly emanations of the five families.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 14th, 2018 at 11:33 PM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

She must have some connections with Nagas ?

Malcolm wrote:

Oshun is represented as a human being, and sometimes as a mermaid. Beyonce makes direct reference to her in this Lemonade video, where she plays a vengeful Oshun:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 14th, 2018 at 10:44 PM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

tingdzin said:

See what sloppy punctuation can do. If the article had said "a living oracle, and an emanation of Mamaki" (note the added comma), it would not have been subject to the interpretation that she was channeling Mamaki, which is an absurdity on many levels. As has been noted many times on this forum, the title "emanation" is tossed about pretty carelessly, and being recognized as an oracle is not that weird or unusual in Asia, and perhaps in Africa either (I don't know anything about Yoruba culture).

If her work is channeling human energies in a positive direction, and she's not just a money-grubbing charlatan, then that work deserves to be recognized, just as the spirit that animates Nechung is to be honored for major contributions to Tibet's and HH's welfare. This does not mean that either is a Buddha.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think the punctuation is sloppy. This page directly equates Osun with Mamaki. This is wrong on so many levels.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 14th, 2018 at 8:01 PM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

Norwegian said:

Just to echo an older discussion on the topic of oracles, JKhedrup, who spent some time at Sera Je:

JKhedrup said:

I just checked with Geshe Sonam now to confirm what I have relayed here is accurate. He said every lama he has heard teach on this topic has stated that fully enlightened Buddhas cannot manifest through oracles, and says that there is no precedent that they can in any of the canonical scriptures.

Sherab said:

There is a huge difference between manifesting THROUGH oracles and manifesting AS AN oracle. A Buddha can manifest as or emanate anything. Therefore, there is no reason why a Buddha cannot manifest or emanate an oracle.

As to "fully enlightened Buddhas CANNOT manifest through oracles", I think this makes no sense. I think a Buddha can do that if he/she wants to but that would be unskillful and unnecessary. Unskillful because it would create a precedence for any medium to claim that he/she is channeling a Buddha (I actually met a medium who claimed to be channeling Buddha Amitabha) and unnecessary because a Buddha can manifest as anything, so he/she can manifest as an oracle to deliver a message instead of going through an oracle to deliver a message.

Malcolm wrote:

Why would a buddha want to use a medium? That makes no sense at all. There is no need for it, as you yourself even admit. There is no evidence of such a thing occurring in any sūtra or tantra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 14th, 2018 at 8:12 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

This is interesting:

<https://www.vajrayanaworld.com/long-bits/nechung-oracle-recognizes-yeye-omileye>

Malcolm wrote:

It is impossible for a human being to be a sku rten for a buddha. Only worldly deities manifest through oracles.

dzogchungpa said:
Duly noted.

Malcolm wrote:

If you doubt me, take it up with HHDL who himself has made this observation many times in the course of speaking of a certain protector. Also, the Nechung Oracle himself is not a Tulku, not is Nechung a transcendent deity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 14th, 2018 at 7:19 AM

Title: Re: Nechung Kuten Recognizes Yeye Omileye

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

This is interesting:

<https://www.vajrayanaworld.com/long-bits/nechung-oracle-recognizes-yeye-omileye>

Malcolm wrote:

It is impossible for a human being to be a sku rten for a buddha. Only worldly deities manifest through oracles.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 14th, 2018 at 12:38 AM

Title: Re: Asbestos snowflakes on the tongue

Content:

Queequeg said:

Its not clear how much exposure leads to cancer.

Malcolm wrote:

Parts per million.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 14th, 2018 at 12:37 AM

Title: Re: Academic learning is not directly proportional to realization

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Nah, I just trot it out to annoy you.

Malcolm wrote:

I does not annoy me. If you want to misrepresent what other people say, this is on you. It however still needs correction.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 13th, 2018 at 7:53 PM

Title: Re: Academic learning is not directly proportional to realization

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

As ChNN says: In fact, the scholar's learning creates many limitations to self-discovery.

Malcolm wrote:

There is in fact a context for this, and the context is that as the Dzogchen tantras say, a shepard who has confirmed their rigpa in direct perception will be liberated far swifter than learned pandita who has not. However, a learned pandita will certainly become liberated far swifter than a shepard if they too have confirmed their rigpa in a direction perception.

It is useful to refer to what Sapan has to say here:

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=49&t=4875&p=50535&hilit=kusali#p50535>

Thus, one must be mindful of the context of these statements, since you have twice now trotted out this citation to imply that ChNN thinks scholarship is useless -- he does not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 13th, 2018 at 10:13 AM

Title: Re: Ancestor worship from a Mahayana POV

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

All sentient beings have been our mothers and fathers, excluding none.

Varis said:

And wives, husbands, friends, etc., right?

So presumably closer karmic affinity is what results in us getting married to certain people, being friends with others, etc? Puts a whole different spin on the concept of "soul mates", eh.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 13th, 2018 at 10:12 AM

Title: Re: Ancestor worship from a Mahayana POV

Content:

Queequeg said:

IIRC, since earliest times, merit earned in Dharma practice benefits not only ourselves, but our families,

Malcolm wrote:

All sentient beings have been our mothers and fathers, excluding none.

Queequeg said:

So it should follow that our practice has far reaching merit for all beings, and that's my understanding of the Mahayana view... I'm sure you are more familiar with this than I am, but the "seven generations" thing seems to be a Vedic or Brahmanical legacy, a convention from the Buddha's time that was incorporated into Buddhism, but was not commensurate to the Buddha's complete message. It would take time for the full scope and breadth of the Buddha's teachings to emerge. Perhaps these were one of the minor conventions current at his time which were not worth challenging.

Malcolm wrote:

It is brahmanical.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 13th, 2018 at 4:47 AM

Title: Re: Anyone know about the Namchak lineage, Namchak Khen Rinpoche or Lama Tsomo?

Content:

monktastic said:

Thank you. In your opinion authentic then?

Malcolm wrote:

TSN is definitely the real deal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 13th, 2018 at 4:28 AM

Title: Re: Anyone know about the Namchak lineage, Namchak Khen Rinpoche or Lama Tsomo?

Content:

monktastic said:

I have some family members who want to attend this:

<https://www.eventbrite.com/e/vipassana-tibetan-style-tickets->

43361727093?aff=websiteinquiry

It's taught by teachers from here: <https://namchak.org/about/teachers>

Wanted to see if anyone has any familiarity with this lineage or teachers.

Malcolm wrote:

Lama Tsomo is Linda Pritzker of Pritzker Foundation fame. She is a student of Tulku Sangngak's and is the sponsor of this:

<http://www.ewambuddhagarden.org>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 13th, 2018 at 2:06 AM

Title: Re: Ancestor worship from a Mahayana POV

Content:

Queequeg said:

IIRC, since earliest times, merit earned in Dharma practice benefits not only ourselves, but our families,

Malcolm wrote:

All sentient beings have been our mothers and fathers, excluding none.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 13th, 2018 at 2:05 AM

Title: Re: Boundless Vision Tulku Tsolo

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Basically that is correct. You need the lung for the root text at least.

Spelare said:

As for the Five Nails, I see these two translated commentaries from the other discussion:

1. "Five Nails: Commentary on the Northern Treasures Accumulation Praxis By Tulku Tsurlo": https://www.namsebangdzo.com/Five_Nails_p/22022.htm
2. "Path of Secret Mantra: Teachings of the Northern Treasures Five Nails Pema Tinley's Guide to Vajrayana Practice": https://www.namsebangdzo.com/Path_of_Se...380188.htm

Do you recommend either of these? If so, what are the merits of one compared to the other? I would probably order one but not both at this point. Is the text of Tulku Thondup's translation of the Five Nails commentary by Tulku Tsurlo already included in the Boundless Vision book mentioned above, so there would be no point in ordering both that and #1 above?

I'd also welcome the input of anyone here who has tried to use either of the commentaries to support their own practice.

Malcolm wrote:

The five nails is a generic practice for the NT, the guru yoga is adapted to which ever cycle you are doing it for. As to which you order, that really depends on whether you like Dowman's megapixels or not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 12th, 2018 at 7:47 PM

Title: Re: Non-human capacity for wisdom

Content:

Ogyen said:

I don't feel drawn to having pets.

Malcolm wrote:

I basically have no interest in picking animal shit, hence no pets.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 12th, 2018 at 7:46 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life Transmission: 09/15/17

Content:

R said:

Just curious:

Did he give pointing out instructions there?

Malcolm wrote:

Just the lung.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 12th, 2018 at 12:28 AM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Our friend ADB has not clarified whether this consciousness is personal, as in Yogacāra, or transpersonal as in Advaita. Even so, the view of Yogācāra is not the view of Dzogchen, which view Dzogchen far surpasses, just as the sun outshines a candle.

Andrew David Boyle said:

It is the view of someone who has directly perceived their Buddha Nature. There is no higher realisation.

Malcolm wrote:

you still have not clarified whether this is Self Mooji keeps talking about is personal or transpersonal.

In any case, having looked at what he says, as far as I can tell is it just standard Self view of Advaita, so not Dzogchen.

Buddhanature misunderstood is just the same as the tīrthika view of self.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 11th, 2018 at 9:51 PM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

Andrew David Boyle said:

Outwardly Mooji's view is that all phenomena arise from consciousness and are of the same nature of consciousness.

Malcolm wrote:

That is not Dzogchen view at all. Not even slightly.

Coëmgenu said:

If I may inquire, although that isn't the Dzogchen view according to you, it does look like the general Yogācāra view.

Perhaps a formal thread, or at the very least a clarification in-thread, on what separates them would be in order?

Malcolm wrote:

Our friend ADB has not clarified whether this consciousness is personal, as in Yogācāra, or transpersonal as in Advaita. Even so, the view of Yogācāra is not the view of Dzogchen, which view Dzogchen far surpasses, just as the sun outshines a candle.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 11th, 2018 at 9:32 PM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

Andrew David Boyle said:

Outwardly Mooji's view is that all phenomena arise from consciousness and are of the same nature of consciousness.

Malcolm wrote:

That is not Dzogchen view at all. Not even slightly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 11th, 2018 at 8:50 AM

Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?

Content:

Snowbear said:

What is wisdom, and how is it acquired?

Malcolm wrote:

Prajñā, wisdom, is the result acquired from hearing the Dharma, reflecting upon it, and cultivating what was heard and reflected upon.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 11th, 2018 at 6:39 AM

Title: Re: Boundless Vision Tulku Tsolo

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

According to the copyright page, "Tulku Thondrup's introduction to this text and his original translation of the text were included in the Buddhayana Foundation Series Volume IX." I don't know if that was actually officially published in some way.

Anyway, 'pixel' etc. sounds silly to my ear, but Tulku Thondup seems to appreciate what he has called Dowman's "brilliant gift of letters" so why not have a look at the book before discouraging others from reading it? Maybe Dowman did a good job with it.

Malcolm wrote:

At minimum, people should have the lung for the root text, kun bzang dgongs pa zang thal gyi nyams khrid thar gling chos sku'i zhing khams su bgrod pa'i nye lam chen mo, composed by 17th century master Zurchen Chöying Rangdrol.

The lung for the ngondro drawn from this was given by Tulku Dakpa when he gave the lung for Buddhahood.

People should not read the text without transmission. I know this is unpopular these days, but well,

Spelare said:

So, if I've received the ngondro lung for this, does that mean I can read the ngondro section but no further? Is it likely that Tulku Dakpa or another qualified lama will be offering the requisite transmission in the foreseeable future?

Malcolm wrote:

Basically that is correct. You need the lung for the root text at least.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 11th, 2018 at 5:53 AM

Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Nichiren studied under many Dharma teachers. Thus, your example is invalid.

Astus said:

So by the requirement for a teacher you accept any Buddhist teacher, even if the encounter is minimal and later one does not even (fully) agree with that person?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because the conceptual view one learns is provisional unless or until one realizes suchness for oneself. Of course, for most people, their success in realization is indicated by the amount of hearing, reflection, and cultivation they do. Thus, people with little hearing have a much longer time on the path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 11th, 2018 at 5:51 AM

Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The main problem with Yogācāra is that they are unable to account for how a conditioned consciousness transforms into unconditioned jñāna, hence Yogācāra is held by Madhyamaka to be a realist school.

Queequeg said:

Interesting. That makes sense, except that last part.

Can you expand on the nature of that problem?

And what is meant by "realist" here?

Malcolm wrote:

It is an issue of transformation, in this case, their position has an inner contradiction. They are trying to account about mind can produce both samsara and nirvana. So the idea is that when the traces of affliction are emptied out of the ālaya, this causes the ālaya to effectively cease to exist, and the remaining mental skandhas transform into the four wisdoms which are now unconditioned. This is explained pretty well in the Mahāyāna Samgraha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 11th, 2018 at 5:01 AM

Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?

Content:

Snowbear said:

What, exactly, are we talking about with the flame?

Malcolm wrote:

Realization.

Snowbear said:

How is it passed?

Malcolm wrote:

It is like a seal and wax. The guru teaches, the disciple hears. Though the guru's realization is not transferred to the disciple, the impression upon the disciple leads to that disciples realization.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 11th, 2018 at 4:31 AM

Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?

Content:

Snowbear said:

It all sounds a bit too immaterial. What is "candle to candle" meant to capture?

Malcolm wrote:

One flame lighting the next flame.

Snowbear said:

What, exactly, are we talking about with the flame?

Malcolm wrote:

Realization.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 11th, 2018 at 4:28 AM

Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?

Content:

Queequeg said:

What does this statement even mean? Couldn't one say (wn the yogacara approach, it seems to me, and I am open to correction, the two truths are not reconciled. There is a leap between the two lower levels of understanding and the perfected understanding which sees emptiness, ie. only the ultimate truth of the two truths; all dharmas, whether false or dependently originated, are not the ultimate truth.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is not correct. The absence of the imputed nature in the dependent nature is the perfected nature.

The two truths are reconciled in Yogacara through the dependent nature.

In other words, the dependent nature is the hinge for the relative and the ultimate, samsara and nirvana, etc.

The main difference between standard Madhyamaka, where one perceives that a given entity has two natures, and the Yogācāra three natures, is that first, all given entities are reduced to mind-only, that recognition of mind-only is the transition point to recognizing that they exist only as seeds in the ālayavijñāna (the dependent nature); through recognizing that they do not exist as anything other seeds, one is no longer confused about the imagined nature (relative truth), recognizing that the dependent is empty of the imagined itself is ultimate truth. The main problem with Yogācāra is that they are unable to account for how a conditioned consciousness transforms into unconditioned jñāna, hence Yogācāra is held by Madhyamaka to be a realist school.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 11th, 2018 at 4:15 AM

Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?

Content:

Astus said:

Nichiren did not have a teacher who told him all he had then imparted on his disciples.

Malcolm wrote:

Nichiren studied under many Dharma teachers. Thus, your example is invalid.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 11th, 2018 at 3:36 AM

Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?

Content:

Queequeg said:

My point, and I'm not sure where you stand based on this statement, is that the realization of emptiness is not possible without the Buddha pointing it out to you first.

Malcolm wrote:

Revise "Buddha" to "virtuous mentor," and we are in perfect agreement, though Astus will vehemently disagree.

Astus said:

The disagreement is not whether one needs to learn, but how learning can happen. For instance, Nichiren did not have a teacher who told him all he had then imparted on his disciples.

Malcolm wrote:

No teacher, no blessings; no blessings, no realization (cue: debate about blessings)

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 11th, 2018 at 2:22 AM

Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?

Content:

Queequeg said:

My point, and I'm not sure where you stand based on this statement, is that the realization of emptiness is not possible without the Buddha pointing it out to you first.

Malcolm wrote:

Revise "Buddha" to "virtuous mentor," and we are in perfect agreement, though Astus will vehemently disagree.

Queequeg said:

Agree.

And further, this ultimate disagreement with Astus was in mind as the end the whole time.

Malcolm wrote:

Come on, Astus, bring it in

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 11th, 2018 at 2:22 AM

Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?

Content:

Snowbear said:

It all sounds a bit too immaterial. What is "candle to candle" meant to capture?

Malcolm wrote:

One flame lighting the next flame.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 11th, 2018 at 12:45 AM

Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Would you disagree with that?

Malcolm wrote:

No (speaking for Cone with confidence here because we are Vajrayāna practitioners) since the essence of Vajrayāna is the direct introduction of suchness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 11th, 2018 at 12:44 AM

Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?

Content:

Queequeg said:

My point, and I'm not sure where you stand based on this statement, is that the realization of emptiness is not possible without the Buddha pointing it out to you first.

Malcolm wrote:

Revise "Buddha" to "virtuous mentor," and we are in perfect agreement, though Astus will vehemently disagree.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 10th, 2018 at 9:22 PM

Title: Re: Vajrayana is not Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

florin said:

So mantrayana and vajrayana are different then ?

http://www.rigpawiki.org/index.php?title=Nine_yanas

Varis said:

I should correct myself.

Tibetans use the words Vajrayana and Mantrayana as synonyms but AFAIK the former term doesn't appear in Kriya and Yoga Tantra because it's a later development, hence why East Asian Buddhists don't use it.

Malcolm wrote:

This is not correct.

The term "Vajrayāna" is found in yogatantra, in the Sarvatathāgatatattvasaṃgraha-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra as well as the Vajra-śikhara-mahā-guhya-yoga-tantra. It is also found in kriya tantra, in the Ārya-avalokiteśvara-padma-jāla-mūlatantra-rāja-nāma and the Ārya-vajrakrodharājakaḷpa-laghutantra-nāma.

In the Sarvatathāgatatattvasaṃgraha we find the term "Unsurpassed Vajrayāna."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 10th, 2018 at 8:50 PM

Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?

Content:

Queequeg said:

They go on contemplating endlessly trying to find "nothing", ie. analysis without remainder. Pursuing an impossible end is, in my view, and endless austerity.

Malcolm wrote:

The point of the analysis is not to find nothing, the point is to find something. When one's analysis fails to find something, one discovers the absence of inherent (a.k.a. ultimate) existence, otherwise known as the absence of existence with respect to any of the four extremes. This analysis is not endless, since one only needs to discover the emptiness of one thing to realize the emptiness of all things. To echo Āryadeva, those who propose any sort of existence must prove the existence of each and everything they propose as existent, whereas those who make arguments via emptiness need only to prove the emptiness of one thing in order to prove the emptiness of all things.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 8th, 2018 at 6:33 PM

Title: Re: Is Bon Buddhadharma?

Content:

yan kong said:

But isn't that kind of an important point, as to whether they're taking refuge in a Buddha or not? Not really in regards to whether they define themselves as Buddhists or not but rather as to whether their object of refuge is enlightened or not.

Fortyeightvows said:

Well like Malcolm said:

Malcolm wrote:

Their object of refuge is Tonpa Shenrab, who was, in the opinion of most western scholars, mythologized into a Buddha (sang gyas).

Varis said:

From what I understand there is little evidence currently that the Buddha was a historical person, let alone that he taught anything attributed to him.

https://www.academia.edu/36121418/The_Idea_of_the_Historical_Buddha_Published_version_JIABS_2017

Those who would claim Bon is not Buddhadharma because they take Tonpa Shenrab as refuge shouldn't throw stones when they live in a glass house.

Malcolm wrote:

That article is really quite silly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 6th, 2018 at 8:23 PM

Title: Re: student-master relationship in Vajrayana

Content:

pemachophel said:

dear climb-up,

if you're looking for a one-size-fits all methodology in vajrayana, i think you're going to be disappointed. as the well-known tibetan saying goes, "every valley has its lama; every lama has his dharma (meaning how he or she does things)."

personally, i recommend your finding (or sticking with) a teacher whose teachings work for you and not worry about the rest. if ChNNR's method of DI or initiation works for some, that's wonderful for them. others may need (or simply favor) in-the-flesh teachings in a small group setting. the issue is the result, not necessarily the delivery system.

just my two cents. sorry if i'm way off base.

climb-up said:

Thank you for your thoughtful post. I appreciate it.

I am not looking for a one-size fits all approach, nor am I looking for a teacher who works for me, I have found that in ChNN's teachings and practice. I'm good on that front, and have full faith in teachings.

My question was specifically in regards to Malcolm, a very well known and vocal supporter of ChNN and his teachings saying that everything in the article was correct. I can understand both approaches being true in the "every lama has his own dharma" sense, but not in the sense of a student of ChNN saying that everything in there article is true.

I am curious if Malcolm has some understanding that some how reconciles these two perspectives and, if he would share it. I am (very genuinely) not trying to start any sh!t ...

dzogchungpa said:

Good, because we can't have that, can we?

climb-up said:

...just trying to preemptively stem off any potential defensiveness, in the hopes of getting an answer (sometimes, I can't imagine why, my questions are thought of as less than sincere).

Malcolm wrote:

With respect to the boss, he answers questions put to him in email or in person.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 5th, 2018 at 11:53 PM

Title: Re: student-master relationship in Vajrayana

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

Well, the thing is, as you practice new questions tend to emerge. And then you go back to your guru and ask them again, don't you?

Malcolm wrote:

Not if he or she has basically stopped answering questions. At a certain point in one's practice, one needs to become self-reliant. After all, Dharma is not rocket science.

treehuggingoctopus said:

That is what one would think. I would, in any case. But then there are things like this:

<http://levekunst.com/club-nondualite/>

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, everything Erik says here is true. But this is not in contradiction with my point at all.

If one is still in a state of doubt, one might ask questions, but even if one ask questions and receives answers, those answers cannot really be confirmed by anyone else but oneself in one's own practice. Anyway, people put too much emphasis on "nonduality" without really knowing what the term means in the various approaches of Buddhadharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 5th, 2018 at 11:07 PM

Title: Re: Why samsara exists

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I don't know why there is all this discussion. The answer to why samsara exists is that sentient beings are subject to grasping a self that does not exist as real.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 5th, 2018 at 11:04 PM

Title: Re: Keith Dowman's argument for his "interpretive free" translation style

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Then there is the issue of "helping" the text. It is the habit of some translators to embed their understanding in their translations by fleshing them out, sometimes by as much as 40 percent, with extraneous material either derived from commentaries or from information provided in the course of hearing a text being taught.

Grigoris said:

I disagree with this method. This sort of activity is best left for footnotes where it is made clear that it is an addition of the translator.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not advocating for this, just mentioned that this is the practice of some translators. I personally think it is the wrong way to go.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 5th, 2018 at 10:11 PM

Title: Re: student-master relationship in Vajrayana

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

And if they stop?

Malcolm wrote:

Then you don't need to ask anymore questions— just find your answers in your practice. I.e., at that time one needs to rely on the inner guru.

treehuggingoctopus said:

Well, the thing is, as you practice new questions tend to emerge. And then you go back to your guru and ask them again, don't you?

Malcolm wrote:

Not if he or she has basically stopped answering questions. At a certain point in one's practice, one needs to become self-reliant. After all, Dharma is not rocket science.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 5th, 2018 at 2:44 AM

Title: Re: student-master relationship in Vajrayana

Content:

47635 said:

How often is it necessary to see one's teacher in Vajrayana?

Malcolm wrote:

Until he or she stops answering your questions.

treehuggingoctopus said:

And if they stop?

Malcolm wrote:

Then you don't need to ask anymore questions— just find your answers in your practice. I.e., at that time one needs to rely on the inner guru.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 4th, 2018 at 11:01 PM

Title: Re: student-master relationship in Vajrayana

Content:

47635 said:

How often is it necessary to see one's teacher in Vajrayana?

Malcolm wrote:

Until he or she stops answering your questions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 4th, 2018 at 9:47 PM

Title: Re: Great Transference question

Content:

Josef said:

one would also be forbidden from reading Malcolm's translations if this were the case.

chimechodra said:

Does "Buddhahood in this Life" contain thogal sections that one should not read unless they have received those teachings? This would be good to know beforehand. I haven't bought the book yet so I have no idea if there's a warning somewhere, but it is on my to-read list.

Malcolm wrote:

I wrote:

In closing, I would like to stress that this translation has been prepared primarily for the serious practitioner who has the transmission for the teachings contained here. The reader should have received the necessary empowerments and reading transmissions. The Great Perfection tradition, like the Buddhist tradition in general, is an orally transmitted tradition, and one cannot expect to make any progress in its teachings without having received transmissions in a proper way. Without proper guidance by a qualified master who has understood and realized the meaning of the Great Perfection, one is sure either to not understand or, perhaps worse, to misunderstand the subject matter. However, with proper guidance by a qualified master, it is certain that one will be able to gain confidence in one's view and practice, and to quickly traverse the path to perfect buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 3rd, 2018 at 10:17 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

heart said:

Yes, it is. But not with ChNNR's melody. Often a part of liberation of wearing mantras. Also there are several version.

/magnus

Miroku said:

Yes, if I remember correctly the melody is really something special. It came to Rinpoche as a part of his Jnanadakiny dreams or it is from Jnanadakini. Either way it is special.

heart said:

No, I think he got it from Ekajati in a dream.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

It came from a dream of a ganapuja he had when he was around 10 years old. Since his uncle was in the dream, he asked his uncle if he knew this melody, but Heka Lingpa said he did not know that melody, and told ChNN to go to his other uncle, since SOV was part of Adzom Drukpa's practice; however, there, his other uncle taught him a melody that was used in Adzom Gar, but it was nothing like what ChNN heard in his dream at that Ganapuja. Later, when he started having dreams of the dance, the melody was slowed down considerably. I have heard recordings from the '70s where SOV was accompanied by harmonium and it was sung very rapidly compared even with the quick form of singing today.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 3rd, 2018 at 1:55 AM

Title: Re: "Wild Wild Country" - Osho documentary on Netflix

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

It's been a while since I looked at it but if I recall correctly, some of that Rajneesh stuff is very well spoken.

Malcolm wrote:

Your memory is failing you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 1st, 2018 at 9:56 PM

Title: Re: Ayya Yeshe

Content:

gelukman said:

Hello

<http://buddhistinsights.com/ayya-yeshe/>

There is a nun called Ayya Yeshe. Who is very active and such a public person.

So the question arise. What is she doing?

Quickly seen I did not find any mention her qualification to ordain women?

If some one have more insight I would be happy to hear.

.

Grigoris said:

Any vow holding monastic is "qualified" to ordain given there are another two (for a total of three) vow holding monastics present.

Why do you want to know? You want to be ordained by her?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, not exactly. Bhikṣunis cannot ordain men. They can at most give them refuge (barring bodhisattva vows and samaya, which do not have gender restrictions).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 1st, 2018 at 8:21 PM

Title: Re: Why is "unborn, unchanging, deathless" NOT eternal?

Content:

krodha said:

"Non-empty" is a play on words in that context. Many see the use of "non-empty" and think it contradicts śūnyatā, but it does not... it is merely a play on words that is intended to come off a bit controversial and incendiary. "Non-empty" is an embellished and shortened way of saying "not lacking qualities," but it appears attractive for those who might fear emptiness, it is intended as an upāya in that sense. The main issue is that it requires unpacking and given the fact that many who shy away from emptiness tend to be those who take comfort in the idea of substantial essences, the use of "non-empty" is oft misconstrued as affirming an inherent essence that contradicts emptiness.

ItsRaining said:

You seem to be just assuming that it is intended to be controversial and incendiary when it is not. There was no massive controversy over these work in the past....

Malcolm wrote:

Sure there was, which is why the Lanka is an important corrective to the ten tathāgatagarbha sūtras, and explains that tathāgatagarbha was taught for those who were in fear of emptiness.

ItsRaining said:

It just affirms that affirms that the mind does not lack qualities which is an important point, clarifying that it is not a nihilist's emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

Anything that has qualities is relative and compounded.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 31st, 2018 at 12:21 AM

Title: Re: Boundless Vision Tulku Tsolo

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

According to the copyright page, "Tulku Thondup's introduction to this text and his original translation of the text were included in the Buddhayana Foundation Series Volume IX." I don't know if that was actually officially published in some way.

Anyway, 'pixel' etc. sounds silly to my ear, but Tulku Thondup seems to appreciate what he has called Dowman's "brilliant gift of letters" so why not have a look at the book before discouraging others from reading it? Maybe Dowman did a good job with it.

Malcolm wrote:

At minimum, people should have the lung for the root text, kun bzang dgongs pa zang thal gyi nyams khrid thar gling chos sku'i zhing khams su bgrod pa'i nye lam chen mo, composed by 17th century master Zurchen Chöying Rangdrol.

The lung for the ngondro drawn from this was given by Tulku Dakpa when he gave the lung for Buddhahood.

People should not read the text without transmission. I know this is unpopular these days, but well,

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 30th, 2018 at 11:42 PM

Title: Re: Yantra Yoga compared to...

Content:

Spelare said:

For myself, I see no problem with integrating haṭha-yoga practices, physical or energetic, into the Dzogchen view. This is precisely what Yantra Yoga instructors apparently do, deferring to Tibetan texts and teachers whenever possible but clearly bringing to bear their training in modern postural yoga.

Malcolm wrote:

As to your first point, yes, there is no conflict here.

As to your second point, I don't think Fabio and Laura would agree.

Spelare said:

Ok. So, would you say that they had to unlearn certain aspects of modern postural yoga and relearn them according to the Tibetan sources? Or, do you just mean that everything they teach was already there in the Tibetan sources already, and there was no need to adapt them for modern use?

Malcolm wrote:

Laura, as far as I know, never studied any of the lineages from Krishnamācārya. Fabio originally studied with Śivānanda, but dropped all of that when he started training with ChNN. Everything in Yantra Yoga is in the root text, including the variations, as ChNN learned it from his uncle.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 30th, 2018 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: melong pendant

Content:

Grigoris said:

As for blessings: I gave my melong to be used during an empowerment as the landing pad for Dakini.

Mantrik said:

Hopefully they were better at landing than the owls in Harry Potter.

Convex side down helps.

Malcolm wrote:

One is to wear the six syllables against the skin, mirror side out.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 30th, 2018 at 11:39 PM

Title: Re: melong pendant

Content:

Grigoris said:

As for blessings: I gave my melong to be used during an empowerment as the landing pad for Dakini.

Mantrik said:

Hopefully they were better at landing than the owls in Harry Potter.

Convex side down helps.

Ogyen said:

These Merigar Melongs are flat discs. I like the convex shape better..

Malcolm wrote:

The Merigar melongs are descendants of the original melong given to ChNN by Changchub Dorje. They are made of a special alloy, to ChNN's precise specifications. Each batch of new melongs has added to it an older melong kept back so that succeeding generations of melongs all have some of the original in their composition. Thus, it is better, IMO, to purchase the merigar melongs.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 30th, 2018 at 11:35 PM

Title: Re: Yantra Yoga compared to...

Content:

Spelare said:

For myself, I see no problem with integrating haṭha-yoga practices, physical or energetic, into the Dzogchen view. This is precisely what Yantra Yoga instructors apparently do, deferring to Tibetan texts and teachers whenever possible but clearly bringing to bear their training in modern postural yoga.

Malcolm wrote:

As to your first point, yes, there is no conflict here.

As to your second point, I don't think Fabio and Laura would agree.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 30th, 2018 at 11:33 PM

Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?

Content:

Losal Samten said:

How do aspirations work once buddahood is attained? Aspirations are a conditioned phenomena and are to be abandoned at the tenth bhumi (IIRC), and since the dharmakaya is unconditioned, surely it can't be conditioned via conditioned practitioners conditionally triggering the abandoned and purified conditional traces of aspirations?

Are aspirations mentioned in Dzogchen literature, or does it rely on the natural compassion doing its business? Wish-fulfilling jewel a and wish-fulfilling jewel b have no differences in activities and potentialities, surely?

Malcolm wrote:

Like karma, there is no inherent nature that forces the result of aspirations, once made, to cease. AA VIII 2,8 (Conze) states concerning the "cognition concerning resolve", "As the cause comes to maturity, he manifests himself at that place, wherever and whenever his help is needed."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 30th, 2018 at 11:02 PM

Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?

Content:

Ogyen said:

So for example is Tara a specific being with a separate mindstream than Shakyamuni, or Chenrezig/Avalokiteshvara, etc. Or are they all the same buddha nature that just projects through a different lens of manifestation?

I ask because we are instructed to use specific practices to help us for specific conditions...

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhanature is not some unity that all beings share. That would be a self-view. Buddhanature is the individual potential of each sentient being to awaken.

Tārā is a being separate from Śākyamuni, Avalokiteśvara and so on, who all make their own aspirations, have their own namthars, etc.

Each deity manifests from separate aspirations to provide methods for different sentient beings. Tārā the bodhisattva and Tārā, the deity in the sadhana that one manifests are not the same, but by doing the latter one invokes the aspirations of the former. However, if one realizes Tārā, there is basically no difference at that point between oneself and Tārā because the pristine consciousness of all the buddhas is identical in terms of object of realization and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 30th, 2018 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: Boundless Vision Tulku Tsolo

Content:

the.eleven said:

Does anyone here have experience with this text?

https://www.amazon.com/Boundless-Vision-Manual-Dzogchen-Changter/dp/1985102846/ref=sr_1_1?ie=UTF8&qid=1522255581&sr=8-1&keywords=boundless+visi%C3%B3n

Josef said:

I havent read it but I find it quite odd that Dowman "edited" a Tulku Thondup translation. This could be a very valuable translation if there is an extant version that Dowman didnt have anything to do with.

Perhaps there is another edition available from Thondup himself.

Malcolm wrote:

From what I understand, there was a manuscript version in circulation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 30th, 2018 at 10:39 PM

Title: Re: Boundless Vision Tulku Tsolo

Content:

Josef said:

I havent read it but I find it quite odd that Dowman "edited" a Tulku Thondup translation. This could be a very valuable translation if there is an extant version that Dowman didnt have anything to do with.

Perhaps there is another edition available from Thondup himself.

Norwegian said:

Basically it looks like Dowman had his way with the text and added in "pixel", "megapixel" and other Dowman-lingo...

treehuggingoctopus said:

"Sole cosmic megapixel." Mmmmmmm.....

Malcolm wrote:
This must be the Minecraft edition of Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, March 30th, 2018 at 3:11 AM
Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
According to Sarvastivada and most of Mahāyāna and Vajrayāna, formless realm beings have no material body. Dzogchen dissents from this view.

Grigoris said:
So the Arupadhatu is suddenly a Rupadhatu?

Malcolm wrote:
In Dzogchen, formless is taken to mean extremely subtle form.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, March 29th, 2018 at 10:16 PM
Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?
Content:
clyde said:
I apologize for my confusion but if “a mind is instantiated in a body”, are there minds without living bodies and/or living bodies without minds?

Malcolm wrote:
According to Sarvastivada and most of Mahāyāna and Vajrayāna, formless realm beings have no material body. Dzogchen dissents from this view.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, March 29th, 2018 at 3:24 AM
Title: Re: ‘Dharmas do not arise’
Content:

Wayfarer said:
Precisely!

There are some very good answers and sources here, which I think address the point (and thank you for them). But that point is, to say of something that it has ‘merely conventional existence’, is not to say that it simply doesn’t exist. Actually the whole distinction between ‘conventional and ultimate’ is really a deep philosophical question.

I think too often we assume that we understand something about that, because after all the sutras and commentaries are written from the perspective of understanding that distinction. But I know that I don't fully understand it. Hence, caution.

Malcolm wrote:

Arising, when analyzed, cannot be ascertained. We do not state from the outset that phenomena do not arise. That is an analytical conclusion. Conventional truth (arising) is how things appear to us, ultimate truth (nonarising) is the conclusion of analyzing appearances.

Coëmgenu said:

So to say "conventionally, nothing arises" is somewhat incorrect, because it is illustrating some confusion about the conventional? Things don't arise, but if conventionality is not the mistaken or unmistaken experience of "apparently" arising dharmāḥ, however "wrong" or "right" that experience of conventionality may be, then what is it?

Malcolm wrote:

Conventionally, arising from conditions is the only valid mode of arising.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 28th, 2018 at 9:49 PM

Title: Re: 'Dharmas do not arise'

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

They don't arise ultimately, they do arise conventionally, sometimes people (not just anyone) say they don't arise conventionally either.

When nothing arises, even conventionally, what is the point of even positing a conventional?

Wayfarer said:

Precisely!

There are some very good answers and sources here, which I think address the point (and thank you for them). But that point is, to say of something that it has 'merely conventional existence', is not to say that it simply doesn't exist. Actually the whole distinction between 'conventional and ultimate' is really a deep philosophical question. I think too often we assume that we understand something about that, because after all the sutras and commentaries are written from the perspective of understanding that distinction. But I know that I don't fully understand it. Hence, caution.

Malcolm wrote:

Arising, when analyzed, cannot be ascertained. We do not state from the outset that phenomena do not arise. That is an analytical conclusion. Conventional truth (arising) is how things appear to us , ultimate truth (nonarising) is the conclusion of analyzing appearances.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 28th, 2018 at 9:40 PM

Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?

Content:

Matt J said:

Why give primacy to the body? Why can't the body be instantiated in the mind?

I mean for example the accounts given by Jamgon Kongtrul Rinpoche in Myriad Worlds. But minds are formless— how can they be instantiated in anything? Plus in Buddhist creation stories, bodies arise in minds, not the other way around.

Malcolm wrote:

If minds cannot be instantiated in bodies, how can there be rebirth?

As to your second remark, I am not sure what you mean. Citation helpful.

Well, in Dzogchen texts for example, it is pretty clear the body is a vessel for the mind, something which is appropriated based on karma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 28th, 2018 at 3:56 AM

Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?

Content:

Matt J said:

But minds are formless— how can they be instantiated in anything? Plus in Buddhist creation stories, bodies arise in minds, not the other way around.

Malcolm wrote:

If minds cannot be instantiated in bodies, how can there be rebirth?

As to your second remark, I am not sure what you mean. Citation helpful.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 28th, 2018 at 1:35 AM

Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

also in the formless there are indriyas supports the mind, such as life force etc.

Grigoris said:

Sure. But you said the delineating quality is the body/form. Or were you speaking about the animal/human realm specifically? do viruses have minds?

I would say that they have a degree of sentience and thus have some sort of mind. A pretty basic mind, but a mind nonetheless.

Malcolm wrote:

We can also say that formless beings have form, it is just very subtle.

As to your second statement, I cannot confirm this or deny it. I simple don't know.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 28th, 2018 at 1:15 AM

Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?

Content:

Matt J said:

The issue with the Buddhist view is that the mind is not physical, so what keeps minds apart?

Malcolm wrote:

Minds are instantiated in bodies, that's what keeps them apart.

Grigoris said:

So what keeps them "apart" in formless realms?

What would happen in the case of a virus, where they become a part of the entity they invade?

Malcolm wrote:

also in the formless there are indriyas supports the mind, such as life force etc.

do viruses have minds?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 28th, 2018 at 12:13 AM

Title: Re: Mind-streams: Separate?

Content:

Matt J said:

The issue with the Buddhist view is that the mind is not physical, so what keeps minds apart?

Malcolm wrote:

Minds are instantiated in bodies, that's what keeps them apart.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 27th, 2018 at 9:27 PM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Sherab said:

You did not explain to me that Richardson already proved Madhyamaka does not stand up when cast in the language of Quine. You made a statement to that effect only if I remember correctly. I did say that I cannot comment on Richardson as I have not read it.

Malcolm wrote:

Early Madhyamaka in China. That is your assignment.

"Not 1; not 0; not 1 and 0; and neither 1 nor 0." These are the four non affirming negations. They have no implication other than what they directly negate. They do not affirm anything.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 27th, 2018 at 1:39 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

heart said:

No, I hope they will make booklet one day. Rinpoche gives the tibetan text of the sadhana if you ask and some people have done translations but I hesitate to mention them in an open forum.

/magnus

javier.espinosa.t said:

ChNN is the only known holder of ChchD teachings?

lelopa said:

outside of Tibet : afaik yes!

Malcolm wrote:

No, there is also Lama Wangdor.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 26th, 2018 at 7:23 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Matt J said:

Language is not quite as susceptible to formal logic, especially English. I think combining statement #1 and statement #2 is a category error.

Malcolm wrote:

I have tried to explain this several times, but he doesn't listen.

Sherab said:

Did you spot the flaw in his logic? It was one that is made by most people who are not trained in logical fallacies. But you? I don't know what to say.

Malcolm wrote:

I have already explained to you that Richardson already proved Madhyamaka does not stand up when cast in the language of Quine. Why you ignore me when I make such observations is anyone's guess. Therefore, you should understand that your equations are flawed since they do not reach the point of Madhyamaka. But if you prefer to spend your time trying to match major and minor premises, please go ahead.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 25th, 2018 at 10:24 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Matt J said:

Language is not quite as susceptible to formal logic, especially English. I think combining statement #1 and statement #2 is a category error.

Malcolm wrote:

I have tried to explain this several times, but he doesn't listen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 25th, 2018 at 12:05 AM

Title: Re: Beijing 'strongly dissatisfied' as Trump signs Taiwan Travel Act

Content:

tingdzin said:

And maybe the only one (world leader). Bravo Trump -- I guess even a nearsighted hog roots up a truffle now and then.

Malcolm wrote:

I was under the impression that pigs rooted up truffles by smell, not by sight.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 24th, 2018 at 6:21 AM

Title: Re: Who/what is the Original Buddha? Split from En-no-gyoja

Content:

Queequeg said:

The problem with identifying any "thing" with the Original Buddha is that the Original Buddha is not a "thing". If it is, then we have to make clear that we mean this only in a conventional sense. Otherwise, we're not discussing Buddhism and rather something else.

In the sutra I reproduced (<https://dharma.wheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=53&t=28193>) The Original Buddha is identified as "no mind, no thought". I didn't reproduce Swanson's comments, but he suggested that this Original Buddha of No Mind and No Thought is jisso - True Aspect of Reality. The suggestion is that the beginningless and endless original Buddha that awakens, awakens by "hearing" the teaching of the True Aspect of Reality, in other words, coming to know reality as it is by observing reality.

I don't know if this is meant to be understood as some temporal event, or rather implies that the practitioner should likewise seek awakening by listening to the True Aspect of Reality.

As for identifying this myoho renge kyo with the True Aspect of Reality, that's probably partially true. It is also the wisdom (in the form of the Buddha) of the True Aspect, as well as the practice of it.

In other words, I don't think that sutra aligns particularly well with what Nichiren taught.

Malcolm wrote:

The term adibuddha in Sanskrit texts makes its first appearance in the Mañjuśrī-nāmasaṃgīti. The adibuddha is considered to be suchness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 24th, 2018 at 1:07 AM

Title: Re: Return after a long absence

Content:

Ogyen said:

Hi, I've been gone years, but I'm back because I missed you guys so much I had to come back.

Ogyen

Malcolm wrote:

Hi Daphne.

Welcome back.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 23rd, 2018 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: the great vegetarian debate

Content:

pueraeternus said:

This is not merely "can't do-ism". It is a horrific notion that it is somehow compassionate to perpetuate the continued enslavement and slaughter of billions of sentient beings.

Malcolm wrote:

That is a horrific notion, and not one advanced by the statement above.

pueraeternus said:

It is like saying let's keep 1000 cows alive in hellish conditions, if not we have to kill them, but it's totally ok to end up enslaving and killing exponentially more cows in just 50 years, and ensuring that the fate of the progeny of those cows are not much better than the most ill-fated of pretas.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is not like that at all. The statement is pointing out the consequence of what would happen if 7.5 billion people overnight stopped raising livestock for food. Of course that is not going to happen, since I do not foresee, in world of 2.5 billion Christians, 1.8 billion Muslims, etc., that the demand for meat is going to decrease anytime soon. In fact, it will only increase as we move deeper into the Kaliyuga.

pueraeternus said:

It would not be so bad if there were no such thing as modern factory farming practices. But in the face of what we know what goes on in meat factories, people continue to spout Buddhist doctrines that do not factor these realities in.

Malcolm wrote:

You apparently selectively ignored my agreement that modern agribusiness in toto is terrible. For the record, I do not buy meat or dairy that is not pastured, i.e. raised humanely, and preferably locally, since I have that luxury. Nor do I buy nonorganic food as much as possible.

On the other hand, the world appetite for meat is increasing as developing countries increase the demand for meat every year.

The FAO projected:

Meat consumption in developing countries has been continuously increasing from a modest average annual per capita consumption of 10 kg in the 1960s to 26 kg in 2000 and will reach 37 kg around the year 2030 according to FAO projections. This forecast suggests that in a few decades, developing countries' consumption of meat will move towards that of developed countries where meat consumption remains stagnant at a high level.

<http://www.fao.org/docrep/010/ai407e/AI407E02.htm>

In reality, more and more people are going to be eating meat. The trends are pretty clear: Thanks to all of this meat eating, at any given point in the year, there are 19 billion chickens, 1.5 billion cows, 1 billion pigs and 1 billion sheep on the planet — more than three times the number of people. And these numbers are set to rise as the human population grows and more people shift toward a meat-based diet. The number of cattle, sheep, goats and buffalo — animals that require quite a bit of land for feed production and grazing — alone is increasing by 25 million annually, according to the Food and Agriculture Organization.

<https://ensia.com/articles/these-maps-show-changes-in-global-meat-consumption-by-2024-heres-why-that-matters/>

pueraeternus said:

It is as if just because technically they may not be incurring direct karmic penalties, they will be alright. But we are all supposed to be on the Mahayana path, and it is not enough to just not further incur negative karma - we have to actively bring benefit for others. It is truly the age of kaliyuga when supposedly learned practitioners can't see the obvious contradictions.

Malcolm wrote:

You seem to have a misunderstanding of the bodhisattva path. Shantideva raises the question of how the Buddha could have perfected generosity since there was still poverty in the world. Shantideva responds to the qualm by pointing out that even though the Bodhisattva could not actually relieve the poverty of all sentient beings, he sincerely wished they were all free of it, and thus he perfected generosity. You also seem not to make a distinction between aspirational bodhicitta and engaged bodhicitta.

One must disentangle what impacts one's liberation, and what impacts the world. There is really no way to prevent the transient suffering of sentient beings. The view that one can is really a one-lifetime view at best. That is why the Buddha clearly stated, "I cannot remove suffering with my hands." Mature Dharma practitioners know with sadness there is really nothing that can be done about the suffering of others, even though we make aspirational vows to lead all beings to nirvana, in order for that to happen, those sentient beings need to be reborn as human beings first. This is why, for example, when training on the four Brahma-viharas, Kamalashila recommends that we first develop equanimity. The lack of equanimity on the part vegetarian ideologues is basically what fuels their idealistic "compassion."

pueraeternus said:

And I am not even now saying everyone should suddenly be vegetarian - just accept the fact that reducing meat intake is good for every sentient being involved (including insects, since we will be killing less of them), the environment and planetary well-being, and then try to reduce meat in our daily life. Even this they do not accept and give all sorts of spurious reasons and denials. There is no other way to say it - it is disgusting and shameful.

Malcolm wrote:

Your feelings of disgust and shame are your own since you are imputing positions upon me that I do not hold.

Frankly, a lot of Western Buddhist hysteria over the consumption of meat comes from living in advanced economies where being a vegetarian is a first world luxury. A point completely overlooked in these debates is that most Buddhists in the world, living in developing nations as they do, eat meat and want to eat meat. Actually, so do most Hindus, they just avoid beef, eating lamb and chicken in great quantity instead. And Hindus would not dream of abandoning milk, etc., since it is sanctioned in the Vedas.

It is pretty clear there is suffering in the world. But the only way suffering can be removed in a real sense is by meeting the Dharma and practicing a path. In the meantime, I will seek to help those I can directly help, and feel sadness at my limitations in not being able to help all sentient beings, even though that is my most sincere wish.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 23rd, 2018 at 3:15 AM

Title: Re: Yantra Yoga compared to...

Content:

Snowbear said:

There is an obvious parallel to modern transnational yoga's asanas in YY, which indicates to me that YY is not trulkhor in the traditional sense. When you say you were exposed to other trulkhor systems, do you mean like on YouTube?

Varis said:

Hatha Yoga comes from Buddhism, this has been well established by academics. Any similarity is likely to be found there.

climb-up said:

Do you have some references for this?

Not that I doubt you, I'd just like to read up on it and on first glance not much is coming up.

Malcolm wrote:

Also look at the work of Jame Mallison.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 23rd, 2018 at 3:07 AM

Title: Re: the great vegetarian debate

Content:

seeker242 said:

To cause harm requires intent to cause harm. This is something you fail to understand. In order to cause harm, one has to have malice.

That is nonsensical. Drunk drivers don't intend to cause harm when they run a red light, but they do cause harm anyway.

Malcolm wrote:

Not so, all drunk drivers know they are acting unlawfully.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 23rd, 2018 at 3:07 AM

Title: Re: the great vegetarian debate

Content:

seeker242 said:

The Buddha could not even prevent the enslavement of his clan.

The Buddha was not the one enslaving the clan, if he was, he would have been able to stop it by not doing it...

Malcolm wrote:

Likewise, just because one eats meat bought from a store, this does not mean one is butchering the animal. Since one is not doing it, one cannot stop it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 23rd, 2018 at 2:50 AM

Title: Re: the great vegetarian debate

Content:

Simon E. said:

I have never, ever, seen an omnivore attempt to convert a vegan/veggie.

treehuggingoctopus said:

Really? I see it regularly, Vajrayana Buddhist meat-eaters attempting to convert Vajrayana Buddhist veggies/vegans. Happens rarely online, regularly in (the pun partially intended) the meat-space.

Malcolm wrote:

This only happens to hapless vegetarians who stumble into Dzogchen Community when ChNN gives his usual lecture about the miserable compassion of vegetarians.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 23rd, 2018 at 2:46 AM

Title: Re: the great vegetarian debate

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No more so than tofu or socks.

seeker242 said:

Much more than tofu or socks.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, this is a claim, not a fact.

seeker242 said:

Funny thing is that "if the world went vegan tomorrow" is unrealistic and therefore irrelevant.

Yes, and for that reason, it is also irrelevant is one buys meat in a store or not. You have acquiesced the point.

Only that which is unrealistic is irrelevant. Reducing harm is not unrealistic and therefore not irrelevant.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it is unrealistic. The Buddha could not even prevent the enslavement of his clan.

seeker242 said:

but we cannot prevent or remove the suffering of others.

You can when you are the one that is causing it to begin with.

Malcolm wrote:

To cause harm requires intent to cause harm. This is something you fail to understand. In order to cause harm, one has to have malice.

seeker242 said:

No, there is a difference. I am not claiming that being an omnivore is some sort of moral high ground. It isn't. But you vegans claim a moral high ground, which in fact is false.

Vegans claim that it's less harmful to be vegan, which is true.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, it is true is not a fact.

seeker242 said:

There are more of us than there are of you. Better be cautious. We only eat vegetarians.

Not really a problem. We can outrun you because we don't have high blood pressure and cholesterol clogged arteries.

Malcolm wrote:

[/quote]

Another bullshit myth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 23rd, 2018 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: the great vegetarian debate

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The funny thing is, if the world went vegan tomorrow, it would be necessary to slaughter billions of livestock anyway because no economy on the planet will absorb the cost of feeding these animals until their natural deaths.

Grigoris said:

What a ridiculous justification for continuing to eat meat. Veganism is very self-centered. It is an example of attachment to views, as is this whole discussion.

I take it you are including your self-centered attachment to your views when you make this statement?

Malcolm wrote:

As I pointed out to seeker, I am not arguing for meat eating as a moral position, unlike vegetarians/vegans like you, who think they are better than omnivores.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 23rd, 2018 at 12:12 AM

Title: Re: the great vegetarian debate

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Buying dead meat in a store does not constitute support for killing. It constitutes supporting one's body so one can help others.

seeker242 said:

It constitutes financial support for killing.

Malcolm wrote:

No more so than tofu or socks.

seeker242 said:

The funny thing is, if the world went vegan tomorrow, it would be necessary to slaughter billions of livestock anyway because no economy on the planet will absorb the cost of feeding these animals until their natural deaths.

Funny thing is that "if the world went vegan tomorrow" is unrealistic and therefore irrelevant.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and for that reason, it is also irrelevant is one buys meat in a store or not. You have acquiesced the point.

seeker242 said:

We live in a degenerate age. Better get used to it.

Slavery and child sex traffic is no problem. We live in a degenerate age. Better get used to it.

Malcolm wrote:

I never said that degeneration was not a problem. I said it is not preventable. Crimes are generally not preventable. That is why we have a justice system. All of these issues you complain about are in fact results of our own karma. It is because of our own karma we are born in a world where meat is eaten, women and children enslaved, where there are nuclear weapons. We can prevent suffering for ourselves, but we cannot prevent or remove the suffering of others. The Buddha never said we could. All we can do is wish that sentient beings be free from suffering. Even though the Buddha sacrificed his body to the tigress so she would not eat her cubs, he did not really remove anyone's suffering. Instead he earned the final piece of merit to cause him to take rebirth in Tushita as the Bodhisattva Svetaketu, before manifesting here as the Buddha.

seeker242 said:

Veganism is very self-centered. It is an example of attachment to views, as is this whole discussion.

Omnivorism is very self-centered. It is an example of attachment to views, as is this whole discussion.

Malcolm wrote:

No, there is a difference. I am not claiming that being an omnivore is some sort of moral high ground. It isn't. But you vegans claim a moral high ground, which in fact is false.

seeker242 said:

The idea that omnivores are less compassionate than vegetarians is entirely fallacious. The idea that omnivores don't cause more destruction than vegetarians is entirely fallacious.

Malcolm wrote:

[/quote]

There are more of us than there are of you. Better be cautious. We only eat vegetarians.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 22nd, 2018 at 11:41 PM

Title: Re: the great vegetarian debate

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No one is arguing that the production of meat is virtuous. We all agree it is not virtuous.

seeker242 said:

If it's not virtuous, then it should not be supported when one has the opportunity to not support it.

Malcolm wrote:

Buying dead meat in a store does not constitute support for killing. It constitutes supporting one's body so one can help others.

seeker242 said:

But then, neither is agriculture in general. The production of food, cloth, etc., is destructive on the whole. In fact, virtually all human activity is destructive to other beings in one way or another.

Sure, but that does not mean that it's inappropriate or pointless to attempt to minimize the destruction that is caused. To assert that a solution is inappropriate because it's not perfect is unreasonable because there is no perfect solution. However, various actions can minimize or maximize the destruction.

Malcolm wrote:

The funny thing is, if the world went vegan tomorrow, it would be necessary to slaughter billions of livestock anyway because no economy on the planet will absorb the cost of feeding these animals until their natural deaths.

seeker242 said:

As I have said, the economic and environmental issues are separate from Buddhist teachings in the issue and should be kept separate.

Yet they are not separate from the amount of destruction being caused.

Malcolm wrote:

We live in a degenerate age. Better get used to it.

seeker242 said:

A text I gave brought up before in this thread, the Blaze of Reasoning (Tarkajvala), a comprehensive Madhyamaka commentary, addresses various objections to meat-eating found in these sūtras, such as the claim that eating meat will make the body impure. Bhavya points out, for example, that the body is already impure by nature, thus eating meat will not make it more so.

Yet vegetarianism isn't about being self-centered. Focusing on your own liberation, your own purity or your own karma, is by definition, a self-centered focus. Vegetarianism is the opposite of self-centered.

Malcolm wrote:

[/quote]

Veganism is very self-centered. It is an example of attachment to views, as is this whole discussion.

The idea that omnivores are less compassionate than vegetarians is entirely fallacious.

The social conditions of India were such at the time that in order to attract converts to Buddhism, vegetarianism was encouraged. Today we have precisely the opposite conditions, at least in the US. Here, the vast majority of people eat meat. Insisting on vegetarianism will simply cause many people to have no interest in the Dharma. When Buddhism spread to Tibet, the majority of people did and still do eat meat, and thus, Indian Buddhists did not insist on vegetarianism understanding that Tibetans would reject them. Insisting that Buddhists be vegetarian is Devadatta's doctrine, as has been pointed out before. The Buddha understood that we have to work with circumstances. Insisting that others must follow one's own dietary conscience is in fact contrary to the Dharma. One can certainly be a compassionate person and also be an omnivore.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 22nd, 2018 at 10:54 PM

Title: Re: the great vegetarian debate

Content:

Grigoris said:

But there is nothing romanticised about the fact that not eating meat takes you out of direct involvement with the meat industry.

Norwegian said:

Not really. It is very common for companies who runs the meat industry to also be involved in the vegetable industry, etc. A new trend now is for meat companies to produce vegan food as well.

So by supporting those companies, you support the exact same group of people who also provides meat to people, and you have no control over where your money goes (it could be for the installment of a new slaughter house, you never know).

The only way to truly avoid these things is to grow your own food, but then you run into the dilemma of killing sentient beings when you till the soil, and having to protect your crops later on, etc...

Grigoris said:

I said direct involvement.

You too are using the flawed logic that: because war is unavoidable, you should become a soldier.

Malcolm wrote:

The only kind of direct involvement in killing is to see it, do it, or order it. None of that applies with respect to dead meat one finds in a store.

As mentioned above, the environmental and economic issues are separate from Buddhist teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 22nd, 2018 at 10:42 PM

Title: Re: the great vegetarian debate

Content:

Simon E. said:

The number of invertebrate animals killed each year as a result directly or indirectly of vegetable or cereal production is countless.

seeker242 said:

The question to ask is why does Situ Rinpoche not recognize the fact that the number of invertebrate animals killed each year increases 10 fold when the cereal is fed to cows, which is how almost all cows are fed these days? Perhaps he is just not aware of the fact that cows are fed grains? Does he think that all the cattle herds out there are out there just grazing in a pasture? If so, that doesn't match up with reality.

Extensive cattle ranching is the number one culprit of deforestation in virtually every Amazon country, and it accounts for 80% of current deforestation (Nepstad et al. 2008). Why does he not take this into account? Is he not aware of how many invertebrate animals are killed when you clearcut a rainforest to make room for cattle farming?

Malcolm wrote:

No one is arguing that the production of meat is virtuous. We all agree it is not virtuous. But then, neither is agriculture in general. The production of food, cloth, etc., is destructive on the whole. In fact, virtually all human activity is destructive to other beings in one way or another. As I have said, the economic and environmental issues are separate from Buddhist teachings on the issue and should be kept separate.

With respect to the Buddha's teaching in Mahāyāna on eating meat, if we are to judge things by their commonality in the Mahāyāna sūtras, the question of meat eating does not come up very frequently, and the prohibitions on consuming meat are exclusively found in sūtras considered by the Madhyamaka tradition to be of provisional meaning such as the Lanka, the tathāgatagarbha sūtras, and some lower tantras.

A text I have brought up before in this thread, the Blaze of Reasoning (Tarkajvala), a comprehensive Madhyamaka commentary, addresses various objections to meat-eating found in these sūtras, such as the claim that eating meat will make the body impure. Bhavya points out, for example, that the body is already impure by nature, thus eating meat will not make it more so. He points out a number of other inconsistencies in these sūtras as well. He does so to point out that the prohibition on consuming meat is not a definitive teaching, but is interpretable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 22nd, 2018 at 12:12 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Sennin said:

Hi,

I just want to put it out there that I strongly believe this seminar is an occasion not to be missed. We have the rare opportunity to dive into one of the oldest texts that gives a comprehensive commentary to the Dzogchen tantras; and what's even better is we will have the chance to learn from someone who knows the language precisely and can give an accurate presentation of what is being explained in this sublime text. I have met Acarya Malcolm in person and I can say without a doubt that he has clarified a lot of the confusion I had. Anyways I just wanted to share that because I think this is important.

PeterC said:

For that reason I very much hope that some format of recording will be available after the event for those of us who cannot be there.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, there will be. Eventually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 21st, 2018 at 7:27 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Sherab said:

This does not mean that there is no foundational layer.

Malcolm wrote:

Your ideas get worse by the second.

There is no foundational layer at all.

Sherab said:

You have a habit of making assertions rather than arguments.

Instead of the truncated version that you are making your assertion on, this is the full version of what I said. Argue against that please.

"This does not mean that there is no foundational layer. Why? This is how I see it: because the perception where the final layer of things is not perceived is still dualistic.

The foundational layer is not perceived through dualistic perception. Also, the ultimate is said to be indescribable and thus cannot be said to be a thing as understood by a dualistic mind."

Malcolm wrote:

The mere fact that you 1) assert a foundation 2) assert that it cannot be described or understood with the mind puts your views outside the pale of the Buddhadharma.

I leave you to your conceptualizations. I won't be continuing this discussion with you any longer.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 21st, 2018 at 7:00 AM

Title: Re: Does the Buddha's Omniscient Mind Pervade the Universe Like Space?

Content:

Wayfarer said:

There is no 'that', right? When words such as 'pervading' are used, then you try to imagine 'what can that be'? But there is no objective reality there to know or grasp. That is one of the key characteristics of 'realisation' - realising the real nature of present reality which is not a 'that'. Which is why 'un-knowing' is fundamental, and why Prajñāpāramitā is the 'way of negation'.

Malcolm wrote:

Pervade simply means, "present in every instance." In this case, heat pervades all fires, meaning, in all instances of fire, there is heat.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 21st, 2018 at 6:56 AM

Title: Re: Killing & eating meat

Content:

pueraeternus said:

So by your logic there is no need to avoid products made by child labor, or fair trade, or companies that indulges in abominable practices. If we can't even activate ourselves to lessen the monstrous slavery and killing of sentient beings we can clearly see their suffering, then what kind of Bodhisattvas are we? Why use the excuse of insects and worms to continue encouraging the abominable factory farming practices? Even if there is still the problem of sentient beings dying in the farming process, we can at least reduce the deaths and hellish lives of billions of livestock, not even talking about the reduction of said insect death by reducing the need to grow feed for the livestock. And of course since we are at it, let's discount the fact that reducing livestock is one of the key elements in slowing down climate change due to the enormous amount of methane gas byproduct and massive loss of vegetation to support that industry.

Malcolm wrote:

These issues are distinct from what is permissible or prohibited to practitioners.
Liberation through diet and clothes was not something the Buddha taught.

As to the hellish lives of billions of livestock, humanity has shown that animals that we use are more immune to extinction than those for which we find no use at all.

If and when we cease to use domestic animals for food, their very population will swiftly decline. This may indeed be a desiderata for some.

I also know that karma is unerring and that all that suffering is a result of karma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 21st, 2018 at 5:27 AM

Title: Re: Killing & eating meat

Content:

pueraeternus said:

In the modern age, this is obviously not the case, even for the vast majority of monastics. When we choose to buy and consume meat, we are consciously making a choice. I find it strange that for people who constantly laud the merits of a penetrative wisdom suddenly become doctrinaire when it comes to vegetarianism.

Malcolm wrote:

In this case buying meat is no different than buying milk, cheese, honey, cotton, wool, etc. If one should object to one, one must object to all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 21st, 2018 at 2:34 AM

Title: Re: Karma and killing sentient beings

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

Whatever being "lived" in that sausage at the butcher shop moved out a long time ago, way before you got there.

Is there a difference between setting fire to me now, while I am alive, and cremating my body after I die?

Mantrik said:

Then why whisper mantras over food?

Surely we are then wasting our time if there is no karmic link to the beings which died to bring it to us?

Malcolm wrote:

We use the meat as a means of directing our attention to that being. The mind is not obstructed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 20th, 2018 at 6:49 AM

Title: Re: Khenchen Pema Sherab Rinpoche

Content:

Aryjna said:

I wanted to ask if anyone can provide some information on Khenchen Pema Sherab Rinpoche. I just read that he will be giving several empowerments from the Longchen Nyingtik in London in May. It seems like a good opportunity but it is difficult to find anything more about him online than what is in the wiki.

<http://palyul.eu/uk/>

http://www.rigpawiki.org/index.php?title=Khenchen_Pema_Sherab

Malcolm wrote:

As with all Lamas you don't know well, caveat emptor. I would spend time taking their non Vajrayāna teachings first.

Aryjna said:

In this case it doesn't seem possible. The only really reliable way is probably to have a reference from a teacher you trust.

Malcolm wrote:

I am sure he is fine. But in general, it is best if one can get some kind of take on the teacher before making serious Vajrayāna commitments.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 20th, 2018 at 6:28 AM

Title: Re: Khenchen Pema Sherab Rinpoche

Content:

Aryjna said:

I wanted to ask if anyone can provide some information on Khenchen Pema Sherab Rinpoche. I just read that he will be giving several empowerments from the Longchen Nyingtik in London in May. It seems like a good opportunity but it is difficult to find anything more about him online than what is in the wiki.

<http://palyul.eu/uk/>

http://www.rigpawiki.org/index.php?title=Khenchen_Pema_Sherab

Malcolm wrote:

As with all Lamas you don't know well, caveat emptor. I would spend time taking their non Vajrayāna teachings first.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 20th, 2018 at 6:26 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Sherab said:

This does not mean that there is no foundational layer.

Malcolm wrote:

Your ideas get worse by the second.

There is no foundational layer at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 20th, 2018 at 5:50 AM

Title: Re: Yantra Yoga compared to...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Postures like Kurma are mentioned by their Sanskrit name in the 12th century Lamdre Yantra text composed by Jetsun Dragpa Gyaltzen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 20th, 2018 at 5:06 AM

Title: Re: Karma and killing sentient beings

Content:

Mantrik said:

Oh yes, I see that. I guess it depends also upon the monk who is drawing the inference from what information they have. You are saying that there is correct inference and incorrect inference, but maybe all that is required is an honest inference that the meat may not be suitable to eat, even if the connection is indirect, rather than dealing in absolutes?

Malcolm wrote:

Some people argue, erroneously in my estimation, that meat for sale is the same as meat ordered specifically for oneself. However, if someone feels that personally, that is up to them. But if they try to convince me I should accept that point of view I will refute it.

Mantrik said:

In terms of vipaka rather than personal preference, would you agree that both monks in my example are fine, as both either ate the meat or did not eat the meat according to their honest inference?

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, the same. No vipaka.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, March 20th, 2018 at 4:50 AM
Title: Re: Karma and killing sentient beings
Content:

Mantrik said:
It does, however, interpret one important aspect:
"Both versions say that the Buddha ..(whoc denies a rumour about his own conduct) clarifies that it is improper for his monastics to take meat when they have seen, heard, or suspected (by way of reasoning infer) that the animal has been killed for their sake.

So a reasonable inference that killing has happened 'for their sake' is important, not so much if the actually order it.

The importance for modern life is that it is therefore not necessary to see or hear the animal killed, only to have a reasonable suspicion that it was, and that there is a link to the meat offered, bought etc.

Malcolm wrote:
If you think a lobster has been killed because you order lobster, then it applies. If you are eating a steak however, there is no way that animal could be reasonably inferred to have been killed on your specific behalf.

When a beef cow is slaughtered in Denver, it is impossible for that butcher to know who will consume it unless you ordered it from the butcher himself. Likewise, if an ancient villager bought some meat that had been slaughtered the day before, when offered to a monk or nun, they can accept it.

This is a completely different issue from whether or not there should be abattoirs at all.

However, as long as we live in societies dominated by non-buddhists there will always be meat readily available. Thus, eating meat or not is a personal choice entirely unrelated to karma as long as one does not order, see, or know that animal was killed specifically for oneself, as in ordering a lobster and unlike ordering a streak.

Mantrik said:
Oh yes, I see that. I guess it depends also upon the monk who is drawing the inference from what information they have. You are saying that there is correct inference and incorrect inference, but maybe all that is required is an honest inference that the meat may not be suitable to eat, even if the connection is indirect, rather than dealing in absolutes?

Malcolm wrote:

Some people argue, erroneously in my estimation, that meat for sale is the same as meat ordered specifically for oneself. However, if someone feels that personally, that is up to them. But if they try to convince me I should accept that point of view I will refute it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 20th, 2018 at 4:24 AM

Title: Re: Can a complete beginner benefit from Dzogchen practice?

Content:

smcj said:

Lama Norlha wouldn't allow his people to do solitary retreats because without irritating people to provoke your defilements you might believe you're getting somewhere. With irritation you see how your mind really is.

Malcolm wrote:

From personal experience I can tell you that when you are in solitary retreat you can find all kinds of things irritating.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 20th, 2018 at 4:22 AM

Title: Re: Karma and killing sentient beings

Content:

Mantrik said:

It does, however, interpret one important aspect:

"Both versions say that the Buddha ..(whoc denies a rumour about his own conduct) clarifies that it is improper for his monastics to take meat when they have seen, heard, or suspected (by way of reasoning infer) that the animal has been killed for their sake.

So a reasonable inference that killing has happened 'for their sake' is important, not so much if the actually order it.

The importance for modern life is that it is therefore not necessary to see or hear the animal killed, only to have a reasonable suspicion that it was, and that there is a link to the meat offered, bought etc.

Malcolm wrote:

If you think a lobster has been killed because you order lobster, then it applies. If you are eating a steak however, there is no way that animal could be reasonably inferred to have been killed on your specific behalf.

When a beef cow is slaughtered in Denver, it is impossible for that butcher to know who will consume it unless you ordered it from the butcher himself. Likewise, if an ancient villager bought some meat that had been slaughtered the day before, when offered to a monk or nun, they can accept it.

This is a completely different issue from whether or not there should be abattoirs at all.

However, as long as we live in societies dominated by non-buddhists there will always be meat readily available. Thus, eating meat or not is a personal choice entirely unrelated to karma as long as one does not order, see, or know that animal was killed specifically for oneself, as in ordering a lobster and unlike ordering a steak.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 20th, 2018 at 4:04 AM

Title: Re: Does the Buddha's Omniscient Mind Pervade the Universe Like Space?

Content:

Matt J said:

That sounds like the Buddha is omnipresent. This is how the Vedantins describe Brahman.

Malcolm wrote:

Emptiness pervades all phenomena.

The buddhas realize emptiness without any trace of knowledge obscuration.

Therefore, their unobscured knowledge pervades everything that is empty.

The difference is that what pervades phenomena is not buddhas. Emptiness is that which pervades phenomena, in other words, all phenomena are empty.

When we say pervades, we mean that all phenomena are similarly empty, just as all fires are similarly hot. It is not that there is one emptiness without a second that pervades all phenomena. And even emptiness is just a convention.

A Buddha is not omnipresent, they are unobstructed. There is a difference, subtle, but a difference that is important.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 20th, 2018 at 4:02 AM

Title: Re: Yantra Yoga compared to...

Content:

jbaumannmontilla said:

I also always wondered about this. I study Hatha yoga in Krishnamacharya lineage and also follow CNN. I never delved too deeply into Yantra Yoga because it seemed a little too hard physically for me. But I was stuck by similarities between Yantra Yoga and Krishnamacharya's approach . It seems that in YY the asanas are arranged and linked into vinyasas and that also that they are coordinated closely with pranayama, and with an emphasis on ujjayi. Krishnamacharya's approach to asana and pranayama seems very similar, although conceptually and spiritually he was basing himself in Yoga Sutra. It seems like academic consensus now is that Krishnamacharya was deeply influenced by European physical culture, but I always wondered if he was influenced by trulkor and tsa lung as well. Krishnamacharya claimed to have studied extensively in Tibet and Nepal, a claim which which academics seem to scoff at.

Malcolm wrote:

Krishnamacharya spent some time in Muktinatha in Nepal, close to the Tibetan border. For him, it was Tibet, Bhotia, as Tibet is called by Indians.

I mean, Indians regard Kailash as part of India, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 20th, 2018 at 3:50 AM

Title: Re: Can a complete beginner benefit from Dzogchen practice?

Content:

florin said:

Some of these people who have done several retreats have been scarred by their experiences and left and never came back.

Some have benefited tremendously but very few.

Aryjna said:

I've heard this before a few times here, and it sounds quite strange. How can it be that they were scarred, the result should have been the opposite.

florin said:

Let's not cling to "should". These retreats, especially when you are cooped up with 10 or 20 other people of all kinds of inclinations temperaments and knowledge can be terribly intense and unpleasant. But some fare better than others.

I only did one month of nyunye retreat and by the end of it i felt like i finished a 10 years prison sentence.

How about 4 years?

Malcolm wrote:

I did a 3.5 year solitary retreat. It was great. On the other hand, I had a bit of difficulty adjusting to normal life when I got out, but even so, it was very much worth it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 20th, 2018 at 3:48 AM

Title: Re: Karma and killing sentient beings

Content:

Mantrik said:

Well, let's take it one aspect at a time. I think there are 2 aspects to this:

1. Is he correct that the original Pali in the Jivaka Sutta did not contain the 'slaughtered for oneself' qualifying clause, and are there contemporary Sanskrit texts which support or undermine this assumption?

Malcolm wrote:

This paper undermines the assertion of your friend:

<http://dharmafarer.org/wordpress/wp-content/uploads/2013/04/43.4-Majjhima-Jivaka-S-m55-piya.pdf>

Mantrik said:

2. How does that apply to the Three Vows and those who practice according to them - is the vipaka going to be different for each of the three?

Malcolm wrote:

The consumption of meat is permitted for śrāvakas; forbidden for bodhisattvas, and permitted for those who practice inner tantras (but prohibited for those who follow outer tantras).

Mantrik said:

Well, it depends on one's perspective. If you regard the 3 Vows as applicable to different and to some extent (containing) discrete forms of Buddhism, one may argue that those Hinayana monastic rules are only applicable to them. If however, you regard all later forms as revisions and developments of an original set of (Pali) teachings, then you are more likely to form the view that they also amended things in an 'attempt to justify their appetite for the flesh and blood of animals'.

Malcolm wrote:

The three vows are related to the path that one follows. The higher vow transforms the lower vow. Thus śrāvakas are absolutely forbidden from handling money, owning property, killing sentient beings, and drinking alcohol. Bodhisattvas may handle money, own property, and even kill sentient beings, if warranted and drink alcohol, but are prohibited from eating meat. Practitioners of inner tantras are permitted to handle money, own property, kill sentient beings if warranted, drink alcohol, and eat meat.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 20th, 2018 at 2:30 AM

Title: Re: Karma and killing sentient beings

Content:

Mantrik said:

Another perspective on this from a Jonangpa Lama friend:

"In an attempt to justify their appetite for the flesh and blood of animals, some individuals allege that the Buddha permitted the consumption of meat under three conditions. This is a patently specious claim.

The Pali text of the Jivaka Sutta, the putative source of the infamous ‘three purities’ argument, states:

“I say that there are three instances in which meat should not be eaten: when it is seen, heard, or suspected. I say that meat should not be eaten in those three instances.

“I say that there are three instances in which meat may be eaten: when it is not seen, not heard, and not suspected. I say that meat may be eaten in these three instances.”

Clearly, the Buddha is stipulating here that if a monk inadvertently consumes meat that has been placed in his begging bowl, he is not at fault. His action is pure. However, if he sees, hears, or even suspects that there is animal flesh in his bowl, he must not eat it.

Later commentators gratuitously inserted the phrase “that the living being has been slaughtered for oneself” after each repetition of the word ‘suspected’. The phrase does not appear in the original Pali text. It is a spurious addition, making it seem as if the Buddha allowed his monks to eat meat when the animal was not expressly killed to feed them, or at least when they did not see, hear, or suspect it."

Malcolm wrote:

This is a mistaken point of view. It is not correct at all. Your Jonang Lama friend needs to read Sapan's Three Vows as well as Bhavaviveka's perspective on the issue. Of course, Madhyamakas in general regard Tathāgatagarbha sutras as provisional as well.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 20th, 2018 at 1:07 AM

Title: Re: Yantra Yoga compared to...

Content:

Snowbear said:

You mentioned separate lineages of Bairo Trulkhor. Who else is it that practices it?

Malcolm wrote:

It is fairly widespread in Eastern Tibet.

climb-up said:

And it's the same form as ChNN teaches? Same yantra movements and everything?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. Of course variations creep in, Tibetan tend to practice these with much more vigor than westerners. This is partially because it is so damn cold in Tibet

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 20th, 2018 at 1:05 AM

Title: Re: Can a complete beginner benefit from Dzogchen practice?

Content:

smcj said:

What do you know now that you wish you had understood when you started?

Malcolm wrote:

Everything I know now and everything I will learn.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 19th, 2018 at 11:11 PM

Title: Re: Can a complete beginner benefit from Dzogchen practice?

Content:

smcj said:

... I'd not heard of Western Kagyupas doing 12+ except for Tenzin Palmo.

Malcolm wrote:

Whose main practice is actually Sakya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 19th, 2018 at 10:25 PM

Title: Re: Response to Bernie

Content:

Simon E. said:

...Wendi Deng who was and apparently still is, a tool of the P.R.C.

Malcolm wrote:

And a close friend of Ivanka Trump.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 19th, 2018 at 10:23 PM

Title: Re: Yantra Yoga compared to...

Content:

Snowbear said:

Does anyone practice Bairo in the context of completion stage today or is it for the most part a stand-alone set of exercises that anyone can do?

Malcolm wrote:

Bairo Trulkhor also has various pranayāmas, and a kind of tummo. But no creation stage.

Snowbear said:

You mentioned separate lineages of Bairo Trulkhor. Who else is it that practices it?

Malcolm wrote:

It is fairly widespread in Eastern Tibet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 19th, 2018 at 9:38 PM

Title: Re: Can a complete beginner benefit from Dzogchen practice?

Content:

smcj said:

Those are called “NgonDro”? If so, then ok.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, they are also called preliminaries (sngon 'gro).

In Dzogchen proper, the so-called tantic preliminaries (prostrations, etc.) are considered part of the common preliminaries; whereas the preliminary practices unique to Dzogchen are called uncommon preliminaries.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 19th, 2018 at 12:11 PM

Title: Re: Yantra Yoga compared to...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It definitely comes from Adzom Drukpa.

Snowbear said:

How did ChNN receive it from Adzom Drukpa?

Malcolm wrote:

Adzom Drugpa > Orgyen Tenzin > ChNN

I am not sure from whom Adzom obtained it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 19th, 2018 at 12:08 PM

Title: Re: Can a complete beginner benefit from Dzogchen practice?

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

What exactly would a beginner be practicing first ?

I consider myself a beginner. I had direct pointing out via webcast. Attended a few other webcasts.

Attended the Lung (VIA WEBCAST) for Malcolms book, BUDDHA IN THIS LIFETIME..

But i don't know what i should be doing as far as practice.

Is it necessary to become a MEMBER of the Dzogchen community ?

THANK YOU

Malcolm wrote:

Ngondro.

chimechodra said:

Tantric or Dzogchen ngondro?

Malcolm wrote:

Gathering accumulations and purification.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 19th, 2018 at 6:28 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Sherab said:

Here is my interpretation of what you are saying that Tsongkhapa was saying. Correct me if I am wrong:

(1) Existence that is free from the extremes of eternalism and nihilism refutes existence in the ultimate (i.e. eternalism and nihilism).

(2) Non-existence of eternalism and nihilism refutes non-existence in the relative.

In other words, in (1), when you examine phenomena, they look like endless continuums from past to the future. This refutes that kind of existence that are eternalism or nihilism. In (2) Since the forms of existence as represented by eternalism and nihilism do not exist, it refutes these kinds of existence in the relative. The kind of existence in the relative is therefore a form of existence that is neither eternalism nor nihilism.

If they above is correct, then there is no contradiction with my position.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. That is not what Tsongkhapa means.

Sherab said:

Explain to me what Tsongkhapa meant then, giving your definitions of what existence and non-existence means in the said context.

Malcolm wrote:

Not existing in the ultimate means the ultimate truth is a simple nonaffirming negation of the inherent existence of things. Not non-existent in the relative means conventional existence is not rejected.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 19th, 2018 at 3:58 AM

Title: Re: Is Bon Buddhадharma?

Content:

Simon E. said:

Do they say that they are Buddhists Malcolm? Or are they divided on the issue?

Malcolm wrote:

The meaning of Bon and Buddhism is the same. The object of refuge is different. Their object of refuge is Tonpa Shenrab, who was, in the opinion of most western scholars, mythologized into a Buddha (sangs gyas).

The main dispute between Buddhists and Bonpos is over history, not doctrine. The main criticism of Bon is that they just copied Indian Buddhism and reworked it, changing the names here and there.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 19th, 2018 at 3:39 AM

Title: Re: Can a complete beginner benefit from Dzogchen practice?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You can also just do Ati Guru Yoga. Or you can do both.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

How exactly do you practice Ati Guru Yoga ?

I think doing both would be beneficial for me...

Malcolm wrote:

Start with ngondro.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 19th, 2018 at 3:28 AM

Title: Re: Can a complete beginner benefit from Dzogchen practice?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Start over fresh if you did not get very far, otherwise, pick up where you left off.

Kunga Lhadzom said:
OK...

I only did about 300 then i read something that let me cheat...so i thought i got away with it...

Malcolm wrote:
You can also just do Ati Guru Yoga. Or you can do both.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, March 19th, 2018 at 3:22 AM
Title: Re: Can a complete beginner benefit from Dzogchen practice?
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Ngondro.

Kunga Lhadzom said:
Oy vey....

i started it many years ago...but stopped....so i just pick up where i left off or start over... ?

Thank you Malcolm

Malcolm wrote:
Start over fresh if you did not get very far, otherwise, pick up where you left off.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, March 19th, 2018 at 3:16 AM
Title: Re: Is Bon Buddhadharma?
Content:
Simon E. said:
Interesting. Thanks J.D. I have had no flesh and blood experience at all of Bonpos. I noticed a Bon thread recently and realised that I had literally no idea what they are about.

Malcolm wrote:
For all intents and purposes, they are Buddhists.

The general scholarly consensus is that they borrowed many Buddhist teachings and recast them into a narrative reflecting Tibetan cultural debts to Zhang Zhung and Central Asia, rather than India. Naturally, Bonpos in general dispute the latter claim and claim on the contrary that Indian Buddhism is ultimately derived from Bon, similar to the way Taoists claimed that the Buddha was a student of Lao Tzu.

The Bonpos preserve a lot of lore important to understanding many Tibetan religious ideas that do not derive necessarily from India, China, or other sources.

The study of Tibetology is incomplete without the study of Bon.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 19th, 2018 at 3:13 AM

Title: Re: Can a complete beginner benefit from Dzogchen practice?

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

What exactly would a beginner be practicing first ?

I consider myself a beginner. I had direct pointing out via webcast. Attended a few other webcasts.

Attended the Lung (VIA WEBCAST) for Malcolms book, BUDDHA IN THIS LIFETIME..

But i don't know what i should be doing as far as practice.

Is it necessary to become a MEMBER of the Dzogchen community ?

THANK YOU

Malcolm wrote:

Ngondro.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 19th, 2018 at 3:06 AM

Title: Re: Does the Buddha's Omniscient Mind Pervade the Universe Like Space?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Emptiness pervades all phenomena.

The buddhas realize emptiness without any trace of knowledge obscuration.

Therefore, their unobscured knowledge pervades everything that is empty.

Matt J said:

So Dr. Berzin states that an omniscient Buddha mind pervades the universe like space.

I'm not sure what to make of it.

Thoughts?

The Buddhas are those who have eliminated all their confusion so that they are able to use their potentials fully to benefit others. On the definitive level, the safe direction of the Buddhas is provided by their dharmakaya or bodies encompassing everything - namely, their omniscient awareness and its nature, both of which encompass everything. The rupakaya or body of forms that Buddhas manifest serve as the interpretable level, while Buddha statues and paintings are the representation of the first precious gem.

From Gelug-Kagyu Tradition of Mahamudra

Also:

A Buddha's omniscient mind pervades all knowable objects and, from an anuttarayoga tantra point of view, is purely a subtlest clear light level of mind. Since a Buddha's subtlest wind and subtlest clear light mind have the same essential nature (ngo-bo gcig), a Buddha's subtlest wind also pervades all phenomena – for example, all phenomena that are forms of physical phenomena (gzugs, Skt. rupa, form). This is similar to space (nam-mkha') pervading all forms of physical phenomena. Taking the four elements – earth, water, fire, and wind – of some form of physical phenomena, such as the table, as a basis for imputation (gdags-gzhi), we can impute not only space on that basis, but also the person (gang-zag) of a Buddha.

But since the referent object of the labeling (btags-chos) and the basis for imputation are not the same, then just as the table is not the space of the table, so too the Buddha that we meditate on as being imputed on the basis of the table is not the table. Thus, we can meditate on the Buddha as being imputed on everything and everywhere, but that does not make Buddha identical to the universe or Buddha as being the size of the universe. Thus, the Buddhist assertion of a Buddha's omniscient mind pervading the universe is not equivalent to the non-Buddhist Samkhya and Vaisheshika assertions of persons (skyes-bu, Skt. purusha) or "souls" (bdag, Skt. atman; selves) pervading the universe and being static, partless, and existing independently of a body or mind.
<https://studybuddhism.com/en/advanced-studies/lam-rim/the-five-aggregates/physical-bodies-of-buddhas-and-arhats>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 19th, 2018 at 12:07 AM

Title: Re: Killing & eating meat

Content:

seeker242 said:

And if someone can't see that animals need to be killed to get meat, then they must have some kind of brain damage.

Malcolm wrote:

You and I are using the term "see" differently. You are using it to mean "know." I am using the term in the sense of "personally witness."

The Buddha forbade the consumption of meat of an animal that one had personally witnessed being slaughtered.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 18th, 2018 at 11:52 PM

Title: Re: Karma and killing sentient beings

Content:

Vasana said:

So is there vipaka if you purchase meat from a farmer or a company who you know will put some of that money into further killing of which it is probable you will also purchase in the future?

Isn't any support of another's actions still support?

Malcolm wrote:

If you make this argument, let's say you buy a tomato from a grocer. And that grocer also sells meat, milk, cheese, etc., all products that require killing (cows have to be impregnated and with calves to make milk). If you take seriously this reasoning you have presented, you have to accept that spending any money at a grocers is "support."

I suggest that there are two issues, which are unrelated to one another. One concerns the ethics of animal husbandry over humanitarian and environmental issues. This is a valid discussion on its own merits. It is demonstrable that industrial agriculture is toxic and bad for the environment in general. It is demonstrable that the conditions of the animals in Concentrated Animal Feed Operations (CAFO) are dreadful.

The second, and the one that concerns us here, is to what extent we bear a karmic burden if we eat meat or participate in an economy in which this practice of eating meat is present. And what, if any impact meat eating has on our path. The latter issue is resolved via an examination of three vows. Analyzed this way, meat is permissible for śrāvakas, forbidden for Mahāyanīs, and permissible for those who practice Niruttarayogatantra (but not practitioner of the three lower tantras).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 18th, 2018 at 11:27 PM

Title: Re: Killing & eating meat

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There are always sentient beings underfoot, every step we take. Just because we cannot see them does not mean they are not there.

seeker242 said:

"Not seeing them" isn't applicable because everyone sees animals are killed to make meat. And then they try to pretend like they have no responsibility in the matter.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course it is applicable.

And no, everyone does not see animals being killed for food. These days, in modern western society, the only people who see animals being killed for food are those who work in abattoirs, etc. The average person never sees animals being killed for food.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 18th, 2018 at 7:52 AM

Title: Re: Bonpo Trigram Legends

Content:

Lhasa said:

So we don't count the Dog when beginning, number 1 would be Bird/garuda?

Also, this year, 2018, I am 67, and that gives me a dragon sign. In three days I'll be 68, and that will change the sign, which one is correct?

Malcolm wrote:

Your animal is based on Tibetan new years, not your western birthday. If you were born in 1951, you were born in the female metal hare year.

Lhasa said:

1950

Malcolm wrote:

Then male metal tiger

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 18th, 2018 at 7:44 AM

Title: Re: the great vegetarian debate

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

But it is not a definitive teaching from a Vajrayana perspective, as both Sakya Pandita and ChNN point out. The Hevajra Tantra states "those with Samaya drink alcohol, those with compassion eat meat."

Thomas Amundsen said:

I found this video recently, which is quite relevant to the conversation. Khenpo Sodargye of Larung Gar says that the "not seen, heard, or suspected" three purities are essentially a lower teaching and that the Mahayana teachings of vegetarianism are definitive. For this reason, Khenpo asks his students to be vegetarian and apparently Larung Gar is entirely or mostly a vegetarian institution.

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e = document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s = document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); } https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 18th, 2018 at 7:41 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Tsongkhapa's point of view, that "existence" refutes existence in the ultimate, whereas "nonexistence" refutes nonexistence in the relative is infinitely preferable to your formulation.

Sherab said:

Here is my interpretation of what you are saying that Tsongkhapa was saying. Correct me if I am wrong:

(1) Existence that is free from the extremes of eternalism and nihilism refutes existence in the ultimate (i.e. eternalism and nihilism).

(2) Non-existence of eternalism and nihilism refutes non-existence in the relative.

In other words, in (1), when you examine phenomena, they look like endless continuums from past to the future. This refutes that kind of existence that are eternalism or nihilism. In (2) Since the forms of existence as represented by eternalism and nihilism do not exist, it refutes these kinds of existence in the relative. The kind of existence in the relative is therefore a form of existence that is neither eternalism nor nihilism.

If they above is correct, then there is no contradiction with my position.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. That is not what Tsongkhapa means.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 18th, 2018 at 4:26 AM

Title: Re: Bonpo Trigram Legends

Content:

Lhasa said:

So we don't count the Dog when beginning, number 1 would be Bird/garuda?

Also, this year, 2018, I am 67, and that gives me a dragon sign. In three days I'll be 68, and that will change the sign, which one is correct?

Malcolm wrote:

Your animal is based on Tibetan new years, not your western birthday. If you were born in 1951, you were born in the female metal hare year.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 18th, 2018 at 4:22 AM

Title: Re: Bonpo Trigram Legends

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:
Malcolm wrote:

Kalacakra does not have the trigrams in it.
Well i thought always until now of yes. Maybe the under depicted photo, does not belong to the Kalachakra Tantra.

Kalachakra - 02.jpg

Malcolm wrote:
This diagram is not based on Kalacakra, the Kalacakra mantra is there for auspiciousness.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, March 18th, 2018 at 4:08 AM
Title: Karma and killing sentient beings
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
There is only vipaka if you see, hear of or order a sentient being killed for you.

Mantrik said:
Thanks. That is what I was seeking to clarify.

What if you confine it, beat it, skin it alive etc.....surely there must be vipaka from the karma of making other beings suffer that way?

Malcolm wrote:
Sure, if you personally do these things or directly order others to do them, then there is vipaka. But if you didn't, there is none, even if you see it happening.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, March 18th, 2018 at 3:39 AM
Title: Re: Bonpo Trigram Legends
Content:
kalden yungdrung said:
Tashi delek.

As a TCM practitioner, i am involved on a regular base with Taosm principles like Yin and Yang. The Pa kua is a fundamental part used in one of the 5 Chinese classical Chings, the I Ching the book of oracles.

Here it is clear that the Pa Kua is very old and has as well in TCM as Bon so its own history with nice examples.

What is very similar in both cultures is the turtle as the source of the Pa Kua.

Further interesting philosophy regarding Taoism would be the prime cause or the Wu Chi out of everything is originated.

That resembles very much the emptiness aspect known in Dzogchen etc.

kirtu said:

I'm stunned. BTW - Taoism is essentialist, at least in the interpretation of my former Taoist teacher (and presumably his teacher). Essentialist in this case means something close to atmanistic if not directly atmanistic (because along the way to enlightenment in Taoism the spirit is basically an essential element and it is further development using a kind of spiritual alchemy).

Anyway, that Bon also has an interpretation of Bagua is stunning and fascinating.

Kirt

kalden yungdrung said:

Tashi delek K,

Yes it is stunning and i asked one very educated Geshela today about the source of the Pa Kua / Ba gua and he assured me it was a teaching of Buddha Tönpa Shenrab Miwoche.

We have also a Chinese "Kung Fu" style Pa Kua which is a certain style which is stepped in circle patterns, with a certain palm technic which goes round. Practised this for a short time in my youth, never finished it.

Then we can consider that the story of the turtle is also known in Taoism as well the "founder" of that, the Medicine man dressed in herbal leaves, forgot his name. Would be around 3000 - 5000 B.Chr.

The I Ching is one of the best divination books i know and it was my first book together with the Tibetan book of the dying.

Here the 64 signs or trigrams can predict for me every situation and it never fails in the right prediction.

The person who likes to know, throws my 3 blessed silver coins and i tell the person what he/she will meet/experience etc.

I Ching never was wrong and the persons who consulted me know that the hexagram "knew" the question .

The answer was always to the point and never mistaken and i could give always the right story, cannot explain that, it goes automatic.

So the Pa Kua is a very powerful tool to predict and it never fails to do so, based on my 49 years experience with this I Ching.

Therefore i can believe it that the Pa Kua is used also elsewhere, like in China and i can imagine myself that the Pa Kua is of Bön origin.

Ok here we can have different meanings, but i am convinced that Bön was spread to China and Uddhiyana.

if the Pa Kua would be Chinese of origin, then the Kalachakra Tantra would also be a mixed up Tantra somehow and that is what i do not believe.

Malcolm wrote:

Kalacakra does not have the trigrams in it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 18th, 2018 at 3:36 AM

Title: Re: the great vegetarian debate

Content:

Simon E. said:

I think we all have to wrestle with the complexities of these issues..even when they appear to be clear cut. So, for example, you say that the insects are not intentionally killed in order to provide vegetables and fruit Mantrik.

I'm sorry but they are.

All commercial crops of vegetables, fruits and grains are treated with substances to kill insects. If they are grown on an organic farm they will be treated with Bordeaux mixture or nicotine or something similar.. which pass the criteria needed for the produce to be considered organic. But whose express useage is to kill invertebrates which otherwise will reduce yields considerably, in some cases the yield will be reduced to zero.

Obviously many invertebrates are killed unintentionally in order to produce food plants..but many others are killed with conscious intention.

Without organic insecticides, few brassicas would make it to the shops, due to caterpillars, and few potatoes would be free of wireworm.

What Situ R. et al are saying is that we in the west subconsciously assume that the life of a caterpillar is worth less than the life of a cow. Largely because they are smaller.

But a caterpillar avoids painful stimuli just as avidly as does a cow or sheep.

Mantrik said:

The insects are in the wrong place at the wrong time. The livestock have no choice.

Malcolm wrote:

No, in all of these cases it is the ripening of their own karma.

Mantrik said:

Now, we are in danger of conflating two issues. The issue is not about some perceived 'value' of each being's life, but their capacity to experience suffering etc.

Malcolm wrote:

Sentient beings are sentient beings. They experience pain and suffer.

Mantrik said:

To compare an insect's reaction to pain with a self-aware mammal and its anticipation of suffering, its life probably spent in misery in unnatural environments etc. is to completely ignore the facts. Unless you really think skinning a dog alive in a meat market is the same in suffering as treading on an ant.

Malcolm wrote:

This assumes insects are not self-aware (false) and bovine, etc., pain and suffering is somehow less trivial than the suffering of birds, insects and small mammals harmed in food production through dismemberment, poisoning, and crushing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 18th, 2018 at 3:32 AM

Title: Re: the great vegetarian debate

Content:

Mantrik said:

Well, I challenge that it is certain

Malcolm wrote:

No you don't.

Mantrik said:

but accept that it is likely. I can pick an apple and may not actually harm a sentient being, but the next day may crush an ants' nest and eat a maggot. Neither the insects nor the person can possibly know for sure what may happen as an UNINTENDED consequence. Again, if I buy veg or fruit I cannot possibly know what beings will be harmed when the store grows more.

Malcolm wrote:

It does not matter that you do not know the specific being being killed. It is sufficient to know that harm to sentient beings is an inevitable aspect of agricultural activity.

Mantrik said:

Since cattle and sheep also eat vegetation, this is added to the vipaka from meat production, and I can be absolutely certain that demand created for meat will result in killing.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. There is no vipaka from eating meat bought from a market.

Mantrik said:

So, I want to know if the vipaka of the vegetarian who may cause unintended deaths is the same as the vipaka of the meat eater who also causes those unintended deaths and in addition the planned and deliberate killing of beings for their flesh.

Malcolm wrote:

In fact, there is no vipaka at all in any these scenarios. There is only vipaka if you see, hear of or order a sentient being killed for you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 18th, 2018 at 2:36 AM

Title: Re: the great vegetarian debate

Content:

Mantrik said:

Can we clarify the aspect of karma and vipaka here?

If I participate in the process of planned meat production by ordering a whole carcass (as Simon gave as an example) I am pretty sure of my intention and that the animal was killed 'for me'. So my karma in ordering it is directly connected to the suffering, pain and death. It is absolutely connected if I kill the being whilst hunting of course.

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on whether one orders a carcass before or after it was killed. If was killed on your order, then you own that karma and its ripening. If not, then not.

Mantrik said:

If I buy meat, I can be sure the store will plan future slaughter on the basis of the demand I create with others who eat their meat. (The Olympics, for example, have huge breeding and slaughter plans based on previous demand at events.) So my karma in buying it is, at best, indirectly linked to killing. If I order the meat from a farm, for example, then it is as the first example, directly connected.

If I eat veg and fruit, some beings are killed in the process. However, and this is a big however, I did not plan to identify specific beings and knowingly kill them or order their deaths. I did not round them up and spray them or slice them up with a plough, they just happened to be there. So, is my action considered 'complete'?

Malcolm wrote:

You can be certain that all the food you buy involves harming sentient beings, and that in creating more demand for more food, you will be harming more sentient beings.

You cause suffering just by wearing clothes. Cotton, for example, is one of the most pesticide-heavy crops there is. When wool is sheared, millions of creatures are sliced in half, not to mention the suffering of the sheep.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 18th, 2018 at 2:30 AM

Title: Re: Killing & eating meat

Content:

seeker242 said:

And the question to ask now is: is causing unnecessary harm to others leading towards that end or away from that end?

Malcolm wrote:

If you step on insect while walking without being aware of it, will this lead you further to that end or away from it? Or is it irrelevant?

seeker242 said:

If you step somewhere knowing full well that stepping there will kill insects and you have an opportunity to step somewhere else, but you step there anyway, is that Irrelevant?

Malcolm wrote:

There are always sentient beings underfoot, every step we take. Just because we cannot see them does not mean they are not there.

seeker242 said:

The problem with the doctrine of Devadatta was that It didn't have anything to do with wanting to not harm animals.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure it did.

seeker242 said:

Vegan ideology doesn't involve trying to murder someone because you're jealous of them. Devadatta was jealous of the Buddha and that's all his doctrine was about.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is false. Devadatta wanted the rules of strict asceticism imposed because he was afraid the Buddha and monks would be criticized by the Jains.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 18th, 2018 at 2:24 AM

Title: Re: Bonpo Trigram Legends

Content:

Lhasa said:

This is really interesting, in the non-Bon tradition, I'm a metal Tiger....big difference.

Malcolm wrote:

You are also a metal tiger in Bon rtsi. There is virtually no difference between 'byung rtsi in Bön and Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 18th, 2018 at 2:22 AM

Title: Re: Bonpo Trigram Legends

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

In the Bön chart:

bird = dragon

ox is elephant.

Malcolm wrote:

No, bird is garuda in Bon elemental calculation. Note: I see you changed it.

Please consult my translation available from Chapur Rinpoche's site, done in collaboration with him when he gave a course a couple of years ago.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 17th, 2018 at 11:30 PM

Title: Re: Yantra Yoga compared to...

Content:

Snowbear said:

I understand it to be prep for completion stage practices in Kagyu, and done privately in a closed area. Is it customary to teach it that early and openly in Dzogchen?

Malcolm wrote:

Bairo Trulkhör does not require a creation stage, though at one time it may have been associated with Śrī Heruka (aka Yang dag) since it ultimately comes from Humkara.

M

Snowbear said:

Does anyone practice Bairo in the context of completion stage today or is it for the most part a stand-alone set of exercises that anyone can do?

Malcolm wrote:

Bairo Trulkhor also has various pranayāmas, and a kind of tummo. But no creation stage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 17th, 2018 at 6:36 AM

Title: Re: Response to Bernie

Content:

pemachophel said:

"Oh, I am not saying that it should not be kept within the confines of initiation. But the word "secret" in Dzogchen and Vajrayāna in general merely means that these principles are not known in lower vehicles, not that they are confidential like a top secret file."

the three teachers i'm thinking about kept dzogchen more secret than your description. no dzogchen until ngon-dro completed. one wouldn't even use the word rigpa.

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty hard to avoid using the word rig pa in a Dzogchen ngpondro.

Gathering accumulations and purification is a good thing. Different teachers have different approaches to how these things are bestowed. People have different karma, different experiences, and need different approaches. There is no one size fits all when it comes to Dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 17th, 2018 at 6:28 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Sherab said:

That does not mean that you get a free pass to be fast and loose with the rules of logic and valid reasoning.

Malcolm wrote:

All we need to do is show the opponents position is self-contradictory, as in your assertion there is an ultimate that is free from two extremes which is merely an affirmation of existence.

Tsongkhapa's point of view, that "existence" refutes existence in the ultimate, whereas "nonexistence" refutes nonexistence in the relative is infinitely preferable to your formulation.

Sherab said:

You keep refusing to accept that once existence and non-existence are properly defined and that when you work within those boundaries, you can no longer make your allegations against the analysis that I have presented, an analytical method that you have so far been unable to say is incorrect. All you did is just to dance around my arguments in order to avoid having to confront the logical inconsistency in your very own statements of the ultimate and the conventional.

Malcolm wrote:

Your definitions are not consistent with the definitions of these things in scripture.

It is natural that when we accept the opponents definitions in toto, he has already won. But your definition of ultimate truth is wrong from the outset.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 17th, 2018 at 6:20 AM

Title: Re: Killing & eating meat

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Since there is no mind in a steak in a market, when you cook it are you harming a sentient being or not?

practitioner said:

Of course steaks don't just appear out of thin air and end up in a market. There is real suffering that must occur to produce that steak. And if the market for steaks is minimized, the suffering of cows will be as well.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course tomatoes do not just appear out of thin air either. There is real suffering that must occur for the millions of insects, birds, and rodents that are poisoned, trapped, and otherwise killed in the course of the production of vegetables, etc., for human consumption too. If the market for tomatoes, etc., was minimized, the suffering of insects, rodents, and birds would be minimized as well.

If we stopped eating tomatoes from the market, and fruit, and everything else, all that suffering would be prevented, right? Or would it? No, because in general the nature of samsara is suffering, and animals have no way out of it at all.

It just isn't a simple, "Don't eat meat and everything will be hunky dory." This is why Buddha rejected Devadatta's desire to force the Sangha to be vegetarian.

For example, if one saves the fly, the spider starves. Whose suffering is more important, that of the fly or the spider?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 17th, 2018 at 5:37 AM

Title: Re: Killing & eating meat

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The only salient point is this: in Dharma, liberation is not predicated on one's diet. It is predicated on whether one is free of afflictions.

seeker242 said:

And the question to ask now is: is causing unnecessary harm to others leading towards that end or away from that end?

Malcolm wrote:

If you step on insect while walking without being aware of it, will this lead you further to that end or away from it? Or is it irrelevant? If you drive a car on a spring evening when you know millions of insects are flying around, is the harm you are certainly doing intentional or unintentional? Since there is no mind in a steak in a market, when you cook it are you harming a sentient being or not? If you heat your house at all with anything other than solar, are you harming all life on the planet or not?

The problem with Vegan ideology in Buddhadharma is that it is basically the doctrine of Devadatta. It is too extreme, and is not the middle way.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 17th, 2018 at 4:27 AM

Title: Re: Yantra Yoga compared to...

Content:

Snowbear said:

I understand it to be prep for completion stage practices in Kagyu, and done privately in a closed area. Is it customary to teach it that early and openly in Dzogchen?

Malcolm wrote:

Bairo Trulkhör does not require a creation stage, though at one time it may have been associated with Śrī Heruka (aka Yang dag) since it ultimately comes from Huṃkara.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 17th, 2018 at 3:54 AM

Title: Re: Response to Bernie

Content:

pemachophel said:

ime, whether dzogchen is kept secret or not depends on the individual teacher. i've had three teachers who kept dzogchen extremely secret even though it was being broadcast openly all around them.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, I am not saying that it should not be kept within the confines of initiation. But the word "secret" in Dzogchen and Vajrayāna in general merely means that these principles are not known in lower vehicles, not that they are confidential like a top secret file.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 17th, 2018 at 2:34 AM

Title: Re: Killing & eating meat

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The only salient point is this: in Dharma, liberation is not predicated on one's diet. It is predicated on whether one is free of afflictions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 17th, 2018 at 1:55 AM

Title: Re: Response to Bernie

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, apparently some received ideas are myths so perhaps a few myths have crept into your preferred narrative. Anyway, like I said, it doesn't really matter, have to run.

Malcolm wrote:

Alternately, like many before you, you have fallen for the "secrecy" marketing scheme. Worked wonders for Masonry too.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 17th, 2018 at 1:53 AM

Title: Re: Mohe Zhiguan Study Thread 摩訶止觀 Part 1

Content:

Queequeg said:

Thank you. That presently has little meaning for me, but I will keep that in mind as I get familiar with it.

Malcolm wrote:

The true aspect/false aspect debate within Yogacāra was whether or not mental experience corresponded with an external reality. The false aspectarians, generally considered the more profound system, argued there was no correspondence.

Queequeg said:

I don't know if you looked at it, but in Jikai's latest outline, he briefly discusses the Three Natures - Tri-Svabhava. Is that related to the debate?

Malcolm wrote:

The three natures is central to the debate. The question is whether the imputed nature's appearance has an external correlate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 17th, 2018 at 1:14 AM

Title: Re: Mohe Zhiguan Study Thread 摩訶止觀 Part 1

Content:

Queequeg said:

Out of curiosity, how do the Fa Hsiang Chinese writings compare with the Indian antecedents? Did you identify any differences?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, I have not really read anything other than the book recommended above. But it is pure, Indian Yogacāra from the middle period. A bit earlier than the true aspectarian-false aspectarian debates that came to dominate later Yogacāra discourse. As such, having read it, you will have no trouble with Bodhisattvabhūmi, Mahayānasamgraha, Madhyantavibhagabhasyaṃ and so forth.

Queequeg said:

Thank you. That presently has little meaning for me, but I will keep that in mind as I get familiar with it.

Malcolm wrote:

The true aspect/false aspect debate within Yogacāra was whether or not mental experience corresponded with an external reality. The false aspectarians, generally considered the more profound system, argued there was no correspondence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 17th, 2018 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: Yantra Yoga compared to...

Content:

Snowbear said:

There is an obvious parallel to modern transnational yoga's asanas in YY, which indicates to me that YY is not trulkhor in the traditional sense. When you say you were exposed to other trulkhor systems, do you mean like on YouTube?

Malcolm wrote:

The Lamdre Yantra system also has a system of 32 asanas that greatly resemble what we call Hathayoga. It's basic texts were codified in the 12th century.

YY is yantra in the traditional sense, actually. Whether it actually comes from Vairocana is a historical claim I cannot validate, but there are separate lineages of Bairo Trulkhor in Tibet, not just ChNN's. It definitely comes from Adzom Drukpa.

Snowbear said:

Do you know why ChNN felt OK to teach trulkhor openly?

Malcolm wrote:

He did so to see if people would be ready for his teachings in general. He was teaching Yantra in the early 70's in Italy, some years before he began to teach Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 17th, 2018 at 1:08 AM

Title: Re: Response to Bernie

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

The issue is not whether the existence of Dzogchen was secret or how large its associated literature is, but rather how rare it has been to receive the pointing out instructions or whatever.

Malcolm wrote:

Not rare at all. Instructions for ritual murder were and are much more restricted than any Dzogchen transmission. Then of course, any major treasure cycle must have three things: Guru, Avalokiteśvara, and Dzogchen.

dzogchungpa said:

This rarity may have varied historically, so citing certain specific cases is not sufficient. E.g., it is quite possible that there were more qualified students at various times etc.

Malcolm wrote:

In the 12th century, Nyangral Nyima Ozer states that after Chegom (early 12th century) the teaching of the 17 tantras were very wide spread in Tibet. There is simply no evidence that Dzogchen ever waned in popularity or was actually kept in the strictest of secrecy.

Finally, because Dzogchen was seen as controversial in the dominant monastic colleges of the day, it mainly spread outside monasteries among the laity, and the vast majority of Dzogchen literature, then as now, was committed to writing by lay tertons.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 16th, 2018 at 11:59 PM

Title: Re: Response to Bernie

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I'm quite willing to believe this but, just out of curiosity, how do you know this?

Malcolm wrote:

By reading Buddhist history and literature for the past 33 years?

dzogchungpa said:

Well, what did you read that shows that this was the case?

Malcolm wrote:

You mean is there one book that demonstrates this? No, but it is obvious when one reads through Tibetan history that Dzogchen was a very poorly kept secret for something so reserved, esoteric, and only for the elect. Dzogchen masters like Rigzin Godem had thousands of students, same with many popular tertons like Jatson Nying, Dudul Dorje, Jigme Lingpa, etc. For something so secret, it is amazing there is more literature on Dzogchen in Tibetan literature than any other tantric genre. I mean, if Dzogchen is so secret, how is it possible that 100,000 monks at Kathog attained rainbow body, as the story goes? Kathog was the earliest Nyimgma monastery, founded in the 12th century by Deshek Dampa, Phamgo Drukpa's younger brother.

That equals 100 monks a year for the past thousand years attaining rainbow body, 8.3 per month— one rainbow body every 3.6 days for the past thousand years!

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 16th, 2018 at 11:49 PM

Title: Re: Uncertain about Key Point of Tantra

Content:

sangyey said:

Hello,

I know that Tantra speaks about the unity of conventional and ultimate truth or the feature of there being the unity of this in one act of consciousness but I am uncertain if this is something that runs through all of Tantra or if it something that comes into play only during a specific phase. For example, if you are practicing the generation stage with the visualization of the deity and the mantra repetition besides merely focusing on the deity or the mantra do you try to have the two aspects unified or is it something that will only occur in a specific section of the practice?

Thank you.

Malcolm wrote:

When you are a beginner, you generally practice the two stages, creation (relative) and completion (ultimate), in stages. But the real intention is that the two stages be unified from the beginning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 16th, 2018 at 11:36 PM

Title: Re: Mohe Zhiguan Study Thread 摩訶止觀 Part 1

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The latter text is the basic text of the Hosso (Fa Hsiang) school. Enjoy reading it. I did.

If you want to understand the Indian antecedents, there are a number of basic Yogacāra texts in translation these days.

Queequeg said:

Out of curiosity, how do the Fa Hsiang Chinese writings compare with the Indian antecedents? Did you identify any differences?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, I have not really read anything other than the book recommended above. But it is pure, Indian Yogacāra from the middle period. A bit earlier than the true aspectarian-false aspectarian debates that came to dominate later Yogacāra discourse. As such, having read it, you will have no trouble with Bodhisattvabhūmi, Mahayānasamgraha, Madhyantavibhagabhasyaṃ and so forth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 16th, 2018 at 11:16 PM

Title: Re: Response to Bernie

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Maybe not so much a problem when Dzogchen mind point out/rigpa tsal wang was so rarely given, so secret, and so strict in both guru and student's qualification, while nowadays.....

The idea that this was rare or difficult to get is an institutional myth. Secrecy is Vajrayāna's main marketing tool.

dzogchungpa said:

I'm quite willing to believe this but, just out of curiosity, how do you know this?

Malcolm wrote:

By reading Buddhist history and literature for the past 33 years?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 16th, 2018 at 11:10 PM

Title: Re: Comparing idioms.

Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Sarva dukkham, Suffering everywhere.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, March 16th, 2018 at 10:43 PM
Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought
Content:
Matt J said:
I thought the four extremes were supposed to be exhaustive of conceptual positions.

Malcolm wrote:
Unless one turns that into a conceptual position.

There is nothing in the middle. Hence, this is why the "Freedom from Extremes" exponents report "gnas lug med pa," i.e., no reality.

Sherab does not seem to understand that all theism can be rebutted by Buddhapalita's simple argument: "Arising from self is invalid because arising would be purposeless and endless."

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, March 16th, 2018 at 10:33 PM
Title: Re: Response to Bernie
Content:
narraboth said:
It always puzzles me that, how come people who actually received mind instruction and 'got it' ever possible to stand up against that certain guru, as DJKR said 'you owe him the world for it'? Does that supposedly greatest moment so insignificant for some people, that they think when they find out the certain guru behaved badly, they don't owe that guru that favour anymore? Or actually it's so insignificant, because it was given in a wrong way, therefore insignificant for students?

Malcolm wrote:
People overrate their own capacity to "get it."

narraboth said:
When we need to seriously talk about samaya based on text and commentaries, including unconventional pointing-out instruction really make defining samaya establishing and breakage quite difficult.

Malcolm wrote:
This is all very clearly explained in tantras such as the Rigpa Rangshar. 1) A qualified guru is indispensable. 2) Empowerments are indispensable 3) Protecting the samaya one receives from empowerment is indispensable. 4) Gurus can break samaya, and if so, the breach is irreparable.

narraboth said:

Maybe not so much a problem when Dzogchen mind point out/rigpa tsal wang was so rarely given, so secret, and so strict in both guru and student's qualification, while nowadays.....

Malcolm wrote:

The idea that this was rare or difficult to get is an institutional myth. Secrecy is Vajrayāna's main marketing tool.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 16th, 2018 at 8:40 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka arguments are not formal proofs in logic. They are rebuttals of other's positions.

Sherab said:

That does not mean that you get a free pass to be fast and loose with the rules of logic and valid reasoning.

Coëmgenu said:

The four extremes, though, in a way, are logic to a certain extent, inasmuch as anything that one could "logically" come up with is included within those extremes.

Affirmation

Negation

Some combination of both

Suggesting "something else" as the solution.

The "logic" of Madhyamaka is in its consistency and internal justifications. Ultimately it is working with what is essentially a "illogical" proposition. Depending on how one views "logical", the entire Buddhadharma is illogical.

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamakas do not make ultimate propositions at all. They merely show the flaws of others ultimate propositions. Thus we have no need to demonstrate any internal coherency since we are merely dismantling the propositions of others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 16th, 2018 at 8:40 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka arguments are not formal proofs in logic. They are rebuttals of other's positions.

Sherab said:

That does not mean that you get a free pass to be fast and loose with the rules of logic and valid reasoning.

Malcolm wrote:

All we need to do is show the opponents position is self-contradictory, as in your assertion there is an ultimate that is free from two extremes which is merely an affirmation of existence.

Tsongkhapa's point of view, that "existence" refutes existence in the ultimate, whereas "nonexistence" refutes nonexistence in the relative is infinitely preferable to your formulation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 16th, 2018 at 8:34 AM

Title: Re: Yantra Yoga compared to...

Content:

Snowbear said:

There is an obvious parallel to modern transnational yoga's asanas in YY, which indicates to me that YY is not trulkhor in the traditional sense. When you say you were exposed to other trulkhor systems, do you mean like on YouTube?

Malcolm wrote:

The Lamdre Yantra system also has a system of 32 asanas that greatly resemble what we call Hathayoga. It's basic texts were codified in the 12th century.

YY is yantra in the traditional sense, actually. Whether it actually comes from Vairocana is a historical claim I cannot validate, but there are separate lineages of Bairo Trulkhor in Tibet, not just ChNN's. It definitely comes from Adzom Drukpa.

bryandavis said:

Malcom,

What dates do you put the root text of the trulkhor nyida khajor in the big yantra book?

Malcolm wrote:

No clue.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 16th, 2018 at 4:59 AM

Title: Re: Yantra Yoga compared to...

Content:

Snowbear said:

There is an obvious parallel to modern transnational yoga's asanas in YY, which indicates to me that YY is not trulkhor in the traditional sense. When you say you were exposed to other trulkhor systems, do you mean like on YouTube?

Malcolm wrote:

The Lamdre Yantra system also has a system of 32 asanas that greatly resemble what we call Hathayoga. It's basic texts were codified in the 12th century.

YY is yantra in the traditional sense, actually. Whether it actually comes from Vairocana is a historical claim I cannot validate, but there are separate lineages of Bairo Trulkhor in Tibet, not just ChNN's. It definitely comes from Adzom Drukpa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 16th, 2018 at 3:49 AM

Title: Re: Mohe Zhiguan Study Thread 摩訶止觀 Part 1

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Read Asanga:

http://www.bdkamerica.org/system/files/pdf/dBET_Beta_T1593_SummaryoftheGreatVehicle_2003.pdf?file=1&type=node&id=475

Hsüan Tsang and Vasubandhu:

http://www.bdkamerica.org/system/files/pdf/dBET_Alpha_ThreeTextsonConsciousnessOnly_1999.pdf?file=1&type=node&id=456

These are the roots.

Queequeg said:

Tip o'the hat, M.

Malcolm wrote:

The latter text is the basic text of the Hosso (Fa Hsiang) school. Enjoy reading it. I did.

If you want to understand the Indian antecedents, there are a number of basic Yogacāra texts in translation these days.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 16th, 2018 at 3:48 AM

Title: Re: Mohe Zhiguan Study Thread 摩訶止觀 Part 1

Content:

Queequeg said:

Do you have any recommendations for a Hosso primer? I'm working my way through Living Yogacara by Tagawa Shun'ei. Pretty accessible read, but not sure how its received generally. Any comments?

Malcolm wrote:

Read Asanga:

http://www.bdkamerica.org/system/files/pdf/dBET_Beta_T1593_SummaryoftheGreatVehicle_2003.pdf?file=1&type=node&id=475

Hsüan Tsang and Vasubandhu:

http://www.bdkamerica.org/system/files/pdf/dBET_Alpha_ThreeTextsonConsciousnessOnly_1999.pdf?file=1&type=node&id=456

These are the roots.

Queequeg said:

Tip o'the hat, M.

Malcolm wrote:

The latter text is the basic text of the Hosso (Fa Hsiang) school. Enjoy reading it. I did.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 16th, 2018 at 2:12 AM

Title: Re: Mohe Zhiguan Study Thread 摩訶止觀 Part 1

Content:

jikai said:

Hosso

Queequeg said:

Do you have any recommendations for a Hosso primer? I'm working my way through Living Yogacara by Tagawa Shun'ei. Pretty accessible read, but not sure how its received generally. Any comments?

Malcolm wrote:

Read Asanga:

http://www.bdkamerica.org/system/files/pdf/dBET_Beta_T1593_SummaryoftheGreatVehicle_2003.pdf?file=1&type=node&id=475

Hsüan Tsang and Vasubandhu:

http://www.bdkamerica.org/system/files/pdf/dBET_Alpha_ThreeTextsonConsciousnessOnly_1999.pdf?file=1&type=node&id=456

These are the roots.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 16th, 2018 at 2:02 AM

Title: Re: Response to Bernie

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Alak Zenkar...

Malcolm wrote:

Is an amazing person. I had the opportunity to meet him briefly at the translation conference, and all I could really say was "Thank you for your dictionary."

dzogchungpa said:

Nice. DJKR seems to think very highly of him.

Malcolm wrote:

Everyone does. He is one of the most important lama alive today.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 16th, 2018 at 1:02 AM

Title: Re: Response to Bernie

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Alak Zenkar...

Malcolm wrote:

Is an amazing person. I had the opportunity to meet him briefly at the translation conference, and all I could really say was "Thank you for your dictionary."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 16th, 2018 at 1:01 AM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:
Sennin said:
Hi Malcolm,

I have to ask, is there a reason why the future volumes are in this order; is it according to how they are cataloged or particular topics?

Malcolm wrote:
I am working on the remaining one's with commentaries first.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, March 15th, 2018 at 11:51 PM
Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought
Content:

Sherab said:
Therefore in avoiding the extremes, we need to avoid only the two extremes of <E> and <N>, and then proceed to examine or analyse the region Not<E or N>.

Malcolm wrote:
Not <E or N> is also rejected as it is the fourth extreme.

You are confusing the Madhyamaka analysis of causal series, neither the same nor different, with the four extreme. This is the basis of most of your errors.

The reasoning why "not existent and not nonexistent" is rejected is because there are some who proposed that existents, while arising, have a phase where they are not existent and not nonexistent.

Madhyamaka arguments are not formal proofs in logic. They are rebuttals of other's positions.

Take the opening statement of MMK:

At no time, no where,
does any thing arise from (1) itself,
(2) from other than itself,
(3) from both, or (4) without a cause.

The first extreme is existence, arising from self; the second extreme is nonexistence, arising from other; the third extreme is both, arising from self and other; the final extreme is without cause, neither existence nor nonexistence.

All four extremes must be refuted. There is no short cut around this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 15th, 2018 at 11:32 PM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:

Arnoud said:

Thank you very much Malcolm. Truly extraordinary. How long did it take you to translate the whole text? Must have been a few days.

BTW, if anyone has lack of funds but has the requirements to read this text, please let me know. I will pay for three sets and shipping for those who can't afford it. It would be best if that was in the US as shipping overseas gets very expensive but let me know and I can see what I can do.

Malcolm wrote:

The initial draft of the Rangdrol took about three months, finished in Dec 2011, and subsequently, five drafts.

The initial draft of the Rangshar took about 6-7 months, that was completed in October 2012. It subsequently went through six drafts.

Then, after a hiatus where we worked on Buddhahood (originally translated over three months in the fall of 2012) to tighten up our lexicon, we returned to editing the Rangshar and Rangdrol which we envisioned publishing together.

After Wisdom agreed to publish this work, frankly due to the success of Buddhahood, I spent six months researching and writing essays to support the text, only 25 percent of which actually made it into these two volumes. In addition, the work altogether went through five rounds of editing with one of Wisdom's senior editors, Laura Cunningham. Wisdom had an expert in Sanskrit, Rory Lindsey, review all of the Sanskrit terms in the text for proper diacritics and accuracy, and it was proofread by Emily Bower, who used to be an editor at Shambhala but now works freelance. Right now it is being indexed, and all final changes will be implemented in April. So, from start to finish, this project will have taken eight years. Amazing. When I began to translate these two texts, I had no idea it would wind up this way.

We commissioned Tashi Mannon to do calligraphy for the two volumes. We also commissioned an original line image for Bhagavan Pawo Zhonnu Tobden, the teacher of both tantras, drawn according to how he is depicted in the Vima Nyinthig's Great Chronicle by a thangka painter, Urgyen Gyalpo, who lives and works in Toronto. The cover design was done by Gopa Campbell. The interior book design also is based on Gopa Campbell's original interior design for Buddhahood, but was executed by Wisdom's inhouse designer, Lyndsay D'Andrea.

Tulku Dakpa Rinpoche and Jean Luc Achard (a leading western authority on Dzogchen) kindly wrote forwards for the book. In addition, Sangye Khandro has expressed amazing kindness in giving her support to our efforts, and there are a couple of other translators who have kindly agreed to lend their support, but until they actually send us their blurbs, they should remain anonymous for now. Credit is also due to the original sponsors of the Rangdrol.

It is really amazing how many hands touched this book to bring it to completion. It has my name on it, but in reality it was a huge team effort. We owe a great debt to Daniel Aitken for his vision in seeing the possibility of bringing our work to the reading public.

At present Team Zangthal is working on volumes three, four, and five of the series. Volume three has been submitted, the Without Syllables and its commentary. We are editing drafts of volume four, the Blazing Lamp and its commentary, and I have begun work on volume five, the Six Dimensions and its commentary. (And all of this does not count all the other translation work I have been involved with over the past 7 years.)

Arnoud, your offer is very generous, thank you.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 15th, 2018 at 6:04 AM

Title: Re: Questions and Answers

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You've read chapter 19 of the MMK? This might put a dent in your supposition that time is "real."

Coëmgenu said:

I think there's a disconnect in usages of "real" here.

Time is conventional and/or saṃsāric is what is meant by "real" in Snowbear's usage I think.

Snowbear said:

Right. Reading that chapter isn't going to make my experience any different.

Malcolm wrote:

No, but realizing that chapter might poke a hole in your experience.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 15th, 2018 at 5:31 AM

Title: Re: Questions and Answers

Content:

Snowbear said:

Time is real...

Malcolm wrote:

You've read chapter 19 of the MMK? This might put a dent in your supposition that time is "real."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 15th, 2018 at 4:54 AM

Title: Re: Response to Bernie

Content:

heart said:

Paris and London where the best I think.

/magnus

Tiago Simões said:

The most fascinating thing is understanding that the things DJKR is saying in those videos is almost the same Malcolm as been saying here all along.

heart said:

Yes, there are similarities I agree.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

It is not surprising, we both were educated in Sakya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 15th, 2018 at 3:22 AM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

"Ācārya Malcolm Smith has certainly given the world a rare gift by presenting to English-reading Dzogchen practitioners in the worldwide Buddhist community this skilled translation of Volume One of the Seventeen Tantras, the Self-Arisen Vidyā Tantra, and Volume Two, its accompanying commentarial tantra, the Self-Liberated Vidyā Tantra. The exceptional features of each of the seventeen tantras of Ati Yoga's quintessential secret cycle of the upadeśa class are described with metaphors. The Self-Arisen Vidyā Tantra is described with the metaphor of the ocean. The eighty-six chapters of this oceanic treatise detail the pinnacle view, meditation, conduct, and result of all paths of Buddhадharma presented in this world. As the destined Dharma of this time, this translation is extremely timely. I wish to express deep gratitude to Malcolm and the wonderful Zangthal team for their noble aspiration and qualified capacity to finally bring these most precious teachings that exist in our world into the English language."

Sangye Khandro
Light of Berotsana Translation Group
Translator and Teacher

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, March 15th, 2018 at 2:25 AM
Title: Re: Questions and Answers
Content:

Queequeg said:
LOL. I'm asking the questions, and I'm being advised not to hurt myself thinking too much, accused of iconoclasm. I've never claimed anything more than my own fumbling path. Others, on the other hand...

Malcolm wrote:
No, I am merely pointing out that this statement, "Or they just concluded they will never get it, gave up asking questions, and just parrot what they hear, passing that off as knowledge" is as applicable to you as it is to anyone else.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, March 15th, 2018 at 2:22 AM
Title: Re: Questions and Answers
Content:

Queequeg said:
Oh, we can't look at the big picture? Which myopia should we limit ourselves to?

Malcolm wrote:
Is your picture the only "big picture?"

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, March 15th, 2018 at 2:07 AM
Title: Re: Questions and Answers
Content:
Queequeg said:
In the second watch of the night the Buddha awakened, he attained the second knowledge, which is most relevant here:

"When the mind was thus concentrated, purified, bright, unblemished, rid of defilement, pliant, malleable, steady, & attained to imperturbability, I directed it to the knowledge of the passing away & reappearance of beings. I saw — by means of the divine eye, purified & surpassing the human — beings passing away & re-appearing, and I discerned how they are inferior & superior, beautiful & ugly, fortunate & unfortunate in accordance with their kamma: 'These beings — who were endowed with bad conduct of body, speech & mind, who reviled noble ones, held wrong views and undertook actions under the influence of wrong views — with the break-up of the body, after death, have re-appeared in the plane of deprivation, the bad destination, the lower realms, in hell. But these beings — who were endowed with good conduct of body, speech, & mind, who did not revile noble ones, who held right views and undertook actions under the influence of right views — with the break-up of the body, after death, have re-appeared in the good destinations, in the heavenly world.' Thus — by means of the divine eye, purified & surpassing the human — I saw beings passing away & re-appearing, and I discerned how they are inferior & superior, beautiful & ugly, fortunate & unfortunate in accordance with their kamma.

MN4 Bhaya-bherava Sutta

This knowledge does not extend to the ability to see the future. Its limited to an insight into the nature of beings and how they fare on the path depending on circumstances.

Malcolm wrote:

This is also a Pali Canon sutta. In general, this class of sūtras does not really address Buddha's omniscience.

Queequeg said:

Arguably, the revelation of the Lotus Sutra fell somewhere between these two teachings, with the Buddha of the Lotus Sutra being closer to the Buddha of the Tripitaka than the Vaipulya Sutra.

Malcolm wrote:

This is called a top-down interpretation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 15th, 2018 at 1:41 AM

Title: Re: Questions and Answers

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

First, you have to understand time is merely a convention, and buddhas are not limited by conventions.

dzogchungpa said:

Aren't buddhas also merely conventions?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, of course.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 15th, 2018 at 1:22 AM

Title: Re: Questions and Answers

Content:

Jeff H said:

If an enlightened being knows exactly how all those momentary choices will play out across all time, it must mean that all the choices I make, and every action a buddha offers me in aid of clearing my obscured mind, have already been determined. There is, in fact, no option but to follow that predetermined path; therefore, infinite potentiality cannot be true.

Malcolm wrote:

It's not like that. Your mind is confined by signs. A Buddha's mind is not. Therefore, you frame the question in terms of limitations.

Jeff H said:

Well, it's things like this that keep me coming to DW. I get that there is something I'm not getting and I've heard some clues in this thread. I'll try to keep my mind open to catch the ray of light when it eventually dawns.

Malcolm wrote:

It is fairly straight forward. A samyaksambuddha has three kinds of omniscience: straight up omniscience (sarvajñātā), omniscience of all aspects (sarvākārajñātā), and knowledge of paths (margajñātā).

Jeff H said:

Unfortunately, this is not that ray of light. This does not sound straightforward to me at all.

One thing I hear now is that I used the concept of "playing out across all time", which I understand is a delusion not shared with buddhas.

Malcolm wrote:

First, you have to understand time is merely a convention, and buddhas are not limited by conventions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 14th, 2018 at 11:49 PM

Title: Re: Response to Bernie

Content:

narraboth said:

I was in his London discussion with Rigpa, and basically all the discussion about samaya was again within the already published articles. (Not saying it was not necessary or beneficial to meet Rigpa sangha face to face)

I have a feeling that DJKR really wants to help Rigpa, this probably biggest Nyingma organisation in the West, move out if not survive from all these, and I admire that very much, considering he already has lots of his 'own' organisations to take care of. The fact he met Rigpa sangha again and again, taking serious questions, posting lengthy reponses, show that he probably care about this 'SR's centre' more than any other lama who made comments.

heart said:

I think he really cares about Vajrayana in the West, rather than Rigpa, he also have a bunch of students here. There been a very black feeling spreading over social media giving many, me included, a feeling Vajrayana is really threatened as a backlash of the SR scandal. I think people are not giving DJKR credit for the enormous courage it takes to actually stand up for Vajrayana in a time like this. I also think DJKR shouldn't answer for what SR have done, I think SR should do that himself. DJKR can hardly be expected to "fix" Rigpa.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Vajrayāna is supposed to be secret. All of this is a result of popularizing it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 14th, 2018 at 11:47 PM

Title: Re: Questions and Answers

Content:

Jeff H said:

Hmm. I'm not getting it.

Snowbear said:

No one can. Anyone who claims to get it is selling you a bridge in Brooklyn.

Malcolm wrote:

It is fairly straight forward. A samyaksambuddha has three kinds of omniscience: straight up omniscience (sarvajñātā), omniscience of all aspects (sarvākārajñātā), and knowledge of paths (margajñātā).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 14th, 2018 at 10:58 PM

Title: Re: Questions and Answers

Content:

Jeff H said:

If an enlightened being knows exactly how all those momentary choices will play out across all time, it must mean that all the choices I make, and every action a buddha offers me in aid of clearing my obscured mind, have already been determined. There is, in fact, no option but to follow that predetermined path; therefore, infinite potentiality cannot be true.

Malcolm wrote:

It's not like that. Your mind is confined by signs. A Buddha's mind is not. Therefore, you frame the question in terms of limitations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 14th, 2018 at 10:27 PM

Title: Re: Questions and Answers

Content:

Jeff H said:

It doesn't seem like anyone has directly answered QQ's point about determinism. If there can be perfect knowledge of the present mental states of all beings (not questioned) AND perfect knowledge of which options they will choose into the future, out of all possible options, how can that not be determinism?

Granted the authoritative sources say Buddha is omniscient, but how can we understand "omniscience" without negating the infinite potentiality of emptiness, since all the realized potentials can be known in advance?

Malcolm wrote:

Since the Buddha's omniscience transcends time, objects, etc., his omniscience of the future does not indicate determinism, his omniscience can handle all possibilities for all phenomena simultaneously.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 14th, 2018 at 7:08 AM

Title: Re: Questions and Answers

Content:

Queequeg said:

Chinese doesn't have question marks. It can however, record a question.

Malcolm wrote:

But that passage is not a record of a question. People who see it that way are not understanding it correctly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 14th, 2018 at 7:02 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Sherab said:

While still on this topic of logic, another place where we disagree is this: whether there is two extremes or four extremes. I hold that when the two extremes of eternalism and nihilism are properly defined, there is no need for two of the extremes in the four extremes: the extreme of <eternalism AND nihilism> would be incoherent; the extreme of NOT <eternalism OR nihilism> would be indeterminate, which is say that anything that belongs to this set cannot be ascertained.

Malcolm wrote:

There are four extremes because there are opponents who adhere to each of the four extremes, such as yourself, who adhere to the fourth extreme, neither existent nor nonexistent, as your post above shows. And because these four extremes are clearly negated in many places in sūtra, tantra, and commentaries.

BTW, I did not negate the ultimate, I stated that ultimate truth must be a conventional truth because otherwise, it would not be effective (āṛthakriya).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 14th, 2018 at 5:38 AM

Title: Re: Questions and Answers

Content:

Queequeg said:

Wonderful that you are omniscient!

May be relevant:

<https://www.buddhismuskunde.uni-hamburg.de/pdf/5-personen/analayo/buddha-omniscience.pdf>

That Medicinal Herbs chapter is not at variance. There is nothing there about seeing the future. The Buddha has penetrating knowledge, but it falls short of omniscience.

Malcolm wrote:

That's not the case. The Buddha is omniscient concerning the three times.

Queequeg said:

The buddha can look at a being and perceive what is appropriate for them and lead them along to liberation, but as the beings' conditions change, so do their needs, and the Buddha responds accordingly. That's wholly consistent with the Buddha's rain.

Past is nothing but present recollection of things experienced in the past; the future is nothing but speculation. The Buddha's knowledge can't go beyond what is real.

Malcolm wrote:

The passage clearly states the Buddha knows this world and the next. Further, from the Lotus, chapter 5, directly addresses the Buddha's knowledge of the three times, stating:

The every way of teaching this is a method of the buddhas,
but without omniscience,
nirvana cannot be undertaken.

In order to tame sentient beings,
with unlimited knowledge of the three times,
the supreme rishi has spoken of
the virtues of the six perfections, emptiness, the absence of signs,
freedom from aspirations,
bodhicitta, and otherwise,
the dharmas which lead to nirvana,
the four Brahmaviharas,
and whatever is spoken in order to convert.

In Kern, these passages are 5:74-77, but his translation is deficient in a number of places, for example, he did not understand that paramarṣi is a reference to the Buddha.

Queequeg said:

That's why the Buddha can't necessarily know all the ways his children's foolishness will play out. The Buddha has a long memory, and so maybe he can anticipate, but that's not the same as knowing the future.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha omniscience is not limited with respect to time.

Queequeg said:

If you go further than this, 1. its speculation. If a text tells you this is the case and you choose to believe it, well, there's that. 2. This would imply complete determination, and we are nothing but billiard balls bouncing around the table according to Newtonian physics.

Malcolm wrote:

Your text tells us that the Buddha's knowledge (jñāna) about the three times is beyond limits (ananta).

Moreover, chapter six begins with Buddha's prediction of Kashyapa, his name, when he will be a buddha and so on.

Queequeg said:

The whole first half of the Lotus Sutra (which I must point out, contrary to your characterization, is not mine) is a series of predictions for the arhats.

This does present a serious question about the Buddha's ability to predict the future, and is something that I've considered. I have no idea what to make of it, as I don't know what to make of most of this.

But, I say this - such predictions are problematic because on their own logic, this would mean all time is static, and we only float along the surface observing, like watching a movie. One can readily see the problem with that sort of fatalism.

Malcolm wrote:

I amended by post above, but will reproduce that here, "Since his omniscience transcends time, objects, etc., his omniscience of the future does not indicate determinism, his omniscience can handle all possibilities for all phenomena simultaneously."

Queequeg said:

The only way that the predictions to the arhats make sense is if they are therapeutic in nature, correcting the their mistaken view that arhatship is the real end, and that the real end the Buddha teaches is something else. And this would be consistent with the explanation of upaya in the sutra, and consistent with what I observe of reality, which is that it is dynamic and not determined.

Malcolm wrote:

Or, that the Buddha's omniscience transcends the three times, etc., and is unimpeded.

Queequeg said:

Knowledge of the three times, even unbounded knowledge, implicitly means that it only extends to what is knowable. Is the future known to the Buddha in all its detail? There's something of the Wizard of Oz quality to such a view.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha has two kinds of omniscience: omniscience concerning all aspects, and omniscience concerning all that is. Your theory confines the Buddha's knowledge to signs.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 14th, 2018 at 4:49 AM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

Astus said:

once you have joined Vajrayāna teachings, you won't really be a Tendai, etc., practitioner anymore.

Why would that be?

Malcolm wrote:

There would be no point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 14th, 2018 at 4:34 AM

Title: Re: Questions and Answers

Content:

Admin_PC said:

Ch 5 was the thing that immediately came to mind reading this discussion.

The related bits even start on p95 of the BDK version:

Malcolm wrote:

QQ will counter that the doctrine that this chapter is from the provisional section, whereas his citation comes from the definitive section — imagine that, the Buddha's omniscience is provisional, and his supposed ignorance, definitive!

Queequeg said:

Wonderful that you are omniscient!

May be relevant:

<https://www.buddhismuskunde.uni-hamburg.de/pdf/5-personen/analayo/buddha-omniscience.pdf>

That Medicinal Herbs chapter is not at variance. There is nothing there about seeing the future. The Buddha has penetrating knowledge, but it falls short of omniscience.

Malcolm wrote:

That's not the case. The Buddha is omniscient concerning the three times.

Queequeg said:

The buddha can look at a being and perceive what is appropriate for them and lead them along to liberation, but as the beings' conditions change, so do their needs, and the Buddha responds accordingly. That's wholly consistent with the Buddha's rain.

Past is nothing but present recollection of things experienced in the past; the future is nothing but speculation. The Buddha's knowledge can't go beyond what is real.

Malcolm wrote:

The passage clearly states the Buddha knows this world and the next. Further, from the Lotus, chapter 5, directly addresses the Buddha's knowledge of the three times, stating:

Every way of teaching this is a method of the buddhas,
but without omniscience,
nirvana cannot be undertaken.

In order to tame sentient beings,
with unlimited knowledge of the three times,
the supreme rishi has spoken of
the virtues of the six perfections,
emptiness, the absence of signs,
freedom from aspirations,
bodhicitta, and otherwise,
the dharmas which lead to nirvana,
the four Brahmaviharas,
and whatever is spoken in order to convert.

In Kern, these passages are 5:74-77, but his translation is deficient in a number of places, for example, he did not understand that paramarṣi is a reference to the Buddha.

Queequeg said:

That's why the Buddha can't necessarily know all the ways his children's foolishness will play out. The Buddha has a long memory, and so maybe he can anticipate, but that's not the same as knowing the future.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha omniscience is not limited with respect to time.

Queequeg said:

If you go further than this, 1. its speculation. If a text tells you this is the case and you choose to believe it, well, there's that. 2. This would imply complete determination, and we are nothing but billiard balls bouncing around the table according to Newtonian physics.

Malcolm wrote:

Your text tells us that the Buddha's knowledge (jñāna) about the three times is beyond limits (ananta).

Moreover, chapter six begins with Buddha's prediction of Kashyapa, his name, when he will be a buddha and so on. Since his omniscience transcends time, objects, etc., his omniscience of the future does not indicate determinism, his omniscience can handle all possibilities for all phenomena simultaneously.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 14th, 2018 at 2:45 AM

Title: Re: Questions and Answers

Content:

Admin_PC said:

Ch 5 was the thing that immediately came to mind reading this discussion.

The related bits even start on p95 of the BDK version: “O Kāśyapa! You should know that the Tathāgata is the king of all the teaching. What he teaches is never false. He explains all the teaching using his wisdom and skillful means and what he teaches leads everyone to the stage of omniscience.

“The Tathāgata perceives the goal of all teachings and knows the underlying mental disposition of all sentient beings, perceiving all with no obstructions. He completely understands all teachings and displays omniscience to all sentient beings.

Malcolm wrote:

QQ will counter that the doctrine that this chapter is from the provisional section, whereas his citation comes from the definitive section — imagine that, the Buddha's omniscience is provisional, and his supposed ignorance, definitive!

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 14th, 2018 at 2:33 AM

Title: Re: Your Spiritual Youth

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

We can set this down as your personal opinion, but it is not what the Buddha taught about his own omniscience of the three times. The Buddha knows the capacities of all sentient beings, what is suited for them, and when. This is in fact what the passage you cited states in Sanskrit. In short, there is nothing the Buddha does not know about the path, and what to teach to whom.

Queequeg said:

And this is your opinion.

Malcolm wrote:

Not just my opinion. It is also explained quite well in your preferred sūtra in chapter 5. In chapter 5 the Buddha states:

I fully know the present world and the other world just as it truly is with correct discerning wisdom. (I am) omniscient and all seeing. Devas and humans come before me in order to hear the Dharma! I show the path, expound the path, know the path, and am the one skilled in the path.

The corresponding passage in the BDK version is at the top of the page 96.

This chapter leaves no room for your assumption that the Buddha does not know everything about the path, nor what practices are suited for every sentient being.

Queequeg said:

So how about providing a Malcolm endorsed translation?

Malcolm wrote:

Translating sūtras is the job of the 84,000 project. They do it quite well and eventually someone will do a version of the Lotus from Sanskrit with reference to the Tibetan and Chinese recensions there.

Queequeg said:

How do you square such an assertion with the illustrative parables in the text? It would have been quite easy to present the father as all knowing in those parables, but he is not.

Malcolm wrote:

The simile of the rain cloud that covers the billion world universe in chapter 5 is used to indicate the Buddha's omniscience.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 14th, 2018 at 1:49 AM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Tsongkhapa was really the last Tibetan to initiate the founding of a new lineage of teachings.

Astus said:

How does that compare to the revealed teachings in Nyingma, like the Longchen Nyingthig and the Lamrim Yeshe Nyingpo?

Malcolm wrote:

With respect to terma, both systems are based on Kama, as are all valid treasure revelations. With respect to Tsongkhapa, he did not actually invent some new set of teachings, he organized lineages he had received into a system of teachings, with a special emphasis on the father tantras. Some of his students got into polemical quibbles over matters of interpretation, but if you go to a Gelug initiation and then a Sakya initiation, and then a Kagyu initiation, you won't notice much difference, because the procedures governing how empowerments are bestowed were set down in India, and have not been altered by Tibetans extensively. Potential novelties introduced by Tibetans are addressed in such polemical works as Sapan's Three Vows, and the responses to it that it continues to earn to the present day. You should read it in order to understand the issues we are addressing.

Astus said:

The original question involved mixing different levels of teachings.

It was along the lines of "we don't need to limit ourselves to one tradition, and we can take the best parts of many traditions as it helps us in our practice and daily life".

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this means mixing levels of teachings. There is no such thing as the "best parts of many traditions" because all Buddhadharma is perfect in the beginning, middle, and end.

Astus said:

Lineage is the most important thing in Vajrayāna because the practice in general involves initiation into various mandalas, and the procedure must be like impressing a seal in wax.

Although this I haven't really heard about actually happening - except perhaps by Yogi Chen - if the method and transmission is left intact, any Vajrayana practice could be incorporated into another system, like in Tendai, could it not? Tantric rituals are still present in Chinese Buddhism, just as they were there in Zen in Japan before the 18th century reformations.

Malcolm wrote:

Tendai practitioners can practice Vajrayāna providing they follow Vajrayāna rules. The same goes for any Buddhist of any tradition. If they want to practice Vajrayāna, they must do so in a precise way, placing the guru as the head of all refuges, and guarding their samaya carefully. But once you have joined Vajrayāna teachings, you won't really be a Tendai, etc., practitioner anymore.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 14th, 2018 at 12:42 AM

Title: Re: Your Spiritual Youth

Content:

Queequeg said:

His perfection is in his ability to respond to challenges, not that he knows what to do before the challenge arises.

Malcolm wrote:

We can set this down as your personal opinion, but it is not what the Buddha taught about his own omniscience of the three times. The Buddha knows the capacities of all sentient beings, what is suited for them, and when. This is in fact what the passage you cited states in Sanskrit. In short, there is nothing the Buddha does not know about the path, and what to teach to whom.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 13th, 2018 at 11:21 PM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is how we roll in Vajrayāna. If you mix systems, it is considered very bad.

Astus said:

What was the point in history when systems became frozen and no new lineages emerged?

Malcolm wrote:

With the ascendance of the Geluk school. Tsongkhapa was really the last Tibetan to initiate the founding of a new lineage of teachings.

Astus said:

That is very bad, not allowed, and the Dharmapālas of both systems will become unhappy and punish the offender.

That being so, it seems to be more of a Vajrayana issue, as nobody else is concerned with keeping the teachings and methods separate, even if there were periods when "purity of the tradition" was deemed important.

Malcolm wrote:

The original question involved mixing different levels of teachings. Lineage is the most important thing in Vajrayāna because the practice in general involves initiation into various mandalas, and the procedure must be like impressing a seal in wax. So in Sakya, the Hevajra empowerment has been given exactly the same way for over 900 years. Minor differences between lineages in the same general school can emerge, however, but they are minor.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 13th, 2018 at 8:20 AM

Title: Re: Questions and Answers

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Questions and answers, honesty, lies;
yes, no you can't,
but you can, and you know why.

Sham '69

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 13th, 2018 at 7:23 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Sherab said:

When there is a problem in logic, it is either due to invalid logical structure or invalid premises. To resolve a problematic conclusion from a valid logical argument, you have to examine the structure and/or the premises. You have done neither.

Malcolm wrote:

You have not shown any logical incoherence in my position. You have merely stated it to be so.

Sherab said:

Any more more such assertions and I would begin to think that you are trolling me: What was the logical argument that I made? You said "even ultimate truth is merely a conventional truth" Call this statement 1. You also said, "An ultimate truth is the veridical perception of a given entity, a relative truth is the non-veridical perception of a given entity." Call this statement 2.

Statement 1 can be represented as $U \rightarrow C$, where U = ultimate truth and C = conventional truth Statement 2 can be represented as $U = V$, $R = \text{not } V$, where V = veridical perception of a given entity.

Substituting 2 into 1 gives $V \rightarrow \text{not } V$, which is incoherent.

Anyone with an understanding of logic will tell you that the argument above is logically correct. Whether the argument is valid or not depends then on whether the premises, statements 1 & 2, are true. If we take your premises as true, then the argument is true and you have an incoherent conclusion. So one of your premises must be false. I would suggest that Statement 1 is false, namely that the ultimate truth is merely a conventional truth. I have already stated before that I thought that saying the ultimate truth is merely a conventional truth is to over negate. It is my view that the incoherence from over-negation implies the undermining of the possibility of knowing what reality is, a consequence that I tried to argue in an earlier post. In other words, when you negate the ultimate to such an extent that it reduces the ultimate to the convention, and since the convention excludes veridical perception, that veridical perception that is necessary for knowing the ultimate is excluded as well.

Refute the above argument if you can. If not, do not make wild allegations of misrepresentation of your position as it only serves to diminish your status.

From

<https://www.dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=53&t=27893&start=100#p437956>

Malcolm wrote:

I answered this in many ways, but the most expressive is that there simply is no reality beneath things. There is nothing to find. Not even something free from two extremes. Therefore, ultimate truth, emptiness, is a conventional truth, because it is effective at bringing about liberation.

Your attempt to reduce it to a formal proposition via western logic is a fools errand. Richardson already attempted this, and when he reduced Madhyamaka to statements in formal logic, he found they were incoherent. But he also missed the point of Madhyamaka, and the two truths.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 13th, 2018 at 7:19 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Sherab said:

If you have understood my position in the thread, you will notice that it starts with the avoidance of the two extremes of existence (eternalism) and non-existence (nihilism).

Malcolm wrote:

Advaitans make precisely the same claim about brahmin as you make about your ultimate.

Sherab said:

You have not made the effort to understand what I wrote... correction, you chose to ignore my arguments and prefer to continue to make allegations based on your strawman picture of my position.

Malcolm wrote:

I understand what you wrote, as above, I think you are suffering from lack of understanding the what the two truths actually are, which causes you to adopt a transcendentalist/realist position with respect to the two truths. For you, the ultimate is something free from the two extremes. For me, ultimate truth is merely the perception of the absence of inherent existence/four extremes in entities which arise from conditions. Among the emptinesses Candrakirti lists, for example, is the emptiness of the ultimate:

Because it is the supreme necessity,
the ultimate is nirvana,
Whatever is the emptiness of that is the emptiness of the ultimate.

The knower of the ultimate taught the emptiness of the ultimate in order to avert the grasping of the thought that nirvana is real.

And:

Whatever is not an extreme is described as transcending extremes;
since that is empty of itself,
it is conventionally the emptiness of the transcended extremes.

Now, the question for you is, is ultimate empty? Of what is it empty? If the ultimate is also empty, how can be it any thing other than a conventional truth?

And since you are fond of citing the two extremes, if freedom from extremes is empty, how can it be anything other than a conventional truth?

Since everything from matter to omniscience is empty, how can they be anything other than conventional truths? A true ultimate truth would not be empty, now would it?

Nāgārjuna said:

If there is something subtle that is not empty, there is something subtle to be empty; but as there is nothing that is not empty, where is there something to be empty?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 13th, 2018 at 6:57 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Sherab said:

When there is a problem in logic, it is either due to invalid logical structure or invalid premises. To resolve a problematic conclusion from a valid logical argument, you have to examine the structure and/or the premises. You have done neither.

Malcolm wrote:

You have not shown any logical incoherence in my position. You have merely stated it to be so.

When one does not understand the basic definitions of the system one is examining, it is difficult, as your arguments show, to build a logically coherent structure. This is why I have tried to remedy your lack of understanding of the basics of the two truths.

You think the ultimate is something independent which can be uncovered. It isn't. The only thing that is an ultimate truth in Buddhadharma is emptiness, and that ultimate truth is also merely a conventional truth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 13th, 2018 at 6:49 AM

Title: Re: Your Spiritual Youth

Content:

Queequeg said:

This whole thing came up because there was a claim that there are no unanswered questions in Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

For a Buddha, there are no unanswered questions. The Buddha is omniscient concerning all paths. This is what it means to be on the path of "no more training," aśaikṣamarga.

Buddhists may have many questions, but then, they are not Buddhas.

Exhaustive citations can be provided.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 13th, 2018 at 6:45 AM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

one cannot randomly use one completion method given in one system with that of another system

Astus said:

But one can use them systematically, like what is itself a combination of different methods from all three systems: the six dharmas of Naropa.

Malcolm wrote:

Suppose you are a Lamdre practitioner, this does not automatically allow you practice the six dharmas of Naropa (Naro chos drug). There is a specific transmission for this which you must receive from a lineage holder, and which is normally practiced on the basis of the creation stage of Vajravārāhī. True, the various of the six dharmas are derived from different tantras, but if you don't have that specific transmission, you cannot practice it.

Further, even if you have received the six Dharmas of Naropa and Lamdre, you cannot mix the two. I.e. you would not apply the Six Dharmas to Lamdre, nor would you apply Lamdre to the Six Dharmas. The basis of these distinctions is lineage of transmission.

Further, you would not apply the practice of Atiyoga to Sarma traditions. In the Tibetan tradition, we maintain very strict boundaries around transmissions, and mixing transmissions is considered to be a personal fabrication. When you are practicing Lamdre, you practice Lamdre, when you are practicing Naro Chödrük, you practice Naro Chödrük. You don't mix. For example, in Sakya, there is Naropa's Khechari, but it is considered extremely bad form to mix Naro Chödrük with Naro Khachö, the completion stage for the latter is entirely dissimilar from the former, and has its own special transmissions and requirements.

Astus said:

And if one has learnt different techniques from different teachers, it is quite normal to practise them, from which comes a person who can then teach such previously diverse techniques as a single set.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is mixing lineages. If you want to teach Naro Chödrük, then you do so based on the constraints of that transmission. For example, even if you have received Hevajra in a Kagyu tradition, this does not grant you permission to practice Hevajra in Sakya — the visualizations are different, the sadhanas are arranged differently, the oral instructions are different, and so on.

Astus said:

Isn't that rather the usual situation, while knowing only one technique and having a single teacher is fairly rare?

Malcolm wrote:

The usual situation is that when a teacher, holding multiple lineages of the same deity, for example, Hevajra, gives an empowerment of Hevajra, they do it according to one specific tradition, and do not mix other traditions in that transmission.

For example, let us say you are a Karma Kagyu who practices Shangpa as well. The six dharmas of Niguma are basically identical to the Naro Chödrük, however, in the Shangpa system, each yoga has a separate empowerment, and cannot be practiced with that empowerment, according to the dictates of the lineage. Naro Chödrük however, has a transmission, but does not have separate empowerments for each of the six. Hence, when teaching Shangpa, a Karma Kagyu teacher will respect the Shangpa tradition very precisely, and follow that system. When teaching Karma Kagyu Naro Chödrük, they will do it according to that school.

This is how we roll in Vajrayāna. If you mix systems, it is considered very bad. The point is to understand how each system agrees with the others in terms of meaning, but practice just that system without mixing other elements into it from other lineages. Even when you have broad heterogeneous systems like Lamdre, which assembles its practice out of nine separate upadesha transmissions, one does not just add the Naro Chödrük system to make a tenth. That is very bad, not allowed, and the Dharmapālas of both systems will become unhappy and punish the offender.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 13th, 2018 at 3:29 AM

Title: Re: Questions and Answers

Content:

Queequeg said:

So much nicer than speculating and impugning.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think I was speculating.

For various problems with the Kern translation see:

<http://iriab.soka.ac.jp/content/pdf/aririab/Vol.%202%20%281999%29%20%5Brev.4Aug2010%5D.pdf> from page 125 or so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 13th, 2018 at 2:40 AM

Title: Re: Your Spiritual Youth

Content:

Queequeg said:

何 this is the character that makes it a question.

Malcolm wrote:

That is the term katha rendered into Chinese.

In Sanskrit, katha (Tibetan ཅིན་ཀླུ་) is not functioning as a question at all in this case.

carim carim jāniya nityakālam

Always knowing (jāniya nityakālam) practices (carim carim)

vadāmi sattvāna tathā tathāham

This literally means, "I (aham) teach (vadāmi) those sentient beings (sattvāna tathā) in that way (tathā)," etc., it is not a question to himself in the Sanskrit, the whole passage is declarative statement about what he teaches sentient beings, knowing all practices, and who should practice them, in order they they are placed in awakening, and obtain buddhadharmas.

As for translators following precedents, they do it all the time. At the translators conference, I ever heard Thubten Jinpa opine we should follow older, incorrect translation equivalents merely because they are in use and have become standard.

As before, I made allowance for commentarial drift in Chinese from the Sanskrit for this passage. But even so, when you are citing some passage, you have to make sure that it is acceptable to both parties, otherwise it is a failure right from the start.

I am afraid that without an agreed upon canonical reference, it is very hard to use citations to make one's arguments.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 13th, 2018 at 2:15 AM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

OK, guys, no need to get worked up about one of my stupid jokes. I will point out that you can find a traditional reflection on the disgusting nature of the body in Khenpo Ngakchung's Zindri for example. Just for the record, I think the body is fantastic!

Malcolm wrote:

You mean the Longchen Nyinthig Ngondro commentary?

dzogchungpa said:

Yes, isn't that what it's called?

Malcolm wrote:

He has many Zintris

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 13th, 2018 at 2:09 AM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

OK, guys, no need to get worked up about one of my stupid jokes. I will point out that you can find a traditional reflection on the disgusting nature of the body in Khenpo Ngakchung's Zindri for example. Just for the record, I think the body is fantastic!

Malcolm wrote:

You mean the Longchen Nyinthig Ngondro commentary?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 13th, 2018 at 1:40 AM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Personally, I would start with observing the disgusting nature of the body, then do the Tara sadhana and finish with the Mu thing. Much less indigestion that way.

conebeckham said:

Either way, there is a contradiction in view. Vajrayana practitioners are not contemplating the disgusting nature of the body. If you're a Vajrayana practitioner and you're disgusted by the nature of the body, there's a pretty good chance you're "doing it wrong."

dzogchungpa said:

Well, I wasn't being entirely serious, but regular contemplation of the suffering of 'ordinary' things is recommended to many contemporary Vajrayana practitioners, e.g. as found in the four thoughts, is it not?

Malcolm wrote:

It is the regarding of the body as impure that is a problem from a HYT POV.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 13th, 2018 at 1:26 AM

Title: Re: Questions and Answers

Content:

Queequeg said:

The Chinese renders the final passage of the Life Span chapter as a question.

Malcolm wrote:

Prove it. Take the time to parse the passage for us so we can see that it is so.

Even so, Greg is not going to take the English rendering of the passage in question as authoritative, because the passage in question in the Tibetan translation as well as the Sanskrit do not present the Buddha asking himself a question.

When one is citing passages in a multi-tradition environment, one has to be sensitive to the fact that the reading one thinks is correct may not be considered correct by another tradition. And if there is some basis for contention, one should not be surprised nor should one impugn the motives of the person pointing out the discrepancy.

Here is the Sanskrit:

carim carim jāniya nityakālam

vadāmi sattvāna tathā tathāham|

katham nu bodhāvupanāmayeyam

katha buddhadharmāṇa bhaveyu lābhinaḥ||23||

Tibetan:

ལྷོད་དང་ལྷོད་པ་རིག་ནས་རྟག་པར་ཡང་། ཅི་ནས་བྱང་ཆུབ་ལ་ནི་དགོད་པ་དང་།
ཅི་ནས་སངས་རྒྱལ་ཆོས་རྣམས་ཐོབ་བྱེད་བྱིར། ལམས་ཅན་རྣམས་ལ་ང་ནི་དེ་བཞིན་སྟེ།

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 13th, 2018 at 1:22 AM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

Astus said:

Neither Vajrayana nor Rinzai Zen means a specific method but they include various teachings and techniques, don't they?

Malcolm wrote:

Vajryāna does in fact mean a specific method: creation stage and completion stage, which themselves depends on empowerment.

conebeckham said:

...which depends on tradition, and on lineage.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 13th, 2018 at 1:21 AM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Vajryāna does in fact mean a specific method: creation stage and completion stage, which themselves depends on empowerment.

Astus said:

Is there anything in Vajrayana that could not be categorised under those two stages? If no, are all creation and completion stage practices equal? If no, why call it a specific method, when they are actually large categories of numerous methods?

Malcolm wrote:

All deities in highest yoga tantra possess two stages.

The procedures of creation differ very little from one to another. They all generally possess the five abhisambodhis and the four limbs of approach and accomplishment.

Completion stage practices vary quite a bit more, but one cannot randomly use one completion method given in one system with that of another system since the transmission lineages are different, as well as the specific tantric system to which any given deity might belong, that is, father tantra, mother, tantra or nondual tantra, and that influences what kind of completion stage practice one engages in. However, there are some completion methods that are universal, like vajra recitation.

In sum, the method of Vajrayāna is the two stages and everything is included in those two.

Astus said:

Furthermore, what would not allow someone to practise first a sadhana of Tara, then contemplate on Joshu's Mu, and finish off with observing the disgusting nature of the body?

Malcolm wrote:

What people do in their own caves is their own business, but I have never heard Vajrayāna master teach Joshu's mu. It isn't needed.

As to observing that the body is disgusting, this contemplation cannot be performed by Vajrayāna (HYT) practitioners at all. People in kriya, cārya, and yoga tantra, on the other hand, can practice that contemplation since there is no vow of maintaining pure perception of the body 24/7/365.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 12th, 2018 at 10:59 PM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you start practicing Vajrayana, you will no longer be someone who practices Rinzai, and vice versa.

Astus said:

Neither Vajrayana nor Rinzai Zen means a specific method but they include various teachings and techniques, don't they?

Malcolm wrote:

Vajryāna does in fact mean a specific method: creation stage and completion stage, which themselves depends on empowerment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 12th, 2018 at 10:56 PM

Title: Re: Your Spiritual Youth

Content:

Queequeg said:

You don't mean that, do you? That all the translators who translated the Chinese followed Kern's translation from Sanskrit?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. They all follow Hurvitz, who in turn follows Kern.

Queequeg said:

Do you really think so little of these translators?

Malcolm wrote:

I just know what the Sanskrit and Tibetan say, and that Kern, someone with little knowledge of Buddhism, got this passage in particular wrong, and up to the present, the Kern translation has been regarded as the standard reference translation from Sanskrit. Thus, errors in Kern's presentation have unfortunately been enshrined and continuously repeated in every translation to the present since they were perpetuated by Hurvitz in his 1976 translation.

Sorry for being a pain in the ass and checking English translations of passages against Sanskrit and Tibetan before accepting them as scripture. I guess I shouldn't do that again, someone might get offended.

Queequeg said:

Where do you get this? You're speculating about the translation methods.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, it is pretty clear. Scholars, like judges, tend to follow precedents.

Queequeg said:

It has nothing to really do with the Sanskrit original, which presents a different issue, but how Kumarajiva rendered the passage in Chinese. The question is how the Chinese reads.

Malcolm wrote:

I allowed for commentarial variation above.

Queequeg said:

The translators after Hurvitz' knew the weaknesses of his translation and we're careful about that, among them, he rather uncritically considered the Sanskrit version Kern translated as coming from a close recension to the one Kumarajiva translated. This has been established to not be the case. He also relied too much on Kern.

Malcolm wrote:

It is unlikely there was any drift for the passage in question among the differing Sanskrit recensions. According to <https://www.scribd.com/doc/284915735/Saddharma->

Pundarika-Sutra-Dr-P-L-Vaidya, the Kumarajiva recension closely resembles the Tibetan translation. Hence my contention that people translating the text are just relying on precedent. And in fact, Kern may be deferring to Burnouf's earlier French rendering. I don't read French, so I cannot be certain of this.

Queequeg said:

The fact is the recent translators have looked at the text with fresh eyes and have tried to render the Chinese as written. That's why this passage reads very differently in the several recent translations. In all of them, the Buddha explains he responds to conditions.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, I have checked several translations for this specific passage, and they all basically say the same thing (Reeves, Threefold, BDK, Watson) in virtually identical language with respect to this passage.

Queequeg said:

This point about response not being just some thoughtless act is explained throughout the text in the examples of the fathers who, in response to conditions, try one thing without success and then contrive another to save their children.

I'm not really interested in a minute debate about the nature of the Buddha as presented in the Lotus Sutra. You have made clear you have your ideas about it and have preconceived notions that the text doesn't mean what it reads.

Malcolm wrote:

In fact, I have far less preconceived notions of the text than you, since it is not that important in our tradition. Nevertheless, when cited as scripture, is appropriate to check the citation.

The translation of the passage you cite simply is not that rigorous and stands on long, though erroneous, precedent. The Buddha simply is not asking himself a question in this passage. The word katham can be an interrogative, but more often than not, as reflected in the Tibetan translation, means "by all means."

Queequeg said:

Have a great day!

Malcolm wrote:

You too.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 12th, 2018 at 8:55 PM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you start practicing Vajrayana, you will no longer be someone who practices Rinzai, and vice versa.

as long as they take care not to mix up the different levels of teachings.

Astus said:

So being "Drukpa Kagyu" or "Rinzai Zen" is not an issue and has no relevance. That's why I said that tradition and lineage were not the key factors.

With respect to the last point, however, that is really oriented towards mastering the five sciences.

What I referred to was the https://global.sotozen-net.or.jp/eng/library/glossary/individual.html?key=verse_of_four_universal_vows, and that says "Dharma gates", meaning Buddhist teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 12th, 2018 at 11:42 AM

Title: Re: Political discussions on Dharma Wheel

Content:

smcj said:

How do you guys feel about the bible thumpers in America that promote patriotism as a religious value? Do you understand why the U.S. Constitution has the separation of church and state?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, to protect religious freedom, even if that means one is an atheist, that is, one is protected from being assaulted by the religious views of others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 12th, 2018 at 7:52 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Wayfarer said:

Again this is why Madhyamika is dialectical, i.e. a dialogue between two poles 'is' and 'is not'. Something becomes clear from that understanding of 'neither is nor is not'.

Whereas what we're always naturally inclined to do, is to hold to one side or another.

That is what makes Madhyamika dynamic, i.e. it's not a fixed view regarding 'what is', but an understanding of the conditioned nature of objects of perception and of the perceiver.

Sherab said:

If you have understood my position in the thread, you will notice that it starts with the avoidance of the two extremes of existence (eternalism) and non-existence (nihilism).

Malcolm wrote:

Advaitans make precisely the same claim about brahmin as you make about your ultimate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 12th, 2018 at 7:50 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Sherab said:

You are putting words in my mouth. That is misrepresentation. So far, I only claim that there is an ultimate and that ultimate is indescribable.

Malcolm wrote:

Your claim is no different than the claim of Christians, Muslims, Hindus and so on who similarly claim an ineffable absolute.

Sherab said:

That is what you think. And you think that what you think is correct. Such hubris, and coming from one who does not wish to confront the logical incoherence of his position when pointed out. That is precisely why no progress can be made in this discussion.

Go back and re-read the thread and you will not find anywhere where I claim that there is an ineffable absolute. I repeat, I made the claim that there is an ultimate. You are equating that the ultimate I claim is equivalent to an ineffable absolute. You have been repeating this claim so many times, despite my disputing your claim each time. I am beginning to think that you are hoping that by making the claim often enough, it will stick and allow you to win the argument. That would be consistent with your unwillingness to confront the logical incoherence in your position. This is not something that I expect from someone of your standing. It is truly disappointing.

Malcolm wrote:

An ineffable ultimate isn't the slightest bit different from an ineffable absolute. "Ultimate" and "absolute" are synonyms.

BTW, I guess you believe if you crow about my "logical inconherence" long enough, someone will believe you.

The long and short of it is, the only incoherence here is your position that there is some sort of ineffable, independent ultimate in Buddhism. There isn't. Emptiness is also empty.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 12th, 2018 at 7:41 AM

Title: Re: Your Spiritual Youth

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This passage is not in fact a question Buddha is asking himself, at least not in the Sanskrit original. This error in translation begins with Kern's translation from Sanskrit, and has been copied by every translator of the Kumarajiva recension since, including Hurvitz.

Queequeg said:

You don't mean that, do you? That all the translators who translated the Chinese followed Kern's translation from Sanskrit?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. They all follow Hurvitz, who in turn follows Kern.

Queequeg said:

Do you really think so little of these translators?

Malcolm wrote:

I just know what the Sanskrit and Tibetan say, and that Kern, someone with little knowledge of Buddhism, got this passage in particular wrong, and up to the present, the Kern translation has been regarded as the standard reference translation from Sanskrit. Thus, errors in Kern's presentation have unfortunately been enshrined and continuously repeated in every translation to the present since they were perpetuated by Hurvitz in his 1976 translation.

Sorry for being a pain in the ass and checking English translations of passages against Sanskrit and Tibetan before accepting them as scripture. I guess I shouldn't do that again, someone might get offended.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 12th, 2018 at 5:20 AM

Title: Re: Questions and Answers

Content:

Grigoris said:

That is why Nagarjuna did not set forth a position regarding ultimate truth, but rather explained what it isn't.

Malcolm wrote:

Not so fast, Kimosabe. Nāgārjuna writes in the Mahāyāna Twenty:

Because there is no birth in ultimate truth,
there is also no liberation in it as well.
Buddhas are just like space, and likewise,
the characteristic of sentient beings is the same.

He also wrote in the Ratnavali:

Saying "I exist," "it is mine"
is the opposite of ultimate truth,
Why? these two do not arise
when the way things really are is comprehended.
The aggregates arise from grasping a self,
that grasping at a self is, in reality, deceptive.

These are both positions concerning ultimate truth.

Grigoris said:

He also says: "If I had any thesis, then I would have that fault. Because I have no thesis I am only faultless."

Refutations of Objections

So which Nagarjuna are we going to roll with?

Malcolm wrote:

He is referring to inherent existence in that passage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 12th, 2018 at 3:48 AM

Title: Re: Political discussions on Dharma Wheel

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

Yeh in that sense that left is extreme and right is the opposite of left also extreme and that is idiot too.

No middle way at the moment, so their adherents are imo opinion idiots, it does not make sense until now to adhere one of those extreme parties, who are also engaged in violence and that is idiot too.

The only thing which is left is Dharma practice and give compassion and HELP to those who are in need for that, that is not left nor right, that is the real thing and never idiot (for a Buddhist).

Malcolm wrote:

You are engaging in politics right now.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 12th, 2018 at 3:26 AM

Title: Re: Questions and Answers

Content:

Grigoris said:

That is why Nagarjuna did not set forth a position regarding ultimate truth, but rather explained what it isn't.

Malcolm wrote:

Not so fast, Kimosabe. Nāgārjuna writes in the Mahāyāna Twenty:

Because there is no birth in ultimate truth,
there is also no liberation in it as well.
Buddhas are just like space, and likewise,
the characteristic of sentient beings is the same.

He also wrote in the Ratnavali:

Saying "I exist," "it is mine"
is the opposite of ultimate truth,
Why? these two do not arise
when the way things really are is comprehended.
The aggregates arise from grasping a self,
that grasping at a self is, in reality, deceptive.

These are both positions concerning ultimate truth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 12th, 2018 at 2:17 AM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

we define traditions based on the disciplines we follow.

Astus said:

In that case those who take the five precepts, the bodhisattva vows, and the samayas, can follow sravaka, bodhisattva, and vajrayana teachings at the same time. After all, one of the four main Mahayana vows is mastering all teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, as long as they take care not to mix up the different levels of teachings. With respect to the last point, however, that is really oriented towards mastering the five sciences.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 12th, 2018 at 1:54 AM

Title: Re: Your Spiritual Youth

Content:

kirtu said:

This highlights a limitation of language.

Shakyamuni is not asking a question, not even of himself, except rhetorically, as a teaching device. He is explaining Bodhicitta in conduct to the people he is addressing.

Kirt

Queequeg said:

How is language limited?

kirtu said:

Language does not exactly represent reality and relies on conventions that people have assented to socially.

On top of which, as Malcolm indicates, the translation is wrong.

I am however surprised that this specific verse hadn't already been discussed in commentaries on the Lotus Sutra within your own school (taking the Lotus schools as a set).

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

It is possible Chinese commentaries treat it as a question. But I don't know, it sure is not a question in Sanskrit or Tibetan.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 12th, 2018 at 1:44 AM

Title: Re: Political discussions on Dharma Wheel

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You can always cease reading and posting in this board, if your delicate sensibilities are so wounded by having to see political speech on DW.

kirtu said:

And this response is supposed to be a reflection of the paramita of friendliness?

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, it is a reflection of my annoyance at the OP's bid to limit speech here.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 12th, 2018 at 1:39 AM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is not true. They mean everything. For example, you will never find creation and completion stage in common Mahāyāna, nor the view of four-fold emptiness in Śrāvakayāna.

Astus said:

Is common Mahayana a tradition? What lineage claims to be its upholder?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, of course. Anywhere where the bodhisattva vows are transmitted is a place where the tradition of common Mahāyāna is being upheld.

we define traditions based on the disciplines we follow.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 12th, 2018 at 1:34 AM

Title: Re: Your Spiritual Youth

Content:

tenyang said:

On a side note, I still think that the Dharma and science should go hand in hand. They are just different tools or frameworks to seek out answers to different questions.

Grigoris said:

Buddhism is not about looking for answers to questions, all the asking and answering has been done already. Buddhism is about applying the answers and practicing for liberation.

Queequeg said:

I don't know if the Buddha would put it that way.

At all times I think to myself:

How can I cause living beings to gain entry into the unsurpassed way and quickly acquire the body of a buddha?

Shakyamuni Buddha, Lotus Sutra

Malcolm wrote:

This passage is not in fact a question Buddha is asking himself, at least not in the Sanskrit original. This error in translation begins with Kern's translation from Sanskrit, and has been copied by every translator of the Kumarajiva recension since, including Hurvitz.

It properly reads in both Sanskrit and Tibetan:

Always knowing [who should] practice [which] practice, likewise I teach sentient beings in order place them in awakening by every means, so that they obtain the buddhadharmas by every means.

Thus the passage in question, rather than expressing a question, expresses his knowledge of all modes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 12th, 2018 at 12:34 AM

Title: Re: What place does pilgrimage have in Buddhist practice?

Content:

amanitamusc said:

ChNNR went to Kailash and wrote about it. It seems he thought it was important.

Did he write as extensively about the other places you mention?

Malcolm wrote:

ChNN's interest is more related to Tibetan culture and the location of Zhang Zhung than Dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 12th, 2018 at 12:07 AM

Title: Re: Shantideva?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

as Shantideva points out, it is better to wear shoes than to try and cover the world in leather.

boda said:

Nice idiom. Shantideva?

Nicholas Weeks said:

Perhaps not original with Shantideva. The older text of the Yoga Vasistha uses a similar simile:

When one's mind is perfected, the whole world appears to him to be full of nectar, just as to a man putting on a pair of shoes the whole earth appears, as it were, covered with leather. (V, 21, 14.)

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty sure the adage predates both...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 11th, 2018 at 11:34 PM

Title: Re: Political discussions on Dharma Wheel

Content:

Grigoris said:

More to the point: Considering things in dualistic terms of "dirty" and "pure" also tends to shoot Great Perfection (and Tantric and yogic practice) down in flames.

kalden yungdrung said:

Tashi delek G,

These disgusting political coverstations here aboard , i see on the level of Theravada / Sutra, the field of dualism. Therefore remarkable that Dzogchenpas are here involved, in these bad kind of dualisms and stamp the world accordingly their "opinions" about good and bad.

Malcolm wrote:

You can always ceased reading and posting in this board, if your delicate sensibilities are so wounded by having to see political speech on DW.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 11th, 2018 at 11:32 PM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

Astus said:

Thinking in terms of tradition and lineage is not a particularly useful approach, because it focuses only on people and communities instead of the precepts and the teachings. Neither tradition nor lineage mean much in terms of view and practice.

Malcolm wrote:

This is not true. They mean everything. For example, you will never find creation and completion stage in common Mahāyāna, nor the view of four-fold emptiness in Śrāvakayāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 11th, 2018 at 11:29 PM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

pael said:

How about lineage of Shinran? It attracts me. Can it be combined with Dzogchen?

Malcolm wrote:

No need. If you practice Dzogchen, you will be reborn in buddhafiels automatically. Of course, if you Nembutsu, you can practice it. But there is not need to "combine" Pure land and Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 11th, 2018 at 6:46 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Sherab's analysis merely indicates that ultimate truth is cognition, not that it is an independent reality....

Sherab said:

You are putting words in my mouth. That is misrepresentation. So far, I only claim that there is an ultimate and that ultimate is indescribable.

Malcolm wrote:

Your claim is no different than the claim of Christians, Muslims, Hindus and so on who similarly claim an ineffable absolute.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 11th, 2018 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: Political discussions on Dharma Wheel

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

Mantrik and Simon, instead of simply disagreeing, criticisms and insinuations about others' Dharma practice being cowardly or incomplete? Misrepresenting our position and dismissing us as snowflakes doesn't show any desire to communicate.

If this is how metadiscussion about politics goes, maybe you can see why some feel the way they do by the actual political discussions themselves.

I'm not sure about a ban on politics here but this thread is kind of a microcosm of the problem

Kalden Yungdrung and I aren't newbies here either. I would hope that input about DW from a member since 2010 would be met with more than derision.

Malcolm wrote:

KY is just mad because his anti-muslim alt-right agit-prop was shut down.

Had the board a moratorium on political speech from the start, this would be one thing — but DNS did not set that up. He followed E-Sangha's liberal policies towards speech.

If this board took a turn toward the illiberalism KY is advocating, I would abandon it in a second. So, to those who don't like political speech, my advice is that they should not read it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 11th, 2018 at 12:18 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

How does the framing of the question on terms of "where is X" (regardless of if 'X' is a chariot, the self, or the 'scent of a flower') instead of "what is X" change the question & the answer?

Malcolm wrote:

"Chariot" is a conventional truth, meaning when we hitch it up to horses, etc., we can go places. We know what a chariot is. No one has doubts about what a chariot is.

But where the chariot is, this another issue altogether. Things are designated on a collection of parts. But a given thing cannot be found in any of the parts, all the parts together, or separate from the parts. So where is that given thing? The thing is found in our imputation and no where else. This is why the question of identity is what is this given thing, but where is this given thing. The purpose of this analysis, naturally, is to show that the self is merely an imputation on a collection of aggregates and that is all.

Sherab's analysis merely indicates that ultimate truth is cognition, not that it is an independent reality. In Abhidharma, Vasubandhu says the perception of water is relative truth, the perception of its wetness, coolness, and limpidity is ultimate truth.

Finally, if the ultimate truth of emptiness is not a conventional truth, it will not be effective in bringing about elimination of clinging, etc. Therefore, we say that ultimate truth is part of conventional truth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 10th, 2018 at 12:04 PM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:

Tlalok said:

Any chance for a reading transmission for this bad boy like Buddhahood in This Life, Malcom?

Malcolm wrote:

There is a lung. But the colophon states that possession of the text by people qualified through empowerment is sufficient to read it, unlike the rest of the seventeen tantras, which do require a lung.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 10th, 2018 at 6:26 AM

Title: Re: Is Mind Fundamental?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Lonchenpa and Dzogchen in general does not reject external objects.

treehuggingoctopus said:

I recall you saying that the Yogacarín model is kosher as well?

Malcolm wrote:

Yogacara Madhyamaka, ala Shantarakshita, not cittamatra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 10th, 2018 at 5:47 AM

Title: Re: Is Mind Fundamental?

Content:

Matt J said:

I'm not proposing subjective idealism.

treehuggingoctopus said:

Well, you said

Matt J said:

Without a doubt, Model B is much cooler.

treehuggingoctopus said:

Since

Malcolm wrote:

Model B is internally triadic, holds that percepts are the actually the activation of traces that provide the content of the world that we perceive as external.

treehuggingoctopus said:

I dare say you do belong in some sort of idealist camp. (Little wonder, too. I also think Model B is cool.) It might be the Kantian one, where you will find Longchenpa, or the Yogacarian one (which is Longchenpaless. I still like it more.)

Malcolm wrote:

Lonchenpa and Dzogchen in general does not reject external objects.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 10th, 2018 at 5:36 AM

Title: Re: Political discussions on Dharma Wheel

Content:

kalden yungdrung said:

Tashi delek,

IMO to discuss politics here aboard is not at all a good case.

Dharma

and left and right winged, (is the middle way here possible ?)

based on discrimination, illusions and political preferences are not at all Dharma orientated, whereas i understand that they belong to Dharma in the sense of phenomenons or emptiness.

Therefore i want to suggest to forbid political discussions here aboard and discuss only Buddha Dharma matters, which go beyond politics, left and right winged idiots and the middle.

Maybe new TOS possible ?

KY

shaunc said:

For what it's worth, I agree with you. I don't think it'll ever happen here though. I just tend to ignore the conversation once it gets too political for me.

Malcolm wrote:

as Shantideva points out, it is better to wear shoes than to try and cover the world in leather.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 10th, 2018 at 4:15 AM

Title: Re: Is Mind Fundamental?

Content:

Matt J said:

What is the source of the models, anyway? I assume that most people don't actually see bijas in the alayavijnana forming into material things, or seeing objects contacting sense organs leading to visual consciousness. Are these models established inferentially, with yogic perception, or simply through scripture?

krodha said:

Like Malcolm mentioned, there are two models. The latter model is indeed that there is no substantial external world, and that the appearances that are misconstrued for an external condition are generated by the minds of sentient beings with like karmic constitutions.

This means everything you experience is an appearance of mind, and there is no actual artifact-like world that lies beyond said appearances.

Malcolm wrote:

The former is a theory taught in the sutras. The latter is simple conventional truth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 10th, 2018 at 2:55 AM

Title: Re: Everybody speaks about samaya, but nobody knows what it is.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The are the foundation of the Vajrayāna path.

Grigoris said:

I think he is more interested in the "why" it is the foundation of the Vajrayana path.

Malcolm wrote:

If they a protected, all qualities of the path arise swiftly, if they are neglected, one experiences obstacles.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 10th, 2018 at 2:29 AM

Title: Re: Tradition shmadition, lineage shmineage

Content:

JMGinPDX said:

To be fair, my post was moved from the original thread to a new one, and taken out of that context seems to be more absolute than I intended it to be.

I'm all for tradition and lineage - my point was that it is counterproductive to hold too tightly to the notion of tradition, glorifying tenets of one while denigrating others (or at least not addressing them at all), worrying too much about whether one belongs in the tradition one is in, or if one should switch traditions, etc. etc.

As was stated elsewhere (including the original thread and here:

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=116&t=27756>), various highly respected teachers in different traditions have admiration for and utilize parts of "other" traditions - Thai Forest master Ajahn Amaro and Dzogchen, Ajahn Chah himself and Zen, various Vipassana/Secular/IM teachers combining elements of Theravada, Zen, and Tibetan, etc. etc.

Rather than worrying about being "true" to a specific tradition, and especially dismissing other traditions' teachings as impure or irrelevant simply because they are not echoed in one's own tradition, is the exact type of clinging to concepts that is the "enemy" of ALL Buddhist paths.

My point to the OP was - why worry about Mahayana vs. Theravada vs. Vajrayana? Find what resonates and works, and keep looking.

Malcolm wrote:

In general, this approach does not work well. Find one tradition, find a qualified teacher in that tradition, learn the practice. If you study separate traditions, still you must keep their approaches separate. You cannot mix Dzogchen with Vipassana, for example.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 10th, 2018 at 2:03 AM

Title: Re: Everybody speaks about samaya, but nobody knows what it is.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is a set of commitments one makes to the guru, one's vajra siblings, and the path in general. Though they are in fact secret, they are openly discussed by many people here all the time.

Anders said:

karma-mechanically speaking, it is more than that though, right? What role do they play as an essential component of tantra practise? What it is, technically speaking, that makes it so crucial?

Malcolm wrote:

The are the foundation of the Vajrayāna path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 10th, 2018 at 12:59 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

krodha said:

And Candrakīrti isn't suggesting one break down the chariot, rather he is challenging you to locate the chariot in general.

Coëmgenu said:

By having us look at the suggested chariot at the level of its constituents rather than at the level of the suggested compounded object.

Quite literally deconstructing the suggestion.

Malcolm wrote:

The question is, where is the chariot?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 10th, 2018 at 12:58 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Unknown said:

Everything is emptiness, emptiness is not just a concept, the nature of all phenomena does not truly exist.

Malcolm wrote:

-- Khenpo Sodhar

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 10th, 2018 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: Everybody speaks about samaya, but nobody knows what it is.

Content:

Anders said:

I do wonder why it is so difficult to give a straightforward explanation of it. It seems like something that ought to be taken on with clear comprehension.

Malcolm wrote:

The samaya vows are actually secret and technically, should only be explained during or after the empowerment.

M

Anders said:

Ok, so that's the content of Samaya. I guess you can work around that by investigating the guru that bestows them.

Is the nature of it also secret? Ie, what is samaya actually, technically speaking?

Malcolm wrote:

It is a set of commitments one makes to the guru, one's vajra siblings, and the path in general. Though they are in fact secret, they are openly discussed by many people here all the time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 9th, 2018 at 11:54 PM

Title: Re: Everybody speaks about samaya, but nobody knows what it is.

Content:

Anders said:

I do wonder why it is so difficult to give a straightforward explanation of it. It seems like something that ought to be taken on with clear comprehension.

Malcolm wrote:

The samaya vows are actually secret and technically, should only be explained during or after the empowerment.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 9th, 2018 at 8:08 PM

Title: Re: The Self-Arisen Vidya Tantra and The Self-Liberated Vidya Tantra A Translation of the Rigpa Rang Shar and Rigpa Rang

Content:

☉ Fimbul ☉ said:

Does this come in two physical volumes, one for each tantra, or just one? I am curious since the picture of the cover displayed on amazon seems to only be the Rigpa Rangshar.

Malcolm wrote:

Two volume box set

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 9th, 2018 at 12:34 PM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Wayfarer said:

A bank robbery was foiled when the robbers, having grabbed the cash, fled the building, only to find that their getaway car didn't actually exist. 'I was sure I had parked it there and left the engine running', said the driver, as he was hauled off in the police paddy wagon, 'but when we came back out, it couldn't be found. It turned out that it had only ever been an imputation, although it beats me how we used it to get there in the first place'.

Malcolm wrote:

What a car is, is not the question. We all know what a car is. Where the car is in what we think a car is, is a separate question.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 9th, 2018 at 11:08 AM

Title: Re: What place does pilgrimage have in Buddhist practice?

Content:

Aryjna said:

Kailash seems to be an important place to visit. I am curious if it would be considered a priority over Bodh Gaya, Sarnath, etc. for Vajrayana practitioners.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Mount_Kailash

Malcolm wrote:

Buddha was not born at Kailash, nor did he attain awakening there, nor did he teach there, nor did he die there, nor is there any sūtra or tantra that mention it is an important site, even though it is one of the 24 places mentioned in the Cakrasamvara cycle, etc. So, no, it is not more important than these traditional four sites.

Aryjna said:

It is slightly disappointing that it is not mentioned more in the tantras.

Malcolm wrote:

It is mentioned in Sūtras, but not as a place of any special significance, just as a prominent geographical location. On the other hand, the lake near Kailash is held to be the home of Nagaraja Anavatapta, who is held to govern the rivers in India. And of course Kailash has been a common object of veneration for Indians and Himalayan's for many millennia.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 9th, 2018 at 10:03 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

krodha said:

Yet there are no parts or pieces to an entity that was never there in the first place. Hence why Nāgārjuna asserts that even constituent aggregates are merely inferential conventions.

And Candrakīrti isn't suggesting one break down the chariot, rather he is challenging you to locate the chariot in general.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. The question isn't, as some mistakenly suppose, what the chariot is, but rather where the chariot is. One finds it isn't anywhere at all, it's just an imputation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 9th, 2018 at 5:30 AM

Title: Re: What place does pilgrimage have in Buddhist practice?

Content:

Aryjna said:

Kailash seems to be an important place to visit. I am curious if it would be considered a priority over Bodh Gaya, Sarnath, etc. for Vajrayana practitioners.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Mount_Kailash

Malcolm wrote:

Buddha was not born at Kailash, nor did he attain awakening there, nor did he teach there, nor did he die there, nor is there any sūtra or tantra that mention it is an important site, even though it is one of the 24 places mentioned in the Cakrasamvara cycle, etc. So, no, it is not more important than these traditional four sites.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 8th, 2018 at 7:07 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Your argument did not address correctly how analysis of the relative is done. As I mentioned before, analysis of the relative will hit a limit. But it does not mean that the limit cannot be breached through direct perception. Until you address this, your reasoning does not hold.

This is so simple really. Can there be an ultimate truth separate from relative truth? No. There is no ultimate independent of the relative. If you say that there is, you have not understood the Buddha's distinction of the two truths. There is no ultimate truth other than the absence of inherent existence in conditioned phenomena.

The Buddha spoke from the perspective of having penetrated to the ultimate but using conventions. It does not mean that there is no ultimate. But because your position is that there is no ultimate, I have argued that your position cannot withstand a deist/theist assertion that the Buddha claim that there is no Creator God cannot be true. You made an assertion, you have not proven it because your thesis is faulty in toto. Of course there is an external world and it is all because of dependent origination.

That was a typo, meant to say, "there is no external world at all."

Your position in this discussion was that the ultimate truth is the conventional truth. We have all along been debating this position of yours.

Correct, ultimate truth is a conventional truth because it is efficient in bringing about a result. That is what makes the ultimate truth conventional, as I have explained repeatedly. If you claim the ultimate truth is not conventional, the consequence is that it is also nonfunctional.

My position is that within the constraints of the two extreme of existence and non-existence, there is the ultimate and the relative. Your position, to put it another way, is that within the region constraint by the two extremes, there is only the relative. Agree? My point of view is that within the constraints of the four extremes (there are four, not only two), the relative is not established, and therefore, the ultimate is also not established since it too cannot be established according to any of the four extremes. Sure, but there is the mind of white appearance, mind of red increase, mind of near attainment.

It is very inappropriate to mix Vajrayāna into a sūtric conversation.

Of course, you would argue that these are not different layers but different degree of subtlety of the mental consciousness.

I am not going to discuss these here: apart from mentioning these experiences are not different kinds of minds.

Even then, there is at least a difference between the sense consciousnesses and the mental consciousness. The sense consciousnesses depends on the elements. When the elements dissolve, they dissolve but the mental consciousness remains. The sense consciousnesses are therefore not fundamental.

The sense consciousnesses and the mental consciousness are the one and same, that is, the "eye-consciousness" is merely consciousness operating through the eye organ, taking form as an object; likewise, the mental consciousness operates through the mental organ, taking the dharma-āyatana/dhatu as its object. All consciousness are included in the vijñāna-skandha. There is therefore no distinction between a "fundamental consciousness" on the one hand, and secondary sensory consciousnesses on the other hand. We don't in fact have six consciousnesses, we have only one, given different names when it performs different operations. Likewise, all the vāyus in our body are actually the prāṇa vāyu, but it is given different names depending on whether it assists speech, movement, digestion, circulation, or sense perception.

The more you talk, the more misunderstandings you introduce.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 8th, 2018 at 4:44 AM

Title: Re: Why does Gelug school claim emptiness means things exist without self nature?

Content:

WeiHan said:

What I want to say is that the main method employed in trekchod is shamatha which is a sutric method.

Malcolm wrote:

No, you have a misconception. Trekchö is not sutric śamatha. In order to practice trekchö, one has to have experiential knowledge of the nature of the mind.

In Sūtra śamatha, one always takes some object. Not so in trekchö, etc.

WeiHan said:

This makes sense but it is still samatha. Moreover, sutric method also combined Shamatha with Vipassana and look into nature of mind at some stage.

Malcolm wrote:

You are really missing the point, so I am not going to continue this discussion with you. One, this in the Gelug forum. Two, trekchö is not "still śamatha." You have seized on the word, but you seem not understand the meaning. In order to engage in trekchö there are many preliminary practices one needs to complete before hand.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 8th, 2018 at 4:04 AM

Title: Re: Why does Gelug school claim emptiness means things exist without self nature?

Content:

WeiHan said:

What i want to say is that the main method employed in trekchod is shamatha which is a sutric method.

Malcolm wrote:

No, you have a misconception. Trekchö is not sutric śamatha. In order to practice trekchö, one has to have experiential knowledge of the nature of the mind.

In Sūtra śamatha, one always takes some object. Not so in trekchö, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 8th, 2018 at 3:19 AM

Title: Re: Why does Gelug school claim emptiness means things exist without self nature?

Content:

Aryjna said:

But it does not make much sense to say 'practicing with a conceptual understanding'. In that case that is not practicing trekchod in the first place. I don't think anyone is claiming people should be practicing it before they are ready for it.

WeiHan said:

I suppose you should read what Malcohms wrote. The concepts one gets from the introduction is just left aside temporarily. When in actual practice of trekchod, one simply rests on awareness without holding any concepts such as "this is empty" etc..one just rest on the clarity aspect.

Malcolm wrote:

One previously ascertains emptiness conceptually through rushan and semzin exercises so that one has a correct inferential understanding of emptiness. One's rigpa, knowledge, is that this mind is inseparably clear and empty. One rests one's mind on that. One does not, as in the Sakya approach, "seal" emptiness with clarity, or seal clarity with emptiness. Right from the beginning one rests in simple unfabricated consciousness based upon the confidence one has gained from Dzogchen preliminaries — the complexity or simplicity of the guru yoga was does is irrelevant to the main part.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 8th, 2018 at 3:07 AM

Title: Re: Why does Gelug school claim emptiness means things exist without self nature?

Content:

WeiHan said:

Correct. And they are all conceptual under usual circumstances.

The Gelug is very clear about what the HYT practices are for. The other lineages is not so explicit but that doesn't mean their tsa Lung, tummo etc don't produce similar effects.

Malcolm wrote:

The difference between the example wisdom (jñāna) and the discerning wisdom (prajñā) born of analysis is that one in the former one is introduced to a moment of unfabricated consciousness, where as in mundane discerning wisdom born of analysis one only has a generic image of emptiness.

This moment of unfabricated consciousness is the actual view meditated in trekchö (and mahāmudra, the inseparability of samsara and nirvana, etc.). The view mediated in trekcö, etc, and so on is not a conceptual view born of analysis. Thus, when you see trekchö described as śamatha plus the view, you really need to understand here that view does not refer to the mundane discerning wisdom born of analysis.

Thus, there is a very great difference between trekchö and sūtrayāna. However, the reason it is said that all Mahāyāna schools practice something similar to trekchö is that in the Prajñapāramita, it is said, "There is no mind in the mind, but the mind's original nature (prakṛti) is luminous." The Gelugpas term this unfabricated mind "the mind of clear light" in English translation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 8th, 2018 at 2:38 AM

Title: Re: Why does Gelug school claim emptiness means things exist without self nature?

Content:

WeiHan said:

Under usual circumstances, empowerment, pointing out instruction or direct introduction in Dzogchen only gave the students a conceptual view and not direct experience. after that, it is samatha resting on ordinary naked awareness-a sutric meditation.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is not correct. The example wisdom of the Dzogchen direct introduction or empowerment is the same as the example wisdom pointed out in the word empowerment.

You are positing things from a strictly Gelug framework (subtle minds and so on).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 7th, 2018 at 10:54 PM

Title: Re: Is Mind Fundamental?

Content:

Matt J said:

The question is when no one is looking. I would like to experience your colorless, silent, unfelt, Antarctica. I think you are basically positing naive realism. Even conventional science and neurology agrees that the world we experience is mentally generated--- in the case of science, by the brain.

Grigoris said:

Give me a quotation where science says that things only exist when a consciousness is perceiving them. I dare you.

Matt J said:

Should I? Should I? Tempting, but I don't want to go down the quantum physics road.

But as pointed out, stating that all of our experience is mind doesn't mean that mind is a substratum or that my individual mind generates the universe and so on. It is a statement about what we know.

So you experience objects apart from colors, sounds, feeling sensations, etc.? I doubt it. You can doubt whatever you like. Buddhist models of perception posit three factors: the sense organ, the object of perception and the sense organ's mind. Notice how the object of perception is one of the three and not included in the sense organ's mind? I wonder why?

An object is nothing more than a bundle of perceptions plus a conceptual label. Unless some one can show me an object apart from perceptions.

Where did I say there were absolute boundaries? All I am saying is that I do not believe that the mind-to-form relationship is a one way street, as you are implying. Non-dualism does not mean that one overrides the other, but that they mutually influence each other.

What I'm positing is that mind is fundamental because that is what we experience--- we never experience matter. Again, if I'm wrong, please point out what matter is like independent of mind and perception. "Matter" is usually based on some sort of enduring, underlying substance--- in ancient Buddhism, it is the atom-like Dharmas. In the modern West, it is atoms. Both have been refuted.

Malcolm wrote:

There are two Buddhist models of perception: Model A is externally triadic, that is, a percept arises based on the contact of a sense organ with an external sense object. Model B is internally triadic, holds that percepts are the actually the activation of traces that provide the content of the world that we perceive as external.

Madhyamaka is happy with either model. Both are relative, not ultimate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 7th, 2018 at 12:54 PM

Title: Re: Guru Devotion

Content:

Josef said:

It could.

We often make the assumption that upaya and pure view etc is limited to one side of the teacher student coin.

There may be times when the circumstances of wisdom and method require unorthodox behavior from both the teacher and or the student.

It's about the individual relationships and circumstances.

Thomas Amundsen said:

Assuming you have samaya with a teacher, how could you do this without damaging or breaking that samaya?

TharpaChodron said:

I was really talking about false gurus not being above reproach, as opposed to genuine lamas. Patrul Rinpoche talks about all the fake lamas in Tibet, the ones with greasy lips from eating meat and such.

As for breaking samaya with ones teacher, yeah, I think criticizing your guru after already making commitments and examining them and finding them to be not false teachers, that is a no-no.

But in our wonderful practice, we do believe in examining a teacher for a while and not merely accepting someone with a title or fan base as a great Lama. sorry I'm beating a dead horse with this old topic.

Malcolm wrote:

Appearances are deceiving. When one recognizes one has been deceived by this or that guru, it is perfectly fine to withdraw one's devotion. After all, following a guru is not a catholic wedding with no hope of divorce if things go south.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 7th, 2018 at 12:32 PM

Title: Re: What place does pilgrimage have in Buddhist practice?

Content:

Thomas Amundsen said:

stupas and large statues in North America

Fortyeightvows said:

like where?

Thomas Amundsen said:

<http://www.vajrayana.org/namdrol-pemay-gatsal/> stupa garden at Pema Osel Ling in Watsonville, California (near Santa Cruz). The 35 foot Vajrasattva statue and others at the <https://www.gettyimages.com/detail/news-photo/panorama-from-the-interior-of-a-building-in-mandala-garden-news-photo/542615198#/panorama-from-the-interior-of-a-building-in-mandala-garden-at-the-picture-id542615198> near Ashland, Oregon. And the <http://www.ewambuddhagarden.org/> in Arlee, Montana.

Malcolm wrote:

You need to do Khandroling and Mahasiiddha. There is a very beautiful Peace Pagoda quite near us as well.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 7th, 2018 at 7:13 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is no ultimate layer, there is an absence of an ultimate layer. When sought, it cannot be found.

Sherab said:

This is merely an assertion (unreasoned argument) in response to my reasoned argument.

Malcolm wrote:

The ultimate is the inability to find the relative. Therefore, the ultimate depends on the relative. Since the relative has no nature, the ultimate has no nature. Both are therefore merely conventions.

Sherab said:

There is a serious consequence of this argument. It implied that the Buddha cannot claim that there is no Creator God because of the Buddha's inability to find the relative and therefore concluded erroneously that there is no ultimate.

Malcolm wrote:

This consequence is invalid since it implies that the inability of relative truth to bear analysis validates causeless arising.

Sherab said:

This would leave the Buddha opened to the counterargument that how then can he claimed that there was no Creator God? The Buddha can claim that there is no Creator God because he knows what the ultimate is and it is not a Creator God.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha only asserts that there is no causeless arising. A creator ipso facto is a causeless cause. The Buddha never rejects this on the basis of an analysis of the relative, but only on the basis of common appearances everyone is witness too, to wit, no one ever perceives any thing at any time any where that arises without a cause. This does not require ultimate analysis at all. Therefore, your pervasion is faulty.

Sherab said:

If the ultimate is the inability to find the relative, the Buddha and all of us could be brains in vat, or living in the Matrix, or in a simulation, and can never look beyond that.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, there is the Yogacāra school, which will happily agree there is external world at all.

Have you considered that reality is simply the absence of the inherent existence of conditioned things and that is all? All Madhyamakas are univocal that the absence of inherent existence in things is reality. This is also the message of the Prajñāpāramitā sūtras.

Of course. Otherwise, how could I have pointed out that it leads to the logical incoherence/inconsistency/contradiction, which you conveniently evaded by claiming that you have all along equated words "ultimate truth" as referring to "enumerated ultimate truth". But this evasion did not hold up to scrutiny.

Of course it holds up to scrutiny. This is why you are unable to rebut my arguments — you have a position and I do not.

No, this is irrelevant.

Not in my view. I made this assumption because when I look at the description of the death process, it would appear that there are layers of consciousness, and sense consciousnesses seemed not to be fundamental.

"Sense consciousness" is merely a name for one's consciousness when it is operating through a sense organ. When it is not, it is mental consciousness. There are no layers of consciousness beyond that.

From all your responses, I conclude that you do not consider your position as wrong. I don't have a position with regard to the ultimate, that's your problem, not mine. All I have done is show that there is no ultimate apart from the convention, "ultimate."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 7th, 2018 at 12:20 AM

Title: Re: What place does pilgrimage have in Buddhist practice?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Pilgrimage has arguably had a prominent place in Buddhist practice, particularly lay practice, from very early on. In Japanese Buddhism with which I am most familiar, it is a significant practice even today, and it seems important in other places around Asia, too. In the West it does not seem to figure into practice much... Perhaps because we don't have significant places to visit, yet.

How do you view pilgrimage practice? Is pilgrimage part of your practice?

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha enjoined all followers to visit the four main sites: Lumbini, Bodhgaya, Sarnath (Deer park), and Kushinagara where he passed away.

I would opine that pilgrimage is very important to all Buddhists. We should all make an effort to visit these four crucial places.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 7th, 2018 at 12:11 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The relative is indescribable as well. If it were describable, it would not be empty of the four extremes.

Sherab said:

How do you examine the relative to come to the conclusion that it is indescribable? By examining what underlies the appearance. Therefore, you can only come to the conclusion that it is indescribable after examining all the layers underlying an appearance. So, you can only conclude that the relative is indescribable only after you come to the conclusion that the ultimate layer is indescribable and not the other way round.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no ultimate layer, there is an absence of an ultimate layer. When sought, it cannot be found.

The ultimate is the nature of the relative. Since the nature of the relative cannot be ascertained, there is no ultimate to ascertain, in other words the ultimate is simply the ascertainment of the absence of inherent existence of the relative, nothing else.

It is the nature of the ultimate that cannot be ascertained that makes the relative indescribable. The nature of the relative is ultimately the nature of the ultimate and not the other way round.

The ultimate is the inability to find the relative. Therefore, the ultimate depends on the relative. Since the relative has no nature, the ultimate has no nature. Both are therefore merely conventions.

No, you have not established that the ultimate is nondeceptive, actually. You have only shown that the ultimate of a lower tenet system is the relative of a higher tenet system, that's it. You have not even shown the ultimate is inexpressible. The only way to show that the ultimate is inexpressible is to show that nothing relative is expressible. In fact, the ultimate depends on entirely on the relative. When the relative is not found, the ultimate vanishes.

If the ultimate truth is deceptive, then no wisdom or knowledge of reality is possible. Have you considered that reality is simply the absence of the inherent existence of conditioned things and that is all? All Madhyamakas are univocal that the absence of inherent existence in things is reality. This is also the message of the Prajñāpāramitā sūtras.

It is not possible to have a direct perception without sense media.

It all depends on whether one assumes the eye consciousness etc is an emergent property or not. If it is, then that would impose a limitation on what can be perceived through it.

No, this is irrelevant.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 6th, 2018 at 8:51 PM

Title: Re: Is Mind Fundamental?

Content:

"Malcolm" said:

Science is good for blowing shit up.

Wayfarer said:

Also for making useful devices, such as those used by yourself to make that remark on the global network of interconnected users.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, good for blowing shit up.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 6th, 2018 at 6:14 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Sherab said:

Do you interpret that "do not exist" in the nihilistic sense where there is no possibility of a continuum of the meditator or the dharmadhātu (in other words, no possibility of freedom from the two extremes)?

Malcolm wrote:

In (ultimate) reality there is no meditator nor a dharmadhātu. All such distinctions are conventional. I don't negate these things conventionally speaking, but ultimately they cannot be established at all.

With respect to this issue, I follow the position of the Jetsun Sakya Gongma who declare, "there is no reality (gnas lugs med pa)" and always have. In other words, since the four extremes cannot be established for relative phenomena, there is no way the four extremes can exist in the ultimate either. This being so, there is no reality as there isn't anything established which can be free from the four extremes. The ultimate is considered inexpressible not because it is something free from the four extremes, it is inexpressible because nothing can be established by way of the four extremes either relatively or ultimately.

As the Samputa Tantra puts it:

Nothing empty, nothing not empty, and nothing to perceive in the middle.

Sherab said:

This seems to be a rather evasive reply.

My reasoning for maintaining that there is a difference between the relative and the ultimate is simply this. If the ultimate is truly indescribable, then you cannot say that it is truly non-existent. If it is truly non-existent, then the word "non-existent" would be an accurate and exact description. If the ultimate cannot be described, then it truly cannot be described. And all we can say is what it is not and not what it is. Also, since we can say what the relative is, and since we cannot say what the ultimate is, the ultimate and the relative cannot be the same.

Malcolm wrote:

The relative is indescribable as well. If it were describable, it would not be empty of the four extremes.

Sherab said:

In brief, my view is that Buddhist ontology is simply that reality is constraint within the two extremes. Within this constraint, there is the ultimate reality and there is the relative reality. The ultimate is not deceptive but the ultimate [sic] is. The nature of the ultimate is the nature of the relative, so one can say that ultimately, the ultimate truth is the same as the relative truth. But we cannot say that the ultimate is the relative.

Malcolm wrote:

The ultimate is the nature of the relative. Since the nature of the relative cannot be ascertained, there is no ultimate to ascertain, in other words the ultimate is simply the ascertainment of the absence of inherent existence of the relative, nothing else.

Sherab said:

In analyzing the relative, we look at the appearance and then ask what is underneath that appearance. So we look at an apple and see that it is formed from molecules. The apple therefore does not exist at the level of the molecules. The apple therefore is simply the appearance of the apple if we don't look at the underlying reality of the apple. Similarly, when we look at a molecule, we see that it is comprised of atoms. At the level of the atom, the molecule does not exist and is simply an appearance. When we look at an atom, we see that it comprises other particles such as quarks and electrons. Science has managed only to penetrate to this level of reality. Beyond that, it is still speculative. Taking the analysis to its logical conclusion, we come to the ultimate reality which is the basis of all the relative realities above it.

Malcolm wrote:

All this shows is that an "ultimate" is just a limit of one's analysis. Glad we agree on that — though it is a little odd to say that a limitation of analysis is the basis of anything at all.

Sherab said:

Therefore, the ultimate is not deceptive and all the various levels of relative realities above it are deceptive. According to the Buddha, this ultimate cannot be described. He did not say that it exists or did not exist. This is all we can say.

Malcolm wrote:

No, you have not established that the ultimate is nondeceptive, actually. You have only shown that the ultimate of a lower tenet system is the relative of a higher tenet system, that's it. You have not even shown the ultimate is inexpressible. The only way to show that the ultimate is inexpressible is to show that nothing relative is expressible. In fact, the ultimate depends entirely on the relative. When the relative is not found, the ultimate vanishes.

Sherab said:

It seems to me that for this reason, the approach of Buddhism to reality is apophatic and that it holds that the only way to know what reality really is is through direct "perception" without the intermediation of any sense media.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not possible to have a direct perception without sense media.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 6th, 2018 at 5:47 AM

Title: Re: Why does Gelug school claim emptiness means things exist without self nature?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

We know already that it is empty since we confirmed this analytically during rushan of the mind or the semzin of gradual and sudden emptiness.

PSM said:

Hi Malcolm - what is the specific semdzin(s) you are referring to here? Something like yeshe zangthal?

Malcolm wrote:

In the classical tradition of seven semszins, the two final ones are gradual and sudden emptiness. You can find them described elsewhere.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 6th, 2018 at 5:27 AM

Title: Re: Guru Devotion

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Guru devotion does not entail following political leaders.

SunWuKong said:

Well, you and the Dalai Lama can argue about that.

Malcolm wrote:

No need, he has already made this abundantly clear in many places.

SunWuKong said:

As I said he has an entire nation of followers, in Europe, who have been loyal to him for centuries.

Malcolm wrote:

With respect to Kalmiyaks. I think you have a fundamental misunderstanding of what a guru is in Tibetan Buddhism. If you have not received empowerment from someone, that person cannot be considered your guru no matter how much faith and devotion you have for them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 6th, 2018 at 3:39 AM

Title: Re: A Western Philosopher's Take on Buddhist Violence

Content:

Queequeg said:

There are a couple points I would make.

1. Dharma is not a set of commands.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, that is what Vinaya is for, governing our conduct.

Queequeg said:

So, when Buddhists commit violence, its not understood as a breaking of some commandment, but rather, the expression of our tendencies flowing from the three poisons.

Malcolm wrote:

When Buddhists commit acts of violence, they are breaking the precept of refuge in the Dharma, ahimsa. The Hinayāna vows govern our physical and verbal actions, while Mahāyāna precepts govern our intention.

Queequeg said:

And maybe the real disconnect here is not the surprise that Buddhists commit violence, but the real issue is the misunderstanding of what Dharma is and how the problems of violence are understood within the tradition.

Malcolm wrote:

There are many traditions— how violence is to be understand varies from tradition to tradition, which is apropos to your introductory statement.

Queequeg said:

2The authors seem to fall a little too heavily on the side that regardless of the dharmas, human beings will act out their nature, and that dharmas only serve as a rationalization after the fact.

Malcolm wrote:

I think this is a perfectly fair observation on the part of the authors, and is born out by many centuries of Buddhist authors parodying their less than diligent coreligionists and bitterly claiming since the fifth century C.E. (i.e. the fall of the Gupta empire) at minimum that we live in a degenerate age, which is only going to get worse, with the Dharma becoming more and more corrupted as time moves on.

Queequeg said:

IMHO, Dharmas do matter - maybe they don't have the precise impact of a meticulously followed set of commandments, but they have profound impact in ordering reality, establishing tropes and normative behaviors.

Malcolm wrote:

The problem the authors are pointing out is when a culture uses Dharma to normalize pathological behavior which is not consistent with ahimsa, for example Myanmar, Shri Lanka, Japan in WWII, and so on. In this case, the Dharma is being used specifically to target Muslims for harm. This is really far worse than a bhikṣu murdering a hundred people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 6th, 2018 at 2:19 AM

Title: Re: Why does Gelug school claim emptiness means things exist without self nature?

Content:

WeiHan said:

If there is really no difference between perfection of wisdom, Chan/Zen etc..What is the element in Treckcod that separates it from the rest as an extremely swift path? At least I have never heard that perfection of wisdom, chan/zen which are sutrayana practices can attain rainbow bodies in this very life.

Malcolm wrote:

Empowerment.

Sennin said:

Is gting gsal explained in vehicles beside Dzogchen?

Malcolm wrote:

I have not encountered it in other traditions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 6th, 2018 at 1:58 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Grigoris said:

If they have eyes and understand English then of course they can read it, but it won't mean much to them and it may not be all that helpful.

fuki said:

Shoot! I have the book (haven't started yet)

I'll read it but when unhelpful, is there any place I can donate it too? All books I'm "done with" I give away if the "right person" appears. But having no Vajrayana introduction (apart from sitting with the Maitreya institute a few times which I assume doesn't count) is that institute a good place to donate it too?

Malcolm wrote:

Give it to someone who practices Dzogchen. I am sure there is someone here who may want it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 6th, 2018 at 1:48 AM

Title: Re: Why does Gelug school claim emptiness means things exist without self nature?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There really is no difference between perfection of wisdom, mahāmudra, Chan/Zen, etc., and trekchöd. I have heard it said that Tulku Orgyen asserted that trekchöd exists in all yānas, perhaps EPK would be kind enough to confirm this. What separates from trekchöd from these other systems of the method of introduction. Trekchöd, like any secret mantra practice, is based on empowerment/introduction.

WeiHan said:

If there is really no difference between perfection of wisdom, Chan/Zen etc..What is the element in Trekchod that separates it from the rest as an extremely swift path? At least I have never heard that perfection of wisdom, chan/zen which are sutrayana practices can attain rainbow bodies in this very life.

Malcolm wrote:

Empowerment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 6th, 2018 at 12:56 AM

Title: Re: Guru Devotion

Content:

SunWuKong said:

who is telling you how to have regard for a guru? goes unanswered except "everyone here" and that won't resolve the issue of how one pays due respect.

Malcolm wrote:

There are many instructions for this in both sūtra and tantra.

SunWuKong said:

Buddha is sufficient as a guru for me.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha passed away 2,500 years. When did you meet him?

SunWuKong said:

Let me give you an example of what i think guru devotion means. There is a Buddhist nation in Europe. Did you know this? It's called Kalmykia. They en masse relocated to the Volga region of Russia when Islam invaded Mongolia. They, as all Mongolians who remain Buddhist are loyal to the Dalai Lama, by a binding treaty between their people and the Dalai Lama's government of Tibet. The current status of the treaty is probably no longer legally binding, because they are now living in Russia, and the exiled government is not ruling. None the less they are all followers of Dalai Lama's teaching. So there's no thrashing around trying to figure out what or who to believe. Its a given.

Malcolm wrote:

Guru devotion does not entail following political leaders.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 5th, 2018 at 12:41 PM

Title: Re: Guru Devotion

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

Yes, yes Buddhadharma is not immune to scandal, but practitioners have a broader view than merely believing gurus are always above reproach. That sort of black and white thinking is best left to other faiths and Trump voters, not Vajrayana Buddhists.

Malcolm wrote:

The black and white approach seems pretty deeply entrenched in the Tibetan scene.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 5th, 2018 at 12:34 PM

Title: Re: Alternative Aroma Offerings Besides Incense?

Content:

catlady2112 said:

My housemate has an allergy to incense and I am trying to find a replacement for an offering with an aroma. I've heard of people using perfume offering. I was thinking of some simple way to do this with perfume, such as everyday putting a drop of essential oil into something like a sponge which would allow it to give an aroma for about an hour, but a sponge seems kind of unpleasant to put on an altar. I prefer not to light candles because I live in earthquake country and I'm nervous I might forget to put it out. Any suggestions?

Malcolm wrote:

Essential oil, sandalwood would be best, using an aromatherapy diffuser is just fine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 5th, 2018 at 11:20 AM

Title: Re: Guru Devotion

Content:

SunWuKong said:

I thinks it's mostly important concept in India and Tibet, you'd have to prove its efficacy in Vajrayana elsewhere, I'm open to it but skeptical.

Malcolm wrote:

There really is no Vajrayāna anywhere but among Himalayan and Mongolian people, apart from Western and Chinese devotees. Shingon is Mantrayāna, not really Vajrayāna. There is no practice of what is known as "unsurpassed yoga tantra" in Shingon. Shingon preceded the transmission of unsurpassed yoga tantra to countries outside of the subcontinent.

SunWuKong said:

And I'm almost sure it's only in lineages that transmit mahasiddhi transmission, because you don't need a guru to gain enlightenment.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure you do. Everyone does. It is axiomatic, even in sūtra.

SunWuKong said:

But some of your Tibetan transmissions are about other things, as I'm sure you know, and without a guru you'd probably be reduced to ashes or something.

Malcolm wrote:

Have you studied Tibetan Buddhism? I am really not sure what these "other things" are. Can you enlighten us as to what these "other things" might be?

SunWuKong said:

It's not an everyone everywhere issue. In fact I bet there's a lot of Tibetans that wouldn't give a crap about it one way or the other

Malcolm wrote:

How is this relevant to the discussion?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 5th, 2018 at 11:14 AM

Title: Re: Is Mind Fundamental?

Content:

SunWuKong said:

To be precise, your trying to make a broad generalization about all human minds? In Buddhism, it's thought that there is a commonality that the entire species shares. So if by "mind" you refer to the sentient knowing, understanding that takes place you might call that mind. But it doesn't define the difference between the knower and the known. To say that matter is really only mind is an unprovable statement. There are empirical tests that can determine the presence of matter independent of one's mind. In fact science itself is all about empirical proof. So the theory crumbles. And I'm not sure why this question is important. If it's to posit some kind of short cut to Nirvana by putting forth that matter is really only mind, the answer is no, it doesn't work that way.

Malcolm wrote:

It's a question of method — different conventional truth frameworks have differing applications—none are universally effective, otherwise they would not be methods.

Science is good for blowing shit up. Buddhadharma is good for liberation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 5th, 2018 at 11:03 AM

Title: Re: Guru Devotion

Content:

PadmaVonSamba said:

Again and again we are reminded that Devotion to one's teacher is essential to vajrayana practice.

But what does it mean?

Tibetans histories are filled with examples, of course, but what if one simply cannot develop what they imagine is required?

What if a teacher never really expresses a demand for it?

Is it an absolute concept? Is it different for different people?

Can one in fact be devoted, but simply not realize it, because, for example, it doesn't seem like anything exceptional?

There are also so many examples in various Indian (Hindu) traditions.

It's a concept that is difficult for many in the west. It sounds "cultish".

Is this a concept that needs to, itself, be a translated concept?

I have my own thoughts about this, but I just wondered...

What do you think?

.
. .

TharpaChodron said:

My understanding is that "Western culture" has an issue with what it sees as cultish obeisance to gurus because it misunderstands devotion in the guru-disciple relationship.

Malcolm wrote:

In all fairness, the 60's, 70's, and 80's were witness some pretty horrific gurus, and even now there are many pretty horrific gurus. Buddhadharma is also not devoid of scandal, as we know.

Devotion boils down to how many hours a day you spend on Dharma, such as 1 hour? 2?, 3?, 4?, 5?, 6?...? Of course, as Vajrayāna people, we are supposed to practice 24/7/365. Easy to say...

TharpaChodron said:

One has to realize that the guru's enlightened nature is none other than our own true nature, and is not separate from or above from us.

Malcolm wrote:
All fires are hot.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, March 5th, 2018 at 6:58 AM
Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought
Content:

Sherab said:
Do you interpret that "do not exist" in the nihilistic sense where there is no possibility of a continuum of the meditator or the dharmadhātu (in other words, no possibility of freedom from the two extremes)?

Malcolm wrote:
In (ultimate) reality there is no meditator nor a dharmadhātu. All such distinctions are conventional. I don't negate these things conventionally speaking, but ultimately they cannot be established at all.

With respect to this issue, I follow the position of the Jetsun Sakya Gongma who declare, "there is no reality (gnas lugs med pa)" and always have. In other words, since the four extremes cannot be established for relative phenomena, there is no way the four extremes can exist in the ultimate either. This being so, there is no reality as there isn't anything established which can be free from the four extremes. The ultimate is considered inexpressible not because it is something free from the four extremes, it is inexpressible because nothing can be established by way of the four extremes either relatively or ultimately.

As the Samputa Tantra puts it:

Nothing empty, nothing not empty, and nothing to perceive in the middle.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, March 5th, 2018 at 5:31 AM
Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought
Content:

Sherab said:
In normal usage, one would expect that when we see the words "ultimate truth", we would take the words as a holder for the entity that the words are pointing to. For example, when we see the word "apple", we see it as pointing to the entity apple. If we want to indicate something that deviate from the convention, we would qualify the word used. For example, we want to refer to an apple of a specific colour, we would use the words "the red apple".

Therefore, when we see the word "ultimate truth", it would be reasonable to expect those words to point to the actual entity of ultimate truth. If we want to indicate something that deviate from the common understanding, say we want to point to an ultimate truth that is a concept, we would use the words "conceptual ultimate truth".

So when come across the word "ultimate truth" or "the ultimate" in the sutras, it would be reasonable to take those words as pointing to the entity of ultimate truth or the entity of ultimate. If not, the sutras, will not make any sense. If the conceptual understanding of the ultimate is being referred to, this should be obvious based on the context. For example, the Buddha said in the Samdhinirmocana that "the ultimate is realized individually by the Aryas"

"the ultimate belongs to the signless realm"

"the ultimate is inexpressible"

"the ultimate is devoid of conventions."

Malcolm wrote:

Another citation (and this is as far away from Hua Yen as one can get), because it is useful— Mipham, commenting on Mañjuśrīmitra's Meditation of Bodhicitta states:

Since neither the state of affliction nor of purification [10/a] is established, because awakening (buddhahood) and non-awakening (sentient beinghood) are the same in terms of being equally without characteristics, there is no buddhahood to accept or sentient beinghood to reject.

Also, if the ultimate is not established, where will one see words that state “It is like this?” If there is an analysis in accordance with the meaning of how it is explained, all of those explanations for the so called “nominal ultimate”, “absence of arising and ceasing”, “sameness”, “nonduality”, “beyond thought”, “emptiness”, “the dharmadhātu”, and so on are didactic conventions. In the true definitive meaning, they are neither ultimate nor are they relative. If there is the perception, “The path is like this in accordance with the ultimate (which is not a convention),” then that is relative, but not ultimate. In reality, where is there a “relative and ultimate” that are inseparable as the two truths?

Mañjuśrīmitra's very next passage states:

Do not abandon or dwell in any Dharma at all, with or without doubt.

Since the meditator and the dharmadhātu do not exist, there is nothing to doubt and there is nothing to perceive as ultimate.

Mipham expands on this:

Since the Dharma of those with doubt who have not seen the true meaning and those without doubt who have seen it in reality is neither true nor false at all, do not abandon the false nor dwell in the true. If it is asked why, in reality, because the meditator and the dharmadhātu do not exist, who has doubts about something? [10/b] Therefore, there is also nothing to perceive as ultimate in the Dharma that is without doubt because in scripture it is said that it is necessary for one to abandon craving to conducive Dharma and aversion to unconducive Dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 5th, 2018 at 4:33 AM

Title: Re: Mind

Content:

Queequeg said:

In East Asia, they relate it to the Amalavijnana which I understand is a development either in China or along the silk road... Not found in traditional yogacara.

Malcolm wrote:

The so-called amalavijñāna is the innovation of the Indian monk, Paramārtha. Sally B. King's Buddhanature discusses this in some detail.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 4th, 2018 at 11:29 PM

Title: Re: Why does Gelug school claim emptiness means things exist without self nature?

Content:

heart said:

Rigpa is utterly non-conceptual. If you can rest in rigpa for half a day, you are on the path of seeing. But ordinary Dzogchen practitioners can't rest in rigpa longer than a few moments at a time.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, what one is resting is empty clarity. However, below the path of seeing, the emptiness of that clarity is a conceptual inference. However, when meditating, we just rest in the clarity aspect without engaging in concepts like "this is empty." We know already that it is empty since we confirmed this analytically during rushan of the mind or the semzin of gradual and sudden emptiness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 4th, 2018 at 11:25 PM

Title: Re: Why does Gelug school claim emptiness means things exist without self nature?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think I agree. For example, when one, a beginner, dissolves appearances into emptiness, is that emptiness conceptual or nonconceptual? When at the end of a sadhana one dissolves the deity into emptiness, is that emptiness conceptual or nonconceptual? If one is below the path of seeing, it is conceptual by necessity. The difference is that emptiness is based on the example wisdom of the empowerment rather than analysis.

WeiHan said:

OK. The difference is probably between analytical or not. While we are at it, maybe we can clarify the dzogchen ati practice. Does an authentic trechok practice requires one to be resting non-conceptually in Rigpa? If it is so, then all genuine practitioners of Trechok are necessarily at least on or above the path of seeing?

Malcolm wrote:

The question is framed incorrectly. Treckhöd is best described in general terms as a practice in which insight into emptiness and śamatha are combined. But below the path of seeing, this insight is conceptual, based on the example wisdom of the direct introduction. However, the emptiness meditated upon in trekchöd is also inferential until one mounts the path of seeing. There really is no difference between perfection of wisdom, mahāmudra, Chan/Zen, etc., and tregchöd. I have heard it said that Tulku Orgyen asserted that trekchöd exists in all yānas, perhaps EPK would be kind enough to confirm this. What separates from trekchöd from these other systems of the method of introduction. Trekchöd, like any secret mantra practice, is based on empowerment/introduction.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 4th, 2018 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: Is Mind Fundamental?

Content:

Matt J said:

The problem with positing a mind-matter duality are many: first, the essence of everything is the same (i.e. emptiness), so there is no foundation upon which to posit a duality.

Malcolm wrote:

Ultimately, not conventionally.

Matt J said:

If everything is empty, then so are boundaries, walls, divisions, and so on.

Malcolm wrote:
Ultimately, not conventionally.

Matt J said:
Second, if things were truly separate, they could not interact or have any relationship. If they did, they wouldn't be separate. This is why Samkhya philosophy collapses, and why materialists love to take on Cartesian dualism--- it is logically inconsistent.

Malcolm wrote:
Samkhya has two problems: one, all effects exist in the cause. Permanent knower that is passive. But Samkhya is really more of a phenomenology than an ontology.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, March 4th, 2018 at 11:14 PM
Title: Re: Read on the Kayas
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
love is the wish that sentient beings be happy. Compassion is the wish that they be free from suffering. Aspirational bodhicitta is based on compassion; engaged bodhicitta is carrying out the first four perfections.

weitsicht said:
This is about wish only, it doesn't advise on actions.
so Malcolm, compassion is absent of any guidance as concerns action (speech or body)?

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, without wisdom, compassion in general is blind.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, March 4th, 2018 at 11:12 PM
Title: Re: Vajrayāna/Dzogchen
Content:

weitsicht said:
Is that contradictory to what Malcolm said?

Are Dzogchen and Mahamudra outside the samaya frame or not?

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, the person who wrote that has no idea what they are talking about.

No, Dzogchen and Mahāmudra are not outside of the samaya framework at all. It is a misconception which goes back to at least the 12th century.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 4th, 2018 at 6:47 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Sherab said:

None of the citations that you provided support your contention as I have mentioned before although you may insist that they do:

Nāgārjuna states:

Without depending on convention, the ultimate cannot be explained;
without realizing the ultimate, nirvana will not be obtained.

"Without depending on convention, the ultimate cannot be explained" does not imply that you can say "the ultimate = the conventional" or "the ultimate truth = the conventional truth". You depend on the Dharma boat to get to the shore of liberation, but this does not entail that the Dharma boat is the shore of liberation.

Malcolm wrote:

The teaching of ultimate truth is the boat, not the other shore. This is why it a conventional truth.

Sherab said:

Candrakīrti states in the Madhyamakāvatāra:

"Because all entities can be seen correctly and falsely, entities possess a dual nature;
the correct perception of any object is true;
the false perception is called "relative."

Also false perception is asserted to be of two kinds, clear sense organs and faulty sense organs."

There correct perception (1), false but unfaulty perception (2), and false and faulty perception (3). It does not follow that (1) = (2) or (2) = (3) or (1) = (3) or (1) = (2) = (3). In fact, it is patently incorrect to make such equations. You will have no problem in disagreeing that (2) = (3), yet you seem to have problem in rejecting the others.

Malcolm wrote:

I never stated that $1 = 2$. In other words, I never stated that veridical perceptions equalled non-veridical perceptions. I cited that so you would understand what an ultimate truth was since I was not, and am still not certain that you do not have a realist position with regard to suchness. For example, Advaitans deny that brahmin falls into the two extremes, and yet, they are still realists. The same applies to Yogacāra. Your comment about "other shores" leads me to believe you think nirvana is something other than the simple cessation of afflictions that cause rebirth.

I stated that ultimate true has to be a conventional truth in order to be functional for the worldly people. See next point.

Sherab said:

Candrakīrti states in his commentary on the 70:

Relative truth and ultimate truth are conventions used by the noble ones.

And:

Here, these are true through the power of a worldly, undistorted consciousness, and are defined as ultimate truth through the power of this absence of distortion.

And:

"Ultimate truth" is expressed on the basis of worldly convention."

What is the purpose of using conventions? So that you can convey the meaning. Just because the worlds "relative truth" and "ultimate truth" are used to convey meaning, does not mean that you can equate the meanings carried by the two sets of words.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, we are conveying meaning with words. This is why Bhāvaviveka distinguishes two kinds of ultimate, enumerated or nominal, which is conventional, and an unenumerated ultimate which is not within the range of convention since it cannot be experienced by worldlings, but only by āryas.

A true relative truth is the apprehension of a functional object that is mistaken about the object's nature (self of phenomena). Such a relative truth is called conventional to indicate its functionality. Thus, when we describe emptiness, ultimate truth, this description, while ultimately true, is nevertheless part of conventional truth. When we cognize emptiness as an object below the path of seeing, it is only nominally an ultimate, thus, it is still conventional because it is not a direct perception of emptiness, but only an approximation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 4th, 2018 at 5:10 AM

Title: Re: Is Mind Fundamental?

Content:

krodha said:

Your position is that phenomena are established in an external environment and that we as sentient beings merely inhabit and encounter this pre-existing environment?

Grigoris said:

Nope. I believe that we are just as much a part of this environment as other phenomena (we are just a phenomenon anyway, we differ in that we possess sentience too: form AND mind).

Malcolm wrote:

I think what he is asking you is if you think the universe exists independently of minds.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 4th, 2018 at 5:06 AM

Title: Re: What are the General Mahayana Teachings?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Whatever the case may be, the issue is not addressed at length in the Nikayas/Agamas.

Astus said:

So it is.

Malcolm wrote:

Another thing is that since the issue is not sufficiently addressed at length, people were able to invent these intrinsic characteristics and so on -- no wonder Mahāyānis had doubts about an arhat's awakening.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 4th, 2018 at 4:51 AM

Title: Re: Vasectomy

Content:

Pema Rigdzin said:

Recently my wife floated the idea of me getting a vasectomy once we've either had our second and last child, or once we've decided we're gonna be one and done. She wasn't insistent, so that's not an issue, and I can't help but sympathize with her position of all other methods of birth control being basically all on her. But my concern is whether a surgery like this would be damaging to practice of Secret Mantra in general, and Dzogchen in particular. What say you, Malcolm, and others? Anyone spoke to their lama about this? I know my wife would take yet another one for the team if I told her it would be harmful to my practice. But would it?

Sonam Wangchug said:

Not only is the advice that it's fine to get Vasectomy grossly inaccurate, it's also incredibly harmful.

Malcolm wrote:

Why? You should present a reason, not merely an assertion. I will be interested to see your reasoning. I expect citations, not merely the opinions of this or that lama.

Sonam Wangchug said:

I was present once when one of the Nyingma lineage heads was talking about various karma's of sexual actions according to the view of the Mantrayana, when it came to the topic of Vasectomy, He said "You don't even want to think about the karma of a Vasectomy" He said that across the board, not only for individuals who are into the yogas.

Malcolm wrote:

How can receiving a vasectomy be a negative karma? This is like claiming the use of birth control is negative karma. Such a position does not make any sense at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 4th, 2018 at 4:07 AM

Title: Re: What are the General Mahayana Teachings?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

it is not extensively mentioned in these texts.

Astus said:

And the reason for that is that dharmas are not taught to have/be svabhava in them either, furthermore, even the concept of dharma as a fundamental element is missing. And according to Bhikkhu Bodhi (Comprehensive Manual of Abhidhamma, p 3): "Even in the Abhidhamma Pitaka itself the dhamma theory is not yet expressed as an explicit philosophical tenet; this comes only later, in the Commentaries."

Malcolm wrote:

I think you mean that the Mahāyāna taught extensively on absence of self in phenomena as a remedy to Sarvastivadin, etc., assertions of svalakṣaṇa and svabhāva, assertions absent in so-called Early Buddhism. Whatever the case may be, the issue is not addressed at length in the Nikayas/Agamas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 4th, 2018 at 3:50 AM

Title: Re: Why does Gelug school claim emptiness means things exist without self nature?

Content:

WeiHan said:

I don't think other schools use the clear light mind attained through HYT to meditate on conceptual emptiness previously arrived at analytically. I only find this approach in Gelug's teaching.

Malcolm wrote:

Sakyas and Nyingmapas do not use the terminology, no.

WeiHan said:

Terminology aside, I do not see Sakya, Nyingma or Kagyu uses accomplishment state in completion stage to meditate on a conceptual emptiness derived through Madhyamika reasoning. Only Gelug.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think I agree. For example, when one, a beginner, dissolves appearances into emptiness, is that emptiness conceptual or nonconceptual? When at the end of a sadhana one dissolves the deity into emptiness, is that emptiness conceptual or nonconceptual? If one is below the path of seeing, it is conceptual by necessity. The difference is that emptiness is based on the example wisdom of the empowerment rather than analysis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 4th, 2018 at 2:13 AM

Title: Re: Why does Gelug school claim emptiness means things exist without self nature?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

All Tibetan schools holds that a correct, inferential understanding of emptiness is necessary. Where they disagree is mostly on pedagogy. For example, the Gelugpas claim that even if one is practicing Vajrayāna, one must nevertheless still engage in analytical meditation based on identifying the proper object of negation according to Madhyamaka reasons.

Sakya, on the other hand, maintains that the example wisdom demonstrated during empowerment corresponds with a proper inferential understanding of emptiness, and it is on the basis of this one practices.

WeiHan said:

I don't think other schools use the clear light mind attained through HYT to meditate on conceptual emptiness previously arrived at analytically. I only find this approach in Gelug's teaching.

Malcolm wrote:

Sakyas and Nyingmapas do not use the terminology, no.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 4th, 2018 at 2:11 AM

Title: Re: Why does Gelug school claim emptiness means things exist without self nature?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

All Tibetan schools holds that a correct, inferential understanding of emptiness is necessary. Where they disagree is mostly on pedagogy. For example, the Gelugpas claim that even if one is practicing Vajrayāna, one must nevertheless still engage in analytical meditation based on identifying the proper object of negation according to Madhyamaka reasons.

Sakya, on the other hand, maintains that the example wisdom demonstrated during empowerment corresponds with a proper inferential understanding of emptiness, and it is on the basis of this one practices.

Jeff H said:

Yes, I agree there's a difference in pedagogical approaches, but with the same ultimate outcome. I don't think you are disagreeing with that, right? When Josef says, <https://dharmawheel.net/posting.php?mode=quote&f=40&t=27883&p=438421#pr438417>, if he means sufficient to result in direct realization of emptiness or enlightenment, that's what I'm objecting to. I don't think Gelugpas claim that. And I'm quite certain they don't believe Buddhas have dualistic minds.

Malcolm wrote:

According the Gelug school, Buddhas can think thoughts, recognize objects, and so on. It is the position of the Sakya school that Buddhas are utterly free from thought at all times.

What the Sakyapas object to most about Gelug view is the statement that clinging to an intellectual representation of emptiness is acceptable and even necessary. Thus, there is some disagreement about what it means when Nāgārjuna says, "Without relying on the conventional, the ultimate will not be understood."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 4th, 2018 at 1:40 AM

Title: Re: Why does Gelug school claim emptiness means things exist without self nature?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

All Tibetan schools holds that a correct, inferential understanding of emptiness is necessary. Where they disagree is mostly on pedagogy. For example, the Gelugpas claim that even if one is practicing Vajrayāna, one must nevertheless still engage in analytical meditation based on identifying the proper object of negation according to Madhyamaka reasons.

Sakya, on the other hand, maintains that the example wisdom demonstrated during empowerment corresponds with a proper inferential understanding of emptiness, and it is on the basis of this one practices.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 4th, 2018 at 1:20 AM

Title: Re: What are the General Mahayana Teachings?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This the selflessness of the person, not of phenomena.

Astus said:

The selflessness of person is that there is no person, only the aggregates, while the selflessness of phenomena is that the aggregates themselves are without essence. The sutra talks about how phenomena themselves are dependent and without any will of their own, so it matches what the Lankavatara Sutra (2.24, tr Red Pine) says: "And what does it mean to know that dharmas have no self? It means to be aware that the self-existence of the skandhas, dhatus, and ayatanas is imaginary, that the skandhas, dhatus, and ayatanas are devoid of a self or anything that belongs to a self, that the skandhas, dhatus, and ayatanas are assemblages tied to desire and karma and that they arise from the interplay of conditions but are themselves passive, and that all dharmas are like this."

Malcolm wrote:

The main point, Astus, is that even though the selflessness of phenomena may be briefly mentioned in Agama and Nikaya texts, it is not extensively mentioned in these texts. On this point, Candrakīrti cites Nāgārjuna's Lokāṭīṣṭava:

You have said there is no liberation without realizing the signless, therefore, you have taught this completely in the Mahāyāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 3rd, 2018 at 9:59 PM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Sherab said:

As to your argument quoted above, are you saying that:

(1) It is not possible to gain insights from meditation when the meditator merely follows the meditation instructions from his teacher?

Malcolm wrote:

That depends on the instruction -- for example, there is no reason to assume anyone will give rise to vipaśyāna solely on the basis of śamatha instructions.

Sherab said:

(2) The so-called village meditators in Tibet were purportedly illiterate ordinary folks were not really illiterate ordinary folks and the stories have not even the tiniest element of truth?

Malcolm wrote:

Even the greatest scholar is ordinary if they have not realized the path of seeing. If those stories contain instructions which present the enumerated ultimate, it is possible that such illiterate folks will awaken if they meditate accordingly.

Sherab said:

(3) Those who do not comprehend tantric sadhanas should not have any expectation of realization when they are given the sadhanas as a practice commitment? If so, why did the guru bother to give the commitment in the first place?

Malcolm wrote:

Insights gained from tantric practice are based in the example wisdom introduced at the time of the third and fourth empowerment, but this example wisdom is conceptual; not nonconceptual—hence the term "word empowerment."

Sherab said:

(4) Faith by itself can never be a valid path even if that faith is placed on an enlightened being?

Malcolm wrote:

Faith is part of the merit accumulation, so, it is an indirect cause.

Sherab said:

(5) If all beings have Buddha nature, that nature cannot be accessed in any other way except through intellectual comprehension? (I am assuming here that by comprehension as regards to mundane people, you are referring to intellectual comprehension and no other form of comprehension. If you are indeed referring to other form of comprehension, then you should have made it clear from the start.)

Malcolm wrote:

Tathāgatagarbha cannot be seen by any one other than buddhas. It is clearly taught it is something we are to have faith in. It is not something we can directly perceive.

Sherab said:

As to the root of our argument, this is how I see it:

(1) When you say that the ultimate truth is a conventional truth, while you are using conventions in your argument, your argument as I see it, is a statement of ontology. Your statement points to the what ultimate truth actually is. Your statement says that ontology of ultimate truth is the ontology of relative truth. If so, your statement should be amended to "the nature of the ultimate truth is the nature of the relative truth". Here veridical cognition is required to ascertain both the nature of the ultimate truth and the nature of relative/conventional truth.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not making an ontological statement, and neither is Nāgārjuna, it is rather a statement of pedagogy.

Sherab said:

(2) If by ultimate truth, you are referring to the enumerated ultimate truth (the intellectual understanding of ultimate truth or ultimate truth as a concept. Here non-veridical cognition is all that is required.), then yes, the statement that the ultimate truth is a conventional truth can apply.

Malcolm wrote:

I have provided adequate citations that indicate that the only ultimate truth which can be referred to is the enumerated ultimate. The non-enumerated ultimate cannot be put into words.

Sherab said:

The questions I have for you then are:

(1) When you make your statement that "the ultimate truth is conventional truth", were you referring to the actual inexpressible ultimate truth or were you referring to the enumerated ultimate truth?

Malcolm wrote:

Since I was using words, I was referring the enumerated ultimate. Of course, even the non-enumerated ultimate is merely the direct perception of the emptiness of a given conventional thing.

Sherab said:

(2) If you were referring to the enumerated ultimate truth, are you saying that that is the conventional use of the term ultimate truth? That when the label ultimate truth is used, it should always be treated as enumerated ultimate truth unless otherwise stated? If so, any reader should be able to go to any sutras and commentaries and substitute every instance of the label "ultimate truth" with "enumerated ultimate truth" and the sutra or commentary will still make sense?

Malcolm wrote:

Anytime you see the ultimate truth expressed in words, it needs to be understood as an example ultimate.

The term "ultimate truth" simply represents a limit of analysis, btw. This is why the ultimate truths of śrāvakas are overthrown by Madhyamaka. Madhyamaka is the only school also which uses no affirming negations but only non-affirming negations.

The main thrust of my point however is that without intellectual comprehension of the example ultimate, the actual ultimate truth cannot be realized. Thus, we have to accept the conventional ultimate as necessary since it is functional in the production of the result, nirvana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 3rd, 2018 at 9:37 PM

Title: Re: Is Mind Fundamental?

Content:

Matt J said:

In fact, the idea of some sort of enduring matter may be another form of selfing.

Malcolm wrote:

The idea of some enduring anything is a self-view.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 3rd, 2018 at 9:13 PM

Title: Re: What are the General Mahayana Teachings?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

One can infer the selflessness of phenomena from teachings in the Agamas, but it is not directly taught there.

Astus said:

Nor is it taught that they are self-existent, hence nothing to oppose the emptiness of appearances to. And as far as the aggregates and sense-areas go, they are taught to be without self many times.

Malcolm wrote:

This the selflessness of the person, not of phenomena.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 3rd, 2018 at 9:07 PM

Title: Re: Is Mind Fundamental?

Content:

Simon E. said:

Cough.

Define 'mind'.

Malcolm wrote:

Clear and knowing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 3rd, 2018 at 5:50 AM

Title: Re: What are the General Mahayana Teachings?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The Great Discourse on the Emptiness of Dharmas and its analogue do not really discuss the emptiness of phenomena, it refers to the emptiness of persons.

Astus said:

It might not be the best example, but that's how it is interpreted in the MPPS. And there is a reason to say that it confirms the emptiness of appearances, because it talks of how there is no self in dependent origination, in other words, appearances are empty.

Malcolm wrote:

One can infer the selflessness of phenomena from teachings in the Agamas, but it is not directly taught there.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 3rd, 2018 at 5:10 AM

Title: Re: Question on right livelihood

Content:

ydnan321 said:

Would that type of work generate any negative karma?

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Anti-ballistic_missile

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, any weapons business is wrong livelihood.

ydnan321 said:

Could you please elaborate more this? Personally, one could argue that since it is built for protection it is at times necessary. It could be used to prevent thousands of people from getting killed by a ballistic missile that carries a nuclear head, for example.

Malcolm wrote:

Weapons themselves breed violence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 3rd, 2018 at 3:53 AM

Title: Re: Question on right livelihood

Content:

ydnan321 said:

Would that type of work generate any negative karma?

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Anti-ballistic_missile

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, any weapons business is wrong livelihood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 3rd, 2018 at 2:37 AM

Title: Re: What are the General Mahayana Teachings?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

the field of sentient beings is called the sattvadhātu and the field of emptiness is called the dharmatā-dhātu (dharmadhātu for short).

Coëmgenu said:

Why is the sattvadhātu then not the sattvatādhātu?

The only attestation I can find of the internet for the usage of the term dharmatādhātu is in your own translation of Treasury of Ati. I am not doubting the term, but I am wondering its source.

There is <https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?t=25259#p383673> on DharmaWheel that I found that addresses this. The Tibetan chos nyid dbyings is specifically dharmatādhātu not dharmadhātu, correct?

Could the poor attestation of dharmatādhātu on the internet be because of the availability of Sanskrit texts available romanized? Are the texts that contain usage of dharmatādhātu only extant in Tibetan? Do you know if any of these texts would also be in Chinese? I am wondering how they translated the term.

Malcolm wrote:

The term itself is mainly confined to the Saṃdhinirmocana Sūtra, but you can see many sūtras where the term dharmatā is systematically related to dharmadhātu. For example, the Bodhisattvapitika sutra among others makes the following statement:

That dharmatā should be understood to be a place, therefore, the dharmadhātu is called "a place."

Or, The Sarvabuddha-viṣayāvatāra-jñānālokālaṃkāra-sūtra states:

Whether the tathāgatas arise or not, dharmatā, dharmasthitikatā, and this dharmadhātu are only places.

The equivalence of this trio is repeated over and over again in the order, dharmatā, dharmadhātu and dharmasthitikatā.

There are further uses in Tantric literature but I generally exclude those here.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 3rd, 2018 at 2:15 AM

Title: Re: What are the General Mahayana Teachings?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

the field of sentient beings is called the sattvadhātu and the field of emptiness is called the dharmatā-dhātu (dharmadhātu for short).

Coëmgenu said:

Why is the sattvadhātu then not the sattvatādhātu?

Malcolm wrote:

It is collecting sentient beings, not the nature of sentient beings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 3rd, 2018 at 2:14 AM

Title: Re: Why does Gelug school claim emptiness means things exist without self nature?
Content:

WeiHan said:

The nuance in argument is so subtle that I can't stop wondering if the point of dispute is simply semantic.

Did the traditional interpretation before Tzong Khapa negates relative truth i.e. the cup?
Or Tzong Khapa's point is that the traditional interpretation self contradicts by maintaining that there is a relative yet it does not exist?

Thankyou Malcohlm for your clear synopsis.

Malcolm wrote:

No, but the four-fold negation can make it seem like conventional appearances are being negated.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 3rd, 2018 at 2:11 AM

Title: Re: Can you practice Tibetan Buddhism without ever had a Gur

Content:

conebeckham said:

Fair enough! So, "Bumpa" should henceforth be "Pitcher?" Works for me.

Malcolm wrote:

Not suggesting we change things at this point, but in reality...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 3rd, 2018 at 12:56 AM

Title: Re: Can you practice Tibetan Buddhism without ever had a Gur

Content:

conebeckham said:

Vase Empowerment

Malcolm wrote:

It really should be called the "Pltcher empowerment."

This is not a vase:

This is a vase:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 3rd, 2018 at 12:33 AM

Title: Re: What are the General Mahayana Teachings?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

tā makes it a nature. dhātu makes it a field.

Coëmgenu said:

If you will forgive me a point-counter-point: dhātu makes it a nature, kṣetra makes it a field, if we have "Buddha" instead of "Dharma" in front of it.

Buddhadhātu is generally translated as "Buddha-nature", even though a better translation might be "Buddha-constituent" or "Buddha-element", even "Buddha-characteristic", yes? No?

Malcolm wrote:

The Tibetans translate the term dhātu as either khams (element) or dbying (a nature or a source) depending on whether it is Mahāyāna or not. Tibetan masters expert in Sanskrit such as Jetsun Dragpa Gyaltsen gloss it as source (ākara, 'byung gnas), and so does Longchenpa in its Mahāyāna context.

The term dhātu itself is a term that denotes a collection. A field of poppies could be called a poppy-dhātu; just as the field of sentient beings is called the sattvadhātu and the field of emptiness is called the dharmatā-dhātu (dharmadhātu for short).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 3rd, 2018 at 12:27 AM

Title: Re: What are the General Mahayana Teachings?

Content:

Grigoris said:

It seems like a fine distinction based on the fact that there was no conception of an atman in phenomena so the Buddha's teaching on anatman was not enough to cover the emptiness of phenomena too.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is the observation made about Nikaya/Agama sūtras.

Astus said:

The view that sravakas do not know the emptiness of phenomena is more a Yogacara interpretation than a universal one. After a number of quotes - e.g.

<https://suttacentral.net/en/sa297>

(<https://www.accesstoinight.org/tipitaka/sn/sn12/sn12.035.than.html>) - from the Agamas the <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Mah%C4%81praj%C3%B1%C4%81p%C4%81ramit%C4%81upade%C5%9Ba> states:

"In place after place within the sutras of the Śrāvakas are discussions such as these which explain the emptiness of all dharmas."

(http://kalavinka.org/Jewels/book_excerpts/N6P_excerpts/N6P_X-Bk4_X-15.pdf, http://tripitaka.cbeta.org/T25n1509_018#0193c01)

Malcolm wrote:

The Great Discourse on the Emptiness of Dharmas and its analogue do not really discuss the emptiness of phenomena, it refers to the emptiness of persons.

For example, this passage actually refers to the selflessness of persons:

What is the great discourse on the emptiness of dharmas? It is this: Because this exists, that exists; because this arises, that arises. That is to say: Conditioned by ignorance, activities arise; because of activities, consciousness arises, and so on ..., and thus arises this whole mass of suffering.

"Regarding the statement conditioned by birth, aging-and-death arises, someone may ask: Who is it that ages-and-dies? To whom does aging-and-death belong?

"And he may answer: It is the self that ages-and-dies. Aging-and-death belongs to the self; aging-and-death is the self.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 2nd, 2018 at 10:55 PM

Title: Re: Looking for Dzogchen Semde material

Content:

Dharmasagara said:

A question to all in the know:

In my quest for getting some idea about the system(s) of Dzogchen presentation I am finding out that knowledge on mind class (semde, sems lde) is quite hard to come by. All the world talks about the instruction class - threkchö and thögal - but the mind class is seems forgotten. Due to some remarks here and there I even suspect that in the Nyingmapa tradition as a whole there is not so much left in active practice.

To make it short: If there is some good presentations of the mind class path out there could you please give me some hint where to look for?

Thanks so much in advance!

Sagara

Malcolm wrote:

Chogyal Namkhai Norbu has extensive materials on sems sde in his SMS program.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 2nd, 2018 at 10:53 PM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Sherab said:

Here is another way to look at the ultimate truth - conventional truth conundrum that I have pointed out:

If ultimate truth is conventional truth, then since conventional truth is deceptive, the ultimate truth must also be deceptive. If the ultimate truth is not deceptive, then the conventional must also be not deceptive. If the ultimate truth is both deceptive and not deceptive, then the ultimate truth is an incoherent truth. If the ultimate truth is neither deceptive or not deceptive, then the ultimate truth is indeterminate.

Malcolm wrote:

If the ultimate truth is not a conventional truth, the former could not be comprehended by mundane people, and therefore, there can be no buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 2nd, 2018 at 7:15 AM

Title: Re: Response to Bernie

Content:

Sherab said:

It is really puzzling for me how someone like you who clearly understands that in terms of strength of an argument, the least is one that relies on authority, followed by one the relies on logical and valid reasoning, with the strongest being one that relies on direct perception.

Malcolm wrote:

I think you not really understand well the content of the authorities in our discussions, preferring instead to rely on your own musings— this is why with you, I insist on bringing up the texts, because you never reason based on citations. As Āryadeva notes in the 400, since we share the same school, citations are appropriate. If we did not, I would not use citations at all.

Now, from what I can see, you seem to think that an ultimate truth is something other than a cognition of an object. Thus we have a basic disagreement over terminology.

1) An enumerated ultimate truth can only be a conventional truth, and this is something that all Madhyamaka masters accept. The so-called non-enumerated ultimate truth cannot be explained in words at all since it is the ārya's direct perception of emptiness.

2) When an ordinary, worldly person engages in analysis to ascertain emptiness, that enumerated ultimate truth, their perception of an inferential emptiness, is simply a convention which means, "I have reached the limit of my ability to analyze this object, and all I can come up with is that it is empty of inherent existence." That perception of emptiness, while designated an ultimate truth, is confined to conventional truth because it is the inferential perception of a mundane person. Thus, even this ultimate truth is non-veridical since it is an inference and not a direct perception. How are inferences non-veridical? for example, it is like mistaking mist for smoke and inferring there is a fire, or perceiving a mirage and inferring there is water. Even the common direct perceptions (mist, mirage) of the worldly are no insurance that their cognitions are veridical.

3) When an ārya explains their yogic direct perception of emptiness to worldlings, this ultimate truth is still a conventional truth i) because it is expressed in words and ii) because the perception of worldlings is by definition non-veridical. Why do we call this ultimate truth a conventional truth? Because it is functional in assisting the direct perception of emptiness. Āryas use either consequences or syllogisms to induce conceptual understanding of emptiness — but that is still an enumerated ultimate truth and thus, by definition, is a part of conventional truth. But as already stated, it is not part of false relative truth because conventional truths are functional. When we see a car, we can drive it. When we study the path, we can traverse it

If the enumerated ultimate truth is not a conventional truth, there is no way ordinary people can realize the non-enumerated ultimate truth, in other words, there is no way they can move from an inferential perception of emptiness on the path of application to the direct perception of emptiness on the path of seeing because ordinary people's cognitions are always deluded with respect to the true existence of things— even after they have analyzed phenomena and found them to be conventionally empty. That conventional emptiness is an ultimate truth, but as it does not have the power to still proliferation on its own, hence, it is also part of conventional truth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 2nd, 2018 at 6:02 AM

Title: Re: What are the General Mahayana Teachings?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Yes. This is what I said. I made a joke about "its" ātman having been emptied by "someone".

Malcolm wrote:

I wish there was an emoticon which clearly indicated that one was humorless.

Perhaps

Coëmgenu said:

I'm more curious about the division between dharmadhātu & dharmatā you have drawn up than if you find me funny, IMO I am very funny.

Nothing about dharmatā, in the word itself, signals it out as referring exclusively to the emptiness of any "particular" dharmāḥ instead of just "dharmāḥ in general", à la dharmadhātu. From where does this distinction come?

Dharmatā & dharmadhātu are completely identical, functionally, afaik, in their translated Chinese correspondences (i.e. they are synonyms in Chinese, more or less), but Chinese does all sorts of "interesting" things to Indic grammar & semantics.

Malcolm wrote:

tā makes it a nature. dhātu makes it a field. In this usage, dharmatā means emptiness. Of course, the term has many different uses, for example, it indicates the predicate of an argument in Logic, whereas dharmin represents the subject.

You should consult the Dharmadharmatāvibhanga by Maitreyañātha for a Yogacāra take on this, based on the Saṃdhinirmocana Sūtra, which itself has a whole section on the distinction between dharma and their dharmatā, and how they can neither be the same nor different.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 2nd, 2018 at 5:22 AM

Title: Re: What are the General Mahayana Teachings?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Its called dharmadhātu...

Malcolm wrote:

Umm, no. The dharmadhātu, in Mahāyāna terms, is the emptiness of all phenomena.

Coëmgenu said:

Yes. This is what I said. I made a joke about "its" ātman having been emptied by "someone".

Malcolm wrote:

I wish there was an emoticon which clearly indicated that one was humorless.

Perhaps

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 2nd, 2018 at 5:17 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Toenail said:

If I ask a Lama to give me the Lung for this book, how much time would he need for it?

Malcolm wrote:

About three hours.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 2nd, 2018 at 5:06 AM

Title: Re: What are the General Mahayana Teachings?

Content:

Grigoris said:

atman in phenomena

Coëmgenu said:

Its called dharmadhātu...

Malcolm wrote:

Umm, no. The dharmadhātu, in Mahāyāna terms, is the emptiness of all phenomena. Dharmatā is the emptiness of a specific entity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 2nd, 2018 at 3:34 AM

Title: Re: What are the General Mahayana Teachings?

Content:

Grigoris said:

So it is talking about the emptiness of characteristics when referring to phenomena?

Malcolm wrote:

Another way of understanding it is that proliferation occurs because of not seeing the selflessness of phenomena. Bhavaviveka writes in his MMK commentary:

Whatever concepts cause karma and afflictions, since those arise from proliferation, those are called "from proliferation," that is, they arise from the proliferation of the characteristic of strong attachment to conventional truth.

If it is what can stop that proliferation, proliferation, as it is said, "is stopped by emptiness"... it is stopped by realizing the characteristic of the selflessness of phenomena."

He says more but I don't have time to translate it for you.

Grigoris said:

Thanks for the effort.

It seems like a fine distinction based on the fact that there was no conception of an atman in phenomena so the Buddha's teaching on anatman was not enough to cover the emptiness of phenomena too.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is the observation made about Nikaya/Agama sūtras.

Grigoris said:

Seems to me that the emptiness of persons is covered by the emptiness of characteristics of phenomena, like it is a subset of this conception of emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, I think this difference is that a person never arose; there is no such thing as an atman, which is why Jñānaśrībhaddra compared an atman with something permanent that does not arise, hence it does not exist at all, like the son of a barren woman, etc. The selflessness of phenomena on the other hand is the recognition of that karma and affliction arise from proliferation due to clinging to conventional truth, i.e. clinging to functional phenomena. The first, the absence of self in persons is coarse; realizing it eliminates the afflictive obscuration; the second, the absence of self in phenomena is more subtle, and when realized, eliminates the knowledge obscuration.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 2nd, 2018 at 3:24 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

bfaus said:

Will there be an online broadcast of this event? I would be interested if that were possible and would still be happy to pay the donation fee. Thank you!

Malcolm wrote:

I cannot promise anything, but if you attended the online lung, then I think I can make the recordings available.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 2nd, 2018 at 3:23 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Mr. G said:

I don't use facebook. Is there an alternative way to register and pay?

Malcolm wrote:

You are registered. Make your donation at the door.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 2nd, 2018 at 3:21 AM

Title: Re: What are the General Mahayana Teachings?

Content:

Grigoris said:

So it is talking about the emptiness of characteristics when referring to phenomena?

Malcolm wrote:

Another way of understanding it is that proliferation occurs because of not seeing the selflessness of phenomena. Bhavaviveka writes in his MMK commentary:

Whatever concepts cause karma and afflictions, since those arise from proliferation, those are called "from proliferation," that is, they arise from the proliferation of the characteristic of strong attachment to conventional truth.

If it is what can stop that proliferation, proliferation, as it is said, "is stopped by emptiness"... it is stopped by realizing the characteristic of the selflessness of phenomena."

He says more but I don't have time to translate it for you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 2nd, 2018 at 2:48 AM

Title: Re: What are the General Mahayana Teachings?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The two selflessnesses are the selflessness of persons and the selflessness of phenomena.

Coëmgenu said:

If I may, how does the literature in question differentiate between these two selflessnesses?

Grigoris said:

My guess is that the selflessness of persons refers to the lack of an essential self in the five skandha whereas the selflessness of phenomena has to do with their dependently arisen nature, but naught to do with the skandha. One could argue that the selflessness of persons is also included in the selflessness of phenomena.

Oh, but you asked for an example from literature, so you must excuse my interjection.

Malcolm wrote:

Citing the commentary on this sūtra by Jñānaśrībhadra:

"All of that which exists is momentary, like the sound of a finger snap or a waterfall. There is no self in persons since the permanent does not arise, it cannot be held to exist, that is, like the son of a barren woman and so on. The absence of self in phenomena is the qualities of form and so on such as thick and thin that are analytically destroyed with discerning wisdom (prajñā) and become empty like a house, a village, a forest, and so on."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 1st, 2018 at 11:44 PM

Title: Re: Can you practice Tibetan Buddhism without ever had a Guru?

Content:

drdoorma said:

What is the goal of your practice? Enlightenment? If so, anyone who says "you must have a teacher" must first show how their own teacher was indispensable in their attainment of enlightenment. If they cannot, their answer is only a suggestion. At best, they can explain how their guru devotion has not led them to enlightenment, but explain the benefits of where it has led them instead.

Malcolm wrote:

The necessity of having a guru is even spoken of in Sūtra, for example, in the 84th chapter of the Perfection of Wisdom in 18,000 lines it is said:

129. A bodhisattva residing on the stage of a beginner altruistically enters [the path of] the supreme awakening of the Buddha. Those excellent students devoted to the guru should always rely upon virtuous mentors.

130. If it is asked why, the qualities of learning arise from them because they teach the perfection of wisdom. The victor who possesses the supreme of all qualities has said, "Rely on the virtuous mentor for the buddhadharmas."

Thus, the Buddha has said a teacher is indispensable for awakening.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 1st, 2018 at 10:46 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhahood in This Life Seminar, Santa Fe, May 4-6

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 1st, 2018 at 9:42 PM

Title: Re: What are the General Mahayana Teachings?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The Lankāvatāra summarizes this succinctly:

All Mahāyāna is included in five dharmas, a nature, eight consciousnesses,
and two selflessnesses.

The five dharmas are name, sign, concept, correct knowledge, and suchness. Those are divided into the three natures: name is the imputed nature; sign and concept are the dependent nature; correct knowledge and suchness are the perfected nature.

The nature is the dharmadhātu.

The eight consciousnesses are the six sense consciousnesses, the afflicted consciousness, and the all-basis consciousness.

The two selflessnesses are the selflessness of persons and the selflessness of phenomena.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 1st, 2018 at 11:00 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

climb-up said:

If I want to start including the Sang offerings regularly in the mornings, is it okay to add it to the short Thun after the dolpa?

If so, where would it go in the medium Thun?

Lastly, is Frankincense or Sandalwood acceptable as Sang until I get some official Tibetan incense?

Thank You!

Malcolm wrote:

Sage Smudge is better if you are in the US.

climb-up said:

hmm, but the others are temporarily acceptable?

I can get some sage, but I'm a little worried about absolutely filling the house (no windows or ventilation in my converted-closet-meditation-room).

Malcolm wrote:
Sang generally is done outside.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, March 1st, 2018 at 9:57 AM
Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought
Content:
dzogchungpa said:
It's kind of amusing that a thread which began with a reference to the idea that all phenomena are expressions of an originally pure and undifferentiated one mind has proven to be so contentious.

coffeebeans said:
Difficult to blame anything other than our own Western culture for that.

Malcolm wrote:
Have you studied Buddhist polemics?

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, March 1st, 2018 at 9:56 AM
Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu
Content:
climb-up said:
If I want to start including the Sang offerings regularly in the mornings, is it okay to add it to the short Thun after the dolpa?
If so, where would it go in the medium Thun?

Lastly, is Frankincense or Sandalwood acceptable as Sang until I get some official Tibetan incense?

Thank You!

Malcolm wrote:
Sage Smudge is better if you are in the US.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, March 1st, 2018 at 6:58 AM
Title: Re: Response to Bernie
Content:

Sherab said:
Refute the above argument if you can. If not, do not make wild allegations of misrepresentation of your position as it only serves to diminish your status.

Malcolm wrote:
Nāgārjuna states:

Without depending on convention, the ultimate cannot be explained;
without realizing the ultimate, nirvana will not be obtained.

Candrakīrti states in the Madhyamakāvatāra:

"Because all entities can be seen correctly and falsely,
entities possess a dual nature;
the correct perception of any object is true;
the false perception is called "relative."
Also false perception is asserted to be of two kinds,
clear sense organs and faulty sense organs."

The point here is that one must have an entity in question in order to have a correct or incorrect perception. And those entities are themselves established on the basis of worldly convention which we are not supposed to contravene. The two truths are also conventions, as Candrakīrti states in his commentary on the 70:

Relative truth and ultimate truth are conventions used by the noble ones.

And:

Here, these are true through the power of a worldly, undistorted consciousness, and are defined as ultimate truth through the power of this absence of distortion.

And:

"Ultimate truth" is expressed on the basis of worldly convention."

The reason we can say that ultimate truth is conventional is that it is functional. If ultimate truth was not functional, its perception could not lead to liberation.

I suspect that you are conflating "truths," which are subjective perceptions, with emptiness. All objects have an ultimate nature, emptiness, which is a truth for those who can see it and is conventionally expressed as such. Also emptiness can be an object of distorted consciousness, which is why there are warnings about not apprehending it incorrectly.

Moreover, Candrakīrti says:

Any fabricated entity which appears as true is that which the Muni called relative truth."

In other words, the perception that entities that arise from cause and conditions are true is what we call relative truth. The perception that they are not true because they are empty is what we call ultimate truth.

Below the path of seeing that ultimate truth can only be a conventional truth because that perception is merely an approximation of the actual lack of inherent existence or absence of the four extremes for a given thing. Such a mundane perception of the ultimate truth of emptiness may be tinged with delusion because it is relative, but since it is functional in bringing about realization, it is conventional.

Finally, the two truths are in union because they exist as aspects of any given entity. There is no ultimate truth beyond entities that are known to the world.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 1st, 2018 at 3:48 AM

Title: Re: Response to Bernie

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Presumably many contemporary lamas, e.g. DJKR, are vajra siblings with Sogyal and this might explain their reluctance to publically criticize him.

Malcolm wrote:

Criticizing vajra siblings out of anger, not ok. But if there is a constructive beneficial purpose, it is ok.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 1st, 2018 at 3:45 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Sure it is, even nonconceptual minds are conditioned and relative.

Grigoris said:

I disagree. I believe that one can have glimpses of the unconditioned but then reverts to conditioned means to express this experience (language), or relies on conditioned means to recall it (memory). Doesn't mean that the experience, or what was experienced, was conditioned.

Malcolm wrote:

All experiences are conditioned. A mind by definition cannot have an unconditioned perception since perception requires an object, a subject, and the act of perceiving.

Grigoris said:

I believe that the notion, or characterisation, of Nirvana is conditioned, but Nirvana itself... If Nirvana is conditioned, then it means it is temporary. But we have had this discussion before, only we were on opposite sides of the discussion last time.

Malcolm wrote:

Nirvana is the cessation of afflictions due to the realization of the absence of the true existence of a self in persons and phenomena. That's it. Nirvana isn't conditioned, but it is a convention.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 1st, 2018 at 12:43 AM

Title: Re: death

Content:

Jesse said:

Honestly I feel that the worst part of dying absolutely will be the anxiety and fear. If we can manage to tame those in our lifetimes death will not be that bad at all.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. Having been declared dead on arrival once, I understand.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 1st, 2018 at 12:13 AM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

justsit said:

Dick's, Major Gun Retailer, Will Stop Selling Assault-Style Rifles

<https://www.nytimes.com/2018/02/28/business/dicks-major-gun-retailer-will-stop-selling-assault-style-rifles.html>

A step in the right direction, as a direct result of Parkland:

"...immediately ending sales of all assault-style rifles in its stores.

The retailer also said that it would no longer sell high-capacity magazines and that it would not sell any gun to anyone under 21 years of age, regardless of local laws...."

"When we saw what happened in Parkland, we were so disturbed and upset," Mr. Stack said in an interview Tuesday evening. "We love these kids and their rallying cry, 'enough is enough.' It got to us."

He added, "We're going to take a stand and step up and tell people our view and, hopefully, bring people along into the conversation."

Malcolm wrote:

And he also said today on CNN one of his motivating factors was the fact that Cruz bought a shotgun from them, even though it was not used in the shooting. The mere fact that he was one of their customers motivated him to cease selling to those under 21 and all assault/tactical rifles.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 28th, 2018 at 11:55 PM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Grigoris said:

When reduced to functional phenomena via conceptualisation.

Malcolm wrote:

There are no other kinds of functional phenomena.

Grigoris said:

I am not really disagreeing except to say that one's experience, if non-conceptual, is not relative/conventional until one starts to conceptualise it. Post-meditation, for example.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure it is, even nonconceptual minds are conditioned and relative. There isn't anything other than conventional phenomena, even space and nirvana are conventional. Space is how we designated nonobstruction; cessation is how we designated the absence of cause for a series to continue. Emptiness is how we conventionally designate absence of inherent existence, but none of these exist from their own side.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 28th, 2018 at 11:51 PM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Sherab said:

I deny that. I used your own words to demonstrate the incoherence/internal contradiction of your own words. Perhaps, you misrepresented yourself.

Malcolm wrote:

No, you didn't. You don't seem to comprehend what truths are.

Sherab said:

Whatever. It is clear to me that you simply can accept the fact that your own statements are contradictory. You can declare yourself victorious for all I care.

Malcolm wrote:

And you seem unable to accept the fact that you are a realist who accepts the ultimate is an inherent existent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 28th, 2018 at 9:12 PM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

... you have misrepresented everything I said

Sherab said:

I deny that. I used your own words to demonstrate the incoherence/internal contradiction of your own words. Perhaps, you misrepresented yourself.

Malcolm wrote:

No, you didn't. You don't seem to comprehend what truths are.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 28th, 2018 at 7:28 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Sherab said:

You said

You also said previously that "even ultimate truth is merely a conventional truth".

So according to your own words, "even ultimate truth (the veridical perception of a given entity) is merely a conventional /relative truth (a non-veridical perception of a given entity."

Or to put it more starkly, you have effectively said "even the veridical perception of a given entity is a non-veridical perception of a given entity."

Malcolm wrote:

All functional phenomena are conventional.

Sherab said:

Your reply is a non-reply since that which is veridical (ultimate) and that which is non-veridical (conventional) are both functional (in the context of this discussion). But your position effectively implies that what is veridical is non-veridical, which is incoherent.

Malcolm wrote:

Your rebuttal missed the barn by miles since you have misrepresented everything I said. More later.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 28th, 2018 at 6:22 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

All functional phenomena are conventional.

Grigoris said:

When reduced to functional phenomena via conceptualisation.

Malcolm wrote:

There are no other kinds of functional phenomena.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 28th, 2018 at 1:17 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Sherab said:

You said

Malcolm wrote:

An ultimate truth is the veridical perception of a given entity, a relative truth is the non-veridical perception of a given entity.

Sherab said:

You also said previously that "even ultimate truth is merely a conventional truth".

So according to your own words, "even ultimate truth (the veridical perception of a given entity) is merely a conventional /relative truth (a non-veridical perception of a given entity."

Or to put it more starkly, you have effectively said "even the veridical perception of a given entity is a non-veridical perception of a given entity."

Malcolm wrote:

All functional phenomena are conventional.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 27th, 2018 at 10:09 PM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

"One Mind" is an English mistranslation of —॥ (cittamatra), i.e., mind-only.

You can clearly see this if you examine the Sanskrit and the Chinese side by side.

<https://www2.hf.uio.no/polyglotta/index...xt&vid=441>

Dharma Flower said:

Whether it's termed the One Mind, the Universal Mind, or the Big Mind, it's been a concept in Ch'an/Zen for over a thousand years, regardless of its scriptural basis or lack thereof:

Malcolm wrote:

If you imagine there is really some transpersonal overmind, you are far outside the Buddha's teachings.

Dharma Flower said:

The One Mind is also a concept in Tibetan Buddhism:

Ālayavijñāna (Skt., Tib. kun gzhi rnam par shes pa) - the unified field of consciousness in the Universe. This universal mind is each individual's higher consciousness. Each living being is an individual "spark" of this one vast whole, in which we breathe and move and have our being. This whole universal consciousness is the living Cosmos itself, constantly evolving through the totality of all experience, and growing ever more "aware" over billions of years. Like a great ocean, the lives of all beings, planetary worlds and star-systems leave their impressions, or imprints, within the whole, which become stored, as it were, in the total body of Universal Mind. Ultimately this is the meaning of life, for we are all contributing our lives to the conscious whole, and the conscious whole is a growing entity moving towards eventual self-reflexive awakening. This is a uniquely mystical doctrine perceived through direct insight by the Masters of the Yogācāra tradition.

<http://www.dharmafellowship.org/library/essays/buddhist-glossary.htm>

Malcolm wrote:

This definition is very mistaken. Whoever wrote this is completely ignorant of Yogācāra. No educated Tibetan scholar of any school would accept this definition.

The ālayavijñāna is personal, not transpersonal. The ālayavijñāna is a description of consciousness which possesses traces. When traces of afflictions are removed, the ālayavijñāna ceases.

Please read the Mahāyāna Samgraha by Asanga for an authentic presentation of this concept.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 27th, 2018 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Ultimate truth is the perception of the emptiness of dependently origination phenomena ...

Sherab said:

You mentioned earlier that even ultimate truth is merely a conventional truth. This would mean that the ultimate is a convention just like the relative. As the ultimate truth is also a conventional truth, and since you said that the ultimate truth is the perception of emptiness of dependently originated phenomena, that very perception is not a perception of emptiness etc. but is merely labeled as a perception and is every bit as illusory as any perceived relative phenomena.

Malcolm wrote:

This does not follow since truths in the specific usage of Buddhist texts are cognitions of objects. An ultimate truth is the veridical perception of a given entity, a relative truth is the non-veridical perception of a given entity.

Sherab said:

So even perception of emptiness cannot be trusted as a true perception. In fact, nothing can be trusted as true whether relatively or ultimately once the statement that the ultimate truth is merely a conventional truth is accepted. This is the circularity that I was alluding to.

Malcolm wrote:

This consequence does not apply.

In response to my argument that time becomes central to dependent origination when it is taken as causal chain, you replied It isn't. Dependent origination operates in three modes simultaneously: serially, momentarily, and simultaneously.

But serially, momentarily and simultaneously all carry the idea of time. So it is incorrect to say that they are not dependent on time.

Pretty clearly, you seem not to understand that in Buddhadharma, time is considered dependent on objects. Time is also something conditioned and relative.

Dependent origination taught by the Buddha is simply, "When this arises, that arises; with the arising of that, this arose."

The teaching looks simple, but it is that simplicity that gave it a generality that enables dependent origination to encompass various forms, from serially, momentarily, simultaneously and even atemporally. In other words, while dependent origination is often understood as a temporal chain, it does not rule out the possibility that it can also be understood as atemporal chain.

Simultaneous dependent origination is atemporal, all links functioning at once and together. However, dependent origination is also merely a convention we use to describe causal appearances.

Now, this mini-doversion is off-topic for the thread.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 27th, 2018 at 12:19 PM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Moreover, even ultimate truth is merely a conventional truth....

Sherab said:

This to me looks like an over negation. It creates a circularity and/or contradiction to dependent origination that invalidate all modes of existences. In other words, if ultimate truth is merely a conventional truth, none of us can even be here debating about it.

Malcolm wrote:

This argument does not make any sense. It also contradicts Nagārjuna, "Without relying on convention, the ultimate will not be understood."

Sherab said:

What does dependent origination refers to? Dependent origination relies on the idea of causes and conditions. But conditions can be understood as a subset of causes. Therefore, many if not all, understood dependent origination as referring to a causal chain of one sort or another. But causal chains are temporal chains. And the flow of time is in my opinion what distinguished the relative from the ultimate.

Malcolm wrote:

That is your private idea, one which you will never find in any Dharma text. According to Candrakīrti, ultimate truth is the object of an unmistaken cognition, that's all.

Sherab said:

So, if the ultimate is merely a conventional truth, it would mean that the ultimate is the endless linear temporal chain of causes and effects.

Malcolm wrote:

Ultimate truth is the perception of the emptiness of dependently origination phenomena, nothing more and nothing less. Arising from conditions itself is beginningless, logic of dependent origination demands it.

Sherab said:

Alternatively, one must somehow argue that the endless chain is a closed loop. Such a position necessarily imply that the endless temporal chain of causes and effects ITSELF is real while the phenomena on this endless chain are not. If the closed loop of causal chain is accepted, it would mean accepting that phenomena hold itself up by its own bootstraps. Neither position seems satisfactory to me.

Malcolm wrote:

None of these consequences apply.

Sherab said:

If time is central in dependent origination,

Malcolm wrote:

It isn't. Dependent origination operates in three modes simultaneously: serially, momentarily, and simultaneously.

Sherab said:

then that in itself contradicts what is understood in the Special Theory of Relative by Einstein, a theory that has withstood all experiments so far. In Special Relativity, all frames of reference are valid. But the photon (a light "particle") experiences no time in its frame of reference. So an atemporal frame of reference is also valid. Causality as commonly understood only applies in frame of references other than that of the photon. That is why the speed of light can be understood as the speed of causality. Also, more theoretical physicists are now thinking that like space, time may not be fundamental.

Malcolm wrote:

Dependent origination taught by the Buddha is simply, "When this arises, that arises; with the arising of that, this arose."

Sherab said:

One can read in various places in the sutras how the state of enlightenment is really not something describable. I think dependent origination is similar and not easily describable ultimately by unenlightened beings like ourselves.

Malcolm wrote:

Dependent origination is profound, but it is also eminently describable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 27th, 2018 at 5:59 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

"One Mind" is an English mistranslation of 一心 (cittamatra), i.e., mind-only.

You can clearly see this if you examine the Sanskrit and the Chinese side by side.

<https://www2.hf.uio.no/polyglotta/index...xt&vid=441>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 27th, 2018 at 4:15 AM

Title: Re: Translatorhood

Content:

jake said:

Can you provide any evidence for this claim? Perhaps some of the posters here who have translated works would like to speak to how best we can support their efforts?

Malcolm wrote:

Support us directly, this puts money in our pocket and buy our books in a legal way, as this supports the companies that publish our works. We translators receive very little remuneration for our work, and publishers can only give us very small advances. Thus, without direct support from you, the interested reading public, there sure won't be many texts published.

jake said:

Thanks Malcolm. In regard to an earlier comment regarding patrons/taxes and your comment here about "support us directly" can you expand a bit? Do you mean a direct cash contribution to you as an individual or rather a charitable donation to a registered not-for-profit that works on supporting translators/translations. I ask because I would like to find a way to further support the important translation work needed for some specific Buddhist traditions.

Malcolm wrote:

In the United States, anyone may gift anyone else up to 13,000 (the amount changes yearly) without either you or the person who is receiving the gift needing to report it to the Feds. It is thus better to make gifts directly. If you pass it through a nonprofit, the amount the nonprofit tenders the recipient is treated as earned income and taxed accordingly.

jake said:

The economics of getting an established publisher to edit, layout, print and distribute books in traditions with a limited Western audience can be a real headache. I imagine this is what lead to the establishment of some of the publishers you've mentioned previous?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, though of course Wisdom is a non-profit, Shambhala is a regular corporation, and then Universities have their own thing.

If you want to support the general publication of Dharma books, a donation to Wisdom is a good idea, and if you want to support a given tradition, an earmarked donation is what I recommend. If you want to support a translator directly, then, directly gifting them money up to the untaxed amount is the way to go.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 27th, 2018 at 3:28 AM

Title: Re: Translatorhood

Content:

jake said:

I'd also like to say how disheartening it is to see people so readily sharing PDFs of books online. An act which certainly doesn't support the important work of translators.

PeterC said:

Re online PDFs. Completely agree that copyright theft of this kind both undermines the fragile economics of translation-to-publish and accrues negative karma.

Pero said:

You've fallen for the anti-piracy propaganda put forth by the entertainment industry. In fact, at worst, it does not not support them, it is more likely that the outcome is simply neutral, and at best it provides higher likelihood of more people actually buying the book.

jake said:

Can you provide any evidence for this claim? Perhaps some of the posters here who have translated works would like to speak to how best we can support their efforts?

Malcolm wrote:

Support us directly, this puts money in our pocket and buy our books in a legal way, as this supports the companies that publish our works. We translators receive very little remuneration for our work, and publishers can only give us very small advances. Thus, without direct support from you, the interested reading public, there sure won't be many texts published.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 27th, 2018 at 2:51 AM

Title: Re: Read on the Kayas

Content:

weitsicht said:

I am quite confused about the three (plus one?) kayas and would like to read a bit closer into it.

Understanding seems to be utmost necessary on various levels also due to their interconnectedness to the dzogchen visions, the abhishekas, probably overall the path and the fruition.

I tried the dharmawheel search function but that didn't bring me anywhere. I'd appreciate any advice on a good read. Thanks.

Just to add: the same counts for compassion. A basic term I also don't get applied easily. When should I take action? Or not? In German we have Mitleid (co-suffering) whilst compassion in the dharmic context is translated as Mitgefühl (co-feeling). Does it mean just being empathic, abstaining from any action is the way to go?!

Malcolm wrote:

love is the wish that sentient beings be happy. Compassion is the wish that they be free from suffering. Aspirational bodhicitta is based on compassion; engaged bodhicitta is carrying out the first four perfections.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 27th, 2018 at 2:47 AM

Title: Re: How to Generate Merit?

Content:

WeiHan said:

This thread is many years old but it is worth adding more.

Besides the many amazing skillful means already mentioned that generate merit, I'll like to add recitation of King aspiration prayer of Bodhisattva Samantabhadra. I don't find many teachings in English but that are many in Chinese language. Khenpo Jigme Phuntsok said that if there is anything that he was still attached, it is the merit that everyone of his sangha member will recite this prayer at least once a day. The late Yangthang Rinpoche said that this is the most powerful prayer in sutrayana while Prayer of Kuntuzangpo is the most powerful prayer in tantrayana and there is an urgency to recite the former prayer many times these days. One eminent Sakya lama (name not specified) as mentioned by Khenpo Sodargye taught that reciting this prayer 3 times a day together with a short pureland practice will guarantee transference to western pureland at death (even more certain than powa practice).

This prayer is recited by all Monlams at Bodh Gaya each year, so the merit must really be fantastic.

Malcolm wrote:

The seven-limb prayer is the basic structure for all Buddhist practice in Indo-Tibetan Buddhism. It is built into most sadhanas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 27th, 2018 at 2:43 AM

Title: Re: Tiantai Meditation

Content:

Seishin said:

This single seamless meditation is called 'Endon Shikan' which means 'Perfect Sudden Shamatha/Vipashyana' (see Rory's post above for a description). The Endon Shikan can be described as the pinnacle of Tendai meditation. I have found the idea of Endon Shikan to be not too dissimilar to the idea of Japanese Zen (or Chinese Chan for that matter) in that Zen patriarchs often describe Chan/Zen as a meditation that encapsulates both Shamatha and Vipashyana.

Malcolm wrote:

In terms of ultimate bodhicitta, unified śamatha and vipaśyāna is or should be the goal of all practitioners of Buddhadharma.

SunWuKong said:

Assuming that this is the case, how do we propose that a history of a single practice such as shikantaza or koan introspection arises? Does this only happen in Japan or does it also happen elsewhere in Zen/Ch'an/Seon/Thein? Or does it fact arise? Could it be omissions in translation or understanding? Or does a unified practice simply encompass what both practices previously encompass? It's an interesting question from a historical perspective, because one could assume no teacher from India could have proposed it? It could simply be that Zen represents a mashup of things on more than one level?

Malcolm wrote:

The goal of śamatha and vipaśyāna is to unify them. Some people have the capacity to unify them from the beginning, i.e., leaping with both feet; but most people can't leap very far and make more progress by first taking one step (śamatha), then another step (vipaśyāna) and so on, gradually developing their abilities.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 26th, 2018 at 1:58 AM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Oh yeah, our system has a really great record with fairly implementing stuff like that and being prudent with uses of executive power, especially as regards marginalized groups. Oh wait no, the complete opposite is true.

With that, I'm done with the conversation, have fun.

Grigoris said:

So you do not trust "the system" to do it and you don't believe "the people" can do it. It seems you prefer rolling over and dying (or being shot, the choice is yours) to any attempt to change?

I wonder what would have happened in the U$ if slavery abolitionists had the same attitude as you?

Johnny Dangerous said:

No, I want it to change. But, since I actually live in the country in question, and have experience with it's justice system....I find the idea of a total ban presumably implemented by the executive ridiculous. Malcolms suggestion seems more sensible.

On the abolition thing, not only is hyperbolic, it's a bizarre comparison.

Malcolm wrote:

It is also another Mason-Dixon line thing. States that fought for the Union have, overall, far better gun control laws, and are also generally more prosperous. States that fought for the Confederacy have an interest in promulgating a revisionist history of the Civil War, and while the NRA was originally formed by former Union Officers, it has been largely coopted by those in this country who imagine that the 2nd Amendment was put into place to in order that we can protect ourselves from tyranny. This point of view is in fact extremely unpatriotic, though it poses as patriotism of the highest order.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 26th, 2018 at 1:48 AM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Grigoris said:

I wonder what would have happened in the U$ if slavery abolitionists had the same attitude as you?

Ricky said:

I wonder if the holocaust would of ever happened had Hitler not taken away all guns?

Malcolm wrote:

Most of the Jews Hitler killed were not German Jews, so this is a specious question. The largest number of Jews killed by the Nazis was in Poland, 2,900,000 88% of the total population of Jews. By contrast, the number of German Jews killed by Nazis was only 130,000, 55% percent of the total population of Jews, and less than 1% of the general population.

<http://www.annefrankguide.net/en-US/bronnenbank.asp?oid=20747>

In response to this popular, but ridiculous argument, history professor Alan E. Steinweis wrote in a New York Times opinion piece:

The Jews of Germany constituted less than 1 percent of the country's population. It is preposterous to argue that the possession of firearms would have enabled them to mount resistance against a systematic program of persecution implemented by a modern bureaucracy, enforced by a well-armed police state, and either supported or tolerated by the majority of the German population. Mr. Carson's suggestion that ordinary Germans, had they had guns, would have risked their lives in armed resistance against the regime simply does not comport with the regrettable historical reality of a regime that was quite popular at home. Inside Germany, only the army possessed the physical force necessary for defying or overthrowing the Nazis, but the generals had thrown in their lot with Hitler early on.

https://www.nytimes.com/2015/10/15/opinion/ben-carson-is-wrong-on-guns-and-the-holocaust.html?_r=0

He also points out that Nazis did not enact any new gun legislation until 1938, and when they did, it only concerned handguns, not rifles. In general Ricky, stop watching Fox News, it is rotting your ability to think objectively. Further, Professor Steinweis notes: The failure of Jews to mount an effective defense against the Waffen-SS in the Warsaw Ghetto in 1943 provides a good example of what happens when ordinary citizens with small arms go up against a well-equipped force.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 26th, 2018 at 12:12 AM

Title: Re: Karma of the Shakya clan

Content:

PeterC said:

Look for the sutra that discusses that hypothetical. But it's very, very important to remember that that story was about a bodhisattva who could perceive perfectly the karmic effects of both action and inaction in that situation. A non-Arya being has no business trying to make this sort of judgement. And that's where Greg's comment is important. This sort of speculation doesn't help a practitioner in any way.

Malcolm wrote:

A non-ārya, a prthagjana, absolutely has business making these sorts of judgements. If not, then you are basically arguing Mahāyāna ethics are only for āryas, and that is patently false.

PeterC said:

I meant judgement in the sense of deciding on that course of action. Of course a non-omniscient non-arya would still have to decide whether to act or not to act. If they genuinely believed that the man was about to commit mass murder, then that takes you back to the OP's hypothetical.

I thought the point of the story was that the arya, perceiving that the man was about to commit murder and thereby condemn himself to a long period of suffering, pre-emptively kills the man and takes upon himself the negative karma thereof but by so doing prevents the man from suffering a worse fate. An non-arya would have lacked the ability to perceive the mans future actions and their consequences correctly and would therefore be unable to do the required karmic calculus. It was for that reason that I said that a non-arya has no business making that choice.

Malcolm wrote:

You don't need to do any karmic calculation. People are being threatened? You stop the person threatening them. No one trying to kill 50 people is up to any good.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 26th, 2018 at 12:05 AM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Fa Dao said:

ummm...no...AR-15's are semi-auto not full auto, in other words one pull of the trigger = one round fired thereby making it virtually impossible to fire 13 rds per second...you must be thinking of the M-16 which can be fired full auto and is actually a military weapon. An AR-15 is not a military weapon...it was designed by Colt to look like an M-16 and sold to LE and civilians..... https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Colt_AR-15

Malcolm wrote:

Huh? The AR-15 is was not designed by Colt at all. It was designed by Armalite Rifles for the Army. It is absolutely a military weapon by design. The M-16 was Colt's rebranding of the AR-15. The M4, the present iteration of the AR-15, is merely an updated version of the original AR-15.

The stat of 13 RPS is based on its engineering specs. Practically speaking, fire rates of more than 2 RPS are unrealistic for any sustained amount of time.

That means a person can unload a 30 round clip at a crowd in one minute with ease. It takes about fifteen seconds to eject an empty clip and insert a full one. One can therefore plausibly get off a 120 rounds in three minutes and 30 thirty seconds.

This rate of fire is unnecessary for any civilian application.

The M-16 only ever fired on full auto for suppressive fire, because it is not a very accurate automatic weapon. It overheats and quickly jams. In fact, in most military uses, the M-16, and now M4, is switched to semi-automatic for accuracy since it is presumed you are aiming at a human being.

Fa Dao said:

Back in the mid-1980s -- before the shift to the M16A2 and the three-round burst -- active-duty infantry units kept to a strict rule that rifleman only fired their M16A1s on semi auto. Today's combat-experienced infantrymen are even more disciplined.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.military.com/kitup/2011/12/full-auto-battlefield-necessity.html>

The only difference between the M-16 class of rifles and the AR-15 is that without a cheap modification, the AR-15 only fires on semi-auto. Therefore, this idea that the full auto mode is the important distinguishing feature in a rifle is nonsense. In reality, soldiers rarely use the full auto mode, and generally only when ordered to do so, which is rare.

There is little difference in the kind of round an AR-15 is designed to shoot as opposed to the M-16/M-4 (5.56 NATO round based on the .223 Remington). The main difference, ironically, is that civilian rounds are designed to cause MORE damage to the target since it is assumed the target will either be an animal or someone trying to harm you. Military rounds are FMJs, and do not cause as much terminal damage as civilian rounds are able to do.

So, frankly, your rebuttal is flawed for many reasons. You neglect to note: Colt's Manufacturing Company currently uses the AR-15 trademark for its line of semi-automatic AR-15 rifles that are marketed to civilian and law-enforcement customers. If you read further on the page, you will discover two things: 1. The AR-15 sold by Colt today is exactly the same design that Stoner created and patented for Armalite when they developed the weapon for the US Military.

2. Since the patent elapsed, many other gun manufacturers have been designing tactical rifles that either are based directly on the AR-15 or design tactical rifles with significant modifications in design and ammunition. Nevertheless, all of these use civilian rounds which are much more damaging even than FMJ military rounds. And all of these rifles can fire military rounds, which the military sells as surplus.

We really must stop pretending that the single shot Remington bolt action Model 700 hunting rifle is as dangerous as an AR-15.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 25th, 2018 at 9:33 PM

Title: Re: Translatorhood

Content:

PeterC said:

If you're a patron, it can actually be frustratingly hard to find a way to finance translation projects, due to the way that most Dharma charities tend to work.

climb-up said:

What!!??? That is really weird!

This seems like something that could be fixed (...I assume ...by someone) and have some sort of portal or space for potential patrons and translators to connect.

I don't really know anything about patronage or on-line dating, but it seems like someone in the know might be able to make something happen.

Malcolm wrote:

The problem is, as always, taxes, among other things. Patrons can only give support up to a certain amount before either they or their client has to pay taxes. Things just are not as simple now as they were.

Even then, there is little guarantee of the quality of the work. There are dishonest translators out there, who will bilk you of your cash, leaving you with badly rendered and poorly edited translations, if they even finish the job. There are translators, who while knowing Tibetan, are terrible writers in English, or whose English leaves much to be desired, either by translating too literally, or whose translations are far too interpretive and "poetic," etc.

At least with projects like the 84,000, and books published with Shambhala and Wisdom one is assured that the works have been vetted and peer-reviewed for quality and accuracy, properly edited, and so on, not to mention books published by academic publishers such as Cambridge, Oxford, Columbia, Princeton, Brill, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 25th, 2018 at 9:30 PM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

A total ban of guns is a ridiculous, and draconian idea, when has that actually been proposed?

Malcolm wrote:

seems pretty reasonable to me, apart from law enforcement and the military, civilians really do not need firearms for more than hunting and sport.

Johnny Dangerous said:

How would it be enforced here, short of violating the 4th amendment more than we already do? How would such a law been applied even across economic classes? The answer of course, is that it would not be. That being the case, there is basically no chance of an actual 'gun ban' short of empowering federal or state governments to militarize even further, bust down doors etc. Not sure why anyone would even entertain the idea that the executive apparatus of this country could fairly enforce anything like that within the confines of our system.

Malcolm wrote:

We first repeal the second amendment, since it is archaic and has no relevance anymore (plus it was really put into the Bill of Rights to protect militias that would pursue runaway slaves). That is where we begin. We repeal and replace the second amendment with an amendment that details the specific rights and regulations with respect to the kinds of arms civilians can reasonably own for hunting and self-defense.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 25th, 2018 at 9:22 PM

Title: Re: Karma of the Shakya clan

Content:

MatthewAngby said:

Hmm... yes yes. I have a really huge question on killing too. Suppose you know someone who is going to kill a group of 50 men, but you refuse to kill him that person because you are scared you will gain bad karma. But if you kill him, you save the 50 men. So like who gains the bigger “bad” karma in this situation.

PeterC said:

Look for the sutra that discusses that hypothetical. But it’s very, very important to remember that that story was about a bodhisattva who could perceive perfectly the karmic effects of both action and inaction in that situation. A non-Arya being has no business trying to make this sort of judgement. And that’s where Greg’s comment is important. This sort of speculation doesn’t help a practitioner in any way.

Malcolm wrote:

A non-ārya, a pṛthagjana, absolutely has business making these sorts of judgements. If not, then you are basically arguing Mahāyāna ethics are only for āryas, and that is patently false.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 25th, 2018 at 9:21 PM

Title: Re: Karma of the Shakya clan

Content:

Sherab said:

Buddha Sakyamuni was undeniably an atheist. He stated clearly that there is no Creator God. That being the case, Buddhist ontology must be founded on natural laws. There are no two ways about it. From a buddhist viewpoint, the law of karma is therefore a natural law akin to a conservation law in science such as the conservation of information.

Therefore it should not be surprising that the Buddha taught that one should not engage in the killing of any sentient beings. If you do intend to kill any sentient being, you will have to face the consequences, whether immediate, in the future or in a future life.

As to the eating of fish out of starvation, the state of starvation that one finds oneself in would be a ripening of one's past karma. By resorting to killing fish in order to fend off one's starvation is to create new karma for oneself that will ripen in future. (Of course, if the fish died naturally, then there is no negative karma associated with eating that fish.) This is a decision that one has to make, and what that decision will be depend on how much one has internalized the Dharma.

MatthewAngby said:

Hmm... yes yes. I have a really huge question on killing too. Suppose you know someone who is going to kill a group of 50 men, but you refuse to kill him that person because you are scared you will gain bad karma. But if you kill him, you save the 50 men. So like who gains the bigger “bad” karma in this situation.

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāyāna ethics in general would hold that you should kill the man intent on killing the other fifty.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 24th, 2018 at 11:59 PM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

A total ban of guns is a ridiculous, and draconian idea, when has that actually been proposed?

Malcolm wrote:

seems pretty reasonable to me, apart from law enforcement and the military, civilians really do not need firearms for more than hunting and sport.

fuki said:

Well civilians hunting is illegal in my country, I'd love to see it go too in other areas, but that's a bit too much to ask for concerning the differences in culture, any government who thinks it's alright to kill animals for sport yet frowns upon innocent people getting shot I find a bit shady.

Ah well, one step (planet) at a time I guess.

Malcolm wrote:

The Netherlands is a tiny country, go hunting there you are likely to accidentally hit a tulip.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 24th, 2018 at 10:52 PM

Title: Re: Some questions on Karma and Merit

Content:

pael said:

In which case the motivation or view is supramundane, not the karma itself? For example: giving without conceiving of the three objects (the giver, the thing being given and the receiver of the thing) vs giving based in a dualistic view; where the karma in both cases is giving, whereas the view/motivation differs?

Malcolm wrote:

How do you give without conceiving? Is it when you give thinking: "there is no three objects"? How does it differ from nihilism or from wrong view according to Mahācattāriśaka Sutta paḥ said:

And what is wrong view? ' There is nothing given, nothing offered, nothing sacrificed.

Malcolm wrote:

.

[/quote]

The difference is the two truths; relatively, there is a subject, object, and action; ultimately, there is no subject, no object, or action — subject, object, and action are free from inherent existence.

This passage is criticizing materialists:

There is nothing given, nothing offered, nothing sacrificed. There is no fruit or result of good or bad actions. There is no this world, no next world, no mother, no father, no spontaneously reborn beings; no contemplatives or brahmans who, faring rightly & practicing rightly, proclaim this world & the next after having directly known & realized it for themselves.' This is wrong view.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 24th, 2018 at 10:35 PM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

A total ban of guns is a ridiculous, and draconian idea, when has that actually been proposed?

Malcolm wrote:

seems pretty reasonable to me, apart from law enforcement and the military, civilians really do not need firearms for more than hunting and sport.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 24th, 2018 at 5:57 AM

Title: Re: thugs kyi dgongs pa

Content:

conebeckham said:

ཐུགས་ཀྱི་དགོངས་པ་རིག་པ་རང་ཤར་གྱི་ངོ་བོ་བདག་ལ་

Keep in mind that the first phrase refers to the honorific "thugs" which is not just "mind," but potentially "Buddha's Mind," or Enlightened Mind. It can, however, refer to one's own mind in some instances, esp. when one is contemplating something.

This is not a full sentence, so the full context is missing. As for "rig pa rang shar kyi ngo bo" "the quintessence of self-manifest awareness" is okay, but I would gloss the whole phrase as "taking as the object of contemplation, (Or as the "intent of contemplative mind") the essence of one's self-manifest Vidya...." Not merely "Awareness," but a knowledge of a specific sort of awareness.

Malcolm wrote:

dgongs pa here is not "intent," abhipraya. but samanvāhāra, which means something like "focuses on," "directed to," etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 24th, 2018 at 4:10 AM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Republicans crack me up with their oblivious hypocrisy. Obama deficits bad! Trump deficits good! I could go on, but I won't.

Got a problem with gun violence in schools? Obviously the solution is adding more guns!

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 24th, 2018 at 4:05 AM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

Part of the solution is making soft targets like schools, businesses etc. harder. Many kinds of door blockers are available and are being used now in some schools.

This is one kind: https://www.bilco.com/Store/ProductDetailPage/1DSI-1/Barracuda_Intruder_Defense_System_-_Model_DSI

Malcolm wrote:

Right because that is so much easier and far less expensive than getting rid of guns from our civil society in the first place.

The second amendment is not sacred. It is an amendment, and its needs to be repealed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 24th, 2018 at 3:57 AM

Title: Re: Samaya in Vajrayāna

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

how far do you take that?

I strive to keep samaya, especially since many people have their own feeling about tibetan buddhism and vajrayana it is better to do so. but what about things like images of one's yidam on the home shrine? or books on the bookshelf?

Malcolm wrote:

I do not allow people without empowerment in my shrineroom.

I keep my images covered when common people are around as much as possible.

HE Ratnavajra gave me an image once with explicit instructions never to show it to someone who had not had the empowerment itself. So I largely try to observe this principle myself.

Tenma said:

Uh oh. So if I made a history project on the classical period and drew pictures of the Buddha, Green Tara, Manjushri, Vajrapani, Chenrezig, and Saraswati, I am officially breaking my samaya and blessing the images with "Om Ye Dharma" and Om Ah Hum was a bad idea? What does one do if they already turned their project in and they now wish to purify this obscuration?

Malcolm wrote:

You are fine, these bodhisattvas are from lower tantra.Om ye dharma is a general mantra, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 23rd, 2018 at 11:37 PM

Title: Re: Khandro Thugtig preliminaries - confused!

Content:

Konchog Tashi said:

Slightly off topic, but has anyone noticed that Dudjom Rinpoche's commentary on the mandala offering in this text is almost word for word identical to Jamgon Kongtrul's explanation in The Torch of Certainty?

I am not finding fault anywhere, I have always just been struck by this.

Malcolm wrote:

Traditionally, plagiarism was not a sin in Tibetan scholarship, not only is it not a sin, but innovation is frowned upon.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 23rd, 2018 at 11:21 PM

Title: Re: Some questions on Karma and Merit

Content:

Grigoris said:

Supramundane karma? Can you give some examples/sources please?

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty sure he means inexhaustible merit which arises from making dedications knowing there is no one dedication, no dedication, and not object of dedication in ultimate truth. For example, the Verses Summarizing the Perfection of Wisdom (Saṃcāyagathā) state:

If that is made into a sign, there is no dedication.
If there is no sign, it is a dedication to awakening.
The victor has said that the perception of positive phenomena is just like eating good food mixed with poison.

Grigoris said:

In which case the motivation or view is supramundane, not the karma itself? For example: giving without conceiving of the three objects (the giver, the thing being given and the receiver of the thing) vs giving based in a dualistic view; where the karma in both cases is giving, whereas the view/motivation differs?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, the view differs. Again from the Verse Summary:

Having understood such an accumulation of merit is empty, hollow, vacant, and lacking a core, as such, if one practices the sugatas' perfection of wisdom, one holds inestimable merit when it is practiced.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 23rd, 2018 at 10:52 PM

Title: Re: Some questions on Karma and Merit

Content:

sth9784 said:

Thanks for the reply. That actually makes sense of the passage in <http://www.sutrasmantras.info/sutra34a.html>, where in Chapter 3 it mentions that the Bodhisattvas can not progress without their 'garland of merits' (as this translation has it).

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

There is mundane Karma and supramundane karma. In Mahayana, we generate supramundane karma with bodhicitta aspiration in mind in order to free ourselves and all beings from suffering. This kind of action leads to supramundane results that is Buddhahood!

Grigoris said:

Supramundane karma? Can you give some examples/sources please?

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty sure he means inexhaustible merit which arises from making dedications knowing there is no one dedicating, no dedication, and not object of dedication in ultimate truth. For example, the Verses Summarizing the Perfection of Wisdom (Saṃcāyagathā) state:

If that is made into a sign, there is no dedication.
If there is no sign, it is a dedication to awakening.
The victor has said that the perception of positive phenomena is just like eating good food mixed with poison.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, February 23rd, 2018 at 10:19 PM
Title: Re: Eido roshi passes away in Japan
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
The first Dharma teacher I ever sat with.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, February 23rd, 2018 at 11:23 AM
Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.
Content:
DGA said:
Important context:

Gun ownership in the US is actually not so popular as you might think, even though there is a metric shit-ton of weaponry piled up. How so? The Guardian did a good job laying this out some months ago.

<https://www.theguardian.com/us-news/2017/oct/02/us-gun-control-ownership-violence-statistics>

Less than one-third of US households own a firearm today. That's less than it has been in decades past. So proportionately fewer households own guns. How, then, to explain the trend of increased gun ownership? About 3% of the population are hoarding weapons and ammo.

And these aren't sport weapons anymore. The "tactical turn" is a real problem. This is a change in US gun culture that has happened over the last twenty years or so. When I was in my early 20s, most of the guns for sale at your local sporting goods outlet would be explicitly for hunting or basic home or self defense. Think of the typical 30-06 Springfield hunting rifle with a walnut stock, or your grandfather's duck gun. These pieces are more fun to shoot than a "tactical" weapon like an ar-15, but they have fallen out of favor with the macho-insecurity set.

PeterC said:

Thanks for posting that article. The numbers do raise the question of how, exactly, the NRA became so politically powerful. Before Wayne LaPierre it really wasn't - GHB publicly cancelled his membership and criticized them over LaPierre's behaviour during his presidency, which is something unthinkable for a republican today. They've clearly done a remarkably good job of mobilizing the small, paranoid minority for whom this is an important issue. This segment - disproportionately rural, white and lower-income - was also very badly covered by the democrats over the past few decades.

Malcolm wrote:

The NRA is a cult with a wide following. Guns and Jesus.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 23rd, 2018 at 3:17 AM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Mantrik said:

How long, I wonder, before you can get arrested in the US for not having a gun; clearly aberrant behaviour.

Malcolm wrote:

There are towns in the US where the head of household is legally required to own and keep a gun in the home, for example, Kennesaw, GA.

Mantrik said:

Understandable in Switzerland, where they are military reservists, but in US households one wonders how many intruders are shot and how many are used to kill each other.

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.latimes.com/opinion/opinion-la/la-ol-guns-self-defense-charleston-20150619-story.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 22nd, 2018 at 10:32 PM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Mantrik said:

How long, I wonder, before you can get arrested in the US for not having a gun; clearly aberrant behaviour.

Malcolm wrote:

There are towns in the US where the head of household is legally required to own and keep a gun in the home, for example, Kennesaw, GA.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 22nd, 2018 at 9:45 PM

Title: Re: Recommendations for Yogacara works?

Content:

pueraeternus said:

Not quite - the Trikaya predated Maitreyanath as well. For example, in the Lankavatara, the Sambhogakaya is known as the Nisyandabuddha.

Malcolm wrote:

What I said was, " the doctrine of three kāyas which was first systematized by Maitreyanatha." This systemization was his elaboration.

There is no doubt sambhogakāya was elaborated to solve certain problems raised by "real buddhas" attaining buddhahood in Akaniṣṭha in the Lanka, but the point is that there was no systematic presentation of three kāyas prior to Maitreyanatha, hence my point stands.

pueraeternus said:

But the eight consciousness, etc were also systematized and elaborated by Yogacarins and laid the groundwork of how later Buddhists understand and debate these topics, so why focus only on the three kayas?

Malcolm wrote:

Because the three kāyas were the only doctrine that were basically adopted by Madhyamakas like Candrakīrti following the Maitreyan synthesis; the eight consciousnesses and so on were not universally accepted by Madhyamakas, and even today are not.

With respect to the so called niṣyandabuddha = sambhoghākāya, this is really only Suzuki's opinion.

The commentary on the Lanka by Jñānaśrībhadrā states this concept in only one place: a buddha produced from ripening is a form that arises from the ripening (nisyanda) of the merit and wisdom accumulations, while the buddhas of emanation are those who show nirvana.

And the Lanka is the only sūtra which uses the term "niṣyandabuddha," so I think that is a pretty weak position of Suzuki's, very tentative and not proven at all.

Asvabhava equates the nisyandakaya as the sambhogakaya. So this is not just Suzuki's opinion. Unless you want to quibble about the words -kaya and -buddha.

Well, it is Asanga who does that, in the closing words of the Mahāyānasamgraha, where niṣyanda is used as an adjective to describe the sambhogakāya where the issue of the impermanence of the sambhogakāya and nirmanakāya are raised. So I am still not convinced it is the intent of the Lanka that one can claim that niṣyandabuddha = sambhogakāya since the person who wrote down the Lanka seems to ignore the term entirely, where as nirmāṇa used in association with the rūpakāya of the Buddha has an old history.

Niṣyanda means "corresponding cause," rgyu mthun pa, though in the Lanka there is still some influence from an earlier Chinese translation where the term is translated as rnam smin, ripened, which is normally reserved for vipaka. Interestingly, this term is completely absent from any of the five treatises, nor can it be found in any of the works on Abhisamayālaṃkāra.

Thus, I think it is still fair to say that the Yogacāra school really was responsible for the elaboration of the three kāyas over the older two kāya model, and it was elaborated to explain issues the two kāya model was not equipped to deal with. Most interestingly, Maitreyanatha imposes the three kāya model on the Perfection of Wisdom Sūtras, in which the terms sambhogakāya, niṣyandabuddha, etc., are completely absent. There is something there to consider.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 22nd, 2018 at 9:32 AM

Title: Re: Looking ahead...(split from ZFI topic)

Content:

Dan74 said:

I remember a great deal of displeasure and censure of things like a modern Zen understanding of "monk",

Malcolm wrote:

You don't recall the context. So let me recall it for you. In a diverse forum with many different traditions, people were becoming quite confused as to what constituted a "monk." Many people were showing up on the forum claiming ordination and teacher appointments in this and that school and we felt an obligation to force them to verify their ordinations/lama/teacher status to prevent misrepresentation and fraud.

There was a great deal of public discussion of whether wine-drinking, non-celibate westerners who had received shukke tokudo were equivalent to bhikṣus or not. This naturally caused some wine-drinking, non-celibate Zen priests frequenting the forum to become upset. But these are the kind of issues that must be addressed. However, there was no "censure" of Zen monks, merely a very heated discussion of what "monk" ought to mean. Ultimately, of course, one disgruntled member threatened to sue us and put up a ridiculous anti-Esanga Website.

I still maintain that if one is a wine-drinking non-celibate, one ought not refer to oneself as a monk.

In other words, we had Huifeng, Khedrup, and Dhammanando on the one hand, all ordained as either śrāmaneras or bhikṣus/bhikkus who did not like the work monk being used for Soto priests, etc., and the other, we had Jundo, Nonin, and so on, noncelibates with day jobs who still wanted to be called "monks," as absurd as that sounds to me even now.

Someone at the SZBA must have been listening, since in this <http://szba.org/wp-content/uploads/Guidelines-for-the-Formation-of-Soto-Zen-Priests-in-the-West.pdf> they studiously avoid referring to people with shukke tokudo or shiho as monks, referring to them solely as priests.

You have no idea how difficult it is when you have a forum of 50k+ registered users. DW does not compare in either volume or complexity.

Dan74 said:

Malcolm, I don't hold any grudges and it is clear that people have different recollections of the events. At one stage a former ESangha admin shared with me his impression of how Zen folks were being mistreated, while another asserted that no such thing ever took place.

Let bygones be bygones, I say.

/|

Malcolm wrote:

You brought it up, not me.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 22nd, 2018 at 7:53 AM

Title: Re: Recommendations for Yogacara works?

Content:

pueraeternus said:

Not quite - the Trikaya predated Maitreyanath as well. For example, in the Lankavatara, the Sambhogakaya is known as the Nisyandabuddha.

Malcolm wrote:

What I said was, " the doctrine of three kāyas which was first systematized by Maitreyanatha." This systemization was his elaboration.

There is no doubt sambhogakāya was elaborated to solve certain problems raised by "real buddhas" attaining buddhahood in Akaniṣṭha in the Lanka, but the point is that there was no systematic presentation of three kāyas prior to Maitreyanatha, hence my point stands.

With respect to the so called niṣyandabuddha = sambhoghākāya, this is really only Suzuki's opinion.

The commentary on the Lanka by Jñānaśrībhadra states this concept in only one place: a buddha produced from ripening is a form that arises from the ripening (nisyanda) of the merit and wisdom accumulations, while the buddhas of emanation are those who show nirvana.

And the Lanka is the only sūtra which uses the term "niṣyandabuddha," so I think that is a pretty weak position of Suzuki's, very tentative and not proven at all.

When we examine sūtras by when they were translated into Chinese, not one sūtra translated into Chinese predates the Maitreyan synthesis containing the term "saṃbhoga" with one or two possible exceptions. The Ārya-dharmasaṃgīti-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra mentions a Sambhogabuddha -- this was translated by Gunabhadra between 412-421. It says:

If it is asked what is a sambhogabuddha, a sambhogabuddha is equivalent in enjoyment and practice with bodhisattvas, equivalent in aspects, food, speech, procedures, and conduct.

Maitreyanatha actually uses this term as well. He says in the MSL:

Because pristine consciousness is the cause of everything, pristine consciousness is similar to a great source;
it is the sambhogabuddha
because it produces the reflection of pristine consciousness.

The longer Suvarṇaprabhāsa Sūtra in Tibetan also has a chapter on the three kāyas, however, it seems quite likely that this chapter was a later addition, added after the time of Vasubandhu.

So in this case, if there is a canonical source for the term saṃbhoga, it would seem to be the reference to it in the Dharmasaṃgīti. Even so, it is not systematic, and it is a very slim basis for the elaborated system of three kāyas we find in the Maitreyan synthesis. Thus, I still stand by my observation that the most significant addition to Dharma by the Yogacara school is the doctrine of three kāyas

pueraeternus said:

Then there is this <http://read.84000.co/translation/UT22084-068-017.html> that explicitly talks about the three kayas, but I do not know if it pre or post dates Asanga.

Malcolm wrote:

It is quite late. It was never translated into Chinese.

pueraeternus said:

If we are talking about innovations, then with regards to the three kayas, I would say it is the addition of the svā-bhāvika-kāya as the fourth kaya. Was the svā-bhāvika-kāya ever mentioned elsewhere prior to the Abhi-samayālaṃkāra?

Malcolm wrote:

Only Haribhadra holds svabhāvakāya and dharmakāya are distinct, he is eight century.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 22nd, 2018 at 6:28 AM

Title: Re: Looking ahead...(split from ZFI topic)

Content:

Dan74 said:

I remember a great deal of displeasure and censure of things like a modern Zen understanding of "monk",

Malcolm wrote:

You don't recall the context. So let me recall it for you. In a diverse forum with many different traditions, people were becoming quite confused as to what constituted a "monk." Many people were showing up on the forum claiming ordination and teacher appointments in this and that school and we felt an obligation to force them to verify their ordinations/lama/teacher status to prevent misrepresentation and fraud.

There was a great deal of public discussion of whether wine-drinking, non-celibate westerners who had received shukke tokudo were equivalent to bhikṣus or not. This naturally caused some wine-drinking, non-celibate Zen priests frequenting the forum to become upset. But these are the kind of issues that must be addressed. However, there was no "censure" of Zen monks, merely a very heated discussion of what "monk" ought to mean. Ultimately, of course, one disgruntled member threatened to sue us and put up a ridiculous anti-Esanga Website.

I still maintain that if one is a wine-drinking non-celibate, one ought not refer to oneself as a monk.

In other words, we had Huifeng, Khedrup, and Dhammanando on the one hand, all ordained as either śrāmaneras or bhikṣus/bhikkus who did not like the work monk being used for Soto priests, etc., and the other, we had Jundo, Nonin, and so on, noncelibates with day jobs who still wanted to be called "monks," as absurd as that sounds to me even now.

Someone at the SZBA must have been listening, since in this <http://szba.org/wp-content/uploads/Guidelines-for-the-Formation-of-Soto-Zen-Priests-in-the-West.pdf> they studiously avoid referring to people with shukke tokudo or shiho as monks, referring to them solely as priests.

You have no idea how difficult it is when you have a forum of 50k+ registered users. DW does not compare in either volume or complexity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 22nd, 2018 at 5:48 AM

Title: Re: Recommendations for Yogacara works?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In reality, the most important contributions of the Yogacara school was not the doctrine of mind-only, but rather, the doctrine of three kāyas which was first systematized by Maitreyanatha.

pueraeternus said:

There are many other important contributions as well, such as the eight consciousness model, Buddhist epistemology (pramanavada), the detailed path laid out in the Bodhisattvabhumi, etc.

Malcolm wrote:

The model eight consciousnesses existed in the sutras prior to the Yogacara elaboration of the three kāyas. Bodhisattvabhumi is basically a commentary on the Sūtra-alaṃkāra, but those paths and stages are also laid in in sūtra prior to Maitreyanath, but what isn't laid out and what appears to be a novelty introduced by Maitreyanatha is the doctrine of three kāyas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 22nd, 2018 at 2:07 AM

Title: Re: Two solutions for karma and not-self paradox

Content:

fuki said:

so where should the notion of not-self (or self) come from, unless such notions were conditioned by reading a book about not self and thoughts become a string called thinking and one believes there's something called a "thinker" with any substantial past, present, or future.

Malcolm wrote:

"I, me, and mine" are the connate ignorance. That connate ignorance does not depend on reading a book, or some implanted belief, or some condition other than the mere fact of being a sentient being.

It is the basic mistaken we make which contradicts dependent origination. Even if we have an intellectual understanding of dependent origination, this is not sufficient to eradicate this connate ignorance. There is only one way to chip away at that connate ignorance, and that is through realizing the emptiness of self and the emptiness of phenomena. There isn't really any other way.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 22nd, 2018 at 1:18 AM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Grigoris said:

There is really no reason at all for civilians to be carrying concealed weapons.

Malcolm wrote:

There is little need for them to carry them openly either. However, frankly I would rather that people carry their pistols concealed. I really don't want to see their penis extensions.

Grigoris said:

I meant that they should not be carrying pistols at all. I wonder how people packing pistols would react if they saw you wandering around with a dildo stuck in your belt. I wonder if that would cause more outrage than walking around with a pistol stuck in your belt? It would be telling...

Malcolm wrote:

Most def, it could get you arrested in some places.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 22nd, 2018 at 12:52 AM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Grigoris said:

There is really no reason at all for civilians to be carrying concealed weapons.

Malcolm wrote:

There is little need for them to carry them openly either. However, frankly I would rather that people carry their pistols concealed. I really don't want to see their penis extensions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 22nd, 2018 at 12:50 AM

Title: Re: Two solutions for karma and not-self paradox

Content:

Supramundane said:

To complicate things, there is no sutra exclusively on Karma as far as I can see: the info seems to be scattered through various texts and is never consolidated. I am starting to think it may be a key part of Buddhism, at least, a key part in forming my overall understanding of Buddhism.

Oh, this is not true at all. Here are some sutras in the Tibetan canon:

karma-vibhaṅga karma-vibhaṅga-nāma-dharmagrantha karma-vibhaṅga karma-śataka karma-prajñapti

Not translated yet, but some Pali equivalents are:

<https://www.accesstoinsight.org/tipitaka/mn/mn.135.nymo.html>
<https://www.accesstoinsight.org/tipitaka/sn/sn35/sn35.145.wlsh.html>
<https://www.accesstoinsight.org/tipitaka/mn/mn.136.nymo.html>

The Diamond Sutra has some references to karma, as it sets out how we can overcome the fear of birth and death. A diamond itself is a composite of various materials and conditions coming together. The diamond was created in a sense by the earth itself and vice versa(!). Without gravity, specific elements, pressure, a certain geology, it couldn't have developed into what we now term a diamond. We ourselves are aggregates that coincide. The five skandhas are reborn every moment of time/space. yet that they lack any permanence/essence. All is empty, as in the quote on empty phenomena you provided, Malcolm.

You should understand that the title Vajracchedika means "Diamond cutter," i.e. it is a reference the perfection of wisdom which cuts through even the hardest things.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 21st, 2018 at 11:26 PM

Title: Re: Best book on the Bardo Thodöl or Death in general

Content:

Thomas Amundsen said:

Too late for rainbow body? Sure. But not too late to be liberated into a Samboghakaya or Nirmanakaya buddhfield.

Malcolm wrote:

You don't need Liberation through Hearing in the Bardo for that.

Don't get me wrong, it is an excellent text, as is Karling Zhitro in general. But sometimes, the essence gets lost in such details.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 21st, 2018 at 11:08 PM

Title: Re: Recommendations for Yogacara works?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In reality, the most important contributions of the Yogacara school was not the doctrine of mind-only, but rather, the doctrine of three kāyas which was first systematized by Maitreyanatha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 21st, 2018 at 11:00 PM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Fa Dao said:

As I said earlier we as a nation need to make a conscious effort to change the narrative from one of the hero shooting his way out of overwhelming odds to one of the hero against all odds showing an unflinching reverence for all life. If at all possible this changing of the narrative needs to be done in such a way that is not viewed as being confrontational. I really don't believe that creating even more laws is going to change much of anything until the dominant narrative is changed. Unfortunately this will take at least a couple of generations of diligent effort....sadly I don't think there is any "quickfix" for this problem. Take for example Chicago..they have some of the most stringent gun control laws in the entire country, yet they in a weekend have had more gun deaths than the rest of the country combined...

Malcolm wrote:

Nah, we just need to get rid of assault rifles (for civilian use) in general. They have no value other than as weapons for hunting humans, for which they were specifically designed. We should also limit semi-automatic pistols as well for people who cannot demonstrate a legitimate need for them. We need to force gun owners to carry liability insurance on each weapon they own. And we need to have a national gun tracking database.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 21st, 2018 at 9:49 PM

Title: Re: Best book on the Bardo Thodöl or Death in general

Content:

Thomas Amundsen said:

Birth, Life, and Death by Namkhai Norbu Rinpoche is an incredible book generally speaking, but doesn't have as much material on death as the other two.

Malcolm wrote:

Read it again more carefully.

Thomas Amundsen said:

I just skimmed through it again. It really depends on what OP is looking for. For a more generalized pithy overview, Birth, Life, and Death by Rinpoche probably is better. Everything is in there, that is for sure. But Karma Lingpa does go into a lot more detail. Where Rinpoche simply mentions "Buddhas of the five families", Karma Lingpa goes into explicit detail about their colors, hand implements, etc. I guess for students with some capacity, Rinpoche's instructions really are all you need

I'm currently studying Karma Lingpa's text with my teacher in LA, so I might be a little biased towards appreciating that.

Malcolm wrote:

If you see hands and faces in the bardo, it is too late for you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 21st, 2018 at 10:04 AM

Title: Re: Would advanced AI possess Buddha-nature?

Content:

PeterC said:

He teaches using that language. But we could interpret that in various ways, for instance that it is a form of upaya manifested by his omniscience. An unexcelled nirmanakaya Buddha wouldn't have the mundane experience of self-awareness in the same way that afflicted beings have - would he/she?

Malcolm wrote:

Why not? They have the same basic capacity for consciousness. Why would we consider self-awareness de facto afflictive?

PeterC said:

Does a Buddha, after demonstrating achieving enlightenment, ever dwell in dualistic perception?

We need to define terms - what in Buddhist terminology are we referring to by self-awareness?

Malcolm wrote:

Svasamvedana seems to fit the bill, which, according to Madhyamaka reasonings, is an inference derived from memory. Pretty hard to be self-aware in absence of memory.

As to your first question, just what do you mean by duality? How can the Buddha have the two kinds of omniscience if a buddha is incapable of memory?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 21st, 2018 at 9:04 AM

Title: Re: Would advanced AI possess Buddha-nature?

Content:

PeterC said:

He teaches using that language. But we could interpret that in various ways, for instance that it is a form of upaya manifested by his omniscience. An unexcelled nirmanakaya Buddha wouldn't have the mundane experience of self-awareness in the same way that afflicted beings have - would he/she?

Malcolm wrote:

Why not? They have the same basic capacity for consciousness. Why would we consider self-awareness de facto afflictive?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 21st, 2018 at 4:14 AM

Title: Re: Would advanced AI possess Buddha-nature?

Content:

PeterC said:

And your suffering is not imagined?

fuki said:

I consider it to be. For instance 2 years ago I went through extreme pain for 3 days leading to a hospitalization. But during that pain there was no suffering, only pain (and a hour of Bliss) if that would have happened 5 years before the pain would have been suffering too. I also see suffering in the past was due to imagination and I see family and friends and other beings suffering, but to them it's real the suffering as it was to me. So to me pain is inevitable but suffering is optional, then again I also see it's not optional for so many poor souls. Things I once called suffering are now figments of imagination, though I might experience suffering in the future I do realize what I called suffering in the past was an imagination.

Malcolm wrote:

There are three kinds of suffering taught by the Buddha: The first is the suffering of suffering, which generally involves intense pain, mental or physical. The second is the suffering of change. These first two are related to sensations. The third is called the pervasive suffering, which is the simple fact that all conditioned phenomena are impermanent and in a constant state of disintegration. This is the most difficult suffering to overcome since it is not related to sensation at all. The only way to overcome this suffering is to attain nirvana.

It appears you think that dukkha is an emotional involvement with pain, but this is not so. All pain is dukkha, since it is the ripening of negative karma on the body (and negative karma only ripens on the body). All pleasure or bliss is the ripening of positive karma, and positive karma ripens only on the mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 21st, 2018 at 12:36 AM

Title: Re: Would advanced AI possess Buddha-nature?

Content:

Motova said:
I'll settle the debate.

If computers can demonstrate clairvoyance and/or siddhis then they are sentient beings.

Malcolm wrote:
Well, not even we can demonstrate this, ergo, we too are not sentient beings.

Motova said:
People have psychic experiences all the time, it's pretty common.

Malcolm wrote:
That is not a demonstration of actual clairvoyance.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, February 21st, 2018 at 12:26 AM
Title: Re: Would advanced AI possess Buddha-nature?
Content:
Motova said:
I'll settle the debate.

If computers can demonstrate clairvoyance and/or siddhis then they are sentient beings.

Malcolm wrote:
Well, not even we can demonstrate this, ergo, we too are not sentient beings.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, February 21st, 2018 at 12:24 AM
Title: Re: Would advanced AI possess Buddha-nature?
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
The question then seems to be, do brains, biological or mechanical, provide the necessary mechanisms for self-awareness? Or is there something else required for self-awareness?

PeterC said:
That is the question. Without resorting to "it depends what you mean by..." games, it's difficult to answer as self-awareness is neither transpersonal nor objectively observable. So how does one assert its existence or not.

In the extreme case, self-awareness cannot simply be the self being aware of the self, in complete isolation from external phenomena. Even the formless realms posit more stimuli than that. Awareness of self this has to be awareness of the self as distinct from other objects of awareness. In which case the brain alone is insufficient.

Malcolm wrote:

There are no stimuli at all in the formless āyatanas since there are no physical sense organs for beings of the formless āyatanas. Without vitarka and vicara, they cannot switch objects and remain focused solely on the conceptual samadhi that propelled their birth, without any other stimulation. It is doubtful they are self-aware except in the most basic sense that their innate grasping at self assisted their afflictive rebirth in this realm.

PeterC said:

I'm struggling with this because the only type of self-awareness that we can posit to answer this question is the unenlightened dualistic awareness. You'd have to answer the question in a very different way if we were talking about non-dualistic awareness, I think.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha apparently exhibits self-awareness, since he frequently uses the pronoun, "I."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 20th, 2018 at 11:48 PM

Title: Re: Two solutions for karma and not-self paradox

Content:

Supramundane said:

I read a short note on karma that states there is a 'non aggregate self ' or a self beyond the 5 aggregates to explain the concept of karmic rebirth.

"The Buddha, however, postulates transcendent consciousness or Buddha consciousness beyond the aggregates. He does not limit the analysis to impermanent properties. The non-aggregate being is a Buddha who has achieved detachment from the aggregates... This "individual stream of consciousness" describes a "self" or "soul" beyond the aggregates. When awakened this is a Buddha."

But i don't think this is accurate in the context of Mahayana buddhism. If there were a non-aggregate self, the Buddha would have said so clearly and succinctly, right?

Malcolm wrote:

This is just the Pudgalavadin heresy poking its head up.

In short, there is no self that is all the aggregates, one of the aggregates, or separate from the aggregates. "Self" is just a label we apply to the aggregates of a person, but it is nothing other than a designation and does not signify anything real.

Supramundane said:

Hi Malcolm, may i ask, is the rebirth real then? Or is it too just a label?

Malcolm wrote:

Nāgārjuna's Verses on Dependent Origination state that while the aggregates are serially connected between this world and the next, nothing transfers from this world to the next:

Empty phenomena are produced only from empty phenomena.
Phenomena are without a self and not of a self.
Though the aggregates are connected in a series,
the wise understand that nothing transfers.

This verse eliminates eternalism.

The following verse eliminates annihilationism:

Someone conceiving annihilation, even for extremely subtle existents, is not wise,
and will never see the meaning of "arisen from conditions."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 20th, 2018 at 10:01 PM

Title: Re: Best book on the Bardo Thodöl or Death in general

Content:

Thomas Amundsen said:

Birth, Life, and Death by Namkhai Norbu Rinpoche is an incredible book generally speaking, but doesn't have as much material on death as the other two.

Malcolm wrote:

Read it again more carefully.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 20th, 2018 at 9:59 PM

Title: Re: Would advanced AI possess Buddha-nature?

Content:

PeterC said:

Haven't seen it - life's too short to watch sci-fi. But the arguments against the validity of machine sentience, and that biological sentience is somehow different and superior, are essentially all arguments from intuition. Nothing wrong with believing that provided we don't pretend that it's demonstrable.

Malcolm wrote:

So far, computers seem to lack the potential for autopoietic self-awareness. This would seem to be the real stumbling block when considering sentience for a given software/hardware platform. At this point, it is relatively easy to show that machines have not developed such self-awareness.

PeterC said:

Is autopoiesis as a theory of cognition sufficiently elaborated to serve as a standard for awareness?

That aside, at this point, yes, machines with that capacity have not been developed. But we are already able to replicate in silico most of the lower-level mechanisms of biological brains, albeit on a much smaller scale. What is often overlooked about artificial neural networks is that as the name suggests, they were abstractions of how we thought biological neural networks function, and the former have done a progressively better and better job of emulating and in some cases surpassing the functionality of the latter. It's therefore quite possible to imagine a machine of sufficient complexity being developed within the next half-century that would meet the standard for awareness.

An old joke in machine learning used to run: what does AI stand for? 'Almost implemented'. Every time someone said they'd 'solved' an AI problem, someone would argue that that wasn't 'real' AI, it was just an implementation of an algorithm that solved a particular instance of a problem. As the problems being solved become more and more complex, that argument will seem increasingly unpersuasive.

Malcolm wrote:

The question then seems to be, do brains, biological or mechanical, provide the necessary mechanisms for self-awareness? Or is there something else required for self-awareness?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 20th, 2018 at 9:56 PM

Title: Re: Recommendations for Yogacara works?

Content:

fuki said:

The links Astus posted should be enough I reckon

After Buddhism was brought to China from India, the initial focus on sutra translation gradually evolved into the eight Chinese schools of Mahayana Buddhism: the Three Treatise (Sanlun), Pure Land, Tian Tai, Consciousness-Only (also known as Yogachara), Huayan, Vinaya, Chan, and the Tantric schools. The late Chan Master Sheng Yen (1930–2009) compared the approaches of the eight schools to modern fields of study, stating: “The approach of the Consciousness-Only school resembles that of science, and the Three Treatise school is akin to philosophy. The approaches of the Huayan and Tian Tai schools parallel literature. The mantra school (Shingon shū) and Pure Land can be considered forms of aesthetics. Meanwhile, Chan embodies the core teachings of the Buddhadharma. Master Taixu [1890–1947] also said, ‘The crux of Chinese Buddhism is Chan,’ where the teaching of any of the other schools can be reduced to the spirit of Chan. As for the disciplines (Vinaya) school, it is the foundation of Buddhism.” (Master Sheng Yen 2007, 128)

Malcolm wrote:

And the essence of Chan be further reduced to Prajñāpāramitā, the quintessence of the Buddha's teaching and its source.

ItsRaining said:

Hello, can you please recommend a version of the Madhyāntavibhāga? I'm interested in reading it and there seems to be three versions available: one from the Khenpo Shenga from the Nyingma school, another from Thrangu Rinpoche of the Kagyu Shentong tradition and the last one is a commentary from Sthiramati who Xuanzang lists as one of the ten great masters of the Yogacara and according to some people author of the commentary on the Uttaratantra which I read. The Kagyu one seems to be most recent whereas the Sthiramati is from 1936 so I don't know how accurate the translation will be.

I don't know much about Indo-Tibetan Buddhism, I'm more familiar with Chan and general Mahayana sutras so is there a particular one I should read?

<https://www.amazon.com/Middle-Beyond-Extremes-Madhyantavibhaga-Commentaries/dp/1559392703>

<https://libgen.pw/item/adv/5a1f04ea3a044650f5081ab5>

Malcolm wrote:

I think the one by Mario D' Amato is the probably the best. Maitreya's Distinguishing the Middle from the Extremes (Madhyāntavibhāga) Along with Vasubandhu's Commentary (Madhyāntavibhāga-bhāṣya): A Study and ... (Treasury of the Buddhist Sciences)

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 20th, 2018 at 1:59 PM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Lindama said:

rest easy tho, the supreme court has just upheld a ban on vegetable gardens in the front yard in Miami.

<http://www.miamiherald.com/news/local/community/miami-dade/article199431784.html>

Malcolm wrote:

Well, It's Miami.

Norwegian said:

Like taken out of a dystopian novel...

Malcolm wrote:

I assure you this is quite normal for places in the US like Miami. But not everywhere is like that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 20th, 2018 at 11:47 AM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Lindama said:

rest easy tho, the supreme court has just upheld a ban on vegetable gardens in the front yard in Miami.

<http://www.miamiherald.com/news/local/community/miami-dade/article199431784.html>

Malcolm wrote:

Well, It's Miami.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 20th, 2018 at 6:06 AM

Title: Re: Patrul Rinpoche advice question

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

Hello all,

You see, in Patrul Rinpoche's "Nine Considerations and Criteria for Benefiting Beings" says in the 6th point "Consideration of the pros and cons of generosity" the next:

4. Consideration of the pros and cons of giving protection from fear

If bodhisattvas possess the power to protect sentient beings from danger, they should act to do so. But if they do not, they should not act. If you have the power but it would cause harm to yourself, you should not act. Even if your power is small, if it would not harm yourself or others, you should act to protect and defend endangered beings as much as possible.

so i was wondering why mr Patrul Rinpoche gave advice on giving material things and performing actions, but in this very case (underlined text) protection from fear is not to be applied at our own expenses.

this made me think that maybe i don't understand what "protect from fear" really means.

can anyone send some light on this? i found it very very interesting, but i don't get why the criteria here is different from other activities.

pd: Source: <http://www.lotsawahouse.org/tibetan-masters/patrul-rinpoche/nine-considerations>

Malcolm wrote:

For example, you should NOT run through a gun battle just to save a small dog. This is what it means. In other words, in order to benefit others one needs to protect oneself. Martyrdom is a Christian thing, not a Buddhist thing. We are supposed to attain buddhahood to benefit others, not uselessly throw away our lives out of some savior delusion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 20th, 2018 at 4:03 AM

Title: Re: Would advanced AI possess Buddha-nature?

Content:

PeterC said:

and if one day we should encounter a machine seeking the same, I'm sure we would not withhold transmission on the grounds that it was unqualified.

Malcolm wrote:

You've been watching too many episodes of Humans.

PeterC said:

Haven't seen it - life's too short to watch sci-fi. But the arguments against the validity of machine sentience, and that biological sentience is somehow different and superior, are essentially all arguments from intuition. Nothing wrong with believing that provided we don't pretend that it's demonstrable.

Malcolm wrote:

So far, computers seem to lack the potential for autopoietic self-awareness. This would seem to be the real stumbling block when considering sentience for a given software/hardware platform. At this point, it is relatively easy to show that machines have not developed such self-awareness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 20th, 2018 at 1:40 AM

Title: Re: Tiantai Meditation

Content:

Seishin said:

This single seamless meditation is called 'Endon Shikan' which means 'Perfect Sudden Shamatha/Vipashyana' (see Rory's post above for a description). The Endon Shikan can be described as the pinnacle of Tendai meditation. I have found the idea of Endon Shikan to be not too dissimilar to the idea of Japanese Zen (or Chinese Chan for that matter) in that Zen patriarchs often describe Chan/Zen as a meditation that encapsulates both Shamatha and Vipashyana.

Malcolm wrote:

In terms of ultimate bodhicitta, unified śamatha and vipaśyāna is or should be the goal of all practitioners of Buddhadharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 20th, 2018 at 1:37 AM

Title: Re: Recommendations for Yogacara works?

Content:

Matt J said:

I don't know about that. The prime text of Chan used to be the Lankavatara.

Malcolm wrote:

And the essence of Chan be further reduced to Prajñāpāramitā, the quintessence of the Buddha's teaching and its source.

I wasn't referring to a book.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 19th, 2018 at 10:44 PM

Title: Re: Recommendations for Yogacara works?

Content:

ItsRaining said:

Hey! I wanted to get to know a bit more about the Yogacara do you guys suggest any works? I've read Living Yogacara, the Sandinirmocana, as well as the 20+30 verses with a short commentary and wanted to know a bit more.

fuki said:

The links Astus posted should be enough I reckon

After Buddhism was brought to China from India, the initial focus on sutra translation gradually evolved into the eight Chinese schools of Mahayana Buddhism: the Three Treatise (Sanlun), Pure Land, Tian Tai, Consciousness-Only (also known as Yogachara), Huayan, Vinaya, Chan, and the Tantric schools. The late Chan Master Sheng Yen (1930–2009) compared the approaches of the eight schools to modern fields of study, stating:

“The approach of the Consciousness-Only school resembles that of science, and the Three Treatise school is akin to philosophy. The approaches of the Huayan and Tian Tai schools parallel literature. The mantra school (Shingon shū) and Pure Land can be considered forms of aesthetics. Meanwhile, Chan embodies the core teachings of the Buddhadharma. Master Taixu [1890–1947] also said, ‘The crux of Chinese Buddhism is Chan,’ where the teaching of any of the other schools can be reduced to the spirit of Chan. As for the disciplines (Vinaya) school, it is the foundation of Buddhism.” (Master Sheng Yen 2007, 128)

Malcolm wrote:

And the essence of Chan be further reduced to Prajñāpāramitā, the quintessence of the Buddha's teaching and its source.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 19th, 2018 at 10:08 PM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

justsit said:

The kids are going to march on Washington. Maybe someone will listen to them.

<https://www.ravelry.com/forum-images/sydney7/2z47x-fr2kae>

Pretty ironic - I just realized we have a shoot 'em up icon here.

Malcolm wrote:

Depicting AR-15 assault rifles, no less.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 19th, 2018 at 10:07 PM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Grigoris said:

I see on facebook that various individuals are starting to voluntarily hand in their assault rifles. People should be standing behind these personal initiatives.

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, I saw a guy saw his AR-15 in half this morning on CNN. The Republican congress has been feckless so far, so maybe they will do the right thing, but I would not place money on it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 19th, 2018 at 4:48 AM

Title: Re: Prajñāpāramitā and it's most influential commentaries.

Content:

Sennin said:

Thank you. I was unaware of the Nyingma commentary.

Losal Samten said:

Paltrul's is mostly a slightly edited down version of Tsongkhapa's, from what I recall.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, for the most part. Tsongkhapa's commentary is quite representative of the Sakya tradition coming from Yag ston, who was the pre-eminent commentator on this text in Tibet. His commentary is in eight volumes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 19th, 2018 at 3:41 AM

Title: Re: Prajñāpāramitā and it's most influential commentaries.

Content:

Sennin said:

Hi,

I'm interested in the most influential sutras and commentaries of the Prajñāpāramitā teachings. I am leaning towards studying the Abhisamayalamkara.

https://www.amazon.com/Gone-Beyond-Prajnaparamita-Realization-Commentaries/dp/1559393564/ref=pd_sim_14_6?_encoding=UTF8&pd_rd_i=1559393564&pd_rd_r=MXQ6P699NAXWENT518EW&pd_rd_w=jlVpX&pd_rd_wg=fjihf&psc=1&refRID=MXQ6P699NAXWENT518EW

Also I am interested in any resources you would recommend.

Thanks

Malcolm wrote:

Best to get Gareth Sparham's 4 volume translation of Vimuktisena and Haribhadra's commentaries. No point in studying later Tibetan systems of this until one has studied that. Also, among Tibetan commentaries available in English, Tsongkhapa's is probably the best in terms of clarity of the translation. It is also translated by Sparham.

https://www.amazon.com/Abhisamayalamkara-Vrtti-Aloka-Vol-1/dp/0875730116/ref=pd_sim_14_3?_encoding=UTF8&pd_rd_i=0875730116&pd_rd_r=SJQSQWS8RT7YVDNCMV4P&pd_rd_w=EfVS3&pd_rd_wg=qVhaf&psc=1&refRID=SJQSQWS8RT7YVDNCMV4P

https://www.amazon.com/Golden-Garland-Eloquence-Vol-1/dp/0875730159/ref=pd_sbs_14_1?_encoding=UTF8&pd_rd_i=0875730159&pd_rd_r=5GYF808P2WN4002R6PX2&pd_rd_w=9hmnG&pd_rd_wg=C0atd&psc=1&refRID=5GYF808P2WN4002R6PX2

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 19th, 2018 at 3:10 AM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

Since people think it's a mental health issue, my idea is a required psychological evaluation and background check for anyone trying to purchase these guns. In addition to a criminal background check, access to your mental health history, academic record, employment, social media history...which all goes into the psychologist's bio-psycho-social investigation, as well as an in-depth interview. And you pay for it. If you can't do this, do you really need an AR-15? Your probably what Trump would call a "loser" who doesn't "deserve" an AR-15.

Malcolm wrote:

It's a public health issue at this point—and of course the CDC is forbidden to research it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 19th, 2018 at 2:25 AM

Title: Re: How do we know if our predominant state of life is that of Buddhahood?

Content:

Minobu said:

everything is Buddha

Malcolm wrote:

Even Trump?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 19th, 2018 at 12:51 AM

Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

There is another ekayāna narrative concerning the liberation of the Arhantaḥ, from the Venerable Nāgārjuna's Mahāprajñāpāramitāsāstra

Malcolm wrote:

It is quite unlikely that the Mahāprajñāpāramitāsāstra is a composition of Nāgārjuna. See Bronkhorst, Language and Reality: On an Episode in Indian Thought, from page 56 on.

Coëmgenu said:

Apologies. I was simply going with a traditional attribution. We can call him Pseudo-Nāgārjuna until there is consensus on who authored it, I suppose.

Malcolm wrote:

No need to apologize. As far as who the author is, we will never know.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 19th, 2018 at 12:32 AM

Title: Re: Best book on the Bardo Thodöl or Death in general

Content:

Tiago Simões said:

What's the one you would recommend to gain more knowledge on death and dying?

Malcolm wrote:

The best description of the death process can be found in ChNN's Birth, Life, and Death. It is the clearest and most profound resource in English.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 18th, 2018 at 11:17 PM

Title: Re: Would advanced AI possess Buddha-nature?

Content:

PeterC said:

and if one day we should encounter a machine seeking the same, I'm sure we would not withhold transmission on the grounds that it was unqualified.

Malcolm wrote:

You've been watching too many episodes of Humans.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 18th, 2018 at 11:12 PM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Fa Dao said:

I am sure that a lot of people here are going to strongly disagree with this but what worked in Australia will not work here in the US...period. American culture is too deeply entrenched with heroes, guns and violence going all the way back to the founding of this country. "Shot heard around the world", Davy Crockett, Daniel Boone, The Alamo, The wild west, cowboys and indians, the quickdraw gunfighter, Tombstone, Wyatt Earp and Doc Holliday, Bat Masterson, Louis and Clarke, Have Gun Will Travel, Hopalong Cassidy, The Rifleman, Bonanza, all of the various cop shows, all of the various war movies and shows, Lethal Weapon, The Terminator...I think you all get the picture. Glorifying the hero who goes against all odds and prevails has been the narrative for over 200 years in books, folk stories, TV, movies, etc etc.

Bottomline is that making more and more laws will not work either...there is no quick fix for this...it will take at least a couple of generations of concentrated effort to change the narrative to a deeply held reverence for all life to the point that it trumps the longstanding narrative of the hero, guns, and violence....

just one mans opinion....

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, the idea that the 2nd Amendment meant that everyone had a right to own an individual firearm is really a post-Civil war interpretation by the SCOTUS. Prior to this, the idea that everyone was entitled to gun was highly contested, and the 2nd Amendment was broadly understood to mean that the right to bear arms was for the purpose of mustering state militias, since there was no professional army in the United States until 1791, shortly after the Constitution was ratified. Prior to the civil war, rifles and pistols were very expensive, costing a year's salary, and most people did not own firearms. However, there was also the Bliss decision in Kentucky that argued that the right to bear arms was personal. However, the Arkansas Buzzard decision, known as the Arkansas Doctrine, came down on the side of the militia interpretation. The turning point came after the Civil War over the question of whether freed slaves had the right to bear arms. At the same time, the availability of inexpensive, mass-produced firearms fostered catalogue sales of pistols and rifles during the westward expansion of the US, and advertising campaigns to sell these weapons were widespread. This is really the source of the "gun culture" of the US -- it was manufactured by marketing people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 18th, 2018 at 10:54 PM

Title: Re: Two solutions for karma and not-self paradox

Content:

Supramundane said:

I read a short note on karma that states there is a 'non aggregate self ' or a self beyond the 5 aggregates to explain the concept of karmic rebirth.

"The Buddha, however, postulates transcendent consciousness or Buddha consciousness beyond the aggregates. He does not limit the analysis to impermanent properties. The non-aggregate being is a Buddha who has achieved detachment from the aggregates... This "individual stream of consciousness" describes a "self" or "soul" beyond the aggregates. When awakened this is a Buddha."

But i don't think this is accurate in the context of Mahayana buddhism. If there were a non-aggregate self, the Buddha would have said so clearly and succinctly, right?

Malcolm wrote:

This is just the Pudgalavadin heresy poking its head up.

In short, there is no self that is all the aggregates, one of the aggregates, or separate from the aggregates. "Self" is just a label we apply to the aggregates of a person, but it is nothing other than a designation and does not signify anything real.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 18th, 2018 at 10:51 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

LolCat said:

I remember reading that every meal should be a Ganapuja, that is what sparked my question.

Malcolm wrote:

You can accomplish that merely by reciting om ah hum over your food and then seeing it as the five meats and five nectars. No need to get meat or booze.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 18th, 2018 at 10:46 PM

Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

There is another ekayāna narrative concerning the liberation of the Arhantaḥ, from the Venerable Nāgārjuna's Mahāprajñāpāramitāsāstra

Malcolm wrote:

It is quite unlikely that the Mahāprajñāpāramitāsāstra is a composition of Nāgārjuna. See Bronkhorst, Language and Reality: On an Episode in Indian Thought, from page 56 on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 18th, 2018 at 9:58 PM

Title: Re: The Unbearable Lightness of Anatman

Content:

Wayfarer said:

Worldly life and mundane concerns are meaningless. I think that's all that is being said.

fuki said:

What's meaningless today might be meaningful tomorrow, it's relative, and not letting go of relative thinking too binds one to the wheel of life and death.

To me meaningful and meaningless are fantasies the conditioned mind adds to perception, I woke up and fed the cats, meaningful/meaningless? Such things I would only think about when suffering some existential crisis.

Also separating meaning depending on "worldly life" and the dharma reeks a bit of self-importance. We all have jobs to do, the "worldly" and the "holy" one should fulfill them and not dwell so much on the meaning or meaningless of activities, again feels a bit too self-important. But if one needs meaning to let go of relative thinking then say its meaningful and get on with it, if one needs no meaning to let go of both meaning and non-meaning then say its meaningless and go on with it.

Malcolm wrote:

You are spending a lot of time spinning words you don't believe.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 18th, 2018 at 9:53 PM

Title: Re: The Unbearable Lightness of Anatman

Content:

fuki said:

Glad to be a Zenny, we don't give birth to concepts and then discuss if they have meaning haha

Malcolm wrote:

Zen forums must be very silent then.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 18th, 2018 at 12:23 PM

Title: Re: The Unbearable Lightness of Anatman

Content:

aflatun said:

But the cessation of, and the pursuit of the cessation of-affliction --> action --> suffering --> affliction- is meaningful, isn't it? Perhaps we're using the word "meaning" in different ways though.

Malcolm wrote:

The Dharma is meaningful. Life isn't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 18th, 2018 at 12:21 PM

Title: Re: The Unbearable Lightness of Anatman

Content:

Wayfarer said:

As I note above, 'I wonder if the question as to whether 'life has a purpose' was ever really articulated in traditional Buddhist narratives...

I still say the statement that 'life has no meaning' is nihilistic, and nothing said here will persuade me otherwise. Over and out.

Malcolm wrote:

As to your first point, this question was never articulated at all in any traditional Buddhist narrative.

As to your second point, things have meaning until one discovers they don't. Over and out.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 18th, 2018 at 12:20 PM

Title: Re: The Unbearable Lightness of Anatman

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

What about falling into the trap of extreme views? The argument that life has no meaning seems to fall into one of the two extreme views: nihilism.

that life's meaning is relative and subjective is not to say it has no meaning. It has many meanings, perhaps.

Malcolm wrote:

Life has no meaning because life by definition is just affliction --> action --> suffering --> affliction.

In reality, questions like, "Is there meaning" are not Dharma language. From the point of view of Dharma, life has no meaning. This is why we have compassion for sentient beings who engage in constant meaningless toil life after life. We have compassion for sentient beings because life is meaningless. There is no point to it at all.

TharpaChodron said:

Personally, I feel everything and every action is deeply meaningful. I think this attitude corresponds to what I have been taught re: karma, etc. So, I have a difficult time accepting that the four seals of Buddhism includes thinking that life is meaningless, even on an existential level. I guess if one thinks that Samsara is pointless is the same as saying life is meaningless, maybe then that makes sense.

Aren't we warned against falling into the two extreme views of nihilism and eternalism? If not thinking of life as either ultimately meaningful OR meaningless, what does that exactly mean?

Malcolm wrote:

Understanding that life is meaningless is not nihilistic, it is how things are. The four summaries of the Dharma actually prove that life has no meaning. Everything compounded is impermanent. Everything compounded is suffering. All phenomena lack self. Nirvana is peaceful.

Since there are no aggregates in nirvana, how can life be meaningful?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 18th, 2018 at 10:42 AM

Title: Re: The Unbearable Lightness of Anatman

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

What about falling into the trap of extreme views? The argument that life has no meaning seems to fall into one of the two extreme views: nihilism.

that life's meaning is relative and subjective is not to say it has no meaning. It has many meanings, perhaps.

Malcolm wrote:

Life has no meaning because life by definition is just affliction --> action --> suffering --> affliction.

In reality, questions like, "Is there meaning" are not Dharma language. From the point of view of Dharma, life has no meaning. This is why we have compassion for sentient beings who engage in constant meaningless toil life after life. We have compassion for sentient beings because life is meaningless. There is no point to it at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 18th, 2018 at 10:38 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas

Content:

heart said:

I might go along with that, but I am not sure that is what Joesph means. Anyway, I thought there was a lot of special teachings needed for giving other people transmissions?

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on the teaching. But anyone who has been a chöbö, knows everything they need to know to give empowerments. Empowerments, in essence, are just ritual manuals.

heart said:

If an empowerment was just a ritual performed well, what would be the point of receiving it?

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

It gives one permission to practice a specific path, that is the point of it. Basically, empowerments are a means of awakening. But if one does not awaken during the empowerment, then one has the sadhana method.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 18th, 2018 at 4:40 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas

Content:

pemachophel said:

"When sentient beings ask for teachings, a bodhisattva gives them."

Yes, but wouldn't you also say depending on whether the Teacher thinks the student(s) asking are ready for and capable of holding those teachings. One doesn't give a loaded gun to a toddler. In some cases it may be compassionate not to give certain, particular teachings to certain sentient beings.

Malcolm wrote:

A teacher has to judge what a student is ready to receive. For this reason we default to the gradual path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 18th, 2018 at 4:13 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas

Content:

heart said:

So, are you saying that there is no need to get the permission to give empowerments from the master that actually gave you the empowerment? You can just decide for yourself when you are ready?

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

It depends on circumstances. When sentient beings ask for teachings, a bodhisattva gives them. The exception would be if one's own teacher was easily accessible.

heart said:

I might go along with that, but I am not sure that is what Joesph means. Anyway, I thought there was a lot of special teachings needed for giving other people transmissions?

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on the teaching. But anyone who has been a chöbö, knows everything they need to know to give empowerments. Empowerments, in essence, are just ritual manuals.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 18th, 2018 at 3:45 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas

Content:

Mantrik said:

So, advice here is that there may be the need for either retreat or permission of your teacher before giving someone a lung of a mantra which is not sutric, and one Lama's recommendation of at least 100,000 repetitions.

I wonder what would happen if the clear stipulation was that you must have signs of attaining the function of any mantra before you are allowed to give to others.

And that, of course, brings us full circle back to having a teacher who can tell you when you have.

Josef said:

Many sadhanas indicate the signs, responsible and genuine practitioners should be able to determine for themselves what they are experiencing etc.

Im not saying that one shouldnt consult their teacher but I think we have a tendency to over-rely on our teachers when it comes to our practice and responsibility for upholding the transmission of the dharma.

If a practitioner receives empowerment, does the practice, and has signs of genuine experience, is asked to give the transmission, then they shouldnt be able to make the decision on whether or not to do so based upon their own relationship with the individual requesting and their willingness to take on the responsibility.

heart said:

So, are you saying that there is no need to get the permission the give empowerments from the master that actually gave you the empowerment? You can just decide for yourself when you are ready?

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

It depends on circumstances. When sentient beings ask for teachings, a bodhisattva gives them. The exception would be if one's own teacher was easily accessible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 18th, 2018 at 2:48 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

fuki said:

This does not render them nonfunctional, as Fuki's use of the illusion example implies. Really? this was not my intention. I agree with everything you say above perhaps there's an error in my speech or that I struggle translating everything in English, I don't know. Where did I negate appearances or implied non-function?

Malcolm wrote:

You said:

you know pretty well that my comment meant that illusory cultivation doesn't produce "enlightenment" the buddhadharma is a skyflower, it cultivates illusion to "remove" Please examine your statement in light of the explanation above of how these metaphors are used or misused.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 18th, 2018 at 2:24 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

ItsRaining said:

Relying on conventional truth to cultivate is what relying on illusion to cultivate illusion means I believe. Illusion may be used to refer to only deceptive truths in certain traditions but in Chan it covers all conventional truths.

Malcolm wrote:

If the example of an illusion is being used merely to demonstrate arising from causes and conditions, this is a correct usage. If it is being used to negate appearances, it is being used incorrectly.

ItsRaining said:

The dharma when taught and practiced is in the realm of the conventional truths and relies on causes and conditions making it ultimately illusory.

Malcolm wrote:

If one is using the example of illusion to claim that Dharma paths and practices are not effective or functional, this is a nihilistic interpretation and is incorrect.

ItsRaining said:

Since both practices and the fruit is said to be empty. I think the user you were responding to coming from a Zen POV will refer to all relative truths as illusion. So there are sayings in Chan like "The Buddha taught all Dharmas to cure all minds - I have not any of those minds, what need is there for the Dharma?"

Malcolm wrote:

The basis, path, and result are all empty. Of what are they empty? nature/inherent existence. This does not render them nonfunctional, as Fuki's use of the illusion example implies.

Moreover, even ultimate truth is merely a conventional truth. There is no ultimate truth per se, apart from correctly apprehending a given thing's absence of true existence. When we see things correctly, we see that they exist without any true existence. For this reason awakening does not arise randomly. Awakening only arises for those people who have correct view, and that correct view is profound dependent origination.

For example, when a magician manufactures the illusion of an elephant, we do not negate the appearance of the elephant, we negate only its functionality to do things an elephant does independently. But the cause and conditions through which that illusory elephant also cannot be negated. If they are, one cannot account for the appearance of the illusory elephant at all. If one declares the appearance of the elephant does not exist, then one is directly contradicting the evidence of one's own sense organs. Only sophists and fools will negate the evidence of their own, healthy sense organs.

ItsRaining said:

I'm not sure what is you mean by "its appearance is not a negandum.", don't appearances get negated in Madhyamaka as non-nonsensical? I remember reading Nagarjuna refuting distinct appearances and shared appearances (arise, stay, change, cease).

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka does not negate appearances, it negates true existence or inherent existence. (It also goes further and negates the four extremes, but that is a technical point not needed here.)

ItsRaining said:

The Sutra of Perfect Enlightenment says this, is that the same as saying perception corresponds to suchness as both existence and non-existence is dispelled?

"Good sons, in the practice of Perfect Enlightenment of the causal stage of the Tathāgata one understands these 'sky-flowers,' thus there is no transmigration, nor body/mind to undergo life-and-death. But they are not caused to be non-existent. It is because they lack original nature. Now, this [prior] awareness is in itself void, like empty space. Yet since this awareness that perceives it to be like empty space is none other than the appearance of sky-flowers, you also cannot say that there is no nature of awareness. Existence and non-existence both being dispelled is called 'according with pure enlightenment.' "

I agree the mind that comprehends the arising from causes + conditions isn't deluded and corresponds to suchness but it doesn't make it substantially existent which is what being illusory meant in this case.

Malcolm wrote:

As long as we understand examples such as sky flowers, etc., to mean that all phenomena from matter to omniscience do not ultimately exist, then there is no problem, because they have no essence. But if we use such examples to negate phenomena which arise from cause and conditions, we run into the problem that conventional phenomena arise from causes and conditions; sky flowers and so on do not arise because they have no causes.

The only place where use of such metaphors is acceptable is when we are making a case about the ultimate truth of a given thing. Ultimately, inherent existence and self are like sky flowers and so on because they have no cause, therefore, they do not arise, therefore they are utterly unreal, not even conventionally real. But there is a right way to realize this in accordance with suchness and ultimate truth, and a wrong way to realize this, which causes one to negate cause and condition in the relative. Thus, when we correctly observe phenomena, we see that in them there is no inherent existence and no self. The appearance of inherent existence and self is like the appearance of sky flowers, and so on, a complete delusion.

Illusions, mirages, and so on illustrate arising from causes and conditions. Thus, this class of metaphors needs to be distinguished from the class of metaphors involving sky flowers, hair on tortoises, horns on rabbits, and so on, which illustrate phenomena which do not arise from causes and conditions, and which are thus conventionally impossible.

The former set of metaphors indicates how conventional appearances arise in relative through cause and condition.

The latter set of metaphors describes how the imputation of self and natures (which never have any cause or condition) onto any phenomena which arise through cause and condition is utterly mistaken, even conventionally.

To put it most simple: when we see the example of illusion, we are seeing an example of arising from cause and conditions. When we see the example of a sky flower, we are seeing an example of the negation of self and nature.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 18th, 2018 at 1:06 AM

Title: Re: The Unbearable Lightness of Anatman

Content:

Wayfarer said:

The only way I can rationalise it is that I think what is being rejected is the idea of 'meaning' in the sense of life being thought of as having a script with a definite meaning. If that is what is being rejected as 'meaning', then sure, I agree. Otherwise, I don't understand the postings in this thread at all. Someone please straighten me out on this.

Malcolm wrote:

Meaning is relative, not intrinsic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 17th, 2018 at 10:59 PM

Title: Re: The Unbearable Lightness of Anatman

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you want to understand how these terms are used in Dzogchen texts, I refer you to the book in my signature.

fuki said:

It will be a pleasure to read and get a better understanding of the terminology in Dzogchen, thanks.

It's even available on a dutchy site

<https://www.bol.com/nl/f/buddhahood-in-this-life/9200000058855905/>

Malcolm wrote:

Best if you go sit at the feet of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 17th, 2018 at 10:52 PM

Title: Re: The Unbearable Lightness of Anatman

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Does such a thing exist? How?

fuki said:

Since it is not permanent you already know the answer to that one.

Awareness is mental factor, conditioned and dependent. I have no idea what you mean by 'true awareness.'

Is this enough? I could also quote some Zen, or Advaita, or pseudo-zen-advaita-sickness for you

Malcolm wrote:

I don't agree with the translation of the term rig pa, vidyā as awareness. It has unfortunately become commonplace, but it is mistaken.

Rig pa principally means knowledge or knowing. Also translating the term rang rig as self-awareness is generally mistaken in a Dzogchen context.

The term "timeless awareness" is a translation of the Tibetan term ye shes, which itself is translation of the Sanskrit term jñāna. It also really means a kind of knowledge in general. But please do not quote to me different translations of different Dzogchen texts by different translators. You are not qualified to judge these texts, and you clearly do not understand what you are reading. If you want to understand these texts, you will need to study under a qualified Dzogchen master for some years.

If you want to understand how these terms are used in Dzogchen texts, I refer you to the book in my signature.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 17th, 2018 at 9:02 PM

Title: Re: The Unbearable Lightness of Anatman

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is no point in returning one's attention to something transient and ephemeral like awareness, unless it is to observe that it is empty and dependently originated.

fuki said:

Quite the nitpick again Malcolm trying to separate sunlight from the sun again, you cognize awareness depending on how it makes sense to your conscious efforts in the comfort zone of a literalist. Not from true awareness as Lin Chi put it; "focus on the one that does not move".

Not everything posted is food for analysis and philosophy.

Malcolm wrote:

Awareness is mental factor, conditioned and dependent. I have no idea what you mean by 'true awareness.' Does such a thing exist? How?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 17th, 2018 at 12:23 PM

Title: Re: The Unbearable Lightness of Anatman

Content:

Queequeg said:

Isn't samsara due to the fact that we mistakenly project subjective significance on to something that is empty of any significance?

Malcolm wrote:

Samsara is the experience of suffering caused by karma that is motivated by affliction, that's all. When all those afflictions cease entirely due to insight, one becomes one of three kinds of buddhas: arhat, pratyekabuddhas, or samyaksambuddha, At that point, one is completely freed of birth, and that is the sole point of awakening. The innate grasping at a truly-existing self is the root of the three poisons. That innate grasping at a truly-existing self is a very subtle delusion. But it is the basic delusion that informs all of our cognitive choices and discriminations. The only thing that has meaning is the correct recognition of this deluded, innate grasping at a truly-existing self so that this delusion can be extirpated from one's continuum. We are not even projecting something on to another thing, such as imputing a self upon the aggregates. The innate grasping at a truly-existing self needs no object of imputation to be imputed. It is naturally imputed as the mere thought, 'me' or 'I.'

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 17th, 2018 at 12:07 PM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Lukeinaz said:

How would you counter the average gun nuts arguments made against Chicago's failed gun laws, and in particular the honest guys are the only ones that will turn in the guns leaving only the criminals armed?

Malcolm wrote:

Canada

Britain

Australia

New Zealand

France

Germany, etc.

This is the best argument there is, just like Universal Health Care. The United States probably needs to shift its economic model from a liberal market economy which emphasizes growth, to a coordinated market economy which emphasizes stability. The problem is that it will very hard for the US to make this transition for cultural reasons.

In other words, the US would have to go into gun addiction counseling for a decade before gun laws are really going to change in the whole country.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 17th, 2018 at 11:55 AM

Title: Re: The Unbearable Lightness of Anatman

Content:

QQ said:

the quality of emptiness is the lack of object-ness. Am I missing something?

Wayfarer said:

Not lack of 'object-ness' - absence of own-being, svabhava. Nothing is 'self-originated' i.e. existing from its own side. But if I throw a rock through your window, it will still break, and that will definitely mean something, like it not being able to keep the rain out.

Malcolm wrote:

Only if it happens to be raining, but I personally would be more worried about mosquitos, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 17th, 2018 at 11:54 AM

Title: Re: The Unbearable Lightness of Anatman

Content:

boda said:

The topic has never been about this. Even newbies know that grasping BAD!

A curious question for someone who just claimed:

Jesse said:

I distinctly remember someone was having trouble reconciling the idea of meaning, with the reality of emptiness.

boda said:

Emptiness is meaningful, at least it is to me. I don't see what there is to reconcile.

Malcolm wrote:

Personally, I am glad life has no meaning -- it would be completely depressing if it did.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 17th, 2018 at 11:51 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

ItsRaining said:

It is using illusion to remove illusion.

Malcolm wrote:

The difference between conventional truth and false or deceptive relative truth is that the former is strictly common perception, whereas the latter also includes hallucinations, and other deluded states which are nonfunctional.

The point of this is that without resorting to conventional truth, one cannot understand and then realize ultimate truth, and therefore, nirvana is impossible.

The point of the illusion example is that an illusion, a deceptive relative truth, is understood to arise from causes and conditions, a veridical relative truth. And further, since this illusion arises from causes and conditions, it is natureless and lacks true existence, but its appearance is not a negandum.

The mind that apprehends the arising of phenomena from causes and conditions cannot be a deluded mind in anyway, since this perception corresponds with suchness. Whereas, the mind that apprehends an illusion can be deluded if it misapprehends the source of the illusion as something other than causes and conditions, i.e. permanent or annihilated.

Thus, illusion cannot be used to remove illusion since illusions are part of relative deceptive truth, rather than conventional truth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 17th, 2018 at 7:24 AM

Title: Re: The Unbearable Lightness of Anatman

Content:

fuki said:

It's in the nature of mind to create subject/object where there is none, its only when we take the phenomenal center we imagine to be, which rides on the bus to go from A to B as something substantial or graspable that errors come into existence, like birth and death, being, not being, becoming, a past and a history, daydreams! It's sufficient to stop pretending it is otherwise and return (one's attention) to awareness,

Malcolm wrote:

There is no point in returning one's attention to something transient and ephemeral like awareness, unless it is to observe that it is empty and dependently originated.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 17th, 2018 at 7:21 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

fuki said:

you know pretty well that my comment meant that illusory cultivation doesn't produce "enlightenment" the buddhadharma is a skyflower, it cultivates illusion to "remove" illusion.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is not correct. Buddhadharma does not foster illusions in any way. It merely points them out.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, February 17th, 2018 at 7:12 AM
Title: Re: Kyab Rig
Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

That does not make sense to me, if matter ultimately arises from the lights which arise from the basis, at what point does matter become completely "cut off" from awareness?

Malcolm wrote:

Matter is a an appearance of ignorance, not knowledge (rig pa).

Johnny Dangerous said:

How would it be possible to achieve the rainbow body etc. if that were so? Mind is present in some appearances but not in others? How is that explained?

Malcolm wrote:

The appearances of ignorance are the mutual traces of sentient beings appearing to one another. When that ignorance is removed, one can manifest rainbow body.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, February 17th, 2018 at 3:16 AM
Title: Re: New Translation: Prajnaparamita in 10,000 Lines
Content:
Malcolm wrote:

This perfection of wisdom of the victors is a great mantra of knowledge, pacifying the misery and suffering of many kinds of sentient beings.
The guides of the ten directions, past and present, having trained in this great mantra of knowledge, become unsurpassed physicians.

— Sañcayagatha

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, February 17th, 2018 at 2:54 AM
Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.
Content:

florin said:

These figures are insane.

I don't know what to say...

I mean, any percentage of gun owners that is above zero that live in places where gun control legislation is nonexistent or very lax, is a potential for dangerous and deadly situations.

It is not too dramatic to think that people living in these places could expect to be shot dead any moment.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, it sounds worse than it is. More than 60 percent of deaths from guns in the US are suicides.

Grigoris said:

And the second largest group of killings is from domestic violence incidents.

Malcolm wrote:

And believe it or not, deaths from guns overall are down precipitously since 1990, along with crime, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 17th, 2018 at 1:49 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is no real problem with encouraging people to recite things like the six syllable mantra or Arapacana since they are from sūtra and so do not require any special transmission.

However, it is more useful for such beginners to recite the Heart Sūtra.

Grigoris said:

Indeed, but practicing a (any) mantra like your life depends on it is exactly what is needed in the case of every mantra. You are overlooking the pedagogical aspect of my post in order to focus on procedural issues (irrelevancies in the case of tenma, who cannot focus on one thing for more than a millisecond).

Now instead of focusing on the mantra mentioned, they will start to ask a string of useless questions regarding the Heart Sutra mantra and any chance of them applying themselves properly to a practice will vanish up their cavity once again.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, the real issue here is not whether to recite mantras, or not, but whether they have a teacher or not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 17th, 2018 at 1:47 AM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

florin said:

I fear that there will be lots of people that having built a personal arsenal for very long time, and worked very hard at creating a warped mentality that justifies an insane amount of firearms, will resist and refuse to give in and surrender, even with the most prohibitive type of legislation.

Malcolm wrote:

They are only three percent of the population. I.e., in the US three percent of the population own 50 percent of the guns. Which means that 3 percent of the US population owns 22.5 percent of all the guns in the world, since 45 percent of the world's guns are owned in the US. It has been pointed out before that in the US most states require one to carry car insurance. This kind of legislation will have to go state by state, since there is no way it will pass on a federal level. For example, where I live, in Massachusetts, there is very low level of gun violence in general because our gun control laws are very strict, and AR 15's are illegal for civilians to buy. Most gun violence in the US take place in states with lax gun control laws Across the border, in Vermont, the rate of gun violence rises precipitously because gun control laws are very relaxed in Vermont.

All of these guns have been illegal to possess or buy in Massachusetts since 1994: Assault weapons are defined (with no exceptions, except pre 1994 models) as: (i) Avtomat Kalashnikov (AK) (all models), Action Arms Israeli Military Industries UZI and Galil, Beretta Ar70 (SC-70), Colt AR-15, Fabrique National FN/FAL, FN/LAR and FNC, SWD M-10, M-11, M-11/9 and M-12, Steyr AUG, INTRATEC TEC-9, TEC-DC9, TEC-22, revolving cylinder shotguns, Street Sweeper, and the Striker 12.
https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Gun_laws_in_Massachusetts

florin said:

These figures are insane.

I don't know what to say...

I mean, any percentage of gun owners that is above zero that live in places where gun control legislation is nonexistent or very lax, is a potential for dangerous and deadly situations.

It is not too dramatic to think that people living in these places could expect to be shot dead any moment.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, it sounds worse than it is. More than 60 percent of deaths from guns in the US are suicides.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 17th, 2018 at 1:19 AM

Title: Re: Kyab Rig

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

If the Five Light arise from the basis, and all matter is ultimately the Five Lights, doesn't this mean that in fact, in some sense all matter is pervaded by awareness, just simply not "from it's own side"?

Malcolm wrote:

No, the reason for this is that such appearances are a result of traces, i.e., all appearances may be mind, but that does mean that a mind is present in every instantiated appearance. Hence, even though out of ignorance the five lights are reified into the five elements, rocks nevertheless do not possess minds or rigpa. As florin points out, the five lights are just symbols for the qualities of the five pristine consciousness, but even here it is important to remember that the five pristine consciousnesses are 'relative,' as opposed to the three pristine consciousnesses of the basis (essence, nature, and compassion) which are 'ultimate.'

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 17th, 2018 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: Ngakpas

Content:

Tenma said:

Uh oh! I gave a "lung" of Chenrezig(Om Mani Padme Hum) to one of my friends who wished for it while I gave the Aa ah sha sa ma ha script to a friend as a charm to be taken care of including the Simhamukha written on a script(all these in gold, I didn't say the Simhamukha mantra nor told how to pronounce) as something to where due to her having a ghost in her house. If this happens, what can I do to fix this?

Grigoris said:

Giving a printed version of protection mantra is not a problem. For the lung you gave I would recommend you practice the mantra like your life depends on it and don't do it again.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no real problem with encouraging people to recite things like the six syllable mantra or Arapacana since they are from sūtra and so do not require any special transmission.

However, it is more useful for such beginners to recite the Heart Sūtra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 17th, 2018 at 1:01 AM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The only way the market can force people to give up their guns is by putting legislation in place which forces all owners of guns to carry insurance policies on each and every gun they own.

florin said:

I fear that there will be lots of people that having built a personal arsenal for very long time, and worked very hard at creating a warped mentality that justifies an insane amount of firearms, will resist and refuse to give in and surrender, even with the most prohibitive type of legislation.

Malcolm wrote:

They are only three percent of the population. I.e., in the US three percent of the population own 50 percent of the guns. Which means that 3 percent of the US population owns 22.5 percent of all the guns in the world, since 45 percent of the world's guns are owned in the US. It has been pointed out before that in the US most states require one to carry car insurance. This kind of legislation will have to go state by state, since there is no way it will pass on a federal level. For example, where I live, in Massachusetts, there is very low level of gun violence in general because our gun control laws are very strict, and AR 15's are illegal for civilians to buy. Most gun violence in the US take place in states with lax gun control laws Across the border, in Vermont, the rate of gun violence rises precipitously because gun control laws are very relaxed in Vermont.

All of these guns have been illegal to possess or buy in Massachusetts since 1994: Assault weapons are defined (with no exceptions, except pre 1994 models) as: (i) Avtomat Kalashnikov (AK) (all models), Action Arms Israeli Military Industries UZI and Galil, Beretta Ar70 (SC-70), Colt AR-15, Fabrique National FN/FAL, FN/LAR and FNC, SWD M-10, M-11, M-11/9 and M-12, Steyr AUG, INTRATEC TEC-9, TEC-DC9, TEC-22, revolving cylinder shotguns, Street Sweeper, and the Striker 12.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Gun_laws_in_Massachusetts

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 16th, 2018 at 11:59 PM

Title: Re: deadliest mass shooting in the U.S.

Content:

Queequeg said:

I think we keep this thread open as long as these shootings continue.

This is a shameful thread.

florin said:

Yes, that is what i meant.

It is sad and hopeless.It will happen again.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, for as long as Americans have easy access to guns, there will be mass shootings, even though gun violence in the US has in fact been decreasing steadily for years. What has increased however is the number of mass shootings. This is simple a function of there being too many guns in the US. The one variably present in all countries when it comes to mass shootings is the presence or absence of guns per capita. It is obvious the problem in the US is solely the ease with which guns can be purchased.

The only way the market can force people to give up their guns is by putting legislation in place which forces all owners of guns to carry insurance policies on each and every gun they own.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 16th, 2018 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: what do we mean by faith?

Content:

Wayfarer said:

I was taught that the Buddhist word for faith, 'saddha', means 'to place ones' heart upon'. Another definition I found helpful was 'confidence in the principles of Buddhism'.

Malcolm wrote:

It's is more useful to rely on native Buddhist definitions for terms. Saddha, as I mentioned already is a mental factor. It does not really correspond to the idea of belief, but it does somewhat correspond to the idea of confidence or trust.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 16th, 2018 at 10:59 PM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

ItsRaining said:

I think One Mind used in the Awakening of Faith is often used to contrast with it's two aspects or the various dharmas we perceive. It definitely doesn't teach an universal mind.

Malcolm wrote:

We ought to be concerned with the fact that the term, "one mind," especially when it is capitalized for emphasis, carries ontological and philosophical connotations in English that may not be present in Chinese. In particular, it seems to trap people who have a naive understanding of the term "nondual," who assume when they see the term nondual or "without duality" in Buddhist texts that it means precisely the same thing as the nonduality spoken of by Advaitan and Neo-Advaitan exponents. This is why I referred to the term as "quasi-Vedantic."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 16th, 2018 at 10:48 PM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Meido said:

Upon further reflection, though, it is clear to me he was right. Many Buddhist types who reject "God" really just reject that which is easily rejected: the crudely anthropomorphized tribal deity. But they continue to hold tightly to a less-defined spiritual "oneness" or "source" of reality, and to view the goal of practice through the lens of atonement, "returning to" something, or "becoming one with" something. Even the choice often made to capitalize "One Mind" and "True Self" perhaps speaks to this. It's a factor worth acknowledging when discussing dharma in these parts.

fuki said:

Rejecting "God" or "Self" only creates a framework and thus asserts the "thing" in the very rejection.

Malcolm wrote:

"God" is not rejected out of hand, it is just that unconditioned creators contradict dependent origination.

fuki said:

...the source of the smile on Buddha's face and its unfathomable gifts are not a product of practise or correct buddhadharma.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, actually it, as well as they, are indeed the product of correct buddhadharma, which is why the Buddha found his two teachers teachings limited and incomplete.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 16th, 2018 at 10:42 PM

Title: Re: Kyab Rig

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

So I often hear "rocks and stones don't have Buddha nature" where Kyab Rig is concerned, or something along those lines, Makes sense, kind of an obvious thing to say, but here is my question:

If the Five Light arise from the basis, and all matter is ultimately the Five Lights, doesn't this mean that in fact, in some sense all matter is pervaded by awareness, just simply not "from it's own side"?

If not, can someone explain the apparent contradiction, how/where is this concept precisely explained?

Malcolm wrote:

According to JLA, <https://khyungmkhar.blogspot.com/2012/07/khyab-rig-final-word-from-drenpa-namkha.html> is a Bonpo term for tathāgatagarbha, that has been misunderstood to mean that inanimate things like rocks have rigpa. Read the series of posts in the posted link above.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 15th, 2018 at 6:54 AM

Title: Re: Illuminating Quotes by Malcolm Namdrol-la

Content:

Vasana said:

What causes and conditions would result in the cessation of the appearance of Buddhahood if there are limitless appearances of (illusory) beings ? End of universal cycle?

I'm sure you mean this in a very Diamond/Heart Sutra way, Malcolm, but just checking I understood the implications of the above quote of yours.

Malcolm wrote:

The end of sentient beings is the end of the appearance of buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 14th, 2018 at 8:13 PM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

thecowisflying said:

Hmmm... yeah it only sounds Vedantic in English? In Chinese it suggests more like an individual mind and doesn't sound like an universal one.

Malcolm wrote:

You would have to review Suzuki to see what I am talking about.

ItsRaining said:

I mean you said Quasi-Vedanta use in Chinese Buddhism which I will disagree with. I don't see the point of reading Suzuki to understand Chinese Buddhism. Do you read Chinese?

Malcolm wrote:

No. But I have seen over time a lot of westerners following Zen in particular who seize terms like one mind with vedantic spins. The source of this problem is a) Suzuki b) Paul Reps.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 14th, 2018 at 11:03 AM

Title: Re: Translatorhood

Content:

Motova said:

To be honest there is no money in anything related to Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

If I were in it for the money, I would have picked either Yoga Hinduism or Evangelical Christianity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 14th, 2018 at 6:48 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I'm kind of feeling the need to justify my alienation from 'ordinary' life, so I thought I might leap into the discussion with the entry from "The Princeton Dictionary of Buddhism" on this topic:

Malcolm wrote:

The problem with this entry is that the term "ekacitta" is not attested in the Lanka, existing nowhere in the Sanskrit text or its Tibetan translation. It appears that the term ekacitta is used by Suzuki on page 269 of his study of the Lanka, but it is not listed as term appearing in his Chinese, Sanskrit, Tibetan glossary.

The quasi-Vedanta use of the term in Chinese Buddhism causes a lot of problems for westerners.

thecowisflying said:

Hmmm... yeah it only sounds Vedantic in English? In Chinese it suggests more like an individual mind and doesn't sound like an universal one.

Malcolm wrote:

You would have to review Suzuki to see what I am talking about.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 14th, 2018 at 6:46 AM

Title: Re: Suttas/Sutras on smoke offering

Content:

Tiago Simões said:

What scriptures mention smoke offerings or the ritual burning of incense?

Malcolm wrote:

You mean sang? No sūtras mention Sang, since it is a native Tibetan custom.

Incense is mentioned frequently.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 14th, 2018 at 5:38 AM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I'm kind of feeling the need to justify my alienation from 'ordinary' life, so I thought I might leap into the discussion with the entry from "The Princeton Dictionary of Buddhism" on this topic:

Malcolm wrote:

The problem with this entry is that the term "ekacitta" is not attested in the Lanka, existing nowhere in the Sanskrit text or its Tibetan translation. It appears that the term ekacitta is used by Suzuki on page 269 of his study of the Lanka, but it is not listed as term appearing in his Chinese, Sanskrit, Tibetan glossary.

The quasi-Vedanta use of the term in Chinese Buddhism causes a lot of problems for westerners.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 14th, 2018 at 3:03 AM

Title: Re: Translatorhood

Content:

csmorg96 said:

How does one support themselves as a translator of Sanskrit/Tibetan?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, getting a day job helps a lot.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 13th, 2018 at 11:32 PM

Title: Re: New Rigpa letter

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The kleśas are not something to remove from the mind, the wisdoms are not something to add to the mind; the kleśas are themselves self-liberated wisdom when one cuts through grasping even though there is nothing to cut.

Therefore, cutting through grasping is the actual practice of all paths, from hinayāna to atiyoga. The only difference between the yānas, lower to higher, is the coarseness of the grasping one cuts through.

Rinchen Samphel said:

Wait, so are you saying that if we cut through grasping, our afflictions will naturally liberate? So, is it the nature of things to self-liberate?

Malcolm wrote:

Things are neither liberated nor unliberated, The nature of self-liberation is total nongrasping.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 13th, 2018 at 11:23 PM

Title: Re: Questions on Buddhas in Vajrayana

Content:

heart said:

The goal in Vajrayana is not to become a supreme Nirmanakaya but rather to fully realize our natural state. This is possible in one life and have been done by countless Vajrayana masters and their students in the past, right this moment and will be done in the future as well.

Malcolm wrote:

Have to disagree with you here, old friend. The goal in Vajrayāna is to attain anuttarasamyaksambodhi, unsurpassed, perfect, complete awakening, i.e., the state of full buddhahood, for the benefit of all sentient beings. Does not mean one manifests as a full-on supreme nirmāṇakāya in our next life. But eventually, in some world system, in some eon, we have that responsibility.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 13th, 2018 at 10:47 PM

Title: Re: "One Mind" in Hua Yen thought

Content:

Admin_PC said:

三界唯一心

Basic Definition: the triple realm is nothing but the one mind

Senses:

- The triple world is but one mind.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a citation of the Avatamska:

/di ltar khams gsum 'di ni sems tsam ste/

Thus, the three realms are only mind.

It uses very similar phrasing to the Lanka:

/di ltar khams gsum 'di ni rang gi sems tsam ste/

Thus, the three realms are only one's mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 13th, 2018 at 9:10 AM

Title: Re: Upāya (continued from another thread)

Content:

DGA said:

And if I understand the quotation that you refer to, the answer isn't that a particular text or canon of texts is to be regarded as definitive. It must instead be a particular view.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. I have always maintained this to be the case.

BTW, Candrakīrti's true brilliance is not just that he honed certain points of Madhyamaka, though that is what he most famous for. His true brilliance and best contribution is that he explains how to correctly understand Yogacāra doctrines from a precise and uncompromising Madhyamaka perspective, taking into account the Maitreyan synthesis. Candrakīrti represents the pinnacle of late Indian Buddhist Mahāyāna thought.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 13th, 2018 at 3:28 AM

Title: Re: Keith Dowman's argument for his "interpretive free" translation style

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

Yes I know that tibetans translated everything and I know that what this thread is talking about tibetan texts, so maybe following tibetan translation rules is the right way to go, but then it raises the challenge of how to translate certain words and because many of these texts are being translated at the same time by different people you'll have several different translations given for the same term.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and eventually this will be ironed out. In the meantime, "let a thousand flowers bloom."

Fortyeightvows said:

I mainly advocate for the standardized translations of liturgy. It seems crazy to me that if I memorized in english very common prayers or sutras (heart sutra, 21 taras, amitabha sutra, even the tibetan refuge and dedications) there is almost no chance that I would be able to go and chant with another english speaker who memorized the same prayer because we would have memorized a different translation.

Malcolm wrote:

This is mainly an institutional problem.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 13th, 2018 at 3:25 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Medicine and Tinnitus

Content:

florin said:

I would be curious to know how does TM view this condition and whether it knows ways of alleviating it.

Malcolm wrote:

It is considered a wind condition, oil treatments for the ears are recommended, but not if your eardrum is perforated.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 13th, 2018 at 2:38 AM

Title: Re: Are Pure Land and Nichiren Buddhisms Compatible With Each Other?

Content:

Sentient Light said:

Also worth pointing out that Bhikkhu Bodhi's teacher practiced the Bodhisattva path:
https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Balangoda_Ananda_Maitreya_Thero

The idea that Theravada rejects the path of bodhisattvas is a very recent one. What they reject is the Mahayana sutras, which is why their view of the bodhisattva path consists of ten perfections rather than six... Their bodhisattva path comes from a different literary tradition than ours.

Malcolm wrote:

We also have ten perfections. As far as I can tell, the Theravadin bodhisattva literature, what they have of it, is derivative of early Mahāyāna.

Thomas Amundsen said:

Loppon, would you have any idea why the six perfections are most commonly heard of in East Asian Buddhism (or maybe just Zen) and not the ten? Was it the later Indian scholars like Chandrakirti that emphasized these? I know I never heard of 10 perfections in Mahayana before studying Chandrakirti, and any Zen practitioner I've ever talked to only speaks of six perfections.

Malcolm wrote:

The six perfections are emphasized because they are the practice of the bodhisattvas of the impure stages. The remaining four are practices of the bodhisattvas of the pure stages.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 13th, 2018 at 2:31 AM

Title: Re: To what extent do hell beings inhabit our world of physical objects?

Content:

Motova said:

I thought they could be reborn into chairs, tables, brooms, etc etc....

Malcolm wrote:

Those are temporary hells, but the hells realms do not, according to Mahāyāna thinking, have physical existence.

Tiago Simões said:

I am also a bit confused by this one Loppön, what do you mean with "temporary hells"? Aren't all hells temporary?

Malcolm wrote:

The temporary (nyi tshe ba) hells are called "temporary" or "day hells" because they are solitary (pratyeka), and generally last for a very short period.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 13th, 2018 at 2:15 AM

Title: Re: Keith Dowman's argument for his "interpretive free" translation style

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

Following Tang Xuan Zang's five rules would be an excellent start.

DGA said:

Would you mind elaborating on this a bit? I'm not familiar with those five rules.

Fortyeightvows said:

He said that there are five instances where a word should be left untranslated (literally 五種不翻)

-If the word has multiple meanings (like arhat and bhagavat)

-Esoteric terms like mantras, incantations, etc

-Terms of reverence, if saying the word has some resonance (prajna-paramita, manjushri, amitabha, vairocana)

-Terms with no local equivalent/words for things that don't exist outside of india (no precise english word that really means the exact same thing)

This is why words like yaksha were not translated.

-Words that have been left untranslated by previous translators (in other words there is a precedent) (Following the spirit of this we could also arrive at the conclusions that words like refuge and empowerment have precedent.

Malcolm wrote:

Tibetans did not follow these rules, they translated everything. Thus, while these may be good guidelines, and I am in agreement with them, there is precedent in Tibetan translation standards for total translation, even names.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 13th, 2018 at 2:12 AM

Title: Re: To what extent do hell beings inhabit our world of physical objects?

Content:

Motova said:

I thought they could be reborn into chairs, tables, brooms, etc etc....

Malcolm wrote:

Those are temporary hells, but the hells realms do not, according to Mahāyāna thinking, have physical existence.

Motova said:

I don't understand.

Malcolm wrote:

Hell realms only exist in the mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 13th, 2018 at 2:01 AM

Title: Re: To what extent do hell beings inhabit our world of physical objects?

Content:

Motova said:

I thought they could be reborn into chairs, tables, brooms, etc etc....

Malcolm wrote:

Those are temporary hells, but the hells realms do not, according to Mahāyāna thinking, have physical existence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 13th, 2018 at 1:58 AM

Title: Re: To what extent do hell beings inhabit our world of physical objects?

Content:

Motova said:

To what extent do hell beings inhabit our world of physical objects?

Malcolm wrote:

They don't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 13th, 2018 at 12:25 AM

Title: Re: Are Pure Land and Nichiren Buddhisms Compatible With Each Other?

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

Nikaya buddhism of the pali suttas and mahayana...

Malcolm wrote:

This is not true. The evidence of this is that bhikṣus who followed Mahāyāna lived side by side with non-Mahāyāna bhikṣus.

Sentient Light said:

Also worth pointing out that Bhikkhu Bodhi's teacher practiced the Bodhisattva path:
https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Balangoda_Ananda_Maitreya_Thero

The idea that Theravada rejects the path of bodhisattvas is a very recent one. What they reject is the Mahayana sutras, which is why their view of the bodhisattva path consists of ten perfections rather than six... Their bodhisattva path comes from a different literary tradition than ours.

Malcolm wrote:

We also have ten perfections. As far as I can tell, the Theravadin bodhisattva literature, what they have of it, is derivative of early Mahāyāna.

The main point is that arhats, pratyekabuddhas, and buddhas are all equal with respect to the eradication of afflictions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 12th, 2018 at 11:50 PM

Title: Re: Why does Gelug school claim emptiness means things exist without self nature?

Content:

ItsRaining said:

Thanks for clearing things up. But when someone perceives something to be existent like a cup, normally they wouldn't be projecting inherent existence but rather just existence in general. Or am I getting them mixed up somehow?

Malcolm wrote:

There is a controversy here. Tsongkhapa maintains that it is very important to identify what he terms the subtle object of negation, inherent existence, because the coarse object of negation, existence, is an over-negation.

In other words, the cup is designated dependent on its parts. If you negate the existence of the cup, you are contradicting your own perception of the cup. If you negate only the cup's inherent existence however, you can maintain the conventional value of the cup that you perceive, but by understanding its lack of inherent existence, you can also acknowledge the cup is something which arises from conditions, since nothing that arises from conditions can be held to inherently exist—arising from conditions is simply a convention.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 12th, 2018 at 11:44 PM

Title: Re: Why does Gelug school claim emptiness means things exist without self nature?

Content:

thecowisflying said:

Why do Gelugs claim this

Malcolm wrote:

They do not claim that things exist without self-nature. They claim that things exist dependent on imputations made upon a collections of parts.

They claim that the emptiness taught by the Buddha is simply the emptiness of true existence that is the absence of the inherent existence of things.

thecowisflying said:

So from what I know about TB much of it is focused on Nāgārjuna so how does Tsongkhapa explain non-arising as only the absence of inherent existence? If something is non-arisen how can it exist at all even if it does so without inherent existence?

Malcolm wrote:

Arising from conditions means nothing arises inherently, that is, without a cause. Arising from causes is imputed upon parts. Things exist as dependent designations, thus, they are still nonarising.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 12th, 2018 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: Are Pure Land and Nichiren Buddhisms Compatible With Each Other?

Content:

Motova said:

Why would any Mahayana practitioner ignore Amitabha's Pure Land?

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think that Nichiren was telling people to ignore Sukhavati.

DGA said:

This is an interesting topic. I don't know if he did or if he did not.

I do know that many of the contemporary Nichiren Buddhists I have engaged with do not view an aspiration for rebirth in Sukhavati as a good way to use the current lifetime one has. (Am I off base here?)

Malcolm wrote:

Apparently, one of Nichiren's beefs with Honen was not that Honen followed pure land sūtras, but rather, that he viewed Honen as advocating the discarding of all other sūtras besides the three pure land sūtras.

As for your second point, I agree with you that in conversations I have had with Nichiren Buddhists in the West, they generally deride Nembutsu as a false practice or irrelevant practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 12th, 2018 at 11:36 PM

Title: Re: Are Pure Land and Nichiren Buddhisms Compatible With Each Other?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Can you list some more forms of Buddhism which are incompatible with other forms of Buddhism?

Fortyeightvows said:

Nikaya buddhism of the pali suttas and mahayana...

Malcolm wrote:

This is not true. The evidence of this is that bhikṣus who followed Mahāyāna lived side by side with non-Mahāyāna bhikṣus.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 12th, 2018 at 11:33 PM

Title: Re: Keith Dowman's argument for his "interpretive free" translation style

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Not if the translator is realized.

Malcolm wrote:

Hahahahahaahahahaha, the Buddha was a buddha, and people were still confused as shit by his teachings, and he taught them directly in their own language.

A realized translator is a desiderata, but go ahead and show me one, and then tell me how it is that you know they are realized. And further, if the translator is realized, what is the point of his or her making translations when they can just teach directly from their experience?

weenid said:

Scriptural evidence and teacher's authority showing a realized translator:...

Vairotsana made translations because he knew that in the future some translators in the west will translate his translations.

Malcolm wrote:

I was talking about modern western translators.

weenid said:

To a part of a little bit of the knowledge of Vairotsana.

Malcolm wrote:

Vairocana was trained from the time he was a young kid to be a translator.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 12th, 2018 at 3:29 AM

Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.

Content:

Ricky said:

Without any sort of practice and realization its not easy to believe. I admire those who entertain no doubts.

Dharma Flower said:

I have doubts about the more extravagant claims of the sutras. Did the Buddha literally emit a beam of light from between his eye brows? I have no idea. What I feel certain about is, in the very least, that the Buddha taught the path to Buddhahood, rather than just mere arahantship alone.

Ricky said:

I have no idea as well but Theravadins argue that the historical buddha only taught the path to arhatship and that there can only be one buddha per eon. Many contradictions between theravada and mahayana. I think both should be seen as separate religions rather than different vehicles.

Malcolm wrote:

It is pretty clear that Indian Mahāyāna Buddhists regarded arhats, pratyekabuddhas, and buddhas as equivalent with respect to liberation. From a Mahāyāna point of view difference between the three lies in cultivation of merit and the depth of their omniscience. Considering Mahāyāna to be a separate religion from the Śrāvaka schools is a big mistake. They merely did different things with the raw material the Buddha left us.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 12th, 2018 at 3:10 AM

Title: Re: Pure Land teachings from a Zen perspective

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is no One Mind in the Lanka or any other sūtra.

Dharma Flower said:

This is from D. T. Suzuki's translation of the Lankavatara Sutra, which I am currently reading:

It is like an image reflected in a mirror, it is seen there but it is not real; the one Mind is seen as a duality by the ignorant when it is reflected in the mirror constructed by their habit-energy.

From not knowing that all that is seen is of mind-only, there takes place discrimination and hence duality; but when it is known that it is nothing but Mind, no discrimination evolves.

http://lirs.ru/do/lanka_eng/Suzuki_Studies_in_the_Lankavatara.pdf

According to the above passage, there is not only the One Mind, but there is also nothing but Mind.

Malcolm wrote:

This passage says in fact:

Just as a reflection in a mirror appears but does not exist, the immature dualistically perceive concepts in the mirror of the mind.

Not knowing the mind and perceptual objects, dualistic concepts arise.
When the mind and objects are thoroughly known, concepts cannot arise.

The mind becomes a diversity, but when characteristics and the basis of characteristics are abandoned, also the appearance of activity does not appear, and are likewise just designations of the immature.

Since the three realms are mere concepts, outer objects do not exist, but are the appearance of diverse concepts: this is not understood by the immature.

As such, the term "One mind" does not appear in the passage at all. The commentarial literature on states that citta here refers to the eighth consciousness, the ālyavijñāna. The ālyavijñāna however is personal, rather than transpersonal.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 12th, 2018 at 2:23 AM

Title: Re: Why does Gelug school claim emptiness means things exist without self nature?

Content:

thecowisflying said:

Why do Gelugs claim this

Malcolm wrote:

They do not claim that things exist without self-nature. They claim that things exist dependent on imputations made upon a collections of parts.

They claim that the emptiness taught by the Buddha is simply the emptiness of true existence that is the absence of the inherent existence of things.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 12th, 2018 at 2:17 AM

Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Ven Zhìyǐ identifies ekayāna as the totality of the refined elements of three periods of teachings: vaipulya (corresponding to Vimalakīrti, Viśeṣa-cinti-brahma, Laṅkāvatāra, Śūraṅgama-samādhi, Suvarṇa-prabhāsa-sūtra, Śrīmālā, etc., (<http://www.acmuller.net/kor-bud/sagyoui.html>)), prajñā (the prajñāpāramitā sūtras), & the period of the Lotus Sermon.

Malcolm wrote:

The Tien Tai school's use of the term ekayāna has come to dominate discourse around it, since ekayāna is such a central term in their system. The unfortunate consequence of this is that the way the term is used by Buddhist scholars in Buddhism's native home, India, has been somewhat eclipsed. No one in India seems ever to have thought to make the term a centerpiece of their hermeneutics based on a historiographical idea of the three turnings (or five periods), just as the three turnings themselves are virtually ignored by Indian scholars, but are important to Tibetan scholars.

From the point of view of text critical methodology, there are a couple of points to bear in mind. Taking Chinese translations of Mahāyāna Sūtras as an approximate gauge of the date of their initial composition, there are no sūtras that use the terminology of the three kāyas that can be dated prior to Maitreyanatha ((ca. 270-350 CE). Thus, trying to use the term sambhogakāya with respect to sūtras earlier than Maitreyanath is anachronistic. These sūtras describe the kāyas of the buddha solely as rūpakāya and dharmakāya. The earliest depictions of the sambhogakāya are in Maitreyanatha's texts, where "sambhogakāya" principally refers to the 32 signs and 80 marks. Moreover, there are no sūtras that I can find where the two terms, rūpakāya and sambhogakāya, can be found together.

It seems the earliest sūtra to fully embrace the terminology of three kāyas is the proto-tantric Suvarṇaprabhāsa Sūtra, first translated into Chinese by Dharmakṣema between 1414-421. (The question of why Maitreya-nātha found it useful or necessary to elaborate the concept of the sambhogakāya, and possible influences is an interesting question, but there is no room for it here.)

Given this, we come across an important distinction: any sūtras which use the terminology of three kāyas were composed after Maitreya-nātha's dates, that is, they must have been composed after 275-350 CE.

There is no discussion of ekayāna in Indian treatises that can be found in the Tibetan canon which can be dated earlier than Maitreya-nātha as well (I have no idea about what can be gleaned from the Chinese canon). Given the fact that there is no distance between what Vasubandhu reports about ekayāna and Candrakīrti, it is clear that for Indian paṇḍitas, Maitreya-nātha, Asaṅga, and Vasubandhu pretty much set the tone for how ekayāna, as well as the rest of Indian Buddhism, was to be discussed from then on. Given that this is the case, and given that the ekayāna is pretty much described as being the identical liberation of arhats, pratyekabuddhas, and buddhas in both Yogacāra and post 6th century Madhyamaka sources, it is not surprising then that Tibetan scholars themselves devoted virtually no attention to the concept.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 11th, 2018 at 11:15 AM

Title: Re: What are the most important/widely studied sutras in Tibetan Buddhism?

Content:

Javierfv1212 said:

As the title states, I'd like know which are the most widely cited, studied and important sutra texts in Tibetan Buddhism. My understanding is that TB study generally focuses on the study of Sastras for the understanding of exoteric Buddhism. And yet there does seem to be at least some sutra study as the references to sutras in Mahayana sastras shows. Does anyone have a good collection or listing of major Mahayana sutras which are studied in the various Tibetan Buddhist schools? I have only found this link to an FPMT site which lists various sutras and dharani:

<https://fpmt.org/education/teachings/sutras/>

Is this a good indication of the main sutras studied in Tibetan Buddhism? If not, which sutras would be studied or at least referenced and cited by Tibetan monks during their education?

Malcolm wrote:

Perfection of Wisdom Sutras studies are a speciality of Tibetan scholastics.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 11th, 2018 at 11:10 AM

Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Short answer, since I lost a detailed post of sūtra citations.

1) Buddhayāna, Ekayāna, Mahayāna and Bodhisattvayāna are absolute synonyms.

2) The teaching of three vehicles is a skillful means. The trio Śrāvakayāna, Prayetyekabuddhayāna and Mahāyāna are more more common in sutras than the trio Śrāvakayāna, Prayetyekabuddhayāna and Buddhayāna, however, the last is always equated with Mahāyāna.

3) The teaching of Ekayāna is in no way unique to the Saddharmakpuṇḍarīka Sūtra. In the Tibetan Canon it is mentioned 145 times, only 19 of those times is in the aforementioned sūtra.

Queequeg said:

Round and round.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it's much better not to read sutras after all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 11th, 2018 at 6:10 AM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

Tlalok said:

The truth is that the second the North got a warhead onto a rocket they completed their nuclear program. NK is now a nuclear power, and unfortunately there is nothing anyone can do to change that. They are never going to give up their nuclear weapons program. We have to learn to live in this world.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I agree.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 11th, 2018 at 6:07 AM

Title: Re: Pure Land teachings from a Zen perspective

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is no One Mind in the Lanka or any other sūtra.

Dharma Flower said:

This is from D. T. Suzuki's translation of the Lankavatara Sutra, which I am currently reading:

It is like an image reflected in a mirror, it is seen there but it is not real; the one Mind is seen as a duality by the ignorant when it is reflected in the mirror constructed by their habit-energy.

From not knowing that all that is seen is of mind-only, there takes place discrimination and hence duality; but when it is known that it is nothing but Mind, no discrimination evolves.

http://lirs.ru/do/lanka_eng/Suzuki_Studies_in_the_Lankavatara.pdf

According to the above passage, there is not only the One Mind, but there is also nothing but Mind.

Malcolm wrote:

Bad translation, unfortunately. You'd be better off with Red Pine's.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 11th, 2018 at 5:58 AM

Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Short answer, since I lost a detailed post of sūtra citations.

1) Buddhayāna, Ekayāna, Mahayāna and Bodhisattvayāna are absolute synonyms.

2) The teaching of three vehicles is a skillful means. The trio Śrāvakayāna, Prayetyekabuddhayāna and Mahāyāna are more more common in sutras than the trio Śrāvakayāna, Prayetyekabuddhayāna and Buddhayāna, however, the last is always equated with Mahāyāna.

3) The teaching of Ekayāna is in no way unique to the Saddharmakpuṇḍarīka Sūtra. In the Tibetan Canon it is mentioned 145 times, only 19 of those times is in the aforementioned sūtra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 11th, 2018 at 4:35 AM

Title: Re: Is dependant origination eternal?

Content:

fuki said:

That depends any grasping that it is so or not so on a conceptual level is falling into error, hence if understood no questions arise and theres nothing in need of explaining. Hence understanding the arising of the inquiry is sufficient and leaves no room for grasping "correct dharma"

Malcolm wrote:

Can you parse this out more?

fuki said:

Sometimes giving everything away is poison.

Malcolm wrote:

I meant write it in grammatically-correct English.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 11th, 2018 at 4:28 AM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

Tlalok said:

You do understand we are mobilizing for a war there?

If the US is seriously gearing up for a nuclear exchange with North Korea they are doing it terribly.

Malcolm wrote:

Are you surprised?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 11th, 2018 at 4:25 AM

Title: Re: Is dependant origination eternal?

Content:

fuki said:

If you wouldnt have read this thread, how would thoughts about inherent existence arise?

Kunga Lhadzom said:

I have thought about this many many times..before the thread....last night i was thinking (again) about WHAT IS LIFE ?

Malcolm wrote:

It is a faculty sentient beings are born with. It's duration depends on their merit.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

WHAT IS THE SUBSTANCE THAT MAKES SOMETHING ALIVE ? Christians would call it GOD. But what IS it that is LIVING ? And what IS it that leave the body, and that body is considered DEAD ?

WHAT IS THE LIFE FORCE ?

Atoms are even vibrating inside of rocks.

Malcolm wrote:

The substance that gives us life is called "life," prāṇavāyu, and it is the oxygen in the air you breath in and out. No air, no life. Very simple. Fish use gills to take oxygen from water, but the principle is the same.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 11th, 2018 at 4:20 AM

Title: Re: Is dependant origination eternal?

Content:

fuki said:

That depends any grasping that it is so or not so on a conceptual level is falling into error, hence if understood no questions arise and theres nothing in need of explaining. Hence understanding the arising of the inquiry is sufficient and leaves no room for grasping "correct dharma"

Malcolm wrote:

Can you parse this out more?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 11th, 2018 at 4:18 AM

Title: Re: Are Pure Land and Nichiren Buddhisms Compatible With Each Other?

Content:

markatex said:

What prompted this question? The answer is no. There is no way the two are compatible.

Malcolm wrote:

What an amazing world we live in, where one form of Buddhism is incompatible with another. Truly a degenerate age.

markatex said:

Oh, give it a rest. Lots of forms of Buddhism are incompatible with each other. I like DGA, but I feel like he's trolling with these questions.

Malcolm wrote:

Can you list some more forms of Buddhism which are incompatible with other forms of Buddhism?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 11th, 2018 at 4:17 AM

Title: Re: Are Pure Land and Nichiren Buddhisms Compatible With Each Other?

Content:

Motova said:

Why would any Mahayana practitioner ignore Amitabha's Pure Land?

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think that Nichiren was telling people to ignore Sukhavati. His axe to grind was against Honen, the founder of the Jodo-shu sect (Honen acknowledges he founded a new school of Buddhism in his seminal Senchakushū), who he believed was leading people away from the Dharma with an undue emphasis on Nembutsu, reciting the name of Amitabha Buddha, Namo Amida Butsu.

A significant factor in his conviction about this was his belief that people in Japan had forgotten about Śākyamuni Buddha (of course they hadn't, but that is a different story), and thus he advocated for the elimination of Pure Land Buddhism, which he considered a "one-sided teaching" as it was being practiced by Honen and his disciples.

Nichiren tied some of his polemics to his belief that the practice of Pure Land Buddhism has earlier caused the suppression of Buddhism by the Taoist Emperor Wuzong (814-846) during the Tang Dynasty in China, and later on, the death in 1221 of the cloistered Japanese emperor Go-toba after he led an unsuccessful rebellion against the Kamakura Shogunate and was exiled.

The interesting thing about this is that Go-toba actually banned Honen's Pure Land school, ordering the execution of some its adherents and the banishment of Honen. There was eventually a rapprochement, where Honen signed a pledge to reign in some of his more radical students. Despite all of this, clearly Nichiren held Honen's teaching and people response to it as being responsible for the death of Go-toba.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 11th, 2018 at 3:10 AM

Title: Re: Is dependant origination eternal?

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

What Inherently exists then ?

fuki said:

On what does this question depend?

You "should" come to see why such questions are false and are unapplicable and not conducive to awakening.

Malcolm wrote:

Such questions are very good, and are easily answered, requiring no speculation at all, and are in fact very conducive to awakening. As Candrakīrti notes in the Madhyamakāvatāra:

Phenomena's lack of inherent existence, is conventionally termed "emptiness" by the wise.
That emptiness is also asserted to be empty of an empty entity.
That emptiness of so-called emptiness is asserted to be the emptiness of emptiness, taught in order to repel the grasping of thinking emptiness is an entity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 11th, 2018 at 3:00 AM

Title: Re: Is dependant origination eternal?

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

What Inherently exists then ?

Malcolm wrote:

Nothing at all.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

Nothing is something....lol...what is nothing ?

Don't tell me nothing is everything...lol oh that's right...everything IS nothing...so nothing IS everything...

Malcolm wrote:

There is no entity, either compounded or uncompounded, which inherently exists.
Hence, nothing exists inherently. Everything that exists, arises from conditions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 11th, 2018 at 2:45 AM

Title: Re: Is dependant origination eternal?

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

What Inherently exists then ?

Malcolm wrote:
Nothing at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 11th, 2018 at 2:43 AM

Title: Re: Are Pure Land and Nichiren Buddhisms Compatible With Each Other?

Content:

markatex said:

What prompted this question? The answer is no. There is no way the two are compatible.

Malcolm wrote:

What an amazing world we live in, where one form of Buddhism is incompatible with another. Truly a degenerate age.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 11th, 2018 at 1:50 AM

Title: Re: Garchen Nyongtig Yabshi Germany 2018 Questions

Content:

Yeti said:

When someone asked Tulku Pema Wangyal about the benefits of this transmission... he said... the benefits will appear during one's journey in the bardo.

fckw said:

I don't mean to sound dismissing, but when I hear someone tell me that the benefits of a given practice will be reaped during bardo - I am not interested at all. What help is this to me in this current form? Why should I care more about a bodyless form in the bardo realm who, according to Buddhist theory, is not even "me" anymore, but just some karmic imprints traveling through the bardo like a lonely asteroid is travelling through space and time? Why should I care more about that form during bardo than about the current form in this body?

(Of course you're going to tell me that I got it all wrong, and that it's not at all what said tulku really meant and so on. But is it really?)

Malcolm wrote:

When one is in the bardo, during the first three weeks, one definitely remembers who one was, etc. When we talk about waking up in the bardo, it means that when we become aware during the bardo of dharmatā, which happens scant moments after we are dead from a Buddhist pov, we still have knowledge of our practice, our identity in this life, etc.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 11th, 2018 at 1:46 AM

Title: Re: Is dependant origination eternal?

Content:

dude said:

Too much head tfipping. Of course it s etetnal. You were never born. You willl never die. And you don,t really exist at all

Malcolm wrote:

Why the qualifier "really?" Is there some sense in which we do exist, are born, and die?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 11th, 2018 at 12:43 AM

Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.

Content:

Queequeg said:

Somebody, at some point, has to tell the kids who still don't get it by 5th grade that Santa Claus is mom and dad. The age of enchantment is wonderful - I'm living it with my 2 and 5 year olds right now. At some point, the age of enchantment ends. But not before they're ready for it to end.

Malcolm wrote:

What an impoverished view.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 11th, 2018 at 12:00 AM

Title: Re: Is dependant origination eternal?

Content:

mechashivaz said:

Buddhism rejects eternalism regarding all compound things, but what about the flow of karma, cause and effect ever moving myriad things? Even after kalpas upon kalpas it would seem that it's posited that the process of being and non-being will continue indefinitely, thus creating an eternal system of flux.

Malcolm wrote:

Since the past is not established, since it has perished, and the future is not established, since it has yet to come to be, the present cannot be established either. Therefore, dependent origination is not an eternal process because no processes can be established, other than as conventions.

Further, dependent origination is about the afflicted processes that drive samsara, affliction, action, and suffering. When affliction is removed, action has no cause; and when action has no cause, the result, suffering cannot be produced. From this perspective too, dependent origination cannot be seen as eternal, since when one attains realization, one becomes free from that process entirely.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 10th, 2018 at 11:57 PM

Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.

Content:

Queequeg said:

I addressed the limits of Maitreya's knowledge above.

Malcolm wrote:

There are no limits to Maitreya's knowledge, the omniscience of a tenth stage bodhisattva is equal to that of a buddha's. This is why your idea about limits to Maitreya's knowledge can't be taken seriously.

Queequeg said:

No substantive response to the quote? A blanket declaration without citation and remarks about the scope of my knowledge?

Sigh. Par.

Malcolm wrote:

You mean the same quote you keep trotting out?

With respect to Maitreya's or any another tenth stage bodhisattvas omniscience, the Buddha had this to say about it in the Perfection of Wisdom in 18,000 Lines:

If it is asked how a bodhisattva mahāsattva abiding on the tenth stage is called a "tathāgata," because such a bodhisattva mahāsattva has thoroughly completed the ten perfections, thoroughly completed the eighteen unshared buddhadharmas up to the omniscient knowledge of aspects, has totally relinquished traces, connections, and afflictions, and totally completed all buddhadharmas, Subhuti, a bodhisattva mahāsattva abiding on the tenth stage is called "tathāgata."

Thus, your idea that Maitreya's comment in that passage shows some limit to his knowledge is completely refuted.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 10th, 2018 at 6:10 AM

Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.

Content:

Queequeg said:

I addressed the limits of Maitreya's knowledge above.

Malcolm wrote:

There are no limits to Maitreya's knowledge, the omniscience of a tenth stage bodhisattva is equal to that of a buddha's. This is why your idea about limits to Maitreya's knowledge can't be taken seriously.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 10th, 2018 at 5:32 AM

Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.

Content:

Queequeg said:

These bodhisattvas until that point still believe that Shakyamuni first attained enlightenment in Gaya.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they don't. Whatever gives you this idea?

Queequeg said:

I made reference to the basis of this remark above.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, it can only be rhetorical.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 10th, 2018 at 5:31 AM

Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is a questionable assertion. While it may accurately represent what the schools you mention maintain, it is not an easily defensible assertion.

DGA said:

I'd like to go back to Qq's assertions. There are two.

1. the three yanas are not real paths in themselves, but are instead upaya. Means to an end. Hold that thought.

2. in themselves, they do not lead to annuttarasamyaksambodhi.

OK, if 1 is true, and I think it is, then you have to consider what the objective of that upaya may be. I think they are means to the end of bringing beings to the Mahayana, which does lead to annuttarasamyaksambodhi. This means the purpose and function of the three yanas is to lead beings to annuttarasamyaksambodhi.

To my mind, as of this moment, 2 must be false if 1 is true. All three lead to Mahayana and therefore to annuttarasamyaksambodhi. There's one Dharma path but different maps and landmarks, if that analogy makes sense.

Maybe I'm misunderstanding Qq's post and Malcolm's objection to it.

If I'm mistaken, I invite the gallery to set me right.

Queequeg said:

The intervening cause that reconciles 1 and 2 is the Buddha delivering the sobering message - "Everything I've taught you is upaya. Here is what's really going on." The rich man's son was always the rich man's son, but he thought he was something else. The rich man treated him as a servant, but that was only because the son thought that was all he was. The father contrived the whole charade for the son's benefit, but there was one reality all along, and in the father's mind, one end. The son on the other hand is conducting himself within the paradigm of a servant until the father declares, "It was all a put on!" That charade was never going to lead to the son realizing his real identity. Sooner or later, the father had to pierce the fiction and reveal the truth. Once the son knows who he really is, the servant paradigm is shattered. Same thing - once the Buddha tells the sravaka, "That whole Hinayana was a story I told you because you think so little of yourself the only thing that would satisfy you was to annihilate desire, etc." How could Sariputra go back to the sravaka path once he hears he's destined for Buddhahood, and always was? The Phantom City has been dispelled, and Sariputra finds himself back on the trail. All he can do is say, with realization casting his entire sravaka endeavor in a new light, "Ohhhhh..... that's what that was...."

Malcolm wrote:

In his commentary on the Lankāvatara Sūtra, Vasubandhu opines:

To the immature, three vehicles, one vehicle, and no vehicle are taught; but to the āryas, the truth of the three vehicles is taught as nondual dharmatā.

On the other hand, Asvabhāva writes in his Extensive Commentary on the Ornament of Mahāyāna Sūtras:

Since it is culmination of all vehicles, it is called Mahāyāna; since there is no other special vehicle beyond that, it is called Ekayāna.

So from this point of view, Ekayāna is the bodhisattva path of perfections, and nothing else.

On the Madhyamaka team, the only thing Vimuktisena writes in his massive commentary on the Abhisamayālaṃkāra:

Since dharmatā is undifferentiated, all paths are the Ekayāna.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 10th, 2018 at 3:15 AM

Title: Re: Awakening kundalini?

Content:

SunWuKong said:

Milarepa was a sorcerer who used his powers to murder his own family. He must have been the most unhappy person on earth. Then he found a Guru, but his guru rejected him. He persisted and eventually became the Milarepa we know and love today. It says a lot about the power of redemption offered through the Buddhist tradition

Malcolm wrote:

Milarepa never murdered anyone in his own family. He was never rejected by his guru. Virtually everything Tsang Nyon Heruka has to say about Milarepa's life is completely false. Apart from the songs TNH collected, there is very little truth in his account of Milarepa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 10th, 2018 at 2:34 AM

Title: Re: Pure Land teachings from a Zen perspective

Content:

Dharma Flower said:

Insisting that Amida either exists or does not exist, when seen in light of the Lankavatara Sutra, is an unnecessary dualistic distinction. The One Mind in all things just is, no matter what name or form we ascribe to it.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no One Mind in the Lanka or any other sūtra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 10th, 2018 at 2:00 AM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I am sorry, but I think you have zero understanding of the real situation with respect to

NK. You do understand we are mobilizing for a war there?
In the very possible eventuality that hostilities do breakout we'll be screwed, all of us.

Minobu said:
i fear you are right...but the we? i think it is a small group of militarists and trump .
Why is SK shaking hands with Kim's sister in front of the world.

Are they, the Two koreas, using the whole Olympic peace opening ceremony and joined team to put pressure to quash this intended war by the USA's administration as of late.

it certainly opposing views being put out ..and the Korea's seem to have very little say in what happens...

NK asked for oil to get a ferry back home...SK said it had to ask permission from USA.

the most precarious set of politics ever...

also i think the stock market is a real sign of what could happen, people are getting their money out slowly while making gains computer generated..for each rise of 300 you get a 1000 dump..it will go to 19,000 and hang there....gold will be at an all time high...people are heading for the hills...

Malcolm wrote:
What I had in mind was fallout and millions of dead Koreans. The stockmarket is hardly a consideration in the event true hostilities breakout.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, February 10th, 2018 at 1:59 AM
Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?
Content:

Minobu said:
do you see God the Creator as a false teaching, something made up and not real .
something to control populace?

Malcolm wrote:
It's erroneous but I also don't think that people picking up the banner of Buddhism will help anything at all.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, February 10th, 2018 at 12:19 AM
Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
Indeed. However Zhiyi could not have read Candra.

DGA said:
How so?

Malcolm wrote:
Candra lived in the 9th century.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, February 10th, 2018 at 12:00 AM
Title: Re: Authority. A Reflection.
Content:
Simon E. said:
If you want to practice Vajrayana you have to have a teacher. Who may or may not be a monk. She might be a married woman with children.

Malcolm wrote:
She might be a women married to another women.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, February 9th, 2018 at 11:48 PM
Title: Re: Authority. A Reflection.
Content:
SunWuKong said:
Following a guru is important in some traditions but not all. I'd never give up being responsible for my own choices, anyway. I consider it to be a cop-out.

Malcolm wrote:
That is not what following a guru is about. All Buddhist tradition emphasize the crucial importance of a teacher.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, February 9th, 2018 at 11:19 AM
Title: Re: Goodbye
Content:
MiphamFan said:
Excerpt from a peterson speech:
And the other thing that's so interesting is that lobsters knew all this stuff. They cleaned their rooms 20 million years ago.

Malcolm wrote:
Obviously, someone needs to do a cutup of Peterson's speeches ala Gyson and Burroughs. This shit is great.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 9th, 2018 at 11:09 AM

Title: Re: Goodbye

Content:

“Malcolm” said:

All Buddhist discipline takes these ten natural principles based on our body, voice, and mind as the foundation for all vows, and so on. When we add bodhicitta on top of this, we arrive at the Mahāyāna path. This is why all Mahāyāna practice, including Dzogchen, takes the motivation to attain buddhahood for all sentient beings as the basis for the path.

Nonharming -- bodhicitta -- insight. These three are the essence of Mahāyāna ethics.

Wayfarer said:

I couldn't possibly disagree with any of that, as I think it's perfectly true. But in respect of Nāgārjuna's teaching of śūnyatā - if this says that nothing is real, or nothing truly exists, does this also apply to the elements of the Buddhist path, as outlined here? Or would that be a misunderstanding?

Malcolm wrote:

As Haribhadra pointed out, the path, from beginning to end, is an illusion, like anything else produced from conditions, such as mirages, optical illusions, and so on. The appearances that we see have no essence when they appear, and if they are sought out, they are only found with respect to how solid our own clinging to our own sense of self is. In other words, the more real we imagine our personal self to be, the more real we imagine phenomena to be. And when we have understood that our personal self really is just a designation upon shifting conditions, which are composed of still more shifting conditions, we simultaneously can understand that about all other appearances, and sever our clinging. In the meantime, we observe conventions and do not assume these illusory conditions don't have rules and apparent consequences. But it isn't fixed or real in any meaningful, ontological, way.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 9th, 2018 at 11:00 AM

Title: Re: Are Pure Land and Nichiren Buddhisms Compatible With Each Other?

Content:

rory said:

I think we're casting back our ideas of the predominance of Amida's pure land onto the past. As before Honen: monks practiced to get to a variety of Pure Land and yes that was a real ongoing practice and Nichiren has the Pure Land of Tranquil Light. According to single practice Pure Land schools such as Jodo Shu and Jodo Shinshu there is only one important pure land (they wouldn't deny the existence of others) Kannon sama has her own Pure Land of Mt. Potalaka, and that's totally fine too!

gassho
Rory

Admin_PC said:

Yah, but 浄土宗 Pure Land school, 浄土教 Pure Land teachings - always referred explicitly to teachings centered around Sukhavati.
Saying otherwise is historical revisionism.

Malcolm wrote:

Tibetan Buddhism has an extremely strong pure land component-- but it is not obvious because it is just part of the architecture of all Tibetan schools; especially Nyingma. In the Nyingma school, Amitabha is regarded as being the dharmakāya; Avalokiteśvara is the sambhogakāya; and Guru Padmasambhava is the nirmanakāya. They all have their own buddhafiels; but Amitabha's is indivisible from Akaniṣṭha Ghanavyuha. Avalokiteśvara's is Mt. Potala in S. India. Guru Padmasambhava's buddhafiels is on the continent of cannibals, the southwest continent of Camara (likely Madagascar).

By invoking any one of these aspects of the three kāyas, one invokes all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 9th, 2018 at 10:53 AM

Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.

Content:

Queequeg said:

Here is the way Ekayana is understood in East Asian Lotus Traditions - namely Tiantai, Tendai, Nichiren.

There is one vehicle - the Buddhayana. In response to the needs of the various beings, the Buddha, employing upaya, teaches the Sravakayana, Pratyekabuddhayana, and Bodhisattvayana. The Sravakayana is characterized by the teaching of the Four Noble Truths, Eightfold Path, etc. what we usually associate with Hinayana. The Pratyekabuddhayana is characterized by wisdom of pratityasamutpada, particularly through the teaching of the 12 linked chain of causation. The Bodhisattvayana is characterized by the teaching on the Six Paramita and the gradual path of 3 eons. None of these is a real path; all three of these are upaya. They, in themselves, do not lead to annuttarasamyaksambodhi. Only the Buddhayana leads to annuttarasamyaksambodhi. These three vehicles lead along the path, but only incompletely. And actually, the Buddhayana encompasses these teachings, without any caveat, but these teachings do not encompass the Buddhayana. Neither do these teachings necessarily encompass each other. For instance, in some interpretations of the Bodhisattvayana, Sravaka, Pratyekabuddha, and Icchantika are precluded from ever attaining Buddhahood. Hence, that form of the Bodhisattvayana is called a Separate or Distinct teaching. All paths eventually lead to the pure Buddhayana, meaning, at some point, beings are told that the path they tread is upaya and that what they have always already been treading was the Buddhayana. That the three are provisional, and only the Buddhayana is real. This is the teaching called the Lotus. It is taught from time time, but not all the time.

In the third chapter of the Lotus Sutra, the Buddha tells the famous parable of the burning house. In short, a father finds his children obliviously playing in a burning house. He tries to get them out by pointing out the danger, but they don't listen. He contrives to tell them that there are goat, deer and ox carts outside, and if they would only come outside he would give each their own cart. The children come running out, but there are no carts. The father is happy because his children are safe, but now the children are demanding the carts. The father is then so happy he gives all the children great ox carts far beyond anything they expected and they ride off into the sunset.

The three carts that are promised are the sravakayana, pratyekabuddhayana, and bodhisattvayana. They don't actually exist. But, if people undertake these paths, they will be delivered from the burning house. Once they're out, the Buddha gives them the Buddhayana which is far beyond what they could have hoped for.

“O Śāriputra! You should know that the buddhas, with the power of skillful means, teach the single buddha vehicle, dividing and teaching it as three.”

Several other parables convey similar messages - for instance the parable of the phantom city.

The real controversy is about whether the Bodhisattvayana and the Buddhayana are actually the same. Both are referred to as Mahayana. However, in what is called the Honmon, or original gate teachings, meaning the second half of the Lotus Sutra, there comes a point when the assembly of bodhisattvas that includes Maitreya, Manjusri, Avalokitesvara, etc. etc., Bodhisattvas that are on the path of the six paramita, are stumped by a myriad of bodhisattvas who erupt out of the ground and which the Buddha identifies as his disciples since his enlightenment. Maitreya and the assembly cannot understand this, describing it like a young man introducing an old man as his son. This indicates that the bodhisattva who are the foremost in the assembly actually are limited. These bodhisattvas until that point still believe that Shakyamuni first attained enlightenment in Gaya.

This is where the bodhisattvayana is demonstrated to be an incomplete path - even Maitreya who is supposed to be the next Buddha doesn't realize that the path he treads is so limited.

In the next Chapter, the Buddha explains his life span which is understood to be eternal, and that all beings, are on this Buddhayana whether they realize it or not, all destined for Buddhahood. The Bodhisattvas don't even know the full scope of this path, let alone sravaka or pratyekabuddha.

I am sure there will be disagreement and critique, moaning about "This is not how the Indians understand it!"

All well and good. There really is nothing to argue about. This is it. This is fact. This is what Ekayana and the Three Vehicles means in East Asian Lotus discourse. Whatever you think about it is opinion.

Malcolm wrote:

This statement below is indefensible.

Queequeg said:

There is one vehicle - the Buddhayana. In response to the needs of the various beings, the Buddha, employing upaya, teaches the Sravakayana, Pratyekabuddhayana, and Bodhisattvayana. The Sravakayana is characterized by the teaching of the Four Noble Truths, Eightfold Path, etc. what we usually associate with Hinayana. The Pratyekabuddhayana is characterized by wisdom of pratityasamutpada, particularly through the teaching of the 12 linked chain of causation. The Bodhisattvayana is characterized by the teaching on the Six Paramita and the gradual path of 3 eons. None of these is a real path; all three of these are upaya. They, in themselves, do not lead to annuttarasamyaksambodhi.

Malcolm wrote:

And this can only be a rhetorical device at best

Queequeg said:

This is where the bodhisattvayana is demonstrated to be an incomplete path - even Maitreya who is supposed to be the next Buddha doesn't realize that the path he treads is so limited.

Malcolm wrote:

Maitreya, like Śākyamuni, is presently a nirmankāya, who will succeed Śākyamuni as the fifth in line of the 1002 buddhas of this fortunate eon. It is impossible for Maitreya to possess the ignorance you attribute to him. If Maitreya, a nirmankāya, possesses such ignorance, so does Śākyamuni, a nirmankāya. So that part of your narrative, friend is inconsistent. And save me the sermon about "The Buddha for this time and place." A nirmanakāya is a nirmanakāya is a nirmanakāya — they are either omniscient about the three times and everything in it, or they are not. Also, one can easily discover that Mañjuśrī attained full buddhahood countless eons ago, so claiming that he or any other bodhisattva belonging to the eight close sons, or even of the tenth bhumi were under the impression that Śākyamuni Buddha first attained buddhahood at Bodhgaya is totally ridiculous. It just means you ignore everything every other Mahāyāna sūtra has to say.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 9th, 2018 at 10:37 AM

Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.

Content:

Queequeg said:

These bodhisattvas until that point still believe that Shakyamuni first attained enlightenment in Gaya.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they don't. Whatever gives you this idea?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 9th, 2018 at 10:29 AM

Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.

Content:

DGA said:

I don't see much daylight between the position you are describing, Malcolm, and the Tientai position.

Coëmgenu said:

The position is almost completely the same. I need to assemble some quotes but I see them as identical.

DGA said:

An amusing image emerges:

Young Zhiyi reads Chandrakirti (in Kumarajiva's translation). He notices the passage Malcolm has referred to, including the reference to the Lotus Sutra.

Reflecting on this passage, he reflects on the significance of the Lotus Sutra (in Kumarajiva's translation) with regard to the various vehicles.

It's not difficult to envision this as the kernel for Zhiyi's thinking on ekayana, the five periods, the supremacy of the Lotus Sutra, and so on.

This is just speculation on my part. Some scholar with a serious interest in this topic could excavate it, though.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed. However Zhiyi could not have read Candra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 9th, 2018 at 6:03 AM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

marting said:

Yes, yes. The nastiness of the outcome is well understood and being evaluated by the U.S. side. Really beside the point. If the U.S. is forced to defend itself from NK, it will. End of story.

Malcolm wrote:
Wag the dog...

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, February 9th, 2018 at 6:02 AM
Title: Re: Authority. A Reflection.
Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

How do you propose one emotional being help other emotional being Buddhists who, for instance, reject rebirth, don't take refuge in the Three Jewels, say suffering is just a bad attitude, etc.? I'm glad to see any connection to the Dharma, but the Eight Freedoms and Ten Endowments don't come by every lifetime. The question from what I can see comes down to where do we place authority rather than only what makes us emotionally comfortable.

marting said:

Very good questions. I don't think we can help anyone accept the Dharma. This can only come from their own volition, tempered of course with the karmic propensity to do so.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, a point I have made many times, with surprising pushback from some.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, February 9th, 2018 at 6:02 AM
Title: Re: Authority. A Reflection.
Content:

Ricky said:

The only authority should be what's written in the texts. Gurus are difficult to trust these days with all the chaos and scandals going on.

Malcolm wrote:
Which texts?

Ricky said:
Pali canon and mahayana sutras.

Malcolm wrote:
What about tantras?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 9th, 2018 at 5:25 AM

Title: Re: Authority. A Reflection.

Content:

Ricky said:

The only authority should be what's written in the texts. Gurus are difficult to trust these days with all the chaos and scandals going on.

Malcolm wrote:

Which texts?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 9th, 2018 at 4:59 AM

Title: Re: Authority. A Reflection.

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

Yes, but in a space where Buddhists specifically come together to discuss the Dharma, it's a little different don't you think? I wouldn't be a Buddhist today without many fine individuals helping and answering questions along the way.

Malcolm wrote:

We all really have a hard time even agreeing on what Buddhadharma is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 9th, 2018 at 4:30 AM

Title: Re: Seeing Things As They Are

Content:

Way-Fun said:

In the context of that post, "things as they are" indicates things the clear seeing...

Malcolm wrote:

Now you are qualifying your initial statement.

Way-Fun said:

It wanted to be qualified.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it needed to be qualified.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 9th, 2018 at 4:13 AM

Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?

Content:

Minobu said:

The piece shows when a government and it's people follow false teachings the people and the land suffers.

Malcolm wrote:

Which false teaching would that be?

Coëmgenu said:

Art of the Deal.

Malcolm wrote:

good one.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 9th, 2018 at 3:48 AM

Title: Re: Authority. A Reflection.

Content:

Jeff H said:

But how is a statement like "everything is just based on our own damn opinion" reconciled with the indispensable need for a qualified teacher -- which, I think, is the topic of this thread.

Malcolm wrote:

Whether someone is qualified or not is based on our opinion. We can seek others opinions, but in the end, whether we accept their opinion or not is based completely on our own point of view, our own opinions. We can rely on credentials, certificates, and titles, but in the end, whether we think they are of value is just our own concept. We do our best.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 9th, 2018 at 3:31 AM

Title: Re: Seeing Things As They Are

Content:

seeker242 said:

If one sees things as they are, then how can one even have delusions to begin with? As the very definition of "seeing things as they are" means "non-delusional"?

Simon E. said:

This.

Absolutely. Things 'as they are' are free from delusions. We impose the delusions and then do not see things as they are. 'Things' are not delusional. We are.

Way-Fun said:

In the context of that post, "things as they are" indicates things the clear seeing...

Malcolm wrote:

Now you are qualifying your initial statement.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 9th, 2018 at 3:29 AM

Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?

Content:

Minobu said:

The piece shows when a government and it's people follow false teachings the people and the land suffers.

Malcolm wrote:

Which false teaching would that be?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 9th, 2018 at 3:21 AM

Title: Re: Pure vision, what's up with?

Content:

Kim said:

Sure. I guess this interpretation by Kunzang Dechen Lingpa (who I assume you referred to) is rather unique, since tertonship usually refers to someone who has been original disciple of GR.

Malcolm wrote:

KDL was such a person as well.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 9th, 2018 at 1:19 AM

Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?

Content:

Minobu said:

the piece holds up to today in your very country.

Malcolm wrote:

How is it relevant to the US?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 11:47 PM

Title: Re: Goodbye

Content:

weitsicht said:

I still somehow hope that there at least in spacetime is the last eternal value left.

Malcolm wrote:

The problem is that conditioned entities are in spacetime. If spacetime were unconditioned, it could not contain conditioned entities because any relationship between a conditioned entity and an unconditioned entity is impossible.

With respect to Buddhist values -- they are based on "natural" law, i.e. that the ten nonvirtues contribute in general to overall misery and the ten virtues contribute to overall happiness. All Buddhist discipline takes these ten natural principles based on our body, voice, and mind as the foundation for all vows, and so on. When we add bodhicitta on top of this, we arrive at the Mahāyāna path. This is why all Mahāyāna practice, including Dzogchen, takes the motivation to attain buddhahood for all sentient beings as the basis for the path.

Nonharming -- bodhicitta -- insight. These three are the essence of Mahāyāna ethics.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 11:20 PM

Title: Re: Pure vision, what's up with?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

My late teacher, an important tertön, said if you want to be a tertön, the only real requirement is faith in Guru Rinpoche. If you supplicate him strongly enough with genuine compassion for sentient beings, then you might be able to reveal terma.

Kim said:

How does this fit with the traditional view of who can be tertöns (GR's direct disciples)?

Malcolm wrote:

All termas are revealed through GP's blessings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 11:43 AM

Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.

Content:

Queequeg said:

None of these is a real path; all three of these are upaya. They, in themselves, do not lead to annuttarasamyaksambodhi.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a questionable assertion. While it may accurately represent what the schools you mention maintain, it is not an easily defensible assertion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 11:35 AM

Title: Re: Seventeen Tantras Volume 1 & 2

Content:

Fa Dao said:

And all 17 will be translated by you?

Malcolm wrote:

That's my plan.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 11:29 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

the white elephant (not ox)

Coëmgenu said:

Is this from the Nepalese LS?

Malcolm wrote:

no its my error, based on a hasty misreading of a secondary source in Tibetan.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 6:47 AM

Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?

Content:

Minobu said:

i still am hoping for malcolm's sake thats all bullshit and he can give us a definitive source to the fact Pabongka was using upaya in his criticizes , which also are claimed by the other side of the sectarian war.

Malcolm wrote:

I was reporting the views of others, for the third time.

Minobu said:

well i think thats unfair to do that in this sectarian war you back...just saying..

Malcolm wrote:

You can think whatever you like, friend. I am not in your brain pulling the strings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 6:26 AM

Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.

Content:

DGA said:

Mahayana (which is the same as Ekayana)

Coëmgenu said:

And therein lies the controverted point: is the Mahāyāna the ekayāna?

When I read the LS, I see three provisional paths outlined and one definitive path.

The three provisional paths being pratyayasambodhiyāna, śrāvakayāna, & bodhisattvayāna. I see one definitive path: buddhayāna, the ekayāna, found in all three.

Is bodhisattvayāna provisional, I suppose, is the question at hand?

DGA said:

Yes, I understand the Mahayana to be the ekayana. In the last analysis, the two terms are fungible into each other.

I don't think that the ekayana is found in all three provisional paths so much as all three provisional paths are means to the end of leading beings to Mahayana and hence Buddhahood. Maybe that is a distinction without a difference.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, if you follow Candra's logic, the one path is based on the fact that everyone realizes the dharmadhātu.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 5:00 AM

Title: Re: Seventeen Tantras Volume 1 & 2

Content:

Sennin said:

I have read that the rigpa rang shar has eighty-six chapters; and is first in the list of tantras listed in the dra tal gyur.

So I'm assuming this is one of the most exhaustive given the length of the text?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it is the longest of all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 4:51 AM

Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You love flinging the critique that has zero calories since you never back your shit up. But you should take that to the other thread, since you are the expert.

Queequeg said:

LOL. Zero calories? Pot, meet kettle.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, tastes great, less filling. From my point of view, the Kamakura period was a period of intense sectarian conflict in Japanese Buddhism, perhaps a reflection of social conditions, but sectarian nevertheless.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 4:40 AM

Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

The LS, like the Buddha, teaches a one vehicle path. Not two. Not three. Not four.

Malcolm wrote:

This is highly debatable, which is why there is debate about it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 4:38 AM

Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?

Content:

Queequeg said:

The lens of sectarianism is problematic when projected onto what was going on during the Kamakura period.

Malcolm wrote:

First of all, you have no idea how much Buddhist history I have studied, including Japanese Buddhist history.

Second of all, sectarianism is sectarianism. It is not problematical at all to observe it in Kamakura Buddhism. Dogen was also sectarian, pretty firmly so. It's par for the course for people who are invested in their own ideology or someone else's to be sectarian.

So let's not be naive and pretend that sectarianism isn't rife in Buddhism, everywhere.

Queequeg said:

You'll have to pardon me. Your obtuse exchanges on Ekayana understood in East Asia going on in other sub-forums at present, a pretty important topic in Japanese Buddhism, give me reason to suspect your studies are limited.

Malcolm wrote:

You can think whatever you like. It has nothing to with reality.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 4:35 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

But look at the placement of the macron in ekayanamagga.

Malcolm wrote:

Meaning son, the meaning.

Coëmgenu said:

The location of the placement of the macron is rather important. It determines the semantic value of the compound, or the meaning. For instance: ekayana with a macron on the second a is "one vehicle". Ekayana with the macron on the first a is not.

Malcolm wrote:

Somehow my reply did not take. It is more likely that the long vowel sandhi (eka ayana) was shifted when this term was translated from Prakrit to Sanskrit, i.e. Pali ekāyana -->Sanskrit ekayāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 4:10 AM

Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?

Content:

Minobu said:

i still am hoping for malcolm's sake thats all bullshit and he can give us a definitive source to the fact Pabongka was using upaya in his criticizes , which also are claimed by the other side of the sectarian war.

Malcolm wrote:

I was reporting the views of others, for the third time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 4:04 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

One note of pedantry here: ekayāna is a Sinicism. It doesn't appear in Pāli.

Chinese translators read ekāyana in Sanskrit texts & mistranslated it as ekayāna (—乘).

Malcolm wrote:

Ahem:

Concentration means keeping the mind firmly centered in a single object — the direct path (ekayana-magga) — not letting it tip, lean, or waver under the influence of its preoccupations, whether good or bad, past or future; keeping the mind honest and upright.

<https://www.accesstoinight.org/lib/thai/lee/strength.html>

Ekayano ayam bhikkhave maggo = "This is the only way, O bhikkhus." Why did the Blessed One teach this Discourse? Because of the ability of the people of the Kurus to take in deep doctrine.

<https://www.accesstoinight.org/lib/authors/soma/wayof.html>

Etc.

Coëmgenu said:

But look at the placement of the macron in ekayanamagga.

Malcolm wrote:

Meaning son, the meaning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 4:03 AM

Title: Re: Vasectomy

Content:

Pema Rigdzin said:

sbyor lam is consort practice? I'm only nearing 42, so don't think I'm too old for much, but I'm afraid my wife would not be qualified for it, so not in the plans. Would the procedure affect practices like tummo, done as secondary practices for a Dzogchen practitioner?

Malcolm wrote:

Not at all.

Pema Rigdzin said:

Cool, thanks for the input! As an aside, what's the reasoning for such a young age cut-off for consort practice?

Malcolm wrote:

After 26, your nadis start degenerating, 220 a week or so.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 4:02 AM

Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?

Content:

Minobu said:

when malcolm refers to Nichiren's writing as bile and talks of the rishuonkukoron ...he should discuss the writing and not just call it bile...

Malcolm wrote:

I did not refer to the writing as bile, I said he, Nichiren, expressed bile towards Honen in his writing. Get it straight, cowboy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 3:58 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I should add, that in Pali scriptures, ekayāna refers to the direct path.

Coëmgenu said:

One note of pedantry here: ekayāna is a Sinicism. It doesn't appear in Pāli.

Chinese translators read ekāyana in Sanskrit texts & mistranslated it as ekayāna (一乘).

Malcolm wrote:

Ahem:

Concentration means keeping the mind firmly centered in a single object — the direct path (ekayana-magga) — not letting it tip, lean, or waver under the influence of its preoccupations, whether good or bad, past or future; keeping the mind honest and upright.

<https://www.accesstoinight.org/lib/thai/lee/strength.html>

Ekayano ayam bhikkhave maggo = "This is the only way, O bhikkhus." Why did the Blessed One teach this Discourse? Because of the ability of the people of the Kurus to take in deep doctrine.

<https://www.accesstoinight.org/lib/authors/soma/wayof.html>

Etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 3:19 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That is a novel interpretation.

Coëmgenu said:

It just seems like Tiāntāi afaik. If it is horribly misinformed, I am similarly congruently misinformed, and me and Queequeg do not PM in order to synchronize our misconceptions. The only thing I might disagree with is "inconceivable to anyone within the three vehicles".

marting said:

Are there four or three yanas in the LS?

Malcolm wrote:

That seems to depend on whether you are Indian or Chinese.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 3:16 AM

Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.

Content:

jake said:

Is your understanding of Ekayana that the other two vehicles lead to the Mahayana and then Anuttarasamyaksambodhi? Or that all three vehicles lead, eventually, to Anuttarasamyaksambodhi? Sorry if this is 'off topic' in the thread, recognizing of course the broad scope of this thread.

DGA said:

Mahayana (which is the same as Ekayana)

Coëmgenu said:

And therein lies the controverted point: is the Mahāyāna the ekayāna?

When I read the LS, I see three provisional paths outlined and one definitive path.

The three provisional paths being pratyayasambodhiyāna, śrāvakayāna, & bodhisattvayāna. I see one definitive path: buddhayāna, the ekayāna, found in all three.

Is bodhisattvayāna provisional, I suppose, is the question at hand?

Malcolm wrote:

This is not how it is understood by Candrakīrti. Candra, the preeminent representative of Nāgārjuna's school in India, understands Mahāyāna = Ekayāna.

Maitreyanath understands the Ekayāna idea to require interpretation, thus, not definitive.

There is no fourth yāna. Even Vajrayāna is just part of Mahāyāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 3:11 AM

Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?

Content:

Minobu said:

i was unaware of his sectarianism...i read his liberation in the palm of your hand ..and well i never was clued into the gelugpa nygma wars you discuss.

Anyway back to source the question;

No, that people use upaya as a means to justify his remarks.

you said

it's the first i heard and wonder if this is actual or just something "You Feel"

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I have heard Gelugpas explain away his remarks as being related only to the fact that many Gelugpas in eastern Tibet were all becoming interested in Dzogchen, and he did not like that. He also did not like the so called Rime movement. He regarded it as a threat the Gelug intellectual hegemony in Tibet.

Minobu said:

I asked you twice now a third.

Where do you get where you claim pabongka was using upaya as the reason for the criticisms .

i asked for source for i fear some would think you just shot that fake news out to bolster your stance in the discussion with "Q".

Malcolm wrote:

I am not required to report to you where and when I have had this or that conversation with Gelug apologists for Pabhongkha. It is sufficient that I have had them and now report them to you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 3:09 AM

Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?

Content:

Queequeg said:

The lens of sectarianism is problematic when projected onto what was going on during the Kamakura period.

Malcolm wrote:

First of all, you have no idea how much Buddhist history I have studied, including Japanese Buddhist history.

Second of all, sectarianism is sectarianism. It is not problematical at all to observe it in Kamakura Buddhism. Dogen was also sectarian, pretty firmly so. It's par for the course for people who are invested in their own ideology or someone else's to be sectarian.

So let's not be naive and pretend that sectarianism isn't rife in Buddhism, everywhere.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 2:17 AM

Title: Re: Pure vision, what's up with?

Content:

climb-up said:

I wonder if anyone can tell me a little about Pure Vision transmissions (if I even have the terminology correct) and how they are received and verified.

I'm not so much interested in how one lama might verify another lama's pure vision (unless that is part of the process), because I know that these can be controversial and there can be disagreements, but about a lama or practitioner receives and verifies these.

Is it common for lamas to receive pure visions as part of their three year retreat, or through their practice in general?

Are these visions sought, or do they just arise?

How are they differentiated from a very strong imaginary experience?

(Just to be clear, ...I have received no pure visions and am not trying to verify any, just very interested in this process).

florin said:

You need to be a reencarnation of someone who has had the very rare privilege of having been personally chosen by Padmasambhava to receive the transmissions of said treasures.

These are some of his disciples. When the time comes for these treasures to be revealed the disciple should enter a period of retreat where he meets Padmasambhava himself in a vision or a dream and where past memories of empowerments and details about the terma to be revealed are awakened.

I guess the way this happens is not set in stone but this is how, more or less, Ratna Lingpa explains it.

climb-up said:

This is to be a tertön right?

Or is it the same to receive a pure vision?

Malcolm wrote:

My late teacher, an important tertön, said if you want to be a tertön, the only real requirement is faith in Guru Rinpoche. If you supplicate him strongly enough with genuine compassion for sentient beings, then you might be able to reveal terma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: Pure vision, what's up with?

Content:

Thomas Amundsen said:

Pure visions may be a little less "regulated" than termas. But my understanding of termas is that there are some checks and balances in the tradition, it's not completely wild and hairy. For one, I believe a tertön must be a reincarnation of one of Padmasambhava's 25 disciples. Secondly, there are six (up to nine?) terma lineages that must be intact for a terma to be considered valid. One of those is a prophecy lineage. The tertön should have already been prophesied by Guru Rinpoche that they would reveal this teaching at a particular time and place. Some of these prophecies really are quite detailed.

Malcolm wrote:
Most of these rules are later elaborations.

Thomas Amundsen said:
Ah, that makes sense. Later like 14th century, or much more recent?

Malcolm wrote:
It is cumulative, each generation added more rules.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, February 8th, 2018 at 1:11 AM
Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?
Content:

Queequeg said:
I just want to make clear, he had no sectarian perspective when he was making his criticisms because he had no sect.

Malcolm wrote:
Oh, come on. Of course he had a sectarian perspective, he was raised and educated in the Tendai tradition. It is pretty hard to read Risshōankokuron and not be surprised by the bile Nichiren expresses towards Honen's Jodo Shu.

He would have been appalled at Tibetan Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 11:15 PM
Title: Re: Pure vision, what's up with?
Content:

Thomas Amundsen said:
Pure visions may be a little less "regulated" than termas. But my understanding of termas is that there are some checks and balances in the tradition, it's not completely wild and hairy. For one, I believe a tertön must be a reincarnation of one of Padmasambhava's 25 disciples. Secondly, there are six (up to nine?) terma lineages that must be intact for a terma to be considered valid. One of those is a prophesy lineage. The tertön should have already been prophesied by Guru Rinpoche that they would reveal this teaching at a particular time and place. Some of these prophesies really are quite detailed.

Malcolm wrote:
Most of these rules are later elaborations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 10:13 PM

Title: Re: Seeing Things As They Are

Content:

Way-Fun said:

When reality is as it already is, you are already free, as you are.

Malcolm wrote:

When is reality not as it is? Thus, your own statement is self-contradictory since despite the fact that reality is already as it is, sentient beings still suffer from afflictions and karma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 10:07 PM

Title: Re: Is Zen Buddhism the "Successor" of Classic Taoism?

Content:

Astus said:

Please look at Chengguan's words:

豈言象之能至。故云迴出。又借斯亡絕以遣言思。(T36n1736_p0002b19)

Words may resemble very much. But the cause (behind it) is very different. We borrow the words but not accept their meaning.

言有濫同釋教者。皆是佛法之餘。(T35n1735_p0521 b15-16)

Those who go too far and equate [false teachings] with Buddhism are all outside of the Buddhadharma.

無得求一時之小名。渾三教之一致。習邪見之毒種。為地獄之深因。開無明之源流。遏種智之玄路。誠之誠之。(T36n1736_p0107 a11-13)

Do not seek after the trivial reputation of a single age and confuse the three teachings as one. Studying the poisonous seeds of false views is a deep cause for being born in hell, opens up the wellspring of ignorance, and blocks of the road to omniscience. Take heed! Take heed!

Guifeng Zongmi on Confucianism and Daoism:

"The main thrust of the non-Buddhist teachings, however, is to establish the conduct for humanity, not to inquire into its ultimate origin. The myriad things discussed in the two teachings are limited to the phenomenal world. Although they point to the great Dao as the root, they do not completely explain agreeability and adversity, arising and ceasing, purity and defilement, or causes and conditions. Consequently, those who practice these teachings are not aware that the doctrines are provisional and cling to them as perfect teachings."

(Treatise on the Origin of Humanity, in Three Short Treatises, BDK ed, p 149)

Dogen wrote:

"no student of Kongzi and Laozi has ever fathomed the Buddha-Dharma. People today of the great kingdom of Song mostly uphold the principle of agreement between Kongzi and Laozi and the Buddha's truth. It is the gravest of wrong views"

"Kongzi, Laozi, Zhuangzi, Huizi, and suchlike are just common people. They could not reach the level of even a srotāpanna of the Small Vehicle; how much less could they reach the level of the second [effect] or the third [effect] or an arhat of the fourth [effect]? That students, however, out of ignorance, put them on a par with the buddhas, is "in the midst of delusion, deepening delusion." Kongzi and Laozi are not only ignorant of the three times and ignorant of the many kalpas; they are not able to know one instant of mindfulness and not able to know one moment of the mind. They do not bear comparison even with the gods of the sun and the moon and they cannot equal the four great kings and the hosts of gods. Whether in the secular sphere or beyond the secular sphere, [seen] in comparison with the World-honored One, they are straying in delusion."

(Shizen-biku, in SBGZ, BDK ed, vol 4, p 268, 275-276)

Malcolm wrote:

Yup.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 10:03 PM

Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?

Content:

Minobu said:

i was unaware of his sectarianism...i read his liberation in the palm of your hand ..and well i never was clued into the gelugpa nygma wars you discuss.

Anyway back to source the question;

No, that people use upaya as a means to justify his remarks.

you said

it's the first i heard and wonder if this is actual or just something "You Feel"

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I have heard Gelugpas explain away his remarks as being related only to the fact that many Gelugpas in eastern Tibet were all becoming interested in Dzogchen, and he did not like that. He also did not like the so called Rime movement. He regarded it as a threat the Gelug intellectual hegemony in Tibet.

ItsRaining said:

Just wondering, what is it like now? Is Gelug still the predominant philosophical view in Tibet?

Malcolm wrote:

For a long while, study of the Gelug school was predominant in academia. This is not the case anymore. Also, since the Ganden Phodrang was toppled, you could not say that in Tibet Gelug is the dominant school now.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 10:00 PM

Title: Re: Vasectomy

Content:

Pema Rigdzin said:

It would have no unavoidable, permanent detrimental effect on my practice?

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. You are too old for sbyor lam anyway, right?

Pema Rigdzin said:

sbyor lam is consort practice? I'm only nearing 42, so don't think I'm too old for much, but I'm afraid my wife would not be qualified for it, so not in the plans. Would the procedure affect practices like tummo, done as secondary practices for a Dzogchen practitioner?

Malcolm wrote:

Not at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 9:59 PM

Title: Re: Vasectomy

Content:

Pema Rigdzin said:

It would have no unavoidable, permanent detrimental effect on my practice?

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. You are too old for sbyor lam anyway, right?

Pema Rigdzin said:

sbyor lam is consort practice? I'm only nearing 42, so don't think I'm too old for much, but I'm afraid my wife would not be qualified for it, so not in the plans. Would the procedure affect practices like tummo, done as secondary practices for a Dzogchen practitioner?

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, you are too old. 26 is the cutoff point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 12:03 PM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

marting said:

Blame Kim.

Malcolm wrote:

That's naive.

marting said:

Thanks for catching that. Forgot to add, "...and blame China." I'll leave it up to you to decide which is the worst offender of the two.

Malcolm wrote:

Have you ever actually been there? China, I mean.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 11:11 AM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

marting said:

Sometimes you have to stand up to the bully, and

<https://www.politico.com/magazine/story/2017/09/14/north-korea-1976-axe-murder-incident-215605>

Malcolm wrote:

I am sorry, but I think you have zero understanding of the real situation with respect to NK. You do understand we are mobilizing for a war there? In the very possible eventuality that hostilities do breakout we'll be screwed, all of us.

marting said:

Blame Kim.

Malcolm wrote:

That's naive.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 10:15 AM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

marting said:

You can try, but hard to justify the actions of bullies.

Malcolm wrote:

Trump isn't a bully? After all, his button is bigger than Kim's.

marting said:

Sometimes you have to stand up to the bully, and

<https://www.politico.com/magazine/story/2017/09/14/north-korea-1976-axe-murder-incident-215605>

Malcolm wrote:

I am sorry, but I think you have zero understanding of the real situation with respect to NK. You do understand we are mobilizing for a war there? In the very possible eventuality that hostilities do breakout we'll be screwed, all of us.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 8:33 AM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

marting said:

You can try, but hard to justify the actions of bullies.

Malcolm wrote:

Trump isn't a bully? After all, his button is bigger than Kim's.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 8:31 AM

Title: Re: Vasectomy

Content:

Pema Rigdzin said:

It would have no unavoidable, permanent detrimental effect on my practice?

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. You are too old for sbyor lam anyway, right?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 6:28 AM

Title: Re: Largest one day drop in U.S. stock market - in history

Content:

DGA said:

Trump just passed an insane tax cut bill. He's throwing money at the already rich. That's why he's tolerated. Mitt Romney couldn't do it, but Trump could squeak into office and get this done for reasons we don't need to get into but have everything to do with idiot baby boomers.

Handing already rich people a big ol' wad of capital, among other things, spurs inflation. Fears of inflation open onto bearish markets. And here we are.

Mantrik said:

But I thought it was all spin. The tax cut was less than Obama's according to UK media, just another way for Trump to lie to his dimwitted supporters.

Queequeg said:

Its a strange tax cut. For people at the bottom and the top it will make a difference. For most in the middle, its pretty much a wash. Small business owners will like this, unless they're accountants and lawyers. It also changes tax incentives. I understand, have not confirmed, it is favorable toward real estate investments at the expense of other types of investments... Gee, I wonder who put those provisions in there?

Malcolm wrote:

And gold courses, don't forget the oppressed golf course owners who are finally going to get those much needed deductions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 6:27 AM

Title: Re: Vasectomy

Content:

Pema Rigdzin said:

Recently my wife floated the idea of me getting a vasectomy once we've either had our second and last child, or once we've decided we're gonna be one and done. She wasn't insistent, so that's not an issue, and I can't help but sympathize with her position of all other methods of birth control being basically all on her. But my concern is whether a surgery like this would be damaging to practice of Secret Mantra in general, and Dzogchen in particular. What say you, Malcolm, and others? Anyone spoke to their lama about this? I know my wife would take yet another one for the team if I told her it would be harmful to my practice. But would it?

Malcolm wrote:

Go for it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 6:25 AM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

marting said:

United States has done nothing to North Korea for decades. The image that they want nuclear weapons because they feel threatened from the United States is a pretense. Stop buying it.

Malcolm wrote:

The United States has put the screws on NK so tightly the people are starving because in Kim's paranoia, he'd rather buy weapons than food. Developing nukes is also part of the their constitution, BTW.

marting said:

Worth mentioning also that you're oblivious to Russia and China's tireless moves to check mate the U.S. off the world stage, economically, militarily, and politically, and the role a nuclear NK will play in that.

Malcolm wrote:

This is largely due to Trump's signaling that the US is withdrawing from its world leadership role with all this "America First" nonsense. And we know that Trump has a hardon for Putin. Trump buys into all this nationalist crap that Bannon was spinning. And all this "lets bring jobs back" is crap too. Who wants those jobs? No one. No one wants $9000 iphones either. There are no coal jobs that are going to be created. We are far from being "checkmated" by China and Russia on any score, in pure military terms. And our economy is still the largest in the world and will continue to be so. Our economy, as of 2017, is 24.32 percent of the world economy. Now, let that sink in because while we only have 324 million +- people, China's economy is only 14.84 percent of the world economy with 1.4 billion people. Russia's economy is the same size as Italy's. So please, dispense with the ridiculous exaggerations about how our economic, military, and political place in the world is so precarious. We, along with Western Europe are the wealthiest, most technically advanced countries in the world. But Trump has no understanding of this and is throwing it away based on trying to make white people in middle America happy with jobs they will never have again. He is selling them snake oil, and if you have a brain in your head, you know it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 5:40 AM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

...all he wants to do is dismantle everything the black guy did.

marting said:

Who, the guy that did nothing whatsoever about North Korea during his tenure?

Malcolm wrote:

North Korea is not a problem that will be solved by ramping up aggression. I am not sure you really understand what motivates them and why they hate the United States so much. Did you completely forget all principles of Dharma?

Hostilities aren't stilled through hostility,
regardless.
Hostilities are stilled through non-hostility:
this, an unending truth.

The people in this Administration are the most incompetent set of political appointees in
I cannot remember how long.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 5:31 AM

Title: Re: Largest one day drop in U.S. stock market - in history

Content:

DGA said:

Pence could go full Caligula, though, when it's his turn.

Malcolm wrote:

I see him more going the Torquemada route, myself. "Kill them all, God will know his own."

Queequeg said:

All with that plastic smile.

His holocaust remembrance tweet was a travesty.

What a creep.

Malcolm wrote:

This whole administration is a travesty.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 5:30 AM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

marting said:

More embarrassing is the inability to acknowledge corrosive ideologies advanced by capable, aggressive state actors.

Malcolm wrote:

The flawed ideology at work here is the ideology of a deeply incompetent administration that defunds the state dept and refuses to send qualified diplomats to S. Korea.

marting said:

No, no, you're missing the invisible gorill...who am I kidding, you're already in the advanced stages of anti-Trumpiritis. Carry on.

Malcolm wrote:

The man is a boob who does not understand anything at all about how foreign policy works, don't even get me started on what a fool he is about the EPA, and so on. He is such a racist asshole, all he wants to do is dismantle everything the black guy did.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 5:02 AM

Title: Re: Largest one day drop in U.S. stock market - in history

Content:

DGA said:

Pence could go full Caligula, though, when it's his turn.

Malcolm wrote:

I see him more going the Torquemada route, myself. "Kill them all, God will know his own."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 4:55 AM

Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?

Content:

Minobu said:

source please.

Malcolm wrote:

Source of what? Pabhongkha's sectarian remarks?

Minobu said:

i was unaware of his sectarianism...i read his liberation in the palm of your hand ..and well i never was clued into the gelugpa nygma wars you discuss.

Anyway back to source the question;

No, that people use upaya as a means to justify his remarks.

you said

Queequeg said:

Those critiques were upaya.

Malcolm wrote:

That's what people say about Pabhongkha's criticisms too;

M

Minobu said:

it's the first i heard and wonder if this is actual or just something "You Feel"

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I have heard Gelugpas explain away his remarks as being related only to the fact that many Gelugpas in eastern Tibet were all becoming interested in Dzogchen, and he did not like that. He also did not like the so called Rime movement. He regarded it as a threat the Gelug intellectual hegemony in Tibet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 4:48 AM

Title: Re: Largest one day drop in U.S. stock market - in history

Content:

Mantrik said:

When the US sneezes, we all catch a cold.

Global indexes also fell.

In the UK we have the same issue - interest rates are set to rise so investment in shares becomes less attractive.

This stuff doesn't astound me.

What astounds me is that our UK economy took a major hit when the BREXIT process commenced, quite rightly recognising an insane plunge into the abyss. Meanwhile, in the US, the markets seemed blind to the election of an insane sociopath just because he happened to lie about favouring big businesses and actually meant bribing anyone who would pay him off once he was ousted.

Queequeg said:

The Roman Empire endured under some truly pathetic leaders for a very long time...

Historians credit the system Augustus left in place. Despite the lunatic in the White House, the rest of the government grinds along.

On that theme... I wonder if there is an argument to be made that Mueller/FBI/Justice Department is to Trump as Praetorian Guard is to Caligula...

Malcolm wrote:
More like Nero, I'd say...

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 3:56 AM
Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?
Content:
Queequeg said:
Those critiques were upaya.

Malcolm wrote:
That's what people say about Pabhongkha's criticisms too;
M

Minobu said:
source please.

Malcolm wrote:
Source of what? Pabhongkha's sectarian remarks?

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 3:27 AM
Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.
Content:

DGA said:
OK. I haven't studied Yogacara in any detail at all, so I wouldn't know.

I should have made my point differently. I don't know of any contemporary school of Mahayana that would claim that practitioners of sravakayana, even those who attain the goal of arhatship, do not eventually wind up practicing Mahayana and then attaining Buddhahood. Are there any such schools today?

jake said:
Hi DGA,

The way you've phrased the paragraph above has triggered a question. Is your understanding of Ekayana that the other two vehicles lead to the Mahayana and then Anuttarasamyaksambodhi? Or that all three vehicles lead, eventually, to Anuttarasamyaksambodhi? Sorry if this is 'off topic' in the thread, recognizing of course the broad scope of this thread.

DGA said:

Good one. My comments so far in this thread don't account for pratyekabuddhas. I've never met one so I can't say first hand. In fact, I'm just parroting what little I know of the Mahayana party line. Here's my best shot at that question.

I think you have to practice Mahayana (which is the same as Ekayana) in order to become a Samyaksambuddha. Which means that pratyekabuddhas don't attain anuttarasamyaksambodhi, because they haven't practiced Mahayana. Or is it possible for a pratyekabuddha to practice Mahayana? I don't know.

I think all sentient beings have Buddhahood available to them, and that the different schemes of different vehicles are little more than temporarily useful fictions or taxonomies.

I invite anyone with the patience to correct any mistakes I've made to do so.

Malcolm wrote:

See this post:

<https://dharma.wheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=102&t=27709&start=240#p434368>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 3:24 AM

Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Those critiques were upaya.

Malcolm wrote:

That's what people say about Pabongkha's criticisms too; I don't buy it personally. There is upāya, there is also grasping to views. I consider Pabongkha and Nichiren's condemnations of other schools to be examples of the latter. YMMV.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 3:13 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

If all you have is madhyamika, I think the tendency is to be run into an emptiness pit. You have to return to the middle and allow for conventions, tentatively recognize dharmas, knowing their dependently arisen nature.

marting said:
I understand that Madhyamaka means "middle."

Malcolm wrote:
In general, it is the middle way between eternalism and annihilationism. But this does not mean there is something else between these two.

Whatever arises in dependence, that is explained to be emptiness;
that is a dependent designation,
that itself is the middle way.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 3:03 AM
Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More
Content:
marting said:
Which leads me to wonder...what is beyond mere Madhyamaka?

Malcolm wrote:
Nothing, nothing surpasses Madhyamaka.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 3:02 AM
Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More
Content:
Queequeg said:
If all you have is madhyamika, I think the tendency is to be run into an emptiness pit. You have to return to the middle and allow for conventions, tentatively recognize dharmas, knowing their dependently arisen nature.

Malcolm wrote:
There is no middle.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 3:02 AM
Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More
Content:

Queequeg said:
You mean, Sudden and Perfect?

Malcolm wrote:
No, I would never describe mantrayāna in those terms. Mantrayāna is not sudden, it simply collapses the path of a buddha from three incalculable eons into one, seven, or 16 lifetimes depending on diligence, based on its special methods, creation and completion stage. Hence, Mantrayāna, aka uncommon Mahāyāna, is distinguished from common Mahāyāna solely by its method, but not by its view.

Queequeg said:
I was being a little facetious.

For the record - Sudden and Perfect in Tiantai is not the same as the notion of Sudden and Perfect where someone is enlightened in a Eureka moment.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, I know. I respect the intellectual edifice that Zhiyi erected. But he makes historical assumptions I don't share.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 2:32 AM
Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More
Content:
marting said:
To my limited understanding, Madhyamaka does indeed disabuse one of bias.

Queequeg said:
Agreed. AFAIK, Madhyamika is just an analysis that undermines any effort to establish a self-existent dharma. Efforts have been made over the millennia to make it something more, and they are bound to be undermined by the very thing they're trying to build something out of.

In East Asia, Nagarjuna is understood as teaching more than merely Madhyamika. The commentary on the Prajna Paramita Sutra attributed to Nagarjuna is probably as influential, if not more so.

Malcolm wrote:
But it too is just Madhyamaka.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 2:31 AM
Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?
Content:
Queequeg said:

Anyways, it seems we never get around to actual doctrines because people get hung up on the rhetoric.

Malcolm wrote:

That means the rhetoric is in the way. It is one of the problems Gelugpas have with Pabhongakha, actually. Non-Gelugpas just can't forget that Pabhongkha stated in his letters, that all other Buddhists apart from his school were all going to hell, and so on. Then Gelugpas get mad and claim we are getting hung up on rhetoric. Moreover, there are more than just a few Gelugpas who double down on the rhetoric, and I see the same thing happening among Nichirenistas. This is complicated by the fact that Nichiren Buddhism itself has a complicated history, with factions and differing ideologies, from peaceful drum bangers who build Nirvana Stupas around to the world, to aggressive street preachers (at least there were in the '80's).

Queequeg said:

I'm not going to disavow Nichiren's rhetoric.

Malcolm wrote:

You ought to. It's pure, undiluted sectarianism.

Queequeg said:

I do think it is appropriate against materialists and nihilists whose influence is posing an existential threat to humanity.

Malcolm wrote:

I personally think religious people are a much greater existential threat to humanity than materialists.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 2:25 AM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You brought up Nisgardatta as someone who both advocated dependent origination and nonduality. I pointed out this was impossible.

fuki said:

I did not, I was asked if I found it in his teachings, the answer was yes due to practise, ofcourse I see the impossibility you demonstrate however theorized, framed with a particular agenda, I'm not an idiot (well not in that way)

Yes, because every time you do, Advaita will be found to be eternalist, advocating ultimate being, and therefore incompatible with the practice of Buddhadharma. There is nothing useful in Advaita for those who practice Buddhadharma, other than to be examined and shown to be a source of faulty views and a deviation. We don't even need to discuss Yoga, Samkhya, etc., since these darshanas have been well refuted. I've studied these things with Hindu masters of them, they have no problem with the incompatibility of Buddhadharma with Samkhya and Advaita, or the incompatibility of Advaita with Samkhya and Buddhadharma and so on. They cheerfully acknowledge that there are clear differences and that they need to be respected.

I already said they were different.

You didn't get the "Mu" reference, well not its function.

Malcolm wrote:

I understand what the Japanese equivalent to A is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 2:23 AM

Title: Re: Largest one day drop in U.S. stock market - in history

Content:

Ricky said:

I really don't know much about it, just saw the price for a big name like that and was shocked.

Queequeg said:

Yeah, crown jewel of the American business world was run into the ground... IBM turned it around, but they are no longer making Business Machines. GE could regroup, but its probably not going to be making everything from jet engines to financial products. Even at its price now, you could lose money before you make money.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, Buffet is out of GE completely.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 2:21 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

unless of course one practices secret mantra.

Queequeg said:

You mean, Sudden and Perfect?

Malcolm wrote:

No, I would never describe mantrayāna in those terms. Mantrayāna is not sudden, it simply collapses the path of a buddha from three incalculable eons into one, seven, or 16 lifetimes depending on diligence, based on its special methods, creation and completion stage. Hence, Mantrayāna, aka uncommon Mahāyāna, is distinguished from common Mahāyāna solely by its method, but not by its view.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 2:01 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

Not positing a fourth. The three are upaya - the Buddhayana is taught in varying degrees of incompleteness in response to the needs of the beings.

Malcolm wrote:

You are: you are saying that the three vehicles are not complete, and that there is a fourth which is.

Queequeg said:

No. The three are conventions, upaya. There is one complete vehicle.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it is called Mahāyāna, which leads full buddhahood; and that takes three asamkheyakalpas to traverse, unless of course one practices secret mantra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 1:52 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

marting said:

Curious also: are you positing a fourth? For the record I couldn't find "Buddhayana" in the index of the paper you linked to.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, he is.

This thread should really be split into a thread called Ekayāna: controversies and continuities.

Queequeg said:

Not positing a fourth. The three are upaya - the Buddhayana is taught in varying degrees of incompleteness in response to the needs of the beings.

Malcolm wrote:

You are: you are saying that the three vehicles are not complete, and that there is a fourth which is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 1:51 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

marting said:

The Buddhayana is inconceivable to anyone within the three vehicles, even the bodhisattvayana.

Curious also: are you positing a fourth? For the record I couldn't find "Buddhayana" in the index of the paper you linked to.

Queequeg said:

Buddhayana is referred to as Sudden and Complete/Perfect/Round.

Malcolm wrote:

Unfortunately, Queequeg generally retreats into Tien tai private language about this issue.

But suffice it to say that what Indians took one vehicle to mean, and its subsequent understanding in Tibet, and what it means to Tientai folk are not really commensurate.

For us, Mahāyāna itself is the one vehicle; for them the one vehicle is sudden, perfect, complete awakening, which as far as I know has never happened for anyone, anywhere, at anytime.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 1:44 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

marting said:

The Buddhayana is inconceivable to anyone within the three vehicles, even the bodhisattvayana.

Curious also: are you positing a fourth? For the record I couldn't find "Buddhayana" in the index of the paper you linked to.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, he is.

This thread should really be split into a thread called Ekayāna: controversies and continuities.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 1:44 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

The awakening of the pratyekabuddha does not equal the awakening of a Buddha. It is of an inferior nature.

Malcolm wrote:

If this were the case it would mean the dharmadhātu had levels and grades. But as above, we can see this is false, which is why according to Candrakīrti, the liberation of śrāvakas, pratyekabuddhas, and buddhas are the same in terms of liberation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 1:38 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

jake said:

In your tradition, how would you describe this forth jeweled cart, the one pulled by a great white ox? Sorry to say, I remain rather ignorant of the specifics of the Tibetan traditions. (I also realize there are differing perspectives on what constitutes ekayana in Japanese traditions...)

jake

Malcolm wrote:

There is no "fourth" cart. There is only one cart, Mahāyāna, the practice of the six perfections which takes three incalculable eons. The jeweled cart drawn by the white elephant (not ox) is the result of Mahāyāna practice, buddhahood.

For example, the Lanka states:

"There are no other vehicles,
I teach only one vehicle;
but in order to guide the immature,
I explain different vehicles.

Candrakīrti observes:

"It is said 'There are persons for one vehicle and three,' but ultimately, there is only one vehicle. The teaching of Śrāvakayāna, Pratyekabuddhayāna and Mahāyāna is for the purpose of introducing sentient beings."

He then clarifies what this means for him:

Because there are no divisions in the dharmadhātu, those [three] were explained for introducing [sentient beings]. Ārya Nāgārjuna states:

Because there are no divisions in the dharmadhātu, there are no divisions in vehicles;
the teaching of three vehicles is for introducing sentient beings.

In that case, since the dharmadhātu is uniform, and because śrāvakas and so on do not differentiate the dharmadhātu, the vehicle is only one. Since there is traversing, there is a so-called vehicle, and because the absence of an entity of self of śrāvakas and so on are the same, there is one vehicle. Since this is traversed, it is a vehicle. Since they are equivalent in liberation, there is one vehicle."

Candra then goes on to point out that Yogacārinś like Maitreyanatha regard the one vehicle teaching as interpretable and not definitive. He summarizes his statement however by stating, " As such, the character of the Mahāyāna is established as the Ekayāna. " In other words, Candra defines the one vehicle from the standpoint of reality, the dharmadhātu, and since reality is one, the means of realizing it must all be the same.

In other words, for Madhyamaka, Mahāyāna is the Ekayāna, there is no Ekayāna apart from Mahāyāna. This is basically how the Ekayāna is understood in Tibet as well, since we are all Madhyamaka here, of the Prasaṅga variety, apart from some people that follow gzhan stong.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 12:54 AM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I never said there was a non-duality, like in my previous post which you didn't quote. You brought up Nisgardatta as someone who both advocated dependent origination and nonduality. I pointed out this was impossible.

I'm not gonna engage the advaita-buddhadharma differences.

Yes, because every time you do, Advaita will be found to be eternalist, advocating ultimate being, and therefore incompatible with the practice of Buddhadharma. There is nothing useful in Advaita for those who practice Buddhadharma, other than to be examined and shown to be a source of faulty views and a deviation. We don't even need to discuss Yoga, Samkhya, etc., since these darshanas have been well refuted. I've studied these things with Hindu masters of them, they have no problem with the incompatibility of Buddhadharma with Samkhya and Advaita, or the incompatibility of Advaita with Samkhya and Buddhadharma and so on. They cheerfully acknowledge that there are clear differences and that they need to be respected.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 12:37 AM

Title: Re: Largest one day drop in U.S. stock market - in history

Content:

Queequeg said:

AMZN... Its expensive, but until the regulators start trying to break it up, they'll just keep bringing their capital to the table and disrupting industries with inefficiencies... very interested to see what they are going to do to the health insurance industry...

Malcolm wrote:

Buy a fund to take advantage of amazon. It is too volatile on the best of days for most people's comfort.

Apple has much better fundamentals. P/E ratio 16.22, Mkt. cap 811.89B

Amazon - P/E ratio 226.99, Mkt cap 675.09B

In other words, if you buy Amazon, you are paying $226.99 for every dollar of asset value. This is not a bargain. Amazon is way, way, over priced. Same with Tesla. It's a suckers bet.

Queequeg said:

Fair points about AMZN and TSLA. They are at the high end of value and would not recommend buying right now - wait for a pull back - but I would argue these aren't really bets on the companies and so traditional valuations are not going to tell the whole story - they're bets on Bezos and Musk and emerging business and product innovations that are in uncharted territory. Bezos has the better track record, and until the regulators start to come down on AMZN, I don't see their expansion slowing.

I agree on AAPL. Solid financials and in terms of product, they've got a cult - the Apple Store aesthetic looks like such a nice and pleasant future! I want to live there!

In general, though, I would not recommend jumping into the market new right now if you've never been. There are aspects of this market that are really weird and could blow up. Do your homework. Get in slow. Like Malcolm touched on, start with funds, and as you get a feel for what's going on, focus on industries that you can relate to, and then you can start placing specialized bets.

Actually, investing is a great dharma practice in certain respects. You need to cultivate detachment and equanimity. Attachments can get you killed.

Malcolm wrote:

Take a long view, and understand that over a long period of time, the market typically averages out to a 10-11 percent return, subtract inflation, and you have your real return (hence the panic over inflation in the market for the past couple of trading days). Stocks are not for most people. This is why Buffet always tells people to put their money in funds that track the major indexes. Right now, a 50/50 or 60/40 split between domestic and foreign equities is a good way to go, keep 15 percent in bonds, and 5 percent in cash. Also, Fidelity and Vanguard are selling total portfolios where one can simply invest in one fund according to one's stomach for risk, which is balanced accordingly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 12:29 AM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is the heart of your error, and it is at the heart of many who subscribe to nondualism, as if there were some nondual reality. There is not. I see this happen over and over again.

Dependent origination is rejected by all Advaitans because the logic of dependent origination does not permit one to advance an ontologically meaningful nondualism.

"Nondual" in Mahāyāna means either the absence of outer objects or it means the absence of the basic pair of existence and nonexistence.

M

fuki said:

Mu

Malcolm wrote:

You should really take the time to discover why Shantaraksita rejected Shankaracharya's embrace of nonarising. It was not because of sectarianism, it was because Advaitans propose, including Nisgardatta, that reality is a all pervasive nondual consciousness. Nisgardatta's point of view is not compatible with <http://www.nonduality.com/asmi2.htm>:

To identify oneself with the particular is all the sin there is. The impersonal is real, the personal appears and disappears. "I am" is the impersonal Being. "I am this" is the person. The person is relative, and the pure Being fundamental.

This is completely incompatible with dependent origination. I am surprised you do not understand this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 7th, 2018 at 12:00 AM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

fuki said:

No not the same.

Yes, non-duality and the void of own-being of that which arise, is at the heart of his teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

This is the heart of your error, and it is at the heart of many who subscribe to nondualism, as if there were some nondual reality. There is not. I see this happen over and over again.

Dependent origination is rejected by all Advaitans because the logic of dependent origination does not permit one to advance an ontologically meaningful nondualism.

"Nondual" in Mahāyāna means either the absence of outer objects or it means the absence of the basic pair of existence and nonexistence.

M

Simon E. said:

Precisely so.

Malcolm wrote:

Time for people to read the Heart Sūtra again, or even better, the <http://www.buddhistische-gesellschaft-berlin.de/downloads/ratnagunasamcayagatha.pdf>. I just wish there were a better translation than this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 11:54 PM

Title: Re: Largest one day drop in U.S. stock market - in history

Content:

Queequeg said:

AMZN... Its expensive, but until the regulators start trying to break it up, they'll just keep bringing their capital to the table and disrupting industries with inefficiencies... very interested to see what they are going to do to the health insurance industry...

Malcolm wrote:

Buy a fund to take advantage of amazon. It is too volatile on the best of days for most people's comfort.

Apple has much better fundamentals. P/E ratio 16.22, Mkt. cap 811.89B

Amazon - P/E ratio 226.99, Mkt cap 675.09B

In other words, if you buy Amazon, you are paying $226.99 for every dollar of asset value. This is not a bargain. Amazon is way, way, over priced. Same with Tesla. It's a suckers bet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 11:36 PM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

Soma999 said:

Everyone is right from his own point of view.

Malcolm wrote:

This does not mean everyone is "right."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 11:35 PM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

Simon E. said:

So in your view are Nisargadatta Maharaj's teachings the same as Buddhadharma?

fuki said:

No not the same.

Do they include Dependant Origination for example?

Yes, non-duality and the void of own-being of that which arise, is at the heart of his teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

This is the heart of your error, and it is at the heart of many who subscribe to nondualism, as if there were some nondual reality. There is not. I see this happen over and over again.

Dependent origination is rejected by all Advaitans because the logic of dependent origination does not permit one to advance an ontologically meaningful nondualism.

"Nondual" in Mahāyāna means either the absence of outer objects or it means the absence of the basic pair of existence and nonexistence.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

fuki said:

hence they cannot describe the real-in-itself.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no "real-in-itself." This is just an importation of Kantian transcendental idealism into Nāgārjuna. But it is a wrong interpretation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 10:51 PM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

Wayfarer said:

The way Nāgārjuna is presented often is nihilistic. To say that nothing is real, or nothing exists, is nihilist, and it's also not what Nāgārjuna says.

Malcolm wrote:

He does say nothing is real. He does not say nothing exists.

fuki said:

"The task of philosophy is to show that reality conceived within the relativity-field is conceptual, and hence it has no essence of its own, i.e., it is not what it would be in itself"

- Nagarjuna

Understanding Nagar. is actually the true middle way, which is neither the extremes nor the middle, since the middle only designates the extremes.

Malcolm wrote:

Where is this from? The translation is a little strange.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 10:42 PM

Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Anyways, it seems we never get around to actual doctrines because people get hung up on the rhetoric.

Malcolm wrote:

That means the rhetoric is in the way. It is one of the problems Gelugpas have with Pabhongakha, actually. Non-Gelugpas just can't forget that Pabhongkha stated in his letters, that all other Buddhists apart from his school were all going to hell, and so on. Then Gelugpas get mad and claim we are getting hung up on rhetoric. Moreover, there are more than just a few Gelugpas who double down on the rhetoric, and I see the same thing happening among Nichirenistas. This is complicated by the fact that Nichiren Buddhism itself has a complicated history, with factions and differing ideologies, from peaceful drum bangers who build Nirvana Stupas around the world, to aggressive street preachers (at least there were in the '80's).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 10:15 PM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

fuki said:

Q: What is the right view?

A: To perceive without perceiving any object whatsoever is the right view.

Malcolm wrote:

This is absolutely correct, but there is a right way to arrive at this view of no view, and a wrong way.

The right way is to analyze phenomena and find that there are no phenomena which stand up to analysis. The wrong way is to take this "no view" as a statement of dogma and start barking it at everything you see.

Now, in the West we have many people training in Zen who do not even know the rudiments of Buddhadharma. This was not the case in China and Japan, where Zen/Chan training was engaged in by people who were well trained in Sūtra, Abhidharma, and so on.

So, it is not surprising in the least that in Zen circles there are people who are unable to distinguish at all what is Buddhadharma and why it is truly unique in the world. The same thing is true of Vipassana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 10:02 PM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Wayfarer has an aversion to Nāgārjuna, he understands it to be a form of nihilism.

Wayfarer said:

The way Nāgārjuna is presented often is nihilistic. To say that nothing is real, or nothing exists, is nihilist, and it's also not what Nāgārjuna says.

Malcolm wrote:

He does say nothing is real. He does not say nothing exists.

Wayfarer said:

Which is that things are empty of own-being, not merely or simply non-existent. Empty \neq non-existent. There are degrees of reality, that is why there can be 'two truths'.

Malcolm wrote:

No, the two truths are measure of how veridical a cognition is, it does not say anything at all about entities per se.

Wayfarer said:

I recognise and salute the superiority of the Buddha, otherwise I wouldn't consider myself Buddhist. But I can't agree with the statement that Buddhism is the only source of truth.

Malcolm wrote:

So you think that other traditions permit people to a degree of realization which is absolutely commensurate, say, with the path of seeing in Mahāyāna?

Wayfarer said:

What I see in the world's wisdom traditions, are accounts of the encounter with the Infinite, which is clearly embodied in Mahayana Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

Always knew you were a perennialist at heart.

Wayfarer said:

Buddhists have the best way of dealing with it - most consistent, most logical, and most profound. That's why I consider myself Buddhist. But it doesn't make everyone else's understanding wrong - that is just the kind of attitude that caused me to leave Christianity.

Malcolm wrote:

With respect to the nature of reality, all other religious understanding of it is wrong. If you believe otherwise, this means that you also believe that awakening has nothing to do with view. That is knowledge obscuration I hope you someday overcome. There is no common basis between Buddhadharma and tirthika religions. HH Dalai Lama happily admits this, and with a grin, for example, is happy to state "When my Christian brothers want to talk to me about emptiness, I tell them emptiness is not their business."

This does not mean that all world religions are not based in some sense of moral responsibility and compassion for others, but compassion cannot eradicate afflictions which cause rebirth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 9:57 PM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

No_Mind said:

How far a leap is it from mind stream to universal soul?

Malcolm wrote:

It's an uncrossable abyss.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 9:26 PM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

marting said:

I think I follow: that the three would not be treading the path of Buddhayana without the Buddha? Just wanted to double check.

With the ekayana perspective can the three paths arise without the Buddha?

(Maybe the hang-up is that I'm just trying to understand the subject better. I'm not arguing.)

Queequeg said:

Right, the message of the Lotus seems to be that the Buddha teaches three paths to prepare beings for the Buddhayana.

Malcolm wrote:

I see, now you have retreated from your previous statement of certitude to "seems to be."

Queequeg said:

The Buddha is considered eternal, so the paths are eternal.

Malcolm wrote:

You are referring to the rūpakāya? If so, this is just not so. With respect to this assertion, the Buddha states in the PP in 100,000 lines:

If matter...is a phenomena that is permanent, stable, eternal and unchanging, this Mahāyāna Dharma would not be able to overwhelm the world with its devas, humans, asuras and gandharvas. Because matter...is a phenomena that is impermanent, unstable, transient and changing, this Mahāyāna Dharma is able to overwhelm the world with its devas, humans, asuras and gandharvas.

BTW, some Buddhas, like Sikhin, never ordain a monastic Sangha. So, just how are all paths eternal?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 9:24 PM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

Ekayana in the Lotus means that even when the Buddha teaches the the three vehicles he is actually teaching the one Buddhayana. Those on the sravakayana are taught arhatship and are aiming for arhatship; pratyekabuddhayana are aiming for pratyekabuddhahood; bodhisattvayana are taught a particular ideal of Buddhahood culminating after 3 eons of practice and they aim for that particular conception of Buddhahood. The actual goal of the Ekayana is not known within these paths. The Buddha is preparing them all to receive the Buddhayana. The Buddhayana is inconceivable to anyone within the three vehicles, even the bodhisattvayana.

Malcolm wrote:

That is a novel interpretation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 8:53 PM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

marting said:

Very dependent on whether or not one caught the anti-Trump fever last year.

Malcolm wrote:

Trump is fool, leading other fools.

marting said:

More embarrassing is the inability to acknowledge corrosive ideologies advanced by capable, aggressive state actors.

Malcolm wrote:

The flawed ideology at work here is the ideology of a deeply incompetent administration that defunds the state dept and refuses to send qualified diplomats to S. Korea.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 8:32 PM

Title: Re: Largest one day drop in U.S. stock market - in history

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Aapl

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 6:47 AM

Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?

Content:

Queequeg said:

The thread drifted off topic and addressed the OP really only on the first page. If you want to inflame passions, as you did in the OP of that post ("You can read the article for a full catalogue to see if Nichiren sent any patriarchs of your tradition to hell..."), that's your prerogative. Its the way you put things that draws your intent into question.

Malcolm wrote:

Your post basically claims there is only one correct understanding and one correct practice. You do understand why some of us think this position is risible?

Queequeg said:

If you're not seeking bodhi, you're doing it wrong. Is that a controversial statement from a Buddhist perspective?

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that your guy claims if you don't seek bodhi his way, you're out. That is the risible part.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 6:40 AM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

Norwegian said:

As someone who goes for refuge to the Buddha, I have accepted the Buddha (indeed any Buddha) as the ultimate authority on Buddhadharma.

The Buddha then stating that outside of his teachings there is no liberation, means it's highly arrogant of me to question that statement (in the sense of implying that the Buddha is mistaken, and yet still after that say that I go for refuge to the Buddha). Or, if not arrogant, then just ignorant (how can I know more about these things than the Buddha himself?). The Buddha is a Buddha. This is supposed to mean something. If the Buddha says something, then I listen to it.

My attitude is that if I don't understand something, then I want to understand why it is so and so, instead of just discarding it. So far this has not disappointed me or let me down.

Malcolm wrote:

The other reason why Wayfarer is completely mistaken on this point is that he believes there is something ultimate beyond phenomena which must be realized. He thinks the unborn, etc. refers to something real.

Norwegian said:

And for however long you hold that kind of view, for that long you'll remain mistaken. It is honestly quite straightforward: A basic study of Madhyamaka should dispense with that kind of view (of there being something truly real, somehow).

Malcolm wrote:

Wayfarer has an aversion to Nāgārjuna, he understands it to be a form of nihilism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 6:39 AM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

“Malcolm” said:

The other reason why Wayfarer is completely mistaken on this point is that he believes there is something ultimate beyond phenomena which must be realized. He thinks the unborn, etc. refers to something real.

Wayfarer said:

It is not something, but also not nothing.

Malcolm wrote:

And thus you stuck in the third extreme, positing something which is not nothing but also not something, which is just the extreme of existence restated.

Wayfarer said:

But that's not the reason. It's because we all have to get along in a pluralistic world. Most of my relatives are Christian (or post-Christian). My sons both had Bible readings at their weddings.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but this a Buddhist forum, and not your parlor. In your parlor, I wouldn't even discuss Buddhism, unless there was clear interest.

I don't discuss Buddhism with people unless they show interest.

Here, it is a different story. We are here to discuss Buddhadharma, and part of that discussion involves why Buddhadharma is unique and why it alone offers ultimate freedom.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 6:32 AM

Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?

Content:

Queequeg said:

The thread drifted off topic and addressed the OP really only on the first page. If you want to inflame passions, as you did in the OP of that post ("You can read the article for a full catalogue to see if Nichiren sent any patriarchs of your tradition to hell..."), that's your prerogative. Its the way you put things that draws your intent into question.

Malcolm wrote:

Your post basically claims there is only one correct understanding and one correct practice. You do understand why some of us think this position is risible?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 6:06 AM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

Dan74 said:

No Mind,

I find the approach as outlined here quite rigid as well. Life/spiritual practice are organic, not formulaic. Signposts (as in the Dharma) and one-to-one guidance from a teacher who knows your heart are vital, I agree, but any dogmatic approach as to what one needs (without even knowing where one is coming from) is naive at best.

Fora being the way they are, the view you are exposed here is symptomatic of this Forum's culture rather than what you are likely to hear in Vajrayana or Zen centres (in my experience), especially as a newcomer.

/

Malcolm wrote:

Also, these days most people are just into what feels good.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 6:05 AM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

Dan74 said:

No Mind,

I find the approach as outlined here quite rigid as well. Life/spiritual practice are organic, not formulaic. Signposts (as in the Dharma) and one-to-one guidance from a teacher who knows your heart are vital, I agree, but any dogmatic approach as to what one needs (without even knowing where one is coming from) is naive at best.

Fora being the way they are, the view you are exposed here is symptomatic of this Forum's culture rather than what you are likely to hear in Vajrayana or Zen centres (in my experience), especially as a newcomer.

/

Malcolm wrote:

Everyone needs right view to practice Dharma. There is no way out otherwise.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 5:55 AM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

Wayfarer said:

I don't agree with any form of 'religious triumphalism' - this way is the only way. We live in a pluralistic society which can accommodate many ways. And besides:

I have taught the Dharma compared to a raft, for the purpose of crossing over, not for the purpose of holding onto. Understanding the Dharma as taught compared to a raft, you should let go even of Dharmas, to say nothing of Adharmas.

Norwegian said:

As someone who goes for refuge to the Buddha, I have accepted the Buddha (indeed any Buddha) as the ultimate authority on Buddhadharma.

The Buddha then stating that outside of his teachings there is no liberation, means it's highly arrogant of me to question that statement (in the sense of implying that the Buddha is mistaken, and yet still after that say that I go for refuge to the Buddha). Or, if not arrogant, then just ignorant (how can I know more about these things than the Buddha himself?). The Buddha is a Buddha. This is supposed to mean something. If the Buddha says something, then I listen to it.

My attitude is that if I don't understand something, then I want to understand why it is so and so, instead of just discarding it. So far this has not disappointed me or let me down.

Malcolm wrote:

The other reason why Wayfarer is completely mistaken on this point is that he believes there is something ultimate beyond phenomena which must be realized. He thinks the unborn, etc. refers to something real.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 5:42 AM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

Wayfarer said:

The ultimate goal is not Buddhist or Hindu or Christian, those distinctions only exist in the domain of phenomena. .

Tiago Simões said:

And given that we are not Buddhas, the domain of phenomena is all we have to play with.

Malcolm wrote:

Moreover, as the Sabba sutta points out, there nothing other than the domain of phenomena, and those are included completely within in the twelve āyatanas.

Another way to put it is that all compounded and uncompounded phenomena are included in one aggregate, one sense base, and one sense element, that is, the material aggregate, the mental sense base, and the dharma sense element. There are no phenomena outside of these three groups.

When we study Dharma in a proper way, we will abandon the notion that there is liberation for those outside of the Dharma. If we do not study Dharma in the proper way, maintaining the delusion that there is liberation for those outside of Buddhadharma is not only mistaken, but it is mistaken compassion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 5:41 AM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If liberation does not come from right view, than liberation has no cause and can arise at any time in anyone, whether they realized emptiness or not.

Kunga Lhadzom said:

But it would arise, if the karma for it ripened...maybe they practiced in a past life ?

Also if there is no beginning. ...no cause to cause a beginning....why couldn't liberation arise spontaneously ?

Malcolm wrote:

Why? It is because of the innate grasping at a nonexistent self which has not been eradicated by the realization of the emptiness of persons and phenomena that liberation cannot arise spontaneously. Since every other religion posits some kind of self as an ultimate reality, liberation is not possible for them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 5:38 AM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

Wayfarer said:

And exactly the same thing is being said of Christianity on Christian forums, and I don't accept that, either. I think liberation is ultimately beyond religions altogether - it is what they are pointing out, or pointing to, but as the parable says, they are 'fingers pointing at the moon'. The ultimate goal is not Buddhist or Hindu or Christian, those distinctions only exist in the domain of phenomena. But I'm not going to get into a long polemical debate about it.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, so for you liberation is not dependent on view, but something other mystical thingymabob that you cannot describe.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 5:31 AM

Title: Re: Largest one day drop in U.S. stock market - in history

Content:

DNS said:

The U.S. DJIA dropped 1,175 points today after dropping 665 last Friday. It is the largest single day drop in U.S. history, however, in terms of percentage drop, it was -4.6% which is still very far from the -22.6% on 10-19-1987.

The pundits say it is because the jobs market is looking good, the economy is doing well, so the stock investors fear interest rates will be going up several times this year. That just makes me glad not to be part of that group, that wishes ill for the common workers, so that the Fed will keep interest rates low. Of course, I am sure there are some investors who don't think like that, but that was the general consensus among the pundits.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a buying opportunity. The world economy is growing. Fundamentals of the economy are great.

The market dropped because if interest rates rise, money becomes more expensive, and this affects returns on investments made with borrowed money. At a micro level this is nothing, but at the macro level, mutual fund level, this gets very expensive very quickly.

This will cause some investors to move their money into bonds, since yields are going to rise. Of course, let's hope the new Fed chair keeps his head and is super cautious about raising the Fed rates.

This is not a dis on workers, but there is some risk of inflation, because we are at nearly "full" employment. If borrowing money becomes expensive, this makes commercial paper more expensive, and this can have an adverse affect on jobs and growth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 5:12 AM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

Wayfarer said:

I don't agree with any form of 'religious triumphalism' - this way is the only way. We live in a pluralistic society which can accommodate many ways.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course, many sentient beings have different karma, and thus follow many paths, but without right view, liberation just is not possible. That right view exists only in Buddhadharma.

If liberation does not come from right view, than liberation has no cause and can arise at any time in anyone, whether they realized emptiness or not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 3:24 AM

Title: Re: What Does It Actually Mean to Practice Dzogchen?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Again, Kyle, this is too narrow. But I am not going to discuss it here other than to say one does not need to be an ārya to be said to know Dzogchen directly and experientially. You are mixing up sūtra and Dzogchen here.

krodha said:

I was attempting to offer an example of another distinction that is somewhat similar in nature.

In any case seems this conversation has probably ran its course.

The distinction isn't important anyway but Dawai Gocha's blatant refusal to even consider its merits is a bit strange to me.

Malcolm wrote:

I understand, it is just that the special feature of Dzogchen is that ordinary people are able to recognize their dharmatā experientially in a direct perception without having realized emptiness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 3:13 AM

Title: Re: What Does It Actually Mean to Practice Dzogchen?

Content:

krodha said:

And the "Dzogchenpa" distinction allows both of us to maintain our points of view in a rather harmonious way.

Dawai Gocha said:

Maybe check out my second post that wasn't approved until later, it might be worth entertaining.

Seems 'dzogchenpa' can be used in both contexts. Both dictionaries define it as 'practitioners of dzogchen' and teachers have used it in this way.

krodha said:

The main point is again, that "Dzogchen" is the living and experiential dimension of equipoise. Those who have known Dzogchen are awakened individuals.

Even within the scope of the buddhadharma, there are "practitioners of the buddhadharma" and then there are those who have awakened, given the title "ārya." In the same way only those who have awakened to their nature have come to know "Dzogchen," and those who have not yet awakened cannot be said to know the meaning of "dzogchen."

Nevertheless they are practicing to create circumstances that are conducive to awakening. Those who have awakened and have lapsed back into their relative condition are also creating conducive circumstances to continually re-visit said equipoise, as that is the entire point.

Just as in the buddhadharma the distinction of an ārya is made, I feel it is appropriate to make the distinction we are discussing. The āryas of the world have tasted chocolate so to speak, they have an experiential, working knowledge of that taste. Those who have not tasted chocolate do not possess that knowledge.

This all started because I said "as an alleged atiyogin, you know X to be the case." You then asked what I meant by "alleged" and this is what I mean, as someone who has allegedly tasted chocolate, you possess an experiential knowledge of that taste. Likewise a yogin of ati, or a "Dzogchenpa" is someone who, if they aren't knowing it constantly, has at least awakened to know "Dzogchen."

Malcolm wrote:

Again, Kyle, this is too narrow. But I am not going to discuss it here other than to say one does not need to be an ārya to be said to know Dzogchen directly and experientially. You are mixing up sūtra and Dzogchen here.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 2:22 AM

Title: Re: Hello All

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No Mind explained his perspective right at the outset. It is mistaken. If no one sets him straight, he will continue in that misconception.

It is no more kind to allow someone to continue in a misconception than it is to allow a lost traveller to continue on their way without pointing out the correct path to their destination.

Time is passing and we are living in time.

fuki said:

I understand your angle of vision, yet I'm more cautious with people I do not have established a deeper connection with yet (or are not aware of yet).

Besides I'm a member of zen forums where actual qualified teachers, which I am not, can address misconceptions better than I. Even if I would say things correctly according to the dharma it does not mean it would function correctly it might have an undesirable effect. So my speech differs when I know someone better and have established a deeper connection. Blindly expounding the dharma to anyone who appears can also be a disservice to the dharma. We all differ in our approach, when a practitioner has seen through the cause and can drop self-grasping the gateway into Ch'an will naturally open. Again I am not a teacher and ofcourse right understanding is vital it is not always the time and place for me to address it, it might be different for you. No opposition there, what is kind or not kind cannot be predicted, it is wisdom which gives compassion its direction, for me always addressing everyone's misconception can be like releasing a bird with one broken wing, which is then also my responsibility if it plummets to the ground. So when it doesn't come naturally I maintain silence. But again I wish your guidance and practise or anyone's will be of service to all sentient beings.

Malcolm wrote:

My attitude is that Buddhadharma is very precise. It is easy to measure what is in accordance with Buddhadharma and what is not. This is a forum for discussing that. Therefore, if someone offers a view that absolutely contradicts Buddhadharma, it is quite permissible, and even desirable, for that contradiction to be pointed out. I generally find that in the end people appreciate being corrected, even if in the beginning they are a little offended.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 1:45 AM

Title: Re: Hello All

Content:

fuki said:

I fear anything I will say will cause more division in the minds of ppl leading to more grasping, hence dukkha.

Malcolm wrote:

The aim of precision about this point is to eliminate the concepts that lead to grasping and clinging.

One does not eliminate views by proffering more views.

Dependent origination itself is the elimination of views. No Mind should understand this point a little better than he does at present.

And just to be clear, Nāgārjuna states:

Whatever is the nature of the Tathāgata, that is the nature of the world.

Since the Tathāgata has no nature, the world too has no nature.

fuki said:

Malcolm, I've been a practitioner of Buddhadharma for 20 years and you cannot force a flower to bloom, as you know it depends on causes and conditions. It isn't my flavour to speak in a manner like you do, as in "he should understand this point" I'm not sure if that would motivate him to deepen his practise and understanding, but again I cannot predict if it will or will not since that depends on a myriad of conditions. Perhaps you are of service to motivate him but putting in "shoulds" usually don't. It's no critique to you I value your assistance in the dharma but it's not my style of speech so I won't discuss that point. If you would address my understanding of the dharma I would engage but I never talk about the understanding or non-understanding of others.

Malcolm wrote:

No Mind explained his perspective right at the outset. It is mistaken. If no one sets him straight, he will continue in that misconception.

It is no more kind to allow someone to continue in a misconception than it is to allow a lost traveller to continue on their way without pointing out the correct path to their destination.

Time is passing and we are living in time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 1:09 AM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

No_Mind said:

Probably because I am a relative newcomer to Buddhism (I became a Theravadan Buddhist in mid-2013 and I am an entirely self taught Buddhist) I do not yet subscribe to such a rigid view. Perhaps in time I will.

Malcolm wrote:

You need a teacher.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 1:07 AM

Title: Re: The Mahayana Is Not Diluted Theravada.

Content:

Simon E. said:

The Theravada is a valid vehicle in its own right for those whose ambition is Arhatship. But it has a different set of aims than does the Mahayana.

Coëmgenu said:

This is something one agrees with, for instance, if one is coming from a Tibetan perspective.

The notion that the śrāvakayāna leads anywhere other than anuttarāsamyaṁbodhi is not a universal Mahāyāna belief.

DGA said:

Can you give an example or two of a tradition that holds that the sravakayana doesn't lead, eventually, to Mahayana and hence to Buddhahood?

I can't think of one.

Malcolm wrote:
Yogacāra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 1:06 AM

Title: Re: Wall Gazing

Content:

Astus said:

In Bodhidharma's case "wall gazing" likely meant not a physical posture but maintaining the mind like a wall, that is, without discrimination or attachment to emotions and ideas.

Malcolm wrote:

According to the Tibetan translation of Bodhidharma's account, the Chinese term "facing a wall" is translated as "Facing reality."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 12:58 AM

Title: Re: Hello All

Content:

fuki said:

I fear anything I will say will cause more division in the minds of ppl leading to more grasping, hence dukkha.

Malcolm wrote:

The aim of precision about this point is to eliminate the concepts that lead to grasping and clinging.

One does not eliminate views by proffering more views.

Dependent origination itself is the elimination of views. No Mind should understand this point a little better than he does at present.

And just to be clear, Nāgārjuna states:

Whatever is the nature of the Tathāgata, that is the nature of the world.
Since the Tathāgata has no nature, the world too has no nature.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 12:55 AM

Title: Re: Hello All

Content:

No_Mind said:

Not with intention to ruffle any more feathers ..

I personally think there is no inherent contradiction between believing in DO (to understand punarbhava) and Buddha's teachings and also believing in "the underlying natural order of the Universe whose ultimate essence is difficult to circumscribe due to it being non conceptual yet evident" and/or "single binding unity behind diversity in all that exists in the universe."

Malcolm wrote:

This contradicts the view of the Buddha in its entirety.

No_Mind said:

I doubt it

Malcolm wrote:

The Blessed One said, "What is the All? Simply the eye & forms, ear & sounds, nose & aromas, tongue & flavors, body & tactile sensations, intellect & ideas. This, monks, is called the All. [1] Anyone who would say, 'Repudiating this All, I will describe another,' if questioned on what exactly might be the grounds for his statement, would be unable to explain, and furthermore, would be put to grief. Why? Because it lies beyond range."

<https://www.accesstoinight.org/tipitaka/sn/sn35/sn35.023.than.html>

There is nothing at all behind the diversity of the world other than the actions of sentient beings which produce it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 12:37 AM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

Jeff H said:

I consider myself to be on a spiritual path, but I don't know how far along that path I will get in this life. When I look back on my life now, I can construct a narrative of that path twisting and turning through many religious, non-religious, and anti-religious processes, all leading to Buddhism – where I am now. If I look at any phase of this life, or if I project that trajectory over many lifetimes, how far did I get in any single lifetime? Those specific limits define discrete pinnacles and nadirs of my personal journey. But they all contributed to the possibility of realizing my complete potential.

I believe Buddhism holds the key, and Buddhists I respect very highly tell me it is possible to gain certainty of that. But even if I had such certainty, I don't think it would be appropriate to diminish non-Buddhist paths or to claim exclusivity. In fact, every religion does that. But the One True Path should be above that, confident that it's veracity will be recognized by those who arrive at its doors by whatever means. Those prior means are contributory and complementary.

Malcolm wrote:

Āryadeva states quite clear that realization is based on view. It is not diminishing other paths to point out that the Buddhadharma is unique with respect to this view of empty dependent origination, and that from this perspective, it is not possible to be free from the afflictions that drive rebirth without realizing the meaning of empty dependent origination. We also do not need to apologize for asserting that without the eightfold path, liberation is not possible. We can also acknowledge that other paths have different baseline assumptions that are at odds with ours, have visions of liberation which are not consistent with ours, and therefore, propose results which are not commensurate with ours.

Jeff H said:

My position is based on considering the experiences of others. I don't dispute the importance of view, but it has no meaning to someone who isn't ready to see it.

Malcolm wrote:

Such a person is in a dark house.

Jeff H said:

And, yes, as a spiritual "end game" I'd agree that no other religion offers true liberation. But for the vast majority of people trying to make sense of conventional life, liberation in the Buddhist sense is not even a remote possibility. However, from their perspective, that doesn't diminish whatever beliefs and efforts they make now that may someday get them to that point.

Malcolm wrote:

Such people are like blind people trying to find their way.

Jeff H said:

I don't advocate apologies or refraining from pointing out differences. As illustrated in the Gelug treatment of the Tenet Systems, all wrong views can ultimately lead to right view. In my journey, I had questions about Christianity which Christianity couldn't answer for me but Buddhism has. That was one of the ways in which Christianity was a great benefit to my discovery of Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

The study of tenet systems is crucial. But its purpose is to lead one from the darkness of ignorance into light of the Buddha's Dharma. It is not the case that any of the nonbuddhist paths are part of the continuum to liberation. To the extent that people on nonbuddhist paths cultivate love and compassion, they will experience higher states of rebirth. But this is just not enough.

Jeff H said:

Some of us need to flounder around awhile and can't be rushed. Guided, yes; rushed, berated, and cajoled, no.

Malcolm wrote:

Samsara has neither a beginning nor an end. So there is plenty of time for people to buzz around samsara like bees stuck in a jar.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 6th, 2018 at 12:33 AM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

Kunga Lhadzom said:

What if you didn't practice any religion, only wanted with all your heart to know the truth, and strived to be a good human being, and had incredible love and compassionwouldn't the Buddha's and Bodhisattva's be able to see you and understand you, and have the compassion to guide you, even though you didn't practice any rituals, or religion or belief system?

No_Mind said:

My pov exactly.

Shall we say Mother Teresa's attainments are zero because she was not a Buddhist.

Malcolm wrote:

Dharmakīrti points out that compassion does not have the force to eliminate afflictions. So while certainly in many quarters Mother Theresa is regarded as a saint, from the point of view of Buddhadharma she cannot be accepted as a realized person. There is nothing in her life that suggests she understood anything about the Buddha's view of reality.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 11:35 PM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

Jeff H said:

I consider myself to be on a spiritual path, but I don't know how far along that path I will get in this life. When I look back on my life now, I can construct a narrative of that path twisting and turning through many religious, non-religious, and anti-religious processes, all leading to Buddhism – where I am now. If I look at any phase of this life, or if I project that trajectory over many lifetimes, how far did I get in any single lifetime? Those specific limits define discrete pinnacles and nadirs of my personal journey. But they all contributed to the possibility of realizing my complete potential.

I believe Buddhism holds the key, and Buddhists I respect very highly tell me it is possible to gain certainty of that. But even if I had such certainty, I don't think it would be appropriate to diminish non-Buddhist paths or to claim exclusivity. In fact, every religion does that. But the One True Path should be above that, confident that its veracity will be recognized by those who arrive at its doors by whatever means. Those prior means are contributory and complementary.

Malcolm wrote:

Āryadeva states quite clear that realization is based on view. It is not diminishing other paths to point out that the Buddhadharma is unique with respect to this view of empty dependent origination, and that from this perspective, it is not possible to be free from the afflictions that drive rebirth without realizing the meaning of empty dependent origination. We also do not need to apologize for asserting that without the eightfold path, liberation is not possible. We can also acknowledge that other paths have different baseline assumptions that are at odds with ours, have visions of liberation which are not consistent with ours, and therefore, propose results which are not commensurate with ours.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 11:07 PM

Title: Re: Ancestor worship from a Mahayana POV

Content:

Admin_PC said:

To be clear, I was talking about references like:

<https://www.accesstoinsight.org/tipitaka/kn/pv/pv.1.05.than.html> (from the Petavatthu of the Khuddaka Nikaya) - offerings benefit dead relatives.

<https://www.accesstoinsight.org/tipitaka/an/an10/an10.177.than.html> (from the Anguttara Nikaya) - which dead relatives can receive offerings.

<https://www.accesstoinsight.org/tipitaka/dn/dn.31.0.nara.html> (from the Digha Nikaya) - offering alms on behalf of dead relatives.

Since the OP is about Mahayana, the obvious sutra references are:

The Ksitigarbha Sutra

The Ullambana Sutra

Fascicle 40 of the Avatamsaka

Malcolm wrote:

That is quite a bit different than making offerings to ancestors. For example, it includes one's deceased children, deceased siblings, and so on. No doubt one can try to relieve the suffering of one's deceased relatives by making offerings of sur while they are in the bardo. But such people do not even need to be related to you as well.

As Merriam-Webster defines the term:

Definition of ancestor worship: the custom of venerating deceased ancestors who are considered still a part of the family and whose spirits are believed to have the power to intervene in the affairs of the living.

There are remnants of this in Tibetan culture in the form of rgyal po spirits -- almost every Tibetan family has something like this. But it is not part of Buddhadharma, it is a hangover from pre-buddhist Tibetan folk religion, and I suspect that it is the same in China, and Japan. In Shinto, there is definitely an idea of ancestor veneration in the form of the Kami.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 10:54 PM

Title: Re: Where is Sakyamuni Buddha?

Content:

heart said:

Seriously, you want to have a discussion about the words reality and truth? I am not interested.

/magnus

DGA said:

That's OK. I think it's an important distinction, but not all of us agree.

heart said:

Do you think relative truth is an reality, yes or no?

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Relative truth is a mistaken cognition about a given thing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 10:40 PM

Title: Re: Hello All

Content:

No_Mind said:

Not with intention to ruffle any more feathers ..

I personally think there is no inherent contradiction between believing in DO (to understand punarbhava) and Buddha's teachings and also believing in "the underlying natural order of the Universe whose ultimate essence is difficult to circumscribe due to it being non conceptual yet evident" and/or "single binding unity behind diversity in all that exists in the universe."

Malcolm wrote:

This contradicts the view of the Buddha in its entirety.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 10:25 PM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

rory said:

Of course this is what Malcolm et al. is about: the Lotus Sutra undermines suppositions of TB, ideas about everybody becoming a buddha, karmic transfer by Buddhas and Bodhisattvas, Jizo preaching in Hell to all beings, animals, insects all sentient beings being equal to humans goes against their school and I daresay their egos.

DGA said:

Returning to this ^^

How does the Lotus Sutra undermine any supposition of any school of Tibetan Buddhism? What aspect of the Lotus Sutra are you referring to? What supposition are you referring to? And how is any of this warranted to the topic at hand?

If anyone cares to follow me down this rabbit hole, consider the posts below as a starting point:

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=102&t=27263&start=20#p422334>

Malcolm wrote:

Her statements is a misconception piled upon misconception.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 9:59 PM

Title: Re: "All Buddha-Nature is One"

Content:

DGA said:

"all Buddha-nature is one"

Astus said:

Buddha-nature is a quality, not an object, and that quality is emptiness.

florin said:

Qualities can only be thought of as existing in relation to something isn't it ?
So what is budha nature the quality of ?

Malcolm wrote:

Sentient beings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 9:00 PM

Title: Re: sang and serkyem practice

Content:

Lukeinaz said:

Yeah, I only ask because in the sang and serkyem booklet it says "for Sangchod you should prepare serkyem". I am still confused about what that means.

Malcolm wrote:

Means you need to make a serkyem for the offerings also. Sang and serkhyem are commonly done in the morning, after which one has a tea break with tea prepared for the rite.

When doing serkhyem in the evening, one also needs to have cups set out for the participants so they all have a little wine at the end. If doing intense Ngaggong or something, you need to take breaks, and during breaks, one has a drink -- this is the mthong brgyud, the seeing lineage.

Adamantine said:

Is that corresponding to making an inner offering to inner dharmapalas?

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is literally having a drink with the The Jewels and the protectors.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 8:58 PM

Title: Re: What Does It Actually Mean to Practice Dzogchen?

Content:

florin said:

According to CNNr you "finally become a dzogchen practitioner" when you have achieved the level of released shine or the ability to integrate with circumstances.

Malcolm wrote:

That is one of the that things he has said, but not the only thing he has said on this issue.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 11:33 AM

Title: Re: What Does It Actually Mean to Practice Dzogchen?

Content:

Dawai Gocha said:

Just don't see the point in establishing this rigid intellectual trapping of the word. They have Theravadins, Mahayanists, Tantrikas, etc., but those in dzogchen lineages can't be called dzogchenpas? Doesn't seem to make sense.

We have tulkus in our lineage and even at a few years old, I don't have a problem calling them dzogchenpas.

krodha said:

The point being made is that there are (i) those who actually possess a knowledge of their nature and (ii) those who don't.

Those who possess that knowledge [rig pa] have come to directly know the meaning of "Dzogchen." The same cannot be said for those who haven't.

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, but let's be sure not to turn that nature into an object too.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 11:05 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

marting said:

I think a simpler explanation is that they were dealing with the real world around them.

Malcolm wrote:

"Dealing with the real world around them" is not karma hall pass.

marting said:

Stuff happens and they need to deal with it.

Malcolm wrote:

Rulers all go to hell. It's the price they all pay for power in this life.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 11:03 AM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

DGA said:

I don't think the leadership in Pyongyang is crazy. It's weird and it's bad, no doubt, but it's not crazy. It's highly consistent. It's not erratic. And that's one reason why the Trump administration's approach to NK is such a disaster.

More on this:

<https://theintercept.com/2017/09/26/north-korea-donald-trump-kim-jong-un/>

TharpaChodron said:

North and South Korea are joining together (so I hear) for the first time in a long while at the Olympics. I'm no fan of Trump, but what if all this bluster and drama brought the two sides together and ironically brought about more peace? I may be just talking crazy, but stranger things have happened.

DGA said:

Yes, and that aligns with what I've read and heard from South Koreans: the sentiment is that US policy and presence is a bigger impediment to peace than anything the North might think or do. That's how the people are feeling. Consequently, there is a beginning of rapprochement between North and South, implicitly against the US.

I really, really, really don't want to see a war on the Korean peninsula. It would be a bloodbath and could initiate a global conflict that none of us even want to think about.

Malcolm wrote:

It would be a disaster of biblical proportion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 10:52 AM

Title: Re: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

MiphamFan said:

Gross simplifications.

Right in your reply itself you admit that Hindus seek the atman while Buddhists talk about AN atman.

Lucas Oliveira said:

Yes

many Catholics developed virtues before finding the Buddha's teachings and this helped these people on the Buddhist path the same with Hindus, Taoists, Shintoists and various people of other religions.

so I think it right to say that other religions can help people on the Buddhist path.

Malcolm wrote:

Religions, including Buddhism, are only as good or bad, kind or mean, as the people who practice them.

The realization of Buddhadharma is unsurpassable in meaning and benefit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 7:14 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

MiphamFan said:

I'm not advocating for war, but it seems like the Mahayana relationship with violence is a bit more complex than the complete condemnation of it in the Pali Canon. There is that famous story of the captain and the potential mass murderer, and plenty of episodes of Mahayana/Vajrayana masters seeming to endorse violent force in some contexts:

https://info-

buddhism.com/Orientalism_Violence_Tibetan_Buddhism_Elliot_Sperling.html

marting said:

I think a simpler explanation is that they were dealing with the real world around them.

Malcolm wrote:

"Dealing with the real world around them" is not karma hall pass.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 7:12 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Way-Fun said:

Yes, of course.

Fear-as-fear is the feeling of not wanting to be afraid. In that case there is a thing, 'fear,' a place, 'here and now,' a person, 'me,' and 'I' want it to go away from 'here' in the immediate future, where that very same 'I' will soon be, so that I can go back to the way I was before I was afraid. Without a construing a 'here' and 'me,' and so on, what remains? When you know fear intimately, without conceptual elaboration, it is not-fear.

The Bodhisattva of Fear (you) awakens fear (you) through the dharma gate of fear (you).

You (fear) awaken you (fear) through the dharma gate of you (fear).

Fear is not afraid, desire does not want, thought doesn't know.

Grigoris said:

You are posting in the academic discussion sub-forum of a Buddhist board, so please quote a Buddhist source for your theory or I will be forced to delete your post.

kirtu said:

The general flow of exposition follows Zen Buddhist teisho form. You can find numerous published teisho saying essentially this.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:
This isn't a Zendo.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 7:09 AM
Title: Re: What Does It Actually Mean to Practice Dzogchen?
Content:
krodha said:
The first instance of recognizing said nature is the point that "practicing Dzogchen" begins, at least in my understanding.

Malcolm wrote:
This is when you become a Dzogchenpa, not just a Dzogchen practitioner.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 6:57 AM
Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions
Content:

marting said:
Very dependent on whether or not one caught the anti-Trump fever last year.

Malcolm wrote:
Trump is fool, leading other fools.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 6:54 AM
Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Trump is an aggressive fool, and he wants to start a nuclear war with someone.

marting said:
No.

<http://thehill.com/opinion/international/370904-enabled-by-china-north-korea-is-still-a-bully-with-impunity>

Meanwhile, President Trump has broken from recent tradition by not pandering, yet he is criticized as the one inciting tensions. Enabler China will cheer on the regime at its 70th anniversary commemoration in September. Bullies don't call out bullies; they need each other.

Yes.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, no. Osth is not a particularly reliable source.

<https://www.counterpunch.org/2013/12/20/pakistan-outs-three-us-cia-station-chiefs-in-three-years/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 6:52 AM

Title: Re: What Does It Actually Mean to Practice Dzogchen?

Content:

Aryjna said:

ChNNR says in 'Longchenpa's Advice from the Heart' At the beginning, we may dwell in our real potentiality or real nature for five or ten seconds in a period of twenty-four hours. Then, applying the practice more and more, we may be able to remain for some minutes, then for some hours, thus becoming Dzogchen yogins.

That would probably exclude a large percentage of the people who are practicing Dzogchen.

krodha said:

The first instance of recognizing said nature is the point that "practicing Dzogchen" begins, at least in my understanding.

The path [lam] consists of fluctuating between equipoise and post-equipoise, which is what Rinpoche is referring to.

Whether that excludes a large percentage I'm not sure.

Malcolm wrote:

This is too narrow a definition. If you are practicing practices characteristic of Dzogchen, etc., then you are a Dzogchen practitioner.

For example, if you are solely a practitioner of Lamdre, you are not a Dzogchen practitioner. On the other hand, there is no difference in meaning between Dzogchen trekcho, Kagyu Mahamudra, the view of the inseparability of samsara and nirvana, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 6:49 AM

Title: Re: What Does It Actually Mean to Practice Dzogchen?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, obviously, it means whatever Malcolm says it means.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. See my post above.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 6:48 AM

Title: Re: What Does It Actually Mean to Practice Dzogchen?

Content:

krodha said:

My point was this: I wouldn't call someone a mechanic if they have never touched a car engine. These individuals may be practitioners engaged in sadhānas, sure. Aspirants, certainly. But yogins of ati, I personally feel that is something different.

Even if they claim to be practicing tregcho and so on, how do I know what they are doing? One can claim to be practicing tregcho yet merely be sitting, distracted, in something that merely resembles samatha. Similarly, one can claim to be practicing thogal, yet just be sitting there, completely distracted, enjoying a light show. There is no way to tell who is applying these views accurately.

That being the case, are the individuals in question practicing Dzogchen? Outwardly it may appear that way. Inwardly though, where it truly matters, I cannot say. For all I know they may be just like someone dressed up in a police officer costume, outwardly appearing as such, yet in actuality not so.

In any case, for asking this question I've now been labeled: arrogant, pedantic, lost, a teapot filled with poison, a mess, and was told: Knowing your real name I'll also encourage others to stay clear.

Malcolm wrote:

Chogyal Namkhai Norbu's answer to this is simple— if you are doing practices which are included in the Dzogchen path, and that includes such preliminaries as creation, completion, rushan, and so on, you are a Dzogchen practitioner.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 6:37 AM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

MiphamFan said:

Malcolm is right actually.

Do you think Xi Jinping managed to carry out his anti-corruption measures without ruffling feathers? Bo Xilai is only the most prominent official he cracked down on.

Malcolm wrote:

From what I understand, the anti-corruption charges, while addressing real issues, are a cover for a turf war between four major political factions in China.

MiphamFan said:

Yeah, of course.

Another divide within China is between the old school Marxists and the liberals in power. Liberals in the (original) economic sense.

China is yuuuuuge, it is silly to assume it is united.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, liberalizing the economy is dangerous to entrenched power -- this is why European monarchs resisted it for so long.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 6:34 AM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

I don't think it will ever happen. If anything, this seems more like political posturing, a la Reagan era "Star Wars." Smoke and mirrors. Both sides are poking a proverbial hornets nest and like Cuba, Russia, China...too much at stake to instigate an huge imbalance in global politics. The US works with China too much to flex on their little watch dog.

Malcolm wrote:

Trump is an aggressive fool, and he wants to start a nuclear war with someone. You don't recall that one of his first questions "to the generals" was "why can't we use them?"

I only hope to Buddha that Mattis or someone tackles the f&^%ing guy when he tries to press the button.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 6:33 AM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

MiphamFan said:

Malcolm is right actually.

Do you think Xi Jinping managed to carry out his anti-corruption measures without ruffling feathers? Bo Xilai is only the most prominent official he cracked down on.

Malcolm wrote:

From what I understand, the anti-corruption charges, while addressing real issues, are a cover for a turf war between four major political factions in China.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 6:25 AM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

China is not as stable as you think.

marting said:

I'm not sure about your assessment.

Malcolm wrote:

No country with 50 major ethnic groups that are under constant harassment can be considered stable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 6:23 AM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

marting said:

Malcolm, we're talking about China, one of the most prosperous if not the most prosperous economy in the world and in the last few years has quickly and decisively consolidated power into the hands of a life-long dictator. You still think building up a country's economy will solve these problems?

Maybe I need some more coffee...

Malcolm wrote:

China is not as stable as you think. There is a massive turf war happening. What we see on the outside is not a reflection of what is going in inside.

However, Trump's trade policies with respect to China, as well as the rest of our trade partners are nothing short of absurd and foolish.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 6:11 AM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

kirtu said:

On top of that we have real lunatics making decisions both in Washington and Pyongyang.

Malcolm wrote:

We don't agree on much when it comes to the US, but we agree on this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 6:06 AM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If the US wanted to solve this problem, just as in Cuba, they could have implemented something like a Marshall plan to build up the economy of NK.

marting said:

Right...we naively thought this would work with China. And to consider Cuba has been targeting U.S. diplomats leaving a number of them <http://www.independent.co.uk/news/world/americas/us-diplomats-cuba-havana-embassy-deaf-secret-sonic-device-attacks-headaches-concussion-brain-injury-a7925376.html>. Same old, same old there. In any case I love reading backseat policy making.

Malcolm wrote:

Ummm, we have tortured Cuba since the revolution. We bombed NK into the f*&^ing stone age. You wonder why they hate us.

With respect to China and Russia, what do you suggest? That we keep them economically isolated? If so, our military budget, rather than being half of what we now spend, would be 90 percent.

The kinds of foreign policies we pursued in the 1950's and 1960's were not economically feasible.

There is only one way to create democratic countries: step one, lift them up economically; step two; encourage them to develop democratic institutions; step three, encourage them to liberalize their economies.

Neither China nor Russia have liberal economies, and in the end, this is what will bring about their downfall.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 5:50 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

MiphamFan said:

Why did Mahayana and Vajrayana masters of the past such as the Great Fifth and Amoghavajra use war magic though?

Malcolm wrote:

They used it as a means of coping with their own afflictions, and the afflictions of their patrons.

MiphamFan said:

OK, let's put aside the Great Fifth but what about more peaceful types of war magic just for defence as Amoghavajra used?

He didn't target the invading armies specifically, just did a rite to bring peace AFAIK. The same rite has still been done in Japan.

Malcolm wrote:

There are four activities; pacification is the first. We use these four all the time; the target is still the same -- why? It is because of the affliction in our own minds that sentient beings appear to us as friends and enemies.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 5:43 AM

Title: Re: Translate text from translation

Content:

weitsicht said:

Hi,

assume there is a tibetan Buddhist text I have in English.

I'd like to translate this into German because it seems it hasn't been yet.

Would it be considered OK if I'd do so, I mean not knowing Tibetan hence not being able to check about deviations that would alter the words chosen then in German language?

Malcolm wrote:

You could, but you would need to have it checked by someone who knows Tibetan against Tibetan to make sure you do not deviate from the meaning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 5:39 AM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

DGA said:

It's a wag-the-dog, in other words. And it's a repulsive strategic consideration: to wage war with the intention of improving one's potential margin in Congress.

marting said:

I don't think this will be a factor in the decision.

Malcolm wrote:

I think this is the only factor in the decision. If the US wanted to solve this problem, just as in Cuba, they could have implemented something like a Marshall plan to build up the economy of NK. Instead we are starving them. As the Buddha said:

Thus from goods not being bestowed on the destitute, poverty... stealing... violence... murder... lying... evil-speaking... immorality grew rife.

Theft and killing lead to false speech, jealousy, adultery, incest and perverted lust...

We should not expect positive outcomes from crippling sanctions. It did not work in Iraq; it did not work with Iran; and it will not work with North Korea. It just causes these economies to focus all their GDP on their militaries at the expense of civilians. Arguably, Russian interference in our political process is also a result of sanctions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 5:35 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

MiphamFan said:

Why did Mahayana and Vajrayana masters of the past such as the Great Fifth and Amoghavajra use war magic though?

Malcolm wrote:

They used it as a means of coping with their own afflictions, and the afflictions of their patrons.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 5:34 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

marting said:

Say you think the United States has been the most benevolent actor on the world stage out of all the contenders and you'll be looked at as nuts these days.

Malcolm wrote:

I happen to agree with you, which is why the Trump Presidency is such a shame. He has disowned the economic and political stability the US afforded the world (despite a sometimes checkered foreign policy) and has actively aided and abetted the forces of illiberalism to rise to the forefront. But part of that stability was assured because the Soviets and the Chinese had closed economies, and the US dominated the world in trade. With opening of China and the downfall of the Soviet Union, globalization has had the predictable effect of transitioning manufacturing jobs to cheaper labor markets without providing many Americans with jobs in their place. But the ridiculous rhetoric of the Trump administration has been neatly refuted by Dave Chapelle, who pointed out we don't want jobs "to come back" from China because we don't want $9,000 iPhones and $1000 Nikes.

Global trade liberalization is a fact, and we can do it well or poorly, but we cannot sit out the game.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 5:21 AM

Title: Re: Potential for War in Korea: Causes and Conditions

Content:

DGA said:

You may be familiar with the proposal made within the Trump administration for a "bloody nose" strategy viz. North Korea. The idea is for US forces to make limited military strikes on North Korean targets with the intention of weakening and embarrassing the Kim regime, but in such a way as to somehow avoid a reprisal. That's impossible, by the way. More on that below.

More urgently, consider the implicit motivation for such an action:

White House National Security Council senior director for Asian affairs Matthew Pottinger reportedly said in a recent closed-door meeting with US experts on Korean Peninsula issues that a limited strike on the North might help in the midterm elections. http://english.hani.co.kr/arti/english_edition/e_editorial/830615.html?utm_content=buffer0b588&utm_medium=social&utm_source=twitter.com&utm_campaign=buffer here are some analyses explaining why the "bloody nose" idea is destined to failure and highly dangerous to global security.

It's a wag-the-dog, in other words. And it's a repulsive strategic consideration: to wage war with the intention of improving one's potential margin in Congress.

<https://www.theatlantic.com/international/archive/2018/01/the-cataclysm-that-would-follow-a-bloody-nose-strike-in-north-korea/551924/>

<https://www.axios.com/why-a-bloody-nose-strike-1517590458-9d68a429-20b5-41f7-be8a-c26c1560605f.html>

Malcolm wrote:

The use of the poison of atomic weapons that have the power to destroy in a single second the presence of the Buddha's teachings and the lives of sentient beings on this great earth of ours, and every bit of goodness in the universe and its inhabitants, will destroy the human race. The time when these extremely lethal weapons never seen before will be used is not far off—signs and indications are growing each day. So, moved irrepressibly by insupportable sadness and intense fear, we must call out like children wailing for their mothers to the one who can stop this: Orgyen Padma.

<http://www.lotsawahouse.org/tibetan-masters/chatral-rinpoche/rishis-maledictory-incantation>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 5:16 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

Ricky said:

At the same time you should probably consider yourself lucky to have taken birth in it.

Malcolm wrote:

I am quite sure luck had nothing to do with it. We don't believe in luck in Buddhadharma, as it happens.

Ricky said:

Good karma I mean.

Thanks for all the Buddha quotes by the way.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, the article where these quotes are drawn from is well thought out and should really be understood by all Buddhists, everywhere.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 4:41 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

Ricky said:

At the same time you should probably consider yourself lucky to have taken birth in it.

Malcolm wrote:

I am quite sure luck had nothing to do with it. We don't believe in luck in Buddhadharma, as it happens.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 4:39 AM

Title: Re: Four Dharma Seals

Content:

weitsicht said:

To whom this may be of interest:

The physicist claims two things being uncompounded: time and space.

There's where the difference lies.

Maybe in the future a new elementary particle for time will solve that?

We'll see.

Malcolm wrote:

Neither time nor space in physics are uncompounded since they both are subject to change and modification.

weitsicht said:

Hmmm -you mean that second kind of space as mentioned in your January 29th post?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 4:36 AM

Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?

Content:

rory said:

If Malcolm and DGA really want to understand Nichiren Buddhism they should join the Zhiyi study group; Nichiren relied entirely on Zhiyi and Tendai philosophy which would explain the totality of NMRK. Unless they do not want to do the work but merely criticize and undermine people's faith.

gassho

Rory

Malcolm wrote:

Rory, you do realize that DGA is an ordained Tendai priest, who used to run a Tendai group in DC, affiliated with the Tendai monastery in Upstate NY? Hence his name, Jikan, which he generally prefers to go by, rather than Daniel. Jikan is very open minded, he has even studied Tibetan Buddhism, unlike you.

rory said:

As far as I know DGA was ordained a NY Betsuin doshu, meaning a kind of assistant priest, it's a preliminary ordination that you get when you start out. I have no idea what his training entailed as the NY Betsuin does things differently than Japan. I don't think he is a priest anymore but I could be wrong.

Malcolm wrote:

My point was only that Jikan actually has a lot of experience with Tendai. So while you can castigate me all you like, I thought it was a little strange to harsh out on Jikan.

rory said:

Rev. Jikai is a Tendai Shu priest, meaning he is an acarya; he went through esoteric training on Mt. Hiei. He also reads Japanese and Chinese, which I don't think DGA has.

Malcolm wrote:

I wasn't comparing them, merely pointing out that Jikan is not a hick from the sticks.

rory said:

If DGA understood Zhiyi and the intellectual background he would know where Nichiren is coming from, Queequeg certainly does, and he certainly would have understood our other conversation:\

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=102&t=27263&p=423053#p423053>

but you're invited Malcolm

gassho

Rory

Malcolm wrote:

Thanks.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 3:33 AM

Title: Re: sang and serkyem practice

Content:

Lukeinaz said:

so you would have a drink from cup on altar and then put it outside?

Malcolm wrote:

No, you have a serkyen cup for the altar, and you have your own cup, When you are done, you drink your tea; and after take the shrine tea out.

Lukeinaz said:

Cheers!

Malcolm wrote:

Exactly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 3:27 AM

Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?

Content:

rory said:

If Malcolm and DGA really want to understand Nichiren Buddhism they they should join the Zhiyi study group; Nichiren relied entirely on Zhiyi and Tendai philosophy which would explain the totality of NMRK. Unless they do not want to do the work but merely criticize and undermine people's faith.

gassho

Rory

Malcolm wrote:

Rory, you do realize that DGA is an ordained Tendai priest, who used run a Tendai group in DC, affiliated with the Tendai monastery in Upstate NY? Hence his name, Jikan, which he generally prefers to go by, rather than Daniel. Jikan is very open minded, he has even studied Tibetan Buddhism, unlike you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 3:25 AM

Title: Re: sang and serkyem practice

Content:

Lukeinaz said:

A couple questions about ChNN's sang and serkyem.

Can the serkyem materials be offered as well if you are just doing a sang offering?

heart said:

I never seen that done, I am not sure why you would do that.

For serkyem, does the practitioner consume any part of the offering when finished, or does it all go outside?

Thanks!

No, it is all going outside.

/magnus

Lukeinaz said:

Yeah, I only ask because in the sang and serkyem booklet it says "for Sangchod you should prepare serkyem". I am still confused about what that means.

Malcolm wrote:

Means you need to make a serkyem for the offerings also. Sang and serkhyem are commonly done in the morning, after which one has a tea break with tea prepared for the rite.

When doing serkhyem in the evening, one also needs to have cups set out for the participants so they all have a little wine at the end. If doing intense Ngaggong or something, you need to take breaks, and during breaks, one has a drink -- this is the mthong brgyud, the seeing lineage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 3:22 AM

Title: Re: sang and serkyem practice

Content:

Jay said:

Thanks Magnus- Yes, it is ChNN's practice. I'm really looking forward to it. I don't have any sang at the moment, but have some green tara incense from Bhutan. Would it be ok to use that? In the book, it says to empower the sang water...how do I do that?

I'm hoping a nice glass of merlot appeases my guests

J

Malcolm wrote:

You can grind up cedar needles, or use sage (smudge stick), or use artemisia, etc. Typically, with ser khyem, you would use tea in the morning, booze at night. You also have to have a drink as well, of either tea or booze.

Lukeinaz said:

so you would have a drink from cup on altar and then put it outside?

Malcolm wrote:

No, you have a serkyen cup for the altar, and you have your own cup. When you are done, you drink your tea; and after take the shrine tea out.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 1:57 AM

Title: Re: Sutras Extolling Benefits of Calm Abiding?

Content:

WeiHan said:

I'll be grateful if anyone can point to me the following which I'll describe.

I know of sutras that extol the benefits for a great variety of practices such as reciting the names of various Buddhas, developing loving kindness, refraining from 10 non-virtuous deeds, practicing generosity and developing bodhicitta etc...

However, probably I am not very erudite, I can't think of any sutras that extol the benefits of calm abiding meditation or even insight meditation. This doesn't click too well with understanding as calm abiding and insight meditation are crucial ingredients along the path for many schools in Buddhism. I'll be thankful if anybody help me out with this.

Malcolm wrote:

The Bodhisattva Pitika Sūtra is pretty comprehensive in this regard.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 1:48 AM

Title: Re: Contradicting sutras

Content:

cj39 said:

The five grave offenses include things like killing ones parents, drawing the blood of a Buddha, causing a monk our nun to fall, or creating a schism within the Sangha. With the exception of the last one, these are fairly easy to avoid.

Malcolm wrote:

The last one is extremely easy to avoid since a schism in the Sangha (sanghabheda) can only be committed by a fully ordained bhikṣu.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 1:28 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

shaunc said:

We don't live in a Buddhist utopia. In this world there is evil and you have to box on with the best of them.

There's plenty of Buddhist countries out there and they all have a military, a police force and a judicial system.

Yes, I agree, if everyone in the world followed the dharma there would be not much use for these institutions but not everybody does so society has to protect itself from oppressors.

Ricky said:

I agree, in a practical functioning society you need military and police. I probably wouldn't be enjoying all these freedoms and privileges today if it wasn't for all those who sacrificed their lives fighting tyranny and oppression. Everyone including buddhists should be grateful for that.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, but if you are referring to the United States, our country was built on slavery and ethnic cleansing by a European minority whose only virtue was creating civil institutions that were able to evolve (albeit imperfectly) beyond the narrow limits imagined by the founders. So lets not get carried away with all the freedom fighting rhetoric. I personally think that democracy based on liberal economics is the way to go, but lets not kid ourselves into thinking that the US is some paragon of virtue. It really isn't.

Yes, we need police and an army, or course, and yes, like any country, the US has a right to defend itself. The Buddha said:

This, dear son, that you, leaning on the Dhamma, honoring, respecting and revering it, doing homage to it, hallowing it, being yourself a Dhamma-banner, a Dhamma-signal, having the Dhamma as your master, should provide the right watch, ward and protection for your own folk, for the army, for the nobles, for vassals and brahmins and householders, for town and country dwellers, for the religious world and for beasts and birds.

The Buddha observed that if a country is in the side of virtue, any attack against it will be <https://www.accesstoinsight.org/tipitaka/dn/dn.16.1-6.vaji.html>:

5. And the Blessed One addressed the brahman Vassakara in these words: "Once, brahman, I dwelt at Vesali, at the Sarandada shrine, and there it was that I taught the Vajjis these seven conditions leading to (a nation's) welfare. [5] So long, brahman, as these endure among the Vajjis, and the Vajjis are known for it, their growth is to be expected, not their decline."

Thereupon the brahman Vassakara spoke thus to the Blessed One: "If the Vajjis, Venerable Gotama, were endowed with only one or another of these conditions leading to welfare, their growth would have to be expected, not their decline. What then of all the seven? No harm, indeed, can be done to the Vajjis in battle by Magadha's king, Ajatasattu, except through treachery or discord. Well, then, Venerable Gotama, we will take our leave, for we have much to perform, much work to do."

"Do as now seems fit to you, brahman." And the brahman Vassakara, the chief minister of Magadha, approving of the Blessed One's words and delighted by them, rose from his seat and departed.

Victory is suffering:

Victory breeds hatred,
The defeated live in pain.
Happily the peaceful live,
Giving up victory and defeat.

Dhp. v. 201

The Buddha in fact recommends social welfare, unlike the present policies of this administration:

But perchance his majesty might think: "I'll soon put a stop to these scoundrels' game by degradation and banishment and fines and bonds and death." But their license cannot be satisfactorily put a stop to so. The remnant left unpunished would still go on harassing the realm. Now there is one method to adopt to put a thorough end to this disorder. Whosoever there be in the king's realm who devote themselves to keeping cattle and the farm, to them let his majesty give food and seed corn. Whosoever there be in the king's realm who devote themselves to trade, to them let his majesty give capital. Whosoever there be in the king's realm who devote themselves to government service, to them let his majesty give wages and food. Then those men, following each his own business, will no longer harass the realm; the king's revenue will go up; the country will be quiet and at peace; and the populace pleased with one another and happy, dancing their children in their arms, will dwell with open doors.

In other words, Roosevelt's New Deal, Johnson's Great Society, Obama's Quantitative Easing policies and Obamacare are precisely the kind of policies the Buddha recommends for a peaceful society.

It is the neglect of the poor that Buddha describes as the downfall of society:

Thus from goods not being bestowed on the destitute, poverty... stealing... violence... murder... lying... evil-speaking... immorality grew rife.
Theft and killing lead to false speech, jealousy, adultery, incest and perverted lust...

Everything above comes from <https://www.accesstoinight.org/lib/authors/harris/wheel392.html#fnt-45>.

The Buddha said nothing in Mahāyāna sūtras that adds anything to this at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 1:03 AM

Title: Re: What is an existential threat to Dharma?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

My unfinished degree in ethnomusicology just fell off the wall it currently isn't hanging on when I read that.

Are you quite sure?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I am quite sure. Hand bells, thighbone trumpets, and damarus, yes, these come from India.

The rest, the massive horns (dung chen), the large drums (rnga chen), the misnamed rgya ling (Indian horn) is actually a <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Sorna>, of Persian origin. The cymbal is definitely of Persian/Central Asian origin, called sil snyan in Tibetan. Then there is the Bonpo bell called a Shang (Zang in Persian) and so on.

The reason for this is simple. Tibetan adopted Nestorian monastic customs and hierarchies in Tibetan monasteries. Persia was the major cultural influence on Western Tibet, aka Zhang Zhung empire, where power in the Himalayas was concentrated until the 7th century with the rise of the Yarlung Dynasty.

Coëmgenu said:

Nestorian monastics using musical instruments? Were they allowed the usage of musical instruments? This is very interesting to me. Where is this substantiated?

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, that is not what I meant to imply -- what I meant to imply was only that Central Asia is the source for much of Tibetan culture, and monastic musical idiom is no different. The music of Tibetan monasteries is war music, actually. It comes from Tibetan armies, they copied it from Central Asians like so much else in the deep fiber of Tibetan cultural influences. Basically, Tibetans adapted their "brass band" music to monastic uses.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 12:59 AM

Title: Re: Nepalese Lotus Sūtra

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Is anyone aware of English translations of specifically the Nepalese or Gilgit Lotus Sūtra, rather than the more common Chinese recension?

Is the only translation of the Nepalese LS the French one from the 1800s?

Malcolm wrote:

It is definitely not as definitive as Kumarajiva's translation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 12:57 AM

Title: Re: sang and serkyem practice

Content:

jay said:

Thanks magnus- Yes, it is ChNN's practice. I'm really looking forward to it. I don't have any sang at the moment, but have some green tara incense from bhutan. Would it be ok to use that? In the book, it says to empower the sang water...how do I do that?

I'm hoping a nice glass of merlot appeases my guests

J

Malcolm wrote:

You can grind up cedar needles, or use sage (smudge stick), or use artemesia, etc. Typically, with ser khyem, you would use tea in the morning, booze at night. You also have to have a drink as well, of either tea or booze.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 12:54 AM

Title: Re: What is an existential threat to Dharma?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

for example, Tibetan monastic music, which ultimately derives from Persian martial music

Coëmgenu said:

My unfinished degree in ethnomusicology just fell off the wall it currently isn't hanging on when I read that.

Are you quite sure?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I am quite sure. Hand bells, thighbone trumpets, and damarus, yes, these come from India.

The rest, the massive horns (dung chen), the large drums (rnga chen), the misnamed rgya ling (Indian horn) is actually a <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Sorna>, of Persian origin. The cymbal is definitely of Persian/Central Asian origin, called sil snyan in Tibetan. Then there is the Bonpo bell called a Shang (Zang in Persian) and so on.

The reason for this is simple. Tibetan adopted Nestorian monastic customs and hierarchies in Tibetan monasteries. Persia was the major cultural influence on Western Tibet, aka Zhang Zhung empire, where power in the Himalayas was concentrated until the 7th century with the rise of the Yarlung Dynasty.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 12:34 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Thomas Amundsen said:

Are you saying that the Lotus Sutra contradicts, say, Chapter Thirteen of the Guhyagarbha tantra? I had always thought they were compatible if interpreted in some kind of subtle way (i.e. the sravakayana and pratyekabuddhayanas necessarily funneling into the bodhisattvayana).

Malcolm wrote:

As you know, the Guhyagarbha's statment, "Incorrect realization, partial realization, and not realizing perfectly," refers respectively to nonbuddhists, śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, and those who practice the common Mahāyāna.

However, in the Indian treatises, "ekayāna" means different things. For example, in the Lankāvatāra, ekayāna does not include all the other vehicles. "The One Vehicle" refers to Mahāyāna only because it has not been obtained in the past by others. It is stated that it is because of the karmic traces and knowledge obscuration śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas have that the Buddha teaches three vehicles, and that the teaching of one vehicle is actually only for Mahāyānis. Given that the Lanka was set down quite some time later than the Saddharmapundarika, we can understand this as a response to it. Likewise, the Nirvana responds to the prediction of all sentient beings as capable of attaining Buddhahood in Saddharmapundarika with the notion of the icchantika, while at the same time promoting tathāgatagarbha, as contradictory as that may seem.

Thomas Amundsen said:

Very interesting! Thanks, Loppon!

Malcolm wrote:

I should add, that in Pali scriptures, ekayāna refers to the direct path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 5th, 2018 at 12:32 AM

Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?

Content:

Queequeg said:

That thread does not really contribute anything here at all.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure it does.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 4th, 2018 at 11:59 AM

Title: Re: Ancestor worship from a Mahayana POV

Content:

Admin_PC said:

Pali Sutas have a few references to making offerings to ancestors, even if only the hungry ghosts can collect.

Malcolm wrote:

There are references to ancestral offerings, but they refer to mundane rites belonging to a group, in so far as they do not involve killing.

I've never noticed offerings to ancestors mentioned.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 4th, 2018 at 3:04 AM

Title: Re: Hello All

Content:

Simon E. said:

The TOS says quite clearly that 'this is a forum for the discussion of Mahayana and Vajrayana Buddhism' and also 'this is not a comparative religion site'

I think we should respect that.

Malcolm wrote:

Just riding the fence, Simon, making sure no cattle rustlers were stealing from the herd.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 4th, 2018 at 3:03 AM

Title: Re: Hello All

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Now, as far as I am concerned, if one's practice of the path is not grounded on the view of dependent origination, one will not be able to understand reality properly, and one will not be able to wake up. Dependent origination is the "original nature" of everything and there is no "original nature" apart from dependent origination.

fuki said:

I agree, but again practise in other paths are not excluded from seeing DO and I've personally known an advaita teacher who taught this, sure it might be the exception to the rule, but just our other talk (don't know/non-dwelling/neti) we seem to agree about many points but also speak past each other. DO teachings might appear in buddhadharma but its not an exclusive to buddhadharma since there is no division in reality, so its nonsensical to say that outside of buddhadharma ppl cant awaken or are never grounded in DO, you might have not met them but ok. DO has no trademark it might be recorded as we know in Buddhism but depended origination is realized in daily life not by effort of the intellect. Again I agree it is an exception to the "rule" but the claim that there are no realized ppl outside of buddhadharma I could not make, Im sure I can find ancient books where the earth was still flat, or better that it couldnt possibly ever be round.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no teaching of dependent origination outside Buddhadharma. It is the Buddha's unique teaching, and does not exist in other traditons, and is in fact explicitly rejected in the source texts of Advaita and so on, fiercely rejected by Shankaracarya, etc.

I really cannot know what this person you refer to taught. But if they taught there was some truly existent ultimate reality then they were not teaching from the view point of dependent origination. No one who accepts and teaches dependent origination accepts there is such a reality.

The Samkhya teachings, which are the underlying structure for Hindu teachings in general, have something which might seem to be dependent origination, but it isn't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 4th, 2018 at 2:48 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha sat on a hillside under a dead tree watching Kapilavastu being sacked and his relatives being enslaved by King Ajatasatru after having dissuaded Ajatasatru on an earlier occasion from invading.

What we do in Mahāyāna in response to pure evil is keep our eyes open and act as witnesses.

Ricky said:

So basically just sit there and watch while your whole town gets massacred by savages. I don't think this is a very practical response for some reason.

Malcolm wrote:

It depends on your understanding the real situation of samsara. If you don't understand— you join in, pick sides, and go to three lower realms. This is called having a one-lifetime view.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 4th, 2018 at 2:43 AM

Title: Re: Is NMRK the definitive Buddhist path?

Content:

DGA said:

Actually, I think it was me who was careless in reading your conversation in that other thread.

What other practices would be involved viz. NMRK apart from chanting? I recognize this may be a stupid question, but I'm trying to come to a better understanding of your perspective.

Thank you for taking the time.

Malcolm wrote:

I once went to hear a Shingon monk, Jomyo Tanaka Sensei, his description of Buddhism in Japan was amusing:

In Zen we have "just sit," the mudra of the body; in Nichiren, we have "just chant," the mudra of speech; in Pure Land we have "just faith," the mudra of the mind; but in Shingon we have all three.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 4th, 2018 at 2:36 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The funny thing is that they are commenting on a passage of an event which never happened, apart from Tsang Nyon Heruka's imagination, a.k.a., "pure vision." Why do we know this? Gampopa's bio reports that Mila was the son of a widower, not a widow. Much of the account in this "autobiography" is about real as Harry Potter.

liuzg150181 said:

So much what we assume to know abt Milarepa's life nowadays is nothing but Tsang Nyon Heruka's imagination, a.k.a., "pure vision."?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. You need to read Peter Alan Roberts book on Rechungpa where he discusses at length the process by which Milarepa's biography is slowly altered over time, culminating in Tsang Nyon Heruka's fantasy novel. This, btw, does not mean that TNH's book is without literary merit -- quite the contrary. But we cannot rely on it for accurate information about Milarepa (or Marpa, etc.)

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 4th, 2018 at 2:28 AM

Title: Re: Hello All

Content:

fuki said:

Even if that is so Malcolm (I'm not asserting or denying historical accuracy at all) then what is recorded is clearly words depended on condition and circumstances of the time when the Buddha was alive, afterall the dharma is fluid, not fixed. I also know realized Buddhist masters today who will not say that it is not possible that there are realized ppl "outside" of Buddhadharma which I cannot ignore just because it is recorded in ancient texts. But really for me it doesnt matter if it is recorded in sutras whether there are realized ppl outside of buddhadharma or not, but I wont say its impossible only because it says so according to a sutra. But again it makes no difference to me, it doesn't affect practice. So I'm not in negation to what you claim, I also wouldn't assert it.

I made my reply to No Mind according to observed patterns I witnessed on the interweb, I rejoice in anyone who seeks to realize original nature, I'm just "afraid" his interest in Buddhism gets distracted from the usual trolling of ppl of demotivating him due to blindly locking him up in a mental "Hindu" picture. I hope I'm wrong.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha was pretty clear what Dharma and Discipline would contain awakened people, a Dharma and Discipline that contained the eightfold path. That path starts from right view.

Now, it is possible that someone, in isolation, based on having meditated Buddhist instructions in a past life, may in this life, for example, recall those and based on this attain awakening, a so-called pratyekabuddha. But they do not teach.

Now, as far as I am concerned, if one's practice of the path is not grounded on the view of dependent origination, one will not be able to understand reality properly, and one will not be able to wake up. Dependent origination is the "original nature" of everything and there is no "original nature" apart from dependent origination.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 4th, 2018 at 2:13 AM

Title: Re: Four Dharma Seals

Content:

weitsicht said:

To whom this may be of interest:

The physicist claims two things being uncompounded: time and space.

There's where the difference lies.

Maybe in the future a new elementary particle for time will solve that?

We'll see.

Malcolm wrote:

Neither time nor space in physics are uncompounded since they both are subject to change and modification.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 4th, 2018 at 2:03 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

Ricky said:

All I want to know is what is the Mahayana response when dealing with pure evil.

Bristollad said:

What is pure evil? Every sentient being has buddha nature.

Malcolm wrote:

As pointed out in another thread; the tathāgatagarbha theory is largely enumerated in the Nirvana Sūtra, the same sūtra that proposes a class of beings called icchantikas. Even Candrakīrti, while rejecting this theory in the face of it, admits there are some beings who are so evil, with so much bad karma, they will never attain liberation.

The Nirvana Sūtra also is the only Buddhist sūtra which advances something like a Buddhist concept of a just war.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 4th, 2018 at 2:02 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

Buddha taught non-violence.

Buddha did not taught violence.

Btw every single war in human history is motivated on wealth stealing, all the other motivations are politician excuses. You want to play the asura game? Go ahead, follow the advice of fools who perpetuate suffering, but know that there are always bad consequences.

Ricky said:

Nobody is talking about joining the military here. All I want to know is what is the Mahayana response when dealing with pure evil.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha sat on a hillside under a dead tree watching Kapilavastu being sacked and his relatives being enslaved by King Ajatasatru after having dissuaded Ajatasatru on an earlier occasion from invading.

What we do in Mahāyāna in response to pure evil is keep our eyes open and act as witnesses.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 4th, 2018 at 1:59 AM

Title: Re: Hello All

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This means there are no realized people at all outside of Buddhadharma.

fuki said:

Also there is zero proof that is what the Buddha actually said neither of us can know this, it's an assumption.

Malcolm wrote:

This is not at all the case. This is like claiming there is zero proof the Rig Veda survived intact as a oral text in more or less its present form for the past 3500 years.

The methods used by Buddhist monks during the time of the Buddha to memorize and then transmit what he said were very precise and specific, and frankly, their memories were trained to an amazingly high degree. There is too much agreement between what we have in the Agamas and the Pali Canon to imagine that the Buddha's words were not faithfully preserved. This does not mean there was no variation, or that no distortions crept in. But this particular assertion of the Buddha is so wide spread in so many different sūtras and suttas, that it cannot be ignored in the facile manner you have attempted to do so here.

No one who seriously studies these things refuses to acknowledge that the Agamas and the Pali Canon are a good record of what the Buddha taught his students in person.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 4th, 2018 at 1:28 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Bristollad said:

Autobiographies are a primary genre in Tibetan literature. The autobiographies are by people who are held to be of high spiritual attainment (e.g., Gyatso, 1998, 103). It might seem incoherent for an enlightened Buddhist to write an autobiography — how can one affirm an autobiography while denying the self?

It is certainly clear that these texts make liberal use of the first person singular. The official rejoinder to this alleged incoherence is that these works treat the author as merely a “conventional” person, not an enduring ultimate self. It is possible to speak of persons in this merely conventional fashion, but Tibetan autobiographies suggest that this is not always consistently upheld. Often in these works, the author is reporting a past experience, and the recollections certainly do not seem to present the distanced perspective afforded by thinking that there really is no persisting self. Rather, they suggest a clear identification with the past experiencer. Consider, for instance, the most famous work in this tradition, The Life of Milarepa. We find the author describing a scene from years earlier in which he had returned to his ancestral home and found human bones among a heap of rags. He writes,

When I realized they were the bones of my mother, I was so overcome with grief that I could hardly stand it. I could not think, I could not speak, and an overwhelming sense of longing and sadness swept over me. (Quintman, 2010, p. 118; see also Shabkar, 1994, p. 32; Kongtrul, 2003; 172–3)

This passage is hardly a dispassionate report that a conventional person consisting of fleeting traits included a set of perceptions. Instead, it seems to be a recollection of a devastating personal experience. It is most plausible that Milarepa, in reflecting on this terrible event, could not suppress the sense that he had the experience of discovering his mother's bones, even if, in a different register, he would deny that there is any self in which he consists, or that he is now the same person who endured that experience.

It seems like they thought that someone who has conquered self-grasping (Milarepa) should be suffering from depersonalisation disorder.

One would hope that Jay Garfield at least would know the differences between the approaches of the different TB schools.

Malcolm wrote:

The funny thing is that they are commenting on a passage of an event which never happened, apart from Tsang Nyon Heruka's imagination, a.k.a., "pure vision." Why do we know this? Gampopa's bio reports that Mila was the son of a widower, not a widow. Much of the account in this "autobiography" is about real as Harry Potter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 4th, 2018 at 1:14 AM

Title: Re: Hello All

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Among those who do not agree, the Buddha.

fuki said:

Sit a while with case 32 of the gateless gate

Malcolm wrote:

This didactic story does not contradict what the Buddha has clearly stated in many sutras: to wit, outside of his Dharma and Discipline there are no realized person, no stream entrants, once-returners, never-returners, nor arhats. This means there are no realized people at all outside of Buddhadharma. As much as we may be fond of and recognize the value of some nonbuddhist masters, the height of their wisdom and words do not even reach the bottom slopes of the Buddha's incomparable wisdom.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 4th, 2018 at 12:21 AM

Title: Re: Former Pentagon UFO official: 'We may not be alone'

Content:

Dan74 said:

Were the Germans of 1939 wiser than the Germans of 1812 (Beethoven meets Goethe)? I don't know. I don't think there is conclusive evidence that we really learn from history, or at least that it sticks. Look at our history. 3000 years and we make the same mistakes over and over...

Malcolm wrote:

Evidence shows that people really only have at best a two generation memory. We only live 80 years or so. Without books, very little knowledge gets transferred from one generation to another, and what manages to get transferred is easily lost when an oral culture faces crisis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 4th, 2018 at 12:03 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It's easier to move the thread to the lounge.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 3rd, 2018 at 11:32 PM

Title: Can other religions/philosophies/practises complement Buddhadharma?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

[Note: Split from

<https://dharmaheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=10&t=27799&p=434014#p433657>. This topic cuts a fine line. Although DW doesn't allow discussion of other paths per se, a general discussion about complementing Buddhist practice with non-Buddhist practices, views, etc should be ok. At least let's give it a try.]

fuki said:

To me many religions/philosophies/practises can compliment each other but most on forums will not agree. So be ready for that.

Malcolm wrote:

Among those who do not agree, the Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 3rd, 2018 at 12:07 PM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

Pratyekabuddhahood ≠ Buddhahood.

Malcolm wrote:

According to your tradition it does, since there is only one vehicle and not three. In fact, Candrakīrti cites the Saddharmapuṇḍarīka in support of this verse.

ItsRaining said:

Lmao, do you know what the "One Vehicle" refereed to in his tradition actually means?

Malcolm wrote:

Sure.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 3rd, 2018 at 8:10 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

Bro... I don't even

Malcolm wrote:

Well, you cannot have it both ways. Either there is one vehicle, in which case the emptiness realized by śrāvaka arhats, pratyekabuddhas, and buddhas is the same (Candrakīrti's point of view) or three, in which case the emptiness realized by śrāvaka arhats, pratyekabuddhas, and buddhas is not the same.

Which one is it?

Thomas Amundsen said:

Are you saying that the Lotus Sutra contradicts, say, Chapter Thirteen of the Guhyagarbha tantra? I had always thought they were compatible if interpreted in some kind of subtle way (i.e. the sravakayana and pratyekabuddhayanas necessarily funneling into the bodhisattvayana).

Malcolm wrote:

As you know, the Guhyagarbha's statment, "Incorrect realization, partial realization, and not realizing perfectly," refers respectively to nonbuddhists, śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas, and those who practice the common Mahāyāna.

However, in the Indian treatises, "ekayāna" means different things. For example, in the Lankāvatāra, ekayāna does not include all the other vehicles. "The One Vehicle" refers to Mahāyāna only because it has not been obtained in the past by others. It is stated that it is because of the karmic traces and knowledge obscuration śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas have that the Buddha teaches three vehicles, and that the teaching of one vehicle is actually only for Mahāyānis. Given that the Lanka was set down quite some time later than the Saddharmapundarika, we can understand this as a response to it. Likewise, the Nirvana responds to the prediction of all sentient beings as capable of attaining Buddhahood in Saddharmapundarika with the notion of the icchantika, while at the same time promoting tathāgatagarbha, as contradictory as that may seem.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 3rd, 2018 at 5:38 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

According to your tradition it does, since there is only one vehicle and not three. In fact, Candrakīrti cites the Saddharmapuṇḍarīka in support of this verse.

Queequeg said:

Bro... I don't even

Malcolm wrote:

Well, you cannot have it both ways. Either there is one vehicle, in which case the emptiness realized by śrāvaka arhats, pratyekabuddhas, and buddhas is the same (Candrakīrti's point of view) or three, in which case the emptiness realized by śrāvaka arhats, pratyekabuddhas, and buddhas is not the same.

Which one is it?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 3rd, 2018 at 4:55 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

My position is, if you take any element away, the Buddha or one's own effort, Buddhahood is not happening.

Malcolm wrote:

Apparently Nāgārjuna disagrees, in MMK:18, final verse:

If the perfect buddha does not arise and the śrāvakas vanish,
even so, the wisdom of the pratyekabuddhas will arise without support.

Queequeg said:

Pratyekabuddhahood ≠ Buddhahood.

Malcolm wrote:

According to your tradition it does, since there is only one vehicle and not three. In fact, Candrakīrti cites the Saddharmapuṇḍarīka in support of this verse.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 3rd, 2018 at 4:38 AM

Title: Re: Robot Buddhist Priests in Japan

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

What's next? Empowerment, direct introduction and pointing out using robots?

Well alot of people on this forum advocate for empowerment over the computer so...

Malcolm wrote:

Not from computers...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 3rd, 2018 at 3:48 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

My position is, if you take any element away, the Buddha or one's own effort, Buddhahood is not happening.

Malcolm wrote:

Apparently Nāgārjuna disagrees, in MMK:18, final verse:

If the perfect buddha does not arise and the śrāvakas vanish,
even so, the wisdom of the pratyekabuddhas will arise without support.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 3rd, 2018 at 12:59 AM

Title: Re: Younge Khachab Rimpoche

Content:

Josef said:

I'm surprised he is still around.

I would advise people to keep their distance from this one.

There is a significant and particularly gross controversy.

Temicco said:

Why is nobody actually expanding on what controversy there is?

Malcolm wrote:

Out of respect for the privacy of those involved. That is all I have to say about it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 11:01 PM

Title: Upāya (continued from another thread)

Content:

Queequeg said:

Even the particular text of the Lotus as we know it is upaya. I have no problem with that.

Malcolm wrote:

Then it is not definitive and requires interpretation.

Queequeg said:

The Buddha actually asserts this in the Sutra. Its why Nichiren could collapse the Lotus, and the entire corpus of all teachings of the Buddhas, anytime, anywhere, into the title.

Malcolm wrote:

The practice of collapsing the meaning of texts into their titles is a pan-Indian hermeneutical device. It is not unique to Nichiren, nor even to Buddhism.

Queequeg said:

Its the name given to the Buddha's most sacred teaching at this time and place.

Malcolm wrote:

Such statements are statements of sentiment and not fact.

Queequeg said:

There is a definitive teaching. It finds expression in innumerable ways.

Malcolm wrote:

Those expressions cannot be definitive if they are innumerable. Since they are not definitive, the teaching they purport to express cannot be definitive either.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 12:43 PM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

War is always bad and everyone who dies fighting in one goes to hell because of the terrible state of mind that war is.

Fortyeightvows said:

Really? How about Guan Yu?

Also, I've heard that people who die doing something heroic will often be reborn in the heaven of the heavenly kings. Like someone who dies while trying to save lives, or maybe fighting in a just war....?

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha is pretty clear on this point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 12:01 PM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

DGA said:

This is good DharmaWheel.

dzogchungpa said:

It's one of the finest displays of upāya I've seen on this board to date.

DGA said:

This thread has it all

*whimsical use of the quote function

*passive-aggressive posturing and, later, almost-aggressive counter-posturing by the same user against him- or herself

*I'm not sure what upāya means anymore *generalizing from the particular *and, with this post, meta-discussion

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 11:45 AM

Title: Re: Mahayana and War

Content:

Ricky said:

What would be the Mahayana position on war?

Can the wars that were fought against nazis, japan, jihadi terrorists, communists be justified in any way?

Malcolm wrote:

War is always bad and everyone who dies ifighting in one goes to hell because of the terrible state of mind that war is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 7:32 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

Could you flesh that out?

marting said:

Do you think anything or anyone outside your own actions and efforts can save you from samsara?

Queequeg said:

Sure. Guidance and instruction of the sages. That's one part. Which is essential. Then there are my own actions and efforts which are also essential. Both are necessary.

Malcolm wrote:

That is not what the Buddha said. He said, "One cannot wash away misdeeds with water. I cannot remove your suffering with my hand. I cannot bestow liberation upon you, but I can show you a path."

Buddhas can show a path. But the only thing essential is your own practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 7:27 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The Nirvana Sūtra follows the Lotus, supposedly. In terms of text criticism it was definitely written later. So why would the Buddha reverse his position?

Queequeg said:

Upaya.

Malcolm wrote:

I see, so then we don't really need to take the Lotus Sūtra's prediction seriously at all, since it too can just be labeled "upāya."

Which means it is not definitive, since no upāya is ever definitive.

And this completely undermines your whole school, in terms of all the "definitive" rhetoric, in terms of how important the Lotus is, i.e., the king of all sūtras, with nothing more definitive or complete, etc. Same with the infinite life span trope, and primordial buddhahood trope.

Basically, you've reduced yourself to the position that "Anything said in any sūtra is merely upāya, and none of it can be said to be definitive."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 7:25 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In a general way what, "there is some identity between some distant being in the past and a buddha in the present."

Queequeg said:

Doesn't compute. Can't parse the rest.

Malcolm wrote:

You said:

In a very general way, yes. Doesn't mean that connection is direct.

I am not sure what part of my question/statement you are replying to.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 7:20 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

Right. Except, Buddhhood is not completely left to chance since there are actors tipping the scales (Buddhas and bodhisattvas).

Losal Samten said:

One can only be leant on if one has the karma for it to happen, and if someone has continually shite karma as to never encounter the Dharma etc. (due to the infinite probability deal) then it can still pass them by.

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamakas generally reject the idea of icchantikas in principle, but admit that there are some sentient beings who are so awful that they might as well be icchantikas because the chance they will meet Dharma is slim to none.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 7:18 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

Indeed. The Lotus opens Buddhahood to Icchantikas, and the Mahaparinirvana condemns them. Are there such things as Icchantikas? I believe the answer to that is, "no". Icchantikas are like balls on a eunuch.

Malcolm wrote:

So you are happy that the Buddha reverses himself on the question of icchantikas? First there isn't, but finally there is? How do you square this with your assertion that the Nirvana Sūtra is definitive?

Queequeg said:

Relatively, its not definitive. The Lotus is, in comparison. You know, "forty and more years", "has taught, will teach".

Malcolm wrote:

The Nirvana Sūtra follows the Lotus, supposedly. In terms of text criticism it was definitely written later. So why would the Buddha reverse his position?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 7:15 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You keep asserting there is some identity between some distant being in the past and a buddha in the present. There is a continuum from sentient being hood to buddhahood (the relative, clear aspect of the mind), but there is no identity there, no being at point a who becomes a buddha at point z.

There is a discontinuity in so far as what was once afflicted is no longer afflicted. But this does not mean that all or even any actions undertaken while in a state of affliction have any bearing at all in becoming free from affliction.

But your point seems to be that whatever one does while a sentient being inevitably leads to buddhahood. That, in my opinion, would be a very strange view.

Queequeg said:

In a very general way, yes. Doesn't mean that connection is direct.

Malcolm wrote:

In a general way what, "there is some identity between some distant being in the past and a buddha in the present."

If so, there is no identity at all between some moment in a continuum distant eons ago and the present. It contradicts the very basis of dependent origination to claim so.

"All phenomena lack identity."

Queequeg said:

Augustine isn't Augustine without his sinful past. The Lotus doesn't grow on the high, dry plateau.

Malcolm wrote:

Conversations like these merely confirm my long held opinion that the Prajñāpāramitā is the definitive common Mahāyāna teaching, and everything else needs to interpretation.

Gate gate paragate parasamgate bodhi svāhā.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 7:05 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That does not follow in the least, which is why Greg pointed out that the three poisons which lead to negative karma cannot be construed as paths to Buddhahood.

The path to buddhahood begins with compassion as an indirect cause, but the direct cause is the 37 adjuncts of awakening, beginning with the five faculties and so on.

Queequeg said:

So is it correct to posit a break in the continuity of the being who turns from haphazardly coursing in samsara and turning toward Buddhahood?

marting said:

On a serious note I don't think anyone else can sketch out a picture of the path to Buddhahood as succinctly and poetically as Khenpo Tsultrim Gyamtso Rinpoche's <http://ibc.ac.th/faqing/files/progressive-stages-of-meditation-on-emptiness2014.pdf>.

Malcolm wrote:

If you like gzhan stong, maybe.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 7:05 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

Indeed. The Lotus opens Buddhahood to Icchantikas, and the Mahaparinirvana condemns them. Are there such things as Icchantikas? I believe the answer to that is, "no". Icchantikas are like balls on a eunuch.

Malcolm wrote:

So you are happy that the Buddha reverses himself on the question of icchantikas? First there isn't, but finally there is? How do you square this with your assertion that the Nirvana Sūtra is definitive?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 6:58 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

every moment along the way since the infinite past is related to that event of Buddhahood.

Malcolm wrote:

That does not follow in the least, which is why Greg pointed out that the three poisons which lead to negative karma cannot be construed as paths to Buddhahood.

The path to buddhahood begins with compassion as an indirect cause, but the direct cause is the 37 adjuncts of awakening, beginning with the five faculties and so on.

Queequeg said:

So is it correct to posit a break in the continuity of the being who turns from haphazardly coursing in samsara and turning toward Buddhahood?

Malcolm wrote:

You keep asserting there is some identity between some distant being in the past and a buddha in the present. There is a continuum from sentient being hood to buddhahood (the relative, clear aspect of the mind), but there is no identity there, no being at point a who becomes a buddha at point z.

There is a discontinuity in so far as what was once afflicted is no longer afflicted. But this does not mean that all or even any actions undertaken while in a state of affliction have any bearing at all in becoming free from affliction.

But your point seems to be that whatever one does while a sentient being inevitably leads to buddhahood. That, in my opinion, would be a very strange view.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 6:41 AM

Title: Re: The straying of new sentient beings

Content:

Sherab said:

I'm in the camp of those who think that new beings can arise because of the following:
(1) beings are countable phenomena and therefore can never be countably infinite in reality.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a teaching of the Buddha somewhere that the sattvadhātu, while infinite in number, is fixed, and does not increase.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 6:36 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

The Buddha taught that we are all to be Buddhas.

Malcolm wrote:

Maybe. If you happen to accept that text. The Buddha also taught there were those who would never attain Buddhahood, so-called icchantikas, in a text you accept as proving the authority of the text you uphold as the Bees Knees of Buddhism.

Seems like a real contradiction to me, that is, in the last sūtra traditionally considered by Mahāyānis to have been taught by the Buddha, the Nirvana Sūtra, he teaches repeatedly on the impossibility of icchantikas attaining buddhahood, after having predicted all sentient beings for full buddhahood in the Saddharmapundarika. Don't see how you square that one.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 6:26 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

But you don't need to do anything to wake up since it is predetermined.

Queequeg said:

Your words, not mine. Can't help ya.

Malcolm wrote:

If buddhahood is predetermined, there is no point to doing anything about it. You used the word "determined," not I.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 6:24 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

every moment along the way since the infinite past is related to that event of Buddhahood.

Malcolm wrote:

That does not follow in the least, which is why Greg pointed out that the three poisons which lead to negative karma cannot be construed as paths to Buddhahood.

The path to buddhahood begins with compassion as an indirect cause, but the direct cause is the 37 adjuncts of awakening, beginning with the five faculties and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 6:17 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

There still seems to be "free will".

Malcolm wrote:

There is?

Queequeg said:

I don't know what to call it. Hence the quotation marks. Uncertainty?

And even if it is completely fatalistic and determined, that would not change the need to make efforts. One still must go through the motions.

Why? What would be the point?

To wake up.

Malcolm wrote:

But you don't need to do anything to wake up since it is predetermined.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 5:23 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

There still seems to be "free will".

Malcolm wrote:

There is?

Queequeg said:

And even if it is completely fatalistic and determined, that would not change the need to make efforts. One still must go through the motions.

Malcolm wrote:

Why? What would be the point?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 5:04 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I don't think 'expedients' is standing for anything here. 'Expedient', in addition to being an adjective, is also a noun. However "This very bad English." is definitely bad English.

Malcolm wrote:

Really, a typo flame? How lame. Surely there are better things you can occupy yourself with.

dzogchungpa said:

Yeah, I really should get a life, shouldn't I?

Malcolm wrote:

I am sure you have a life. On the other hand, your time here could be spent more productively than the constant sniping you seem to get off on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 4:24 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I don't think 'expedients' is standing for anything here. 'Expedient', in addition to being an adjective, is also a noun. However "This very bad English." is definitely bad English.

Malcolm wrote:

Really, a typo flame? How lame. Surely there are better things you can occupy yourself with.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 2:04 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

Can the Dharmakaya preach to an assembly of sentient beings? That's a serious question.

Malcolm wrote:

The dharmakāya has no form.

Queequeg said:

Regarding the commentary, its one commentary, by a fella who probably was Xuanzang's student and who had a vested interest in the three vehicles v. one vehicle debates and which maybe was composed in Chinese and translated into Tibetan.

Malcolm wrote:

I cited Vasubandhu's commentary, not Prithvibandhu's.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 1:31 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

There are those who practice the four kinds of supernormal power. While practicing these powers, they are always mindful of these practices so as to keep them in good memory. When one so desires, he can prolong his life on the basis of his power for as long as the remaining duration of the current eon.

Grigoris said:

Yup, that quote seems to cover it. The one from the Lotus Sutra seems to be referring to the Dharmakaya though. At least that is how it reads to me.

Malcolm wrote:

According to the Indian commentarial literature, it is a reference to the sambhogakāya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 2nd, 2018 at 1:05 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

That's my understanding. A particular emanation could endure eternally.

Grigoris said:

Do you have a scriptural source for this?

Queequeg said:

There's this from the Agamas, which falls short of "eternal", but suggests the Buddha's nirmanakaya could endure to the end of the eon:

There are those who practice the four kinds of supernormal power. While practicing these powers, they are always mindful of these practices so as to keep them in good memory. When one so desires, he can prolong his life on the basis of his power for as long as the remaining duration of the current eon.

O Ānanda, the Buddha has already practiced these four supernormal powers on many occasions and, being mindful of these experiences, he does not forget the use of them. If it is necessary, the Tathāgata can extend his life span for the remaining duration of the present eon, so that he may remove darkness, benefit the world, and make heavenly gods happier.

Ananda didn't take the hint to ask the Buddha to remain, so the Buddha let go.

Malcolm wrote:

Not precisely. It is recorded in various sources that the Buddha extended his life for three months.

Queequeg said:

Then in the Lotus Sutra, the Buddha explains that his life span is of incalculable duration - nitya - and actually endures through the end of the eon.

Since I attained buddhahood,

Immeasurable hundreds of thousands of myriads

Of koṭis of incalculable kalpas have passed.

I have been constantly teaching the Dharma,

Through these immeasurable kalpas,

Leading and inspiring

Innumerable koṭis of sentient beings

And enabling them to enter the buddha path.

Using skillful means

I have manifested the state of nirvana

To bring sentient beings to this path...

Malcolm wrote:

This passage is the one that the Prithvibandhu commentary (irrespective of its source) asserts is describing the nirmanakāya with the characteristics of a Sambhogakāya.

Vasubandhu is in agreement:

“My pure land does not decay yet living beings perceive its conflagration” means the true pure land of the enjoyment buddha, the Tathāgata, is incorporated in the highest truth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 10:34 PM

Title: Re: What is a Man?

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

"Doesn't affect me" also isn't true for many women whose spaces, resources, and groups are being pressured into accepting newly minted women as both equally oppressed and as the new authorities on womanhood. The backlash against the Women's March is an example.

Malcolm wrote:

It is generational. About ten years ago, in my area a controversy was stirred up because a transwomen wanted to join the local moon lodge. Naturally, the older women-born women were uncomfortable with this. But the younger women demanded they allow this person to attend because she self-identified as female and had undergone surgery. This kind of issue has plagued at women's festivals, immortalized in an episode of Transparent where Maura Pfefferman is not allowed to attend the Idlewild Womyn's Music Festival, but has to hang out at the <https://tv.avclub.com/transparent-goes-to-a-feminist-music-festival-in-a-seas-1798186990>.

Genesis P. Orridge-Breyer's project of <https://www.newyorker.com/culture/culture-desk/the-reinventions-of-genesis-breyer-p-orridge> may be of interest to some.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 9:25 PM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

Its not merely overthrowing or blurring distinctions.

Does the Buddha remember his past lives? Yes or no? If he does, then there is a connection between the Buddha's past as an ordinary being and the Buddha.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course.

Queequeg said:
Is Buddhahood the fruit of Bodhisattva Practice?

Malcolm wrote:
Of course.

Queequeg said:
They say that when you become a Buddha, one realizes that they had been awakened all along. Distinctions are then seen to be insubstantial.

Malcolm wrote:
Here, your conclusion does not follow from your premise.

Queequeg said:
There are different levels of view here. They don't all fit neatly with the other. That doesn't mean they are false.

Malcolm wrote:
And you just provided the proof that your conclusion does not follow from your premise.

Queequeg said:
Eradicating ignorance does not efface the path to Buddhahood.

Malcolm wrote:
Sounds nice, but I am not sure of your point here.

Queequeg said:
Contrary to what you think, I'm not playing games. I don't play games with Dharma. I joke, but I don't play games. You really ought to refrain from speculating about other's motivation. Its rude.

Malcolm wrote:
DW itself is just a big game, and we are the players.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 9:17 PM
Title: Re: Laughter or Martyrdom
Content:

The Cicada said:
Vimalakirti: A venerable and enlightened bodhisattva living within society as a successful layman. And people couldn't stand that guy.

Malcolm wrote:

What gives you the idea that people did not like Vimalakīrti?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 10:17 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Some people think the people who think I am an asshole are assholes.

dzogchungpa said:

While this is probably true, I don't see how it is relevant.

Malcolm wrote:

This thread veered massively off topic ages ago, so everything and nothing is relevant.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 6:36 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Take Nichiren's Buddhism, I think his claim that chanting NMRK is the definitive Buddhist path is rubbish.

Queequeg said:

Well, you misunderstand it. That interpretation of Nichiren is not correct. But that's not the point.

Malcolm wrote:

No I don't, and it is-- heard it hundreds of times from Nichirenistas. But as you say, it is not the point.

Queequeg said:

Which raises the question, when is a teaching attributed to the Buddha an upāya, and when is it the opposite?

You leave out some alternate options - in some cases, the Buddha's teachings are upaya to some, inert to others. In other cases, they carry different meaning to different listeners. They're also, in all those cases, perfect expressions of Buddhahood.

Malcolm wrote:

Not according to Rogowcop and other people who waffle on endlessly about the "For forty years I have not told the truth."

Queequeg said:

I'm not sure that the Buddha's teaching could ever be the opposite of upaya.

Malcolm wrote:

This just brings up the question of what is a teaching of the Buddha and what is not. Big can of worms.

Queequeg said:

What I wrote was that there is no moment in the boundless lifespan of a being which can be distinguished from that being's Buddhahood. Buddha sees the entirety of his past, infinite lives.

Malcolm wrote:

A sentient being is by definition under control of the three afflictions and the two obscurations. Buddhas have no afflictions or obscurations. The distinguishing moment is the attainment of vajropama samadhi, which eradicates every last trace of afflictive and knowledge obscurations.

I know it is fun to follow intellectual theories which try to overthrow or blur this distinction, but they are intellectual theories only with no practical application.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 6:01 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

Formations are for suckers.

So doesn't think the god dwelling in neither thought nor no thought.

Formations are expedients. So understands the Buddha's good little student.

Grigoris said:

This makes no sense. Is it meant to be gibberish, is that it's purpose?

Malcolm wrote:

He is being clever. Those in the highest formless āyatana, neither perception nor nonperception have only one thought which causes their birth in that formless realm, that is, "neither perception nor nonperception." Since they lack vitarka and vicara, they have no means of having any other thought since they cannot switch objects until the karma that sustains their life force in that āyatana expires and they fall into the hells.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 5:40 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Some people think the people who think I am an asshole are assholes.

Queequeg said:

Are you bragging about your fan club? Do they follow you on twitter?

Malcolm wrote:

I don't do twitter. I don't really do facebook either. This place is the primary extent of my social media engagement.

Queequeg said:

I like a good tall tale just as much as the next guy.

Some people call those tales "upaya".

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, they do. But not every upāya is for every person. Take Nichiren's Buddhism, I think his claim that chanting NMRK is the definitive Buddhist path is rubbish. So it is not an upāya for me. Rory thinks Tibetan Buddhism is rubbish. Obviously not an upāya for her. Dhammawheel thinks we are all nucking futs, so obviously Mahāyāna is not an upāya for them.

Which raises the question, when is a teaching attributed to the Buddha an upāya, and when is it the opposite?

All formations, including the Dharma, are impermanent.

Umm, no. The Buddha predicts everyone for full buddhahood because sentient beings have no fixed nature as sentient beings. It has nothing to do with some random cause. There are two causes for attaining buddhahood: merit and wisdom accumulations, and there is no third cause.

Nothing I wrote contradicts that.

Claiming some random event set one on the path to Buddhahood, pretty much does.

Instead, it is pretty clear that one event and one event only sets one on the path of buddhahood -- the impossible wish to take on the sufferings of others out of compassion (impossible, because it is impossible for someone else's karma to ripen upon oneself, for any reason). It is for this reason that in his Madhyamakāvatāra, Candrakīrti praises compassion before he praises buddhas and bodhisattvas.

I think these are different things.

The criteria with which we understand Dharma is pretty different.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 5:03 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

The basis for suggesting "everything is a method" is because in some context, every experience causally results in bodhi. That connection might be eons in length, but that connection is there, nonetheless.

Malcolm wrote:

In this case, "upāya" refers to the Buddha's teaching for some sentient being. For example, we might say that Buddhas twelve deeds were skillful means for śrāvakas, to give them confidence that freedom was actually a possibility. The Sea Captain bodhisattva's murder of the thief is regarded as a skillful means, etc. There are whole sūtras on the subject.

Queequeg said:

Its why the Buddha can look at any being and predict their Buddhahood. That's the gradual version.

Malcolm wrote:

Umm, no. The Buddha predicts everyone for full buddhahood because sentient beings have no fixed nature as sentient beings. It has nothing to do with some random cause. There are two causes for attaining buddhahood: merit and wisdom accumulations, and there is no third cause.

Queequeg said:

There's also the sudden version in which any stimulus has the potential of triggering awakening, immediately.

Malcolm wrote:

I have heard about so called sudden awakening, but I have never encountered anyone who actually experienced this, apart from crazy people who claim to be so-called cig car bas, sudden realizers. It is possible, I suppose. Seems to be rather rare.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 4:23 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

One of the unfortunate things about hell is that no one can see anyone else, all one can hear is their screams. There really is no way to set an example for anyone.

The Bodhisattva earned merit through his act, and set himself on the long road to buddhahood. He neither set an example for anyone while in hell, nor did he have an example, beyond his own moment of pity for others based on his own suffering.

Anyway, you don't really take Dharma that seriously because you are just into promulgating your own version of Buddhism, and you try to twist everything into the Buddhist narrative you have signed up for.

Queequeg said:

Kindly back up, dude. It is remarkable what kind of a problem you have with anyone who doesn't immediately bow to your remarks.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't have a problem with anyone, whether they like my remarks or not.

Queequeg said:

Please tell about this moment of pity.

Malcolm wrote:

There really aren't many details. So speculating about the Bodhisattvas moment of pity in hell is just speculation. He had a moment of pity, and it set him on the bodhisattva path, according to some traditional Mahāyāna accounts. The other detail about this is that at that time, the Buddha of that epoch was a buddha from the same clan, the Śākya. You have to love the absolute disregard Indians had for time. This even happened many mahākālpas ago, but still the Indians thought there was a Śākya clan millions upon millions of eons ago.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 4:16 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Method, means. That is all it means. Nothing more. See my edit of last post.

Queequeg said:

How do methods manifest?

You guys are using translations that are pretty ancient, superseded by improvements in understanding in all areas of Buddhist studies. It is a problem not just for you, but for example, for everyone who uses the term "enlightenment" for bodhi. It is just not right on any level.

As I've stopped trying to keep up with PC names for things and people, I've stopped trying to keep up on Buddhist vocabulary in translation. Luckily, language is fungible and a word like expedient could be (abusively, perhaps) expanded to encompass "upaya". It may present some problems in leading to understanding... so I suppose I should make an effort to update my language... I hope others will make allowances for my arcane language as one might give an old man a pass on calling people "colored" when it is completely free of malice.

Malcolm wrote:

You are not old, and I don't give people passes for using racist terms.

Anyway, old bad translations have a way of never disappearing, unfortunately.

The point about upāya is that it is a method or a means. It is skillful when it correct applied to a given situation, and unskillful when it is not.

But just saying "everything is a method" is somewhat lame. Why? Because there is also wisdom, prajñā. A method without wisdom cannot be skillful in anyway. Wisdom without method is ineffective at doing anything. So you need both. When you have both method and wisdom, your methods will be skillful, adroit, and appropriate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 4:07 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You guys are using translations that are pretty ancient, superseded by improvements in understanding in all areas of Buddhist studies. It is a problem not just for you, but for example, for everyone who uses the term "enlightenment" for bodhi. It is just not right on any level.

Thomas Amundsen said:

What is your preferred translation of bodhi?

Malcolm wrote:

Awakening, of course, since that is actually what the word means. The Tibetan translation of Buddha, sangs rgyas, reflects this, actually. The translation of bodhi itself into Tibetan, does not. The latter means "perfect (byang) comprehension (chub)."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 4:02 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

When I give you water because you are thirsty, I am not absorbing your suffering, but I am relieving it.

Queequeg said:

And in showing kindness, one presents an example to emulate... and so emulating we commence our long climb out of hell. Where did we learn that kindness?

Malcolm wrote:

One of the unfortunate things about hell is that no one can see anyone else, all one can hear is their screams. There really is no way to set an example for anyone.

The Bodhisattva earned merit through his act, and set himself on the long road to buddhahood. He neither set an example for anyone while in hell, nor did he have an example, beyond his own moment of pity for others based on his own suffering.

Anyway, you don't really take Dharma that seriously because you are just into promulgating your own version of Buddhism, and you try to twist everything into the Buddhist narrative you have signed up for.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 3:57 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You are using the term from "expedient means," a rather dated translation of the term "upāya-kauśalya."

Queequeg said:

lol. no scorn. you though...

how do you translate upaya?

Malcolm wrote:

Method, means. That is all it means. Nothing more. See my edit of last post.

You guys are using translations that are pretty ancient, superseded by improvements in understanding in all areas of Buddhist studies. It is a problem not just for you, but for example, for everyone who uses the term "enlightenment" for bodhi. It is just not right on any level.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 3:52 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, you are misusing the word "expedient," as I already pointed out above.

Queequeg said:
Inconclusive. We're still working that out.

Malcolm wrote:
It's pretty conclusive, unless you are Humpty Dumpty:
“When I use a word,” Humpty Dumpty said, in rather a scornful tone, “it means just what I choose it to mean—neither more nor less.”
You are using the term from "expedient means," a rather dated translation of the term "upāya-kaśālya."

"Kaśālya" does not mean expedient, it means "m. a kind of pavilion Va1stuv. ; (%{am}) n. (g. %{{brAhmaNA7di}}) welfare , well-being , prosperity MBh. R. ; cleverness , skilfulness, experience (ifc.) SaddhP. Bhpr. ; (%{A}) f. see %{{kausalya}}."

The Tibetans translate it as mkhas pa, which means "expert," among other things.
"Expert" or "Skilled" in means or methods, in other words.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 3:51 AM
Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
The Buddha in Hell is there to relieve the sufferings of the beings inhabiting it in whatever small ways they can.
Buddhas do not absorb anyone's sufferings.

Queequeg said:
Please square those?

Malcolm wrote:
When I give you water because you are thirsty, I am not absorbing your suffering, but I am relieving it.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 3:41 AM
Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More
Content:

Queequeg said:
Formations are expedients.

Malcolm wrote:
This very bad English.

Queequeg said:
Is it?

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, you are misusing the word "expedient," as I already pointed out above.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 3:40 AM
Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
Buddhas do not use torture as an upāya. I know you think this is really clever, but it is actually really dumb. The Buddha in Hell is there to relieve the sufferings of the beings inhabiting it in whatever small ways they can. The Buddha of hell is not there to preside over their misery and use it as a "teaching moment."

Queequeg said:
That is a point well taken, and actually occurred to me as I was writing that in a putative form. Thank you for drawing that out.

Retribution is inescapable, but each time we emerged from hell, it was because we made causes to do so. Seems to me there is more in the Buddha's function than merely absorbing the sufferings on behalf of another.

Malcolm wrote:
Buddhas do not absorb anyone's sufferings.

Queequeg said:
And that doesn't really make sense. The Buddha could absorb and endure everyone's punishment indefinitely, but that would merely put off the retribution - suspend cause and effect. The karma is not dissipated.

Malcolm wrote:
Buddhas do not absorb anyone's suffering.

Queequeg said:
So then what is the function of Buddha in hell? As I understand, its the act of kindness in relieving the other's suffering, which sets an example for others to be internalized and then extended to others, and so starts their long climb out of hell.

Malcolm wrote:
It seems you are conflating the Bodhisattva's initial generation of compassion by wishing the sufferings of other hell beings would be visited upon him with the Nyingma notion that Yamarāja is the Buddha of the hells, just as the preta Jvalamukha is the buddha of the preta realm, Śākyamuni the Buddha of the human realm, etc.

Queequeg said:

In the Jatakas, the Buddha appeared as the leader of his peers in all the various realms, leading by his example.

Malcolm wrote:

The Bodhisattva was indeed the leader of all his peers.

Queequeg said:

Your presentation of the Buddha is a little one dimensional.

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty hard to be dimensional on a chat board.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 3:22 AM

Title: Re: Do Pure Land practitioners go to the court of Yama?

Content:

Jingang said:

Wonderful, thanks. I'll shift my focus away from manis and back toward Amitabha mantra accumulations.

Malcolm wrote:

Sentient beings are fickle.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 3:20 AM

Title: Re: The straying of new sentient beings

Content:

Grigoris said:

Good luck with that one!

Malcolm wrote:

It is a major bone of contention between Nyingmapas and other schools.

Mantrik said:

If the number of sentient beings is infinite, and each rebirth is from one sentient form to another, do we need any new ones? Clearly not, nor do we need a 'beginning'.

Will it be like the 'Rapture' at the end of the mahakalpa and after liberation there will be no more left in samsara? Almost a universal Pure Land liberation without the need to ask?

What is taught about this, please?

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen tantras teach that by the end of the eon, when all sentient beings have vanished from all the realms below the fourth form realm, all those realms perish (as in Abhidharma), and in the end all sentient beings attain buddhahood (not in Abhidharma).

As I said, it is a difficult point, not easily addressed in a forum like this. I have discussed it elsewhere here several times.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 3:10 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

Formations are expedients.

Malcolm wrote:

This very bad English.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 3:05 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

There is no place in the three-fold world where the Buddha does not penetrate. Even in hell, the Buddha makes an appearance to lead beings to Buddhahood. I have a Tibetan Wheel of Life hanging in my house and I notice that even in the hell section, there is a Buddha. Am I reading that wrong to understand that even beings in hell are not beyond the Buddha's activity?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, according to the teachings of the Nyingma school, there is a Buddha presiding over each of the six realms.

Queequeg said:

hence, for those beings, even the tortures of hell are upaya, because even that path inevitably ends in Buddhahood.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhas do not use torture as an upāya. I know you think this is really clever, but it is actually really dumb. The Buddha in Hell is there to relieve the sufferings of the beings inhabiting it in whatever small ways they can. The Buddha of hell is not there to preside over their misery and use it as a "teaching moment."

Unless a being obtains a precious human birth with the eight freedoms and ten endowments, there is no possibility they will meet the Dharma, let alone practice, and so on. Groovy theories about the interpenetration of realms are pretty useless in this regard.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 2:51 AM

Title: Re: The straying of new sentient beings

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is one of those difficult points.

Grigoris said:

Good luck with that one!

Malcolm wrote:

It is a major bone of contention between Nyingmapas and other schools.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 2:45 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

I'll take a stab at answering my own question... probably for someone limited by the absolute limitations of arising and perishing. Oh, well whaddaya know? The Lotus is at least partly addressed to Sravaka and Pratyekabuddha who in respects can be characterized by their insights to arising and perishing... And to Bodhisattvas who, though transcending the scope of Sravaka and Pratyekabuddha, still are limited by arising and perishing.

"Takes a long time, but God dies, too, but not before he'll stick it to you!"

Malcolm wrote:

"All formations are impermanent."

-- the Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 2:40 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it is not convincing. One cannot wish away all contradictions by claiming that everything is an expedient device. The Buddha can no more dismiss the laws of causality than you or I. If someone is born, they die. End of story.

Queequeg said:

In this threefold world, what is not expedient? What is not subject to arising and perishing?

Malcolm wrote:

It seems you mean the term "upāya" by expedient. But you are misusing the word "expedient" in this context, in addition to misusing the term upāya. "Expedient" is not a useful translation of that term. In fact, it is wrong. Upāya means "method" or "means."

Queequeg said:

Expedient:

adjective

(of an action) convenient and practical, although possibly improper or immoral:

Malcolm wrote:

Hell, for example, is not very expedient, since it is very inconvenient and impractical to be stuck there.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 2:24 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

Right, but then this Buddha is appearing to particular causes and conditions where an eternal duration would not be expedient.

Malcolm wrote:

Everything that arises, perishes. Fantasizing about eternal nirmanakāyas is, well, just a fantasy. There is no such thing.

Queequeg said:

Is this addressed to me? You seem to ignore my consistent use of the term, "expedient".

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it is not convincing. One cannot wish away all contradictions by claiming that everything is an expedient device. The Buddha can no more dismiss the laws of causality than you or I. If someone is born, they die. End of story.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 2:16 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

That's my understanding. A particular emanation could endure eternally.

Malcolm wrote:

Not one popped out of a human womb.

Queequeg said:

Right, but then this Buddha is appearing to particular causes and conditions where an eternal duration would not be expedient.

Malcolm wrote:

Everything that arises, perishes. Fantasizing about eternal nirmanakāyas is, well, just a fantasy. There is no such thing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 1:47 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

That's my understanding. A particular emanation could endure eternally.

Malcolm wrote:

Not one popped out of a human womb.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 1:15 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

rory said:

This is where your ignorance of Pure Land and the Lotus Sutra matters:

That's Ch. 25 the famous Kwan-Yin chapter of the Lotus Sutra; Kannon can use her karma to overcome the individual's bad karma, who calls upon her. The Pure Land sutras explain that Amida and Kannon build up huge amounts of good karma due to their vows and when individuals with crap karma call upon them, wishing to be born in their pure land, by karmic transfer those individuals can be born there. That's how it works: via karmic transfer. Now you can do this for others simply by transferring the merit of the pure land practice. So if I call upon Amida and pray for someone's Birth in the Western Pure land, I transfer the merit to them at the end of my practice. Everyone in East Asia does this practice: for the living for the dead for pets...all sentient beings.

Grigoris said:

This does not answer my question. I asked you where in the quoted section... and instead of (maybe) quoting me a piece from another part of the Lotus Sutra proving your point, you just post some general commentary. Again you need to read the Lotus Sutra, specifically Ch. 16 The Thus Come One's Life Span it spells it out quite clearly: The Buddha isn't dead, and never really died, he's on Sacred Vulture Peak. To the unenlightened it just looks like he lived and died. I'm really surprised to ever see you write such a thing;

His Nirmanakaya died. Mahaparinirvana and all that jazz. From the time I attained Buddhahood,

...

For the Buddha's words are real, not false.

<http://www.buddhistdoor.com/OldWeb/resources/sutras/lotus/sources/lotus16.htm>

This is referring to the Buddha's Dharmakaya. Siddhārtha Gautama died. According to your logic he could have healed himself (not lacking faith in Buddhahood and all) by praying to Buddha Amitabha, just like you claimed you did.

Again, I do not doubt that chanting and praying can have an effect, like I said: In Vajrayana we have this notion too. I just believe that there may be more factors in play, that we are not taking into account.

Malcolm wrote:

Greg, there is little point. While there are certain areas of overlap, for the most part, Lotus Sūtravadins seem incapable of hearing anything outside of their own echo chamber, even our friend Queequeg.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: Monastic Tibetan Buddhists Fear Death More

Content:

Queequeg said:

The Buddha's entire appearance, from birth to death, was a show for the purpose of teaching beings the Buddha Path.

Malcolm wrote:

That is part of the Mahāyāna catechism, for sure.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 1:09 AM

Title: Re: The straying of new sentient beings

Content:

Grigoris said:

If you plan on being a Bodhisattva, plan to be around for a REALLY long time.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, this is just one kind of bodhicitta, the bodhicitta of shepherd. The usual bodhicitta one develops in Tibetan Buddhism is the bodhicitta of a king.

What is the difference? Just as a shepherd does not rest until all their flock is penned at night, a shepherd bodhisattva puts off their own buddhahood until all sentient beings are liberated. On the other hand, just as king looks after his own benefit first, and then takes care of the kingdom, a king bodhisattva first attains buddhahood and then helps sentient beings. The first is superior to the second, but the second is more practical for sentient beings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 1st, 2018 at 12:56 AM

Title: Re: The straying of new sentient beings

Content:

Grigoris said:

If you plan on being a Bodhisattva, plan to be around for a REALLY long time. There are infinite sentient beings, that means no matter how many are liberated, there are still an infinite number waiting to be liberated.

Malcolm wrote:

Kris's question concerns the Dzogchen doctrine that all sentient beings in this mahākalpa will be liberated by the end of the mahākalpa. There are a couple of opinions recorded by Longchenpa about where "new" sentient beings come from at the beginning of a new mahākalpa, and whether it is proper to say that sentient beings are newly created at all. It is one of those difficult points.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 31st, 2018 at 11:27 PM

Title: Re: The straying of new sentient beings

Content:

Sennin said:

New sentient beings cannot stray into samsara.

But why?

Malcolm wrote:

There are no "new" sentient beings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 31st, 2018 at 6:29 AM

Title: Re: Ancestor worship from a Mahayana POV

Content:

Varis said:

How is ancestor worship/placation viewed from the perspective of Mahayana?

Malcolm wrote:

What would be the point? All of our ancestors have long since taken rebirth.

SunWuKong said:

More likely that it's Confucian, and there is plenty of overlap in populations into Taoism, Mahayana, and Confucianism.

Malcolm wrote:

In China, but not in India, Tibet, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 31st, 2018 at 6:28 AM

Title: Re: What is a Man?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Honestly, I think it's about time we all started ma ning up.

Grigoris said:

Mahakala Maning is a eunuch, so unless you have no need for your family jewels...

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, this is a mistake made frequently by Western translators who do not understand the meaning as they have not received teachings on this form of Mahakala. Maning in Maning Gonpo refers to nonduality, and also the fact that it is the source of all the other Mahakala emanations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 31st, 2018 at 4:43 AM

Title: Re: Gyalpo spirits

Content:

Aryjna said:

The eight classes, or at least most of them, are classified as pretas that move through space in WOMPT. But as one of the eight classes is devas I suppose these are actually devas and not pretas, and perhaps this is true for 1-2 others.

Malcolm wrote:

Lha are not completely identical with devas, just as klu are not completely identical with nāgas.

Aryjna said:

Is it just because the two kinds of Lha belong to different systems of classification or is it that one of them are pretas and the other devas?

Malcolm wrote:

Lha and 'dre, so-called gods and spirits, are basically the eight classes, which are called "lha" when they act beneficially, and "'dre" when they act harmfully.

The eight classes is originally an Indian categorization which the Tibetans took over and adapted.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 31st, 2018 at 4:40 AM

Title: Re: Nagas -- mythological?

Content:

Fortyeightvows said:

it is also worth noting that there are at least four different types of nagas.

Three translations of the same sutta:

<https://www.accesstoinight.org/tipitaka/an/an04/an04.067.than.html>

http://www.buddhanet.net/bp_sut05.htm

<https://suttacentral.net/en/an4.67>

Malcolm wrote:

There are also four castes of nāgas, the lowest caste are considered to be very stupid.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 31st, 2018 at 4:11 AM

Title: Re: Gyalpo spirits

Content:

crazy-man said:
Gyalpo are a class of devas...

Malcolm wrote:
No, they are a class of spirits native to Tibet. Classifying them according to Indian lists is inaccurate.

They are basically pretas of a particularly powerful kind.

Mantrik said:
Are all spirits 'native to Tibet' as capable of causing problems world-wide?

Malcolm wrote:
sure.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, January 31st, 2018 at 3:48 AM
Title: Re: What is a Man?
Content:

Mantrik said:
'Nonbinary gendered'

Malcolm wrote:
"Nonbinary" is the direct translation of the Tibetan term for such folks, ma ning.

Mantrik said:
In that context containing the unity of both? As with Mahakala Maning.

'Nonbinary' seems to mean unable to identify as either, which is a different thing of very modern coinage.

Malcolm wrote:
Not really.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, January 31st, 2018 at 3:40 AM
Title: Re: Gyalpo spirits
Content:

Norwegian said:
No.

Gyalpos are pretas, and they live in the preta realm.

Josef said:

Definitely not.

Not all "spirits" are preta.

Gyalpo are one of the 8 classes of very powerful beings and are much more closely related to the beings of the higher realms than the lower.

They have little in common with preta other than being generally unseen sentient beings.

Aryjna said:

The eight classes, or at least most of them, are classified as pretas that move through space in WOMPT. But as one of the eight classes is devas I suppose these are actually devas and not pretas, and perhaps this is true for 1-2 others.

Malcolm wrote:

Lha are not completely identical with devas, just as klu are not completely identical with nāgas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 31st, 2018 at 3:39 AM

Title: Re: Gyalpo spirits

Content:

crazy-man said:

Gyalpo are a class of devas...

Malcolm wrote:

No, they are a class of spirits native to Tibet. Classifying them according to Indian lists is inaccurate.

They are basically pretas of a particularly powerful kind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 31st, 2018 at 3:36 AM

Title: Re: What is a Man?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

nonbinary gendered people were incapable of being a basis for receiving Buddhist discipline.

Mantrik said:

'Nonbinary gendered'

Malcolm wrote:

"Nonbinary" is the direct translation of the Tibetan term for such folks, ma ning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 31st, 2018 at 2:59 AM

Title: Re: What is a Man?

Content:

Queequeg said:

He/She wanted to use the women's bathroom and the employer didn't want to permit it. This was twenty or so years ago before all this gender stuff became what it is now. The dispute ended up in binding arbitration, as required for almost all disputes arising under a collective bargaining agreement. The arbitrator himself was a grizzled old fella who had been in the trucking industry since Jimmy Hoffa was alive. The sides made their opening statements and then the arbitrator looked at the foreman and asked, "Do you stand or sit?"

The foreman wasn't expecting the question and stammered, "I stand."

The arbitrator said, "You use the men's bathroom."

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, by that standard Buddhist monks have to use the lady's room. They are required to squat or sit when urinating. No pulling up the robes and standing...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 31st, 2018 at 2:52 AM

Title: Re: What is a Man?

Content:

Norwegian said:

In some more radical extremist corners today, this Buddhist point of view would be regarded as hate-speech and as an act of violence...

Malcolm wrote:

In other parts of the world, just being a Buddhist may very well get you killed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 31st, 2018 at 2:49 AM

Title: Re: What is a Man?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, there is quite a bit of discussion of gender in the Kośabhaṣyaṃ since it bears on gender, and gender is a concern in ordination. There are several gender orientations that were barred from ordination. Also blond people were barred from ordination as well, since in India people with blond hair were considered demonic.

Grigoris said:

I have to admit that I have not dared to touch that one yet. I am currently slogging through his Abhidharmasamuccaya and haven't found anything in there yet either..

In other Abhidhamma and Abhidharma texts I have read, gender is not discussed.

Is the discussion in the Kosa related just to ordination, or to a wider analysis of the subject of gender?

Malcolm wrote:

Gender is principally discussed with regard to who is capable of holding the vows. The ancient Buddhists were basically of the opinion that nonbinary gendered people were incapable of being a basis for receiving Buddhist discipline. Jose Cabazon has a new book out on the subject, which should be very interesting, as he is a very talented scholar:

<https://www.wisdompubs.org/book/sexuality-classical-south-asian-buddhism>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 31st, 2018 at 2:22 AM

Title: Re: What is a Man?

Content:

DGA said:

A woman is an adult who identifies as a woman.

Why not? If Ms Jenner says she's a woman, I take her word for it.

I wouldn't loan her my truck, though. Not because she's a woman, but because... er... I'm not saying she's a terrible driver because she's a woman, but I am saying she is a woman and a terrible driver

Malcolm wrote:

From a Buddhist point of view, one cannot change one's gender. It is something one is born with, it is a portion of one's viapaka, ripened karma, and one cannot alter it by cutting, sewing, or use of prosthetics. One is born either male, female, or nonbinary (with it's five subcategories). The impulse to alter one's apparent gender is itself a sign that one has been born with a nonbinary gender indriya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 31st, 2018 at 1:52 AM

Title: Re: What is a Man?

Content:

Grigoris said:

None. It just talks about the "material phenomena of sex".

DGA said:

So it describes what it means for a body to be a specifically male or female one.

This is distinct from the question of what it is for a person to be a man. I'm curious to know if Abhidharma can capture the experience of not fitting into either categories "man" or "woman" in a tidy fashion, or the experience of being a woman but having a male body or being a man but having a female body.

manhood is a social construction. it's built up in different ways in different contexts, and all of them are full of contradictions.

Grigoris said:

I think it is telling that the Buddha and the Abhidharma do not waste time in discussing gender differences, race differences, etc...

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, there is quite a bit of discussion of gender in the Kośabhaṣyaṃ since it bears on gender, and gender is a concern in ordination. There are several gender orientations that were barred from ordination. Also blond people were barred from ordination as well, since in India people with blond hair were considered demonic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 31st, 2018 at 1:41 AM

Title: Re: What is a Man?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Another good question is: What is a "real woman"?

Ricky said:

That can be a tricky question these days.

DGA said:

I think it's an easy question.

A woman is an adult who identifies as a woman.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 31st, 2018 at 1:37 AM

Title: Re: Ancestor worship from a Mahayana POV

Content:

Varis said:

How is ancestor worship/placation viewed from the perspective of Mahayana?

Malcolm wrote:

What would be the point? All of our ancestors have long since taken rebirth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 31st, 2018 at 1:28 AM

Title: Re: What is a Man?

Content:

Ricky said:

So what would be a better model of masculinity?

Malcolm wrote:

The Bodhisattva, of course.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 30th, 2018 at 11:37 PM

Title: Re: What is a Man?

Content:

Queequeg said:

There's a Southern Man for you, DGA.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 30th, 2018 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: Dharani of Glorious Vajra claws / Dorje Dermo

Content:

PeterC said:

I don't think we can advise someone to defer studying the dharma when they have genuine interest without endangering our own vows.

However that doesn't mean that we should advise them to begin immediately with the vajrayana. There are excellent reasons to delay that until the student has met and developed confidence in a qualified guru etc etc and also has the personal maturity to practice strictly according to the guru's instructions.

Most teenagers would be best served by shamatha and sutras first, blood-drinking four-headed herukas later. Though I can see the futility of trying to persuade them of that.

Malcolm wrote:

Ngondro was developed for teens.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 30th, 2018 at 10:42 PM

Title: Re: Dharani of Glorious Vajra claws / Dorje Dermo

Content:

marting said:

No, Aryjna. I'm saying he should wait until he develops an adult brain.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, there is nothing wrong with an adolescent flirtation with Dharma. But serious Dharma practice is an adult pursuit, best left until, as you say, one's brain is fully formed, around 26 or so.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 30th, 2018 at 10:26 PM

Title: Re: How are Madhyamaka and Yogacara teachings actually realised?

Content:

ItsRaining said:

So the Madhyamaka and Yogacara teach emptiness and mind only respectively but how are they realised? In a previous thread I posted, I found out early Mahayana practitioners mostly did similar practices to Hinayana schools. So how did they realise Madhayamaka or Yogacara teachings while doing virtually the same thing as the Sravakas?

Malcolm wrote:

They practice the same path, the six perfections.

ItsRaining said:

But how did they realise the specific teachings in their systems? If they practiced the same things why were their teachings/realisation different?

Malcolm wrote:

Their realization differed because their view differed. From the perspective of Candrakīrti, for example, Yogacāra practice does not lead to the path of seeing. This was contested by Yogacārins, naturally.

If we examine the texts of the respective systems, we can see that the standard division of Madhyamaka and Yogacāra as deep and vast is grounded in reality.

Madhyamaka focuses on the profound view, whereas, Yogacāra focuses on a detailed explanation of the bodhisattva path. There is no difference in practice, but there is a difference in view. The de facto Indian position (while not entirely uncontested) is that Madhyamaka and the Perfection of Wisdom Sūtras are the summum bonum of Mahāyāna teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 30th, 2018 at 10:14 PM

Title: Re: What is a Man?

Content:

Queequeg said:

I'm surprised no one has brought up archetypes and male and female energy characteristics.

Malcolm wrote:

You mean like this?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 30th, 2018 at 1:09 PM

Title: Re: Nagas -- mythological?

Content:

Kim O'Hara said:

Thanks. That's a very good, succinct definition of the kind of truth Westerners usually assume, too.

Agreed, but do poetic truth, mythical truth, subjective truth, spiritual truth qualify as "phenomena"? Nagas might, but (e.g.) the statement that, "Truth is beauty, beauty truth," isn't. Nor is, "I am constantly amazed by the quality of the light over the Coral Sea," which is incontrovertible but can't be "conventionally known by ordinary people," as you put it.

Kim

Malcolm wrote:

Aesthetic evaluations are entirely subjective and emotive. They are supposed to be so.

Kim O'Hara said:

Fine, but my question was whether those statements are "true" or not, or in which way they might be "true". They are certainly not true in the way that "Paris is the capital of France" is true, but nor are they false.

Kim

Malcolm wrote:

This is why it is important to distinguish facts from aesthetics.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 30th, 2018 at 10:30 AM

Title: Re: How are Madhyamaka and Yogacara teachings actually realised?

Content:

ItsRaining said:

So the Madhyamaka and Yogacara teach emptiness and mind only respectively but how are they realised? In a previous thread I posted, I found out early Mahayana practitioners mostly did similar practices to Hinayana schools. So how did they realise Madhayamaka or Yogacara teachings while doing virtually the same thing as the Sravakas?

Malcolm wrote:

They practice the same path, the six perfections.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 30th, 2018 at 10:25 AM

Title: Re: Mind (duality and beyond)

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Nothing. Should there be?

DGA said:

What's mind?

Nothing said:

ok. maybe we're limited by language here.....how about " that " which experiences Nirvana?.....can we call it " awareness?

Malcolm wrote:

There are no aggregates in nirvana, so how can there be awareness in nirvana?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 30th, 2018 at 9:46 AM

Title: Re: Nagas -- mythological?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The baseline standard for what is "true," from a Madhyamaka perspective, is that which can be conventionally known by ordinary people.

Kim O'Hara said:

Thanks. That's a very good, succinct definition of the kind of truth Westerners usually assume, too.

Phenomena beyond such conventional knowledge can be accepted based on testimony, but it is a very thin authority.

Agreed, but do poetic truth, mythical truth, subjective truth, spiritual truth qualify as "phenomena"? Nagas might, but (e.g.) the statement that, "Truth is beauty, beauty truth," isn't. Nor is, "I am constantly amazed by the quality of the light over the Coral Sea," which is incontrovertible but can't be "conventionally known by ordinary people," as you put it.

Kim

Malcolm wrote:

Aesthetic evaluations are entirely subjective and emotive. They are supposed to be so.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 30th, 2018 at 6:35 AM

Title: Re: Nagas -- mythological?

Content:

Josef said:

We like to assume that the word "myth" means "not true".

The primary definition of myth is: "a usually traditional story of ostensibly historical events that serves to unfold part of the world view of a people or explain a practice, belief, or natural phenomenon"

Mantrik said:

Folk tales indeed, as I mentioned earlier. Odd how neutral words acquire pejorative uses, like criticism, cult etc.

Kim O'Hara said:

We also (usually) have a strangely narrow view of "true", applying it only to publicly verifiable statements about the physical world, or (less often) logical truths. A lot of what we deal with here on DW is "true" in other ways - poetic truth, mythical truth, subjective truth, spiritual truth.

Are these kinds of truth imperfect (less valid) versions of the materialist truth? Or different-but-equal? Or not truth at all?

I would argue for different-but-equal, but it would be nice if we didn't have to use the same word for such different things.

Kim

Malcolm wrote:

The baseline standard for what is "true," from a Madhyamaka perspective, is that which can be conventionally known by ordinary people. Phenomena beyond such conventional knowledge can be accepted based on testimony, but it is a very thin authority.

There are also recognized cognitive limitations which ordinary people find insurmountable without a considerable amount of effort spent in developing the five eyes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 30th, 2018 at 2:04 AM

Title: Re: Feminism, the "myth" of the gender pay gap and other left wing ideologies

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Which is an identity, since that is how they are defined. The chief aim of Socialists was to awaken such people to their identity as the proletariat.

Grigoris said:

No. One can choose to identify with their class (or not), but somebody is a proletarian whether they identify with their relation to capital or not. It is the reason why white working class people are still proletariat, even if they are granted some advantages due to their skin colour. Even if they choose to support the capitalist class (cf Fascists). Regardless of whether they identify with other proletarians or not, they still do not own the means of production. That is the reality of a class view of politics.

Malcolm wrote:

It is still just a label, and therefore an identity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 30th, 2018 at 1:29 AM

Title: Re: Feminism, the "myth" of the gender pay gap and other left wing ideologies

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Even as a class, identity politics are at work, with the notion of the proletariat, and so on.

Grigoris said:

No. A proletariat is defined by their relation to capital (the means of production).

Malcolm wrote:

Which is an identity, since that is how they are defined. The chief aim of Socialists was to awaken such people to their identity as the proletariat.

And not surprisingly, Socialists in the US consistently maintained/and still maintain that African Americans had/need to stuff their issues with racism and subordinate them to class interests. Not surprisingly, Socialism has never done all that well among African Americans.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 29th, 2018 at 10:41 PM

Title: Re: Four Dharma Seals

Content:

DGA said:

Actually, "being compounded" is the proof there is no such thing as "inherent existence."

weitsicht said:

No, three things are uncompounded. Or do you abnegate that?

So I understand you say "absence of inherent existence" always means "being compounded"? But then "presence of inherent existence" always means "being uncompounded"?

Malcolm wrote:

No, also, the three unconditioned dharmas also lack inherent existence since they also lack a self.

weitsicht said:

And no, I have no idea how uncompoundedness could be proven by logic.

Malcolm wrote:

There are two kinds of space discussed in Buddhist texts. The first and most important is space as "absence of obstruction." This is uncompounded or unconditioned space. The second kind of space is dimension, such as the dimension of the cavity in a cup. That kind of space is compounded.

The other two unconditioned dharmas, the two cessations, also lack inherent existence because they are the absence of causes, and do not by themselves exist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 29th, 2018 at 10:35 PM

Title: Re: Feminism, the "myth" of the gender pay gap and other left wing ideologies

Content:

Grigoris said:

It's a problem because it loses sight of 80% of the problem (class politics). It is the reason why so much time and energy is wasted on identity politics.

Malcolm wrote:

Class politics are identity politics.

Grigoris said:

Ummm... Yeah, right!

Malcolm wrote:

Well, in the US they are -- with roots dating back to the Colonial era when some people (whites) of the same class (poor) were given more rights than other poor people (blacks, natives) in order to split their power.

Further, the Socialist movement in the US largely failed because of identity (this is not well known). Prior to the first world war, the majority of Socialists in the US were German-speakers, and Socialist newspapers and so on across the US were published principally in German. Non-German speaking Socialists like Italians were completely marginalized in the US, and had little or no voice in the Socialist movement -- identity politics at work again.

Indeed, identity politics were at the root of the Italian Fascist Movement because of the failure of Socialism to deal with identity at all.\

Even as a class, identity politics are at work, with the notion of the proletariat, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 29th, 2018 at 9:01 PM

Title: Re: Feminism, the "myth" of the gender pay gap and other left wing ideologies

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It's not a problem at all. It's a feature, not a bug.

Grigoris said:

It's a problem because it loses sight of 80% of the problem (class politics). It is the reason why so much time and energy is wasted on identity politics.

Malcolm wrote:

Class politics are identity politics.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 29th, 2018 at 9:59 AM

Title: Re: Four Dharma Seals

Content:

weitsicht said:

Provided that the list of the three unconditioned phenomena is conclusive, what makes things like space or paradoxity conditioned or compound (the latter was the term I started with because it was how it was taught to me) ?

Malcolm wrote:

Conditioned/compounded things have parts and causes.

Unconditioned/uncompounded things have no parts and no causes.

weitsicht said:

I reconsidered and I insist.

Paradoxes and time are uncompounded.

Malcolm wrote:

You can insist all you like, but paradoxes are not listed, and time is definitely compounded since it is divided into past, present, and future.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 29th, 2018 at 5:06 AM

Title: Re: Four Dharma Seals

Content:

weitsicht said:

Provided that the list of the three unconditioned phenomena is conclusive, what makes things like space or paradoxy conditioned or compound (the latter was the term I started with because it was how it was taught to me) ?

Malcolm wrote:

Conditioned/compounded things have parts and causes.

Unconditioned/uncompounded things have no parts and no causes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 29th, 2018 at 3:27 AM

Title: Re: Feminism, the "myth" of the gender pay gap and other left wing ideologies

Content:

Grigoris said:

I think the problem with the left in the US is that it is dominated by liberalism and that whole "sanctity of the individual", whereas here the left is dominated by socialism.

Malcolm wrote:

It's not a problem at all. It's a feature, not a bug.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 29th, 2018 at 2:58 AM

Title: Re: Four Dharma Seals

Content:

weitsicht said:

Still looking for a response.

And no, don't want to discuss "mind" here.

Malcolm wrote:

The three unconditioned phenomena are space, analytical cessation (nirvana), and non-analytical cessation (simple absence of causation).

weitsicht said:

Thanks Malcolm.

Meaning (3) mind was wrong. And (2) Entrance into nirvana is little differently interpreted

What makes phenomena like paradoxy compound?

Malcolm wrote:

I don't know what a "paradoxy compound" is. Can you explain it a little better?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 29th, 2018 at 2:21 AM

Title: Re: Four Dharma Seals

Content:

weitsicht said:

What is it that is uncompound?

I remember from a teaching, but cannot cite and may be wrong, there are three only:

(1) Nirvana

(2) Entrance into nirvana and

