I think he expresses a rather mechanical view about the subject of samaya, as if samaya is something received from a ritual because you have recited a few words after someone in an empowerment. I think a catechistic approach to three vows is a very limited view. It may not be his real view, but it is a view he has expressed in a number of pieces he has authored.

Sonam Wangchug said:

It's not about absolute authority based on worldly ambitions, it's a matter of respect and devotion for lineage masters.

Malcolm wrote:

I respect Dzongsar, but if he says something I think is poorly spoken, a.k.a. "bullshit," then I will call it as I see it. I do not respect authority for the sake of authority. One has to earn my respect. I don't just hand it out because a bunch of people say, "Oh, this is a really important lama," etc. This is one huge difference I see between Americans and Tibetans. We threw off the shackles of hereditary aristocracies more than 200 hundred years ago (though to be fair, we replaced it with the class inequalities produced by Capitalism), so we do not automatically respect someone merely because they have 1) a good family, 2) a good teacher, and last and not least, 3) good personal qualities. If you read Aryadeva's 400 Verse you will discover there the Madhyamaka refutation of family lineages. And if anything, for us, good personal qualities are far more important than family lineage or teacher.

Sonam Wangchug said:

Some people seem to think Rinpoche has nothing better to do with his time then benefit from his position, (Despite the fact that for example at one of his last major events he urged people not to keep offering many things, due to his concern about them being properly used, to not create waste, and to instead donate towards Translating the words of The Buddha, if they were to want to donate.)

You can also find at the back of his most recent book The Guru drinks Bourbon that all the Proceeds were being donated by rinpoche to charity. Enough is enough of unfounded and unsubstantiated claims. Rinpoche is an authentic teacher of the dharma, and while he can have a bewildering air about him at times, if one truly observes, they will see how far reaching his vision is, and how much concern he has for the Dharma, (not just the tibetan tradition either.)

Malcolm wrote:

You are raising objections to sentiments that have not been voiced by me.

You know, it is funny, but just the other day (Saturday) I was talking with some friends about the Sogyal thing, and I pointed out to them that there is a great difference between the activity of Trungpa and Dzongsar when one compares Sogyal to them. In other words, Sogyal's activities are rather paltry by comparison. Just because I voice a criticism of Dzongsar's statement published on Facebook, does not mean I do not recognize or support his other contributions to the Dharma.

But if I see bullshit, I will call it bullshit, even if it was said by the Buddha himself. We do not have sacred cows in Buddhadharma.

I will always reserve my right to speak out whenever I feel the need. As an American, I always reserve the right of free speech. And you can just pity me for my impure vision and wrong-headed insistence on my liberal, individualistic, Western values.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 6:21 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sherab said:

If you subscribe to the emptiness of emptiness, you will have to conclude that emptiness is conditioned.

Malcolm wrote:

No, you just have to conclude that emptiness also has no nature. This is why I told you, and still tell you, your qualm is a nonissue.

Otherwise, the pervasion follows that the unconditioned is conditioned because of the emptiness of the unconditioned.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 6:14 AM

Title: Re: Successful empowerment and conferral of samaya?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

which says nothing about students going to hell.

Malcolm wrote:

I pointed this out already.

dzogchungpa said:

" and as a result an immature student breaks the most fundamental root samayas. "

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that the student in question has no samaya to break. The student faces only the consequence of having had a fraud as a teacher. That can be truly devastating, as I have personally observed in the fallout resulting from the unethical financial and sexual conduct of the one unqualified teacher I had the displeasure of knowing. And no, I am not going to say who this teacher is.

dzogchungpa said:

I do not claim to really understand samaya, and I also like your POV here. I think that the passages I quote are not so clear, at least to me. My only point is that DJKR nowhere implies that any of Sogyal's students "had broken samaya and were likely hell bound" as far as I can tell.

Malcolm wrote:

No, but he included enough of the standard Vajrayāna machismo warnings to make it pretty clear he does not approve of the student's actions either. And Orgyan Tobgyal was absolutely clear, all those people are samaya breakers with one way tickets to lower realms.

And he is just as culpable, really. Without DJK visiting places like Rigpa, knowing what is going on, Sogyal would never have been so successful. Yes, I understand a valid argument can be made that there are earnest and sincere people in this place who deserve to receive teachings, etc. Much of the Tibetan Buddhist establishment in exile is somewhat culpable in the Sogyal Frankenstein. They permitted and abetted this situation, and did not shut him down in the 90's when he should have been shut down. But the attraction of devoted students, incense, beautiful statues, nice donations which can be used for your monastery and shedra back in India, and so on are powerful fumes which overcome one easily, even if you do not take a penny for yourself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 6:02 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sherab said:

This does not mean that it is not there to be directly known...

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, actually it does. This is why it is said in diverse sutras and tantras that there is nothing to see in the middle.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 6:01 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sherab said:

Most physicists would argue that space is not fundamental and that it is an emergent.

Malcolm wrote:

Do not conflate the conditioned space of physics with ākāśa. They do not refer at all to the same thing.

Sherab said:

Yes, they have to be different if you wish to say that ākāśa is unconditioned.

This is another reason why you adopted the position that there is no ultimate.

Malcolm wrote:

I said there was no ultimate reality. Such a thing cannot be found on analysis.

Sherab said:

Yes, the ultimate cannot be found analysis. That is why in relation to the ultimate, it is said to be ineffable because any form of analysis and communication among deluded beings must necessarily involve languages and languages are referenced only to the relative and imputed rightly or wrongly on the ultimate but can never describe it.

Malcolm wrote:

Cessation is considered an extreme in Mahāyāna, an extreme to be avoided.

A cessation is not an annihilation however. A cessation is not annihilation since an annihilation requires an existent to be destroyed. A cessation is simply the absence of a cause for arising.

Sherab said:

Cessation is an annihilation. It is an annihilation of the drivers/causes of samsara in an individual. And only what belongs to the relative can be annihilated.

Malcolm wrote:

Cessation is not annihilation. Analytical cessation is the absence of the arising of afflictions which continued birth in samsara due supermundane insight on the path of seeing and meditation. Nonanalytical cessation is is simple absence of a cause for arising, like a burnt seed.

Neither are annihilation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 5:54 AM

Title: Re: Successful empowerment and conferral of samaya?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

In fact, if the teacher hasn't laid the proper foundations, if the teacher takes advantage of a student physically, emotionally or financially, and if the teacher gives the highest yoga tantric teachings to those who have not established a proper foundation and as a result an immature student breaks the most fundamental root samayas, then the teacher will also suffer extremely grave consequences – consequences even more serious and terrible than those faced by the student.
which says nothing about students going to hell.

Malcolm wrote:
I pointed this out already.

dzogchungpa said:
" and as a result an immature student breaks the most fundamental root samayas. "

Malcolm wrote:
The point is that the student in question has no samaya to break. The student faces only the consequence of having had a fraud as a teacher. That can be truly devastating, as I have personally observed in the fallout resulting from the unethical financial and sexual conduct of the one unqualified teacher I had the displeasure of knowing. And no, I am not going to say who this teacher is.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 5:49 AM
Title: Re: sex with prostitute
Content:
rory said:

It's amazing in all the millennia of prostitution, with horny men buying women's bodies it's only about now that the widespread idea of making the buyer, the man, get punished is taking hold.

The better answer finally, criminalizing the men who buy prostitutes services:
<https://www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2014/aug/08/criminsalise-buying-not-selling-sex>

If you think it's okay to buy a prostitute for sex is it okay for a man to buy your daughter for sex. How about your mother selling herself to buy some food for you? Does that make you happy?

As a woman, maybe the only one in this thread, I can tell you the majority of women worldwide want respect, love, intimacy, companionship from men.

They do not want to sell themselves as a hole for men to deposit their sperm.

gassho
Rory

Malcolm wrote:
Exactly.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 5:48 AM
Title: Re: sex with prostitute
Content:
Anders said:
Yes.

It's not a straightforward topic, there are evidently people here who seem to have the straight of it. I'd like to see it properly argued.

Malcolm wrote:
The difference is that when I buy a homeless person's newsletter, I am not exploiting them. When I use the services of a prostitute, I am. This is why, generally speaking, in Buddhist writings, especially in East Asia, it is held that buying the services of prostitutes is a kind of sexual misconduct, but the selling of the same service is not.

Anders said:
I am really not being wilfully stupid here, but assuming no pimping, can you explain in which way it is exploitative? What's the obvious better alternative for the desperate would-be prostitute?

Malcolm wrote:
She does not have an alternative. This is why buying her services is exploitation. She is selling her body, placing herself at risk of pregnancy, beatings, sexually transmitted diseases, and even murder. If you want to give a prostitute her fee without using her services, this is dāna. It may not be the most intelligent dāna, but at least you are not using her to masturbate.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 5:43 AM
Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations
Content:
Malcolm wrote:

Another glaring hole in his presentation was there was no mention of patriarchy, the unequal status of woman in the Dharma, sexist attitudes towards woman that is rampant in Vajrayāna circles (the dakini/whore complex), Tibetan privilege (yes, it is a problem), and so on.

M

dzoki said:
I don't mean to say that those issues are unimportant, they are important, but as it is, the text by DJKR is quite long, it would be much longer if he were to address everything, so cut him a bit of slack, would you?

Malcolm wrote:

Why? He never cuts anyone any slack.

dzoki said:

I agree that sexist BS is rampant within Tibetan community, but it also partly lies with women, who are too often willing to suppress their sisters in Dharma and prevent them from taking more prominent role.

Malcolm wrote:

This is called patriarchy. Patriarchy has always had female backing. Mothers currying favor for their sons, husbands, etc. There are women who derive a lot of power from patriarchy indirectly.

dzoki said:

Some male teachers are even actively working to alleviate this situation, so while it is far from being satisfactory, there is some improvement, especially if we compare it to the situation say a 100 years ago.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, there is some improvement. But it seems that this improvement is considered a degeneration of the Dharma by many Tibetans, and their western students.

dzoki said:

As for Tibetan privilege, to be honest I am in no way surprised that it exists...

Malcolm wrote:

"Tibetan privilege" means you can be completely ignorant doofus, and yet you will still have far more students than the western teacher, who is ten times more educated than you.

dzoki said:

for I have not seen many Westerners who have completed a whole "khenpo" course in shedra, or who have completed a retreat longer than 7 years. There are very few, and I would be surprised if there is a single one, who has done both. At least 90% of Western Dharma teachers that I met or heard their teaching, had somewhat if not completely faulty presentation of Dharma, that even I, a person who has not done a great deal of study or practice, could discern. One problem with most of such teachers is that they do not teach from the texts (I strongly doubt that they would have capacity to teach from experience), but they only have a loose lecture based on whatever comes to their mind regarding given topic.

Malcolm wrote:

This is not fair. You have not heard even a fraction of all the Western Dharma teachers out there. Be honest, you are grossly exaggerating.

dzoki said:

Basically many Western teachers (self proclaimed lamas and tulkus, "approved" lamas and tulkus, instructors, "resident teachers", you name it) suck hard - at least most of whom I have seen - from Nyingma and Karma Kagyu, can't speak for Sakya or Gelug, or other traditions.

Malcolm wrote:

If these western teachers "suck hard," it is because they have managed to make a deal, gain recognition, students, aided and abetted by the Tibetan establishment.

dzoki said:

But don't you worry, if we, Westerners, spend our time doing practice and studying Dharma at least as much as we hang out on the internet and write things on forums such as this one, there will be more and more high quality practitioners and eventual teachers.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not worried at all. There are already fine western teachers out there, like Lama Tsultrim Allione, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 5:35 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Another glaring hole in his presentation was there was no mention of patriarchy, the unequal status of woman in the Dharma, sexist attitudes towards woman that is rampant in Vajrayāna circles (the dakini/whore complex), Tibetan privilege (yes, it is a problem), and so on.

M

Adamantine said:

One positive development in this regard involves DJKR's own uncle, Dungse Shenphen Dawa Norbu Rinpoche, who a few years ago enthroned four female senior disciples as Lamas out of seven Lamas total. So the numbers swayed to the female in that expression of the Dudjom Tersar lineage. Perhaps this was a way of addressing these inequalities through action instead of words. I'm sure it's also because they were the most qualified however, so perhaps there was zero consideration about gender...which would also be significant.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhadharma generally expresses itself by adapting to the needs of the people who are to be befitted by it. This does not mean there are not fractious and difficult challenges ahead, especially for Tibetan reactionary conservatives who imagine that the Dharma is going to be destroyed as it slowly adjusts itself to the needs of western liberals, whom it primarily serves in the West.

The question that must be raised is whether a Dharma culture that includes liberal, anti-patriarchal, democratic values is truly all that bad. To read some of DKJ's posts, this seems to be worse than have boiling gold poured down one's throat. How is it that the Dharma is so inflexible, so intellectually moribund, that it cannot meet the needs of a given client population? Well, I do not believe for one second that Dharma is that inflexible and intellectually moribund.

The fact is that there are more women in the Dharma in the West than there are men. This is undoubtedly one reason why Shenphen Rinpoche raised four women to be lamas. He has more female students than male students.

As to upholding the idea of genderlessness—it is true that the mind has no gender. It is equally true that our physical gender is an expression of a) our afflictive patterning and b) our mother's conduct in the womb. The point is not be gender blind, this is like the fantasy that the USA is racially blind. It isn't. We still have deal with the fact that after forty years of the women's movement, women still earn on average $0.78 to every $1.00 than a man earns. We live in a society with deep issues with both gender and race. Hoping to smooth it away with gender blindness is just not going to work.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 5:18 AM

Title: Re: sex with prostitute

Content:

Anders said:

He described sexual misconduct as immoral.

Malcolm wrote:

As far as I am concerned, exploiting women through buying their services is sexual misconduct. It generally falls under the category of having sex with those who are not independent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 5:14 AM

Title: Re: sex with prostitute

Content:

Anders said:

I think it needs to be shown here how selling sex out of desperation is morally different from selling a homeless' newsletter out of despeation.

Malcolm wrote:
Seriously?

Anders said:
Yes.

It's not a straightforward topic, there are evidently people here who seem to have the straight of it. I'd like to see it properly argued.

Malcolm wrote:
The difference is that when I buy a homeless person's newsletter, I am not exploiting them. When I use the services of a prostitute, I am. This is why, generally speaking, in Buddhist writings, especially in East Asia, it is held that buying the services of prostitutes is a kind of sexual misconduct, but the selling of the same service is not.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 5:12 AM
Title: Re: sex with prostitute
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Since prostitution is rooted in patriarchy,

The Cicada said:
No it isn't. Nothing is rooted in patriarchy. It's a fiction.

Malcolm wrote:
You poor, deluded man. You probably believe there were some good people among the Nazis in Charlottesville too.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 3:07 AM
Title: Re: sex with prostitute
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Since prostitution is rooted in patriarchy, it is probable that it will never be nonexploitative, since the economy that produces prostitutes is inherently exploitative. In a nonpatriarchal economy prostitution will not exist even though there may be sex workers of various kinds.

Karma Dorje said:
Why the assumption that prostitutes/sex workers are women? The economy is exploitative regardless of your job. We can't escape it at that level. Anyway, I don't think we really disagree.

Malcolm wrote:

Most are. And yes, patriarchy is exploitative of men and women. It's just more exploitive of women.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 2:04 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Grigoris said:

I gave up on pretending to be holy a while ago and just decided to be real. Unfortunately my "real" is not as "nice" as my feigned saintliness.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't know, you might try feigning saintliness again — practice makes perfect, fake it 'till you make it, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 2:02 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

MalaBeads said:

In days ago...the only way to see a lama was to take an empowerment. They would come into town, give an empowerment and then leave without a word. So much for checking them out...let alone for up to 12 years!

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, so one cannot really take any samayas they handed out very seriously, can one?

Seems a very risky thing to give empowerments to a bunch of students you do not know, considering all the rhetoric about it.

MalaBeads said:

Fortunately or not, I never did take the empowerments all that seriously. Certainly not as seriously as is warranted by all discussion. I knew why I was there and also knew that I did not understand a whit of what was happening. I can't say that I still really understand it. That is certainly why I appreciated dzongsar khyentse's long albeit rambling "explanation". If only something like that had been available then! But what can we really say? We are among the first, the pioneers if you will, of dharma coming to the west. So of course there will be things we did not understand. The hazards of the first generation. And the dumb! But then, I shouldn't be quite so hard on myself. I was there for the experience, not for "enlightenment". Live and learn I guess.

Malcolm wrote:

Basically, what happens when unethical teachers breach their commitments with their students is that the establishment resorts to tribal punishment memes. This is what Orgyen Tobgyal did when he accused the students at Rigpa of breaking their samaya.

It is understandable, albeit wrong-headed. It is like claiming, "Well, you took Ramsey Bolton as your guru, and now you are just screwed—your bad."

Tantric commitments are for encouraging harmony in a Vajrayāna Sangha, and the guru is the head of that Sangha. But when a guru's unethical actions threaten that Sangha itself, there is really something for the students to say and something for them to, and they should resist misguided traditionalists who go all Tilopa on them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 1:53 AM

Title: Re: sex with prostitute

Content:

Karma Dorje said:

How is having consensual sex exploitative?!

Malcolm wrote:

If we are talking about prostitution, it is very questionable whether this can be considered "consensual." There are a whole host of labor issues to be taken into consideration when we discuss sex workers of various kinds. Sex workers are among the most exploited workers there are.

In the case of a young woman marrying an older man for position, money, or comfort -- this is between them.

Karma Dorje said:

Yes, I agree that the sex industry has a horrible record of exploitation, from trafficking to physical and sexual abuse, stealing of money, etc. What I am saying is that it ain't necessarily so. It's not the selling of sex for money that is exploitative, it's the current industry practice.

Malcolm wrote:

Since prostitution is rooted in patriarchy, it is probable that it will never be nonexploitative, since the economy that produces prostitutes is inherently exploitative. In a nonpatriarchal economy prostitution will not exist even though there may be sex workers of various kinds.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 1:44 AM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

Vasana said:

Ok. That follows if you already subscribe to Buddhist thought but some Advaitans also say that Atman is false/illusory in the sense that only Brahman is true -i.e there is only Brahman. Atman was never Atman and the thought of atman is subsumed within the realization of being Brahman and so on. Some advaitans even use 'unborn' when describing Brahman which muddies the waters even further. I suppose at this point it circles back to discussion from earlier in the thread in that believing in the final realization of Brahman also constitutes a belief in some kind of transcendental super-self.

Malcolm wrote:

It constitutes belief in an ultimate, all pervading, truly existing essence. To say brahman is unborn is to say it is eternal.

Vasana said:

I was hoping to avoid epistemology and ontology and focus on meditation alone but I suppose it's impossible to speak about them when the meditation follows the view.

Malcolm wrote:

Meditation follows view. If your view is wrong, your meditation will be wrong.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 1:42 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

...my karma does not propel another to act non-virtuously.

Grigoris said:

I didn't say it did. But "why?" their shitty non-virtuous actions come your way and not your neighbours (for example) has to do either with a karmic debt of yours being repaid OR, of course, a new karma debt of theirs being formed. Either way... It is karma all the way down.

Malcolm wrote:

Afflictions generate karma; karma generates suffering, rinse, repeat.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 1:40 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The student has to actually know what they are doing — this is the main criteria.

MalaBeads said:

In days ago...the only way to see a lama was to take an empowerment. They would come into town, give an empowerment and then leave without a word. So much for checking them out...let alone for up to 12 years!

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, so one cannot really take any samayas they handed out very seriously, can one?

Seems a very risky thing to give empowerments to a bunch of students you do not know, considering all the rhetoric about it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 1:30 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Grigoris said:

Karma is not about allocating blame. It is not about punishment and reward. It is not about simple dualistic ideas of victim and perpetrator, it is a little more subtle and complex than that. But I imagine, as a Buddhist, you know this, right?

Malcolm wrote:

Karma is about how our nonvirtuous actions result in physical suffering, and how our virtuous actions result in mental happiness.

Mature practitioners know that most harms which manifest in their vision are the result of lan chags (literally "attachment to repayment"). With respect to being beaten, raped, and so on, my karma does not propel another to act non-virtuously.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 1:21 AM

Title: Re: sex with prostitute

Content:

Karma Dorje said:

How is having consensual sex exploitative?!

Malcolm wrote:

If we are talking about prostitution, it is very questionable whether this can be considered "consensual." There are a whole host of labor issues to be taken into consideration when we discuss sex workers of various kinds. Sex workers are among the most exploited workers there are.

In the case of a young woman marrying an older man for position, money, or comfort -- this is between them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 1:18 AM

Title: Re: sex with prostitute

Content:

Anders said:

I think it needs to be shown here how selling sex out of desperation is morally different from selling a homeless' newsletter out of despeation.

Malcolm wrote:

Seriously?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 1:14 AM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

Vasana said:

So then by that token, An advaitan developing a stable nirvikalpa samadhi is progressing in the same manner as a Dzogchenpa developing a stable vajropama samadhi ? Don't such samadhi's serve to 'scratch the surface' of the obscurations at least?

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. The result of a nonaryan's nirvikalpa samadhi is rebirth in the realm of unconscious devas. Nonbuddhist samadhis merely suppress afflictions, they do not even scratch their surface.

Vajropama samadhi will only come at the end of the path, even if one is a Dzogchen practitioner. In order for Vajropama samadhi to function, one has to be on the verge of buddhahood.

Vasana said:

Right, I suspected this would lead to meditation devas. It still doesn't explain some Advaitan's insistence that the realization of a Jivanmukti is synonymous with the eradication of any more karma coming to fruition in the future.

Swami Sivananda on Nirbija Samadhi:

"Without seeds or Samskaras [...] All the seeds or impressions are burnt by the fire of knowledge [...] all the Samskaras and Vasanas which bring on rebirths are totally freed up. All Vrittis or mental modifications that arise from the mind-lake come under restraint. The five afflictions, viz., Avidya (ignorance), Asmita (egoism), Raga-dvesha (love and hatred) and Abhinivesha (clinging to life) are destroyed and the bonds of Karma are annihilated [...] It gives Moksha (deliverance from the wheel of births and deaths). With the advent of the knowledge of the Self, ignorance vanishes. With the disappearance of the root-cause, viz., ignorance, egoism, etc., also disappear."

Is this assertion correct or are they just hanging out in the meditation realms for eons taking it to be full realization?

Malcolm wrote:

This assertion is not correct since atman is an inherently wrong view. Since their view is wrong, they are mistaken in their meditation, and their conduct and result is also false and samsaric.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 1:07 AM

Title: Re: Successful empowerment and conferral of samaya?

Content:

conebeckham said:

You are still of the opinion that watching a previously-recorded video doesn't confer empowerment, I assume?

Malcolm wrote:

Of course.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 1:05 AM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

Vasana said:

I'm still not fully understanding this point. Surely if a commoner developed samadhi it would naturally burn away the afflictions in the same way it would for an Arya if the samadhi was exactly the same?

Malcolm wrote:

A commoner is afflicted. An ārya who abides in Vajrapama samadhi is, in Mahāyāna, already on the 10th bhumi. In the Hinayāna, they are on the supermundane path of meditation.

You need to study the samapattis as they are discussed in the Abhidharmakosha, chapter 8.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 1:03 AM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Yes, there must be. Nirvikalpa Samadhi is not a final resting place, so to speak, per Ramana Maharshi and others.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no difference between nirvikalpa samadhi and vajropama samadhi apart from the person who is experiencing them: an ordinary afflicted being or someone about to enter buddhahood. In the case of the former, such a person has not even scratched the surface of the two obscurations; in the case of the latter, vajropama samadhi eradicates the last vestige of the two obscurations.

Vasana said:

So then by that token, An advaitan developing a stable nirvikalpa samadhi is progressing in the same manner as a Dzogchenpa developing a stable vajropama samadhi ? Don't such samadhi's serve to 'scratch the surface' of the obscurations at least?

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. The result of a nonaryan's nirvikalpa samadhi is rebirth in the realm of unconscious devas. Nonbuddhist samadhis merely suppress afflictions, they do not even scratch their surface.

Vajropama samadhi will only come at the end of the path, even if one is a Dzogchen practitioner. In order for Vajropama samadhi to function, one has to be on the verge of buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 12:56 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Another glaring hole in his presentation was there was no mention of patriarchy, the unequal status of woman in the Dharma, sexist attitudes towards woman that is rampant in Vajrayāna circles (the dakini/whore complex), Tibetan privilege (yes, it is a problem), and so on.

tiagolps said:

In DJKRs Defence, he does glance at that problem some times...just maybe not about buddhist circles exactly.

A Celebrity Falls Sick by Dzongsar Khyentse Rinpoche said:

“So, where is your female form now?” asked the goddess.

“It is no more,” replied Śāriputra, and they discuss what is meant by ‘no more’. As there is no such thing as truly existing gender, they said, how can it change once, let alone twice.

This conversation about gender equality took place near the beautiful and remote north Indian city of Vaiśālī, in the presence of perhaps the most significant and consequential spiritual practitioners alive at that time. And it happened more than two thousand five hundred years ago, centuries before the Christian and Islamic religions were founded, and more than two millennia before the French writer Olympe de Gouges published her Declaration of the Rights of Woman and the Female Citizen in 1791 and the English philosopher Mary Wollstonecraft added her feminist voice with A Vindication of the Rights of Woman in 1792.

Malcolm wrote:

In fact, this is a dodge. It shows how much sexism there is in Buddhism. When you have a story about how a goddess has to call an arhat correct on sexism, this shows there is a deep problem with sexism in Buddhism and there has been since its inception. This is what that story means.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 12:51 AM

Title: Re: Successful empowerment and conferral of samaya?

Content:

conebeckham said:

On reflection, I will agree with this position, Malcolm.

Malcolm wrote:

Come on, cone, if you agree with me there is nothing to discuss!

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 12:47 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

conebeckham said:

I will note the DKR calls attention to the "poor preparation" of students by the Rigpa organization, and I think that's right.

heart said:

No to mention his attention to the training of the teacher.

Malcolm wrote:

I addressed this explicitly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 12:45 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

MalaBeads said:

One thing emerges as clear: that orthodox Tibetan teachers and orthodox western practioners differ in their interpretations of the events surrounding Sogyal Rinpoche.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no such thing as orthodoxy in Tibetan Buddhism. Position? Power? Money? Yes. Orthodoxy, nope that does not exist.

MalaBeads said:

No orthodoxy, eh? How so?

Malcolm wrote:

It is summed up in this old Tibetan saying, "Every valley has a different language; every lama has a different Dharma."

Kirt thinks that broad commonalties, largely based in the Kadampa tradition, between the four schools counts for an orthodoxy, or that the goal of all schools is to liberated sentient beings (it is true they all give lip service to this idea).

But we all know that Tibetan culture is extremely brutal to animals (hence Patrul's' long diatribes about meat eating, agriculture practices, shearing of sheep and so on), and we also know that Tibetans were extremely brutal to each other. The aristocrats in Tibet oppressed the shit out of their subjects, all the while mouthing pretty mores about compassion, bodhicitta, and so on. I certainly do not mean to suggest, by the way that Western Capitalist culture is a vast improvement. In 1850 there were 3,204,313 slaves in bondage in the USA.

Quite frankly, so called "orthodoxy" in Tibetan Buddhism merely serves the class interests of the religious caste in Tibetan society.

This is not to say that Tibetan Buddhism has not produced thousands of awakened people, because it has — but as far as I can tell, most of these people were on the margins, like Milarepa, not connected with institutional Buddhism in Tibet, for the most part.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 17th, 2017 at 12:33 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Grigoris said:

I actually think he clarified a lot of issues.

Malcolm wrote:

For example?

Grigoris said:

He talked at length of the Teacher's job to prepare the students. This, to me, does not look like a condemnation of students. Then he talked about how students should assess their teacher before entrusting themselves to them. This, to me, does not look like a condemnation of teachers.

Actually, what this makes clear to me, is that that the relation between student and teacher is not a one way affair, in either direction. It shows me that the relationship is one of mutual dependence, that both sides have to have an intelligent and informed attitude to the teacher-student relationship, otherwise it'll end up as a disaster (or will just be pointless). I fail to see why this is controversial.

Malcolm wrote:

He did indeed discuss this, which I took pains to point out.

However, he still lays blame on the students who have picked a faulty guru and he still insists that if such students criticize that guru or perceives the guru as disqualified or at fault, they have broken samaya with that guru, even if in the end it is the guru's own damn fault because that guru himself broke samaya with his or students, subjecting those students to abuse — physical, sexual, financial, or emotional.

I can understand why people like Dzongsar, who have literally thousands of vajra disciples, might be anxious about the issue of samayas. You have to have a titanium stomach to bear all that broken samaya.

There are a lot of samaya heroes out there who arrogantly proclaim that that "Vajrayāna isn't for pussies." Vajrayāna machismo primarily injures woman— it really does need to end.

Another glaring hole in his presentation was there was no mention of patriarchy, the unequal status of woman in the Dharma, sexist attitudes towards woman that is rampant in Vajrayāna circles (the dakini/whore complex), Tibetan privilege (yes, it is a problem), and so on.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 11:02 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

These are all good suggestions, but they need to take it step further and completely disassociate with Sogyal, as in the Kripalu example I mentioned before.

M

Lucas Oliveira said:

Sogyal Rinpoche Resigns from Rigpa

Rigpa also announced an independent investigation into the abuse allegations, and the creation of a new code of conduct and spiritual advisory group to guide the Rigpa organization:

“The governing boards and management teams of Rigpa, having sought professional and spiritual advice, will assure that the following steps are taken:

1. Set up an independent investigation by a neutral third party into the various allegations that have been made.
2. Launch an international consultation process to establish both a code of conduct and a grievance process for Rigpa.
3. Establish a new spiritual advisory group to guide the Rigpa organization.

These steps are being taken by the boards and management teams of Rigpa worldwide, in a true spirit of collaboration. Channels will be established so that any member of our community has the opportunity to express their wishes, views and concerns.” (Rigpa International)

<https://www.buddhistdoor.net/news/sogyal-rinpoche-resigns-from-rigpa->

Even in Kali Yuga justice is present. Because the truth is immortal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Grigoris said:

I actually think he clarified a lot of issues.

Malcolm wrote:

For example?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 10:06 PM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

Vasana said:

I'm trying to understand the difference between these two states in terms of practice rather than the usual dialect of Brahman being taken as an absolute existent . The extinction of subject and object seems to be common to both traditions as does the burning away of Samskaras/vasanas and mental activity as a result of such samādhi/jñāna. So what is the experiential difference between the jñāna In Advaita that results in the extinguishing of karmic traces and conceptualization and the jñāna in Dzogchen that results in the karmic extinguishing of traces and conceptualization?

Is there still some subtle knowledge-obscuration [jneyavarana] that Advaita's Nirvikalpa Samadhi fails to make obsolete?

Anonymous X said:

Yes, there must be. Nirvikalpa Samadhi is not a final resting place, so to speak, per Ramana Maharshi and others.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no difference between nirvikalpa samadhi and vajropama samadhi apart from the person who is experiencing them: an ordinary afflicted being or someone about enter buddhahood. In the case of the former, such a person has not even scratched the surface of the two obscurations; in the case of the latter, vajropama samadhi eradicates the last vestige of the two obscurations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 9:52 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

A lot of bullshit, not 100%, but a very high percentage of bullshit.

Punya said:

Oh really. You disagree with DJKR? What a surprise!

(Sorry to be late with these comments, but some of us only have time for work, practice and household matters during the week and the other thread got closed down.)

Sonam Wangchug said:

Again Malcolm's bias against DJKR becomes painfully clear here.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not biased against Dzongsar. I think he is a highly qualified teacher. I have encouraged people to study with him, if they are interested to, and I still would.

Nevertheless, I thought much of his spiel on Facebook with respect to the Sogyal debacle was bullshit. It was long winded, repetitive, rambling, self-indulgent and overly blaming of students. That is my opinion of the piece he wrote. I am sure that you, like others, have a different opinion.

Sonam Wangchug said:

Just because you disagree with a Rinpoche doesn't mean you have to be disrespectful, "A lot of bullshit." "Self indulgent babble" .. who are YOU to say such a thing?

Malcolm wrote:

Why should I have to be any particular kind of person at all? Not only that, I do not find that Dzongsar is especially respectful of those who are the object of his oft-voiced criticisms.

Do you maintain a double standard? It's ok for Dzongsar to be rude and cutting because he is a "rinpoche" while ordinary people who do not bear hereditary titles, peons such as myself, need to take a respectful tone with their superiors? Sorry, that is exactly why we Americans kicked out the British. I am not going to bend a knee to anyone merely because they possess a title.

Sonam Wangchug said:

I may not agree with everything CHNN does, but realizing people like YOU and others are his students and have faith in him, I find it pretty arrogant and rude to insult teachers.

Malcolm wrote:

I did not insult him, I found his piece to be wanting, imprecise, and largely unfair and unbalanced.

Sonam Wangchug said:

As a Sakya loppen, there is a bit more weight on you to act with some decency, especially when the head of Sakya says Rinpoche is one of the most learned and realized rinpoche's of our times .. somehow doesn't really equate with "self indulgent babble."

Malcolm wrote:

Dzongsar takes a lot of opportunity to be a social critic. He delights in it. No one says, "Hey Dzongsar, that's bullshit." Instead everyone just applauds him and tells him how wonderful his words are — as if he is a prince and we are in his court.

If you can dish it out, you have to be able to take it, especially when you dish it out in public. The court of public opinion is a rather different kind of court than a royal court.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 12:42 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Konchog1 said:

Do this mean the Three Heaps Sutra or something else?

Malcolm wrote:

the footnotes on the tantra refer to a different text.

Konchog1 said:

Any chance of finding this in English?

Malcolm wrote:

In 2018 when my translation of the Rigpa Rangshar will be published by Wisdom.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 12:40 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

smcj said:

There is no such thing as orthodoxy in Tibetan Buddhism. Position? Power? Money? Yes. Orthodoxy, nope that does not exist.

Although on one level correct, I think I'm going to say this how things look when you completely lack pure view.

Malcolm wrote:

"Pure view" is simply a measure of how much delusion you can stand without getting sucked into it. Buddhas have an infinite capacity to not be sucked in by delusion. Us, not so much. Even our so called "pure vision" is just a conceptual delusion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 12:38 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

MalaBeads said:

One thing emerges as clear: that orthodox Tibetan teachers and orthodox western practioners differ in their interpretations of the events surrounding Sogyal Rinpoche.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no such thing as orthodoxy in Tibetan Buddhism. Position? Power? Money? Yes. Orthodoxy, nope that does not exist.

kirtu said:

You are being unnecessarily provocative on this point. There is definitely an orthodoxy and it is reflected in what people and esp. gurus consider normative. In that sense it is a potentially fluid orthodoxy.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

There is no orthodoxy. Sakyapa? Gelugs, Kagyus, and Nyingmas disagree with you. Gelug? Kagyus, Nyingmas, and Sakyapas disagree with you and so it goes.

The establishment of orthodoxy is just about when the dry rot of religion sets in.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 12:21 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

MalaBeads said:

One thing emerges as clear: that orthodox Tibetan teachers and orthodox western practioners differ in their interpretations of the events surrounding Sogyal Rinpoche.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no such thing as orthodoxy in Tibetan Buddhism. Position? Power? Money? Yes. Orthodoxy, nope that does not exist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 12:20 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

TRC said:

So, perhaps a clarification of this samaya aspect and how it directly relates to Sogyal Rinpoche would be good, to get this topic back to focus and relevancy?

Malcolm wrote:

I think the assumption that needs to be tested is the assumption that these students have any samaya at all with Sogyal as a teacher.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 12:17 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It also gives warning signs that one has broken samaya:

These are the warning signs of broken samaya:

various misfortunes arise,

diseases are rampant and harmful,

various contagious diseases occur,

and there are also provocations and misguiders.

If one is killed, one becomes a hell being.

One's eyes cannot see form.

One cannot hear and one's work cannot be done.

Leprosy and blistering diseases arise.

Thieves and royal punishments occur.

One contracts contagious diseases others do not get.

One's sons and daughters die.

The whole country arises as one's enemy.

One's activities become completely pointless.

When such warning signs arise,

recite a confession as previously explained.

If confessions are recited, then these signs will be successfully averted.

Konchog1 said:

Do this mean the Three Heaps Sutra or something else?

Malcolm wrote:

the footnotes on the tantra refer to a different text.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 12:14 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you do not have samaya, you did not receive the empowerment, you are not qualified to practice Vajrayāna, and so whatever effort you make in practicing Secret Mantra will become poison rather than medicine.

smcj said:

Malcolm, would you have enough confidence in an online initiation to do a retreat on that specific practice without having had the initiation duplicated elsewhere?

Malcolm wrote:

If I had confidence in the guru, I would absolutely have that confidence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 11:08 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

conebeckham said:

[Some content edited out.]

Just to be clear--Garchen Rinpoche is not wasting anyone's time. That is an extreme interpretation of my words. Connections are established, we just perhaps differ on the extent of those connections.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a logical consequence of asserting that online transmissions do not transmit samaya.

Lhasa said:

And without samaya, whatever that is, we are trying to go up a creek without a paddle?

Malcolm wrote:

If you do not have samaya, you did not receive the empowerment, you are not qualified to practice Vajrayāna, and so whatever effort you make in practicing Secret Mantra will become poison rather than medicine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 11:04 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

conebeckham said:

[Some content edited out.]

Just to be clear--Garchen Rinpoche is not wasting anyone's time. That is an extreme interpretation of my words. Connections are established, we just perhaps differ on the extent of those connections.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a logical consequence of asserting that online transmissions do not transmit samaya.

conebeckham said:

Is it your opinion that all on-line transmissions transmit Samaya? For that matter, do Jenangs and Jinlabs transmit the same samayas as Wangkurs and Wangchens? If so, is it not a requirement that such samayas are elucidated, or is merely "maintaining bodhicitta in one's heart" sufficient?

Malcolm wrote:

It is my opinion that if a qualified guru wishes to create samaya bonds with people who are a) tuning in over the internet or b) are present in the room, that is their prerogative. I see no reason at all why refuge ceremonies, monastic ordinations, bodhisattva vow rites, and so on as well as full abhishekas cannot be conferred online. The only difference I see is whether or not some guru feels comfortable with doing so or not. If they feel comfortable with it, that is fine with me and I will respect that their students received the transmission they say they received. Obviously gurus who are not comfortable with giving transmissions and empowerments online will not be online for that reason.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 10:57 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

conebeckham said:

Alright.

I am going to say something that may make me unpopular, but if you've only taken teachings or "empowerments" on-line, I think there are no "classic" samayas.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not going to make you unpopular, it just makes you wrong. Samayas in an empowerment come from reciting the vidyādhara vows, etc, after the Guru during the preliminary phase. If you think that the samayas did not take because you did not have a sip of samaya water after that recitation, well...

conebeckham said:

I did not make that argument. Nor do I intend to.

I do, however, not mind being wrong. I do not believe there have been full wangkurs given on-line, where the vidhyadhara vows are recited. If I am wrong, so be it. Someone can correct me with specific examples, and I will eat my proverbial hat. If such full wangkur were in fact given, live via the internet, it would follow that, as is traditional, the explanation regarding the various samayas would also be given, in detail, just as it is, in full wangkurs, in "meat space."

Malcolm wrote:

What is the difference between the internet and sitting in a room watching the whole thing on a big screen with the lama hundreds of feet away being listened too on a local fm radio channel, and the samaya substances just being handed out to 4,000 people at the end? The samaya substances? Is that all? Geographical proximity? As far as I can tell, the only difference between an empowerment given live online and one being given locally is the preference of the lama.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 10:37 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

conebeckham said:

[Some content edited out.]

Just to be clear--Garchen Rinpoche is not wasting anyone's time. That is an extreme interpretation of my words. Connections are established, we just perhaps differ on the extent of those connections.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a logical consequence of asserting that online transmissions do not transmit samaya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 10:33 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Adamantine said:

actual samaya being able or not being able to be conferred by unqualified or unrealized Gurus? It appeared you had indicated there were passages that covered that territory.

Malcolm wrote:

From chapter nine of the same text:

A master lacking a connection with a lineage of scholars,
who is self-important,
stupid, literal-minded,
who does not understand the meaning of Secret Mantra,
has harsh words for others, is boastful, has entered false paths, has not seen the mandala of the empowerment, disregards samaya,
is unable to answer questions,
has little learning, and great pride —
such an unexamined master is a m̄ara for the disciple.
He is not a master who can teach Secret Mantra

and is unable to teach the Great Perfection, Ati.

Adamantine said:

Thank you Malcolm. That's a lot of conditions to meet. The translation has the list end with an AND great pride.. so was the intent of the source text to imply only if a master fulfills all of these negative descriptions they can not teach Secret Mantra? Or is just one or two potentially enough to disqualify them?

Malcolm wrote:

I think a number of different kinds of gurus are included in this list. I do not take it to mean that someone must possess all of these faults in full; but if they have enough of these faults then this passage applies to them. "Enough" means enough of these faults which demonstrate through their conduct that these faults exist in them.

Adamantine said:

It's not clear in this excerpt as it's not addressed: in the case of an unqualified master granting Empowerment that a samaya link is not made in some way, or if a samaya link is made through the temdrel of mutual intent and the ritual enactment of the source tantric texts etc. so I'll assume you have concluded that samaya is not transmitted from your own logical inference?

Malcolm wrote:

It is made very clear: "He is not a master who can teach Secret Mantra and is unable to teach the Great Perfection, Ati." It is an unequivocal statement.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 10:25 AM

Title: Re: Individuality, Nonduality, Anatta, Nirvana

Content:

Queequeg said:

The confusion, it seems to me, arises with the attempt to directly "experience" emptiness, or alternatively anatta - these are more or less similar insights.

Wayfarer said:

'Experience' always implies 'an experiencer'. So you can't 'experience emptiness' - if you have an experience of it, then it's not empty, it contains something, namely 'the experiencer'.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no "experiencer" since there is no agent. There is merely experience, and all experience is empty.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 7:29 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is not going to make you unpopular, it just makes you wrong. Samayas in an empowerment come from reciting the vidyādhara vows, etc, after the Guru during the preliminary phase. If you think that the samayas did not take because you did not have a sip of samaya water after that recitation, well...

Grigoris said:

Wait a second there Malcolm... You yourself, in another thread, said that one cannot receive the Vase Empowerment without getting knocked on the head, which means the empowerment would be incomplete. Now you are saying that the samaya water is not necessary to complete the empowerment?

Seems contradictory to me.

Malcolm wrote:

The consequence of maintain our friend Cone's POV is that Garchen is wasting his time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 7:24 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Just how many unconditioned (saṃskṛita) dharmas do you think there are? By my count, there are only three: space and the two cessations. Space has no function at all, and neither do the two cessations. Space never changes, it is permanent. Cessations never change, they are permanent.

Emptiness also has no "function." Emptiness is also permanent and changeless.

Space, cessation, and emptiness also are not real so their permanence is merely a formal statement.

Only conditioned dharmas have "functions."

Sherab said:

Most physicists would argue that space is not fundamental and that it is an emergent.

Malcolm wrote:

Do not conflate the conditioned space of physics with ākāśa. They do not refer at all to the same thing.

Sherab said:

Space, cessation and emptiness are not real to you because as far as you are concerned, they are merely concepts and nothing else. They have no correspondence to reality.

Malcolm wrote:

Space, cessation, and emptiness do not arise. Space is a description of absence of obstruction. Cessation is a description of absence of a cause for arising. Emptiness is a description of the absence of nature. These terms describe absences.

Sherab said:

This is another reason why you adopted the position that there is no ultimate.

Malcolm wrote:

I said there was no ultimate reality. Such a thing cannot be found on analysis.

Sherab said:

Correct me if I am wrong. If I am right, then cessation for you is the same as annihilation because nothing is left after cessation. That is an extreme position in my view.

Malcolm wrote:

Cessation is considered an extreme in Mahāyāna, an extreme to be avoided.

A cessation is not an annihilation however. A cessation is not annihilation since an annihilation requires an existent to be destroyed. A cessation is simply the absence of a cause for arising.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 3:49 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Adamantine said:

actual samaya being able or not being able to be conferred by unqualified or unrealized Gurus? It appeared you had indicated there were passages that covered that territory.

Malcolm wrote:

From chapter nine of the same text:

A master lacking a connection with a lineage of scholars,
who is self-important,
stupid, literal-minded,
who does not understand the meaning of Secret Mantra,
has harsh words for others, is boastful, has entered false paths, has not seen the mandala of the empowerment, disregards
samaya,
is unable to answer questions,
has little learning, and great pride —
such an unexamined master is a mārā for the disciple.
He is not a master who can teach Secret Mantra

and is unable to teach the Great Perfection, Ati.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 3:37 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

conebeckham said:

Honestly? You cannot address this question on an internet forum.

Lhasa said:

Yes, honestly, some of us only have online teachers and no where to ask questions. All I've heard is Garchen Rinpoche say to keep your mind full of love, bodhicitta.

conebeckham said:

Alright.

I am going to say something that may make me unpopular, but if you've only taken teachings or "empowerments" on-line, I think there are no "classic" samayas.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not going to make you unpopular, it just makes you wrong. Samayas in an empowerment come from reciting the vidyādhara vows, etc, after the Guru during the preliminary phase. If you think that the samayas did not take because you did not have a sip of samaya water after that recitation, well...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 3:35 AM

Title: Re: Tantric Vows after Death

Content:

Minobu said:

I was taught that tantric vows after we die become null in void so to speak.

If this is the case it seems much more compassionate than the hell fire and brimstone that is going on in other threads concerning Tantric vows.

It produces a fear instead of joy..

maybe it's just some sects. it does not make sense that the stopping of a Buddhist practice should cause any harm to the sentient being.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, they do. They are connected with the physical body. When that perished, so do the samayas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 2:48 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

tiagolps said:

Right don't disagree with ye there. where you getting at?

Grigoris said:

That not all Western cultures are purely Kali Yuga cultures.

.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes they are. Why? Because the humans in them are all 100% grade A kali yuga people.

All of the people of the world are 100% Kali Yugins.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 2:31 AM

Title: Re: The Mahamudra of Sakya Pandita, paper by Julia Stenzel

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This short text has been translated, more than once.

kirtu said:

On Academia.edu, you will have to register to download it.

http://www.academia.edu/10145199/The_Mah%C4%81mudr%C4%81_of_Sakya_Pa%E1%B9%87%E1%B8%8Dita, Julia Stenzel, Indian International

Journal of Buddhist Studies Volume 15 (2014)

Sakya Pandita Kunga Gyaltsen (Sa skya pa[^] ðita kun dga' rgyal mtshan, 1182–1251) of the Sakya school of Tibetan Buddhism viewed Mahāmudrā practice as being solely a part of the Tantric practice path—a path to which disciples may be introduced only after having passed through the initiations and required stages of the Niruttarayogatantra. He criticised the non-Tantric

Mahāmudrā approaches of Kagyü (Bka' brgyud) masters such as Gampopa (Sgam po pa, 1079-1153) and Lama Zhang Tsalpa (Bla ma Zhang tshal pa, 1123-93). The controversy between representatives of the two schools has been discussed by Roger Jackson (1982) ,

David Jackson (1990, 1994) , and others. Western scholarship has been less concerned, however, with the positive statements of Sakya Pandita on Mahāmudrā, i.e. with the question of what a correct understanding of Mahāmudrā would be in his eyes. This fact is partly due to the secrecy with which the Sakya School handles Tantric texts. However, in a dialogue (dris lan) text in the collected works of the Sakya masters (Sa skya bka''bum), Sakya Pandita gives a short account of the topic in response to questions posed by Tokden Gyan (Rtogs ldan rgyan). 1 This text, available from the Tibetan Buddhist Resource Center and as yet untranslated, 2 will serve as the basis for an analysis of Sakya Pandita's Mahāmudrā. His presentation will be supplemented by explanations drawn from A Clear Differentiations of the Three Codes, 3 and Taking the Result as the Path (Stearns 2006) . Since controversies and debates have the advantage of clarifying divergent viewpoints by highlighting crucial differences, I will include a discussion of the Kagyü Mahāmudrā approaches that Sapan criticizes wherever it seems helpful in illuminating Sakya Pandita's standpoint. For this part of the research, I will rely on the Western scholarship mentioned previously. My analysis does not aim at justifying either side of the controversy. Both Sakya and Kagyü Schools have continuously taught their respective meditation systems for nearly a millennium, which I like to see as a proof that a significant number of individuals have found meaning in their divergent approaches. As Western scholars and practitioners explore Tibetan Buddhism, it is important to understand controversial positions as thoroughly as the secret content of the debated material allows, so as not to perpetuate a thousand year-old debate on the basis of partial information. It is my hope that this paper contributes to clarifying the position of Sakya Pandita in the Mahāmudrā controversy.

Kirt

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 2:22 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Grigoris said:

Uuuuummm... I think you are talking about US culture here, coz Greek society, for example, predates the beginning of the Kali Yuga (3012 BCE) and also happens to be Western culture. Greek Neolithic society is kicked off about 7000BC, highly developed Helladic, Minoan and Cycladic societies existed about 100+ years before the beginning of the Kali Yuga.

Malcolm wrote:

Every culture in the world is a kali yuga culture. Your view is excessively synchronic.

Grigoris said:

Ever culture in the world is CURRENTLY a Kali Yuga culture. Pre-3012BCE Indian culture can not be considered Kali Yuga culture.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, I am talking about now, not 3012BCE.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 2:12 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

tiagolps said:

Completely out of the blue question, you mentioned on a facebook post that "Tibetans were a violent culture, and their ritual preferences reflect this" and "Indians were a more erotic culture, and their ritual preferences reflect this too".

Out of curiosity, what do we westerners reflect?

Malcolm wrote:

We are a Kali Yuga culture, so it is a little too soon to say.

Grigoris said:

Uuuuummm... I think you are talking about US culture here, coz Greek society, for example, predates the beginning of the Kali Yuga (3012 BCE) and also happens to be Western culture. Greek Neolithic society is kicked off about 7000BC, highly developed Helladic, Minoan and Cycladic societies existed about 100+ years before the beginning of the Kali Yuga.

Malcolm wrote:

Every culture in the world is a kali yuga culture. Your view is excessively synchronic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 1:55 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

...

tiagolps said:

Completely out of the blue question, you mentioned on a facebook post that "Tibetans were a violent culture, and their ritual preferences reflect this" and "Indians were a more erotic culture, and their ritual preferences reflect this too".

Out of curiosity, what do we westerners reflect?

Malcolm wrote:

We are a Kali Yuga culture, so it is a little too soon to say.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 1:32 AM

Title: Re: DJKR on Rigpa Scandal

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

I 100% agree with this,

<https://www.buddhistdoor.net/news/dzongsar-khyentse-rinpoche-issues-public-statement-on-recent-criticism-of-sogyal-rinpoche>

Malcolm wrote:

I don't, for many reasons. Mostly self-indulgent bullshit. There are a few things in it with which I agree. Mostly it is a bunch of irrelevant silliness and posturing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 1:24 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In short, people should consult the Rigpa Rangshar's chapter on samaya and cease laying blame on blameless students who have the misfortune of choosing mad guides.

Adamantine said:

Is there an existing English rendition of this chapter? If not, could you give a summary and at least a couple of relevant lines translated for us to consider? Otherwise it is simply not possible for non-lotsawas to consult with the text in a timely way regarding this issue. Thank you.

Not sure if you missed this Malcolm, as you've been since active in the thread.. hope you'll consider helping us look into your reference. Thanks!

Malcolm wrote:

This is with respect to breaking the samayas of the body, from chapter 10 of the Rig pa rang shar:

If the master breaks samaya, there is no method of purification.

Both master and disciple are born in the hell of great wailing.

If the disciple breaks samaya, there is a method of purification.

recite the vast discourses and turn the vast wheel of the ganacakra.

It is also said that one should completely purify the three wheels.

It also gives warning signs that one has broken samaya:

These are the warning signs of broken samaya:

various misfortunes arise,

diseases are rampant and harmful,

various contagious diseases occur,

and there are also provocations and misguiders.

If one is killed, one becomes a hell being.
One's eyes cannot see form.
One cannot hear and one's work cannot be done.
Leprosy and blistering diseases arise.
Thieves and royal punishments occur.
One contracts contagious diseases others do not get.
One's sons and daughters die.
The whole country arises as one's enemy.
One's activities become completely pointless.
When such warning signs arise,
recite a confession as previously explained.
If confessions are recited, then these signs will be successfully averted.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 12:49 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

pael said:

I want to know how deep I am in samaya. ChNN manifested sickness after I sent questions to him with e-mail on 11th of May 2017. Is this my fault?

Malcolm wrote:

Oh lord, no. You should not think that way at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 12:30 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

makewhisper said:

Based on your study and practice, what conditions are necessary for a successful empowerment and conferral of samaya?

Malcolm wrote:

The student has to actually know what they are doing — this is the main criteria.

makewhisper said:

As a neophyte, I'm not quite sure what this means.

Malcolm wrote:

It means you have to know what you are doing. You have to understand the Dharma. You have to examine the teacher. You have to understand the commitments you are taking on. For example, if you do not understand the commitments you are taking, you don't have samaya at all. It is really that simple.

If you do understand the commitments, you do know what you are doing, and so on, a teacher's conduct has to be pretty outrageously abusive before you can legitimately say, this teacher has broken samaya and now my commitment to him or her is null and void. If he or she likes fancy cars, too bad; if they like expensive food and wine; too bad. If they have a penchant for gold and silver, and insist that their students pay outrageous fees for teachings, too bad. If they like having multiple partners and are up front about it, too bad. If they are gay, too bad. If they are trans, too bad.

But if they systematically abuse their power, or are dishonest, or are physically and/or sexually abusive, well, then one might have a case that this teacher is bad news. Even here, it is best to just leave their company and move on. However, sometimes it is bad enough to warrant a public outing. In this case, don't worry about your samaya, your obligation to sentient beings is more important.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 12:14 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

These days, empowerments are handed out as a means of attracting followers to people who no idea what they are doing, even though sometimes they have been "following" Tibetan Buddhism for decades. How can one even imagine that any of these people have actually received samaya? It is only possible to believe this if one thinks that merely attending a ritual and repeating some words has the power to confer samaya. I don't believe this, but you are free to disagree.

makewhisper said:

Based on your study and practice, what conditions are necessary for a successful empowerment and conferral of samaya?

Malcolm wrote:

The student has to actually know what they are doing — this is the main criteria.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 12:11 AM

Title: Re: Guru Yoga thought experiment

Content:

Grigoris said:

I agree, and I also think that his point of people entering Vajrayana without a grasp of Buddhist basics, is also very important.

MalaBeads said:

Yes.

Miroku said:

Yes exactly. Few days ago my friend and I had a discussion about informing people about samayas when preparing them for di from ChNN. Nobody ever tells them anything about some samayas and preparation is usually done in a matter of few minutes. No wonder Rinpoche's health is bad.

Malcolm wrote:

ChNN never mentions samaya when discussing Direct Introduction, or when he does, he says it is too much to remember and quite relative anyway. He does recommend that if someone is unhappy with someone they discover is an unqualified teacher, they are free to leave. But that they should not slander that teacher in anyway. In this respect, he is quite traditional.

For him, samaya means doing guru yoga, and not causing problems in his boat.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 16th, 2017 at 12:08 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

paël said:

Can samaya be received, if receiver has incomplete faculties (being cripple or something else)?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 15th, 2017 at 11:45 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

paël said:

Can seed be nonviable, if receiver has incomplete faculties (being cripple or something else)?

Do you need to know exact translation of recited words? Teachers often just say: "repeat these samaya words" Is this enough?

Malcolm wrote:

You need to know what you are doing so that you have no doubt about what you are doing. Repeating "samaya" words you don't understand is not sufficient.

All of these problems come about for three reasons: power, money, and sex.

pael said:

Does this mean knowing how many root vows there is or content of few of them?
All I know is basically from Berzin Archives.

Malcolm wrote:

The problem of course is that, traditionally, one is not allowed to know the contents of samaya prior to receiving it, and after one's receives it, it is held it is too late to give it back or refuse it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 15th, 2017 at 11:33 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Samaya is a seed that slowly grows into a tree. Sometimes that seed is nonviable, because of 1) the soil in which it is planted is not properly prepared,

pael said:

Can seed be nonviable, if receiver has incomplete faculties (being cripple or something else)?

Malcolm wrote:

One receives by them by reciting some words after a teacher at the beginning of the empowerment, and then at the end saying, "Ok boss, I'll do whatever you say" (btso bo ji ltar bka' bstsal pa, de dag thams cad bdag gi bgyis."

pael said:

Do you need to know exact translation of recited words? Teachers often just say: "repeat these samaya words" Is this enough?

Malcolm wrote:

You need to know what you are doing so that you have no doubt about what you are doing. Repeating "samaya" words you don't understand is not sufficient.

All of these problems come about for three reasons: power, money, and sex.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 15th, 2017 at 11:29 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

tiagolps said:

DJKR does mention the same thing:

Grigoris said:

I know he does, I was talking about the participants in this thread...

tiagolps said:

In the end our fear of Abrahamic judgement is always projected onto karma, as if both had the same basis, nobody likes to be "blamed". It's very easy to misunderstand karma when talking about abuser-abused situations.

For example I remember DJKR giving the example of how "it's the victims karma to have a human body at that time and place", of course, it's the abusers karma to feel uncontrollable sexual urges.

Malcolm wrote:

This is rather like saying that a raped woman is culpable for being raped because she has a vagina, and just maybe she was wearing a dress that made her look attractive.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 15th, 2017 at 10:30 PM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sherab said:

Here is why 'unconditioned' is not a suitable term to describe emptiness and therefore the ultimate:

<https://dharma.wheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=40&t=26142&start=100#p399627>

Malcolm wrote:

Defining emptiness as unconditioned is axiomatic; for example,

Abhisamayālaṃkāravṛtti kīrtikalā:

The conditioned depends on cause and conditions, for example, the desire realm and so on. The unconditioned does not depend on cause and condition, for example, emptiness and so on.

Sherab said:

Yes, the unconditioned does not depend on cause and condition. But that does not automatically mean that the unconditioned cannot function. The unconditioned is only non-functional only if it is taken to be the same as permanent, totally incapable of any change.

Malcolm wrote:

Just how many unconditioned (saṃskṛita) dharmas do you think there are? By my count, there are only three: space and the two cessations. Space has no function at all, and neither do the two cessations. Space never changes, it is permanent. Cessations never change, they are permanent.

Emptiness also has no "function." Emptiness is also permanent and changeless.

Space, cessation, and emptiness also are not real so their permanence is merely a formal statement.

Only conditioned dharmas have "functions."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 15th, 2017 at 10:28 PM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sherab said:

@Malcolm,

I argued previously that: (see

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=40&t=26142&start=100#p399627>)

When something is dependently arisen, it implies that the something is not unconditioned. If you assert that emptiness is dependent arising or dependent co-arising, and if you also assert that emptiness is empty as well, then you would be implying that emptiness is not unconditioned. Your reply did not address the logical problem raised.

So far, you have avoided addressing this issue. If you want to resolve the logical conundrum, you have to look more closely at what dependent arising is. If you take dependent arising as strictly a temporal causal chain, you cannot get out of this conundrum. If you cannot get out of this conundrum, you will have to take the view that there cannot be an ultimate because of dependent arising and merely assert that emptiness is unconditioned even when the emptiness of emptiness implies otherwise, which is exactly what you have done. So I am not surprised by your position.

Anyway, I think I have already stated my position and the relevant supporting arguments. Until the above is addressed, the debate will not end. So I am going to leave this discussion until such time you address the logical conundrum that I posed.

Malcolm wrote:

I have not addressed the issue because it is a nonissue. Whatever arises in dependence (relative truth) is empty (ultimate truth). The two truths are inseparable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 15th, 2017 at 10:23 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

narraboth said:

They are two contradictory statements. Does 'not preparing students properly' automatically make empowerment invalid? If yes, there is no 'so much broken samaya today'. If not, people in Rigpa who have received full empowerments from SR have samaya with SR.

Malcolm wrote:

Only if you believe that attending an any empowerment ritual at all withy any teacher at all creates magic vajra dust that you carry around with you forever because of the magic power of a ritual. HHDL has said on more than one occasion that when he gives these large Kalacakras, he does not feel that most people in attendance have even received the empowerment at all, much less samaya.

narraboth said:

You will need to draw a line on what do you mean for sufficiently preparing students and what is not, thus who is qualified and who is not. There are rules in tradition about the qualification of giving empowerment/ being vajra masters, I don't think 'preparing students properly' is one.

Malcolm wrote:

Dzongsar Khyentse clearly thinks that preparing students is the responsibility of the teacher.

Where I disagree with him is the notion that improperly prepared vessels have any samaya at all to break.

I also think it is quite questionable to believe that reciting words after a teacher in a language one does not understand qualifies as "receiving vows." After all, how does one receive a vow in Vajrayāna. One receives by them by reciting some words after a teacher at the beginning of the empowerment, and then at the end saying, "Ok boss, I'll do whatever you say" (btso bo ji ltar bka' bstsal pa, de dag thams cad bdag gi bgyis."

narraboth said:

'Knowing how to prepare students properly' might be one; if the teacher did not do what they supposed to do, there're consequences, but that doesn't make students have 'no samaya' with him.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure it does, unless you similarly take the position that attending an ordination with an unqualified upādhyāyaḥ confers ordination vows or that someone who is in debt, etc., can take ordination.

These days, empowerments are handed out as a means of attracting followers to people who no idea what they are doing, even though sometimes they have been "following" Tibetan Buddhism for decades. How can one even imagine that any of these people have actually received samaya? It is only possible to believe this if one thinks that merely attending a ritual and repeating some words has the power to confer samaya. I don't believe this, but you are free to disagree.

narraboth said:

Not sure what the Rigpa Rangshar says, I will have a read if you can qoute the full tibetan title. But from the common three-vows commentaries, which translation are available, I don't see Malcom's definition in it.

Malcolm wrote:

Honestly, the three vows literature is filled with nonsense. It is principally polemical in nature, thanks to Sakya Pandita, and there are so many contradictory opinions as to render this whole class of polemical literature basically useless as a guide for what one is to accept and reject unless one should stay in the narrow silo of a particular interpretation. It is a technical literature for scholars with too much time on their hands and who do not practice enough. It is not a literature which will clearly explain to one how one is to practice the three vows. For example, Sapan claims it is ridiculous to expect that someone who has not received full ordination should nevertheless follow all the vows of a fully ordained monk or nun, and at the same time, we see other famous presentations of this literature which insists that this is the case. Sapan claims the three vows do not have one intention; but in Drigung it is clearly held that they do. Thus, there is no common three vows literature. Sapan claims it is absurd to dedicate merit to the dharmadhātu, etc. There are so many points of disagreement and the whole of the three vows literature was spawned by Sapan's polemics.

narraboth said:

I also don't think a person needs to be "realised" (to what degree??) to perform a valid empowerment ritual (pointing out teaching is another issue). At least not in Sakya's view from what I heard. We need to be extremely careful here. If I have chance to meet HHST again I will try to ask.

Malcolm wrote:

If a person who is not realized performs a qualified rite, with all the bells and whistles, in a proper way, that empowerment is valid as far as it goes. It can serve as a basis for someone's practice of this or that sadhana. But the unrealized person giving that empowerment cannot expect that he or she has bestowed much in the way of samaya, especially if their own samaya is not really in perfect order. In any case, the notion of the 22 common samayas is a scholastic construct. There is no tantra that gives a defined list of 14 root and 8 branch samayas.

narraboth said:

To push further, I have been in Rigpa centre limited time listening to other masters' teaching. I don't think the consequences of samaya breakage were not mentioned; I heard Kyabje Trulshik Rinpoche talked about it and it was translated, emphasized and repeated again. If it was mentioned too late or not I don't know. People were already there, bought tickets, paid for the meals and beds.... like almost every major event in other places. You can of course say it was too loose, but again, that doesn't make students free from samaya.

Malcolm wrote:

Were we talking about Trulshik Rinpoche? I don't think so. We were talking about what happens when unrealized teachers give empowerments to poorly prepared students — which has unfortunately become the rule, rather than the exception.

I know of at least one example where a teacher accused his student of completely breaking samaya, telling others this person was going to hell. This student, understandably upset, went to Tulku Nyima Gyaltzen and explained the situation. Tulku Nyima Gyaltzen's reply was that the Tibetan teacher granting the empowerment was not qualified to give empowerments at all (despite having done three year retreat, being a recognized tulku, etc.) and the student in question had no samaya to break despite being the sponsor for the empowerment in question.

Thus, the picture painted by some within the tradition of an inviolable bond with absolutely strict and mechanical outcomes (the old snake in a tube example) seems to be rather not as hard and fast as some teachers and students imagine.

narraboth said:

The only way I find to get around is, I don't think SR gave full empowerment often.

Malcolm wrote:

I think this class of statement betrays an attachment to rules and rituals. This is a fetter, no matter what level of Buddhadharma we practice. As I mentioned above, attachment to rules and rituals is a huge problem in Vajrayāna in general. It makes people very superstitious, which is why the Buddha identified attachment to rules and rituals as one of the ten fetters to begin with.

narraboth said:

Most of time he invited other lama to do so, or because it's me only go there when my own guru visiting. Actually, when did SR last time gave a full empowerment?? That makes a big difference on the guru-students relationship. Indeed, dzogchen pointing out teaching also counts, but I think that's a different requirement for qualification and that might actually more suit Malcom's definition.

Malcolm wrote:

Thinking the mechanical attendance of an empowerment creates samaya is just superstition. Samaya is a seed that slowly grows into a tree. Sometimes that seed is nonviable, because of 1) the soil in which it is planted is not properly prepared, or 2) because the gardener is inept.

However, promising infernal consequences if someone busts a teacher purporting to teach Vajrayāna and give Vajrayāna teachings when they behave in a manner which proves they are not at all qualified to care for students is fundamentalism of the worst kind. I don't accept that, it does not make common sense, it is not just, it is not right, and should be protested vigorously.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 15th, 2017 at 9:44 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

A lot of bullshit, not 100%, but a very high percentage of bullshit.

tiagolps said:

What parts did you find bullshit?

Quay said:

I'd rather hear about the non-bullshit parts myself.

Malcolm wrote:

Most of the piece was self-indulgent babble. The essence of the bullshit in this piece is that Dzongsar blames students for rejecting and abandoning deluded gurus when those students find out about the delusion of their deluded guru. It is not fair, it is not rational, and it is pure superstition to imagine that attending a ritual, no matter how profound and meaningful when administered by a realized person to a group of well prepared students, creates an irreversible bond when administered by foolish and deluded teachers. No one imagines that attending a monastic ordination lead by a madman would have any force at all. Such thinking represents the worst example of the fetter of attachment to rules and rituals. Indeed, this whole idea comes from such fettered thinking.

Why should we imagine that empowerments administered to poorly educated Western Dharma students by deluded fools who imagine themselves gurus, whether Tibetan or any other ethnicity, would have any binding power via samaya other than through accepting an irrational interpretation of how rites that impart Vajrayāna vows actually function? Most people have no idea what is happening when they attend empowerments. They do not understand the visualizations as they happen, and so on. Even if the gurus in question are realized, if the student does not understand what is going on, no samaya is transmitted.

I would suggest, honestly, that there are probably few people who actually have samaya at all among so called Vajrayāna students—— by and large because they have no idea what is happening during empowerments, direct introductions, and so on. There is no magic bond created by an empowerment, none whatsoever. The only true bond or samaya we have is our understanding of Dharma, how deep it goes, and our appreciation of the teacher and community within which this blossoms.

The other samayas are relative. But it is the relative ones that receive all the attention. Even in terms of relative samaya, samaya is something that gradually builds, matures, and becomes deeper as the student matures in their understanding of profound Secret Mantra.

I would suggest also that there are very few gurus alive today who can actually impart samayas, since they have not realized the meaning of the teachings they are imparting. I will discuss this in the conclusion.

When we think about debacles like Rikpa (as it presently exists), we should not even be discussing the issue of breaking samaya. First of all it is bad for the students. It demoralizes them. Secondly, we are not sure that they have samaya from Sogyal. It has yet to be determined that he ever was a qualified teacher. If he was never a qualified teacher, they never received samaya. When we read comments such as the one below it is seem very questionable whether Sogyal is a qualified teacher, (the part of the article which is not bullshit, apart from just a little):

I know a little about Sogyal Rinpoche because I have visited several Rigpa centres and have witnessed the Rigpa set-up first hand. To be frank, I didn't see enough evidence to convince me that the appropriate warnings had been given, or that adequate foundations had been laid, or that the fundamental teachings were properly given. On several occasions it seemed to me that some of the students had been Christians until perhaps the day before they attended the teaching, then suddenly, 24-hours later, they were hearing about guru devotion, receiving pointing out instructions and practising Guru Yoga – it was as extreme as that.

If that's how it happened – if no proper warnings and no fundamental training were given prior to the Vajrayana teachings – then Sogyal Rinpoche is even more in the wrong than his critical students. Why? Because it is his responsibility to prepare the ground in accordance with the Vajrayana's prescribed and well-established foundation teachings and practice. There is no question that the person with the greater knowledge, power and therefore responsibility is also more culpable when those obligations are not fulfilled.

If Sogyal is in the wrong, and did not prepare his students properly, this automatically means he is an unqualified teacher and his students have no samaya with him at all, apart from as a Vajra brother. If Sogyal is in the wrong, it is axiomatic that his critical students are not in the wrong at all, from a samaya point of view, and thus this line is bullshit because they have no samaya with him.

Dzongsar also says this, which is 2% bullshit, 96% ok, and 2% requires a little more comment. Ok part in green; bullshit part in red, other part in orange:

If the teacher and student have reached a genuine understanding about the path being practised, and if all the necessary and appropriate foundations have been laid and a clear idea of possible consequences conveyed, but the student still has a wrong view and acts on it by slandering and criticizing the teacher, then, according to tantra, that student will face grave and unimaginable consequences.

But the same also applies to the teacher. In fact, if the teacher hasn't laid the proper foundations, if the teacher takes advantage of a student physically, emotionally or financially, and if the teacher gives the highest yoga tantric teachings to those who have not established a proper foundation and as a result an immature student breaks the most fundamental root samayas, then the teacher will also suffer extremely grave consequences – consequences even more serious and terrible than those faced by the student.

With respect to the section marked in orange: the serious and terrible consequences to a student that has been taken advantage of by a guru or teacher is that their trust in Dharma might be damaged for some time in this life or even multiple lifetimes, and they may suffering secret obstacles which prevent them from applying the Dharma. This is what renders the broken samaya of a teacher irreparable.

In short, people should consult the Rigpa Rangshar's chapter on samaya and cease laying blame on blameless students who have the misfortune of choosing mad guides. It not fair, it is not just, it is not right, it is not rational, and should not be accepted regardless of what the traditions seems to say on the matter because to take all this literally is merely an expression of the fetter of attachment to rules and rituals. What do I mean by "literally?" By "literal" I mean that empowerments given by gurus who are not truly realized have very little force. They have very little force to produce realization in their disciples, for many, many reasons. Likewise, they also have very little power to impart any real samaya.

The reasons why we see so much broken samaya today is not the fault of students, it is the fault of too many unrealized teachers giving empowerments which they are not qualified to give in the first place.

Oh, and BTW, bringing up Naropa and Tilopa, etc. is bullshit. Please stop doing it. The twelves trials are just stories, didactic stories to show what a huge egotist Naropa was. They doubtless have some basis, but they are exaggerated way beyond anything anyone can reasonably accept as anything other than Indian/Tibetan dramatic hyperbole.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 15th, 2017 at 6:57 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Whatever is unconditioned is permanent; there are no impermanent unconditioned entities. Whatever is conditioned is impermanent; there are no permanent conditioned entities.

Sherab said:

Here is why 'unconditioned' is not a suitable term to describe emptiness and therefore the ultimate:

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=40&t=26142&start=100#p399627>

Malcolm wrote:

Defining emptiness as unconditioned is axiomatic; for example,

Abhisamayālaṃkāravṛtti kīrtikalā:

The conditioned depends on cause and conditions, for example, the desire realm and so on. The unconditioned does not depend on cause and condition, for example, emptiness and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 15th, 2017 at 6:09 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sherab said:

Of course the Hindus will claim freedom from the two extremes. They have been assimilating whatever they can assimilate of Buddhism into their religion and philosophy so as to render Buddhism irrelevant. But the ultimate reality of Hinduism is monistic. That contradicts their claim of freedom from the two extremes.

Malcolm wrote:

Any claim at all that there is an ultimate reality is an extreme.

Sherab said:

Try to understand why freedom from the two extremes precludes monistic claim first.

Malcolm wrote:

First, try to understand why dependent origination precludes any possibility of an ultimate reality.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 15th, 2017 at 5:53 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

krodha said:

How is your own view different than a non-Buddhist "Hindu" ultimate?

Malcolm wrote:

It isn't. Hindus also claim that Brahmin is free from the four extremes, etc.

The basic difference between Hindu traditions and Madhyamaka on up is that Hindus state there is an ultimate reality. The Buddhist position, Madhyamaka on up, is that there is no ultimate reality.

Sherab said:

Of course the Hindus will claim freedom from the two extremes. They have been assimilating whatever they can assimilate of Buddhism into their religion and philosophy so as to render Buddhism irrelevant. But the ultimate reality of Hinduism is monistic. That contradicts their claim of freedom from the two extremes.

Malcolm wrote:

Any claim at all that there is an ultimate reality is an extreme.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 15th, 2017 at 5:47 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

tiagolps said:

DJKR take on it:

<https://www.facebook.com/djkhyentse/posts/2007833325908805>

Malcolm wrote:

A lot of bullshit, not 100%, but a very high percentage of bullshit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 15th, 2017 at 3:53 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

CedarTree said:

Malcolm, I have been thinking of two things you said and I think it would benefit the community here to have you elaborate on them a bit.

You mentioned "Nirvana being an "undesirable extreme in Mahāyāna"

This for me and I am sure others needs some further explaining.

You also mentioned that in Dzogchen the highest realized masters (Rainbow Body) have the material elements transform into the five pristine lights? Can you elaborate what these Pristine Lights are and how Noumenal World can change like that without destroying casualty for all things?

Thank you.

Malcolm wrote:

Nirvana is the cessation of afflictions, and parinirvana is cessation of birth. The latter is an extreme because if buddhas cease in fact they cannot directly benefit anyone. Mahāyāna nirvana is called "non-abiding." This means though in one's continuum afflictions for rebirth in samsara has ceased, upon attaining buddhahood one continues to benefit sentient beings directly until samsara is emptied.

On the other hand, the Dzogchen view is stated succinctly by Mañjuśrīmitra:

Since the awakening of the sugata does not exist, his magical apparitions appear to the deluded, similar to an illusion.

Mipham comments on this line:

Since the awakening of the sugata does not exist, his magical apparition, while a false appearance, appears to the deluded, similar to an illusion.

As for your second question, it is exactly the same as the example of a liquid substance that appears differently for the being of the six realms.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 15th, 2017 at 1:16 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sherab said:

It is also easy to understand why many are confused between the Buddhist ultimate and the non-Buddhist ultimate, especially Hindu ultimate.

krodha said:

How is your own view different than a non-Buddhist "Hindu" ultimate?

Malcolm wrote:

It isn't. Hindus also claim that Brahmin is free from the four extremes, etc.

The basic difference between Hindu traditions and Madhyamaka on up is that Hindus state there is an ultimate reality. The Buddhist position, Madhyamaka on up, is that there is no ultimate reality.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 14th, 2017 at 11:05 PM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sherab said:

I have explained a few times previously that 'unconditioned' is not a suitable word to describe the ultimate. You have conflated 'unconditioned' with 'permanence'.

Malcolm wrote:

Whatever is unconditioned is permanent, whatever is permanent is unconditioned.

Sherab said:

The consequence is the same. When there is no ultimate reality, there is then only the relative reality. If there is only the relative reality, then it is its own ultimate reality.

Malcolm wrote:

Only dependently originated entities are "real" (nondependent entities like space and cessations are not "real," i.e. they have no putative state of being at all), either perceived falsely (relative truth), or correctly (ultimate truth).

The reason why, in Mahāyāna, dependently originated entities are likened to space is that they are not actually real; they only appear to be real when essences are imputed to them. The reason that in Mahāyāna it is said that all phenomena are in the state of nirvana from the start is because as Mañjuśrī points out, whatever arises in dependence does not truly arise. Nirvana is a cessation. Nirvana does not arise.

Sherab said:

The ultimate, like the relative, is free from the two extremes. They are functional. That is why when the word 'unconditioned' is applied to the ultimate, one must not assumed immediately that 'unconditioned' means 'permanence'.

Malcolm wrote:

Whatever is unconditioned is permanent; there are no impermanent unconditioned entities. Whatever is conditioned is impermanent; there are no permanent conditioned entities.

Sherab said:

The relative is but an emergent thingy of the ultimate. That is why the relative can be argued as being an illusion. It is also why the relative can never be separated from the ultimate because without the ultimate, there is no possibility of an illusory relative.

Malcolm wrote:

There are no categories in Buddhadharma of relative and ultimate entities (dharmas). There are only conditioned entities (everything belonging to nama and rūpa) and unconditioned entities (space and the two cessations.)

[/quote]It is also easy to understand why many are confused between the Buddhist ultimate and the non-Buddhist ultimate, especially Hindu ultimate.[/quote]

The Buddhist ultimate truth is strictly a veridical perception (either analytical or nonanalytical) of any entity (whether conditioned or unconditioned). The Buddhist relative truth is a nonveridical perception (either analytical or nonanalytical) of any entity (whether conditioned or unconditioned).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 14th, 2017 at 2:38 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

aflatun said:

When you say "below" do you mean Sautrantika is considered "highest" of the non Mahayana tenet systems? Is this hierarchy based on views of Nibbana specifically?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it is the highest tenet system in Hinayana, but this is it specifically related to nirvana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 13th, 2017 at 8:02 PM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In short, there is no independent ultimate, or nirvana, etc., other than in the mistaken view of Hinayāna tenets.

aflatun said:

Don't be silly, everyone knows that in Hinayana, Nirvana=atheist death I wish there wasn't some truth in that actually...

(Are you referring to Vaibhasika, Buddhaghosa, all of the above? The sautrantika were kind of nihilistic as I recall, not really eternalist...)

Malcolm wrote:

There is a range, but in general, everything below Sautrantika has a rather eternalist viewpoint of nirvana. Sautrantikas argue that nirvana is simply nonexistence.

All of these views about nirvana are mistaken. Also, one must understand that nirvana is regarded as an undesirable extreme in Mahāyāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 13th, 2017 at 7:59 PM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Bakmoon said:

it is clearly presented in the Pali Suttas as well where the Kotthita Sutta teaches that to say that there is or isn't something in Nibbana is a mistake because it
<http://www.accesstoinsight.org/tipitaka/an/an04/an04.174.than.html>

Malcolm wrote:

This does not mean that. It is similar to a suuta in the Sutta Nipata where it is pointed out by the Buddha that one cannot speak of the nonexistence of an arhat who has passed away because there is no existence by which his nonexistence may be described.

Similarly, one cannot speak of the nonexistence of a given thing which has ceased because there is no given thing there to talk about. Fundamentally, cessation is the absence of a cause, either through insight, or naturally, like a burnt seed. We cannot speak properly of the nonexistence of a shoot from a burnt seed because such a thing never existed from the start. All we can say is "That seed will not germinate." Likewise, of an arhat one can only say, "He or she will not be born."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 13th, 2017 at 8:24 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

heart said:

Mexican food was treated in USA in places like Taco Bell, it has all the right names but totally lack the taste.

Malcolm wrote:

Mexican food isn't necessarily all that great in Mexico. It can be, but it can also be awesome in the USA.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 13th, 2017 at 8:21 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sherab said:

What is atemporal, unsupported, unfabricated, unmanifest, ineffable and self-arising, that is the ultimate, the state of buddhahood.

Malcolm wrote:

And the difference between this and Brahmin is? As we have seen, this kind of buddhahood is refuted by Nāgārjuna right at the outset.

Sherab said:

What distinguished a Buddhist ultimate from a non-Buddhist ultimate is freedom from the two extremes of eternalism and annihilation, the two dead zones that I mentioned in an earlier post.

What springs from the ultimate and therefore not separable from the ultimate is the supported, the fabricated, the manifest, the communicable, the causal, i.e., the relative, the realm of both pure and impure phenomena.

Malcolm wrote:

False, a conditioned entity cannot have an unconditioned cause.

Sherab said:

The consequence of saying that there is no ultimate is that the relative becomes the ultimate: the atemporal, the unsupported, the unfabricated, unmanifest, ineffable and self-arising. The relative no longer makes any sense.

Malcolm wrote:

I did not say there was no ultimate truth — there is an ultimate truth. What I said was that there is no ultimate reality. Two entirely different statements altogether.

Sherab said:

Extremes are non-functional. It looks like there is a new extreme, a dysfunctional one, namely, the relative is its own ultimate.

Malcolm wrote:

By declaring there is an ultimate, atemporal, unsupported, unfabricated, unmanifest, ineffable and self-arising, you have already slipped off the other side of the horse into eternalism.

Neither the atemporal, unsupported, unfabricated, unmanifest, ineffable and self-arising nor the temporal, supported, fabricated, manifest, effable and arising from another can be established in any way. When one understands that nothing can be established in any of the four extremes in anyway whatsoever outside of conventions, then one has a slight glimpse of the wisdom of the Buddha. As long as one insists there is an atemporal, unsupported, unfabricated, unmanifest, ineffable and self-arising in contrast to the the temporal, supported, fabricated, manifest, effable and arising from another one has not escaped from any extreme at all. One is still trapped in the two extremes of permanence (the atemporal, unsupported, unfabricated, unmanifest, ineffable and self-arising) and annihilation (the temporal, supported, fabricated, manifest, effable and arising from another). I am surprised that do not easily see the flaw in your reasoning.

In short, there is no independent ultimate, or nirvana, etc., other than in the mistaken view of Hinayāna tenets.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 13th, 2017 at 12:04 AM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

the challenge of finding a means of controlling population that would be at the same time feasible, effective and ethically sound...

Malcolm wrote:

Birth control, deciding not to procreate, etc. For example, I have no children.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 12th, 2017 at 11:36 PM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

with DG ideas slowly but steadily seeping into left-wing institutions, including those on the left-wing mainstream. Which the article I liked shows.

Malcolm wrote:

Not nearly rapidly enough.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 12th, 2017 at 10:00 PM

Title: Re: Consciousness turns back upon itself; it does not extend beyond name-and-form

Content:

Dan74 said:

Many interesting points. Glad to see some practice focused posts here.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't know about that — I observe a lot of griping and disrespect of Buddhadharma, for example:

This is what the Buddha stepped out of. And now, it is being re-created in his name. Just like the rest of the religions of the world attempt to do in the name of their own 'saviours'.

A simple study of Madhayamaka should end all this, but that is not what has happened.

It is turned into a 'system' which misses the whole point.

Anonx's posts are full of this kind of shite.

Anonymous X said:

tsk, tsk, tsk, Malcolm. And what you have just said is not shite? You misunderstand much of what I say because you are so invested in your studies and memorization of Buddhist teachings that become your filter for judging the world around you. It's your way or the highway. Your dismissive attitude has been criticized by many on this board and I fail to see how this is instructive or even compassionate, to use a Buddhist term, that gets bandied about so often. You sound like a spiritual elitist and a snob. This is the Open Dharma thread. If you can't be open, then just stick to your Dzogchen world and receive the praises of those who think like you do.

Malcolm wrote:

It is up to you to clearly express yourself. Blaming others because you are not clear is a copout.

Buddhadharma is something very specific, very precise. Much of what you say does not correspond to Buddhadharma on any level.

There have been 125 generations of awakened masters who have followed in the Buddha's footsteps in Hināyāna, Mahāyāna and Vajrayāna. I am not sure how it is you think you have exceeded their realization. As a consequence, you wind up saying many disrespectful things about Buddhadharma and its various expressions. The corollary of that is that I and others find your stated understanding wanting.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 12th, 2017 at 9:08 PM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:
treehuggingoctopus said:
The green turn I had in mind:

<https://www.counterpunch.org/2017/08/11/capitalism-and-its-discontents-what-are-we-living-for/>

The piece's conclusion is as follows:

William Hawes said:
The only democracy possible is an ecological democracy, with a long-term planning, and rational, sustainably-oriented national constitutions, a 90-95% reduction in fossil fuel use within a few decades at most, and an international consensus which will guarantee safeguards against habitat destruction, even in the face of democratic majority opposition. If we don't face up to these facts, and collectively and courageously organize, we may in fact be due for the Kali Yuga, as the Hindus prophesied.

treehuggingoctopus said:
and it is Counterpunch, not the Trumpeter...

Malcolm wrote:
And none of it is possible without a massive reduction in human population to pre-18th century levels. This global need for population reduction is what freaks out the materialist left more than anything else. Present levels of human population can only be sustained with a petroleum based industrial economy, exactly the same economy that got us into the present mess to begin with. That is why socialism is reactionary and not progressive with respect to ecological issues. He points this out very clearly:
Most mainstream socialists (important exceptions being Ian Angus, Paul Burkett, and John Bellamy Foster) have so far been too committed to a flailing, abstract ideology; specifically, wrongly committed to a Eurocentric, technocratic, anthropocentric worldview; to capture people's imaginations. Developing an ecological worldview, one that acknowledges our interdependence and interconnectedness with all species, is crucial.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, August 12th, 2017 at 11:27 AM
Title: Re: Tibetan Zen
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Since the conditioned is never established, how can the unconditioned ever be established?[/i]/[list]
M

Sherab said:
Just because the unconditioned cannot be established does not mean that it is not there.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that is what it means. Otherwise, the consequence is that the conditioned is also there, even though it cannot be established. This is a pervasion you must accept if you insist on your point of view. Such a point of view is utterly outside Mahāyāna.

Sherab said:

It simply means that the unconditioned can never be established through conventional reasoning.

Malcolm wrote:

See above, the pervasion of your statement is that conditioned also cannot be established through conventional reasoning.

Sherab said:

Like I argued before, if the unconditioned is not there, statements like there is no arising and ceasing ultimately makes no sense because the statements will end up being circular. In the end, if even the state of buddhahood is not even real, striving for liberation and omniscience also makes no sense. It is a denial of the validity of Udana 8.3.

Malcolm wrote:

You did not make an argument, you made an unproven assertion. I showed that this assertion is unfounded.

Udana 8.3 merely shows that liberation is also a convention, bound up in the dualism of samsara and nirvana, etc. I imagine you also have quite a bit of difficulty with Nāgārjuna's assertion that nirvana and samsara are not even slightly different.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 12th, 2017 at 6:54 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is no self to cease. Nothing ever arose at any time, any where.

Sherab said:

This only makes sense if there is an ultimate reality. Why? Because if otherwise, the statement has no basis at all. In other words, even "there is no self to cease" is an illusion. "Nothing ever arose at any time, any where" is also an illusion. It is not possible to say that the statements are true because what the statements point to is an illusion and therefore untrue. This is the result of circular reasoning.

Malcolm wrote:

You claim that when statement points to an illusion, if there is no ultimate basis with which to contrast an illusion the statement is rendered false? This is poor reasoning.

Statements are conventions and do not require any ultimate basis in order to be accepted conventionally, i.e., nonanalytically. Nor does analysis of conventions such as arising require some ultimate basis in order to ascertain they are false. Conventions can be examined and found false without any reference at all to any ultimate basis. To suggest otherwise is fall prey to the kind of pathological, realist substantialism the Buddha's Dharma is meant to cure.

I repeat, conventions require no ultimate basis in order to be conventionally true.

In worldly conventional perception things appear to arise from causes and conditions.

MMK 1:1

No thing arises at any time, anywhere from itself, from other than itself, or without a cause.

When analyzed it is found there are no causes and no conditions — this analysis forms the entire body of the rest of the MMK -- arising from conditions is merely a convention and when investigated no arising can be found at all (and thus no abiding or perishing either).

You must have real difficulties reading Nāgārjuna:

Since arising, abiding, and perishing are not established, the conditioned is not established.

Since the conditioned is never established, how can the unconditioned ever be established?

In light of the above, I think you may wish to retract your hasty and erroneous critique,

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 12th, 2017 at 2:52 AM

Title: Re: Justification of killing in Buddhism

Content:

CedarTree said:

Malcolm is there a good site that has English translations available of the Tantric writings for people to view.

Malcolm wrote:

You can read The Taming of the Demons: Violence and Liberation in Tibetan Buddhism.

CedarTree said:

I am guessing a lot of Tantric literature is only for those initiated?

Malcolm wrote:
Yes.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, August 12th, 2017 at 2:50 AM
Title: Re: Lama Norlha
Content:

Minobu said:
It is also does not have anything to do with what i am talking about.

and saying no one ever taught us that tulkus are living buddhas is just propaganda.

Malcolm wrote:
You may have been taught that. I question the quality of the people who taught you that.
They are thieves of the teachings.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, August 12th, 2017 at 2:25 AM
Title: Re: Lama Norlha
Content:
Minobu said:
But i did not pluck this out of thin air and i know my understanding of Tulku has nothing to do with Chinese anything.

Malcolm wrote:
It is also does not have anything to do with the Tibetan thing either.

For example, there is a famous traditional story. Jamyang Khyentse Wangpo, one of the few famous Tibetan who really attained buddhahood, was pestered by some monks who were unhappy with the newly recognized tulku for their monastery, so they pestered him with their doubts.

After growing a little impatient with them, he said, "Let's go see your lama."

He led to them to the cattle yard, and called out the recently deceased lama's name. A young bull calf trotted over. "There" Khyentse said, "This is your lama."

The Tibetan penchant for devotional hyperbole is hard for westerners to deal with. We tend to take everything so literally.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 12th, 2017 at 1:46 AM

Title: Re: Lama Norlha

Content:

Minobu said:

i attended many a medicine buddha initiation with cancer patients hoping and nothing except death from cancer.

i never really saw anything except in Lotus Buddhism..sorry ...thats my eyes...

Malcolm wrote:

You do realize Medicine Buddha has a section in the Lotus Sutra?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 12th, 2017 at 1:30 AM

Title: Re: Justification of killing in Buddhism

Content:

Seeker12 said:

Is there a scriptural basis for this that I can read? I'm not disagreeing, just interested.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, in the tantras, in fact.

CedarTree said:

Malcolm is there a good site that has English translations available of the Tantric writings for people to view.

Malcolm wrote:

You can read The Taming of the Demons: Violence and Liberation in Tibetan Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 12th, 2017 at 1:27 AM

Title: Re: Lama Norlha

Content:

Minobu said:

too many let downs in the Tibetan thing..the one biggy was when i asked a tulku Rinpoche if as a householder i could attain enlightenment through Tantra and the various teachings ...he said no...he was honest.

Malcolm wrote:

He was totally mistaken.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 11th, 2017 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: Lama Norlha

Content:

Minobu said:

a tulku is not a catholic priest or anything near a gakki anything.

A tulku is supposed to be a living Buddha.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a huge misconception that has arisen from a mistaken Chinese translation of the term "sprul sku" as "living buddha."

There are several kinds of tulkus. The kind of tulku we mostly encounter are "blessed" tulkus. The process of enthroning them is virtually identical with consecrating a buddha statue. We find a small boy, with proper signs, maybe they even correctly pick out some of the items of their predecessor. With this done, they are blessed as the incarnation of their predecessor and the rest is history. The process of identifying candidates is an art, not a science, and sometimes great political turmoil arises because of disagreements among senior monastics over who is the "right" choice.

The kind of tulku who is a living buddha is generally a self-proclaimed incarnation, not a recognized incarnation.

Also, the modern Tibetan Buddhist establishment, recognizing the kind of misunderstandings that arise from the use of the term tulku for reincarnations has taken to calling them yang srid, rebirths, rather than tulkus.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 11th, 2017 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: Consciousness turns back upon itself; it does not extend beyond name-and-form

Content:

Dan74 said:

Many interesting points. Glad to see some practice focused posts here.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't know about that — I observe a lot of griping and disrespect of Buddhadharma, for example:

This is what the Buddha stepped out of. And now, it is being re-created in his name. Just like the rest of the religions of the world attempt to do in the name of their own 'saviours'.

A simple study of Madhayamaka should end all this, but that is not what has happened.
It is turned into a 'system' which misses the whole point.
Anonx's posts are full of this kind of shite.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 11th, 2017 at 9:36 PM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Anonymous X said:

[

I can understand your investment in Dzogchen and your continued beliefs that you will achieve realization of something.

Malcolm wrote:

You really don't understand what I am talking about.

Anonymous X said:

It is this very grasping/training that I question deeply. It doesn't seem compatible with what the Buddha and other masters taught about the cessation of self on every level and what I witnessed in my own teacher.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no self to cease. Nothing ever arose at any time, any where.

In any case, attaining buddhahood has two benefits, one's own and others. Of these two benefits, the benefit of others is more important.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 11th, 2017 at 4:53 AM

Title: Re: Assisted Suicide/ euthanasia

Content:

Grigoris said:

I remember, in another thread, that you said that nothing can obscure the experience of Clear Light at the time of death, so it was okay for people that are terminally ill to take sedation to dull their pain, as it will not effect the experience and their chances of liberation.

Is my memory unclear on the subject?

Malcolm wrote:

If someone is not buddhist, and has no instructions, then they should be comfortable. But if you are a practitioner, you need to have a clear mind at the time of death.

Grigoris said:

But surely it is not the coarse mind that recognises the Clear Light? So what difference does it make?

Malcolm wrote:

Sedatives obscure the clarity of the mind in toto because of the way they affect the body.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 11th, 2017 at 12:51 AM

Title: Re: Justification of killing in Buddhism

Content:

CedarTree said:

Killing fellow living beings is not noble according to Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

There are exceptions to this rule. It is fine to kill specially pernicious beings, it is bodhisattva activity, in fact.

Seeker12 said:

Is there a scriptural basis for this that I can read? I'm not disagreeing, just interested.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, in the tantras, in fact.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 10th, 2017 at 11:32 PM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

liuzg150181 said:

One question that lingers in my mind, how do we tell whether a master is realized? During empowerment?

Malcolm wrote:

Good question.

No, one can tell a master is realized by observing them for a long while and seeing how their qualities manifest.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 10th, 2017 at 10:18 PM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Anonymous X said:

I agree, but I don't agree about your assertion that only through a Dzogchen teacher can someone have this 'intro'. That's a very hard sell, sir.

Malcolm wrote:

Though one can find descriptions of the nature of mind in sūtras, the methods of introducing it do not exist in sūtras. One must find a teacher who has the intimate instructions.

Further, introduction to the nature of the mind is not confined to Dzogchen masters, but it is confined to Vajrayāna. Even here, such introductions as they may be found in Vajrayāna empowerments tend to be overly brief, ritualized, cryptic and obscure.

Though you may find methods of introduction described in some books, for example, some lengthy Mahāmudra manuals come to mind, they must be received from a teacher who has realized the meaning of such instructions in themselves because such methods are experiential, not intellectual.

If someone wishes experiential training in the nature of the mind, one should find an old master who has done many years of retreat and who has also guided many students personally. One must do whatever it is he or she might command. In general, one will not be able to receive such teachings from famous teachers, with a very, very, short list of exceptions.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 10th, 2017 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Knowing how rare true realization is, I remain skeptical of your statement.

Malcolm wrote:

You have not met the teachers to whom I refer. If you had, you would not be skeptical.

Anonymous X said:

Perhaps I have met some, and perhaps I would remain skeptical.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think so. But even the Buddha had his doubters, like Sunakṣatra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 10th, 2017 at 9:45 PM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Anonymous X said:

You do understand that most gurus ARE unrealized.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't know about most gurus, but I have had the fortune of being in the presence of several realized teachers in my lifetime, one of whom is still alive.

Anonymous X said:

Knowing how rare true realization is, I remain skeptical of your statement.

Malcolm wrote:

You have not met the teachers to whom I refer. If you had, you would not be skeptical.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 10th, 2017 at 9:34 PM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Anonymous X said:

As per ultimate truth or ultimate reality, no one can show you this. An ultimate truth is only measured by the conventional which cannot know ultimate anything, just knows it's own appearance.

Malcolm wrote:

An ultimate truth is a) an analytical cognition of the nature of phenomena b) a nonanalytical direct perception of the nature of phenomena. The former is conceptual, and therefore, conventional. The latter is nonconceptual, and burns away misconceptions about how things are.

One can certainly be lead to an understanding of the analytical ultimate truth. The nonanalytical ultimate is your responsibility to discover.

However, neither of these has much bearing on being introduced to the nature of the mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 10th, 2017 at 9:15 PM

Title: Re: Assisted Suicide/ euthanasia

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The problem is that one should be aware when they die.

Grigoris said:

I remember, in another thread, that you said that nothing can obscure the experience of Clear Light at the time of death, so it was okay for people that are terminally ill to take sedation to dull their pain, as it will not effect the experience and their chances of liberation.

Is my memory unclear on the subject?

Malcolm wrote:

If someone is not buddhist, and has no instructions, then they should be comfortable. But if you are a practitioner, you need to have a clear mind at the time of death.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 10th, 2017 at 7:37 PM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Anonymous X said:

You do understand that most gurus ARE unrealized.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't know about most gurus, but I have had the fortune of being in the presence of several realized teachers in my lifetime, one of whom is still alive.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 10th, 2017 at 7:35 PM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If the nature of one's own mind were truly a sufficient teacher, we would have all actualized rainbow body by now and there would be no more samsara. So obviously, something a little more is needed in the teacher department.

Anonymous X said:

A truly realized guru can only show you your own illusions, your own grasping, your own mistakes. They do not show you practices of 'how to realize ultimate truth'. As you noted before in an inspired moment of intellectual understanding, there is no ultimate truth. This is the most difficult thing to understand for a seeker, that what you think you're after, simply doesn't exist.

Malcolm wrote:

I said there is no ultimate reality. There is however an ultimate truth. Truths, in Buddhadharma, are cognitions. Emptiness, for example, is not an ultimate reality, but it is an ultimate truth. Even ultimate truths represent limits to cognition and analysis, and are nothing other than measures of them.

On the other hand, helping one discover the nature of one's own mind is a the role of a Buddhist guru, and this is not merely a process of being shown one's illusions, grasping, and mistakes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 10th, 2017 at 10:13 AM

Title: Re: Assisted Suicide/ euthanasia

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

However, if people used drugs like sublimaze (a curare derivative), which merely stops the heart, painlessly, one can be fully present during the death process.

Fentanyl is not a good way to die.

Meido said:

Malcolm, I read your reference to sublimaze with interest. But then the follow-up confused me: I'm seeing sublimaze described as a brand name for fentanyl, itself described as an opioid (no reference to curare).

Did I miss something?

~ Meido

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, I missed something. Anyway, my primary point is that practitioners need to die as clear as possible. If one is not afflicted, one is clear about why one is choosing to die, and has no regrets, then no problem.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 10th, 2017 at 5:31 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sahajaya said:

The key words are "should one choose to inquire". Sadly, the more common condition is external inquiry into the external world for answers only, where the inner world is ignored, is it not. Thus outer, inner, and non-dual realization is implied in realizing the nature of mind; while ignorance (marigpa) is the semi-static condition where the inquiry has failed. For example, meditation.

Malcolm wrote:

People do not even know they should inquire.

Many people seek inwardly for answers too, but not recognizing the right questions to ask, they come up with many incorrect answers.

If you want to know the secret guru, first you must discover the inner guru; and to discover that inner guru, a realized outer guru is indispensable.

People have a very huge misconception about gurus, particularly in Dzogchen teachings. No guru is going to hand you awakening in their hand, or pick out the perfect yidam for you to practice, or give you a tailor made path to buddhahood. But they can transmit their own knowledge of the teachings, and help you encounter your own state directly. A realized guru is indispensable in this case. In Dzogchen and Mahāmūdra, an unrealized guru, however, is a serial killer of disciples. An unrealized guru can set one back many lifetimes. An unrealized guru breaks their own samaya the minute they open their mouths.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 10th, 2017 at 5:03 AM

Title: Re: Assisted Suicide/ euthanasia

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

Assisted suicide has been legal in California since 2016 and it looks like it will be staying. 111 people died with assisted suicide in the first 6 months of it being legal in the state.

I've personally wondered about this issue. I'm for euthanasia being legal and available, but I've wondered how it's viewed from a Buddhist standpoint. I'm pretty sure it's a no-no. But, is this an issue which, as modern Buddhists, we need to balance modern day reality etc. with view? How do end of life practices come into play when one is choosing to die?

Malcolm wrote:

The problem is that one should be aware when they die. These days, they use a sedative cocktail. However, if people used drugs like sublimaze (a curare derivative), which merely stops the heart, painlessly, one can be fully present during the death process. If one is a practitioner and is relatively free from afflictions, there is no problem with such a death. There are for example arhats of whom it is recorded that they ended their lives when faced with a lot of pain.

TharpaChodron said:

That's the problem I was concerned about. It would be great to be given the option of taking fentanyl, but I have no idea how that works. consciousness at the time of death is important, yet there's many times when I'm sure people die unconscious due to various reasons.

As I have a hard time with all or nothing thinking, the Arhat story is nice. Okay, maybe not "nice," but you get what I'm saying.

Malcolm wrote:

Fentanyl is not a good way to die.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 10th, 2017 at 3:47 AM

Title: Re: Her Eminence Mindrolling Jetsün Khandro Rinpoche

Content:

Toenail said:

What I always wondered: If she is so realized, why does she never give something like Vajrakilaya etc? I know this is wrong view and so on, but I wonder why these female teachers are obviously not green-lighted to give wrathful or major empowerments and every small tulku gives whatever he pleases. It is all chenrezig and talks about karma. Patriarchy?

Malcolm wrote:

Khandro Rinpoche gives all kinds of major empowerments to her students. But you have to be her student and go to places like Lotus Garden if you want to receive such things from her. She follows more of the old Vajradhātu model.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 10th, 2017 at 3:45 AM

Title: Re: Is Maya/Mara becoming stronger?

Content:

Supramundane said:

Is Maya becoming more and more powerful?

Malcolm wrote:

No, but we do live in the age of the five degenerations:

degeneration of lifespan, time, afflictions, views, and experience.

http://www.rigpawiki.org/index.php?title=Five_degenerations

Strive said:

lifespan is increasing

Malcolm wrote:

You think "lifespan" only refers to the lifespan of human beings?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 10th, 2017 at 3:37 AM

Title: Re: Question re Nagas

Content:

Grigoris said:

From what I hear <https://www.amazon.com/Naga-Indian-Iconography-R-K->

Sharma/dp/8173055157 has a lot of info (and great pictures) but is somewhat expensive...

Malcolm wrote:

It is a good book, but the Tibetan indigenous cultural understanding of Nagas (klu) expands considerably on the Indian one, and needs to be considered in its own right as well.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 10th, 2017 at 2:38 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Inner wisdom teacher? You mean breath? Heartbeat? The flow of blood? Is there someone inside?

Sahajaya said:

It's the nature of your own mind, should one choose to inquire. The physical parts, are just that, fragments that reflect primordial presence. You know that already.

Malcolm wrote:

If the nature of one's own mind were truly a sufficient teacher, we would have all actualized rainbow body by now and there would be no more samsara. So obviously, something a little more is needed in the teacher department.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 10th, 2017 at 2:36 AM

Title: Re: Mahāvairocana etymology?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

I know that Mahāvairocana is 大日如來 in Chinese, "Great Sun Tathāgata".

However, the Sanskrit escapes me, due to my lack of familiarity with that language.

One etymology I read said it meant "Great Shining Sun Buddha". Another said it meant "Great One Who Comes from the Sun".

What is the etymology?

Malcolm wrote:

Vairocana: vi means aspects, here it means "to emanate"; rocana means the sun. So, the term is a word for the sun which means "to illuminate."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 10th, 2017 at 12:15 AM

Title: Re: Assisted Suicide/ euthanasia

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

Assisted suicide has been legal in California since 2016 and it looks like it will be staying. 111 people died with assisted suicide in the first 6 months of it being legal in the state.

I've personally wondered about this issue. I'm for euthanasia being legal and available, but I've wondered how it's viewed from a Buddhist standpoint. I'm pretty sure it's a no-no. But, is this an issue which, as modern Buddhists, we need to balance modern day reality etc. with view? How do end of life practices come into play when one is choosing to die?

Malcolm wrote:

The problem is that one should be aware when they die. These days, they use a sedative cocktail. However, if people used drugs like sublimaze (a curare derivative), which merely stops the heart, painlessly, one can be fully present during the death process. If one is a practitioner and is relatively free from afflictions, there is no problem with such a death. There are for example arhats of whom it is recorded that they ended their lives when faced with a lot of pain.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 10th, 2017 at 12:04 AM

Title: Re: Is Maya/Mara becoming stronger?

Content:

Supramundane said:

Is Maya becoming more and more powerful?

Malcolm wrote:

No, but we do live in the age of the five degenerations:

degeneration of lifespan, time, afflictions, views, and experience.

http://www.rigpawiki.org/index.php?title=Five_degenerations

paël said:

Why did we born in the age of the five degenerations?

Malcolm wrote:

1) Because this time is part of the Kali Yuga,
Why we live in the age of the five degenerations?
See number 1.

pael said:

Are beings born nowadays more defiled than former ages?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

pael said:

Or is this age more defiling than former ages?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 9th, 2017 at 11:18 PM

Title: Re: Dharma Fellowship

Content:

methar said:

I could be wrong so please check "Vijayapath" with the headquarters of Namgyal Rinpoche at the Dharma Centre of Canada.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 9th, 2017 at 10:04 PM

Title: Update on Chögyal Namkhai Norbu's Program

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dear All,

Our dear Maestro Chögyal Namkhai Norbu is continuing his convalescence and his health is steadily improving.

He has decided not to undertake the journey planned for Asia and to remain at Merigar. This is for various reasons and various obstacles that are manifesting in connection with this journey.

The Gakyil of Merigar

<http://melong.com/chogyal-namkhai-norbu-program-update/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 9th, 2017 at 9:57 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

crazy-man said:

Dans l'attente qu'une évolution heureuse soit établie, l'Union Bouddhiste de France suspend la qualité de membre de Rigpa Lérab Ling et Rigpa France.

<http://www.bouddhisme-france.org/espace-presse/article/communiquer-suite-au-scandale-lie-a-sogyal-rinpoche.html>

Malcolm wrote:

According to Google Translate, this means:

The master of Tibetan Nyingmapa Buddhism, Sogyal Rinpoche, is subject to concordant accusations, which, as we know it and as they are stated, do not in any way correspond to Buddhist ethics and prove unjustifiable at all points of views.

In anticipation of a successful outcome, the Union Bouddhiste de France suspends the membership of Rigpa Lérab Ling and Rigpa France.

The UBF expresses with sincerity and compassion all its spiritual support to the people concerned by this affair and to the international community of this school.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 9th, 2017 at 9:12 PM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I am glad you are all in with Orton. Just drop your attachment to the word "socialism" and we won't have anything argue about, and much to discuss.

Grigoris said:

You would probably gain a lot from dropping your aversion to the word "socialism". The McCarthy era is long gone, praise Stalin!

Malcolm wrote:

It is not an aversion, it just isn't the solution the present ecological crisis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 9th, 2017 at 8:44 PM

Title: Re: Is Maya/Mara becoming stronger?

Content:

Supramundane said:

Is Maya becoming more and more powerful?

Malcolm wrote:

No, but we do live in the age of the five degenerations:

degeneration of lifespan, time, afflictions, views, and experience.

http://www.rigpawiki.org/index.php?title=Five_degenerations

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 9th, 2017 at 11:11 AM

Title: Re: Question re Nagas

Content:

jkarlins said:

Ok, thanks Malcolm.

Malcolm wrote:

This does not mean one remains passive, there are many remedial things one can do such as klu bsangs, sgrib bsangs, bsnol bsangs (sang offerings to nagas, for removing obscuration, and for removing contamination), certain kinds of chöd practices, prayer flags, treasure vases, stupas building, placing stones carved with the Guru Rinpoche mantra in the water, and so on. Also First Nations peoples have many methods, one can collaborate with them for this common purpose.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 9th, 2017 at 7:37 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

CedarTree said:

And thank you for sharing your understanding

Malcolm wrote:

\

There is no living tradition of the sTon mun (Chan) tradition which has survived in Tibet, though perhaps there is a vestigial remnant of it in the Kagyu Mahāmudra tradition.

However, the clearest explanation of these traditions as they existed in Tibet may be found in the The Lamp of the Eye of Dhyāna by Nubchen Sangye Yeshe. Here it is clearly explained with respect to sūtrayāna systems, the Chan tradition's view and practice is much superior to the Indian system of view and practice brought to Tibet as presented to the Tibetans by Kamalashila. Without this background, I am afraid Tibetan Zen will be rather obtuse.

As evidenced by the preservation of a debate in an 11th century text by Mañjusfīkirti, there was a serious debate in the mid 8th century between Indian exponents of the tradition we now term "The Great Perfection" (Śrī Singha being mentioned by name) and a more gradualist style of Vajrayāna which came to be the normative position. However, echoes of the earlier Indian nongradual tradition may be found in some of the Mahāmudra dohas, especially those of Saraha. Klaus Dieter Mathis has done some remarkable work in this area.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 9th, 2017 at 7:22 AM

Title: Re: Question re Nagas

Content:

jkarlins said:

Anyone have suggestions for practical household issues relating to nagas and spirits?

I wonder about things like this, do folks run afoul of nagas by doing things like this, dumping the wrong stuff down the drain, and so on.

Jake

Sahajaya said:

According to my teachers, yes, avoid polluting your environment and angering nagas as much as possible. YMMV, of course.

sarva mangalam

Malcolm wrote:

Nāgas lash out indiscriminately. It might be your neighbor dumping toxic shit down the drain, but your family winds up with the horrible skin diseases, not his.

This merely points to the fact that apart from the clear stupidity of pissing in ponds and streams, problems with Nāgās and other nonhumans is systemic and pervasive, as the First Nations have been warning us for centuries.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 9th, 2017 at 7:17 AM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

Hear, hear, btw. The one and only problem here is exactly what I said: a very narrow definition of socialism. That aside, I am, and have been for years, all with Orton.

Malcolm wrote:

I am glad you are all in with Orton. Just drop your attachment to the word "socialism" and we won't have anything argue about, and much to discuss.

Unfortunately, like the swastika, it is too late to rehabilitate socialism. As Orton writes in his essay above (italics mine):

— The Declaration assumes that it is capitalism, not industrialism, which is the main problem. Left biocentrists see industrial society's social and technological formation as the main problem, and it can have a capitalist or a socialist face...

— I feel that generally the Declaration underplays the primary contribution of the environmental and green movements, which have not, in the main, been driven by a socialist consciousness. Socialists have mainly been in the wings, not in the activist vanguard.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 9th, 2017 at 2:40 AM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Bookchin self-identified as an anarchist.

treehuggingoctopus said:

Anarchism is libertarian socialism.

No, socialism is too bound up with class hierarchy to even approach anarchism.

Socialism is also a product of patriarchy, and bears the faults of it as well.

Again, depends on how you construe the label. Orton was right, in his time, to distance himself from the neoliberal atrocity that was then trying to pass for the socialist alternative.

I don't really agree with this assessment. Orton distanced himself from socialism for this reason, among others:

It seems to me that "socialism" or "ecosocialism", as a description of a future deep ecology-inspired and socially just post-capitalist society, is not adequate or inspirational. The type of future ecocentric and socially just social formations is up for discussion. There are no worked out social models that can be simply adopted.

Socialism is in many ways an expression of the industrial proletariat, and while its legacy of social justice remains valid, and indeed needed for a future ecocentric society, it is not correct to say that "ecosocialism" will describe the future post-industrial ecocentric society. The features of such a society are a work in progress for all of us to engage with.

Malcolm wrote:

<http://climateandcapitalism.com/2011/06/23/deep-ecology-versus-ecosocialism-part-two/> more later.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 9th, 2017 at 1:07 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sahajaya said:

yet his methods of reproving could use polishing.

Malcolm wrote:

You ever heard of a mirror, buddy?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 9th, 2017 at 1:02 AM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Mélenchon is just an old school leftist. The old left is precisely what Orton is criticizing. Even Bookchin departed from his old left roots in the formation of his libertarian municipalism (with which I am sympathetic, but think it is too anthropocentric), despite his trenchant materialism. Frankly, I have not seen an ecosocialist analysis that goes beyond Saral Sarkar's ecological dictatorship of the proletariat.

treehuggingoctopus said:

I have seen quite a few. It seems to me that your definition of socialism is much narrower than mine. As far as I am concerned, Bookchin is a socialist -- a libertarian socialist, libertarian-municipalist socialist, to be exact, but socialist nonetheless.

Malcolm wrote:

Bookchin self-identified as an anarchist.

treehuggingoctopus said:

Orton was one as well -- and it was Orton who created late in the 90s the cornerstone of deep green socialism ("left biocentrism") that, as a living political platform, is still to come.

Malcolm wrote:

Left -biocentrism is also not socialist, from the <http://home.ca.inter.net/greenweb/lbprimer.htm>:

"Left" as used in left biocentrism, means anti-industrial and anti-capitalist, but not necessarily socialist.

treehuggingoctopus said:

There are few sets of eco-friendly political platforms in the West which might help foster a genuinely left movement that is also really and truly biocentric. One of them is obviously European Greens. Another is the broad array of socialist parties. Yet another is, however surprising it may be, the so-called Catholic Left, rallying around Francis (the green encyclical proves that the Catholic church is presently undergoing a sea-change in this respect: <http://earthministry.org/wp-content/uploads/2015/05/Laudato-Si.pdf>).

Malcolm wrote:

What most people do not understand about deep ecology is that it has room for many different level 1 principles —Buddhist, Taoist, Muslim, Hindu, Christian, Philosophical, Socialist, etc.— which will lead to a deep ecological view, which is level 2 (levels three and four, where social ecology finds its best expression, is pragmatic, as well as and policy/solution oriented, but also necessarily shallow).

What eco-socialists and the Bookchinists fail to grasp and constantly criticize is the diversity of level 1 principles that can lead to a deep ecological perspective. Sarkar, Bookchin, and other materialist thinkers in the ecology movement devote/waste an enormous amount of time criticizing the spiritual and philosophical underpinnings of the deep ecological view, because of traditional left wing dogmatism and intellectual rigidity that continues to infect the materialist left to this day. They completely miss the point that how one arrives at one's ecological view is far less important than the fact that one has arrived at it, and thus they persistently act and behave in ways counterproductive to the ecological movement as a whole — it is for this reason and this reason alone the Green Parties are so ineffective.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 9th, 2017 at 12:45 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sahajaya said:

Namdrol

Malcolm wrote:

Please cease from addressing me as Namdrol. Thanks. I do not use that name in my daily life, and have ceased using it as a nym on the internet for a number of years. I do not welcome the assumed familiarity of total strangers on the internet who pretend they know me, when they are not themselves forthcoming with their actual meat space identities.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 8th, 2017 at 11:09 PM

Title: Re: Justification of killing in Buddhism

Content:

CedarTree said:

Killing fellow living beings is not noble according to Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

There are exceptions to this rule. It is fine to kill specially pernicious beings, it is bodhisattva activity, in fact.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 8th, 2017 at 8:33 PM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sherab said:

I guess you would say that the "undifferentiated stage of Samantabhadra the meaning of Dzogchen", is an illusion.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course. You ought to read Rongzom's <http://www.shambhala.com/entering-the-way-of-the-great-vehicle.html>

You might also recall that Nāgārjuna points out that since the conditioned cannot be established, neither can the unconditioned.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 8th, 2017 at 10:17 AM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

Grigoris said:

But the fastest growing jobs sector in the US is in wind and solar installation.

Too little, too late and at too slow a rate... China will continue to lead due to it's central planning.

Malcolm wrote:

In order the three largest carbon producers in the world today:

1. China
2. US
3. EU

The US however is the second largest carbon producer per capita, Saudi Arabia is the the largest.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 8th, 2017 at 10:09 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sahajaya said:

HHDL and others have said that present circumstances demand to unveil them and make them public. I agree.

Malcolm wrote:

Publishing books does not negate the need for proper transmissions of the teachings contained in those books from qualified teachers who actually understand those teachings and how to present them properly and to whom.

People who post wildly inaccurate translations on the internet, present their misunderstandings of the same, incapable of actually recognizing the content of the teachings they supposedly are presenting, and then defend their error under the mistaken belief they have been given a mandate to do so by HHDL, are more deluded than deluded.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 8th, 2017 at 10:03 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sahajaya said:

I thought the topic was Tibetan Zen. How did this get to the superiority of the dzogchen view?

Malcolm wrote:

You brought it up.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 8th, 2017 at 10:02 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sahajaya said:

It's sad that you refuse to get out of your shell a tiny bit...

Malcolm wrote:

It's sad that you have no idea what you are talking about.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 8th, 2017 at 10:00 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sahajaya said:

Asserting that Samantabhadra is real, while negating the Dharmakaya, is only conceivable (not inconceivable) only if one is hopelessly lost in delusion.

Malcolm wrote:

Someone asserted Samantabhadra was real? Not even Samantabhadra would assert that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 8th, 2017 at 6:23 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sherab said:

Is that how you read "thams cad nas thams cad du sangs rgyas pa med pa'i che ba"?

Malcolm wrote:

You could read this rendition of the greatness as "the greatness of the nonexistence of buddhahood in toto" or "...in all ways every way."

"Total" however is simpler, and the "du" particle here means that it is the verb being modified and not the noun.

Sherab said:

I have no issue with "thams cad nas thams cad du".

Where I have a problem with is "sangs rgyas pa med pa". It seems to me that treating that as a verb or verbal phrase makes more sense. In other words, it is saying that there is totally no attainment of enlightenment. .

Malcolm wrote:

Well, you can think whatever you like, but the commentarial tradition is pretty clear on what this greatness means. Rongzom states:

Even this demonstration of "buddhahood" is either a faultless quality which exists or does not exist as such a characteristic. Either everything is buddhahood or is everything free from even the nominal designation "buddhahood."

And:

To determine the greatness of the total non-existence of buddhahood, if buddhahood and non-buddhahood are non-dual, why is one seeking? Determine there is nothing to seek. The yogins in whom such a meaning is present effortlessly abide on the undifferentiated stage of Samantabhadra. The undifferentiated stage of Samantabhadra is universal stage of all Buddhas. Whatever the meaning of Dzogchen might be, that is it. The verb here is med pa, nonexistence; sangs rgyas is a noun.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 8th, 2017 at 5:28 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sahajaya said:

Although such comes from a premier Dzogchen master, it does appear to describe anu yoga dzogrim (completion stage).

Malcolm wrote:

No, it has nothing to do with anuyoga. It is 100% man ngag sde.

It requires transmission and explanation.

Sahajaya said:

Such Dharmakaya Buddha does 24/7 if you listen and follow.

Malcolm wrote:

Only buddhas can see and "hear" dharmakāya. If you have not understood this, you have understood nothing.

Sahajaya said:

A needless and may I suggest corrupt closeting of Mahasandhi teachings have become manufactured...Of course, I may be wrong.

Malcolm wrote:

You are definitely wrong. It is proven by your absolute misunderstanding which led you to post the corrupt translations above.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 8th, 2017 at 5:24 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sherab said:

Are you implying that the state of buddhahood is not real?

Malcolm wrote:

It is totally illusory just like everything else.

Sahajaya said:

In lieu of negating Buddhism, the four noble TRUTHS, the two TRUTHS free from extremes, and Buddhadharma, it is far better to act inclusive. Buddha taught freedom from ignorance and illusion. By contradicting Buddha's fundamental teachings, such teachings no longer become Buddhadharma.

Malcolm wrote:

It is better to rely directly on sutras like the Prajñāpāramita which states:

Even the unshared Dharmas of a buddha are like a dream, like an illusion.

Or for example, the Ārya-bhadramāyākāra-vyākaraṇa-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra states

Just as fire spreads outward in a field with butter or oil, likewise, Bhadra's illusions definitely show the Buddha to be an illusion.

And the Ārya-caturdārika-samādhi-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra states:
In the same way, all conditioned things are likewise illusory, without essence;
the buddhas and śrāvakas too are not different, are just the same.
And since you like Mañjuśrimitra, he states in his Meditation on Bodhicitta:
Since the awakening of the sugata does not exist, his magical apparitions appear to the deluded, similar to an illusion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 8th, 2017 at 4:14 AM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

Grigoris said:

Just to get things straight: if you think that, for me, Social Ecology vs Deep Ecology is a competition of any interest at all, you are severely mistaken. As far as I am concerned they both have their positive and negative qualities.

Malcolm wrote:

You so frequently deride deep ecology, it is hard to take you seriously on this.

Grigoris said:

If I lean more towards the side of Social Ecology it is for the following reason:

The fact that Burlington, VT runs on 100% renewable electricity, for example, is a result of Vermonters taking Bookchin's ideas seriously and applying them to a small city.

That's great, but really it is a piss in the ocean. Especially when one looks at the direction things are going at the Federal level in the US, it is quite clear that anti-ecology movement is winning.

Malcolm wrote:

The appointment of a few reactionary bureaucrats does not mean the anti-ecology movement is "winning."

Grigoris said:

And why is it winning? For the very reason that you critique Bookchin: because the power imbalances at the intra-human level do not allow for the expression of ecological consciousness. Even if the majority of people developed a non-anthropocentric view, if the majority that hold power do not agree with this view... Of course the opposite can also occur, but not under a capitalist economic system.

Anyway, if we are going to talk about advances in ecologically (more) sound power production, then the example par excellence is China, not Burlington Va. China, of course, is socialist and quite clearly China has not moved in this direction due to a sudden upsurge in ecological consciousness, but merely because: 1. Solar energy is now the cheapest energy. 2. It has gotten to the point, in China, where nobody living in an urban environment (rich or poor, powerful or powerless) can breath.

Malcolm wrote:

China basically has the advantage of possessing access to large stores of rare earth minerals that are not combined with radioactive isotopes. That is principally why they are leading in solar.

But the fastest growing jobs sector in the US is in wind and solar installation.

Grigoris said:

Like I said: humans are generally self-centred and egotistical at this point in history, if you cannot appeal to this mindset, then essentially any philosophy, no matter how intelligent, is doomed to failure.

Malcolm wrote:

When people's children cannot survive, they will be motivated.

In any case, it is a consciousness raising effort.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 8th, 2017 at 3:59 AM

Title: Re: Yangzab Shitro

Content:

thogme19 said:

I wonder whether anyone here has English Yangzab Shitro text or not.

Malcolm wrote:

Contact Drikung Dzogchen Community in VT. If anyone has one, they will.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 8th, 2017 at 3:39 AM

Title: Re: Sapan Manjushri - Sajam Bagtuk?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Whichever one you can obtain the transmission for. They are all the same in intent and meaning. In general you want the Mañjuśrī/Sarasvati yab yum form.

Of course the Sapan Guru Yoga is fantastic too, but it is very specific, and if you are not a Sapan fanatic...

dzogchungpa said:

OK, I understand. I will keep an eye out for that practice.

Malcolm wrote:

As it is not given frequently, since it is not as popular as entrails-chewing demon destroyers, you will probably need to make a special request for it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 8th, 2017 at 3:26 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist version of Mahavidya Bhairavi?

Content:

crazy-man said:

Bhairavi - Shri Devi (Palden Lhamo)

Malcolm wrote:

not even remotely

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 8th, 2017 at 3:10 AM

Title: Re: Sapan Manjushri - Sajam Bagtuk?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

OK, thanks for the info. I've been wanting to have a Manjushri practice for a while now, so this sounds quite promising.

Malcolm wrote:

I rarely give advice, but what you really want is 'jam dpal smra ba'i seng ge.

dzogchungpa said:

I think there are several practices by this name. Do you mean the one from Dudjom Lingpa?

Malcolm wrote:

Whichever one you can obtain the transmission for. They are all the same in intent and meaning. In general you want the Mañjuśrī/Sarasvati yab yum form.

Of course the Sapan Guru Yoga is fantastic too, but it is very specific, and if you are not a Sapan fanatic...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 8th, 2017 at 3:02 AM

Title: Re: Sapan Manjushri - Sajam Bagtuk?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

OK, thanks for the info. I've been wanting to have a Manjushri practice for a while now, so this sounds quite promising.

Malcolm wrote:

I rarely give advice, but what you really want is 'jam dpal smra ba'i seng ge.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 8th, 2017 at 2:59 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sahajaya said:

Although such comes from a premier Dzogchen master, it does appear to describe anu yoga dzogrim (completion stage).

Malcolm wrote:

No, it has nothing to do with anuyoga. It is 100% man ngag sde.

It requires transmission and explanation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 8th, 2017 at 2:57 AM

Title: Re: Sapan Manjushri - Sajam Bagtuk?

Content:

ratna said:

sa 'jam sbag sgrub.

dzogchungpa said:

OK, thanks. I don't see how "sbag sgrub" gets pronounced as "bagtuk" though. What does 'sbag' mean here?

Malcolm wrote:

Merged.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 8th, 2017 at 2:56 AM

Title: Re: Sapan Manjushri - Sajam Bagtuk?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Can anyone provide some information about <http://www.ewamchoden.org/?p=4397?>

E.g. how is "Sajam Bagtuk" spelled, a link to a Tibetan text and/or a translation, history and significance of this practice etc. Thanks in advance.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a practice based on the pure vision of the famous Sakya scholar, Yagton (gyag ston). It is referred to as the 'jam dpal dang sa paṇ sbags te sgrub, i.e. Mañjuśrī and Sakya Pañdita Merged and Accomplished.

<http://www.tbrc.org/eBooks/W23681-2417-303-340-any.pdf>

It is an extremely important practice in the Sakya School, one which I did for many years. If you do this practice seriously, you will realize the actual meaning of Mahāmudra.

It also has a supplement, a pure vision of Dilgo Khyentse's where the sbags sgrub serves as the outer sadhana, as well as an inner and secret sadhana as well. This is included in Dilgo Khyentse's collected works.

<http://www.tbrc.org/eBooks/W21809-1847-585-596-any.pdf>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 8th, 2017 at 1:45 AM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

Grigoris said:

Deep Ecology fizzled socially/politically after a short burst mainly because of it's inability to speak to human suffering directly, given it's main audience was humans, it failed to convince.

Malcolm wrote:

Greg, you are a little isolated on the island of yours.

Deep Ecology is not dead, not even slightly. There is Bill McKibben and the <https://350.org/2016-annual-report/> in the US. If you think they are not a significant force, they have emerged as much more effective than the monkey wrenchers following Edward Abbey's vision. When you read pro-oil blogs and books, they constantly freak out at deep ecologists like McKibben, not social ecologists like Bookchin. Since Bookchin passed, the social ecology movement has faltered. Nevertheless, despite the deep misunderstanding of deep ecology by the socialist left, it is actually THE principle ecological voice today.

Grigoris said:

Social Ecology died in the ass too (especially) after the failed Green Party experiment in Germany and some other parts of the Western world.

Malcolm wrote:

The Green Parties have largely failed in because in the end party politics are, as Bharo, pointed out, blackholes that destroy life. Liberation Municipalism, Bookchin's most valuable contribution, has actually taken off in many (liberal) parts of the US. The fact that Burlington, VT runs on 100% renewable electricity, for example, is a result of Vermonters taking Bookchin's ideas seriously and applying them to a small city.

Grigoris said:

I might add: unfortunately, as they were the only two visions that would have stopped (or slowed) humanity burning itself to death in a hellish fireball.

Malcolm wrote:

Personally, I think what is needed is a broad merging of Deep Ecology and Social Ecology/Libertarian Municipalism. Deep ecology, or rather Naess' ecosophy model specifically, provides the necessary philosophical framework needed for sustaining a broad, intellectually diverse, radical ecology movement; Bookchin's writings show a way out of the patriarchal social systems that have landed us in this mess to begin with.

The difficulty with Naess's writing is that they are not obviously systematic, and really require a lot of thought. If I fault Bookchin for anything, it is his insistence that we first must create a nonhierarchical society, and then deal with the issue of the environment — if only we had so much time! However, I think we can create nonhierarchical communities in an effort to meet his challenge. At the same time however, we must support Al Gore, McKibben, David Graber, and so on. At this point I am a bit loathe to lend my support the Green Party in the US, because they run a top down ship, and there is virtually no room for new leadership. Jill Stein also began to sound like crazy person during the election, repeating Russian agitprop taken from pro-Russian "anti-Atlantacist" right wing nutjobs like Richard Spencer and other Alt-right lunatics.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 7th, 2017 at 11:14 PM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is totally illusory just like everything else.

For example, one of the five greatnesses of the Great Perfection is the total non existence of buddhahood.

Sherab said:

Is that how you read "thams cad nas thams cad du sangs rgyas pa med pa'i che ba"?

Malcolm wrote:

You could read this rendition of the greatness as "the greatness of the nonexistence of buddhahood in toto" or "...in all ways every way."

"Total" however is simpler, and the "du" particle here means that it is the verb being modified and not the noun.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 7th, 2017 at 11:08 PM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

Orton's piece was written a few years ago, and it seems to me that he is familiar mostly with the American scene. Also, he uses a very narrow definition of ecosocialism.

Lots and lots of people within European socialist movements of various stripes have been becoming more and more enthusiastic about degrowth. What might have initially seemed like a momentary "deviation" has turned out to be a steady and lasting tendency. In France for example it is already pretty much part of the mainstream left:

<https://www.thenation.com/article/could-leftist-jean-luc-melenchon-win-the-french-presidency/>

Malcolm wrote:

Mélenchon is just an old school leftist. The old left is precisely what Orton is criticizing. Even Bookchin departed from his old left roots in the formation of his libertarian municipalism (with which I am sympathetic, but think it is too anthropocentric), despite his trenchant materialism. Frankly, I have not seen an ecosocialist analysis that goes beyond Saral Sarkar's ecological dictatorship of the proletariat.

Greg brought up the issue of not romanticizing First Nations. This is a very good point. But he also misses something in the Sturm und Drang of people freaking out over the Deep Ecological observation that our planet has exceeded our carrying capacity. 1) Wild animal populations plummeted 58% between 1970 and 2002. Only 15% percent of the land mass of the planet has been set aside for reserves.

At population levels circa 1780, human beings still largely lived within nature. This is not to argue that the impact of human being has never been felt before in history. Obviously the desertification of North Africa, the Middle East, up into the Gobi Desert in Central Asia, and so on are a direct impact of human social and economic activity. It is speculated that the epidemics that wiped out indigenous people in the Americas led to a period of global cooling, because there was a marked decrease in slash and burn agriculture. But the point is that we were nowhere near exceeding the carrying capacity of the planet.

We should also take into consideration that humans have managed our environment for countless millennia. Is any of this inconsistent with Deep Ecology? Of course not. The most distressing fable I hear from its detractors is that ecological management is incompatible with the goals of Deep Ecology (by which I mean the discipline put forth by Arne Naess, and not the Primitivism mentioned by Greg— these two are frequently confused).

The fundamental expression of Naess's thought is the idea that ecological thinking fosters self-realization:

Self-preservation, or in our terminology, self-realization, cannot develop far without sharing joys and sorrows with others or, more fundamentally, without the development of the narrow ego of the small child into the comprehensive structure of a Self that comprises all human beings. The ecological movement—like many earlier philosophical movements—goes a step further and asks for a deep identification of individuals with all life.

Naess, Arne (2009-05-01). The Ecology of Wisdom: Writings by Arne Naess (pp. 172-173). Counterpoint. Kindle Edition.

Here, Naess is asking us to extend the boundaries of our self-identification from human beings, or our nation, or our state, neighborhood, or tribe, to all of life in all its diversity. This kind of thinking is completely absent from ecosocialist thought, indeed, Sarkar makes a sustained argument for anthropocentrism.

Bookchin's point of view is much better, he writes:

Thus, unlike most deep ecologists, social ecologists understand that until we undertake the project of liberating human beings from domination and hierarchy — not only economic exploitation and class rule, as orthodox socialists would have it — our chances of saving the wild areas of the planet and wildlife are remote at best.

<http://climateandcapitalism.com/2012/02/15/anthropocentrism-versus-biocentrism-notes-on-a-false-dichotomy/>

Nevertheless, Bookchin unfairly characterizes deep ecologists. Naess writes:

At the end of this century we see a convergence of three areas of self-destructiveness: the self-destructiveness of war, the self-destructiveness of exploitation and suppression among humans, the self-destructiveness of suppression of non-human beings, and of degradation of life conditions in general. The two first gave rise to the global peace movement and the global social justice movement, the third gave rise to the much younger global movement, that of deep ecology.

<http://trumpeter.athabasca.ca/index.php/trumpet/article/view/431/706>

We see that Naess explicitly acknowledges Bookchin's point:

So far as I can understand, all-round maturity of humans facilitates acts of identification with every kind of living being. This again facilitates negative attitudes towards wanton limitation of the fulfilment of life potentialities of such beings. When manifest exploitation and suppression are performed a reason is demanded: are they necessary for the satisfaction of vital needs of humans? The deepening and widening of the human ecological self results in increasingly limiting its own realization, when exploitation and suppression are applied. Potentialities of self-realization are destroyed. In this sense the third movement seeks to reduce the self-destructiveness of present globally relevant human behavior.

<http://trumpeter.athabasca.ca/index.php/trumpet/article/view/431/706>

In this speech, Naess clearly acknowledges the need for social justice, and the elimination of dominance and hierarchy within human populations. He does not consider this to be the main thrust of the radical ecology movement. But he considers the three movements he mentions—the anti-war movement, the social justice movement, and the radical ecology movement—to be moving in the same direction, ultimately with the same goal. He continues:

The self-destructiveness of present policies seems clear to a great many, and it has been adequately formulated, but 'to turn the tide' seems politically overwhelmingly difficult. The self-destructiveness of wars has been announced clearly since the atomic bomb changed 'everything'. The long range self-destructiveness of large scale exploitation and suppression based on race, sex, or dominant economy are by now gradually seen to undermine the exploiters or suppressors themselves. (The false masculinity has crippled the male sex.)

In short, I argue ecosocialists such as Sarkar have in no way transcended their Marxist roots, that they insist on an economic dictatorship which in the end will only escalate into the kind of situation we had in Soviet Union, where, as McLaughlin writes, "Ecology was also seen as reactionary because it cast doubt on the view that socialism could and should transform nature." (pg. 52, Regarding Nature).

Another problem is that most people, like Greg for example, take Deep Ecology as interpreted by David Forman to truly representative of Deep Ecology in toto. It is not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 7th, 2017 at 11:01 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is no ultimate reality.

Sherab said:

Are you implying that the state of buddhahood is not real?

Malcolm wrote:

It is totally illusory just like everything else.

For example, one of the five greatnesses of the Great Perfection is the total non-existence of buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 7th, 2017 at 10:29 AM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Socialism, as presently framed in its intellectual history is inherently anthropocentric. It is based on a dialectic of class struggle, etc. It is also based on industrialism. Bookchin's Social Ecology is a case in point, actually.

treehuggingoctopus said:

The properly, genuinely (i.e., post-anthropocentric, de-growth) eco-socialist theory is already here.

Malcolm wrote:

I thought I was pretty current on ecosocialist thought, frankly I have not seen such a trend.

treehuggingoctopus said:

We do need ecological justice, obviously. We also need social justice. The two must go together, there is no other way.

Malcolm wrote:

The former is the latter, actually.

<http://climateandcapitalism.com/2011/06/23/deep-ecology-versus-ecosocialism-part-two/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 7th, 2017 at 8:51 AM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

It does not take much to reframe socialism in such a way that it accords with biocentrism. It can be done. It has been done. It is (relatively) easy because, ethically speaking, socialism is about one's responsibility for (and rejoicing in) the (human) Other. Its mythology is that of the collective. One needs only to purge it of its anthropocentrism, and lo and behold, you already have biocentric and degrowth-friendly ecosocialism.

Malcolm wrote:

Socialism, as presently framed in its intellectual history is inherently anthropocentric. It is based on a dialectic of class struggle, etc. It is also based on industrialism. Bookchin's Social Ecology is a case in point, actually.

treehuggingoctopus said:

The properly, genuinely (i.e., post-anthropocentric, de-growth) eco-socialist theory is already here.

Malcolm wrote:

I thought I was pretty current on ecosocialist thought, frankly I have not seen such a trend.

treehuggingoctopus said:

We do need ecological justice, obviously. We also need social justice. The two must go together, there is no other way.

Malcolm wrote:

The former is the latter, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 7th, 2017 at 8:41 AM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No. But it is a view grounded in a biocentric spiritual impulse, something that makes many Social Ecologists uneasy, and which they too easily conflate with romanticism.

Grigoris said:

Yawn!!! The main point is that we need to transition to a steady state world economy, i.e., a no growth economy. Neither Capitalism nor Socialism can accommodate this.

Hogwash. This idealistic trend in the Deep Ecology movement is exactly why it has made no political progress for (at least) the past 30 years.

Malcolm wrote:

I wasn't aware this was about politics, I thought this was about a paradigm shift in how modern humans relate to our world and all the living beings in it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 7th, 2017 at 8:36 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sahajaya said:

Not to get hung on semantics; but "Body of light" appears to be a description of Dharmakaya Buddha, where vajrakaya may be an aspect of the same. To realize such is noble, and certainly that is what paths are designed to do, more or less. Although the practice to attain the rainbowbody may be noble, is that part and parcel of the same? That is why it is said; that in essence there is no difference, when referring to that which is devoid of any referent --- undifferentiated ultimate reality, which calls forth differentiated reality as its witness. Only in the subsumption of empty space and rupa (svabhavikakaya), will such activation of Rainbow Light bodies be recognized in a trans-substantiated Rose Apple world where all sentient beings are welcomed.

Aye, more easily said, than done.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no ultimate reality.

Sherab said:

Are you implying that the state of buddhahood is not real?

Malcolm wrote:

It is totally illusory just like everything else.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 7th, 2017 at 5:19 AM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

One might think so, but the book Regarding Nature has a very good argument for why socialist systems subordinate the environment to the political dictates of providing commodities to their citizens.

Grigoris said:

Socialist systems, or socialist rulers/dictators wishing to maintain the status quo?

Socialism is a political system of distribution (as is capitalism) if it can be tethered to ecological politics, well... It is not like capitalism which depends on profit, so it is much more malleable.

The other major problem with Deep Ecology is its romanticised view of an ecological society which does not differ from the ideal of Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden.

Malcolm wrote:

You've confused Deep Ecology with something else.

Grigoris said:

The Deep Ecological view is basically a Romanticist view.

Malcolm wrote:

No. But it is a view grounded in a biocentric spiritual impulse, something that makes many Social Ecologists uneasy, and which they too easily conflate with romanticism. Actually, Deep Ecology is very inclusive of other ecological movements, as Naess says, "The Front is long."

The main point is that we need to transition to a steady state world economy, i.e., a no growth economy. Neither Capitalism nor Socialism can accommodate this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 7th, 2017 at 4:59 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:
Sahajaya said:
Another Translation
The Six Meditation Techniques of Acarya Manjusrimitra

"O Noble One, should you wish to experience the Continuum of Awareness (vidya-santana) in all its unveiled nakedness, then:

- (1) focus on absolute Awareness as the object [of Meditation];
- (2) press the points of the body with the mudra;
- (3) retain the coming and going of the breath;
- (4) aim [the arrow] at the target [of the crown bindu];
- (5) rely on the immovability (acala) of body, eyes, consciousness;
- (6) and grasp the Vast Openness [of absolute Awareness].

Colophon

This is the last testament of Sri Manjusrimitra."

Malcolm wrote:
This translation is even worse than the last.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, August 7th, 2017 at 2:20 AM
Title: Re: Socialism & Communism
Content:
Grigoris said:
Yes, but neither one has to be.

Malcolm wrote:
Sorry, but this ecological irrationality is built into each system. In the market distribution of commodities (capitalism) and the social distribution of commodities (socialism), the environment always loses.

treehuggingoctopus said:
It does not take much to reframe socialism in such a way that it accords with biocentrism. It can be done. It has been done. It is (relatively) easy because, ethically speaking, socialism is about one's responsibility for (and rejoicing in) the (human) Other. Its mythology is that of the collective. One needs only to purge it of its anthropocentrism, and lo and behold, you already have biocentric and degrowth-friendly ecosocialism.

Malcolm wrote:

Socialism, as presently framed in its intellectual history is inherently anthropocentric. It is based on a dialectic of class struggle, etc. It is also based on industrialism. Bookchin's Social Ecology is a case in point, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 7th, 2017 at 2:07 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sahajaya said:

Not to get hung on semantics; but "Body of light" appears to be a description of Dharmakaya Buddha, where vajrakaya may be an aspect of the same. To realize such is noble, and certainly that is what paths are designed to do, more or less. Although the practice to attain the rainbowbody may be noble, is that part and parcel of the same? That is why it is said; that in essence there is no difference, when referring to that which is devoid of any referent --- undifferentiated ultimate reality, which calls forth differentiated reality as its witness. Only in the subsumption of empty space and rupa (svabhavikakaya), will such activation of Rainbow Light bodies be recognized in a trans-substantiated Rose Apple world where all sentient beings are welcomed. Aye, more easily said, than done.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no ultimate reality.

Sahajaya said:

Malcolm, after a night's rest, here is my response going back to the OP, that in essence, there is no difference in result.

Wholeheartedly recognizing and being absorbed into our innate buddhanature, the nature of mind, mind's essence, or ultimate bodhicitta, etc, is essentially the same, in essence.

Ultimate reality (no-thingness) is incomplete if viewed as apart from phenomena in the non-dual context of interdependence by definition. Svabhavikakaya is all inclusive where subsumption heals all apparent rends. Yes, it is through breaking through the veil of illusion that the noble truths are read.

Rainbow Light bodies, wisdom bodies, sambhogakayas, yidams, yogic illusory bodies, cannot manifest independent from Dharmakaya (Dharmabody), just as phenomena are not to be separated from Dharmadhatu (Dharmata) -- such act as buddha's self-radiant vehicles.

It may be worthwhile to contemplate what Vairochana studied in Shang Shung and Khotan, why he was exiled to the region of the "great Chinese mountain", and the lives of Sri Singha, Manjushrimitra, and Vimalamitra in this regard, or not. Perhaps, it seems that you have already done this work? Breaking apart and breaking through, my tea is waiting.

It seems to this ignorant reader that much of history is unclear and that the Dunhuang excavations have brought forward an undiluted syncretism that has been ignored or forgotten in traditional circles. Of course, I may be wrong to speculate.

“O son of good family
If you wish to see the continuity
Of naked awareness
Then focus on absolute awareness as the object
Press the points of the body
Close the way of going and coming Focus on the target
Rely on the unmoving
And grasp the vast expanse.”

~ Manjushrimitra, “Six Experiences”

Malcolm wrote:

What I can tell you is that this translation is pretty bad. You should not rely on it.

The dharmakāya is a path experience— it does not exist in the result.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 7th, 2017 at 2:03 AM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, but this ecological irrationality is built into each system. In the market distribution of commodities (capitalism) and the social distribution of commodities (socialism), the environment always loses.

Grigoris said:

I disagree. If one had a socialist system where the citizens have an ecological outlook/consciousness there is no reason for the environment to lose.

Malcolm wrote:

One might think so, but the book Regarding Nature has a very good argument for why socialist systems subordinate the environment to the political dictates of providing commodities to their citizens.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, August 7th, 2017 at 12:38 AM

Title: Re: Dharma Fellowship

Content:

Lingpupa said:

And does anyone know who the "Kunpal Rinpoche" might be, or what the "Vijaya Lineage of the Kagyu School" might be?

Malcolm wrote:

Vijaya is a reference to Namgyal (rnam rgyal = vijaya). Apparently Leslie George Dawson aka Namgyal Rimpoche, or his students, imagine that he spawned an independent Karma Kagyu Ladrang.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 6th, 2017 at 10:54 PM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

Dan74 said:

There's a lovely post on the short lived Spanish anarchy by Dan Mathews, WikiLeaks cofounder, research mathematician and former colleague:

<http://danielmathews.info/blog/2017/01/eighty-years-ago-spanish-people-responded-to-the-far-right-with-social-revolution/>

Incidentally, in some places the majority favour a return to Communism - don't assume that capitalism automatically means a better life for everybody. Especially a capitalism without proper safeguards.

/

Malcolm wrote:

Both capitalism and socialism are ecologically irrational systems.

Grigoris said:

Yes, but neither one has to be.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, but this ecological irrationality is built into each system. In the market distribution of commodities (capitalism) and the social distribution of commodities (socialism), the environment always loses.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 6th, 2017 at 10:01 PM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

Dan74 said:

There's a lovely post on the short lived Spanish anarchy by Dan Mathews, WikiLeaks cofounder, research mathematician and former colleague:

<http://danielmathews.info/blog/2017/01/eighty-years-ago-spanish-people-responded-to-the-far-right-with-social-revolution/>

Incidentally, in some places the majority favour a return to Communism - don't assume that capitalism automatically means a better life for everybody. Especially a capitalism without proper safeguards.

/

Malcolm wrote:

Both capitalism and socialism are ecologically irrational systems.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 6th, 2017 at 9:19 PM

Title: Re: How genetics is settling the Aryan migration debate

Content:

MiphamFan said:

It probably was a diffusion of culture with some genetic component and some conflicts between autochthons and Indo-Aryans.

The people of the Orkney Islands barely have any West Asian DNA, which is the key indicator of proto-Indo-European genetic descent, but they assimilated to PIE culture(s) millennia ago.

Same for various isolated European groups like Basques.

Malcolm wrote:

Genetics, language, and culture are not co-terminus.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, August 6th, 2017 at 9:20 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sahajaya said:

Not to get hung on semantics; but "Body of light" appears to be a description of Dharmakaya Buddha, where vajrakaya may be an aspect of the same. To realize such is noble, and certainly that is what paths are designed to do, more or less. Although the practice to attain the rainbowbody may be noble, is that part and parcel of the same? That is why it is said; that in essence there is no difference, when referring to that which is devoid of any referent --- undifferentiated ultimate reality, which calls forth differentiated reality as its witness. Only in the subsummation of empty space and rupa (svabhavikakaya), will such activation of Rainbow Light bodies be recognized in a trans-substantiated Rose Apple world where all sentient beings are welcomed. Aye, more easily said, than done.

Malcolm wrote:
There is no ultimate reality.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, August 6th, 2017 at 3:04 AM
Title: Re: Tibetan Zen
Content:
Sahajaya said:
Bodies are formations.

Malcolm wrote:
The body of light is free from conditions.

Sahajaya said:
There is no result, ultimately.

Malcolm wrote:
There is no basis, or path, ultimately. The ultimate represents a limit of analysis. It is not some thing out there.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, August 5th, 2017 at 11:31 PM
Title: Re: Tibetan Zen
Content:
Sahajaya said:
Thogal, trechod, rainbowbody, dis and dat are processes...

Malcolm wrote:
Not exactly. Trekcho is the basis, thogal is the path, rainbow body aka body of light is the result of the exhaustion of dharmata.

CedarTree said:
I may be wrong but as I have understood the Rainbow body it is the liberation of the body into a Sambhogakaya that the then deceased master can manifest by their enlightened compassion in numerous places.

Can you maybe broaden that understanding and explain how it ties into the "exhaustion of dharmata".

Thank you Malcolm, we are very appreciative of your understanding.

Malcolm wrote:

"Rainbow body" is the reversion of the physical elements of the body into their original form as the five lights of pristine consciousness. In Dzogchen, the three kāyas are path appearances, they do not exist in the result.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 5th, 2017 at 11:30 PM

Title: Re: How genetics is settling the Aryan migration debate

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

We are Punjabis are Aryans.

Malcolm wrote:

Part Indo-Iranian, you mean. It seems that the migration to India was not an "invasion," but a piecemeal migration by single men over some number of centuries. I imagine, given patrilineal inheritance in the Proto Indo-European community in general, these were young men whose older brothers stood in line of inheritance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 5th, 2017 at 8:46 PM

Title: Re: How genetics is settling the Aryan migration debate

Content:

The Cicada said:

There's also tenuous evidence of pre-Buddhist Chinese influence on ancient Mesoamerican cultures.

<http://www.ancient-origins.net/news-history-archaeology/scientist-explores-connection-between-china-and-peru-020153>

<http://mexicounexplained.com/chinese-contact-ancient-mexico/>

Malcolm wrote:

There has been contact between the Americas, Asia, and Europe for millennia. Vikings are the first people who left definite archaeological remains confirming the presence of Europeans in the Americas.

While it is certainly reasonable to speculate that Chinese ships may have reached American shores prior to Columbus, there has yet to be any proof of this in either Chinese records or in the archaeological record.

However, Gavin Menzies is a https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Gavin_Menzies.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 5th, 2017 at 6:22 PM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sahajaya said:

Thogal, trechod, rainbowbody, dis and dat are processes...

Malcolm wrote:

Not exactly. Trekcho is the basis, thogal is the path, rainbow body aka body of light is the result of the exhaustion of dharmata.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 5th, 2017 at 11:17 AM

Title: Re: How genetics is settling the Aryan migration debate

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

I was going to rename myself "Buddhist Barbi" maybe that would be more obvious.

The Cicada said:

Why not go with something très tubular like, "The Modest Matron?"

TharpaChodron said:

There's a minor controversy here with Native Americans who argue against the whole migration from Asia theory, as well. Their legends say that they were born on this land, and didn't come from Asia. it's pretty ridiculous.

The Cicada said:

There are some anapistic ancient statues of corn and sunflowers that were found in India.

<http://econ.ohio-state.edu/jhm/arch/maize.html>

Pretty much proves that Indians are Mexicans, not the other way around.

Malcolm wrote:

Unlikely.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 5th, 2017 at 9:53 AM

Title: Re: What is your favorite Tantra, Sutra, Etc.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 5th, 2017 at 9:49 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

MalaBeads said:

There is no rainbow body, or thogrol instructions in zen. Is that what you are referring to Malcolm?

So the "realization of rainbow body" would be one difference in realization between the two methods.

Matylda said:

Yes there is nothing like that.. however there is an interesting story about ryokan.. when he died and was cremated his bones had sing of the 5 colors.. trekcho instructions seem to be very close to advanced zen instructions..

CedarTree said:

Matylda, Thank you for sharing that story of Ryokan. He is a very interesting Soto Zen Monk to say the least If anyone may have achieved Rainbow body maybe it was him,

Malcolm wrote:

Relics are common to all traditions. Rainbow body is something very specific and not shared with traditions outside Tibetan Vajrayana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, August 5th, 2017 at 12:24 AM

Title: Re: How genetics is settling the Aryan migration debate

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

Hold up a sec. I'm not a dude, for one thing. And another, this isn't about whether is was true, but you don't think people believed it? Didn't people also believe that God created Adam and Eve and the world was created in 7 days (or something) until Darwin? Even if my linguist was full of shite, there is apparently a Biblical linguistic theory that involves the Tower of Babel which is long debunked, but still persists in some Christian people's minds.

Grigoris said:

Sorry about the "dude" thing, it is hard to tell from the picture and the name, though that does not mean I should have assumed you are a "dude". Malcolm is right though: I don't get out much. I find "out" incredibly boring, especially after a week of the tales I hear at work.

Anyway, I was more referring to the "Christian West" thing. Greece was part of the "Christian West" (and East) and I am sure they knew that their language existed well before the "Tower of Babel" story.

Malcolm wrote:

Chodron is basically a women's name, dude. The first Chodron (Chos sgron) was the female arhat, Dhammadipa, a direct disciple of the Buddha. She teaches an entire sutta in the Majjhima Nikaya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 4th, 2017 at 11:09 PM

Title: Re: How genetics is settling the Aryan migration debate

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

Hold up a sec. I'm not a dude, for one thing.

Malcolm wrote:

Don't mind Greg, he doesn't get out much.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 4th, 2017 at 10:18 PM

Title: Re: Question re Nagas

Content:

tingdzin said:

The Tibetan naga literature comes from a variety of sources, there is a mass of lore, and there is no Naga Encyclopedia that has all the answers in a consistent way. Furthermore, naga mythology from India, etc. was overlaid onto the pre-existing Tibetan concepts of the klu (lu), which usually referred to ill-defined subterranean powers, not necessarily serpents. The two cannot be seen as simply the same, although they have been running in harness for so long it is difficult to separate the concepts derived from the two sources.

Malcolm wrote:

There is at least one encyclopedic source in Tibetan: the klu 'bum dkar nag khra gsum. Granted, these volumes, which belong to the Bon school, show considerable evidence of Indian overlay, but they also contain tons of native Tibetan lore.

According to Bon text, the klu 'bum dkar po (White Volume of the Nāgās), the nāgas are the offspring of the union of the king of the Gnyan, Gnyan spar ba Dung mgo g.yu'i thor tshugs (The gNyan Flying Conch Head with Turquoise Topknot) with the Sa bdag bstan ma, Gser mdog gser gyi bum pa can (The Golden One with a Vase of Gold). In this text, nāgās are held to live in springs.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 4th, 2017 at 11:33 AM

Title: Re: Satori at a Grateful Dead Show

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

For me it was Zeppelin --> 801 Live --> Pistols --> Throbbing Gristle --> PTV --> Tibetan Buddhism (That is sort of a very general outline). Dub Music in general, from Black Uhuru on. These days fond of Bonobo, etc.

Queequeg said:

Saw in the other thread dzogchungpa linked you confessed to being a skin head... interesting that you went the TB route. That crowd usually goes Zen.

Malcolm wrote:

One does not confess to being a skinhead. One proudly announces it to a properly-shocked audience. I was a skin because of Ska, Oi and because it was a clean-cut postmod style, not because I was a racist. It was also an excellent outfit for working in kitchens, warehouses, construction yards, and so on, which is what I did at the time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 4th, 2017 at 6:38 AM

Title: Re: Question re Nagas

Content:

Grigoris said:

There are also two types of Naga: black and white.

We (mainly) subjugate the black and appease the white.

Malcolm wrote:

There were five castes of nāgas: royal, brahmin, merchant, farmer, and outcasts. It is the outcasts that cause the problems.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 4th, 2017 at 6:35 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The mind and it's emptiness together are one entity, inseparable, just as space and the characteristic of space are not two separate entities, whereas clothe and its dye are not one entity and not inseparable. The Mahasiddha Virupa observed, the sole difference between space and the mind is that a mind has the capacity to know. But the emptiness of the mind is part of the entity of the mind and not something separate from the mind itself, just as the capacity for the mind to know is also inseparable from the entity of the mind itself. That empty knowing is the mind essence. That is Buddhahood. There is nothing to realize beyond that.

Bakmoon said:

I'm still confused. The mind and emptiness are a single entity, but that doesn't mean it is the mind's sole characteristic, or that emptiness is equivalent to everything else about the mind. For example, earlier you said that clarity and emptiness are isolates of the mind, so obviously they are a single entity. But emptiness and clarity aren't identical to one another because they refer to different aspects of the mind.

Malcolm wrote:

Clarity and emptiness cannot in truth be differentiated from one another. They are inseparable like fire and heat.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 4th, 2017 at 2:16 AM

Title: Re: Question re Nagas

Content:

Proclus said:

I have a question regarding Nagas. In some Sadhanas or apologies, it seems that we are befriending Nagas, but in other Sadhanas, it seems that we are subjugating Nagas, for example, visualizing a Garuda devouring a Naga.

I am confused as to how to maintain both positions - how can I befriend Nagas and also subjugate them.

Thank you

Malcolm wrote:

The Nāga kings are beneficial, in general, though easily angered. The lower class nāgas are the main problem.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 4th, 2017 at 1:27 AM

Title: Re: Tibetan Zen

Content:

Sahajaya said:

As a path, there are differences in method. The ultimate realization is the same (no essential difference).

Malcolm wrote:

No, there are differences.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 4th, 2017 at 1:27 AM

Title: Re: How genetics is settling the Aryan migration debate

Content:

Queequeg said:

I'm aware this is controversial, but can someone explain exactly why its controversial in contemporary India?

Malcolm wrote:

Indians do not like the way the Max Muller and other characterized the influx of Indo-European speakers into the India, so they pushed back and came up with alternate (and incorrect) counter theories.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 4th, 2017 at 1:20 AM

Title: Re: How "new atheism" slid into the alt-right

Content:

Grigoris said:

Are you a Nazi sympathiser by any chance?

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, he absolutely is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, August 4th, 2017 at 1:19 AM

Title: Re: How "new atheism" slid into the alt-right

Content:

The Cicada said:

They often say that "liberals are the real racists." Think about it. They love environmentalism like Nazis,

Malcolm wrote:

No.

The Cicada said:

are vegetarians like Hitler,

Malcolm wrote:

No.

The Cicada said:

and are deeply authoritarian

Malcolm wrote:

No.

The Cicada said:
and concerned with population control.

Malcolm wrote:
No.

The Cicada said:
Modern liberals are basically the new Hitler.

Malcolm wrote:
Not even remotely.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, August 4th, 2017 at 12:55 AM
Title: How genetics is settling the Aryan migration debate
Content:

Unknown said:
The thorniest, most fought-over question in Indian history is slowly but surely getting answered: did Indo-European language speakers, who called themselves Aryans, stream into India sometime around 2,000 BC – 1,500 BC when the Indus Valley civilisation came to an end, bringing with them Sanskrit and a distinctive set of cultural practices? Genetic research based on an avalanche of new DNA evidence is making scientists around the world converge on an unambiguous answer: yes, they did.

Malcolm wrote:
<http://www.thehindu.com/sci-tech/science/how-genetics-is-settling-the-aryan-migration-debate/article19090301.ece>

The only people who will doubt this are climate science deniers.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, August 3rd, 2017 at 9:48 PM
Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness
Content:

tomamundsen said:
Is the Nyingma view of that shastra closer to the Kagyu or Sakya view?

Malcolm wrote:
It depends on how close to a Sakya, Kagyu or even Gelugpa monastery a given Nyingma scholar was raised.

These days, via Mipham and Khenpo Zhenga, Nyingma view skews Sakya in formal academic studies. But a lot of Nyingmapas, nevertheless, adhere to Kongtrul's ideas.

These rose to great prominence in the late nineteenth century in Eastern Tibet and have influenced many very famous masters such as Dudjom Rinpoche and Dilgo Khyentse Rinpoche, among others. On the other hand, we find masters like Jigme Lingpa, Shabkar, and the Drodrukchens whose outlook on formal academic studies are completely influenced by their proximity to Gelug institutions of higher learning.

Sherab said:

I find this disconcerting, if true. I'd rather they espouse an accurated view rather than a view of a school. I won't be disconcerted if they espoused an accurate view but were strawed-men into one category of view or another.

Malcolm wrote:

Everyone thinks their own view is accurate, including you. Most of us are mistaken.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 3rd, 2017 at 9:13 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It can be compassionate to toss someone in jail.

MalaBeads said:

Always good to know what you think, Malcolm.

Malcolm wrote:

Sometimes people need a serious time out. Jail can be good for that. However, do not read that as an endorsement for the penal justice system as its stands in the US today. It is way too racist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 3rd, 2017 at 11:30 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

smcj said:

On other threads you've expressed very, uh, 'interesting' interpretations of that chapter. Now I'll get a chance to run your ideas by a real Kagyu Khenpo.

Malcolm wrote:

He'll just tell you I am a Sakyapa. And it is true, my entire "undergraduate" training is in the Sakya School.

tomamundsen said:

Is the Nyingma view of that shastra closer to the Kagyu or Sakya view?

Malcolm wrote:

It depends on how close to a Sakya, Kagyu or even Gelugpa monastery a given Nyingma scholar was raised.

These days, via Mipham and Khenpo Zhenga, Nyingma view skews Sakya in formal academic studies. But a lot of Nyingmapas, nevertheless, adhere to Kongtrul's ideas. These rose to great prominence in the late nineteenth century in Eastern Tibet and have influenced many very famous masters such as Dudjom Rinpoche and Dilgo Khyentse Rinpoche, among others. On the other hand, we find masters like Jigme Lingpa, Shabkar, and the Drodrukchens whose outlook on formal academic studies are completely influenced by their proximity to Gelug institutions of higher learning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 3rd, 2017 at 11:17 AM

Title: Re: Satori at a Grateful Dead Show

Content:

narhwal90 said:

I never "got" the Dead. I partied with the deadheads for years, listened to the songs lots of times but all the concert tapes sounded pretty much the same to me even the famous ones with various events and solos that people traded recordings of. I do like a few of their songs but the others.... lots of noodling around with no end in sight is mostly how it sounds to me.

lol, I might say the same about Rush and I went to one of their concerts a few years ago which goes on record as the most boring concert I've ever attended and I had a girlfriend drag me to see Journey back in the day.

Now put on some Zeppelin and we're getting somewhere...

TharpaChodron said:

I'd pretty much agree (especially the Rush part). but I admire the Grateful Dead, and the passionate following that they created. Although I'm not old enough to really have ever been too into the Dead, my Buddhist roots do go back to the Beat era. I think it was reading Kerouac that really got me started. And then I had the pleasure as a teen to get in touch with Herbert Huncke while he was living in the Chelsea Hotel and talk to the old junky before he kicked the bucket. Jazz, man, it's all about the Jazzzzz.

Malcolm wrote:

For me it was Zeppelin --> 801 Live --> Pistols --> Throbbing Gristle --> PTV --> Tibetan Buddhism (That is sort of a very general outline). Dub Music in general, from Black Uhuru on. These days fond of Bonobo, etc.

Dead, I went to a show in 1979, dropped some acid, waved a glow stick around for a while, then hitched home at midnight after the show let out. Really, quite an unremarkable experience. However, I saw James White and the Blacks on peyote buttons at Max's Kansas City in 1978, and that was really quite an experience, as was the whole city of New York that night.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 3rd, 2017 at 11:04 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Bakmoon said:

I don't understand. From what I understand, Tsongkhapa is saying that emptiness and appearance are two isolates of the same entity rather than being literally identical. I thought that was your position as well.

Malcolm wrote:

The emptiness aspect of the mind is its dharmatā, no more separate from the mind than wetness is from water.

Emptiness is not something separate from the mind.

Tsongkhapa said:

Are you saying that mind and emptiness are the same then?

If you answer "no" then we agree.

Malcolm wrote:

The mind and its emptiness together are one entity, inseparable, just as space and the characteristic of space are not two separate entities, whereas cloth and its dye are not one entity and not inseparable. The Mahasiddha Virupa observed, the sole difference between space and the mind is that a mind has the capacity to know. But the emptiness of the mind is part of the entity of the mind and not something separate from the mind itself, just as the capacity for the mind to know is also inseparable from the entity of the mind itself. That empty knowing is the mind essence. That is Buddhahood. There is nothing to realize beyond that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 3rd, 2017 at 10:59 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

???

smcj said:

On other threads you've expressed very, uh, 'interesting' interpretations of that chapter. Now I'll get a chance to run your ideas by a real Kagyu Khenpo.

Malcolm wrote:

He'll just tell you I am a Sakyapa. And it is true, my entire "undergraduate" training is in the Sakya School.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 3rd, 2017 at 10:44 AM

Title: Re: Lama Norha

Content:

Strive said:

so much sex abuse wierd who to trust these days? better to practice alone i think lol yan kong said:

These I think are exceptions rather than norms. But then there's no reason to publish articles about all the Dharma centres that go about there day to day activities quietly, peacefully and ethically.

Headline: Vancouver Canada Dharma centre has its weekly Tara Puja. Everyone is civil and things go as expected.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, if all news were good news we'd all be completely depressed at how dreadful our lives are compared to everyone else.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 3rd, 2017 at 10:42 AM

Title: Re: How "new atheism" slid into the alt-right

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

A honey pot for fascists, ha. I've met some people I'd lovingly call Buddhist nazis, but not like real fascist Nazi Buddhists. It's a strange world.

The Cicada said:

They often say that "liberals are the real racists." Think about it. They love environmentalism like Nazis, are vegetarians like Hitler, and are deeply authoritarian and concerned with population control. It's almost as if you're looking at what Nazis would have become if they'd been subjected to prolonged exposure of low level intensity metta rays emanating from the Buddha's heart—which consequently has a giant swastika on it...

FB_IMG_1492198300933.jpg

TharpaChodron said:

As I said, you can't argue with crazy.

Malcolm wrote:

However, one can calmly repeat "No" in response to their insanity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 3rd, 2017 at 10:38 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

robh said:

Malcom,

You wrote: A lot of so called "guru abuse" is a co-created problem where students lose their perspective and feed a guru's ego, the latter in turn begin to feel invincible, and there is kind of snowball effect of ego inflation: the student feels their master is enlightened, the master begins to believe student mythology, and then the master loses perspective.

You refer to such a "guru" as a "master". What has such a "guru" truly mastered in regards to embodying the dharma if he acts in such a manner?

Malcolm wrote:

The term "master" has two connotations: 1) one who has mastered a subject or a body of knowledge and 2) someone who has been given or taken authority of some portion of another person's life choices.

One hopes that someone termed "a master" in Buddhadharma has actually mastered some portion of the Dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 3rd, 2017 at 10:34 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

smcj said:

(I'm sure the very idea of it gives Malcolm the chills.)

Malcolm wrote:

???

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 3rd, 2017 at 10:33 AM

Title: Re: How "new atheism" slid into the alt-right

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

A honey pot for fascists, ha. I've met some people I'd lovingly call Buddhist nazis, but not like real fascist Nazi Buddhists. It's a strange world.

The Cicada said:

They often say that "liberals are the real racists." Think about it. They love environmentalism like Nazis,

Malcolm wrote:
No.

The Cicada said:
are vegetarians like Hitler,

Malcolm wrote:
No.

The Cicada said:
and are deeply authoritarian

Malcolm wrote:
No.

The Cicada said:
and concerned with population control.

Malcolm wrote:
No.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, August 3rd, 2017 at 12:26 AM
Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu
Content:

Aryjna said:
Having followed the world wide transmission does one also have the transmission for the song of the vajra?

Malcolm wrote:
Yes.

Aryjna said:
Thanks. One more question: having the transmission, can one read and practice the 21 semdzins, the lojongs, rushens, and semdzins from the other book, and the precious vase? I think the answer is yes again, but I don't think I've seen it mentioned explicitly, for all these.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, you can.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 3rd, 2017 at 12:04 AM

Title: Re: How "new atheism" slid into the alt-right

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The problem with Harris and his followers is that they apply double standards because they are blind to their Western privilege.

Dharma Flower said:

Sam Harris, Richard Dawkins, Bill Maher, and others on the left who are critical of Islamic extremism can and do condemn Christian extremism for what it is as well. They are also just as likely to point out violence in the Bible as they are to point out violence in the Koran.

Malcolm wrote:

No, in fact they do not. I watch Maher regularly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, August 3rd, 2017 at 12:03 AM

Title: Re: How "new atheism" slid into the alt-right

Content:

Dharma Flower said:

Sam Harris, Richard Dawkins, Bill Maher, and others on the left

Malcolm wrote:

None of these guys are really on the left. Bill Maher may be a pot smoking Democrat, but he is certainly not a leftist. Harris, for all intents and purposes, is a neoconservative. Dawkins is a neoliberal, hardly a bastion of the left wing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 2nd, 2017 at 10:49 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Aryjna said:

Having followed the world wide transmission does one also have the transmission for the song of the vajra?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 2nd, 2017 at 10:34 PM

Title: Re: How “new atheism” slid into the alt-right

Content:

Dharma Flower said:

It's not racist or anti-Muslim to be honest about these atrocities, just as it's not anti-Christian to be honest about the witch trials, the Crusades, the Inquisition, etc.

Someone like Sam Harris tries to be honest about the problems caused in the world by theistic belief and religious fundamentalism, rather than simply singling out Islam. He's said some very important things about Christian extremism and other forms of religious extremism too.

If we do not condemn Islamic extremism for what it is, then we risk allowing all Muslims, including moderate Muslims, being lumped in with the extremists. I fully support the rights and dignity of moderate Muslims, so I don't want them to be lumped in with the extremists. If we don't name Islamic extremism for what it is, we risk allowing moderate Muslims to be lumped in with the extremists.

Malcolm wrote:

We do not label terrorism perpetrated by Christians "Christian extremism," why should we do the same for terrorism perpetrated by Muslims?

We do not attack the Bible because it contains Leviticus and Deuteronomy, why should we attack the Q'uran?

The problem with Harris and his followers is that they apply double standards because they are blind to their Western privilege.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 2nd, 2017 at 9:18 PM

Title: Re: How “new atheism” slid into the alt-right

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

He was an inept fool, as well as a murderer.

The Cicada said:

He was trying to save a Buddhist country—and Buddhism itself—from the same force that demolished Tibet.

Malcolm wrote:

No, he wasn't. He was trying to set himself up in a Conradian novel.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 2nd, 2017 at 9:17 PM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Are you saying that mind and emptiness are the same then?

If you answer "no" then we agree.

conebeckham said:

Where is emptiness, aside from the mind? Can you show me emptiness?

Tsongkhapafan said:

That's right, they are inseparable but not the same, like a cloth and the colour of the cloth.

Malcolm wrote:

The color of the cloth is extraneous to the cloth and can be changed. The emptiness of the mind cannot be changed because emptiness is inherent to the mind. Therefore to say that the mind and emptiness are two different things is a basic category error.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 2nd, 2017 at 9:15 PM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Bakmoon said:

I don't understand. From what I understand, Tsongkhapafan is saying that emptiness and appearance are two isolates of the same entity rather than being literally identical. I thought that was your position as well.

Malcolm wrote:

The emptiness aspect of the mind is its dharmatā, no more separate from the mind than wetness is from water.

Emptiness is not something separate from the mind.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Are you saying that mind and emptiness are the same then?

If you answer "no" then we agree.

Malcolm wrote:

The mind is empty, emptiness is not a thing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 2nd, 2017 at 9:53 AM

Title: Re: How "new atheism" slid into the alt-right

Content:

Strive said:

about alabama women that could be so lol but truth be told i wouldnt feel safe. maybe i read too much about klue klux klan and all the hatred that the black ppl have to go thru there. i dont want to judge tho. maybe i will go there someday n have better feelings about them.

The Cicada said:

I honestly believe that you might. I also get the impression that Muslims you meet in the West are, generally a bit more circumspect than their counterparts back home. The Baptist church lady might just be saying aloud what the Muslim is thinking, bless her heart. I would recommend visiting Alabama before Saudi Arabia—or putting yourself in a box like Nermal the cat and shipping yourself off to Abu Dhabi.

Regarding the OP... I find the source questionable, the author biased, and the remarks of the original poster to be hyperbolic. As Buddhists, we practice compassion. However, if a bunch of white dudes jump onto a movement and discover that, when 3 people are left in the sun, one will get a nice bronzy tan, another will shrug off the exposure with no change, and another will turn crisp and red and develop melanoma skin cancer, I can't see why anyone is rightfully outraged by this. If it angers liberal, rich white women... I can't say that this concerns me, either. There's no "other side of the planet" for innovative men to sail to anymore. If reason offends, society may just have to learn to deal.

All I know is that Baron Ungern-Sternberg is a great man.

Malcolm wrote:

He was an inept fool, as well as a murderer.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 2nd, 2017 at 5:03 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Emptiness is the very nature of the mind itself, but it is not mind, thus there is a non-deluded duality or nominal distinction between mind and emptiness. .

Malcolm wrote:

For as long time as you maintain this idea, you will be as far from Buddhahood as the earth is from the sky.

Bakmoon said:

I don't understand. From what I understand, Tsongkhapafan is saying that emptiness and appearance are two isolates of the same entity rather than being literally identical. I thought that was your position as well.

Malcolm wrote:

The emptiness aspect of the mind is its dharmatā, no more separate from the mind than wetness is from water.

Emptiness is not something separate from the mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 2nd, 2017 at 4:39 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Emptiness is the very nature of the mind itself, but it is not mind, thus there is a non-deluded duality or nominal distinction between mind and emptiness. .

Malcolm wrote:

For as long time as you maintain this idea, you will be as far from Buddhahood as the earth is from the sky.

Tsongkhapafan said:

The non-deluded duality of mind and emptiness is simply a fact. Anyone who thinks that emptiness can perceive objects has a wrong view because emptiness is not mind and is in fact unconditioned whereas mind is conditioned.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 2nd, 2017 at 4:05 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Emptiness is the very nature of the mind itself, but it is not mind, thus there is a non-deluded duality or nominal distinction between mind and emptiness. .

Malcolm wrote:

For as long time as you maintain this idea, you will be as far from Buddhahood as the earth is from the sky.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 2nd, 2017 at 3:05 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

CedarTree said:

However I am of the personal view that the Pali Canon is an Authoritative text though I don't assert this on anyone else.

Malcolm wrote:

The Pali canon is the word of the Buddha. So is Mahāyāna. Mahāyāna supercedes the Pali Canon in many instances, where it does, I follow the former and not the latter. The same is true with respect to Vajrayāna and Mahāyāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 2nd, 2017 at 2:28 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

A for the first, no, the unconditioned cannot be a direct object of the mind. Mind is conditioned. You are confusing conditioned space (space as a cavity) with unconditioned space (space as absence of obstruction). The latter space permeates the hand that is waving. The hands waves in conditioned space. It stops waving as soon as it hits a tree limb, for example.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Unproduced space is the nature of produced space. I experience lack of obstructive contact all the time when I walk around.

Malcolm wrote:

Until you walk into a wall. Unobstructed space, unlike you, is not impeded by the wall.

I thought you would make this error. The absence of inherent existence is not the nonexistence of something (an affirming negation). It is a total negation of essence (a nonaffirming negation).

It's not an error. Absence of inherent existence is the non-existence of inherent existence which is fine because inherent existence has never existed.

Then it cannot be perceived at all, like hair on a tortoise, horns on a rabbit, or the son of a barren woman.

No. At this point the mind, when in equipoise, is in a nondual absorption, completely free of subject and object.

No. the experience of being in equipoise is the apparent freedom from the duality of subject and object but that is not actually the case unless you are asserting that mind is emptiness. Emptiness is always an object of mind because it is not clarity and cognizing. In equipoise on emptiness, there is no separate mind to find that is different from its emptiness at all. According to you, emptiness is something other than the mind. This is a very mistaken idea.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 2nd, 2017 at 2:20 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

CedarTree said:

Minobu makes a great point sometimes when we really delve into the depth of certain aspects of practice we have to make sure we don't lose context within the broader dhamma as presented by the Buddhas. Does it mean topics can't be explored and content explained of course not, that is literally what Mahayana is in contract to say the Pali canon which is systematic and extremely well presented but limited on some subjects where Mahayana expands but it has to find itself within the larger context of these authority of works

Malcolm wrote:

If you are saying that the authority of Mahāyāna must bow to that of the Pali Canon, I completely disagree. It is the other way around.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 2nd, 2017 at 2:18 AM

Title: Re: How "new atheism" slid into the alt-right

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

well, no, it is an alt-right honey pot, it draws people of fascist sympathies from far and wide.

Queequeg said:

Oh, jeez. Is that something to be encouraged?

Malcolm wrote:

It is useful to see who, on this board, has such sympathies.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 2nd, 2017 at 2:02 AM

Title: Re: How “new atheism” slid into the alt-right

Content:

The Cicada said:

There are many beautiful women in Alabama.

Queequeg said:

Had a girl from Alabama in one of my classes back in school. My heart skipped a beat when she'd answer a question in class... that debutante Southern accent...

Roll Tide!

Sorry off topic, but this thread is pretty much used up garbage anyway.

Malcolm wrote:

well, no, it is an alt-right honey pot, it draws people of fascist sympathies from far and wide.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 2nd, 2017 at 1:56 AM

Title: Re: How “new atheism” slid into the alt-right

Content:

The Cicada said:

But that's just me. I also think Roman von Ungern-Sternberg is an unsung Buddhist hero for protecting the Dharma from the communists—who are the cause of the occupation of Tibet, the Tibetan Exodus to India, and their global diaspora, after all.

Malcolm wrote:

Hahaha, seriously dude you are too funny, but it figures you would admire a murderous <https://seanmunger.com/2016/03/13/the-mad-baron-of-mongolia-the-incredible-story-of-roman-von-ungern-sternberg/>:

Ungern finally achieved his goal of power over Mongolia—but only briefly. After a long and complicated series of wars against various Chinese and Russian armies, he restored the Bogd Khan to the throne of Mongolia on February 22, 1921, but he was just a figurehead ruler. Ungern held power from March 13 until August 20. His short reign was pretty brutal. Ungern hated Jews and had what few Jews he could find in Mongolia rounded up and executed. ...Ungern's number was up when the Reds counterattacked in summer 1921. As it turned out he wasn't as brilliant a military commander as Genghis Khan. An ill-advised foray across the Russian border sapped Ungern's forces, and under the pressure of another Bolshevik attack a revolt by his own men ultimately caused the collapse of his fragile dictatorship. The “Mad Baron” was captured by Soviet forces, interrogated, given the courtesy of a trial that lasted all of six hours, and then faced a firing squad on September 15, 1921.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 2nd, 2017 at 1:16 AM

Title: Re: Practicing dharma as a pair

Content:

gyamtsotrinle said:

Hello firends,

I would like to ask (or better to say if you can share) to the topic which I did not find on the DW,..maybe is there somewhere, but anyway. Are you practicing Dharma with your husband or wife? Are you involved both in the Dharma? Is it something which quite rare and precious when both together practising? Especially when you have the same lineage and teacher,...If you do not mind can you share your experiences or opinion? I hope I have asked right and clear way:-)

thank you

P

Malcolm wrote:

It is best to have the same teacher and same lineage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, August 2nd, 2017 at 12:14 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The absence of inherent existence is not the nonexistence of something (an affirming negation). It is a total negation of essence (a nonaffirming negation).

aflatun said:

Could you illustrate the distinction with an example ?

Malcolm wrote:

An affirming negation is the negation of the presence of an existent, the example used by Asanga, for example, is a forest is empty of a city. The forest exists, but it is empty of something else, that is why we know it is a forest. It is a kind of apoha theory.

A nonaffirming negation is the direct negation of something that does not exist at all, in this case, essences. When we negate essence, we are not affirming the existence of anything else.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 1st, 2017 at 10:55 PM

Title: Re: Lama Norlha

Content:

Grigoris said:

While people are busily trying to deconstruct Tibetan feudal patriarchy (fat chance), I would recommend two easy applicable guidelines for simple solutions to the issue:

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that patriarchal power relations flow seamlessly from one patriarchy (Tibetan) into another (ours).

Adamantine said:

That's a fair point, but power alone should also be noted as a corrupting influence. And according to current studies, actually a literal cause of brain damage:

"The historian Henry Adams was being metaphorical, not medical, when he described power as "a sort of tumor that ends by killing the victim's sympathies." But that's not far from where Dacher Keltner, a psychology professor at UC Berkeley, ended up after years of lab and field experiments. Subjects under the influence of power, he found in studies spanning two decades, acted as if they had suffered a traumatic brain injury—becoming more impulsive, less risk-aware, and, crucially, less adept at seeing things from other people's point of view."

<https://www.google.com/amp/s/www.theatlantic.com/amp/article/528711/>

I would surmise that anyone in the Guru's seat—male or female (let's not gloss over "The Buddha from Brooklyn")—who hasn't truly been able to uproot or transform their afflictions is likely to be corrupted simply by the power the role affords.

Malcolm wrote:

Interesting, and indeed, Catherine Burroughs is a whole other kit and kaboodle.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 1st, 2017 at 10:00 PM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

The unconditioned is a direct object of mind.

Absence of obstruction can be directly perceived (waves hand through empty space)

Malcolm wrote:

A for the first, no, the unconditioned cannot be a direct object of the mind. Mind is conditioned. You are confusing conditioned space (space as a cavity) with unconditioned space (space as absence of obstruction). The latter space permeates the hand that is waving. The hand waves in conditioned space. It stops waving as soon as it hits a tree limb, for example.

Tsongkhapafan said:

The absence of inherent existence can be directly perceived since it is mere absence of all the phenomena we normally see or perceive

Malcolm wrote:

I thought you would make this error. The absence of inherent existence is not the nonexistence of something (an affirming negation). It is a total negation of essence (a nonaffirming negation).

Tsongkhapafan said:

The emptiness that is meditated upon below the path of seeing is a generic image of emptiness that leads, through familiarity, to the direct non-conceptual experience of emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

That is the theory.

Tsongkhapafan said:

That meditation from the path of seeing onwards is not a non-meditation but a direct experience of the object emptiness in which experientially the perceiving subject does not appear, however there is still a subject/object relationship between emptiness and the mind realising emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

No. At this point the mind, when in equipoise, is in a nondual absorption, completely free of subject and object.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 1st, 2017 at 9:54 PM

Title: Re: Lama Norlha

Content:

Grigoris said:

While people are busily trying to deconstruct Tibetan feudal patriarchy (fat chance), I would recommend two easy applicable guidelines for simple solutions to the issue:

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that patriarchal power relations flow seamlessly from one patriarchy (Tibetan) into another (ours).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 1st, 2017 at 9:50 PM

Title: Re: Lama Norlha

Content:

MiphamFan said:

As I asked previously -- do Tibetan lamas actually do this kind of thing and get away with it in Tibetan cultural areas?

I'm not talking about just taking consorts. Talking about pressuring nuns into sex, and other forms of abuse.

heart said:

You tell us.

/magnus

MiphamFan said:

I don't know, that's why I am asking.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this happens. Abuse of women is very high in the Tibetan community, both in Tibet and in India. Abuse of women is also high in the West.

MiphamFan said:

People keep blaming it on patriarchy in Tibetan culture. Yes for sure there is some patriarchy, but if it were completely due to that, then we would find the same behaviour amongst Tibetans themselves.

Malcolm wrote:

We do. It is a complex issue, and the Tibetan herstory is still being written.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 1st, 2017 at 4:45 AM

Title: Re: Lama Norlha

Content:

conebeckham said:

Feudal relations--

Malcolm wrote:

Power dynamics in Tibetan Dharma centers are nothing more nor less than vestiges of a particular kind of feudalism.

conebeckham said:

is that one one calls sexual blackmail, verbal and physical abuse, lust for wealth and status, unbridled hedonism?

Malcolm wrote:

The forms in which they are perpetuated in Tibetan Buddhist Dharma centers are feudal.

conebeckham said:

Or are those simply human failings, potential pitfalls of any human being, but certainly aided and abetted by hierarchical power structures?

Malcolm wrote:

They are human failings, but the extent to which we just suck up Tibetan social patterns without reflection means that a lot of unresolved Tibetan cultural bullshit gets pushed onto Westerners.

conebeckham said:

But I think the only clear way forward is for some sort of explicit discussion about boundaries and expectations. Some folks will disagree.

Malcolm wrote:

First, let's identify the pathology.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 1st, 2017 at 3:58 AM

Title: Re: Lama Norlha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Your words stand on their own.

Grigoris said:

...Your opinions though, well they don't.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure they do, Greg.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 1st, 2017 at 3:57 AM

Title: Re: Lama Norlha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is my belief that Buddhадharma asserts an "absolute" equality of the sexes, but that relatively it notes wide disparity in power, opportunity, etc. between the sexes precisely because of "circumstances."

No, Buddhism traditionally has never promoted an absolute equality of the sexes. Buddhist sūtras are filled with references to the inferiority of women and so on. Sooner or later we are just going to have to deal with the fact that Buddhism arose in a very sexist, patriarchal culture, and deal with this unpleasant fact, and understand that this traditional background of Buddhism has negative consequences for Buddhadharma in the West, unless we openly acknowledge these issues and confront them honestly.

tiagolps said:

What about the Vimalakirti Sūtra?

Malcolm wrote:

It is one of those sūtras that is notable because it challenges the sexist status quo in India. But that message of gender irrelevance in terms of awakening may have been given lip service in Vajrayāna, but that is as far as it goes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 1st, 2017 at 3:56 AM

Title: Re: Lama Norlha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is why karma works the way it does. Motivation for a negative action can ameliorate the action, but this is not something easy to ascertain.

There are ten natural nonvirtues in Buddhadharma: killing, stealing, sexual misconduct, lying, harsh speech, calumny, idle speech, greed, malice, and ignorance.

Grigoris said:

Karma is not an ethical force, there is no judge and nobody handing out punishment/reward. We are the ones that project an ethical component onto karma. Karma is a mechanical force whereby "this action" leads to "that outcome".

Malcolm wrote:

These ten nonvirtues and their opposite govern the karmic results of all sentient beings, not just human beings. This is why predators have a more difficult time escaping the animal realm than song birds, for example. All actions are either positive, meaning they correspond with ten virtues; neutral, meaning they have no positive or negative intention behind them, or negative. Negative actions are wholly attended by the six afflictive mental factors that all beings in the desire realm who have afflictive minds possess. This is not a "projection." This is how the Buddha taught the principles of karma and its retribution.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 1st, 2017 at 3:52 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

Emptiness is unconditioned as well as being an object of mind and the true nature of all phenomena.

treehuggingoctopus said:

How could the unconditioned be an object of the mind?

Tsongkhapa said:

How could it not? if it is not, it is unknowable and unrealisable.

Malcolm wrote:

The unconditioned cannot be a direct object of the mind. It can only be inferred by the mind. Unconditioned space is an absence of obstruction. It cannot be directly perceived. Cessation is the absence of a cause. It also cannot be perceived directly. Likewise, emptiness—the absence of inherent existence in your preferred parlance—cannot be directly perceived. All three of these types of unconditioned phenomena (there are no others in Buddhism) can only be inferred.

Therefore, the emptiness meditated upon below the path of seeing is merely a conceptual stand in for actual emptiness. The emptiness meditated above the path of seeing is not an object of the mind, since it is actual emptiness. That meditation is a nonmeditation because it is completely free from all objectification.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 1st, 2017 at 3:30 AM

Title: Re: Lama Norlha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. I never maintained that.

You did.

Grigoris said:

No I didn't, so unless you have somehow mastered omniscience, and know what I said, and my motivation for saying it, better than I do; I kindly request you keep your completely mistaken opinion to yourself.

Malcolm wrote:

Your words stand on their own.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 1st, 2017 at 2:15 AM

Title: Re: Lama Norlha

Content:

conebeckham said:

I agree with all of this, but wonder if these reflections of inequality are "Buddhist" or more "Tibetan." Of course, pre-Tibetan Buddhism arose in Patriarchal India, and was transmitted to patriarchal Tibet, and now finds itself in all areas of the (almost entirely) patriarchal world.

In other words, does the quote about inferior merit mean that women are by nature inferior, or is it the recognition that, in this cultural situation, men have greater opportunity?

Malcolm wrote:

It means they are by nature inferior.

conebeckham said:

It is my belief that Buddhadharmā asserts an "absolute" equality of the sexes, but that relatively it notes wide disparity in power, opportunity, etc. between the sexes precisely because of "circumstances."

Malcolm wrote:

No, Buddhism traditionally has never promoted an absolute equality of the sexes. Buddhist sūtras are filled with references to the inferiority of women and so on.

conebeckham said:

Yes, I know. But-are those references expedient? From the POV of Sakyamuni, or Guru Rinpoche, etc., etc., of course women have inferior position in the world. From the POV of the Dharmakaya, there is no gender.

Malcolm wrote:

All gender expression is a result of afflictive patterning. It is questionable that the affliction of anger which leads to male gender expression is something superior to desire, which leads to female gender expression, or ignorance, which leads to intersexed gender expression, and so on.

conebeckham said:

It is more than patriarchy, unless you define patriarchy not merely as male dominance, but the "father figure" as authority over all, regardless of the subservient one's gender. Which, come to think of it, may be a valid definition of "Patriarchy."

Malcolm wrote:

Patriarchy is a social system, spread throughout most of the world, that involves the economic and social subjugation by one gender of all other genders.

Merriam Webster states:

Patriarchy: 1) social organization marked by the supremacy of the father in the clan or family, the legal dependence of wives and children, and the reckoning of descent and inheritance in the male line; broadly: control by men of a disproportionately large share of power

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 1st, 2017 at 2:03 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

Are you sure you are expressing a Mahayana view here?

Tolya M said:

Non abiding nirvana recognized in Mahayana is far more broad than that of Lesser vehicle. If the last is a mind object what to say about Mahayana? Buddha is aware of his awakening. How it can be otherwise? It can't.

treehuggingoctopus said:

A Buddha's knowing of their being awake is hardly mind, is it?

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on what you mean by "mind," actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 1st, 2017 at 1:56 AM

Title: Re: Lama Norlha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Frankly, the status of women is still very low in Tibetan Buddhism. Tibetan teachers, on the whole, are still very sexist and patriarchal. Patriarchy is not a good thing, and has very negative consequences for women around the world. I suggest you look into the work of Karma Lekshey Tsomo, etc. One of the main terms in Tibetan for women is skyes dman, lower birth. This view is so endemic that the chapters on women's health in the medicine tantras begin:

Because of inferior merit, one obtains the body of a women... female illness in the end become fourteen extra [diseases] for woman because their birth is lower.

conebeckham said:

I agree with all of this, but wonder if these reflections of inequality are "Buddhist" or more "Tibetan." Of course, pre-Tibetan Buddhism arose in Patriarchal India, and was transmitted to patriarchal Tibet, and now finds itself in all areas of the (almost entirely) patriarchal world.

In other words, does the quote about inferior merit mean that women are by nature inferior, or is it the recognition that, in this cultural situation, men have greater opportunity?

Malcolm wrote:

It means they are by nature inferior.

conebeckham said:

It is my belief that Buddhadharma asserts an "absolute" equality of the sexes, but that relatively it notes wide disparity in power, opportunity, etc. between the sexes precisely because of "circumstances."

Malcolm wrote:

No, Buddhism traditionally has never promoted an absolute equality of the sexes. Buddhist sūtras are filled with references to the inferiority of women and so on. Sooner or later we are just going to have to deal with the fact that Buddhism arose in a very sexist, patriarchal culture, and deal with this unpleasant fact, and understand that this traditional background of Buddhism has negative consequences for Buddhadharma in the West, unless we openly acknowledge these issues and confront them honestly.

conebeckham said:

That's my personal opinion, obviously. From my point of view, we should stand against inequality whenever we find it, and hold people accountable for their actions. This is incredibly difficult, given the inherent inequality in the Guru/Disciple relationship.

Malcolm wrote:

The job of a guru is make their students free, not keep them bound in a set of basically feudal relations (as the present system does).

conebeckham said:

In the other high profile news story, it's not confined to gender and sex abuse issues, in fact. Patriarchy is definitely an issue, but perhaps the issue is bigger.

Malcolm wrote:

It's patriarchy all the way down. This is why situations like the Rigpa affair can last for decades with nothing concrete ever being dealt with effectively.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 1st, 2017 at 1:52 AM

Title: Re: Lama Norlha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

For example, here you claim there is no power imbalance in these situations:

Grigoris said:

I said nothing of the sort. Here you claim that abuse is culturally subjective:

Of course it is. What is considered abuse in some countries/cultures is not considered abuse in others. Are you saying there are moral/ethical absolutes?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is why karma works the way it does. Motivation for a negative action can ameliorate the action, but this is not something easy to ascertain.

There are ten natural nonvirtues in Buddhадharma: killing, stealing, sexual misconduct, lying, harsh speech, calumny, idle speech, greed, malice, and ignorance.

Grigoris said:

1) There is no power differential involved in these incidents.

Nope. I never maintained that.

Malcolm wrote:

You did.

Grigoris said:

2) The women involved were consenting adults

They were adults, I do not know if they consented, they were capable of consent though.

Malcolm wrote:

Consent in power differential situations is questionable.

Grigoris said:

3) That abuse is culturally malleable.

The IDEA of what is abuse is culturally malleable. Something that you have not proven false.

Malcolm wrote:

Abuse is not a culturally malleable condition. Abuse is abuse. Abuse constitutes unwarranted harm inflicted on another. In situations where a more powerful person desires things from a less powerful person, this opens up all avenues of abuse.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 1st, 2017 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: Lama Norlha

Content:

Sādhaka said:

Buddhist Patriarchy is a good thing.

Malcolm wrote:

All patriarchy is a bad thing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, August 1st, 2017 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: Lama Norha

Content:

Grigoris said:

No, I am not going to defend your straw men, I am more than happy to (and have been) defending what I have actually said though. If you want to misrepresent what I say so that it makes an easier target for you, then go for it. I am not playing your silly game though.

Malcolm wrote:

Greg, you have basically said that it these women bear all responsibility for their own conduct, and tough shit if they felt hurt — they are adults and should have known what they got themselves into. You have also excused womanizing by lamas as culturally acceptable since the status of women is low in Tibetan society, it's just their culture (it isn't actually).

I have responded that the issue is a great deal more complicated, that it has to do with patriarchy, power differentials, etc., all of which you reject as irrelevant.

Grigoris said:

No, I did not say that. Maybe you should go back and actually read what I said.

Malcolm wrote:

For example, here you claim there is no power imbalance in these situations: Now take the leader and put him in a Western nunnery. The girls there are not young and naive, most of them are adults with life experience. They are not reliant on their practice in order to live. They do not have the social pressure to remain. They have been brought up in a culture where not only is sexual abuse not acceptable, but it is illegal. Etc...

Sounds like a recipe for disaster, right? A ticking bomb waiting to go off.

But this idea that somehow there is this massive power imbalance (like there is in the first example), well, quite clearly there is not. If it were a university or a school and one's future survival depended on getting through, getting high grades, etc... Well, yes, then there is some tangible pressure. A very real sense of dependence. But...

Still an unsavory state of affairs, of course...

Here you claim that abuse is culturally subjective:

Maybe in your WASP neck of the woods it is, but then again Lama Norlha is not a WASP is he? Neither is the majority of this planet.

What is "inappropriate", unfortunately, is culturally subjective/specific.

You say here:

I have played devil's advocate because I see a whole heap of negativity being advocated, but at no point, if you read my statements, will you find that I support these actions. I don't know enough, I am not capable of solving the issue, I am not personally involved at any level.

You are continually making excuses for these kinds of actions, stating for example: I disagree. If one is not in a monogamous relationship and the woman one is womanising consent then there is no reason at all for it to be abusive. Not in the slightest.

So there are three things which you have maintained:

- 1) There is no power differential involved in these incidents.
- 2) The women involved were consenting adults
- 3) That abuse is culturally malleable.

As to the first point, there is clearly a power differential — an "abbot" holds a position of power. That power can be abused. In cases where an abbot preys on celibate(!) female students for his own pleasures, it is clearly a violation of ecclesiastical authority.

As to the second point, since the power differential is real, it compromises these women's freedom to consent.

As to the third point, sexual abuse, whether womanizing or human trafficking, is not culturally relative. It is part of a continuum of abusive patriarchal relations and power structures that renders women in this world second class citizens in most of the world, and vulnerable to predation by men. This is no less true in the West than it is in the East. It needs to be said that patriarchy injures men too, and is the fundamental set of social relations which has brought the climate to its knees under capitalism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 11:49 PM

Title: Re: Lama Norha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I imagine defending in the indefensible is not very much fun. No wonder you have lost your heart for it.

Grigoris said:

No, I am not going to defend your straw men, I am more than happy to (and have been) defending what I have actually said though. If you want to misrepresent what I say so that it makes an easier target for you, then go for it. I am not playing your silly game though.

Malcolm wrote:

Greg, you have basically said that it these women bear all responsibility for their own conduct, and tough shit if they felt hurt — they are adults and should have known what they got themselves into. You have also excused womanizing by lamas as culturally acceptable since the status of women is low in Tibetan society, it's just their culture (it isn't actually).

I have responded that the issue is a great deal more complicated, that it has to do with patriarchy, power differentials, etc., all of which you reject as irrelevant.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 11:38 PM

Title: Re: Lama Norha

Content:

Grigoris said:

Well, I'm sick of your straw men, so I am not even going to bother any more.

Malcolm wrote:

I imagine defending in the indefensible is not very much fun. No wonder you have lost your heart for it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 10:20 PM

Title: Re: How “new atheism” slid into the alt-right

Content:

Dharma Flower said:

You seem to care more about liberal politics than Asian Buddhists being persecuted.

Malcolm wrote:

You are not being very specific. Which Asian Buddhists? Where?

Coëmgenu said:

I am detecting conspiracy theories about how Muslim men allegedly rape hundreds of Burmese women each year, because that is the standard anti-Muslim lie, wherever it pops up: Burma or Alabama.

Lets hope it doesn't descend to that.

Malcolm wrote:

What it will descend to is the myth that Buddhism fell to the Muslim sword. Buddhism indeed fell to the sword, but that was in the late fifth century, and the swords were those of Huns, not Muslims.

Buddhism and Islam lived side by side for centuries in Central Asia. And by 1200, Buddhists had only two major monasteries in India, the Hindus having taken over or destroyed the rest. The first person who projected Muslim power beyond the Punjab was Mohammed Ghuri (1162-1206), who sacked central India and destroyed 80 temples, all but two were Hindu temples.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 10:06 PM

Title: Re: Lama Norha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The fact that you are writing from a position of privilege as a male person who will never be subject to sexual harassment by a Tibetan Lama in a Dharma center is glaringly obvious.

Grigoris said:

I imagine it would be. You are in the same position too though...

Malcolm wrote:

The difference between us is that you are using that position to defend male privilege in this respect by placing all responsibility on the women involved in these sad incidents. I find this strange because you seem to think that these women in Dharma centers are in positions of equal privilege with the men who are assaulting them sexually, when normally, for example, I am pretty sure you would not be sympathetic with johns who exploit African women prostitutes in Italy, etc., and would clearly understand the power differentials involved and why the sex trade in these countries was grossly unfair and dangerous for the women. However, these women in Dharma centers are not in positions of equal privilege, and I have personally witnessed an entire community unravel because the teacher involved was discovered to have been grossly hitting on women, some cases successfully, in every Dharma center he visited, with very negative consequences for everyone involved.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 10:00 PM

Title: Re: Lama Norha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It means you have not taken into account that the onus of sexual misconduct in this case is traditionally held to fall on the person with power — that it why it is sexual misconduct to sleep with someone's else spouse, children, the ordained, etc.

Grigoris said:

I did not talk about misconduct, I said that when I take a vow I take it for myself, not for others.

Malcolm wrote:

And part of those vows are to refrain from pursuing sexual relations with those who are ordained, even they have just taken one day fast vows, even if they are your wife. For that day you just restrain yourself.

Grigoris said:

Frankly, the status of women is still very low in Tibetan Buddhism. Tibetan teachers, on the whole, are still very sexist and patriarchal. Patriarchy is not a good thing, and has very negative consequences for women around the world. I suggest you look into the work of Karma Lekshey Tsomo, etc. One of the main terms in Tibetan for women is skyes dman, lower birth. This view is so endemic that the chapters on women's health in the medicine tantras begin:

Because of inferior merit, one obtains the body of a women... female illness in the end become fourteen extra [diseases] for woman because their birth is lower.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't doubt it, and neither do I condone it. I said that a teacher coming from this cultural milieu will have very different standards to those encountered in some Western countries and this inevitably will lead to conflict. I fail to see what is so controversial about that.[/quote]

When in Rome, do as the Romans. The onus is on Tibetan teachers to discover what kind of culture they intend to spread Dharma in. If they are not up to changing their views, adapting their teachings to the situation they find in the West, they should just stay home. Most people do not realize that nunneries in India and Tibet are major refuges for women fleeing human trafficking and the sex trade. These women take up vows because they are tired of being sexually exploited. You need to read up on the very real inequality Tibetan and Himalayan women face under Buddhism (among other nations like Thailand).

When Lamas come to the West, and then begin having sexual relationships with women in their Sanghas, womanizing, getting them pregnant, forcing them to have abortions on the pain of self-exile back to India, refusing to speak with them after they have decided to end the affair, and so on, this is completely wrong and we should not stand for it.

I personally have no problem with Tibetan Lamas meeting a female student and then having a serious relationship with them where they are accorded personal respect as befits them as human beings. There are some good examples of such partnerships. But women are becoming increasingly suspicious of Tibetan Lamas, rightly so, and this is a problem for the flourishing of the Dharma in the West.

As to your oft repeated cultural relativism: Tibetan women do not enjoy and they do not like the sexism in their culture.

Tibetans in general do not like it when Lamas womanize. They consider it vulgar and unseemly. Such lamas do not attract large followings in Tibetan culture in general. The fact that some lamas come to the west and get away with this behavior has more to do with the fact that they were able to get away with it here where they could not possibly get away with this in the tight knit communities in Tibet and the Himalayas, as well as exile communities. Drukpa Kunley's are few in Tibetan culture. Most people cannot be Drukpa Kunley.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 9:43 PM

Title: Re: Lama Norha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is an awful lot of male privilege in Greg's opinions on this matter.

Grigoris said:

There is an awful lot of lack of substance in your flippant one line write-offs.

Malcolm wrote:

The fact that you are writing from a position of privilege as a male person who will never be subject to sexual harassment by a Tibetan Lama in a Dharma center is glaringly obvious.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 9:42 PM

Title: Re: Lama Norha

Content:

Grigoris said:

I'm sorry, but when I take vows I take them for myself not others. I do not expect others to respect, or even understand my vows. My expectations are for myself, not for others.

Malcolm wrote:

Engaging in sexual activity with someone who has taken vows of celibacy is clearly defined as sexual misconduct in Buddhadharma.

Grigoris said:

Yes, but this does not render what I say irrelevant or untrue.

Malcolm wrote:

It means you have not taken into account that the onus of sexual misconduct in this case is traditionally held to fall on the person with power — that is why it is sexual misconduct to sleep with someone's else spouse, children, the ordained, etc.

Frankly, the status of women is still very low in Tibetan Buddhism. Tibetan teachers, on the whole, are still very sexist and patriarchal. Patriarchy is not a good thing, and has very negative consequences for women around the world. I suggest you look into the work of Karma Lekshey Tsomo, etc. One of the main terms in Tibetan for women is skyes dman, lower birth. This view is so endemic that the chapters on women's health in the medicine tantras begin:

Because of inferior merit, one obtains the body of a women... female illness in the end become fourteen extra [diseases] for woman because their birth is lower.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 9:27 PM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Sherab said:

But this still does not resolve the dilemma of whether emptiness is conditioned or unconditioned.

Malcolm wrote:

Emptiness is the unconditioned nature of things. There are no appearances that are not conditioned and dependently arisen, therefore, there is no need to bracket appearance/emptiness as something distinct from dependent origination/emptiness, they are the same thing.

Why do we say emptiness is unconditioned? No one made emptiness, no one can increase emptiness, no one can decrease emptiness, no one can destroy emptiness. You might argue, well, what is the emptiness of a thing that has ceased to exist? Does that emptiness exist or not? If the emptiness of a given thing is conditioned, one should be able to describe how it arose. Merely stating that a thing's emptiness arose with the arising of thing itself is not adequate. When a thing perishes there is no need to discuss the nature of a nonexistent. When we examine the meaning of emptiness, we find that emptiness refers to the absence of four extremes of being in phenomena. Since all phenomena are free from four extremes, emptiness is therefore unconditioned.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 9:20 PM

Title: Re: How "new atheism" slid into the alt-right

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is an extremely narrow view of Islam.

Dharma Flower said:

You are saying things that are very hurtful for someone who actually cares about the Asian Buddhists who've been persecuted under Islam.

Malcolm wrote:

What about the Muslims that have been persecuted under Buddhism such as the Rohingya?

Dharma Flower said:

You seem to care more about liberal politics than Asian Buddhists being persecuted.

Malcolm wrote:

You are not being very specific. Which Asian Buddhists? Where?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 9:14 PM

Title: Re: Lama Norha

Content:

Grigoris said:

Yes, in the West people tend to see Buddhism as a type of psychotherapy, but it is not.

treehuggingoctopus said:

It is the ultimate therapy, of the one-to-rule-them-all sort.

Grigoris said:

This leads to all sorts of problems since people approach Buddhism (and Buddhist teachers) with a whole lot of misconceptions and expectations and suddenly they find out that gasp, their teacher is human and makes mistakes! Shock, horror, swoon and faint... If people were more realistic in their expectations, then they would not fall from the clouds so often...

treehuggingoctopus said:

You need not bring psychotherapy into it at all. As we all know, in Vajrayana we have to see our guru as a living Buddha and not as a human being -- reconciling this with "realistic expectations" is obviously quite a challenge.

Grigoris said:

Maybe those coming to Buddhism should be seeking psychotherapy instead, since that, it seems, is what they need?

treehuggingoctopus said:

They certainly need Buddhadharma. Most of them -- of us, that is -- seem to need psychotherapy very much as well. But my point was different, and still stands: our gurus need to be realistic about who we are as well. And we are, most or at least great many of us, deeply troubled persons. We are not Tibetans, and we do not fit the profile of who becomes a good Dharma practitioner in Tibet or India -- those who go into Buddhadharma there would probably strive to be good Christians here. Most of us "Western" Buddhists are broken people who are ill at home in our culture, very often in our family, and pretty much always with ourselves.

It does not mean we will make lousy disciples. It does mean our problems need to be taken into account.

Malcolm wrote:

There is an awful lot of male privilege in Greg's opinions on this matter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 9:13 PM

Title: Re: Lama Norha

Content:

smcj said:

I've got a recent update on the strictly traditional approach from the lama who is Situ R's representative in administrative matters. He said something to the effect of, "You are responsible for your own decisions. Think of all the things your lama tells you to do but you don't do them. But when he suggests having sex suddenly you think, 'I've got to do what the lama says.' It doesn't work that way."

Malcolm wrote:

Awesome way of passing the buck.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 9:11 PM

Title: Re: Lama Norha

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

Leonard Cohen told someone who was critiquing the retreat center as a place where crazy people go by saying that is what it's partly there for, for people who are sick and need help, sometimes.

Malcolm wrote:

And lets not forgot that Cohen's teacher, Sasaki, hit on women so badly that the staff felt the need to entrance council women that they might be hit on, their breasts grabbed and so on.

They enabled the crap out of their teacher.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 8:57 PM

Title: Re: Lama Norha

Content:

Grigoris said:

Sorry, but did I say the actions were karmically positive? That still does not the fact that the person that takes the vow is the one that is responsible for holding it. And, since when was rape (non-consensual penetration) a sexual act? Rape is an act of violence.

Malcolm wrote:

I will repeat what I said: a part of sexual misconduct is engaging in sex with someone who holds vows of celibacy.

In patriarchy, "consent" is an afterthought in power relations between men and women, especially in those situations where men exclusively hold ecclesiastical authority.

Grigoris said:

Because a lama is not a health professional and is not obliged, by law, to avoid sexual contact with his "flock".

Malcolm wrote:

In the United States, it is a state by state case. There are in fact many states where religious professionals are legally bound to follow a code of ethics similar to psychologists and so on.

Grigoris said:

The other thing that is important to take into consideration here is that Buddhism is not therapy, when a patient comes to me it is assumed that they have mental health issues that effect their normal personal and social functioning, this is not the case with Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhadharma is not psychotherapy, but it is medicine for suffering. It was for this reason the Buddha was called "The Great Physician." I am not sure how you can hold lamas, responsible as they are for treating patients with the diseases of samsara to a lesser standard than you would a psychologist, etc. If anything, the standards should be much more rigorous.

Grigoris said:

Let me reiterate the point also that ALL social interactions involve power imbalances.

Malcolm wrote:

The power imbalance between two children playing with a ball and the power imbalance of a lama preying on his female students is rather different, don't you think?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 8:47 PM

Title: Re: Lama Norha

Content:

Grigoris said:

The other thing that is important to take into consideration here is that Buddhism is not therapy, when a patient comes to me it is assumed that they have mental health issues that effect their normal personal and social functioning, this is not the case with Buddhism.

treehuggingoctopus said:

I think it definitely should be, at least in the West. We all know what sort of people are drawn to the Dharma, do we not?

Also, does not being mired in marigpa and addicted to dukkha spell the greatest insanity of them all? Let us face it: we are all one sandwich short of a picnic here.

Grigoris said:

The suffering of Samsara is endemic, every sentient being suffers. Psychological illness on the other hand is a specific type of suffering.

Yes, in the West people tend to see Buddhism as a type of psychotherapy, but it is not. This leads to all sorts of problems since people approach Buddhism (and Buddhist teachers) with a whole lot of misconceptions and expectations and suddenly they find out that gasp, their teacher is human and makes mistakes!

Malcolm wrote:

Well, you just tossed pure vision of your guru right out the window.

Grigoris said:

Shock, horror, swoon and faint... If people were more realistic in their expectations, then they would not fall from the clouds so often...

Malcolm wrote:

Perhaps the problem is the with teachers, and not the students. Did this occur to you?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 8:46 PM

Title: Re: Lama Norha

Content:

CedarTree said:

Follow that line of thinking and create a "dream bubble". Imagine you in a traditional setting in Tibet or some other place and you are sitting around a revered leader and then when you are alone he touches you.

Grigoris said:

I imagine it would be horrific. Your family has put a whole heap of expectations on you. You are probably young and poor without any other avenue of escape from your poverty. You may have actually been informed that this will happen to you and you are dreading it. Etc...

Frackin' awful!

Now take the leader and put him in a Western nunnery. The girls there are not young and naive, most of them are adults with life experience. They are not reliant on their practice in order to live. They do not have the social pressure to remain. They have been brought up in a culture where not only is sexual abuse not acceptable, but it is illegal. Etc...

Sounds like a recipe for disaster, right? A ticking bomb waiting to go off.

But this idea that somehow there is this massive power imbalance (like there is in the first example), well, quite clearly there is not. If it were a university or a school and one's future survival depended on getting through, getting high grades, etc... Well, yes, then there is some tangible pressure. A very real sense of dependence. But...

Still an unsavory state of affairs, of course...

Arnoud said:
Grigoris,

I know you are not victim blaming and shaming...

Malcolm wrote:
In fact, he is.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 8:44 PM
Title: Re: Lama Norha
Content:
heart said:
If the retreat lama don't respect your vows, who will?

/magnus

Grigoris said:
I'm sorry, but when I take vows I take them for myself not others. I do not expect others to respect, or even understand my vows. My expectations are for myself, not for others.

Malcolm wrote:
Engaging in sexual activity with someone who has taken vows of celibacy is clearly defined as sexual misconduct in Buddhadharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 3:56 AM

Title: Re: How "new atheism" slid into the alt-right

Content:

Sam Harris said:

We are at war with Islam. This is not to say that we are at war with all Muslims, but we are absolutely at war with the vision of life that is prescribed to all Muslims in the Koran.

Malcolm wrote:

This statement is blatantly ignorant.

Dharma Flower said:

He's saying that we're at war against international jihad, which is the drive to take over the world for Islam that has been part of Islam from the beginning. Millions of Asian Buddhists have died at the hands of Islamic conquest. Is there any Asian Muslim country that wasn't converted by the sword?

What Sam Harris is saying is that the Muslim world needs an enlightenment and a reformation, the same way that the West had an enlightenment and a reformation. Christianity had a very violent, brutal history too, but the West is different today because of the reformation and the enlightenment.

Malcolm wrote:

This is an extremely narrow view of Islam. You need to read:

Elverskog, Johan (2011-06-06). Buddhism and Islam on the Silk Road (Encounters with Asia) University of Pennsylvania Press.

Otherwise, you are just reciting the biased and flawed narrative of far-right radicals such as Alex Jones, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 3:42 AM

Title: Re: Lama Norha

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

2.) Womanizing is abusive.

Grigoris said:

Maybe in your WASP neck of the woods it is, but then again Lama Norlha is not a WASP is he? Neither is the majority of this planet.

What is "inappropriate", unfortunately, is culturally subjective/specific.

Malcolm wrote:

Womanizing is abusive and inappropriate no matter where in the world it happens and no matter in which culture. It is also inappropriate no matter who is doing it, tulku, lama, etc.

Strictly speaking, one should not be hitting on women who are in retreat, and who have adopted vows of celibacy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 3:32 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Minobu said:

=

Malcolm wrote:

this scandal is merely a symptom of a much broader problem. Alas, we keep treating symptoms without addressing the cause.

The broader issue to which I was alluding is patriarchy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 2:20 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

As I said in the other thread, "This is not an issue of sex: this is an issue of patriarchy and power."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 2:19 AM

Title: Re: Lama Norha

Content:

Grigoris said:

Let's not freak out here: not everyone that went into retreat was savaged sexually by Lama Norlha Rinpoche.

We are talking about 8 women having sex with him over a forty year period. Six of which had bad sex with him!

Malcolm wrote:

It appears we are talking about someone who was not "having sex," but rather, apparently abusing his position of power to find sexual partners. This is a serious problem in Tibetan Buddhism. I have heard countless accounts of this kind of thing going on in numerous Sanghas such as the Sakya school, the Nyingma school, and the Kagyu school. Most American women I have discussed this with consider this a real problem, and all have been inappropriately approached on one occasion or another by lamas, monastic and and nonmonastic.

Woman do not expect to be hit on when they seek religious guidance. When they are, there are a variety of responses, most of them negative.

This is not an issue of sex: this is an issue of patriarchy and power.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 2:13 AM

Title: Re: Lama Norha

Content:

Grigoris said:

Is Lama Norlha Rinpoche a monastic?

Malcolm wrote:

What matters here is that, "Most of the women (6) reported they felt the relationship to be detrimental to their psychological and personal wellbeing."

Grigoris said:

Yes, I agree, but it seems that people are up in arms because of his Buddhist religious status, rather than his actions.

I was looking to clarify if his sexual activity "in general" contravened his vows. If he is a lay teacher then there is no reason for him to abstain from having sex.

Malcolm wrote:

1.) He was womanizing, it does not matter if he was a monk or lay person.

Grigoris said:

If his sexual activity is abusive, well that is a completely different kettle of fish.

Malcolm wrote:

2.) Womanizing is abusive.

Grigoris said:

PS In the article it states that a number of the women involved in the "scandal" felt that the sexual activity benefited them and were upset over the ensuing publicity.

Malcolm wrote:

It seems that the majority of women were upset.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 1:45 AM
Title: Re: Lama Norha
Content:
Grigoris said:
Is Lama Norlha Rinpoche a monastic?

Malcolm wrote:
What matters here is that, "Most of the women (6) reported they felt the relationship to be detrimental to their psychological and personal wellbeing."

This is not new news, incidentally, even though the board of Wappingers Falls apparently only first heard about this in January. I myself have heard buzz about this for almost a decade.

M

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, July 31st, 2017 at 12:51 AM
Title: Re: How "new atheism" slid into the alt-right
Content:
Strive said:
I think he has racist feelings against muslims...

Grigoris said:
Muslims are not a race, they are followers of a religion. A religion that any member of the human race (of which there is one) can become members of.

Strive said:
most muslim ppl are arabic and have brown skin color. if muslims were white instead do u feel there would be all this hatred against them? i doubt it Grigoris

Malcolm wrote:
No, the majority of Muslims are non-Arabic, 80%. In other words, only 2 out of every 10 Muslims are Arabic.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, July 30th, 2017 at 11:14 PM
Title: Re: Lama Norha
Content:
kalden yungdrung said:
Tashi delek,

Lama-Norlha-Rinpoche.jpg

Is this fake news or not ?

<https://tricycle.org/trikedaily/kagyutshubtencholingmonastery-working-sex-impropriety/>

Malcolm wrote:

No. It is real.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 30th, 2017 at 10:51 PM

Title: Re: How "new atheism" slid into the alt-right

Content:

Dharma Flower said:

It's sad when Sam Harris' words are taken out of context in order to discredit him. Harris' words were taken from an interview with a Muslim activist against religious extremism.

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty hard to take this out of <http://www.washingtontimes.com/news/2004/dec/1/20041201-090801-2582r/>:

Sam Harris said:

We are at war with Islam. This is not to say that we are at war with all Muslims, but we are absolutely at war with the vision of life that is prescribed to all Muslims in the Koran.

Malcolm wrote:

This statement is blatantly ignorant.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 30th, 2017 at 10:34 PM

Title: Re: sem-ngo tropa ?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

How about <https://books.google.com/books?id=ILbWj-GRzUMC&pg=PA263&lpg=PA263&dq=%22sems+ngo%22?>

kirtu said:

I had seen sems ngo 'phrod while I was researching the above and it looked promising but the Ranjung Yeshe Online Dharma Dictionary didn't have sems ngo 'phrod pa (it just listed sems ngo 'phrod and sems ngo 'phrod song pas). And then the tie-in with sems rtogs pa !

Thanks!

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

What Eric PK meant was that the experience of Kensho and the experience of introducing the mind is the same experience. The difference of course is that the latter is a discovery, the former is an introduction.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 30th, 2017 at 10:49 AM

Title: Re: Semen

Content:

jkarlins said:

Thanks for this discussion! I wonder about this. I'd consider myself a very minimal sadhana practitioner, not a bigtime yogi. How important is it to retain semen? I don't want to get gross, but I do notice my practice gets diffuse and weak if I less so when I spend time with my wife. Sorry for the euphemisms, I'm pretty direct in person, but I don't want to offend anyone or be gross online.

Just wondering how important it is to retain as a basic sort of meditator, not doing 6 yogas, Dzogchen, anything like that. And I know I should ask my teacher, but I'm a little uncomfortable asking him.

Malcolm wrote:

Not important at all if your diet is rich enough in fat and oil and you are not doing tummo, karmamudra, or chulen practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 30th, 2017 at 3:35 AM

Title: Re: How "new atheism" slid into the alt-right

Content:

TharpaChodron said:

Who would have thought that a philosophy created by all white, Western/European males could ever possibly be sexist, homophobic or racist?

A little diversity in their groupthink might go a long way. But, the whole viewpoint of "New Atheism" is rather anti-diverse. I've never been to a "Reason Rally" but I can certainly imagine what it's like.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 30th, 2017 at 3:31 AM

Title: Re: Semen

Content:

tingdzin said:

Why is this is the Dzogchen forum? IMO the general Tibetan Buddhist forum would be better.

climb-up said:

I can't remember where, but I thought that ChNN in one of his books said precisely what Malcolm said above, but said that it was specifically a dzogchen understanding.

...I can't remember which book. I'll try to check.

tingdzin said:

Well, the whole ojas thing is Indian rather than Dzogchen, and seminal retention is also practiced by Taoists, among others.

Malcolm wrote:

In Tibetan, ojas is translated a mdangs. This fluid is discussed in the four medicine tantras, specifically in the explanatory tantra, in the chapter on physiology, chapter 5: . The metabolic heat of each individual tissue ripens the extract. The extract travels the path of the liver in nine channels that draw the extract from the stomach, changing into blood in the location of the liver; flesh from blood; from flesh changing into fat; from fat changing into bone; from bone changing into marrow; from marrow changing into semen (khu ba, śukra).

Their impure part is the stomach phlegm, bile, sebum, grease, teeth and nails, oil of the pores and the anus, reproductive fluid (sa bon).

The final state of the semen tissue (khu ba kham, śukra dhātu) is the supreme life-sustaining fluid (mdangs, ojas), located in the heart, pervading the entire body, and causes longevity, radiance, and brilliance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 30th, 2017 at 3:25 AM

Title: Re: Semen

Content:

tingdzin said:

Why is this is the Dzogchen forum? IMO the general Tibetan Buddhist forum would be better.

climb-up said:

I can't remember where, but I thought that ChNN in one of his books said precisely what Malcolm said above, but said that it was specifically a dzogchen understanding.

...I can't remember which book. I'll try to check.

Malcolm wrote:

Birth, Life, and Death.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 30th, 2017 at 1:10 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

smcj said:

You're pushing what appears to be a glossed-over view of Refuge that doesn't account for subtlety and the views and vows of the subsequent Yanas.

If you hold all three sets of vows, the higher vows trump the lower ones if they appear to conflict. According to the Bodhisattva yana the crucial aspect of an action is the motivation. By responding to the suffering of others with compassionate action stemming from pure motivation, that does not indicate any failure of refuge vows, because it's keeping one's Bodhisattva vows. To imply otherwise will lead others astray on a Mahayana forum.

Even 10th level Bodhisattvas take Refuge from their own unawareness. if you hold all three sets of vows, the higher vows trump the lower ones if they appear to conflict. Yes. And I've been taught that the Vajrayana Vows can be summarized as "Never criticize anything."

Malcolm wrote:

.

The person who told you this was an idiot.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 29th, 2017 at 10:04 PM

Title: How "new atheism" slid into the alt-right

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

From the Enlightenment to the Dark Ages: How "new atheism" slid into the alt-right:

<http://www.salon.com/2017/07/29/from-the-enlightenment-to-the-dark-ages-how-new-atheism-slid-into-the-alt-right/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 29th, 2017 at 9:53 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen means understanding both how things are and how they appear, and then behaving accordingly.

smcj said:

Correct. And that Buddha Activity perfectly accords with the situation spontaneously, without deliberation of any kind, right? Therefore without condemnation also, right?

Malcolm wrote:

This isn't Christianity. No one is saying Sogyal is going to burn in an eternal lake of fire (though apparently some Tibetan Lamas think that is what is going to happen to his student who have recoiled at his alleged actions).

smcj said:

In seeing 'how things appear' enlightenment also sees a sentient being's mistaken understanding. Compassion is the motivation for helping, not condemnation. No judgment or criticism need be involved.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't see any enlightened people in this game, neither Sogyal, nor the students. It is useless to pretend to be enlightened. It can be compassionate to toss someone in jail.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 29th, 2017 at 9:50 PM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Sherab said:

It is possible to talk sensibly of emptiness as an object for a subject? If so, what are we to make of the inseparability of clarity and emptiness?

Malcolm wrote:

Clarity and emptiness are isolates of the mind: when we experience the clarity of the mind, we seal it with emptiness; when we experience emptiness, we seal it with clarity.

Sherab said:

When the mind experience emptiness, does it have emptiness as its object? That is the question which is not answer by your response above.

Malcolm wrote:

No, if it did that would be a concept of emptiness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 29th, 2017 at 12:00 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

If "In the Vajrayana there is no criticism." means "Vajrayana practitioners should not criticize anything or anyone." then, frankly, that is ridiculous.

smcj said:

Funny, I thought it was Dzogchen.

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen means understanding both how things are and how they appear, and then behaving accordingly. In this case it is pretty clear there is a big problem, and it does not seem to be the students, but rather the teacher. No amount of pious appeals to pure vision and so on are likely to remedy that situation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 29th, 2017 at 7:45 AM

Title: Re: klesavarana and jneyavarana in Dzogchen

Content:

Temicco said:

How do klesavarana and jneyavarana work in Dzogchen? If Dzogchen is a single state, is it innately free from both, such that one is entirely free of all obscuration so long as one is in rigpa? If so, then how is there any state of being free of klesavarana but not yet jneyavarana? If not, then how does it work?

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen is a uniform state. When it is recognized that is vidyā, rigpa; when it is not, that is avidyā, ma rig pa. The two obscurations exist when we are in a state of ma rig pa, ignorance.

Ma rig pa itself is the basis knowledge obscuration from which the obscuration of afflictions arises.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 29th, 2017 at 7:43 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is actually a difference in the object: sūtra emptiness is the coarse emptiness, realized by a coarse, analytical mind. Vajrayāna emptiness is a subtle emptiness, realized by a subtle, nonanalytical mind.

Tsongkhapafan said:

There is no difference in the object, what is different is the mind that is realising emptiness. The meaning of emptiness is the same whether it is being realised by a gross mind or by the mind of clear light.

Sherab said:

It is possible to talk sensibly of emptiness as an object for a subject? If so, what are we to make of the inseparability of clarity and emptiness?

Malcolm wrote:

Clarity and emptiness are isolates of the mind: when we experience the clarity of the mind, we seal it with emptiness; when we experience emptiness, we seal it with clarity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 29th, 2017 at 4:44 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Tolya M said:

There is the possibility of infinite voids even if this refers to a way of classifying phenomena. I do not know if it is written somewhere in the Mahayana sutras, but comparing the lists of prajnaparamita, yogachara and Patisambhidamagga, such a conclusion seems plausible. The practice of looking into the sky, by the way, is partly from the Prajnaparamita sutras.

CHRISTOPHER HATCHEIL Naked Seeing said:

Then, Sakra, the lord of the gods, asked the venerable

Subhuti: "Noble Subhuti! When one practices yoga in this Perfection of Wisdom, on what does one practice yoga?"

Subhuti replied: "Kausika! When one practices yoga in this Perfection of Wisdom, one practices yoga in space. Kaurika!

Someone wishing to train and practice yoga in this Perfection of Wisdom should practice yoga in [a place] without cover."

Malcolm wrote:

This passage is discussed in Kalacakra commentarial literature by Naropa among others, but there it is said that the meaning of this is to be learned from a guru.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 29th, 2017 at 3:39 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

CedarTree said:

Are you able to speak about the pointing out practice or would this violate the practice?

Malcolm wrote:

Direct introduction needs to be received from a master.

CedarTree said:

Absolutely amazing. Is there any origin on how this practice came to be?

Malcolm wrote:

Introduction is part of the three inner tantras of the nine yāna scheme. It does not really exist in lower tantras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 29th, 2017 at 3:29 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

CedarTree said:

Are you able to speak about the pointing out practice or would this violate the practice?

Malcolm wrote:

Direct introduction needs to be received from a master.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 29th, 2017 at 3:00 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Grigoris said:

So emptiness is conditioned?

Malcolm wrote:

Of course not, but the mind that realizes it is conditioned.

Grigoris said:

But if the experience of an object is dependent on the mind experiencing it, doesn't that make the object conditioned?

Malcolm wrote:

Emptiness is not really an object, it is the state of things. In sutra, emptiness is arrived at inferentially. The so called "direct perception of emptiness" is in every respect the absence of the perception of substantiality in/of things. This absence of perception is in fact an inference below the path of seeing in sūtra as well as Dzogchen, Mahāmudra, and so on.

The difference lies in whether or not the nature of the mind is directly pointed out. In sūtra it is not, and in Vajrayāna it is — gradually, in the case of Mahāmudra, or all at once, as in the case of Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 29th, 2017 at 12:38 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Bakmoon said:

Are they different emptinesses, or are they the same emptiness being perceived in a coarse way and a subtle way? ('perceived might not be the best word to use but I'm not sure other word to use).

Malcolm wrote:

Emptiness is not an objective thing. Therefore, its subtly or coarseness depends on the mind that realizes it.

conebeckham said:

The "mind" that realizes emptiness in Tantra is a different "mind" than that which realizes emptiness via the path of analysis--I think even the Geluk lineage asserts this, yes?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 29th, 2017 at 12:06 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Bakmoon said:

Are they different emptinesses, or are they the same emptiness being perceived in a coarse way and a subtle way? ('perceived might not be the best word to use but I'm not sure other word to use).

Malcolm wrote:

Emptiness is not an objective thing. Therefore, its subtly or coarseness depends on the mind that realizes it.

Grigoris said:

So emptiness is conditioned?

Malcolm wrote:

Of course not, but the mind that realizes it is conditioned.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 29th, 2017 at 12:04 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

smcj said:

A class action based on physical assault would be what I would advise.

With another reading of the letter something became obvious to me. Since it is all the top people in the organization that are making the complaint, then going to court would be ridiculous. They'd be suing themselves!

Malcolm wrote:

No, they would be suing the corporate entity of Rigpa, a legally separate person. In any case, the person who should be sued is Sogyal, right?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 28th, 2017 at 10:56 PM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is actually a difference in the object: sūtra emptiness is the coarse emptiness, realized by a coarse, analytical mind. Vajrayāna emptiness is a subtle emptiness, realized by a subtle, nonanalytical mind.

Bakmoon said:

Are they different emptinesses, or are they the same emptiness being perceived in a coarse way and a subtle way? ('perceived might not be the best word to use but I'm not sure other word to use).

Malcolm wrote:

Emptiness is not an objective thing. Therefore, its subtly or coarseness depends on the mind that realizes it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 28th, 2017 at 10:44 PM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

There is no difference between the meaning of emptiness in Sutra and Tantra

Malcolm wrote:

There is however a great difference in how they are realized. If this were not the case, there would be no difference between Sutra and Vajrayāna.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Of course, but there's no difference in the object.

Malcolm wrote:

There is actually a difference in the object: sūtra emptiness is the coarse emptiness, realized by a coarse, analytical mind. Vajrayāna emptiness is a subtle emptiness, realized by a subtle, nonanalytical mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 28th, 2017 at 5:44 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news: Letter to Sogyal Rinpoche / Abuse allegations

Content:

TRC said:

I'll go by the eight senior signatories who composed the letter to Sogyal outlining the harm and abuse. I am going to trust their account, as they are the closest to him and have seen and witnessed his actions and the results of his actions. They are also long-term Dharma practitioners and are best placed to make a judgement.

Here is what they said to Sogyal in their reply to him. I've already quoted this, but it's worth quoting again. They actually deal directly with this point:

Grigoris said:

Like I said: "I think our vision is too obscured to be able to make the necessary judgments without falling prey to aversion and attraction."

I am not going to deny that it SEEMS that there is abuse.

TRC said:

Ours might be, but not the eight senior signatories of the letter, or for that matter those who have been abused. They might actually know if they have suffered actual harm.

Malcolm wrote:

"Harm" is subjective, that's why we have courts. If Sogyal was a monk, the standard would be more clear. He isn't, he is a layperson, and since this is a religious organization rather than the professional one, professional standards that apply to physicians, etc., may not apply. Then there is the issue of EU law. This is why I council that the Rigpa students need to take matters into their own hands, ala Kripalu.

TRC said:

In 1994, revelations surfaced of sexual relationships between Desai and several female ashram residents. When these and other alleged abuses of power were confirmed, Kripalu's Board of Trustees called for Desai's immediate resignation. Since 1994, and continuing today, there is no formal relationship between Kripalu and Desai.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://kripalu.org/about/kripalu/our-history>

Of course, Amrit Desai is still actively teaching and has many students.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 28th, 2017 at 5:37 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life Transmission: 09/15/17

Content:

Tolya M said:

Will the transmission by reading be given for the guru-yoga of Vimalamitra? Thank you!

Malcolm wrote:

It will be taken under advisement. we will see.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 28th, 2017 at 5:36 AM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

There is no difference between the meaning of emptiness in Sutra and Tantra

Malcolm wrote:

There is however a great difference in how they are realized. If this were not the case, there would be no difference between Sutra and Vajrayāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 27th, 2017 at 10:17 PM

Title: Re: Tantra vs Sutra Emptiness

Content:

CedarTree said:

There has been some discussion that Tantra provides a deeper understanding of Emptiness than Sutra.

I thought it would be of benefit to contrast how Sutra and Tantra handle emptiness and broaden our understanding of Dharma.

To those that are knowledgeable about Mahamudra and Dzogchen please elaborate how emptiness is detailed/broadened in your tradition.

Malcolm wrote:

The mind that apprehends emptiness is held to be more subtle in Vajrayāna -- at least this is how the Gelugpas explain the difference.

The Nyingmapas, Sakyapas, and Kagyupas argue that the nature of the mind is introduced experientially and nonanalytically in Vajrayāna; whereas the analysis used in sutra is coarse and overly conceptual.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 27th, 2017 at 10:05 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life Transmission: 09/15/17

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

On September 15, 2017 Zangthal Editions and Wisdom Publications present a conversation between Tulku Dakpa Rinpoche and Daniel Aitken (Publisher, Wisdom Publications) from 5:00-6:00

pael said:

Is hearing of this conversation necessary for receiving transmisson?

Malcolm wrote:

Nope.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 27th, 2017 at 5:38 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Reting was a student of Chatral Rinpoche, and had deep experience in Dzogchen teachings. HHDL has never expressed anything other than admiration for Reting.

cloudburst said:

Reting hatched a plot to have Taktia murdered. The Dalai Lama explains that he saw the order in Reting's own handwriting. Let's not get carried away.

smcj said:

You guys got sources for your histories?

Malcolm wrote:

Melvin Goldstein, among others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 27th, 2017 at 4:14 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Reting was a student of Chatral Rinpoche, and had deep experience in Dzogchen teachings. HHDL has never expressed anything other than admiration for Reting.

cloudburst said:

Reting hatched a plot to have Taktra murdered. The Dalai Lama explains that he saw the order in Reting's own handwriting. Let's not get carried away.

Malcolm wrote:

There was indeed a plot by Reting's followers, but Reting maintained his innocence in the plot. In any case, political assassination is an old story in Tibet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 27th, 2017 at 3:54 AM

Title: Re: Most Powerful Dharmapala?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I would add that all Dharmapālas protect all Dharma practitioners, whether they are Vajrayāna practitioners or not — that's their job.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 27th, 2017 at 2:28 AM

Title: Buddhahood in This Life Transmission: 09/15/17

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Who: Tulku Dakpa Rinpoche

Where: First Parish Unitarian Universalist, 3 Cambridge Street, Cambridge, Massachusetts

What: Buddhahood in This Life Reading Transmission

When: 5:00-9:30 PM

On September 15, 2017 Zangthal Editions and Wisdom Publications present a conversation between Tulku Dakpa Rinpoche and Daniel Aitken (Publisher, Wisdom Publications) from 5:00-6:00, immediately followed by the Reading Transmission for Buddhahood in This Life (<https://tinyurl.com/yd2xrogd>) from 6:30-9:30. This event is FREE. Please join us in person if you can or by webcast (URL forthcoming).

Tulku Dakpa Rinpoche was educated at Mindroling Monastery, the only tulku recognized by His Holiness the 11th Mindrolling Trichen. Tulku Dakpa Rinpoche is the founder and director of Dhanakosha Dharma Center in Finland (<http://www.danakosha.fi>). He speaks English fluently and has been teaching students in Europe and America for over 10 years.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 27th, 2017 at 2:20 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

cky said:

Thank you!

Adamantine said:

Which regent did HHDL speak out about? Surely not the Reting Rinpoche, who was murdered?

Tenzin1 said:

I don't know that he specified which Regent.

Malcolm wrote:

HHDL indicated that it was Taktia Rinpoche, the regent appointed by the Shugden faction who had deposed Reting.

Reting was a student of Chatral Rinpoche, and had deep experience in Dzogchen teachings. HHDL has never expressed anything other than admiration for Reting.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 26th, 2017 at 2:48 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

kirtu said:

People are not supposed to perform divination at all. And in the West there is very little opportunity to avail oneself of Tibetan (or other) practices such as mirror gazing. And we cannot expect people just coming to the Dharma to do so anyway.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

.

In Hinayana people are not supposed to resort divination, etc. Secret Mantra is different.

kirtu said:

I am not speaking from a Hinayana perspective at all (ironically divination is rife in Asian Theravada).

Malcolm - you know perfectly well that there is no emphasis or encouragement at all in doing divination in Vajrayana by students. And few lamas I know encourage it at all. Different students are in fact treated differently on this by the same lamas btw.

At any rate a Vajrayana students is not supposed to do Mo until, what, they have finished a long Manjushri retreat? Yes, of course Mipham and probably Kongtrul wrote about divination (Mipham in detail). These are generally not taught to students. And mirror divination? That is not a common practice at all amongst students (or western monks). Even mala divination is not taught, at least not openly.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

This is just not my experience, kirt. For example Longsal Yudron ma dice divination is given by ChNN all the time, and there are many other mo systems ordinary Tibetans use all the time like mala mos, etc.

But this off topic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 26th, 2017 at 2:46 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

Norwegian said:

And there are different kinds of divination practices. It's not just connected to Manjushri.

kirtu said:

Of course. And most of those not connected to Manjushri are really esoteric and locked away.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

Not at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 26th, 2017 at 2:28 AM

Title: Re: Most Powerful Dharmapala?

Content:

Tenma said:

I've been a bit curious, who is the most powerful dharmapala? Also, who would be the most fastest dharmapala with quick results and which dharmapala would be the most wisest? Not only that, but which dharmapala would be the safest especially for a fourteen year old to practice and which would be the most violent and dangerous dharmapala to practice?

Malcolm wrote:
Lojong training.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, July 26th, 2017 at 1:32 AM
Title: Re: Very sad news
Content:

dzogchungpa said:
Khenpo Ngachung's commentary on the "Examining the Teacher" section of WoMPT begins as follows:
Examine the teacher from a distance by what you hear said about him, from close up by what you can see for yourself, and by such means as divination and mirror gazing.

kirtu said:
People are not supposed to perform divination at all. And in the West there is very little opportunity to avail oneself of Tibetan (or other) practices such as mirror gazing. And we cannot expect people just coming to the Dharma to do so anyway.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:
.

In Hinayana people are not supposed to resort divination, etc. Secret Mantra is different.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, July 25th, 2017 at 2:52 AM
Title: Re: Very sad news
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, this a major reason these discussions should be handled with care. Ultimately it his needs to handled by the Rigpa Sangha. Kripalu offers a possible model.

Minobu said:
this sense of entitlement that leads led this rinpoche to this...is this common among these men with rinpoche in their title.?

Malcolm wrote:

It is common in all patriarchal cultures, and ours is no exception.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 25th, 2017 at 2:51 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

Minobu said:

my god man...this is not about whether it is a scandal or not...

this guy was supposed to be a Dzogchen master highly evolved..read my last post...

Malcolm wrote:

There is a great deal of hyperbole in Tibetan culture. Don't believe the hype.

Minobu said:

what about my Karma mudra post and the other stuff malcolm.

are you really just going to do this..

the post reminds me of Sogyal's action..leave for retreat and prepare to die.

you know if this guy was really about all this have fun with wealth abuse the student women..it shows he is a fraud..actually never was what people claimed him to be.

end of.

have fun helping the guy out of this jam malcolm.

Malcolm wrote:

I have no interest in aiding or harming Sogyal. It is a broader issue, and this scandal is merely a symptom of a much broader problem. Alas, we keep treating symptoms without addressing the cause.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 25th, 2017 at 2:47 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this a major reason these discussions should be handled with care. Ultimately it has to be handled by the Rigpa Sangha. Kripalu offers a possible model.

CedarTree said:

The really sad thing is that a lot of people are going to see the news about this, discussions like this and others and not want to be involved with Gurus and or teachers.

Does this mean we shouldn't talk about it of course not but we should all practice noble speech and stress repeatedly that there are excellent teachers.

I can't even imagine how horrible it would be if we didn't have teachers like Ajaan Thanissaro, Bhikkhu Bodhi, Bhikkhu Analayo, Ajahn Amaro, Shōhaku Okumura Roshi, Shoryu Bradley, Mahasi Sayadaw & Sayadaw U Pandita, or Luang Por Chah!

Without these heavy weights that have been supported solely by lay people and have been able to deeply explore, draw out content, develop teaching and practices, and help guide many of us in different situations the Dhamma may be very hard in some senses to develop and or get started on.

Though these teachers are also pretty amazing examples. Usually live incredibly modestly (Some robes and a bowl) and in the Zen masters I mentioned one lives off the grid.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 25th, 2017 at 2:42 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

Grigoris said:

Is the problem really so widespread? Seems to me to be odd rotten apple here and there, but you seem to be implying that it is endemic. Is it?

Malcolm wrote:

People like scandals. They find them enjoyable.

Minobu said:

my god man...this is not about whether it is a scandal or not...

this guy was supposed to be a Dzogchen master highly evolved..read my last post...

Malcolm wrote:

There is a great deal of hyperbole in Tibetan culture. Don't believe the hype.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 25th, 2017 at 1:49 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

Karma Dorje said:

The more voices raised to declare that this behaviour is unacceptable, the more chance of real reform in our Buddhist organizations.

Grigoris said:

Is the problem really so widespread? Seems to me to be odd rotten apple here and there, but you seem to be implying that it is endemic. Is it?

Malcolm wrote:

People like scandals. They find them enjoyable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 25th, 2017 at 1:48 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Complain all you want (and you will), it will do nothing to prevent any harm you perceive being inflicted by Sogyal on others.

dzogchungpa said:

This is definitely false. I can say for a fact that some people will be deterred from getting involved with him due to such complaints.

Malcolm wrote:

And a lot people won't. In the end it is really not our business.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 25th, 2017 at 1:38 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

Karma Dorje said:

I don't see how chasing pussy is anything other than a worldly activity.

justsit said:

How about we don't compound the problem by referring to women as pussy?

Malcolm wrote:

Thank you

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 25th, 2017 at 12:07 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

Karma Dorje said:

I don't see how chasing pussy is anything other than a worldly activity.

justsit said:

How about we don't compound the problem by referring to women as pussy?

Karma Dorje said:

That's of course a fair point but I wasn't equating women with pussy. I meant that this guy is simply objectifying and using women without consideration for their needs, desires and autonomy. We have enough of that here in the West already (which is probably why he came here in the first place, come to think of it). I put it this way specifically because it doesn't look any different to me than frat houses on vacation in Cancun.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, that is your karmic vision. Other people have different visions of Sogyal. Why is yours true and theirs false?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 25th, 2017 at 12:02 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

Karma Dorje said:

Of course bad actions by those acting from a position of authority can pose obstacles to the faithful. If we substitute Gilbert Gauthe for Sogyal, and the Catholic sexual abuse scandals for this current 20-year long Rigpa trainwreck, would you really say "Well that's just those boys' karma"?

Malcolm wrote:

We are not Catholics and no one yet has accused Sogyal of pedophilia. And yes, everything is a result of karma. That does not make it "correct," however, the relationship between harmer and harmed is karmic.

Karma Dorje said:

Of course we have all done worse things many times over in previous lives, but that's not the point.

Malcolm wrote:

It is the point from which we must analyze ourselves before criticizing others.

Karma Dorje said:

This is not a question of policing morality but of trying to prevent further harm. The more voices raised to declare that this behaviour is unacceptable, the more chance of real reform in our Buddhist organizations.

Malcolm wrote:

All I can say is that this is fantasy. Complain all you want (and you will), it will do nothing to prevent any harm you perceive being inflicted by Sogyal on others. Only a criminal or civil finding will put an end to it.

Karma Dorje said:

That is the democratic principle in operation.

Malcolm wrote:

The Democratic principle is that if one person feels injured by another, they file a complaint in court and seek redress through the legal system. The accused is presumed innocent until guilt is proven.

Karma Dorje said:

Threads like this can help inform vulnerable students that they can and should say no to unscrupulous teachers.

Malcolm wrote:

Threads like this mainly serve to rouse people's afflictions, hence my description of it as Mi kha.

Karma Dorje said:

I don't see how chasing pussy is anything other than a worldly activity. If Sogyal wants to do that, he at very least should not abuse the position of trust he is in to do so.

Malcolm wrote:

If it is just a matter of seeking sexual partners, everyone involved presumably is a consenting adult. Whether it is liberating activity or just sex is not something we actually have the capacity to perceive with our limited samsaric vision. If Sogyal was forcing his women student to have abortions after he impregnated them, for example, then this would be entirely different, of course. Therefore, this is none of our business, in absence of other information.

Physical assault is a criminal act, either a misdemeanor or a felony depending on how severe the resulting harm. A punch in the stomach is likely a misdemeanor unless there is some damage to an organ. However, the proper forum adjudicating this is the courts, not DW. Hence my observation that Sogyal has become the OJ of Tibetan Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 24th, 2017 at 10:56 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

Karma Dorje said:

One ought not to use a term like "lynch" to describe criticism of an authority figure for hypocrisy and moral turpitude, particularly when you live in a not so open, not so democratic country that has actually lynched people of colour in the not-so-distant past.

Malcolm wrote:

In point of fact, he is being accused of far more than "hypocrisy and moral turpitude."
Your have aversion to the country of your birth is irrelevant.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 24th, 2017 at 10:50 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

TRC said:

Yes, all that matters is that Sogyal hasn't done anything legally wrong in the regards to the law, not whether he has done anything ethically and morally wrong in regards to the Dharma.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, we ought not lynch people in an open democratic society. The general principle is innocent until proven guilty.

This whole thread is Mi kha.

Karma Dorje said:

One ought not to use a term like "lynch" to describe criticism of an authority figure for hypocrisy and moral turpitude, particularly when you live in a not so open, not so democratic country that has actually lynched people of colour in the not-so-distant past.

This is not a court of law. You are free to choose not to speak out about the bad behaviour of your coreligionists. It is not the moral high ground you are presenting it as, however. I have first hand experience of the obstacles this kind of depravity can put in the way of new and potential Buddhists. While you choose not to speak of it, you have had the same experience with friends of yours (as you have shared). There have already been several out-of-court settlements for large sums of money made by Sogyal/Rigpa to his accusers. This is not mere rumour. or gossip.

After consideration and reflection I will continue to speak out about what I see as wrong. At least the conversation here is not devolving to talking about lizard creatures and Big Pharma poisoning the water and our food supply, or opining that the reason people have a problem with this fiasco is that they don't like Asian men sleeping with white women like that other Vajrayana forum.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not claiming any moral high ground at all. I am simply observing that no one here is in possession of facts. All we have is allegations of misconduct and one or more settlements out of court (which are not admissions of guilt). I would also observe that truly unethical teachers are rarely, if ever, "brought down" by "outing" them. I have no opposition to his students releasing their letter. However, the perseveration, speculations, moral indignation, and pointless gossip present in this thread serves no one.

No one can put obstacles in front of new Buddhists (are there any in truth?), including a bad teacher. If we make a connection with a bad teacher, that is on us. That is our karma. We learn from that experience and move on. We all have lived many lifetimes, and have done many worse things in our past lives than Sogyal's accusers allege against him. When criticizing others it is useful to maintain a multi-life perspective about oneself. And of course there is Angulimala.

The tone of this thread is rather WASPy, and not very Buddhist at all. I am not defending Sogyal, incidentally. My point is completely different. And if in the end Sogyal is actually guilty of all these alleged misdeeds, he will suffer the result of his own karma. Karma is unerring.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 24th, 2017 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

TRC said:

Yes, all that matters is that Sogyal hasn't done anything legally wrong in the regards to the law, not whether he has done anything ethically and morally wrong in regards to the Dharma.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, we ought not lynch people in an open democratic society. The general principle is innocent until proven guilty.

This whole thread is Mi kha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 24th, 2017 at 1:26 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Sogyal's realization is a nonissue. All that matters is whether he has any civil or criminal liability. The rest of it is irrelevant.

Karma Dorje said:

With all due respect, if this fat, abusive Sogyal prick was a Mormon we would all be going on about how degenerate the Mormon religion is and not hemming and hawing about whether he "has realization".

I am sorry, but all of the equivocation on this is not good for Tibetan Buddhism in the West. The ridiculous level of sexism and misogyny in Tibetan culture has to stop, if not in Tibet and the diaspora, then certainly among western practitioners. This is not a case of he said/she said. There are years of reports from some of his closest students that substantiate Sogyal's abusive, predatory behaviour.

If we can't draw clear lines against behaviour like that, it is no wonder that western sanghas with a few exceptions are the domain of aging hippies and GenX'ers. Even if this alleged tulku has the realization to carry on like this without harm to himself, he is clearly harming others. I mean, Jesus H. Christ have we learned nothing from the Osel Tenzin fiasco? This is not a difficult topic.

What would we say about abusive Catholic priests molesting young boys? That it was OK because it brought the boys closer to God? Give me a break.

Whether you are Sogyal Lhakar, Younge Khachab or Osel Tenzin if you can't keep your pants on, don't call yourself a Dharma teacher.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 24th, 2017 at 11:18 AM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I am not trying to defend the notion that SR has realization but it is interesting to note the following passage from <http://all-otr.org/public-talks/1-following-the-dzogchen-path>:

dzoki said:

Statements like these mean nothing. Only buddha can see realization of others.

kirtu said:

Only a Buddha can accurately or possibly directly know the realization of others. But Shantideva clearly says "where there is smoke, there is fire (in a positive way). Although we are personally afflicted we can examine the good qualities of others and infer some level of realization (or not). Secondly there are other guidelines and these were apparently used in the mid 1800's by Jamgon Kongtrul and Janmyang Khyentse Wangpo to evaluate each other's levels of realization (probably initiated on the part of JKW).

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

Sometimes smoke is not smoke, but mist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 23rd, 2017 at 9:44 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

cky said:

Could someone with some knowledge on the topic of Samaya (Malcolm?) please be so kind and say a few words to clear up the following?

1) We're harming Samaya by exposing our Guru after we've have been sexually or physically abused by him

Malcolm wrote:

It is a delicate subject and should be treated with care. Simply finding that you do not like a guru after all, and feel he or she is not being super nice to oneself and meeting one's expectations is not a grounds for "outing" a guru. In our culture we are overly sensitive about being respected. If you wanted to sleep with your guru, and then found out they have other partners, that is your problem. If on the other hand you or someone you know are physically damaged by a teacher, sexually assaulted/raped, or subjected to clear psychological abuse, this may be sufficient grounds for exposing a teacher.

A lot of so called "guru abuse" is a co-created problem where students lose their perspective and feed a guru's ego, the latter in turn begin to feel invincible, and there is kind of snowball effect of ego inflation: the student feels their master is enlightened, the master begins to believe student mythology, and then the master loses perspective. In this case, students really need to reflect on their own role in their own "abuse" in terms of how much they were involved in inflating their master's ego in order to inflate their own. In short, it may be a practice to view our guru as enlightened, but we really should not keep telling them that over and over again. If our guru is truly realized, it will be evident when they die. Until then, it is best to maintain a balanced perspective and keep good boundaries.

If our guru is a truly harmful being, it is they who are breaking samaya and not we. They cannot repair samaya they break with their students. We can always repair our samaya with respect to all our teachers.

It is very perilous to be a guru. It is a great responsibility. And, it is the case that sometimes flawed gurus generate a great deal of benefit for the majority of their students, at the expense of a few.

With respect to the Sogyal affair, I have no personal opinion about the matter which I choose to share, apart from my comment about his letter. I was not there, I did not see what happened, and in this country, America, accusations are not sufficient proof to convict, despite movies, testimonies, and so on. I am afraid that Sogyal is now something like the OJ Simpson of Tibetan Buddhism, his letter is the white bronco, and one's opinion of his guilt or innocence depending on which side of the ethnic/traditionalist divide you stand.

One thing to bear in mind is that Sogyal has had a huge hand in introducing thousands of western students to luminaries like Dilgo Khyentse and so on, whom they otherwise may have never met or would have had great difficulty receiving teachings from. His book, whether personally authored or ghostwritten, has been a major introduction to Tibetan Buddhism for hundreds of thousands of people. Like any person living in a democracy, he deserves the right to a fair trial, not the incessant sniping on the internet to which he has been subjected for decades. If someone has a criminal or civil complaint, they should file it in the French Courts. Otherwise, this is all hearsay, and hearsay bears no legal weight whatsoever. If he is not doing anything for which he may held criminally or civilly liable, one may find his lifestyle and choices distasteful and disturbing, but it is also none of one's business. One is not obligated to participate in his Sangha.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 22nd, 2017 at 9:03 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

Vasana said:

All sounds very messy. Let's just hope for all involved that samayas are repairable.

Malcolm wrote:

When a guru breaks samaya, it is irreparable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 22nd, 2017 at 12:47 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

I wish the best to the Rigpa community and pray for some serious healing to take place.

CedarTree said:

I second this.

I think we need to start creating ethical standards though were money and lifestyles are humble. This is a spiritual path after all.

Malcolm wrote:

There is nothing wrong with wealthy teachers. How they derive their wealth however is of some concern.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 22nd, 2017 at 12:46 PM

Title: Re: Very sad news

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

FWIW, here's a response from SR:

<https://whatnow727.wordpress.com/responses/>

Malcolm wrote:

Doesn't seem to be worth very much: a lot of me, me, me, and not very much else.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 22nd, 2017 at 12:07 PM

Title: Re: Loppon Ogyan Tanzin Rinpoche European Teaching Tour 2017

Content:

Grigoris said:

No, according to the "strict" definition Rinpoche is not a Terton. He is not even a Tulku so how can he be a Terton? These teachings are Pure Visions.

Malcolm wrote:

Being a recognized tulku is not a precondition for being a terton.

Grigoris said:

A Terton has to be one of the 25 disciples of the Guru Rinpoche, correct? So how can one be a Terton, without being a Tulku, given that they would have to be a rebirth of one of the 25 disciples?

Malcolm wrote:

One can be an emanation of Guru P, for example, Rigdzin Jatson Nyingpo.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 21st, 2017 at 10:01 PM

Title: Re: Emptiness: expedient or certain teaching?

Content:

Bakmoon said:

Also, I find this is an extremely useful proof-text to show that emptiness is a definitive teaching, especially against the hard line true-self Buddha-nature people who generally subscribe to the three turnings idea.

Malcolm wrote:

I have written on this subject here a lot, you should look up my posts on the subject.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 21st, 2017 at 9:57 PM

Title: Re: Transmission

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You should receive transmission if you are interested in Dzogchen. Otherwise it is like looking at a coffee grinder and never plugging it in.

lee said:

Hi all,

I have only been reading about Dzogchen for the last 6 weeks and with the transmission coming up, i have doubts whether or not i'm ready to receive it.

I am nearly through the GuruYoga book and have the worldwide transmission dvd to practice with, but with such little time to develop the practice, i'm stuck wondering whether or not i should participate in the event.

As for understanding Dzogchen (the basics) i'm still very much in my infancy and for me i kind of feel like i should be focusing more on developing both the guru practice (to receive correctly not to develop it in the same way as after the transmission) and gain a little deeper into my understanding of the structure and basic theory of it.

Whats your thoughts on this, should i keep studying non restricted content and develop the mantras and movements of GuruYoga or do i go ahead with the upcoming transmission with very little understanding of it's structure and little practice of the event itself?

The reason why i ask is that im getting mixed signals on the topic, some people are saying get it done because his health is getting worse and from what im getting from the books iv read is, the student understands the theory of it and practices the event in order to be able to have the capacity to receive it.

Thank you

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 21st, 2017 at 9:48 PM

Title: Re: The Hundred-Syllable Mantra

Content:

mutasuk said:

BTW Lung tha and Kalden Yungdrung are one and the same person, right ? I thought having two accounts was prohibited and against the rules...

Malcolm wrote:

No, definitely not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 21st, 2017 at 9:42 PM

Title: Re: Loppon Ogyan Tenzin Rinpoche European Teaching Tour 2017

Content:

Grigoris said:

No, according to the "strict" definition Rinpoche is not a Terton. He is not even a Tulku so how can he be a Terton? These teachings are Pure Visions.

Malcolm wrote:

Being a recognized tulku is not a precondition for being a terton.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 21st, 2017 at 12:16 PM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The basis of the bodhisattva path is renunciation, which is obvious even to beginners, let alone scholars.

Tuybachau said:

The basis of the bodhisattva path is the Buddha Nature which has nothing to do with renunciation or/and appropriation... That is what the definitive teaching is about and why it is to be relied on.

Malcolm wrote:

You seem to have a problem distinguishing view and path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 20th, 2017 at 11:58 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Tuybachau said:

You keep on asserting that a bodhisattva's path is bounded by renunciation...

Malcolm wrote:

The basis of the bodhisattva path is renunciation, which is obvious even to beginners, let alone scholars.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 19th, 2017 at 11:27 PM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Expedient means are also used by bodhisattvas for their own training, for example, śīlapāramita, the perfection of discipline which necessarily involves renunciation such as abandoning killing, stealing, lying, sexual misconduct and intoxication.

A bodhisattva may engage in any of those five misdeeds for the benefit of others, but not for his or her own benefit. Therefore, the bodhisattva path is a renunciate path in general.

Tuybachau said:

- The monastic codes, vinaya, should not be confused with the definitive teaching on which the bodhisattvas rely. Bodhisattvas can choose to assume any role such as that of a fully ordained, a sramana, who keeps 250 precepts or an apprentice, a samanera, 10 precepts, or an upasaka 5, or someone like Devadata, or a prostitute. The path of a bodhisattva is not defined by one or more of the expedient means that bodhisattva employs but:

"

Wisdom is the bodhisattva's mother, expedient means his father;
of those who guide and teach all beings, there are none not born of these.

"

From Chapter 8 THE BUDDHA WAY of the Vimalakirti Sutra

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāyāna indeed has both provisional teachings and definitive teachings. For example, the Avatamska teaches the definitive teachings on practicing the path, which involve renunciation, etc., included in the seven limbs.

For their own practice of the path, bodhisattvas are obliged to abandon the ten nonvirtuous deeds, eating meat and so on. Therefore, the bodhisattva path is a renunciate path in general.

Tuybachau said:

- For his/her own practice of the path, a bodhisattva relies on the definitive teaching to employ one or more of the expedient means. In the definitive teaching:

"

Here, Sariputra, a Bodhisattva, a great being, having stood in the perfection of wisdom, by way of not taking his stand on it, should perfect the perfection of giving, by way of seeing that no renunciation has taken place, since gift, giver, and recipient have not been apprehended. He should perfect himself in the perfection of morality, through not transgressing into either offence or non-offence. He should perfect the perfection of patience and remain imperturbable. He should perfect the perfection of vigour, and remain indefatigable in his physical and mental vigour. He should perfect the perfection of meditation, and derive no enjoyment (from transic meditation). He should perfect the perfection of wisdom, on account of the fact that he apprehends neither wisdom nor stupidity.

"

From Chapter 2 THE THOUGHT OF ENLIGHTENMENT of The Large Sutra on Perfect Wisdom

"

Subhuti : If, O Lord, form should be seen as empty of form, etc. to: enlightenment as empty of enlightenment, how can of a Bodhisattva who courses in perfect wisdom the coursing take place?

The Lord : A noncoursing is the bodhisattva's coursing in perfect wisdom.

Subhuti : For what reason?

The Lord : Because no perfect wisdom can be apprehended, no Bodhisattva, no coursing, no one who courses, nor that whereby or wherein he courses. It is thus that a Bodhisattva's coursing in perfect wisdom is a noncoursing in which all these discourings are not apprehended.

"

From Chapter 63 MANY QUESTIONS CONCERNING THE DUALITY OF DHARMAS of The Large Sutra on Perfect Wisdom

- As I said before, those who confuse worldly things with bodhisattvas' wisdom and practice do not know this path.

Malcolm wrote:

And I as said before, those who do not understand that bodhisattvas rely on the two truths, and not just one, do not understand Mahāyāna. You keep on asserting there is no use for the relative things of the path for a bodhisattva themselves.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 19th, 2017 at 7:53 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris, Musk Deer Hunter?

Content:

Wayfarer said:

David Brazier's recent book 'Buddhism is a Religion' is a series of essays protesting the 'secularisation' of Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this trend will destroy the Dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 19th, 2017 at 7:52 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Tuybachau said:

[

- The expedient are expedient as they are employed to lead sentient beings to the realization of the definitive teaching. Things are not expediently used when they are confused with the definitive.

Malcolm wrote:

Expedient means are also used by bodhisattvas for their own training, for example, śīlapāramita, the perfection of discipline which necessarily involves renunciation such as abandoning killing, stealing, lying, sexual misconduct and intoxication. A bodhisattva may engage in any of those five misdeeds for the benefit of others, but not for his or her own benefit. Therefore, the bodhisattva path is a renunciate path in general.

Tuybachau said:

- Mahayana teaches the definitive meaning. Bodhisattvas who rely on the definitive meaning can use whatever expedient means they see fit: renunciation, appropriation, abandonment, attainment..

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāyāna indeed has both provisional teachings and definitive teachings. For example, the Avatamska teaches the definitive teachings on practicing the path, which involve renunciation, etc., included in the seven limbs.

For their own practice of the path, bodhisattvas are obliged to abandon the ten nonvirtuous deeds, eating meat and so on. Therefore, the bodhisattva path is a renunciate path in general.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 18th, 2017 at 1:36 PM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

common Mahāyāna

Queequeg said:

Sorry to interrupt. I have not been following along except the last page.

Is this a technical term?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. It refers to all non-Vajrayāna traditions including Chan/Zen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 18th, 2017 at 1:15 PM

Title: Re: Emptiness: expedient or certain teaching?

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Being present...

Malcolm wrote:

... just means you know what you are doing when you are doing it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 18th, 2017 at 7:02 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris, Musk Deer Hunter?

Content:

michaelb said:

It's hardly fair to judge Harris by what people say on his forums.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct. But Harris has said enough to cast his understanding in doubt. (mic drop)

michaelb said:

The question wasn't his understanding but his attitude; whether he was being insincere and cynical, "like a musk deer hunter." I don't think he was. He seems to have had an ongoing relationship with Tulku Urgyen over the last five years of TUR's life. He valued what Tulku Urgyen taught him as the most valuable thing he has ever been taught and, whilst not setting himself up as a dzogchen teacher, has done his best to convey what he understood from what TUR and others taught him.

Malcolm wrote:

Musk hunters also value musk glands for their scent, which is extremely valuable. One needs musk deer to obtain musk glands. The very fact he dismisses samaya as anachronistic demonstrates his attitude is incorrect.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 18th, 2017 at 6:58 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

pael said:

Where to get Bodhisattvapitika Sūtra in English?

monktastic said:

From a brief search it seems to be a synonym for the Avatamsaka Sutra, which can be found in many places (e.g., http://www.cttbusa.org/avatamsaka/avatamsaka_contents.asp).

Malcolm wrote:

It is not that sutra. It is an separate sūtra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 18th, 2017 at 6:58 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Tuybachau said:

By claiming that mahayana, the path of bodhisattvas, is a path of renunciation, one slanders the dharma.

Malcolm wrote:

This suggests your understanding of the Mahāyāna is somewhat deficient You should perhaps read the Bodhisattvapitika Sūtra, Bodhicaryavatara, Siksasammucaya, and so on.

Tuybachau said:

If you aspire to the path of bodhisattvas, mahayana, you should learn to rely on the definitive meanings not the provisional 依了義、不依不了義.

See Mahaparinirvana sutra chapter 8 The Four Reliances/Dependables 四依止 and this sutra:

http://buddhism.lib.ntu.edu.tw/BDLM/sutra/chi_pdf/sutra8/T13n0420.pdf

Malcolm wrote:

Relying on the definitive meaning in no way contradicts the path of renunciation which is clearly taught as the principle expedient means in Mahāyāna. To insist that it does means abandoning the relative in favor of the ultimate. Buddha taught two truths; the one of worldly convention, and the ultimate truth. These two truths are not in contradiction. Someone who does not understand that common Mahāyāna is a path of renunciation does not understand the meaning of the two truths.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 17th, 2017 at 11:10 PM

Title: Re: Reliance on Rites and Rituals

Content:

Wayfarer said:

When I took my formal refuge ceremony, at Nan Tien Temple, in 2005, one of the points I particularly noticed in the vows, was to avoid 'reliance on rites and rituals.' It struck me as a little incongruent, as what I was engaged in was indeed 'a rite', namely, the rite of taking refuge. I read this again the other day while studying a Dharma text - that the bodhisattva is to avoid reliance on rites and rituals. But Buddhism has its rituals - even a daily meditation is a ritual, or so it seems to me. And as I understand it, life in many Buddhist monasteries is a constant succession of recitations which I would have thought were 'rites'?

So, what do I make of this apparent discrepancy between principle and practice, if indeed it is? Is there a difference between chanting the Buddhist precepts, and what is considered a rite or ritual?

Thanks to all

Malcolm wrote:

It means believing that rites result in liberation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 17th, 2017 at 11:07 PM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Tuybachau said:

That classification teaching is either provisional or dishonest.

Malcolm wrote:

Or your understanding itself is incomplete. Have you considered this possibility?

Tuybachau said:

By claiming that mahayana, the path of bodhisattvas, is a path of renunciation, one slanders the dharma.

Malcolm wrote:

This suggests your understanding of the Mahāyāna is somewhat deficient You should perhaps read the Bodhisattvapitika Sūtra, Bodhicaryavatara, Siksasammucaya, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 17th, 2017 at 1:48 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris, Musk Deer Hunter?

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

I have to say I find it hilarious that there are people on his forums fretting because they can't find "secular" Dzogchen and Mahamudra teachers, i've actually read through some of those threads.

michaelb said:

It's hardly fair to judge Harris by what people say on his forums.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct. But Harris has said enough to cast his understanding in doubt. (mic drop)

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 17th, 2017 at 1:41 PM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Tuybachau said:

- Bodhisattvas practicing Prajnaparamita on the Mahayana path do not either renounce or appropriate either Samsara or Nirvana.
- Mahayana is not about renunciation and/or appropriation.

Anonymous X said:

From the Dzogchen point of view, Malcolm is repeating how the sutra system is classified, a path of renunciation, both Hinayana & Mahayana.

Lopon Tenzin Namdak: From Bonpo Dzogchen Teachings,

Both the Buddhist and the Bonpo teachings are divided into Sutra, Tantra, and Dzogchen. Each of these three systems has a different Base, a different Path, and thus they lead to a different Fruit or result. The method proper to the Sutra system is the path of renunciation (spong lam), the method proper to the Tantra system is the path of transformation, (sgyur lam), and the method proper to Dzogchen is the path of self-liberation, (grol lam).

Tuybachau said:

That classification teaching is either provisional or dishonest.

Malcolm wrote:

Or your understanding itself is incomplete. Have you considered this possibility?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 15th, 2017 at 11:18 PM

Title: Re: Where does the idea of the three paths come from?

Content:

heart said:

So this distinction is coming from the Bon tradition?

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Rangjung Dorje also discusses this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 14th, 2017 at 7:52 PM

Title: Re: Dudjom Dzambala Practice

Content:

Karinos said:

this is nice, but many western "ngagpas" I met have little clue about Mahayana motivation and are just simply attracted to Tibetan shamanism. They look for exotic courses and empowerments for wealth, healing and power to get rich, healthy and powerful. Fortunately Lamas are smart to use this occasion to teach something about Mahayana, Tantra or Dzogchen, so there is still hope

Malcolm wrote:

The ngakpa ordination is connected with both Dzogchen view and great compassion for sentient beings, so you might be talking about ngakpa wannabes, people who like wearing the outer paraphernalia of ngakpas, but you are not talking about real ngakpas, western or otherwise.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 12th, 2017 at 2:00 PM

Title: Re: Dudjom Dzambala Practice

Content:

Miroku said:

However if we receive teachings from an accomplished lama with whom we can be sure he has not broken his samaya, then the teaching should be still as powerful as powerful as at the beginning if the lineage of that teaching is pure, right?

Isn't breaking samaya quite hard though?

Malcolm wrote:

The issue is not generally with the Lamas in a lineage, The issue is the students.

TharpaChodron said:

why should the students, who are by nature learning and imperfect, be an issue with the value of the teaching and the Lamas?

Malcolm wrote:

When students break samaya it affects their Guru's possibility of manifesting Rainbow body, among other things, and generally degrades the power of a given lineage. This is why in every generation there are tertons like Dudjom Rinpoche, and so on. But after some time broken samayas on the part of the students degrade the blessings of these teachings and they are not as effective, signaling the need for new terms.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 12th, 2017 at 8:05 AM

Title: Re: Practical Recognition of Ignorance

Content:

Sherab said:

I would argue that the lack of insight on the emptiness of all phenomena is what enable a grasping at a self. If there is insight on emptiness, there will be no grasping at a self.

Malcolm wrote:

It is called connate ignorance in other teachings than Dzogchen because sentient beings do not recognize the nature of their own minds, inseparable clarity and emptiness. The way the Sakypas frame this, for example, is because the emptiness of the mind is not recognized, this causes nirvana. Because the clarity of the mind is not recognized, this causes samsara. Because their inseparability is not recognized, this is the source of the misperception of self. So, it is not simply a matter of lacking insight into emptiness alone. It is a matter of not recognizing the nature of the mind in its totality. The Dzogchen account, given above, is very different. The Sakya theory has another interesting twist— they identify tathāgatagarbha as the inseparability aspect of inseparable clarity and emptiness because clarity and emptiness are themselves extremes to be avoided.

Sherab said:

It looks as if you use "connate" here to mean "inherent" or inborn. Whereas when you use "connate" in relation to Dzogchen, you appear to mean "co-emergent" or "arising simultaneously". Am I understanding you correctly?

When one talks of extremes, one normally talks of polar opposite. Therefore I find it strange that Sakya theory considers clarity and emptiness as polar opposites. A combination of polar opposites i.e. extremes, if at all possible, simply gives rise to a third extreme.

Malcolm wrote:

Connate means connate, not innate.

It is not the case that clarity and emptiness are polar opposites, they are inseparable, but as I said, "the emptiness of the mind is not recognized, this causes nirvana. Because the clarity of the mind is not recognized, this causes samsara. Because their inseparability is not recognized, this is the source of the misperception of self."

These are three aspects to the nature of the mind, also termed the all-basis. You can consult any text on Lamdre.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 12th, 2017 at 7:38 AM

Title: Re: Dudjom Dzambala Practice

Content:

Adamantine said:

Yes but what is the math happening in the minds of wisdom masters like ChNN, Dudjom Rinpoche, Garchen Rinpoche, HHDL, Karmapa, etc. who decide that giving large public transmissions—even some globally webcast ones—have benefits that outweigh the pitfalls?

Malcolm wrote:

That is a good question, and one I am not prepared to answer for them. All I can tell you is what I have found in classical literature on the subject. For example, ChNN pointed out that Longde practitioners ceased attaining rainbow body at a certain point in time because of broken samayas in the lineage. And of course, I have no idea if any present day Longde practitioners are going to attain rainbow body either, even though ChNN's revival of Longde in Longsal is a very important development. All we can expect, as practitioners of recent terma cycles, is that the samayas in these lineages are pure and thus the teachings will be very, very effective for their practitioners.

Miroku said:

However if we receive teachings from an accomplished lama with whom we can be sure he has not broken his samaya, then the teaching should be still as powerful as powerful as at the beginning if the lineage of that teaching is pure, right?

Isn't breaking samaya quite hard though?

Malcolm wrote:

The issue is not generally with the Lamas in a lineage, The issue is the students.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 12th, 2017 at 6:53 AM

Title: Re: Practical Recognition of Ignorance

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is a third ignorance, which exists prior to these two, called "the ignorance identical with the cause." This simply means that prior to the potential of consciousness arising as a display, consciousness is unaware of itself.

Sherab said:

I prefer to think of this third consciousness as primary, basic or fundamental 'consciousness'. Or perhaps, pre-consciousness may be more accurate.

Malcolm wrote:

It is actually termed "neutral consciousness" in Dzogchen teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 11th, 2017 at 10:58 PM

Title: Re: Practical Recognition of Ignorance

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is a third ignorance, which exists prior to these two, called "the ignorance identical with the cause." This simply means that prior to the potential of consciousness arising as a display, consciousness is unaware of itself.

Anonymous X said:

Consciousness is unaware of itself. Is this the same as consciousness without an object? Is there consciousness without an object?

If the ignorance is identical with the cause, it would mean the end of consciousness and its display (8 consciousnesses) in full Buddhahood, no? Where do you put this reflexive awareness (svasamvedana)?

Please try to answer simply, if possible.

Malcolm wrote:

Svasamvedana is not part of Dzogchen teachings. It is a theory of Sautrantikas and Yogacara.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 11th, 2017 at 8:23 AM

Title: Re: Kalacakra Root Tantra

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

Another section of the mulatantra has been traced; see the July 9 blog entry:

<http://prajnaquest.fr/blog/>

Minobu said:

Nice to learn madame Blavatsky had visited and studied in Tibet in the late 1800's.

i never knew this i always thought she was just someone who Aleister Crowley studied and received knowledge from after she died.

I think they worked on the tarot deck Toth together.

Malcolm wrote:

No, Crowley worked on the Thoth Tarot with Lady Frieda Harris towards the end of his life. It was his magnum opus in many ways.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 11th, 2017 at 8:20 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

David N. Snyder said:

And this is why we have the various sects in Buddhism and other religions. Sectarianism in Buddhism started around 285 BCE, shortly after the Second Council. The differences started out small and then through the polemics got exacerbated. The initial differences were small and usually were around Vinaya issues.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it started much earlier than that. It started during the time of the Buddha. Devadatta was the first sectarian. I am sure there were others.

David N. Snyder said:

Correct and the Devadatta schism was over Vinaya issues on how strenuous the rules should be for monks. The wide scale differences of other schools of Buddhism was after the Second Council.

Malcolm wrote:

I think it is highly unlikely that the disputes recorded during the third council originated only after the second council. But this merely my opinion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 11th, 2017 at 8:10 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

David N. Snyder said:

And this is why we have the various sects in Buddhism and other religions. Sectarianism in Buddhism started around 285 BCE, shortly after the Second Council. The differences started out small and then through the polemics got exacerbated. The initial differences were small and usually were around Vinaya issues.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it started much earlier than that. It started during the time of the Buddha. Devadatta was the first sectarian. I am sure there were others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 11th, 2017 at 8:08 AM

Title: Re: Practical Recognition of Ignorance

Content:

Sherab said:

So why is there a grasping of a self?

Malcolm wrote:

Grasping at a self is the fundamental perceptual error plaguing sentient beings. It is connate. It has always been there.

Sherab said:

I would argue that the lack of insight on the emptiness of all phenomena is what enable a grasping at a self. If there is insight on emptiness, there will be no grasping at a self.

Malcolm wrote:

It is called connate ignorance in other teachings than Dzogchen because sentient beings do not recognize the nature of their own minds, inseparable clarity and emptiness. The way the Sakypas frame this, for example, is because the emptiness of the mind is not recognized, this causes nirvana. Because the clarity of the mind is not recognized, this causes samsara. Because their inseparability is not recognized, this is the source of the misperception of self. So, it is not simply a matter of lacking insight into emptiness alone. It is a matter of not recognizing the nature of the mind in its totality. The Dzogchen account, given above, is very different. The Sakya theory has another interesting twist— they identify tathāgatagarbha as the inseparability aspect of inseparable clarity and emptiness because clarity and emptiness are themselves extremes to be avoided.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 11th, 2017 at 8:03 AM

Title: Re: Practical Recognition of Ignorance

Content:

Sherab said:

So why is there a grasping of a self?

Malcolm wrote:

Grasping at a self is the fundamental perceptual error plaguing sentient beings. It is connate. It has always been there.

While the answer to why there is a grasping at a self is answered in Dzogchen teachings, the rest of Buddhist teaching merely treat it as an ineluctable fact of being sentient.

Anonymous X said:

What is short answer for grasping at a self in Dzogchen teachings?

Malcolm wrote:

In Dzogchen teachings, when the potential of consciousness manifests as its own display, if that display is not recognized as its own state, this is called "the connate ignorance." It is called connate (lhan gcig skyes) because it arises in the presence of a similitude of subject and object perception, i.e. it is the the ignorance that arises with the display. Even Samantabhadra experiences this ignorance.

When the perceived display is reified as other, self-grasping ensues immediately. This reification following nonrecognition is called "the imputing ignorance." Following this the twelve limbs of dependent origination begin and there is a bifurcation between samsara and nirvana, often described as "samsara and nirvana turning their backs on one another."

There is a third ignorance, which exists prior to these two, called "the ignorance identical with the cause." This simply means that prior to the potential of consciousness arising as a display, consciousness is unaware of itself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 11th, 2017 at 7:51 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

David N. Snyder said:

Correct, however it was still anatta/emptiness, in their view, just their interpretation of it.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't see how you can say that. It certainly was not how their opponents saw it

Coëmgenu said:

I read a paper recently that claimed that the Pudgalavāda polemicized against "anātmanvāda", or anātman-framed-as-Buddhist-heresy.

Malcolm wrote:

We have the detailed polemics with Pudgalavadins recorded both in the Katthavatthu and the ninth chapter of the Koshabhashyam. It is very clear they thought the present "no self" orthodoxy of modern Buddhism was a complete misunderstanding of Buddha's teachings. In Tibetan texts this is frequently brought up as a caveat about defining Buddhist teachings in terms of the three or four seals of the doctrine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 11th, 2017 at 7:41 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The most widespread school of Buddhism in ancient India were the Pudgalavadins, who insisted, based on the hinayana sutras. That there was an inexpressible self that was different than the aggregates

David N. Snyder said:

Correct, however it was still anatta/emptiness, in their view, just their interpretation of it.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't see how you can say that. It certainly was not how their opponents saw it

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 11th, 2017 at 7:25 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

But as I pointed out to Lucas, other religions like Hinduism and Jainism, present something similar to 4NT, like the existence to Duhkha up to the path to cessation! While it does differ in many aspects with regards to Buddha's path, it does has many similarities like renunciation! While dependent arising and emptiness is a 100% Buddhist thing, as Malcolm pointed out.

David N. Snyder said:

However, they differ from Buddhism right at the outset with their insistence of Atman, diametrically opposed to the anatta of Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

The most widespread school of Buddhism in ancient India were the Pudgalavadins, who insisted, based on the hinayana sutras. That there was an inexpressible self that was different than the aggregates

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 11th, 2017 at 12:29 AM

Title: Re: Practical Recognition of Ignorance

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The fundamental ignorance is grasping a self.

Sherab said:

So why is there a grasping of a self?

Malcolm wrote:

Grasping at a self is the fundamental perceptual error plaguing sentient beings. It is connate. It has always been there.

While the answer to why there is a grasping at a self is answered in Dzogchen teachings, the rest of Buddhist teaching merely treat it as an ineluctable fact of being sentient.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 11th, 2017 at 12:24 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Seeker12 said:

The bottom line is that it seems to me that all Buddhist teachings can fit under the 4 noble truths, but not all Buddhist teachings can fit under DO.

Malcolm wrote:

Give me an example of a "Buddhist" teaching that does not fit under DO, and I will show you it is a non-Buddhist teaching.

Seeker12 said:

Let me put it another way, actually, as I think that my last post was a bit questionable...

The relative manifestation of all Buddhist teachings falls under the umbrella of the 4 NT, properly understood, I think.

The relative manifestation of the teaching on DO would fall under the header of the 4 NT.

However, the relative manifestation of teachings on, say, the different realms, or teachings on the nature of nirvana, etc could be conceived of as distinct from that of DO, which has it's own relative manifestation.

Ultimately, as I said in the quote from the Avatamsaka Sutra, I think enlightened knowledge is unfragmented. But its relative manifestations are myriad. All of those relative manifestations fit under the 4 NT, conceptually.

Malcolm wrote:

Dependent origination is peace, freedom from proliferation, it is nirvana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 10th, 2017 at 11:51 PM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Seeker12 said:

The bottom line is that it seems to me that all Buddhist teachings can fit under the 4 noble truths, but not all Buddhist teachings can fit under DO.

Malcolm wrote:

Give me an example of a "Buddhist" teaching that does not fit under DO, and I will show you it is a non-Buddhist teaching.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 10th, 2017 at 11:45 PM

Title: Re: Kalacakra Root Tantra

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

Another section of the mulatantra has been traced; see the July 9 blog entry:

<http://prajnaquest.fr/blog/>

Malcolm wrote:

Nice find. I would amend his translation of the cited verse as follows however:

sems can sems nyid 'od gsal zhing |
gdod nas skye 'gag gnas bral te |
thog ma med pa'i sngon rol nas |
dang po mchog gi sangs rgyas te |
rgyu med rkyen gyis ma bslad pa |

The mind essence of sentient beings is luminosity,
from the start free of arising, ceasing and abiding.
From the beginningless past
the adibuddha
lacks a cause and is uncontaminated by conditions.

Crazywisdom said:

So this does not square w the geluk view of Buddhahood arising by conditions, no?

Malcolm wrote:

The Gelugpa would argue the mind essence here, luminosity, is their mind of clear light, which they regard as a permanent continuum which has no first cause, thus it is without a cause; and is not altered by conditions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 10th, 2017 at 11:42 PM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Seeker12 said:

some common conceptions of religions just basically don't want to feel suffering and, instead, they want to feel a 'good' state instead.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhism is no different here. Buddhists wish to cease suffering. The absence of suffering is "feeling a good state." After all, the Buddha has only pleasant sensations, no painful ones.

Seeker12 said:

It seems to me that from the perspective of an enlightened one, everything in Buddhism fits within the 4NT.

Malcolm wrote:

Again, the first three truths are a diagnostic methodology. But they are not the essence of the teachings. What is the essence of the teachings?

ye dharmā hetu-prabhavā hetuṃ teṣāṃ tathāgato hy avadat, teṣāṃ ca yo nirodha evaṃ vādī mahāśramaṇa

Roughly, "The Tathāgata has spoken of the cause of the production of phenomena, and likewise the great mendicant has also spoken of their cessation."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 10th, 2017 at 11:34 PM

Title: Re: Sources for yidam practices not requiring empowerment?

Content:

smcj said:

So the difference between levels of tantras is more a function of empowerments than deities.

So if I understand you correctly, it depends on the specific empowerment given. That means two people could be sitting side by side doing the same practice the same way, but if one had a more elaborate empowerment than the other they would effectively be practicing different levels of tantra. Is that right?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, two people, sitting side by side, practicing Mahakarunika, the four armed form of Avalokiteśvara, could be practicing completely different teachings based on whether they received a carya tantra transmission or an anuyoga transmission.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 10th, 2017 at 11:32 PM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Seeker12 said:

some common conceptions of religions just basically don't want to feel suffering and, instead, they want to feel a 'good' state instead.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhism is no different here. Buddhists wish to cease suffering. The absence of suffering is "feeling a good state." After all, the Buddha has only pleasant sensations, no painful ones.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 10th, 2017 at 11:28 PM

Title: Re: Where did buddha teach the tantra?

Content:

diamind said:

Where did buddha teach the tantra? Any books explaining where he taught what?

Malcolm wrote:

Different tantras were taught in different places. Not in only one place.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 10th, 2017 at 11:20 PM

Title: Re: Sources for yidam practices not requiring empowerment?

Content:

smcj said:

So then the standard 4 arm Chenrezig is which level of tantra?

Grigoris said:

Every level, as far as I have been taught.

smcj said:

As in there are different versions for all 4 levels, or as in the standard Tongton Gyalpo version has elements of each level?

Malcolm wrote:

Thangton Gyalpo's sadhana is basically a kriya tantra sadhana. Kriya tantra sadhanas can be practices as self-generation practices from the point of view of Caryā tantra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 10th, 2017 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: Sources for yidam practices not requiring empowerment?

Content:

smcj said:

If self-generation isn't the defining characteristic of HYT, what then defines a HYT practice? Yab Yum deities?

Malcolm wrote:

Kriya tantra through -yoga tantra has the vase empowerment.

Yoga tantra introduces the vajramaster empowerment, as well as the empowerments of the five families.

Highest Yoga Tantra introduces the inner three empowerments, secret, Prajna's pristine consciousness and word empowerment.

So the difference between levels of tantras is more a function of empowerments than deities.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 10th, 2017 at 11:04 PM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There are more important principles deserving of consideration in Buddhadharma, notably, dependent origination.

Seeker12 said:

Is that not included in the 4NT?

In the Khenjuk, and I think likewise in the Abhidharmasamuccaya, within the 4th NT of the "Path" it says basically that "as a remedy for delusion, 'contemplation of interdependence' establishes the fact that all outer and inner phenomena originate in dependent connection, and thus arise free from eternalism or nihilism..." This quote is from the Khenjuk, and the AS says, basically the same: "For those whose character is dominated by delusion (bhuyomohacarita) the object is meditation on conditioned origination (pratityasamutpada) which concerns conditioned nature (idam pratyayata)..."

It seems to me that dependent origination is sort of a subset of the 4NT, in other words, and is included in the 4th NT (and perhaps in the 2nd as well in an explanatory role). Generally all knowledge of samsara would be included in the 1st, all knowledge of the cause of samsara would be included in the 2nd, all knowledge of the end of samara would be included in the 3rd, and all knowledge of the means to that end - including understanding DO - would be included in the 4th. This can absolutely be understood from a Mahayana point of view.

Malcolm wrote:

You are missing the point: all religions recognize that suffering exists, that it has a cause, and it can cease. They merely disagree about the means. In that case then, what is unique about Buddha's teachings? Certainly not the first three truths. Moreover, every religion has their idea of right view, etc. So the eightfold path, arguably, is not so unique either. So we are left with the question: what doctrine is absolutely unique to Buddhadharma? That, I would argue, and have for many years, is dependent origination and its corollary, emptiness free from extremes. Moreover, the Buddha did not invent this idea. This has been the consistent teaching of all the Buddhas of past, is the teaching of the Buddha of the presence, and will be the teaching of all Buddhas of the future.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 10th, 2017 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: Kalacakra Root Tantra

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

Another section of the mulatantra has been traced; see the July 9 blog entry:

<http://prajnaquest.fr/blog/>

Malcolm wrote:

Nice find. I would amend his translation of the cited verse as follows however:

sems can sems nyid 'od gsal zhing |
gdod nas skye 'gag gnas bral te |
thog ma med pa'i sngon rol nas |
dang po mchog gi sangs rgyas te |
rgyu med rkyen gyis ma bslad pa |
The mind essence of sentient beings is luminosity,
from the start free of arising, ceasing and abiding.
From the beginningless past
the adibuddha
lacks a cause and is uncontaminated by conditions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 10th, 2017 at 10:13 PM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I never questioned that the 4NT were part of Dharma, that would be stupid, I merely question whether a diagnostic protocol can really be considered the essence of Buddhist teaching.

Sherab said:

If one is not aware that one has a sickness, would one even bother to take the medicine? How would one know if one has a sickness? One needs a diagnostic tool.

A thorough understanding of the 4NT is what would establish one properly on a Dharmic path. In that sense, I would argue that it is an essential Buddhist teaching.

Malcolm wrote:

This diagnostic idea is common to all religions: there is a problem, the problem has a cause, the problem can be resolved because there is a method to solve that problem. There is no need to enshrine common sense as a religious dogma.

There are more important principles deserving of consideration in Buddhadharma, notably, dependent origination. As the Buddha said, "Whoever sees dependent origination sees the Dharma. Whoever sees the Dharma sees me." When Nāgārjuna set out to correct Hinayāna deviations from the Buddha's true message, he did not focus on the 4NT, his refrain again and again was that one needed to understand what "arising from conditions" really meant and how understanding the Buddha's actual message undermined all substantialist misunderstandings of what the Buddha taught. Elevating the 4NT bears the error of promoting a prescriptive understanding of Buddhadharma when there are more important principles to understand.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 10th, 2017 at 12:04 PM

Title: Re: Emptiness: expedient or certain teaching?

Content:

rachmiel said:

Is emptiness -- like annica, dukkha, karma, rebirth, the two truths, dependent arising -- an expedient/provisional, rather than certain teaching?

In other words, upon enlightenment, does "emptiness" reveal itself to have been just another story, another log of the raft?

Malcolm wrote:

Emptiness is the definitive teaching of the Dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 10th, 2017 at 12:02 PM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I never questioned that the 4NT were part of Dharma, that would be stupid, I merely question whether a diagnostic protocol can really be considered the essence of Buddhist teaching.

David N. Snyder said:

Here is what you wrote on page 4 of this thread:

Sherab said:

I would reiterate that the 4NT and the 8FP are foundational to any specific path. Even if they are not taught in a specific path, they are unspoken assumptions.

Malcolm wrote:

The path offered by the 4NT are specific to Hinayāna teachings. It is not a path for Mahāyāna. In particular, they are not the path that is followed at all in Vajrayāna, since the 4NT offer a path of renunciation.

Correct, the path offered by the 4NT is specific to Hinayāna teachings. Hinayāna teachings are part of the Dharma, but they are not its essence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 10th, 2017 at 11:40 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Since you like text critical methodology you might want to reconsider this point of view.

https://en.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/Dhammacakkappavattana_Sutta

David N. Snyder said:

Some of the scholars suggest that they may not have been part of the first sermon and "are a matter of ongoing discussion and research.[12][13][14][15][note 5]" nothing conclusive yet (in their views). But they agree that the 4NT are part of the Dharma and other research on the topic has shown that the repetitiveness of the teachings found in the Tripitakas, demonstrate that it is central to the Dharma.

Malcolm wrote:

I never questioned that the 4NT were part of Dharma, that would be stupid, I merely question whether a diagnostic protocol can really be considered the essence of Buddhist teaching.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 10th, 2017 at 11:05 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Since you like text critical methodology you might want to reconsider this point of view.

https://en.m.wikipedia.org/wiki/Dhammacakkappavattana_Sutta

David N. Snyder said:

The Four Noble Truths were the first teachings of the Buddha, found in both the Theravada and Mahayana Canons (Pali Canon and Mahayana Tripitaka).

From an older thread here:

Sönarn said:

What do you not understand? The 4 NT is the most important teaching of the Buddha, it's a Direct Introduction, it points directly to the essence ...

Sönarn

(from Dzogchen view of 4 Noble Truths, thread here:

<https://dharmaheel.net/viewtopic.php?t=13390>)

How to Knowingly Practice

The Four Noble Truths of The Enlightened,
The First Teaching of Buddha Shakyamuni

Compiled, translated, and composed by His Eminence Dzogchen Khenpo Choga Rinpoche
<http://www.thebuddhapath.org/>

Chogyal Namkhai Norbu said:

Even if we have different methods in the teaching, such as Tantra and Dzogchen, they are always based on the Four Noble Truths. There is a teaching that is universal to all Buddhists called the Four Noble Truths.

https://books.google.com/books?id=m4Oj1VGwj4cC&pg=PA14&lpg=PA14&dq=four+noble+truths+dzogchen&source=bl&ots=JaKbRnyW-O&sig=np0hPzNEXI0L0_Mkh832zSlDtCg&hl=en&sa=X&ved=0ahUKEwjbgJu6yf3UAhVQ8mMKHR3WAlU4ChDoAQhGMAs#v=onepage&q=four%20noble%20truths%20dzogchen&f=false

14th Dalai Lama Tenzin Gyatso said:

When the great universal teacher Shakyamuni Buddha first spoke about the Dharma in the noble land of India, he taught the four noble truths: true sufferings, true origins or causes of sufferings, true stoppings or cessations of sufferings, and true pathway minds or paths leading to the stoppings of sufferings.

Thich Nhat Hanh said:

The first Dharma talk of the Buddha after his enlightenment was about the Four Noble Truths. They express the cream of his teachings and method of practice. The Buddha continued teaching the Four Noble Truths right up until his “great passing away” (mahaparinirvana). It is important for us to study and learn deeply the practice of the Four Noble Truths.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 10th, 2017 at 8:16 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Strive said:

there is no liberation without 4 noble truths and practicing 8fold path

Malcolm wrote:

Of course there is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 10th, 2017 at 7:26 AM

Title: Re: Practical Recognition of Ignorance

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

.... there are two kinds of ignorance (āvidya): afflictive ignorance and non-afflictive ignorance.

Afflictive ignorance is the first segment of the twelve segments of dependent origination.

Within non-afflictive ignorance there are also two kinds: the the ignorance of the absence of omniscience, for example, in Arhats and Pratyekabuddhas, and the knowledge obscuration from which innate self-grasping arises, which in turn is the cause for the three poisons. This knowledge obscuration is only eradicated in full buddhahood.

Sherab said:

I prefer to see these "ignorances" as one level up from the more basic meaning of ignorance, namely the lack of insight. These definitions of ignorances are definitions that incorporate their (direct?) consequences.

Malcolm wrote:

The fundamental ignorance is grasping a self.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 10th, 2017 at 4:30 AM

Title: Re: Practical Recognition of Ignorance

Content:

Jesse said:

I was thinking earlier, and I began to wonder.. what is ignorance really?

Malcolm wrote:

First one has to recognize there are two kinds of ignorance (āvidya): afflictive ignorance and non-afflictive ignorance.

Afflictive ignorance is the first segment of the twelve segments of dependent origination.

Within non-afflictive ignorance there are also two kinds: the the ignorance of the absence of omniscience, for example, in Arhats and Pratyekabuddhas, and the knowledge obscuration from which innate self-grasping arises, which in turn is the cause for the three poisons. This knowledge obscuration is only eradicated in full buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 10th, 2017 at 1:46 AM

Title: Re: Sources for yidam practices not requiring empowerment?

Content:

fckw said:

Gandalf (what's his mantra in any case?)

Malcolm wrote:

Oṃ aḥ hūṃ vajraguru gandalf siddhi phala hūṃ

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 9th, 2017 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: Sources for yidam practices not requiring empowerment?

Content:

smcj said:

A couple of questions for Cone:

In the standard Chenrezig practice one does visualize oneself as the deity while doing the mantra recitation.

A. Wouldn't that aspect require an initiation?

B. Also, doesn't that by definition make it a HYT practice?

Malcolm wrote:

Self-generation exists in Carya tantra on up through anuyoga.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 9th, 2017 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The one thing that Hinayāna and common Mahāyāna do share however is that they are both paths of renunciation.

Tuybachau said:

- Bodhisattvas practicing Prajnaparamita on the Mahayana path do not either renounce or appropriate either Samsara or Nirvana.
- Mahayana is not about renunciation and/or appropriation.

Malcolm wrote:

Common Mahāyāna is precisely about renunciation. This is so well known there is no point in even arguing about it. Like Hinayāna, common Mahāyāna regards the five aggregates and their sense objects as something poisonous to abandon.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 9th, 2017 at 10:41 PM

Title: Re: Dudjom Dzambala Practice

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well,-what about ChNN's authority? Presumably he doesn't think that making Dzogchen popular will weaken its benefit, does he?

Malcolm wrote:

He often mentions that if people do not keep their samaya, it will damage the teachings. When you make teachings more popular, more people with broken samaya come into contact with them, etc. You do the math.

Adamantine said:

Yes but what is the math happening in the minds of wisdom masters like ChNN, Dudjom Rinpoche, Garchen Rinpoche, HHDL, Karmapa, etc. who decide that giving large public transmissions—even some globally webcast ones—have benefits that outweigh the pitfalls?

Malcolm wrote:

That is a good question, and one I am not prepared to answer for them. All I can tell you is what I have found in classical literature on the subject. For example, ChNN pointed out that Longde practitioners ceased attaining rainbow body at a certain point in time because of broken samayas in the lineage. And of course, I have no idea if any present day Longde practitioners are going to attain rainbow body either, even though ChNN's revival of Longde in Longsal is a very important development. All we can expect, as practitioners of recent terma cycles, is that the samayas in these lineages are pure and thus the teachings will be very, very effective for their practitioners.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 9th, 2017 at 5:45 AM

Title: Re: Dudjom Dzambala Practice

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well,-what about ChNN's authority? Presumably he doesn't think that making Dzogchen popular will weaken its benefit, does he?

Malcolm wrote:

He often mentions that if people do not keep their samaya, it will damage the teachings. When you make teachings more popular, more people with broken samaya come into contact with them, etc. You do the math.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 9th, 2017 at 5:16 AM

Title: Re: Best english translation of the bardo thodol?

Content:

odysseus said:

W Y Evans Wentz. The original Enligsh translation, nothing beats that one.

Malcolm wrote:

surely you are kidding,

odysseus said:

No, actually this is my first reading! It has a charming attitude of old English understanding. I don't even know if there is anything better.

Malcolm wrote:

It has the charming attitude of being completely wrong in so many ways.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 9th, 2017 at 5:14 AM

Title: Re: Dudjom Dzambala Practice

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Kunzang Dorje states. "All Dharmas are weakened through popularity," meaning the more popular a teaching is and the more widespread it becomes, the weaker its benefit.

dzogchungpa said:

Well, maybe, but I don't really see how that could be established.

Malcolm wrote:

It is established through the authority of many masters in all traditions, and in fact is the primary justification for the Terma tradition: i.e., that as termas are promulgated more widely, their blessings weaken correspondingly. It is for this reason that so many transmissions were "gcig brgyud" transmissions, transmissions restricted to one recipient.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 9th, 2017 at 5:11 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The path offered by the 4NT are specific to Hinayāna teachings. It is not a path for Mahāyāna. In particular, they are not the path that is followed at all in Vajrayāna, since the 4NT offer a path of renunciation.

Remember the nine yānas are each independent vehicles, with their own basis, path, and result.

Seeker12 said:

I don't think I understand this, as the 16 mind moments that comprise the path of seeing basically all consist of experiential realization of the 4 noble truths. This is taught clearly in the Mahayana and by Vajrayana masters such as Patrul Rinpoche.

Malcolm wrote:

The 16 moments of the Hinayāna path of seeing are not shared with Mahāyāna at all. Though 16 moments with respect to the four truths are mentioned in the Abhisamayālaṅkāra, they are completely different and have to do with recognizing, for example, that there is no truth in the truth of suffering at all, i.e. the truth of the suffering is the fact that suffering is not established, that suffering has the nature of the dharmadhātu, and so on. Moreover, the Abhisamayālaṅkāra that for Mahāyanis the truth of the path is the six perfections and not the 8FP. The one thing that Hinayāna and common Mahāyāna do share however is that they are both paths of renunciation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 9th, 2017 at 3:15 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Grigoris said:

Tell that one to all the Vajrayana nuns and monks (renunciates) and see what their response is.

Malcolm wrote:

If you are a Vajrayāna practitioner who happens to be ordained, your Vajrayāna practice is more important than your path of renunciation vows.

Grigoris said:

Uh-huh.

I noticed that you've been avoiding my other question, so I'll take it you have no better alternative to the Four Dharma Seals to judge teachings by then...

I guess I'll just stick to my naive insistence...

Malcolm wrote:

I do have a better alternative, it is found in the Akṣayamati-nirdeśha sūtra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 9th, 2017 at 3:11 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you read carefully, you will understand that the Buddha (Gautama) states very clearly that when he was under the bodhitree, he rediscovered the principle of dependent origination through recalling all of his past lives, which necessarily means he recalled teachings he had received from previous buddhas.

Wayfarer said:

I have never encountered that interpretation before. Does it say this explicitly that the Buddha learned the truth of dependent origination, in previous lives, from other Buddhas? The brief description of his recollection of earlier lives that I am familiar with is this one:

When the mind was thus concentrated, purified, bright, unblemished, rid of defilement, pliant, malleable, steady, & attained to imperturbability, I directed it to the knowledge of recollecting my past lives. I recollected my manifold past lives, i.e., one birth, two... five, ten... fifty, a hundred, a thousand, a hundred thousand, many eons of cosmic contraction, many eons of cosmic expansion, many eons of cosmic contraction & expansion: 'There I had such a name, belonged to such a clan, had such an appearance. Such was my food, such my experience of pleasure & pain, such the end of my life. Passing away from that state, I re-arose there. There too I had such a name, belonged to such a clan, had such an appearance. Such was my food, such my experience of pleasure & pain, such the end of my life. Passing away from that state, I re-arose here.' Thus I remembered my manifold past lives in their modes & details.

— MN 36

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, "Thus I remembered my manifold past lives in their modes & details..." How can one imagine he did not recall teachings he had received from the many buddhas he attended in the past? It is not thinkable.

Wayfarer said:

The canonical declaration of the Buddha as 'self-enlightened' is this:

I have heard that on one occasion, when the Blessed One was newly Self-awakened, he was staying at Uruvela on the bank of the Nerañjara River, at the foot of the Goatherd's Banyan Tree. Then, while he was alone and in seclusion, this line of thinking arose in his awareness: "One suffers if dwelling without reverence or deference. Now on what brahman or contemplative can I dwell in dependence, honoring and respecting him?"

Then the thought occurred to him: "It would be for the sake of perfecting an unperfected aggregate of virtue that I would dwell in dependence on another brahman or contemplative, honoring and respecting him. However, in this world with its devas, Maras, & Brahmas, in this generation with its brahmans and contemplatives, its royalty and common-folk, I do not see another brahman or contemplative more consummate in virtue than I, on whom I could dwell in dependence, honoring and respecting him.
— Iti 112

Malcolm wrote:

"self-awakened" is a translation gloss. It is not accurate. It is a result of interpretive license.

Wayfarer said:

So, these sources don't 'state clearly' that the Buddha learned from earlier Buddhas in previous lives. Is that stated somewhere else in the Nikayas?

Malcolm wrote:

It is daft to ignore all the suttas where Buddha describes being a student of Buddhas in past lives, such as Dipamkara. Seriously.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 9th, 2017 at 3:07 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you read the Majjhima Nikaya, there is a sutra there where the Buddha gives an account of his awakening, describing in some detail that he recalled the view of dependent origination in the recollection of his myriad past lives, with which he attained buddhahood.

David N. Snyder said:

So even if we use your view of past buddhas for determining the original Dharma (and not just Gautama's Dispensation), there is still this which you have quoted yourself and goes to show that buddhas review their myriad past lives, recall dependent origination and attain buddhahood. Using your own words, there is still an original Dharma there that is taught by all buddhas. This is the Dharma Gautama rediscovered and taught, the Path.

Avoid all evil, Cultivate the good, Purify your mind; this is the teaching of the Buddhas.
Dhammapada 183

This is an original Dharma too, taught by all buddhas.

" So too, monks, I saw the ancient path, the ancient road traveled by the Perfectly Enlightened Ones of the past. And what is that ancient path, that ancient road? It is just this Noble Eightfold Path; that is, right view, right intention, right speech, right action, right livelihood, right effort, right mindfulness, right concentration. I followed that path and by doing so I have directly known aging-and-death, its origin, its cessation, and the way leading to its cessation. I have directly known birth ... existence ... clinging ... craving ... feeling ... contact... the six sense bases ... name-and-form ... consciousness ... volitional formations, their origin, their cessation, and the way leading to their cessation. Having directly known them, I have explained them to the monks, the nuns, the male lay followers, and the female lay followers. This spiritual life, monks, has become successful and prosperous, extended, popular, widespread, well proclaimed among devas and humans. "

(SN 12:65; II104-7)

Malcolm wrote:

You said "original Buddhism," I said there was no such thing. It is impossible. These citations do not negate my point, they reinforce it. That is why I brought them up (thought the sutta reference I was referring to is more or less an identical passage in the Majjhima Nikaya).

But buddhas have also taught an even more direct path than the reversal of dependent origination.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 9th, 2017 at 3:01 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The path offered by the 4NT are specific to Hinayāna teachings. It is not a path for Mahāyāna. In particular, they are not the path that is followed at all in Vajrayāna, since the 4NT offer a path of renunciation.

Grigoris said:

Tell that one to all the Vajrayana nuns and monks (renunciates) and see what their response is.

Malcolm wrote:

If you are a Vajrayāna practitioner who happens to be ordained, your Vajrayāna practice is more important than your path of renunciation vows.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 9th, 2017 at 2:59 AM

Title: Re: Dudjom Dzambala Practice

Content:

pemachophel said:

The great Garchen Rinpoche, at a series of empowerments in L.A. a couple of years ago, also discussed this issue. He talked about the commitments and the dangers inherent in failing to keep those commitments. He said He had thought a lot about whether it is good to give empowerments to all-comers. At the end, He decided that the potential benefits out-weighed the potential dangers -- meaning Enlightenment in this, the next, within eight, or within a maximum of 16 lifetimes. However, at least one Lama I have studied with said that "guarantee" depended on at least the bare minimum of keeping samaya.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, if you do not maintain samaya, the max 16 lifetime promise is a no go.

pemachophel said:

As a corollary of this, somewhere on line I once read something by a Lama who said that, if all people wanted was a no-strings-attached blessing, then that's what they should ask for, not an empowerment. Sorry I don't remember what Lama said that and where it is on line.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a comment made frequently by ChNN. He maintains there is no such thing as an empowerment "given as a blessing." All empowerments, he maintains, come with commitments. And since all empowerments contain refuge and bodhicitta ceremonies, it is impossible to give someone an empowerment who has not taken refuge.

pemachophel said:

I'm more talking about the bind we find ourselves in here in the Kaliyuga where everything, including the Dharma, is degenerating.

Malcolm wrote:

With respect to this, Kunzang Dorje (1130-?), the author of the Vajra Bridge Longed commentary, was relating the fact that his teacher, Dzeng Dharmabodhi (1052-1168) was a direct disciple of Phadampa Sanggye. Dzeng met Phadampa when he was eighteen, and spent a year and a half with him. With respect to the surprising amount of material in Zhi byed, Kunzang Dorje stated it was impossible for Padampa to have actually said that much since he primarily taught with symbols and did not chatter very much with people, or give teachings with many words. With respect to that, Kunzang Dorje states. "All Dharmas are weakened through popularity," meaning the more popular a teaching is and the more widespread it becomes, the weaker its benefit. Such observations should temper our evangelical zeal, especially with respect to Vajrayāna cycles.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 8th, 2017 at 12:52 PM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you read the Majjhima Nikaya, there is a sutra there where the Buddha gives an account of his awakening, describing in some detail that he recalled the view of dependent origination in the recollection of his myriad past lives, with which he attained buddhahood.

David N. Snyder said:

Yes, I fully accept that. I think the whole issue is as LE noted, just semantics. You are taking a different notion of original Buddhism. I am fine with it just being the historical Gautama Buddha and his Dispensation beginning with his awakening around 528 BCE. I fully accept that there were other buddhas, in fact I like those teachings, it makes the Dharma universal, applicable to all places and all times, all worlds. It is just that for original Buddhism, I am using it in the historical sense of the historical Gautama from the 6th century BCE.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and I am saying it is an entirely inaccurate way to look at the Dharma, one which privileges western text critical methodology even when it flies completely in the face of what the Buddha actually taught about buddhas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 8th, 2017 at 12:41 PM

Title: Re: Best english translation of the bardo thodol?

Content:

WuMing said:

What about the new translation done by Elio Guarisco

<http://shop.shangshungfoundation.com/en/books/312-the-tibetan-book-of-the-dead-awakening-upon-dying-9781583945551.html>?

Has anybody read it? Any thoughts about it?

Johnny Dangerous said:

I really loved it personally. I have no idea about the accuracy of translation or anything, but I thought this edition was wonderful...mainly for the fact that it includes a sizeable chunk of commentary and explanatory material from ChNN, and is presented in a Dzogchen context. My only previous experience was with the Trungpa/Fremantle version.

Malcolm wrote:

The Bardo Thos grol is Dzogchen through and through

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 8th, 2017 at 12:40 PM

Title: Re: Best english translation of the bardo thodol?

Content:

odysseus said:

W Y Evans Wentz. The original Enligsh translation, nothing beats that one.

Malcolm wrote:

surely you are kidding,

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 8th, 2017 at 12:38 PM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Not more semantics...it proves there is no original Buddhism.

David N. Snyder said:

Okay, we'll just have to agree to disagree on that then.

Malcolm wrote:

If you read the Majjihma Nikaya, there is a sutra there where the Buddha gives an account of his awakening, describing in some detail that he recalled the view of dependent origination in the recollection of his myriad past lives, with which he attained buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 8th, 2017 at 12:35 PM

Title: Re: Dudjom Dzambala Practice

Content:

pemachophel said:

Sometimes it's almost as if Tibetan Buddhism is a business and empowerments are the product, with Lamas coming to the West mainly to raise money for their monasteries back home.

Malcolm wrote:

Tibetans made the same observation about Indians. Not much has changed in a thousand years.

Adamantine said:

Well that must be a good sign that the transmission lineage is intact!

Though the Indian masters must have been better businessmen, since they managed to get bags of gold and modern Lamas maybe an envelope with $21 tops. . .

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on the lama, what he is selling, and where.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 8th, 2017 at 12:30 PM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Not more semantics...it proves there is no original Buddhism.

No one is perfectly enlightened by themselves. If you read carefully, you will understand that the Buddha (Gautama) states very clearly that when he was under the bodhitree, he rediscovered the principle of dependent origination through recalling all of his past lives, which necessarily means he recalled teachings he had received from previous buddhas. We know this is the case from the sheer number of times he recounts anecdotes from when he was a disciple of other buddhas.

David N. Snyder said:

Again, more semantics. I could have said "perfectly enlightened by himself when he rediscovered the principle of dependent origination through recalling all of his past lives, which necessarily means he recalled teachings he had received from previous buddhas." It still doesn't change the fact that Gautama Buddha taught many things at Jeta Grove, Deer Park in Sarnath, Sravasti, Kushinagar, etc which means there was some Dharma taught at those places and monks, nuns and lay people listened and practiced what they were taught, i.e., some Path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 8th, 2017 at 12:09 PM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Sherab said:

(2) Your post also appears to suggest that there is no distinction between Buddhism and certain Hindu schools because the latter also claim the four seals. But one of the seal is on emptiness. .

Malcolm wrote:

No. None of the seals are on emptiness:

All conditioned/compounded entities/dharmas are impermanent.

All contaminated entities are suffering.

All entities are not self.

Nirvana is peaceful.

It is perfectly possible to read these four statements in a manner consistent with certain Hindu schools, such as classical Advaita Vedanta.

Sherab said:

Looks like there are different versions of the four seals. Here's the one I am referring to:

‘Dus-byas-thams-cad-mi-rtag-pa-red,
“Everything that is conditioned is impermanent.”
Zag-bcas-thams-cad-sdug-bsnga-red,
“Everything that is stained brings suffering.”
Chos-thams-cad-stong-zhin-bdag-med-pa-red,
“All phenomena are empty and devoid of a self.”
Myan-‘das-ni-zhi-ba-red,
“Nirvana is peace.”

I think everyone here would agree that emptiness as taught by the Buddha is definitely something that distinguishes Buddhism from all other religions.

Malcolm wrote:

The source? It has to be non canonical because of the red particle.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 8th, 2017 at 11:38 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Gautama is an emanation of Samantabhadra.

David N. Snyder said:

Okay, then we're still talking the Dispensation of Gautama. It's just that I see Gautama Buddha as a Samyaksambuddha, perfectly enlightened by himself and you see him as an emanation but in the end it is Gautama's Dispensation. I think this just confirms what LE wrote here:

Malcolm wrote:

No one is perfectly enlightened by themselves. If you read carefully, you will understand that the Buddha (Gautama) states very clearly that when he was under the bodhitree, he rediscovered the principle of dependent origination through recalling all of his past lives, which necessarily means he recalled teachings he had received from previous buddhas. We know this is the case from the sheer number of times he recounts anecdotes from when he was a disciple of other buddhas.

Now then, Samantabhadra, of whom Śākyamuni is an emanation, was also an ordinary person, who received teachings, became a buddha as a result, and manifested in this eon as the adibuddha, aka first buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 8th, 2017 at 8:55 AM

Title: Re: Six Syllables of Samantabhadra

Content:

Tolya M said:

I read a short article about these syllables and I have two questions

1) Do syllables stand for certain words or roots (Sanskrit, Gandhari, Tibetan)? For example, the first "A" is for anutpada, aprapancha\avikalpa, vaisAradya. The second "A" is for anabhoga, "Sha" is for ksetra for example... I am familiar with Sanskrit at the level of "saw" in the brackets, unfortunately. I would be very happy if someone responds according to the texts or commentaries.

2) How to write them correctly and in what language? Can I make two rows of three letters for an amulet? Something like the image in the picture, but from clay? I want to replace my Phra Somdej. It split at the corners when I was in the hospital and accidentally dropped it)))

Thank you!!!

Malcolm wrote:

'A (ॐ), according to Longchenpa, represents a sound found in the the Language of Oddiyāna.

'A corresponds to one of the six lokas, and represents its pure aspect. The same with the other five.

The six syllables are themselves the syllabic form of the nirmanakāyas of the six lokas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 8th, 2017 at 8:53 AM

Title: Re: Dudjom Dzambala Practice

Content:

pemachophel said:

Sometimes it's almost as if Tibetan Buddhism is a business and empowerments are the product, with Lamas coming to the West mainly to raise money for their monasteries back home.

Malcolm wrote:

Tibetans made the same observation about Indians. Not much has changed in a thousand years.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 8th, 2017 at 8:48 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Sherab said:

I would reiterate that the 4NT and the 8FP are foundational to any specific path. Even if they are not taught in a specific path, they are unspoken assumptions.

Malcolm wrote:

The path offered by the 4NT are specific to Hinayāna teachings. It is not a path for Mahāyāna. In particular, they are not the path that is followed at all in Vajrayāna, since the 4NT offer a path of renunciation.

Remember the nine yānas are each independent vehicles, with their own basis, path, and result.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 8th, 2017 at 8:38 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I just explained, there are Hindu schools which can also claim them.

Grigoris said:

Let's say there are, and let's say they actually conform to them, does the fact that they call themselves "Hindu" mean they are not Dharma?

And what is the alternative (more trustworthy) measure of Dharma-ness?

Bump.

Malcolm wrote:

It means that their basis, path, and result is different even though they will broadly agree with the four seals.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 8th, 2017 at 7:56 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Norwegian said:

You are referring to the Bodhisattva. Malcolm is referring to the Buddha.

David N. Snyder said:

Okay, no problema, different strokes for different folks. Then this thread is referring to the Dispensation of Gautama.

Malcolm wrote:

Gautama is an emanation of Samantabbadra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 8th, 2017 at 5:22 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

David N. Snyder said:

We are not in Dipankara's Dispensation; but rather the Dispensation of Gautama.

Malcolm wrote:

I am in the dispensation of Samantabhadra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 7th, 2017 at 9:38 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Sherab said:

(1) Your post appears to suggest that there is no underlying view and principles to the Dharma taught by the Buddha. .

Malcolm wrote:

If there was an underlying principal followed by the Buddha, it was solely to remedy ignorance and replace it with knowledge.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 7th, 2017 at 9:34 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Sherab said:

(2) Your post also appears to suggest that there is no distinction between Buddhism and certain Hindu schools because the latter also claim the four seals. But one of the seal is on emptiness. .

Malcolm wrote:

No. None of the seals are on emptiness:

All conditioned/compounded entities/dharmas are impermanent.

All contaminated entities are suffering.

All entities are not self.

Nirvana is peaceful.

It is perfectly possible to read these four statements in a manner consistent with certain Hindu schools, such as classical Advaita Vedanta.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 7th, 2017 at 7:21 AM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

climb-up said:

As I mentioned in a previous post, you have a tendency to be very concise.

Malcolm wrote:

After writing thousands of posts on the internet over the past 20 years, that happens.

climb-up said:

I figure that I your going to practice dzogchen (or try to, as I try to) then you do it and the tradition says you need a guru so you need a guru. That's enough for me.

Malcolm wrote:

Tradition says that if you wish to discover the mind essence, you need a guru to point it out. Why? Because the mind essence will not be discovered by ordinary people trapped in the thicket of concepts and views without the aid of a guru. For example, if someone does not understand the difference between pyrite and gold, they can be deceived because of a similarity in color if they do not have instruction in how to test them. Likewise, without having a way to test the difference between the mind essence and the mind, one can be easily deceived thinking that one is the other because their "color" is similar. Only a qualified guru can help one distinguish mind from the mind essence, just as only a skilled gemologist can help one distinguish between a fake diamond and a real one.

climb-up said:

Similarly, if someone doesn't want to they don't need to. If they feel another path is right for them, I hope they get what they are after and are happy.

Malcolm wrote:

This thread is the Dzogchen forum, last I looked.

climb-up said:

If they don't think they need a guru I certainly don't feel qualified to tell them they do, their just not doing dzogchen (or vajrayana, or anything else that explicitly requires a teacher).

Malcolm wrote:

If someone does not want a guru, then of course they will wind up wandering in samsara for a very long time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 7th, 2017 at 7:16 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Sherab said:

While Buddhas teach according to sentient beings need, they still teach THE DHARMA.

Malcolm wrote:

What this Dharma is has not yet been quantified in this thread. For example, David thinks it is the 4NT and the 8FP. I don't.

The only thing that distinguishes the Buddha's teaching from that of non-Buddhists (excluding Bonpos) is emptiness— not just the simple absence of a self, but emptiness free from extremes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 7th, 2017 at 5:43 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Despite some people's naive insistence that Buddhadharma has to conform to three seals...

Grigoris said:

Why do you consider it naive to judge a teaching as Dharma based on it's conformance to the Four Dharma Seals? What would you consider a better standard of comparison?

Malcolm wrote:

I just explained, there are Hindu schools which can also claim them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 7th, 2017 at 4:12 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

David N. Snyder said:

...all buddhas teach the same Dharma, same path.

Malcolm wrote:

But they clearly don't. They teach whatever Dharma sentient beings need. Some need one kind of Dharma, others other kinds of Dharma. Despite some people's naive insistence that Buddhadharma has to conform to three seals, we can even find nonBuddhist traditions that corresponds to the three seals inso far as they assert all conditioned phenomena are impermanent, all contaminated phenomena are suffering, and all phenomena are not self (brahmin being outside what can be considered "phenomena."

David N. Snyder said:

It is additionally moot, because even if we do accept that different buddhas teach different paths (not a view I hold), then original buddhism could still refer to the Path of this dispensation, that of Siddhartha Gautama.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it cannot because Gautama was not the first Buddha.

David N. Snyder said:

Yes, my approach is a historical one

Malcolm wrote:

One out of many possible historical approaches.

David N. Snyder said:

The historical and original is something some Buddhists aspire to, notably, yes, more so among Theravadins.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 7th, 2017 at 4:06 AM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

climb-up said:

All I am pointing out is that you made an argument purporting to logically prove that you cannot discover the nature of mind without a guru.

Malcolm wrote:

I did not make any such argument. I made a declaration and used an example.

climb-up said:

Oh, well there you go.

To be fair, you did in fact present it as a logical proof, you made a statement and then declared that there was proof of it (see the quotation below with bolded lettering), and that's what I responded too.

Malcolm wrote:

No, I made a statement, declared it was a fact, and used an example to illustrate my point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 7th, 2017 at 1:02 AM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

What standard are you using? Mahāyāna? In this case the original teaching of Śākyamuni Buddha would be the Avatamska Sūtra. Vajrayāna? In this case there are any number of tantras that will claim this position. Dzogchen? The answer is as above.

Lazy_eye said:

Not a question of my standard, but rather David's. He's clearly using the historical approach, which you reject.

Malcolm wrote:

He is using one historical approach. There are others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 7th, 2017 at 1:01 AM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

Anonymous X said:

I sincerely hope your mind is open enough to allow non-Buddhists, non-Dzogchenistas, to awaken fully to their own nature.

Malcolm wrote:

Everyone will become a buddha eventually. First, however, they have to be in the stream of Buddhadharma.

Anonymous X said:

My own teacher was such a one

Malcolm wrote:

I can't speak to this. I do not know who your teacher is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, July 7th, 2017 at 12:57 AM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

climb-up said:

All I am pointing out is that you made an argument purporting to logically prove that you cannot discover the nature of mind without a guru.

Malcolm wrote:

I did not make any such argument. I made a declaration and used an example.

climb-up said:

If people could attain realization of their mind essence without a cause, it would just happen randomly. But it does not. That is the point.

Your saying that saying one can realize the nature of mind without a guru is the same as saying you can do it without a cause.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct.

climb-up said:

Why would those be the same thing? That would be one example (speaking theoretically) of realization without a guru, but just as all pigeons are birds but not all birds are pigeons there are more things that would qualify under the heading of realization without a guru than spontaneous realization with no cause whatsoever.

Malcolm wrote:

Sentient beings do not realize the mind essence without a guru, they cannot see it just as they cannot see their own faces without a mirror. To see the mind essence, one needs the mirror of the guru. Even Samantabhadra has a back story as an ordinary sentient being who received teachings from a Buddha, and then attained buddhahood.

climb-up said:

Also, why would it be random?

Malcolm wrote:

What would some of these other putative causes be?

climb-up said:

If people who have legitimately experienced the nature of mind can still act out of affliction then you can use acting out of affliction as evidence that someone has not experienced the nature of mind.

Malcolm wrote:

When acting out of affliction, one is distracted. It is possible for people who have recognized the mind-essence to be distracted, especially if they spend little time cultivating that and remain content with just a small taste. When one is distracted, one is not maintaining the essence, so to speak.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 6th, 2017 at 10:02 PM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I still would not call this the original Buddhism. Buddhas do not teach according to some plan. Buddhas teach according to the needs of sentient beings. For example, the first buddha of this eon taught Dzogchen, not the 4NT and 8FP. But somehow, I do not think you are likely to accept this. Based on the latter fact, claiming there is some original Buddhism is basically just a faith-based claim, not grounded in facts.

Lazy_eye said:

There seems to be an issue of semantics. When David uses the term "original Buddhism," does he actually mean "the core teachings of all Buddhas past and present, in all world systems that have ever existed"?

Or does he mean "the core teachings that can be attributed, with some certainty, to Siddhartha Gautama" ?

I thought it was the latter, personally. David?

Malcolm wrote:

What standard are you using? Mahāyāna? In this case the original teaching of Śākyamuni Buddha would be the Avatamska Sūtra. Vajrayāna? In this case there are any number of tantras that will claim this position. Dzogchen? The answer is as above.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, July 6th, 2017 at 9:57 PM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

climb-up said:

In this case, there is no cause by which one can discover one's own nature in a concrete sense such that one is without doubt in absence of a guru. The primary difference between the paths of Mahāyāna and Vajrayāna is introduction to one's real state. That is a reason or why your statement would be true, based on theory and tradition, but I don't see how it is a logical proof.

Malcolm wrote:

One cannot see one's own face without a mirror. Likewise, can cannot see the mind essence without a guru.

climb-up said:

You said that the proof that something couldn't happen was that it didn't happen all the time, so I asked why that would prove anything.

Malcolm wrote:

You are suggesting that people can attain realization without a cause. This is rejected in Dzogchen teachings in general. If people could attain realization of their mind essence without a cause, it would just happen randomly. But it does not. That is the point.

Using the example of a crowd, if I tell you to go find John Doe in a large crowd, whom you have never met nor seen a picture of, it is unlikely you find him. Even if you meet a person claiming to be John Doe, you will still have to find someone who knows the John Doe for whom you are searching to confirm you have met the right John Doe. However, once you have met John Doe, and it is confirmed to be the correct John Doe, you will always be able to recognize him on your own. So it is with the mind essence.

climb-up said:

Still, I think that makes my point. Since we all (fully enlightened Buddhas excepted of course) act out of affliction, even those who have discovered the nature of their mind, then we can't look from the outside and consider our judgments of others afflicted actions as being proof of their not having discovered anything.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not the case that all apart from Buddhas act out of affliction. Where did you get this idea? It is not true. Even ordinary persons who have achieved patience on the Mahāyāna path of application no longer act out of affliction.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 5th, 2017 at 8:52 PM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

For example, one can believe one has discovered the nature of the mind, but without a guru to confirm whether or not one has made this discovery, you will just be in a state of belief without knowledge.

Sure it can. Just look at yourself and ask, "Did I discover my own state on my own without resorting to a Guru?" The answer of course will be no.

climb-up said:

So can people believe that they have discovered the nature mind without a guru or not?

Malcolm wrote:

They can believe this.

climb-up said:

If you they can, as you say in the first quote above, then asking themselves if they have found it without a guru would not elicit the answer no, as you say in the second quote.

Malcolm wrote:

The second quote was directed to a person who by their own admission has a teacher, more than one.

climb-up said:

We can know for a fact that no one, ever, anywhere can discover their real nature because:

- 1)It doesn't happen 'all the time' and
- 2)people continue to act out of affliction.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, in other words, discovering our real nature has a cause.

climb-up said:

I am failing to see the logic here?

Why would the possibility of something happening mean that it necessarily would happen all the time?

Malcolm wrote:

In this case, there is no cause by which one can discover one's own nature in a concrete sense such that one is without doubt in absence of a guru. The primary difference between the paths of Mahāyāna and Vajrayāna is introduction to one's real state.

climb-up said:

If the proof that people don't find the nature of mind on their own is that they act out of affliction; firstly, in regards to the above, are you saying that you know the actions of EVERYONE? That would be quite impressive.

Malcolm wrote:

The actions of all sentient beings who are not on a path are afflicted. The actions of sentient beings on the path are also afflicted, though they are likely to be more mindful of afflictions as they arise and thus act with more restraint.

climb-up said:

Secondly, that would mean that everyone who has discovered the nature of mind does not act out of affliction. That would be similarly impressive.

Malcolm wrote:

People who are in true possession of the knowledge of their own state are less likely to act out of affliction.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 5th, 2017 at 3:06 AM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Having one's awakening confirmed is not an option, it is a necessity.

MalaBeads said:

I would think this is true only if one wants to teach or have a 'career' in Buddhism.

Whatever happened to 'way-seeking' for the ordinary person? I am quite happy with just this.

Malcolm wrote:

A ordinary person should not remain in doubt.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, July 5th, 2017 at 2:59 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

A related issue I think:

The general iconoclasm of Zen has a completely different context within a Buddhist culture than it does in a secular one with protestant leanings.

You take something like "if you see the Buddha on the road kill him",.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, while forgetting the saying has its roots in the story of Angulimala, the mass murderer.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 4th, 2017 at 11:27 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Your statement can also apply to Japanese delusions. Certainly Ch'an changed when it was adapted in Japan.

Matylda said:

In a way yes in a way no... there was big difference in adopting zen in China, Japan and the West...

Anonymous X said:

How so? Please explain.

Malcolm wrote:

For one, in the case of Chan --> Zen, it was largely a monastic movement among highly educated Buddhists. Zen --> West, largely nonmonastic, poorly educated Buddhists.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 4th, 2017 at 11:24 PM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Your real nature, your dharmatā, the jewel you lost eons ago.

This might be another fable.

Malcolm wrote:

It isn't. It is something which can be pointed out, but it is not something which can be discovered without a guru. If it were, everyone would discover it all the time. But they clearly don't. Why can we know this is a fact? Because people and other sentient beings continue to act out of affliction and with no natural restraint whatsoever.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 4th, 2017 at 11:13 PM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Sure it can. Just look at yourself and ask, "Did I discover my own state on my own without resorting to a Guru?" The answer of course will be no.

Anonymous X said:

This is one way of discovering, not the only way. Plus, I was actually referring to the confirmation part of your statement.

Going further, what do you mean 'discovering my own state'?

Malcolm wrote:

Your real nature, your dharmatā, the jewel you lost eons ago.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 4th, 2017 at 11:11 PM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Plus, I was actually referring to the confirmation part of your statement.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I know. Even Buddha has his awakening confirmed by someone else. Just read the traditional accounts. If you are fond of Zen fables, Buddha confirmed Kashyapa's awakening and so on. Having one's awakening confirmed is not an option, it is a necessity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 4th, 2017 at 11:00 PM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

For example, one can believe one has discovered the nature of the mind, but without a guru to confirm whether or not one has made this discovery, you will just be in a state of belief without knowledge.

Anonymous X said:

This is a statement that cannot possibly be proven to be true.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure it can. Just look at yourself and ask, "Did I discover my own state on my own without resorting to a Guru?" The answer of course will be no.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 4th, 2017 at 10:40 PM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

smcj said:

I believe that negative actions ripen as suffering, so I make an effort to avoid them.

Isn't that useful?

Malcolm wrote:

It happens whether you believe it or not. Like gravity.

climb-up said:

But is that the point raised?

The ripening into suffering happens regardless of belief, but the effort to avoid the ripening happens because of it. So it's potentially useful, yes?

Malcolm wrote:

The effort to avoid the ripening of suffering does not need to be grounded in belief. It can be grounded in simple, empirical observation. The latter is more useful in the avoidance of suffering than the former.

For example, one can believe one has discovered the nature of the mind, but without a guru to confirm whether or not one has made this discovery, you will just be in a state of belief without knowledge.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 4th, 2017 at 10:37 PM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

David N. Snyder said:

Original buddhism refers to this path; 4NT and 8FP.

Malcolm wrote:

I doubt you will find that all Buddhas teach 4NT and 8FP.

For example, there is a verse in the Vinaya that is more likely to be the core teaching of all Buddhas:

Abandon non-virtue.

Cultivate virtue.

Observe one's mind.

This is the teaching of the Buddhas.

I still would not call this the original Buddhism. Buddhas do not teach according to some plan. Buddhas teach according to the needs of sentient beings. For example, the first buddha of this eon taught Dzogchen, not the 4NT and 8FP. But somehow, I do not think you are likely to accept this. Based on the latter fact, claiming there is some original Buddhism is basically just a faith-based claim, not grounded in facts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 4th, 2017 at 1:53 AM

Title: Re: All Sentient Beings will attain Buddhahood?

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

Perhaps Vasubandhu's comments (Thurman's version) will make clear, what does not seem so unclear. First the root verse 60 of Maitreya, then Vasubandhu. Verse 61 is skipped:

60. You have achieved the ultimate!
You have transcended all the stages!
You have become the chief of all beings!
You are the liberator of all beings!

The buddha character is explained here under headings: nature, cause, result, activity...

The ultimate achieved is pure suchness, which is the natural reality body of the buddhas. The transcending through all the bodhisattva stages is the cause. The achievement of supremacy over all beings is the result. The liberation of all beings is the activity.

Whether one puts the emphasis on the paramita practices during the 10 stages, or the notion of 'transcending through' which DZ folk may prefer, it seems clear enough.

Malcolm wrote:

I think "rising through" is more apt, it just means going through the stags, either one by one, or by skipping stages, as is the case for some bodhisattvas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, July 4th, 2017 at 1:02 AM

Title: Re: All Sentient Beings will attain Buddhahood?

Content:

Anonymous X said:

What would be a 'cause' for Buddhahood?

Nicholas Weeks said:

Ju Mipham comments on XXI:60 at the end of the text: (my underlining)

The characteristics of the ground of buddhahood are discerned in the following way.

First, the essence of the buddha ground is the accomplishment of the ultimate objective, or reality, which is great enlightenment endowed with both natural purity and the purity that manifests in the absence of the adventitious stains. The cause of such enlightenment is the emerging definitively and perfectly beyond all of the grounds, and its effect is a forever unfailing supremacy among all sentient beings.

Maitreya. Ornament of the Great Vehicle Sutras.

Anonymous X said:

This really doesn't make a lot of sense to me. How could anyone understand this?

Malcolm wrote:

Looks like an editorial fail.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 3rd, 2017 at 11:47 PM

Title: Re: Who can identify this figure?

Content:

Grigoris said:

Could be, though Dolpopa is normally shown with both hands on his knees (like a double earth touching mudra).

Malcolm wrote:

He is depicted in both ways.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 3rd, 2017 at 11:38 PM

Title: Re: Who can identify this figure?

Content:

Grigoris said:

I've never seen Nagarjuna in a pandita's hat. He's almost exclusively displayed with a topknot.

Thanks for trying.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a topknot, it is an uṣṇīṣa, indicating he is the "second" Buddha.

Grigoris said:

One mans top knot is another man's usnisha!

But seriously: do you have any idea who the guru in the gau may be?

Malcolm wrote:

I suspect it may be Dolpopa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 3rd, 2017 at 11:26 PM

Title: Re: Who can identify this figure?

Content:

Grigoris said:

I've never seen Nagarjuna in a pandita's hat. He's almost exclusively displayed with a topknot.

Thanks for trying.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a topknot, it is an uṣṇīṣa, indicating he is the "second" Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 3rd, 2017 at 9:57 PM

Title: Re: Best english translation of the bardo thodol?

Content:

rleebaker said:

Just as with many ancient texts we also need to understand often Chapters and Chapter breaks were added by the translator.

Malcolm wrote:

In this case the chapter breaks and chapters are in the original text as written down by Karma Lingpa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 3rd, 2017 at 9:39 PM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

smcj said:

I believe that negative actions ripen as suffering, so I make an effort to avoid them.

Isn't that useful?

Malcolm wrote:

It happens whether you believe it or not. Like gravity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 3rd, 2017 at 9:16 PM

Title: Re: All Sentient Beings will attain Buddhahood?

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

So even though all beings have buddha potential or nature, if no causes arise, then no buddhahood manifests.

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen rejects this point of view. All sentient beings will eventually obtain buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 3rd, 2017 at 12:48 AM

Title: Re: All Sentient Beings will attain Buddhahood?

Content:

Vasana said:

If we are to take the bodhisattva ideal literally, then why wouldn't you expect all beings to attain Buddhahood? If compassion is a natural quality of realization and time is not a restricting factor, then why would some beings be excluded from that?

Losal Samten said:

Presumably because just as time is infinite, so are sentient beings, so mathematically speaking there's always going to be someone that's out of reach. (IIRC that was one Yogacarīn argument for the existence of icchantikas?)

Some sūtras state that the saṃvādhātu neither increases nor decreases (anunātvaapurnatva), is this to be only understood in the non-conceptual ultimate sense, or relatively too, since whether infinity +1, or infinity -1, it still equals infinity?

https://www.academia.edu/30408695/The_S%C5%ABtra_on_the_Residence_of_Ma%C3%B1ju%C5%9B%C4%AB

Malcolm wrote:

This point is addressed by Longchenpa at the end of the difficult points chapter in the Treasury of the Supreme Vehicle. He resolves the difficulty by stating that while all sentient beings are liberated at the end of the great eon, because there is never any limit to latent traces in the dharmadhātu, new sentient beings can always arise. He claims these two points of view are not contradictory.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, July 3rd, 2017 at 12:29 AM

Title: Re: All Sentient Beings will attain Buddhahood?

Content:

Vasana said:

If we are to take the bodhisattva ideal literally, then why wouldn't you expect all beings to attain Buddhahood? If compassion is a natural quality of realization and time is not a restricting factor, then why would some beings be excluded from that?

I was reading Dzogchen Ponlop's commentary on the Aspiration of Samantabhadra earlier today. After the root text it mentions it's from the 9th chapter of The Tantra of the Great Perfection which shows the penetrating wisdom of Samantabhadra. "Which presents the powerful aspiration which makes it impossible for all beings not to attain Buddhahood"

Malcolm wrote:

It is from the 19th chapter of that text, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 2nd, 2017 at 11:25 PM

Title: Re: incarnation in families

Content:

Punya said:

On the other hand, HH the Dalai Lama was reborn into a simple farming family. I dare say there were reasons for this too.

Malcolm wrote:

They were not that simple, they were wealthy enough to have already had tulkus nearby at Kumbum Monastery (HHDL's oldest brother). Thus, his family was already on the ecclesiastical radar.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 2nd, 2017 at 11:22 PM

Title: Re: All Sentient Beings will attain Buddhahood?

Content:

Anonymous X said:

I wonder if the Buddha ever said this?

Malcolm wrote:

In many places.

Anonymous X said:

Can you give us a quote?

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha predicts all sentient beings for Buddhahood in the Lotus Sūtra, among other places.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 2nd, 2017 at 10:25 PM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

the Buddha himself said there was no original Buddhism, and I'm inclined to believe him.

David N. Snyder said:

Where does the Buddha say "there is no original Buddhism"? Do you have a reference?

Malcolm wrote:

How could there be an "original" Buddhism? I have read somewhere many years ago that existence of Kanakamuni's disciples was reported during the time of Gautama.

Then there is Buddha's metaphor of discovering an ancient, forgotten city in the jungle...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 2nd, 2017 at 9:34 PM

Title: Re: Differences in Paths of Mahāmudra, Dzogchen, and Prajñāparamitā

Content:

Marc said:

Yongdzin Tenzin Namdak being pretty traditional / canonic in his teaching, I guess this may be one of the few differences between Bön & Nyingma Dzogchen...

Malcolm wrote:

ChNN generally maintain that the result of Dzogchen and Mahamudra are identical.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 2nd, 2017 at 9:33 PM

Title: Re: All Sentient Beings will attain Buddhahood?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this may be taught in sūtras, good thing this is an idea rejected completely in Atiyoga where it is held that all sentient beings will attain buddhahood.

discussionbuddhist said:

Which Atiyoga scripture or teacher taught all sentient beings will attain buddhahood?

Thanks

Anonymous X said:

I wonder if the Buddha ever said this?

Malcolm wrote:

In many places.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 2nd, 2017 at 4:20 AM

Title: Re: Semantics or not..Dharmakaya, Eternalism and the Self of Advaita

Content:

smcj said:

The question I'd like to ask you is: how is suffering seen/understood in Dzogchen?

Malcolm wrote:

A mistake. Delusion is not part of the basis at all.

smcj said:
Ok.

Malcolm wrote:
One's primordial state aka the basis is originally pure. Pure of what? Delusion. It was never deluded, it is not deluded now, and will never be deluded later on.

The sense in which Dzogchen has a gzhan stong view is that delusion is absent in one's primordial state— it is empty of delusion, delusion is extraneous to it. Samsara and nirvana all arise because one did not see one's nature.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, July 2nd, 2017 at 3:14 AM
Title: Re: Sems, Dharmata and Dharmadhatu
Content:

cepheidvariable said:
(2) Should I be concerned about ending up in Vajra Hell, haven taken DI with ChNNR and received one lung for a ngondro text, with no other empowerments? I've seen that Sam Bercholz -- of Shambhala Publications -- has a new book called "A Guided Tour of Hell." If one of the senior students of Thinley Norbu Rinpoche ended up there, what hope is there for me?

HandsomeMonkeyking said:
Whats Vajra Hell?

Malcolm wrote:
It is a name for Avici Hell in Vajrayāna.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, July 2nd, 2017 at 2:05 AM
Title: Re: Semantics or not..Dharmakaya, Eternalism and the Self of Advaita
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Maybe among Kagyus.

smcj said:
Ah, good that you dropped in.

The question I'd like to ask you is: how is suffering seen/understood in Dzogchen?

Malcolm wrote:
A mistake. Delusion is not part of the basis at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 2nd, 2017 at 1:00 AM

Title: Re: Cultural dancing and dressing up

Content:

philji said:

<https://youtu.be/0Jv2yFcItN4>

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, Tibetans do not wear clothes like that. This what Tibetans wear:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e = document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s = document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); } https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 2nd, 2017 at 12:39 AM

Title: Re: Semantics or not..Dharmakaya, Eternalism and the Self of Advaita

Content:

smcj said:

But then there is the Kagyu take on Dzogchen in which I think it is more widely accepted, Kongtrul being a case in point.

Malcolm wrote:

Maybe among Kagyus.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, July 2nd, 2017 at 12:14 AM

Title: Re: Cultural dancing and dressing up

Content:

philji said:

I hear on here a lot from dzogchen community members that dzogchen is free from cultures, religion, even buddhism. Why do members therefore engage in tibetan dance and dressing up as tibetans?

Malcolm wrote:

Because Norbu Rinpoche likes Tibetan pop music and dance. He also feels it is a way of instilling mindfulness. They do not dress up as Tibetans. Tibetans do not wear such clothing.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, July 1st, 2017 at 11:56 PM
Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life
Content:

Marc said:
Hi Malcolm
17th is a Saturday...
Will it be Saturday 17th or Sunday 18th ? Will it be streamed ?
Thx

Malcolm wrote:
It will be streamed, and it looks like the 18th, my bad.

pael said:
Do you know which service will stream it yet?

Malcolm wrote:
No, we have not set up those details as of yet. Will keep you posted.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, July 1st, 2017 at 2:49 AM
Title: Re: Buddhist Brain Surgery
Content:

dzogchungpa said:
Yes, I'm sure you are absolutely correct. My own experience completely confirms the unique role of the teacher. I just don't like the idea of a rigid separation between "hearing" and other forms of study.

Malcolm wrote:
There are all kinds of study. They do not make up the trio of wisdom: hearing, reflection, and meditation.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, July 1st, 2017 at 1:44 AM
Title: Re: Buddhist Brain Surgery
Content:

Meido said:
But the point is that all of this occurs against the backdrop of training with one's teacher. Encounter with the teacher is, in fact, the primary practice of Rinzai Zen: the entire path is structured around the mutual investigation of Zen (sanzen) with the teacher.

Malcolm wrote:

The Dharma lives in the interaction between teacher and student, it does not live in books.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 1st, 2017 at 1:10 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Brain Surgery

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, I agree that it is basically an oral tradition but IMO it is ridiculous to rigidly exclude reading from hearing in this context. All of my initial contact with Buddhism, as a young boy, was through books. I didn't hear a single syllable about it but there is no doubt in my mind that reading served, at least in a rudimentary way, the same function as hearing for me at that time.

conebeckham said:

I'm sure this is true, but, at least in Vajrayana tradition, you must admit that all of this was preparation.

Being with a qualified teacher, having a relationship with a teacher, taking empowerment in person from a qualified teacher, obtaining transmission of explanations from a qualified teacher, these are the the essence of the Vajrayana path, and this includes Dzogchen and Mahamudra. No amount of reading will create the same impact that this essential relation creates. I think you would agree?

dzogchungpa said:

Sure, but Buddhism is not just Vajrayana.

Malcolm wrote:

When sūtras describe "reading," they describe reading in assemblies so that the Dharma may be heard.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 1st, 2017 at 1:04 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Brain Surgery

Content:

paël said:

How about Webcasts of Namkhai Norbu? I don't think he will visit in my country (Finland). I can't travel.

Malcolm wrote:

webcasts are fine, as I already pointed out. But there is a very excellent teacher in your country, Tulku Dakpa Rinpoche, at Dhanakosha. You should be in touch with him.

pael said:

I thought he requires ngondro for Dzochen. What should I ask him? Do you have suggestions? He gave me Shakyamuni gomde with (Teyata om muni muni mahanua soha) text once. They do it weekly. It is sutric mantra?

Malcolm wrote:

He is running a retreat next week on Longchenpa's Chariot of Supreme vehicle. Second year in a five year course.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, July 1st, 2017 at 12:15 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Brain Surgery

Content:

undefineable said:

What about hearing dharma talks - particularly (I'd imagine) on video-?

Malcolm wrote:

It does not really count. Even webcasts, while better, are no substitute for being in the presence of teacher with whom one can interact. A video tape will never make you as uncomfortable as a teacher can.

pael said:

How about Webcasts of Namkhai Norbu? I don't think he will visit in my country (Finland). I can't travel.

Malcolm wrote:

webcasts are fine, as I already pointed out. But there is a very excellent teacher in your country, Tulku Dakpa Rinpoche, at Dhanakosha. You should be in touch with him.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 30th, 2017 at 11:48 PM

Title: Re: Buddhist Brain Surgery

Content:

undefineable said:

So is an update to the teachings needed perhaps?

Malcolm wrote:

No, at base Buddhadharma is an oral tradition.

dzogchungpa said:

Well, I agree that it is basically an oral tradition but IMO it is ridiculous to rigidly exclude reading from hearing in this context. All of my initial contact with Buddhism, as a young boy, was through books. I didn't hear a single syllable about it but there is no doubt in my mind that reading served, at least in a rudimentary way, the same function as hearing for me at that time.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it didn't.

It may have served you to become inspired enough to seek out a teacher eventually, but reading a book can in no way be considered hearing.

Buddhadharma must be heard from a teacher. There is no substitute. This is what my experience has shown me.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 30th, 2017 at 11:30 PM

Title: Re: Buddhist Brain Surgery

Content:

undefineable said:

What about hearing dharma talks - particularly (I'd imagine) on video-?

Malcolm wrote:

It does not really count. Even webcasts, while better, are no substitute for being in the presence of teacher with whom one can interact. A video tape will never make you as uncomfortable as a teacher can.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 30th, 2017 at 11:28 PM

Title: Re: Buddhist Brain Surgery

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

until very recently, people did not just go to bookstores and buy books on Buddhadharma.

undefineable said:

So is an update to the teachings needed perhaps?

Malcolm wrote:

No, at base Buddhadharma is an oral tradition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 30th, 2017 at 9:53 PM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

emaho said:

Wasn't Chatral Rinpoche attacked by someone who tried to strangle him with a khata?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, a gyalpo worshipper from the West.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 30th, 2017 at 9:44 PM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

michaelb said:

Suddenly, HH Dalai Lama was right in front of me and put a khata around my neck and pulled it tight. I woke up gasping for breath.

Malcolm wrote:

Tulku Drakpa Gyaltsen was murdered with a white kata. Sounds like the Gyalpo to me.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 30th, 2017 at 9:37 PM

Title: Re: Buddhist Brain Surgery

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

So you don't feel that reading has anything to do with wisdom in a Buddhist context?

Malcolm wrote:

If we needed to put reading somewhere within the three wisdoms, it would belong to reflection, not hearing.

Anonymous X said:

Did you check somewhere to modify your original statement?

Malcolm wrote:

No, reading is not part of the classic trio of wisdoms because until very recently, people did not just go to bookstores and buy books on Buddhadharma.

Reading in the classic Mahāyāna sūtras is a merit-producing endeavor, meaning reciting the text aloud, usually in an assembly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 30th, 2017 at 9:35 PM

Title: Re: Buddhist Brain Surgery

Content:

Anonymous X said:

What about the book he wrote?

Malcolm wrote:

I make it very clear in the introduction to my translation that people really ought to receive the appropriate level of teachings in order to read my translation. This is why I have made an effort to arrange a transmission for the text by a qualified teacher. Even so, this is not enough. One needs to receive proper transmission of a school in order to understand its literature. For example, I rarely opine about Chan/Zen or Theravada (apart from reciting Sarvastivada doxology, or discussing the various opinions of Tibetan scholars on Chan). Why? Because I have no transmission in those schools at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 30th, 2017 at 9:15 PM

Title: Re: Buddhist Brain Surgery

Content:

emaho said:

But I think your statement is going a little too far. I've always taken it that reading belongs to studying which is a part of reflection.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't disagree with this. However, reflection must be preceded by hearing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 30th, 2017 at 9:14 PM

Title: Re: Buddhist Brain Surgery

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There are three wisdoms: hearing, reflection, and meditation. The last I checked, reading was not one of those wisdoms.

dzogchungpa said:

So you don't feel that reading has anything to do with wisdom in a Buddhist context?

Malcolm wrote:

If we needed to put reading somewhere within the three wisdoms, it would belong to reflection, not hearing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 30th, 2017 at 8:37 PM

Title: Re: Semantics or not..Dharmakaya, Eternalism and the Self of Advaita

Content:

Stefos said:

So again to clariy, For me there IS a substratum: Emptiness, Clarity and Bliss

Is this what Sri Nagarjuna taught?

Malcolm wrote:

You are confusing three experiences that cause deviation: bliss, clarity, and emptiness (nonconceptuality) with the basis: essence, nature, and compassion.

Here, emptiness means being in a state free of thoughts. But it is not the emptiness spoken of by Nāgārjuna.

As mentioned before, there were several Nāgārjunas. The first was the founder of the Madhyamaka school. He did not assert that emptiness was a substratum.

Ramana Maharshi is completely irrelevant here.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 30th, 2017 at 6:41 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Brain Surgery

Content:

Meido said:

I happen to feel that the natural and best course of action for someone interested in Zen is to seek out a qualified teacher, and then to practice according to that teacher's instructions as befits one's conditions and the particular path one has entered.

Malcolm wrote:

This is true not only with respect to Zen, but all forms of Buddhadharma. There are three wisdoms: hearing, reflection, and meditation. The last I checked, reading was not one of those wisdoms. Thus, to receive Buddhadharma, one must find a teacher and here the Dharma from that person.

Without hearing the Dharma, there is no possibility of reflection; without reflecting on the Dharma, there is no possibility it can be meditated upon.

There are no self-taught Buddhists, just as there never have been any self-taught Buddhas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 30th, 2017 at 12:41 AM

Title: Re: Semantics or not..Dharmakaya, Eternalism and the Self of Advaita

Content:

Stefos said:

Why is Sunya declared by Nagarjuna to be the only real thing or substratum to everything?

Malcolm wrote:

Nāgārjuna nowhere states that emptiness is the only real thing. In fact he never states that emptiness is a substratum at all.

Stefos said:

By "substratum" I mean the original ground, which is the Dharmakaya qualified by Emptiness, Clarity & Bliss.

So, yes, there is a substratum according to that definition I believe sir.

Malcolm wrote:

One, you are now conflating Nāgārjuna's point of view, who never heard of "Dzogchen," with Dzogchen teachings.

With respect to the latter, the term "basis" refers to something one has not realized. It does not refer to an entity as such. The thog ma gzhi, the original basis, the mind-essence, is the basis of the recognition or nonrecognition of the nature of one's consciousness. If one reifies this as a substratum, one winds up in Advaita land.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 29th, 2017 at 10:24 PM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

monktastic said:

Thanks Malcolm-la. But doesn't this still mean everything I perceive as my world?

Malcolm wrote:

No, you also perceive the mental projections of others.

Also the material aggregate is not one's own, strictly speaking.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 29th, 2017 at 8:49 PM

Title: Re: Semantics or not..Dharmakaya, Eternalism and the Self of Advaita

Content:

Stefos said:

Why is Sunya declared by Nagarjuna to be the only real thing or substratum to everything?

Malcolm wrote:

Nāgārājuna nowhere states that emptiness is the only real thing. In fact he never states that emptiness is a substratum at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 29th, 2017 at 8:47 PM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

HHDL said:

A: I understand the Primordial Buddha, also known as Buddha Samantabhadra, to be the ultimate reality, the realm of the Dharmakaya-- the space of emptiness--where all phenomena, pure and impure, are dissolved. This is the explanation taught by the Sutras and Tantras. However, in the context of your question, the tantric tradition is the only one which explains the Dharmakaya in terms of Inherent clear light, the essential nature of the mind; this would seem imply that all phenomena, samsara and nirvana, arise from this clear and luminous source. Even the New School of Translation came to the conclusion that the "state of rest" of a practitioner of the Great Yoga--Great Yoga implies here the state of the practitioner who has reached a stage in meditation where the most subtle experience of clear light has been realized--that for as long as the practitioner remains in this ultimate sphere he or she remains totally free of any sort of veil obscuring the mind, and is immersed in a state of great bliss.

We can say, therefore, that this ultimate source, clear light, is close to the notion of a Creator, since all phenomena, whether they belong to samsara or nirvana, originate therein. But we must be careful in speaking of this source, we must not be led into error. I do not mean that there exists somewhere, there, a sort of collective clear light, analogous to the non-Buddhist concept of Brahma as a substratum. We must not be inclined to deify this luminous space. We must understand that when we speak of ultimate or inherent clear light, we are speaking on an individual level.

monktastic said:

<http://hhdl.dharmakara.net/hhdlquotes22.html>

I do not understand this. All phenomena in "my" world -- including the colorful splotches I describe as "other beings" -- originate from "my" Samantabhadra. What sense does it make to speak of "other" worlds (or beings with their own Samantabhadras), if, by definition, I can never encounter them in any way?

If everything I could ever call "world" came from "my" Samantabhadra, then I still have no way of distinguishing this concept from "god."

Edit: Except, of course, that I should look for it "inside" and not "outside."

Malcolm wrote:

It is commonly misunderstood that when one says "all the dharmas of samsara and nirvana" this refers to entities out there in the world. It does not. It refers to one's own aggregates, sense bases, and elements. "All phenomena" means the one aggregate, the material aggregate with its external objects made of the four elements; one sense base refers to the sense base of the mind; and elements refers to the dharmadhātu which contains all the mental factors and unconditioned phenomena.

Thus, when one does not recognize the basis for what it is, one reifies the five lights of one's own pristine consciousness as the five elements; at the same time oneself is doing this, so are infinite myriads of other sentient beings. Shabkar for example, uses the example of how a woman who meditated on herself as a tigress terrified a small village in order to show that our own mental projections can generate appearances for others and vice versa:

When a devaputra asked the Buddha:

"Who made Meru, the sun and the moon, and so on?"

The Buddha said:

"There is no other creator here.

The attachment of the traces of one's conceptuality imputes them, grasps them and then they appear in that way. Everything is created by one's mind."

When the devaputra asked the Buddha again:

"How can the attachment of my concepts make the hardness and stability of Meru, the sun and moon, and so on?"

The Buddha said:

"In Varanasi, an old woman meditated her own body as a tiger.

Since the villagers saw her as a tiger, they evacuated the village.

If one is able to appear like that for a little while, if one cultivates mental traces for beginningless lifetimes, one will be able to appear like this for a year."

Therefore, everything is created by the mind.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 29th, 2017 at 8:30 PM

Title: Re: original buddhism

Content:

David N. Snyder said:

As a follow-up to my recent DhammaWiki article on Pudgalavada (and topic here), I made this analysis / interpretation of original Buddhism. I'm sure it will have some detractors from both hard-core Theravadins and hard-core Mahayanists, but that's okay:

https://dhammawiki.com/index.php?title=Original_Buddhism

As I note at the top of the article:

(This is just one historical analysis and interpretation. There are other views and interpretations which vary from this one. It is recommended for those interested to review the literature in the References and make their own conclusions.)

Perhaps it's not about Theravada vs. Mahayana, but rather some blend of the early schools . . .

Malcolm wrote:

There is no original Buddhism. Not even Gautama's direct teaching is original Buddhism. By all accounts, there were many buddhas prior to him.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 29th, 2017 at 5:18 AM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It represents the elimination of obstacles. Likewise, if you dream of monks, it is usually a sign of gyalpo provocation.

michaelb said:

Thanks, Malcolm. I dreamt that my lama had died years ago, and it really shit me up. I also had a dream of a "well-known" monk who went to strangle me with a khata and that shit me up, too.

Going back to the topic of this thread, I think I had the first dream whilst I was doing Vajrasattva part of ngondro. I was so concerned I phoned my lama from Tso Pema to check he was alright.

Malcolm wrote:

The first sounds like a good dream. The second sounds terrible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 29th, 2017 at 4:53 AM

Title: Re: Differences in Paths of Mahāmudra, Dzogchen, and Prajñāparamitā

Content:

Marc said:

Hi

Sure Malcolm is a treasure trove of Dharma knowledge. And so were so many of the great masters of the Rime movement.

No question here

I simply wanted to bring to the fore that some of the greatest Dzogchen teachers of our time insist that Dzogchen is unique from "every angle": Base, Path and Fruition.

Ex: Lopön Tenzin Namdak for the Yungdrung Bön Dozgchen, and for the Nyingma, it seems to me that ChNN has a similar stance.... (Though Malcolm statement casts a serious doubt on what I think to be ChNN's position)

Cheers

M

Malcolm wrote:

The Rig pa rang shar states:

If someone does not dwell in words and does not dwell in names, that is Prajñāpāramitā,
the transcendent state of buddhahood itself.

And:

Migrating beings are led with the noose of the method through concrete objects to wisdom.

Therefore it is the Prajñāpāramita.

The vast dhātu of Samantabhadra arises in the dharmatā of unceasing play.

The dhātu of wisdom, the transcendent state, lacks attachment, the nature of grasping.

Since it is nonconceptual, it is beyond speech and thought.

For example, like a magic display in the sky,

it is said to be free from the Dharma of expression.

Thus we can see that Prajñāpāramita and Great Perfection have equivalent meanings.

The Union of the Sun and Moon Tantra, source of Song of the Vajra, states:

Someone who has not settled into concentration will settle naturally with this.

When the yogin is lethargic, when revitalized by this, samadhi is good;
it seals one's mind with bliss, joined with the state of mahāmudra;

one can enter into all of the guru's intimate instructions;
emptiness is also supported on the continuum;

Perceptions are liberated in their own place;
mental entities are purified.

Therefore, sing the song of the vajra and always do the vajra dance.

Therefore, one can understand that Mahāmudra is nothing other than the state of Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 29th, 2017 at 4:33 AM

Title: Re: 3 obstacles / 4 devils

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The one great root Māra is the concept that grasps a self.
— Self-Liberated Vidyā Tantra

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 29th, 2017 at 3:47 AM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

michaelb said:

Yes, why would that be a good sign?

Malcolm wrote:

The reasons for such signs being good or bad are rarely indicated.

michaelb said:

Yes but, why, though? Maybe you could indicate now?

Malcolm wrote:

It represents the elimination of obstacles. Likewise, if you dream of monks, it is usually a sign of gyalpo provocation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 29th, 2017 at 2:38 AM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Grigoris said:

Personally I would prefer him dying in my dream than dying in reality...

Malcolm wrote:

That is inevitable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 29th, 2017 at 2:00 AM

Title: Re: Is the "Self" a "Rabbit's Horn"?

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Whatever you decide to do, there is only grasping. You can neither stop it or control it. It is created by this activity of separation. All movements of thought are part of it.

Manjusrimitra: "Through not understanding what the grasping of experience through thought ultimately is, one is deceived by this grasping. The stream of thought continues, and so there is no opportunity to turn away from deluded thought later on."

conebeckham said:

If one decides not to decide, is one then grasping?

Agree that all movements of thought are grasping, that is essential. But Manjuśrimitra's quote implies an alternative, does it not? There are thought-free moments, and also awarenesses of grasping and thought which may not be deceptive.

But perhaps this is tangential to the original discussion.

Malcolm wrote:

For as long as there is movement of the mind, for that long it is the domain of Māra — the path is subtle.

Do not abide in the convention of movement and stillness; also, do not abide in that abiding.

That middle way without appearance is the awakened mind proclaimed by the Sugata.

This is further clarified:

Even the slightest movement which is not Mañjuśrī is [Mañjuśrī]; there is no abiding there.

Mipham comments:

If the movement or existence of the slightest subtle fault of sign or concept which is not that dharmatā is seen, since that is the ultimate pristine consciousness of dharmatā or Mañjuśrī, it is not to be abandoned. If it is asked where there is abiding in that dharmatā or Mañjuśrī, since there is no basis in which to abide because the nature of [dharmatā or Mañjuśrī] is not established at all, there is no abiding there.

In other words, movement and stillness have the same nature. It does not matter whether one has concepts or not. All that matters is whether one is deceived by them or not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 29th, 2017 at 1:56 AM

Title: Re: Is the "Self" a "Rabbit's Horn"?

Content:

conebeckham said:

In my opinion, there is no grasping. Better to relax in the lack of finding.

Anonymous X said:

Whatever you decide to do, there is only grasping. You can neither stop it or control it. It is created by this activity of separation. All movements of thought are part of it.

Manjusrimitra: "Through not understanding what the grasping of experience through thought ultimately is, one is deceived by this grasping. The stream of thought continues, and so there is no opportunity to turn away from deluded thought later on."

conebeckham said:

If one decides not to decide, is one then grasping?

Agree that all movements of thought are grasping, that is essential. But Manjuśrimitra's quote implies an alternative, does it not? There are thought-free moments, and also awarenesses of grasping and thought which may not be deceptive.

But perhaps this is tangential to the original discussion.

Malcolm wrote:

For as long as there is movement of the mind, for that long it is the domain of Māra — the path is subtle.

Do not abide in the convention of movement and stillness; also, do not abide in that abiding.

That middle way without appearance is the awakened mind proclaimed by the Sugata.

This is further clarified:

Even the slightest movement which is not Mañjuśrī is [Mañjuśrī]; there is no abiding there.

Mipham comments:

If the movement or existence of the slightest subtle fault of sign or concept which is not that dharmatā is seen, since that is the ultimate pristine consciousness of dharmatā or Mañjuśrī, it is not to be abandoned. If it is asked where there is abiding in that dharmatā or Mañjuśrī, since there is no basis in which to abide because the nature of [dharmatā or Mañjuśrī] is not established at all, there is no abiding there.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 28th, 2017 at 10:41 PM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Quite often. For example, negative dreams are often understood to be positive signs. If you dream your guru dies, this is a very good dream.

Lobsang Chojor said:

Just wondering, is there a reason why this is seen as a positive sign? Just doesn't seem like a good sign your guru dying.

michaelb said:

Yes, why would that be a good sign?

Malcolm wrote:

The reasons for such signs being good or bad are rarely indicated.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 28th, 2017 at 9:33 AM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

climb-up said:

Should those who have not discovered it for themselves believe you that it is possible to have this experience?

Malcolm wrote:

They don't have to believe anything. They just need to be interested enough in the question to find out the answer. It is the same with any kind of knowledge. Knowledge is not based on belief. It is based on what one can discover for oneself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 28th, 2017 at 4:46 AM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

Mantrik said:

So, do we not have to have a belief that this experience will help us to remove that delusion and assist us to gain that control?

Before we get to the experience of abiding etc. we have to have that belief, I assert, or we wouldn't attend. Having done so, if the experience is transformative, we gain a belief that it is effective and may conclude therefore that further steps on the path are worthwhile.

I don't think anyone is challenging the position that belief without experience is pretty useless, but even if we base our path on the experiences of ChNN and engage in Dzogchen in order to have our own experiences, it is not wholly useless, surely.

Malcolm wrote:

Belief is useless. For example, I am ill. Whether I believe a medicine will help me or not is irrelevant. If the correct medicine is given for the illness it will be cured. It does not matter whether I believe it or not.

For example, if you do some practice believing in some effect it is supposed to have, and you do not have that experience, you may lose confidence.

If you approach practices without any belief in them one way or another, then you are more likely to discover the point of that practice.

Belief is thinking something is true without knowing whether it is true. This is not the standard we apply in Dzogchen teachings. We apply a higher standard. You do not believe what you know. The main term in Dzogchen is "rig pa," "to know."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 28th, 2017 at 4:25 AM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

Mantrik said:

Please can you give examples of experiences entered into deliberately of the 'no belief necessary' type.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not interested. To much nitpicking.

Grigoris said:

So basically you just want him to believe you when you say that belief is useless?

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. I want him, and the rest of you to discover this for yourself. No amount of belief in Buddhahood, awakening, karma, etc., will substitute.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 28th, 2017 at 4:00 AM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

Mantrik said:

Please can you give examples of experiences entered into deliberately of the 'no belief necessary' type.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not interested. To much nitpicking.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 28th, 2017 at 3:58 AM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

Mantrik said:

Your example of unstable belief is not really relevant, and could equally be applied to experience: today I experienced heat and it was pleasant, but yesterday I experienced heat and it was unpleasant - therefore experience alone is unreliable since it depends upon my mind processing it and changing my understanding.....my belief in what is true and real.

tomamundsen said:

I don't think those are the kinds of experiences that Rinpoche is referring to.

Mantrik said:

Neither is the tasting of sugar Malcolm has used throughout as his example.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, when he related this, he precisely used the example of tasting sugar.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 28th, 2017 at 3:45 AM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

Mantrik said:

Your example of unstable belief is not really relevant, and could equally be applied to experience: today I experienced heat and it was pleasant, but yesterday I experienced heat and it was unpleasant - therefore experience alone is unreliable since it depends upon my mind processing it and changing my understanding.....my belief in what is true and real.

Malcolm wrote:

Ok. If you choose not to understand the point, I cannot help you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 28th, 2017 at 3:04 AM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

Mantrik said:

I think I read, possibly from you, that 'capacity' is also to do with interest. It would be hard to have interest in something if we did not believe it worthwhile. ChNN would have no students unless people believed it was worth being taught by him. I think a casual remark he made is having far too much read into it. He could just as easily have said discussion is useless.

Malcolm wrote:

The context of the remark was one in which ChNN was contrasting "belief" against "direct experience." Hence his statement, "You can believe in anything." Beliefs are just concepts. They shift and change. One day you believe doing this practice is the best, the next day, you believe another is better. One day you believe America is a great place, the next day, you believe it sucks.

But in Dzogchen, beliefs are useless. The only thing that counts is personal experience born out of direct perception.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 28th, 2017 at 2:19 AM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, now I don't know what to believe!

Malcolm wrote:
Good place to start.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, June 28th, 2017 at 1:10 AM
Title: Re: Belief
Content:

climb-up said:
Yes, and even more so with Dzogchen, because you have to intentionally receive DI (I believe) whereas you could potentially trip and land face first in a pile of sugar, tasting it with no previous intention (...if I had a nickel...).

Malcolm wrote:
Ok, you guys can have your beliefs. I personally do not find "believing" in things helpful at all. As ChNN says, "You can believe anything."

Lukeinaz said:
Malcom, I seem to recall you saying at one point that you just decided to believe in rebirth since you could see that not doing so was hindering. Has this belief helped your practice?

Malcolm wrote:
Nope. It is still something I accept as true, however, something I believe. But like all beliefs, it is pretty useless. Despite, there are lots of helpful things in Dzogchen teachings for dealing with this or that belief we may have.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, June 28th, 2017 at 1:06 AM
Title: Re: Belief
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Ok, you guys can have your beliefs. I personally do not find "believing" in things helpful at all. As ChNN says, "You can believe anything."

dzogchungpa said:

I'm going to believe that my teacher is the greatest teacher in the whole world!

Malcolm wrote:

I am quite sure you accept that as true.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 28th, 2017 at 12:46 AM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

tomamundsen said:

What Tibetan word is being translated as "faith" in the passage below? From Rongzom's Entering the Way of the Great Vehicle:

Rongzom said:

When this Great Perfection approach to the path is taught in a condensed manner, it is said that the bases of all phenomena are included simply within mind and mental appearance; the nature of the mind (citta) itself is awakening (bodhi) and thus referred to as the mind of awakening (bodhicitta). There is nothing to be taught other than this. People with faith in the Great Perfection approach realize and penetrate it through being shown this alone.

tomamundsen said:

Is the phrase "belief is useless" compatible with the above?

Malcolm wrote:

The word Rongzom uses is "faith," dad pa or śraddhā. But we have to point out what śraddhā actually means. According to Vasubandhu, faith is the mental factor that brings clarity to the mind. So, "faith" is not belief, per se. In fact, it is one of the five faculties, which are part of the thirty-seven adjuncts to awakening.

When we look at what the word means in Tibetan, the first definition is confidence (yid ches pa) (the second definition is joy (dga' ba) or attachment(chags pa)). Thus, the passage would be more accurately translated, "People with confidence in the Great Perfection approach realize and penetrate it through being shown this alone." Norbu Rinpoche tends to translate this term as "interest," thus the passage could also be rendered, "People interested in the Great Perfection approach realize and penetrate it through being shown this alone."

Dominic (a nice guy, very smart) also translated "tshul" as "approach," where as I would prefer here to say "principle", thus "People interested/confident in the principles of the Great Perfection realize and penetrate it through being shown this alone."

So yes, the phrase "belief is useless" is absolutely compatible with the above.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 28th, 2017 at 12:10 AM

Title: Re: Awakening is a collective venture

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Perhaps Malcolm misunderstands my questioning of DGA? And, perhaps Malcolm is also defensive about Dzogchen and its need for 'protection'? This is all chit chat. Isn't that what this board is about?

Malcolm wrote:

No defensive about Dzogchen at all. I think you are holding DGA to a standard you don't observe for yourself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 28th, 2017 at 12:09 AM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, no more than you have to believe sugar is sweet before you try some.

Mantrik said:

That was not my point. Unless you believed the experience was worthwhile you wouldn't bother tasting it. You wrote it yourself - people 'want' experience, therefore they must hold the belief that it is worthwhile having.

Wading in a quicksand of unsubstantiated belief without taking action is useless, for sure.

Unless you just happened to encounter it by chance, I'll wager most people experience DI because they have a belief it is worth experiencing.

Experience is not a substitute for belief, but often a confirmation or negation of it, and that is often iterative.

climb-up said:

Yes, and even more so with Dzogchen, because you have to intentionally receive DI (I believe) whereas you could potentially trip and land face first in a pile of sugar, tasting it with no previous intention (...if I had a nickel...).

Malcolm wrote:

Ok, you guys can have your beliefs. I personally do not find "believing" in things helpful at all. As ChNN says, "You can believe anything."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 27th, 2017 at 11:35 PM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Look, obviously all kinds of ordinary "beliefs" are necessary for any kind of undertaking, even Dzogchen. A statement like "Belief is useless" can be useful, but only in a given context etc.

Malcolm wrote:

When it comes to Dzogchen, belief is useless. There are many other things for which belief is also useless.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 27th, 2017 at 11:34 PM

Title: Re: Awakening is a collective venture

Content:

Anonymous X said:

They are just ideas. Do you actually engage in Ch'an practice, or do you just read books?

Malcolm wrote:

You know, this is a loaded question as in, "Do you actually engage in Dzogchen practice or do you just read books?"

Anonymous X said:

Let the poster answer the question. And we're talking about Ch'an.

Malcolm wrote:

I am merely pointing out that you are maintaining a double standard. You feel eminently qualified to opine about Dzogchen, which you do not practice, but question DGA about his practical experience with Chan. Just saying.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 27th, 2017 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: Awakening is a collective venture

Content:

Anonymous X said:

I don't know where you got these ideas from.

DGA said:

Yes you do, because I told you in the part you quoted. See: Liberating Intimacy, P. Hershock. It's worth your time to read that one.

Anonymous X said:

They are just ideas. Do you actually engage in Ch'an practice, or do you just read books?

Malcolm wrote:

You know, this is a loaded question as in, "Do you actually engage in Dzogchen practice or do you just read books?"

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 27th, 2017 at 10:15 PM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Some people want religion, other people want experience. Belief is good the former, not for the latter.

Mantrik said:

If you want experience you must hold the belief that it is something worth desiring.

Malcolm wrote:

No, no more than you have to believe sugar is sweet before you try some.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 27th, 2017 at 4:11 AM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

Adamantine said:

Caucasian, African, Latin? Seems like within human form we cling to Buddhas appearing Asian

Malcolm wrote:

Give it time.

Matylda said:

Isn't it that oldest original buddhist sculptures were of some Greek origin? Those which I saw in museums were more of European outlook... east Asian or south Asian figures seem to be of later development, when Buddhism took deeper roots in those regions.

Am I wrong?

Malcolm wrote:

There are two trends: the Gandhara trend, influenced by Greek sculpture, and the Mathura tradition, which is much less so and more Indian in appearance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 27th, 2017 at 4:03 AM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

One can believe anything. What counts is direct experience. One can believe that sugar has all kinds of different tastes. The point is that one only knows sugar by tasting it.

Mantrik said:

Well, the belief that belief is useless may be useful in some circumstances. Perhaps if there is an assumption that belief is like 'blind faith' and a conclusion rather than a motivation.

Are we all clear about when belief ends and faith begins, I wonder? I'm not.

We may posit that enlightenment is possible, and use that belief as motivation for our path, without any experience of enlightenment itself, nor any evidence that what others have experienced, including our Gurus, is actually taking them there.

So without belief, where is motivation, path and fruit?

First DI? No, first a motivation, so a belief that DI is something worth having before we have any experience of it.

I'd say the process is iterative - we have enough belief to embark on the path, to experience, to reinforce. But there is no conclusive belief unless we cease to gain new experiences; hence we may need many lives to attain the enlightenment we believe to be possible, and in doing so may regard our earlier beliefs as incomplete or even totally wrong.

Malcolm wrote:

Some people want religion, other people want experience. Belief is good the former, not for the latter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 27th, 2017 at 3:48 AM

Title: Re: Awakening is a collective venture

Content:

Lazy_eye said:

Isn't this just substituting one type of self-view for another? Instead of a static unchanging self, we get a continually fluctuating self. Is this really anātman, though?

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha has already allowed the conventional designation of the aggregates as a self. After, all, how many times in the suttas does the Buddha refer to himself in the past tense when discussing his own previous lives?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 27th, 2017 at 3:14 AM

Title: Re: Belief

Content:

climb-up said:

Could it be that belief alone is useless?

It seems to me that belief cannot truly be useless. We have to believe that it is worthwhile to continue our sadhana for example.

Even if we have experienced contemplation, if we are not fully enlightened Buddhas we have to believe that continuing on without doubt will, at the very least, improve our condition.

Also, even if it isn't 100% necessary, I would imagine that for those who have an unwavering belief in the stories of Buddha, Guru Rinpoche, et al. and in the claims of the tantras, this would be a very useful belief for continuing on in times of doubt.

Right?

Malcolm wrote:

One can believe anything. What counts is direct experience. One can believe that sugar has all kinds of different tastes. The point is that one only knows sugar by tasting it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 27th, 2017 at 2:09 AM

Title: Re: Awakening is a collective venture

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

For the life of me, I don't understand how this question trips people up the way it does.

Can you watch a movie and understand it's being performed by actors, and that the narrative is not real? If so, this concept is not so difficult, certainly there is an ex[experience of a conventional self.

Lazy_eye said:

Ok, so let me make sure I get this. The answer is that it is a self-concept, but it's the conventional self. And the Two Truths doctrine explains why there is a conventional self. Correct?

As to how the question trips people up the way it does, I obviously can't speak for everyone who has stumbled over it. But it's well known (I think) that Buddhists across the traditions have grappled with some ambiguities and apparent contradictions between different things said in different scriptures, going all the way back to the early texts.

For example, in <http://www.accesstoinight.org/tipitaka/sn/sn12/sn12.046.than.html>, the Buddha explicitly rejects the view that "the one who acts is the one who experiences."

On the other hand, according to <http://www.accesstoinight.org/tipitaka/an/an05/an05.057.than.html>, "I am the owner of my actions, heir to my actions, born of my actions, related through my actions, and have my actions as my arbitrator." The statements in these two suttas don't quite align with each other.

It's not always clear how to resolve the seeming contradiction. I understand that a great deal of later Abhidharma and Mayahana doctrinal elaboration, including the Two Truths as well as alaya-vijnana, grew precisely out of the effort to explain this.

Of course I can watch a movie, but I have a functioning memory that allows me to follow the narrative and believe that the same experiencer is sitting in the movie theater from beginning to end. Transmigration across lifetimes is more like watching a movie and having your memory erased halfway through, so you don't remember anything that came before or who you were when you entered the theater.

Anonymous X said:

Staying with the Two Truths doctrine, you only get part of the Totality. Now, for the Three Truths:

From Zongmi on Chan: "The nature axiom has three truths: nature (voidness); characteristics (origination by dependence); and self substance (true mind). The self substance is neither voidness nor form, etc.; it is the potentiality to be both. This corresponds to a mirror's specific images, the voidness of those images, and the brightness or reflectivity of the mirror itself.

The difference between them concerning the two truths and the three truths. All scholars know that the voidness axiom says that all dharmas, both mundane and supramundane, do not go beyond the two truths. There is no need for quotations to elucidate this. The nature axiom, however, gathers up nature, characteristics, and the self substance [xing xiang ji ziti], and considers them together as the three truths. It takes all dharmas that originate by dependence, such as forms, etc., as the worldly truth and takes [the truth that] conditions lack a self nature and [hence] all dharmas are void as the real truth. (This much is no different in terms of principle from the two truths of the voidness axiom and the characteristics axiom.) That the one true mind substance is neither voidness nor form [but] has the potentiality to be void and the potentiality to be form is the truth of the highest meaning of the middle path.”

For me, without the inclusion of the Tathagatagarbha doctrine, Mahayana and Madhyamaka teachings don't point directly to the heart of the matter.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no two truths, three truths, and so on. There is delusion and nondelusion. That's all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 26th, 2017 at 9:01 PM

Title: Re: Awakening is a collective venture

Content:

Lazy_eye said:

For example, in <http://www.accesstosight.org/tipitaka/sn/sn12/sn12.046.than.html>, the Buddha explicitly rejects the view that "the one who acts is the one who experiences."

Malcolm wrote:

He also rejects the opposite extreme: "the one who acts is other than the one who experiences."

This is because, in the logic of dependent origination, causes and effects are neither the same nor different.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 26th, 2017 at 2:07 AM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

Adamantine said:

Caucasian, African, Latin? Seems like within human form we cling to Buddhas appearing Asian

Malcolm wrote:

Give it time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 26th, 2017 at 1:49 AM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Ya but what you gonna emanate as a Buddha? There's a form body and it's symbolic

Malcolm wrote:

Form body emanations are determined by sentient beings, not buddhas.

KrisW said:

Since buddhas have no confused perception, and are inseparable from the dharmakaya then the benefit for beings to be guided is ensured through the rupakayas/compassion and the ability of ordinary beings to perceive these emanations.

If this is so then buddhas see rupakayas as clearly apparent but not truly existing arising in response to other beings. And since there is no confused perception from the perspective of buddhabood, a Buddha perceives what arises for others and can be of benefit through omniscience.

But sentient beings only perceive these emanations depends on the purity of the karma of that individual?

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhas have no specific form kāya per se. What form would a Buddha want? Male, female, neutral? One head, one thousand?

If we were elephants, Samantabhadra would appear to be a blue elephant. Sentient beings perceive buddhas in their own image.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 26th, 2017 at 12:55 AM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

We need a translation of the complete Kalachakra Tantra.

Malcolm wrote:

MIpham's entire commentary has been translated and can be found.

Crazywisdom said:

What's it's called please?

Malcolm wrote:

Sunshiner is how it is translated, by Ives Waldo. You can download it from the Kalacakra Network.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 26th, 2017 at 12:53 AM

Title: Re: Awakening is a collective venture

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Jay is glossing over the fact that while selves may be refuted, individual mindstreams are strongly defended in Mahāyāna. So, he is just deceptively waltzing down the Secularist path, i.e., "Buddhism" without rebirth.

Lazy_eye said:

Since this is a recurring area of confusion, perhaps you would be willing to take a moment and explain the difference between a "self" and an "individual mindstream"? What is the answer to the charge that "individual mindstream" is just a semantic ploy intended to allow a self-concept back into the Dharma?

One could argue also that the distinction being made is between two different kinds of self-concept -- a static one (maybe a pre-Buddhist "atman"), and a dynamic one that allows for change and impermanence. But as long as it's an "individual" mindstream, there is still this troublesome attribute of "individuality," which sounds like a synonym for selfhood.

Malcolm wrote:

Mindstreams are individuated and unique— they have to be, otherwise my karma could ripen on you and vice versa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 25th, 2017 at 11:59 PM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, some of it is kind of nice, don't you think?

Malcolm wrote:

Oh it is nice enough, but it is very conceptual.

Crazywisdom said:

Ya but what you gonna emanate as a Buddha? There's a form body and it's symbolic

Malcolm wrote:

Form body emanations are determined by sentient beings, not buddhas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 25th, 2017 at 11:58 PM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, some of it is kind of nice, don't you think?

Malcolm wrote:

Oh it is nice enough, but it is very conceptual.

Crazywisdom said:

We need a translation of the complete Kalachakra Tantra.

Malcolm wrote:

Mrpham's entire commentary has been translated and can be found.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 25th, 2017 at 11:09 PM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

So you can't even relish it a little bit?

Malcolm wrote:

Honen said, "What is the use of visualizing leaves in Sukhavati, when I can hold the leaves of Mt. Hiei in my hand?"

dzogchungpa said:

Well, yes, but can the same be said of visualizing Vajrayogini?

Malcolm wrote:

Only if you want to get arrested for harassing sixteen year old woman.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 25th, 2017 at 10:41 PM

Title: Re: Awakening is a collective venture

Content:

rachmiel said:

Jay Garfield, in <https://opinionator.blogs.nytimes.com/2014/04/27/what-does-buddhism-require/>:

"The project of full awakening is a collective, not an individual, venture."

I think it's really important to keep this in mind during the journey. And sometimes easy to forget ... for me at least.

Malcolm wrote:

Jay is glossing over the fact that while selves may be refuted, individual mindstreams are strongly defended in Mahāyāna. So, he is just deceptively waltzing down the Secularist path, i.e., "Buddhism" without rebirth.

Buddhadharma without rebirth makes no sense, likewise, there awakening is not a collective venture.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 25th, 2017 at 10:34 PM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, some of it is kind of nice, don't you think?

Malcolm wrote:

Oh it is nice enough, but it is very conceptual.

dzogchungpa said:

So you can't even relish it a little bit?

Malcolm wrote:

Honen said, "What is the use of visualizing leaves in Sukhavati, when I can hold the leaves of Mt. Hiei in my hand?"

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 25th, 2017 at 10:05 PM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I don't relish any more the complex symbolism of the two stages.

dzogchungpa said:

Well, some of it is kind of nice, don't you think?

Malcolm wrote:

Oh it is nice enough, but it is very conceptual.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 25th, 2017 at 9:20 PM

Title: Re: Is "Space" in Dharma the same as it is understood in modern physics?

Content:

Riju said:

I understand Buddhism as a practical science. For me space in buddhism and our physics is same. Separating is to complicate matters and make buddhism abstract.

Malcolm wrote:

No, in physics, space is conditioned. In Buddhism, space is unconditioned.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 25th, 2017 at 9:10 PM

Title: Re: Trumpcare is immoral

Content:

Dharma Flower said:

Trumpcare will result in the loss of healthcare coverage for millions of people, including children, the elderly, and the disabled, all so that the very wealthy can receive hundreds of billions of dollars in tax cuts. I fail to see how this fits with the Buddha's teachings, or with Trump's promises to improve healthcare in America.

Grigoris said:

You mean you believe him when he promised to improve healthcare in America?

Malcolm wrote:

At this point, the Senate bill is going to fail.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 25th, 2017 at 9:09 PM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Really So don't build war machines?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, don't build the war machines presented in outer Kalacakra.

Crazywisdom said:

Low tech anyway. So where how does it explain a metaphor ?

Malcolm wrote:

The Kalacakra war as a metaphor is most fully explained in chapter 5 on the completion stage. In chapter 2, the inner Kalacakra chapter, it is clearly explained that in the war, Rudracakravartin will create an illusion for the Muslims that they are being slaughtered in battle to intimidate them, but that in reality no one is being harmed in anyway.

As for myself, I will just stick with Dzogchen. I don't relish any more the complex symbolism of the two stages.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 25th, 2017 at 8:58 PM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

So close cousin doesn't work. It's married.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, ostensibly the message of the Kalacakra is that Buddhist and Hindus should unite to fend off Muslim encroachment. But this is metaphorical and should not be taken literally, as the text itself makes clear.

Crazywisdom said:

Really So don't build war machines?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, don't build the war machines presented in outer Kalacakra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 25th, 2017 at 8:55 PM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Kalacakra is only dealing with purusha and prakriti.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it presents the complete set of tattvas.

Crazywisdom said:
So close cousin doesn't work. It's married.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, ostensibly the message of the Kalacakra is that Buddhist and Hindus should unite to fend off Muslim encroachment. But this is metaphorical and should not be taken literally, as the text itself makes clear.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, June 25th, 2017 at 8:27 PM
Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
Basically, Samkhya is of the "self is different from the aggregates" persuasion.

Manas is the Buddhist consciousness aggregate.

Mantrik said:
Ah, thanks, that makes sense.

There are also subtle elements, tanmatras, linked to sense organs, and also the five gross Elements. It seems like a close cousin rather than a brother.

Crazywisdom said:
Kalacakra is only dealing with purusha and prakriti.

Malcolm wrote:
No, it presents the complete set of tattvas.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, June 25th, 2017 at 3:37 AM
Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana
Content:

paël said:
Even consciousness/mind? Five elements are earth, water, fire, air and space?

Malcolm wrote:
No, consciousness is a separate dhātu.

Mantrik said:
In the 24 Tattvas, how does 'Manas' relate to the Buddhist 'Consciousness' ?
From the little I've read it seems tied to the physical brain.

Malcolm wrote:

Basically, Samkhya is of the "self is different from the aggregates" persuasion.

Manas is the Buddhist consciousness aggregate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 25th, 2017 at 3:09 AM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Ok so samkhya now is the wisdom of emptiness then purusha is luminous clarity emptiness and prakriti is the impermanent materials that flow from it as Maya, unreality. No problem.

Malcolm wrote:

... in Buddhism in general, the five elements are regarded as primary, from which everything springs, ...

paël said:

Even consciousness/mind? Five elements are earth, water, fire, air and space?

Malcolm wrote:

No, consciousness is a separate dhātu.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 25th, 2017 at 3:03 AM

Title: Re: Is "Space" in Dharma the same as it is understood in modern physics?

Content:

Matt J said:

I wasn't criticizing, I really don't know what it means.

What does that mean, space is nonobstruction? I hear "nonobstructi-"(-ive, -ing) as an adjective, but here you've made it into a noun.

Malcolm wrote:

At least it is the nouning of a verb rather than the verbing of mistranslated noun.

The Sanskrit word for space is defined through its quality of nonobstruction.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 24th, 2017 at 9:02 PM

Title: Re: "Chop wood, carry water." Why bother?

Content:

Jesse said:

"Chop wood, carry water" Insinuates still grasping on to our basic impulses. The impulses to eat, drink, shit, survive. No?

Isn't continuing to live still grasping on to life? What in a sense 'motivates' a totally free person?

Malcolm wrote:

Compassion, service to others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 24th, 2017 at 12:41 AM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is a strong tradition of light physical mortification in all Buddhist traditions, for example, the Dhutāṅga austerity practices of monks.

dzogchungpa said:

Forget about Dhutāṅga, how about shaving your head, no sex/masturbation and only eating before noon? I certainly don't consider those to be "light" austerities.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, the first is good for preventing lice, the second is good for not having children, and the third is good for maintaining a trim, monkly figure.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 24th, 2017 at 12:07 AM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

But Buddhism also says samsara has no beginning or ending unless one ends it with prajna. What your describe sounds extremely close to the awakening of Samatabhadra that you've written about. So then how does the kalacsakra fix this Saṃkhya up?

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen Tantras like the Self-Arisen Vidyā take special pains to negate Saṃkhya, from the recognition that the two systems can be easily confused for one another.

I had meant to add that Patanjali, those who do not know the idea of puruṣa get lost in sattva, forever contemplating only on this most subtle aspect. Buddhists, I believe, were his main targets with this charge.

Kalacakra's Saṃkhya is modified because purusha in this system is replaced with emptiness.

Crazywisdom said:

Well Indians who call themselves Samkya prolly don't all agree on what the tenets are. It means reasoning. I can see being convinced of another rationale and it still Samkya.

Maybe not Samkya if 400 BC. But updated. I think the central approach is that there is something to wrap

The mind around and that can be the samadhi and liberation. Like all you need is to be told the facts of life and the ship rights itself.

Malcolm wrote:

Saṃkhya is the something like the Abhidharma of Hinduism. Without understanding it, Hindu schools are difficult to understand.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 24th, 2017 at 12:05 AM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Ok so samkhya now is the wisdom of emptiness then purusha is luminous clarity emptiness and prakriti is the impermanent materials that flow from it as Maya, unreality. No problem.

Malcolm wrote:

Saṃkhya ideas also show up explicitly in other Indian Buddhist Tantras, such as the Samputa. It is very likely they penetrated Buddhist texts via Ayurveda.

Perhaps the earliest text treatment of Samkhya we have is presented in the Carakra Saṃhita, when Caraka provides proofs for rebirth by positing an atman, and then outlining the Saṃkhya system.

The other main place where Buddhism and Samkhya are mismatched, is that in Buddhism in general, the five elements are regarded as primary, from which everything springs, whereas in the Samkhya system the five elements are the grossest aspect of tamas and are the last things to evolve.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 11:36 PM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

No, the notion of Tapasya, is that suffering and austerities in itself, purifies Karma and delusions, and can even lead to liberation. This makes no sense in a buddhist POV!

dzogchungpa said:

Dude, tapas is an Indic word used by all the traditions.

Grigoris said:

I thought it was a Spanish food for yummy finger food!

Malcolm wrote:

Just as samsara is a perfume:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 11:32 PM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Grigoris said:

Prostration are not penance. It is not like you do them to suffer in order to ameliorate past negative actions.

Malcolm wrote:

One does prostrations to purify the body and traces of negative actions connected with the body.

Grigoris said:

Yes I agree, but not through suffering. That was the main point I was trying to make.

Malcolm wrote:

I have definitely both read in traditional texts and heard from teachers that the pain of prostrations is part of the purification process. There is a strong tradition of light physical mortification in all Buddhist traditions, for example, the Dhutānga austerity practices of monks.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 11:20 PM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Permanent sense object? They say these are mutable, in combination, and changing. Prakriti is not the permanent side, purusha is. No?

Malcolm wrote:

Prakriti does not in fact change. It's evolutions are a product of purusha not recognizing itself, thus cause the three gunas to appear to transform. When meditating according to the Samkhya system, even getting the buddhi/mahat level, the most sattvic level is still a deviation. Patanjali speaks about yogis who get involved with the most subtle level of the three gunas, without realizing that even the most subtle aspect of sattva is still not the self, not the purusha. It is only when purusha turns back on itself, resting its own radiance, that the apparent, but unreal evolutions of a real prakriti cease. Prakriti is as real as Purusha, both are permanent, but samsara comes about from not knowing (āvidyā) that the evolutes produced out from prakriti are not itself. When it is known (vidyā) that the display of prakriti is not the self, then the purusha turns away from prakriti and one reaches the state of kaivalya. Basically, what happens is that the radiance of purusha illuminates prakriti, because while purusha is sentient, prakriti is not sentient. Purusha mistakes its radiance reflected back to itself off of prakriti as other. Saṃkhya is a very interesting, rational system. But it is realist and eternalist in characteristic.

Crazywisdom said:

But Buddhism also says samsara has no beginning or ending unless one ends it with prajna. What you describe sounds extremely close to the awakening of Samatabhadra that you've written about. So then how does the kalacakra fix this Saṃkhya up?

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen Tantras like the Self-Arisen Vidyā take special pains to negate Saṃkhya, from the recognition that the two systems can be easily confused for one another.

I had meant to add that Patanjali, those who do not know the idea of purusha get lost in sattva, forever contemplating only on this most subtle aspect. Buddhists, I believe, were his main targets with this charge.

Kalacakra's Saṃkhya is modified because purusha in this system is replaced with emptiness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 11:04 PM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Grigoris said:

Prostration are not penance. It is not like you do them to suffer in order to ameliorate past negative actions.

Malcolm wrote:

One does prostrations to purify the body and traces of negative actions connected with the body.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 10:38 PM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

So I guess where sankhya is lacking is their theory of causation, where the effect is preexistent in the cause. Nagarjuna in a sense could have been seen as fixing that. Sankhya just means reasoning.

Malcolm wrote:

Samkhya has serious two flaws: 1) a permanent knower 2) permanent sense object.

Crazywisdom said:

Permanent sense object? They say these are mutable, in combination, and changing. Prakriti is not the permanent side, purusha is. No?

Malcolm wrote:

Prakriti does not in fact change. It's evolutions are a product of purusha not recognizing itself, thus cause the three gunas to appear to transform. When meditating according to the Samkhya system, even getting the buddhi/mahat level, the most sattvic level is still a deviation. Patanjali speaks about yogis who get involved with the most subtle level of the three gunas, without realizing that even the most subtle aspect of sattva is still not the self, not the purusha. It is only when purusha turns back on itself, resting its own radiance, that the apparent, but unreal evolutions of a real prakriti cease. Prakriti is as real as Purusha, both are permanent, but samsara comes about from not knowing (āvidyā) that the evolutes produced out from prakriti are not itself. When it is known (vidyā) that the display of prakriti is not the self, then the purusha turns away from prakriti and one reaches the state of kaivalya. Basically, what happens is that the radiance of purusha illuminates prakriti, because while purusha is sentient, prakriti is not sentient. Purusha mistakes its radiance reflected back to itself off of prakriti as other. Samkhya is a very interesting, rational system. But it is realist and eternalist in characteristic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 9:30 PM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

So I guess where sankhya is lacking is their theory of causation, where the effect is preexistent in the cause. Nagarjuna in a sense could have been seen as fixing that. Sankhya just means reasoning.

Malcolm wrote:

Samkhya has serious two flaws: 1) a permanent knower 2) permanent sense object.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 12:25 PM

Title: Re: Is "Space" in Dharma the same as it is understood in modern physics?

Content:

Matt J said:

What does that mean, space is nonobstruction? I hear "nonobstructi-"(-ive, -ing) as an adjective, but here you've made it into a noun.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. Space in Buddhism is nonobstruction and unconditioned. .

At least it is the nouning of a verb rather than the verbing of mistranslated noun.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 4:56 AM

Title: Re: Is "Space" in Dharma the same as it is understood in modern physics?

Content:

tomamundsen said:

Hi all,

Is "Space" in Dharma the same as it is understood in modern physics?

Thanks

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. Space in Buddhism is nonobstruction and unconditioned.

boda said:

What about air? or are you talking about the abstract concept of space?

Malcolm wrote:

I am talking about the Buddhist definition of ākāśadhātu. Air is the vāyudhātu, the principle of motility.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 4:53 AM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Consciousness [shes rig] is the partless solitary knower [jñā] who is an enjoyer, is neither a nature nor an evolute, only this is conscious, the others held to be without consciousnesses [bem po].

Luminosity, the primal nature of the mind, is said to be consciousness [shes rig, i.e., puruṣa]. As such, these phenomena of the body are said to exist in the manner prakṛti and puruṣa.

Losal Samten said:

Do you know if it takes its prakṛiti to be illusory a la trisvabhava's imputed nature/Advaita's prakṛiti or if it takes them to be existent a la Samkhya proper?

Malcolm wrote:
Illusory.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 3:42 AM
Title: Re: Is "Space" in Dharma the same as it is understood in modern physics?
Content:
tomamundsen said:
Hi all,

Is "Space" in Dharma the same as it is understood in modern physics?

Thanks

Malcolm wrote:
Nope. Space in Buddhism is nonobstruction and unconditioned. Space in physics is conditioned. There is also a kind of conditioned space in Buddhism, but again it is not the same. Conditioned space is holes and cavities.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 3:41 AM
Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana
Content:

dzogchungpa said:
According to CTR:

Malcolm wrote:
Well, it really only had Hindus in it until they were converted to Buddhism through receiving the Kalacakra initiation and made into a single vajra family.

dzogchungpa said:
Times change. Apparently CTR once quipped that he had so many Jewish students that they constituted a new sect: the "Oy Vey" school of Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, Shambhala is now exclusively inhabited by Muslims.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 3:33 AM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

Losal Samten said:

Any other views present in Shambhala that we know of or is that it?

dzogchungpa said:

According to CTR: The Shambhala vision does not distinguish a Buddhist from a Catholic, a Protestant, a Jew, a Moslem, a Hindu. That's why we call it the Shambhala kingdom. A kingdom should have lots of different spiritual disciplines in it.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, it really only had Hindus in it until they were converted to Buddhism through receiving the Kalacakra initiation and made into a single vajra family.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 3:23 AM

Title: The Red Pill

Content:

Unknown said:

It started with Sam Harris, moved on to Milo Yiannopoulos and almost led to full-scale Islamophobia. If it can happen to a lifelong liberal, it could happen to anyone

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.theguardian.com/commentisfree/2016/nov/28/alt-right-online-poison-racist-bigot-sam-harris-milo-yiannopoulos-islamophobia>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 3:06 AM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

Losal Samten said:

Is this seen as definitive?

Malcolm wrote:

Meaning is it accepted as Buddhadharma? Yes.

Losal Samten said:

Any other views present in Shambhala that we know of or is that it?

Malcolm wrote:

That is it, AFAIK.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 2:51 AM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is a Saṃkhya of Shambhala.

Losal Samten said:

Is this seen as definitive?

Malcolm wrote:

Meaning is it accepted as Buddhadharma? Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 2:16 AM

Title: Re: The Dharmakāya in Early Buddhist Texts

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I guess what I am saying is that there is no original literature. There is no ur-text. There is no single canon and there never was. Buddhism has no GUT (Great Unified Teaching). Searching for one is an eminently Christian pastime.

Coëmgenu said:

And this is something that is readily acknowledged in EBT studies, in my experience, but only selectively so.

Proponents of EBTs and related scholastic ventures are very ready to point out that "schisms" in "Early Buddhism" do not follow the common mould the West expects from its Christian heritage: schisms over points of doctrine and doctrinal interpretation.

For context: almost all schisms in early Christian history are doctrinal schisms over the correct way to conceptualize the divine and human aspects of Jesus Christ. It began first with dehumanizing tendencies (Docetism, Eutychianism) which rejected Jesus Christ's humanity, and later heresies were produced from the opposite extreme: doubting the divinity of Jesus Christ and framing him as an "ascended master" or just a regular monotheistic prophet (Arianism, Psilanthropism, etc). These are all "conceptual" schisms, or schisms over Christology/Theology.

Instead we have schisms over Vinaya-adaption, monastic practice, and preservation of vinaya observance. It seems that having an "orthodoxy" ("one true teaching") was simply less of a concern. Serious wrong views, we can rest assured, would have been dealt with, but schisms in "Early Buddhism" do not occur over points of doctrine or even points of interpretation of doctrine until a much later period.

Why then do we assume that there was indeed "one true teaching" that served as the ur-teaching for all Buddhisms, and why do we assume the Buddhisms produced by the alleged ur-teaching are necessarily inferior?

It seems the notion of an early Buddhism that does not "schism" over points of doctrine and an early Buddhism that has "one true teaching" are not readily compatible with one-another, unless one wants to argue that Buddhism stayed unschismated with "one teaching" for an extremely unlikely long time (which would contradict much historical evidence for sectarianism).

Malcolm wrote:

Devadatta is a perfect example of schism that happens during the life of the Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 1:53 AM

Title: Re: The Dharmakāya in Early Buddhist Texts

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I guess what I am saying is that there is no original literature. There is no ur-text. There is no single canon and there never was. Buddhism has no GUT (Great Unified Teaching). Searching for one is an eminently Christian pastime.

At a recent translators conference, Jan Nattier gave an excellent talk about the fact that everything we have, Pali canon included, is a translation and that this process of translation began during the Buddha's time. There are no original texts, everything we have is a translation from another language.

Coëmgenu said:

Indeed, all earliest extant Buddhist literature, Buddhavaṇṇa included, comes from transmissions of Buddhavaṇṇa preserved along sectarian lines with particular interpretations and orthodoxies in mind.

That being said, there is also a smaller body of literature (sūtrāṇi & āgamāḥ) from within the "sectarian literature" (as Buddhist history in EBT studies, it seems, for better or worse, is marked by the notion of a older theoretical "Great Unified Teaching" stage of Buddhādharma-history, which becomes hidden under sectarian misinterpretations over time) which does display a certain amount of convergence that is not as apparent in certain other bodies of literature (such as different schools' Abhidharmāḥ).

I was discussing a similar matter to this, that is: how exactly we go about treating this body of apparent "EBTs", on SuttaCentral a while ago, and I hope I am not violating any forum policy of DharmaWheels by quoting something from over there that deals with some of the complicated "fuzzy edges" reconstructed EBT-based Dharma-orthodoxies may well have, contrary to public narratives about EBTs and "Early Buddhism": The EA actually preserves some āgamāḥ which clearly expound Mahāyāna teachings, from EA 27.5:

聞如是：一時，佛在舍衛國祇樹給孤獨園。

Heard thus truly: one time, Buddha dwelt [at] Śrāvastī [in] Jetavana.

爾時，彌勒菩薩至如來所，頭面禮足，在一面坐。

At that-time, Maitreya Bodhisattva came [to the] Tathāgata's location, head facing [downward] bowing [from the] foot [i.e. prostrating or hiding his feet], [then] beside [the Buddha] [to] one side sat.

爾時，彌勒菩薩白世尊言：

At that-time, Maitreya Bodhisattva addressed [the] Bhagavān saying:

「菩薩摩訶薩成就幾法，而行檀波羅蜜，

"[Do] Bodhisattvāḥ Mahāsattvāḥ accomplish myriad dharmāḥ, and perform dānapāramitā,

具足六波羅蜜，疾成無上正真之道？」

possess [the] path [of] six pāramitāḥ, swiftly accomplish nothing higher correctly [and] truly[,] [the] path?

[The passage in question then goes on to explore the other five pāramitāḥ and have the Buddha agree with Maitreya Bodhisattva's questioning of if the Buddha approves of practice of the six pāramitāḥ (dāna, śīla, kṣānti, vīrya, dhyāna, & prajñāpāramitā) as a path to awakening.]

If we take āgamāḥ like this at face value, it implies that Mahāyāna and Bodhisattvayāna are far older than believed to be. However, there is essentially unanimous consensus among those informed concerning Buddhist textual criticism that āgamāḥ like the one I just quoted above (although there are other more problematic and less clear-cut cases, such as the āgama-parallel of the Paccayasutta) are Mahāyāna accruals, not original literature from the same layer as the rest of the āgama-material.

Because of this, there is a small deal of controversy within the EBT subcommunity of Buddhist textual criticism, as to if the āgamāḥ and nikāyā together constitute a coherent body of literature or if they are ultimately incoherent (i.e. sectarian) and cannot be used to reliably reconstruct a common Ur-tradition of "Early Buddhism".

A proponent of the alleged (partial, I am phrasing this far stronger than he would ever) incoherence between the āgamāḥ and the nikāyā is Ven Thích Minh Châu, his text The Chinese Madhyama Āgama and the Pāli Majjhima Nikāya is a good text for exploring this presented perspective.

This perspective is disagreed with by proponent of what we could call "EBT coherency", namely our own Ven Sujato and Ven Brahmali, whose text I will now quote, namely, The Authenticity of Early Buddhist Texts, from page 84:

4.3.5 Claims of incoherence

Scholarship has not succeeded in finding consequential contradictions within the EBTs.

An important challenge to our contention that the EBTs are coherent comes from those who have argued that Buddhism contains fundamental teachings that are hard to reconcile. Probably the most important of these arguments is the claim that Buddhism, specifically the Buddhism of the Pali sources, gives contradictory accounts of the goal of the Buddhist practice, including contradictory accounts of the path of meditation that leads to these goals.

This is not the place to assess these claims in detail, but a few general remarks seem called for. A major problem with these claims, here exemplified by those of Griffiths, is that they often do not distinguish between EBT and non-EBT material. Griffiths says, "The canonical and commentarial literature will be treated here as a unity ... because the thrust of this paper is structural and philosophical rather than historical, and for such purposes differentiation between canon and commentary is of small importance."

This is assuming a point that needs to be proved. In the absence of such proof, it is not possible to ascertain the coherence of the EBTs, or the lack thereof, by relying on non-EBTs. The EBTs need to be considered on their own merits.

Another problem with Griffith's proposition is his reliance on a very limited number of texts from the EBTs. His main reference is to the Satipaṭṭhāna Sutta. However, in establishing any point about the EBTs one needs to consider the literature as a whole. It is our contention that the problems identified by Griffiths and others fall away once this is done.

This addresses an academic named Griffiths, whose work I cannot access, and does not specifically address Ven Thích Minh Châu's work.

Another proponent EBT coherency, Ven Āṇalayo, has however specifically addressed Ven Thích Minh Châu's work from a perspective informed by EBT coherency. His paper, in response to Ven Thích Minh Châu, is available freely online if one googles "The Chinese Madhyama-āgama and the Pāli Majjhima-Nikāya – In the Footsteps of Thich Minh Chau Āṇalayo".

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 1:46 AM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

invisiblediamond said:

Also he mixes up Samkya with Vajrayana.

Malcolm wrote:

So does Kalacakra.

liuzg150181 said:

Referring to Jonang's Zhentong view?

Malcolm wrote:

No, referring to the contents of the Kalacakra itself. There is a Saṃkhya of Shambhala.

In Kalacakra, according to Tagtsang Lotsawa:

Consciousness [shes rig] is the partless solitary knower [jñā] who is an enjoyer, is neither a nature nor an evolute, only this is conscious, the others held to be without consciousnesses [bem po].

Luminosity, the primal nature of the mind, is said to be consciousness [shes rig, i.e., puruṣa]. As such, these phenomena of the body are said to exist in the manner prakṛti and puruṣa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 1:38 AM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

liuzg150181 said:

Apology for digging out a relatively old reply, but:

Malcolm wrote:

For example, in Sakya they have a system where one can visualize oneself as a Hevajra, and practice it as a yidam. One can also practice Hevajra Guru yoga where one visualizes the guru as the mandala of Hevajra. But theory behind each practice is completely different. They are separate paths. The latter bypasses creation and completion stage completely.

liuzg150181 said:

Does that mean the latter is cig car approach?

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is not really a cig car approach.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 1:37 AM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

heart center

Losal Samten said:

As an aside, the SaṃkhyaYoga atman tattva is still considered as self-less as it's still part of the prakṛti, correct? Or does it have a special relationship to the puruṣa?

Malcolm wrote:

You mean the ahamkara, the I-making principle that grasps Prakriti has a self. Yes, it is not part of purusha at all. Purusha stands alone.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 12:11 AM

Title: Re: The Dharmakāya in Early Buddhist Texts

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

pre-sectarian Buddhism

Malcolm wrote:

Pre-sectarian Buddhism is a myth, just like the unicorn, often mentioned, never found.

There were factions in the Sangha right from the beginning.

Coëmgenu said:

Indeed, but rather than challenging the entire premise of a lot of peoples' worldviews (and unnecessarily, perhaps, affecting their faith in Buddhism, if the argumentation is severe enough and well-executed enough), I am just trying to point out that many EBTs already speak of a dharmakāya, and it is clear that it is not always just "the collection of the teachings".

Like I said earlier though, this essay is addressed to a predominantly non-Mahāyāna audience, so there will be some redundancies that wouldn't need mentioning to someone interested in and informed about what is reconstructable about the history of early Mahāyāna. I thought it might just interesting to have it here though anyways and as well, because I find that EBT-studies is so often used to point out anything not found in the Pāli Canon as "not an EBT", and any time that EBTs disagree, the Pāli or what "agrees most" with the Pāli is almost always given precedence (as evidenced by the SF hypothesis being used to edit Sarvāstivāda texts to conform with an "EBT orthodoxy"). This essay is mostly to challenge that tendency and to expose one particular misconception: that the dharmakāya is a Mahāyāna "innovation".

Malcolm wrote:

At a recent translators conference, Jan Nattier gave an excellent talk about the fact that everything we have, Pali canon included, is a translation and that this process of translation began during the Buddha's time. There are no original texts, everything we have is a translation from another language.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 23rd, 2017 at 12:06 AM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Guru yoga is a very specific practice with a very specific theory related to the vajra body and the indestructible bindu.

rai said:

where could we find more about that theory? there is so much on Kyerim but on Guruyoga i don't know any sources, i mean about how and why it works etc. I have your book, is it somewhere there? thank you anybody? please :)

Malcolm wrote:

You have an indestructible bindu in your heart center. When you do guru yoga, and meditate on the guru in the heart, this causes the vāyu to enter the central channel and dissolve. That indestructible bindu is your rigpa.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 11:36 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

Your willingness to use it so casually and easily

Malcolm wrote:

I did not use it casually and easily. I used it deliberately. I don't often call people bigots. But when they are being bigots, then it is proper to refer to them as such.

PuerAzelis said:

It is not "hysterical" to believe that this degradation of language itself, its descent into incoherence and double talk, is the primary issue.

Malcolm wrote:

In my opinion, you are getting worked up about nothing.

PuerAzelis said:

You may say this is the cart leading the horse, but I completely disagree. The moral "valence" (to use the psychologists' word) of language precedes its use. An assessment of utility precedes objective description. As such, if the utility of a certain language is squandered, whether or not it objectively describes anything becomes irrelevant.

Malcolm wrote:

Harris needs to be called out on his bigotry. Bigots have bigotry by definition.

PuerAzaelis said:

bigot |'bigət|

noun

a person who is intolerant toward those holding different opinions

Malcolm wrote:

Bill Maher is another bigot.

So is Trump. And so, apparently, are you since you are expressing extreme intolerance of our difference of opinion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 11:00 PM

Title: Re: The Dharmakāya in Early Buddhist Texts

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

pre-sectarian Buddhism

Malcolm wrote:

Pre-sectarian Buddhism is a myth, just like the unicorn, often mentioned, never found.

There were factions in the Sangha right from the beginning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 10:42 PM

Title: Re: Ju Mipham's Mode of Being

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

No glossary, so what are "Drala and Werma deities"?

Malcolm wrote:

These ancient Bonpo entities, pre-Buddhist. IN this context, it is related more to the Gesar cycle of practice composed by Mipham in general.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 10:36 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

With respect to FGM:

Female circumcision in the USA

Clitoridectomy and other circumcision-like operation on girls and women had a longer career in United States, where doctors deplored Baker Brown's disgrace and The Medical Record defended him with the question "What now will be the chance for recovery for the poor epileptic female with a clitoris?" [11] There was also a vigorous attempt to apply the theories of Lewis Sayre – that many nervous diseases were caused by a tight or non-retractable foreskin – to women, and a number of doctors urged that girls also should have their clitoral hoods excised if there was any suspicion of adhesions of the accumulation of "secretions". In 1892 another defender of Brown (he was "almost on the right track"), Dr Robert Morris, went so far as to suggest that, since 80 per cent of American women suffered from preputial adhesions, all schoolgirls should be inspected to ensure that proper separation between prepuce and clitoris had occurred. He was apparently confident that most of the girls would require surgery, and added: "The separation of adhesive prepuces in young unmarried women should be done by female physicians anyway, and such physicians can be abundantly occupied with this sort of work". [12] It was a valiant effort to expand the market for medical services, and he must have been disappointed that his suggestions were not more widely taken up.

http://www.historyofcircumcision.net/index.php?option=com_content&task=category§ionid=13&id=76&Itemid=6

So it is not just a "Muslim" thing and predates Islam by millenia.

Unknown said:

The history of FGM is not well known but the practice dated back at least 2000 years. It is not known when or where the tradition of Female Genital Mutilation originated from. It was believed that it was practised in ancient Egypt as a sign of distinction amongst the aristocracy. Some believe it started during the slave trade when black slave women entered ancient Arab societies. Some believe FGM began with the arrival of Islam in some parts of sub-Saharan Africa. Some believe the practice developed independently among certain ethnic groups in sub-Saharan Africa as part of puberty rites. Overall, in the history, it was believed that FGM would ensure women's virginity and reduction in the female desire.

Many commentators believe that the practice evolved from earliest times in primitive communities that wished to establish control over the sexual behaviour of women. The Romans performed a technique involving slipping of rings through the labia majora of female slaves to prevent them from becoming pregnant and the Scoptsi sect in Russia performed FGM to ensure virginity.

The practice is supported by traditional beliefs, values and attitudes. In some communities it is valued as a rite of passage to womanhood. (for example in Kenya and Sierra Leone) Others value it as a means of preserving a girl's virginity until marriage, (for example in Sudan, Egypt, and Somalia) In most of these countries FGM is a pre-requisite to marriage and marriage is vital to a woman's social and economic survival. It is believed by some African women that if their daughters are not circumcised would not get husband. This (FGM) harmful tradition has been guided by taboos from generation by generation.

FGM is rooted in culture and some believe it is done for religious reasons, but it has not been confined to a particular culture or religion. FGM has neither been mentioned in the Quran nor Sunnah.

It has been highlighted that FGM was practised in the United Kingdom and United States by the Gynaecologists to cure women of so-called "female weakness" The practice of FGM continues within some communities in various form and even in the 20th century girls and women are still subjected to this harmful tradition.

Malcolm wrote:

http://www.fgmnationalgroup.org/historical_and_cultural.htm

Johnny Dangerous said:

You seem to be shifting the conversation from the "PC" state of discourse on the left, and making it into simply being against FGM and its supporters - not exactly a controversial position, i'm guessing we will all agree it's abhorrent.

PuerAzelis said:

So then it was a stupid example, never mind.

DGA said:

I think FGM specifically and the systematic abuse of children generally is a worthwhile discussion to have. Maybe it's worth a separate topic? One thing I have observed: with regard to FGM as it happens in some Islamic communities, the best advocates against it are typically the parents of children who have endured it and regret their own parents convincing them it was a good idea. It's the maternal grandmother you have to watch out for in these situations.

You throw a stick in the air it'll come down on someone calling you a bigot.

1. Stop throwing sticks like that. You could put someone's eye out.

2. I wonder why I don't have this problem. Do you really experience life that way? Does anyone else here? Am I failing to notice a chorus of chides? Or... alternatively... could it be that if you don't talk or act like a bigot to the best of your ability, you tend not to have this problem? That's a rhetorical question.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 10:00 PM

Title: Re: Indian Vajrayana

Content:

invisiblediamond said:

Also he mixes up Samkya with Vajrayana.

Malcolm wrote:

So does Kalacakra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 8:48 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

PuerAzaelis said:

And this is also dangerous. Because the inheritors of the language you just created will misuse it - perhaps against you.

Malcolm wrote:

You're being a little hysterical here. Our little discussion over whether Harris is a bigot (my opinion) or a righteous crusader for Western Liberal Values (michaelb's opinion) against the terrors of Wahhabism has little affect in the world. It merely shows that Buddhists have strong differences of opinion over the question of the intrinsic evil of Islam as an entity, divorced from its monotheistic ideology held in common with Christianity and Judaism. Arguably, Christianity is the most pernicious and aggressive religious movement in history, and continues to be so.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 8:42 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The cause of terrorism from Muslim countries is Western economic imperialism.

Karma_Yeshe said:

If this were the case, then why are so many Muslims in Arabia victims of terrorism from Muslims?

Malcolm wrote:

Because the US and its allies have completely disrupted the major economies of this area, that should be obvious.

What is less obvious is the role climate change is playing in these conflicts. For example, the riots in Syria that led to the civil war were sparked by drought.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 8:39 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Muslims became radicalized when Western powers started attacking Muslims. Muslims did not start attacking the West.

[...]

The cause of terrorism from Muslim countries is Western economic imperialism. Harris does not understand, or refuses to understand the real causes of violence that is coming against the West from the Muslim world. And even here, that violence is minimal, compared to the violence that competing factions fighting resource wars against each other in the Middle East, etc. are inflicting upon one another.

michaelb said:

Absolute nonsense. Muslims became "radicalised" in the wake of the fall of the ottoman empire. The ottoman empire was every bit as aggressive and expansionist as its western counterparts and launched attacks against the west and against western interests - anything from the Barbary corsairs, armenian genocide, to the continued occupation and illegal settlement building on Cyprus.

Malcolm wrote:

The Ottoman Empire perished a century ago. Were they expansionist? Yes. Was it for religious reasons? Largely not. Was it moribund and in decline for the last 100 of its rule? Definitely. Was the Ottoman Empire allied with any Western countries? Yes, France, for example, was a major ally of the Ottoman Empire.

michaelb said:

I see your perverse attempt to portray sunni jihadist violence against non-sunni people in the west as a response to "economic imperialism", but sunni jihadist violence against non-sunni people in other countries (Buddhists in SE Asia, Animists in S Sudan, Christians in Pakistan, etc.) as "resource wars."

Malcolm wrote:

All wars are resource wars.

michaelb said:

In fact, we know what the jihadists want and why they do what they are doing, because they tell us so. Now, the global sunni islamist movement has momentum and, no matter how much you and chomsky like to beat yourselves up over the evils of western imperialism, it won't stop them.

Malcolm wrote:

It does not really have that much momentum. And I am not beating myself up over Western Imperialism. I am observing that Western Imperialism caused this mess. That said, I would rather have US Imperialism than Russian, Chinese, or Saudi Imperialism. Just because I correctly identify the mistakes the West has made does not bear the correlation that I think the West should give up its armies and go home. But I do think we have a responsibility to understand the failures of our foreign policies. After all, most of this mess is Britain's fault, when you get right down to it. Followed up with American naivety in the postwar period.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 12:26 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The cause of terrorism from Muslim countries is Western economic imperialism.

PuerAzelis said:

Naturally. Well thank goodness Noam Chomsky isn't a bigot or anything like that. Like Sam Harris is a bigot. Thanks for clearing that up.

Malcolm wrote:

Harris' point of view is rooted in bigotry because it does not address the real issues and relies on scapegoats.

PuerAzelis said:

Ah. Thank you for the reminder about irony. I was wondering when we were going to get to the irony.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, Chomsky is not a bigot.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 9:37 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The difference between what I am saying and what Harris says is that I am saying is that monotheism itself is the problem, not any of its particular expressions.

aflatun said:

Well that's news to me. Last I checked the problem was good old hatred, greed, and delusion.

Malcolm wrote:

[/quote]

The Buddha was fairly clear that some views are more pernicious than others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 9:33 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:
PuerAzelis said:
PC police.

Malcolm wrote:
Red herring of all red herrings.

The problem with Harris is that he blames Muslims for not being sufficiently Western and liberal. This is why I think he is a bigot. He targets Islam, and Muslims for special venom in his writing, etc. This is amazingly clear evidence of his bigotry:

4. It is perfectly possible—and increasingly necessary—to speak about the ideological roots of Islamism and jihadism, and even about the unique need for reform within mainstream Islam itself, without lapsing into bigotry or disregarding the suffering of refugees. Indeed, when one understands the problem for what it is, one realizes that secular Muslims, liberal Muslims, and former Muslims are among the most desirable allies to have in the West—and, indeed, such people are the primary victims of Islamist intolerance and jihadist terror in Muslim-majority countries. Muslims became radicalized when Western powers started attacking Muslims. Muslims did not start attacking the West.

He continues to talk about "reform within mainstream Islam itself," while having zero expertise in Islam, being completely ignorant of its history, tradition, language, and doctrines.

He then says:

6. The next acts of jihadist terrorism to take place on American soil will most likely be met with terrifyingly blunt (and even illegal) countermeasures by the Trump administration. If all that liberals can do in response is continue to lie about the causes of terrorism and lock arms with Islamists, we have some very rough times ahead. The cause of terrorism from Muslim countries is Western economic imperialism. Harris does not understand, or refuses to understand the real causes of violence that is coming against the West from the Muslim world. And even here, that violence is minimal, compared to the violence that competing factions fighting resource wars against each other in the Middle East, etc. are inflicting upon one another. Harris' point of view is rooted in bigotry because it does not address the real issues and relies on scapegoats.

My intellectual distaste for monotheism as a socio-religious-economic system is distinct from my lack of sympathy for Harris' politics of scapegoating.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 6:31 AM
Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction
Content:
Malcolm wrote:

I think that you are not properly distinguishing the power differential between ourselves, and those who live in muslim nations, most of which are second and third world nations.

For example, if a white person is biased against black people, this is a more powerful kind of bias than one group of black people having bias against another, for example, the frequent bias black people raised in American express against black people raised elsewhere, and vice versa.

One can expect bias against Muslims from Jeff Sessions. The fact that Harris so shamelessly promotes his bias against Islam is nothing short of appalling.

PuerAzelis said:

Oh, for the Namdrol of old.

I suspect it is extremely aggravating for people (such as Sam Harris) to have their words proof-texted. But, well, c'est la vie, once that mud starts flying, things tend to spiral out of control. Hell, before you know it, you're living in some place called Moscow in 1934 and there's no court of appeal and that court officer with the jackboots and revolver is making you nervous.

But I forget myself. One man's bigotry is another man's subtle postmodernist critique. As we all know. Since we are all enlightened post-enlightenment whatever-we-ares-based-upon-our-present-whim. Indeed, one man's bigotry may be another man's championing of the downtrodden and the oppressed, who all, I have no doubt, would unhesitatingly appreciate all of his sentiments without question. And if they did question these sentiments, well, no need to take the noble savages at their word. They are oppressed, therefore delusional, so our words can be safely uttered in order to liberate them, after all. As long as you are preaching to the correct choir. Or talking about the perfectly appropriate topic, "power differential", as opposed to, I dunno, cultures, or books, or ideologies, or belief-systems or ... well whatever topic it is that makes your points valid and the other man's invalid.

Malcolm wrote:

Different day, different point. You will note that I do not spare Christianity nor Judaism from the charge that they are religions essentially founded on the basis of culture wars and ethnic cleansing.

What we are witnessing now is a fundamentally Christian exercise of power over the Muslim world. Terrorism against Western populations is a direct consequence of US wars of aggression the Middle East, and the failure of an anti-Communist foreign policy that made crucial policy errors in the 50's, not limited to the CIA's replacement of Mosedeq with the Pahlavi family in Iran.

I fully understand the anxiety of Europeans who are fearful. I also think that the Harris response, i.e., to try and blame Muslim terrorist behavior on books absurd.

The difference between what I am saying and what Harris says is that I am saying is that monotheism itself is the problem, not any of its particular expressions.

I am not apologizing for Islam, I saying that Harris is a bigot who has problems with Muslims based on their belonging to a religion. For example he claims:

"While the other major world religions have been fertile sources of intolerance, it is clear that the doctrine of Islam poses unique problems for the emergence of a global civilization...The only future devout Muslims can envisage—as Muslims—is one in which all infidels have been converted to Islam, politically subjugated, or killed."

This statement is such absolute bullshit coming from a person who lives among Fundie Christians in the US. His laughable defense of the Second Iraq war is equally pathetic.

He summarizes, "It is not at all clear how we should proceed in our dialogue with the Muslim world." Yes, it is not at all clear when one engages in dehumanizing and humiliating others based on what you imagine they believe.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 5:15 AM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Grigoris said:

Just to be clear: I am not being contrary, just trying to flesh out the subject. I am trying to understand here. The reality is that I am quite thick at times:

I feel that the problem with this (having the text that explains the signs) is that one then does a practice, with a specific goal in sight, which may not be the actual goal of the practice.

For example: If one is doing Guru Yoga (let's say) expecting certain signs (outcomes) wouldn't it be possible they would lose sight of the actual aim of the practice? Or are the signs a guarantee that the aim of the practice has been achieved? Somehow though I could see that knowing what to expect may actually take you further away from the outcome... Like when you know what the "effects" of each jhana are BEFORE engaging in practice and you aim for the effects... Do you get what I am asking?

Malcolm wrote:

I do, and you cannot fake the kinds of signs talked about in the texts. You can lie about them to others, but you cannot lie to yourself about them. For example, Virupa had some nightmares, or what he thought were nightmares. But Nairatmya explained to him these were signs of the winds doing this thing and that in his body as a result of doing the Yogini completion stage.

The signs don't guarantee anything other than that you are generating "heat."

florin said:

So violent dreams can sometime have a positive meaning ? Like things are progressing and moving in the right direction ?

Malcolm wrote:

Quite often. For example, negative dreams are often understood to be positive signs. If you dream your guru dies, this is a very good dream.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 3:59 AM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You just need a text that explains what the signs are.

Grigoris said:

Just to be clear: I am not being contrary, just trying to flesh out the subject. I am trying to understand here. The reality is that I am quite thick at times:

I feel that the problem with this (having the text that explains the signs) is that one then does a practice, with a specific goal in sight , which may not be the actual goal of the practice.

For example: If one is doing Guru Yoga (let's say) expecting certain signs (outcomes) wouldn't it be possible they would lose sight of the actual aim of the practice? Or are the signs a guarantee that the aim of the practice has been achieved? Somehow though I could see that knowing what to expect may actually take you further away from the outcome... Like when you know what the "effects" of each jhana are BEFORE engaging in practice and you aim for the effects... Do you get what I am asking?

Malcolm wrote:

I do, and you cannot fake the kinds of signs talked about in the texts. You can lie about them to others, but you cannot lie to yourself about them. For example, Virupa had some nightmares, or what he thought were nightmares. But Nairatmya explained to him these were signs of the winds doing this thing and that in his body as a result of doing the Yogini completion stage.

The signs don't guarantee anything other than that you are generating "heat."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 3:11 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

PuerAzaelis said:

And so am I and so are you and so are all the Sunnis and Shiites themselves. So who gets to draw where the line should be. rhizzone? Who died and appointed them the dictatorship of the proletariat?

Malcolm wrote:

So you are defending bigotry against Muslims on the principle that one group of Muslims hates another? Wow.

PuerAzaelis said:

So from your own statement that there is a continuum of bigotry you conclude that someone who agrees with that, and points out that there are certain people who are themselves Muslim but who hate other Muslims, is "defending bigotry"? Wow.

Malcolm wrote:

I think that you are not properly distinguishing the power differential between ourselves, and those who live in muslim nations, most of which are second and third world nations.

For example, if a white person is biased against black people, this is a more powerful kind of bias than one group of black people having bias against another, for example, the frequent bias black people raised in American express against black people raised elsewhere, and vice versa.

One can expect bias against Muslims from Jeff Sessions. The fact that Harris so shamelessly promotes his bias against Islam is nothing short of appalling.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 2:53 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.rhizzone.net/articles/sam-harris-fraud/>

michaelb said:

A puerile hatchet job that has no business being posted on a Dharma forum.

Malcolm wrote:

So then you are basically stating the author's claims are themselves false.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 2:51 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Sessions and Harris just shades in a continuum of bigotry against Muslims.

PuerAzelis said:

And so am I and so are you and so are all the Sunnis and Shiites themselves. So who gets to draw where the line should be. rhizzone? Who died and appointed them the dictatorship of the proletariat?

Malcolm wrote:

So you are defending bigotry against Muslims on the principle that one group of Muslims hates another? Wow.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 1:55 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, I would say it was his irrational bias towards Muslims. Being a lightweight isn't a sin.

PuerAzelis said:

Fine. But he hasn't exactly limited his biases. The Southern Baptist Convention and the Anti-Defamation League aren't exactly his groupies either.

This is why I have such a visceral reaction to a character assassination of someone who is basically an equal opportunity sht-thrower.

I mean good bloody God if the bloody rhizzone is seriously throwing Sam bloody Harris of all people into the same cesspool as (say) Jeff Sessions (who apparently btw just got a 60-year-old woman arrested simply because she laughed out loud at his recent testimony) ... this kind of approach is what is left of revolutionary socialism? Seriously, that's the conversation we need to have. Sam Harris is a legit target. I mean, are you kidding? That's really the position, we need less of that kind of person, not more?

Nothing to do with OP obviously ... I read "Waking Up". It was an definitely, absolutely, incredibly, utterly, completely, truly... lightweight book. I preferred The Power of Now.

Malcolm wrote:

Sessions and Harris just shades in a continuum of bigotry against Muslims.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 1:19 AM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Mantrik said:

it ends up becoming the 'Greg and Malcolm Show'.]

Malcolm wrote:

Fine, I will cede the floor to Greg since it is so boring for you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 12:54 AM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Grigoris said:

You yourself admit that signs are not so easy to recognise (shiiiiiiiit, not even the Mahasiddha Virupa could recognise them),

Malcolm wrote:

He wasn't a mahasiddhi, or even a siddhi then. He was an ordinary person just like you or I, and as I explained, had not received the instructions on how to recognize the signs of accomplishment.

Grigoris said:

so if you use them as a guide... Numbers and time are also imperfect since signs can manifest well before the completion of the counting or time period (as you stated earlier).

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is why signs are the best indication, all texts agree on this point.

Grigoris said:

Or, if one is anal retentive about the measuring and cuts off the practice before signs manifest, then one may be selling themselves short (maybe even by a few days or a few hundred repetitions).

Malcolm wrote:

This is why signs are the best indicator. You practice until you have them. Then numbers and time don't matter.

Grigoris said:

I guess that is why it is important to have a teacher (or a more experienced practitioner) oversee the process.

Malcolm wrote:

You just need a text that explains what the signs are.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 12:42 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:
cky said:
... its a pretty decent book ...

PuerAzaelis said:
As far as I can tell Sam Harris' only sin is that he is a lightweight.

Malcolm wrote:
No, I would say it was his irrational bias towards Muslims. Being a lightweight isn't a sin.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 12:42 AM
Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway
Content:
Grigoris said:
If you think that my goal in this discussion, or any other, is just to oppose you, then you are sadly mistaken.

Malcolm wrote:
I was just pointing out that your responses are habitually contrarian.

Grigoris said:
No they are not! I think you are reading something into them which is not actually there.

Malcolm wrote:
Whatevs

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 12:41 AM
Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway
Content:
Grigoris said:
By not "hanging onto numbers" one runs the risk of drifting around aimlessly without a target or goal, spending too much or too little time on the activity, wasting one's time and energy wandering around in circles.

Malcolm wrote:
Numbers, time, or signs. The latter is best.

Mantrik said:
Tut tut... 'Former' and 'latter' are used when there are two alternatives. For more than two, use 'first' and 'last'.

We dun things gooder when I were a profeshnal writer.

.

Malcolm wrote:

Really, you are actually twitting me on grammar?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 12:35 AM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Grigoris said:

It seems to me that no matter how you measure your progress, it can become a source of obstacles.

Malcolm wrote:

I say white, you say black. I say black, you say white.

Grigoris said:

If you think that my goal in this discussion, or any other, is just to oppose you, then you are sadly mistaken.

Malcolm wrote:

I was just pointing out that your responses are habitually contrarian.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 12:19 AM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Personal experience indicates to me that signs are better, and that they often come before one has done a complete number or time.

Grigoris said:

It seems to me that no matter how you measure your progress, it can become a source of obstacles.

Malcolm wrote:

I say white, you say black. I say black, you say white.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 22nd, 2017 at 12:14 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

I am just a delicate teacup, but I think I get the argument here ... Extremely well regarded social critic Ben Afflek says that Sam Harris says naughty things about Muslims, therefore Sam Harris is an imperialist crusader, therefore Sam Harris is bad and stupid.

Have I got that, roughly?

boda said:

More specifically, the article agrees with Afflek's characterization of Harris's views of regarding Muslims as "racist." I didn't know Muslims were a race. Learn something new everyday.

Malcolm wrote:

Hatred for Muslims is often racist in character, since what people are reacting to is ethnicity, not religion. Muslims are, by and large, not white people. Religion is just used as an excuse. For example, look at the way Catholics were treated in the US. Irish, Germans, and Italians were all represented with characteristics that were at best subhuman in the press of the day. Most of the so called "anarchists" who were tried in US courts were from Catholic countries, Sacco and Vanzetti being just one famous example of Catholics being tried and convicted of crimes in which they had no involvement.

However, perhaps "racist" is the wrong word for Harris. I would settle for "bigot."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 21st, 2017 at 11:45 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

He must have accumulated an incredible amount of merit in past lives to have access to so much wealth and leisure and to connect with a great master like TUR, don't you think?

Malcolm wrote:

People waste their precious human birth in the most amazing ways. And I don't mean connecting with TUR.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 21st, 2017 at 11:28 PM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Grigoris said:

By not "hanging onto numbers" one runs the risk of drifting around aimlessly without a target or goal, spending too much or too little time on the activity, wasting one's time and energy wandering around in circles.

Malcolm wrote:

Numbers, time, or signs. The latter is best.

Grigoris said:

They are not mutually exclusive. One can achieve the signs within the numbers or time. Sometimes signs may not manifest during the specific practice though, do you believe maintaining the practice is a good idea in that case or would it be better to move on and (possibly) gain the signs later, possibly during another practice?

Was it Maitripa that got sick of accumulating without experiencing signs, and so threw his mala into the latrine in frustration and then...?

Malcolm wrote:

Virupa. However, Virupa had many signs, but since he never received the intimate instructions connected with Vajrayogini from his gurus, he did not properly understand the signs he was having, and interpreted them as bad omens and signs of failure. Thus he became despondent, tossed his mala in the toilet, which led to his dream of Nairatmya, and his subsequent meeting with her in human form. She then sorted him out, and he achieved six bhumis in six days as a result of her teachings.

Personal experience indicates to me that signs are better, and that they often come before one has done a complete number or time. For me the worst practice was mandala, and it was the practice in which I had the best signs. Then the rest of my retreat was a breeze.

The Sakya approach to Ngondro has always been much less number oriented anyway — classically it was based on time periods, one month of this, then that, etc.. The number trip is a rather modern thing for Sakyapas. I did follow it, actually, but in retrospect, I would have done things a little differently. In any case, no matter, I finished my retreat. Another thing, the signs I had from mandala I did not recognize at the time as being specific to mandala, etc. But later on, some years later, I read a commentary that specified the signs of each of the ngondro practices and I can report that I had those experiences.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 21st, 2017 at 10:36 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.rhizzone.net/articles/sam-harris-fraud/>

smcj said:

The article makes a big deal out of his trust fund financial status from his "Hollywood parents". His dad was a soap opera actor. That's small potatoes.

Malcolm wrote:

I think the dead salmon and claim to be a neuroscientist is more the issue here...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 21st, 2017 at 10:02 PM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Grigoris said:

By not "hanging onto numbers" one runs the risk of drifting around aimlessly without a target or goal, spending too much or too little time on the activity, wasting one's time and energy wandering around in circles.

Malcolm wrote:

Numbers, time, or signs. The latter is best.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 21st, 2017 at 9:21 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.rhizzone.net/articles/sam-harris-fraud/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 21st, 2017 at 8:59 PM

Title: Re: Do we have free will?

Content:

pael said:

Do we have free will?

Malcolm wrote:

Does not apply in Buddhadharma. The question only applies in theistic traditions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 21st, 2017 at 3:41 AM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

For example, in Sakya they have a system where one can visualize oneself as a Hevajra, and practice it as a yidam. One can also practice Hevajra Guru yoga where one visualizes the guru as the mandala of Hevajra. But theory behind each practice is completely different. They are separate paths. The latter bypasses creation and completion stage completely.

anjali said:

Is "bypass" the best choice of wording here?

Malcolm wrote:

Bypass is apt.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 21st, 2017 at 3:24 AM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Since we live in Kali Yuga, if it says 100, you now have to do 400.

tomamundsen said:

No, people need to do however many their guru tells them...

Malcolm wrote:

I think you rather missed the point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 21st, 2017 at 2:39 AM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, śamatha and vipaśyāna are not guru yoga. Nor is practicing the six perfections, nor do any of the three lower tantras have guru yoga. Guru yoga exists only in highest yoga tantra on up.

Meditating on the guru is held to be more effective than yidam practices, and so on.

Grigoris said:

Yes, but I want to go to my original point, which you did not answer too: If the Yidam and the Guru are seen as inseparable, then surely the one practice is as effective as the other?

Malcolm wrote:

What I am saying is that the guru is the ultimate yidam which is peerless and beyond compare.

Grigoris said:

If the Six Perfections are seen as the qualities of the perfect teacher, etc... Surely it is more a matter of view then it is a matter of specific practices?

Malcolm wrote:

There is no guru yoga in common Mahāyāna.

Grigoris said:

If the Guru is the source of all blessing (and no doubt the Guru is), then wouldn't any teaching bestowed by the Guru (including the "lowly" practices of śamatha and vipaśyāna) be on par with a "formal" Guru Yoga?

Malcolm wrote:

Why would they be? Guru yoga is a very specific practice with a very specific theory related to the vajra body and the indestructible bindu.

Grigoris said:

With the right view wouldn't all teachings be a Guru Yoga since the Guru is the source of those teachings?

Malcolm wrote:

For example, in Sakya they have a system where one can visualize oneself as a Hevajra, and practice it as a yidam. One can also practice Hevajra Guru yoga where one visualizes the guru as the mandala of Hevajra. But theory behind each practice is completely different. They are separate paths. The latter bypasses creation and completion stage completely.

In Nyingma they have many practices related to Guru Rinpoche. For example, in Dudjom Tersar it is common to practice Drollo as the Guru, Kilaya as the Yidam, and Troma as the Dakini, for blessings, siddhis, and activities respectively.

In Konchok Chidu, we have the outer, inner, and secret guru, Pema Obar, Guru Dragpo, and Simhamukha as guru deva and dakini.

But in the end, it is the practice of guru yoga that is most important in all schools. All a Nyingma practitioner really needs is Shower of Blessings by Mipham, or something similar.

The long Dudjom Tersar Ngondro states that it itself is enough, and that there is no need to do other creation or completion stage practices. Taking this as a basis, then one is given teachings on the three spaces and the text on rushan, and thogal.

But since people's karma is different, there are many practices of the three roots for people of various dispositions and karmas.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 21st, 2017 at 2:09 AM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Everything comes from the guru. This is why guru yoga is the most important practice of all. As Virupa states, "The profound path is the guru."

Grigoris said:

What I am asking is: if practiced properly, is there a practice/path that is not guru yoga?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, śamatha and vipaśyāna are not guru yoga. Nor is practicing the six perfections, nor do any of the three lower tantras have guru yoga. Guru yoga exists only in highest yoga tantra on up.

Meditating on the guru is held to be more effective than yidam practices, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 21st, 2017 at 12:17 AM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Also, I don't know much German, and I know even less about Heidegger so I can't really answer questions relating to this term, at least, not yet.

Malcolm wrote:

So it is even worse, we have an absurd neologism based upon a questionable translation of a German word because someone is infatuated with Heidegger and Guenther.

Basically, Heidegger was the worst thing that ever happened to Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 21st, 2017 at 12:00 AM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Matylda said:

Anyway I wonder if in fact there is no some remote origin of Tibetan ngondro in India... somehow Tibetan masters had to come to conclusion with ngondro, and probably it was not out of the blue.

Malcolm wrote:

Indian ngondro consisted primarily of Vajrasattva, Mandala offerings and supplications to the guru. Refuge and Bodhicitta were added by Tibetans, as far as I can tell.

dzogchungpa said:

Was it typically numbers-based, i.e. you have to do (at least) a certain amount of each practice, and basically a prerequisite?

Malcolm wrote:

As far as I know, it was signs based. You did each practice until you have a sign. In SMS level 2 and beyond, it is all signs based, AFAIK.

The number thing comes from lower tantra. Since we live in Kali Yuga, if it says 100, you now have to do 400.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 20th, 2017 at 11:50 PM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Um, for the record, I am not a fan of Guenther's stuff either. I just thought "absurd neologisms" was a bit too flip.

Malcolm wrote:

I said it, and I am sticking too it: "ground-presencing" is an absurd neologism. Incidentally, anwesen is also a noun in German meaning "property." Sure you didn't mean "anwesend," adj. "present?"

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 20th, 2017 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Everything comes from the guru. This is why guru yoga is the most important practice of all. As Virupa states, "The profound path is the guru."

Grigoris said:

You won't see me disagreeing. But why define guru yoga so narrowly?

Malcolm wrote:

I haven't defined it narrowly. I have defined it as the most important of all practices. The guru is the Buddha, the guru is the Dharma, likewise the guru is the Sangha, the guru is Śrī Heruka, the guru creates everything.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 20th, 2017 at 10:07 PM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Matylda said:

Anyway I wonder if in fact there is no some remote origin of Tibetan ngondro in India... somehow Tibetan masters had to come to conclusion with ngondro, and probably it was not out of the blue.

Malcolm wrote:

Indian ngondro consisted primarily of Vajrasattva, Mandala offerings and supplications to the guru. Refuge and Bodhicitta were added by Tibetans, as far as I can tell.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 20th, 2017 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is better that someone recall the guru for an instant than meditate one hundred thousand deities for ten million years.

— The Great Array Tantra

Grigoris said:

Sure, but if one sees the unity of guru, deva and dakini... Well... Killing three birds with one stone, really.

Malcolm wrote:

Everything comes from the guru. This is why guru yoga is the most important practice of all. As Virupa states, "The profound path is the guru."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 20th, 2017 at 9:46 PM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Anonymous X said:

In Japan, as Matylda points out, the Shingon also incorporate this, but the influence in Shingon is derived from Tibet, not Japanese culture.

Malcolm wrote:

No, Japanese Shingon does not depend on Tibetan Buddhism at all for anything. It is a completely independent stream of Vajrayāna.

Anonymous X said:

Thanks for the correction. I had always assumed it came to Japan via China and Tibet.

Malcolm wrote:

No, India --> China --> Japan.

Shingon is a little older than the Vajrayāna that went to Tibet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 20th, 2017 at 9:41 PM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Guru yoga isn't a preliminary. It is the main practice, far more important than any deity yoga.

Grigoris said:

I didn't say it is a preliminary practice, I said it is normally part of the preliminaries. And, excuse me if I am wrong, but isn't one meant to see the guru as the deity? As the protector? As the... So I fail to see why you would delineate between Guru Yoga practice and Yidam practice...

Malcolm wrote:

It is better that someone recall the guru for an instant than meditate one hundred thousand deities for ten million years.

— The Great Array Tantra

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 20th, 2017 at 8:49 PM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

In this case I believe 'presencing' originally comes from English translations of Heidegger's 'anwesen'.

Malcolm wrote:

Even worse. There is no use in mixing up Dzogchen language with the jargon of Western Philosophers.

Lingpupa said:

I agree with my whole heart!

But I reply because, although it is quite a few years since I read any significant amount of Guenther's work, I recall that one of the great difficulties was that he threw terminology from the phenomenological/existentialist tradition exemplified by Heidegger into his translations without explanation, almost as if to imply that the terminology had a clear, obvious, and usable meaning, or as if to imply that it was necessary to have studied that continental philosophical thinking before being able to engage properly with Buddhism. Perhaps, in this case, he did explain it, but I would be surprised.

Malcolm wrote:

Guenther's works cannot be taken seriously as studies of Dzogchen texts. Despite his obvious kindness to the tradition and number of people like Steve Goodman and Jim Valby whom he encouraged to study it, his books are not about Dzogchen. They are about mapping Western philosophy onto a non-Western tradition. I predict Guenther studies will become a thing someday.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 20th, 2017 at 8:43 PM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Grigoris said:

The fact that all teachers give preliminary practices/exercises, of one type or another, is rather more telling than the opinions of internet experts.

To me, if anything, it underlines the extreme need for the guru yoga practice (which is normally part of the preliminaries for any serious Vajrayana practice).

Malcolm wrote:

Guru yoga isn't a preliminary. It is the main practice, far more important than any deity yoga.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 20th, 2017 at 8:42 PM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Anonymous X said:

In Japan, as Matyida points out, the Shingon also incorporate this, but the influence in Shingon is derived from Tibet, not Japanese culture.

Malcolm wrote:

No, Japanese Shingon does not depend on Tibetan Buddhism at all for anything. It is a completely independent stream of Vajrayāna.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, June 20th, 2017 at 10:36 AM
Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway
Content:
Arnoud said:
What is Dharma?

Malcolm wrote:
Knowledge of your own state.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, June 20th, 2017 at 8:08 AM
Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Practicing Ngondro is nice, but practicing Dharma is better.

TaTa said:
Well i guess this could be apply to other practices scenarios and i agree

Malcolm wrote:
Indeed, practicing Dzogchen is nice, but practicing Dharma is better.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, June 20th, 2017 at 6:32 AM
Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway
Content:
Johnny Dangerous said:
So to my mind part of the issue is the assumption that ngondro is something everyone should be doing in the first place, not just in how it's done. I mean ultimately we listen to our teachers of course...

Malcolm wrote:
There are ngondros and then there are ngondros, for example, in Dzogchen, the Dzogchen preliminaries are indispensable. But prostrations, recitations of refuge verses and bodhicitta verses, etc., these are all dispensable in Dzogchen.

That said, I did a full ngondro, and it didn't hurt me none.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, June 20th, 2017 at 6:29 AM
Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway
Content:
Johnny Dangerous said:

I wonder how much of the argument is people ending up in the wrong place, especially after having been told that they should follow the "correct" approach, when in fact there does not appear to be such an animal.

dzogchungpa said:

It seems to me that very few people have the chance to get any truly personalized advice, based on real familiarity with their condition, so what you describe is probably quite common.

Malcolm wrote:

This is in part due to a somewhat corporate approach in Vajradhātu, that spread widely. I know people who did seminary in the '80s who still have not completed their ngondro, and thus never went any further in that system.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 20th, 2017 at 4:39 AM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Practicing Ngondro is nice, but practicing Dharma is better.

conebeckham said:

LOL, as if the two are always mutually exclusive.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, I see a lot of people practicing Ngondro who don't seem to practice Dharma at all. On the other hand, I see a lot of people who never practice Ngondro who seem to have the Dharma in their hearts. Hence my observation.

Happy Dakini day, incidentally.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 20th, 2017 at 4:28 AM

Title: Re: who's ngondro is it anyway

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Practicing Ngondro is nice, but practicing Dharma is better.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 20th, 2017 at 12:54 AM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

In this case I believe 'presencing' originally comes from English translations of Heidegger's 'anwesen'.

Malcolm wrote:

Even worse. There is no use in mixing up Dzogchen language with the jargon of Western Philosophers.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 20th, 2017 at 12:20 AM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

We all experience "instant presence" all the time. The reason we have no confidence in this is that we have not been clearly introduced to it. When one is clearly introduced to it, the words do not matter very much.

Anonymous X said:

I disagree with you that all of us experience 'instant presence' all the time. It is like saying we are already enlightened, but you just don't know it. On some level, it may be true, but on a practical level, an aware level, the experience of 'instant presence' is unforgettable and not limited to Dzogchen lineage.

Malcolm wrote:

We all experience moments of unfabricated consciousness at all times, but those moments are contaminated by cognitions. This is what is known in Dzogchen parlance as "unripened rigpa."

Unless our experience is confirmed by an experienced teacher, we, on our own, have no way of validating whether what we think we are experiencing is conceptual blather or moments of unfabricated consciousness.

As far as other lineages go, I don't practice them and I cannot comment on people's experience.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 19th, 2017 at 11:42 PM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Rongzom Pandita stated that the words of Dzogchen are very simple, but their meaning is profound. It seems the hardest task in the world for Dzogchen translators to put these texts into simple language. Much of this is Herbert Guenther's fault. Thus we wind up with absurd neologisms like "ground-presencing" which mean absolutely nothing in English.

dzogchungpa said:

Well, I'm not sure what you mean by 'absurd' here but if you leave terms untranslated they are essentially neologisms that mean nothing in English so I don't see really see what your objection is.

Malcolm wrote:

My objection is to absurd neologisms, not to neologisms in general. No one knows what "ground-presencing" means since it is not English at all. "Presence" is a noun. There is no verb "to presence" in English.

By contrast, a few simple Buddhist technical terms kept in Sanskrit (and a couple in Tibetan such as khregs chod and thod rgal) will keep translations much cleaner and neater.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 19th, 2017 at 9:43 PM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Correct me if I'm wrong, but it would stand to reason that the actual experience of instant presence would be apparent to anyone who has had it. The problem might arise if that person described it in a way to someone else who used a different word or phrase to describe the same thing. Add a third person using yet another word or phrase and it becomes confusing to a listener who has not had it and it could be perplexing to someone who has had it, too.

Malcolm wrote:

We all experience "instant presence" all the time. The reason we have no confidence in this is that we have not been clearly introduced to it. When one is clearly introduced to it, the words do not matter very much.

Rongzom Pandita stated that the words of Dzogchen are very simple, but their meaning is profound. It seems the hardest task in the world for Dzogchen translators to put these texts into simple language. Much of this is Herbert Guenther's fault. Thus we wind up with absurd neologisms like "ground-presencing" which mean absolutely nothing in English.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 19th, 2017 at 9:36 PM

Title: Re: Lamas willing to teach from afar?

Content:

okay said:

Thanks so much, I'll check it out. Do you maybe know if there's also a way to ask personal practice questions?

Malcolm wrote:

Rinpoche answers all emails from all students. Though maybe not right now, since he had recently a very bad bout with arthritis that has probably made that not as possible.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 19th, 2017 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

Anonymous X said:

You make good points about the words. I would think that among the Tibetans, they would arrive at a word or phrase that most teachers could agree describes a term like rigpa.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, these definitions are quite clearly made in Tibetan texts.

All that remains is for Westerners to stop conditioning Tibetan Lamas with mistranslations from their own naive misunderstandings of Dzogchen texts so that we can have good reliable translations of them based on native definitions of words. For example, with respect to the term dhātu, the actual Tibetan explanation is that a dhātu (dbyings) is a 'byung gnas," a source, hearkening back to the original Sanskrit meaning of dhātu as a "mine."

We must keep in mind that some of the most influential Dzogchen translations were made at a time when not only did the translators not understand Tibetan very well, let alone Dzogchen, but that the Tibetan Lamas involved knew almost no English.

This is not to fault anyone, but merely to point out that Dzogchen translation is still in its infancy. But when one talks about translations, people get all mad because they invest a lot in what they thought they understood through translations they like.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 19th, 2017 at 12:17 AM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

Anonymous X said:

What is ChNN's choice of translation now?

Malcolm wrote:

He gives two glosses, depending on context. One is "instant presence." This is more in reference to the state discovered in direct introduction.

The second is "knowledge of your primordial state [ye thog gzhi]." This is more global use of the term, when the term rigpa is used for the actual essence of Dzogchen.

His translators just generally phoneticize the term as rigpa these days, or use instant presence with rigpa in brackets. And his translators also understand that rang rig is not "self-knowing," but rather "one's knowledge."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 18th, 2017 at 11:54 PM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I see, so it is easy to get a taste of the "the basic space of phenomena?"

dzogchungpa said:

Well, at least it provides some food for thought.

Actually, I prefer that technical terms be left untranslated but if you have a somewhat general readership in mind it's problematic without extensive glossaries, contextualization etc. Some words would probably require short essays to explain. So, I can see both sides of the issue but I basically agree with you.

Malcolm wrote:

Dharma is like any science or area of specialized knowledge, it has some technical terms that must be learnt. And we do have dictionaries.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 18th, 2017 at 11:20 PM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Some people want to translate everything into English, whereas I want to make some terms English, like dharmadhātu, dharmatā, etc. After all, no one translates the word "gaucamole" or "puttanesca" into English? They have become English words in their own right.

dzogchungpa said:

That's true, but it's not so hard to get a taste of guacamole or puttanesca and the same can not be said for dharmadhātu, dharmatā, etc.

Malcolm wrote:

I see, so it is easy to get a taste of the "the basic space of phenomena?"

And the use of awareness for rigpa is like giving someone salt and telling them it is sugar.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 18th, 2017 at 10:09 PM

Title: Re: New Longchenpa translations from Eric Fry-Miller

Content:

RikudouSennin said:

Hmmm, so there are errors in the translations, bummer.

My copy of the Golden Garland seemed okay but then again I don't know the original language, so finding out about errors in the translation...glad my other order was refunded.

Malcolm wrote:

Translators are works in progress.

Anonymous X said:

Malcolm, which Longchenpa translations float your boat?

Malcolm wrote:

They are all transitional, first attempts to translate a difficult subject by a difficult writer into English. Longchenpa's prose style is considered very elegant in Tibetan, but in English it has been generally rendered very turgidly so far. His verse translates into English somewhat more elegantly, but without considerable intellectual contrivance on the part of the translator, his verse, like most Tibetan verse, winds up being rendered very prosaically.

But as with all first attempts, there can be errors, sometimes important ones, like the calque for dharmadhātu, "basic space of phenomena;" or the use of "ineffability" for nonexistence (med pa), which was the result of a translator/editorial team imposing a top down interpretation on a text, rather than reading the text itself, and more importantly, the tradition as a whole. Sometimes inertia just sets in, where people just follow what people before them did out of lack of certainty, clear research, or laziness.

Some people want to translate everything into English, whereas I want to make some terms English, like dharmadhātu, dharmatā, etc. After all, no one translates the word "gaucamole" or "puttanesca" into English? They have become English words in their own right.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 18th, 2017 at 9:11 PM

Title: Re: Lamas willing to teach from afar?

Content:

okay said:

Hi,

First: great forums, really impressed.

I have a question: I've been a practicing Buddhist for decades. Got some personal instruction and also direct introduction to the nature of the mind, and studied. My Teacher passed away, and I recently begun strongly wanting to deepen my practice again but where I live now there are absolutely no centers, no Lamas to talk to face to face. I guess a Tibetan might call the place where I live a barbaric land... sigh, anyway, I have no means of travel so that's that.

Do you maybe know qualified Lamas who would be willing to give instruction by skype or any way that's not face to face, but from afar?

Not ideal, not as good as meeting in person, but also not as bad as not having the karma to get any instruction at all. So I'm looking.

Thanks

Malcolm wrote:

Webcasts with Chogyal Namkhai Norbu.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 17th, 2017 at 11:36 AM

Title: Re: The Resistance goes live-fire... Really?

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

In The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis...

Queequeg said:

Um. What language is that? Is that American? I couldn't understand.

Tl;dr please.

Malcolm wrote:

U can't be serious.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 17th, 2017 at 6:00 AM

Title: Re: The Resistance goes live-fire... Really?

Content:

boda said:

I coincidentally read another critique of the Resistance yesterday. This one coming from within the Buddhist circle. Brad Warner's recent blog post titled "Resistance? What Resistance?", expresses his deep thoughts

Malcolm wrote:

Brad Warner has deep thoughts?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 17th, 2017 at 3:56 AM

Title: Re: The Resistance goes live-fire... Really?

Content:

Grigoris said:

Anyway, this whole left/right thing is pretty arbitrary anyway.

Malcolm wrote:

See, you agree with me. I said it was a matter of perspective, you say it is arbitrary.

Grigoris said:

CNN propaganda tends to be economic-liberal and politically center-right, no matter which angle you view it from.

Malcolm wrote:

CNN is socially liberal, economically progressive, in line with the NYT, WaPo, etc. Politically, they are center left, no matter which angle you view it from.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 17th, 2017 at 3:53 AM

Title: Re: Some Dos and Don'ts of Mantric or Tantric Healing

Content:

naljor said:

Very interesting, thanks, is it from the point of view of lower tantras? For example it says Nettle soup diminishes mantra power for half a month – but wasn't there a yogi who lived on nettle soup?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, Milarepa.

naljor said:

What is most interesting for me is how successfully alternate periods of doing mantra with ordinary speech activities in daily life.

Malcolm wrote:

All speech is mantra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 17th, 2017 at 3:34 AM

Title: Re: The Resistance goes live-fire... Really?

Content:

boda said:

This is so sad to watch I'm going to actually help you troll me, Grigoris. Out of social status, intelligence, morality, and I guThing is that I wasn't trolling. You really do have to be on some serious drugs to consider CNN a liberal news service, unless, of course, you are talking about economic liberalism.

Malcolm wrote:

Or, you have to be a fairly left-wing person to consider CNN conservative or right wing. It's all a matter of perspective, no?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 16th, 2017 at 9:51 PM

Title: Re: The Resistance goes live-fire... Really?

Content:

The Cicada said:

If anything, as a Mexican-American, I'm highly dangerous. So dangerous I think I would be afraid of myself if I could feel fear.

I'm serious about this. Ask Queequeg. He's completely freaked out by me.

Jesse said:

Alas.. There is also much animosity, and anger coming from many left-wing groups, that is like dumping fuel on the Trump Nation fire.

The Cicada said:

No one envisioned an endpoint to the social grievances that were given voice in the civil rights era. There was no point envisioned where those deemed to have been oppressed, in whatever way, would stop and say, "This is sufficient. The society that wronged our parents has been fair to us, and we stand as equal to those who brought our ancestors into it, or upon them, as life and fate will allow." Subsequently, such grievances have become powerful levers for persuasion by the elites to create strategic divisions within the population and maintain their respective agendas.

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty much total nonsense.

The Cicada said:

One of the things that gets me the most about the negative media commentary on Trump is that, besides the deliberately bombastic statements he's made about his opponents, much of what he says and promises wouldn't have caused such a stir 20 years ago.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, they would have. You seem to forget his ignorant and racist ads placed in the NYT.

The Cicada said:

Enforce immigration laws? Good idea—that's why we made the laws in the first place.

Malcolm wrote:

Tell that to the farmers that grow all that cheap food you eat. Worst thing for American food prices and fast food labor is cracking down on illegal immigrants.

The Cicada said:

Bring jobs back from overseas...

Malcolm wrote:

You're kidding, right?

The Cicada said:

Defeat ISIS? We broke the whole area with half-assed efforts over a war started on dubious pretexts, might as well clean up our mess.

Malcolm wrote:

Great, another 15 years in the Middle East.

The Cicada said:

But the media wants to point out his Twitter typos, take his statements out of context, and paint him as an avatar of Hitler.

Malcolm wrote:

Umm no, his mistakes are his, and he has left nothing to the imagination in terms of his intentions.

The Cicada said:

He asked whether the Civil War was necessary in our history or whether the differences that caused it could have been worked out peacefully, and somehow this implies everything but the obvious, peace-making and unifying message, he meant to communicate by sharing this thought.

Malcolm wrote:

Man, you really have drunk the kool-aid.

The Cicada said:

Meanwhile, the state of California signed an environmental deal with China—a foreign nation—adding to the precedents that will lead to some part of the US becoming autonomous by de facto, de jure, or postbellum within our lifetimes. A precedent different from the usual threats of secession by Cali and Texas after the odd and symbolic inter-state travel ban over transgender bathrooms a few years ago on the East Coast—a seemingly innocuous issue that historians will someday recognize as a prominent symptom of the growing ideological disagreement within the nation over what it means to be a part of it and the implications of that for the individual.

Malcolm wrote:

The Right-wing in this country seems to have always felt they have a right to dictate people's bodies.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 16th, 2017 at 10:28 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Vajrakila/Vajrakilaya

Content:

Mantrik said:

Is there a special relationship between the Dzogchen path and Vajrakilaya?

I seem to remember a reference in the 'Golden Letters' by John Myrdhin Reynolds but can't recall if Vajrakilaya was especially useful in following the teachings of Garab Dorje.

Malcolm wrote:

Dudjom Lingpa has an extensive terma called Namchag Putri, Razor of Meteoric Iron, a Vajrakilaya cycle that has an extensive presentation of the Dzogchen path within it.

M

Mantrik said:

How does this relate to the Putri Rehpung, please?

Malcolm wrote:

It is like father and son.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 16th, 2017 at 4:05 AM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka is just a means of enforcing correct view.

Astus said:

Do you not consider it a valid path for non-conceptual wisdom?

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka is not a path. If you want a path, look at Mahāyāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 16th, 2017 at 3:53 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and Vajrakila/Vajrakilaya

Content:

Mantrik said:

Is there a special relationship between the Dzogchen path and Vajrakilaya?

I seem to remember a reference in the 'Golden Letters' by John Myrdhin Reynolds but can't recall if Vajrakilaya was especially useful in following the teachings of Garab Dorje.

Malcolm wrote:

Dudjom Lingpa has an extensive terma called Namchag Putri, Razor of Meteoric Iron, a Vajrakilaya cycle that has an extensive presentation of the Dzogchen path within it.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 16th, 2017 at 3:45 AM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka does not establish a basis, a path, and result. No one said they did. They accept the basis, path, and result put forward by general Mahāyāna, as witnessed by the Madhyamaka commentaries (by Vimuktisena, Haribhadra, etc.) on the Abhisamayālaṃkāra. You were the one who claimed that Madhyamaka was a complete and independent teaching, not me.

Astus said:

I wrote that Madhyamaka is a complete teaching, and not something that is meant simply to be used as a correction for other systems. But if it were used as an arbiter over others, then their methods would suffer from it. And before calling it a complete teaching, I also noted that it is not a doctrine establishing things on its own but relying on others, as a response to you stating that Madhyamaka not only negates but enforces rationality. So now when you write that they accept what others put forward, that is exactly what I meant by building on others, and not rationalising others.

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka is just a means of enforcing correct view. That's all. In fact, the system of Bhavaviveka is used for refuting non-buddhists, while the system of Candrakīrti is used for refuting Buddhists. That's it. There are no other purpose for Madhyamaka. It is strictly a critical approach for correcting other systems. It has no system of its own, but it does enforce rationality by subjecting propositions to the test of whether or not they have hidden statements of essences within them. Why? Because assertions of essence are irrational.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 16th, 2017 at 2:24 AM

Title: Re: Rabbit's Horn and Bull's Horn (from Dzogchen the Self-Perfected State)

Content:

Seeker12 said:

First of all, I apologize as this is not necessarily specifically a Dzogchen question. However, it is from a Dzogchen book and I'm aware that a number of you are student's of ChNN, so I thought this was perhaps an appropriate place to ask.

Basically, in the book, when discussing voidness in the Prajnaparamita Sutras in Chapter 3, a footnote says, "To understand correctly the concept of voidness, the examples are given in the Sutras of the "rabbit's horn" and the "bull's horn". There has never been such a thing as a rabbit's horn, and so it would be useless to deny its existence. If we were to deny the existence of a bull's horn, on the other hand, we would be directly denying the existence of something whose existence we consider real and material. In the same way, the "void" is not an attribute of an "abstract condition" of things, but is the very nature of their materiality."

The only reference I can find to a rabbit's horn is from the Platform Sutra which basically says "To search for Bodhi apart from the world Is like looking for a hare with horns". I see no reference to a bull's horn.

Can anyone elucidate what is meant by this reference or provide references?

Thanks. If it's appropriate I can post this in the Mahayana or Sutra section, but given the source I thought I'd start here.

Malcolm wrote:

It means we do not bother negating something that is impossible, like the horns on a rabbit, hair on a tortoise, the son of a barren woman, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 16th, 2017 at 1:18 AM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This passage does not negate the convention of going. It only negates the motion of nondependent entities.

Astus said:

As the Madhyamaka convention goes, conventions are not debated. But once conventions are analysed, there is nothing left to posit or rely on. That's why establishing things like basis, path, and result are not the Madhyamaka method.

Malcolm wrote:

Astus, you are debating conventions.

Madhyamaka does not establish a basis, a path, and result. No one said they did. They accept the basis, path, and result put forward by general Mahāyāna, as witnessed by the Madhyamaka commentaries (by Vimuktisena, Haribhadra, etc.) on the Abhisamayālaṅkāra. You were the one who claimed that Madhyamaka was a complete and independent teaching, not me.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 15th, 2017 at 10:44 PM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka is strictly a critical school, and does not offer basis, path, and result that is in anyway distinct from Yogacāra.

The role of Madhyamaka is to make sure that Buddhist assertions remain in line with the Buddha's teaching of emptiness and dependent origination — that's all.

Astus said:

If one should apply the reasoning provided in Madhyamaka to all doctrines, there can be neither basis nor path, much less anything to attain as a result.

"One who is a real goer does not perform a going of any of the three kinds.

Neither does one who is not a real goer perform a going of any of the three kinds.

One who is a both-real-and-unreal goer does not perform a going of any of the three kinds.

Thus there is no going, no goer, and no destination."

(MMK 2.24-25, tr Siderits)

Malcolm wrote:

This passage does not negate the convention of going. It only negates the motion of nondependent entities.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 15th, 2017 at 8:40 PM

Title: Re: please help identify these two figures

Content:

heart said:

The second one is Padampa Sangye.

/magnus

dzoki said:

Actually it is Brahmanarupa Mahakala.

The first one appears to be Luipa, though usually Luipa is depicted with fish entrails in his left hand, sometimes he is depicted with kapala.

heart said:

Very cool Mahakala, I had no idea.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is the exoteric presentation of Caturmukha Mahakala, the main protector of the Sakya doctrine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 15th, 2017 at 8:30 PM

Title: Re: Japanese Fascism

Content:

DGA said:

The first draft of Fascism, Mussolini's Italy, was not particularly concerned with race until after falling under the influence of its neighbor to the north.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, that is debatable, from the start Mussolini was concerned with "spazio vitale," which the Nazi's also adopted.

What is interesting is how much in common Trump's ideology has with Mussolini's. Like Mussolini, Trump is obsessed with the idea that other countries are interfering with American economic expansion. Like Mussolini, Trump ran on campaign targeting inferior outsiders (in Mussolini's case it was Slavs he was worried about.) Fortunately Trump is a rich old fart who avoided entering the service rather than a war veteran, like Hitler and Mussolini, so he cannot really command respect of disgruntled vets, though he tries lamely.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 15th, 2017 at 8:07 PM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka is charged with making sure it all makes sense.

Astus said:

How so? Madhyamaka is a complete teaching as it is, so are others as well. Even in a several vehicles setting, as in Tibetan Buddhism, Madhyamaka is used separately, not as a correction. So, I'm not sure what you're referring to here.

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka is not an independent vehicle, not even in the nine yāna setting.

Madhyamaka is a division in the Bodhisattva vehicle, like Yogacāra. Madhyamaka is strictly a critical school, and does not offer basis, path, and result that is in anyway distinct from Yogacāra.

The role of Madhyamaka is to make sure that Buddhist assertions remain in line with the Buddha's teaching of emptiness and dependent origination — that's all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 15th, 2017 at 10:40 AM

Title: Re: The Resistance goes live-fire... Really?

Content:

boda said:

She makes liberals sound worse than ISIS. Is there any truth to this?

Malcolm wrote:

Zero. It's Anne Coulter after all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 15th, 2017 at 12:45 AM

Title: Re: Pudgalavada

Content:

Wayfarer said:

But I don't take it to mean there are no persons, as many seem to do.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no ultimate person; a person is a convention. But no ultimate person may be found either in the aggregates or apart from the aggregates. A person is a convention designated on the basis of the aggregates, but apart from that kind of person, there is no other kind of person.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 14th, 2017 at 10:07 PM

Title: Re: Eight Trigrams

Content:

DGA said:

I'm referring to these guys, familiar to those who have surveyed the I Ching:

<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bagua>

What role do these have in Tibetan culture and in Vajrayana in particular? I have seen them turn up in amulets and things; do they have a function elsewhere? Are they arranged differently from the canonical Chinese treatments?

thanks

Malcolm wrote:

They are a part of Nag rtsi or 'byung rtsi. There are various rites related to them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 14th, 2017 at 7:22 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Arnoud said:

Cool. I might have missed it but who will offer the lung?

Malcolm wrote:

Tulku Dakpa Rinpoche.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 14th, 2017 at 7:19 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Marc said:

Hi Malcolm

17th is a Saturday...

Will it be Saturday 17th or Sunday 18th ? Will it be streamed ?

Thx

Malcolm wrote:

It will be streamed, and it looks like the 18th, my bad.

DGA said:

Now I'm confused. I read on another forum that it was rescheduled for September.

either way I'm looking forward to it

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, my double bad. The lung will be given in sept on Sunday the 17th

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 14th, 2017 at 4:04 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Final details are being worked out. It will happen in the boston area, at this point on Sunday the 17th.

Marc said:

Hi Malcolm

17th is a Saturday...

Will it be Saturday 17th or Sunday 18th ? Will it be streamed ?

Thx

Malcolm wrote:

It will be streamed, and it looks like the 18th, my bad.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 14th, 2017 at 3:57 AM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It enforces rationality with respect to conventional truth through the negation of essences.

Astus said:

That is a very good point.

On the other hand, every Buddhist tradition seems to attempt to build a rational system, beginning with Abhidharma. And compared to others, Madhyamaka does not build much, but rather relies on what others have already set up.

Malcolm wrote:

Madhyamaka is charged with making sure it all makes sense.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 14th, 2017 at 1:02 AM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Astus said:

Madhyamaka is not just a simple refutation of entities, as you seem to think.
What more is there to it?

Malcolm wrote:

It enforces rationality with respect to conventional truth through the negation of essences.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 14th, 2017 at 12:18 AM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Astus said:

I'm not sure if this is the right example for "causes are neither the same as nor different than their effects, taking care of both the identity and difference issues with one stone, and avoiding the issue of temporal simultaneity and discontinuity". Rather, as it says in the commentary, the idea of something becoming another thing is mistaken, because there is no thing in the first place.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it clearly states that milk does not become butter, but there can be no butter in absence of milk: enforcing two things, homogeneity of causes and effects (i.e., butter will not come from water) and avoiding the identity issue I mentioned above.

Madhyamaka is not just a simple refutation of entities, as you seem to think.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 13th, 2017 at 10:57 PM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

all that remains is the idea that I owe you some money.

Astus said:

What holds the idea of a karmic debt then?

With the example of milk and butter.

Could you please be more specific about the location of that section?

Yes, like a debt collector calling in a note.

What/Who is karma's debt collector?

Malcolm wrote:

Astus, don't be silly, if you consider karma a convention, it does not really matter which convention you choose to use as long as it is rational, and functions conventionally. If we call karma a debt, it is just fine.

Milk and curd location is MMK 13:6

The only rational way to understand this section is to understand that causes and their effects are neither the same nor are they different. It is more fully explained by Buddhapalita than Candrakīrti.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 13th, 2017 at 9:58 PM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Astus said:

"Sometimes, a long period of time elapses after the action has ceased, but no matter—know that its fully ripened result will most certainly arise, and there is absolutely nothing contradictory about its doing so."

(Mikyo Dorje, in The Moon of Wisdom, p 111)

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, like a debt collector calling in a note.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 13th, 2017 at 9:56 PM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, like a debt.

Astus said:

The problem with the position mentioned in the MMK and by others is the idea that there needs to be a connection between action and fruit, as it's based on a substantialist approach, something that Madhyamaka does not need to posit. A debt is something that stays around until it is repaid, so it is conceived as an enduring entity.

Malcolm wrote:

A debt is merely a convention. If I borrow money from you, spend it on food, and then eat it, the capital is gone and all that remains is the idea that I owe you some money.

There is no money left nor food, just a piece of paper scribbled with IOU. When I die, the paper is no good.

Astus said:

He also proposes a solution: causes are neither the same as nor different than their effects, taking care of both the identity and difference issues with one stone, and avoiding the issue of temporal simultaneity and discontinuity.

Where is that proposed by him?

Malcolm wrote:

With the example of milk and butter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 13th, 2017 at 8:50 PM

Title: Re: Respect for the cultural differences of Western Muslims

Content:

Sherab said:

To truly resolve the issue of Islamic terrorism, the cause has to be addressed.

Malcolm wrote:

You have not even come close to the cause of terrorist acts committed by disgruntled Muslims. You keep insisting it comes from a book, which is a major error.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 13th, 2017 at 8:46 PM

Title: Re: lung ta

Content:

MiphamFan said:

What about Nubchen's serkyem?

Malcolm wrote:

If one is doing sang, then do sang first. If not, well, just go ahead with the serkyem.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 13th, 2017 at 8:45 PM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Astus said:

Then if it's asked how can there still be cause and effect, the answer is that it's a mere nominal appearance, an illusion, just like with everything else.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, like a debt.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, June 13th, 2017 at 8:44 PM
Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?
Content:
PuerAzaelis said:
I can't see how that helps your point it only appears to hurt it.

Astus said:
Candrakirti lists four different ways others tried to solve the problem of connecting a ceased cause with a later arising effect.

Malcolm wrote:
He also proposes a solution: causes are neither the same as nor different than their effects, taking care of both the identity and difference issues with one stone, and avoiding the issue of temporal simultaneity and discontinuity.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, June 13th, 2017 at 12:47 AM
Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?
Content:
Astus said:
Since the mental organ is not physical, how is it influenced by fetal development in any way?
I guess you refuse to answer the question, since you cannot.
The question seems to be based on the assumption that the mind is produced by the body, so it should be influenced/defined by fetal development. But if it is not based on the body, then the question makes no sense.

Malcolm wrote:
I did not make this claim. Manas is a consciousness that exists in the past, in the sense that its objects are second order perceptions, not direct perceptions.

One assumes a fetus has five skandhas. So, what kind of a consciousness does a fetus experience in absence of sense inputs prior to the formation of the six sense organs and contact? You are basically advocating for a Cartesian substance dualism, Astus. It is a very problematical view, apart from your dogmatic and unreasonable rejection of ālayavijñāna.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, June 13th, 2017 at 12:44 AM
Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Astus said:

It may be established as a fact that all the commentaries imply verses Mmk 17.13-20 to be spoken by an opponent and this was the interpretation, which became important for the ensuing textual tradition."/i]

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a fact that all the commentaries make such an implication. I have already provided you with the counterfactual that negates such a claim.

At best, you might object that this section of MMK is open to interpretation since we clearly have some traditional scholars who think it is part of the opponents view, and other scholars who think it is a view accepted as reasonable by Nāgārjuna. I happen to think the latter are correct. You disagree.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 13th, 2017 at 12:05 AM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

Why take the time and energy justifying the best interpretation from Abhidharma if he's just going to go ahead and reject it in 17.21?

Malcolm wrote:

I already addressed this point: Nāgārjuna runs through the various theories current during his day, rejecting them one by one, until he arrives at the one actually taught by the Buddha in the sūtras, i.e., that karma is like a debt, or a bond to put this in modern parlance, that does not expire until it reaches maturity. Among all these, Nāgārjuna accepts that latter is reasonable. He then goes on to deconstruct karma from an ultimate point of view, having already settled on the best conventional theory available to him.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 12th, 2017 at 11:49 PM

Title: Re: Respect for the cultural differences of Western Muslims

Content:

AlexanderS said:

Its a much less sadistic form of terror though than inflicting harm on others.

Malcolm wrote:

It is nevertheless a deluded act, just like strapping on a vest and pushing the button.

AlexanderS said:

Deluded act on what level?

Malcolm wrote:

Every level. Suicide is suicide.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 12th, 2017 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: Respect for the cultural differences of Western Muslims

Content:

Sherab said:

You talked as if I deny the role of US foreign policies. I did not.

By your argument, we should expect Tibetans to be terrorizing cities in China with suicide bombing and other acts of terror.

Malcolm wrote:

Self immolation is an act of terror.

AlexanderS said:

Its a much less sadistic form of terror though than inflicting harm on others.

Malcolm wrote:

It is nevertheless a deluded act, just like strapping on a vest and pushing the button.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 12th, 2017 at 11:26 PM

Title: Re: lung ta

Content:

pemachophel said:

A quick BTW: When doing both sang and serkyem, sang should always come before serkyem.

Lobsang Chojor said:

Sorry to go off topic. Is there a reason for doing sang before serkyem?

Malcolm wrote:

Purification (bsangs) in this case should come before the offering of the beer in a golden cup (gser skyems). Skyems is the honorific for chang. We must purify ourselves before the gods will accept our offering. This is likely based on the ancient nomadic Tibetan custom of having visitors to one's camp pass through juniper smoke (to prevent communicable diseases) before they are offered repast.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 12th, 2017 at 11:14 PM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is not an eternalist view. The avipranashas do not survive death. They are therefore not permanent. They "imperishable" only in the sense that while one is alive that "debt" remains current.

Astus said:

There is actually one such unperishable dharma that carries over karma to the next life.

"At the moment of rebirth there occurs a single [unperishing] with respect to all actions of the same sphere, both dissimilar and similar."
(MMK 17.17, tr Siderits)

Malcolm wrote:

And it is destroyed once one has taken rebirth.

Astus said:

And, if as you say, the Vaibhasika idea is something Nagarjuna agrees with, why then follow it up with a refutation of those ideas and replacing the unperishing dharma with showing that action is unperishing because it has not arisen in the first place?

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a Vaibhasika idea, it is an Ariya-Sammittya idea. Walleaser, in his book on Nāgārjuna, notes Nāgārjuna's preference for this idea points to the very real likelihood that he was in fact an Ariya-Sammitya monk (the monastic order dominant in Andra Pradesh).

Astus said:

"Why is an action not arisen? Because it is without intrinsic nature. And since it is unarisen, it does not perish."
(MMK 17.21)

Malcolm wrote:

You really seem to not understand the point Nāgārjuna is making. He is saying that among all these Hinayāna views, the Sammitya one is reasonable. The others are not. I suggest you expand your reading. Just because some traditional scholars have not understood the point Nāgārjuna was making, does not mean that they all have failed to see the point. Some, like Khenpo Shenga grasped the point perfectly and comment on the passage in question correctly.

Astus said:

Because in a fetus there is no differentiation of sense perception and there can be no consciousness according to you because even the mental organ requires a mental object, otherwise it does not exist. Since a fetus prior to the six sense organ stage and contact stage (19 weeks) has no sense organs and cannot perceive anything, is it merely a lump of flesh or is it sentient?

Since the mental organ is not physical, how is it influenced by fetal development in any way?

Malcolm wrote:

I guess you refuse to answer the question, since you cannot.

Astus said:

The object of the mental consciousness are mental phenomena, i.e. thoughts. How is that related to fetal status?

Malcolm wrote:

[/quote]

What thoughts do fetuses have prior to six sense organs and contact?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 12th, 2017 at 7:45 PM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

He states that he accepts it provisionally.

Astus said:

May interpret it so if you read the opponent's position as if it were Nagarjuna's.

Malcolm wrote:

Absolutely not. The idea that karmic actions are like a debt is absolutely Nāgārjuna's own position.

Astus said:

Furthermore, Nagarjuna accepting such an eternalist view seems more contradictory than Tsongkhapa's idea of disintegratedness (zhig pa).

Malcolm wrote:

It is not an eternalist view. The avipranashas do not survive death. They are therefore not permanent. They "imperishable" only in the sense that while one is alive that "debt" remains current.

Astus said:

So the fetus is just an inert lump of matter until stage of six sense organs? Then how does it become conscious at all?

Consciousness is not the product of physical development, so why would being a fetus matter?

Malcolm wrote:

Because in a fetus there is no differentiation of sense perception and there can be no consciousness according to you because even the mental organ requires a mental object, otherwise it does not exist. Since a fetus prior to the six sense organ stage and contact stage (19 weeks) has no sense organs and cannot perceive anything, is it merely a lump of flesh or is it sentient? If it is sentient you have removed your objection to the ālayavijñāna, it is not sentient you cannot account for life at all.

Astus said:

Evidence of this unsubstantiated claim?

Evidence of what part? That the alayavijnana is momentary, or that no being can be aware of alayavijnana?

Malcolm wrote:

The latter.

Astus said:

So what is the object of the manas in the womb? If it has none, you have again removed your own objection to ālayavijñāna. If it has one, what is it?

Do you mean the seventh consciousness by manas?

Malcolm wrote:

[/quote]

No, I mean the sixth consciousness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 12th, 2017 at 6:57 PM

Title: Re: Respect for the cultural differences of Western Muslims

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Self immolation is an act of terror.

tingdzin said:

Hogwash and horse manure.

Malcolm wrote:

The Chinese find Tibetan self-immolations terrifying indeed. All acts of terror are grounded in the rage and despair that results from oppression. We Buddhists are nangpas, so we direct that violence inward,

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 12th, 2017 at 6:53 PM

Title: Re: Respect for the cultural differences of Western Muslims

Content:

The Cicada said:

I have no problem with the cultural practices of people immigrating to the West from Muslim countries, but only with the doctrines of the Islamic religion, including the Koran itself.

Malcolm wrote:

Hahaha, if you have problems with Islam, you should have the same problem with its mother and father, Judaism and Christianity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 12th, 2017 at 9:06 AM

Title: Re: Respect for the cultural differences of Western Muslims

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I was referring to the Iraq war, and the racheting up of hostilities against Iran. Not to mention the open violence being inflicted upon Muslims in many Christians countries.

Sherab said:

You talked as if I deny the role of US foreign policies. I did not.

By your argument, we should expect Tibetans to be terrorizing cities in China with suicide bombing and other acts of terror.

Malcolm wrote:

Self immolation is an act of terror.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 12th, 2017 at 3:50 AM

Title: Re: Respect for the cultural differences of Western Muslims

Content:

conebeckham said:

Indeed...though I wonder how much of our aggression is driven by fundamentalist ideology, and how much fundamentalist ideology is a cover story for materialist greed and thirst for power. Both seem to be stemming from an authoritarian impulse.

The Cicada said:

In the case of the Christian evangelicals? All of it. People who assume that no one takes ideology seriously and that everyone simply looks after their own selfish interests while viewing all other concerns as subsidiary to that are projecting their own attitudes onto the world.

Malcolm wrote:

Christian evangelicals are merely looking out for their own selfish interests.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 12th, 2017 at 3:49 AM

Title: Re: Can I reject direct introduction?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Samaya comes with any empowerment. If someone does not want to receive a commitment, they should not attend teachings where commitments are incumbent.

My response is was prompted by a misconception that some people have that they can attend an empowerment or a Dzogchen teaching without making a vajra relationship with that teacher. It is not possible.

Mantrik said:

It is sometimes said that Dzogchen Guruyoga satisfies all samayas. I recall reading that HHDL thinks so and practices accordingly. Do all Vajrayana masters accept that or is it more a case that all Dzogchen masters accept that?

TaTa said:

Well i have heard from close people that HHDL does very extensive comminets that he does even when traveling.

Not that i disagree with the dzogchen principle

Malcolm wrote:

he is a lineage holder, it's different for them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 12th, 2017 at 2:55 AM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

in the same way that debt, though not tangible, doesn't vanish until it is either paid off or forgiven.

Astus said:

That is the example given in 17.14, My question is, what is your reason to say that it is proposed there as a theory acceptable by Nagarjuna?

Malcolm wrote:

He states that he accepts it provisionally.

Astus said:

How could there be a consciousness without anything that it is conscious of?

Malcolm wrote:

So the fetus is just an inert lump of matter until stage of six sense organs? Then how does it become conscious at all?

Astus said:

No, because the problems are that it is claimed to be a consciousness that no being can ever be aware of, and that it is proposed to solve the problem of continuity when actually it is itself only momentary.

Malcolm wrote:

Evidence of this unsubstantiated claim?

Astus said:

The set of manovijnana-dharma-dharmadhatu is not material to require a physical organ.

Malcolm wrote:

So what is the object of the manas in the womb? If it has none, you have again removed your own objection to ālayavijñāna. If it has one, what is it?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 12th, 2017 at 1:57 AM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The ālayavijñāna is called the appropriating consciousness with respect to its role in rebirth. It is synonymous with citta.

Astus said:

How does that answer the problems with it?

Malcolm wrote:

What is the object of consciousness during gestation prior to the appearance of the six sense organs?

If you answer it has none, then you have also removed your own objection to ālayavijñāna. If you answer that it has one, then what is the object and what is the sense organ?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 12th, 2017 at 1:53 AM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The ālayavijñāna is called the appropriating consciousness with respect to its role in rebirth. It is synonymous with citta.

Astus said:

How does that answer the problems with it?

Either there are slight errors in the translations, or the authors themselves have erred.

It is very clear that Nāgārjuna finds the concept of karma being like a debt reasonable.

Putting aside then the commentators and the tradition, why do you say it is reasonable to think that Nagarjuna finds it acceptable that there can be such a thing as a non-disappearing dharma?

Malcolm wrote:

Hahah, yes, in the same way that debt, though not tangible, doesn't vanish until it is either paid off or forgiven. It is quite clear in Khenpo Zhenga's annotations, which closely follow Buddhapalita and Candrakirti, that it all the previous positions prior to the Sammitiya position that Nagārjuna rejects.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 12th, 2017 at 1:29 AM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Astus said:

The commentaries of Kumarajiva, Mabja Jangchub, and Tsongkhapa attribute that part to an opponent, not Nagarjuna's own view or anything he accepts, but rather something that he refutes.

Malcolm wrote:

Either there are slight errors in the translations, or the authors themselves have erred.

It is very clear that Nāgārjuna finds the concept of karma being like a debt reasonable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 12th, 2017 at 1:06 AM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The ālayavijñāna is nothing other than the vijñāna skandha.

Astus said:

"What is the characteristic of consciousness? Knowing is the characteristic of consciousness."

(Abhidharmasamuccaya, I.1, p 4)

"What is consciousness? It is awareness of an object."

(Pancaskandhaprakarana, in Inner Science of Buddhists Practice, p 239)

This is held true for the six active consciousnesses, not the other two (i.e. they are not actually aware). The role of manas and citta is to maintain the continuity of afflictions when the six active consciousnesses cease. While the extra parts are said to serve as a bridge, it is also maintained that the seeds, just as the storehouse, are momentary. So, if there is no problem with the alayavijnana ceasing every moment, why is it a problem with the six active consciousnesses? And because the alayavijnana is unconscious and momentary, the very theory of it is problematic and redundant.

Malcolm wrote:

The ālayavijñāna is called the appropriating consciousness with respect to its role in rebirth. It is synonymous with citta.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 11th, 2017 at 10:56 PM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The supposition of everything is purely theoretical. When is the last time you perceived your mental consciousness? Your statements amount to "I did not see it, so it does not exist."

Astus said:

Thoughts are apparent, just as the five other types of objects of consciousness. The alayavijnana, even though it is called a consciousness with innumerable seeds as its objects, there is nobody who can be aware of those seeds, so it is a consciousness without consciousness.

Malcolm wrote:

The ālayavijñāna is nothing other than the vijñāna skandha.

Astus said:

The seeds are inferable, and inference is a valid basis of knowledge in Buddhadharma, etc.

The seeds are deductible, but my point is that the argument used for that deduction is not good enough, as the existence of an alayavijnana is self-contradicting.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a perfectly fine argument since the ālayavijñāna is nothing other than the vijñāna skandha, just like the other 7 consciousnesses.

Astus said:

Nāgārjuna accepts the Sammitya theory of the avipranasha, but when is the last time you saw one?

He does not, but rejects both the seed theory and the non-disappearing dharma theory, and gives his interpretation at the end where he talks about empty karma. This is made clear in the commentaries and similarly summed up in Madhyamakavatara 6.39-40.

Malcolm wrote:

[/quote]

Yes, he most certainly does accept this theory of karma, and states quite clearly he likes it the best out of all the Hinayāna options, before moving onto a deconstruction of karma framed in ultimate terms.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 11th, 2017 at 10:41 PM

Title: Re: Respect for the cultural differences of Western Muslims

Content:

PuerAzelis said:
Christopher Hitchens

Malcolm wrote:
Not someone notable for depth, nuance, and critical acumen.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, June 11th, 2017 at 7:54 PM
Title: Re: Respect for the cultural differences of Western Muslims
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
I was responding to the "for now part," which in my estimation is mistaken.

Sherab said:
I wrote: "Yes, the violent form of Christianity is over ... for the time being. "
You said your reply was in response to the "for the time being" part. If so, you must be referring to non-physical violence which would be highly unusual given the context of the discussion. Either that or you simply could not admit to making a simple mistake.

Malcolm wrote:
I was referring to the Iraq war, and the racheting up of hostilities against Iran.
Not to mention the open violence being inflicted upon Muslims in many Christians countries.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, June 11th, 2017 at 5:55 PM
Title: Re: Respect for the cultural differences of Western Muslims
Content:

Sherab said:
Did you even realize that the part of my posting that you truncated did not disagree with what you are saying, except not in so many words as in your "reply" to my post?

Malcolm wrote:
I was responding to the "for now part," which in my estimation is mistaken.

Sherab said:
I wrote: "Yes, the violent form of Christianity is over ... for the time being. "
You said your reply was in response to the "for the time being" part. If so, you must be referring to non-physical violence which would be highly unusual given the context of the discussion. Either that or you simply could not admit to making a simple mistake.

Malcolm wrote:

I was referring to the Iraq war, and the racheting up of hostilities against Iran.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 11th, 2017 at 10:02 AM

Title: Re: Respect for the cultural differences of Western Muslims

Content:

Sherab said:

Did you even realize that the part of my posting that you truncated did not disagree with what you are saying, except not in so many words as in your "reply" to my post?

Malcolm wrote:

I was responding to the "for now part," which in my estimation is mistaken.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 11th, 2017 at 12:48 AM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Nāgārjuna accepts the Sammitiya theory of the avipranasha, but when is the last time you saw one?

PuerAzelis said:

!

Where does he say something like that?

Malcolm wrote:

In the chapter on karma. It is only place in the MMK where he expresses a personal opinion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 11th, 2017 at 12:16 AM

Title: Re: Caste system and Hinduism

Content:

Mantrik said:

If karma vipaka determines in the type of rebirth we take, is it better to be born into a high caste or low caste, with regard to the next rebirth?

Malcolm wrote:
High caste of course.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, June 10th, 2017 at 11:57 PM
Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?
Content:

Astus said:
That issue of self-awareness is another matter. Alayavijnana is per definition unknown.

Malcolm wrote:
No, it is inferable.

paël said:
Is Alayavijnana anatta? How Alayavijnana is anatta?

Malcolm wrote:
The ālayavijñāna is not a self and does not pertain to a self.

Astus is making an error in so far as the ālayavijñāna is just the vijñāna-skandha, named from the role consciousness plays as a repository of karmic traces. There are in reality not eight different consciousnesses, but rather eight names for consciousness based on its distinct and various functions.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, June 10th, 2017 at 10:44 PM
Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?
Content:

Astus said:
That issue of self-awareness is another matter. Alayavijnana is per definition unknown.

Malcolm wrote:
No, it is inferable.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, June 10th, 2017 at 10:43 PM
Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?
Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, its role on the path is to undergo transformation through recognizing that the seeds within it that ripen as the appearances of the three worlds are nothing other than appearances to one's mind that arise from the ālaya.

Astus said:

The seeds are unknown and never seen, in other words, latent, even though they're said to be the objects of the storehouse consciousness. The very supposition of such a storehouse is purely theoretical, as it's never perceived by anyone. So, when it's claimed that "it" is transformed, such a transformation doesn't occur to any being.

Malcolm wrote:

The supposition of everything is purely theoretical. When is the last time you perceived your mental consciousness? Your statements amount to "I did not see it, so it does not exist."

The seeds are inferable, and inference is a valid basis of knowledge in Buddhадharma, etc. Nāgārjuna accepts the Sammitya theory of the avipranasha, but when is the last time you saw one?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 10th, 2017 at 10:40 PM

Title: Re: Can I reject direct introduction?

Content:

pael said:

Is samaya from DI practice of Guruyoga?

Malcolm wrote:

Samaya comes with any empowerment. If someone does not want to receive a commitment, they should not attend teachings where commitments are incumbent.

My response is was prompted by a misconception that some people have that they can attend an empowerment or a Dzogchen teaching without making a vajra relationship with that teacher. It is not possible.

Mantrik said:

It is sometimes said that Dzogchen Guruyoga satisfies all samayas. I recall reading that HHDL thinks so and practices accordingly. Do all Vajrayana masters accept that or is it more a case that all Dzogchen masters accept that?

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty much every tradition accepts that Guru Yoga is the most important practice in which all samayas can be maintained.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 10th, 2017 at 10:09 PM

Title: Re: Respect for the cultural differences of Western Muslims

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Frankly, living as I do in the US, I am more concerned about the venomous form of Christianity that is entrenched in some parts of this country. I am not worried about Islam in the least. Fundamentalist Christians on the other hand...they have wrecked more havoc on the planet these days than all of ISIS put together.

Sherab said:

Yes, the violent form of Christianity is over ... for the time being.

Malcolm wrote:

You do realize that the Bush administration was filled with fundamentalist Christians, including GWB, who are convinced that we are in the end times? You do realize that the US Gvt.'s. continued support for Israel is as much a fundamentalist Christian concern as a geopolitical concern? The violent form of Christianity is far from over. You do realize that Eric Prince, the founder of Blackwater, and brother of Betsy Devos, is a radical fundamentalist Christian? And did you not hear Trump directly address the militant fundamentalist Christian base from the White House many times?

Sorry, but White Fundamentalist Christians are the ones behind climate denial, and the main promulgators of white supremacy in the US. They are far more dangerous than all the Muslims in the world put together, and most certainly more dangerous than ISIS and Al Qaeda. So lets just have some rational perspective here that is based on facts rather than hysteria and religious bigotry.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 10th, 2017 at 10:03 PM

Title: Re: Can I reject direct introduction?

Content:

Anonymous X said:

[If someone receives DI, aren't the samayas part of the practice of Dzogchen?

Malcolm wrote:

Of course. People who think otherwise do not understand Dzogchen.

pael said:

Is samaya from DI practice of Guruyoga?

Malcolm wrote:

Samaya comes with any empowerment. If someone does not want to receive a commitment, they should not attend teachings where commitments are incumbent.

My response is was prompted by a misconception that some people have that they can attend an empowerment or a Dzogchen teaching without making a vajra relationship with that teacher. It is not possible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 10th, 2017 at 11:53 AM

Title: Re: Respect for the cultural differences of Western Muslims

Content:

Sherab said:

Without addressing the underlying ideology, there is always the danger that the virulent venomous form of Islam can rear its ugly head at any time, once the conditions are ripe.

.

Malcolm wrote:

Frankly, living as I do in the US, I am more concerned about the venomous form of Christianity that is entrenched in some parts of this country. I am not worried about Islam in the least. Fundamentalist Christians on the other hand...they have wrecked more havoc on the planet these days than all of ISIS put together.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 10th, 2017 at 10:18 AM

Title: Re: Can I reject direct introduction?

Content:

Anonymous X said:

[If someone receives DI, aren't the samayas part of the practice of Dzogchen?

Malcolm wrote:

Of course. People who think otherwise do not understand Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 10th, 2017 at 10:17 AM

Title: Re: Can I reject direct introduction?

Content:

Boomerang said:

Ibut I don't want samaya.

Malcolm wrote:

Then you should not go.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 9th, 2017 at 10:57 PM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

MMK 17 shows only that there can be no ultimate continuum.

Astus said:

Since it's illusory anyway, why struggle with building a whole system of it? I mean, alayavijnana is not perceptible by anyone, it is admittedly based only on "holy teaching and proper reasoning" (Cheng Weishi Lun, BDK ed, p 83), so it's posited as a mere theoretical workaround, but even if it's better than those proposed before it, if investigated a bit, it suffers from a number of inconsistencies, starting with the problem of being a consciousness nobody is conscious of. Aside from that, alayavijnana has no practical role on the path.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, its role on the path is to undergo transformation through recognizing that the seeds within it that ripen as the appearances of the three worlds are nothing other than appearances to one's mind that arise from the ālaya.

Your objection does not hold at all. According to some kinds of Madhyamaka, no one is conscious of their own consciousness at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 9th, 2017 at 10:01 PM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Of course it is directly connected with the path of liberation. Otherwise there would be no purpose in teaching the ālayavijñāna.

Astus said:

What is the purpose of teaching it? To give a plausible explanation of the continuity of being. But as it is shown in MMK 17, establishing a continuity is not possible. How is it connected in your view?

Malcolm wrote:

MMK 17 shows only that there can be no ultimate continuum.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 9th, 2017 at 7:09 PM

Title: Re: Trump pulls out of Paris accord

Content:

Kim O'Hara said:

It's interesting but I doubt that it will be a game-changer since electric cars are already well on their way to acceptance.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think you understood the point. This electric "battery" is an electrolytic fluid that stores a charge and can be pumped into a car when needed.

That is the game changer. No more six hour recharges, etc.

Kim O'Hara said:

Oh, I understood the point all right. I just didn't - and don't - think it will make an enormous difference because (1) we're going to go to electric cars anyway and (2) the new technology does have some negatives.

You have nailed its (only?) advantage: quicker refuelling. As against that, it requires a network of tankers shuttling fluid around the place, like gas tankers now but moving the fluid both to and from the 'refinery', and a network of 'service stations' fitted with doubled sets of tanks.

Malcolm wrote:

It also means more flexible storage for wind and solar farms. The solid-battery approach is just not effective and is itself an environmental nightmare. This electrolytic fluid is made of water and ethanol. No lithium, cobalt, or other toxic metals which are a toxic waste issue.

Kim O'Hara said:

That's a fairly big cost which would have to be borne, in the end by the consumers. With conventional battery systems, most users (afaik) can charge their cars at home while they sleep, so recharge time is not an issue except for the occasional trip which exceeds battery range. Taxis, delivery trucks, buses, etc, that are on the road for hours every day would get a bigger advantage from the reduced recharge time. We will see what happens.

Malcolm wrote:

It's a gamechanger. It untethers electric cars to outlets, and that is the point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 9th, 2017 at 10:52 AM

Title: Re: Trump pulls out of Paris accord

Content:

Kim O'Hara said:

Coal really is dead -

Malcolm wrote:

Oil will be soon <https://www.purdue.edu/newsroom/releases/2017/Q2/instantly-rechargeable-battery-could-change-the-future-of-electric-and-hybrid-automobiles.html>.

Kim O'Hara said:

It's interesting but I doubt that it will be a game-changer since electric cars are already well on their way to acceptance.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think you understood the point. This electric "battery" is an electrolytic fluid that stores a charge and can be pumped into a car when needed.

That is the game changer. No more six hour recharges, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 9th, 2017 at 6:23 AM

Title: Re: Trump pulls out of Paris accord

Content:

Kim O'Hara said:

Coal really is dead -

Malcolm wrote:

Oil will be soon <https://www.purdue.edu/newsroom/releases/2017/Q2/instantly-rechargeable-battery-could-change-the-future-of-electric-and-hybrid-automobiles.html>.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 9th, 2017 at 5:52 AM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Is there anything that isn't a conventional model?

Astus said:

Right. My point is that it is a secondary teaching in the way that it is not directly connected to the path of liberation, it is not a necessary element.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course it is directly connected with the path of liberation. Otherwise there would be no purpose in teaching the ālayavijñāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 9th, 2017 at 5:24 AM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

According to whom? Even Candrakīrti accepts it.

Astus said:

Provisional, in the sense of being a convenient explanation of karma, a conventional model.

Malcolm wrote:

Is there anything that isn't a conventional model?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 9th, 2017 at 3:52 AM

Title: Re: "Near-vana"....?

Content:

Anonymous X said:

it is not an entity separate from the eighth consciousness.

Astus said:

The eighth consciousness is a provisional teaching

Malcolm wrote:

According to whom? Even Candrakīrti accepts it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 9th, 2017 at 12:43 AM

Title: Re: Islam-bashing from buddhists???

Content:

lostitute said:

Pretty sad how ignorance can fuel baseless hate.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed:

“There is no compulsion where religion is concerned.” (Holy Quran: 2/ 256)

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 8th, 2017 at 9:32 PM

Title: Re: Melong in Dzogchen

Content:

DGA said:

I've noticed that DC people, including ChNN, wear the melong as a pendant more or less at heart level.

I've read in exactly one source that the melong is worn in a sash at one's navel level on the right flank of the body.

Malcolm wrote:

That kind of melong is a as astrological melong, worn as a talisman of good luck, basically.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 8th, 2017 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment success rate

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

As I pointed out already, the idea the formless realms are actually formless is a debatable point upon which there is disagreement. According to the the Theravada tradition as well as the Dzogchen tradition, there are no disembodied minds anywhere in the three realms, and with respect to the latter, not even in the bardo.

Astus said:

It is a debatable point that is addressed in the Kathavatthu (VIII.8, XVI.9) and refuted, i.e. the arupaloka cannot contain rupa, i.e. matter.

"You can predicate them truly of the Rupa-sphere, where there yet is matter. But this sphere is not identical with the Arupa-sphere. And if you predicate matter of the Arupa-sphere, you must show that matter agrees with the description you can truly give of the Arupa-sphere as a state of existence, a destiny, etc."

(Kathavatthu, VIII.8, tr Aung & Davids, p 220)

What source do you use regarding the Theravada interpretation?

Malcolm wrote:

Kosha. So apparently there is disagreement between continental Vaibhajyavadins and those in Śrī Lanka.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 8th, 2017 at 12:43 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment success rate

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There are no minds without bodies, and no bodies without minds. Mind and matter are coterminous.

Astus said:

There is a whole realm for minds without bodies. There are also bodies without mind.

Also, if bodies are defined in terms of the experiential perspective, then they refer to the instances of certain sensory occurrences, that is: sight, sound, smell, taste, and touch, and those are not always present.

Malcolm wrote:

As I pointed out already, the idea the formless realms are actually formless is a debatable point upon which there is disagreement. According to the the Theravada tradition as well as the Dzogchen tradition, there are no disembodied minds anywhere in the three realms, and with respect to the latter, not even in the bardo.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 8th, 2017 at 12:41 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment success rate

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I didn't know that about Theravada. Other schools don't say that though, do they?

Malcolm wrote:

Sarvastivadins hold that "formless" means absolutely without form. However, it is somewhat ridiculous idea to hold as they do that formless realm beings still possess a jivitindriya, a life-force faculty when they have no body.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 8th, 2017 at 12:24 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment success rate

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There are no minds without bodies, and no bodies without minds. Mind and matter are coterminous.

dzogchungpa said:

Below Dzogchen, aren't formless realm beings considered not to have bodies? i seem to rememeber you saying something about how the idea that formless realm beings had some kind of body was unique to Dzogchen.

Malcolm wrote:

Both Dzogchen and Theravada assert "formless" means very subtle form.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 8th, 2017 at 12:08 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment success rate

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Both — the division between mind and body (nāmarūpa) is formal, not actual.

Astus said:

In what interpretation? Rupa stands for earth, water, fire, and wind - neither of them carries any sentience. .

Malcolm wrote:

There are no minds without bodies, and no bodies without minds. Mind and matter are coterminous.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 7th, 2017 at 10:25 PM

Title: Re: Enlightenment success rate

Content:

Wayfarer said:

How to make pottery. How to play the piano. How to raise a child. How to ski.

Astus said:

Do those knowledges reside in the mind or the body?

Malcolm wrote:

Both — the division between mind and body (nāmarūpa) is formal, not actual.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 7th, 2017 at 10:20 PM

Title: Re: Enlightenment success rate

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Would you agree that the naming of it is not the actual point?

Malcolm wrote:

Knowledge and awareness are not the same thing.

Anonymous X said:

They may not be, but putting a name on either one doesn't help to give one the experience of it. By your own admission, you say that there is no common word for Rigpa that Dzogchen translators agree upon. I think at best, we get a concept of what is meant by the word, but that is not the actual experience of it.

Malcolm wrote:

There may be no common agreement on what the word rig pa means among some translators, but the commentarial literature is extremely clear on what the word means— it means "knowledge" in general, and specifically, knowledge of the essence. The reason it is best not to use the term "knowledge" in Dzogchen translations, is that the term "knowledge" in English attenuates the meaning too narrowly. Rig pa is a knowledge, but it is a very special kind of knowledge. Rig by it self some cases in Dzogchen texts means "knowing," as in the phrase shes zhing rig, i.e. "consciousness and knowing," or one could say, "conscious and aware." But it never means the noun, "awareness." And commonly in its verbal form, rig bya, it means literally, "one should know."

The experiential knowledge indicated in Dzogchen by the term rig pa cannot be discovered independently, it can only be discovered on the basis of a teacher's intimate instruction. Those who disagree simply do not understand rig pa is in Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 7th, 2017 at 11:18 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment success rate

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Would you agree that the naming of it is not the actual point?

Malcolm wrote:

Knowledge and awareness are not the same thing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 7th, 2017 at 7:22 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment success rate

Content:

smcj said:

Awareness is an inadequate, unattested, unjustified rendering for rig pa.

You wouldn't have perchance attended the recently concluded translator's conference in Boulder would you? You could've raised the issue there.

Malcolm wrote:

It was raised with many people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 7th, 2017 at 1:06 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment success rate

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Wouldn't you think if ChNN was consulted, he would have gone over the text and suggested some changes? I'm not disputing what Malcolm wrote, just wondering why there is a difference in interpretation when ChNN was helping him out?

Malcolm wrote:

It is really quite simple. This translation, one of the earliest made of a Dzogchen introduction text, was made in 1985, 32 years ago. Both teachers with whom Reynolds consulted were not fluent in English at the time this translation was made. We have made considerable progress in Dzogchen studies since that time. This should not be construed as a criticism of Reynolds, he did his best with limited resources.

The use of "awareness" for rig pa in Dzogchen translations has become a chronic issue, one that causes a great deal of misunderstanding, and one it seems few translators have the courage to face. There are really no good words in English which capture the full semantic range of the term rig pa as it is used in Dzogchen, just as "avocado sauce" does not really capture the meaning of the term "guacamole" (from Nahuatl ahuacamolli, from ahuacatl 'avocado' + molli 'sauce.'). Given this, it is as useful to translate rig pa as "awareness" as it would be to translate rig pa as "guacamole."

Anonymous X said:

I get your point, but ChNN also uses the term awareness.

Is there another more recent translation of this treatise that you can recommend?

Malcolm wrote:

There is Gyurme Dorje's, but it suffers from the same issue. Awareness is an inadequate, unattested, unjustified rendering for rig pa. I am afraid we are stuck with it until enough people have studied enough primary commentaries so the tides shift in a better direction.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 7th, 2017 at 1:03 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment success rate

Content:

Anonymous X said:

I get your point, but ChNN also uses the term awareness.

Malcolm wrote:

Not for the term rig pa. He uses the term "awareness" as it should be used, for shes bzhin (samprajāna), which is the companion of presence (dran pa, smṛti) a.k.a mindfulness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, June 7th, 2017 at 12:43 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment success rate

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Wouldn't you think if ChNN was consulted, he would have gone over the text and suggested some changes? I'm not disputing what Malcolm wrote, just wondering why there is a difference in interpretation when ChNN was helping him out?

Malcolm wrote:

It is really quite simple. This translation, one of the earliest made of a Dzogchen introduction text, was made in 1985, 32 years ago. Both teachers with whom Reynolds consulted were not fluent in English at the time this translation was made. We have made considerable progress in Dzogchen studies since that time. This should not be construed as a criticism of Reynolds, he did his best with limited resources.

The use of "awareness" for rig pa in Dzogchen translations has become a chronic issue, one that causes a great deal of misunderstanding, and one it seems few translators have the courage to face. There are really no good words in English which capture the full semantic range of the term rig pa as it is used in Dzogchen, just as "avocado sauce" does not really capture the meaning of the term "guacamole" (from Nahuatl ahuacamolli, from ahuacatl 'avocado' + molli 'sauce.'). Given this, it is as useful to translate rig pa as "awareness" as it would be to translate rig pa as "guacamole."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 6th, 2017 at 11:13 PM

Title: Re: Hrih or Hrim?

Content:

Grigoris said:

The one your lama gave you is the correct one.

Malcolm wrote:

Unless the Lama has made a mistake of course.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 6th, 2017 at 9:50 PM

Title: Re: The White-Robed, Dreadlocked Community

Content:

Grigoris said:

Yeah, I blame Gampopa actually, although he was a ngakpa too...

Malcolm wrote:

No, he was a fully ordained Kadampa monk, who ordained following the death of his beloved wife. When he was a lay person, one might say he was a ngakpa, but his main occupation was practicing medicine.

Grigoris said:

Was he a Vinaya upholder during his time with Milarepa?

Malcolm wrote:

Absolutely.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 6th, 2017 at 8:17 PM

Title: Re: Enlightenment success rate

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Read...

Astus said:

I'm asking about your interpretation, your view, what you call "intrinsic awareness". If one takes it to be something other than the aggregates, it is no different from the mistaken view of the self. If it is not different from the aggregates, it cannot be called intrinsic.

Malcolm wrote:

The passage is:

E ma

da lta'i rig pa dngos med bsal ba 'di/

'di ka lta ba kun gyi yang rtse yin/

Amazing!

This clear, insubstantial knowledge (rig pa)

alone is the absolute pinnacle of all views.

The term "intrinsic" (rang) occurs nowhere in the passage.

In case anyone continues to harbor doubt that rig pa should be understood as knowledge, Longchenpa clearly states in the Treasury of the Supreme Vehicle:

The definition of rig pa: the knowledge (rig pa) gained through the guru's instructions which was formerly unknown (ma rig pa) is rig pa.

BTW, if something is not different from something, that makes it intrinsic. For example, water is intrinsically wet.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 6th, 2017 at 7:10 PM

Title: Re: The White-Robed, Dreadlocked Community

Content:

Grigoris said:

Yeah, I blame Gampopa actually, although he was a ngakpa too...

Malcolm wrote:

No, he was a fully ordained Kadampa monk, who ordained following the death of his beloved wife. When he was a lay person, one might say he was a ngakpa, but his main occupation was practicing medicine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 6th, 2017 at 5:20 PM

Title: Re: Trump pulls out of Paris accord

Content:

The Cicada said:

Whelp, no more excuses for anti-Trump, bourgeois communist types who hate America at this point.

Malcolm wrote:

I am sure all the pro-Trump, lumpen fascist types who hate Americans will very welcome in Russia. Adios!

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 6th, 2017 at 3:37 AM

Title: Re: London Bridge

Content:

The Cicada said:

There was nothing in the Christian religion that mandated slavery...

"[S]laves, obey your earthly masters with fear and trembling" (Ephesians 6:5)

[T]ell slaves to be submissive to their masters and to give satisfaction in every respect" (Titus 2:9).

Malcolm wrote:

As for lynching, segregation, and ethnic terrorism:

When the Lord your God brings you into the land where you are entering to possess it, and clears away many nations before you...you shall utterly destroy them. You shall make no covenant with them and show no favor to them. Furthermore, you shall not intermarry with them.... For they will turn your sons away from following Me to serve other gods. Then the anger of the Lord will be kindled against you and He will quickly destroy you. But thus you shall do to them: You shall tear down their altars, and smash their sacred pillars, and hew down their Asherim, and burn their graven images with fire. (Deut. 7:1-5)

Only in the cities of these peoples that the Lord your God is giving you as an inheritance, you shall not leave alive anything that breathes. But you shall utterly destroy them, the Hittite and the Amorite, the Canaanite and the Perizzite, the Hivite and the Jebusite, as the Lord your God has commanded you, so that they may not teach you to do according to all their detestable things which they have done for their gods, so that you would sin against the Lord your God. (Deut. 20.16-18)

Now go, attack the Amalekites and totally destroy everything that belongs to them. Do not spare them; put to death men and women, children and infants, cattle and sheep, camels and donkeys.” (1 Sam 15:2-3)

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, June 6th, 2017 at 3:32 AM

Title: Re: London Bridge

Content:

Dharma Flower said:

Please also keep in mind that more attacks in the United States are committed by white racists or fundamentalist Christians than by Muslims, something that the mainstream media and the right-wing choose to ignore.

Queen Elizabeth II said:

No.

<https://areomagazine.com/2017/05/28/no-youre-not-more-likely-to-be-killed-by-a-right-wing-extremist-than-an-islamic-terrorist/>

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

<https://www.splcenter.org/hatewatch/2017/03/13/trumps-second-travel-ban-once-again-misidentifies-source-domestic-terrorist-threa>

It all depend on the era in which one begins the clock, what criteria one uses for "right-wing," and whether or not killings by the police of unarmed civilians ought to be regarded as "extra-judicial" since they are obviously prejudicial in every case since they involve policemen and women prejudging a situation and then taking fatal actions.

Your article includes killings outside the US, a deceptive device, as well as tallies in 9/11. It excludes documented police terrorism in Black and Latin neighborhoods, and so on.

Then of course there is Oklahoma City. Not as imaginative or as devastating as 9/11, but still...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 5th, 2017 at 1:44 PM

Title: Re: Just how omniscient, is "omniscient"?

Content:

ClearblueSky said:

Can a Buddha be wrong? Or more accurately is it written/taught that a Buddha either can/can't be mistaken about something very relative (e.g. the example of nature metaphors that are inaccurate).

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhas are free from error.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 5th, 2017 at 6:21 AM

Title: Re: Sogyal Rinpoche - sexual abuse against women?

Content:

Sādhaka said:

Females get it from males, usually not the other way around. I.e. bisexual males spread it to females.

Grigoris said:

Substantiate this ridiculous claim.

Mantrik said:

It's getting very off-topic, but I know what you're driving at. The truth is simply that one person gives it to another, regardless of gender. I'm more interested in the Gurus who people seem to think can be enlightened beacons of compassion whilst exploiting followers for sex and passing on STD's. Malcolm's seeming dismissal of any serious consequences does not sit well with me, having seen people destroyed within the (cult which cannot be mentioned) and another die in very relevant circumstances. Yes, sex is OK between consenting adults, but not when one is a brainwashed victim of the other.....gender is irrelevant as the relationship is between exploiter and exploited.

Malcolm wrote:

I know many students of Sogyal. I have never seen any evidence that any of them are "brainwashed." The same applies to students of CTR.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, June 5th, 2017 at 3:35 AM

Title: Re: Sogyal Rinpoche - sexual abuse against women?

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

Why wasn't he charged with a crime for that behavior btw? It seems like some kind of reckless assault or even homicide to me, like drunk driving.

Malcolm wrote:

Osel Tenzin died before such negligence laws about knowingly transmitting HIV were passed. He also apparently believed his penis was so magical it would not transmit the virus.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 4th, 2017 at 11:08 PM

Title: Re: Sogyal Rinpoche - sexual abuse against women?

Content:

Anonymous X said:

The fetishization of "enlightenment" by "students" is a greater obstacle than unethical conduct of "teachers." The former almost certainly leads to the latter.

Nosta said:

Both are bad, but in the case of Sogyal, if it is true the sexual abuse, then that's even worse than anything else.

Malcolm wrote:

Sogyal's students are all adults. People may not approve of Sogyal's behavior, but on the other hand, it really is no one's business with whom he has sex and who has sex with him as long as it does not amount to rape. After all, Trungpa slept with many, many of his students.

People are very hung up on and neurotic about sex in Western Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 4th, 2017 at 10:44 PM

Title: Re: Just how omniscient, is "omniscient"?

Content:

ClearblueSky said:

I'm wondering if anyone can shed some additional light on what is meant by a Buddha being "omniscient". Is it an accurate translation, and is there any specificity describing what exactly a Buddha can know? Presumably every possible thing, if the term is accurately translated. And considering the number of times the sentence "I can't know your level of realization because I'm not enlightened" is written on this board, at least some level of literal omniscience seems to be implied.

Looking from early teachings attributed to The Buddha, all the way to recent masters, it is clear that highly revered beings don't truly know everything, in the sense that there are teachings about the world being flat, or large misunderstandings about how disease works, or that no one spoke to whether bacteria are sentient (and for the sake of this conversation, we have to assume these were not skillful lies/omissions).

So, are the teachings about Buddhas being literally omniscient false, or is it used in a different sense?

Malcolm wrote:

The omniscience of buddha is a deep topic. But at base, it means that buddhas have complete comprehension of whatever they direct their attention towards. It does not mean that they know everything all the time. This was a claim made by the Jains for Mahāthera, and rejected by the Buddha directly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, June 4th, 2017 at 10:39 PM

Title: Re: Sogyal Rinpoche - sexual abuse against women?

Content:

Anonymous X said:

It's unfortunate that Tendzin contracted and died of HIV. Within Trungpa's domain, there was a lot of promiscuity and alcohol abuse.

Malcolm wrote:

Promiscuity?

How terrible.

Drinking?

Oh my gawd...

This issue is tired and old. Trungpa was a genius, who cares if he was "enlightened?" Sogyal has been criticized over and over again.

The fetishization of "enlightenment" by "students" is a greater obstacle than unethical conduct of "teachers." The former almost certainly leads to the latter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, June 3rd, 2017 at 11:58 AM

Title: Re: Direct Introduction Always Works

Content:

pael said:

I meant, can lama give DI just by saying 'Hi' or touching you kindly first time you meet him? Without mentioning it was DI? I was wondering was it DI? Tilopa received it by hit from shoe?

Malcolm wrote:

No.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, June 2nd, 2017 at 9:00 PM

Title: Re: Donald Trump Impeached

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Donald Trump is not fit to be president of the United States.

The Cicada said:

The Russian allegations are just baseless accusations used for political maneuvering by Trump's opposition—and to distract from the provable corruption of his former challenger for the presidency, among other things. The mainstream media—who Trump challenged—is now making a big huff that Trump is acting like, of all things, a politician! Suddenly this behavior is a problem from one particular individual.

Malcolm wrote:

"Mr. Putin raised the possibility of attacks on foreign votes by what he portrayed as free-spirited Russian patriots."

<https://www.nytimes.com/2017/06/01/world/europe/vladimir-putin-donald-trump-hacking.html>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 1st, 2017 at 5:21 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

javadm said:

dears,

do we need lung for 100 syllable mantra of Vajrasattva?

Malcolm wrote:

All mantras require a lung.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 1st, 2017 at 4:37 AM

Title: Re: Enlightenment success rate

Content:

Admin_PC said:

.

While, a mind purified of defilements is a common theme - the idea of original purity is not.

Malcolm wrote:

The idea of original purity comes directly from the perfection of wisdom sūtras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 1st, 2017 at 4:33 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Seeking Wisdom said:

I'm thinking of attending a lung of the Tshig Don Mzod. I have "Buddhahood in this Life" trans. by Malcolm. And I understand that the lung for that text will be offered by webcast. Considering that Longchenpa's text is an expansion/revision of the former, is there any reason, related to practice, why I should attend an in-person lung of the Tshig Don Dzod, or would getting the lung of the text Malcolm translated suffice for practical purposes?

Thank you in advance.

Malcolm wrote:

You should attend the lung of the Tsigdon Dzod, by all means.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 1st, 2017 at 4:31 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

fckw said:

Is the information on the webcast already out? If so, where can I find the details?

Malcolm wrote:

Final details are being worked out. It will happen in the boston area, at this point on Sunday the 17th.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, June 1st, 2017 at 4:25 AM

Title: Re: Direct Introduction Always Works

Content:

pael said:

Can DI be received without knowing it?

Malcolm wrote:

No.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 30th, 2017 at 4:42 AM

Title: Re: Donald Trump Impeached

Content:

boda said:

What about Bernie Sanders and social democracy? Socialism is back in fashion, I hear.

Malcolm wrote:

Neither Capitalism nor Socialism are ecologically-rational socio/political/economic systems.

boda said:

Have you heard of any socio/political/economic theory that could address contemporary challenges? Challenges such as the environment, increasing automation, and population growth? It seems to me that any possible solution would lean towards socialism, and democracy.

Malcolm wrote:

https://books.google.com/books/about/Regarding_Nature.html?id=8xotV05WZtkC

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 29th, 2017 at 1:05 PM

Title: Re: Donald Trump Impeached

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Part of the problem of the Left is that unlike the Right, they have no doctrine at all anymore and so they pale in the face of Power, Might, and Authority. This is the actual problem. Nothing else. The Left has no courage in their convictions anymore because they have benefitted so much from the accumulation of capital characterized by neo-liberalism.

boda said:

What about Bernie Sanders and social democracy? Socialism is back in fashion, I hear.

Malcolm wrote:

Neither Capitalism nor Socialism are ecologically-rational socio/political/economic systems.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 29th, 2017 at 11:34 AM

Title: Re: Donald Trump Impeached

Content:

tingdzin said:

The left needs to quit being so blinkered and doctrinaire, and above all, must lose the smug attitude of moral superiority to the yahoos in flyover country, or it will cease altogether to be a counterweight to looming fascism.

Malcolm wrote:

Part of the problem of the Left is that unlike the Right, they have no doctrine at all anymore and so they pale in the face of Power, Might, and Authority. This is the actual problem. Nothing else. The Left has no courage in their convictions anymore because they have benefitted so much from the accumulation of capital characterized by neo-liberalism. The right has no convictions any more because they have lost their minds in an orgy of capital accumulation they allow nothing to prevent their participation in.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 29th, 2017 at 6:57 AM

Title: Re: Donald Trump Impeached

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.spiegel.de/international/world/donald-trump-is-a-menace-to-the-world-opinion-a-1148471.html>

Donald Trump Is a Menace to the World: Opinion - SPIEGEL ONLINE

Donald Trump is not fit to be president of the United States. He does not possess the requisite intellect and does not understand the significance of the office he holds nor the tasks associated with it. He doesn't read. He doesn't bother to peruse important files and intelligence reports and knows little about the issues that he has identified as his priorities. His decisions are capricious and they are delivered in the form of tyrannical decrees.

He is a man free of morals. As has been demonstrated hundreds of times, he is a liar, a racist and a cheat. I feel ashamed to use these words, as sharp and loud as they are. But if they apply to anyone, they apply to Trump. And one of the media's tasks is to continue telling things as they are: Trump has to be removed from the White House. Quickly. He is a danger to the world.

Trump is a miserable politician. He fired the FBI director simply because he could. James Comey had gotten under his skin with his investigation into Trump's confidants. Comey had also refused to swear loyalty and fealty to Trump and to abandon the investigation. He had to go.

Witnessing an American Tragedy

Trump is also a miserable boss. His people invent excuses for him and lie on his behalf because they have to, but then Trump wakes up and posts tweets that contradict what they have said. He doesn't care that his spokesman, his secretary of state and his national security adviser had just denied that the president had handed Russia (of all countries) sensitive intelligence gleaned from Israel (of all countries). Trump tweeted: Yes, yes, I did, because I can. I'm president after all.

Nothing is as it should be in this White House. Everyone working there has been compromised multiple times and now they all despise each other - and everyone except for Trump despises Trump. Because of all that, after just 120 days of the Trump administration, we are witness to an American tragedy for which there are five theoretical solutions.

The first is Trump's resignation, which won't happen. The second is that Republicans in the House and Senate support impeachment, which would be justified by the president's proven obstruction of justice, but won't happen because of the Republicans' thirst for power, which they won't willingly give up. The third possible solution is the invocation of the 25th Amendment, which would require the cabinet to declare Trump unfit to discharge the powers of the presidency. That isn't particularly likely either. Fourth: The Democrats get ready to fight and win back majorities in the House and Senate in midterm elections, which are 18 months away, before they then pursue option two, impeachment. Fifth: the international community wakes up and finds a way to circumvent the White House and free itself of its dependence on the U.S. Unlike the preceding four options, the fifth doesn't directly solve the Trump problem, but it is nevertheless necessary - and possible.

No Goals and No Strategy

Not quite two weeks ago, a number of experts and politicians focused on foreign policy met in Washington at the invitation of the Munich Security Conference. It wasn't difficult to sense the atmosphere of chaos and agony that has descended upon the city.

The U.S. elected a laughing stock to the presidency and has now made itself dependent on a joke of a man. The country is, as David Brooks wrote recently in the New York Times, dependent on a child. The Trump administration has no foreign policy because Trump has consistently promised American withdrawal while invoking America's strength. He has promised both no wars and more wars. He makes decisions according to his mood, with no strategic coherence or tactical logic. Moscow and Beijing are laughing at America. Elsewhere, people are worried.

In the Pacific, warships - American and Chinese - circle each other in close proximity. The conflict with North Korea is escalating. Who can be certain that Donald Trump won't risk nuclear war simply to save his own skin? Efforts to stop climate change are in trouble and many expect the U.S. to withdraw from the Paris Agreement because Trump is wary of legally binding measures. Crises, including those in Syria and Libya, are escalating, but no longer being discussed. And who should they be discussed with? Phone calls and emails to the U.S. State Department go unanswered. Nothing is regulated, nothing is stable and the trans-Atlantic relationship hardly exists anymore. German Foreign Minister Sigmar Gabriel and Bundestag Foreign Affairs Committee Chair Norbert Röttgen fly back and forth, but Germany and the U.S. no longer understand each other. Hardly any real communication takes place, there are no joint foreign policy goals and there is no strategy.

In "Game of Thrones," the Mad King was murdered (and the child that later took his place was no better). In real life, an immature boy sits on the throne of the most important country in the world. He could, at any time, issue a catastrophic order that would immediately be carried out. That is why the parents cannot afford to take their eyes off him even for a second. They cannot succumb to exhaustion because he is so taxing. They ultimately have to send him to his room - and return power to the grownups.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 29th, 2017 at 5:56 AM

Title: Re: Donald Trump Impeached

Content:

The Cicada said:

Trump is not going to be impeached

Malcolm wrote:

Of course not, he will resign in the face of the criminal prosecution of key members of his campaign. And there won't be riots, since Trump has broken every campaign promise he made, or has proven to be so incompetent, incapable of carrying out those he has no yet broken.

Most.Incompetent.President.Ever.

Most Americans will be glad he is gone. And on the off chance he does last four years, that will be it.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 29th, 2017 at 5:49 AM

Title: Re: The Teacher-Disciple Relationship

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Your teacher is not your friend. He or she is someone in whom you've placed your trust to guide you in the Dharma.

Arnoud said:

Yes, but Dharma is connected to daily life. So, what if you disagree with their daily life choices or advice on your daily life? Is that guidance in the Dharma or just their opinion which is not related to Dharma?

If a teacher is truly realized, isn't it all Dharma? Or at least it should be, no? I think reconciling those--at times conflicting--views can be difficult.

Malcolm wrote:

One must use one's own wisdom too, when evaluating a teacher. Since they are not your friend, you can be more dispassionate in your analysis. Also, you are not practicing Dharma to please anyone.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 28th, 2017 at 10:33 PM

Title: Re: Portland bodhisattva

Content:

tingdzin said:

It appears from his name that the man killed defending some Muslim women in Portland from a lunatic was Buddhist. Grateful for any details about him.

Malcolm wrote:

Taliesin Myrrdin Namkai-Meche might have been a Buddhist, or someone whose mother had some Buddhist + new age ideas. His sister is named Vajra Alaya-Maitreya.

A former platoon sergeant, Ricky John Best, who was also killed defending the same two women, apparently had no Buddhist ties.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 28th, 2017 at 10:21 PM

Title: Re: The Teacher-Disciple Relationship

Content:

Dharma Flower said:

How concerned should we be over whether our teacher likes us or not? What if a teacher and a disciple don't like each other as people? Can it still be a beneficial relationship? Can a Dharma relationship transcend personal likes and dislikes? I appreciate your help.

Malcolm wrote:

Your teacher is not your friend. He or she is someone in whom you've placed your trust to guide you in the Dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 28th, 2017 at 11:17 AM

Title: Re: Crisis of Faith

Content:

Grigoris said:

Another option is to examine these practices via the prism of the Four Dharma Seals, if they satisfy the requirements, then theoretically they are Dharma and so...

Konchog1 said:

What about the passage in the Chakrasamvara Tantra teaching methods to sneak into harems and sleep with women? I'm not being sarcastic. I want an answer. How is that Buddhist?

Malcolm wrote:

Liberation through contact.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 27th, 2017 at 7:43 AM

Title: Re: Who Benefits Posting on a Buddhist Forum?

Content:

dharmagoat said:

I agree with Ivo on a <https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=10&t=22134#p388298> that a Buddhist forum like this can be very misleading for newcomers, with its myriad of contradictory and conflicting views and the inevitable confrontations that follow.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhism period has a "myriad of contradictory and conflicting views and the inevitable confrontations that follow..." Why would this board be anything other than a reflection of that?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 27th, 2017 at 7:41 AM

Title: Re: Is suicide OK?

Content:

Queequeg said:

I've always been told that suicide is not a feasible option according to Dharma.

Malcolm wrote:

If you are free of afflictions, then you can off yourself with impunity. At least one arhat did so.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 27th, 2017 at 1:46 AM

Title: Re: Jnana as pristine consciousness also in Sanskrit commentaries?

Content:

tingdzin said:

It may also be helpful to remember that "jnana" does not have the same connotations in non-Buddhist literature as in Buddhist, and that the term has certainly undergone some evolution throughout the long history of Indian philosophical speculation.

Malcolm wrote:

In any case, Sapan excoriates people for etymologies of ye shes as ye nas shes pa, but he was an Indiophile.

MiphamFan said:

What's his preferred etymology?

Malcolm wrote:

He claims ye was added merely to distinguish the term jnana from prajna in Tibetan and that other wise it has no meaning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 26th, 2017 at 11:45 PM

Title: Re: Jnana as pristine consciousness also in Sanskrit commentaries?

Content:

tingdzin said:

It may also be helpful to remember that "jnana" does not have the same connotations in non-Buddhist literature as in Buddhist, and that the term has certainly undergone some evolution throughout the long history of Indian philosophical speculation.

Malcolm wrote:

In any case, Sapan excoriates people for etymologies of ye shes as ye nas shes pa, but he was an Indiophile.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 26th, 2017 at 8:31 PM

Title: Re: Jnana as pristine consciousness also in Sanskrit commentaries?

Content:

MiphamFan said:

OK, so ye shes really is closer to "pristine consciousness"/"primordial consciousness"/etc rather than "wisdom".

Understanding this point, helped me resolve some doubts. Wisdom in English, especially in historical usage, was often used to translate/mean Latin "prudentia" or Greek "phronesis", both of which indicate decision-making, quite different from ye shes. In the Havamal, purported to be the words of Odin, Odin also says it is better for a man to be "middling wise" in the sense of not being overly learned nor too uneducated. Again this historical use of "wise"/"wisdom" is quite distant from ye shes.

Does this gloss also exist in Sanskrit commentaries for jnana?

Malcolm wrote:

Not as far as I know.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 26th, 2017 at 9:04 AM

Title: Re: Melong in Dzogchen

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

As far as dzogchen goes, no.

DGA said:

That's helpful, thank you. One more issue to clarify:

Does the melong serve a purpose in the context of Dzogchen apart from its symbolism, its function as an aide memoire to practice, or as a fashion statement?

Malcolm wrote:

A D.C. Melong is a symbol, mnemonic device, and a tagdrol.

For some it may be a fashion too.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 26th, 2017 at 7:05 AM

Title: Re: Melong in Dzogchen

Content:

DGA said:

I wanted to follow up on some other conversations we've had here about our old friend, the melong, in the context of Dzogchen practice.

Are any or all of these claims true regarding the use of the melong in this context?

May hold a 'data bank' of esoteric knowledge;

Is aware and responds with autonomous action (consciousness);

Holds/retains energy and resources useful as tools for the shaman;

Can be 'programmed' with the shaman's conscious intention;

Has attributes that can be perceived meditatively or may be 'gifted' by the mirror;

Has an inherent network to communicate with other mirrors;

May have the agency of healing when applied to biology and psyche;

May have the agency of protection or force when used for warfare; and

Can act as an instrument of amplification or enrichment.

<http://www.generalintention.com/research/2012/7/7/the-shamans-mirror-ancient-animism-tool-of-shamanism.html>

Malcolm wrote:

As far as dzogchen goes, no.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 25th, 2017 at 8:35 AM

Title: Re: The Importance of the Body

Content:

boda said:

Perhaps a more straightforward question would be: how often do you visit the gym?

Malcolm wrote:

Irrelevant.

boda said:

I think Mr. Swolenormous may disagree with you, if not outright flip you off.

Staying fit and exercise does improve mental function and reduce stress. That can't only help Buddhist practice.

Malcolm wrote:

It is irrelevant the subject of the conversation I am having, not sure about others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 25th, 2017 at 8:05 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Longde Tantras

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Magnus,

that is problematic but as far as I know these are the only translations of these two Tantras in English...

Malcolm wrote:

In general, you won't find anything very special in the so called "klong sde" tantras since their view and so on is virtually identical with so called "sems sde."

The unique stuff is in the various instructions which take these tantras as their basis.

Fa Dao said:

I don't suppose any of this "unique stuff" has been translated has it?

Malcolm wrote:

working on it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 25th, 2017 at 7:05 AM

Title: Re: The Importance of the Body

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

I've taken teachings from HHST too. I don't have a strong opinion on Ray, I like him but he's not a particular source of inspiration for me. That said, I still don't really understand your sharp criticism of him..

If you're saying that he isn't teaching anything new, then I think you are basically right, but he doesn't claim to.

Malcolm wrote:

JD, I was not objecting to Ray in this case, I was objecting to chung's fanboy exaggeration.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Gotcha.

Malcolm wrote:

Look, people object often and loudly to my fanboy boosting of ChNN (the greatest master of Dzogchen alive today)...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 25th, 2017 at 7:03 AM

Title: Re: The Importance of the Body

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

If you have been around the block, Ray's contribution is not "great;"

I've taken teachings from HHST too. I don't have a strong opinion on Ray, I like him but he's not a particular source of inspiration for me. That said, I still don't really understand your sharp criticism of him..

If you're saying that he isn't teaching anything new, then I think you are basically right, but he doesn't claim to.

Malcolm wrote:

JD, I was not objecting to Ray in this case, I was objecting to chung's fanboy exaggeration.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 25th, 2017 at 6:40 AM

Title: Re: The Importance of the Body

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, Ray does a lot more than "notice" it, but whatevs.

Malcolm wrote:

The entire practice of Vajrayana is predicated on the body and the experience of being embodied.

Johnny Dangerous said:

He teaches on this in detail. I mean if you have an actual critique of him that's great but, pretending he merely "notices" or only teaches mindfulness of the body etc. is not so.

Malcolm wrote:

That is not what I said. What I said was: "Noticing a central feature of Vajrayāna (the body) that is stressed over and over again in the teachings hardly rates as a "great contribution" in response to chung's "The importance of the body is one of the central themes of Reginald Ray's teaching and I think this is a great contribution on his part."

If you have been around the block, Ray's contribution is not "great;" anyone who teaches anything to do with Vajrayāna must by definition frame these things with reference to the body. For example, in the very first teaching on Vajrayāna I ever received from HHST, he made it very clear that the main difference between Vajrayāna and other forms of Buddhism was our emphasis on methods connected with the body which are wholly absent in sūtra. This is why we have yantra yoga, prāṇāyama, and so on in Vajrayāna.

Then I mentioned that in common Mahāyāna etc., there is mindfulness of the body.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 25th, 2017 at 6:12 AM

Title: Re: The Six Paramitas and the Eightfold Path

Content:

Minobu said:

i was referring to the primordial source that all things come from...a Creationist Thing...i believe Dzogchen teaches that as well ...

Malcolm wrote:

Sometimes Dzogchen uses language that seems creationist, but it is intentional and not to be taken literally, but the same is true of the Hevajra Tantra and others. The texts themselves direct us to understand such language is metaphorical and not literal. Again, some people, through a casual reading of these texts, misunderstand everything.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 25th, 2017 at 5:29 AM

Title: Re: The Importance of the Body

Content:

boda said:

Perhaps a more straightforward question would be: how often do you visit the gym?

Malcolm wrote:

Irrelevant.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 25th, 2017 at 4:39 AM

Title: Re: The Importance of the Body

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Noticing a central feature of Vajrayāna (the body) that is stressed over and over again in the teachings hardly rates as a "great contribution."

dzogchungpa said:

Well, Ray does a lot more than "notice" it, but whatevs.

Malcolm wrote:

The entire practice of Vajrayana is predicated on the body and the experience of being embodied.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 24th, 2017 at 10:11 PM

Title: Re: The Importance of the Body

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

As far as I can tell, the Vajrayana is all about the body. In other parts of Buddhism, maybe not Zen so much, the body seems to be somewhat neglected, it's true. The importance of the body is one of the central themes of Reginald Ray's teaching and I think this is a great contribution on his part, see e.g.

<https://www.dharmaocean.org/meditation/somatic-meditation/>.

Malcolm wrote:

Noticing a central feature of Vajrayāna (the body) that is stressed over and over again in the teachings hardly rates as a "great contribution."

Secondly, the first foundation of mindfulness is the foundation of mindfulness of the body, so one cannot maintain that paths of renunciation neglect the body either.

The reality is that since the body culture of India and Tibet was only come to us in fragments and dribs and drabs, quite often people overlook the vast literature on physical cultural, health, and illness that exists in these traditions, or because of biomedical prejudice, ignore it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 24th, 2017 at 9:50 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

If we actually look at what he says about dzogchen he uses exactly the same kind of terminology and as Tulku Urgyen Rinpoche and his translators and dharma heirs.

Malcolm wrote:

Parrots and Magpies also can repeat words. The point is not that Harris does not understand what he was taught (I have no idea if he does or not, don't know the man). The point is that it is easy to seem like we understand something by repeating words we have heard and think we understand.

We see this here on DW all the time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 24th, 2017 at 9:47 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

Like someone above, you assume he was dead on correct about Advaita but totally confused about Dzogchen.

Malcolm wrote:

I think he is confused about both, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 24th, 2017 at 8:56 AM

Title: Re: The truth of Mahayana beyond literal historicity

Content:

smcj said:

You're a Kagyu, right? You might want to run that idea by your lama.

Grigoris said:

It is not my idea, it is what my lama have taught me.

smcj said:

In the same vein, if I were to do the ritual properly could I give a valid empowerment?
(That's a rhetorical question.)

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, providing you had done a least one major yidam retreat and or had permission from your own guru.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 24th, 2017 at 8:44 AM

Title: Re: The Six Paramitas and the Eightfold Path

Content:

Minobu said:

I realize that no Buddhist claims a God the Creator ...but a primordial source is a Creationist View.

Malcolm wrote:

The "source of things" is whether or not one recognizes the nature of one's mind. If one does not, that nonrecognition produces all the dharmas of samsara. If one does, that recognition produces all the dharmas of nirvana. But the nature of the mind itself is beyond samsara and nirvana from the beginning. There is no samsara or nirvana outside of the mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 24th, 2017 at 8:34 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, you didn't. The Nirvana Sūtra clearly states that the "self" it is discussing is different than the self of the nonbuddhists. Do you really need me to trot out the passages?

Anonymous X said:

What did I actually quote, then?

Malcolm wrote:

It is impossible to quote the Nirvana Sūtra in defense of a nonbuddhist like atman because the sūtra itself rejects the idea outright.

The Nirvana Sūtra is a very large text. The version translated from Chinese into Tibetan anywhere from 600 folios to a 1000, depending on the canon edition.

The direct translation from Sanskrit is 15--200 folios depending on the canon edition.

Anyway, what the text says concerning tīrthikas is:

In order to refute tīrthikas, I explained a self does not exist, a sentient being does not exist, and a person does not exist. The self explained by the tīrthikas is like letters carved by worms. Therefore I said there is self does not exist in all sentient beings.

The Buddha then goes on explain the atman found in the Upanishads that is the size of a thumb or a grain of mustard that exists in the heart does not exist. He explains elsewhere in the text that the self to which he is referring is the buddhadhātu. He also equates the "self" he teaches with a vajra. He also equates it with dharmakāya. He uses the same set of adjectives to describe the self and the dharmakāya throughout the text: permanent, stable, eternal, and peace.

The Buddha in this sūtra identifies himself as the dharmakāya.

Your post also again illustrates the dangers of the casual reading of profound texts.

Typo:

In order to refute tīrthikas, I explained a self does not exist, a sentient being does not exist, and a person does not exist. The self explained by the tīrthikas is like letters carved by worms. Therefore I said a self does not exist in all sentient beings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 24th, 2017 at 4:23 AM

Title: Re: BumShi in English? Bon Traditional Tibetan Medicine tantras

Content:

mahabuddha said:

Is the Bon Traditional Tibetan Medicine tantras, BumShi, translated in English? Does it still exist in Tibetan? Any help would be greatly appreciated.

Yours in the Dharma,
Chimed Dorjee

Malcolm wrote:

It still exists in Tibetan and is 98 percent identical with the rgyud bzhi.

mahabuddha said:

Malcolm,

Do you know of an online resource where the bumshi is in Tibetan? I'd love to practice translating it.

Thanks!

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.tbrc.org/#!rid=W1GS4>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 24th, 2017 at 2:49 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I do not think these sorts of popularizations of the teachings do anything more than confuse people.

Grigoris said:

People are confused anyway, so introducing them to, and sparking interest in, Dzogchen and/or Advaita is not necessarily negative. A person's karma will influence where they will settle after that.

Anyway, after years of reading threads (like these) and a variety of books, many times I still fail to see the difference between the Advaita and the Shentong view... So I imagine that for a complete and utter newb...

Malcolm wrote:

gZhan stong does not assert a unified field of consciousness, since it comes from the Yogācāra tradition. This is one very important difference between gZhan stong and Advaita. It asserts, like every other buddhist tradition, that mind streams are unique and distinct.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 24th, 2017 at 2:48 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Anonymous X said:

But I just quoted passages from the Mahaparinirvana sutra stating differently.

Malcolm wrote:

No, you didn't. The Nirvana Sūtra clearly states that the "self" it is discussing is different than the self of the nonbuddhists. Do you really need me to trot out the passages?

Anonymous X said:

What did I actually quote, then?

Malcolm wrote:

It is impossible to quote the Nirvana Sūtra in defense of a nonbuddhist like atman because the sūtra itself rejects the idea outright.

The Nirvana Sūtra is a very large text. The version translated from Chinese into Tibetan anywhere from 600 folios to a 1000, depending on the canon edition.

The direct translation from Sanskrit is 15--200 folios depending on the canon edition.

Anyway, what the text says concerning tirthikas is:

In order to refute tirthikas, I explained a self does not exist, a sentient being does not exist, and a person does not exist. The self explained by the tīrthikas is like letters carved by worms. Therefore I said there is self does not exist in all sentient beings.

The Buddha then goes on explain the atman found in the Upanishads that is the size of a thumb or a grain of mustard that exists in the heart does not exist. He explains elsewhere in the text that the self to which he is referring is the buddhadhātu. He also equates the "self" he teaches with a vajra. He also equates it with dharmakāya. He uses the same set of adjectives to describe the self and the dharmakāya throughout the text: permanent, stable, eternal, and peace.

The Buddha in this sūtra identifies himself as the dharmakāya.

Your post also again illustrates the dangers of the casual reading of profound texts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 24th, 2017 at 1:24 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Anonymous X said:

These quotes seem to contradict what you just said. There are many more like these in the Tathagathagarbha 'class' of sutras.

Malcolm wrote:

Tathatāgatagarbha is just a name for dharmakāya covered with afflictions. As such, it refers to the nature of the mind, that's all. It's doctrine was formulated as a reaction to the idea that the ultimate nature of sentient beings, beings with consciousness, is a blank emptiness. Hence, these sūtras and their commentary, the Uttaratantra, while acknowledging the essence of the mind is emptiness free from all extremes of proliferation, emphasize that the nature of the mind is an unconditioned clarity, just as for example, fire is not merely heat, but also light, for example, water is not just wet, it is also limpid.

Also, the Nirvana Sūtra and so on explicitly reject the atman of non-buddhists.

M

Anonymous X said:

But I just quoted passages from the Mahaparinirvana sutra stating differently.

Malcolm wrote:

No, you didn't. The Nirvana Sūtra clearly states that the "self" it is discussing is different than the self of the nonbuddhists. Do you really need me to trot out the passages?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 23rd, 2017 at 10:28 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Anonymous X said:

He even goes as far as calling this 'True Self'. Of course, we immediately think of Advaita and it's posit of an atman as true self. This kind of conception is not very different from each other, and the Buddha lived in a time where this kind of teaching must have been prevalent. Buddhist scholars have argued this point of 'positive' essence vehemently, both for and against this kind of thinking. How do you personally interpret this? Is it just semantics that we get lost in and both systems are talking about the 'ineffable' using different terms? What would the difference between Brahman and buddhanature really be?

krodha said:

The term "true self" [satyātman] actually never appears in any of the tathāgatagarbha sūtras. Its presence in select English texts is a translational gloss chosen by a couple authors to fit their own biases.

Further, the Laṅkāvatāra is explicitly clear that the tathāgatagarbha is not to be conflated with the self of the non-buddhists.

The Laṅkā also states:

O Mahāmati, with a view to casting aside the heterodox theory, you must treat the tathāgatagarbha as not self [anātman].

Bhāviveka demonstrates the proper way to view buddhanature:

The statement "The tathāgata pervades" means wisdom pervades all objects of knowledge, but it does not mean abiding in everything like Viśnu. Further, "Tathāgatagarbhin" means emptiness, signlessness and absence of aspiration exist the continuums of all sentient beings, but is not an inner personal agent pervading everyone.

Anonymous X said:

These quotes seem to contradict what you just said. There are many more like these in the Tathagathagarbha 'class' of sutras.

Malcolm wrote:

Tathatāgatagarbha is just a name for dharmakāya covered with afflictions. As such, it refers to the nature of the mind, that's all. Its doctrine was formulated as a reaction to the idea that the ultimate nature of sentient beings, beings with consciousness, is a blank emptiness. Hence, these sūtras and their commentary, the Uttaratantra, while acknowledging the essence of the mind is emptiness free from all extremes of proliferation, emphasize that the nature of the mind is an unconditioned clarity, just as for example, fire is not merely heat, but also light, for example, water is not just wet, it is also limpid.

Also, the Nirvana Sūtra and so on explicitly reject the atman of non-buddhists.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 23rd, 2017 at 9:01 PM

Title: Re: The truth of Mahayana beyond literal historicity

Content:

smcj said:

Personally I don't consider all that Dharma with a capitol "D".

Malcolm wrote:

Then why the heavy allegiance to gzhan stong? It does not appear in Sūtra at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 23rd, 2017 at 8:45 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

No, the point is, to Harris the difference is irrelevant.

Malcolm wrote:

That means there is a problem with his view. The difference is crucial.

michaelb said:

Why? He doesn't go into any kind of detail about it. We can't say his view is wrong because he doesn't say what his view is. He neither explains what he means by advaita nor what he means by dzogchen in any kind of detail. We can't just assume that and to him it is irrelevant because that is not what his book is about.

Malcolm wrote:

He does indeed say what he means by Advaita. He is a student of Poonja-ji, like Andrew Cohen, Ganga-ji, Mooji and so on. Thus, we have a very clear idea of what Advaita means for him.

He also paints a very clear picture of what Dzogchen means for him. This is one of the reasons why I characterized his description of Dzogchen as Vipassana gussied up in Tibetan drag.

He describes his religious career very precisely: He first practiced Burmese-style Vipassana; he then went on to study with Poonja-ji, and then he spent a few years (5) taking teachings from Tulku Urgyen.

His book is entitled, "Waking Up: A Guide to Spirituality Without Religion." In this book he describes his view of religion in general, and Advaita and Dzogchen very thoroughly.

Now, as for myself, I really do not have anything more to offer on the subject of this book, other than that as a "purist," someone who has devoted to the past 25 years of my life to studying and practicing Dzogchen, I do not think these sorts of popularizations of the teachings do anything more than confuse people. People are very influenced by the first book they read on a given subject, and it pains me to think that the first book someone might read on the subject of Dzogchen teachings is Harris's book.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 23rd, 2017 at 8:03 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

No, the point is, to Harris the difference is irrelevant.

Malcolm wrote:

That means there is a problem with his view. The difference is crucial.

michaelb said:

Of course, people here who wish to discredit Harris want to show his knowledge of the nature of mind is incorrect.

Malcolm wrote:

I can't address his experience, only what he says in print.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 23rd, 2017 at 10:12 AM

Title: Re: The truth of Mahayana beyond literal historicity

Content:

smcj said:

I know that early 20th century Tibet had a lot going on that wouldn't necessarily have passed muster at Nalanda, but if it was producing enlightened masters who am I to nit-pick about this or that?

Malcolm wrote:

And for you, Sam Harris too passes muster.

smcj said:

If his teacher has realization, and if his teacher gives him the thumbs up, I would, yes.

Since I'm not sure either of those conditions are true, at this time I hold judgement.

Malcolm wrote:

TUR certainly was a realized person. As far as I know, he did not really know Sam Harris very well. Certainly not well enough to say, " Sam Harris understood and realized what I am teaching."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 23rd, 2017 at 10:05 AM

Title: Re: The truth of Mahayana beyond literal historicity

Content:

smcj said:

I know that early 20th century Tibet had a lot going on that wouldn't necessarily have passed muster at Nalanda, but if it was producing enlightened masters who am I to nit-pick about this or that?

Malcolm wrote:

And for you, Sam Harris too passes muster.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 23rd, 2017 at 10:04 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

smcj said:

So basically he is saying to the "purists" that he doesn't care. As an admitted dilettante myself I personally don't have a problem with that.

Malcolm wrote:

In other words, you too don't care about the Dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 23rd, 2017 at 3:11 AM

Title: Re: Confused about nature of mind introduction

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I'm sure time passes quickly in Sukhavati...

Malcolm wrote:

Consider that most people born there have to wait five hundred years in that land before they can even hear to see Amitbha, 500 Sukhavati years that is...

dzogchungpa said:

Well, like I always say, I'm going for Abhirati myself but I'm sure there are worse things to do than wait five hundred years in Sukhavati...

Malcolm wrote:

I don't know, it reminds me of the scene in Spinal Tap where Harry Shearer is caught in his pod on stage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 23rd, 2017 at 3:01 AM

Title: Re: Confused about nature of mind introduction

Content:

Dechen Norbu said:

Still don't buy it. Just because it's written doesn't mean it's true. I just can't see how that would work, you see?

Forget karma. We make ten recitations with the aspiration to be reborn in a pure land and we're off the hook? I mean, ten recitations are something so easy to perform that I wonder why Buddha gave a single teaching other than that. The conditions to attain enlightenment in a Pure Land are so more favourable that such method would render most practices irrelevant. Sounds too good to be true...

Malcolm wrote:

The caveat is that since a single day there is many thousands of human years long...

dzogchungpa said:

I'm sure time passes quickly in Sukhavati...

Malcolm wrote:

Consider that most people born there have to wait five hundred years in that land before they can even hear to see Amitbha, 500 Sukhavati years that is...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 23rd, 2017 at 2:42 AM

Title: Re: Confused about nature of mind introduction

Content:

Dechen Norbu said:

Still don't buy it. Just because it's written doesn't mean it's true. I just can't see how that would work, you see?

Forget karma. We make ten recitations with the aspiration to be reborn in a pure land and we're off the hook? I mean, ten recitations are something so easy to perform that I wonder why Buddha gave a single teaching other than that. The conditions to attain enlightenment in a Pure Land are so more favourable that such method would render most practices irrelevant. Sounds too good to be true...

Malcolm wrote:

The caveat is that since a single day there is many thousands of human years long...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 23rd, 2017 at 1:58 AM

Title: Re: The truth of Mahayana beyond literal historicity

Content:

Grigoris said:

Personally, for me: If a teaching coincides with the Four Dharma Seals, then it is Dharma, regardless of who wrote it.

smcj said:

You might want to rethink that. For instance I could write something that coincides with the Four Dharma Seals. It wouldn't be Dharma. Dharma is Dharma only if it comes from a realized person. That realized person need not be Sakyamuni.

Malcolm wrote:

So you mean all those hundreds of śāstras in the bstan 'gyur, and all the hundreds of thousands of subsequent Tibetan commentaries, etc., were all written by awakened people? No, it is not possible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 11:15 PM

Title: Re: Confused about nature of mind introduction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

However, Ati guruyoga is about the easiest practice in the world.

pael said:

Do you mean easier than Amitabha chanting of Pure Land Buddhism?

I understood birth in Sukhavati is guaranteed by saying his name ten times.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it is a much more direct path than pure land practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 10:45 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

"What we should recognise is the state of nondual emptiness and cognizance." Rainbow Painting. p.173

Malcolm wrote:

"Cognizance" is how EPK has been translating gsal ba, generally rendered as "clarity."

michaelb said:

"You need to be able to dissolve dualistic mind in nondual awareness, rigpa." Rainbow

Painting p.69.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a gloss on what TUR said in Tibetan.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 10:40 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

That he says both seek an insight into the non-duality of consciousness doesn't mean that they both seek the same insight.

Malcolm wrote:

He says on pg. 132, very clearly and unequivocally, that they seek the same insight.

Moreover, in footnote 9, on pg. 210, he says:

Sam Harris, Waking Up said:

"Purists will insist on important differences among the various schools of Buddhism and the tradition of Advaita Vedanta developed by Shankara (788-820). Although I touch upon some of these distinctions, I do not make much of them. I consider the differences to be generally a matter of emphasis, semantics and (irrelevant) metaphysics — and to esoteric to be of interest to the general reader."

Malcolm wrote:

In other words, when he says that two traditions seek to promote the same insight, he means it literally.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 10:17 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

Rangjung Yeshe that stick most, it seems, to rigpa = awareness.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but that was years ago.

The first person to use the term awareness for rig pa was Guenther in his earlier translations. John Reynolds used in his works, and still does — this has influenced the Bonpos quite a bit. Jean Luc Achard uses the term capitalized, but agrees it is not an adequate translation.

But the word in fact means "knowledge," and in the context of Dzgchen it means knowledge of your own nature.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 9:54 PM

Title: Re: The Six Paramitas and the Eightfold Path

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Permanent ... self ...

PuerAzelis said:

?!

Really?!

Malcolm wrote:

Yup, but you need to make sure understand that this is not taken literally.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 8:43 PM

Title: Re: The Six Paramitas and the Eightfold Path

Content:

Minobu said:

why can't someone please just explain Buddha nature in terms that is simple.

.

Malcolm wrote:

Permanent, pure, self, blissful.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 8:42 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

smcj said:

So how does this thread relate to the "DI Always Works" thread?

Malcolm wrote:

It always works because anyone who receives direct introduction will inevitably become a buddha, sooner, rather than later, including Sam Harris.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 8:31 PM

Title: Re: Confused about nature of mind introduction

Content:
paël said:
Will Ati guruyoga compensate all those?

Malcolm wrote:
According to the boss, 100%.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 8:25 PM
Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction
Content:
michaelb said:
many translators like Keith Dowman, Richard Barron...

Malcolm wrote:
BTW, neither Barron nor Dowman translate rig pa as "knowing" or "knowledge."

Barron uses "intrinsic awareness," Dowman uses "pure presence," or something like that.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 8:07 PM
Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction
Content:
michaelb said:
It's Rangjung Yeshe that sticks to awareness.

Malcolm wrote:
No, these days EPK leaves it untranslated because apart from a few holdouts, everyone agrees "awareness" is not the right word for " rig pa."

The problems with translations of terms is that the field shifts more rapidly than we can reedit earlier work to reflect advances in our knowledge. Like deprecated or legacy code which has a large install base and is hard to upgrade, deprecated translations have a very long half-life, and people resist upgrading their terms. But the reason why deprecated code is deprecated is that it causes errors in computation. Likewise, legacy translations can cause errors in understanding. For example, many times you see texts translating rlung as prāṇa, when in fact rlung is a translation of vāyu. Prāṇa is properly translated into Tibetan as srog, life, and prāṇavāyu is translated as srog 'dzin rlung, lit., "the wind that sustains life." But over and over again we see people using the term prāṇa to refer to the five vāyus. This inaccuracy is a holdover from the introduction of Yoga to the West, from which these terms were first introduced.

Thus, students also have to keep up with the times, and when there is a major shift in how this or that term is understood, they have to shift with it.

When it comes to clarity, however, clarity in Dzogchen is not a cognitive faculty. A commentary on the Blazing Lamp Tantra clarifies perfectly that the clarity discussed in Dzogchen is not the clarity found in the three realms, but is rather clarity (gsal ba) in Dzogchen means zang thal, pellucidity, or 'od gsal ba, luminosity.

Finally, the point is not to make one person right and another person wrong. This is like science. When the facts change, we change accordingly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 7:56 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Are you equating 'mind essence' with 'buddhanature'?

Malcolm wrote:

In general, in Dzogchen and mahāmudra teaching mind essence = sugatagarbha.

A Dzogchen commentary called the Vajra Bridge explains:

The actual realization of one's mind essence is the meaning of the sugatagarbha (one's mind essence) arising simultaneously with the transcendent state of buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 8:21 AM

Title: Re: Freedom From Buddha Nature by Thanissaro Bhikkhu & Zen Master Dogen

Content:

PuerAzaelis said:

When fabrications stop at least one of the aggregates have to stop since nothing is outside of the aggregates.

Malcolm wrote:

Which one? And who told you there was nothing outside of the aggregates? Certainly not the Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 8:17 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

This empty clarity is what Harris refers to as non-dual awareness...

Malcolm wrote:

He is mistaken in so far as he equates this empty clarity with the insight Advaita supposedly provokes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 8:15 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

Either of you read Harris's book?

Malcolm wrote:

How can you say that when I quote actual page numbers and cite actual passages? You might as well do the same.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 8:15 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

Some phenomenologists used 'cognisance' to refer to the kind of being-in-the-world in which the figure/ground tension melts away.

Malcolm wrote:

What does this have to do with Dzogchen?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 4:11 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen and Mahāmudra seek to identify the so called mind-essence.

michaelb said:

Please explain the features and characteristics of mind-essence? Is mind-essence in any way cognizant?

Malcolm wrote:

The mind essence is unconditioned, empty clarity. The mind is conditioned. A person who has directly perceived their own mind essence is someone who has rig pa, knowledge.

The mind essence is not cognizant, however, any more than a mirror is cognizant of the reflections on its surface.

For example, to use a metaphor Norbu Rinpoche frequently employs for making people understand clarity, when you look at a vista and swiftly move your head from one side to the other, all of the impressions on your sense organ of the eyes (in this example) are part of your clarity, but one has no awareness or cognizance of any object within that field. If you recognize something in that field and pick it out, that is mind, not clarity.

"Cognizant" (meaning to know of or be aware of something,) means that one must have something to be cognizant of. It's built into the way the word is used in our language. You never use the verb without "of" being appended to it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 2:20 AM

Title: Re: Freedom From Buddha Nature by Thanissaro Bhikkhu & Zen Master Dogen

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Why do you insist that buddhanature is not knowable as an experience? Perhaps it is because you have never the experience of buddhanature?

PuerAzaelis said:

How could it be an experience when cessation is the end of the aggregates? What is left to have any experience?

Malcolm wrote:

Cessation is the end of which aggregates now?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 12:48 AM

Title: Re: Speeches by Saudi King & President Trump

Content:

Grigoris said:

I ain't talking about heroes, there are rarely heroes in wars, mainly just innocent victims.

Malcolm wrote:

We don't often agree about much, but we definitely agree about that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 12:29 AM

Title: Re: Speeches by Saudi King & President Trump

Content:

Sādhaka said:

Aren't Iran, Russia, Assad (and Hezbollah) the ones who are actually fighting al-Qaeda/ISIS/daesh?

Malcolm wrote:
Not really.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 12:26 AM

Title: Re: Speeches by Saudi King & President Trump

Content:

Grigoris said:

Behind the smiles and the sword dances lies the truth of the US-Saudi alliance.

Malcolm wrote:

The whole thing is just a proxy war between the US and Russia, in reality. I hold them all responsible. One side is not better than the other. They are all engaged in wickedness of one kind or another. That is just how it is with secular governments.

US --> Saudis --> Yemen <--Iran <-- Russia.

Of course, the Houthis are no https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Flag_of_Houthis:

Anyone who flies a flag that says "Curse the Jews" is a problem, the third red line.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 12:19 AM

Title: Re: Freedom From Buddha Nature by Thanissaro Bhikkhu & Zen Master Dogen

Content:

Anonymous X said:

I've always liked the expression of 'suchness' or 'thusness'. How would I go about explaining something that is not knowable as an experience? I don't think we need to explain it, or search for it. It seems you can only point to experience, not to what is not experienced.

Malcolm wrote:

Why do you insist that buddhanature is not knowable as an experience? Perhaps it is because you have never the experience of buddhanature?

aflatun said:

Malcolm:

In Dzogchen, is it correct to say that buddha nature refers to the dharmata of the mind?

Malcolm wrote:
You can say that.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, May 22nd, 2017 at 12:02 AM
Title: Re: Freedom From Buddha Nature by Thanissaro Bhikkhu & Zen Master Dogen
Content:
Anonymous X said:
I think what you are referring to is a state of mind.

Malcolm wrote:
No. Definitely not.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 11:56 PM
Title: Re: The Middle Length Discourses of the Buddha
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
So therefore, one should allow one's afflictions to rage? One should not avoid actions harmful to oneself or others? If you see someone about to be run down by a truck, you should be remain motionless rather than help them?

Just exactly how far does one take this lack of opposition and control?

Anonymous X said:
These kinds of questions are very sophomoric for someone like yourself to be asking. Spontaneous action is always possible. Why put it into a right and wrong context? You act according to the situation when you really pay attention. There is no place called samsara.

jake said:
I'm honestly having a very difficult time putting your comments into context as they often sound so different from what I have studied and learned over the years. From what tradition do you spring forth? Or, if prefer not to "label" yourself, what are the key Sutra upon which you base your comments? Just so I can gain a better understanding of where you are coming from, please?

Malcolm wrote:
He has never studied Buddhadharma with a teacher. He seems like a Rajneesh type of guy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 11:55 PM

Title: Re: The Middle Length Discourses of the Buddha

Content:

Anonymous X said:

No, I don't. It's only a problem if you want to oppose things or try to control things.

Malcolm wrote:

So therefore, one should allow one's afflictions to rage? One should not avoid actions harmful to oneself or others? If you see someone about to be run down by a truck, you should be remain motionless rather than help them?

Just exactly how far does one take this lack of opposition and control?

Anonymous X said:

These kinds of questions are very sophomoric for someone like yourself to be asking. Spontaneous action is always possible. Why put it into a right and wrong context? You act according to the situation when you really pay attention. There is no place called samsara.

Malcolm wrote:

Why put it into a context of right and wrong? Right actions result in happiness for oneself and others; wrong actions result in suffering for oneself and others.

Samsara is a result of all actions that are driven by afflictions. Nirvana is the opposite.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 11:41 PM

Title: Re: Freedom From Buddha Nature by Thanissaro Bhikkhu & Zen Master Dogen

Content:

Anonymous X said:

I've always liked the expression of 'suchness' or 'thusness'. How would I go about explaining something that is not knowable as an experience? I don't think we need to explain it, or search for it. It seems you can only point to experience, not to what is not experienced.

Malcolm wrote:

Why do you insist that buddhanature is not knowable as an experience? Perhaps it is because you have never the experience of buddhanature?

Anonymous X said:

I've said it before, there is no part of you that can separate and identify such a thing. You are only suggesting an experience of Mind, not buddhanature. If I said this very moment was a manifestation of buddhanature, would you be able to separate buddhanature from it? It's not a 'thing' and I don't try to experience it.

Malcolm wrote:

No, I am not suggesting an experience of mind or Mind (whatever that is).

When you've met a person, you can always spot them in a crowd. So it is with buddhanature.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 11:26 PM

Title: Re: The Middle Length Discourses of the Buddha

Content:

Lobsang Chojor said:

So you don't see samsara as a problem?

Anonymous X said:

No, I don't. It's only a problem if you want to oppose things or try to control things.

Malcolm wrote:

So therefore, one should allow one's afflictions to rage? One should not avoid actions harmful to oneself or others? If you see someone about to be run down by a truck, you should be remain motionless rather than help them?

Just exactly how far does one take this lack of opposition and control?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 11:17 PM

Title: Re: Freedom From Buddha Nature by Thanissaro Bhikkhu & Zen Master Dogen

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Buddha nature is not any 'thing'. It can never be separated from what arises, and what arises is impermanent by nature. So I say Buddhanature is Impermanence. This is a truly non dual teaching where there is no separation from anything, nothing to attain, nothing to know. Your literal physical appearance is Buddhanature. It can be called by whatever name one chooses but it will never be found separate from all universes.

Malcolm wrote:

What exactly do you think "buddhanature" is?

Anonymous X said:

I've always liked the expression of 'suchness' or 'thusness'. How would I go about explaining something that is not knowable as an experience? I don't think we need to explain it, or search for it. It seems you can only point to experience, not to what is not experienced.

Malcolm wrote:

Why do you insist that buddhanature is not knowable as an experience? Perhaps it is because you have never the experience of buddhanature?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 11:02 PM

Title: Re: Confused about nature of mind introduction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that all teachings one has received and their lineages are included within one's own state, represented in the visualization.

smcj said:

Elegant.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and very unelaborate. Of course, this does not mean that one is precluded from doing more elaborate forms of guru yoga is one if so inclined and has time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 10:56 PM

Title: Re: Confused about nature of mind introduction

Content:

smcj said:

My impression is that it skips the historical lineage and just goes to the heart of the matter with the guru being the primordial "AH".

Malcolm wrote:

Not my place to discuss the deeper meanings of the practice. The point is that all teachings one has received and their lineages are included within one's own state, represented in the visualization.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 10:49 PM

Title: Re: Confused about nature of mind introduction

Content:

smcj said:

However, Ati guruyoga is about the easiest practice in the world.

Serious question: How is Ati guruyoga different than regular guruyoga?

Malcolm wrote:

If you really want to know, I recommend you attend a retreat.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 10:48 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

People who truly understand Dzogchen know that it is incomparable. Others are like "Dzogchen? Meh."

dzogchungpa said:

I think it is mostly the "Dzogchenpas" that provoke the latter reaction, honestly.

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, maybe but "meh."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 10:08 PM

Title: Re: Freedom From Buddha Nature by Thanissaro Bhikkhu & Zen Master Dogen

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Why would Buddhanature not be impermanence?

Malcolm wrote:

Because it is a contradiction in terms. Buddhanature is not a conditioned thing. Therefore, it cannot be impermanent.

Anonymous X said:

Buddha nature is not any 'thing'. It can never be separated from what arises, and what arises is impermanent by nature. So I say Buddhanature is Impermanence. This is a truly non dual teaching where there is no separation from anything, nothing to attain, nothing to know. Your literal physical appearance is Buddhanature. It can be called by whatever name one chooses but it will never be found separate from all universes.

Malcolm wrote:

What exactly do you think "buddhanature" is?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 9:47 PM

Title: Re: The truth of Mahayana beyond literal historicity

Content:

dharmagoat said:

All I really wanted to say is that I feel that Buddhism has become unnecessarily convoluted and esoteric.

Malcolm wrote:

No, people are convoluted.

dharmagoat said:

It is the source of so much confusion.

Malcolm wrote:

No, people are the source of confusion. There is a Dharma gate for every single confusion a person has. People have a lot of confusion, so there are many Dharma gates.

dharmagoat said:

A large proportion of posts on Dharma Wheel involve members wrestling with this confusion and apparently making very little progress.

Malcolm wrote:

You simply are not in a position to make this assessment.

dharmagoat said:

There is a better way: practice without too much regard for theory. In my 30 years as a mediocre Buddhist, I can personally vouch for the effectiveness of basic Buddhist practice.

Malcolm wrote:

There are three wisdoms in Buddhadharma, the wisdom of hearing, the wisdom of reflection, and the wisdom of meditation. One needs to integrate all three.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 9:29 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

smcj said:

But the fact that he continues to state that the point of Dzogchen is the same as Advaita (nondual consciousness) to me shows that he misunderstood the intent of Dzogchen teachings.

Not everyone has a need to keep Dzogchen so unique that there can be no comparison (contamination) to anything else.

Malcolm wrote:

People who truly understand Dzogchen know that it is incomparable. Others are like "Dzogchen? Meh."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 9:27 PM

Title: Re: The Six Paramitas and the Eightfold Path

Content:

Anonymous X said:

I'm glad you use your own words, but I still insist that Buddhanature is not an experiential thing.

Malcolm wrote:

Not for sentient beings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 8:46 PM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

boda said:

The judgment is still being made, it's merely done unconsciously. This is not always a good thing, as when expressed in various types of prejudice

Wayfarer said:

Which is why self-awareness is so important, and also, so foundational to every school of Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

I am assume you mean mindfulness here, knowing what you are doing when you are doing it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 8:34 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

fckw said:

I see. So, where according to the Mahamudra traditions comes ignorance into play? (And what vocabulary are you referring here to denote emptiness and appearance regarding the Mahamudra teachings?) I'm just realizing that the theoretical framework of Mahamudra is less clear to me than Dzogchen.

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāmudra does not divide ignorance up the way it is done in Dzogchen. Mahāmudra merely asserts that ignorance is connate with the mind. It is with the mind from the beginning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 8:32 PM

Title: Re: Confused about nature of mind introduction

Content:

smcj said:

Nice of you to allow for that.

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen is only for people who are truly interested in it. Others should find paths more suited to their wishes, As Pagor Vairocana said to Paṇḍita Prajñāsiddhi, when asked with which vehicle can the result be attained, he replied:

The individual entrances into the innermost view of ultimate dharmatā are differentiated by grades of capacity.

The result will also be obtained by realizing any vehicle of the sublime Dharma taught by the Buddha.

pael said:

How about after DI or initiation finding it insuitable for their wishes or capabilities? What to do then?

Malcolm wrote:

They practice what they are able to. As ChNN says, "Do your best." However, Ati guruyoga is about the easiest practice in the world.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 8:19 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

If you think dzogchen seeks a dualistic consciousness, please say.

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen does not seek a "dualistic" consciousness, because consciousness is always dualistic. It is always with concepts.

Dzogchen and Mahāmudra seek to identify the so called mind-essence. This teaching does not exist in Advaita, and there is nothing remotely like it in that system. There is therefore no way that one can say that Dzogchen and Advaita seek to provoke the same insight. This is why I pointed out that Dzogchen rejects Yogācāra, because indeed, Yogācāra is predicated on seeking a nondual consciousness.

It is an error to dismiss the fact that the underlying view of Dzogchen teachings is emptiness, whereas the underlying view of Advaita is a truly existing yet featureless consciousness called "brahmin."

The insight provoked in Dzogchen couldn't be further away from Advaita.

michaelb said:

Harris talks about his experience from the first person and not through studying the literature. He gives an overview of his experience and how he interpreted it. To expect a dissection of various schools of Indo-Tibetan philosophy would be stupid.

Malcolm wrote:

The Dzogchen literature over and over again gives a detailed summation of the various yānas. Why? So that people will not confuse their experiences in this or that yāna with the underlying principles Dzogchen is based upon.

It seems attractive when people "share" their experience. But it is always an error because experiences are temporary and deceptive. Knowledge on the other hand, is not.

michaelb said:

It is Harris's discussion of receiving teachings from Tulku Urgyen Rinpoche that I find most interesting. He says that Tulku Urgyen introduced him to the nature of mind and I have no reason to doubt what he says or how he describes it.

Malcolm wrote:

Many people have been introduced to the nature of the mind by this or that famous Dzogchen master. It does not mean they understood what they were being introduced to. But the fact that he continues to state that the point of Dzogchen is the same as Advaita (nondual consciousness) to me shows that he misunderstood the intent of Dzogchen teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 9:50 AM

Title: Re: Confused about nature of mind introduction

Content:

smcj said:

What I'm NOT saying is that everyone should practice Dzogchen.

Nice of you to allow for that.

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen is only for people who are truly interested in it. Others should find paths more suited to their wishes, As Pagor Vairocana said to Paṇḍita Prajñāsiddhi, when asked with which vehicle can the result be attained, he replied:

The individual entrances into the innermost view of ultimate dharmatā are differentiated by grades of capacity.

The result will also be obtained by realizing any vehicle of the sublime Dharma taught by the Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 8:22 AM

Title: Re: Donald Trump Impeached

Content:

Wayfarer said:

That Patriotics blog site looks very much 'fake news' to me, I wouldn't touch it with a barge pole.

Malcolm wrote:

Louis Mensche reported last fall (scooping the Times and everyone else) that there was a FISA warrant out on members of the Trump campaign. She was absolutely correct. When the Times, etc., were able to corroborate her story, well, that's history now. So we will wait and see, won't we?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 8:15 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

He explicitly and repeatedly does NOT equate advaita with dzogchen.

Malcolm wrote:

He explicitly does, right on page 132, "The two traditions seek to provoke the same insight into the nonduality of consciousness..."

michaelb said:

Are you suggesting that dzogchen does not seek to provoke insight into the nonduality of consciousness?

Malcolm wrote:

Yogācāra already offers insights into the nonduality of consciousness. Indeed, that is the point of the whole school.

Since Dzogchen rejects Yogācāra insights (i.e. a Buddhist nondual realism) concerning the nonduality of consciousness, why would it accept Advaita (i.e. a non-Buddhist nondual eternalism) presentations concerning the nonduality of consciousness? Dzogchen texts and teachings take explicit pains to differentiate themselves from non-Buddhist schools such as Saṃkhya, Vedānta and so on, as well as Yogācāra and so on. Mañjuśrīmitra takes pains to explain why Dzogchen and Yogācāra are not commensurate views. So does Rongzom, so does Longchenpa, etc.

More importantly, he makes a gross error in asserting that Dzogchen and Advaita seeks to provoke the same insight. Nothing could be further from the truth.

I also expect you will now withdraw your claim, "He explicitly and repeatedly does NOT equate advaita with dzogchen," because he repeatedly and explicitly does.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 5:09 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I read his book. Sympathetically at first— and then less as I continued. Really, when it comes right down to it, the only value it may have with respect to Dzogchen teachings, apart from whatever merits it may or may not have, is that someone might go out and actually find out what Dzogchen really is, as opposed to the watered down silliness in his book.

Another point about which he is utterly confused is that he falsely equates Advaita and Dzogchen.

michaelb said:

He explicitly and repeatedly does NOT equate advaita with dzogchen.

Malcolm wrote:

He explicitly does, right on page 132, "The two traditions seek to provoke the same insight into the nonduality of consciousness..."

michaelb said:

His presentation is interesting precisely because he studied with teachers of different traditions.

Malcolm wrote:

So have I (meaning Buddhist and Hindu (Advaita, Samkhya, Yoga).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 4:43 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

Ergo, Dzogchen is not the "practice (of) a form of awareness." It is the cultivation of a specific kind of knowledge. What knowledge? Knowledge of sugatagarbha.

But Harris's Dzogchen is nothing more than secular mindfulness gussied up in Tibetan drag.

Absolute nonsense. You completely disregard everything Harris says on the subject. He very carefully explains the process of acquiring the "knowledge" of dzogchen using numerous metaphors and examples of pointing out instructions. He, very carefully shows how dzogchen is different and indeed in opposition to shamata and vipassana and other techniques that take objects, gross or subtle, as the focus of concentration.

I would sincerely recommend anyone on this board to read or listen to his book, available free as part of an Audible trial. I feel Harris explains dzogchen with greater clarity than many dzogchen teachers, Tibetan or western.

Malcolm wrote:

I read his book. Sympathetically at first— and then less as I continued. Really, when it comes right down to it, the only value it may have with respect to Dzogchen teachings, apart from whatever merits it may or may not have, is that someone might go out and actually find out what Dzogchen really is, as opposed to the watered down silliness in his book.

Another point about which he is utterly confused is that he falsely equates Advaita and Dzogchen.

michaelb said:

I would sincerely recommend anyone on this board to read or listen to his book, available free as part of an Audible trial. I feel Harris explains dzogchen with greater clarity than many dzogchen teachers, Tibetan or western.

Malcolm wrote:

He does not explain it at all.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 4:11 AM

Title: Re: Confused about nature of mind introduction

Content:

Dechen Norbu said:

Yes, some teachers do all sorts of stuff. Doesn't mean I'm cool with that.

tingdzin said:

Who are you?

Dechen Norbu said:

If a teacher is said to be a Dzogchen teacher, then he should teach Dzogchen from the start,

tingdzin said:

Who are you to judge? As I said, there are different approaches, and people make their own decisions. Are you going to say that all the teachers who teach a more traditional way are just wrong? What arrogance.

Malcolm wrote:

I think what he is saying is that there are some teachers who are like the example of a dishonest merchant, setting out a deer's tail and selling donkey meat instead to unsuspecting customers.

I've met such people.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 4:07 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

If I want to know what New York is like, I want to be there and experience it, I couldn't care less about the "knowledge" of it.

Malcolm wrote:

When you have experienced something, then you have know what it is. Until then you don't. When you taste sugar, then you know what sugar is. When you have experience of the mind essence, then you know what it is. That is why rig pa is a knowledge and not an awareness.

michaelb said:

Sure, and that is exactly how Harris explains dzogchen practice. Be introduced, recognise and get used to it. But when people teach dzogchen they often talk about the character of the "experience", just as they may talk about the sweetness of sugar rather than just saying they know what sugar tastes like.

Malcolm wrote:

Ergo, Dzogchen is not the "practice (of) a form of awareness." It is the cultivation of a specific kind of knowledge. What knowledge? Knowledge of sugatagarbha.

But Harris's Dzogchen is nothing more than secular mindfulness gussied up in Tibetan drag.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 3:51 AM

Title: Re: Donald Trump Impeached

Content:

Mantrik said:

Maybe they could ban his immigration back into the USA on the grounds that he is making the trip to meet international terrorists...

Grigoris said:

$110bn sure buys a lot of starving cholera racked Yemenis...

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is horrible. But the US Gvt. could care less.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 3:27 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

[

Luminosity is a completion stage experience in which all appearances subside.

Mahāmudra is the experience of union, in which appearance and emptiness are a seamless unity. Rather than being treated as relative (appearance) and emptiness (ultimate), here the two truths are seamless and unified where the distinctions between ultimate and relative, conditioned and unconditioned, etc., are seen through.

fckw said:

Ah, thanks, that again clarifies something.

Would you say this is fairly comparable to the kadag and lhundrup aspects of the base in Dzogchen?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, sort of. The difference is that ka dag can never be a basis for delusion, since it has no appearances. In Dzogchen teachings, the basis for delusion is lhundrup.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 3:03 AM

Title: Re: Donald Trump Impeached

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Warning: this might be total bullshit, but we can only

https://patribotics.blog/2017/05/20/exclusive-judiciary-committee-considering-articles-of-impeachment/...

Unknown said:

By Louise Mensch and Claude Taylor

Multiple sources close to the intelligence, justice and law enforcement communities say that the House Judiciary Committee is considering Articles of Impeachment against the President of the United States.

Sources further say that the Supreme Court notified Mr. Trump that the formal process of a case of impeachment against him was begun, before he departed the country on Air Force One. The notification was given, as part of the formal process of the matter, in order that Mr. Trump knew he was not able to use his powers of pardon against other suspects in Trump-Russia cases. Sources have confirmed that the Marshal of the Supreme Court spoke to Mr. Trump.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 2:57 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

If I want to know what New York is like, I want to be there and experience it, I couldn't care less about the "knowledge" of it.

Malcolm wrote:

When you have experienced something, then you have know what it is. Until then you don't. When you taste sugar, then you know what sugar is. When you have experience of the mind essence, then you know what it is. That is why rig pa is a knowledge and not an awareness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 1:58 AM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

tingdzin said:

I don't care if a cat is black or brown, as long as it catches mice. Unfortunately, neither capitalism nor socialism has proven to be worth a damn in that respect.

Nicholas Weeks said:

Only buddhas, bodhisattvas & arhats 'catch mice'. Any social or political ism built by worldly humans will never 'catch mice'.

Malcolm wrote:

No political system has ever been set up by an awakened person. Why? It would be like herding cats.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 21st, 2017 at 1:45 AM

Title: Re: Harvard study on Media Bias

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

<https://shorensteincenter.org/wp-content/uploads/2017/05/News-Coverage-Donald-Trump-100-Days-1.pdf>

Journalists need to resist even the smallest temptation to see themselves as opponents of government.

Malcolm wrote:

It was Trump and Bannon (and Roger Stone) who declared war on journalism, not the other way around.

That said, at this point, the courts and the press are our present last bastion of defense against these incompetent fools the GOP allowed into office.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 11:52 PM

Title: Re: Donald Trump Impeached

Content:

smcj said:

If Trump had a heart attack and died today he has still done permanent damage to our international standing.

Malcolm wrote:

That ship sailed when GWB convinced Congress that invading Iraq was a good idea.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 11:32 PM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

tingdzin said:

I don't care if a cat is black or brown, as long as it catches mice. Unfortunately, neither capitalism nor socialism has proven to be worth a damn in that respect.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and then there is the fact that neither system is ecologically rational.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 10:41 PM

Title: Re: Donald Trump Impeached

Content:

Jeff H said:

I think impeachment and article 25 (incompetency) are lose-lose propositions. I don't share DGA's domino theory that sees Pence falling right after Trump. I think Pence has shown himself to be cautious and aloof from Trump-mania.

Malcolm wrote:

He also lied. If DJT goes down, so will Pence.

Jeff H said:

Trump is dangerous for his thoughtless miscalculations, but it could be that Pence would show real political savvy and competence in power.

Malcolm wrote:

No, Pence is also an idiot.

The Trump administration crash and burn all but assures a sensible reversal of congressional and executive power back the Democratic Party.

People who sat out the last election will not sit out the next two (2018, 2020). When overall voter turn out is high (not just in battle ground states), the Dems win every time.

People will tolerate this bizarre GOP melange of Ayn Rand cultists and Jesus Camp people for only so long.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 9:47 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

I think this thread has gone off topic in discussing zen but also in discussing the definition of rigpa. I think it is clear that Harris, and others that talk about awareness, not as a translation of rigpa, but as a feature of the ground. Phrases like open awareness, empty cognisance, non-dual awareness, etc. are used as terms for mind's nature not knowledge of it.

Malcolm wrote:

Harris uses awareness for rigpa. Waking Up, pg. 134:

"The Dzogchen master must precipitate an insight on the basis of which a student can thereafter practice a form of awareness (Tibetan: rigpa) that is unencumbered by subject/object dualism."

This point of view does not go beyond Yogacara. Yogācāra is great, but let's not confuse it with Dzogchen.

michaelb said:

I disagree. Rigpa is the insight the Dzogchen master must precipitate. I concede, like many others, Harris uses awareness to refer to different things, (confused awareness, concentrated meditative states, knowledge of the ground, etc.) his main use of awareness, arguably like Yongey Mingyur Rinpoche, is of awareness as the ground, the cognisant aspect of non-dual awareness.

I think you have got tied up with this because most use terms like awareness to refer to different things and mostly, when talking about dzogchen, they are talking about sem nyid not rigpa.

Malcolm wrote:

"... practice a form of awareness (Tibetan: rigpa) that is unencumbered by subject/object dualism"

This is the problem. This is not what the term rig pa means. You cannot "practice" rigpa. You either have it or you don't. If you don't, you have ma rig pa, ignorance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 9:45 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If I understand your question: you are asking if rig pa is the substance of consciousness? I have already provided an authoritative citation from a commentary on a primary tantra which answers this question:

Furthermore, based on the power of repelling the armies of samsara, vidyā (rig pa) is 1) the knowledge (vidyā) of names designated by words, 2) helpful, worldly knowledge such as healing, arts and crafts, and so on, 3) the five sciences (rig pa gnas lnga) of the treatises and so on, 4) knowing (vidyā) as a factor of consciousness, 5) sharp and dull worldly knowledge and so on, and 6) the knowledge of the essence (snying po) that permeates all that is free from ignorance, unobscured by the obscurations of ignorance and so on.

Tolya M said:

Oh, it's like a raging flame that destroys the vegetable treatments of the new age and the advaita-vedanta's demagoguery for western donators. Where does the quote come from, please???

Malcolm wrote:

The commentary on the Tantra Without Syllables.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 8:08 PM

Title: Re: Freedom From Buddha Nature by Thanissaro Bhikkhu & Zen Master Dogen

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Why would Buddhanature not be impermanence?

Malcolm wrote:

Because it is a contradiction in terms. Buddhanature is not a conditioned thing. Therefore, it cannot be impermanent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 7:54 PM

Title: Re: Mystery Object - Dotty Melong

Content:

Mantrik said:

"Numbers 1-9. In Tibetan, these are called the me-wa gu. In English, this is a so-called magic square where any line added up across, down, or the hypotenuse through the middle equals 15. These nine numbers are correlated to the nine stars. It is a system of numerology/astrology. It was borrowed from the Tibetans from the Chinese, remembering that Tibetans use both kar-tsi (white or Indian astrology) and nak-tsi (black or Chinese astrology). (The white and black are abbreviations for the Tibetan for India, gya-kar, vast white, and China, gya-nak, vast black.

Malcolm wrote:

Unfortunately, the idea that Nga rtsi comes from rgya nag rtsi is slightly wrong. The reason why elemental calculation is called Nag rtsi has to do with its founders, who while indeed Chinese, was also named Du har Nag po. Thus, Nag rtsi in reality means "The calculation of Nag po."

Mantrik said:

So, the system was named after the person rather than the other way around. Interesting, thanks.

Malcolm wrote:

Also, kartsi is not "white calculation" (dkar rtsi), it is rather "stellar calculation" (skar rtsi). This name has nothing whatsoever to with India (rgya gar).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 7:36 PM

Title: Re: Mystery Object - Dotty Melong

Content:

Mantrik said:

"Numbers 1-9. In Tibetan, these are called the me-wa gu. In English, this is a so-called magic square where any line added up across, down, or the hypotenuse through the middle equals 15. These nine numbers are correlated to the nine stars. It is a system of numerology/astrology. It was borrowed from the Tibetans from the Chinese, remembering that Tibetans use both kar-tsi (white or Indian astrology) and nak-tsi (black or Chinese astrology). (The white and black are abbreviations for the Tibetan for India, gya-kar, vast white, and China, gya-nak, vast black.

Malcolm wrote:

Unfortunately, the idea that Nga rtsi comes from rgya nag rtsi is slightly wrong. The reason why elemental calculation is called Nag rtsi has to do with its founder, who while indeed Chinese, was also named Du har Nag po. Thus, Nag rtsi in reality means "The calculation of Nag po."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 7:07 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Emptiness and luminosity ('od gsal) are synonyms. When one is in the experience of emptiness or luminosity there are no appearances. In Mahāmudra there are appearances. Which appearances? The appearances of the world.

Temicco said:

How do "appearances" differ from "form", practically? What does the experience of Mahamudra entail that distinguishes it from emptiness/luminosity, such that it entails appearances while the other does not?

What of the saying, "Mind without projection is mahamudra"?

Malcolm wrote:

Luminosity is a completion stage experience in which all appearances subside. Mahāmudra is the experience of union, in which appearance and emptiness are a seamless unity. Rather than being treated as relative (appearance) and emptiness (ultimate), here the two truths are seamless and unified where the distinctions between ultimate and relative, conditioned and unconditioned, etc., are seen through.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 7:04 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra same as Shikantaza

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

he second is called "vipaśyāna," because one recognizes that movement and calmness are identical in nature.

fckw said:

Now I'm curious - what instructions are usually given out on this particular point in Sutra-Mahamudra?

Malcolm wrote:

Freedom from proliferation, aka, simplicity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 6:59 PM

Title: Re: Donald Trump Impeached

Content:

Wayfarer said:

There was some news footage from the House of a Democratic congressman (or senator?) formally calling for the impeachment. I think he has a perfectly good cause to do that, but it's simply politicking at this moment. That's probably what the news is about - and it is true that impeachment was called for, so it's not fake news. But that particular motion is probably not going to go anywhere.

Personally, I think if a James Comey memo comes out, showing that T. really did ask him to drop the investigation into Flynn, which he has since categorically denied - then that will be checkmate.

Malcolm wrote:

We will see what the special prosecutor turns up. It won't be pretty and some people are definitely going to jail. Whatever the case may be, Trump has injured the GOP's brand for a long time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 11:59 AM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

A cause that does not produce a result is a non cause.

aflatun said:

Agreed, although Nirvana, at least in the Pali tradition (which I'm not pushing) does have a sense in which all phenomena do cease, depending on who you ask, Nirvana without residue/Arahattaphala Samadhi (Nanananda), Timless, Cessation of the Personality Factors/Unconstructed Discernment (Peter Harvey), Nirvana without residue post mortem (Buddhaghosa). But we're not talking about that so I'm happy to leave it there.

Nirvana is the cessation of hatred, greed and delusion. I said "destruction" before, and it seems you took issue with this word. I'll take your word for it, as you are a scholar and I respect that. But the general form of the proposition is not controversial as I understand it.

While I appreciate this exchange (I mean that) I'd like to return to where it started. When I asked why cessation wasn't an experience you said:

Can you explain how this relates?

You also said:

I still need help with this. Nirvana is the cessation of the three poisons. Saying they never grew (why is this in the past tense) in the state of nirvana sounds redundant to me. Of course they didn't, the state of nirvana is itself their irreversible cessation. What were you getting at here?

Further, Nirvana is in one sense precisely experience which is no longer conditioned by hatred, greed and delusion. So it is six sense base experience marked by the absence of cognitive and affective distortions. For Buddha Joe, those afflictions were once present, after awakening they're absent. This absence would have to be discernible. How? For one, suffering is now impossible, always and forever.

Further you stated:

I can't resolve the two bolded statements. Help?

Malcolm wrote:

.

The absence of a cause is not the absence of something since there is nothing by which that absence may be identified.

aflatun said:

How does this follow? The cause is the three poisons. They are assuredly something (barring any one upmanship here). Their absence is identified by the cessation of suffering, birth, death, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 11:33 AM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is no reason any positive dharma's will cease as a result of insight. The purpose of insight is to see what is negative and remove the causes for that.

aflatun said:

Agreed, although Nirvana, at least in the Pali tradition (which I'm not pushing) does have a sense in which all phenomena do cease, depending on who you ask, Nirvana without residue/Arahattaphala Samadhi (Nanananda), Timless, Cessation of the Personality Factors/Unconstructed Discernment (Peter Harvey), Nirvana without residue post mortem (Buddhaghosa). But we're not talking about that so I'm happy to leave it there.

Nirvana is the cessation of hatred, greed and delusion. I said "destruction" before, and it seems you took issue with this word. I'll take your word for it, as you are a scholar and I respect that. But the general form of the proposition is not controversial as I understand it.

While I appreciate this exchange (I mean that) I'd like to return to where it started. When I asked why cessation wasn't an experience you said:

Malcolm wrote:

All experiences are necessarily conceptual.

aflatun said:

Can you explain how this relates?

You also said:

Malcolm wrote:

You cannot experience the absence of three poisons that have never arisen. This is why nirvana is peaceful. It is not an experience of an absence of anything. The three poisons never grew in the state of nirvana.

aflatun said:

I still need help with this. Nirvana is the cessation of the three poisons. Saying they never grew (why is this in the past tense) in the state of nirvana sounds redundant to me. Of course they didn't, the state of nirvana is itself their irreversible cessation. What were you getting at here?

Further, Nirvana is in one sense precisely experience which is no longer conditioned by hatred, greed and delusion. So it is six sense base experience marked by the absence of cognitive and affective distortions. For Buddha Joe, those afflictions were once present, after awakening they're absent. This absence would have to be discernible. How? For one, suffering is now impossible, always and forever.

Further you stated:

Malcolm wrote:

You cannot experience a tree that has never grown. Cessation is not the absence of something.

A cessation is the absence of cause for arising. Saying you can experience a cessation is like saying you can experience the sprout that never grows from a burnt seed.

aflatun said:

I can't resolve the two bolded statements. Help?

Malcolm wrote:

.

The absence of a cause is not the absence of something since there is nothing by which that absence may be identified.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 10:54 AM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

No, advocate and inspire people to ignore materialistic cravings. Instead turn them toward living the buddhadharma.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh yes, and throwing in your lot with Fundamentalist Christians Like Pence is really going to advance that agenda...

Nicholas Weeks said:

Ho Hum - straw man again...

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is what conservatism means now, guns and Jesus.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 7:59 AM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

For goodness sake, you really think it ended?

Malcolm wrote:

Definitely. Capitalism won.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 7:58 AM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

The secular ideologues of much of the Left still prefer political so-called solutions to try and fix samsara.

dharmagoat said:

What else? Do we leave it to rot?

Nicholas Weeks said:

No, advocate and inspire people to ignore materialistic cravings. Instead turn them toward living the buddhadharma.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh yes, and throwing in your lot with Fundamentalist Christians Like Pence is really going to advance that agenda...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 7:57 AM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

For those who prefer videos to texts, ponder (not react immediately, if possible) on these offerings:

<https://www.youtube.com/user/VOCvideos>

Malcolm wrote:

Oh for lord's sake man. You're still fighting the cold war.

Nicholas Weeks said:

For goodness sake, you really think it ended? The secular ideologues of much of the Left still prefer political so-called solutions to try and fix samsara.

Malcolm wrote:

You prefer the Christocratic Right?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 6:21 AM

Title: Re: Confused about nature of mind introduction

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Song of the Vajra only requires that you've had direct introduction, Same for Rushens, Semdzins, Lojong. It doesn't have a separate lung or anything that I know if.....

Pero said:

Song of the Vajra is a mantra and requires lung. But Rinpoche gives it every retreat.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Really? I don't recall that in any of the lists of lungs given in the ones I've done, but i'll take your word for it.

Malcolm wrote:

Dude, it is in the short thun, etc.. And he always gives the lung for it when he explains Ati Guru Yoga.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 6:20 AM

Title: Re: Socialism & Communism

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

For those who prefer videos to texts, ponder (not react immediately, if possible) on these offerings:

<https://www.youtube.com/user/VOCvideos>

Malcolm wrote:

Oh for lord's sake man. You're still fighting the cold war.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 6:15 AM

Title: Re: Donald Trump Impeached

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

We conservatives ground our teeth for 8 years, you can suck it up can you not?

Malcolm wrote:

I am sorry, do you mean to say that you have changed your position and now actually believe this person is qualified to be president?

This is not a right/left issue. Oh wait, except the the fact that very few people in the GOP have any ...

And one more thing since we are on it — violence at protests is not confined exclusively to the far left. The far right is heavily invested in it as well.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 3:49 AM

Title: Re: Donald Trump Impeached

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Exactly why I made this post.

Malcolm wrote:

Just stick with papers of record.

Coëmgenu said:

What does the term "papers of record" entail? Original documents?

Malcolm wrote:

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Newspaper_of_record

In the US, that would be the NY Times, the Post, the LA Times, and the Wall Street Journal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 3:30 AM

Title: Re: Donald Trump Impeached

Content:

smcj said:

I guess the left has fake news too.

Coëmgenu said:

Exactly why I made this post.

Malcolm wrote:

Just stick with papers of record.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 2:54 AM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

aflatun said:

Has any dharma whatsoever arisen in the state of nirvana? Why are the three poisons exempt? Aren't they empty like everything else?

On your reading what distinguishes the two? What has changed? (Besides the fact that perception and feeling have "resumed" and one is walking about, etc). I'm guessing you wouldn't accept "the destruction of hatred, greed, delusion" as a valid answer here

Malcolm wrote:

In the context, nirvana is not the cessation of all phenomena, it is the cessation of all afflictive phenomena.

The three poisons are not things that can be destroyed, like pots. In order to destroy them, you would have to destroy the mind. In other words, you would have to "Destroy the village to save it, sir."

aflatun said:

Can you explain what the context is then?

Malcolm wrote:

There is no reason any positive dharmas will cease as a result of insight. The purpose of insight is to see what is negative and remove the causes for that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 2:51 AM

Title: Re: One Upmanship places on DW

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

PS game is what language is; its inescapable if the escape

Is sought from language. Actually yoga is the only escape , refuge, etc. Milarepa often used the phrase, play words. We could also like Wittgenstein refer to the language game. Or word games. Arranging syllables to direct an effect, this is a strategy. Strategy is game. In language the game is to affirm potential of ego. They call ego games. It seems to me that's all that happens ever. Look at me. I'm right. Feels good. Do it again. Now you challenge or join the team.

Malcolm wrote:

The old "I am not gonna play your game" play.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 2:40 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Definitely knockoffs.

DGA said:

This looks like one of Rinpoche's designs for melong, no?

https://www.etsy.com/listing/268851337/melong-small-handmade-buddhist-pendant?ga_order=most_relevant&ga_search_type=all&ga_view_type=gallery&ga_sear ch_query=melong&ref=sr_gallery_1 anyone know who the maker might be?

thoughts?

edit: another one

https://www.etsy.com/listing/268266865/melong-handmade-buddhist-pendant?ga_order=most_relevant&ga_search_type=all&ga_view_type=gallery&ga_sear ch_query=melong&ref=sr_gallery_18 and other

https://www.etsy.com/listing/493959203/buddhist-pendant-melong-made-from?ga_order=most_relevant&ga_search_type=all&ga_view_type=gallery&ga_search_ query=melong&ref=sr_gallery_3

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 2:08 AM

Title: Re: Donald Trump Impeached

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Is Donald Trump actually getting impeached? I just read an article claiming that it was "official" "confirmed" and "inevitable".

Malcolm wrote:

We can only hope.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 20th, 2017 at 12:25 AM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The three poisons never arose in the state of nirvana, they are not in a state called unborn or nonarisen. There can be no such state, by definition

aflatun said:

Has any dharma whatsoever arisen in the state of nirvana? Why are the three poisons exempt? Aren't they empty like everything else?

Malcolm wrote:

You also have to distinguish between the absorption of cessation, nirodhasamapatti, and the subsequent attainment of cessation, where one is no longer subject to birth and death.

aflatun said:

On your reading what distinguishes the two? What has changed? (Besides the fact that perception and feeling have "resumed" and one is walking about, etc). I'm guessing you wouldn't accept "the destruction of hatred, greed, delusion" as a valid answer here

Malcolm wrote:

In the context, nirvana is not the cessation of all phenomena, it is the cessation of all afflictive phenomena.

The three poisons are not things that can be destroyed, like pots. In order to destroy them, you would have to destroy the mind. In other words, you would have to "Destroy the village to save it, sir."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 19th, 2017 at 8:43 PM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

Anonymous X said:

I don't think I've ever heard you say 'in a discussion with my teacher', or 'my teacher said this'. That's fine with me. I'm not setting you up for Malcom.

Malcolm wrote:

Astus has studied with a number of Zen teachers, and couple of Kagyu ones too, if I am not mistaken.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 19th, 2017 at 8:41 PM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

A cessation is the absence of cause for arising. Saying you can experience a cessation is like saying you can experience the sprout that never grows from a burnt seed.

aflatun said:

So the cause here would be ignorance? And the arising here would mean the arising of any dharma whatsoever?

Malcolm wrote:

You cannot experience the absence of three poisons that have never arisen. This is why nirvana is peaceful. It is not an experience of an absence of anything. The three poisons never grew in the state of nirvana.

aflatun said:

I think you're saying in the state of nirvana the three poisons (and any dharma) are unborn and unarisen (correct me if I misunderstand). But in saying this is not an experience you're not saying it is rather a cognitive blackout, or a blank void?

Malcolm wrote:

The three poisons never arose in the state of nirvana, they are not in a state called unborn or nonarisen. There can be no such state, by definition.

You also have to distinguish between the absorption of cessation, nirodhasamapatti, and the subsequent attainment of cessation, where one is no longer subject to birth and death.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 19th, 2017 at 8:31 PM

Title: Re: Confused about nature of mind introduction

Content:

Seeking Wisdom said:

Uh oh. Does this mean that I have not received rigpa tsal wang?

I've been reading some heavy stuff under the impression that I had. Might this be what's creating obstacles? What would you suggest as a course of action Malcolm?

Malcolm wrote:

You received it. The transmission anniversaries are no substitute for attending a webcast retreat, that is all I am saying. But they will give you a "kick in the pants."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 19th, 2017 at 7:02 AM

Title: Re: Confused about nature of mind introduction

Content:

Seeking Wisdom said:

@Malcolm, Song of the Vajra is restricted. So not sure it's fair to expect a newbie to have read it going into things. I'll add it to my list though. And here I thought Dzogchen was the lazy man's path.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a very great misunderstanding that has arisen around the so called "transmission days." Originally they were anniversaries where the DC would gather every where in the world at the same time to do a practice related to that days anniversary.

Then, sometime in the late 90's, ChNN came up with the idea of doing remote transmissions guided by video tape. This was soon replaced by webcast transmissions.

But if you have not at least listened to ChNN intro to Dzogchen talks and so on, it is unlikely you will be properly prepared to receive transmission. So many people attend these webcast transmissions, but not understanding the real principle, they remain confused through no fault of their own.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 19th, 2017 at 6:01 AM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

aflatun said:

EDIT: In your initial statement that these things (cessation of craving, insight into emptiness) are not experiences, perhaps you meant that they are not transient meditation states? Not that they aren't literally within the domain of experience?

Malcolm wrote:

A cessation is the absence of cause for arising. Saying you can experience a cessation is like saying you can experience the sprout that never grows from a burnt seed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 19th, 2017 at 5:56 AM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

aflatun said:

No quarrel with that from me.

If I'm following you, you're contrasting nonconceptual wisdom of seeing emptiness for example (jnana, etc), vs. experience (always conceptual)?

Even if that's the case I'm not sure I understand how the cessation of craving is not an experience, as Astus said. Something that was previously present is gone (forever) and that absence is experienced. Thoughts?

Malcolm wrote:

You cannot experience a tree that has never grown. Cessation is not the absence of something.

aflatun said:

We're talking about cessation qua 3rd NT right? Nirvana is not the absence of hatred, greed, delusion?

Malcolm wrote:

You cannot experience the absence of three poisons that have never arisen. This is why nirvana is peaceful. It is not an experience of an absence of anything. The three poisons never grew in the state of nirvana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 19th, 2017 at 3:07 AM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

aflatun said:

Could you unpack this some? If they're not experiences what are they?

Malcolm wrote:

All experiences are necessarily conceptual.

aflatun said:

No quarrel with that from me.

If I'm following you, you're contrasting nonconceptual wisdom of seeing emptiness for example (jnana, etc), vs. experience (always conceptual)?

Even if that's the case I'm not sure I understand how the cessation of craving is not an experience, as Astus said. Something that was previously present is gone (forever) and that absence is experienced. Thoughts?

Malcolm wrote:

You cannot experience a tree that has never grown. Cessation is not the absence of something.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 19th, 2017 at 2:14 AM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

dharmagoat said:

"Seeing", however it is meant metaphorically, still pertains to experience.

Astus said:

Not really. The third noble truth is the truth of cessation, the end of craving - that is not an experience. Seeing emptiness, the nature of phenomena, is the end of fabricating a self/substance, the cessation of conceptualisation, so again - that is not an experience.

aflatun said:

Could you unpack this some? If they're not experiences what are they?

Malcolm wrote:

All experiences are necessarily conceptual.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 19th, 2017 at 1:36 AM

Title: Re: Confused about nature of mind introduction

Content:

conebeckham said:

Yes, different.....in some sense. And there are many other different methods---the Lama may make gestures, or speak a few words. Different approaches, but same goal. The more "gradual" questions are more in line with Mahamudra, or with Sem De Dzogchen, I think. Rigpai TselWang is a more "instant" approach, if that makes sense.

Malcolm wrote:

There are all kinds of "rig pa'i rtsal dbangs." For example, the fourth empowerment of the King's Tradition Avalokiteśvara is called "the empowerment of the potential of vidyā," there are eighteen rig pa'i rtsal dbangs connected with Sems sde, and so on.

conebeckham said:

They are all, more or less, "instant," though, yes? As opposed to, questioning/investigation sorts of approaches?

Malcolm wrote:

Not really, the eighteen rig pa'i rtsal dbangs takes a fairly long time, with a lot of explanations, etc. However, they work with experiences as well, not so much question and answer, as in the sems khrid approach.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 19th, 2017 at 1:31 AM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

Anonymous X said:

You are the one providing the quotes here.

Astus said:

I find it a good way to avoid stating things that are incompatible with the Dharma, furthermore, it allows everyone to cross reference it.

Anonymous X said:

Off the top of my head, the Buddha silently holds up a flower amidst a gathering of his followers. Only Kasyapa responds with a knowing smile. Hence, the transmission of the Dharma to Kasyapa, the first patriarch of Chan. These are nice stories, but how does this help you uproot the foundation of the self structure?

Malcolm wrote:

It helps if you know what kind of flower it was.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 19th, 2017 at 1:28 AM

Title: Re: Confused about nature of mind introduction

Content:

michaelb said:

I was wondering about the difference between the kind of direct introduction or rigpa'i tsal wang, where the lama shouts phat or some such syllable, compared to a more conversational pointing out, where the lama asks questions. Where/what is the mind, etc. Actually, at one Rigdzin Dupa wang the lama shouted a question. Traditionally, are these two approaches seen as different?

conebeckham said:

Yes, different.....in some sense. And there are many other different methods---the Lama may make gestures, or speak a few words. Different approaches, but same goal. The more "gradual" questions are more in line with Mahamudra, or with Sem De Dzogchen, I think. Rigpai TselWang is a more "instant" approach, if that makes sense.

Malcolm wrote:

There are all kinds of "rig pa'i rtsal dbangs." For example, the fourth empowerment of the King's Tradition Avalokiteśvara is called "the empowerment of the potential of vidyā," there are eighteen rig pa'i rtsal dbangs connected with Sems sde, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 19th, 2017 at 1:26 AM

Title: Re: Confused about nature of mind introduction

Content:

Seeking Wisdom said:

Hello every one. I've been browsing this board since I found it recently and haven't been able to find a concern I've been having in any other thread, so thought I'd register and ask.

I've been chasing after the dzogchen experience for some time now and earlier this year I watched a webcast with Chogyal Namkhai Norbu Rinpoche where he introduced rigpa through a guru yoga of Garab Dorje. I keep reading over and over that the introduction is to introduce you to the state of rigpa, and then afterwards you work with integrating what you were introduced to. It just so happens that I did not recognize anything (at least consciously) during the introduction, so I'm unsure how to work with meditating on something I had no recognition of in the first place. I paid full attention during the retreat and followed along closely with the visualizations and recitations. Am I just not a suitable candidate for Dzogchen?

What is the course of action I should take here, if any? If any one has any thoughts on this I'm all ears.

Thanks.

Malcolm wrote:

You do not understand the principle of the three transmissions, it seems. ChNN describes them very precisely on page-15-17 of the Song of the Vajra book.

In essence, a teacher communicates with words and symbols in order to generate an understanding of the meaning of the Great Perfection in the students mind. If you do not have an understanding of the verbal and symbolic transmissions, there is no way you will enter into direct transmission. The direct transmission means being in the same state of knowledge as the teacher at the same time. This is why ChNN, when he gives retreats, explains the meaning of the direct introduction through words and symbols before he gives it. If you do not have a conceptual understanding of the meaning of Dzogchen going into direct introduction, you may not recognize what is being pointed out during transmission. He says:

Chogyal Namkhai Norbu said:

The third method, direct transmission, implies that one already has the knowledge of the oral and symbolic transmissions. Through these two, one has an idea of how to enter the real nature; then by using different experiences together, and by entering into that real nature at the same moment as the teacher, there is the possibility that one also receives direct transmission. So direct transmission implies the possibility of receiving knowledge, when the student already knows how to work while the teacher transmits that knowledge.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 19th, 2017 at 12:04 AM

Title: Re: Presence and Awareness

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you are a student of ChNN, you have three main jobs:

- 1) Guru Yoga as a means of finding and then sustaining knowledge of your own state (rig pa).
- 2) Being present and aware, i.e. mindful and aware.
- 3) Working with circumstances.

dharmagoat said:

Hello Malcolm.

How would you describe what "working with circumstances" entails?

Malcolm wrote:

It means understanding your life in a practical way.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 19th, 2017 at 12:04 AM

Title: Re: Presence and Awareness

Content:

TaTa said:

Would you say that sov is next in importance to those?

Malcolm wrote:

Song of the Vajra is a component of Guru Yoga, a support for it, if you will. So it comes in 1.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 18th, 2017 at 9:44 PM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

Anonymous X said:

How would you know what it is like to be in the presence of a Buddha or fully awakened being? There are many stories in Buddhist literature of sudden awakening in the presence of such a one.

Astus said:

Could you provide a few quotes from the sutras where people attained enlightenment because of the presence of a buddha?

Malcolm wrote:

Should be:

"Could you provide a few quotes from the sutras where people attained enlightenment because of being in the mere presence of a buddha?"

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 18th, 2017 at 9:17 PM

Title: Re: One Upmanship places on DW

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Over on another

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=39&t=25540&start=20#p388058>, I identified a common oneupmanship play in the constant game of "Dharma" oneupmanship that goes on here at DW.

Please use this space to share your favorite oneupmanship plays and strategies here.

Possible themes for discussion

The nonduality play

The humblebrag play

etc.

Anders said:

Nice try, Malcolm. But you are simply not enlightened enough to fathom the plays that those of us who really get it play. You're just going to have to trust that I am doing it for your sake. Of course, your rampant prapanca can't stomach that. But don't worry. That's why I am here for you.

Malcolm wrote:

You sound like Anonx.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 18th, 2017 at 9:13 PM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

Anonymous X said:

How would you know what it is like to be in the presence of a Buddha or fully awakened being?

Malcolm wrote:

The real question here is how would you? You keep on waffling on about Chan, yet you've never practiced it. You keep waffling on about koans, but you've never practiced the koan method. In fact, just as your posts over in the Dzogchen forum were deeply arrogant and uninformed (and no one who has not received teachings from a master is informed about Dzogchen), so too are your posts here.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 18th, 2017 at 12:46 PM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

Anonymous X said:

that is more or less correct, but not in the way you are putting it.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhadharma is a direct oral tradition. You either in it or out of it.

Anonymous X said:

Neither in, nor out. Neither not in nor not out. Any others?

Malcolm wrote:

You can play all the word games you want. But what's the point?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 18th, 2017 at 12:38 PM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

dharmagoat said:

Don't forget Malcolm, you are in Zen territory here.

This subforum is populated by members that do not uphold the Vajrayana or Dzogchen view, and are generally willing only to accept the guidance of fellow Zen practitioners and teachers. With this in mind, please consider that your efforts here (no matter how well-intended) may be interpreted as trolling.

Malcolm wrote:

The person whom I am addressing has no relationship with the Buddhist tradition, much less Zen.

Anonymous X said:

that is more or less correct, but not in the way you are putting it.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhadharma is a direct oral tradition. You either in it or out of it.

You just can't get it from books.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 18th, 2017 at 12:32 PM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The person whom I am addressing has no relationship with the Buddhist tradition, much less Zen.

dharmagoat said:

Feel free to engage him on a general or non-Zen subforum.

Malcolm wrote:

I will engage with whomever I please on whichever sub-forum I please, thank you very much.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 18th, 2017 at 12:27 PM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

Anonymous X said:

So?

Malcolm wrote:

You just don't get it. Lack of a proper teacher is likely the root of it.

dharmagoat said:

Don't forget Malcolm, you are in Zen territory here.

This subforum is populated by members that do not uphold the Vajrayana or Dzogchen view, and are generally willing only to accept the guidance of fellow Zen practitioners and teachers. With this in mind, please consider that your efforts here (no matter how well-intended) may be interpreted as trolling.

Malcolm wrote:

The person whom I am addressing has no relationship with the Buddhist tradition, much less Zen.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, May 18th, 2017 at 12:24 PM
Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos
Content:
Anonymous X said:
So?

Malcolm wrote:
You just don't get it. Lack of a proper teacher is likely the root of it.

Anonymous X said:
From your point of view, yes? Said, according what you wish to achieve.

Malcolm wrote:
Who said there was anything to achieve? That is not what the Buddha taught.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, May 18th, 2017 at 11:48 AM
Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos
Content:
Anonymous X said:
So?

Malcolm wrote:
You just don't get it. Lack of a proper teacher is likely the root of it.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, May 18th, 2017 at 11:43 AM
Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos
Content:
Anonymous X said:

I believe I mentioned some already in one of my posts above. When you spend 10 years around someone that doesn't grasp, you begin to understand the scope of this a lot more and how very rare it is. Living effortlessly without a shred of dis-ease. No self, no mind. Nothing to accomplish. Total presence. No fluctuations of any inner disturbance. That dude died while alive, much the same as Ramana.

Malcolm wrote:
Such a state does not indicate awakening. For example, in the Yoga Sūtras, there is what they call "Kaivalya." A person who has attained kaivalya might appear much as you describe Ramana to be. Certainly my yoga guru discussed this in these terms: when you achieve liberation through Yoga, for you there will be nothing to do, just sit in your apartment, breath, eat, shit, until you die, absorbed in purusha.

But what distinguishes such a person? How does one know they are awakened, as opposed to resting in a mundane samadhi?

If your notion of liberation is divorced from putting an end to samsaric rebirth, how is it even relevant at all to Buddha's teachings? And if it is not relevant to Buddha's teachings, why waste your time here?

M

Anonymous X said:

Don't worry about me wasting my time. It is not your concern, thanks.

As my teacher used to say, that person who sought liberation is gone. All questions regarding statements like samadhi and awakening are only relevant to that person who was the seeker. The question of how do you know is not relevant and never comes up. There is no movement to pose and answer these questions. Only when there is self do these questions get asked.

Because you believe in the system you follow, every experience is going to be filtered through this model. This is the thing that has to stop, IMO. It is a form of grasping and shows that the comparative mind is still dominant. It is nothing more than an intellectual exercise that we think is 'sacred'. Every thing you do revolves around your sense of self. If that ever stops, really stops, let me know. I will be the first in line to wait for you.

Malcolm wrote:

You really don't get the point. But it is not surprising since you are not someone who has entered Buddha dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 18th, 2017 at 4:14 AM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

Anonymous X said:

How many people have you met who have ended grasping?

Malcolm wrote:

How would you tell? What are the observable characteristics of such a person?

boda said:

They should be at least relatively stress-free, right? There are many observable expressions of stress.

Malcolm wrote:

There are all kinds of stress. Some more observable than others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 18th, 2017 at 2:41 AM

Title: Re: How can one with "wrong" view become a Buddha?

Content:

Anonymous X said:

My main teacher was not a Buddhist...

Malcolm wrote:

That explains everything.

Anonymous X said:

A path is always tied to time and space.

Malcolm wrote:

So are you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 18th, 2017 at 2:05 AM

Title: Re: Me too! Me too!

Content:

smcj said:

From "Moonbeams of Mahamudra" by Treleg R. introduction:

(The erratic capitalization is from the book.) It is important to understand that this Mahamudra system goes beyond Tantra. The text contains a discussion on the relationship between Tantra and Mahamudra but Mahamudra is not confined to conventional tantra practices. The goal of all higher tantric practices is to realize mahamudra, but Mahamudra meditation is a distinct meditative system. Conventional tantra practices include visualizations of deities, mantra recitation, ritual practices, chanting, and so on. Not so in Mahamudra meditation. Mahamudra does not rely on any of these things or even regard them as important. We can practice Mahamudra without practicing Tantra or we can practice it in conjunctions with Tantra, but the Mahamudra system as presented in this manual is a complete and distinct practice in its own right. I just wanted to make the point that Dzogchen does not monopolize this kind of approach.

(Me too! Me too!)

Malcolm wrote:

Correct, but indeed, as Machig Labdron says of the dharmadhātu after going through all the yānas, including Dzogchen and Mahāmudra:

The ignorant and confused are deluded because they know and apprehend the dharmadhātu as an object [...]

All of these knowledges (rig pa) are knowledges that know objects.

Those [knowledges that] possess objects are not true.

There is nothing to know in the mind without objects.
Whoever knows is bound by knowledge.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 18th, 2017 at 1:49 AM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

Anonymous X said:

How many people have you met who have ended grasping?

Malcolm wrote:

How would you tell? What are the observable characteristics of such a person?

Anonymous X said:

I believe I mentioned some already in one of my posts above. When you spend 10 years around someone that doesn't grasp, you begin to understand the scope of this a lot more and how very rare it is. Living effortlessly without a shred of dis-ease. No self, no mind. Nothing to accomplish. Total presence. No fluctuations of any inner disturbance. That dude died while alive, much the same as Ramana.

Malcolm wrote:

Such a state does not indicate awakening. For example, in the Yoga Sūtras, there is what they call "Kaivalya." A person who has attained kaivalya might appear much as you describe Ramana to be. Certainly my yoga guru discussed this in these terms: when you achieve liberation through Yoga, for you there will be nothing to do, just sit in your apartment, breath, eat, shit, until you die, absorbed in purusha.

But what distinguishes such a person? How does one know they are awakened, as opposed to resting in a mundane samadhi?

If your notion of liberation is divorced from putting an end to samsaric rebirth, how is it even relevant at all to Buddha's teachings? And if it is not relevant to Buddha's teachings, why waste your time here?

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 18th, 2017 at 1:03 AM

Title: Re: James Ford on kensho, from Pathos

Content:

Anonymous X said:

How many people have you met who have ended grasping?

Malcolm wrote:

How would you tell? What are the observable characteristics of such a person?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 18th, 2017 at 12:41 AM

Title: Re: Presence and Awareness

Content:

HandsomeMonkeyking said:

Hello,

Some teachers speak about presence and others about awareness, others use both terms. Is there a difference or are these synonyms?

CNN also uses the word contemplation. What is the Tibetan word he uses 'contemplation' for?

Thank you

Malcolm wrote:

Presence = dran pa = smṛti = mindfulness

Awareness = shes bzhin = saṃprajāna = awareness

Contemplation = ting nge 'dzin = samadhi = samadhi.

Smṛti and saṃprajāna always accompany one another. If you are being mindful, you are being aware. If you are being aware, you are being mindful.

If you are a student of ChNN, you have three main jobs:

- 1) Guru Yoga as a means of finding and then sustaining knowledge of your own state (rig pa).
- 2) Being present and aware, i.e. mindful and aware.
- 3) Working with circumstances.

That's it.

We can add a fourth:

Do your best.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 17th, 2017 at 10:33 PM

Title: Re: How can one with "wrong" view become a Buddha?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

(bracketing Chan/Zen here).

.

Queequeg said:

What do you mean? Zen is or is not Sutrayana?

Malcolm wrote:

Zen/Chan is special case. It is included with sūtrayāna in general. But we cannot say that its methodology is strictly analytical or merit accumulation based.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 17th, 2017 at 9:25 PM

Title: Re: Jiddu Krishnamurti

Content:

Grigoris said:

I have read the history of this and it does not seem COMPLETELY unlikely to me. Again though: the point is that Christians found the essence of the tale important enough to include it in their canon.

Malcolm wrote:

It does not mean that they were aware of its origin, and there is no evidence to suggest that they were, since the tale was quite garbled and out of its context by the time it reached the the Christian world, and also quite a long time after the last Buddhist monasteries in Eastern Iran, etc. were deserted.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 17th, 2017 at 9:21 PM

Title: Re: How can one with "wrong" view become a Buddha?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

But if for example, one still believes in purusha or brahmin as an ultimate self/principle, then you will not make much progress in your practice beyond accumulation merit for a better rebirth, as well as having made a solid connection with a Buddhist guru.

Losal Samten said:

Believing in the ontologically existent perfected nature would also merely lead to cultivating merit, no? it is a breakage of samaya to abandon the view of emptiness free from extremes. So there is that as well.

And Yogacara's emptiness is not nisprapanca.

Malcolm wrote:

As for question one: provided that one engaged in the standard set of virtuous deeds, but not on its own as a belief.

Yogācārins certainly thought their presentation of emptiness was niṣprapañca. So do Theravadins.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 17th, 2017 at 8:56 PM

Title: Re: How can one with "wrong" view become a Buddha?

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Can you really state that Jesus' view is incorrect

Malcolm wrote:

Sure.

Anonymous X said:

And, btw, what do they do with all those dead non-buddhists? Where do they go?

Malcolm wrote:

They remain right here with us in samsara until they meet the Dharma.

Anonymous X said:

Is the after life segregated? And, how bout those billions of Muslims?

Malcolm wrote:

There is no "afterlife," there is just this endless round of samsara. Most sentient beings will not get out anytime soon.

Anonymous X said:

Are the Vajrayanas really top shelf...?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 17th, 2017 at 8:49 PM

Title: Re: How can one with "wrong" view become a Buddha?

Content:

Boomerang said:

A person like that could have confidence in place of doubt. Through a mixture of arrogance, optimism, and under-education, they could believe that they understand Buddhadharma at its core. And if anyone objects to the idea that Brahman and emptiness are equal, it's just a sign that the objector is confused. If a person like that received empowerment and practiced a sadhana on the basis of that empowerment, could they become a Buddha?

Malcolm wrote:

No, because their fundamental confusion will interfere with the meaning of the view pointed out during empowerment. Of course, if through practicing they abandoned this confused idea well then, no problem.

It is not the same with respect to Yogacara and Madhyamaka. Both advocate emptiness as correct view.

Boomerang said:

Alright, if I'm understanding this correctly, there are multiple views of reality. The ultimate view is the tantric view. Below that, there are various sutra mahayana views. All of these are okay for receiving empowerment. Below that there are non-Buddhist views of reality, and these interfere with empowerment such that attaining Buddhahood is impossible. However, even if one receives empowerment while holding a confused view, they can grow out of it through practicing, and then they can become a Buddha.

Is all of that correct?

Malcolm wrote:

The view gained through empowerment/direct introduction is experiential. The views of sūtra are analytical (bracketing Chan/Zen here).

In sutrayāna, it is important that one's view in equipoise and post-equipoise match. It is for this reason that Madhyamakas such as Candrakīrti assert one cannot attain the path of seeing via Yogācāra. This is because one's view in equipoise is a product of analysis.

If one faithfully practices the methods of sadhana, however, the method itself familiarizes one with the experiential view gained in empowerment that corresponds with the correct view arrived at in sūtrayāna equipoise. Then, it does not matter whether you advocate Yogācāra or Madhyamaka, since both are within the general rubric of Mahāyāna and emphasize the two-fold emptiness.

With respect to that, even if you hold very wrong views, such Advaita, Samkhya, and so on, theoretically cultivation of sadhana methods of the Buddha can help you overcome these views through the development of the two accumulations. But if for example, one still believes in purusha or brahmin as an ultimate self/principle, then you will not make much progress in your practice beyond accumulation merit for a better rebirth, as well as having made a solid connection with a Buddhist guru.

There is however one other slight problem with thinking you can hold Hindu views while practicing Buddhist Vajrayāna sadhana — it is a breakage of samaya to abandon the view of emptiness free from extremes. So there is that as well.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 17th, 2017 at 12:15 PM

Title: Re: How can one with "wrong" view become a Buddha?

Content:

Boomerang said:

If a person received empowerment and practiced a sadhana on the basis of that empowerment all while believing Brahman and emptiness were synonymous, could they become a Buddha?

Malcolm wrote:

No, I don't think so. Why? Because they would have a fundamental doubt about the veracity of Buddhadharma.

Boomerang said:

A person like that could have confidence in place of doubt. Through a mixture of arrogance, optimism, and under-education, they could believe that they understand Buddhadharma at its core. And if anyone objects to the idea that Brahman and emptiness are equal, it's just a sign that the objector is confused. If a person like that received empowerment and practiced a sadhana on the basis of that empowerment, could they become a Buddha?

Malcolm wrote:

No, because their fundamental confusion will interfere with the meaning of the view pointed out during empowerment. Of course, if through practicing they abandoned this confused idea well then, no problem.

It is not the same with respect to Yogacara and Madhyamaka. Both advocate emptiness as correct view.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 17th, 2017 at 11:50 AM

Title: Re: How can one with "wrong" view become a Buddha?

Content:

Boomerang said:

Thank you for the answers everybody. Okay, so if I understand this correctly, two people practicing Vajrayana could have diametrically opposed beliefs on what emptiness means, but as long as they both had Mahayana motivation they would both become Buddhas.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is based on the fact they both have received empowerments and are practicing their sadhana on the basis of those empowerments.

Boomerang said:

If a person received empowerment and practiced a sadhana on the basis of that empowerment all while believing Brahman and emptiness were synonymous, could they become a Buddha?

Malcolm wrote:

No, I don't think so. Why? Because they would have a fundamental doubt about the veracity of Buddhadharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 17th, 2017 at 11:22 AM

Title: Re: How can one with "wrong" view become a Buddha?

Content:

Boomerang said:

Thank you for the answers everybody. Okay, so if I understand this correctly, two people practicing Vajrayana could have diametrically opposed beliefs on what emptiness means, but as long as they both had Mahayana motivation they would both become Buddhas.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is based on the fact they both have received empowerments and are practicing their sadhana on the basis of those empowerments.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 17th, 2017 at 10:33 AM

Title: Re: Entry into gcod

Content:

michaelb said:

Probably a good idea to receive Yumka Dechen Gyalmo empowerment, though. There's only a peaceful dakini (Dechen Gyalmo) and wrathful dakini (Sengedongma) empowerment in LN, and other practices (like Tara, maybe) rely on those.

Malcolm wrote:

No, you just need to receive direct introduction.

michaelb said:

What do you mean by "direct introduction", what term are you translating here? I assume you would also need lung and tri?

I suppose I'm wondering what the difference between nam mkha'i sgo 'byed, ngo sprod spras pa and rig pa'i rtsal dbang is.

Just to add, I think it's quite a Longchen Nyingthig thing to receive empowerments and that rather than just rely on direct introduction(?)

Malcolm wrote:

This particular chod is grounded in Dzogchen. All you need to practice this chod is direct introduction, ala, first phrase of Garab Dorje.

Of course you also need the lung for the practice, but you certainly do not need to receive any kind of empowerment, including "the opening of the sky door." Having said that, it is not a fault to receive Dechen Gyalmo, etc. It just isn't necessary.

This of course has a lot to do with a difference in perspective about empowerments from an Ati point of view and a Maha or Anuyoga point of view.

[Mod note: This topic had been necroed and was split to here:]

<https://www.dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?p=663428#p663428>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 17th, 2017 at 10:25 AM

Title: Re: Turning the light around (asraya-paravrtti)

Content:

鐵觀音 said:

Yet,

when I hear this translation from Linji, the only thing which sounds close is the advaitic technique of "being aware of awareness". Ramana's self-inquiry is a close second.

Malcolm wrote:

Pardon me for butting in here, but there is a strong sympathy in Western Zen circles for Advaita.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 17th, 2017 at 10:22 AM

Title: Re: How can one with "wrong" view become a Buddha?

Content:

Boomerang said:

By "wrong" view, I'm referring to the shentong-rangtong divide. Apparently, certain schools of Tibetan Buddhism favor one over the other. And apparently, people practitioners from both sides have become enlightened.

Malcolm wrote:

It is because the "view" in Vajrayāna is not a result of intellectual analysis, it is experientially based on the third and fourth empowerments/direct introduction/pointing out instructions.

So, from this perspective, it really does not matter much what your post-equipose intellectual view may be.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 17th, 2017 at 4:36 AM

Title: Re: Jiddu Krishnamurti

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

They did not know it was from the Buddha's life. If they had, they would have excluded it.

Grigoris said:

You are assuming they did not know it. Given the amount of intellectual cross-fertilisation that existed in the region my assumption would be that they did know it was the life of Buddha but they changed names and identities to protect the innocent.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is completely unlikely. Please read the history of this.

Grigoris said:

The fact that they considered it important enough to include it in their narrative shows the value they attached to it.

Malcolm wrote:

I understand it as a dis of Buddhists and Buddhism. Your mileage may vary.

Grigoris said:

I would hardly call Kalacakra's description of all the leading patriarchs of the Abrahamic religions respectful in anyway.

I also fail to see the relevance of this statement.

Malcolm wrote:

According to you, it should be AOK, since it is in someones religious book.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 17th, 2017 at 3:03 AM

Title: Re: One Upsmanship places on DW

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

How about favorite oneupmanship players? I nominate thee, Malcolm.

Malcolm wrote:

Glad I rate as one of your favorites, Nick.

Anonymous X said:

Malcolm, since you put yourself in the position of arbiter of these things so often with your one line posts that usually make a statement but not much of a real explanation, it's hard to wrap my head around most things you post except the most rudimentary responses of yes and no. If you're going to act as a teacher, which your title supposedly says you are, I'm not seeing much compassionate response to the ignorance of many of us. Teachers are often inspirations. They act with benevolence and caring. I would take a page out of Meido's book and try for a more balanced response in posting.

Malcolm wrote:

1) I am not the arbiter of anything. 2) Who said I am acting as a teacher? 3) Meido is Meido and Malcolm is Malcolm. Just accept it. This is not a beauty contest. You're kind of new around here so I guess it is taking you a little while to acclimatize to the altitude.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 17th, 2017 at 2:54 AM

Title: Re: Jiddu Krishnamurti

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

But they has no idea the story of Baarlam and Josaphat was in fact based on the Buddha's life.

Grigoris said:

So what? The point is that they identified the positive characteristics/message in the tale of the Buddha's life and considered it important enough to make it part of their canon.

Malcolm wrote:

They did not know it was from the Buddha's life. If they had, they would have excluded it.

Grigoris said:

I don't see how being an Avatar of Vishnu could possibly be disrespectful. Followers of Vishnu worship his avatars because their actions were expressions of the will of their god. How is that disrespectful???

Malcolm wrote:

it is disrespectful, for example, because it is clearly a political narrative penned at the expense of Buddhists. On the other hand, when people call for infidels and heretics to be slaughtered because their god tells them too, I guess that is not disrespectful either. Onward Christian Warriors!

Grigoris said:

Buddha fooled the Asura, Parashurama destroyed the greedy Kshatriya clans, Vamana vanquished the demon king Bali after he abused his powers and starts to destroy the universe, etc... Isn't Vishnu's tenth avatar the Kalki that features as one of the saviours of humanity, and bringer of the Golden Age, in the Kalachakra?

Malcolm wrote:

Kalachakra definitely uses the scheme of the ten avatars of Vishnu for its own purposes.

I would hardly call Kalachakra's description of all the leading patriarchs of the Abrahamic religions respectful in anyway.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 17th, 2017 at 2:21 AM

Title: Re: Jiddu Krishnamurti

Content:

Grigoris said:

The Buddha Shakyamuni is also considered an Avatar of Vishnu, a Christian Saint in Orthodox Christianity and Catholicism (St Josaphat), etc... So why would it seem strange that a "non-Buddhist" would show respect for the Buddha?

Malcolm wrote:

But they has no idea the story of Baarlam and Josaphat was in fact based on the Buddha's life.

As an avatar, it is hardly a respectful thing — Buddha was an avatar of Vishnu sent to deceive the Asuras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 17th, 2017 at 1:00 AM

Title: Re: Interaction with spirits

Content:

RikudouSennin said:

How does TB view the spirits of a given religion like Yemoja for example?

I assume they may just be considered worldly beings, not worthy of refuge but may be helpful in particular situations

Malcolm wrote:

They are worldly, so, use care.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 17th, 2017 at 12:31 AM

Title: Re: One Upmanship places on DW

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Great thread, but I think we should use gender-neutral language, i.e. 'one-uppersonship' etc.

Malcolm wrote:

Nice move. We have to unclude this in the PC strategy guide.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, May 17th, 2017 at 12:15 AM
Title: Re: One Upsmanship places on DW
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
Glad I rate as one of your favorites, Nick.

Nicholas Weeks said:
As 'one of' ? Come now, you know you are The One.

conebeckham said:
What should we call this particular strategy?

Malcolm wrote:
Ironical flattery.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, May 16th, 2017 at 11:57 PM
Title: Re: One Upsmanship places on DW
Content:
Nicholas Weeks said:
How about favorite oneupmanship players? I nominate thee, Malcolm.

Malcolm wrote:
Glad I rate as one of your favorites, Nick.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, May 16th, 2017 at 11:30 PM
Title: Re: How is this not Advaita?
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
SMCJ, you are just so relative.

smcj said:
Well yes, and proudly so. 40 years ago I figured out that if on the ultimate level there is nothing to be done then I need not concern myself with it. But since I don't like suffering it was/is important for me to focus my attention on the relative. Like, you could not even be in the same place with nonduality at the same time.
I've always understood nonduality to be how things actually are. If so, how is it possible to be apart from it again? What a loser.
I'm 62 and still doing NgonDro. So guilty as charged.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, then there is the "irony is lost on you play."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 16th, 2017 at 11:22 PM

Title: One Upsmanship places on DW

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Over on another

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=39&t=25540&start=20#p388058>, I identified a common oneupmanship play in the constant game of "Dharma" oneupmanship that goes on here at DW.

Please use this space to share your favorite oneupmanship plays and strategies here.

Possible themes for discussion

The nonduality play

The humblebrag play

etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 16th, 2017 at 11:18 PM

Title: Re: How is this not Advaita?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

An addendum, the other oneupmanship play, though more rarely seen, is the "speak from your own experience" play. This play is designed to shut down any all discussion whatsoever, because most people are not so foolish as to say things like, "Yeah man, I am so totally sure my samadhi has destroyed all my afflictions because that is my experience, man."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 16th, 2017 at 11:04 PM

Title: Re: How is this not Advaita?

Content:

smcj said:

...so it won't happen.

Promise?

Malcolm wrote:

SMCJ, you are just so relative. Like, you could not even be in the same place with nonduality at the same time. You are also so totally cognizable, absolutely subject to madhyamaka analysis. Sheesh. What a loser.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 16th, 2017 at 11:00 PM

Title: Re: If everyone has buddha nature...

Content:

smcj said:

Buddha Nature is a popular translation of "Tathagatagarbha". From Wiki:

Malcolm wrote:

In fact it is a translation of buddhagarbha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 16th, 2017 at 10:50 PM

Title: Re: How is this not Advaita?

Content:

smcj said:

It is always fun to watch the ultimate oneupsmanship game on DW which always ends in the stalemate of ultimate truth.

I look forward to the time, probably soon, when I can quote that back to you.

Malcolm wrote:

Time is empty, so it won't happen, and even if it does happen, it won't be real. And even you do quote it back to me, I will be comfortable in the knowledge it is all just your proliferation, far away from the meaning of nonduality, truth, Jesus, the Akashic record, and the advent of Lord Maitreya (who, I am reliably informed, works as a quant for Morgan Stanley).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 16th, 2017 at 10:33 PM

Title: Re: How is this not Advaita?

Content:

Astus said:

"To say that the mind is rattled and the nature is composed is the view of other ways; to say that the nature is clear and deep and the form shifts and moves is the view of other ways. The study of the mind and study of the nature on the way of the buddha are not like this. The practice of the mind and practice of the nature on the way of the buddha are not equivalent to the other ways. The clarification of the mind and the clarification of the nature on the way of the buddha, the other ways have no share in."

(Dogen:

https://web.stanford.edu/group/scbs/sztp3/translations/shobogenzo/translations/sesshin_sessho/translation.html)

Malcolm wrote:
Excellent case in point.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, May 16th, 2017 at 8:43 PM
Title: Re: How is this not Advaita?
Content:
Malcolm wrote:

It is always fun to watch the ultimate oneupsmanship game on DW which always ends in the stalemate of ultimate truth.

Such conversations always begin with person A giving a perfectly sensible and rational proposition from the perspective of conventional truth. Person B then seems absolutely compelled to blow up the former's statement by invoking some principle they regard as ultimate such as emptiness, nonduality, freedom from extremes, to show that person A's proposition is invalid. It is really funny and really pathetic at the same time.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, May 16th, 2017 at 7:52 PM
Title: Re: Entry into gcod
Content:

Malcolm wrote:
No, there is no specific empowerment for this chö text.

Khechara said:
Thank you for the information!

michaelb said:
Probably a good idea to receive Yumka Dechen Gyalmo empowerment, though. There's only a peaceful dakini (Dechen Gyalmo) and wrathful dakini (Sengedongma) empowerment in LN, and other practices (like Tara, maybe) rely on those.

Malcolm wrote:
No, you just need to receive direct introduction.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, May 16th, 2017 at 5:08 AM
Title: Re: Western geshes and khenpos
Content:
Virgo said:

Malcolm is one of the few people who hold the distinguished title of Loppon.

Kevin

Adamantine said:

What is the difference between loppon and khenpo?

I know a loppon who has a very limited breadth of knowledge, I think it was just an honorary title I guess. . or maybe it acknowledges their competence and capacity in a particular focus of Dharma practice and study, rather than a wide one. I think Khenpo usually indicates someone with a vast breadth of knowledge in the Dharma, that's why I am asking.. never been clear on the meaning of loppon.

Virgo said:

It means the Tibetan for acharya.

Kevin

Malcolm wrote:

I have met some pretty stupid khenpos...there are some who are really just business khenpos.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 16th, 2017 at 1:54 AM

Title: Re: Selfhood between births and karma

Content:

pothigai said:

The assertion that only animals and humans forget their past lives is based on the Abhidharma, which I would suppose is considered to be a authoritative source for such an assertion in the context of Buddhist discourse.

boda said:

I just downloaded the manual of Abhidhamma from buddhanet.net. There's not a single instance of 'clairvoyant' contained within it.

Malcolm wrote:

The term in Pali is Abhiññā:

Abhiññā¹ (f.) [fr. abhi + jñā, see jānāti]. Rare in the older texts. It appears in two contexts. Firstly, certain conditions are said to conduce (inter alia) to serenity, to special knowledge (abhiññā), to special wisdom, and to Nibbāna. These conditions precedent are the Path (S v.421 = Vin i.10 = S iv.331), the Path + best knowledge and full emancipation (A v.238), the Four Applications of Mindfulness (S v.179) and the Four Steps to Iddhi (S. v.255). The contrary is three times stated; wrong -- doing, priestly superstitions, and vain speculation do not conduce to abhiññā and the rest (D iii.131; A iii.325 sq. and v.216). Secondly, we find a list of what might now be called psychic powers. It gives us 1, Iddhi (cp. levitation); 2, the Heavenly Ear (cp. clairaudience); 3, knowing others' thoughts (cp. thought -- reading); 4, recollecting one's previous births; 5, knowing other people's rebirths; 6, certainty of emancipation already attained (cp. final assurance). This list occurs only at D iii.281 as a list of abhiññās. It stands there in a sort of index of principal subjects appended at the end of the Dīgha, and belongs therefore to the very close of the Nikāya period. But it is based on older material. Descriptions of each of the six, not called abhiññā's, and interspersed by expository sentences or paragraphs, are found at D i.89 sq. (trsl. Dial. i.89 sq.); M i.34 (see Buddh. Suttas, 210 sq.); A i.255, 258 = iii.17, 280 = iv.421. At S i.191; Vin ii.16; Pug 14, we have the adj. chaḷabhiññā ("endowed with the 6 Apperceptions"). At S ii.216 we have five, and at S v.282, 290 six abhiññā's mentioned in glosses to the text. And at S ii.217, 222 a bhikkhu claims the 6 powers. See also M ii.11; iii.96. It is from these passages that the list at D iii. has been made up, and called abhiññā's.

Afterwards the use of the word becomes stereotyped. In the Old Commentaries (in the Canon), in the later ones (of the 5th cent. a.d.), and in medieval and modern Pāli, abhiññā, nine times out ten, means just the powers given in this list. Here and there we find glimpses of the older, wider meaning of special, supernormal power of apperception and knowledge to be acquired by long training in life and thought. See Nd1 108, 328 (expln. of ñāṇa); Nd2 s. v. and N0. 466; Ps i.35; ii.156, 189; Vbh 228, 334; Pug 14; Nett 19, 20; Miln 342; Vism 373; Mhvs xix.20; DA i.175; DhA ii.49; iv.30; Sdhp 228, 470, 482. See also the discussion in the Cpd. 60 sp., 224 sq. For the phrase sayam abhiññā sacchikatvā and abhiññā -- vosita see abhijānāti. The late phrase yathā abhiññam means 'as you please, according to liking, as you like', J v.365 (= yathāhippāyam yathāruciṃ C.). For abhiññā in the use of an adj. (° abhiñña) see abhiñña

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 15th, 2017 at 7:36 PM

Title: Re: Interaction with spirits

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

... And of course, confessions are a very important part of the Sang rite; absent, for example in Chö.

Quay said:

Perhaps in some, but certainly not all? For instance in a widely practiced medium-length Thröma practice one finds the confession:

The karma, delusion and non-virtue of all my lives,
I acknowledge and confess with intense remorse.

Or am I misunderstanding the remarks about sang, confession and such as regards offerings to the four classes?

Malcolm wrote:

That is a deity yoga sadhana, not the four feasts per se. Of course, in the preliminaries of a given cho rite there might be a standard confession in the seven limb framework, but in the main body of the practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 15th, 2017 at 7:33 PM

Title: Re: all emotions are pain?

Content:

Grigoris said:

You are avoiding my question, and I am not engaging in nitpicking, I am trying to understand your opinion.

I am not engaging in judgement of others, I am engaging in this line of questioning because I find MYSELF sometimes engaging with non-afflicted objects in an afflicted manner.

Which is why your statement comes as a surprise to me: not on the basis of my experience of the actions of others, but on the basis of my own experience.

Malcolm wrote:

If one's "practice" is involved with the eight worldly dharmas, it is not sublime Dharma practice, and in the words of the Kadampa seven point mind training, one should not reduce gods to demons.

If one's set one's activities with the right motivation, how can they lead to anything other than the development of the 37 adjuncts to awakening, beginning with the five indriyas: faith, diligence, mindfulness, samadhi and wisdom?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 15th, 2017 at 9:44 AM

Title: Re: Tersar

Content:

Punya said:

Thanks for the extra info.

I'm still interested in why some recent terma collections are known as tersar and some are seemingly not.

Malcolm wrote:

Gsar means new or recent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 15th, 2017 at 3:34 AM

Title: Re: all emotions are pain?

Content:

Grigoris said:

If an un-afflicted object can give rise to an afflicted state, then why would the reaction to the object (an object in it's own right) not be capable of giving rise to an afflicted state?

I mean surely one can approach circling a stupa as a possession: "My circumambulation."

Or circumambulation can be practiced for self-centred purposes.

Etc...

Malcolm wrote:

Even the Buddha talked about "his robes, his sangha." Conventional markers of identity and possession are not necessarily afflictive.

The point of practicing Dharma is to cause positive path dharmas to arise in the mind, and transforming afflictive positive mental factors into nonafflictive positive mental factors.

I really have no idea why anyone practicing Dharma would practice for any other reason. Certainly there are people who appear to be practicing sublime Dharma who are in fact practicing the eight worldly Dharmas, but what is the point of dwelling on the mistakes of others?

You initially brought up this unqualified example:

I can, for example, have a pleasurable feeling while circling a stupa and then get attached to the action and feeling, so that when I am not circling a stupa I feel distress (or I feel a desire/need to experience the positive feeling again and this brings me distress.

I responded to your example with the assumption that you were presenting in good faith an example of sublime Dharma practice that somehow could lead to suffering. Now I find myself in another exchange with you that seems to be heading nowhere but to pointless nitpicking over what are, from my perspective, needless trivialities.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 15th, 2017 at 2:06 AM

Title: Re: all emotions are pain?

Content:

Grigoris said:

Let's try this from a different angle then: Would you agree that an un-afflicted object (a Buddha-rupa) for example, can elicit an afflicted mental state?

Malcolm wrote:

If approached as a possession, yes — which turns it into a zag bcas, a contaminated thing. If approached with devotion, no.

However you used the example of a Dharma practice (circumambulation), which is why I responded the way I did.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 15th, 2017 at 12:25 AM

Title: Re: An interesting series of articles on Islamic mysticism...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is very likely one of the best academic treatments of the subject: Mystical Dimensions of Islam by Annemarie Schimmel. Her Wiki page is here:

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Annemarie_Schimmel

"Even prominent Sufis acknowledged her as one of the foremost experts on their history and tradition."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 14th, 2017 at 11:43 PM

Title: Re: TODAY'S MYSTERY OBJECT

Content:

MiphamFan said:

Reminds me more of Southeast Asian depictions of the Garuda

Malcolm wrote:

It's a Makara.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 14th, 2017 at 11:39 PM

Title: Re: Interaction with spirits

Content:

Vasana said:

Would you mind elaborating on the various ways of going about clearing karmic debts if sang offering can sometimes be problematic?

Malcolm wrote:

Contemplation is the best way to remove all problems.

Vasana said:

True, problems and immediate threats subside naturally with contemplation just as the weapons of maras transformed into flowers when Buddha was close to [re]awakening.

But what about at other times when the strength of contemplation is not so unwavering due to various conditions? Or when all of the contemplation engaged with thus far has not rendered all debts clear? Or when you want to 'make peace' and make amends by addressing the particular debtor[s] more directly/personally ?

Malcolm wrote:

There is no chance you can ever clear these debts completely. We have been in samsara since beginningless time. There is absolutely no way we can eliminate all those obscurations by any methods of relative purification.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 14th, 2017 at 11:20 PM

Title: Re: Interaction with spirits

Content:

Mantrik said:

Ah, perhaps it is just this sadhana then, or I misinterpreted:

"NGÖN GYI LEN CHAK TAM CHE CHANG GYUR CHIK

May all my karmic debts from the past be purified!

DA TA GYÜ LA MI NE TOL LO SHAK

In the present so that they do not remain in my mind-stream, I confess them!

MA ONG DRIB PE KHOR LOR MA GYUR CHIK

And in the future, may I never be drawn into the wheel of obscuration!"

Malcolm wrote:

Karmic debts are not just to the eight classes. The eight classes manifest as demons rather than gods because of such karmic debts; but that is not the whole extent of karmic debts. There are also beings who ignore us because of karmic debt, etc., who will not help us, even if they do not actively harm.

Vasana said:

Would you mind elaborating on the various ways of going about clearing karmic debts if sang offering can sometimes be problematic?

Malcolm wrote:

Contemplation is the best way to remove all problems.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 14th, 2017 at 11:16 PM

Title: Re: all emotions are pain?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I'm beginning to think that all discussions between Malcolm and Grigoris are pain.

Malcolm wrote:

Interactions with human beings always carry that risk.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 14th, 2017 at 10:51 PM

Title: Re: all emotions are pain?

Content:

Grigoris said:

Didn't say it was, I said the attachment to it is. Attachment can occur to a pleasant feeling arising from a non-afflicted object too.

I can, for example, have a pleasurable feeling while circling a stupa and then get attached to the action and feeling, so that when I am not circling a stupa I feel distress (or I feel a desire/need to experience the positive feeling again and this brings me distress.

Malcolm wrote:

No, circling a stupa creates path dharmas. They will never result in suffering. They may be conditioned, but they are not contaminated.

Grigoris said:

You are quite obviously not reading what I am saying, so I am not going to attempt to engage you any further.

Malcolm wrote:

That pleasurable feeling is a path dharma. It will never bring you distress, and the desire to feel that again is in fact a positive mental factor called "faith." The distress at not doing something virtuous is another path dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 14th, 2017 at 10:39 PM

Title: Re: all emotions are pain?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That depends on whether that pleasant emotion arises for an afflictive object or not. The pleasant emotion is not in itself painful.

Grigoris said:

Didn't say it was, I said the attachment to it is. Attachment can occur to a pleasant feeling arising from a non-afflicted object too.

I can, for example, have a pleasurable feeling while circling a stupa and then get attached to the action and feeling, so that when I am not circling a stupa I feel distress

(or I feel a desire/need to experience the positive feeling again and this brings me distress.

Malcolm wrote:

No, circling a stupa creates path dharma. They will never result in suffering. They may be conditioned, but they are not contaminated.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 14th, 2017 at 9:40 PM

Title: Re: all emotions are pain?

Content:

Grigoris said:

True, but ultimately even "positive" and pleasurable emotions can lead to suffering as they (in most cases) can lead to clinging and attachment to the pleasurable state.

Malcolm wrote:

That depends on whether that pleasant emotion arises for an afflictive object or not. The pleasant emotion is not in itself painful.

In any case, painful is also a poor translation of dukkha.

tiagolps said:

What translation would you give to the seal?

Malcolm wrote:

"All afflicted phenomena are suffering."

This refers to both material as well as mental states since all conditioned things are either afflicted or afflictive, apart from path dharma. Pain is not really a good word for dukkha since pain means "Middle English (in the sense 'suffering inflicted as punishment for an offense'): from Old French peine, from Latin poena 'penalty,' later 'pain.'"

Suffer means "Middle English: from Anglo-Norman French suffrir, from Latin sufferre, from sub- 'from below' + ferre 'to bear.'" When we look at Tibetan, it is sdug bsngal; sdug means in this context, means misery; ngal ba means exhausted or difficult. Thus we could gloss sdug bsngal as "exhausting misery."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 14th, 2017 at 9:22 PM

Title: Re: Tersar

Content:

Punya said:

TerNying meaning terms in the Nyingma tradition I suppose. Thank you, that takes care of my "new and recent" question. Any other thoughts or comments?

Malcolm wrote:

Gter rnying means old termas. All gter mas are by definition rNying ma since they are all connected with the legends surrounding the transmission of Dharma to Tibet by Padmsambhava, Vimalamitra, Vairocana, the king and the 25 five disciples.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 14th, 2017 at 8:13 PM

Title: Re: Selfhood between births and karma

Content:

Boomerang said:

It is part of their karmic condition.

Malcolm wrote:

It has more to do with their specific mode of birth. Hell beings, pretas, devas and asuras, and bardo beings are all born by means of apparitional births. Thus they are all clairvoyant. All animals are born either via eggs, heat and moisture, or wombs. Humans of course are born from wombs.

Boomerang said:

Thank you Malcolm. Where does this teaching come from? I remembered hearing this fact about womb-birth versus apparitional birth somewhere, but because I don't know the source I didn't mention it in my previous posts.

Malcolm wrote:

Abhidharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 14th, 2017 at 7:43 PM

Title: Re: all emotions are pain?

Content:

Odin said:

What does that mean that all emotions are pain?

Malcolm wrote:

Emotion is poor translation of kleṣa, i.e. affliction. A kleṣa is a painful mental state. Not all emotions are painful.

Grigoris said:

True, but ultimately even "positive" and pleasurable emotions can lead to suffering as they (in most cases) can lead to clinging and attachment to the pleasurable state.

Malcolm wrote:

That depends on whether that pleasant emotion arises for an afflictive object or not.
The pleasant emotion is not in itself painful.

In any case, painful is also a poor translation of dukkha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 14th, 2017 at 10:50 AM

Title: Re: all emotions are pain?

Content:

Odin said:

What does that mean that all emotions are pain?

Malcolm wrote:

Emotion is poor translation of kleṣa, i.e. affliction. A kleṣa is a painful mental state. Not all emotions are painful.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 14th, 2017 at 10:42 AM

Title: Re: Tersar

Content:

Punya said:

I've read that Tersar (Wylie: gter gsar) means a new or recently-revealed collection of treasure teachings from one treasure revealer (new and recent being relative terms) and have heard of the Dudjom Tersar and the Chokling Tersar.

But I'm aware there are other terma collections around, such as those by Jamyang Khyentse Wangpo, but I don't see them being called a Tersar. What constitutes a Tersar - is it a large volume of termas from one treasure revealer or does it have something to do with how widely they are taught?

Malcolm wrote:

All tersars become ternyings eventually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 14th, 2017 at 2:24 AM

Title: Re: Selfhood between births and karma

Content:

boda said:

Why do only humans and animals forget their past lives?

Boomerang said:
It is part of their karmic condition.

Malcolm wrote:
It has more to do with their specific mode of birth. Hell beings, pretas, devas and asuras, and bardo beings are all born by means of apparitional births. Thus they are all clairvoyant. All animals are born either via eggs, heat and moisture, or wombs. Humans of course are born from wombs.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, May 14th, 2017 at 12:34 AM
Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism
Content:

Lhasa said:
The thing is, they are long-time tantric practitioners, have siddhis, know all about how to use transmission links for negative activities and can easily counter my practice. I don't need practice, I need intervention. And I don't have a teacher who would do that.

Malcolm wrote:
You just need a repelling rite like Simhamukha. If you do this practice, then whatever negativities they send will bounce off of you and back at them.

Lhasa said:
Ok, and what about the negativities already received and manifesting? I've done Simhamukha and Yamantaka for several years, it only seemed to make things worse. But I also had a naga problem at the same time, and that has been pacified because someone stepped forward to help with that. Maybe those practices will work better now. Things like shaktipat do not just go away, they need to be expelled. Thank you

Malcolm wrote:
I cannot give you a diagnosis. I can make general recommendations.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, May 13th, 2017 at 11:45 PM
Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism
Content:

Lhasa said:
A former student of the 16th Karmapa, now an Advaita-Vedanta pujari huckster, and some Kashmir Shaivite vampires. Old Shiva-running-a-muck-ananda....among others.

treehuggingoctopus said:

Sounds like a Bollywood remake of a Hammer classic. Seriously though, has your teacher recommended any practices? Have you thought about Simhamukha?

Lhasa said:

The thing is, they are long-time tantric practitioners, have siddhis, know all about how to use transmission links for negative activities and can easily counter my practice. I don't need practice, I need intervention. And I don't have a teacher who would do that.

Malcolm wrote:

You just need a repelling rite like Simhamukha. If you do this practice, then whatever negativities they send will bounce off of you and back at them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 13th, 2017 at 9:02 PM

Title: Re: Making Sense of Tantric Buddhism by Christian Wedemeyer

Content:

tingdzin said:

I have just read this book, and if anyone is interested in the various theories about the "origin" of tantra/ Vajrayana, this is a must-read. Even though I don't agree with everything the author says, he clearly shows the flaws in some other theories.

Malcolm wrote:

Christian Wedemeyer is an extremely nice person with whom I had the pleasure of spending a few hours over glasses of wine at the last Tsadra translation conference. He is very bright and knowledgeable. His book is definitely worth the read. It stands as one of the best pieces of critical writing about western scholarship on Vajrayāna to date.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 13th, 2017 at 8:28 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

paël said:

Who can do it? Whose job is it?

Malcolm wrote:

Someone who feels motivated to go there and tame this being, and more importantly, has the capacity to do so.

paël said:

Where this being resides?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, generally, in the area where it frequents, in this case the Island of Lesbos, where Greg makes his home.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 13th, 2017 at 8:10 PM

Title: Re: Illuminating Quotes by Malcolm Namdrol-la

Content:

smcj said:

From: "Stream-entry in a Mahayana context"

Malcolm wrote:

Nirvana in Mahāyāna is nonabiding nirvana, meaning that buddhas are active in the world and have infinite emanations.

ItsRaining said:

Since Buddhas (Or Rather Dharmakayas) have infinite emanations as stated here and in the Brahma Net Sutra

"Now, I, Vairocana Buddha, am sitting atop a lotus pedestal; on a thousand flowers surrounding me are a thousand Sakyamuni Buddhas. Each flower supports a hundred million worlds; in each world a Sakyamuni Buddha appears. All are seated beneath a Bodhi-tree, all simultaneously attain Buddhahood. All these innumerable Buddhas have Vairocana as their original body."

Why does each world system only have one Buddha? Why are there not a Buddha every generation to uphold the right teachings and keep the Dharma Wheel spinning?

Malcolm wrote:

There are. They are however not supreme nirmanakāyas, but they are nirmanakāyas nevertheless.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 13th, 2017 at 8:09 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Grigoris said:

So do it.

Malcolm wrote:

Not my job.

pael said:

Who can do it? Whose job is it?

Malcolm wrote:

Someone who feels motivated to go there and tame this being, and more importantly, has the capacity to do so.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 13th, 2017 at 11:33 AM

Title: Re: Meditative concentration on impermanence (for example)

Content:

prsvrnc said:

I don't understand how it would be possible to obtain meditative concentration on many objects because those objects aren't solid or stable. Do they have a particular quality that is single... that one focuses on?

Lobsang Yeshi said:

You start the meditation session by working out your lines of reasoning related to the topic. The goal is to dispel any doubts you might be harboring about the truth of the teaching. So using your example topic of impermanence, you could start the session by asking yourself, is there anything that might actually be permanent? Or, is there anything that I treat as if it is permanent, without consciously realizing that I'm doing this? Whatever objects come up in response to these or similar questions, analyze them, searching for permanence, and use logic to prove to yourself that in actuality they are not permanent, and that the permanence you suspected might be there is actually illusory. You need to get good at seeking out genuine points of doubt and be honest about the persuasiveness of your internal reasoning, since this won't work if you just go through the motions as a sort of kabuki theater in your head.

If your analytical meditation is successful, at some point you will experience a strong feeling of certainty regarding the truth of the teaching on impermanence. This feeling of certainty is what you want to stabilize and hold as your concentration object for as long as you can. You are right that this is not a very stable object, and probably would not be the best choice to use to develop calm abiding, but the primary purpose of this practice is to increase your understanding of the teachings and conviction that they are truthful and beneficial.

Anonymous X said:

The object of meditation is only a provisional step to calm and gather the focus on mind. Any object of meditation is either let go of or dissolves as cognizance of impermanence increases. Certainty, or any other object in the field of cognition gives way to total presence. Conceptual and non-conceptual are both seen as impermanent. Nothing is held on to. Holding on is a reification of a concept. This is deep habit energy. I'm not even sure that samadhis really touch this.

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on the samadhi and who has engaged in it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 13th, 2017 at 11:09 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

MiphamFan said:

The early Christian version of hell seems to be quite different from later versions.

Valhalla sounds like a Buddhist hell too.

Malcolm wrote:

Valhalla sounds like the Asura realm.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 13th, 2017 at 11:09 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

Read again my post! I use the term 'underwolrd'!

Malcolm wrote:

The concept of hell/underworld is very similar among Indo-European peoples in general. The idea of hells with levels is likely ported from Buddhism through Islam to Christianity.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

How? Did not Christianity predate Islam? You mean a later influence of Islam on Christianity?

Malcolm wrote:

Obviously.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

How about ideas of salvation that were already part of Greco-roman world, like the ones posited by mystery cults, like Eleusinian Mysteries, that were probably even older than Buddhism?! Orphism being a contemporary maybe. But do you believe in the theories that connects it to Buddhism and Vedism?! Or others that connect Shiva to Dionysios?

Malcolm wrote:

What about them?

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

Also, wasn't the Aeneid (with the descent to 'Inferno' and all else) based on the Greek Homeric accounts?

Malcolm wrote:

The Aeneid is a literary composition based on a minor character, a Trojan, who shows up in the Illiad and about whom there were independent legends. While certainly the Illiad influenced it, for the most part it was based on Cato the Elder's histories of the founding of Rome.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

The name Hades from 5th BC was already widely used to designate the actual place of the dead, people and the Mysteries in particular preferring the use of the word 'Plouton' for the actual God!

Malcolm wrote:

No, I don't think so.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

The Idea of an underworld was also present in cultures in no way related to Indo-european ones. Like the Maya (xibalba) and Aztec. In both, like the ancient Greek, heaven was a reward to warriors and heroes! The Xibalba also had many levels, palaces and different places not unlike the Greco-Roman version!

Malcolm wrote:

Quite irrelevant.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 13th, 2017 at 1:58 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

As always Greg, you are right, and everyone else is so, so wrong about everything. Have fun on your little self-made island of righteousness.

Grigoris said:

Is it really so hard for you to admit that you do not have the same understanding of the nuances of the Greek language that a Greek does? .

Malcolm wrote:

No, that is not what I am referring to. I am happy for you that you have a superior understanding of Modern Greek.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 12th, 2017 at 6:58 PM

Title: Re: Stream-entry in a Mahāyāna context

Content:

Anonymous X said:

No one is born and no one who dies according to Mahayana teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

Ultimately, but the teaching of Mahāyāna is two truths...

aflatun said:

Thank you all for the responses, and with regards to what Malcolm just said, I was asking about the conventional nature of Buddhahood in Mahayana (I hope that's appropriate terminology?).

I somewhat regret making the comment about controversy within Theravada about Nibbana, as I know Arahantship from the point of view of Mahayana is not Buddhahood, I was just making a point (poorly executed), and was not interested in delving into that.

Its Buddhahood in Mahayana I was interested in, vs. the "lower stages." Thank you all for the references also, plenty to read up on!

metta

Malcolm wrote:

Nirvana in Mahāyāna is nonabiding nirvana, meaning that buddhas are active in the world and have infinite emanations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 12th, 2017 at 6:51 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Grigoris said:

careful about the use of the term "hell" when discussing the after-life in pre-Christian European and North-African religions. Hades is often confounded as Hell, but existence in Hades had nothing to do with the Christian notion of Hell as a place of eternal suffering for sins.

Malcolm wrote:

Hell, whether it is a mere pit in the ground that is cold and lifeless, or a place of many levels as in Buddhadharma, is no fun.

Hades was a god, not a place, until Christians began to use the term Hades for what they understood as Hell. Early Greek-speaking Christians referred to what we call hell as κόλασις. The word Hades used as a synonym of Hell really only enters English around 1600.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

Read again my post! I use the term 'underworld'!

Malcolm wrote:

The concept of hell/underworld is very similar among Indo-European peoples in general. The idea of hells with levels is likely ported from Buddhism through Islam to Christianity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 12th, 2017 at 6:31 PM

Title: Re: Identifying Vajragarbha / Dorjé Nyingpo

Content:

Palzang Jangchub said:

Can anyone help a friend and i better identify Vajragarbha (Dorjé Nyingpo)? He's quite early on in the lineage for the Hevajra Tantra, but we're not aware of who he truly is and what he's known for/associated with.

Any assistance from the more learned is much appreciated!

Malcolm wrote:

He is the tenth stage bodhisattva who received the Hevajra Tantra and wrote a commentary on it. Other than that, there is no biography.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 12th, 2017 at 6:29 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Grigoris said:

So when it was quoted by Matthew, in his version of the bible, as the words of Jesus in reference to the "unmerciful" or ἀσπλαγχοί, its meaning was rather different. It was more a reference to a type of eternal jail, rather than an eternal torment.

Malcolm wrote:

As always Greg, you are right, and everyone else is so, so wrong about everything. Have fun on your little self-made island of righteousness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 12th, 2017 at 10:11 AM

Title: Re: Stream-entry in a Mahāyāna context

Content:

Anonymous X said:

No one is born and no one who dies according to Mahayana teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

Ultimately, but the teaching of Mahāyāna is two truths...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 12th, 2017 at 10:09 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

But their view of afterlife drew heavily from Greek traditions.

Malcolm wrote:

This is quite overstated.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 12th, 2017 at 9:46 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

Roman Religion was heavily influenced by the Greek one, not only directly but also through it's Etruscan antecedent. The underworld even encompassed an 'paradise' or the Elysium, after it they could even reach the Isle of the Blessed, they usually reached this through rebirth.

Avernus was once also a part of Magna Graecia!

Malcolm wrote:

Roman religion was quite distinct from Greek religion in fact. I recommend you read Archaic Roman Religion by George Dumézil.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

I agree, in many aspects yes, in others no! Ancient world religions tended to be quite syncretic then. In case of Roman Religion some traditions came from Etruscan Religion, others from Greece(Bacchic rites), Egypt(Isis) or Asia (Cybele) and many places all over the Empire!

As I said, Cumae and Averno were once part of Magna Graecia before the Empire, so it was born within a Greek cultural setting.

Malcolm wrote:

While the Romans certainly adopted many cults external to Roman culture especially during and after the expansion of the Empire, the essentials of Roman religion were quite unique to Romans.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 12th, 2017 at 9:43 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Grigoris said:

careful about the use of the term "hell" when discussing the after-life in pre-Christian European and North-African religions. Hades is often confounded as Hell, but existence in Hades had nothing to do with the Christian notion of Hell as a place of eternal suffering for sins.

Malcolm wrote:

Hell, whether it is a mere pit in the ground that is cold and lifeless, or a place of many levels as in Buddhadharma, is no fun.

Hades was a god, not a place, until Christians began to use the term Hades for what they understood as Hell. Early Greek-speaking Christians referred to what we call hell as κόλασις. The word Hades used as a synonym of Hell really only enters English around 1600.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 12th, 2017 at 9:32 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

Roman Religion was heavily influenced by the Greek one, not only directly but also through it's Etruscan antecedent. The underworld even encompassed an 'paradise' or the Elysium, after it they could even reach the Isle of the Blessed, they usually reached this through rebirth.

Avernus was once also a part of Magna Graecia!

Malcolm wrote:

Roman religion was quite distinct from Greek religion in fact. I recommend you read Archaic Roman Religion by George Dumézil.

In any case, as we can often see here in threads, the road to hell is paved with good intentions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 12th, 2017 at 8:43 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

But we are talking about Romans...

<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Avernus>

Avernus refers to a volcanic lake west of Naples that would kill birds who flew over it, and was regarded as the entrance to Hell.

Grigoris said:

Again: careful about the use of the term "hell" when discussing the after-life in pre-Christian European and North-African religions. Hades is often confounded as Hell, but existence in Hades had nothing to do with the Christian notion of Hell as a place of eternal suffering for sins. Ancient Greeks also believed in reincarnation (cf references to reincarnation in Plato's Republic), so...

Ancient Greeks did not really have a concept of sin, for them the concept of ὕβρις was more predominant, a word which has come to denote blasphemy in Modern Greek, but which had more of the meaning of ACTS that insulted the Gods (and could thus invoke their ire), in Ancient Greece.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 12th, 2017 at 5:51 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Question: have you read any of the classic literature of Chö?

Grigoris said:

Yes I have. That is what has lead me to believe that the goal of Chod is to overcome grasping to the sense of self, free oneself from the fear that this produces and realise the true (ie selfless nature) of all phenomenon. ie It is geared towards the Perfection of Wisdom.

Malcolm wrote:

You missed one point, in Chod the way you identify this sense of self is to deliberately induce fear. Fear makes the sense of self stand out in bold relief.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 12th, 2017 at 5:49 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Grigoris said:

As for Virgil: Virgil would have been a practitioner of Ancient Roman religion. If the Ancient Roman religion is anything like the Ancient Greek (and Zeus/Dias/Jupiter knows they stole large portions of it and rebranded it as Roman), then there is no hell, per se. There is only Hades. Hades is not hell.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Avernus>

Avernus refers to a volcanic lake west of Naples that would kill birds who flew over it, and was regarded as the entrance to Hell.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 12th, 2017 at 5:44 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Grigoris said:

Excuse me if I am wrong, but isn't the whole idea of Chod to realise that there is no harmer, harmed or harm?

Malcolm wrote:

There is considerably more to it than that. It is not just a pretty rite with nice haunting melodies. When you are inviting guests with the kangling, all kinds of formless spirits come. When one goes to a wild place (gnyan sa), one is deliberating trying to invite guests to test one's sense of fear and dread, the surest sign of self-grasping. Question: have you read any of the classic literature of Chö? Machig says: If one goes to wild places and is not harmed by ghosts ('dre), the conceited mind that arises is the māra of exhilaration.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 12th, 2017 at 4:03 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Grigoris said:

By Protestant Christians. Which is to be expected from a bunch of anally-retentive tight-fisted pricks.

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually the saying begins with a Cistercian, Bernard of Clairvaux, who wrote: "L'enfer est plein de bonnes volontés ou désirs."

Even your man Karl Marx used it, "Our capitalist, who is at home in his vulgar economy, exclaims: "Oh! but I advanced my money for the express purpose of making more money." The way to Hell is paved with good intentions, and he might just as easily have intended to make money, without producing at all."

DGA said:

Marx liked to use the truisms of bourgeois religion (particularly that of the English, corresponding more or less to the "protestant work ethic") as sticks with which to beat the capitalist. hence "metaphysical subtleties and theological niceties" he finds in the commodity.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, since he was a bourgeois German, it makes sense.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 12th, 2017 at 3:50 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually the saying begins with a Cistercian, Bernard of Clairvaux, who wrote: "
L'enfer est plein de bonnes volontés ou désirs."

Grigoris said:

Well, I was brought up Eastern Orthodox and there was no mention of it.

Malcolm wrote:

That does not make it Protestant. Arguably, the saying in fact goes back to Virgil, "facilis descensus Averno," i.e., falling into hell is easy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 12th, 2017 at 2:56 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The road to hell is paved with good intentions, or so it is said.

Grigoris said:

By Protestant Christians. Which is to be expected from a bunch of anally-retentive tight-fisted pricks.

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually the saying begins with a Cistercian, Bernard of Clairvaux, who wrote: "
L'enfer est plein de bonnes volontés ou désirs."

Even your man Karl Marx used it, "Our capitalist, who is at home in his vulgar economy, exclaims: "Oh! but I advanced my money for the express purpose of making more money." The way to Hell is paved with good intentions, and he might just as easily have intended to make money, without producing at all."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 12th, 2017 at 2:48 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Lhasa said:

So my question with Sang and Chod is, my intent is to work on my karmic imprints, not duel with blazing demons, although if I must, I must. Is working within my own mind, with no intent to provoke any outer being, going to p*ss off worldly beings anyway? I suppose the ones actively attacking might object. Please don't tell me to ask my Lama, I don't have an available tantric teacher.

Grigoris said:

You can piss off anybody, doing any thing.

For example: there are groups of "people" here in Greece that get pissed off if you tell them that you are helping refugees.

Should that stop you from doing something that is positively motivated?

Malcolm wrote:

The road to hell is paved with good intentions, or so it is said.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 12th, 2017 at 1:19 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

A lot of unintended consequences can result from making offerings to worldly beings. For example, there can be unintended consequences from making Sang offerings, sometimes fatal ones. But everyone thinks Sang offering are great, and never question the wisdom of making them in this or that place. But when one looks a little deeper, one discovers many stories of people who have mistakenly upset demons in a given area through doing Sang, through doing Chö, through doing Serkyem, etc. When you go and piss off some nāga for making an offering at the wrong time, or with the wrong incense for example, the effects may not hit you, because nagas strike out at random when they are annoyed — this is just one example.

Lhasa said:

This is the second time in the last couple months I've heard a warning about doing Sang. One of the Ligmincha lay teachers did a facebook live Sang ceremony and he said they had changed the text because the wording to the protectors was so strong. And if one could not follow through, if one 'didn't have the goods' to back up what was said, then very bad things could happen. And now here is Malcolm saying the same thing. So I'm not doing that practice anymore.

But at the time I did the Sang practice with the facebook live ceremony. Proper incense, mustard seeds etc., in my living room. What an amazing shift in energy inside the circle of mustard seeds! So there are now mustard seeds around the perimeter of every room, around the foundation outside and along the property lines.

So my question with Sang and Chod is, my intent is to work on my karmic imprints, not duel with blazing demons, although if I must, I must. Is working within my own mind, with no intent to provoke any outer being, going to p*ss off worldly beings anyway? I suppose the ones actively attacking might object. Please don't tell me to ask my Lama, I don't have an available tantric teacher.

Malcolm wrote:

I never said one should not do Sang. One just needs to be careful where one does Sang.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 12th, 2017 at 12:35 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

humble.student said:

Is this Barcelona retreat going to be webcast openly? I couldn't find any indication on the melong or dzogchen.net website. Thanks!

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 12th, 2017 at 12:14 AM

Title: Re: Sources for yidam practices not requiring empowerment?

Content:

fckw said:

Are there any sutric deities commonly depicted in sexual union? I guess not, but just curious.

Malcolm wrote:

Zero. This does not mean however that deities like Avalokiteśvara and Mañjuśrī do not have consorts in higher tantra, but these are not supposed to be shown to ordinary people who lack empowerments.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 11th, 2017 at 11:55 PM

Title: Re: Sources for yidam practices not requiring empowerment?

Content:

fckw said:

I guess the follow-up question is then: Which deities are based on Sutras? Do you know of any good resources (books, articles etc.) giving an overview on the topic?

Malcolm wrote:

Principally Buddha Śākyamuni, Amitabha, Medicine Buddha; bodhisattvas such as Avalokiteśvara, Mañjuśrī, Samantabhadra; as well as the great mother, Prajñāpāramitā.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 11th, 2017 at 8:21 PM

Title: Re: cycles

Content:

Punya said:

Perhaps I could ask an even more basic question. What is a terma "cycle".

Malcolm wrote:

The term in Tibetan skor. Skor ba literally means "to turn." But in this usage, it refers to a class or group of things. The reason we often translate it as "cycle" is that it reflects the English usage of the term when it means "a complete set."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 11th, 2017 at 8:16 PM

Title: Re: Sources for yidam practices not requiring empowerment?

Content:

Grigoris said:

(tri, lung and wang).

Malcolm wrote:

Wang, lung, and tri.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 11th, 2017 at 9:07 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

You guys are silly.

Malcolm wrote:

says the silliest of them all...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 11th, 2017 at 2:52 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

DGA said:

so what is shamanism, exactly?

what would a shamanistic influence look like?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 10th, 2017 at 11:12 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Vasana said:

Does anyone know if the retreat this weekend involves direct introduction/ transmission?

Malcolm wrote:

Anytime ChNN explains Ati Guru Yoga, this is exactly direct introduction. He has said this over and over again. ChNN always gives Dzogchen transmission in every retreat, none excepted.

Vasana said:

Thanks. I thought as much but wasn't certain. Just wanted to confirm for a friend who is wanting to participate.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure thing. This is a FAQ.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 10th, 2017 at 11:09 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Vasana said:

Does anyone know if the retreat this weekend involves direct introduction/ transmission?

Malcolm wrote:

Anytime ChNN explains Ati Guru Yoga, this is exactly direct introduction. He has said this over and over again. ChNN always gives Dzogchen transmission in every retreat, none excepted.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 10th, 2017 at 9:55 PM

Title: Re: cycles

Content:

HandsomeMonkeyking said:

It seems to me that longchen nyingtik is the most popular terma cycle. At least thats my impression by always seeing it written somewhere. I wonder if that assumption is wrong and what other cycles are there.

Malcolm wrote:

Most of the more popular treasure cycles benefitted from aristocratic or institutional patronage. For example, one reason LNT is so widespread, apart from its intrinsic merits, is that Jigme Lingpa was the guru of the daughter of the King of Derge, the Dagchens of Sakya, and so on. This kind of sponsorship is not always responsible for the popularity of a given cycle however, case in point, Dudjom Tersar.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 10th, 2017 at 8:12 PM

Title: Re: Sources for yidam practices not requiring empowerment?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

By definition there is no yidam practice without empowerment. Yi dam is a translation of samādāna. Samādāna means to undertake a promise. One only receives a yi dam, a commitment, from a guru.

One may, out of devotion, choose to engage in a cycle of offerings and praises to any buddha or bodhisattva, including reciting their mantras/dhāranis which are found in sūtra. But this does not make this practice a yi dam or samādāna practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 10th, 2017 at 3:23 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Grigoris said:

And my Dzogchen is too small in order for it to entered into a Dzogchen measuring contest!

treehuggingoctopus said:

Thank goodness Dzogchen enlargement pills are no longer merely a wet dream these days! Perfectly easy to apply and always readily available literally everywhere, too, provided one knows where to look!

dzogchungpa said:

I'm told it's not so much the size as the tsal that matters.

Malcolm wrote:

Think this has enough "tsal?"

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 10th, 2017 at 1:54 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Yidam and mantra are boring. And not very shamanistic. Using nature and elements is very shamanistic, like color and light. Oooo

Grigoris said:

I neither identify as a shaman, nor do I consider Tibetan Buddhism "shamanistic" so I really don't have a horse in the race.

And my Dzogchen is too small in order for it to entered into a Dzogchen measuring contest!

Malcolm wrote:

The you have to call it Dzogchung.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 9th, 2017 at 11:58 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

cloudburst said:

The implications of your statement are that Padmasambhava did not regard his main practice as the path. This makes no sense to me, could you clarify?

Malcolm wrote:

It was his main recitation practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 9th, 2017 at 8:29 PM

Title: Re: Interaction with spirits

Content:

Mantrik said:

Confession of deeds in order to include them in the purification of karmic debt owed to all the classes?

Malcolm wrote:

No, just confession of deeds in general.

Mantrik said:

Ah, perhaps it is just this sadhana then, or I misinterpreted:

"NGÖN GYI LEN CHAK TAM CHE CHANG GYUR CHIK

May all my karmic debts from the past be purified!

DA TA GYÜ LA MI NE TOL LO SHAK

In the present so that they do not remain in my mind-stream, I confess them!

MA ONG DRIB PE KHOR LOR MA GYUR CHIK

And in the future, may I never be drawn into the wheel of obscuration!"

Malcolm wrote:

Karmic debts are not just to the eight classes. The eight classes manifest as demons rather than gods because of such karmic debts; but that is not the whole extent of karmic debts. There are also being who ignore us because of karmic debt, etc., who will not help us, even if they do not actively harm.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 9th, 2017 at 6:51 PM

Title: Re: Interaction with spirits

Content:

Mantrik said:

Confession of deeds in order to include them in the purification of karmic debt owed to all the classes?

Malcolm wrote:

No, just confession of deeds in general.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 9th, 2017 at 10:27 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen wikipedia article

Content:

Javierfv1212 said:

I have recently been working on editing this article,

<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Dzogchen>

I have mostly been adding to section 3 "Conceptual background", drawing a lot from Buddhahood in this life and some books by Sam van Schaik.

However I am still somewhat of a beginner in this topic and I was wondering if you folks could take a look at this article and let me know what in this article needs to be fixed, or is just incorrect. Also is there any important material you feel is missing?

Malcolm wrote:

On thing I can tell you that the illustration titled "Illustration of the channels or nadis of the subtle body as taught in Dzogchen" is completely wrong, and is in fact an anatomical drawing of biliary channels.

Javierfv1212 said:

Are these biliary channels used in Dzogchen at all or should this image simply be removed?

Malcolm wrote:

Remove.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 9th, 2017 at 6:19 AM

Title: Re: Interaction with spirits

Content:

MiphamFan said:

That's my understanding of protector rites in TB, sang offerings etc. Correct me if I am wrong.

Malcolm wrote:

The original purpose of Sang, as I understand it, is that one has made some error, one purifies this mistaken through fumigation with aromatic plants. The second ancient idea of Sang related to nomads was that one would make any newcomer who came to your camp through juniper smoke, etc., to decontaminate them. When doing Sang with Tibetans, this custom is still observed. Later Sang became merged with the Buddhist idea of making offerings to the four classes of guests, but this is not part of the original, pre-Buddhist custom. And of course, confessions are a very important part of the Sang rite; absent, for example in Chö.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 9th, 2017 at 5:50 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

cloudburst said:

As for me, I have trouble understanding why, if you could be familiarizing yourself with the most direct method, you would start in with the two stages.

Malcolm wrote:

A Dzogchen practitioner should have experience with all kinds of teachings. That does not however mean that he or she regards teachings which belong to the eight lower yānas as the path.

cloudburst said:

A Dzogchen practitioner should have experience with all kinds of teachings...

Malcolm wrote:

I include here non-Buddhist teachings of any kind. Dzogchen practitioners have to learn how to integrate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 9th, 2017 at 5:40 AM

Title: Re: Stream-entry in a Mahāyāna context

Content:

Seeker12 said:

Also, is all of this from the Abhisamayalankara?

Malcolm wrote:

More or less...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 9th, 2017 at 5:10 AM

Title: Re: Entry into gcod

Content:

heart said:

Yes, but today it seems he will give the "Khadroi Gadgyang", he already transmitted his own chöd practice the last two days.

/magnus

michaelb said:

Cool. A great opportunity for everyone able to watch/listen in. I understand there is no specific wang for the khando'i gejung so it would be interesting to see what form such a transmission usually takes and how Rinpoche does it.

Khechara said:

Sorry, I know it is a very old thread but I specifically want to clarify whether or not there is a specific wang for the Sound of Dakini Laughter Practice. Also, which teachers besides Lama Wangdu are currently offering this teaching in Nepal?

Thank you

Malcolm wrote:

No, there is no specific empowerment for this chö text.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 9th, 2017 at 5:04 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

PeterC said:

Malcolm - this may be an overly broad question, but I'm curious - what would you consider as the essential reading list for a practitioner? What is the minimum set of texts that someone should have received and be familiar with, irrespective of which particular lineage of teachings they practice?

Malcolm wrote:

Impossible to answer such a broad question.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 9th, 2017 at 5:02 AM

Title: Re: Stream-entry in a Mahāyāna context

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

How is stream-entry defined and contextualized from a Bodhisattvayāna-informed perspective specifically? Is there any significant difference in how Mahāyāna and Theravāda define contextualize and regard stream-entry?

Malcolm wrote:

First stage is Mahayana stream entry

Seeker12 said:

What are the full correlations? That is, if stream entry is the first Bhumi/path of seeing, then what are the correlates for a once returner, non-returner, and arhat/arahant?

Thanks.

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāyāna once returner = sixth bhumi; Mahāyāna never returner = eighth bhumi.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 9th, 2017 at 4:59 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen wikipedia article

Content:

Javierfv1212 said:

I have recently been working on editing this article,

<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Dzogchen>

I have mostly been adding to section 3 "Conceptual background", drawing a lot from Buddhahood in this life and some books by Sam van Schaik.

However I am still somewhat of a beginner in this topic and I was wondering if you folks could take a look at this article and let me know what in this article needs to be fixed, or is just incorrect. Also is there any important material you feel is missing?

Malcolm wrote:

On thing I can tell you that the illustration titled "Illustration of the channels or nadis of the subtle body as taught in Dzogchen" is completely wrong, and is in fact an anatomical drawing of biliary channels.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 9th, 2017 at 4:40 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

cloudburst said:

As for me, I have trouble understanding why, if you could be familiarizing yourself with the most direct method, you would start in with the two stages.

Malcolm wrote:

A Dzogchen practitioner should have experience with all kinds of teachings. That does not however mean that he or she regards teachings which belong to the eight lower yānas as the path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 8th, 2017 at 8:17 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

DGA said:

I think we need to be cautious in generalizing about the being and characteristics of other people's deities. This is because it's good to be respectful, but it's also good not to be uncritical and take such narratives at face value

treehuggingoctopus said:

Sounds reasonable. There is also a good chance that in many situations nobody picks up the phone, there being nobody to begin with -- just the ordinary, mountain-moving faith and devotion.

I am afraid that is all just prapanca, though, and a prapanca of a really useless sort -- although it is certainly a less damaging kind of prapanca than interpreting the features of a religion one does not follow in terms of the religion (or Buddhadharma) one follows. An archangel being a gyalpo is very nearly as offensive as a Buddha being a devil.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhas typically do not kill dragons nor decimate armies.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 8th, 2017 at 5:28 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhas etc., are greatly outnumbered by false teachers and paths.

Vasana said:

False paths...false by Buddhist standards but valid for them. It's difficult to quantify and compare when the teachings say that both Buddhas and beings are innumerable. In terms of how things appear in this world, the ratio doesn't look so great.

If we take the Bodhichitta vow literally and based on what you've said before, all beings will become Buddhas eventually. Some illusions continue much longer and feel more painful than others is all. Contemplating that scale of time and the duration of life in God realms is difficult for us to really comprehend directly. I always wondered why it is that beings may have the merit for heavens, but lack the merit for their to be an abundance of Dharma in that heaven.

dzogchungpa said:

V, apparently some people have brainwashed themselves into objectifying their religion as being something more than a narrative, a story, as someone or other once put it.

Malcolm wrote:

Religion is one thing, Dharma is another.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 8th, 2017 at 3:04 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

For example, there can be unintended consequences from making Sang offerings, sometimes fatal ones.

Grigoris said:

Of course many of the beings we make Sang offering to may be quite fickle. People are fickle when you make gifts to them, so I imagine other beings would be too But everyone thinks Sang offering are great, and never question the wisdom of making them in this or that place. But when one looks a little deeper, one discovers many stories of people who have mistakenly upset demons in a given area through doing Sang, through doing Chö, through doing Serkyem, etc.

True. But the thing is that regardless of the attack, if one can maintain their samaya and view, then the attacks are essentially rendered ineffectual.

Malcolm wrote:

You are forgetting about collateral damage to others. That was the point of the example.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 8th, 2017 at 1:30 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Vasana said:

Greater in number perhaps, but not in strength.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhas etc., are greatly outnumbered by false teachers and paths.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 7th, 2017 at 10:40 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Vasana said:

Maybe so, maybe not. I think cosmology of the realms in general and the motivations and activities of non-humans is likely far more complex than us worldings can really see or determine. Which sounds like a cop-out but I think all speculation is just that.

Malcolm wrote:

Dude, they are driven by the three poisons, just like we are. This is why worldly beings who are not bound to the Dharma are not reliable at all. Even then, those who are periodically need to be reminded of their commitments.

Vasana said:

Yeah in the grand scheme of things, I can totally accept that, which I'm happy to highlight is fundamentally the most important point here. It's the particularities and complexities involved such as categorizing A.A.M as a gyalpo or a being who needs propagating that I think are just speculations. I'll even admit that my own 'conclusions' are also ultimately speculative and based on incomplete information and inadequate immediate perception of the matters at hand. If there's really an immediate threat, you would have thought that a Buddha, mahasiddha or Dharmapala would have done something about it by now.

Malcolm wrote:

It's a war out there. The forces of Māra are greater than the forces of Dharma. It is obvious.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 7th, 2017 at 10:29 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Vasana said:

I can accept that. I just interpreted your use of 'taming' and gyalpo to indicate that he requires special wrathful subjugation when it's more likely (to me) that he's a peaceful deva with guardian activity. (Guardian of his traditions, not a Dharmapala)

Not all beings can meet the dharma. It's just the way it is that some people encounter paths that lead to hanging out in heaven realms for a while.

Malcolm wrote:

Michael is an angel of wrath, not peaceful at all, a nāga slayer, one who decimated the armies of Sennacherib. In order to believe that Michael is peaceful, you sort of have to side the Israelites.

Vasana said:

Maybe so, maybe not. I think cosmology of the realms in general and the motivations and activities of non-humans is likely far more complex than us worldings can really see or determine. Which sounds like a cop-out but I think all speculation is just that.

Malcolm wrote:

Dude, they are driven by the three poisons, just like we are. This is why worldly beings who are not bound to the Dharma are not reliable at all. Even then, those who are periodically need to be reminded of their commitments.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 7th, 2017 at 10:17 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Vasana said:

I completely disagree. A.A Michael is not malevolent to humans at all. If anything, he's a Deva, and protector of the traditions associated with him, not a worldly being. He can also swiftly deal with various provocations.

Malcolm wrote:

Vasana, are you claiming that Michael is a bodhisattva on the stages? Because otherwise, he is just a sentient being cycling through samsara, like Shiva, Kali, Brahma, Indra, Vishnu, etc., if he even exists at all.

Vasana said:

I can accept that. I just interpreted your use of 'taming' and gyalpo to indicate that he requires special wrathful subjugation when it's more likely (to me) that he's a peaceful deva with guardian activity. (Guardian of his traditions, not a Dharmapala)

Not all beings can meet the dharma. It's just the way it is that some people encounter paths that lead to hanging out in heaven realms for a while.

Malcolm wrote:

Michael is an angel of wrath, not peaceful at all, a nāga slayer, one who decimated the armies of Sennacherib. In order to believe that Michael is peaceful, you sort of have to side the Israelites.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 7th, 2017 at 10:07 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Vasana said:

Yes, that's what new agers preach. I'm neutral in regards to this. But agree that labelling a Gyalpo may be quite complicated issue!

Cosmology and variety of 'supernatural' beings is not rigidly confined solely to the descriptions found in any one given tradition.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a clear dividing line: there are beings who are āryas and then there is the rest of us samсарins, including Jesus, Michael, Gabriel, etc.

The Buddha clearly states in so many places that outside his Dharma and Vinaya there are no stream entrants, one returners, never returners, and arhats.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 7th, 2017 at 10:03 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Just a Christian/Muslim/Jewish Gyalpo, a worldly being, not within samaya, definitely in need of taming.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

New agers would think otherwise!

Vasana said:

I completely disagree. A.A Michael is not malevolent to humans at all. If anything, he's a Deva, and protector of the traditions associated with him, not a worldly being. He can also swiftly deal with various provocations.

Malcolm wrote:

Vasana, are you claiming that Michael is a bodhisattva on the stages? Because otherwise, he is just a sentient being cycling through samsara, like Shiva, Kali, Brahma, Indra, Vishnu, etc., if he even exists at all. I suppose you can use Pabhongkha's logic, which is to say that if you believe a worldly being is a buddha, then for you it is so. However, look where that logic led the Tibetan state.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 7th, 2017 at 10:00 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Not my job.

Grigoris said:

So what is your job then? Offering unsolicited advice and criticizing valid practical advice?

Malcolm wrote:

You might wish to think about that the next time you offer unsolicited advice.

A lot of unintended consequences can result from making offerings to worldly beings. For example, there can be unintended consequences from making Sang offerings, sometimes fatal ones. But everyone thinks Sang offerings are great, and never question the wisdom of making them in this or that place. But when one looks a little deeper, one discovers many stories of people who have mistakenly upset demons in a given area through doing Sang, through doing Chö, through doing Serkyem, etc. When you go and piss off some nāga for making an offering at the wrong time, or with the wrong incense for example, the effects may not hit you, because nagas strike out at random when they are annoyed — this is just one example. But you are a great Ngakpa now, so you can ignore my opinions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 7th, 2017 at 9:09 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Vasana said:

Interesting that it's Archangel Michael. I suspect as you say, Greg, that the followers are more blood-thirsty and greedy than he is. A.A Michael is known for his protective qualities and subjugation of other harmful beings. I really don't think he would interfere with anyone's Dharma activities whatsoever and is not a being that needs 'taming'. Sounds like the people need taming.

Malcolm wrote:

Just a Christian/Muslim/Jewish Gyalpo, a worldly being, not within samaya, definitely in need of taming.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

New agers would think otherwise!

Malcolm wrote:

New agers are also worldly beings, not within samaya, definitely in need of taming.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 7th, 2017 at 9:07 PM

Title: Re: Rigdzin Sokdrup

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

invocation of Drala ... which can also be added

rai said:

great, does it exist in english? thank you

Malcolm wrote:

Someone must have translated it, but I am not sure who.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 7th, 2017 at 9:03 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Just a Christian/Muslim/Jewish Gyalpo, a worldly being, not within samaya, definitely in need of taming.

Grigoris said:

So do it.

Malcolm wrote:

Not my job.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 7th, 2017 at 8:55 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Vasana said:

Interesting that it's Archangel Michael. I suspect as you say, Greg, that the followers are more blood-thirsty and greedy than he is. A.A Michael is known for his protective qualities and subjugation of other harmful beings. I really don't think he would interfere with anyone's Dharma activities whatsoever and is not a being that needs 'taming'. Sounds like the people need taming.

Malcolm wrote:

Just a Christian/Muslim/Jewish Gyalpo, a worldly being, not within samaya, definitely in need of taming.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 7th, 2017 at 8:50 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

gzodzilpa said:

Aside from ye she, what are the the other properties?

Malcolm wrote:

Infinite.

gzodzilpa said:

So like mtha bral, mtha yas, or mtha med?

Malcolm wrote:

bsam mi khyab

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 7th, 2017 at 8:50 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

I think this thread has gone off topic in discussing zen but also in discussing the definition of rigpa. I think it is clear that Harris, and others that talk about awareness, not as a translation of rigpa, but as a feature of the ground. Phrases like open awareness, empty cognisance, non-dual awareness, etc. are used as terms for mind's nature not knowledge of it.

Malcolm wrote:

Harris uses awareness for rigpa. Waking Up, pg. 134:

"The Dzogchen master must precipitate an insight on the basis of which a student can thereafter practice a form of awareness (Tibetan: rigpa) that is unencumbered by subject/object dualism."

This point of view does not go beyond Yogacara. Yogācāra is great, but let's not confuse it with Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 7th, 2017 at 8:35 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:
Malcolm wrote:
ye she is a property of rig pa.

gzodzilpa said:
Aside from ye she, what are the the other properties?

Malcolm wrote:
Infinite.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, May 7th, 2017 at 3:52 AM
Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism
Content:
Mantrik said:
If you could persuade the others to abandon the killing it would be fantastic.

Grigoris said:
The slaughter is actually illegal (because they kill the bull without rendering it unconscious first), so really it is up to the police to stop it. Have you ever tried to stop a baying mob of blood lusting zealots?

The church ain't going to stop it because the entire festival/spectacle is highly profitable.

The protector will not want them to stop because it is a source of power for them.

So unless a Guru Rinpoche comes along I don't think the practice will stop any time soon.

Mantrik said:
We can only do our best. Trite, but true.

Malcolm wrote:
It certainly wont happen by attempting to placate blood thirsty local spirits with red dough sculptures. First they must be tamed. Otherwise, they will continue to encourage blood sacrifices to themselves.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, May 7th, 2017 at 2:56 AM
Title: Re: Understanding non-duality
Content:
Crazywisdom said:
Yeah. Maybe. ChNN never says this.

Malcolm wrote:

Never says what?

Crazywisdom said:

I've never heard him use the wetness/heat analogy. I have heard him and Garchen travel to Advaita land. I tend to go with your approach, but I've not heard a lama go there.

Malcolm wrote:

No, but he does say over and over again, your primordial state is your own primordial state, not someone else's.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 7th, 2017 at 1:16 AM

Title: Re: How to practice generosity in modern society

Content:

boda said:

There's one difference right there, in modern society you can drive to Vons buy the tigers a roast or whatever.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, now you've outed your general location.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 7th, 2017 at 1:10 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, I question the use of the word at all with respect to indigenous religion cultures.

If we confine it Mongolians, fine. But then in order to be a Mongolian shaman, one has to kill animals as part of one's initiation rites.

Mantrik said:

Well, that was what the OP asked about, so we can attempt to answer or simply state that the question cannot be answered as one of the terms does not really apply in this context.

I agree that it is fraught with problems, made much worse by the worldwide hijacking of the 'shaman word' and also the 'indigenous' word.

In the case of 'indigenous' people take it to mean tribal or ethnic as opposed to 'belonging to a specific place'. Hence I have 'indigenous shamanism' being conducted down the road in Glastonbury where it is neither indigenous nor shamanic, but a nice little earner with a killbunny sweatlodge weekend course and a real Certificate to prove you are ready to start drumming up your very own psychic storm. Thankfully, some of those running the courses are moving on the 'mindfulness' , which I'm sure will be 'shamanic mindfulness' before the year is out.

In the case of the Mongolian shamans, I am under no illusions.....goats, and later on dogs etc. in initiations. I do see some signs of change, however, as some of those soon to become elders would like to move to other forms of offering, but whether they have the courage to do so once they have actually become elders remains to be seen. I'm told lots of Gelugs there worshipped the Gyalpo in the past but no longer do so, so maybe that will also help make a less fearful society.

Malcolm wrote:

Or trance mindfulness, spirit animal meditation timers

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, May 7th, 2017 at 12:40 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Mantrik said:

In Tibet specifically, which is the topic here ? Others have adopted and confuddled the 'shaman' term across the globe so much as to make it meaningless. If we stick to Tibet, or at least the Himalayas, we have a fighting chance of defining characteristics. Trance seems to be the glue binding them all, but there may be traditions which don't use it in the Himalayas?

Malcolm wrote:

People keep on claiming that Bon descends from Tibetan Shamanism. And if trances are your defining characteristics, new age channelers are also shamans.

Mantrik said:

Malcolm, firstly, I was specific about the Himalayas and the need to be narrow in order to define shamanism there. Secondly, your logic is akin to saying that 'all swans are white therefore all white things are swans'. I asserted that those shamans I have encountered or read about all seem to use trance, and thus it is a defining characteristic. It makes no sense to then conclude that all who use trance are therefore shamans, and I did not assert that at all, because it would be daft to do so.

I further qualified what I said by asking if 'there may be traditions which don't use it in the Himalayas? If not, my definition is strengthened, as a description of what is authentically shamanic in Tibet and the wider Himalayas.

I would add that traditionally, the job may have had a title like 'Pau', but then some adopted the 'shaman' label to help people understand what they did. The word has since become very widely misused and debased, but it is the best we have for this discussion in the absence of a detailed list and map of all the shamanic forms and their interactions with Vajrayana. As I wrote way back, nobody knows for sure, but some best guesses are helpful, and ChNN's book I mentioned picks up at the point where history is more certain.

You do seem to like to argue with points you wish people had made rather than the ones they actually made.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, I question the use of the word at all with respect to indigenous religion cultures.

If we confine it Mongolians, fine. But then in order to be a Mongolian shaman, one has to kill animals as part of one's initiation rites.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 6th, 2017 at 10:30 PM

Title: Re: How to practice generosity in modern society

Content:

Queequeg said:

The Jataka Tale about Prince Vessantara has always made me feel uneasy.

That story relates the Buddha's last incarnation in the human realm before his birth as Siddhartha Gautama.

In the course of the story, he gives away everything, including his wife and child. IIRC there is a happy ending, but, the ideal posited is extreme. Dana is perfected, but at tremendous cost to the Prince's kingdom, and then ultimately, his family. Its also not quite clear if the donees benefited since their motivation in asking the Prince for his property is tinged with malice.

Malcolm wrote:

Maybe according to one tradition.

According to Tibetan tradition, the Jataka where he throws himself off a cliff to feed the mother tigress and her cubs is his last life as a human being before taking birth in Tushita, and then as Śākyamuni. The site of this event is called "Body offered to the tigress" (rtag mo lus sbyin) AKA Namu Buddha in Nepal.

Queequeg said:

That's an interesting contrast. Offering of one's own body does not raise the same concerns as giving away the livelihood of your kingdom and your family.

Malcolm wrote:

Sakya Pandita remarks:

Third, the three in the generosity of one who has obtained patience towards the nonarising of all dharmas: renunciation, increased renunciation and great renunciation.

The first is giving up a kingdom. The second is giving up one's cherished relatives, children, wives, and so on. The third is giving up one's body, head and limbs and so on. From this point of view, bodhisattva giving his body to the tigress is great renunciation, the Jataka of Viśvaṃtara giving away his family is increased.

Queequeg said:

AFAIK, the offering to the Tigress is included in all jataka collections, but not as the last incarnation. I assume the Vessantara story is included in the Tibetan canon? Do you know where it appears?

Malcolm wrote:

Jataka of Viśvaṃtara occurs in the Jatakas in the collection of Jatakas.

The tradition that the bodhisattva offered his body to the tigress and then was born in Tuṣita comes from the Sūtra of the Wise and Foolish (translated into Tibetan from Chinese):

"After I gave my body to the starving tigress, I was born in the place of the Tuṣita devas."

Thus, in Tibetan Buddhism, this is the general tradition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 6th, 2017 at 10:01 PM

Title: Re: Understanding non-duality

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Yeah. Maybe. ChNN never says this.

Malcolm wrote:

Never says what?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 6th, 2017 at 8:57 PM

Title: Re: How to practice generosity in modern society

Content:

Queequeg said:

The Jataka Tale about Prince Vessantara has always made me feel uneasy.

That story relates the Buddha's last incarnation in the human realm before his birth as Siddhartha Gautama.

In the course of the story, he gives away everything, including his wife and child. IIRC there is a happy ending, but, the ideal posited is extreme. Dana is perfected, but at tremendous cost to the Prince's kingdom, and then ultimately, his family. It's also not quite clear if the donees benefited since their motivation in asking the Prince for his property is tinged with malice.

Malcolm wrote:

Maybe according to one tradition.

According to Tibetan tradition, the Jataka where he throws himself off a cliff to feed the mother tigress and her cubs is his last life as a human being before taking birth in Tushita, and then as Śākyamuni. The site of this event is called "Body offered to the tigress" (rtag mo lus sbyin) AKA Namo Buddha in Nepal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 6th, 2017 at 8:28 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Grigoris said:

Shamanism is too ill-defined to be a valid descriptor.

This notion that trance is somehow a defining characteristic of shamanism is also a little off.

Mantrik said:

In Tibet specifically, which is the topic here ? Others have adopted and confuddled the 'shaman' term across the globe so much as to make it meaningless. If we stick to Tibet, or at least the Himalayas, we have a fighting chance of defining characteristics. Trance seems to be the glue binding them all, but there may be traditions which don't use it in the Himalayas?

Malcolm wrote:

People keep on claiming that Bon descends from Tibetan Shamanism. And if trances are your defining characteristics, new age channelers are also shamans.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 6th, 2017 at 8:26 PM

Title: Re: Understanding non-duality

Content:

fckw said:

Thanks, Malcolm, that's very clear now. Btw, just ordered your book and looking forward to receiving it.

Malcolm wrote:

I hope you enjoy reading it. If you have questions, don't hesitate to ask, either here or by pm.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 6th, 2017 at 8:25 AM

Title: Re: The Rinzai Zen Way: A Guide to Practice

Content:

Meido said:

Friends,

I'm very pleased to announce that my book The Rinzai Zen Way: A Guide to Practice is currently in production with Shambhala Publications, and expected to be available in February or March 2018. Shambhala distributes through Penguin Random House, so this should be available in all the usual places one finds books these days.

Malcolm wrote:

Congratulations. I am sure your book will be well received.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 6th, 2017 at 4:22 AM

Title: Re: Understanding non-duality

Content:

florin said:

However statement like the above where CNNr says that "there is no separation" and "they are one and the same thing" implies very clearly that the student's mind merges with the teacher's mind.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it implies that the state of the teacher and student are the same state as in all water is wet, all fires are hot. There is no separation in "all water is wet, all fires are hot," where "all" refers to all instances of wetness or heat. When one takes things as a group, a group is by nature not individuated.

Dzogchen does not abandon the firmly established nominalism which permeates general Buddhist discourse, and Buddhist logic in particular— in fact it reinforces it.

Otherwise florin, you wind up in Advaita land.

fckw said:

Just for me to make sure I understand this particular point, Malcolm: So you are saying that in Dzogchen, "non-dual" refers to the "wetness of drops of water". Because all drops of water are wet, they are said to be "non-dual". In contrast, Dzogchen does not state that "all drops are one water", i.e. it does not interpret non-duality according to the idea that there drops lose individuality any point in time and merge into one unified water entity.

Is this correct, is this what you mean?

Malcolm wrote:

Correct.

fckw said:

This position does make sense to me, yet one thing that I find puzzling about it is that it does not clearly elaborate on the occurrence of individuality. Are there multiple individual bases (gzhi) or not? Or is it rather hold that individuality (and the absence thereof) arises in the base like everything else? If so, then how could the base be said to be either one or many or none?

Malcolm wrote:

The basis is ka dag, i.e., emptiness. It does not make sense to say that emptiness is one thing or many things. However, the emptiness of all things is the same; and yet it makes no sense to speak of emptinesses that are not the emptinesses of specific things. This is why we call the basis, "the generic basis." This basis, though nondual since existence, nonexistence, and so on do not apply to it, is also neither one thing nor many things. If it was one thing, it cannot manifest as a diversity; if it is many things, its single nature is contradicted. The Cuckoo of Vidyā states:

The primal nature of diversity is also nondual;
in reality, free from the proliferation of partiality.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 6th, 2017 at 3:11 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is a typo "This also rules out most so called "shamans" for whom trance states are NOT a feature of their practice."

Mantrik said:

The shaman business is full of fakers, and faking trance as dramatically as possible is part of their tomfoolery.

I would agree that those genuinely using trance are few and far between.

Malcolm wrote:

I am just saying that the rubric of shamanism does not always include trances.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 6th, 2017 at 2:38 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Mantrik said:

Defining Shaman:

If we examine practitioners as opposed to followers, Shamans tend, in my experience, to use trance as a medium through which to contact their spirits and also be possessed by them. This defines the shamanic as opposed to the village healers, Ngakpas etc. In the Vajrayana, very few practitioners use trance, so in general do not fit the shamanic definition and thus we can differentiate.

Malcolm wrote:

This then rules out most pre-Buddhist religious practice in Tibet in which trance is not a feature at all. This also rules out most so called "shamans" for whom trance states are a feature of their practice.

Mantrik said:

Pre-Buddhist religious practice in Tibet - what do you mean by religious? spiritual? Bon? Pre-Bon?

Then we have the equally thorny definition of 'trance'. Some shamans 'journey' with no recollection of it, others have good recall. There are many variants.

There is little documentation of shamanism per se, let alone pre-Buddhist Tibet, so how are you sure about 'most' ?

Not sure I understand the second sentence.....do you mean the present day? Some have long lineages, so perform according to the teaching of their elders, others are just in it to fleece dopey westerners.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a typo "This also rules out most so called "shamans" for whom trance states are NOT a feature of their practice."

I mean Tibetan religion prior to 600 c.e.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 6th, 2017 at 1:54 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I assume you are referring to Newar Buddhism — however, you fail to notice that Shingon is actually earlier than Tibetan Buddhism, and it is also still practiced.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

Yes, I know this detail about Shingon, I know too that no Sakya, Gelug or Kagyu existed in India! I'm referring to the emphasis given by these lineages to later tantras and related practices. That are virtually absent from Nyingma and are but are also practiced in Newar Tradition. Samvara Tantra being important in Newar Tradition. But what about dzogchen? The Six Yogas didn't came also from India, from Naropa? I don't know about the present state of it among them, but some of it accomplishers were ethnic newaris as you know!

Malcolm wrote:

Śrī Heruka is an early form of Hevajra, and was Padmasambhava's main practice.

The Laghusamvara indeed is a later tantra, appearing long after the Guhyasamaja and so on were translated during the first promulgation of tantras to Tibet. What makes it more valid than a whole host of earlier tantras in the Nyingma corpus, for example, the Guhyagarbha? This text definitely was translated from Sanskrit into Tibetan during the early ninth century. Did it ever occur to you that the circles in which tantras like Guhyagarbha, Vajrakīlaya and so on were necessarily smaller since Vajrayāna was still an extremely new movement in India? Indians were just like Tibetans, going after newer revelations, and neglecting older ones. In fact, Indian panditas who came to Tibet in the 11th were unable to read the palm leaf manuscripts from the late 8th/early 9th century at Samye because in that 200 year period, scripts had changed so much. Dzogchen was a teaching which existed at Nalanda during the eighth century. We know this because there are several Indian commentaries on that tantra, we have mentions of a commentary for the rdo rje sems dpa' nam kha' che by Śrī Singha quoted by Nubchen. Why do we accept the Chan masters he quotes as being real people and real texts, but throw shade on the Dzogchen texts and masters he mentions? It is shitty scholarship to do so.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 6th, 2017 at 1:39 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Mantrik said:

Defining Shaman:

If we examine practitioners as opposed to followers, Shamans tend, in my experience, to use trance as a medium through which to contact their spirits and also be possessed by them. This defines the shamanic as opposed to the village healers, Ngakpas etc. In the Vajrayana, very few practitioners use trance, so in general do not fit the shamanic definition and thus we can differentiate.

Malcolm wrote:

This then rules out most pre-Buddhist religious practice in Tibet in which trance is not a feature at all. This also rules out most so called "shamans" for whom trance states are a feature of their practice.

Mantrik said:

Aspects of divination are shared, as are ritual implements, in some cases quite literally, between shamans and lamas.

Malcolm wrote:

There are many divination methods in Indian tantras, mirror divination not least among them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 6th, 2017 at 1:37 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

Plus we have more documentation about the lineages that originate the later Sarmas lineages ,were originally practiced in "India" and how the transmission occurred...

Malcolm wrote:

I just want to add that because of this orientalist and largely gsar ma inspired anti-Nyingma agenda, the true roots of much of so called Nyingma tantra in Indian texts have either been overlooked, ignored, or not properly vetted.

Vajrakilaya, Śrī Heruka, Guhyagarbha, etc., are all cases in point. There is no reason to doubt that Vairocana received Dzogchen teachings from Śrī Simha, since the latter is mentioned in at least one later polemical text the most prominent in a group of scholars who argued the creation stage was unnecessary, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 6th, 2017 at 1:27 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

Nyingma is more related to Yungdrung Bon and other traditions labeled as "Shamanic" in character.

Malcolm wrote:

- 1) What do you mean by Shamanic?
- 2) How is Yungdrung Bon shamanic at all?
- 3) How is Nyingma related to Yungdrung Bon, what specific practices do you mean? You cannot possibly mean Dzogchen because Dzogchen's roots in "India" are very clear and well established.

As far as I can tell, you are just repeating old orientalist tropes from the early 20th century.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

- 1)With this a I can agree with you that it's a vague term and notion, with this i'm referring to pre-buddhist practices, native to Tibet.

Malcolm wrote:

Then you should say "pre-Buddhist practices found in Tibet."

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

2) I also agree that it's not shamanic in any sense! But read again, I said its normally labelled as such by people who promote the so-called "shamanic origins" of TB

Malcolm wrote:

Is it useful to continue to promote such misunderstandings?

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

3)Yes, Dzogchen, and their divisions of Yanas being similar. Also their lower Yanas focus on divination and healing practices that tend to be associated with "shamanism". Plus their claims that their tradition predates Buddhism introduction. At least David Germano, asserts that separate lineages bearing the label dzogchen are absent in "India" (Oddiyana, Bharata Varsha, Aryavarta or whatever name you want to call it).

Malcolm wrote:

There is also no Sakya Lineage, Gelug lineage, Mahamudra lineage, etc. in India either.

Bonpos may claim their Dzogchen tradition predates Buddhist Dzogchen, but there is no evidence for this apart from the claim that it is so.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

Of course many of its practices and concepts have its origins there, and were practiced there certainly, and the words mahasandhi and atiyoga are present in the Tantras. But the concept of Dzogchen as lineage of practice can be a Tibetan thing!

Malcolm wrote:

Just as the concept of a Lamdre Lineage, or a Mahāmudra lineage is a Tibetan thing. In fact, the whole obsession with lineages seems to be a wholly Tibetan thing.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

Plus we have more documentation about the lineages that originate the later Sarmas lineages, were originally practiced in "India" and how the transmission occurred, besides plain Tibetan mythology!

Malcolm wrote:

You must be kidding. When one looks into the gsar ma lineages as recorded by Tibetans, there is nothing but a morass of conflicting accounts and legends.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

And its more recent, and related lineages and practices are also present and practiced outside of TB to this day.

Malcolm wrote:

I assume you are referring to Newar Buddhism — however, you fail to notice that Shingon is actually earlier than Tibetan Buddhism, and it is also still practiced.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, May 6th, 2017 at 12:12 AM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

Nyingma is more related to Yungdrung Bon and other traditions labeled as "Shamanic" in character.

Malcolm wrote:

1) What do you mean by Shamanic?

2) How is Yungdrung Bon shamanic at all?

3) How is Nyingma related to Yungdrung Bon, what specific practices do you mean? You cannot possibly mean Dzogchen because Dzogchen's roots in "India" are very clear and well established.

As far as I can tell, you are just repeating old orientalist tropes from the early 20th century.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 5th, 2017 at 11:59 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Mantrik said:

You seriously think smoke offerings came from shamanism in Tibet , specifically? I won't repeat or restate my answer for the third time.

Malcolm wrote:

Bsang offerings are something which are very specific and indeed they have pre-Buddhist Tibetan origins. That there are similar customs of burning fragrant herbs and wood in other parts of the world cannot be denied, but bsang is something very precise, specific, and pre-Buddhist.

Mantrik said:

Those specific practices yes, but that was not what was written or asserted. Smoke offerings occur widely, and vary according to who was making them to which spiritual being and for what purpose. I would find it hard to believe that Buddhism lacked any forms of smoke offering before it encountered Tibetan shamans.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhism had the custom of offering incense, part of the standard set of offerings we find in Indian religion. That's it. But it was nothing like a purifying Sang offering, or Native American rites using sage and other aromatic plants for purification. Such smoke offerings are absent from all Buddhisms apart from Himalayan Buddhism.

I also think it is not useful to say that these things are "shamanic," the term is too vague and ill-defined.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 5th, 2017 at 9:58 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

DGA said:

I recall reading a claim among scholars that sang offerings in particular are pre-Buddhist Tibetan rituals. It may have been in Drung, Deu, and Bon, but my memory is poor.

Malcolm wrote:

It was, ChNN, building on Samten Karmey's research, points out that a specific custom we find in pre-Buddhist Tibetan rites is that they always detail the history and purpose of the rite as a prolegomena, and that recitation is integral to the rite itself. This distinguishes autochthonic Tibetan rites from Indian imports.

I would argue that this custom has carried over into Tibetan Buddhism as a concern for lineage and origin narratives, a concern largely absent from Indian Buddhism in general.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 5th, 2017 at 9:28 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

On the contrary, the formal Vajrayana as practiced in Gelugpa and Sakya institutions, was in many ways a plainly Indian thing !

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is a conceit of these schools, and at one time I believed this, but in reality, in their own way, the practice of Vajrayāna in Gelug and Sakya is as far removed from Indian modes of practice as it is in Nyingma. The Gelugpas and Sakyas also make use of thread cross rituals, sang offerings, elaborate tormas, Drala rites, and so on.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

Yes Namdrol,

Malcolm wrote:

Please use my given name, thanks.

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

But what about what I term the "bulk" of practices, like the two stages of completion and generation, the six yogas, retreats, Guru Yoga. This actually came from India or not?

Malcolm wrote:

The practices you mention indeed have sources in tantras (which by and large come from Oḍḍiyāna, BTW, not "India") why single out Sakya and Gelug? All of these practices are shared by Nyingma and Sarma alike.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 5th, 2017 at 9:18 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Mantrik said:

You seriously think smoke offerings came from shamanism in Tibet , specifically? I won't repeat or restate my answer for the third time.

Malcolm wrote:

Bsang offerings are something which are very specific and indeed they have pre-Buddhist Tibetan origins. That there are similar customs of burning fragrant herbs and wood in other parts of the world cannot be denied, but bsang is something very precise, specific, and pre-Buddhist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 5th, 2017 at 9:08 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Nyedrag Yeshe said:

On the contrary, the formal Vajrayana as practiced in Gelugpa and Sakya institutions, was in many ways a plainly Indian thing !

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is a conceit of these schools, and at one time I believed this, but in reality, in their own way, the practice of Vajrayāna in Gelug and Sakya is as far removed from Indian modes of practice as it is in Nyingma. The Gelugpas and Sakyas also make use of thread cross rituals, sang offerings, elaborate tormas, Drala rites, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 5th, 2017 at 9:05 PM

Title: Re: Shamanistic influence on Tibetan Buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The problem with this conversation is that the term "Shamanism" is too vague and imprecise. We have a pretty precise idea of what Buddhism is, in all its aspects, and we know quite well its flexibility in accommodating local cults. But we do not have a very precise idea of what the blanket term "Shamanism" entails.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, May 5th, 2017 at 5:57 AM

Title: Re: Bronze vs Iron Phurba

Content:

DGA said:

does one attain the same through the practice of Guru Dragphur, or only Kilaya?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, since it is included.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 4th, 2017 at 10:55 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

zenman said:

So who is right...?

Malcolm wrote:

Try to order it and you will find out...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 4th, 2017 at 9:31 PM

Title: Re: How to practice generosity in modern society

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

mm should one judge what people do with our gifts?

Malcolm wrote:

One has to give wisely and understand whether our generosity causing harm or benefit.

If we think a gift we give will be used harmfully by the recipient, it is better we do not give.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, May 4th, 2017 at 7:57 PM

Title: Re: Offering and Accomplishing Mandala

Content:

sangyey said:

What is the difference between an Offering Mandala and an Accomplishing Mandala?

Thank you.

Malcolm wrote:

One goes on your shrine, the other you use for counting.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 3rd, 2017 at 8:05 PM

Title: Re: Seventeen Tantras Volume 1 & 2

Content:

pael said:

How long it takes to translate all seventeen?

Malcolm wrote:

I'll tell you when I am finished.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 3rd, 2017 at 11:46 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Fa Dao said:

I am..however I have a question...does one need to know/understand all of the topics to be able to accomplish rainbow body? Hasnt there been regular people who werent brainiacs like Vimalamitra, Vairocana, and Padmasambhava who realized rainbow body?

Malcolm wrote:

The unelaborated topics are for those who do not need the more elaborate approach. It is in the book.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 3rd, 2017 at 4:55 AM

Title: Re: Seventeen Tantras Volume 1 & 2

Content:

RikudouSennin said:

Will Zangthal Editions be doing any self-publishing of short translations and the like?

Malcolm wrote:

we are working on that

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, May 3rd, 2017 at 1:39 AM

Title: Re: Angulimala Sutra

Content:

Su DongPo said:

I am searching, but no luck yet.

Here's a video to keep you occupied in the meantime --

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e = document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); } https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Anonymous X said:

In this oral interpretation, he seems to be talking about an Advaitin point of view, not a Buddhist. Where in this sutra does the Buddha talk about the reality of Atman?

Malcolm wrote:

It is one of the ten tathāgatgarbha sūtras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 2nd, 2017 at 8:08 PM

Title: Re: Rigdzin Sokdrup

Content:

pemachophel said:

I understand the sections added by H.H. Dudjom Rinpoche, but are you sure Lhatsun'S original was not longer? This what we were told in Sikkim two years ago when we did pilgrimage there and primarily did Riwo Sangchod in all of Guru Rinpoche'S caves. I remember being told the original practice was an all-day affair, but I've never seen the original terma.

Malcolm wrote:

I am quite sure. It may be found in the dag snang section of his collected works.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, May 2nd, 2017 at 5:23 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Without conceptual elaboration, there is no rigpa word or any teaching, which is exactly my point.

Malcolm wrote:

This citation seems apropos:

Though one cannot speak of emptiness,
it is very important to match words and meanings.
The nature, method, and result can be explained without contradicting

the intention of the unfabricated Great Perfection.

-- Equal to the End of Space Tantra

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 1st, 2017 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: Rigdzin Sokdrup

Content:

pemachophel said:

H.H. Dudjom Rinpoche condensed Lhatsun's original version that is much longer and then made it His personal daily practice. This led to its wide popularization.

Malcolm wrote:

No, in fact the original is shorter. Dudjom Rinpoche added refuge, a self-creation, and dedication prayers. There are ancillary texts such as the invocation of Drala and the invocation of prosperity which can also be added which are connected with this sang offering but not actually part of the original text.

conebeckham said:

Right. Kamtsang add a protector offering, Shangpa add a short NgaSol prayer for Chagdrupa, and we do not do the blessing of offerings or GR generation, which was added by Dudjom Rinpoche.

And it has been done in Sikkim for a long, long time--I think Rumtek figures in the popularization of this practice as well.

Malcolm wrote:

It was a pure vision Lhatsun received when he was trying to locate the hidden land of Dremojong, "Rice Valley." He was told to do this practice as a support for that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 1st, 2017 at 9:33 PM

Title: Re: Quick Questions about Fivefold Mahamudra & the Six Yogas of Naropa

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Yeah they can be simultaneous or not. But it not exactly true they are separate and distinct systems. Six yogas is always practiced within FFPM, but not always the other way around.

Malcolm wrote:

That is because they are different systems.

Crazywisdom said:

One system lol

Malcolm wrote:
Two times an infinite set...

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, May 1st, 2017 at 9:25 PM
Title: Re: Quick Questions about Fivefold Mahamudra & the Six Yogas of Naropa
Content:
Crazywisdom said:
One system as I demonstrated. Five-fold path is like the overarching umbrella that everything falls under and is included within.

Malcolm wrote:
No, you did not demonstrate that. You demonstrated that, in your words, "They can be treated as distinct but then again they can be mixed in."

Crazywisdom said:
Yeah they can be simultaneous or not. But it not exactly true they are separate and distinct systems. Six yogas is always practiced within FFPM, but not always the other way around.

Malcolm wrote:
That is because they are different systems.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, May 1st, 2017 at 9:07 PM
Title: Re: Understanding non-duality
Content:
florin said:
However statement like the above where CNNr says that "there is no separation" and "they are one and the same thing" implies very clearly that the student's mind merges with the teacher's mind.

Malcolm wrote:
No, it implies that the state of the teacher and student are the same state as in all water is wet, all fires are hot. There is no separation in "all water is wet, all fires are hot," where "all" refers to all instances of wetness or heat. When one takes things as a group, a group is by nature not individuated.

Dzogchen does not abandon the firmly established nominalism which permeates general Buddhist discourse, and Buddhist logic in particular— in fact it reinforces it.

Otherwise florin, you wind up in Advaita land.

florin said:

I know how these things are explained with the help of fire and water example but i was playing the devil's advocate for a bit.
I cannot help but think that such statements as the one we are discussing are quite misleading for lots of people.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, in particular people do not really understand what "nondual" means in sūtras and tantras. People always assume that it is some kind of yogacara absence of subject and object; but reality it is the absence of extremes.

florin said:

If we go back to it and dig a bit deeper, non separation and separation are two situations that depend on each other. So we cannot have a non separation without a previous situation where the two things were already separated.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is why many dzogchen texts say that the basis is not one, not many, that it is neither dual nor nondual.

florin said:

So now we have non-separation where "they" as in plural are "one and the same thing" where "one and the same thing" doesn't seem to refer to a characteristic like the hotness of fire-as you seem to propose-but to how "they" from their previous condition of individuality and independence have now become "one and the same thing".

Malcolm wrote:

It works for Hindus, but not for Buddhists.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 1st, 2017 at 9:03 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Not simple the way you describe it.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes,in fact it is simple— for those who do not allow conceptual elaboration to get in their way.

Anonymous X said:

Without conceptual elaboration, there is no rigpa word or any teaching, which is exactly my point. It is what I quoted from Mipham. Who is it that allows or doesn't allow?

Malcolm wrote:

Seems a rather pyrrhic point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 1st, 2017 at 8:35 PM

Title: Re: Rigdzin Sokdrup

Content:

pemachophel said:

H.H. Dudjom Rinpoche condensed Lhatsun's original version that is much longer and then made it His personal daily practice. This led to its wide popularization.

Malcolm wrote:

No, in fact the original is shorter. Dudjom Rinpoche added refuge, a self-creation, and dedication prayers. There are ancillary texts such as the invocation of Drala and the invocation of prosperity which can also be added which are connected with this sang offering but not actually part of the original text.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 1st, 2017 at 8:26 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Anonymous X said:

To define any term, you must use it in a context that relates it to one's own experience. The above quote, which you may or may not agree with, is such an attempt at context with regard to rigpa. There is no isolation of rigpa that is going to have any real meaning, only an interpretation.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course, you are wholly ignoring the fact that the whole passage is predicated on defining knowledge (rig pa) with respect to its opposite, ignorance (ma rig pa).

For example, Mipham warns about fabricated knowledge that arises from analysis:

Making effort for a long time in growing the huge poisonous tree of the appearance of clinging to union that is fertilized with the empty clarity of a fabricated vidyā that analyzes each extreme is a ground of deviation in the luminous Great Perfection.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 1st, 2017 at 12:41 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Not simple the way you describe it.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, in fact it is simple— for those who do not allow conceptual elaboration to get in their way.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 1st, 2017 at 11:21 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, there's a notion of "five undefiled aggregates", "zag med kyi phung po lnga" in Tibetan. Maybe you could fit rigpa into one of those.

Malcolm wrote:

This applies only to buddhas and arhats, but perhaps if you had studied abhidharma you would have already understood this and provided proper context.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 1st, 2017 at 4:59 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

aflatun said:

I think I do understand that much, but how are these functions not "in the aggregates?" Admittedly I wouldn't be sure "where" to put them, perhaps "in" sankhara and sanna, but I dunno

Malcolm wrote:

What I said was that knowledge and ignorance are not listed as mental factors, etc. This is why they are not part of the aggregates, per se. I never implied that cognitions, which are mental factors, did not belong to the aggregates.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 1st, 2017 at 4:57 AM

Title: Re: Quick Questions about Fivefold Mahamudra & the Six Yogas of Naropa

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Hush. That's not exactly true.

They can be treated as distinct but then again they can be mixed in. Drikung is big on that.

Malcolm wrote:

They are different systems, as you demonstrate above, so hush yourself.

Crazywisdom said:

One system as I demonstrated. Five-fold path is like the overarching umbrella that everything falls under and is included within.

Malcolm wrote:

No, you did not demonstrate that. You demonstrated that, in your words, "They can be treated as distinct but then again they can be mixed in."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 1st, 2017 at 4:48 AM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

You realize I cited Gampopa's own words, right?

To connect it w yangti Gampopa explains by remaining in rigpa the kayas emerge without conscious thought as various minds like a sparkling gemstone. Still simultaneous. The difference is dzogchen masters made the connection w visible bindu luminosity and the mandalas of the deities so there's the possibility of less questions due to the unmistakability.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, I still don't see that passage referring to them as being simultaneous. If someone realizes nonmeditation they have no need for the three other yogas.

Crazywisdom said:

They are all aspects of the same condition.

Malcolm wrote:

That is a nice interpretation, and I can see your point, but I still do not believe that is what the passage you cited means, given everything else is attributed to Gampopa on the subject, for example, his presentation in the String of Pearls which clearly presents them as a step by step approach.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, May 1st, 2017 at 1:11 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Anonymous X said:

This is not at all clear in the several books I have encountered. Can you quote any of the recognized Dzogchen masters having said the same thing that you put forth? This would be considered a 'characteristic' and not the substance of true mind which Knowing-Seeing is.

Malcolm wrote:

If I understand your question: you are asking if rig pa is the substance of consciousness? I have already provided an authoritative citation from a commentary on a primary tantra which answers this question:

Furthermore, based on the power of repelling the armies of samsara, vidyā (rig pa) is 1) the knowledge (vidyā) of names designated by words, 2) helpful, worldly knowledge such as healing, arts and crafts, and so on, 3) the five sciences (rig pa gnas lnga) of the treatises and so on, 4) knowing (vidyā) as a factor of consciousness, 5) sharp and dull worldly knowledge and so on, and 6) the knowledge of the essence (snying po) that permeates all that is free from ignorance, unobscured by the obscurations of ignorance and so on.

Anonymous X said:

When a word like rigpa is introduced to me as a central concept in a teaching, I have to try to understand how this word is translated into English. From your description, I am left wondering even more what rig pa means in English. That's not your fault, it is an inherent problem in translation and the different interpretations from one translator to the next. From your explanations, I can't fathom what you are talking about.

Malcolm wrote:

It is pretty damn simple -- rig pa is knowledge, and in the context of Dzogchen it refers to a very specific kind of knowledge.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 11:56 PM

Title: Re: Understanding non-duality

Content:

florin said:

However statement like the above where CNNr says that "there is no separation" and "they are one and the same thing" implies very clearly that the student's mind merges with the teacher's mind.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it implies that the state of the teacher and student are the same state as in all water is wet, all fires are hot. There is no separation in "all water is wet, all fires are hot," where "all" refers to all instances of wetness or heat. When one takes things as a group, a group is by nature not individuated.

Dzogchen does not abandon the firmly established nominalism which permeates general Buddhist discourse, and Buddhist logic in particular— in fact it reinforces it.

Otherwise florin, you wind up in Advaita land.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 10:33 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Anonymous X said:

You mean it is an intellectual understanding? I think not. It is not knowledge, it is Knowing. There is a big difference. Using foreign words introduces a whole set of problems as you can see when you peruse these discussions. Are you still looking at the finger that is pointing to the moon?

Malcolm wrote:

No, rig pa is a kind of knowledge. All sentient beings are born with consciousness, and aspect of consciousness is the ability to know things. Sentient beings are not born with rig pa. Rig pa is something one learns from a teacher experientially. Before one has rig pa, one has ma rig pa. This applies even to Samantabhadra, the adibuddha.

Anonymous X said:

This is not at all clear in the several books I have encountered. Can you quote any of the recognized Dzogchen masters having said the same thing that you put forth? This would be considered a 'characteristic' and not the substance of true mind which Knowing-Seeing is.

Malcolm wrote:

If I understand your question: you are asking if rig pa is the substance of consciousness? I have already provided an authoritative citation from a commentary on a primary tantra which answers this question:

Furthermore, based on the power of repelling the armies of samsara, vidyā (rig pa) is 1) the knowledge (vidyā) of names designated by words, 2) helpful, worldly knowledge such as healing, arts and crafts, and so on, 3) the five sciences (rig pa gnas lnga) of the treatises and so on, 4) knowing (vidyā) as a factor of consciousness, 5) sharp and dull worldly knowledge and so on, and 6) the knowledge of the essence (snying po) that permeates all that is free from ignorance, unobscured by the obscurations of ignorance and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 10:30 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Anonymous X said:

You mean it is an intellectual understanding? I think not. It is not knowledge, it is Knowing. There is a big difference. Using foreign words introduces a whole set of problems as you can see when you peruse these discussions. Are you still looking at the finger that is pointing to the moon?

Malcolm wrote:

No, rig pa is a kind of knowledge. All sentient beings are born with consciousness, and aspect of consciousness is the ability to know things. Sentient beings are not born with rig pa. Rig pa is something one learns from a teacher experientially. Before one has rig pa, one has ma rig pa. This applies even to Samantabhadra, the adibuddha.

Anonymous X said:

This is not at all clear in the several books I have encountered. Can you quote any of the recognized Dzogchen masters having said the same thing that you put forth? This would be considered a 'characteristic' and not the substance of true mind which Knowing-Seeing is.

Malcolm wrote:

ChNN reinforces this point continually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 10:21 PM

Title: Re: Understanding non-duality

Content:

dharmafirststeps said:

Please forgive me confusion, I'm fairly new to this and am trying to unpack the following line by ChNN concerning direct transmission:

"because the state of the teacher and the student are nondual, it is possible for them to be in that state at the same time. There is no separation; they are one and the same thing."

I realise my understanding of non-duality is fairly minimal. Duality I get, quoting ChNN from The Crystal: "a spurious `subjective self' or `ego' that experiences the world as separate from itself, external and objective, and which continually tries to manipulate that world in order to obtain satisfaction and security." That seems fairly straight forward.

When it comes to non-duality I think I'm confused on several levels, including between the relative and the absolute.

So the purpose of the Dzogchen teaching is to experience our real condition as it is - rigpa, our primordial state. Correct me if I'm wrong but isn't our awareness of rigpa individual. My continuum of consciousness, the all-ground consciousness (ālayavijñāna), that is stuck in the cycle of samsara, is individual to everyone else's is it not? My karma is mine alone. When someone else experiences enlightenment that is individual to them, I am not also enlightened.

What is that is nondual, and allows for direct transmission, what is "one and the same" between teacher and student?

Malcolm wrote:

It is like one flame explaining to another flame their mutual nature of hotness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 9:59 PM

Title: Re: Quick Questions about Fivefold Mahamudra & the Six Yogas of Naropa

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Hush. That's not exactly true.

They can be treated as distinct but then again they can be mixed in. Drikung is big on that.

Malcolm wrote:

They are different systems, as you demonstrate above, so hush yourself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 9:44 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

conebeckham said:

Rigpa is not bare awareness in Dzogchen. It is knowledge of the basic state, which is, i think, a certain aspect of bare awareness, consciousness, beyond "mind" per se.

It is "being in the recognition of mind's nature," which is Rigpa, and not mind's nature itself, yes?

Anonymous X said:

You mean it is an intellectual understanding? I think not. It is not knowledge, it is Knowing. There is a big difference. Using foreign words introduces a whole set of problems as you can see when you peruse these discussions. Are you still looking at the finger that is pointing to the moon?

Malcolm wrote:

No, rig pa is a kind of knowledge. All sentient beings are born with consciousness, and aspect of consciousness is the ability to know things. Sentient beings are not born with rig pa. Rig pa is something one learns from a teacher experientially. Before one has rig pa, one has ma rig pa. This applies even to Samantabhadra, the adibuddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 9:41 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Are you sure? Malcolm, in another post, said that the pointing led to an intellectual recognition of mind's nature.

Malcolm wrote:

There are three transmissions in Dzogchen, mind, symbol, and verbal. The teacher explains things verbally using symbols, and if the student can be in that state with the teacher at the same time, this is the mind transmission.

Direct introduction is different. With direct introduction the teacher uses experiences to show the student the nature of their mind. There are introductions through ka dag and lhun drub. They are different, but bear on the same point.

At this point, since what you really want to discuss is comparisons between Dzogchen and Zen, I suggest that you open a separate thread since this is kind off topic in a thread devoted to Sam Harris.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 9:37 PM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

You realize I cited Gampopa's own words, right?

To connect it w yangti Gampopa explains by remaining in rigpa the kayas emerge without conscious thought as various minds like a sparkling gemstone. Still simultaneous. The difference is dzogchen masters made the connection w visible bindu luminosity and the mandalas of the deities so there's the possibility of less questions due to the unmistakability.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, I still don't see that passage referring to them as being simultaneous. If someone realizes nonmeditation they have no need for the three other yogas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 9:23 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Anonymous X said:

I'm not arguing that the two have different approaches. And, I'm not trying to say one is better than the other. But, Chan is not a sutra practice as evidenced by Bodhidharma saying: 'A special transmission outside the scriptures'.

Malcolm wrote:

This is statement dates from a text from http://www.thezensite.com/ZenEssays/HistoricalZen/A_Special_Transmission.htm.

While certainly it must have been a slogan circulating in Chan circles prior to this time, attributed to Bodhidharma, to paraphrase the way it shows up in Tibetan Chan texts "When one has ascertained the view, from then on do not rely on scriptures."

It is well known that Bodhidharma introduced his teachings in the context of the Lankāvatara Sūtra, which is a sūtra that contains the sudden method used in Chan.

Anonymous X said:

Furthermore, Chan also has its 'pointing out' emphasized in Zongmi's 10 Levels Of The Awakening Sequence, No. 1 being: The good friend shows the sentient being the true mind of original awakening. This is the first step as it is in Dzogchen.

Malcolm wrote:

There is certainly a similarity, but again, in the Broughton book, this is not a direct introduction, this is more like someone hearing about the Perfection of Wisdom teachings and activating traces of having practiced Mahāyāna in a past life. It is also true that one will never even hear the word "Dzogchen" in this life without some past life connection with the teaching. Apart from these topographical similarities, however, I see no reason to assume that step 1 of Zongmi is identical in content to what we call direct introduction in Dzogchen without further concrete evidence in how Chan/Zen is transmitted in the present day.

In brief, Both Chan and Dzogchen maintain they are "outside the scriptures." But this too is merely a topographical similarity. In the case of the former, it is outside sūtras, but depends on sūtras for its context. In the case of the latter, it is outside tantras, but depends on tantras for its context. So when we say that Chan is a sūtra teaching, it means that it is part of the Perfection Vehicle and all of its rhetoric turns on themes found in Mahāyāna sūtras. When we say that Dzogchen is a secret mantra teaching, it means it is part of secret mantra and all of its rhetoric turns on themes found in outer and inner tantras, with less attention paid to the three vehicles of characteristics.

There exists only one sustained discussion of the similarities and differences between Chan and Dzogchen in one text written by the Tibetan master, Nubchen Sanggye Yeshe, which is also one of our earliest sources for Dzogchen prior to the 10th century in Tibet. There is an interesting little book published recently by Van Schaik called Tibetan Zen: Discovering a Lost Tradition which will certainly add the conversation. However, the main point I am making is that Tibetans familiar with Chan grouped it in with the sūtrayāna while at the same time respecting that Chan termed itself a sudden path and a teaching nominally outside of the sūtras since it depended on experience rather than intellectual analysis. Dzogchen is also a path which depends on experience rather than intellectual analysis (but in fact the same may be said of all classes of tantra), but the contexts of the two teachings are really different because of the milieus in which each arose.

Whether a translation of Nubchen's text will prove interesting to Chan/Zen people is doubtful, because apparently the Chan in that text represents the long dead Northern School, and not a living tradition of Chan.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 8:50 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Of course it did. No great Zen master can introduce you to Dzogchen teachings.

Jyotish said:

This part of buddha dharma is terribly confusing to me. If the final realization of all the mahayana is same buddha hood and same stages of bhumis, why wouldn't a Zen teacher be able to introduce you to Dzogchen or similarly a Dzogchen teacher to teach zen?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, simply put, the buddhahood realized in Vajrayāna is deeper than the buddhahood realized in Mahāyāna because the means are different.

Mahāyāna only leads to the eleventh bhumi. Vajrayāna in general leads to the 13th bhumi, Vajradhara. What is the difference? According to the Saṃputa Tantra, buddhas of the eleventh and twelfth bhumis do not recognize all phenomena as being the display of their own pristine consciousness. This realization is confined to buddhas of the thirteenth bhumi. Of course, whether someone accepts this or not depends very much on whether one accepts the Saṃputa Tantra, a general commentary tantra on the mother tantras, as being valid. Why is there this difference? Because the paths or means are different.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 9:44 AM

Title: Re: Quick Questions about Fivefold Mahamudra & the Six Yogas of Naropa

Content:

Kushi said:

Hi,

I wasn't entirely sure whether this should go in the Tantra Talk forum or not, but hopefully it's general enough to fly here in the Kagyu subforum. My questions are pretty basic. Does the Drikung Fivefold Mahamudra practice encompass any of the activities associated with the 6 Yogas of Naropa? Are the Completion Stage practices within this lineage tied to the Yidam, and are they substantially different from Completion Stage practices not practiced in a Mahamudra context?

Thank you!

- K

Malcolm wrote:

Five Fold Mahāmudra it is its own thing. Separate from the Six Yogas of Naropa. It is prevalent primarily in Drikung and Drugpa Kagyu since it is based on the teachings of Phagmodrupa.

Kushi said:

I see. And as its "own thing", is its implementation (in Drikung, anyway) generally understood to make something like the 6 Yogas obsolete?

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is just a different system.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 9:12 AM

Title: Re: Quick Questions about Fivefold Mahamudra & the Six Yogas of Naropa

Content:

Kushi said:

Hi,

I wasn't entirely sure whether this should go in the Tantra Talk forum or not, but hopefully it's general enough to fly here in the Kagyu subforum. My questions are pretty basic. Does the Drikung Fivefold Mahamudra practice encompass any of the activities associated with the 6 Yogas of Naropa? Are the Completion Stage practices within this lineage tied to the Yidam, and are they substantially different from Completion Stage practices not practiced in a Mahamudra context?

Thank you!

- K

Malcolm wrote:

Five Fold Mahāmudra it is its own thing. Separate from the Six Yogas of Naropa. It is prevalent primarily in Drikung and Drugpa Kagyu since it is based on the teachings of Phagmodrupa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 9:08 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Lukeinaz said:
From Carefree Dignity:

"Rigpa means awareness. But this is not awareness that is dualistic, in terms of subject looking at object. It is nondual awareness."

He then later says rigpa is equivalent to mind essence.

Malcolm wrote:
The term rig pa is used as an equivalent for mind essence in Mahāmudra texts teachings. But we are not talking about Mahāmudra. We are talking about Dzogchen, not mahāmudra.

Lukeinaz said:
I just started this book but he talks a lot about dzogchen and has not mentioned mahamudra at all.

Malcolm wrote:
He does talk about mahamudra in this book. On page 33, he offers a useful distinction.

On page 67 he says, "When seeing the three qualities simultaneously, this is called seeing the nature of the mind. In Dzogchen, this is called rigpa, or you can call it the Dzogchen view."

Very clearly, he describes seeing the nature of the mind as rigpa. And I agree with this completely. Again, on 68, "When the clapper strikes the bell, it is like a moment of seeing the nature of the mind. That is rigpa."

When I read this book, I understand him to say that seeing the nature of the mind is rigpa. Therefore, I do not see a real difference between the essentials of what he is saying and what I am saying.

M

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 6:23 AM
Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction
Content:
dzogchungpa said:
I decided to see how my man Guenther wound up translating "rigpa" in his final book. Apparently he went with "supraconscious ecstatic intensity". What do you all think, yay or nay?
No takers?

Malcolm wrote:
Early Guenther is pure awareness.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 6:20 AM
Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction
Content:

zenman said:
You don't think shikantaza is a rigpa ripening practice?

Malcolm wrote:
That depends on whether the person is a Dzogchen practitioner or not. Rigpa in Dzogchen is something very precise and specific. I have never encountered such descriptions or instructions in Chan or Zen.

zenman said:
You mean separating rigpa and alaya vijnana?

Malcolm wrote:
They are definitely different.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 4:24 AM
Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction
Content:

zenman said:
I'm not talking about dzogchen "teachings" but rigpa.

What are you saying?

Malcolm wrote:
Rig pa is just the start of the Dzogchen path, not the end. Rig pa must first be ripened, than cultivated, than brought to its full measure, etc.

zenman said:
You don't think shikantaza is a rigpa ripening practice?

Malcolm wrote:
That depends on whether the person is a Dzogchen practitioner or not. Rigpa in Dzogchen is something very precise and specific. I have never encountered such descriptions or instructions in Chan or Zen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 4:17 AM

Title: Re: Bronze vs Iron Phurba

Content:

Lhasa said:

I don't mind that the topic has strayed into practice.

Garchen Rinpoche just gave a two day empowerment of Vajrakilaya along with empowerment to use a phurba and some instructions and demonstration, rather brief.

I've attended every Vajrakilaya empowerment/drubchen he has given online in the last five years.

This is the first time he has given instructions on using a phurba online. But it was very brief.

You all are being very helpful because it is almost impossible to ask him questions via email anymore.

Thank you.

Malcolm wrote:

I would go with a phurba made from mixture of sky metal and a weapon that has killed someone. A light saber phurba would be cool too.

Ok, here is the real deal. According to the Vajrakīlaya Anudhamapratipana-tantra

Iron or black wood is the material for a wrathful action phurba.

So now you have your answer. An iron kīla is what you need.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 4:03 AM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Because that's what he's talking about. Don't get me wrong he talks about them in a sequential way to others I the book. But he also discussed them from a non gradual perspective too.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't see it. But I don't have the book, and I really do not have a horse in this race.

Crazywisdom said:

Look again

if everything has been realized as non-dual, even though there are differing grounds and paths, there is no gradual process of opening them up

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, I addressed this point earlier. It is well known that in Gampopa's mahāmudra the paths and stages are regarded as little more than distractions, and not important. That still does not make the four yogas any less sequential. The error is asserting that the mapping of them to the paths and stages was definitive or even necessary. This is what freaked out the Sakyas — "irresponsible" Kagyu yogis telling them they didn't need no stinkin paths or stages.

According to Gyalwa Yangonpa, the four yogas are for those who, in his words, cannot be in this state:

It is not soiled by experience and sensations, it is not corrupted by realization and certainty, it is not divided by view, meditation and conduct, it is not sectioned into a basis, path and result, all of these phenomena of appearance and existence, samsara and nirvana are neither removed nor added, bound nor freed, nor fixed with an antidote. Recognition of and self-liberation into one's own state is called "mahāmudra."

It is for people who do not experience buddhahood through intimate instructions; with respect to that, the four yogas are like thögal in Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 3:59 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

zenman said:

I'm not talking about dzogchen "teachings" but rigpa.

What are you saying?

Malcolm wrote:

Rig pa is just the start of the Dzogchen path, not the end. Rig pa must first be ripened, then cultivated, then brought to its full measure, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 3:57 AM

Title: Re: Bronze vs Iron Phurba

Content:

Mantrik said:

Can we please clarify here.

I know very little, but I think I understand what Malcolm is saying about readiness, and of course buying a scalpal does not make a person a surgeon.

However, the topic was about the relative qualities of materials, so it has strayed, as discussions do, into the performance of practice itself.

The person who decides if a practitioner is ready to perform lower activities is their Guru.

Nobody else can decide upon that.

Malcolm wrote:

The point I am making is that until one has gained siddhi, any phurba will do.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 3:55 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

zenman said:

I am neither convinced of most zen masters out there but those who stand out of the mass can and do marvelously point out.

Malcolm wrote:

I am sure they do a fine job of teaching Zen. Zen and Dzogchen are different.

zenman said:

Receiving di from Norbu Rinpoche didn't land me on a different place compared to couple of great zen masters.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course it did. No great Zen master can introduce you to Dzogchen teachings. Direct introduction is the starting point of Dzogchen, just the beginning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 3:54 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Apparently you can do pretty well even without that inconvenient little thing called "direct introduction".

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, lots of people have. But no one who is practicing Dzogchen teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 3:50 AM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, ok, still not sure why you think this renders the four yogas nonsequential.

Crazywisdom said:

Because that's what he's talking about. Don't get me wrong he talks about them in a sequential way to others in the book. But he also discussed them from a non gradual perspective too.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't see it. But I don't have the book, and I really do not have a horse in this race.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 3:46 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

None of the five skandhas are rig pa because rig pa is knowledge. You will never find a single text that includes knowledge, or ignorance for that matter, as one of the five aggregates.

aflatun said:

Could you expand on this point a bit, Malcolm? Are you saying knowledge (rig pa) is something outside of the aggregates? Similarly for ignorance?

(I'm not implying that's what you're saying, in fact I don't think it is, which is why I'm asking for clarification)

If its not "something outside" of them then what is it?

I'm just bumping this because I'm assuming it fell off the radar, sorry for the nuisance

Malcolm wrote:

Knowledge and ignorance are modes of cognition. Vidyā is a undeceived cognition Avidyā is a deceived cognition. It is really that simple.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 3:32 AM

Title: Re: Bronze vs Iron Phurba

Content:

michaelb said:

Yes, of course. So, the phurbu is not "just a chunk of matter" once one has accomplished any yidam, not just Vajrakilaya? By "lower activities" (smad las?) are you referring to specific smad las practices or any use of a phurbu, such as the bsgral ba offering in tshogs feasts? I suppose what I am asking is, you are not saying that accomplishing Vajrakilaya is necessary before you can use a phurbu in any practice, are you?

Malcolm wrote:

Generally, the offering of liberation is performed by the Guru in behalf of the group. Even so it is symbolic and not really the lower activity.

And no I am not saying that no one can use a phurba before having finished a retreat. But it is little crazy to get all worried about what kind of phurba one should get based on its use by a siddhi prior to having attained siddhi oneself.

michaelb said:

Yes but, if one accomplishes Hayagriva, for example, one can use a phurbu in lower activities of Hayagriva?

Malcolm wrote:

Of course.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 3:26 AM

Title: Re: Bronze vs Iron Phurba

Content:

michaelb said:

Is it only accomplishment doing Vajrakilaya? What about other yidams where phurbus are used, like Hayagriva?

Malcolm wrote:

The siddhi of Kilaya is accomplished by doing Kilaya. The siddhi of Hayagriva is accomplished by doing Hayagriva.

Generally, before one is permitted to engage in the lower activities with wrathful implements like a kila, it is assumed that at least one has finished the accomplishment retreat.

michaelb said:

Yes, of course. So, the phurbu is not "just a chunk of matter" once one has accomplished any yidam, not just Vajrakilaya? By "lower activities" (smad las?) are you referring to specific smad las practices or any use of a phurbu, such as the bsgral ba offering in tshogs feasts? I suppose what I am asking is, you are not saying that accomplishing Vajrakilaya is necessary before you can use a phurbu in any practice, are you?

Malcolm wrote:

Generally, the offering of liberation is performed by the Guru in behalf of the group. Even so it is symbolic and not really the lower activity.

And no I am not saying that no one can use a phurba before having finished a retreat. But it is little crazy to get all worried about what kind of phurba one should get based on its use by a siddhi prior to having attained siddhi oneself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 3:22 AM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

The production from realization is a person who has training; it is spoken of as the sahaja luminosity, un-outflowed emptiness to be seen in direct perception. It is spoken of as the dharmin which is mutually reliant on both types of bodhicitta. Geshe Gyayon Dag said to me, "In Tibet, there is a dearth of dharma which have been sweetened for easy digestion like food chewed before giving it to a child. For example, there is the so-called "Dzogpa Chenpo" of one group which who say, "If you realize it in the morning, you are a buddha in the morning and if you realize it in the evening you are a buddha in the evening". And there is the the so-called "Characteristics" of one group who say, "If dissection is done using free.

from one and many, I will by this be buddha". And there is the so-called called "Paramita" of one group who say, "Relying on method and prajñā, I will by this be buddha". And there is the so-called "Mantra" of one group who say, "Relying on the channels, winds, and drops and development and completion, I will by this be a buddha". And there is the so-called "Kadampa" of one group who say, "There are the oral instructions for relying on the three beings great, middling 194 I will by this be buddha." The whole lot of them are mistaken; I dare them to give me a reply, what are you doing?!" He said, "The whole lot of them are mistaken; they are not doing anything except for changing from the ten non-virtues to the ten virtues!" He said, "Those with greater intelligence will change from outflowed virtue to unoutflowed virtue! He said, "There is a group who say, "The ten non-virtues will not contaminate me!"; they have befriended evil deeds!"

He said, "The Buddha taught eighty four thousand dharma doors. If the whole lot are summed up, they condense down to body, speech, and mind. And moreover, body and speech even are retinue. The principal one is mind." He said, "Not even one moment of non-virtue should be done. And do not lose yourself either to one moment of indeterminacy from the perspective of the antidote". He said, "I heard rinpoche say, "It is necessary to travel the three types of path: inference has to be made into path; blessings have to be made into the path; and direct perception has to be made into the path. He said, "Characteristic or Pāramitā is the one that makes inference into the path. Great Vehicle Secret Mantra makes, through reliance on the pair development and completion, blessings into the path. The one that makes direct perception into the path is co-emergence, luminosity.”

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, ok, still not sure why you think this renders the four yogas nonsequential.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 3:19 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

zenman said:

I guess you never met a zen master one on one in sanzen (sometimes translated as meditation meeting).

Malcolm wrote:

It is not the same thing. Direct introduction is something very precise and specific.

Also, I am not convinced the caliber of so called Zen masters in the west is very high.

zenman said:

I am neither convinced of most zen masters out there but those who stand out of the mass can and do marvelously point out.

Malcolm wrote:

I am sure they do a fine job of teaching Zen. Zen and Dzogchen are different.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 2:58 AM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

P 97

Malcolm wrote:

I do not see evidence for your assertion in this summary. Just saying...

Crazywisdom said:

He says, no gradual process of opening up... he mentions no bardo for the best. This passage is Sahaja with no stages. There are many mentions of Sahaja in the text.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, still seems sequential to me. The absence of bardo for the best is the same in all teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 2:49 AM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

P 97

“For the four yogas, the yoga of one pointedness is that moment of awareness where there is no stoppage of the clarity. The yoga of freedom from elaboration is that rigpa’s entity is seen as birthless. There is no hope upwards to buddhahood, no concern downwards to saïśåra, and in between with no grasping to appearances, no being deceived by other. The yoga of one taste is that you realize the inseparability of appearance and emptiness. The yoga of non-meditation is that, whichever comes forth, whichever is produced, it shines forth in one entity thus, everything at the time of the thought process comes as meditation.”

Malcolm wrote:

I do not see evidence for your assertion in this summary. Just saying...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 2:09 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

.... Dzogchen.... nor without the inconvenient little thing called "direct introduction," which is absent both in Sūtra in general, and Zen/Chan.

zenman said:

I guess you never met a zen master one on one in sanzen (sometimes translated as meditation meeting).

Malcolm wrote:

It is not the same thing. Direct introduction is something very precise and specific.

Also, I am not convinced the caliber of so called Zen masters in the west is very high.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 1:51 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Anonymous X said:

I wasn't implying that nature of mind was separate. I thought I had implicitly stated that. From what you wrote, I see no difference in Zongmi's teaching of his Chan gate.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, for some people it is hard to see the difference between Chan and Dzogchen. But their approaches are quite different, and for this one has to look to those Tibetan masters who practiced both.

The difference in approach is based on whether you are a Sūtra practitioner or a Secret Mantra practitioner. In some respect, whether you practice sūtra or tantra is a little irrelevant if you are studying with real Dzogchen master. But because Dzogchen is grounded in Secret Mantra, one cannot practice it without a guru, nor without the inconvenient little thing called "direct introduction," which is absent both in Sūtra in general, and Zen/Chan.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 1:45 AM

Title: Re: Bronze vs Iron Phurba

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No matter what material your phurba is made of, if you have not attained the siddhi of kilaya it is just a chunk of matter.

michaelb said:

Is it only accomplishment doing Vajrakilaya? What about other yidams where phurbus are used, like Hayagriva?

Malcolm wrote:

The siddhi of Kilaya is accomplished by doing Kilaya. The siddhi of Hayagriva is accomplished by doing Hayagriva.

Generally, before one is permitted to engage in the lower activities with wrathful implements like a kila, it is assumed that at least one has finished the accomplishment retreat.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 12:21 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Original mind (gnyug sems, adyācitta), on the other hand, refers to the basic state of a moment of unfabricated clear and empty consciousness. It is also called ordinary consciousness (tha mal gyi shes pa). However, there is no nature of the mind separate from the mind. Sustaining equipoise in unfabricated clear and empty consciousness is what is termed "the view" in Dzogchen, Mahāmudra, Lamdre, etc. This unfabricated clear and empty consciousness is the basis upon which rests the path of Secret Mantra.

treehuggingoctopus said:

You are referring to rigpa qua instant presence, right?

Malcolm wrote:

If you have this experience, then that can be called knowledge of this state, so yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 30th, 2017 at 12:15 AM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Tony Duff has a text on Gampopa Mahamudra where all this is reiterated as nauseam

Malcolm wrote:

Ganges Mahāmudra is not the tradition of the four yogas.

Four yogas is Gampopa's innovation applied to Saraha's tradition.

Crazywisdom said:

That's true. I didn't really learn Gampopa mahamudra

Malcolm wrote:

Well, check the title of the thread.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 11:17 PM

Title: Re: Bronze vs Iron Phurba

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No matter what material your phurba is made of, if you have not attained the siddhi of kilaya it is just a chunk of matter.

Arnoud said:

If it is a terma Phurba, then it can have magical properties?

Malcolm wrote:

Not in the hands of a beginner. For a beginner, a phurpa is a shrine object, something to be taken to a teacher and blessed and put away until they can drive a wooden phurba into a rock.

Also, to attain the siddhi of phurba you do not need a phurba. You just need a mālā.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 11:14 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Lukeinaz said:

From Carefree Dignity:

"Rigpa means awareness. But this is not awareness that is dualistic, in terms of subject looking at object. It is nondual awareness."

He then later says rigpa is equivalent to mind essence.

Malcolm wrote:

The term rig pa is used as an equivalent for mind essence in Mahāmudra texts teachings. But we are not talking about Mahāmudra. We are talking about Dzogchen, not mahāmudra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 11:08 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

Over the years I must have read these passages more than a hundred times, I think. Still not sure if I am getting them right. The gist of Rinpoche's explanation of why rigpa =/= nature of the mind seems to me to be something like that:

(1) sems-nyid is a term found in all HYT, rigpa is a strictly Dzogchen thing;

Malcolm wrote:

No, because it is found also in Mahāmudra teachings, especially translations of Mahāmudra texts by Vairocanarakṣita, an Indian master lived in Tibet in the 11th century and translated these texts into Tibetan independently.

treehuggingoctopus said:

The last passage of Rinpoche's, however, seems to identify rigpa as both the Base ("Rigpa means that underlying condition of essence, nature, and energy of which the individual has had no experience up to now, with which he's not had contact") and the direct, lived knowledge of the Base ("Now the teacher has put him in contact with it, given him that experience, and now he has lived it or perceived it. Now, that experience, however minimal, that which is now perceived, that's what we're calling rigpa")*. Frankly, there are many early texts of Rinpoche's in which the Base and rigpa are depicted like that. If the translated into English and published texts and teaching transcripts of ChNN are in any way representative here, Rinpoche starts to consistently define rigpa as our knowledge (in the sense of "being in") of our primordial state towards the end of the 1990s. Or so has my amateur textual study led me to believe.

Malcolm wrote:

No, you can find these distinctions made in the famous green book, etc. The hardbound manuscripts of teachings in US in the early '80's.

treehuggingoctopus said:

*One could also read it it like that:

(5) sems-nyid is a concept which refers to the Base before we have recognised it, rigpa can be meaningfully used to refer to it only after we have recognised our real nature.

Malcolm wrote:

[/quote]

There is this ambiguity in some texts. But when one has a comprehensive understanding of the man ngag sde tradition as a whole and how that term is used within it, this is no longer so confusing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 11:00 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Anonymous X said:

In another thread, I mentioned 'knowing' as the nature of mind.

Malcolm wrote:

I am afraid that without triangulating terms with Sanskrit, comparisons between Dzogchen texts and Zen texts amount to an exercise in chasing one's tail.

Anonymous X said:

Because different schools use different approaches and terminology, it is not a bad idea to see the same thing from a different point of view. This Knowing is also called jnana, but I don't like to use that term because it is often mixed up with Advaitic meaning and their world view.

Malcolm wrote:

You are correct to observe that one should refrain from mixing Advaita usages into Buddhist usages.

Jñāna is generally translated into Tibetan as ye shes (depending on context) then from there into English as wisdom, primordial wisdom, timeless awareness, pristine awareness, pristine gnosis, or pristine consciousness, etc.

Anonymous X said:

Personally, I don't see the difference in meaning, just the interpretation. Some people would also call this Knowing, Awareness. I don't need to analyze the words as the presence of Knowing is all encompassing.

Malcolm wrote:

The Dzogchen tradition has very precise definitions and introduces its own psychology into the mix. Vidyā, which refers to a very specific kind of knowledge, is not always present, it is conditional until it is cultivated to the point where it eclipses ignorance completely.

Anonymous X said:

One might think, 'substance'? Substance is not a thing. It cannot be apprehended. True Mind is Buddha Mind is Primordial Mind. Knowing illuminates each thing and reveals the essential emptiness, which is infinitely Open and free of all views.

Malcolm wrote:

Original mind (gnyug sems, adyācitta), on the other hand, refers to the basic state of a moment of unfabricated clear and empty consciousness. It is also called ordinary consciousness (tha mal gyi shes pa). However, there is no nature of the mind separate from the mind. Sustaining equipoise in unfabricated clear and empty consciousness is what is termed "the view" in Dzogchen, Mahāmudra, Lamdre, etc. This unfabricated clear and empty consciousness is the basis upon which rests the path of Secret Mantra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

bc Dzogchen texts are pulled out of thin air

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, this is not true at all. The five early lungs brought to Tibet by Vairocana are authentic. Garab Dorje, Mañjuśrimitra are historical persons. Śrī Simha is called out by name by later Indians who were upset that he was part of a movement at Nalanda in the mid 8th century that dissed the creation stage, etc. Śrī Simha's commentary on the rDo rje sems dpa' nam mha' che is definitely authentic — it is mentioned by name by Nubchen Sanggye Yeshe.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 10:14 PM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Tony Duff has a text on Gampopa Mahamudra where all this is reiterated as nauseam

Malcolm wrote:

Ganges Mahāmudra is not the tradition of the four yogas.

Four yogas is Gampopa's innovation applied to Saraha's tradition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 10:46 AM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

I'm aware there's more than one teaching lineage within Drikung. .

Malcolm wrote:

Gyalpo Rinpoche has them all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 10:29 AM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

They emphasize single moment understandings for everything from 6 Paramitas to 3 turnings to four yogas, gongchig etc, etc. one moment one intent one view, meditation, action and one realization. All one single moment.

Malcolm wrote:

The Drikungs depend on Dzogchen for their final mahāmudra view, in fact. But this is hard for them to openly admit. You will see this when the Essence of Mahāyāna is published by the Garchen Institute in Europe. They recruited me to do the the mahāmudra section.

Gyalpo Rinpoche's presentation of the four yogas is derived from Longchenpa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 10:26 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Personally, I kind of like the word "awareness".

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, as a translation of saṃprājana, it is quite alright. As a translation of rigpa it is totally and utterly wrong.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 10:25 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The place to start that correction is correcting their use of the word "awareness" vis rigpa.

michaelb said:

But as long as people want rigpa to refer to something like semnyi or Buddha Mind they will keep calling it something like awareness.

Malcolm wrote:

Then they should continue to be corrected until they stop.

michaelb said:

If there's a problem with Dharma being confused with advaita that's not because of a mistranslation of rigpa but because of a misunderstanding of the ground.

Malcolm wrote:

A mistranslation of rigpa is one of the main reasons there is such confusion, in my opinion.

michaelb said:

Anyway, I think we are in basic agreement. I've always said knowledge is a better translation but using awareness doesn't, in itself, invalidate Harris's presentation of dzogchen.

Malcolm wrote:

If he thinks rigpa is the basis, this in itself invalidates his presentation of Dzogchen from the start.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 10:22 AM

Title: Re: Bronze vs Iron Phurba

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No matter what material your phurba is made of, if you have not attained the siddhi of kilaya it is just a chunk of matter.

Fortyeightvows said:

No sympathetic magic?

Also, what is the siddhi of kilaya?

Malcolm wrote:

You should receive the empowerment and do the practice. This is the only way you will find out in a real sense.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 9:23 AM

Title: Re: Bronze vs Iron Phurba

Content:

Grigoris said:

Brass is an alloy of copper and zinc, bronze is an alloy of copper and tin. The end effect is basically the same (a gold-ish colour) and it is the colour that counts in the specific instance, as it is associated with the Ratna Buddha family in both instances.

Malcolm wrote:

No matter what material your phurba is made of, if you have not attained the siddhi of kilaya it is just a chunk of matter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 9:17 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

The point, it seems to me, is that people think that rigpa refers to the nature of mind rather than the knowledge of the nature of mind. They take it as like a synonym for Buddha Nature rather than just the recognition of that.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and they are mistaken to do so. ChNN states over and over again that rig pa is not the nature of the mind.

michaelb said:

Yes, I know, I listen. It's just the strange prominence the word Rigpa has amongst western Dharma students. It's promoted more than other dzogchen terms and ideas. I blame Sogyal Rinpoche. People should actually be more interested in the ground, nature of mind, what we really are. If someone goes off on an advaita trip about it, that needs correcting rather than their use of the word Awareness.

Malcolm wrote:

The place to start that correction is correcting their use of the word "awareness" vis rigpa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 8:22 AM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Btw, four yogas are one in a single moment, at least for the Drikung

Malcolm wrote:

This is not how Lamchen Gyalpo Rinpoche explains it. I have received the Drikung take on the four yogas from him personally, one on one.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 8:21 AM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

TaTa said:

Sooo whats the difference?

Crazywisdom said:

Rather, these

Are deeper

http://www.rigpawiki.org/index.php?title=Four_Dharmas_of_Gampopa

The Four Dharmas of Gampopa (Tib. ངགས་པོ་ཚས་བཞི།, Wyl. dwags po chos bzhi) lo chö su dro war chin gyi lop

Grant your blessing so that my mind may turn towards the Dharma.

chö lam du dro war chin gyi lop
Grant your blessing so that Dharma may progress along the path.

lam trul wa shyik par chin gyi lop
Grant your blessing so that the path may clarify confusion.

trulpa yeshé su char war chin gyi lop
Grant your blessing so that confusion may dawn as wisdom.

༥ རྒྱ་ལུ་ལ་བ་ཞིག་པར་བྱིན་གྱིས་རྒྱབས། །

ཆོས་ལམ་དུ་འགོ་བར་བྱིན་གྱིས་རྒྱབས། །

ལམ་འཁྲལ་བ་ཞིག་པར་བྱིན་གྱིས་རྒྱབས། །

འཁྲལ་བ་ཡེ་ཤེས་སུ་འཆར་བར་བྱིན་གྱིས་རྒྱབས། །

Johnny Dangerous said:

Are these specifically from Gampopa or a rephrase of something more universal? I am familiar with a slightly different translation of this from Sakya stuff. Meaning, are they attributed solely to him, or are they stuff he ..sort of synthesized? Or, have they simply been adopted by basically everyone?

Malcolm wrote:

This is Gampopa's verse.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 8:20 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

The point, it seems to me, is that people think that rigpa refers to the nature of mind rather than the knowledge of the nature of mind. They take it as like a synonym for Buddha Nature rather than just the recognition of that.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and they are mistaken to do so. ChNN states over and over again that rig pa is not the nature of the mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 5:24 AM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

What if the natural state is (gasp) ordinary?

Malcolm wrote:

How very Shambhalian of you.

PuerAzaelis said:

Hm unfortunately I can't afford to be quite that ordinary.

Malcolm wrote:

True, their "ordinary" has become quite pricey.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 5:22 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Stewart said:

Hence why I didn't elaborate further.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course, I was referring to dzogchungpa's desire for gossip.

Stewart said:

Fair enough.

To be clear, I was simply commenting that a short video really doesn't do justice to Mingyur Rinpoche's style and ability to transmit intimate instructions.

I never met Tulku Urgyen, but I've been told by one of his students that Mingyur Rinpoche emulates TUR perfectly.

Interestingly, as you know, TUR never spoke English, yet succeeded in transmitting Dzogchen to hundreds of students. I'm unsure his translator used/uses 'knowledge' as a translation of rig pa, but through the thorough explanations and introductions by TUR, many people had a concrete experience of their natural state.

Malcolm wrote:

How many people have cruised through here, including people who have gone to this and that Dzogchen master (ChNN, TUR, YMR, Tsoknyi, etc.), convinced that the "awareness" neo-advaitans talk about is the same thing as rig pa?

What is important is that someone learns what rig pa is. This is why I do not translate the word, why EPK does not translate it anymore, why Adriano Clemente does not translate it, and so on. But if we are going to explain what the word means in English, it clearly means "knowledge" and "knowing", and not awareness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 4:35 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Your point being?

Malcolm wrote:

That point being that is purely vicarious and serves no useful purpose.

Stewart said:

Hence why I didn't elaborate further.

Malcolm wrote:

Of course, I was referring to dzogchungpa's desire for gossip.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 4:29 AM

Title: Re: Teachings of the previous buddhas

Content:

zenman said:

Have teachings of the buddhas previous to Shakyamuni have been preserved? Any idea when they might have lived? I remember reading that some of the recent Tibetan buddhist masters have been close students of Shakyamuni in their previous lives. Anyone of them ever referred to the previous buddhas as being students of them? Thanks.

Malcolm wrote:

According to tradition, the virtually Dzogchen tantras are said to have been taught by past Buddhas and then restated by Garab Dorje.

Garab Dorje also shows as a student of these buddhas in his previous emanations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 4:23 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Now I'm kind of curious about the "various reasons" TD no longer translates for MR and TR.

Malcolm wrote:
This is pure gossip.

dzogchungpa said:
Your point being?

Malcolm wrote:
That point being that is purely vicarious and serves no useful purpose.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 4:09 AM
Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction
Content:
dzogchungpa said:
Now I'm kind of curious about the "various reasons" TD no longer translates for MR and TR.

Malcolm wrote:
This is pure gossip.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 4:03 AM
Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction
Content:
Stewart said:
I don't think it's fair to judge Mingyur Rinpoche from a 5 minute video

Malcolm wrote:
Of course not.

But when discussing such translation issues with me, people often bring up how this or that lama translates this or that thing, and if I don't agree, am I supposed to remain silent? Of course, I cannot remain silent since the whole point of the exercise was to try and negate my point.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 2:14 AM
Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra
Content:
PuerAzelis said:
What if the natural state is (gasp) ordinary?

Malcolm wrote:

How very Shambhalian of you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 2:11 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Jyotish said:

Many people in spiritual market use the word awareness. Some say choice less awareness some say observerawareness.

Malcolm wrote:

It is still conditioned and relative.

michaelb said:

I think there is a problem of terminology here. If someone is using awareness, non-dual awareness, selfless awareness or whatever to denote rigpa, as "none of the five skandhas are rig pa", then awareness, as they mean it, is not conditioned and relative.

Malcolm wrote:

None of the five skandhas are rig pa because rig pa is knowledge. You will never find a single text that includes knowledge, or ignorance for that matter, as one of the five aggregates.

michaelb said:

Take Sam Harris, for example. He could have directly perceived the nature of mind when it was pointed out to him by Tulku Urgyen. He could refer to this non-dual unconditioned knowledge as "awareness". His use of this word does not mean his experience was conditioned and relative.

Malcolm wrote:

All experience is conditioned and relative. There is no such as an experience which is not conditioned and relative.

michaelb said:

One could argue the same of Yongey Mingyur Rinpoche. Just because he teaches about awareness a lot, doesn't mean he has no realisation and his understanding is just conditioned and relative.

Malcolm wrote:

Apart from pointing out that use of language can either enhance or impede one's message, I have never commented about YMR's state of realization or understanding, except to remark that in Tibetan I am sure his teachings are perfect.

michaelb said:

I agree that using words accurately is important but that can only take you so far and denying people's knowledge or understanding because they choose a word that we may not choose is going too far.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but I did not do that.

michaelb said:

They alone know their experience and what they have understood following their lama's instruction is not knowable by us.

Malcolm wrote:

This is not why I have doubts about Sam Harris. It appears to me that he thinks Dzogchen is an exotic, Tibetan form of Vipassana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 29th, 2017 at 1:42 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Jyotish said:

Many people in spiritual market use the word awareness. Some say choice less awareness some say observerawareness.

Malcolm wrote:

It is still conditioned and relative.

Anonymous X said:

Can you explain how awareness is conditioned and relative?

Malcolm wrote:

Awareness (saṃprajāna) is a mental factor (caitta) which is always associated with mindfulness (smṛti). Mental factors arise simultaneously with a mind. There is no other "awareness" spoken of in Buddhadharma.

The mind (citta), consciousness (vijñāna), or intellect (manas) is a conditioned (saṃskṛta) entity by nature, and so too are mental factors.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 7:50 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Jyotish said:

Many people in spiritual market use the word awareness. Some say choice less awareness some say observerawareness.

Malcolm wrote:
It is still conditioned and relative.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 7:48 PM
Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction
Content:
michaelb said:

I was wondering a few things since last night. Firstly, is it the case that when Harris (or Yongey Mingyur Rinpoche) say "awareness" are they always implying Rigpa? Take the video I linked earlier with Yongey Mingyur Rinpoche. If we substitute his use of awareness for the word Rigpa we get things like this:

"Rigpa is with us all the time; whether you have thought or not, whether you have emotion or not, whether your mind is distracted or not, whether you become unconscious or not, rigpa is always there. But the main point is that we have to realise our rigpa, recognise our rigpa."

This shows the limit to using awareness as a translation for rigpa as we are using awareness for three different things: ordinary deluded awareness, nature of mind and understanding of nature of mind.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, because when one is unconsciousness one is necessarily unaware. If one is aware, one is necessarily conscious.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 7:46 PM
Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction
Content:
dreambow said:
Can we say aware of awareness?

Malcolm wrote:
No more than we can say a "walking walker."

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 7:45 PM
Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction
Content:
dreambow said:
Can we say aware of awareness?

michaelb said:

Yep, we might say rang rig or rang gi rigpa, self awareness or more correctly (?) knowledge of self. Maybe intrinsic awareness.

Which of the five skandhas would rigpa, rang rig, or even semnyid be?

Malcolm wrote:

Rang gi means "one's own"; in Tibetan; it is the genitive case, showing possession. Thus, rang gi rig means "one's rig pa." I'll spare you the citation avalanche.

None of the five skandhas are rig pa. However, in one usage, rig pa refers to the mind's capacity to know.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 11:54 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

dreambow said:

You say um no, that's no argument...I can say um yes. Will that convince you?

Malcolm wrote:

No, because awareness is mundane and conditioned.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 11:50 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

dreambow said:

As I see it Sam Harris leans towards Dzogchen. The unadorned truth is awareness or just be...not this or that or any added adjunct.

Malcolm wrote:

Um no

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 9:24 AM

Title: Re: Seventeen Tantras Volume 1 & 2

Content:

DGA said:

Congratulations, Malcolm, on this publication. I hope it finds its audience. I'm glad Wisdom is getting behind these projects.

Meanwhile...

Malcolm wrote:

The first division includes the three essential tantras: the Self-Arisen Vidyā, the Self-Liberated Vidyā, and the Without Syllables. If one knows these three, one will have command over the general meaning of the tantras, like a king who has command over his subjects.

-- Longchenpa.

DGA said:

I'm ignorant of these texts (for now). The upcoming volume will contain translations of the first two tantras, correct? Will the third one, Without Syllables, also find print in English?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that is the plan.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 6:32 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

rangjung yeshe?

Malcolm wrote:

Rang byung ye shes means a pristine consciousness that one discovers for oneself. It can also mean a pristine consciousness for which no evident cause may be found when it is discovered. In general however, rang byung is short for rang las byung, arising from oneself.

michaelb said:

How does rangjung yeshe relate to rigpa and what Sam Harris calls (inter alia) awareness?

Malcolm wrote:

ye she is a property of rig pa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 6:29 AM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

anjali said:

It seems to me that as one gains more stability in rigpa with fewer selfish emotions (and lessening of self-cherishing in general), then that in turn should lead to some tangible behavioral results.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a function of cultivating knowledge of one's primordial state, not merely having a glimpse of it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 6:25 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

Huh? Talk about moving the goal posts. Of course translating a list of five areas of knowledge or study, knowledge is a better way to refer to them than awareness, but this is a just jargon, and jargon unrelated to dzogchen's rigpa, unless you think science is preferable to knowledge? Anyway, seriously enough of this. I concede the point - knowledge is better than awareness but only because then marigpa can be ignorance.

Malcolm wrote:

You are incorrect, look at the citation I provided for you from a commentary attributed to Vimalamitra on one of the seventeen tantras:

Again:

Furthermore, based on the power of repelling the armies of samsara, vidyā (rig pa) is 1) the knowledge (vidyā) of names designated by words, 2) helpful, worldly knowledge such as healing, arts and crafts, and so on, 3) the five sciences (rig pa gnas lnga) of the treatises and so on, 4) knowing (vidyā) as a factor of consciousness, 5) sharp and dull worldly knowledge and so on, and 6) the knowledge of the essence (snying po) that permeates all that is free from ignorance, unobscured by the obscurations of ignorance and so on.

All of these things are included under the term vidyā in Dzogchen teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 6:21 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

rangjung yeshe?

Malcolm wrote:

Rang byung ye shes means a pristine consciousness that one discovers for oneself. It can also mean a pristine consciousness for which no evident cause may be found when it is discovered. In general however, rang byung is short for rang las byung, arising from oneself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 6:18 AM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Grigoris said:

Let me be clear that I am not talking about expectations about the nature of the experience, but the effect of the experience itself on one's mind stream.

Malcolm wrote:

There are a lot of people who have had such a glimpse, and then do not cultivate it. Those who do may experience some transformation of their basic attitudes. Those who don't, not so much.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 6:00 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

.For example, the consciousness at the time of the basis is certainly aware. However, it is only when it knows it's own appearances are its own state, that we can say that consciousness has rig pa, a state of knowledge. If it fails in this recognition, one's consciousness is still aware of those appearances, but in this case since it does not know those appearances are its own state, that consciousness has ma rig pa instead, a state of ignorance.

michaelb said:

For example, the consciousness at the time of the basis is certainly aware. However, it is only when it is aware it's own appearances are its own state, that we can say that consciousness has rig pa, a state of awareness. If it fails in this recognition, one's consciousness is still aware of those appearances, but in this case since it is not aware those appearances are its own state, that consciousness has ma rig pa instead, a state of ignorance

I know and I'm aware I'm pushing the point a bit (it would work if you have two different words for mistaken cognition and unmistaken cognition) but it's not such a massive error.

Malcolm wrote:

Your reframing of my statement fails because awareness is always present when there is consciousness, but knowledge is not always present when there is consciousness and awareness. It really is that simple.

Further, there is no such thing as the five awarenenses. There is such a thing as the five sciences (pañcavidyāsthana).

Another problem with your defense of "awareness" as a proper translation of vidyā/rig pa is that it does not correspond even with respect to common language. Absolutely no one says "I am aware of how to drive" when they mean "I know how to drive." They do not say, "I am aware of how to tie my shoes" when they mean "I know how to tie my shoes."

Even when we examine the root of "to know," according to the OED, we find the word descends from Old English cnāwan (earlier gecnāwan) 'recognize, identify,' of Germanic origin.

Aware, on the other hand comes from "Old English waru 'commodities,' of Germanic origin, having the primary sense 'object of care.' Hence awareness is far more apt for shes bzhin, the mate of mindfulness, dran pa.

michaelb said:

...other than Harris's mistranslation of rigpa (and views on science, geopolitics and Islam), discredits his presentation of dzogchen?

Malcolm wrote:

He has no idea what he is talking about in a real sense since he thinks the cit of Advaita and rig pa are fundamentally the same. In fact, that latter is an acquired knowledge, and the former is just consciousness mistaken for a permanent entity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 4:42 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Mantrik said:

It is not so clear cut in English. Knowledge can mean being aware that something exists, so you are correct in that, as it is one of the definitions. However, it can also be defined as understanding, which is different.

I believe that here it is the case that awareness of something is not the same as understanding it, knowing about it, hence the vocab difference.

michaelb said:

Sure, but then understanding would be a better word. Awareness can also connote understanding, knowledge, recognition, cognition, etc. You can be aware of details, differences, characteristics, good points, bad points, whatever. I agree that knowledge is better, largely because it is the opposite of ignorance but anyway, it's not really a big deal, which is why, on balance, Sam Harris using awareness (he uses loads of other words, too) isn't proof that his presentation of dzogchen is flawed. I'm not saying that proof doesn't exist but mistranslating one word isn't it.

Malcolm wrote:

Sam Harris's Dzogchen is stuck in early '90's translations. It is 25 years out of date.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 4:40 AM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Grigoris said:

One would expect that a glimpse of the true nature of mind should/would have some pretty "tangible" results.

Malcolm wrote:

This kind of expectation gets students into a lot of trouble.

Grigoris said:

Taking a dump has an effect on one's mental state, and expect me to believe that seeing one's true nature (the transition from avidya to vidya, even momentarily) does not effect one's mental state? I find that hard to believe.

Malcolm wrote:

I was addressing the notion of expectation of psychological change. For example, you have said you cannot deal with DC people, you think they are jerks. ChNN says that he has met a lot of students of a lot of teachers, and in his opinion, his own students have the best overall grasp of Dzogchen and rig pa. So there you go. One might assume that in your case, an experience of the nature of mind might have the effect of lessening your intensely judgmental personality. I see no evidence of this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 4:35 AM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Grigoris said:

One would expect that a glimpse of the true nature of mind should/would have some pretty "tangible" results.

Malcolm wrote:

This kind of expectation gets students into a lot of trouble.

conebeckham said:

Indeed it does.

Yongay Mingyur Rinpoche, in the course of pointing out instructions, would often comment as to how we all likely have experienced such moments of "clarity," at times in our life. But until one recognizes the significance of such moments, due to the skill of a qualified teacher, one attaches no particular importance to such moments of "clarity." I suppose one could say there is no "Vidya" until one actually has the "knowledge" of the significance of such moments. But once it's known, one must stabilize...and therein lies the rub, right? Conditioning is so strong, Samsara and habit are so strong--that one conceptualizes and reifies such moments, and deludes oneself that one has "achieved something" or has produced a result. Or worse. That's my sense, at least.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a commentary which states that the difference between buddhas and sentient beings is that the vidyā or rigpa of buddhas is continuous, whereas the vidyā of sentient beings is fragmented.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 4:32 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

To have knowledge is to have awareness and vice versa. But, in any case, whatever word is chosen, some explanation is necessary, as rigpa is a technical term used specifically in dzogchen as well as a common word used in other contexts.

Malcolm wrote:

I disagree about knowledge = awareness. To be conscious is to be aware. Awareness is a quality of consciousness. Knowledge is something else. For example, the consciousness at the time of the basis is certainly aware. However, it is only when it knows it's own appearances are its own state, that we can say that consciousness has rig pa, a state of knowledge. If it fails in this recognition, one's consciousness is still aware of those appearances, but in this case since it does not know those appearances are its own state, that consciousness has ma rig pa instead, a state of ignorance.

Awareness is present in both rig pa and ma rig pa since knowledge and ignorance are the knowledge and ignorance of a consciousness. According to the definition you provide, awareness cannot be present in ma rig pa, it will be a state of unconsciousness. But even ignorant minds are consciousness and aware. Since awareness is in fact a quality of consciousness, awareness is found states of both knowledge and ignorance.

This is why it is important to separate Dharma language from common parlance.

Mantrik said:

So an understanding of the nature of oneself being aware is rig pa?

Malcolm wrote:

I did not say that. But it is a start.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 4:25 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

To have knowledge is to have awareness and vice versa. But, in any case, whatever word is chosen, some explanation is necessary, as rigpa is a technical term used specifically in dzogchen as well as a common word used in other contexts.

Malcolm wrote:

I disagree about knowledge = awareness. To be conscious is to be aware. Awareness is a quality of consciousness. Knowledge is something else. For example, the consciousness at the time of the basis is certainly aware. However, it is only when it knows it's own appearances are its own state, that we can say that consciousness has rig pa, a state of knowledge. If it fails in this recognition, one's consciousness is still aware of those appearances, but in this case since it does not know those appearances are its own state, that consciousness has ma rig pa instead, a state of ignorance.

Awareness is present in both rig pa and ma rig pa since knowledge and ignorance are the knowledge and ignorance of a consciousness. According to the definition you provide, awareness cannot be present in ma rig pa, it will be a state of unconsciousness. But even ignorant minds are consciousness and aware. Since awareness is in fact a quality of consciousness, awareness is found states of both knowledge and ignorance.

This is why it is important to separate Dharma language from common parlance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 3:57 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Interesting, thanks. CTR goes on in the text to connect this to "first thought, best thought", a phrase that comes up a lot in his teachings:

Malcolm wrote:

No, not exactly. When the neutral consciousness that arises with the rising of the compassion aspect of the basis (which is defined in Dzogchen tantras as personal and individual) recognizes its appearances as it's own state, this recognition is called "rig pa." However, prior to this recognition or non recognition, this neutral consciousness possesses two of the three ignorances (ma rig pa). If this neutral consciousness does not recognize its own appearances, this non-recognition is the imputing ma rig pa, which initiates the process of development of what are called the "six intellects," grouped under the name "sems."

If CTR had said, "Before sem even begins to work, there is a chance at a first glimpse of reality, called rik pa" then I would agree..

dzogchungpa said:

Well, I think we can chalk it up to poetic license.

Malcolm wrote:

I changed my post slightly while you were replying. That said, I have almost no use for poets. However, as it says in the Hagakure, minor failures are permissible in major undertakings...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 3:47 AM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Grigoris said:

One would expect that a glimpse of the true nature of mind should/would have some pretty "tangible" results.

Malcolm wrote:

This kind of expectation gets students into a lot of trouble.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 3:39 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Interesting, thanks. CTR goes on in the text to connect this to "first thought, best thought", a phrase that comes up a lot in his teachings: Rikpa is the clearest and most precise discovery. Before sem even begins to work, rikpa has a first glimpse of reality.

Malcolm wrote:

No, not exactly. When the neutral consciousness that arises with the rising of the compassion aspect of the basis (which is defined in Dzogchen tantras as personal and individual) recognizes its appearances as it's own state, this recognition is called "rig pa." However, prior to this recognition or non recognition, this neutral consciousness possesses two of the three ignorances (ma rig pa). If this neutral consciousness does not recognize its own appearances, this non-recognition is the imputing ma rig pa, which initiates the process of development of what are called the "six intellects," grouped under the name "sems."

If CTR had said, "Before sem even begins to work, there is a chance at a first glimpse of reality, called rik pa" then I would agree.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 2:25 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I'm having a look through the third volume of CTR's "Profound Treasury" and there's actually quite a lot about rigpa in there. This passage caught my eye: Sem is generally regarded as ordinary, as samsaric. But there is an interesting term for sem, "transcendent sem," which is said to have been coined by the great nineteenth-century Nyingma master, Mipham Rinpoche. In Tibetan, transcendent sem is called nyuk sem, or "primordial sem," which is the same as rikpa.

Malcolm wrote:

CTR is referring to series of three polemical texts by Mipham, one of which Hopkins translated as "fundamental mind." Mipham's rendering of gnyug sems in Sanskrit is ādyacitta, which actually means "first," etc. In this text Mipham quotes from the Great Tantra Clarifying The Meaning of Freedom From Proliferation:

In the context of explaining the illustrative examples of that basis, it is said to be empty and pervasive like space; immaculate like a crystal; unchanging like a vajra; the source of all blessings like a jewel; unimpeded illumination like the heart of the sun and so on. [7/a] It is the opposite of ignorance (avidyā) and inertness, existing as nature of a veridical consciousness, it is knowledge (vidyā). Since it is beyond cause and condition, it is self-originated. Since it does not arise adventitiously, it is the pristine consciousness that has become the nature of the vidyā that has always existed. It is the basis from which all samsara and nirvana appear.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 2:06 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

I fail to see how Yongey Mingyur Rinpoche's teaching would be improved by changing awareness to knowledge. Indeed, such a change may lead to further confusion. Knowledge of what, like book knowndedge, etc.

Malcolm wrote:

Knowledge of the essence, as in the citation.

michaelb said:

fair enough, but I feel both "knowledge" and "awareness" are broad enough words in English to take in the meaning of rigpa, and also to miss the meaning. I think even though Yongey Mingyur Rinpoche could have been more accurate, it does not mean his teaching is totally mistaken. And I would say the same is true of Harris, to a degree.

Malcolm wrote:

I never said that YMD was "totally mistaken." In Tibetan, I am quite sure his teachings are absolutely perfect.

Look, I am a translator. Being neurotic about words is my stock in trade. But if you say to me, "Tibetan teacher says X in contradistinction to what you claim," I am never going to say, "Oh gee, I guess I was wrong." I never make statements about these things without very sound research. Sometimes I do more research and change my mind, but not about this one.

For those who want to believe I am just an intellectual, this is fine by me. I could care less.

The fact is that word awareness as a translation of rig pa is plain wrong: no ifs, ands, or buts about it. People continue to use it because of Herbert Guenther's translations. But he was wrong, and that is that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 1:58 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

TaTa said:

Do you think hes distintion between normal awareness, meditative awareness and pure awareness is helpfull? Or maybe someone like alan wallace with pristine awareness? Or is it the word awareness that you consider flawed too use in this context?

Malcolm wrote:

Wallace translates ye shes as "pristine awareness." This is fine, however I prefer "pristine consciousness." But there is no major difference. When awareness is used for the word " shes pa ", this ok, and it also how I use the term depending on context.

But using the term awareness for rig pa is, as you put it, too flawed and leads to great misunderstanding.

TaTa said:

Thanks dor the clarification. Its been a while since ive read alan,s stuff.

Knowledge is the word uae by chnn? Whats the difference between his use of contemplation and knowledge.

Srry for all the questions

Malcolm wrote:

Rig pa is used in two ways by CHNN: the first is "instant presence;" the second is "knowledge of one's primordial state."

Contemplation is how he translates ting ge 'dzin, samadhi.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 1:55 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Well yes, just watch his [Sam Harris] silly bullshit on Bill Maher's show.

boda said:

The challenge was to substantiate the claim that Harris is massively confused both emotionally and intellectually.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that was the challenge you put forth, I merely pointed out that I think Harris has a chauvanistic attitude towards Islam that is not grounded in any real appreciation for the subject of his bia, he says for example:

Muslims everywhere who love freedom must honestly grapple with the challenges that a politicized strand of their religion poses to free societies.

He has make many such statements, and yet nowhere does he show this danger to free societies exists. In fact, ISIS, etc, is only a danger to those societies that have been fractured and damaged as a result of US adventurism into the Middle East and Central Asia. ISIS poses no threat to " Western Civilization(tm)."

Yes, it is certainly true that two centuries of racist policies in Europe have created tension between former colonial powers and workers they imported from North Africa, Pakistan, and so on. But in reality, Europe has been dealing with terrorists of one stripe or another for decades. As far as I am concerned, the rise of neo-fascism is a much more of an existential threat than a bunch of violent sociopaths in Syria and Iraq who have proven they are so despicable the world agrees they should be utterly and completely rubbed out.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 28th, 2017 at 12:12 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

You can read a little about CTR's take on this issue here:

<https://www.nalandatranslation.org/choosing-the-right-word/rikpa/>

As far as I know, CTR has been the only tertion to date to make a thorough study of English vocabulary, so I tend to regard his input quite highly.

Malcolm wrote:

Their Post-Trungpa decision to translate rig pa as awareness is a mistake. Not a big fan of insight, but it is better than awareness, since prajñā and vidyā are synoymys in Dzogchen texts. Valby uses 'intelligence," but not a big fan of that gloss either.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 27th, 2017 at 11:49 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

Yes, of course, rigpa refers to knowledge, but does being inaccurate on this point make the content of his teaching is wrong?

Malcolm wrote:

It means he is less effective at communicating his knowledge.

michaelb said:

How much does word choice really matter if the way it is explained and demonstrated are accurate?

Malcolm wrote:

How can anything be explained accurately if the words and meanings do not correspond? Dzogchen tantras of all classes spend an inordinate amount of time on language, meaning, and words.

michaelb said:

I fail to see how Yongey Mingyur Rinpoche's teaching would be improved by changing awareness to knowledge. Indeed, such a change may lead to further confusion. Knowledge of what, like book knowndge, etc.

Malcolm wrote:

Knowledge of the essence, as in the citation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 27th, 2017 at 11:12 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

TaTa said:

Do you think hes distintion between normal awareness, meditative awareness and pure awareness is helpfull? Or maybe someone like alan wallace with pristine awareness? Or is it the word awareness that you consider flawed too use in this context?

Malcolm wrote:

Wallace translates ye shes as "pristine awareness." This is fine, however I prefer "pristine consciousness." But there is no major difference. When awareness is used for the word " shes pa ", this ok, and it also how I use the term depending on context.

But using the term awareness for rig pa is, as you put it, too flawed and leads to great misunderstanding.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 27th, 2017 at 10:55 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

I'd actually also be interested in people's views on how Harris talks about dzogchen in "waking up." I quite liked it and wondered what other people thought.

Malcolm wrote:

His presentation is trite, superficial, and more importantly, going the wrong way. If someone thinks that Dzogchen is talking about rig pa as "awareness," they have made a big mistake right in the beginning. It is a bit sad that this term, awareness, has become a gloss for the term rig pa. It is wholly inaccurate and misleading.

michaelb said:

Thanks for the feedback. I think there is definitely a simplification in his presentation but I'd be interested if you explained his big mistake more fully. His emphasis on "awareness" seems similar to other teachers like Yongey Mingyur Rinpoche, for example.

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e = document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); } https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

thanks.

Malcolm wrote:

Mlgyur Rinpoche is not a native speaker. He relies on translators he trusts. However, this is not a criteria for accuracy. When the word rig pa is examined in its context in Dzogchen texts, there is really no way that anyone can justify the gloss "awareness" in a real sense. As a noun, it means "knowledge"; as a verb, it means "to know."

For example, the commentary on the Tantra Without Syllables clarifies this point precisely:

Furthermore, based on the power of repelling the armies of samsara, vidyā (rig pa) is 1) the knowledge (vidyā) of names designated by words, 2) helpful, worldly knowledge such as healing, arts and crafts, and so on, 3) the five sciences (rig pa gnas lnga) of the treatises and so on, 4) knowing (vidyā) as a factor of consciousness, 5) sharp and dull worldly knowledge and so on, and 6) the knowledge of the essence (snying po) that permeates all that is free from ignorance, unobscured by the obscurations of ignorance and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 27th, 2017 at 10:33 PM

Title: Re: Seventeen Tantras Volume 1 & 2

Content:

DGA said:

Congratulations, Malcolm, on this publication. I hope it finds its audience. I'm glad Wisdom is getting behind these projects.

Meanwhile...

Malcolm wrote:

The first division includes the three essential tantras: the Self-Arisen Vidyā, the Self-Liberated Vidyā, and the Without Syllables. If one knows these three, one will have command over the general meaning of the tantras, like a king who has command over his subjects.

-- Longchenpa.

DGA said:

I'm ignorant of these texts (for now). The upcoming volume will contain translations of the first two tantras, correct? Will the third one, Without Syllables, also find print in English?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, after the first two, and with its complete commentary.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 27th, 2017 at 8:44 PM

Title: Re: Seventeen Tantras Volume 1 & 2

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The first division includes the three essential tantras: the Self-Arisen Vidyā, the Self-Liberated Vidyā, and the Without Syllables. If one knows these three, one will have command over the general meaning of the tantras, like a king who has command over his subjects.

-- Longchenpa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 27th, 2017 at 8:00 PM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Anonymous X said:

What was I thinking.

Malcolm wrote:

I have that reaction to virtually all of your posts in the Dzogchen forum, "What is this guy thinking?"

Anonymous X said:

Somehow, you and I are on two different wave lengths. Why do you assume yours is the better?

Malcolm wrote:

Not better, just far more informed about the subject matter at hand, the teaching of the Great Perfection.

For example, I don't know anything about Chan/Zen, apart from the polemics about it found in early Dzogchen commentaries which date from the late 9th century. So I rarely venture into the Zen forums because I am not really qualified to talk about Chan. All I am qualified to do with respect to Chan and Zen is to ask questions, when they occur to me to ask them, as well as relate what early Tibetan Dzogchen masters thought about the Chan tradition as it existed in Tibet in the late 8th century. I expect that people who have no background in Dzogchen teachings to exercise the same respect when they visit these boards.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 27th, 2017 at 7:58 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

I'd actually also be interested in people's views on how Harris talks about dzogchen in "waking up." I quite liked it and wondered what other people thought.

Malcolm wrote:

His presentation is trite, superficial, and more importantly, going the wrong way. If someone thinks that Dzogchen is talking about rig pa as "awareness," they have made a big mistake right in the beginning. It is a bit sad that this term, awareness, has become a gloss for the term rig pa. It is wholly inaccurate and misleading.

Anonymous X said:

Perhaps you can lead us back to the correct view of it?

Malcolm wrote:

You can read my introduction in Buddhahood in this Life, Wisdom, 2016, where I discuss the term rig pa and other important terms in the system of Dzogchen. There are some translators who persist in using the gloss "awareness" for rig pa; but there has been a strong movement among Dzogchen translators for leaving the term rig pa either untranslated, or as in my case, back-translating it into Sanskrit, vidyā.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 27th, 2017 at 7:53 PM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Anonymous X said:

What was I thinking.

Malcolm wrote:

I have that reaction to virtually all of your posts in the Dzogchen forum, "What is this guy thinking?"

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 27th, 2017 at 7:46 PM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Same question. What has this done for you? Can we assume that you do things for a result?

Vasana said:

Best not to assume anything. If you understood the context of these teachings and how the base, path & fruit of Dzogchen & Mahamudra is presented, you probably wouldn't feel the need to ask those questions in the first place. Dzogchen begins with direct introduction, then you come to confidence about what was introduced through applying various means, then the rest of the path is simply continuing in that state, where thoughts are self-arisen and self-liberated.

Anonymous X said:

I am asking a straight forward question. What has this practice done for you? Has discursive thinking stopped? Has the subject/object dichotomy been resolved? Has there been any transformative experience or understanding that is now irreversible and functional? This being in contrast with philosophical or dialectical constructs. Is there a mind or no-mind, or neither a mind or a no-mind? Maybe something else? Some other description that is bulletproof in your own being? I'm not being glib.

Malcolm wrote:

You have completely missed the side of the barn with your question due to your clear unfamiliarity with the subject matter (Atiyoga).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 27th, 2017 at 7:44 PM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

michaelb said:

I'd actually also be interested in people's views on how Harris talks about dzogchen in "waking up." I quite liked it and wondered what other people thought.

Malcolm wrote:

His presentation is trite, superficial, and more importantly, going the wrong way. If someone thinks that Dzogchen is talking about rig pa as "awareness," they have made a big mistake right in the beginning. It is a bit sad that this term, awareness, has become a gloss for the term rig pa. It is wholly inaccurate and misleading.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 27th, 2017 at 7:33 PM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

Marc said:

As far I as can tell, Direct Introduction renders the tibetan ngo sprod (pronounced "ngotrö"), where one is introduced to Rigpa in its "nakedness".

Malcolm wrote:

"Direct introduction" is ChNN's translation of rang ngo thag tu sprad, which could otherwise be translated as "directly encountering one's own state." This is the first phrase of the famous three phrases of Garab Dorje.

Marc said:

Whereas the rig pa'i rtsal dbang (pronounced "rigpé tsel wang"), is the Empowerment (wang) of Rigpa's Expressive Power / Dynamic Display (Tsal).

Before reading Malcolm comments, I would have said that the rig pa'i rtsal dbang is the gateway to the practice of Thögal, while rigpa'i ngo sprod is the gateway to Dzogchen in general, and Trekchö more specifically.

But apparently, this is an oversimplification / generalization...

Malcolm wrote:

The term rig pa'i rtsal dbang, (empowerment of the potential of vidyā) is used in many contexts — for example, there are the eighteen rig pa'i rtsal dbangs of the so called mind series; the fourth empowerment of the King's Tradition of Avalokiteśvara from the Mani Kabum is called the empowerment of the potential of vidyā, where it is also noted that it forms the root of all other empowerments.

ChNN has stated many times that "direct introduction" is an empowerment of the potential of vidyā. Thus, I use them interchangeably.

makewhisper said:

Would you say that śamatha is vital to recognition during the direct introduction?

Malcolm wrote:

Normally, during the course of a direct introduction, the master will ask people to remain in a calm, undistracted state. I am under the impression from one of Tulku Urgyen's students that he was impressed with the śamatha of the some Vipassana people who became his students and thought it was a great preparation for Dzogchen practice. The serious practice of the mind series teachings in Santi Mahā Sangha requires the development of śamatha. And in the 21 semzins of the intimate instruction series, there are methods for developing śamatha very quickly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 27th, 2017 at 9:53 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

boda said:

Well, no.

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e = document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); } https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Try again, anyone?

Malcolm wrote:

Well yes, just watch his silly bullshit on Bill Maher's show.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 27th, 2017 at 3:00 AM

Title: Re: Seventeen Tantras Volume 1 & 2

Content:

ratna said:

Fantastic news!

Malcolm wrote:

You will be in the bibliography again.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 27th, 2017 at 1:21 AM

Title: Re: Sam Harris receives a (literal) pointing out instruction

Content:

boda said:

Can you in any way substantiate the claim that Harris is massively confused emotionally and intellectually?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, there is his chauvinism against Islam for one...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 27th, 2017 at 1:15 AM

Title: Re: Mahasiddha Geshe Lama Konchog

Content:

seraphim said:

A very close dharma brother of mine, who was one of Geshe Konchog's close students, mentioned that he is a Dzogchen Longde practitioner.

ZenChanChan said:

But he was a Gelugpa monk? According to his biography his main practice was Vajrayogini.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no contradiction.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 27th, 2017 at 1:06 AM

Title: Seventeen Tantras Volume 1 & 2

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Dear Friends:

It is my pleasure to announce that Wisdom Publications and Zangthal Editions will collaborate in bringing out the Self-Arisen Vidyā Tantra (rig pa rang shar) and the Self-Liberated Vidyā Tantra (rig pa rang grol) as the Seventeen Tantras: Volume 1 & 2. The first edition of this two volume set will be hardbound, in a clothbound slip case. Publication of these two translations are presently scheduled for late summer/early fall, 2018. Together with an introductory essay with text critical overview of the history and origins of the Seventeen Tantras as related in the Vima Nyinthig, index, glossary, etc., to be included in vol. 2, I expect the page count to be somewhere around 900 pages all totaled.

One thing people should understand is that with respect to the Self-Arisen Vidyā Tantra, according to Chetsun Sengge Wangchuk, possession of the text itself is permission to read it. So while I encourage readers who are interested to have Dzogchen transmission, there is no absolute need to have the lung for this text, though of course it is also good in you can obtain the lung.

I will keep you posted with updates here.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 27th, 2017 at 12:47 AM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

TaTa said:

can i ask you to elaborate? Im reading on the subject but i cant seem to grasp it.

Malcolm wrote:

Which subject. The four ting nge 'dzins?

TaTa said:

Why one is gradual and the other not. Is it because one has DI and the other no?

Malcolm wrote:

They both depend on a kind of introduction. However, the four samadhis are based on the experience of the rig pa'i rtsal dbang, while the four yogas are introduced in a gradual process of pointing out.

That said, it is vital to both approaches to discover the experience of śamatha in the beginning. Without that experience, there are no four contemplations nor four yogas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 26th, 2017 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: Mahasiddha Geshe Lama Konchog

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Fascinating stuff. I wonder if anyone will have them scientifically analyzed.

I was always under the impression that Dipankara Buddha was the one before Sakyamuni. In the article it says Kasyapa Buddha. Never heard this before.

Malcolm wrote:

Dipamkara Buddha was the Buddha from whom Śakyamuni received his prediction eons ago in the last major eon. In this eon, the Fortunate Eon, there are six buddhas prior to Śakyamuni (for a total of 1001). The Theravadins preserve an account of 27 buddhas prior to the present one.

paël said:

What are names of those 1001 buddhas? Where I can find names of them?

Malcolm wrote:

You can find the names of these buddhas in the Bhadrakalpa Sūtra, translated as the Fortunate Eon, Dharma Publishing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 26th, 2017 at 9:33 PM

Title: Re: Mahasiddha Geshe Lama Konchog

Content:

ZenChanChan said:

From what I read, he was recognized by the Dalai Lama to be a greatly high realized yogi. He left behind a myriad of five colored, gem-like relics. Many pictures of his relics can be found.

Lama Zopa Rinpoche also said that the five coloured relics show that he has achieved the five wisdoms of Buddha (complete enlightenment).

According to his attendant Tenzin Zopa, lama Konchog was appeared so humble and so simple that most people, even his close attendant Tenzin Zopa, didn't realize he was someone as special as he was and no one expected relics at all.

There is also an article of Vicky McKenzie on Tricycle about the study of Lama Konchog relics called Jeweled Demise <https://drive.google.com/file/d/0B09d-8OZewcyb2pqa0FkN25Nd0k/view>

Aside from the movie "Unmistaken Child", does anyone personally know him?

Anonymous X said:

Fascinating stuff. I wonder if anyone will have them scientifically analyzed.

I was always under the impression that Dipankara Buddha was the one before Sakyamuni. In the article it says Kasyapa Buddha. Never heard this before.

Malcolm wrote:

Dipamkara Buddha was the Buddha from whom Śākyamuni received his prediction eons ago in the last major eon. In this eon, the Fortunate Eon, there are six buddhas prior to Śākyamuni (for a total of 1001). The Theravadins preserve an account of 27 buddhas prior to the present one.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 26th, 2017 at 9:30 PM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

TaTa said:

Sooo whats the difference?

Malcolm wrote:

The latter are gradual, the former are not.

TaTa said:

can i ask you to elaborate? Im reading on the subject but i cant seem to grasp it.

Malcolm wrote:

Which subject. The four ting nge 'dzins?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 26th, 2017 at 11:16 AM

Title: Re: The four contemplations and gampopa's mahamudra

Content:

TaTa said:

Sooo whats the difference?

Malcolm wrote:

The latter are gradual, the former are not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 26th, 2017 at 10:30 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Oh yes? Why don't you tell me what my opinions are?

Malcolm wrote:

I will when I see one. But, for example, you are clearly critical of the idea that Dzogchen does not depend on the lower vehicles. You have also expressed admiration for a number of nonbuddhist teachers, etc. It is not hard to tell that you are of a perennialist persuasion. You are definitely a fanboy of Khyentse, Trungpa, etc., but not so much of ChNN, etc.

You must think we are very stupid if you imagine we have not got your number years ago. And sadly, you add virtually nothing of value to any discussions. Sometimes, however, you are amusing—in a sad, class clown kind of way.

TaTa said:

People here should virtually chill more

Malcolm wrote:

He asked.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, April 26th, 2017 at 10:06 AM
Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice
Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Friend, this is all meta-discussion. All I will say is that it is probably for the best that I do not generally state my opinions.

Malcolm wrote:

You telegraph your opinions constantly. In fact, you are one of the most unsubtle posters here.

dzogchungpa said:

Oh yes? Why don't you tell me what my opinions are?

Malcolm wrote:

I will when I see one. But, for example, you are clearly critical of the idea that Dzogchen does not depend on the lower vehicles. You have also expressed admiration for a number of nonbuddhist teachers, etc. It is not hard to tell that you are of a perennialist persuasion. You are definitely a fanboy of Khyentse, Trungpa, etc., but not so much of ChNN, etc.

You must think we are very stupid if you imagine we have not got your number years ago. And sadly, you add virtually nothing of value to any discussions. Sometimes, however, you are amusing— in a sad, class clown kind of way.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, April 26th, 2017 at 9:21 AM
Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice
Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Actually, I do really care but since I am anonymous, apparently my input is regarded by some with only slightly more regard than the ramblings of the town drunk.

Finney said:

I personally don't care that you're anonymous. However, I do wish that now and then your "input" would be more than just pokes and feints. Presumably you have opinions, why not just come right out and say them? You're obviously not bashful about posting, why not post something of substance?

dzogchungpa said:

Friend, this is all meta-discussion. All I will say is that it is probably for the best that I do not generally state my opinions.

Malcolm wrote:

You telegraph your opinions constantly. In fact, you are one of the most subtle posters here.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 26th, 2017 at 5:37 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Webcasts aren't particularly intimate, are they?

RikudouSennin said:

Of course they are. To hear the instructions is key. And to listen without the three faults. By listening well to the dharma, the fault of the toxic container is dispelled. By listening attentively, the fault of an upside-down container is dispelled. And by bearing the teachings in mind, the fault of a leaky container is remedied.

All six paramitas are complete in listening to the dharma.

dzogchungpa said:

Dude, the six paramitas are, like, totally lower yana.

Malcolm wrote:

Chapter 24 in the Marvelous Mind that Realizes Purity states:

Naturally completing the ten perfections,
the mind that realizes purity is marvelous!
This marvelous mind that realizes purity is the perfection of all Dharmas, it is the treasury of all Dharmas,
it is the inexhaustible treasury,
it is full buddhahood as unsurpassed awakening, this tathāgata, samyaksambuddha arises from this perfection of wisdom.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 26th, 2017 at 1:17 AM

Title: Re: A very interesting article on the chakras...

Content:

HandsomeMonkeyking said:

And where does one get some basic training in Tibetan Medicine?

What should one read? Might there be someone in Merigar?

Malcolm wrote:

Birth, Life and Death by CHNN is a good start.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 26th, 2017 at 1:05 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Am I not talking and quoting from Buddhist masters and Sutras?

Malcolm wrote:

You are quoting sūtras and masters from the vehicles of cause and result. The vehicles of cause and result are just fine, much better than the mundane vehicles of the tirthikas.

This specific subforum however is devoted to the vehicle that is beyond cause and result, Atiyoga.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 26th, 2017 at 12:50 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Anonymous X said:

When I read about rigpa, it could be the same as intrinsic awareness.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, so you actually do have no clue what you are talking about. Therefore as you say, "[It] is not to say that there is no usefulness for the intellectual, but it cannot be relied on for real understanding."

Anonymous X said:

I've already been cast as a heretic, by the brahmins of this group.

Malcolm wrote:

You are not a heretic, you are someone spouting off about Zen in a Dzogchen forum since in fact you are unfamiliar with the teachings of the Great Perfection.

Dzogchen teachings are something very precise, very specific. You cannot understand Dzogchen by reading some books.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 26th, 2017 at 12:24 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Tongnyid Dorje said:

of course direct introduction. what i mean is, that we are not all the highest capacity, (chigcharwa? <- if i remember correctly), so after direct introduction, if we even succeed to recognize anything, we need to sustain this recognition by some method, right? if we havent recognized anything, then we need another method.

Malcolm wrote:

The method is applying the method of direct introduction for ourselves, over and over again, until we recognize that nature and have confidence in it.

Tongnyid Dorje said:

and exactly that is what is meant by doing practice.

Malcolm wrote:

You said we need "another method." There is only one real method in Dzogchen teachings — direct introduction.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 26th, 2017 at 12:07 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Anonymous X said:

[

I'm afraid you might be confused about this. If this were really the case, that obstacles are identical to the true nature, you would not be here talking about this kind of thing. That is not the case except in some abstract dream that one could concoct from all this 'dharma' talk. Phenomenon, your experience, is unreal, it is empty and void. Mind's nature is Knowing.

Malcolm wrote:

That is a very trivial nature of the mind. It does not go beyond cittamatra.

Anonymous X said:

Yogacara concepts are merely a gate. No one is stopping there, but you have to begin somewhere. Knowing is not some trivial nature. It is not the knowing of something.

Malcolm wrote:

You stopped there, in your post.

Anyway, define your terms. What is "knowing?"

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 26th, 2017 at 12:05 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Tongnyid Dorje said:

of course direct introduction. what i mean is, that we are not all the highest capacity, (chigcharwa? <- if i remember correctly), so after direct introduction, if we even succeed to recognize anything, we need to sustain this recognition by some method, right? if we haven't recognized anything, then we need another method.

Malcolm wrote:

The method is applying the method of direct introduction for ourselves, over and over again, until we recognize that nature and have confidence in it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 10:09 PM

Title: Re: How to practice generosity in modern society

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

First you have to understand that there are four kinds of generosity. All four can be practiced today.

pael said:

How they can be practiced today?

Malcolm wrote:

The four gifts are things such as food, and other kinds of material things; giving protection; giving writing implements and paper; and finally, giving Dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 9:00 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Grigoris said:

Can you tell where it does not fit? I was under the impression that all existence is nothing other than Dzogchen, that there is nothing separate to Dzogchen.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but there is a difference between recognizing that and not recognizing that. The point that Dzogchen tantras consistently make is that practicing the two stages of creation and completion are at best an indirect means of coming to that recognition, and at worst a total deviation from the meaning of the Great Perfection. Rongzom points out that one should not discriminate between mantra or sūtra practice when it comes to the indirect approach. Recognition is the important point in Dzogchen, nothing else.

Tongnyid Dorje said:

nice, but if you don't have method/practice how to recognize it, you will not recognize anything.

Malcolm wrote:

The method is direct introduction. As it is said in the Tantra Without Syllables, "The dharmakāya is encountered in the intimate instructions."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 8:31 PM

Title: Re: How to practice generosity in modern society

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

Hello all,

Here we go, first question is ¿how to practice generosity in modern society?, and ¿what happens in -side of- us when we try to give what we like?, to me these are interesting questions and would like to know what you all think and learn from the different kind of views and experiences.

best regards

Malcolm wrote:

First you have to understand that there are four kinds of generosity. All four can be practiced today. The supreme generosity is of course the gift of the Dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 8:12 PM

Title: Re: A very interesting article on the chakras...

Content:

Jyotish said:

So Malcolm, are the points of view you present in this topic or in other threads a standard view in Tibetan medical studies?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 8:11 PM

Title: Re: A very interesting article on the chakras...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

When you are visualizing yourself as a deity with a hollow body made of light, there is no need to adhere to some anatomically correct idea of the nadis and so on. If you are a Dzogchen practitioner doing Yantra Yoga, for example, you visualize your ordinary body as a light form. Same principle applies.

Mantrik said:

For the practice of the Purification of the 6 Lokas as well?

Malcolm wrote:

yes

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 7:46 PM

Title: Re: Dorje Yudronma safe or not?

Content:

Tenma said:

Okay, I've read that Dorje Yudronma should be realized by now and would either be enlightened or a high bodhisattva. However, from other teachings, I've found that she is not to be practiced for common students with empowerment. If she is enlightened, wouldn't it be safe to recite her mantra? Although I'm still confused on her visualization, would it be alright to do her practice? as she is also a form of Tingi Shalzungma, a retinue of unenlightened Tseringma and enlightened Palden Lhamo, I am not too sure if she is enlightened or not and safe or not.

Malcolm wrote:

Are you a student of ChNN?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 7:39 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Anonymous X said:

[

I'm afraid you might be confused about this. If this were really the case, that obstacles are identical to the true nature, you would not be here talking about this kind of thing. That is not the case except in some abstract dream that one could concoct from all this 'dharma' talk. Phenomenon, your experience, is unreal, it is empty and void. Mind's nature is Knowing.

Malcolm wrote:

That is a very trivial nature of the mind. It does not go beyond cittamatra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 7:37 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Anonymous X said:

You forgot, there is also no Dzogchen.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure there is. However, I do not see anything in your posts reflective of any actual understanding of the subject. You have already disqualified yourself as capable of judging English translations of Dzogchen texts. You do not sound like a person who has ever studied Dzogchen with a Dzogchen master. You sound like an all-oner.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 5:50 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Grigoris said:

Seriously though: I believe you and Crazy Wisdom are selling your previous teachers and practice short by not acknowledging the fact that your past practice paid off by generating the merit necessary for you to meet your precious gurus. Instead of denigrating what were quite possibly the means by which you arrived at your current state/position/realisation, you should be extraordinarily grateful. You should not be trying so hard to dissuade others as you may actually be encouraging them to abandon the only means they currently have at hand, to reach the point that you are currently at.

Malcolm wrote:

I am not dissuading anyone from anything. People are free. If they wish to practice the two stages, let them. I am encouraging people who are interested in Dzogchen teachings to understand that Dzogchen is an independent path, which does not depend on the vehicles of cause and result.

It may be the case that in modern Tibetan Buddhism Dzogchen has become mixed with anuyoga teachings, especially at the level of empowerments. For example, the Longchen Nyinthig is mostly deity practices. The Dzogchen section of it is very short, only a few very short texts (Yeshe Lama is not part of the Longchen Nyinthig, though it is included in the supporting text material).

Further, it is a very common practice to include the empowerment of the potential of vidyā (rig pa'i rtsal dbang) within a standard deity yoga empowerment (sometimes called "the fifth empowerment") or to include that in the fourth empowerment. But Dzogchen also has its own independent empowerments which are not based on any kind of deity yoga path.

You are continuing to talk about empowerments like Troma Nagmo and Namchak Putri which are mixed cycles:

Grigoris said:

I know that, but I am. I am continuing to explain my point.

Malcolm wrote:

"Mixed" means that they introduce a yidam as part of the path, they are more gradual cycles. No one disputes that people attain rainbow body from practicing such cycles. Of course they do, they contain the main practices of Dzogchen, trekchöd and thögal.

For example, Vajravārāhī is an important part of the Gongpa Zangthal. There is also a Shitro. It is said there that Vārāhī is present for people of intermediate capacity. The same can be said of the Khandro Nyinthig. The retreats of the deities of these cycles are one week, not months and years.

But this is not what CW and I are talking about. We are talking about Dzogchen as it is presented within the Dzogchen tantras themselves and their related instructions such as the Vima Nyinthig, which have zero deity yoga practices as part of the path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 5:23 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

So... having realized one's nature as the prerequisite one then engages in the guru's upadesha until the four visions appear on their own. To do that one has to remain speechless as a mute, etc.

Grigoris said:

Different strokes for different folks... If one realized the nature of the deity during the empowerment then, theoretically, the sadhana would be the means by which one is reminded of this realization and the repetition would be the means by which it is stabilised.

Malcolm wrote:

CW is not talking about empowerments which introduce one to this or that yidam as a path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 5:01 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Grigoris said:

They may get in the way before recognition, theoretically though, after recognition, there ain't that much that can really get in the way.

Malcolm wrote:

Greg, you do not know what you are talking about here. I am not saying this to put you down. I am saying this because you lack instructions.

You appear to believe that Dzogchen is gussied up Mahāmudra. It isn't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 4:37 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Grigoris said:

A white guy in the sky with long hair and a bushy beard.

Malcolm wrote:

I thought as much.

Grigoris said:

Well you, being humorless, thought wrong.

Malcolm wrote:

Ever heard of sarcasm?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 4:28 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Grigoris said:

I don't disagree. But they both have the same source.

This is the central teaching that is repeated continuously in the Kungyed Gyalpo: everything, EVERYTHING, has a single source. ONE SOURCE.

Malcolm wrote:

What is this "one source?"

Grigoris said:

A white guy in the sky with long hair and a bushy beard.

Malcolm wrote:
I thought as much.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 4:22 AM
Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice
Content:
Mantrik said:

Surely, the point is not whether they may be integrated into a Dzogchen path, or are an obstruction to it - you know that applies to any daily activity and that sadhanas are no different from the perspective of integration. The issue you were both discussing is whether any of them is essential to recognition of the state and to the Dzogchen path.

Grigoris said:
The only thing that is essential to the recognition of the state is the state itself and the introduction to the state by the guru. No doubt about this. After the recognition of the state everything becomes the dzogchen path.

Malcolm wrote:
Sustaining that recognition is the path, nothing else.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 4:17 AM
Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice
Content:
Grigoris said:

IWith this view you are putting ignorance on the same level as Dzogchen and setting them up as polar opposites. That seems to me to be a fail of monumental proportions.

Malcolm wrote:
Rig pa and ma rig pa are opposites. Neither are the state of Dzogchen (the basis), per se.

Grigoris said:
I don't disagree. But they both have the same source.

This is the central teaching that is repeated continuously in the Kungyed Gyalpo: everything, EVERYTHING, has a single source. ONE SOURCE.

Malcolm wrote:
What is this "one source?"

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 1:43 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Cause and effect, samsara and nirvana arise from ignorance of our own state. There is neither samsara nor nirvana in the state of Dzogchen.

Grigoris said:

With this view you are putting ignorance on the same level as Dzogchen and setting them up as polar opposites. That seems to me to be a fail of monumental proportions.

Malcolm wrote:

Rig pa and ma rig pa are opposites. Neither are the state of Dzogchen (the basis), per se.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 1:16 AM

Title: Re: A very interesting article on the chakras...

Content:

Grigoris said:

Would you say that the Tibetan Medicine view and use of chakra (which seems to be more static), is different to the spiritual/yogic view and use of chakras?

Malcolm wrote:

These things are all connected with the formation of the body after conception. Thus, there is no way to separate them. For example, there is a vast so called "sgeg sel" literature which are yogic means of removing illness based on an understanding of the vāyus, nāḍīs and so on of the body.

Grigoris said:

Fair enough. How would you then explain the variety of visualisations of the chakras which is tied to specific deities and their mandala where the number of chakra, their placement, their colour etc... differs from yidam to yidam?

Malcolm wrote:

When you are visualizing yourself as a deity with a hollow body made of light, there is no need to adhere to some anatomically correct idea of the nadis and so on. If you are a Dzogchen practitioner doing Yantra Yoga, for example, you visualize your ordinary body as a light form. Same principle applies.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 1:09 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Anonymous X said:

So, what is the problem? If there is nothing separate, there is no one to practice anything.

The questions you are bringing up happen when you don't live like this.

Malcolm wrote:

The state of dzogchen is not brahmin, etc. It is personal and individual.

Grigoris said:

So now the nature of existence is personalised and variegated...

"My Dzogchen is bigger than your Dzogchen!"

Malcolm wrote:

The state of dzogchen is to persons what heat is to fire. All fires are hot, but the heat of one fire is not the heat of another fire. However, one partial aspect of the basis is that it is variegated. Asserting that the basis is only variegated, however, is a defective proposition. There are five other defective propositions about the basis, the state of dzogchen, which are defective as well. The only non-defective proposition about the state of dzogchen is that it is originally pure, ka dag.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 1:08 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Grigoris said:

Again: Is effort something other than Dzogchen? Is practice something other than minds enlightened nature?' Is cause and effect something other than Dzogchen? Etc...

Malcolm wrote:

If you think you need effort and practice to realize Dzogchen, then you are deviating from the meaning of Dzogchen. There is no cause and effect in the state of Dzogchen. This could not be more clear in the All-Creating King:

Oh mahasattva, listen!

this is the explanation for doubts about the purpose.

In countless past eons,

since fortunate Atiyogins

with devotion to me, All-Creating Bodhi,

do not meditate a view, do not protect samayas,

do not engage in activities, do not progress on a path,

do not train on stages, do not have cause and result,

do not have relative and ultimate,

perceive there is nothing to meditate or accomplish,

do not generate altruistic intentions, nor use antidotes,

that perception of the nature of the all-creating mind

is the explanation of the purpose.

That said, if someone likes doing sadhanas, they are free.

Grigoris said:

I'm not talking about what is needed or what is not, I am asking if you believe that cause and effect are separate to the nature of mind (Dzogchen/Mahamudra). I am asking if you believe there is something in phenomenal experience or existence that is not born of the nature of mind (Dzogchen/Mahamudra).

You seem to be saying that Dzogchen is separate to samsara.

Malcolm wrote:

Cause and effect, samsara and nirvana arise from ignorance of our own state. There is neither samsara nor nirvana in the state of Dzogchen. As the Tantra of the King of the Infinite Great Dimension states:

Since there is neither before and after, there is no cause and result.

Since there is no cause and result, there is no samsara and nirvana.

Since there is no samsara and nirvana, there is no awakening.

Those who assert a result turn their backs upon the true meaning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 12:54 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Vasana said:

I don't personally know what the written Dzogchen perspective on Zen is....

Malcolm wrote:

Based on definitive sūtras, inferior to Mahāyoga.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 12:52 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

good, when people use capitalized "Being" and so on when discussing Dzogchen, it generally means they have either read too much Husserl, etc., or they are some kind of neo-advaitan.

dzogchungpa said:

People using "Supreme Absolute Being" very much excepted of course.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, you mean the Ramana quote that Elio used without informing the boss...which was then removed in the reprint. So no, no exceptions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 12:49 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

A passage from Buddhahood, pg. 161 is instructive here, as it is repeated all over various Great Perfection texts:

If it is objected, "If afflictions are liberated into dharmatā without antidotes, there is no need for purification on the path. Otherwise, liberation would require no effort," for what reason would those who do not understand be liberated? Asserting that those who understand are liberated merely by recognizing concepts as dharmatā is the fruit of one's wishes. As such, in order to recognize that concepts are dharmatā, the intimate instructions of the guru are important.

Vasana said:

And so i think it's fair to say that deliberate effort and dilligence in applying the instructions of the Guru is needed to realize effortless liberation even if that liberation it's self is not the result of the causal process of effort. As you said earlier, 'creation and completion are at best an indirect means of coming to that recognition.' Sounds like a pretty good outcome for those suited to it even if it's indirect. I guess the problem is that there's a thin line between it being an aid or a deviation.

Malcolm wrote:

The indirect means has the same principle— recognizing concepts as dharmatā. This is also based on a guru's instructions. In both cases, recognition is the point. For example, when you encounter someone you know in a crowd, there is no effort involved in recognizing them. If you have not met someone and only know their name, unless there is someone who can introduce you, you will spend a long time asking every person in the crowd if they are so and so.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 25th, 2017 at 12:05 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Grigoris said:

Again: Is effort something other than Dzogchen? Is practice something other than minds enlightened nature?' Is cause and effect something other than Dzogchen? Etc...

Malcolm wrote:

If you think you need effort and practice to realize Dzogchen, then you are deviating from the meaning of Dzogchen. There is no cause and effect in the state of Dzogchen. This could not be more clear in the All-Creating King:

Oh mahasattva, listen!
this is the explanation for doubts about the purpose.
In countless past eons,
since fortunate Atiyogins
with devotion to me, All-Creating Bodhi,
do not meditate a view, do not protect samayas,
do not engage in activities, do not progress on a path,
do not train on stages, do not have cause and result,
do not have relative and ultimate,
perceive there is nothing to meditate or accomplish,
do not generate altruistic intentions, nor use antidotes,
that perception of the nature of the all-creating mind
is the explanation of the purpose.
That said, if someone likes doing sadhanas, they are free.

Vasana said:

While I appreciate that this is all valid from the perspective of the meaning of Dzogchen, doesn't the insistence of no effort required then lead to the argument that sentient beings should already be realized Buddhas in actuality and not just potentiality? Using the various Dzogchen preliminaries as an example, these involve initial effort even if the actual state recognized is beyond effort. I can't remember who said it but it makes me think of the phrase, 'The Artificial leads to the natural' & 'The path of effort leads to effortlessness'. Tulku Urgyen Rinpoche from 'As it is vol 2,

“Honestly, for a beginner, without the mindfulness of reminding, there is no recognition of mind essence. That is called deliberate mindfulness. It is dualistic mind that reminds you to recognize, but the seeing of no thing to be seen is rigpa, the awakened state free of duality. This becomes clearly discerned through practical experience. In other words, a yogi can distinguish the difference between these two, while a beginner cannot. Therefore, in the beginning it is indispensable to be 'remindful'. After all, rigpa has been caught up in sem, dualistic mind, from beginningless lifetimes. The essence has been lost in its expression“

As for conduct and Samaya, this also has to reflect one's level of actual realization. Tulku Urgyen Rinpoche again, “Padmasambhava said: ‘Though the view should be as vast as the sky, keep your conduct as fine as barley flour.’ Don’t confuse one with the other. When training in the view, you can be as unbiased, as impartial, as vast, immense, and unlimited as the sky. Your behaviour, on the other hand, should be as careful as possible in discriminating what is beneficial or harmful, what is good or evil. One can combine the view and conduct, but don’t mix them or lose one in the other. That is very important

I think the main point is different people have different capacities at different times and there are many ways up a mountain. Going the long way round might seem silly to those who know all of the direct shortcuts but then some people might have very little chance of reaching the top or encountering these shortcuts without going the indirect way first.

Malcolm wrote:

A passage from Buddhahood, pg. 161 is instructive here, as it is repeated all over various Great Perfection texts:

If it is objected, "If afflictions are liberated into dharmatā without antidotes, there is no need for purification on the path. Otherwise, liberation would require no effort," for what reason would those who do not understand be liberated? Asserting that those who understand are liberated merely by recognizing concepts as dharmatā is the fruit of one's wishes. As such, in order to recognize that concepts are dharmatā, the intimate instructions of the guru are important.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 24th, 2017 at 11:41 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Anonymous X said:

So, what is the problem? If there is nothing separate, there is no one to practice anything. The questions you are bringing up happen when you don't live like this.

Malcolm wrote:

The state of dzogchen is not brahmin, etc. It is personal and individual.

Anonymous X said:

I think you mean Brahman, not brahmin. But, that is not what I was referring to at all.

Malcolm wrote:

good, when people use capitalized "Being" and so on when discussing Dzogchen, it generally means they have either read too much Husserl, etc., or they are some kind of neo-advaitan.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 24th, 2017 at 11:36 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Can someone tell me where sadhana fits into this?

Grigoris said:

Can you tell where it does not fit? I was under the impression that all existence is nothing other Dzogchen, that there is nothing separate to Dzogchen.

Anonymous X said:

So, what is the problem? If there is nothing separate, there is no one to practice anything. The questions you are bringing up happen when you don't live like this.

Malcolm wrote:

The state of dzogchen is not brahmin, etc. It is personal and individual.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 24th, 2017 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The point, Greg, is that the state of Dzogchen is not something to attain through effort and practice, like putting in a foundation, erecting walls, and putting on a roof. The state of Dzogchen is not something to be attained through perceiving a cause and an effect. The state of Dzogchen is beyond cause and effect.

Grigoris said:

Again: Is effort something other than Dzogchen? Is practice something other than minds enlightened nature?' Is cause and effect something other than Dzogchen? Etc...

Malcolm wrote:

If you think you need effort and practice to realize Dzogchen, then you are deviating from the meaning of Dzogchen. There is no cause and effect in the state of Dzogchen. This could not be more clear in the All-Creating King:

Oh mahasattva, listen!

this is the explanation for doubts about the purpose.

In countless past eons,

since fortunate Atiyogins

with devotion to me, All-Creating Bodhi,

do not meditate a view, do not protect samayas,

do not engage in activities, do not progress on a path,

do not train on stages, do not have cause and result,

do not have relative and ultimate,

perceive there is nothing to meditate or accomplish,

do not generate altruistic intentions, nor use antidotes,

that perception of the nature of the all-creating mind

is the explanation of the purpose.

That said, if someone likes doing sadhanas, they are free.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 24th, 2017 at 10:10 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Can someone tell me where sadhana fits into this?

Grigoris said:

Can you tell where it does not fit? I was under the impression that all existence is nothing other Dzogchen, that there is nothing separate to Dzogchen.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but there is a difference between recognizing that and not recognizing that. The point that Dzogchen tantras consistently make is that practicing the two stages of creation and completion are at best an indirect means of coming to that recognition, and at worst a total deviation from the meaning of the Great Perfection. Rongzom points out that one should not discriminate between mantra or sūtra practice when it comes to the indirect approach. Recognition is the important point in Dzogchen, nothing else.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 24th, 2017 at 9:51 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Grigoris said:

And this your experience, right? You are not just regurgitating a half-digested theory, right?

Malcolm wrote:

The point, Greg, is that the state of Dzogchen is not something to attain through effort and practice, like putting in a foundation, erecting walls, and putting on a roof. The state of Dzogchen is not something to be attained through perceiving a cause and an effect. The state of Dzogchen is beyond cause and effect.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 24th, 2017 at 8:47 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

"I have no devatā but the devatā of the nature of my mind."

-- Vairocana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 24th, 2017 at 8:26 PM

Title: Re: A very interesting article on the chakras...

Content:

Grigoris said:

Would you say that the Tibetan Medicine view and use of chakra (which seems to be more static), is different to the spiritual/yogic view and use of chakras?

Malcolm wrote:

These things are all connected with the formation of the body after conception. Thus, there is no way to separate them. For example, there is a vast so called "sgeg sel" literature which are yogic means of removing illness based on an understanding of the vāyus, nāḍīs and so on of the body.

Vasana said:

Is much of this "sgeg sel" literature currently available?

I know that the appendices in the Yantra Yoga book lists some of the relative functions of the practices but what you're speaking of sounds more specific.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is not really available. Unfortunately, to date very few Dharma translators have the necessary training in Tibetan Medicine to understand the medical import of much of what they read in yogic texts. Indeed, "fake yoga" ideas about cakras and so on have impeded proper understanding of Vajrayāna texts for decades. One example, mislabeling vāyu (rlung) as prāṇa. Prāṇa (srog 'dzin) is not rlung, it is one of the five rlungs (vāyu).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 24th, 2017 at 8:13 PM

Title: Re: A very interesting article on the chakras...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

IN reality, cakras are places in the body where channels cross. The five major cakras in Tibetan Buddhism are places where blood vessels, arteries and nerves cluster to produce various functions, such as sense perception (brain); speech and eating (throat); consciousness, circulation and respiration (heart); growth of the fetus and digestion (navel); as well as excretion and reproduction (groin).

Grigoris said:

Would you say that the Tibetan Medicine view and use of chakra (which seems to be more static), is different to the spiritual/yogic view and use of chakras?

Malcolm wrote:

These things are all connected with the formation of the body after conception. Thus, there is no way to separate them. For example, there is a vast so called "sgeg sel" literature which are yogic means of removing illness based on an understanding of the vāyus, nāḍīs and so on of the body.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 24th, 2017 at 11:01 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Choying Dzod is largely considered a commentary on the view of the so called mind series. As such, it mainly concerns the topic of the basis.

Fa Dao said:

your book seems to have considerably more breadth to it....gotta say it again...so many "gaps" that are being filled....know what I mean? I know now why you chose this... gotta tell ya man...the way you laid out the introduction....very nice...like a preview of coming attractions...please consider doing it that way in the future on all of your translation work..makes it easier for "regular" folks to "get it"...know what I mean?

Malcolm wrote:

Thank you. I am glad you are finding it edifying.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 24th, 2017 at 4:47 AM

Title: Re: A very interesting article on the chakras...

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Can you go into more detail? Clearly the broad concept itself not bullshit, since lung is so tied to emotional states, what I'm curious about is HOW they are bullshit in comparison to the real thing (tm). Again this author on the one hand says they are bullshit, but in the next sentence or so describes the emotional problems created by incorrect practice of westerners.

.

Malcolm wrote:

They are bullshit because those associations are based on the Zelator papers of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn and Crowley's subsequent elaboration of the same in 777.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Ah ok, I get it now, but this applies mainly to the systems encountered in non-Buddhist stuff right...i.e the standard 7 chakra deal?

Malcolm wrote:

Yup and fake yoga stuff.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 24th, 2017 at 4:35 AM

Title: Re: A very interesting article on the chakras...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, those associations are bullshit.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Can you go into more detail? Clearly the broad concept itself not bullshit, since lung is so tied to emotional states, what I'm curious about is HOW they are bullshit in comparison to the real thing (tm). Again this author on the one hand says they are bullshit, but in the next sentence or so describes the emotional problems created by incorrect practice of westerners.

.

Malcolm wrote:

They are bullshit because those associations are based on the Zelator papers of the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn and Crowley's subsequent elaboration of the same in 777.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 24th, 2017 at 3:46 AM

Title: Re: A very interesting article on the chakras...

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Read this recently too and enjoyed it...the thing about viewing chakra as organs seems totally pervasive in the western Yoga view of them.

Malcolm wrote:

IN reality, cakras are places in the body where channels cross. The five major cakras in Tibetan Buddhism are places where blood vessels, arteries and nerves cluster to produce various functions, such as sense perception (brain); speech and eating (throat); consciousness, circulation and respiration (heart); growth of the fetus and digestion (navel); as well as excretion and reproduction (groin).

Johnny Dangerous said:

So this article doesn't go into great detail, but it says that psychological functions associated with various chakra are also a "modern" thing, but this seems like an iffy claim to me, as just those sorts of physical functions are "traditionally" associated with certain psychological maladies, mind states etc. He also goes briefly into the idea that western practitioners have certain personality characteristics due to incorrect practice, which seems contradictory to the statement that chakra have no psychological function traditionally.. Can you give me the scoop on that?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, those associations are bullshit.

What I am talking about is different and is covered in the formation of the body sections in many different tantras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 24th, 2017 at 3:26 AM

Title: Re: A very interesting article on the chakras...

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Read this recently too and enjoyed it...the thing about viewing chakra as organs seems totally pervasive in the western Yoga view of them.

Malcolm wrote:

IN reality, cakras are places in the body where channels cross. The five major cakras in Tibetan Buddhism are places where blood vessels, arteries and nerves cluster to produce various functions, such as sense perception (brain); speech and eating (throat); consciousness, circulation and respiration (heart); growth of the fetus and digestion (navel); as well as excretion and reproduction (groin).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 23rd, 2017 at 10:49 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Malcolm,

a few questions if you don't mind indulging...

1. Out of all the Dzogchen texts/Tantras out there that have not been translated what made you choose this one?

2. Could you do a contrast compare between this work and the Choying Dzod? Not to say that one is better but to highlight the differing focus of each text

3. Would this be a good complementary companion for studies/practice of the Choying Dzod?

Thank you for your time!

Malcolm wrote:

Choying Dzod is largely considered a commentary on the view of the so called mind series. As such, it mainly concerns the topic of the basis.

Fa Dao said:

your book seems to have considerably more breadth to it....gotta say it again...so many "gaps" that are being filled....know what I mean? I know now why you chose this...

Malcolm wrote:

It chose me. It was part of the four volume cycle of the Gongs pa zang thal. Though Longchenpa's tshig don mdzod has many more citations, it is not fundamentally different than this text, and excludes topics such as the nidana section, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 23rd, 2017 at 8:04 PM

Title: Re: Energy stuck in the head, insanity, anger, going nuts

Content:

frankc said:

I have had this problem for so many years. I have been to monks, I have been to teachers, I have seen my guru many times, nothing ever, ever, permanently fixes this problem. When I meditate, energy moves into my head, it builds into a giant ball of pressure, and then anger, delusion, confusion, and insanity start to arise as a result. For years I have tried to fix it, I have been taught so many techniques to fix it, nothing fixes this problem. When the pressure builds up in my head, it starts to hurt my heart and lungs below. I have felt like I was going to have a heart attack before. Every morning I wake up, there it is, the big ball of pressure stuck in my head, i meditate, it gets worse and worse. Everyday is another day of suffering and misery. Horrible horrible emotions constantly arising day after day due to this energy being stuck in my head. Is there anyone in this world that knows how to fix this problem? I haven't met one yet.

Malcolm wrote:

You need to go to an Ayurvedic doctor, a very good one.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 23rd, 2017 at 7:50 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Malcolm,

a few questions if you don't mind indulging...

1. Out of all the Dzogchen texts/Tantras out there that have not been translated what made you choose this one?

2. Could you do a contrast compare between this work and the Choying Dzod? Not to say that one is better but to highlight the differing focus of each text

3. Would this be a good complementary companion for studies/practice of the Choying

Dzod?

Thank you for your time!

Malcolm wrote:

Choying Dzod is largely considered a commentary on the view of the so called mind series. As such, it mainly concerns the topic of the basis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 22nd, 2017 at 8:34 PM

Title: Re: Wrathful Deities

Content:

Tirisilex said:

I don't believe that Wrath is a quality of a Buddha so I don't think Wrathful deities are full of wrath. Are they?

Malcolm wrote:

Peaceful deities are related to the eight consciousnesses. Wrathful deities are related to the senses organs.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 22nd, 2017 at 8:31 PM

Title: Re: Anonymity on Buddhist forums

Content:

muni said:

I find as I said earlier that an investigation about people's behavior would be interesting, whether so called anonymous or not. A forum is not a closed place, our behavior is all what we expose.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Great, what is your opinion on the subject of forum anonymity then?

muni said:

Okay. Regarding a Buddhist forum, anonymity or not itself will not result in caring behavior.

Malcolm wrote:

No, but that is not the point. The point is that it may result in more careful behavior.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 22nd, 2017 at 7:01 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

smcj said:

The culture here has become disdainful of the very idea of sadhana practice under the guise of insulating Dz from all other practices. That goes beyond mere triumphalism.

Malcolm wrote:

In a nutshell: you are wrong.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 22nd, 2017 at 9:18 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

smcj said:

. As for one, secondary practices are useful

Ok, great. As for your second question, no, I am not dismissive of their "validity"

Ok, so they are both valid and useful. That's a good start.

What can they be useful for? When should they be used? Do you personally do any, even sporadically? Under what circumstances would you see doing one as advantageous?

Malcolm wrote:

Since when have I ever discussed my personal practice?

As far as your question goes however, obstacle removal, life extension, winning friends and influencing people, etc., the usual circumstantial things people want.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 22nd, 2017 at 9:08 AM

Title: Re: Anonymity on Buddhist forums

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty funny that my simple opinion has led to multiple page threads both here and on Vajracakra...

Oh, by the way: Malcolm Farleigh Estes Smith, Ācārya, DTM, aka Namdrol, Kunga Namdrol, Loppon Kunga Namdrol, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 22nd, 2017 at 8:50 AM

Title: Re: Tertön

Content:

Palzang Jangchub said:

What about when a person claims "I received a vision that if you do X, Y, and Z, you will reveal a pure vision treasure"? When things like this are said unprompted and unbidden, do they get examined seriously just in case, or are they simply to be regarded as jokes in poor taste and/or signs of mental disturbance?

Malcolm wrote:

People who say things like that are usually idiots.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 22nd, 2017 at 7:15 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

smcj said:

It has to do with his attitude towards sadhana practice, which is included in this thread.

To your credit you willingly made the point yourself. I'm just highlighting it.

My take on your post(s) is that you are more "Dzogchen exclusive" than ChNN is. For instance I don't easily imagine you sitting down and doing a Tara sadhana. Nothing wrong with that. That's your karmic trajectory.

Like I said, I'm just highlighting the point you just made about ChNN's apparently more tolerant approach to sadhanas than your own.

Malcolm wrote:

I find it amazing when people who have no relationship with nor have ever sat in his company for any extended period of time feel confident in commenting on ChNN's point of view about this and that in an effort to fit him into their own views about Dharma. This is remarkable indeed because of the consistent disagreement with which their comments meet from people who are actually the man's students.

FYI, in ChNN's teachings all sadhanas of whatever stripe are considered secondary practices.

smcj said:

That was never contested. Point conceded.

So now let us discuss sadhana practice as secondary practices.

Would you agree that ChNN's endorsement of sadhana practices as secondary is an endorsement of their value and validity in general? Would you also agree that your own position on the value of sadhana practices in general, even as secondary, is dismissive of their validity?

Malcolm wrote:

As for one, secondary practices are useful. As for your second question, no, I am not dismissive of their "validity" per se.

The point is that creation and completion stages practices do not form part of actual Dzogchen practice, regardless of whether mantra practices are an indirect means of realizing the meaning of Dzogchen teachings from the perspective that Mañjuśrimitra outlined.

The fact that Dzogchen practice as outlined in the Dzogchen tantras are not involved with the standard secret mantras methods of creation and completion should not be construed as a condemnation of such practices. Dzogchen simply does not make any great use of them. It does not mean they are bad, or that someone who is practicing Dzogchen should avoid them, if they have reason for their use. However, a practitioner of Dzogchen should understand that such practices are not the main point, and that the vehicles that promulgate cause and result with respect to buddhahood suffer from certain deviations with respect to Dzogchen, including anuyoga. Such practices in general are secondary primarily because the vehicles from which they spring have an incomplete understanding of the meaning of Dzogchen.

One does not need to get involved with those vehicles to practice Dzogchen. One can start out as Dzogchen practitioner, practice the path of Dzogchen, and realize the result of Dzogchen without reciting a single mantra or practicing a single sadhana from any of other five levels of tantra.

Of course, if someone is trained in what has come to be regarded as the "traditional" approach, typically one practices common and uncommon ngondro, three roots, and then enters the special preliminaries of Dzogpachenpo (hopefully, one will complete these before one becomes too old to practice actual Dzogchen practice). But this is not necessary, and never has been.

This not a question of "pure Dzogchen" as opposed to some other kind. This is a question of what those instructions that have come down to us in the tantras of and commentaries on the Kun byed rgyal po, etc., the Vajra bridge, etc., and the so called intimate instruction series actually say.

The point is to understand what the path of Atiyoga is, not the paths of Mahāyoga and Anuyoga which regard Atiyoga as some kind of result that is attained through a cause.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 21st, 2017 at 11:44 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

smcj said:

If he's interested in longevity he must not be dismissive of all "causes and conditions", right?

What does that have to do with Dzogchen.

It has to do with his attitude towards sadhana practice, which is included in this thread.

To your credit you willingly made the point yourself. I'm just highlighting it.

My take on your post(s) is that you are more "Dzogchen exclusive" than ChNN is. For instance I don't easily imagine you sitting down and doing a Tara sadhana. Nothing wrong with that. That's your karmic trajectory.

Like I said, I'm just highlighting the point you just made about ChNN's apparently more tolerant approach to sadhanas than your own.

Malcolm wrote:

I find it amazing when people who have no relationship with nor have ever sat in his company for any extended period of time feel confident in commenting on ChNN's point of view about this and that in an effort to fit him into their own views about Dharma. This is remarkable indeed because of the consistent disagreement with which their comments meet from people who are actually the man's students.

FYI, in ChNN's teachings all sadhanas of whatever stripe are considered secondary practices.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 21st, 2017 at 7:08 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

smcj said:

Does this mean that Dzogchen masters ruled out an indirect path for unfortunates? No. "Unfortunates"? I have heard the boss state, more than once, that he does not maintain a regular practice schedule of thun practices. That said, for his longevity, it is well known that he relies in Mandarava. He also is fond of Tara, and Ozer Chenma. If he's interested in longevity he must not be dismissive of all "causes and conditions", right?

Malcolm wrote:

What does that have to do with Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 21st, 2017 at 10:26 AM

Title: Re: Anonymity on Buddhist forums

Content:

Quay said:

So your source is a name given to you by other people? Interesting concept of a source.

Malcolm wrote:

When we know who a person is, what they do, who their teachers are, there is more basis for trust in what they say.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 21st, 2017 at 10:23 AM

Title: Re: Anonymity on Buddhist forums

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I regard the input of anonymous users who are unknown to me with only slightly more regard than the ramblings of the town drunk.

Mantrik said:

Is that how you would have regarded the person, if unknown to you, who for many many years was 'Namdrol'?

You say you were never that anonymous, yet I had no idea a who you were and came to respect you nonetheless. Your point was that if unknown to you someone not using their own name was therefore someone whose views must be disregarded.

Methinks tis the sport to have the engineer hoist by his own petar.

Malcolm wrote:

You could have easily ascertained who I was if you had cared to. After all, my meat space identity was never a secret. Your apathy at learning who I was is not a measure of my desire for anonymity. BTW, I stopped using Namdrol because I decided it was ridiculous for me to use a Tibetan name. I am not Tibetan.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 21st, 2017 at 8:44 AM

Title: Re: Tertön

Content:

philji said:

A very interesting book on this subject is "Tibetan Treasure Literature" by Andreas Doctor.

By the way, referring back to an earlier post from Malcolm... who guards the termas which are in rocks etc...is it nagas only or are there specific beings entrusted with this duty?

Malcolm wrote:

In general, terma guardians are often naga like demons.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 21st, 2017 at 8:06 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Sadhana Practice

Content:

Sādhaka said:
Wait a minute.

I thought that Buddhafields are mentioned in even the highest (?) class(es) of texts, which are supposed to be definitive.

Dudjom Lingpa is not necessarily implying here that Stephen Batchelor is not completely wrong after all, is he?

Or is "somewhere else" the key phrase here?

RikudouSennin said:
From my limited understanding it seems as if the buddhafields are viewed as enlightened qualities as opposed to actual locations or destinations.
I'm certain Malcolm could answer you more clearly though.
Peace.

Sādhaka said:
Okay, thanks for your reply.

Then perhaps " somewhere else " is the key phrase here, meaning that the Buddhafields are inside rather than being external places that one is transported to.

If such is the case, then I don't think that Dudjom Lingpa was trying to go "Stephen Batchelor" on us.

Or maybe there is a third alternative here that I'm not seeing.

Malcolm wrote:
There are no buddhafields external to one's own state, from the perspective of Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, April 21st, 2017 at 6:55 AM
Title: Re: Dalai Lama's daily practice - specific details
Content:
MiphamFan said:
What "culture"?

ChNN also practices his own sadhanas daily. Many Dzogchen masters do so.

Malcolm wrote:
I have heard the boss state, more than once, that he does not maintain a regular practice schedule of thun practices. That said, for his longevity, it is well known that he relies in Mandarava. He also is fond of Tara, and Ozer Chenma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 21st, 2017 at 6:51 AM

Title: Re: Anonymity on Buddhist forums

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, as far as I can see, the whole reason this thread exists is because I asked Anonymous X to tell us about the connection between his or her Buddhist and non-Buddhist study/practice. Apparently this was a bit too much for some. Generally speaking, I think that when people start "taking names" it is basically a form of intimidation.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is a means of ascertaining the source of people's mental peregrinations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 21st, 2017 at 6:15 AM

Title: Re: Anonymity on Buddhist forums

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I regard the input of anonymous users who are unknown to me with only slightly more regard than the ramblings of the town drunk.

Jeff H said:

I spent 4½ years in online courses through Jamyang. Among the requirements for both courses was participation in the online discussions. Many people were reticent to share because they were embarrassed to express their ideas to the group.

In a classroom setting I am the same way, but online I always found that odd because, first, we were learning that our personhood in general is an imputed fiction, and furthermore we were unlikely to ever meet each other. We were essentially anonymous anyway, even though we used our "real" names.

I think people tend to identify with their online personas just as they do their societal personages, and allow those identities to color their behavior. What's more, trolls are trolls, whether anonymous or known, online or in person.

Your feeling seems particularly strange to me, Malcolm, because you seem to be saying the validity of a posting depends on the identity of the writer rather than the quality of what they write.

Malcolm wrote:

When it comes to Vajrayana, the sutric dictum to follow the Dharma, not the person needs to be taken with a grain of salt.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 21st, 2017 at 5:30 AM

Title: Re: Anonymity on Buddhist forums

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I regard the input of anonymous users who are unknown to me with only slightly more regard than the ramblings of the town drunk.

Mantrik said:

Is that how you would have regarded the person, if unknown to you, who for many many years was 'Namdrol'?

dzogchungpa said:

Malcolm is apparently quite fond of town drunks, see:

Malcolm wrote:

He did recommend that world never abandon booze.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 21st, 2017 at 5:25 AM

Title: Re: Anonymity on Buddhist forums

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I regard the input of anonymous users who are unknown to me with only slightly more regard than the ramblings of the town drunk.

Mantrik said:

Is that how you would have regarded the person, if unknown to you, who for many many years was 'Namdrol'?

Malcolm wrote:

I was never terribly anonymous.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 21st, 2017 at 4:48 AM

Title: Re: Anonymity on Buddhist forums

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I regard the input of anonymous users who are unknown to me with only slightly more regard than the ramblings of the town drunk.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 19th, 2017 at 8:21 AM

Title: Re: Stream-entry in a Mahāyāna context

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

How is stream-entry defined and contextualized from a Bodhisattvayāna-informed perspective specifically? Is there any significant difference in how Mahāyāna and Theravāda define contextualize and regard stream-entry?

Malcolm wrote:

First stage is Mahayana stream entry

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 19th, 2017 at 2:23 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen/Mahamudra and Pali Buddhist morals & meditation..

Content:

Anonymous X said:

If I introduce myself, I will no longer be Anonymous. We can't have that, can we?

anjali said:

You can introduce yourself as Anonymous X. People can maintain their meatspace anonymity while still introducing themselves. Lots of folks have done so.

Malcolm wrote:

A practice I completely disapprove of.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 18th, 2017 at 4:35 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Yes, agreed. What I was implying is that the natural state encompasses all actions rendering them harmless and appropriate. There are no choices to be made if one truly is living this as there is only that.

Malcolm wrote:

Hi Jax, please take your new age pastiche elsewhere.

Anonymous X said:

Whoever Jax is, it is not me.

Malcolm wrote:

Regardless, take it elsewhere.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 18th, 2017 at 12:46 AM

Title: Re: Avijnapti

Content:

Queequeg said:

Working through Abhidharmakosabhyasam.

Can't figure this out. Google searches have not been fruitful.

What is avijnapti?

Malcolm wrote:

Avijñāpti is a dharma proposed by the Sarvastivadins and rejected by the Sautrantikas. It is a kind of matter that is created when one takes a vow. This means that vows create a physical state that cannot be perceived (avijñāpti). It is irrelevant to everyone above the level of Sarvastivada. But it is an interesting theory.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 18th, 2017 at 12:41 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen/Mahamudra and Pali Buddhist morals & meditation..

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Does it really sound like I'm speculating?

Malcolm wrote:

It sounds like you are an all-oner.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 18th, 2017 at 12:40 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Grigoris said:

A single glimpse of one's true nature is enough to render useless entire encyclopedias of terminology and learning.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that a guru is indispensable for glimpsing one's "true nature." You cannot find even one single tantra or intimate instruction that suggests otherwise.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 17th, 2017 at 7:59 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a question of belief. It is a question of definitions.

Grigoris said:

I thought you would say something profound, like: It is a question of experience.

Definitions can be found in dictionaries and books, experience and realisation though...

Marc said:

It is indeed a matter a lexicon...

It seems to me that modern Dzogchen oral traditions tends to "simplify" things a bit with Rigpa as a kind heuristic, that encompasses Rigpa, The Base, Dharmakaya etc...

While, as far as I can tell, in ancient Dzogchen texts and tradition, Rigpa has a precise meaning and definition, (tentatively paraphrased hereafter)

The recognition of the indivisible Empty-Clarity of the Base pointed out by the Guru.

Given these lexicon differences, what may sound even more shocking to modern ears yet while solving many pseudo-paradoxes and also emptying a lot of spiritual wanking "à la you know who":

Not only is Rigpa "conditional" but it is also impermanent.

For the practionner on the path, the recognition of the ever-present Base is not ever-present itself. At the level of the Path (not the Base) moments of Recognition and distraction do alternate.

When this apparence has vanished, one has regained the Primordial Throne and one is a Buddha in actuality.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 17th, 2017 at 3:36 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Malcolm, you can believe whatever you want, but belief is useless.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a question of belief. It is a question of definitions.

Grigoris said:

I thought you would say something profound, like: It is a question of experience.

Definitions can be found in dictionaries and books, experience and realisation though...

Malcolm wrote:

In this case however, it is not profound since it is a simple question of definitions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 17th, 2017 at 3:18 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Sorry to nitpick at you, Vasana, but.....I think your first sentence is sufficient. The activity of accepting and rejecting are not the way towards stability, they are in fact obstructing it, as well as any idea of cultivation of merit or rejection of the negative.

Vasana said:

In terms of equipoise, then yes, accepting ,rejecting and reification is an obstruction. But in terms of going about your daily life you still need to know what conduct is acceptable and conducive for recognizing & stabilizing your recognition and what conduct harms it and is not conducive for recognizing & stabilizing your recognition.

This is why Guru Rinpoche says even if your view is as wide as the sky, attention towards action, cause and effect should be as fine as flour. If you went about your day in a state of ma-rigpa, doing whatever you pleased, you might be beyond accepting and rejecting by deed, but that won't be coming from a place of understanding unless you're actually in a state of knowledge at that time of committing any given action.

Anonymous X said:

Yes, agreed. What I was implying is that the natural state encompasses all actions rendering them harmless and appropriate. There are no choices to be made if one truly is living this as there is only that.

Malcolm wrote:

Hi Jax, please take your new age pastiche elsewhere.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 17th, 2017 at 3:11 AM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Malcolm, you can believe whatever you want, but belief is useless.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a question of belief. It is a question of definitions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 16th, 2017 at 10:44 PM

Title: Re: comparing paths, uniting paths, and practicing a path

Content:

Anonymous X said:

I'm not sure what you mean when you say "vidya/rigpa is conditional upon introduction and does not exist without it." Perhaps the way you phrased the words is not what you really meant.

Malcolm wrote:

No, I said exactly what I meant.

Anonymous X said:

I'm sure you are not saying that rigpa is not always present, but you need someone to make it the case.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that is exactly what I am saying.

Anonymous X said:

If you mean that you need someone to help you see your own intrinsic nature of awareness that is obscured by your habitual thinking, then I it can make sense. But, even further, anyone at anytime can come to see rigpa, intrinsic awareness, and is not dependent on another.

Malcolm wrote:

Knowledge (vidyā, rigpa) depends on a guru's intimate instructions, without which one will never have that knowledge (vidyā).

Anonymous X said:

It depends on the person. Sticking to dogmas will eventually obstruct any kind of real knowing and illumination. All paths have this danger. I am not advocating not practicing, just being mindful of the fixations and dangers of 'travel'.

Malcolm wrote:

To the extent that a person has the good fortune to meet Dzogchen teachings, it depends on the person. Without meeting a qualified guru, however, there is no hope that one will discover that knowledge for oneself alone. As the Tantra Without Syllables states:

The dharmakāya is encountered in the instructions.

Vimalamitra states:

Sentient beings experience samsara, cycling within it again and again. Although they abide in samsara, they have never seen the characteristic of samsara because they lack the instruction of a guru.

And:

As such, the nature of vidyā pervades all migrating beings, but they do not understand the instructions of the guru for encountering the dharmakāya in direct perception.

So, you are free to do as you please, but Dzogchen yogis rely on the intimate instructions of their guru.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 16th, 2017 at 9:50 AM

Title: Re: How easy was it to get empowerments in Tibet?

Content:

Boomerang said:

So now I'm curious, did people in Tibet actually do the "examine a guru for 12 years" thing...?

Malcolm wrote:

generally no.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 16th, 2017 at 3:19 AM

Title: Re: Full disclosure

Content:

smcj said:

...but henceforth I will certainly be more patient with people who choose to do that.

Malcolm wrote:

Thank you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 15th, 2017 at 10:00 PM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Bump

Malcolm wrote:

It is not how it was explained in the early manag de tantra s and commentaries. The way the early commentaries explain this is that trekcho is the path for lazy chikcharwas; togal is for diligent rimgipas.

Crazywisdom said:

I would contend there is always some display of dharmata, like a bluish light. So the exhaustion of dharmata is not like tregcho.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't contend anything. I just report what I read.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 15th, 2017 at 8:47 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually, they cannot. You are confusing direct perception of rigpa with resting in a moment of unfabricated consciousness.

Crazywisdom said:

And what do you say to Thogal is the path and tregcho the realization like the completion stage?

Bump

Malcolm wrote:

It is not how it is explained in the early manag de tantra s and commentaries. The way the early commentaries explain this is that trekcho is the path for lazy chikcharwas; togal is for diligent rimgipas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 14th, 2017 at 8:51 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

gzodzilpa said:

Sorry to press the issue and perhaps I am overthinking this, but will you further clarify the difference? Is the difference a matter of merely coming across the natural state versus directly apprehending the true character of the natural state?

Malcolm wrote:

one is based on ascertaining the nature of the mind, the second is confirming rig pa in one's direct perception via one's sense organs.

Marc said:

So if I get you right, this distinction is one of the superiorities of Thögal over Trekchö ?
Right ?

Malcolm wrote:

That is one way to put it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 14th, 2017 at 8:49 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually, they cannot. You are confusing direct perception of rigpa with resting in a moment of unfabricated consciousness.

gzodzilpa said:

Will you expand a bit on this please?

Marc said:

Upvote for this !

Could you please Malcolm further clarify this distinction ?

What do you translate as "moment of unfabricated consciousness" ?

Malcolm wrote:

Shes pa ma bcos pa skad gcig ma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 14th, 2017 at 8:45 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

heart said:

I am confusing direct perception of rigpa with resting in a moment of unfabricated consciousness?

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Many people (not you) do. They are not the same thing.

gzodzilpa said:

Sorry to press the issue and perhaps I am overthinking this, but will you further clarify the difference? Is the difference a matter of merely coming across the natural state versus directly apprehending the true character of the natural state?

Malcolm wrote:

one is based on ascertaining the nature of the mind, the second is confirming rig pa in one's direct perception via one's sense organs.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 14th, 2017 at 8:34 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

heart said:

I am confusing direct perception of rigpa with resting in a moment of unfabricated consciousness?

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Many people do. They are not the same thing.

heart said:

I think it is very much out of line to think you know anything about my practice Malcolm. I am really disappointed I must say.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Hi Magnus, my comment was not directed at you personally.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 14th, 2017 at 5:40 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Vasana said:

But if you've already had a hint of that direct perception, methods from other yanas can be used while knowing the flavour of the main point. You can still experience brief uncontrived moments interspersed in an elaborate practice if you choose to practice in that way.

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually, they cannot. You are confusing direct perception of rigpa with resting in a moment of unfabricated consciousness.

heart said:

I am confusing direct perception of rigpa with resting in a moment of unfabricated consciousness?

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Many people (not you) do. They are not the same thing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 14th, 2017 at 5:38 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

heart said:

Yes, of course. For me that includes using methods from all the yanas, just like ChNNR say we can do.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Using methods from other yanas will not lead even to a hint of the direct perception of rigpa.

heart said:

Of course it will, if you got direct introduction.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Nope.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 14th, 2017 at 2:17 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Norwegian said:

And while of course one can practice the methods of creation and completion from Vajrayana, or a method from Sutra too if that's something one likes and gets benefit from, it's this often proposed idea people have which is so peculiar, that one must supplement Dzogchen with something else, because Dzogchen somehow is lacking in methods.

Vasana said:

I don't think anyone here was arguing that if you practice Dzogchen, you must supplement with something else or that it's in any way lacking. As you said, it's something you can do if you feel it has any kind of benefits. The debate seems to be centred on whether the other yanas are able to produce the same recognition.

Malcolm wrote:

They are incapable of producing the direct perception of rigpa since they do not even discuss it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 14th, 2017 at 1:40 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

heart said:

Yes, of course. For me that includes using methods from all the yanas, just like ChNNR say we can do.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Using methods from other yanas will not lead even to a hint of the direct perception of rigpa.

Vasana said:

But if you've already had a hint of that direct perception, methods from other yanas can be used while knowing the flavour of the main point. You can still experience brief uncontrived moments interspersed in an elaborate practice if you choose to practice in that way.

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually, they cannot. You are confusing direct perception of rigpa with resting in a moment of unfabricated consciousness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 14th, 2017 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

heart said:

The master pointing it out don't make you capable to continue in that state continuously, unfortunately. Nor does it make it effortless to return to that state when you loose it or even to make a clear distinction between rigpa and mind. It is a big job.

/magnus

Crazywisdom said:

True but at least you know what he's talking about. And you can get the job done when you put your mind to it.

heart said:

Yes, of course. For me that includes using methods from all the yanas, just like ChNNR say we can do.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Using methods from other yanas will not lead even to a hint of the direct perception of rigpa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 13th, 2017 at 6:05 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Thanks for the citation magnus. This is the first time I have ben able to sit down with a computer in some days.

heart said:

I had an email conversation with a friend about the two accumulations and he wrote the following:

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

The Tantra Without Syllables states:

Since the appearance of vidyā is intrinsically perfect,
I do not assert the two accumulations of syllables.

The Blossoming Lotus commentary on this passage by Vimalamitra states:

Everything is perfect within the appearances of vidyā itself. Since [the appearance of vidyā] is intrinsic, it is perfect. Asserting the two accumulations of merit and [pristine consciousness] as the cause of awakening is a deviation— not realizing the meaning of Ati which is free from accomplishment through effort. Within the reality of Ati, the two accumulations of merit (the cause) and pristine consciousness (the result) are not asserted in my self-originated vidyā.

With respect to the creation stage, it says:

Since there is neither emanating nor gathering in me,
the meanings of syllables are totally perfect.

Vimalamitra comments:

Since there is no effort of emanating and collecting the assembly of syllables in my self-liberated appearance, there is no need for a creation stage, like the syllables. The way the syllables located in the ultimate natural nāḍīs are totally perfect is that Samantabhadra father and mother abide within the balls of light, perfect like oil in a small seed—the deities that do not need to be created are innate attributes.

Further:

Since there is no cause in vidyā itself,
where can there be a generation stage syllable?

Vimala comments:

There is no connate cause in vidyā. Since it has always self-appeared without being created by a cause, there is no need in the present to generate that [appearance]. Since it has always been intrinsically complete, where can there be a generation stage seed syllable? Since that is not understood, outer and inner mantra from Mahāyoga on down are deviations.

Further:

Since pristine consciousness and the five kāyas are intrinsically complete, there is also no A of the completion stage.

Vimala states:

Since pristine consciousness and the five kāyas are complete as innate attributes in vidyā itself, they have always existed. Since the completion stage that depends on the syllables of outer and inner Secret Mantra (based on the syllable A and so on) is a deviation, it also does not exist in Ati.

Vimala also mentions possible deviations within Ati:

Since Mahāyoga Tantra asserts that the outer universe is the celestial mansion and the inhabitants are deities in the utterly pure relative based on words, it deviates from the transcendent state of the self-liberation of the appearances of the six relaxed senses.

Since Anuyoga Tantra asserts the dhātu and pristine consciousness as ultimate based on words, it deviates from the meaning of making the result of Ati Yoga (the sole, unique bindu) into the path, the absolute perfection in which nothing is abandoned.

Furthermore, the proponents of Ati who assert words that are approximations deviate by:

1) leaving the view in the basis, 2) leaving meditation as the mode of the arising of qualities, 3) leaving experience in syllables, 4) leaving conduct in reality, 5) leaving everything as being the mind, and 6) asserting the potentiality and play of appearances as ultimate. Since all of these proponents lack experience, they deviate by grasping a view and meditation of intellectual analysis. As such, because of being free from these assertions of words, there is no emanation and withdrawal. As vidyā itself is not within the range of wisdom (prajñā), it is confirmed as a direct perception which is beyond intellectual analysis.

Since with the three critical points one abides together with the nonarising dharmatā, there is no need for the activities of hearing, reflection, and meditation. Likewise, there is no distinction between sharpness or dullness in capacity.

Since the experience itself is approached in the self-appearance, the extreme of doubt is eliminated. Since there is freedom from benefit or harm in gathering accumulations or misdeeds, and since this can be immediately applied in experience, vidyā is beyond virtues or misdeeds. In this way, since appearances are liberated directly, there is no great hope for some other antidote. Since the meaning of inexpressibility is experienced on the basis of one's own voice, those who are beyond words and expressions are those of the unmistakable Atiyoga which is beyond a ground of deviation. Since Ati does not fall into any sort of a ground of deviation, those who assert other designations with words and syllables are explained to be those who deviate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 12th, 2017 at 8:30 PM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

madhusudan said:

I've read this thread with interest over the past days, and thank each poster for adding their perspective. Since the primordial Buddha spontaneously manifests as teacher and disciples, I thought the relative practices were aspects of compassion. Due to lack of merit and conceptual obscurations sentient beings don't recognize the natural state, so they need some help. I think Milarepa didn't get it immediately either, so people who need purification and accumulation are in good company. Looking at the state of most people on Earth today, I think teachings on ethics are most compassionate. So many people headed to a burning hell, preta realm or animal it's truly sad. How will they ever realize the natural state then?

Malcolm wrote:

Without a qualified guru, never. With such a guru, easily.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 12th, 2017 at 5:40 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Such sentiments don't really have anything to do with how creation is practiced. In fact such sentiments are made from perspective of the completion stage.

Vasana said:

I think the distinction to be made is that 'creation stage' is also used in other contexts as a descriptive term for a characteristic of [knowing] reality and experience, not purely just the method.

Apart from the explanations of creation stage Tulku Urgyen Rinpoche that I think Cone, Magnus and others already shared, Thrangu Rinpoche's commentary on the mind instructions of Khenpo Gangshar says something similar;

While in that state, your body is left to itself without fabrication, free and easy.

That is the body of all the victorious ones.

That is the essence of the creation stage.

[...]When we see the essence of the mind, are we at that point actually doing the creation stage of visualizing a deity? We are not, but the essence of the creation stage is the realization of the nature of all phenomena as they are. That is why this practice is the essence of the creation stage and why this is the body of all the victorious ones, even though we are not doing anything in particular with our body other than just letting it rest and relax. These are the benefits for the body.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 12th, 2017 at 4:07 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

conebeckham said:

How do you know?

Crazywisdom said:

Bc his quote says so.

You know Cone, the Drikung guys shared we me Lawapa's Dakini Mahamudra. Milarepa used this. It's supposed to be their fastest method even in a half day. But I practiced it for 5 years. It so secret he said if I shared it he'd shoot me. The key point of creation is instantaneous and without a doubt. The completion finishes with a seed syllable that you visualize in nonmeditation. If you can grok that. Or does it just appear as blessing? not so easy to say. So I totally get where you guys are coming from. But, while it's fast and equal and great, it's not the same thing as spontaneous appearances in DC like the day and dark practices.

conebeckham said:

That's nice.

There are indeed many profound practices that relate to creation stage, and related to completion stage with signs. Most people know very little about these things, and consider deity yoga as merely some sort of imaginary construct, or as a method of obtaining specific "goals" or mundane siddhis, etc. With regard to the methods of Creation and Completion, and with regards to Paths outside the two stages, I have transmissions and explanations, but I know only a hair's tip. But I'm glad you've found something that you enjoy, and that you feel connected to, and that you feel brings benefit.

Malcolm wrote:

Creation stage is a constructed imaginary pure vision. As such, it is very far away from the meaning of the great perfection.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 11th, 2017 at 8:45 PM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This idea, that Madyamaka/prajnaoaramita path has same result as HYT is already directly contradicted by the Samputa Tantra.

Vasana said:

It's not a Tantra I have any familiarity with beyond a passing quote. Know which chapters? From a PHD thesis on the first 4 chapters of the Samputa Tantra it mentions the 15th century scholar, Mkhas grub rje who states, "The doctrine (dar ana)of all (four) sections of the tantras is Prasah-gika." I guess that's disputable?

Even so, what would the reasons then be for the many proclamations we find of their same underlying ground? It seems like more than just skillfull means for settling disputes or unifying splits but I don't know.

'This freedom from cogitation is the Mahamudra.

The freedom from extremes is the great Middle-Way.

Encompassing everything, it is also called the Great Perfection.

May i obtain confidence in this single reality that, once understood, brings about all realizations.'- 3rd Karmapa Rangjung Dorje

'It is the perfection of wisdom, the Middle Way.

Is it what pacifies proliferations and sufferings, the Great Seal.

It is the essential reality, the Great Perfection.

The primordially extinguished state, the basic reality, it is the clear light, the mind's nature, the self-arisen wisdom [Yeshe],

Although it is labeled using many names,

the meaning [of those systems] is one in nature.'- Longchenpa

Malcolm wrote:

Prajnaparamita as a path only results in 11th bhumi buddhahood. Lower tantra, according to this tantra only result in 12th bhumi buddhahood. These yanas do not comprehend all phenomena as the display of pristine consciousness and do not lead to the result called Vajradhara, the 13th bhumi. Prajnaparamita, madhyamaka, and so on as names for reality are synonymous with Dzogchen, Mahamudra and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 11th, 2017 at 9:42 AM

Title: Re: Bon Dzogchen & Nyingma/Kagyu Dzogchen...same or different?

Content:

gzodzilpa said:

Hi,

I wasn't referring to rainbow bodies, though you are right to also point that out as for some reason that is a common misunderstanding on the web.

Look here:

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=40&t=25145&p=382340&hilit=path+appearances#p382340>

Malcolm wrote:

Most of the confusion here results from the fact that in the Great Perfection, the three kāyas are regarded as the path appearances, and not the result.

Marc said:

Hmmm... Interesting ! Thanks for pointing that out.

"The Three Kayas as appearances of the Path" is something I had heard before, but not to cancel out those at the level on the Fruition...

The context I heard it in was that of affirming / "proving" the necessity of the Path and its practice, based on the fact that the 3 Kayas were not the level on the Base, but "appearances of the Path"...

It would be interesting to have Malcolm deepening & clarifying this nuance...

Cheers

M

Malcolm wrote:

It is asserted in some early Dzogchen commentaries attributed to Vimalamitra that the three kayas do not exist in the result.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 11th, 2017 at 9:35 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Reynolds claims that Bonpos indeed argue that the fruit of Dzogchen excels that of the path of transformation.

And we know that the of transformation has a result that excels that of sutra.

One can find also arguments in ancient Buddhist Dzogchen commentaries that the practice of various yanas, apart from ati, lead only to various heavens where further practice is needed.

Vasana said:

Doesn't that contradict the usual comparisons of the fruit of Prajnāpāramitā, Mādhyamika, Mahāmudrā and Dzogchen being alike?

Malcolm wrote:

This idea, that Mādhyamaka/prajñāpāramitā path has same result as HYT is already directly contradicted by the Samputa Tantra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 11th, 2017 at 2:58 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Reynolds claims that Bonpos indeed argue that the fruit of Dzogchen excels that of the path of transformation.

And we know that the of transformation has a result that excels that of sutra.

One can find also arguments in ancient Buddhist Dzogchen commentaries that the practice of various yanas, apart from ati, lead only to various heavens where further practice is needed.

conebeckham said:

Whether one is practicing the stages of creation and completion or not; whether one successfully practices or not If one applies oneself--in the end, there is nothing within the limit of our experience which is beyond the stages of creation and completion.

Gyurme Kundrol said:

If this came from HH Getse Rinpoche I doubt he means that Dzogchen is somehow within the limits of this, or that Dzogchen is somehow bound to this.

Having heard him teach I can say that he definitely has taught at least one time that Dzogchen can be practiced in itself, by itself, by people who have no special requisites beforehand like Ngondro or mantra recitations and without involvement in creation and completion stage practice as a necessity for engaging Dzogchen. He never said of course that people shouldn't practice, he did nothing but encourage people to be humble and practice and generally said it's a good idea to practice, but never said it is a must.

conebeckham said:

Again, I am not arguing method, per se, but looking at experience from the POV of a Two Stages model. If you feel that Dzogchen is somehow outside the limit of the Two Stages, not as method, but as experience, you are in a sense arguing that the result of the Two Stages, or the "fruition," if you want look at this from a gradualist perspective, differs from the completely stable Dzogchen

I obviously have no way in which to know his true meaning and lack his ability in Dharma in every respect, but if I had to guess at a meaning here I would think he meant that since all phenomena arise from the same ground from which either the phenomena of Samsara or Nirvana arise, nothing we do, whether we succeed or not in doing it, moves from that ground. Creation and completion stage also never move from this- what one might call "the limits of our experience". In this sense experience refers to knowable phenomena and limits refers to the full range of that phenomena from the peak of mundane existence all the way to the grossest appearance of a physical body, all of which can be reified by conceptual mind and bifurcated as either the states of Samsara or Nirvana, all of which can be clung to and can act as a basis for generating karma. Unlike ultimate reality which falls outside of what you might call "limited" and "experience", since the nature of ultimate reality is endowed with the seven vajra qualities like immutability, indestructibility and so forth it is not really limited, and since it falls outside being part of the conceptual realm it is beyond experience. Ultimately all appearing phenomena are in the stage of "creation" and all dissolving phenomena are in the stage of "completion" and this is all that's ever been happening, willed or not, intentional or not, successful or not. All appearing phenomena never move from the space of one's own primordial awareness and so whether there is the appearance of a deity or of a cigarette butt, in either case it's a self appearing, self arisen phenomena that is arising, abiding, and dissolving in the same way that all other knowable phenomena have always been doing.

I understand the meaning to be something like this, yes. The only question I would ask is regarding your assertion, or assumption, that all "experience" is within the conceptual realm. Certainly we reify experiences in conceptual thought.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 10th, 2017 at 11:31 PM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

conebeckham said:

When we talk about them, yes.

When we practice, maybe--or perhaps not. Either way, there is nothing beyond the limits of creation and completion. Whether we know it or not.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, it certainly is a characteristic sarma view that Dzogchen is part of the completion stage. But this negates Dzogchen being an independent vehicle.

conebeckham said:

First, I am paraphrasing Kathok Getse Rinpoche, not really a "Sarmapa."

Second, I never said Dzogchen isn't an "independent Path."

Malcolm wrote:

We've been over this. Modern Nyingma is pretty Kadampified.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 10th, 2017 at 7:50 PM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

conebeckham said:

You bet. And Dzogchen.

Malcolm wrote:

So you are asserting that both are conceptual.

conebeckham said:

When we talk about them, yes.

When we practice, maybe--or perhaps not. Either way, there is nothing beyond the limits of creation and completion. Whether we know it or not.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, it certainly is a characteristic sarma view that Dzogchen is part of the completion stage. But this negates Dzogchen being an independent vehicle.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 10th, 2017 at 10:58 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

conebeckham said:

Whether one is practicing the stages of creation and completion or not; whether one successfully practices or not If one applies oneself--in the end, there is nothing within the limit of our experience which is beyond the stages of creation and completion.

Malcolm wrote:

Even mahamudra?

conebeckham said:

You bet. And Dzogchen.

Malcolm wrote:

So you are asserting that both are conceptual.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 10th, 2017 at 10:22 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

conebeckham said:

Whether one is practicing the stages of creation and completion or not; whether one successfully practices or not If one applies oneself--in the end, there is nothing within the limit of our experience which is beyond the stages of creation and completion.

Malcolm wrote:

Even mahamudra?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 10th, 2017 at 10:17 AM

Title: Re: Bon Dzogchen & Nyingma/Kagyu Dzogchen...same or different?

Content:

Stefos said:

Hi everyone,

What is the difference between the Bon Dzogchen lineage and the Nyingma/Kagyu Dzogchen lineage?

Is the Bon Tenzin W. Rinpoche teaches non Buddhist?

Thank you,

Stefos

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen is Dzogchen. No difference in meaning at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 10th, 2017 at 5:40 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

muni said:

You've met Dzogchen teachings. You are practicing Dzogchen teachings. You don't need to worry about your position in samsara anymore.

But then is it of no importance whether there are Compassionate action to relieve the pain of a fellow? We see how the Bodhisattvas act for the welfare of all in simple ways, as helping them out of samsara as much as possible. How Buddhahood can be realized without trying/wishing to help fellows, not to leave them "alone" in despair or distress of samsara?

Help is possible when the obscurations aren't, when perfect perception is, right? The Kindness of such help, we receive, is just incredible amazing!

Malcolm wrote:

Compassion is part of the basis of each and every sentient being. It functions naturally even in a state of obscuration.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 10th, 2017 at 5:21 AM

Title: Re: Aren't all Tantras essentially mind termas/pure visions?

Content:

ClearblueSky said:

Though there is a distinction made between these two, I'm not sure I actually understand the difference when it comes down to it. I'm particularly referring to "pure visions", which are often said to be received from deities (as opposed to something that was necessarily hidden by Padmasambhava to be found later), and they contain a practice (as opposed to someone just seeing a deity for example).

When I look at the lineages of early tantras, that are not considered termas, it appears the same way, e.g. something like: A primordial Buddha, to some Bodhisattva or deity, eventually to some historical human and so on.

Assuming neither have an unbroken oral lineage from Shakyamuni Buddha, they basically seem like the same thing. So other than their age, lineage, or possibly size... is there actually a difference?

Malcolm wrote:

Not really.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 10th, 2017 at 5:20 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Grigoris said:

That is exactly what everybody else seems to be talking about.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, then they are missing the point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 10th, 2017 at 1:42 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, there are some people, who because they have some understanding of emptiness, make this kind of mistake. However, this is not what I am talking about.

dzogchungpa said:

The following passage from ChNN's commentary on Longchenpa's "Advice From The Heart" seems relevant:

The Fifteenth Word of Advice

Proffering mindless talk on emptiness and disregarding cause and effect,
You may think that non-action is the ultimate point of the Teaching;
Yet to abandon the two accumulations will destroy the good fortune of spiritual practice.
Integrate them both! This is my advice from the heart.

Some people who have only an intellectual understanding think that emptiness is the real nature of everything and say, 'Everything is empty, so it does not matter whether we do good or bad'. Saying this, they disregard the relative level, the relationship between cause and effect. There are many people who have this attitude. Among the followers of Dzogchen many think that this teaching requires no limitations, and that they are free to do anything they like, and they actually live out that idea. However, this attitude amounts to disrespect toward the relationship of cause and effect. Why? We are not always in a state of emptiness; we simply have a knowledge of emptiness. We know with our intellect that everything is empty, but in reality, we eat and sleep and so on, and all these actions occur in the relative condition. In the relative condition we must give the proper consideration to the relationship between cause and effect. Disregarding that will bring many unwanted consequences for our future.

Moreover, in the Dzogchen teachings it is said that when one dwells in instant presence, in the continuation of that state, one does not need any effort nor any concepts. To apply effort or to harbor concepts at that time would be negative. For that reason, Dzogchen speaks of there being 'nothing to do' or 'non-action'. This is different from thinking of oneself as a Dzogchen practitioner simply because one has an understanding that all is empty. That is just intellectual knowledge, and, on the pretext of that knowledge, believing that one is in a state of Dzogchen, one neglects the two accumulations of wisdom and merit.

Accumulation of merit means performing good actions—for example, cleaning the temple, placing flowers or lights before the statues of the buddhas, making various offerings, helping the poor people we meet. With these actions we accumulate merit.

Accumulation or increase of wisdom means, when time permits it, staying in a calm state or, if we have knowledge of our real nature, developing that knowledge. If we do not apply these two accumulations, our spiritual practice will not unfold in a perfect way. Thus, Longchenpa advises us that the relative condition and contemplation must not be separated but should go together. When we notice that we are not in a state of contemplation, we should try to make the best of the relative condition we are in.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 9th, 2017 at 11:08 PM

Title: Re: Re:

Content:

Vasana said:

But it does lead to the conducive circumstances required to meet and practice the teachings that can lead to Buddhahood. Just as the mind purified of obscurations and samsaric seeds can help someone practice the teachings that can lead to Buddhahood with less obstacles and perhaps more clarity and other conducive mental states like inspiration and diligence.

Like someone said earlier, unless you're non-distracted in Rigpa, or the natural state in any given moment, you're in ma-Rigpa. If you're distracted and in ma-Rigpa, you might as well be enacting the liberative karmas that aren't extinguished until complete Buddhahood. If we're not in the natural state or generating conditioned virtue, the chances are we're fostering distraction and negative acts. I get that on the one hand, these aren't causal realizations, but we have our relative condition of body speech and mind that can be influenced positively or negatively while on the path which can't be separated from the stabilisation of the meditation/result.

Malcolm wrote:

You've met Dzogchen teachings. You are practicing Dzogchen teachings. You don't need to worry about your position in samsara anymore.

Vasana said:

I think it all still applies. Practicing still means stabilizing non distraction which is not guaranteed if you let your dualistic habits run wild without recognition. People can find relative purification and accumulative practices helpful in shaping overall mind state to life & practice.

Then there's the need/benefits of upholding the regular Samayas if not abiding in the knowledge of the profound samayas. Not to mention the consequences of not doing so.

Malcolm wrote:

It's all just hope and fear, man. I would address your points at more length but I am on a road trip, replying from a phone. But in brief, you have received the teachings, you have understood the profound point, you should be confident in that. There is literally nothing else you have to do.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 9th, 2017 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: Hashang's view is actually profound[Extracted from a previous thread]

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

BTW Khenpo Palden Sherab has a book on the subject.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 9th, 2017 at 10:41 PM

Title: Re: Hashang's view is actually profound[Extracted from a previous thread]

Content:

tingdzin said:

In Nubchen Sangye Yeshe's now-well-known work, he lists the profundity of approaches in ascending order as Sutrayana (presumably if not actually represented by Kamalashila), Ch'an (or what he understood as Ch'an, represented by the Hva Shang), the mantra path, and Dzogchen. The whole subject in all its nuances has been done to death in the scholarly literature by people who can read Sanskrit, Tibetan, and Chinese, and if you are really interested in the subject, you might start by reading some of that, because, as you are aware, internet posters on the subject generally have an axe to grind, and discussions usually dissolve into self-justifying polemics very quickly. If you like, I could recommend some books and articles to get you started. Van Schaik's book, which was recommended by the poster above while I was writing, would have been on my list.

Malcolm wrote:

Very few of those scholars have any practical experience with the subject matter. They too often have axes to grind, one way or another.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 9th, 2017 at 10:37 PM

Title: Re: Hashang's view is actually profound[Extracted from a previous thread]

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

...Hashang's view is much more profound than Kamalashila's. But centuries of misrepresentation and politics have obscured this fact.

Brunelleschi said:

This is very interesting. Could you please expound as to why it is that Hashang's view is actually more profound?

What I had gathered from the standard accounts of the debate was that Hashang's view was based on the path of renunciation and hence, from a Tibetan Buddhist-perspective less profound than a Tantric perspective (path of transformation). Do I interpret you correctly if I say that Hashang's view was actually a part of/or closer to the path of self-liberation(Great Perfection)?

I'm not interested in polemics. I'm genuinely interested.

Relevant prior threads:

Tibetan Buddhist View of Zen - <https://dharma.wheel.net/viewtopic.php?t=3886>

Malcolm wrote:

The primary difference, practically speaking, is that Kamalashila's method is to meditate the two truths alternately; Hashang's method is to meditate them simultaneously. Nubchen states that the former is based on provisional sutras; the latter, definitive sutras. Nubchen further clarifies that while mahayoga is gradual, since it possesses direct introduction it is actually more rapid than Chan. But because its view is causal it is inferior to the approach of Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 9th, 2017 at 8:22 PM

Title: Re: Re:

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

They may say such things, but then they turn around and insist that their students must gather the two accumulations, practice the paths of renunciation and transformation and so on. That seems strange to me.

Grigoris said:

It is probably because they can see that their students are not going to achieve Buddhahood in this lifetime and so they give them the tools and means to deal with things for their next few hundred-thousand lifetimes.

Let's face it: very few people "get it" during direct introduction and of those that "get it" even fewer still can stabilise it. That means that Dzogchen essentially becomes a doorway into Vajrayana Yoga practice as the student requires something to stop them slipping into further delusion. The two accumulations are that "something". They teach the two accumulations out of compassion for their students.

Nothing strange about that.

Malcolm wrote:

This is completely wrong.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 9th, 2017 at 8:19 PM

Title: Re: Re:

Content:

heart said:

Could be he said that, but are you showing respect now? He also said recently that we accumulate merit whenever we can with dedication.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Accumulating merit is fine, it just does not lead to buddhahood.

Vasana said:

But it does lead to the conducive circumstances required to meet and practice the teachings that can lead to Buddhahood. Just as the mind purified of obscurations and samsaric seeds can help someone practice the teachings that can lead to Buddhahood with less obstacles and perhaps more clarity and other conducive mental states like inspiration and diligence.

Like someone said earlier, unless you're non-distracted in Rigpa, or the natural state in any given moment, you're in ma-Rigpa. If you're distracted and in ma-Rigpa, you might as well be enacting the liberative karmas that aren't extinguished until complete Buddhahood. If we're not in the natural state or generating conditioned virtue, the chances are we're fostering distraction and negative acts. I get that on the one hand, these aren't causal realizations, but we have our relative condition of body speech and mind that can be influenced positively or negatively while on the path which can't be separated from the stabilisation of the meditation/result.

Malcolm wrote:

You've met Dzogchen teachings. You are practicing Dzogchen teachings. You don't need to worry about your position in samsara anymore.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 9th, 2017 at 6:11 AM

Title: Re: Re:

Content:

heart said:

I see, but it isn't one or the other. Even if you have recognised the natural state gathering the two accumulations is still a good idea. That is also a lot easier if you recognised the natural state.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Once, when explaining the dedication of merit that refers to the two accumulations, ChNN said we recite it out of respect, but we (meaning Dzogchen practitioners) don't believe it.

heart said:

Could be he said that, but are you showing respect now? He also said recently that we accumulate merit whenever we can with dedication.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Accumulating merit is fine, it just does not lead to buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 9th, 2017 at 3:37 AM

Title: Re: Re:

Content:

heart said:

There is something strange in that statement. It is like you don't believe other masters say Dzogchen is primary. My experience don't correspond with that at all.

I also never heard a Nyingma master say that Dzogchen is a result acquired from causes. Where do you get this things from?

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

They may say such things, but then they turn around and insist that their students must gather the two accumulations, practice the paths of renunciation and transformation and so on. That seems strange to me.

To each their own.

heart said:

I see, but it isn't one or the other. Even if you have recognised the natural state gathering the two accumulations is still a good idea. That is also a lot easier if you recognised the natural state.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Perhaps, if you doubt your experience.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 9th, 2017 at 3:34 AM

Title: Re: Re:

Content:

heart said:

There is something strange in that statement. It is like you don't believe other masters say Dzogchen is primary. My experience don't correspond with that at all.

I also never heard a Nyingma master say that Dzogchen is a result acquired from causes. Where do you get this things from?

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

They may such things, but then they turn around and insist the their students must gather the two accumulations, practice the paths of renunciation and transformation and so on. That seems strange to me.

To each their own.

heart said:

I see, but it isn't one or the other. Even if you have recognised the natural state gathering the two accumulations is still a good idea. That is also a lot easier if you recognised the natural state.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Once, when explaining the dedication of merit that refers to the two accumulations, ChNN said we recite it out of respect, but we (meaning Dzogchen practitioners) don't believe it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 9th, 2017 at 3:19 AM

Title: Re: Re:

Content:

heart said:

I just have to ask, the fact that ChNNR just finished a 10 day long drubchen with "sadhanas, malas, vajras and bells" doing his own Mandarava practice don't make you feel a little uncomfortable about that statement?

I think Florin made the point earlier, quoting from the Kunjed Gyalpo, that practicing lower yanas will block your access to Dzogchen for a very long time. But perhaps that is only when other teachers do it?

I don't mean any disrespect but it really makes no sense to me.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Mandarava is a secondary practice, and malas, vajras and bells are extraneous even with respect to such practices. The ritual instruments are mainly a collective practice thing. So, I feel no discomfort making such statements since ChNN has made such statements countless thousands of times.

As far as Florin's comment goes, if someone thinks that the state of Dzogchen is a result they will acquire from causes, this indeed will block them.

heart said:

There is something strange in that statement. It is like you don't believe other masters say Dzogchen is primary. My experience doesn't correspond with that at all.

I also never heard a Nyingma master say that Dzogchen is a result acquired from causes. Where do you get these things from?

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

They may say such things, but then they turn around and insist their students must gather the two accumulations, practice the paths of renunciation and transformation and so on. That seems strange to me.

To each their own.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 9th, 2017 at 3:01 AM

Title: Re: Re:

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

You have, however, said

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=48&t=23955#p372457>:

Malcolm wrote:

.

Yup.

heart said:

I just have to ask, the fact that ChNNR just finished a 10 day long drubchen with "sadhanas, malas, vajras and bells" doing his own Mandarava practice don't make you feel a little uncomfortable about that statement?

I think Florin made the point earlier, quoting from the Kunjed Gyalpo, that practicing lower yanas will block your to access to Dzogchen for a very long time. But perhaps that is only when other teacher do it?

I don't mean any disrespect but it really makes no sense to me.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Mandarava is a secondary practice, and malas, vajras and bells are extraneous even with respect to such practices. The ritual instruments are mainly a collective practice thing. So, I feel no discomfort making such statements since ChNN has made such statements countless thousands of times.

As far as Florin,s comment goes, if someone think that the state of Dzogchen is a result they will acquire from causes, this indeed will block them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 9th, 2017 at 1:57 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I never stated that my teacher is the only teacher who teaches Dzogchen "correctly." I just said that he is the most interesting teacher of Dzogchen for all kinds of reasons that I do not think you can really understand.

Grigoris said:

I think you will find that any one of us here will make the same statement about our teachers too, which kind of cancels out the relevance of the statement, really...

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think you really comprehend ChNN.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 9th, 2017 at 1:55 AM

Title: Re:

Content:

smcj said:

Yep. And Trungpa is the only lama to teach Kagyu Dharma the way it is supposed to be taught.

Malcolm wrote:

I never stated that my teacher is the only teacher who teaches Dzogchen "correctly." I just said that he is the most interesting teacher of Dzogchen for all kinds of reasons that I do not think you can really understand.

dzogchungpa said:

You have, however, said

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=48&t=23955#p372457>:

Malcolm wrote:

While there are many good teachers alive today, there is only one living Vidyādhara of Dzogchen teachings. Everyone better meet him while they still have the chance if they are truly interested in Dzogchen teachings. Everyone else can stick with their sadhanas, mālās, vajras, and bells.

.

Yup.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 8th, 2017 at 11:26 PM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

smcj said:

Yep. And Trungpa is the only lama to teach Kagyu Dharma the way it is supposed to be taught.

Malcolm wrote:

I never stated that my teacher is the only teacher who teaches Dzogchen "correctly." I just said that he is the most interesting teacher of Dzogchen for all kinds of reasons that I do not think you can really understand.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 8th, 2017 at 8:13 PM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

smcj said:

I'm starting to think these 'caveat emptors' are disclaimers more for your own posts and 'buyers'.

If you read the signature at the bottom of all my posts you'll see that everything I write always has a disclaimer. As far as I'm concerned the best reaction to any of my posts is if it precipitates some contact with a traditional lineage holding teacher. Of course that includes Nyingmapas, hence my disagreement with Malcolm's dismissiveness.

Think of it this way; what if I was dismissive of all Kagyu lamas except Trungpa? There are many people that feel that way. None of them happen to post here. But if I were to express the sentiment that only Trungpa has the Kagyu teachings right, don't you think I should expect to get called on it every now and then?

Malcolm wrote:

I didn't state that ChNN was the only person teaching Dzogchen, nor did I denigrate any of other teachers who are. For the most part, however, they do not interest me very much. All I stated that ChNN was the only person teaching Dzogchen right now that I find interesting.

As for my opinion about Tibetan Buddhism's moribund state of development, it is a sentiment I have expressed many times before. There hasn't been a single interesting development in the intellectual history of Tibetan Buddhism since the 15th century. Since the 15th century, the intellectual history of Tibetan Buddhism has been one merely of institutional consolidation, money, and power. This should not be construed as an argument that there have been no interesting authors, teachers and so on. It is a statement that even despite the fact that there have most certainly been interesting authors since the 15th century, (Ganden Chopel comes to mind) and doubtlessly, realized masters, there has been virtually no development in the intellectual history of Tibetan Buddhism.

ChNN's chief role has been the experiential revival of Dzogchen traditions that had fallen into obscurity, as well as opening the West to the broad range of the teachings of the Great Perfection and the ancient pre-modern Nyingma tradition — not just Yeshe Lama and texts like it that form the main body of what Tibetans practice as Dzogchen in the present day.

In Tibet, of course, we had my teacher, the late Khenpo Jigme Phuntsog, who is perhaps one of the pre-eminent interpreters of Longchenpas oeuvre; Khenpo Munsel and his students, who took great pains to gather and publish all he could find of obscure Nyingma texts and publish them in what we call "The Very Large Kama"; Dudjom Rinpoche before him who edited whatever he could find into what we call the "Large Kama."

And, BTW, I never called ChNN an "outlier" — that is a term you have insisted on introducing the conversation in your quixotic attempt to explain tradition of which you have little understanding (for example, your silly attempt to force gzhan stong down everyone's throat as "orthodox Nyingma view."). In other words, my friend, you really have no idea what you are talking about. But I am sure that my admonition will not prevent you from continuing to share with us the effluvia of misguided logorrhea to which you are prone when it comes to the subject of the Nyingma school.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 8th, 2017 at 12:44 PM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Vasana said:

I still think you're still reading too much in to that sentence personally. Voicing a preference to follow Garab Dorje doesn't equate to disparaging the Nyingma system in the slightest.

smcj said:

Or maybe it does.

Malcolm wrote:

You really have no idea how much early Nyingma ideas completely contradict the modern, institutionally-sanitized, homogenized, intellectually-moribund Tibetan Buddhism we see at present.

smcj said:

However he does place ChNN into context this way:

Malcolm wrote:

It is these texts that interest me. Pre-15th century, very interesting; post 15th century, increasingly less so with every passing century. (Except of course, the writings and teachings of ChNN. But he is really old school.)

smcj said:

Suffice it to say that he sees ChNN as being an outlier--which he likes.

Caveat Emptor.

Malcolm wrote:

You are a Kagyu. Dzogchen is none of your business.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 8th, 2017 at 8:01 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Grigoris said:

If it was not for the institutionalisation of the Nyingmapa, I don't know how many of the precious teachings that have currently have been handed down to us would be in existence.

Malcolm wrote:

In fact, the institutionalization of Nyingma is has lead to a precarious existence for many teachings. Older more obscure ones get left on the shelf in the favor of the latest terma craze — even Mipham complains about this at length.

For example, Longchenpa lists a total of 84 texts that accompanied the 17 tantras — only 10 of these have been located and published. Hopefully more exist moldering in some library, but for now, we have a paucity of material from the early period of Nyingma, especially Dzogchen — but we have enough. It is these texts that interest me. Pre-15th century, very interesting; post 15th century, increasingly less so with every passing century. (Except of course, the writings and teachings of ChNN. But he is really old school.)

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 8th, 2017 at 6:52 AM

Title: Re: what the buddha didn't teach

Content:

Wayfarer said:

Do you find teachings about chakra anywhere apart from tantra or Buddhist yoga?

Grigoris said:

Do you find teachings about karma anywhere apart from Buddhism?

Malcolm wrote:

Hinduism, Jainism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 8th, 2017 at 6:16 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

conebeckham said:

By this comment, you are differentiating between Nyingma and Dzogchen?

Grigoris said:

He already did that about 5-6 pages ago, calling everyone (except himself, the only true Dzogchenpa and follower of Garab Dorje) a Nyingma modernist.

<https://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=48&t=25216&start=180#p383762>

Malcolm wrote:

No, Greg. That is fake news. What I mean by modern Nyingma is the rise of the Nyingma school in general as an institutional entity. This happened in the 17th century. Prior to this, Nyingma had only one major monastic institution founded by Phagmo Drupa's younger brother, Dampa Desheg, in Eastern Tibet during the 12th century, and expanded in 1656.

Dorje Drag in 1659, and Mindroling in 1676 were established under the patronage of the Fifth Dalai Lama; Palyul was founded in 1665; Dzogchen in 1685 and Shechen, in 1735.

Basically, prior to the 17th century, Nyingma had no major institutions, unlike Sakya, Kagyu and Gelug, Jonang, or even Bon. Prior to this Nyingma persisted primarily in family lineages and on the fringes of other monastic institutions.

The person who benefitted the Nyingmapas the most, as can be seen from the above, was the Fifth Dalai Lama. He was responsible for the rise of modern Nyingma.

This has both positive and negative aspects. The positive aspect is that of course Nyingma received major funding and patronage.

The negative aspect is that by the 19th century, Nyingma had lost much of its iconoclastic flavor and has come to resemble the Sarma schools far more than it is different from them. I consider this the Kadampification of Nyingma (and of course, we will all recall Milarepa was no fan of the Kadamapas, calling Dromton a demon who had crippled the Dharma in Tibet because of his control over Atisha).

Indeed, one of the reasons Longchenpa became so popular, apart from his systematization of the Great Perfection literature of the Nyinthig, is that after lingering in total obscurity for nearly three hundred years, as a result of his Sakya/Kadampa education, he had created an amazing graduated curriculum in the Sems nyid ngal so cycle. This has become the basis for the institutional presentation of Nyingma teachings today, especially as a result of the revival of his popularity by Jigme Lingpa. Ironically, Longchenpa himself was no fan of gradualism in a real sense, writing in defense of Hashang Mahāyāna. Longchenpa also largely remained aloof from the polemical battles that later Nyingmapas waded into with gusto in the 15th, 16th, and 17th centuries.

The adoption Sakya, Gelug, or Kagyu monastic curricula in these monasteries has also impacted Nyingma in the sense that modern Nyingmapas are trained in a lam rim curriculum heavily influenced by the Kadampa school. Hence, I distinguish modern Nyingma from the wilder, woolier, more interesting, and more heterodox Nyingma of Nubchen, Rongzom, early Nyinthig and other earlier trends of the Great Perfection. You really have no idea how much early Nyingma ideas completely contradict the modern, institutionally-sanitized, homogenized, intellectually-moribund Tibetan Buddhism we see at present.

We can see an encroaching homogenization of Nyingma which really begins during 17th century, once the Nyingmapas began to have a coherent institutional stake in the Tibetan games of power, prestige and influence.

I have to say Greg, for an Anarchist, you certainly are a staunch supporter of the religious hierarchy of Tibetan Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 8th, 2017 at 5:24 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

conebeckham said:

Or for those who misunderstand Dzogchen. It is presented that way, as well. But it's all a fable, as is much that has been written about Milarepa. Nevertheless, all Tibetan Buddhist practitioners are happy to claim some relationship to him as a lineal ancestor, or practitioner of their system --except, perhaps, the Sakyapas.

Malcolm wrote:

And Nyingma

conebeckham said:

By this comment, you are differentiating between Nyingma and Dzogchen?

Malcolm wrote:

Nyingmapas do not really claim Mila as one of their own, despite the fact that he passed on some important Nyingma lineages.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 8th, 2017 at 3:11 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

sherabpa said:

Milarepa's encounter with Dzogchen is a cautionary tale for all would-be simultaneists!

Grigoris said:

His encounter with Dzogchen is a cautionary tale for all those that believe Dzogchen is the one-and-only path to liberation.

conebeckham said:

Or for those who misunderstand Dzogchen. It is presented that way, as well. But it's all a fable, as is much that has been written about Milarepa. Nevertheless, all Tibetan Buddhist practitioners are happy to claim some relationship to him as a lineal ancestor, or practitioner of their system --except, perhaps, the Sakyapas.

Malcolm wrote:

And Nyingma

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 8th, 2017 at 12:11 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

sherabpa said:

Milarepa's encounter with Dzogchen is a cautionary tale for all would-be simultaneists!

Malcolm wrote:

Not at all. Mila had ten Nyingma gurus before he met Marpa. I think the account of Mila meeting with Rongton is clearly a political story meant to denigrate Dzogchen teachings, reflective of the uncertainty about Dzogchen among Tibetans because of various log sngags sun phyung texts in circulation at that time influential in Kadampa circles. In fact Mila received Dzogchen teachings from at least two teachers.

Also keep in mind that Mila is universally regarded as an emanation of Mañjuśrimitra in Kagyu.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 7th, 2017 at 11:54 PM

Title: Re: man ngag sde question

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In the Bon tradition, Dzogchen is much more widely mingled with its literature overall.

gzodzilpa said:

Ah that makes sense.

A little more if you'll indulge me, I am trying to get a better grip on the different presentations of kun gzhi in Dzogchen.

Okay in the man ngag sde system, the gzhi is a set of generic qualities of an individual consciousness. When the neutral awareness latent in this is ignorant of the gzhi's true condition, it stirs the vayu which in turn leads to the arising of the kun gzhi, and from there to the kun gzhi rnam shes and so forth. Assuming I have that right, it is the kun gzhi that is the repository of traces (or is it the kun gzhi rnam shes or both)? Furthermore since here kun gzhi basically equates to ignorance, it indeed dissolves upon realization?

Malcolm wrote:

In man ngag lde, the kun zhi is another name for mind, and is distinct from the gzhi. Bonpo texts do not seem to make a distinction between gzhi and kun gzhi, at least not in the ZZNG. In ZZNG, kun gzhi is equated with byang chub sems. For example, the the ZZNG the kun gzhi is defined as having the nature of the three kāyas.

In the Rig pa rang shar, however, those who identify the kun gzhi as dharmakāya are strongly negated.

So there is a difference in terminology, with ZZNG using kun gzhi where man ngag sde uses gzhi.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 7th, 2017 at 10:45 PM

Title: Re: man ngag sde question

Content:

gzodzilpa said:

Thanks. So one could say that the commentary that mentions this in reference to Dzogchen practice and alludes to the Six Essential Points text is providing a maha view on ati practice? For example in JLA's The Six Lamps, the section on complimentary instructions pg. 127.

Malcolm wrote:

Bon does not make use of the division of maha, anu, and ati. The comparison does not apply and it is best not to mix Bonpo doxologies with Buddhist ones.

gzodzilpa said:

I didn't think it made use of it, and it is informative to know that an approximate comparison does not apply. Thanks for the exchange Lapon, your time is much appreciated.

Malcolm wrote:

In the Bon tradition, Dzogchen is much more widely mingled with its literature overall. Of course, it is also considered a separate independent path, the path of self-liberation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 7th, 2017 at 9:20 PM

Title: Re: man ngag sde question

Content:

gzodzilpa said:

In the man ngag sde system is it also held that thigles enter and dissolve in the central channel, or is that considered a deviation?

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen practice is not based on moving and dissolving bindus.

gzodzilpa said:

Thanks. So one could say that the commentary that mentions this in reference to Dzogchen practice and alludes to the Six Essential Points text is providing a maha view on ati practice? For example in JLA's The Six Lamps, the section on complimentary instructions pg. 127.

Malcolm wrote:

Bon does not make use of the division of maha, anu, and ati. The comparison does not apply and it is best not to mix Bonpo doxologies with Buddhist ones.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 7th, 2017 at 7:40 PM

Title: Re: man ngag sde question

Content:

gzodzilpa said:

In the man ngag sde system is it also held that thigles enter and dissolve in the central channel, or is that considered a deviation?

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen practice is not based on moving and dissolving bindus.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 7th, 2017 at 7:38 PM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

smcj said:

Marpa taught Mila Mahamudra. Mila taught Mahamudra.

Just accept it.

Malcolm wrote:

Marpa was not Mila's only teacher. Just accept it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 7th, 2017 at 4:54 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is based in the principle found in the Sandhivāyākaraṇa Tantra:

The single beautiful vajra phrase becomes many different ones

according to the divisions in the inclinations of migrating beings.

tomamundsen said:

How wonderful!

Malcolm wrote:

This is a very common idea. For example, according to the Four Medicine Tantras, when Medicine Buddha taught the four retinues, he emanated the teacher Rigpa'i Yeshe, who appeared to the four retinues—the buddhists, devas, rishis, and nonbuddhists—each perceived their own teacher teaching the four tantras, but heard them as texts in their own tradition. In other words if a Buddha is teaching Dharma, a Christian will hear the gospels and a Muslim, the Koran.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, April 7th, 2017 at 12:07 AM

Title: Re: Periods in Buddhist Cosmology

Content:

Jyotish said:

And for that many years there was no evolution or change in terms of human consciousness(intelligence), merits, etc.?

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddhist point of view is that at the beginning of the Mahābrahma eon, lifespans could not be counted. As the merit of beings decline and afflictions increase, the lifespan drops to 10,000,000 years, then to 100,000, 80,000, 70,000, 60,000, 10,000, 5,000, 1000, 500, 300 and finally 100 years, our present age.

So basically, the Buddhist account is one of continued degeneration, and things will get worse from here on out. There is another point, which is that based on certain conditions, according to Dzogchen tantras, the length of the Buddha's teachings in Jambudvīpa itself are divided into three periods which last a total of 15 million years.

During the first period, the primary mode of practice is making offerings to the images of the buddhas and so on. This period, called the period of the doctrine of the body, lasts 7.5 million years. The period of the doctrine of speech lasts five million years, and during this time, recitation and deity yoga are the main practices to follow. In the final 2.5 million years, the doctrine of mind, only samadhi is effective. The four yugas last 3,456,000 years. Thus, it could be argued that, from a Dzogchen point of view, at this time only samadhi is an effective means of liberation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 6th, 2017 at 11:52 PM

Title: Re: Periods in Buddhist Cosmology

Content:

Dharmic said:

The term used in the Sūtra is saṃkṣobha.

Malcolm wrote:

The Sanskrit term for the five degenerations is pañcakaṣāyāḥ.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 6th, 2017 at 11:50 PM

Title: Re: Periods in Buddhist Cosmology

Content:

Jyotish said:

So when these Buddhist texts say end of kali yuga, can you possibly say when they say this ends?and for last 432,000 years we have been on this kali yuga and all the Buddhas who were born in this time are also said to be of kali yuga? And for that many years there was no evolution or change in terms of human consciousness(intelligence), merits, etc.?

Malcolm wrote:

It ends when the lifespan of human beings drops to ten years, we still have to go through the age of disease and famine and the age of weapons— this is when human beings lifespan drops to ten years. These are all parts of the Kāli Yuga.

Buddhist texts measure time periods mainly in terms of the life spans of human beings.

Jyotish said:

If they mention kali yuga, do these Buddhist sources mentioned also the dvapara yuga, satya yuga and treat yuga?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. all four yugas are included in one day of Brahma.

Jyotish said:

What should our attitude be towards commentary on this kind of subject? Because for example kalachakra tantra apparently offers a model of the physical universe that Edward Henning says is not true although that was taken literally. Like things that just don't match up astronomically.

Malcolm wrote:

Henning said the opposite, he said it was impossible that the Kālacakra authors took the Meru Cosmology in the Kālacakra literally.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 6th, 2017 at 11:31 PM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Grigoris said:

Anybody practicing a Dzogchen Path is not practicing Dzogchen. I think Malcolm (being a Dzogchen purist) will agree.

Malcolm wrote:

This is facile. Of course there is a Dzogchen path. What does that mean? It means that Dzogchen has its own view, its own meditation, and its own conduct. You will not find those in Mahāyoga nor in Anuyoga.

Grigoris said:

Broad, sweeping and un-nuanced generalisations tend to be. You should go back and read some of your statements and judge them in the same light as mine.

Malcolm wrote:

No thanks.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 6th, 2017 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: Periods in Buddhist Cosmology

Content:

Jyotish said:

Malcolm has already clarified that degenerate age doesn't mean kali yuga at all rather that dharma declines every 500 years .

Malcolm wrote:

I did not say this. I said that the five degenerations are related to another idea as well as the idea that the Buddha was the Buddha of the Kāli Yuga. Please refer to my post above which is sourced in Indian texts on the subject matter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 6th, 2017 at 11:18 PM

Title: Re: Periods in Buddhist Cosmology

Content:

Jyotish said:

Debatable issue. But turns out anyways that when they say degenerate age they don't mean kali yuga or such. So I would look to other traditional and more reliable sources about this and there are many Hindu yogis who give astronomical reasoning as to why this is dvapara yuga which I would trust unless there were texts in buddha dharma strictly saying otherwise.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddhist system of understanding the Kāli Yuga is found in the Saddharmasmṛty-upasthāna Sūtra. It is defined by the lifespan of human beings:

In the Kāli Yuga, the very longest lifespan of human beings in Jambudvīpa is one hundred years.

In the Kālacakra commentary, Padmañi-nāma-pañjikā, the Kāli Yuga is characterized by the five degenerations:

The so called "Kāli Yuga" is the time of the five degenerations.

And:

Through the power of the Kāli Yuga, the life span of human beings is one hundred years.

The Madhyamaka commentary, Saṃskṛtāsaṃskṛtaviniścaya states:

A long time after the parinirvana of Krakucchanda, at the end of the Kāli Yuga, our teacher, the Tathāgata called Śākyamuni arose in the world.

Finally, the Amarakoṣaṭīkākamadhenu states the Kāli Yuga lasts 432,000 human years.

We are at the end of that period of time, according to all Buddhist sources.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 6th, 2017 at 9:24 PM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Grigoris said:

Anybody practicing a Dzogchen Path is not practicing Dzogchen. I think Malcolm (being a Dzogchen purist) will agree.

Malcolm wrote:

This is facile. Of course there is a Dzogchen path. What does that mean? It means that Dzogchen has its own view, its own meditation, and its own conduct. You will not find those in Mahāyoga nor in Anuyoga.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 6th, 2017 at 9:20 PM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Grigoris said:

Really? You don't know Dzogchen masters that teach the Four Noble Truths (for example)?

conebeckham said:

Oh, they may teach it, but they will say it is not the "Path of Dzogchen."

Nyoshul Khen Rinpoche said:

When a Dzogchen Yogi hears Shakyamuni Buddha turning the Wheel of the Dharma of the Four Noble Truths he hears Samathabhadra proclaiming the most profound Dzogpachenpo.

Malcolm wrote:

This is based in the principle found in the Sandhivyaṅkaraṇa Tantra:

The single beautiful vajra phrase

becomes many different ones

according the divisions in the inclinations of migrating beings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 6th, 2017 at 6:39 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I do remember that Khenpo Ngagchung kind of goes off in his comments on the Guru Yoga section of WoMPT about how devotion to the Guru is absolutely the most important practice in Dzogchen, and how this is a somewhat special characteristic of Dzogchen, at least in the sense of completely relying on that.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure. But there are two kinds of devotion. One is based on mind, the other is based on pristine consciousness. The latter does not resemble what is commonly brought to mind when the word devotion.

dzogchungpa said:

Well, that is an interesting distinction and I would like to learn more about it. I understand that 'devotion' may not be a really accurate translation here, but in the English translation of that section there are several instances of variations on the phrase "pray with devotion", e.g. from the subsection on Atiyoga: What then is the most important thing here? It is to pray to the teacher with such devotion that we see him as a Buddha. If we do so, the wisdom of realization will take birth in our minds.

Are you saying then that there is a kind of prayer based on pristine consciousness?

Perhaps there is, but it seems to me that would not be something beginners could really do.

Malcolm wrote:

I am saying that in this instance Khenpo Ngachung's point is not particularly profound or unconventional.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 6th, 2017 at 1:52 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Vasana said:

Which is always worth reiterating but that doesn't discount the technical nuances concerning Maha , Anu & Ati that Malcolm and others have brought up. With that being said, I also agree with Magnus in that these practices can be best approached if you've already discovered the natural state. Sometimes it's seen as a deviation to practice in that way, where as at other times and for other people, they can be a useful method for making the mind and voice 'supple' enough to stabilize the natural state more readily.

Grigoris said:

I think that people that rant and rave against the Yoga's have failed a)to understand the reasoning behind these practices and b)to understand that they may currently be in the position to forgo these practices because they have already practiced them (either in this lifetime or in previous one's).

Anybody that believes that the Yoga's are somehow separate to Dzogchen, has failed miserably in understanding Dzogchen.

I imagine b) occurs because as Westerners we have not been raised to naturally consider that where we are now, is the consequence of countless previous lifetimes of effort.

Malcolm wrote:

I will restate what I already said: Dzogchen is an independent path that has its own theory, empowerments, and methods of practice that do not involve anything in the eight lower vehicles, i.e., the paths of renunciation and transformation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, April 6th, 2017 at 1:42 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, apparently Jamyang Khyentse Wangpo's main practice was indeed a form of guru yoga, so what was up with that? Did he not understand what you are saying here? Seriously, I find this kind of confusing.

Malcolm wrote:

I highly doubt anything written down in words was JKW's main practice.

dzogchungpa said:

Fair enough. I do remember that Khenpo Ngagchung kind of goes off in his comments on the Guru Yoga section of WoMPT about how devotion to the Guru is absolutely the most important practice in Dzogchen, and how this is a somewhat special characteristic of Dzogchen, at least in the sense of completely relying on that.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure. But there are two kinds of devotion. One is based on mind, the other is based on pristine consciousness. The latter does not resemble what is commonly brought to mind when the word devotion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 5th, 2017 at 9:41 PM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, apparently Jamyang Khyentse Wangpo's main practice was indeed a form of guru yoga, so what was up with that? Did he not understand what you are saying here? Seriously, I find this kind of confusing.

Malcolm wrote:

I highly doubt anything written down in words was JKW's main practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 5th, 2017 at 8:56 PM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

heart said:

My practice is that of the Nyingtik and you might think it is inferior...

Malcolm wrote:

I honestly do not understand why people take this issue personally.

And why would I think Nyingthig is inferior? Which Nyingthig? You mean Chetsun Nyingthig? I don't think any such thing.

What I do know is that people, Tibetans included, get attached to this lineage, and that terma cycle, forgetting the whole thing is rooted in the Kama tradition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 5th, 2017 at 8:31 PM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

heart said:

We talked about this a lot in the past. I find it very helpful to do sahanas and guru yogas and you don't get it.

The sadhanas and guru yogas don't surpass the natural state they just adorn it and continuously inspire me in my practice.

Malcolm wrote:

I do get it.

But from my point of view, it is like having an absolutely-beautiful, natural, crystal diamond that is perfect in every way, and thinking that one has to paint some flowers on it to make it prettier.

What I am also saying is that sadhanas and so on are not part of the main practices taught in the three series of Dzogchen. And as Florin rightly notes, those who think one can approach the Great Perfection through mahāyoga and anuyoga have a flawed perspective.

If one is going to take the indirect approach, it has to be done as Mipham clarifies: If one meditates generating the thought that the [three] samadhis and the [four] mudras are dharmatā and therefore are not different, the ultimate awakened mind will arise. If one actualizes the meditation, one realizes that all phenomena do not exist apart from one's mind. The accumulations are gathered and obscurations are purified because of that meditation. One becomes realized because one's continuum is blessed by the deity of pristine consciousness.

But frankly, this approach is more trouble than it is worth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 5th, 2017 at 8:07 PM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

heart said:

Now you got me confused, isn't Guru Yoga a main Dzogchen practice?

Malcolm wrote:

Of course not. The main Dzogchen practice is the direct perception of your own state. Even guru yoga is a practice that works with mind, rather than pristine consciousness -- even Ati guru yoga. Thus, guru yoga is a method related to the second phrase of Garab Dorje, "decide one thing/remain without doubt." One uses guru yoga, or rushan, etc., to introduce oneself to the mind essence over and over as many times as one needs until one has attained some stability in recognizing it and sustaining that recognition.

Once you have "decided on one thing/no longer remain in doubt", then you do not remain passive, you shift your focus to "continue in the confidence of liberation/continue in that state," relying principally on the primary methods of the Great Perfection found in so called "man ngag lde," trekchö and thögal.

heart said:

If your practice centers around this recognition how could it possibly be a deviation no matter what Yana it formally belongs to?

Malcolm wrote:

If your practice centers around this recognition, what else could you possibly need to do? What guru yoga, deity practice, and so on can surpass that point? This does not mean you are forbidden from doing any practices from the eight lower yānas— after all, we have various relative needs and requirements such as long life, health, wealth, removal of obstacles, etc. It just means that one does not have to do any of them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 5th, 2017 at 6:21 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

What I was griping about is being passaiive-agressively poo-pooed by someone for sometimes using "lower practices" when necessary...

Grigoris said:

I feel that the "you shouldn't do this" fundamentalism that is displayed by some around here is as boring and off-putting as the "you have to do this" fundamentalism of others.

Malcolm wrote:

For example, if someone claims they are a Jungian analyst, but instead is practicing DBT and calling it Jungian analysis, one would call it blameworthy. Likewise, if someone is claiming to teach Dzogchen, but instead they teach the methods of Mahā and Anuyoga and call this "Dzogchen," one should call it blameworthy. Most Nyingma teachers do not do this. But there are some who do, and one should be aware that the situation these days is similar to merchants who show beef, but sell horse meat instead.

Finally, just because some sadhana has really pretty Dzogchen words like "ka dag," "lhun grub," etc., does not mean that sadhana actually belongs to Dzogchen teachings. A case in point is the Chetsun Nyingthig. The Chetsun Nyingthig's actual Dzogchen instructions are included only in a very short section at the very end of the root text. The rest of it is devoted to discussing the empowerment, the ngondro practice, the sadhana of Chetsun, and so on. It is a wonderful practice, excellent in every way. But when you are practicing some sadhana reciting mantras, you are practicing the two stages, not Dzogchen. This does not mean the Chetsun Nyingthig sucks, does not have blessings (whatever that means) and so on. It means that in that system, when you have finished the two stages connected with the practice of Chetsun, then you move on to actual Dzogchen preliminaries and the main practice of Dzogchen. The main emphasis of the Chetsun Nyingthig is the Guru Yoga of Vimalamitra. It is very profound. But the main practice of Dzogchen is more profound, as Vimalamitra would agree.

My point is simply that people should have a very clear, formal understanding of the differences between this and that yāna, so they know what they are doing and why. This is the reason why there is a detailed discussion of the nine yānas.

Some people like to follow the modern Nyingma system. I prefer to follow Garab Dorje. We are all free to do as we like.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 5th, 2017 at 5:59 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

... they never bothered to finish (much less start) Ngondro...

Grigoris said:

So now, according to you, the various Dzogchen lineage ngondro are of no value? So Dudlom Lingpa did not know what he was doing or talking about when he taught/outlined the Dudjom Tersar ngondro?

Malcolm wrote:

I never said they were of no value. Purification practices have their place. I will say however that Dudjom Tersar Ngondro, Longchen Nyingthig Ngondro, the "Semde" Ngondro by Sogdogpa Lodo Gyaltsenn, etc. are not Dzogchen practice, per se. These are elaborate Guru Yogas based in Mahāyoga, since one takes the four empowerments. There is absolutely no difference between practicing the "tantric" ngondro of one school and that of another school apart from lineage.

To use another example, from the time of Dzeng Dharmabodhi, the practice of Heruka Ngondzog Gyalpo has been associated with the so called Longde teachings. But no one thinks practicing Ngondzog Gyalpo's sadhana is Longde practice, even if, in order to be introduced to Longde teachings this empowerment is indispensable since this is how the transmission of Longde has been passed on since the time of Dzeng. But before Dzeng, it was not the case that Longde was ever associated with any practice belonging to the two stages. And even if one receives this empowerment, there is no reason to practice that sadhana unless you are planning to give the empowerment yourself, apart from the Guru Yoga practice as a preliminary.

Dudjom Tersar Ngondro is just fine, it is just not Dzogchen Ngondro. That is something else, very precise and specific.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 5th, 2017 at 5:50 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Since when have you been able to read minds?

Grigoris said:

A long time now, it is part of the trade I plunder. Anyway, you don't have to be a clairvoyant to know what people are thinking. Your mother always knew when you were about to get up to shit and she was didn't work at carnival side shows as a medium and soothsayer.

Malcolm wrote:

You definitely have to be clairvoyant if you are trying judge others you know solely through the internet.

Grigoris said:

You should know you cannot judge realization based on outer behavior.

I think that in many instances you can. What is manifested through speech and bodily action if not the mind?

Malcolm wrote:

Reams of Mahāyāna sūtras, not to mention tantras, contradict this notion. Śakyamuni Buddha in a past incarnation was a very strict monk who was critical of another monk whose students hung out in bars with townsfolk, ate meat and so on. The karmic effect of this was that Buddha's Sangha has been fragmented by sectarianism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 5th, 2017 at 4:59 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Grigoris said:

I have yet to see ordinary person who practice the Great Perfection eradicating the coarse aspect of the two obscurations even while they have not realized the direct realization of emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

Since when have you been able to read minds? You should know you cannot judge realization based on outer behavior.

conebeckham said:

Aye, and there's the rub. As a non-psychic, how am I to determine that those of my friends who recommend dispensing with "outer practices," ritual, or so-called "lower paths" are really on the right path? And who among them are deceiving themselves, and possibly others?

The answer is: it doesn't matter, of course. All that matters is my own personal path, my own capacities and abilities, my own recognition, or non-recognition, of my nature, and how I integrate that recognition, or create circumstances to cause it to "arise."

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and what I am saying is that people who are practicing the methods prescribed in the Dzogchen teachings— which does not include the two stages, deity yoga and so on — should be confident in those practices without thinking they are missing something because, for example, they never bothered to finish (much less start) Ngondro, have not done a retreat on the three roots and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 5th, 2017 at 3:53 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Grigoris said:

I have yet to see ordinary person who practice the Great Perfection eradicating the coarse aspect of the two obscurations even while they have not realized the direct realization of emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

Since when have you been able to read minds? You should know you cannot judge realization based on outer behavior.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 5th, 2017 at 3:52 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Grigoris said:

Some great masters dedicated their entire lives to ngondro practices.

dzogchungpa said:

I don't know how accurate this is but, in "The Wish-Fulfilling Jewel", Dilgo Khyentse

Rinpoche says that the Guru Yoga from the Longchen Nyingthig ngondro described in that book was Jamyang Khyentse Wangpo's main practice.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, and the Sakyas claim his main practice was the Amoghasiddhi Guru Yoga from Sakya Lamdre.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 5th, 2017 at 3:51 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

What is meant by "the coarse aspect of the two obscurations"?

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty simple, it means that the two obscurations have a coarse aspect and a subtle aspect.

Eliminating the coarse aspect of the afflictive obscuration means that one will not take rebirth in any of the three lower realms, nor outside of Dharma families and so on.

The subtle aspect of the afflictive obscuration means that one will still be subject to afflictions, but markedly less so than other ordinary people.

Eliminating the coarse aspect of the knowledge obscuration means that one will begin to manifest the six clairvoyances, find it very easy to understand difficult Dharma topics and so forth.

The subtle aspect of the knowledge obscuration means that one will still be subject to innate self-grasping, will lack the two omnisciences and so on.

What Khenpo Ngachung is stating is that these coarse obscurations cannot be eliminated by those who have not achieved the path of seeing of the lesser vehicles.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 5th, 2017 at 3:42 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Grigoris said:

In order for people to embrace your assertion, they need to see examples of this in Dzogchen students.

Proof of the pudding... and all that.

Malcolm wrote:

The proof of the pudding is the source of the assertion,
<http://www.shambhala.com/wondrous-dance-of-illusion.html>.

heart said:

Who recognised the natural state while doing Ngondro?

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

And this demonstrates what? Do you think it was Ngondro practice that was responsible for his recognition? I am sure that is not what you mean.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 5th, 2017 at 2:14 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Grigoris said:

In order for people to embrace your assertion, they need to see examples of this in Dzogchen students.

Proof of the pudding... and all that.

Malcolm wrote:

The proof of the pudding is the source of the assertion,
<http://www.shambhala.com/wondrous-dance-of-illusion.html>.

Grigoris said:

No my friend... I have no doubt Khenpo Ngachung is a realised teacher, but you assert that: "an ordinary person who practices the Great Perfection can eradicate the coarse aspect of the two obscurations even while they have not realized (what is understood in lower vehicles as) the path of seeing, the direct realization of emptiness."

Malcolm wrote:

I definitely fault your eyesight — I did not make this claim, Khenpo Ngachung made this claim.

Grigoris said:

because I have yet to see ordinary people practicing the the Great Perfection...

Malcolm wrote:

What an extremely strange thing to say. You think only realized people can practice Dzogchen teachings? If this were true, it would defeat the whole purpose of Dzogchen teachings. But it is definitely a common opinion among those who really have no understanding of Dzogchen, both Tibetans and Westerners.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 5th, 2017 at 1:58 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

People who doubt my assertion need to read the works of Khenpo Ngachung.

Grigoris said:

In order for people to embrace your assertion, they need to see examples of this in Dzogchen students.

Proof of the pudding... and all that.

Malcolm wrote:

The proof of the pudding is the source of the assertion,
<http://www.shambhala.com/wondrous-dance-of-illusion.html>.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, April 5th, 2017 at 1:32 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Gyurme Kundrol said:

If someone rejects practice telling others that it will somehow hold them back, implying that practice is somehow "harming" them, then they are not really holding the authentic view of Dzogchen in my opinion. In that view there are no sentient beings, so where is all this concern coming from regarding what other people are doing? What kind of realized Dzogchenpa who is in Rigpa 24/7 conjures up this delusion of beings practicing and this dualistic notion that they should or shouldn't do those things? It's absurd to claim to be an advanced practitioner who is beyond all this then turn around and engage in acceptance of one thing and rejection of another, taking positions of what is good or bad, high or low. It's a sure sign that we should not listen to people who talk like this and should instead listen to whatever our Guru has taught us.

Malcolm wrote:

The dichotomy you appear to be setting up is that if a Dzogchen practitioner is not a first stage bodhisattva and beyond, then somehow they need to be practicing sadhanas, generating merits, and so on, as in the lower vehicles. But this is not the case.

Put in terms of the five paths and ten stages: an ordinary person who practices the Great Perfection can eradicate the coarse aspect of the two obscurations even while they have not realized (what is understood in lower vehicles as) the path of seeing, the direct realization of emptiness. This is a special point of the superiority of the Great Perfection teachings. In the eight lower vehicles, it is impossible to eradicate the coarse aspect of the two obscurations below the path of seeing. People who doubt my assertion need to read the works of Khenpo Ngachung.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 4th, 2017 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: Robert Spatz and Ogyen Kunsang Choling

Content:

crazy-man said:

it ´s a shame

Malcolm wrote:

It is an outrage, and every Tibetan Lama who knew about this up should be publicly shamed as well.

Further, Tibetan Lamas really do need to investigate from whom they are receiving donations. They cannot excuse themselves with the "I didn't know" nonsense.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 4th, 2017 at 9:42 PM

Title: Re: What does chos kyi dbyings mean in the plural?

Content:

emaho said:

I have to do some chores now ...

dzogchungpa said:

Like researching and posting Roxy Music/Bryan Ferry videos?

jk

Anyway, I'm curious about dharmatadhātu now, never seen that before. Is it possible that's just an error in the Sanskrit?

Malcolm wrote:

It is occurs often enough.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 4th, 2017 at 7:03 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

conebeckham said:
Maybe that's just me, LOL.

Malcolm wrote:
Yes. I agree with this assessment.

conebeckham said:
Thanks for the vote of confidence, LOL.

Malcolm wrote:
I definitely agree that you were expressing your own point of view on the matter. Kagyus in general always try to jimmy Dzogchen into their gradualist framework.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, April 4th, 2017 at 6:50 AM
Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism
Content:

conebeckham said:
That's true, of course. But although I am no mind reader, and have no idea of the capacities of anyone else, I strongly feel such comments are excuses.

Malcolm wrote:
There is nothing called "higher or lower" capacity in Dzogchen teachings, as Shabkar states:

If this is practiced, all will be liberated;
there is no distinction between sharp and dull capacity.
If one practices, even a cowherd will be liberated.
If one understands the significance of the luminosity of one's mind through a direct perception, the rhetoric of scholars is not necessary here;
just as when one eats sugar,
there is no need for an explanation of the taste of sugar.
Without understanding this, even a paṇḍita will be deluded.
Even if one is skilled in all the explanations of the nine vehicles, it is like telling a story of a distant place one has not seen;
one is even further from the stage of full awakening than heaven is from the earth.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, April 4th, 2017 at 6:46 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

conebeckham said:

Maybe that's just me, LOL.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. I agree with this assessment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 4th, 2017 at 6:45 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

kirtu said:

The US is only 15% of the climate change problem. This is bad but there is not much to be done.

Malcolm wrote:

We and Europe are 100 percent responsible for the present climate effects that we are witnessing now (Industrial Revolution effects). We have diminished our footprint some, but there are a lot of effects that we are still indirectly responsible for.

kirtu said:

Western Europe has diminished it's 1990 greenhouse gas emissions by 25%-50% depending on the country whereas US greenhouse gas emissions have increased since 1990. Even though they decreased during the Obama years they are still higher than in 1990.

Western Europe has taken significant action and the United States hasn't.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

I see, so you agree with me in the form of a disagreement.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 4th, 2017 at 4:11 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Grigoris said:

Either I am seriously underestimating the stupidity of American citizens or you (Malcolm) are underestimating the power of mass media (or a little of both)...

Malcolm wrote:

Direct democracy, as with all democracies, requires that a) people are educated and b) have good information upon which base their decisions.

If either of those two conditions are not met, then not only will direct democracy fail, all forms of democracy will fail.

This is why I maintain that while direct democracy is great at the town meeting level; it does not scale to running a large country and never can because even with a good education, no individual person can hope to have a grasp of all the information needed to make good policy decisions about every aspect of a nation, and if asked to weigh in on these questions, average people are likely to respond from a position of an absence of knowledge, unlike their intimate knowledge of their local community.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 4th, 2017 at 3:21 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

heart said:

Tulu Urgyen Rinpoche often said this: "The Mahayoga teachings are combined within Anu yoga, the Anu yoga are combined within Ati yoga, the Ati yoga are combined within sadhana, and sadhana is combined within one's application." I think it makes a lot of sense.

Malcolm wrote:

This nothing other than the indirect approach to Dzogchen practice.

The point is that when one is engaged in Dzogchen practice there is no Mahāyoga, no Anuyoga.

Practicing secondary practices with Dzogchen view is the indirect approach indicated by Mañjuśrimitra, and later, by Rongzom in chapter six of his Intro to Mahāyāna.

heart said:

Even if it is an indirect approach to Dzogchen, it still is an approach. Reading the Rongzom book right now.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but let us be very clear what we are doing and how such approaches deviate from the approach the Great Perfection itself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 4th, 2017 at 2:45 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

heart said:

Tulu Urgyen Rinpoche often said this: "The Mahayoga teachings are combined within Anu yoga, the Anu yoga are combined within Ati yoga, the Ati yoga are combined within sadhana, and sadhana is combined within one's application." I think it makes a lot of sense.

Malcolm wrote:

This nothing other than the indirect approach to Dzogchen practice.

The point is that when one is engaged in Dzogchen practice there is no Mahāyoga, no Anuyoga.

Practicing secondary practices with Dzogchen view is the indirect approach indicated by Mañjuśrimitra, and later, by Rongzom in chapter six of his Intro to Mahāyāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 4th, 2017 at 2:07 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

amanitamusc said:

Secondary practices including the 8 lower yanas are not Dzogchen but they can be practiced with the Dzogchen view.

Malcolm wrote:

Which means we understand that for us they are not the main path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 4th, 2017 at 2:06 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

binocular said:

If they're all so advanced and have it all figured out, then it shouldn't be hard for them to clarify things for me the way the Buddha did for Saccaka.

Malcolm wrote:

Seems to me you are trying to start a fire with a wet log.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 4th, 2017 at 1:35 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

heart said:

If it wasn't like that nothing would make much sense.

Malcolm wrote:

It isn't like that. For example, the short thun is not a Dzogchen practice, nor is the medium thun, nor the long thun, nor the invocation to the protectors and so on. These are all secondary practices, but they are not Dzogchen practice per se.

heart said:

Maybe they are not "Dzogchen practice per se", even if there are a number of sadhanas that are said to be Dzogchen sadhanas ,but it will be pretty difficult to take the Dzogchen out of the practitioner in order to apply a Anuyoga practice.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Anuyoga is a special case because it's explanation of the basis is the same as the Great Perfection. However, even Anuyoga practice is not Dzogchen since it regards Dzogchen as something to attain. This is why it is classed as part of the 8 lower vehicles. Practices like Chetsun Nyinthig, Thigle Gyachan, etc., are not Dzogchen practices. Even these practices with very nice words, and so on, are part of the indirect approach to Dzogchen teachings. They approach the main practices of Dzogchen as a completion stage. But the two stages do not exist in Dzogchen per se.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 4th, 2017 at 1:29 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Direct democracy simple does not work at a national level, and shouldn't. For example, I would not want people voting directly issues of national security about which they necessarily have little or no information.

Grigoris said:

Whereas the educated and informed dudes in the Pentagon make all the right decisions when it comes to national interests. They are not driven by financial and political bodies???

Malcolm wrote:

As the armed forces are under the control of the civilian government, they are supposed to be driven by our political body, the Congress. Only the Congress has the right to declare war. The executive branch has limited abilities to use the military in the case of attacks by other countries, but does not have the right to declare war [hence most of the so called "war on terror" is based on the latter idea].

The people in the Pentagon as well as the Intelligence Services are generally quite highly educated. For example, the Pentagon has accepted human-driven climate change for decades, irrespective of the deluded opinions of the flat-earthers presently in the White House and the GOP in general. So yes, in matters of military goals and strategies, I generally think when it comes to defense of the US, they do a pretty good job. When there are screwups like the Iraq Invasion, it is not on the military, it is on the civilian government. In my opinion, in a direct democracy campaign US citizens would have overwhelmingly made the choice to invade both Iraq and Afghanistan. So, again, in my opinion, the Congress acted out the will of the people in those two wars, as foolish as they were.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 4th, 2017 at 1:04 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

heart said:

If it wasn't like that nothing would make much sense.

Malcolm wrote:

It isn't like that. For example, the short thun is not a Dzogchen practice, nor is the medium thun, nor the long thun, nor the invocation to the protectors and so on. These are all secondary practices, but they are not Dzogchen practice per se.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 4th, 2017 at 12:42 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Where do you draw the distinction then, there are lots of Dzogchen practitioners practicing Anuyoga, Kriya yoga, maybe some shine etc.

Malcolm wrote:

These are secondary practices for overcoming relative problems. But they are not practices proper to the Dzogchen path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, April 4th, 2017 at 12:00 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

binocular said:

What I'm not doing is mindlessly going with the program. I'm not "misinformed". I'm not submissive enough to be able to be religious.

And thank you, you keep proving my points.

Have it.

Malcolm wrote:

I have to say, I find it odd when people with no interest in Buddhadharma hang around Buddhist sites. Don't you think your time would be better spent on sites where others share your interests? Just a thought.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 3rd, 2017 at 11:51 PM

Title: Re: The Navagraha in Buddhism

Content:

Jyotish said:

Every Tibetan teaching I go to they keep talking about degenerate age and I wonder if the calculation is wrong.

Malcolm wrote:

This is in relation to the the idea that that Buddhadharma declines in 500 years periods, with this age being the age of the five degenerations: view, afflictions, time, lifespan, and merit. However, it is also due to the idea that Śakyamuni Buddha is the Buddha for the Kāliyuga.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 3rd, 2017 at 10:39 PM

Title: Re: The Navagraha in Buddhism

Content:

Jyotish said:

@malcolm

I was referring to calculation of planetary position in signs. Tibetan astrology do have these right?

The link referred to indrajalas blog post mentions this about Tibetan system.

Malcolm wrote:

There are many systems of calculation in Tibetan Buddhism. One is derived from Kalacakra, this is used mainly for calendar-making, it also has a version of horary and natal astrology, but Tibetans do not use it much.

Another is derived from the Sarvodaya Tantra, it is very complicated, and never received much attention.

The third is the system of 'byung rtsi or n ag rtsi elemental calculation. It is derived from the treasures concealed by one Chinese master, Du har Nag po (hence the name nag rtsi) and discovered and translated in the 11th century by one Kham pa Khra mo. This system is very connected with the system of apotropaic rites known under the Rubric of Gto. While Tibetan "Astrology" contains as a whole contains elements from all three of these systems, in general it is the third upon which Tibeatans most rely.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 3rd, 2017 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

madhusudan said:

Since sentient beings are as infinite as space, the Buddha's compassionate teachings are also infinite, but can be categorized into 84,000 kinds depending on beings' needs. I would guess that those who see no need for the lower teachings are usually those who need them the most.

One thing I find kinda funny is that it is said that for practitioners of the highest faculty, the title of a teaching is enough to intuit the full meaning. The rest of the explanation, then, is for those that didn't "get it" and need further help. So, are the highest teachings spelled out for the slow pokes who just couldn't get to the other shore from madhyamaka, bodhicitta, or the 4 noble truths for that matter?

I'm a very basic practitioner, but I always thought the goal was to practice the 9 yanas simultaneously. Like, keeping the highest view but still minding your Ps and Qs.

Malcolm wrote:

Each of the nine yānas is in independent, self-sufficient vehicle. Otherwise, there is no point in calling them individual "vehicles."

The actual name is Theg pa rim dgu, the nine progressive vehicles. The implication of this however is not that one learns for example, śrāvakayāna, then one moves on to pratyekabuddhayāna, etc. The intention of this is that higher vehicles embrace the intention of the lower vehicles. Thus, if you have been introduced to Dzogchen teachings, there is no need to practice common Mahāyāna since the intention of common Mahāyāna is fully included in the vehicle of Atiyoga. It is not the case however that the lower vehicles can encompass the higher vehicles, because the view and practice of the nine progressive vehicles moves from lower to higher. It is generally regarded as a downfall to prefer to practice a lower vehicle having been introduced to the practices of a higher vehicle: for example, preferring to observe one's pratimokśa vows rather than breaking them to benefit another according to Mahāyāna vows.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 3rd, 2017 at 8:57 PM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In New England and elsewhere, consensus decision making and direct democracy is alive and well in New England town halls, etc.

Grigoris said:

That is not enough. If a consensus decision is reached at a local level, only to be overturned at a national level due to political and economic affiliation (and not the validity of the content of the decision), then that is not direct democracy. The main problem with US Democracy is not how the system is set up at present; the main problem is apathetic citizenry.

Has it ever occurred to you that the citizenry is apathetic because they know that the system does nothing to actually represent their needs?

Malcolm wrote:

The scope of direct democracy must necessarily be limited to local decisions, for example, whether a town wishes to allocate money to installing a broadband network.

Direct democracy simple does not work at a national level, and shouldn't. For example, I would not want people voting directly issues of national security about which they necessarily have little or no information.

As for your second observation, an engaged citizenry can have their needs represented and met. Countless examples in the US show this.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 3rd, 2017 at 11:58 AM

Title: Re: The Navagraha in Buddhism

Content:

Jyotish said:

I had no faith in Tibetan system of calculation

Malcolm wrote:

It is not astrology. It is a system of calculating the phase relationships between the elements. The man ngag sde system of Dzogchen also has an important system of elemental calculation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 3rd, 2017 at 11:56 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

boda said:

Perhaps this is a good attitude, considering that the one guy everyone agrees achieved supreme unsurpassed enlightenment didn't have the benefit of "Common Mahayana/prayers/Sutra/Tantra etc."

Malcolm wrote:

According to whose narrative?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 3rd, 2017 at 9:03 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

kirtu said:

This statement is true but it is also ridiculous because it implies that there is little that can be done.

We can massively reduce inequality by restructuring societies. Or we can move to Norway (or Australia or Holland or ...).

Malcolm wrote:

....

The USA is the problem, run as it is by a bunch of climate denying gangsters. So, to the extent that we can affect change in the world, it is best to try and affect change here in this country.

kirtu said:

The US is only 15% of the climate change problem. This is bad but there is not much to be done.

Malcolm wrote:

We and Europe are 100 percent responsible for the present climate effects that we are witnessing now (Industrial Revolution effects). We have diminished our footprint some, but there are a lot of effects that we are still indirectly responsible for.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 3rd, 2017 at 3:44 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, so you actually mean a Republican Democracy, like the US. As I said elsewhere, direct democracy is fine in small communities. It does not scale.

Grigoris said:

What are you talking about dude? Does what I described sound anything like the current U$ system? Where is the consensus decision making and direct democracy in the current U$ system?

Malcolm wrote:

In New England and elsewhere, consensus decision making and direct democracy is alive and well in New England town halls, etc.

Grigoris said:

The U$ system is (loosely) based on representative democracy. The representatives make decisions ON BEHALF of (and most times in direct contradiction to the needs of) their constituent.

Malcolm wrote:

Not if those representatives wish to keep their jobs.

The main problem with US Democracy is not how the system is set up at present; the main problem is apathetic citizenry.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 3rd, 2017 at 3:41 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

boda said:

I suppose my point is that the Buddha obviously wasn't a scholar of Buddhism, and could not have known even the basic concepts of Buddhism. That being the case, how important could these things be?

Malcolm wrote:

Many basic concepts of Buddhism were already present in Indian society: karma, rebirth, etc.

There are many other things a person may need to know that have nothing to do with Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, April 3rd, 2017 at 3:25 AM
Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism
Content:
boda said:
Was the Buddha a scholar?

Malcolm wrote:
Yes, in fact.

boda said:
What, where did he study? Was it Hindu?

Malcolm wrote:
He was educated, learned in the sciences of his day.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, April 3rd, 2017 at 3:23 AM
Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
No, it won't actually. On a large scale, "direct democracy" poses the very real risk of majoritarian extremism.

Grigoris said:
On a large scale direct democracy works via a confederate system. Representatives of the position of their community meet with other representatives and work on a consensual decision based on the variety of views. Representatives do not have the right to change the view/opinion of their community, nor override it with their personal view. In the case of a complete deadlock over a decision that HAS to be made? Majority vote.

Malcolm wrote:
Oh, so you actually mean a Republican Democracy, like the US. As I said elsewhere, direct democracy is fine in small communities. It does not scale.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, April 3rd, 2017 at 2:33 AM
Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism
Content:
Johnny Dangerous said:
I could have just as easily posted this in the Zen section due to the parallels involved, I remember thinking same thing when I practiced Zen, but figured this was better here.

So something I've run into in my Dharma experiences, a kind of clash of personality types among practitioners that gets me wondering:

An attitude you find in practice groups among some folks goes something like this: "You don't need [Common Mahayana/ prayers/ Sutra/ Tantra etc.], all you need is [Zazen/ Shikantanza/ abiding in Rigpa] man".

This sort of approach has always seemed sophomoric to me, as I have my doubts that anyone can be anything like a "pure" practitioner that makes no use of "lower" teachings. Or at least, it seems like such people are exceedingly rare.

It sometimes feels to me like in our culture this approach risks turning into a Dharmic form of anti-intellectualism, and is often accompanied by "dude you can't learn Dharma from a book" (which while true in many ways, is sort of beside the point, and devalues scholarship and study). Am I just being paranoid, is it just my quirks and pet peeves, or is this a real trend that others have observed?

I mean, I get that one should not cling to or be conditioned by practices, that intellectual knowledge is provisional etc.. but I seem to run into the opposite sometimes - people who seem to reject "lower" practices altogether in favor of a sometimes rigid, sort of protestant approach where any "lower" practice requiring what is viewed as effort are frowned upon. Sometimes the value of studying or knowing Dharma subjects at all is questioned.

What do all y'all think?

boda said:

Was the Buddha a scholar?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, in fact.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, April 3rd, 2017 at 2:21 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

So, who is going to pick winners and losers?

Karma is unerring.

Joka said:

Anarchism is where nobody gets to pick.

Grigoris said:

Anarchy is where everybody gets to pick, not just an elite few. A directly democratic solution based on consensus, is a solution that takes into account everybody's needs.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it won't actually. On a large scale, "direct democracy" poses the very real risk of majoritarian extremism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 2nd, 2017 at 10:40 PM

Title: Re: Sems, Dharmata and Dharmadhatu

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Since you have taken DI, you should stop worrying about samsara.

Marc said:

Hi Malcolm

Could you please elaborate a bit on this piece ?

Even if, as you stated in another thread, DI always works and therefore inflict a kind of "fatal wound" to once "samsaric mind", without actual recognition and even more so "preservation" of the Natural State, one could still wander for quite a while... No ?

Malcolm wrote:

That's up to you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 2nd, 2017 at 10:25 PM

Title: Re: The Navagraha in Buddhism

Content:

Indrajala said:

I have not heard much modern discussion of this in Buddhist traditions. I would be curious to know what people think. Have your teachers ever touched on the subject of astrology, or specifically the navagraha?

Malcolm wrote:

You should look into the Tibetan lore around the protector, Zadud Rahula. Look at Gods and Demons of Tibet.

Indrajala said:

Do you mean...

Oracles and demons of Tibet : the cult and iconography of the Tibetan protective deities
Nebesky-Wojkowitz, René von, 1923-1959
Graz, Austria : Akademische Druck-u. Verlagsanstalt 1975

?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, sorry, exactly. This is best english language resource into these sorts of things.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 2nd, 2017 at 9:57 PM

Title: Re: The Navagraha in Buddhism

Content:

Indrajala said:

I have not heard much modern discussion of this in Buddhist traditions. I would be curious to know what people think. Have your teachers ever touched on the subject of astrology, or specifically the navagraha?

Malcolm wrote:

You should look into the Tibetan lore around the protector, Zadud Rahula. Look at Gods and Demons of Tibet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 2nd, 2017 at 9:03 PM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

muni said:

Dzogchen, I only have been told is master * student

Malcolm wrote:

So, you mean, you have no idea what Dzogchen teachings are since you have never received them?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 2nd, 2017 at 8:57 PM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is possible to ameliorate some of the inequality that is in the world, but this also depends on the merit of the recipient.

kirtu said:

This statement is true but it is also ridiculous because it implies that there is little that can be done.

We can massively reduce inequality by restructuring societies. Or we can move to Norway (or Australia or Holland or ...).

Malcolm wrote:

All formations are subject to decay.

It is unlikely that within the horizon of our lifetime much will change for the better.

Moving to any of the countries you suggest will change very little. Why? Because these countries are not really the problem. The USA is the problem, run as it is by a bunch of climate denying gangsters. So, to the extent that we can affect change in the world, it is best to try and affect change here in this country.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 2nd, 2017 at 2:50 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

One liquid, six realms.

Grigoris said:

Using Buddhist theory to justify one's negativity is also the wrong attitude.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, of course it is. That is not the point of the analogy. You insist that somehow we are able to control how other people think of us. In practice, this is rarely true. For example, you are absolutely incapable of controlling the way people think about your contributions to this forum, which many people experience as aggressive, loud, bullying, arrogant, condescending, and rude.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, April 2nd, 2017 at 1:35 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This thread has definitely run its course.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, April 1st, 2017 at 10:00 PM
Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism
Content:

dzogchungpa said:
No? Or is it so relevant that you just blew your mind?

Malcolm wrote:
Irrelevant.

Confidence can be mistaken for arrogance, especially by those with inferiority complexes.

Grigoris said:
And arrogance can be seen as arrogance, especially by those that do not have an inferiority complex.

Sometimes what one sees is what actually exists. Blaming others for what they see, in order to justify one's own negative behaviour, is not exactly the correct attitude.

One can be confident without being arrogant, if one chooses to do so.

Malcolm wrote:
One liquid, six realms.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, April 1st, 2017 at 7:01 AM
Title: Re: Sems, Dharmata and Dharmadhatu
Content:

cepheidvariable said:
Even unconditioned dharmas have a dharmatā.

Malcolm wrote:
Is the dharmatā of unconditioned dharmas, the same as that for conditioned ones? Buddhahood and the path are unconditioned, yet empty of inherent existence? Or is this a misread?

Yes, emptiness.

cepheidvariable said:
And our view towards akasa is the same as the Abhidharmikas?

Malcolm wrote:
Basically, yes.

cephheidvariable said:

Can you speak at all towards whether the material that Vimalamitra surveys (the 17 upadesha tantras) is fundamental to Dudjom Lingpa's method of presenting the material? He seems to have a rather unique way of doing so. But then again, what do I really know. (I know, I know, I'm a Dudjom Lingpa fanboy...or rather, a Padmakara fanboy...)

Malcolm wrote:

It is fundamental to all presentations of so called "man ngag sde."

cephheidvariable said:

Do you think receiving the lung when it's webcasted would be worth my while? Even though I highly doubt I'm going to practice any of the Vima Nyingthig?

Malcolm wrote:

The Vima Nyingthig is the root of all modern Dzogchen. It is all based on the VN. The 17 Tantras, their related texts, and the Vima Nyingthig constitute the basis of all modern Dzogchen teachings.

So yes, you should get the lung.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 1st, 2017 at 6:52 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Grigoris said:

but then again: I don't have a superiority complex!

Malcolm wrote:

Me either.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 1st, 2017 at 3:27 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

So to my understanding, this part and parcel to Dzogchen practice, we are not limited to, or confined by practices, period. And yet, I see out there (also I could say the same in Zen) every so often someone says "oh, you don't actually need to do any of that lower stuff, unless you are inferior".well, it seems safe to say that most people are, to one degree or another, at one time or another, "inferior" in just this way.

"

Malcolm wrote:

No, it just means that you work with circumstances. It has nothing to do with inferior or superior persons. In Dzogchen, there is no such distinction.

There is a distinction between higher and lower paths however. If you have entered Dzogchen teachings, but then adopt the view of lower vehicles, this is regarded as a fault or a deviation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 1st, 2017 at 2:39 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I feel <https://tsegyalgar.blogspot.com/2016/10/fire-on-mountain-chogyal-namkhai-norbu.html> is relevant.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, not relevant at all.

dzogchungpa said:

No? Or is it so relevant that you just blew your mind?

Malcolm wrote:

Irrelevant.

Confidence can be mistaken for arrogance, especially by those with inferiority complexes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 1st, 2017 at 2:08 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I feel <https://tsegyalgar.blogspot.com/2016/10/fire-on-mountain-chogyal-namkhai-norbu.html> is relevant.

Malcolm wrote:

Nope, not relevant at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 1st, 2017 at 1:29 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If this were the case, no one would have bothered writing detailed analysis of why this is so in so many tantras and commentaries from the five early extracts translated by Vairocana forward.

tingdzin said:

And this literature was formerly read by a very small minority of people who, if they were reading it, usually already had some understanding and practice experience.

Malcolm wrote:

Rongzom's book was intended for Kadampas who were negating Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 1st, 2017 at 1:16 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

From a Dzogchen point of view, the practices of the eight lower vehicles will not get you where you want to go because they are all based on mind, whereas Dzogchen is based on pristine consciousness. That point is hard to grok until you have had a direct perception of vidyā.

tingdzin said:

O.K., but for those who have not, it is pointless to just harp on how superior the Dzogchen (or the ultimate, beyond-the-mind Zen perspective) is.

Malcolm wrote:

If this were the case, no one would have bothered writing detailed analysis of why this is so in so many tantras and commentaries from the five early extracts translated by Vairocana forward.

Even if one has not experienced direct perception, one can still practice according to Dzogchen view, as Rongzom notes in chapter six of the Intro to Mahāyāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, April 1st, 2017 at 12:08 AM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Right, what i'm talking about is a dismissive attitude about practices and praxis though, not view.

Malcolm wrote:

From a Dzogchen point of view, the practices of the eight lower vehicles will not get you where you want to go because they are all based on mind, whereas Dzogchen is based on pristine consciousness. That point is hard to grok until you have had a direct perception of vidyā.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 31st, 2017 at 11:30 PM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

I mean, I get that one should not cling to or be conditioned by practices, that intellectual knowledge is provisional etc.. but I seem to run into the opposite sometimes - people who seem to reject "lower" practices altogether in favor of a sometimes rigid, sort of protestant approach where any "lower" practice requiring what is viewed as effort are frowned upon. Sometimes the value of studying or knowing Dharma subjects at all is questioned.

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen is the most intellectually elaborate Buddhist system there is. It also cannot be learned from books, it is a system that depends principally on receiving intimate instructions from a qualified guru.

Johnny Dangerous said:

I get this, but it is not really what I'm talking about exactly. I would argue that -no- form of Dharma can truly be learned from books anyway, in anything but a really limited form.

Malcolm wrote:

I agree. The difference lies in the path. There is a path for śrāvakas, pratyekabuddhas, etc., and they all, from a Dzogchen perspective, miss the point. They are provisional means, like hitching a ride— they will get you part of the way you want to go, but not all the way.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 31st, 2017 at 9:33 PM

Title: Re: Rainbow Body in Dzogchen Tantras?

Content:

bryandavis said:

Malcolm,

So in essence, Rainbow body of the great transference or rainbody at the time of death allows Buddhahood without going through the bardo process. Would a practitioner of HYT be able to garner the same realization using the path of transformation?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 31st, 2017 at 9:32 PM

Title: Re: Sems, Dharmata and Dharmadhatu

Content:

cephheidvariable said:

Another one, am I wasting my time with the Kosha if I just want to get to Maha-rainbow-body (and thus engender faith in non-practitioners), as quickly as possible? Can you think of anything wrong with this motivation?

Thanks again, sir!

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen practitioners should study abhidharma, etc., if only so they know what the difference is between what we practice and our view of the path and what other people practice and their view of the path. This includes looking into non-Buddhist schools. The function of studying tenets is to eliminate concepts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 31st, 2017 at 9:30 PM

Title: Re: Sems, Dharmata and Dharmadhatu

Content:

cephheidvariable said:

It refers to all afflictive ideation.

So, say, when I'm analyzing my mind (for its color, etc.) I have trouble pinpointing (or I guess, separating) the mind from the sensory consciousnesses. The lhungrub (possibly wrong word to use here) of the ayatanas from mental ideation. Visual consciousness is there, aural consciousness is there, etc. So the afflictive qualities of the sensorial consciousness would be included in this?

Malcolm wrote:

Mind, in Dzogchen, refers to the repository of traces.

cephheidvariable said:

Oh, he is. I'm just saying. Had this not been just an NDE and been a finality, it's not very reassuring that there's much hope for an immensely deluded person such as myself. I don't know, perhaps I should just stick to the bodhisattvayana and skip the eternal hell thing altogether, but having taken DI, I suppose that may not be an option any longer.

Malcolm wrote:

Since you have taken DI, you should stop worrying about samsara.

cepheidvariable said:

So, dharmata is the nature of any possible dharma (minus the uncompounded ones), i.e., empty of it's own inherent existence?

Malcolm wrote:

Even unconditioned dharmas have a dharmatā.

cepheidvariable said:

Vasubandhu states that the three uncompounded dharmas are space, cessation due to realization and cessation not due to realization (I'm having trouble with the last one). I take it we Dzogchenpas take issue with at least one of these. Idk.

Malcolm wrote:

No, not at all. Non-analytical cessation is the simple absence of a cause.

cepheidvariable said:

Thank you so much for your help, Loppon-la. By the way, I picked up Buddhahood in This Life. Waaaaay over my head, but from the standpoint of spiritual materialism I'm happy to have it available. Thanks for the lotsawa work, and that talk you gave that's on facebook was pretty cool. Glad to have the opportunity to pick your brain a little.

Malcolm wrote:

[/quote]

It is a very dense book. In time it will become more clear as you practice more and receive more teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 31st, 2017 at 9:21 PM

Title: Re: "highest practices" and anti-intellectualism

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

I mean, I get that one should not cling to or be conditioned by practices, that intellectual knowledge is provisional etc.. but I seem to run into the opposite sometimes - people who seem to reject "lower" practices altogether in favor of a sometimes rigid, sort of protestant approach where any "lower" practice requiring what is viewed as effort are frowned upon. Sometimes the value of studying or knowing Dharma subjects at all is questioned.

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen is the most intellectually elaborate Buddhist system there is. It also cannot be learned from books, it is a system that depends principally on receiving intimate instructions from a qualified guru.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 31st, 2017 at 2:14 AM

Title: Re: Does it matter if you reveal your yidam?

Content:

tingdzin said:

This is the highest viewpoint, but when one is just starting yidam practice, it might not be helpful to be too facile about the whole thing. There is the ever-present peril of over-intellectualizing one's practice.

As I said, if you do keep your Vajrayana practices secret, you can't go wrong.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, especially if your main practice is the mani mantra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 31st, 2017 at 1:46 AM

Title: Re: Won't even be able to find the outer guru anymore

Content:

The Guru Drinks Bourbon, by Dzongsar Jamyang Khyentse, page 12 said:

Therefore, the outer guru is necessary until you at least have the gist of the inner and secret gurus. When you realize the inner and secret gurus, you won't even be able to find the outer guru anymore.

Kelwin said:

Won't even be able to find the outer guru anymore? Can anyone explain that statement?

Malcolm wrote:

It means you a) will have no more questions b) you will need no further transmissions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 30th, 2017 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: Gap in the Dharma?

Content:

madyhamika said:

What appears to be missing is a Buddhist exposition of how the illusion of inherent existence arises as a conventionally existent psychological phenomena in the first place, and secondarily, how the illusion of inherent existence leads to suffering in psychological terms.

Malcolm wrote:

This is one of the main subjects of the so called intimate instruction series of the Great Perfection.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 30th, 2017 at 11:29 PM

Title: Re: Rainbow Body in Dzogchen Tantras?

Content:

zenman said:

Is there buddhahood without rainbow body? Is Yeshe Lama another name for buddhahood? Or Kuntu Zangpo?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, there is a kind of Buddhahood without rainbow body. And to your second question, yes.

zenman said:

What kind of buddha was Shakyamuni then? Trying to figure this out. Are there different stages in being a buddha?

Malcolm wrote:

According the Dzogchen tradition, following the general Mahāyāna tradition, Śakyamuni was a nirmanakāya, an emanation of the sambhogakāya Vajradhara/Vairocana Jñānasagara.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 30th, 2017 at 9:47 PM

Title: Re: Rainbow Body in Dzogchen Tantras?

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Malcolm, I get that Rainbow body=Buddhahood...what I was wondering was if there is anything written about the process/experience of Rainbow body found specifically in the Dzogchen Tantras or commentaries?

Malcolm wrote:

There is.

Fa Dao said:

Can you elaborate or is it meant to be secret and not talked about? Its just that all of us who practice Dzogchen know that this is the ultimate goal we are working towards but most dont know what that goal actually entails...would be nice to know...ya know?

Malcolm wrote:

You can look at the final chapter in Buddhahood in This Life.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 30th, 2017 at 8:50 PM

Title: Re: Sems, Dharmata and Dharmadhatu

Content:

cepheidvariable said:

Hello dear friends,

Some quick questions for you guys, seeing as you've all been so helpful previously.

(1) When we refer to "Sems" in the sense of Dzogchen, are we referring to all of the ayatanas? Or just that of mental ideation?

Malcolm wrote:

It refers to all afflictive ideation.

cepheidvariable said:

(2) Should I be concerned about ending up in Vajra Hell, haven taken DI with ChNNR and received one lung for a ngondro text, with no other empowerments? I've seen that Sam Bercholz -- of Shambhala Publications -- has a new book called "A Guided Tour of Hell." If one of the senior students of Thinley Norbu Rinpoche ended up there, what hope is there for me?

Malcolm wrote:

Last I knew, Bercholz was alive and well.

cepheidvariable said:

And finally, (3) I seem to recall Allan Wallace saying that Dharmata is a shortening of dharmadhatu? I assume this is incorrect, what is the relationship of these two terms. I have been working with the hypothesis that dharmadhatu kind of refers to what would be called in set theory "the set of all possible sets/elements." Is this incorrect?

Malcolm wrote:

Dharmatā can refer to many things. In this context it refers to the emptiness of a single thing; dharmadhātu refers to the emptiness of all things.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 30th, 2017 at 8:38 AM

Title: Re: Rainbow Body in Dzogchen Tantras?

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Malcolm, I get that Rainbow body=Buddhahood...what I was wondering was if there is anything written about the process/experience of Rainbow body found specifically in the Dzogchen Tantras or commentaries?

Malcolm wrote:

There is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 29th, 2017 at 11:30 PM

Title: Re: Does it matter if you reveal your yidam?

Content:

Boomerang said:

yidam

Malcolm wrote:

"Yi dam" means "promise," actually. Thus, if you are a Dzogchen practitioner, your promise is vidyā. If you say that you are a Dzogchen practitioner, you are essentially claiming that vidyā is your yidam. Everything else is secondary.

Boomerang said:

So when a person on Dharmawheel says they practice Dzogchen they are openly claiming that vidyā is their yidam, and this doesn't break vows of secrecy like it would in Mahayoga or Highest Yoga Tantra? Is it only harmful when you talk about Dzogchen with the wrong person, such as a person with no interest in dharma?

Coincidentally, one of the aforementioned biographies was of your late guru, Yeshe Dorje Rinpoche. I wonder if the circumstances regarding secrecy were different or him, since he was constantly revealing his attainments by doing his job. What do you think?

Two other gurus who openly talk about deities they practice are Garchen Rinpoche and Namkhai Norbu Rinpoche. Is this a subtle way of saying, "I have attained siddhi, so there's nothing for me to lose by revealing this?" Or maybe it's okay for them to reveal those yidams because they aren't the main yidam?

Malcolm wrote:

Anytime you take an empowerment, you are making a commitment to that method of practice from now until awakening. That is essentially what a yidam is, i.e., a commitment to the path of awakening. The whole idea of "special yidams" is a bit of quasi theistic superstition. It does not matter who anyone's yidam is since the continuum of pristine consciousness of all yidams is the same.

People have karmic relations with this or that practice. But in reality, everyone in Mahāyāna has the same yidam: buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 29th, 2017 at 9:27 PM

Title: Re: Does it matter if you reveal your yidam?

Content:

Boomerang said:
yidam

Malcolm wrote:

"Yi dam" means "promise," actually. Thus, if you are a Dzogchen practitioner, your promise is vidyā. If you say that you are a Dzogchen practitioner, you are essentially claiming that vidyā is your yidam. Everything else is secondary.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 29th, 2017 at 8:44 PM

Title: Re: Rainbow Body in Dzogchen Tantras?

Content:

zenman said:

Is there buddhahood without rainbow body? Is Yeshe Lama another name for buddhahood? Or Kuntu Zangpo?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, there is a kind of Buddhahood without rainbow body. And to your second question, yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 29th, 2017 at 7:47 PM

Title: Re: Rainbow Body in Dzogchen Tantras?

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Can you elaborate or is there just not much that is written?

Malcolm wrote:

Rainbow body is buddhahood. So any standard description of a Buddha's experience of the inexhaustible ornamental wheel of the body, speech, mind, qualities, and activities of the Buddha would apply.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 29th, 2017 at 4:24 AM

Title: Re: Yamantaka with Protection Sphere

Content:

conebeckham said:

Just keep in mind that the Yamantaka practice done in Drikung, with Garchen Rinpoche, differs from the Vajrabhairava practices that Geluk folks do.

Drikung's Yamantaka is a terma. Nyingma tradition.

Malcolm wrote:

its actually a kama tradition (from Nubchen) reinforced with pure visions.

I have seen the original six armed Yamantaka statue at Samye, made in India. It looks very little like Tibetan representations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 29th, 2017 at 12:58 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Possibly of interest:

https://www.academia.edu/2430819/Simulating_Liberation_The_Tibetan_Buddhist_Game_Ascending_the_Spiritual_Levels_

Malcolm wrote:

Chogyal Namkhai Norbu's

http://shangshung.org/store/index.php?main_page=product_info&products_id=574 has 108 total positions, and includes the 13 dimensions where Dzogchen is taught. The Muslim hells are the hardest from which to escape, apart from Vajra Hell.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 28th, 2017 at 10:30 PM

Title: Re: Rainbow Body in Dzogchen Tantras?

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Are there any of the Dzogchen Tantras or commentaries that talk specifically about what its like to have rainbow body? How one functions? what it "feels" like? All that we are told as Dzogchen practitioners is how to get there and that its the ultimate but that seems to be as far as it goes....

Malcolm wrote:

Spontaneously and blissful.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 28th, 2017 at 9:19 PM

Title: Re: Book on Non Conceptualization?

Content:

Tirisilex said:

Can someone please suggest a book on Non conceptualization.. I tried a search on Amazon and got nothing. I really want to explore the concept of non conception.

Malcolm wrote:

You should look at Klaus Dieter Mathis writings on Kagyu Mahāmudra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 28th, 2017 at 8:47 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

zenman said:

I have been waiting for a month to get my user account activated at the website to access webcast replays. I have sent two emails to the addresses given about this without answer. Any ideas?

Leif said:

I believe webcast replays are generally only accessible to IDC members.

zenman said:

I am talking about membership, cost me 130 euros. Are there different kinds of memberships?

Malcolm wrote:

You have to go through your local gakyil.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 27th, 2017 at 9:46 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

smcj said:

Instantaneous types are the most rare since you would need a high degree of past-life realization & familiarity as well as having met conducive circumstances in this life. My Gelug teacher elaborated on this by saying that instantaneous enlightenment is really a fiction. The "work" of dharma practice is always there, but it may be in a previous life and therefore unseen. Thus if viewed from this life only it may appear as effortless and instantaneous but that is simply not seeing the entire picture.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a fiction, but it is as rare as a star seen during the daytime.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 27th, 2017 at 8:41 PM

Title: Re: Is Kunjed Gyalpo the word of Garab Dorje ?

Content:

florin said:

In a way i consider the kunjed gyalpo collection as a reactionary tantra against the schema of 8 yanas and their methodologies.

Malcolm wrote:

I prefer to consider it a dialogue.

florin said:

But how well known was this schema at the time of Garab Dorje ?

Malcolm wrote:

If the nine yāna scheme existed in India, it was among a very small circle of scholars, and quite late (i.e. late 8th century). There is zero chance the Kun byed rgyal po is something other than a Tibetan compilation of disparate texts— some Indian, some Tibetan— forged into whole sometime in the late ninth, early tenth century.

florin said:

My thoughts are that the repeated rejection of this schema it was generated as a reaction and a response to an already existing audience that was already familiar with this schema.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a long history in India of masters who practiced graduated paths and then came to consider them provisional. The earliest wave of these people are represented by Śrī Siṃha, Vimalamitra and so on. Later on we have Saraha and Vairocanaraṣita (an 11th century Indian who travelled to Tibet and stayed there, who was responsible for translating many of Saraha's more radical dohas).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 27th, 2017 at 2:47 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

kirtu said:

That's why I'm surprised that you chose that metaphor.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

I chose that metaphor because it is a traditional one in Dzogchen. For example, Mañjuśrīmitra's Meditation on Bodhicitta is nicknamed "rdo la gser shun," Smelting Gold from Ore.

Mipham states:

Having established the intrinsic, natural uniformity of the mind of perfect realization [byang chub sems, bodhicitta], the ultimate dharmatā, as the unmistakable meaning of the Great Perfection, the intimate instruction of how to meditate is the treatise exemplified by a skilled smith smelting the element of gold in gold ore into liquid, meaning that it is actually extracted, which uses the principle of connecting the example and the meaning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 27th, 2017 at 2:27 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The approach of Dzogchen is like smelting ore to extract gold.

kirtu said:

The smelting metaphor is a transformation, a fabrication.

Why is the approach not actually more like testing the gold and then realizing/confirming that it really is gold? The preliminaries maybe are more like smelting just as purification but once introduced then it is training in confidence, etc.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is not a transformation nor a fabrication. You are not changing one thing into another thing. You are not creating something new.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 27th, 2017 at 1:34 AM

Title: Re: "Deaths of despair"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Then I will be better equipped to be a barista. In general, I will be more literate and more adaptable than someone with a technical degree or technical school education. You see, I am a great believer in education purely for the sake of learning.

binocular said:

Have you ever actually have to live and work like this?

Malcolm wrote:

Sure. I worked a dishwasher for many years, then as a house painter, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 26th, 2017 at 9:51 PM

Title: Re: "Deaths of despair"

Content:

dreambow said:

"People with liberal arts educations are generally better equipped in life" well in my neck of the woods you may end up working as a barista.

Malcolm wrote:

Then I will be better equipped to be a barista. In general, I will be more literate and more adaptable than someone with a technical degree or technical school education.

You see, I am a great believer in education purely for the sake of learning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 26th, 2017 at 8:48 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

Grigoris said:

In which case you are saying that conventional mind can be enlightened (experiences enlightenment), or that is enlightened already (but not perceived of as enlightened)?

Malcolm wrote:

The approach of the Sakyapas and Gelugpas is alchemical— they want to take the base matter of the five aggregates and transform them into the five wisdoms.

The approach of Dzogchen is like smelting ore to extract gold.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 26th, 2017 at 8:17 AM

Title: Re: "Deaths of despair"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The GOP, etc., understand that liberally educated people are their worst nightmare. So they have sought to cut funding for liberal, comprehensive education where people are taught to think for themselves.

Wayfarer said:

That's a depressing thought. I wonder if that is a conscious decision as much as one of the many consequences of 'economic rationalism', i.e. regarding education as being a function of the 'market-driven economy'?

I must say, I had an excellent education at Uni of Sydney. When I finished the Buddhist Studies degree, the address given at my Graduation Ceremony was on the theme of 'an unexamined life is not worth living'. It captured so many excellent points about a true liberal arts education and the ability to think for oneself.

(The subjects I have studied have never really been directly relevant to my means of livelihood - in fact that is an major issue in some ways - but on the other hand, I've gained an understanding that I never would have done had I studied law or medicine, which is what my family background would have suggested.)

I think one of the obvious problems of Western culture, generally, is nihilism - the death of meaning, community, a sense of relatedness to those around you and the cosmos. I think many people are dying of loneliness and meaninglessness. In much poorer environments, I suspect that people are less prone to suicide because they're fully occupied just trying to survive, so they don't sit around and wonder 'why am I doing this?'

Malcolm wrote:

People with liberal arts educations are generally better equipped in life.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 26th, 2017 at 4:53 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

conebeckham said:

Solidifying either a "conventional mind" or a "nature of Mind" are just conceptual traps, and, as Malcolm said, not helpful. This is a real crucial point, I think. That's why too much talk is not useful, esp. here on the Internet.

Malcolm wrote:

Since there are no phenomena that are not one's mind, the diversity [as mind] is the mind series. The sole intent of these [texts] is to refute that the mind is anything other than the self-originated pristine consciousness.

-- Longchenpa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 26th, 2017 at 1:52 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

Grigoris said:

It is a question, not a suggestion. That is why there are question marks in the statement.

There seems to be a distinction between ... and ... but the question is whether they have the same nature or not.

Malcolm wrote:

The mind essence (sems nyid, cittatā) is the essence or nature of the mind by definition. What does it mean to say mind essence? It means that the mind's essence is inseparable clarity and emptiness. There is no nature of the mind beyond this. It is also not meaningful to speak of a further nature of the mind essence.

conebeckham said:

Would you say the crucial point is whether one "sees" this clarity/emptiness, or not? And for how long? At some point, with training, one "always sees" this clarity/emptiness?

Malcolm wrote:

The nature of the mind is seen in a moment of unfabricated consciousness. This moment of seeing is called vidyā. The difference between buddhas and sentient being solely depends on how fragmented this vidyā is. In buddhas vidyā is unbroken and continuous; in sentient beings it is fragmented and discontinuous.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 25th, 2017 at 9:12 PM

Title: Re: "Deaths of despair"

Content:

dreambow said:

Interesting, a lot of people I know with university degrees are unemployed or under employed. The few I know who have full time jobs have no job security as they are all on contracts. Many jobs have been outsourced to India or the Philippines. It's hard to compete with these low wage countries. Of course universities are being run like businesses and have been run that way for many years, so students often from Asia who pay up front can usually get into any subject they please and are often passed accordingly. Money speaks louder than ability.

Every second student is clamouring to get into commerce, banking and become an economist....its the buzz word, its your ticket to employment.

Yes many people are sad and dispirited.

Malcolm wrote:

It is the nature of samsara to be sad and dispirited. That said, the US has disinvested in education, and has done so for decades, since Reagan. It was deliberate. The GOP, etc., understand that liberally educated people are their worst nightmare. So they have sought to cut funding for liberal, comprehensive education where people are taught to think for themselves.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 25th, 2017 at 9:02 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

Grigoris said:

Are you saying that "conventional mind" has a different nature than "the nature of mind"???

Marc said:

Hi Grigoris

Are you somehow suggesting that the distinction between sems and sems nyid isn't a crucial key point in Dzogchen ?

Grigoris said:

It is a question, not a suggestion. That is why there are question marks in the statement. There seems to be a distinction between ... and ... but the question is whether they have the same nature or not.

Malcolm wrote:

The mind essence (sems nyid, cittatā) is the essence or nature of the mind by definition. What does it mean to say mind essence? It means that the mind's essence is inseparable clarity and emptiness. There is no nature of the mind beyond this. It is also not meaningful to speak of a further nature of the mind essence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 25th, 2017 at 8:46 AM

Title: Re: "Deaths of despair"

Content:

Rakz said:

For what?

Malcolm wrote:

For being a learned, cultured person with a sense of history and perspective.

STEM programs are fine, but they need to be supplemented by ample amounts of Liberal Arts.

For example, people with Liberal Arts degrees often make much better programmers than STEM graduates, because they have more flexible thinking.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 25th, 2017 at 8:34 AM

Title: Re: "Deaths of despair"

Content:

Rakz said:

Maybe this has more to do with the failure of second/third wave feminism? Studies have shown that women are much less happier than they were in the 50s. I wonder why.

Malcolm wrote:

Really? What studies? By whom?

Rakz said:

<http://www.dailymail.co.uk/femail/article-1189894/Women-happy-years-ago-.html>

Malcolm wrote:

The study does not support your thesis that this is a result of the failure of feminism. The study specifically states that "Rather than immediately inferring that the women's movement failed to improve the lot of women, we conclude with a simple taxonomy for organizing alternative explanations of this paradox."

They then address the issue of feminism in a nuanced fashion, "Finally, the changes brought about through the women's movement may have decreased women's happiness. The increased opportunity to succeed in many dimensions may have led to an increased likelihood of believing that one's life is not measuring up. Similarly, women may now compare their lives to a broader group, including men, and find their lives more likely to come up short in this assessment. Or women may simply find the complexity and increased pressure in their modern lives to have come at the cost of happiness."

It also says, "It has been recognized that an individual's assessment of their well-being may reflect the social desirability of responses and Kahneman (1999) argues that people in good circumstances may be hedonically better off than people in worse circumstances, yet they may require more to declare themselves happy. In the context of the findings presented in this paper, women may now feel more comfortable being honest about their true happiness and have thus deflated their previously inflated responses."

But quite frankly, not a single one of the woman that I know would dream of trading in their independence and so on for some putative happiness that exists on TV in Ozzie and Harriet land.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 25th, 2017 at 5:35 AM

Title: Re: "Deaths of despair"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I was referring adversarial conditions in contemporary society which render less-educated people less marketable for jobs, etc.

binocular said:

In which case, it is not education itself that provides people with better tools and resources to deal with adversarial conditions. Education is just a means to an end in our particular system.

But education doesn't really solve anything, it just shifts the same problem to another level. Education only offers an advantage to a person as long as enough other people don't get that education. But when more people get that education, the competition is just the same, and many lose out again. IOW, you could educate everyone, and many people would still be unemployed. This is because our systems of production are far too efficient for everyone to have room to have a job.

Rakz said:

Only useful education is a STEM degree, but even that is no guarantee of a job nowadays.

Malcolm wrote:

Total nonsense. We need more liberal arts education, not less.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 25th, 2017 at 5:34 AM

Title: Re: "Deaths of despair"

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

Right. The article made it clear that while similar deaths in Hispanic and black communities were decreasing, the aggregate ratio remains far higher than in white communities. But - the headline essentially means that the community with the best mental health is deteriorating. The headline did not say that the communities with the worst mental health were improving. So I'd say the odd focus of the article means that an improvement of mental health in Hispanic or black communities is not characterized as a relevant success of American culture.

Malcolm wrote:

Precisely. White women have been offing themselves with drugs and alcohol for decades and decades. Mommy's little helper and all that,

Rakz said:

Maybe this has more to do with the failure of second/third wave feminism? Studies have shown that women are much less happier than they were in the 50s. I wonder why.

Malcolm wrote:

Really? What studies? By whom?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 25th, 2017 at 3:07 AM

Title: Re: "Deaths of despair"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I was referring adversarial conditions in contemporary society which render less-educated people less marketable for jobs, etc.

binocular said:

In which case, it is not education itself that provides people with better tools and resources to deal with adversarial conditions. Education is just a means to an end in our particular system.

But education doesn't really solve anything, it just shifts the same problem to another level. Education only offers an advantage to a person as long as enough other people don't get that education. But when more people get that education, the competition is just the same, and many lose out again. IOW, you could educate everyone, and many people would still be unemployed. This is because our systems of production are far too efficient for everyone to have room to have a job.

Malcolm wrote:

I have always understood education to mean "being trained how to think." That has been missing in the US educational system for anyone who is not had access to good primary, secondary and higher education. That access is becoming increasingly rare.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 25th, 2017 at 1:47 AM

Title: Re: "Deaths of despair"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

People with less education have fewer tools and resources to deal with adversarial conditions.

binocular said:

This needs elaborating.

What education does one get in school that provides the student with better tools and resources to deal with adversarial conditions? They generally don't teach life skills in schools. But it does take a lot of life skills to successfully complete a course of education.

Malcolm wrote:

I was referring adversarial conditions in contemporary society which render less-educated people less marketable for jobs, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 25th, 2017 at 1:41 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

conebeckham said:

Can we agree that you won't "see" either clarity or emptiness, but you will somehow experience the nature of empty clear awareness?

After all, as Karmapa Rangjung Dorje said, "even the Buddhas do not see it."

Tsongkhapa said:

Why would experiencing the conventional nature of the mind lead to an experience of emptiness? Our mind is obscured and we perceive all phenomena as inherently existent including the mind. Without specific meditation on emptiness you will never perceive the empty nature of things and you certainly won't simply by focusing on conventional truths.

Conrad Beckham said:

Who said anything about meditating on conventional nature of mind? Not me. Not the Dohas or Upadeshas, really, either. That is your own fabricated conclusion. I don't think you read the Upadesha from Tilopa, because you would not mistake the object if you had read it, and the commentary by Khenchen Thrangu Rinpoche.

I do wish you would read outside your own ghost-written tradition, with an attempt to be open-minded and with no tortured attempts to turn words and meaning to your purpose. It's transparent and intellectually dishonest.

Nowhere in the upadesha, nor in any of the quotes I have provided in this thread, does anyone suggest "conventional mind" to equate with primordial awareness. If you assert that "Nature of Mind," the empty yet cognizant awareness which is nonconceptual and without beginning or end, is conventional, please provide sources from sutra, Tantra, or upadesha to support this assertion. Frankly, every quote and every source provided thus far, and every Doha and pith instruction any of us could trot out in future, contradicts your position when read plainly without superimposition or needless twisting.

You can continue to parrot your dogma to the end of time and you will still have no idea what the Mahasiddhas are talking about in their pith instructions. You've gotten in your own way. I cannot say it more plainly. Go read and contemplate the Ganges Mahamudra Upadesha Tilopa spoke to Naropa, and read the commentary from the master, Thrangu Rinpoche, it is a gift--do not throw it away carelessly or break it.

Malcolm wrote:

Most of the confusion here results from the fact that in the Great Perfection, the three kāyas are regarded as the path appearances, and not the result. Since TKF has no idea about this, he is naturally confused about it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 25th, 2017 at 12:08 AM

Title: Re: "Deaths of despair"

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

So you mean all the despair of blacks, latinos, and women amounts to nothing? It is only a failure of American Culture when white men start to off themselves through drugs, alcohol and depression?

PuerAzaelis said:

Right. The article made it clear that while similar deaths in Hispanic and black communities were decreasing, the aggregate ratio remains far higher than in white communities. But - the headline essentially means that the community with the best mental health is deteriorating. The headline did not say that the communities with the worst mental health were improving. So I'd say the odd focus of the article means that an improvement of mental health in Hispanic or black communities is not characterized as a relevant success of American culture.

Malcolm wrote:

Precisely. White women have been offing themselves with drugs and alchohol for decades and decades. Mommy's little helper and all that,

It is interesting too to note that addiction rates are much lower in Europe in general.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 24th, 2017 at 9:22 PM

Title: Re: "Deaths of despair"

Content:

Wayfarer said:

That is very sad and also very concerning. I see it as a sign of the real failure of American culture, society and politics, on a deep level.

Malcolm wrote:

So you mean all the despair of blacks, latinos, and women amounts to nothing? It is only a failure of American Culture when white men start to off themselves through drugs, alcohol and depression?

Wayfarer said:

This sense of despair is what got Trump elected - he promised that he can turn it around.

Malcolm wrote:

77,000 votes got Trump elected. Please bear in mind he lost the popular vote by 3 million+

Wayfarer said:

But, it's a terrible situation, made worse by the fact that really nobody in Government - or nobody who gets any media - is doing anything to address it.

Malcolm wrote:

The reality is that the correlation does not track ethnic identity, it tracks education.

People with less education have fewer tools and resources to deal with adversarial conditions.

If there is a correlation with the Government policies, the correlation lies in the steep cuts to public education and related funding since the Reagan era.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 24th, 2017 at 8:55 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

A merely imputed self does exist.

Malcolm wrote:

There are two kinds of imputation: valid and false.

The imputation of a self is a false imputation. That false imputation exists, but the self it imputes does not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 24th, 2017 at 2:18 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

His Buddhism is a result of a thousand years of doctrinal politics

Tsongkhapa said:

Buddhadharma is really not about politics at all.

You can blame certain Dalai Lamas for corrupting political elements.

Malcolm wrote:

No, I was talking about the ancient politics of Sba bzhed annals. etc., sources you use without even realizing it. Where do you think all this nonsense about Hashang comes from to begin with? But you have no idea. You just inherited a doxology that you have never seriously questioned nor critically examined, taking myths and legends to be historical facts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 24th, 2017 at 2:10 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

conebeckham said:

One thing I do want to make clear, though, is that it is always good to recognize the limits of one's experience and knowledge. You make black/white assertions quite a bit, you know, and the BuddhaDharma doesn't really operate that way. 84,000 teachings, you know? Expedient Meaning.

Tsongkhapafan said:

I agree it's good to recognise one's limits.

As far as black and white assertions are concerned, just because things are empty doesn't mean you can believe anything. Missing out important parts of the path in the name of a 'pathless path' isn't going to lead anywhere.

Malcolm wrote:

That is the point, there is nowhere else to go.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 24th, 2017 at 1:41 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

conebeckham said:

You make black/white assertions quite a bit, you know, and the BuddhaDharma doesn't really operate that way.

Malcolm wrote:

His Buddhism is a result of a thousand years of doctrinal politics, based in part on annals written to bolster Pro-Indian clans over Pro-Chinese clans. This is why these conversations always degenerate into "Your view is Hashang"!

But we know, from a clear study of Samten Migdron, that Hashang's nongradualist view, based on definitive sūtras, was much more profound than Kamalashila's view, based as it was on provisional sūtras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 24th, 2017 at 1:21 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

There's a reason why there are four empowerments in HYT - they plant the seeds for the four bodies of a Buddha. Cultivating one seed, i.e., that planted by the fourth empowerment, is not sufficient.

Malcolm wrote:

It is absolutely sufficient:

Tsongkhapa said:

Actually, it really isn't. The Sambhogakaya arises from the Dharmakaya and the Nirmanakaya emerges from the Sambhogakaya due to having trained in the three bringings of generation and completion stage; in other words, the two stages. Do you think this happens automatically? If there is no motivation, no love, no great compassion, no bodhicitta, no three bringings, none of this will happen automatically. You can't build a house without a solid foundation.

How many stages are you missing out? renunciation? Bodhicitta? Correct view of emptiness?

Don't be in too much of a rush because you'll miss something important.

As for the Chandrakirti analogy, consequences are a useful way of realising emptiness but syllogisms are also important and play their part - don't be in a hurry to bin something that might be important. Even contemplating consequences is a gradual path.

Malcolm wrote:

When you realize dharmakāya, everything else happens automatically. Since the three kāyas are innate, there is no need for effort on a path to realize them. In fact, effort obscures them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 23rd, 2017 at 10:45 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

There's a reason why there are four empowerments in HYT - they plant the seeds for the four bodies of a Buddha. Cultivating one seed, i.e., that planted by the fourth empowerment, is not sufficient.

Malcolm wrote:

It is absolutely sufficient:

For example, the trikāya chapter in the Suvarnaprabhāsa Sūtra states:

For example, lightening arises in an empty sky and light appears based upon lightening. Likewise, the sambhogakāya appears based on dharmakāya and the nirmanakāya appears based on the sambhogakāya.

The Mahāyāna-sūtrālaṃkāra states:

The divisions of the kāyas of the buddhas are the svabhāvakāya and the sambhogakāya, and the other one is the nirmanakāya.

The first two are supports.

And:

The svabhāvakāya is uniform, subtle, connected with [the sambhogakāya], exhibits the enjoyment of all joys, and is asserted as the cause of the abundance of the sambhogakāya.

The svabhāva/dharmakāya is what one realizes for oneself. This realization spontaneously produces the other two kāyas. Therefore, it is sufficient to realize the dharmakāya alone.

The difference is that people of your inclination, gradualists, are algorithmic in their approach and understanding of practice and realization. People of our inclination, non-gradualists, are dialectical in our approach and understanding of practice and realization.

In fact, the whole Prasanga approach of Candrākīrti makes gradualism unnecessary.
Just as one does not need to use syllogism (a form of algorithm) to demonstrate emptiness, and can demonstrate emptiness through consequences (a form of dialectics), likewise, one can realize dharmakāya dialectically, without the need to go step by step. Even in sūtrayāna, such persons are called thod rgal bas, people who skip stages.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 23rd, 2017 at 2:14 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

as I have said before, generation stage is an essential part of the spiritual path and cannot be bypassed.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not essential in the least.

Tsongkhapa said:

Buddha Vajradhara, Tilopa, Naropa and all realised Tantric adepts disagree with you.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they don't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 22nd, 2017 at 11:56 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

heart said:

Perhaps I am expressing myself badly, I am rather saying that bskyed rim doesn't really work without rDzogs chen.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

I can go along with that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 22nd, 2017 at 8:49 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

as I have said before, generation stage is an essential part of the spiritual path and cannot be bypassed.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not essential in the least.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 22nd, 2017 at 8:48 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

heart said:

Thinking you need perfect shamata to arrive at vipassana is common but the truth is that shamata always have some vipassana. In fact it is impossible to develop shamata without a little bit of vipassana.

Malcolm wrote:

Really, so all Hindus have a little bit of vipaśyāna in their śamatha? Really?

heart said:

In the same way completion is impossible without development and development without completion. It is, or should be, integration with the natural state.

Malcolm wrote:

If we take you seriously, you are claiming that rDzogs chen is impossible without bskyed rim and rdzogs rim!

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 22nd, 2017 at 8:37 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen/Mahamudra & Vichara.....same or different?

Content:

dreambow said:

How to define liberation: "Not being bound, attracted or repulsed by any one particular 'realm' is called the dawning of the Svabhavikakaya in the mindstream.

When activities of body, speech and mind no longer entail karmic consequences, one is said to have attained Abhisambodhikaya (perfect kaya of complete awakening)"

Many definitions and all true pointers.

Malcolm wrote:

I think you need to study the stages of the path a little more systematically.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 22nd, 2017 at 8:36 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen/Mahamudra & Vichara.....same or different?

Content:

Stefos said:

What my ultimate goal in picking apart things, per se, is that there are people who cannot even understand Mahamudra, Dzogchen, Tantra or deeper levels of "meditative absorption" or Jhanas, let alone "attain" it or them, what have you.

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen/mahāmudra are for everyone who wishes to understand them.

Stefos said:

If the perception isn't there, the understanding of the concept isn't there.

If a physiological problem is present such as a TBI, Schizophrenia (full blown) or Wet brain syndrome....things get even more dicey.

Malcolm wrote:

This called "lacking a precious human birth."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 22nd, 2017 at 8:32 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Would you accept that Mahamudra is a completion stage realisation, or is it something else?

Malcolm wrote:

“Mahāmudrā” is a mental imputation of the childish.

Virupa

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 22nd, 2017 at 8:30 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Hashang was wrong to want to abandon all conceptuality...

Malcolm wrote:

Classic example of fake news. Hashang's view is much more profound than Kamalashila's. But centuries of misrepresentation and politics have obscured this fact.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 22nd, 2017 at 8:28 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Conceptual minds create, and the conceptual minds of generation stage create the cause for completion stage experiences.

Malcolm wrote:

The purpose of the creation stage is remedy attachment to impure perception. The purpose of the completion stage is to eliminate attachment even to pure perception.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 22nd, 2017 at 5:14 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen/Mahamudra & Vichara.....same or different?

Content:

Matt J said:

No doubt, if the Dzogchen Atiyoga is the primordial vehicle, which rather than being a philosophical system is the direct, nonconceptual Vision (of) the primordial state, and which qua primordial vehicle is (as stated in the Samten Migdrön) the universal ancestor of all vehicles, by no means could it be circumscribed to a single religious system, a single country or a single culture.

--- Elias Capriles (DC instructor)

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed, Samantabhadra claims that all vehicles are his vehicles, he then sets out which of those vehicles view keep one trapped in samsara (60), and he then presents the nine vehicles which lead one out of it.

though my vehicles are inconceivable, they are included in two categories:

samsara and nirvana.

Further, samsara includes: [53/b]

the false view and the eternalist view.

The false vehicle is held to be 360 beliefs in a self.

The nine vehicles of course, are the vehicles of nirvana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 22nd, 2017 at 5:06 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen/Mahamudra & Vichara.....same or different?

Content:

Matt J said:

It is logical to hypothetize that Shaivism may have had its roots in Bön, which prevailed in the region of Mount Kailash ever since Tönpa Shenrab Miwochei established it there some 3.800 years ago, and which contains its own Dzogchen teachings, part of which may have leaked into Shaivism.

--- Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Malcolm wrote:

I am afraid that this speculation by Norbu Rinpoche cannot stand up to scrutiny. We can hypothesize all we want, but especially when there is counterfactual evidence, such a hypothesis cannot stand. There are no Great Perfection teachings in Shaivism, Kashmiri or otherwise.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 22nd, 2017 at 5:01 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

zenman said:

How about on purely mental level?

Malcolm wrote:

Not sure what you mean.

zenman said:

How about on purely mental level?

Vasana said:

Dzogchen Semde is probably the most mind oriented in terms of it's approach to practice- i.e, no deliberate modification of body or breath or any visualization.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is wrong. "Sems sde" also involves prāṇayāma, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 22nd, 2017 at 4:58 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

heart said:

I don't agree. Doing the generation stage make you have experiences that can't be grasped or understood by conceptual ideas. If Dharma was a conceptual idea everyone would have figured it out by now, enlightenment would be a university course.

Malcolm wrote:

The creation stage is completely conceptual. Experiences are nothing but concepts. The reason we have a completion stage to begin with is to remedy the conceptuality of the creation stage.

heart said:

That is only true if you practice them in that order, the annutaratantra style. In the Nyingma they are inseparable development and completion once you received the direct introduction.

Malcolm wrote:

Even in the gsar ma schools, creation and completion are supposed to practiced as an inseparable unity. Nevertheless, in fact people generally practice sadhanas, regardless of school, in two phases. Even if you are practicing the creation stage and completion stage inseparably, the fact is that the reason you do so is because the creation stage is completely conceptual since it is based in words and concepts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 22nd, 2017 at 1:47 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

heart said:

I don't agree. Doing the generation stage make you have experiences that can't be grasped or understood by conceptual ideas. If Dharma was a conceptual idea everyone would have figured it out by now, enlightenment would be a university course.

Malcolm wrote:

The creation stage is completely conceptual. Experiences are nothing but concepts. The reason we have a completion stage to begin with is to remedy the conceptuality of the creation stage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 22nd, 2017 at 1:34 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yantra yoga, pranayāma, etc., are all practices which in Dzogchen do not require deity yoga. In general, one can understand that Dzogchen utilizes many methods from the completion stage without requiring the creation stage.

zenman said:

How about on purely mental level?

Malcolm wrote:

Not sure what you mean.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 22nd, 2017 at 12:47 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

zenman said:

What are the names of those methods that do the same preparation without deities?

Malcolm wrote:

Yantra yoga, pranayāma, etc., are all practices which in Dzogchen do not require deity yoga. In general, one can understand that Dzogchen utilizes many methods from the completion stage without requiring the creation stage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 21st, 2017 at 11:54 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

zenman said:

I saw the date for the lung (18.6.) but not the name and the way the lung is given. Is this information available yet?

Malcolm wrote:

It will stream live over the web. I will have more definitive information soon.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 21st, 2017 at 11:52 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

zenman said:

No deity allergy here. I am just wondering if such a method exists or not. I suppose not based on your comments which I am grateful for.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, many.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 21st, 2017 at 10:50 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

zenman said:

Are there ways of practice of dzogchen or mahamudra that uses something else than tantric deity/ies as a method of practice?

Malcolm wrote:

There are many practices within Dzogchen that do not involve deity yoga. But one should not be allergic to deity practices if one is a Dzogchen practitioner.

Guru Yoga, however, is indispensable.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 21st, 2017 at 10:08 PM

Title: Re: Are Tibetans racist?

Content:

tingdzin said:

IMO, "racism" is an imprecise and badly overworked word. In the present context, for example, are Tibetans really a "race"? What does the word mean, really? Certainly there are vast phenotypical (meaning visually apparent) differences between Tibetans who come from the border areas of Amdo, for example, and those who come from areas near Ladakh. I suspect there is also considerable genotypical variation. Similarly, there are Thai people who look like Chinese, Burmese, Malays, Khmer, etc., but there is a concept of "Thainess" that has more to do with cultural assumptions than physical appearance or even political citizenship.

A more precise word might be "ethnocentric". Granted, it does not lend itself to name-calling as well as the word "racist", but it seems more accurate in a lot of cases where the term "racism" is bandied about.

Malcolm wrote:

I have met a a number of Tibetans who have pretty negative attitudes about "mi nag pos," blacks. In Tibet, a lot of Tibetans are very bigoted towards Chinese Hui Muslims, and invent outrageous tales about them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 21st, 2017 at 9:55 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen/Mahamudra & Vichara.....same or different?

Content:

monktastic said:

Other religions don't have refuge and bodhicitta. Of course, neither does Buddhism: it is the practitioners that have those things. For one who naturally takes refuge in the principle we happen to know as "Buddha," who knows what is possible?

Stefos said:

Monktastic,

The Theravadas don't have bodhicitta nor rlung nor Dharma protectors.

Malcolm wrote:

They have all three actually. Theravadin texts discuss vāyu/marut because it is part of the Indian system of medicine (Ayurveda). They have bodhicitta, in other words, one can take the bodhisattva vow in Theravada, they merely understand it quite differently than Mahāyāna. They indeed have dharmapālas, look at the <http://www.accesstoinight.org/tipitaka/dn/dn.32.0.piya.html> in the Digha Nikāya

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 21st, 2017 at 9:48 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen/Mahamudra & Vichara.....same or different?

Content:

Stefos said:

Monktastic,

The Theravadas don't have bodhicitta nor rlung nor Dharma protectors.

monktastic said:

Yes, and from the POV of much of Mahayana, they do not attain the same realization. This isn't the place to discuss that (nor am I the person to discuss it with), but given the very different metaphysical assertions they arrive at, it doesn't seem unreasonable. Perhaps it's not crazy to think there's more in common between the mystical traditions of different religions, than between any of them and their orthodox roots.

Hence: refuge in the principle that we (Mahayanists) just happen to call "Buddha."

Malcolm wrote:

According to all Mahāyāna texts, śrāvaka arhats, pratyekabuddhas and buddhas are all the same in terms of their liberation. The difference between them is omniscience.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 21st, 2017 at 9:46 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen/Mahamudra & Vichara.....same or different?

Content:

muni said:

How can there be nondual nature/dzogchen, while at the same time perceiving others with another nondual nature? Nondual = not one, not two, not many. Or no self-no other. And still there is perception of other selves with a characteristic which is believing in a self-nondual by its doctrine?

Malcolm wrote:

The Great Perfection, like all other expressions of Buddhadharma, posits that individuals are unique and independent from one another. Everyone bears their own karma and results, everyone accumulates and purifies afflictions individually, everyone cycles through samsara on their own through the power of their own delusion.

The Buddha never rejected a conventional self, just as he never rejected the principle of the individual accumulation and ripening of karma.

The term "nondual" in Dzogchen texts, depending on context, either means freedom from the extremes of existence and nonexistence, or it means that we confuse our personal, individual experience of the world as a self and an other in absence of self and an other which can be established.

It does not mean that everything is one substance or one consciousness, etc. The latter proposition is a nonBuddhist point of view with no place in Buddhadharma at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 21st, 2017 at 9:39 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen/Mahamudra & Vichara.....same or different?

Content:

dreambow said:

How to define liberation is difficult.

Malcolm wrote:

The definition of liberation is consistent in Buddhadharma, from the canon of the śrāvakas to the tantras of the Great Perfection. In all these Buddhadharma traditions, liberation is defined as freedom from afflictions that cause rebirth in the three realms. Apart from that, there is no other liberation taught in Buddhadharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 21st, 2017 at 9:37 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen/Mahamudra & Vichara.....same or different?

Content:

dreambow said:

Ramana Maharshi said "One consciousness, equally distributed everywhere because of delusion we give it unequal distribution. No distribution, no everywhere"

The teachings of 'advaita' whether it be Ramana, Dattatreya or Nisargadatta is no different to Dzogchen 'the great perfection'. You can knit pick if you want but I can't see any glaring difference.

Malcolm wrote:

The Great Perfection is completely different than Advaita in any form.

In the Great Perfection, vdyā/rigpa is understood to be particular and unique to each sentient being. There is no "unified field" of vidyā or field of consciousness which permeates all beings in the Great Perfection. Those who believe so have not understood a single word of Great Perfection teachings, much less a single word of the teachings of the Buddha.

Great Perfection Tantras explicitly reject the point of view you espouse above, going so far as to list Śankaracarya in the list of 60 teachers who teach wrong view.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 21st, 2017 at 9:32 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen/Mahamudra & Vichara.....same or different?

Content:

Stefos said:

Consider what R.M. said and then see "Does this match Mahamudra?" "Does this match Dzogchen?"

Malcolm wrote:

What RM says is consistent with Advaita, not Mahāmudra or Dzogchen.

Stefos said:

The Buddha himself did practice what his 2 famous teachers taught him, as is found in the Pali Nikayas.

Although not leading to liberation, he never said "Well.....you know.....just forget it because it's completely useless."

He used what they taught him.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha found the formless āyatana concentrations he was taught by Udraka Ramapūtra and Ārāla Kālāma useless in so far as they did not lead to liberation, but instead merely created traces for taking rebirth in the formless āyatanas. So, yes, he did state these were completely useless.

Most people do not realize that meditation is a kind of karma that creates results. When ordinary, common people meditate on the form realm dhyānas for the formless dhyānas they are creating seeds for rebirth in these realms. When Buddha meditated on these dhyānas he did so in order to observe that they were suffering, a cause for suffering, and that there was a cessation and a path from that suffering. When he had meditated and recognized the pernicious nature of all of these meditative "accomplishments," he entered the Vajropama-samadhi which destroyed every last trace of latent affliction which would cause rebirth in the three realms.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 21st, 2017 at 9:23 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra or Dzogchen without tantric empowerment?

Content:

zenman said:

Do teachings or practices of mahamudra or dzogchen without tantric empowerment, and deity practice, exist?

Malcolm wrote:

There is no dzogchen or mahāmudra practice without direct introduction, at minimum.

Deity yoga practice is meant for those who do not understand the meaning of dzogchen or mahāmudra directly. Deity yoga is the indirect means of realizing dzogchen and mahāmudra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 21st, 2017 at 5:17 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Grigoris said:

Which American identity?

binocular said:

Exactly. I think it was discussed earlier in this thread, or some other that while there is a strongly established concept of there existing and "American identity," it's not clear what that "American identity" actually is. American people keep talking about American this, American that, so one would think they mean something by it, but it's not clear what exactly they refer to. Perhaps this is what is the central characteristic of "American identity," even as it flies in the face of the concept of "identity" as such. I.e., identity as an empty shell or an outer layer under which it is not acceptable...

Malcolm wrote:

They are mostly referring to our national myth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 21st, 2017 at 12:31 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen/Mahamudra & Vichara.....same or different?

Content:

Stefos said:

I have yet to see any Buddhist writer or commentator confirm or affirm ANY meditative accomplishment from anyone outside of Buddhadharma.

dzogchungpa said:

Perhaps you should try talking to one privately.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, because we all know how reliable personal opinions about such issues are, especially when they fly in the face of 2500 years of consistent, reasoned assertions to the contrary by people counted in our tradition as awakened in their own right.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 20th, 2017 at 9:23 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Joka said:

I'm confused, are you saying that there is no European collective ethnicity or identity?

Malcolm wrote:

Correct. There is no collective European ethnicity or identity.

binocular said:

I've often seen that Americans tend to think of Europe as basically similar to the US...

Malcolm wrote:

Americans are somewhat provincial in their outlook on the world. It is understandable, we are the new Rome.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 20th, 2017 at 9:01 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen/Mahamudra & Vichara.....same or different?

Content:

Stefos said:

What's going on here between the polemics of Buddhadharma & Sanatana Dharma?
I have yet to see any Buddhist writer or commentator confirm or affirm ANY meditative accomplishment from anyone outside of Buddhadharma.
Why is it that?

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha and his disciples have always considered that nonBuddhists suffer from wrong view. That wrong view prevents them from attaining liberation.

Buddha declared in many places, "Outside of my Dharma and discipline, I do not see any liberated persons."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 20th, 2017 at 5:36 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen/Mahamudra & Vichara.....same or different?

Content:

zenman said:

I can appreciate the detailed articulation. But I do not think the recognition of the nature of mind is dependent on as complex articulation.

Malcolm wrote:

Upon what do you think it depends?

zenman said:

Guru.

Malcolm wrote:

And are there gurus who point out the nature of the mind outside of Buddhadharma? if so, who? And from whom did they receive this introduction?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 20th, 2017 at 4:53 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Joka said:

[

Alright, what's wrong with people having a national identity then especially for various Europeans?

Malcolm wrote:

There is nothing wrong with people having ethnic or national identities, per se.

The problem arises when people discriminate against others based on imaginary differences between human beings based on ethnicity.

In fact, there is only one human race, and we live on one planet. We have to make this planet work for everyone, as best we can.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 20th, 2017 at 4:41 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen/Mahamudra & Vichara.....same or different?

Content:

zenman said:

I always felt it strange how buddhists are so keen to deny that people from other religions couldn't recognize their nature of mind.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not strange at all. Other religions do not even parse things in these terms. How can you realize something you cannot even articulate?

zenman said:

I can appreciate the detailed articulation. But I do not think the recognition of the nature of mind is dependent on as complex articulation.

Malcolm wrote:

Upon what do you think it depends?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 20th, 2017 at 3:14 AM

Title: Re: Any Vajrayana centers in or near Iowa/Minnesota border?

Content:

Grigoris said:

No I'm not moving, I am asking on behalf of a friend of mine.

Malcolm wrote:

Lama Dawa

<http://saraswatibhawan.org>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 20th, 2017 at 3:11 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen/Mahamudra & Vichara.....same or different?

Content:

zenman said:

I always felt it strange how buddhists are so keen to deny that people from other religions couldn't recognize their nature of mind.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not strange at all. Other religions do not even parse things in these terms. How can you realize something you cannot even articulate?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 20th, 2017 at 3:10 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen/Mahamudra & Vichara.....same or different?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Otherwise, the consequence is that one is asserting that Padmasambhava is asserting, contra all sūtras on the subject, that the self of the nonBuddhists is equivalent with the tathāgatagarbha, the all-basis, and so on.

Grigoris said:

It seems to me that what he is saying is that the Tirthika confuse their experience of the all-basis and mistakenly label it as a "self".

None of my teachers have ever claimed that Mahamudra is a quality/state of relative mind, so it seems bizarre to me that it should be equated in this manner.

Malcolm wrote:

The mahāmudra of the basis is the all-basis. The all-basis mind has a relative aspect as well as an ultimate one. It is also often said that in mahāmudra texts that buddhahood cannot be found outside of the mind. For example, Tilopa says "When the mind lacks a reference point, this is mahāmudrā."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 20th, 2017 at 1:31 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen/Mahamudra & Vichara.....same or different?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is a common misunderstanding of this passage. What the passage is actually referring to is the different names people have for the mind, the relative aspect...

Grigoris said:

Tathāgatagarbha, Mahāmudra and the All-basis as names for the relative mind?

Malcolm wrote:

Definitely. For example, in Dzogchen teachings (of which this text is one), the all-basis(kun gzhi, ālaya) is considered merely a repository of traces. It is different than the the basis (gzhi, sthana). In the Yogacara school, tathāgatagarbha is considered to be another name of the ālayavijñāna.

Otherwise, the consequence is that one is asserting that Padmasambhava is asserting, contra all sūtras on the subject, that the self of the nonBuddhists is equivalent with the tathāgatagarbha, the all-basis, and so on.

On the other hand, the text later clarifies the meaning of the madhyamaka, tathāgatagarbha, ordinary mind, and ālaya with respect to vidyā, but it never invokes the self of the nonBuddhists in that discussion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 19th, 2017 at 9:17 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen/Mahamudra & Vichara.....same or different?

Content:

zenman said:

The book, Self-liberation through seeing with naked awareness (trans. John Myrdhin Reynolds), which is a teaching of Guru Rinpoche, says that the views of the tirthikas, the buddhists and the dzogchen refer to the same truth, on page 12.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a common misunderstanding of this passage. What the passage is actually referring to is the different names people have for the mind, the relative aspect.

"The so-called mind is knowing (rig rig) and clear (tur tur),

With respect to its existence, it does not exist as even one thing;

with respect to a source, it is the source of the variety of samsara and nivana, happiness and suffering.

With respect to assertions about it, there are assertions about it according to eleven vehicles.

It [the mind] is given inconceivable individual names.

(1) Some call it "the mind-essence," "the mind-essence."

(2) Some non-Buddhists give it the name "the self."

(3) Śrāvakas call "oral instruction," "oral instruction." (absence of self of persons taught by the Buddha)

(4) Cittamātrins give it the name "mind."

(5) Some call it "prajñāpāramitā."

(6) Some give it the name "tathāgatagarbha."

(7) Some give it the name "mahāmudra."

(8) Some give it the name "sole unique bindu."

(9) Some give it the name "dharmadhātu."

(10) Some give it the name "all-basis."

(11) Some give it the name "ordinary."

Thus, we can see from this that the text, The Introduction to Vidyā entitled "The Self-liberation through Naked Seeing, is not claiming that all vehicles are party to the same truth, but rather, that everyone has different names for the mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 19th, 2017 at 8:40 PM

Title: Re: Q's about reading the Kunje Gyalpo, and transmission

Content:

Grigoris said:

Why would it surprise you?

Malcolm wrote:

Every other account of the Buddha's mother in all schools held that she was a queen, not a whore.

Grigoris said:

The two professions are not mutually exclusive. Take Trump's wife, for example.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is not whether a prostitute or a courtesan can be elevated to the level of a queen. The point is that this is an anomalous account.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 19th, 2017 at 7:11 AM

Title: Re: Don't pay for Dharma Books?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Question 1: how many of you own Natural Liberation (Wisdom Pubs)?

Question 2: how many of you have the lung for it?

Pero said:

I don't own it and don't have the lung for it.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but many people here do.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 19th, 2017 at 7:09 AM

Title: Re: Q's about reading the Kunje Gyalpo, and transmission

Content:

Grigoris said:

Why would it surprise you?

Malcolm wrote:

Every other account of the Buddha's mother in all schools held that she was a queen, not a whore.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 19th, 2017 at 5:16 AM

Title: Re: Nagkpa or Nyingma shawl and dress

Content:

RikudouSennin said:

Malcolm wrote: If they were beginners, they just wore white like everyone else in public, and in private, they wore their requisite ornaments if they could afford them or carried a card painted with them.

1)Was it typical for the sadhu wearing bone ornaments to be naked?

2)Can you describe a little more the painted card, is this a replica ornament?

Malcolm wrote:

The painted card has a picture of the six bone ornaments, khatvanga, bell, vajra, etc.

Yes, in India, the bone ornaments would be worn while naked:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 19th, 2017 at 5:11 AM

Title: Re: Q's about reading the Kunje Gyalpo, and transmission

Content:

heart said:

Those things don't surprise me anymore.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

It is a very strange claim.

heart said:

If he was the son of a prostitute or the son of a king his activity was equally impressive and inspiring for me.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

The only reason it is a strange claim it is the only time I have ever seen such a claim made anywhere. When I read it, it really surprised me.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 19th, 2017 at 2:36 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

They are roused from samadhi, and are set upon the bodhisattva path.

Brev said:

Loppon, after an arhat is roused from samadhi, is it possible for them to fall into the lower realms and away from the Dharma? Or is there cessation of afflictions permanent?

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is not possible for them to fall into lower realms as a result of affliction, through for the purpose of skillful means it is possible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 19th, 2017 at 1:53 AM

Title: Re: Q's about reading the Kunje Gyalpo, and transmission

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

His edition, while a valiant attempt at text criticism, is a total mess. The original version attributed to Zhang Gnas gsar is much better, in my opinion.

BTW, you will be very surprised to learn that in the Great Chronicle it is claimed that Śakyamuni was the son of a prostitute rather than a king.

heart said:

Those things don't surprise me anymore.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

It is a very strange claim.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 19th, 2017 at 1:28 AM

Title: Re: Q's about reading the Kunje Gyalpo, and transmission

Content:

heart said:

If I understand correctly Dharma Senge made a "critical edition" of the The Great Image based on five other versions of the same text. At least that is what he says and I see no particular reason to don't trust that. It is anyway pretty clear to me that it is a very inspiring book.

Malcolm wrote:

His edition, while a valiant attempt at text criticism, is a total mess. The original version attributed to Zhang Gnas gsar is much better, in my opinion.

BTW, you will be very surprised to learn that in the Great Chronicle it is claimed that Śakyamuni was the son of a prostitute rather than a king.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 19th, 2017 at 1:21 AM

Title: Re: Q's about reading the Kunje Gyalpo, and transmission

Content:

heart said:

If I understand correctly Dharma Senge made a "critical edition" of the The Great Image based on five other versions of the same text. At least that is what he says and I see no particular reason to don't trust that. It is anyway pretty clear to me that it is a very inspiring book.

Malcolm wrote:

His edition, while a valiant attempt at text criticism, is a total mess. The original version attributed to Zhang Gnas gsar is much better, in my opinion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 19th, 2017 at 1:09 AM

Title: Re: Don't pay for Dharma Books?

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

Stealing a book maybe, but the Dharma cannot be filched.

Malcolm wrote:

In Vajrayāna, taking a Vajrayāna book for which you do not have transmission is considered stealing the Dharma.

Pero said:

If so, then we are practically all Dharma thieves since I very much doubt that none of use have in their entire lifetime read no books which we didn't have transmissions for. It's a pretty strange opinion to hold for you too, since you just published a book which most people don't have a transmission for, in effect making anyone who reads it a dharma thief according to this reasoning.

Great book btw.

Though I haven't read it in full yet. Looking forward to the lung!

Malcolm wrote:

As long as people intend to try and at least find a proper Dzogchen teacher, than as far as I am concerned, they can read whatever they want and their teacher will sort out any misconceptions they may have gained. If they do not intend to find a teacher, they can still read tregchö and thögal instructions that have been published by famous teachers on the web and buy them in books with no questions asked, like Natural Liberation.

Question 1: how many of you own Natural Liberation (Wisdom Pubs)?

Question 2: how many of you have the lung for it?

A lot of this business about restricted texts is western neurosis. I have mentioned before that in my opinion, there is a lot of stuff from Anuttarayoga tantra that is far more deserving of being "restricted" than anything one can read in a Dzogchen tantra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 19th, 2017 at 1:02 AM

Title: Re: Nagkpa or Nyingma shawl and dress

Content:

Grigoris said:

Would you say that the above pictured yogins are caught up in the rind because they maintain the samaya of ngakpa garb and accouterments?

Malcolm wrote:

I would have to meet them personally to find out. I don't judge people from pictures.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 19th, 2017 at 1:01 AM

Title: Re: Nagkpa or Nyingma shawl and dress

Content:

Karma Jinpa said:

Garchen Rinpoche also explained the symbolism of the red and white striped zen during the Yamantaka Wangchen over the recent Winter Teachings at GBI. He said that on the ngakpa robes, white represents love and compassion, or relative bodhicitta, and red represents ultimate bodhicitta.

Malcolm wrote:

That is certainly one explanation though it is not the explanation in my tradition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 19th, 2017 at 12:55 AM

Title: Re: Q's about reading the Kunje Gyalpo, and transmission

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

We should just be grown up about it and derive our confidence in the teachings based on what they teach, not where they are supposed to come from.

florin said:

Isn't kama literature based on transmission and this transmission itself based on historical figures ?

Are we to disregard that ?

To me this is being grown up, being able to trace back in time the entire lineage of transmission of a said text, tradition, etc.

But historically we cannot do that .

For example CNNr places Garab Dorje's existence as far back as 200 BCE maybe even earlier.

What happens to the transmission of dzogchen between this date and early 8th or 9th century ?

We have a gap of around 1000 years where we know nothing about dzogchen transmission .

heart said:

Have you read "The Great Image"? <http://www.shambhala.com/the-great-image.html> It contains a very long and interesting Dzogchen lineage.

I always rely on the traditional accounts of lineage, even if there is no historical facts supporting it right now. Why? Because if you can accept that Vimalamitra gave Chetsun Senghe Wangchuk complete transmission of the Vima Nyingtik then everything is possible. Just like ChNNR received so much teachings over the years in dreams from so many different masters of the past. Like the Longsal Yangtik being a direct transmission from Duntso Repa himself and so on. The lineage can look pretty strange for ordinary eyes but it doesn't mean that it isn't true.

/magnus

Malcolm wrote:

Hi Magnus:

The Great Image translated by Ani Jinpa is a very flawed book (though not because of her translation). If you look at the colophon, you will see that it was cobbled together and edited from various sources in the late 19th century by Dharma Senge because he thought the original terma version which was taken out by Jomo Menmo was too difficult for non-scholars to understand since it has many, many, interesting citations. Even though it is a terma, it is not a terma in the traditional sense in that it was composed by another Tibetan, Zhang Gnas gsar, who is 12th in line of the oral transmission from Vairocana. So it was not written down until a couple of centuries later.

The earliest recension of the accounts found in the 'Dra 'bag chen mo that are available to us is in the commentary on the Cuckoo of Vidya that I mentioned above which is found in the Bairo rgyud 'bum. The Bairo 'gyud 'bum text mentions the lineage you mention, but states that it happens within the span of 200 hundred years or eight human generations. So if we assume that Vairocana meets Śrī Siṃha in the late eight century, this means that Garab Dorje's birth can be dated at the earliest around 600 CE.

In short, there is nothing wrong per se with the various conflicting lineage histories of Dzogchen. But when doing history we should not take them literally as facts, in the same way that we do not take Tonpa Shenrab's birth 18,000 years ago as a fact merely because the Bonpos claim it to be so. As I mention above, when it comes to history, it needs to correspond to ordinary human perception. This applies the Buddha, Jesus, Tonpa Shenrab, Garab Dorje, Muhammed, Shankaracarya, and any other founder or major figure of a religion about whom fantastic legends gradually develop. If we do take them as facts, we will wind up becoming fundamentalist ninnies.

With respect to visionary encounters, such as that between Vima and Chetsun, that is a whole different ball of wax. That cannot be subject to any kind of analysis. One either accepts it or not.

The real lineage of Dzogchen cannot be found in a book.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 19th, 2017 at 12:33 AM

Title: Re: Q's about reading the Kunje Gyalpo, and transmission

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

We should just be grown up about it and derive our confidence in the teachings based on what they teach, not where they are supposed to come from.

florin said:

Isn't kama literature based on transmission and this transmission itself based on historical figures ?

Are we to disregard that ?

Malcolm wrote:

The only bka' ma traditions of Dzogchen are "sems sde" and the Vajra Bridge. Everything else, all of it, is terma.

For example, Dagma Lhungyal discovered the 17 tantras 30 years before he passed them onto Chetsun Senge Wangchuk, and Chetsun was only 15 when he received them.

He received them, according to the only account we have, after the passing of Atisha. Atisha passed away in 1054. We do not know exactly how long after Chetsun met Dangma Lhungyal that Atisha passed. But, what we do know is that Zhangton received the 17 tantras from Chegom Ngapo in 1108. The only really firm fact we have in any of this is that Zhangton studied with Chegom for one year in 1108, according to Zhangton's son and revealed the Vima sNying thig in 1118. And of course, this presumes that the Nyingthig lineage account is the most definitive, which is questionable. But it makes for very fun reading, with dragon-riding dākinīs and so on.

florin said:

To me this is being grown up, being able to trace back in time the entire lineage of transmission of a said text, tradition, etc.
But historically we cannot do that .

Malcolm wrote:

We can trace the historical part back to Śrī Siṃha. There is definitely an aural transmission. It is my point of view that the textual tradition developed out of this preexisting tradition. It seems that in India there were some short texts written, like the Great Space of Vajrasattva that were systematized into the Kun byed rgyal po, but there is zero chance, in my opinion, that the bulk of the Kun byed rgyal po is a translated text, unlike the four chapters which are incorporated into it based on the five early translations made by Vairocana [the fifth is the Cultivation of Bodhicitta by Mañjuśrīmitra, which I regard his actual composition]. We do not need to doubt the historicity of Garab Dorje, Mañjuśrīmitra, and Śrī Siṃha, but it is unlikely, in my opinion, that Garab Dorje and Mañjuśrīmitra lived any earlier than the late seventh and early eighth centuries. Valby thinks the Mdo bcu was written by Vairocana, for example, but it is presented as an independent text in the sems sde section. As I have noted elsewhere, the whole division of Dzogchen into the three series is something which first appears in the Vima Snying thig in 1118. It is possible this idea was floating around in the very limited circles of those who were promulgating the 17 tantras prior to this time, but there is zero evidence for it.

florin said:

For example CNNr places Garab Dorje's existence as far back as 200 BCE maybe even earlier.

Malcolm wrote:

As far as dating Garab Dorje (Vajraprahelā) based on the Great Chronicle written by Zhangton — the Great Chronicle places the the birth of Garab Dorje 360 years after the parinirvana of the Buddha. It places the removal of the Vima Snying thig 1568 years after the parinirvana. Subtracting 360 from 1568 equals 1208, and subtracting 1208 from 1118 = -90, thus we arrive at a date of 90 BCE for the date of Garab Dorje's birth according to the Great Chronicle.

florin said:

What happens to the transmission of dzogchen between this date and early 8th or 9th century ?

Malcolm wrote:

The earliest sems sde history we have is from the Bairo rgyud 'bum. But is probably written in the 12th century and is contemporary with the Great Chronicle and the Vajra Bridge history. But it could not be more different in content and scope. In any case, there are two different versions of the birth of Garab Dorje, two of which agree on some details (klong sde and man ngag sde): he was born in Danakosha, a region or an island in Oddiyāna, he was born of a virgin birth, and his mother was the daughter of the king which suggest a common source. The names however of the king and the daughter differ completely. In the Vajra Bridge account there is no mention that the daughter is a nun. It is a major point in the Great Chronicle. The manner of conception differs as well — in the Vajra Bridge, Garab Dorje's birth is heralded by a turquoise cuckoo. No such mention is made in the Great Chronicle. The earliest "sems sde" account, the commentary on the Rig pa'i khu byug in the Bairo rgyud 'bum lacks any mention of these events.

florin said:

We have a gap of around 1000 years where we no nothing about dzogchen transmission .

Malcolm wrote:

It is only the Great Chronicle which gives positive dates for Garab Dorje, 90 BCE to 454 CE. According to it, Mañjuśrīmitra I rainbows in 740. Supposedly the second Mañjuśrīmitra II, his emanations comes in 1065, but of course this is much too late. In fact the chronology of events in the Great Chronicle does not stand up to scrutiny at all. So we cannot take it seriously with respect to dates of this or that person since it places the second Mañjuśrīmitra II not only after Śrī Siṃha, but also after Vimalamitra leaves for China.

Also the sems sde commentary mentioned above states there are 23 masters in the sems sde lineage spanning only 8 human generations. A generation is 25 years, thus the lineage is only 200 years old when it reaches Vairocana, if we accept the sems sde account in the Bairo rgyud 'bum. The Vajra Bridge lineage is short: Garab Dorje, Mañjuśrīmitra, Śrī Siṃha, and Vairocana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 18th, 2017 at 10:48 PM

Title: Re: Nagkpa or Nyingma shawl and dress

Content:

mani said:

Thank you everybody for your answers. I still have some questions.

If is just a matter of dressing to blend with the sangha, why is that there are empowerments for each garment and earrings, and hair and else, is not just a vow to wear them but an empowerment right? why is the long hair considered the mandala of dakinis? I mean I think wearing all of these must have a profound meaning, is not just fashion.

Malcolm wrote:

Long hair is not considered a mandala of ḍakinīs, it has to be blessed that way. Otherwise long hair is just long hair.

In Indian Vajrayāna, each deity has its own special commitments in terms of accouterments. For example, if you receive the Cakrasamvara empowerments, you were expected to have a set of six bone ornaments. In the beginning, when one's practice is at the level of weak heat on the path of application, one would be expected to wear these in private, and when one's practice becomes stronger, one would be expected to test one's resolve in practice by wearing them in increasingly public settings. For example, the reason why Padmasambhava holds a skullcup and a vajra is that is part of the commitments of having received the Śrī Heruka (Yang dag) empowerment, his main yidam.

Tibet is a different place than India and a different culture, so a different set of accouterments developed over the Indian layer. Slowly, over time, in a different culture, a new set of accouterments developed and became meaningful. Tibet is a country where it is difficult to run around half-naked like an Indian sadhu. In India, no mantrins wore a red and white shawl. If they were beginners, they just wore white like everyone else in public, and in private, they wore their requisite ornaments if they could afford them or carried a card painted with them. Tibet is a pretty cold place, so it is not practical for most people to run around without clothes.

Since we are in the Dzogchen forum, I will speak plainly. Dzogchen practitioners have no need of these kind of things. It has nothing to do with Dzogchen practice directly. The real point of the hair empowerment, as it relates to Dzogchen, is to have uncontrived hair, uncontrived clothes, and uncontrived dwellings, because the principle of Dzogchen is nonfabrication. To summarize, having an elegant Ngakpa kit defeats the whole meaning of uncontrived hair, cloths, etc.

When my guru Ngakpa Yeshe Dorje emerged from his first three year retreat in the early 1950's, he looked like a ragged bum. When he went to see Dudjom Rinpoche in Kongpo, he arrived where Dudjom Rinpoche was teaching, and sat in the back. But when Dudjom Rinpoche saw him there, he made fun of all the elegant Ngakpas sitting in the Gonpa for their carefully tended hair, ornaments, and robes, and asked Ngakpa Yeshe Dorje come and sit next to him, commenting that Ngakpa Yeshe Dorje was a real Ngakpa, unlike all the elegant so called Ngakpas sitting in the assembly. So if we want to be Ngakpas, it should be our intention to be real Ngakpas. Also, if we wish to kit up and run around in Ngakpa gear, it is probably better that we first develop some power of mantra. This does not happen overnight. For this reason, some teachers forbid their students to wear Ngakpa gear until they have some juice in their practice.

Now, for someone who is following a Dzogchen path, Ngakpa ordinations can be aspirational. But it is not necessary for Dzogchen practitioners to receive these kinds of empowerments. If we do, it is probably a result of past karma, as Greg mentioned.

A Dzogchen practitioner has no need to become a monk, but there are many monks that practice Dzogchen. It is not necessary for a Dzogchen practitioner to become a ngakpa, but there are many ngakpas who also practice Dzogchen. In the primary empowerment texts of the Dzogchen tradition, you will never discover an empowerment which requires one to wear anything. It is not even necessary for a Dzogchen practitioner to become a lay person with all five vows. It is not even necessary for a Dzogchen practitioner to formally declare allegiance to this or that form of Buddhism, Tibetan or otherwise. Why? Because Dzogchen is the essence of Buddhadharma. Buddhism is fragmented into sects and traditions. Dzogchen is beyond sects and traditions. Buddhism is cultural. Dzogchen is beyond culture. Buddhism is a religion. Dzogchen is beyond religion.

I am not telling you this because I do not like the Ngakpa tradition. The Ngakpa tradition is just fine. But it really does not have anything to do with being a Dzogchen practitioner. When one is a Dzogchen practitioner, it is important to go to the core of the teachings and not be caught up in the rind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 18th, 2017 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: Nagkpa or Nyingma shawl and dress

Content:

Grigoris said:

It's funny though how westerners will always attribute one's desire to practice as a ngakpa with ego, and seem incapable of considering that it may be due to past karma. But then we do tend to (mistakenly) consider our ego as the driving force of our existence.

Malcolm wrote:

Self-grasping is the driving force of our existence. Without it, we would not take rebirth in samsara.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 18th, 2017 at 4:07 AM

Title: Re: Q's about reading the Kunje Gyalpo, and transmission

Content:

florin said:

In that case the entire conventional and traditional narrative of how dzogchen was transmitted and evolved on our planet is completely false. Moreover, the existence of the first early masters is in doubt.

Malcolm wrote:

With respect to this, there is a mythical origin of Dzogchen teachings, legendary one, and a historical one.

The former involves all discussions of teachers in the distant past. The legendary one involves some accounts of the Buddha and Garab Dorje, etc. The historical one begins with persons that can be verified by more than one Indian source, in this case, the Buddha, Śrī Simha, and possibly Manjuśrimitra and even Garab Dorje. The legendary and historical are intermixed until roughly the 12th century.

But if you approach these traditional accounts as historical facts, then I am sorry to disappoint you. From the ordinary human point of view, these things are not historically factual. We should just be grown up about it and derive our confidence in the teachings based on what they teach, not where they are supposed to come from.

Accepting these as literal means accepting human beings who lived for 80,000 years and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 18th, 2017 at 3:34 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Grigoris said:

I think that it is true that what we deem as inequality is due to a large degree to past karma ie circumstances we are born into are a consequence of past karma.

Thing is though that our present karma can address the current situation in order to mitigate the problem, to an extent. While I may be born with a larger share of power and wealth due to my generosity in the past, the only thing that is stopping me from sharing my current power and wealth with this in a less fortunate state, is my actions right now. Buddhism addresses this issue through the application of the Paramita, these would not be espoused if they were not actually effective. Okay, ultimately the Paramita are practiced for reasons of Buddhahood and not for political utopian projects, but I don't think they are mutually exclusive.

Malcolm wrote:

It is possible to ameliorate some of the inequality that is in the world, but this also depends on the merit of the recipient.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 18th, 2017 at 3:07 AM

Title: Re: Q's about reading the Kunje Gyalpo, and transmission

Content:

florin said:

I find the commentaries to KG utterly inspiring .

Malcolm wrote:

The commentary on KG is definitely very interesting, nevertheless, the KG, like the whole Atiyoga textual tradition, depends very heavily on the Guhyagarbha for structure, content, and exegetical direction.

florin said:

In what way is this significant ?

What kind of significance does this information hold for someone who wants to study the views of these texts and commentaries ?

Is it somehow meant to cast some doubt on the origin of KG ?

Malcolm wrote:

It means if you really want to understand the Kun byed rgyal po, a composite text which cannot date earlier than the 10th century, one should examine the commentaries on the Guhyagarbha, especially Longchenpa's Dispelling Darkness in the Ten Directions and Rongzom's Jewel Commentary. Why? Because the exegetical precedents we find in the Guhyagarbha influence all later Great Perfection exegetical traditions. For example, the idea that Samantabhadra is a byed pa po, a creator, is more clearly explained in these commentaries than it is in Zhenphan Ozer's commentary on the Kun byed rgyal po itself, the latter depending heavily on the former. In other words, the Guhyagarbha gives us the general model, based on which Dzogchen tantras were composed. It is a literary issue, not a criticism of the contents of the Kun byed rgyal po per se.

Apart from the markedly tantric context of Great Perfection texts, they really are just a continuation of the Yogacara synthesis that begins with Maitreyanatha in the 4th century. Why do I say this? Because ideas like Akaniṣṭha and the three kāyas do not appear before this time. Indeed, there are only two sūtras in bka' 'gyur that actually mention all three kāyas by name — the Suvarṇaprabhāśottama Sūtra and the Trikāya Sūtra. This is truly amazing when you consider a) the sūtra division of the Bka' 'gyur is 78 volumes of texts and b) the three kāyas are the principle explanatory scheme around which all Tibetan Buddhist schools revolve and the result they all intend to gain. There is a distinct possibility in fact that the Trikāya chapter in the Suvarṇaprabhāśottama Sūtra is based on the Mahāyānasūtrālaṃkāra rather than the other way around. It is certain the Trikāya Sūtra is a condensation of the Trikāya chapter in the Suvarṇaprabhāśottama Sūtra.

Norbu Rinpoche, when considering the question of the date of Tonpa Shenrab states, "[S]ince history must be studied in congruence with ordinary human perception, I prefer not to base myself on these traditions." In the same way, when considering the origin of Great Perfection teachings, I have to say that traditions around their dissemination are contradictory in the first place, and in the second, do not stand up to historical research.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 18th, 2017 at 12:45 AM

Title: Re: Q's about reading the Kunje Gyalpo, and transmission

Content:

Temicco said:

I've tried searching about this but I'm still confused so I thought I'd make a new post.

Does one need lung to read the Kunje Gyalpo? I'm interested in reading The Supreme Source which contains excerpts of the tantra, but I'm not sure how restrictions and transmissions work exactly. Can one read anything, but lung (or dbang? or both? I don't really get the difference) is the proper basis required for practice? Do all tantras need lung/(dbang)? How does ChNN's direct introduction to guruyoga factor into the necessity of specific lungs/dbangs like this? Also, I don't really understand transmission just yet, so it feels like every time I come across a new text/practice I have to ask others if you need dbang/lung for it. Is this typical or is there some memo I'm missing?

~merci~

Malcolm wrote:

At minimum you should have received direct introduction. On the other hand, it is an openly published book. There is nothing very revolutionary in sems sde tantras.

florin said:

I find the commentaries to KG utterly inspiring .

Malcolm wrote:

The commentary on KG is definitely very interesting, nevertheless, the KG, like the whole Atiyoga textual tradition, depends very heavily on the Guhyagarbha for structure, content, and exegetical direction.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 18th, 2017 at 12:40 AM

Title: Re: Nagkpa or Nyingma shawl and dress

Content:

mani said:

Malcolm

First of all thank you for giving me a clear answer and not giving a moral sermon like others.

In general, you don't need robes to a Dharma practitioner.

So, you don't wear robes but you don't cut your hair, why is this vow more important than the robes or the earrings?

Malcolm wrote:

No, I generally never wear robes. I have them, but I don't wear them. In my tradition, [Kunzang Dechen Lingpa] one's hair is blessed as mandala of ḍākinīs. Whether one wears ngakpa gear or not, one cannot cut one's hair at all. In the Dudjom tradition, there is more flexibility. Many of the Dudjom Ngakpas I know trim their hair from time to time. This kind of defeats the purpose of the Dudjom hair wang, but that is their business and not mine. They do a little confession.

mani said:

As far as Ngakpa vows go, if you have taken any major empowerment, you already have them.

I have received major empowerments, I didn't know I had them though but I will study them and try to keep them. Does this mean I can dress as a ngakpa now because I already have the vows? Does this mean I took the vow of not cutting my hair?

Malcolm wrote:

Unless you received a hair empowerment specifically, you have no obligation to keep your hair long. As far as the other vows go, anyone who has received a major empowerment in any tradition needs to maintain and respect the fourteen root downfalls and the eight branch downfalls. Then there are the 27 samayas of body, voice, and mind which are the main set of samayas to follow with Nyingma. You can read all of these things in Buddhist Ethics by Kongtrul.

Whether or not you can wear ngakpa gear depends on your guru.

mani said:

In terms of wearing a striped shawl, as you have already discovered, the criteria for wearing these shawls shifts from Sangha to Sangha. What you can ascertain from this is that there is no canonical rule. The use of the striped shawl is a Tibetan innovation that evolved gradually over time. Lay mantra practitioners in India wore white, like other lay people.

What is the meaning of this shawl? What was the purpose for dressing like this in old Tibet?

Malcolm wrote:

It means different things in different lineages, and that meaning depends on how it is explained during the empowerments. Of course, empowerments with a red and white shawl are strictly a Nyingma thing. There is also no set costume for Ngakpas. Ngakpas in different places wore different things. The present Ngakpa outfit that we commonly see in the West is largely a result of Dudjom Rinpoche's influence. Repkong Ngakpas look completely different.

mani said:

Therefore, you should do as your primary teacher suggests, and not worry about what other people do.

My primary teacher is Padmasambhava, all my Nyingma lamas are his manifestations and they tell me different things about this. What does Padmasambhava say? Can anyone quote him?

Malcolm wrote:

The striped shawl evolved long after Padmasambhava left Tibet, so I think he has very little to say on the subject. There is one spurious tantra floating around on the internet that makes some claims, but its source is highly questionable. No Tibetan original seems to exist for this text.

Ngakpas like the Sakya family commonly wear a white lower robe and an upper red shawl. My personal opinion is that the striped shawl evolved out of this custom. When we see depictions of ancient Ngakpas like the 25 disciples, they are never depicted with the striped shawl. We can understand from this that it is a relatively modern custom that originated in Eastern Tibet within the last 400 hundred years.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 18th, 2017 at 12:04 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

zenman said:

Literally in person, no webcast on thogal?

Malcolm wrote:

Correct. Never. So far. Who knows what the future will bring.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 17th, 2017 at 11:13 PM

Title: Re: John Oliver interviews the Dalai Lama

Content:

Joka said:

Horse milk in Mongolia?

Malcolm wrote:

They make a kind of alcoholic drink out of it called "kumis."

climb-up said:

Wait, what!?

Maybe I'm misremembering but wasn't he saying he used that to cure alcoholism?

It kind of undermines the success if he was using an alcoholic drink right!? lol!

Malcolm wrote:

He was implying that Mongolians should not drink vodka which is from Russia and very strong, while kumis is native to Mongolia and pretty weak.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 17th, 2017 at 11:12 PM

Title: Re: Q's about reading the Kunje Gyalpo, and transmission

Content:

Temicco said:

I've tried searching about this but I'm still confused so I thought I'd make a new post.

Does one need lung to read the Kunje Gyalpo? I'm interested in reading The Supreme Source which contains excerpts of the tantra, but I'm not sure how restrictions and transmissions work exactly. Can one read anything, but lung (or dbang? or both? I don't really get the difference) is the proper basis required for practice? Do all tantras need lung/(dbang)? How does ChNN's direct introduction to guruyoga factor into the necessity of specific lungs/dbangs like this? Also, I don't really understand transmission just yet, so it feels like every time I come across a new text/practice I have to ask others if you need dbang/lung for it. Is this typical or is there some memo I'm missing?

~merci~

Malcolm wrote:

At minimum you should have received direct introduction. On the other hand, it is an openly published book. There is nothing very revolutionary in sems sde tantras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 17th, 2017 at 11:08 PM

Title: Re: Nagkpa or Nyingma shawl and dress

Content:

mani said:

So, before I decide, I would like to know if someone can clarify these points for me.

Malcolm wrote:

In general, you don't need robes to a Dharma practitioner.

As far as Ngakpa vows go, if you have taken any major empowerment, you already have them.

In terms of wearing a striped shawl, as you have already discovered, the criteria for wearing these shawls shifts from Sangha to Sangha. What you can ascertain from this is that there is no canonical rule. The use of the striped shawl is a Tibetan innovation that evolved gradually over time. Lay mantra practitioners in India wore white, like other lay people.

Therefore, you should do as your primary teacher suggests, and not worry about what other people do.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 17th, 2017 at 8:34 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Joka said:

Maybe so, but this inequality is only increasing with the modern world being the epitome or apex of it.

Malcolm wrote:

So, who is going to pick winners and losers?

Karma is unerring.

Joka said:

Anarchism is where nobody gets to pick.

Malcolm wrote:

I think you ought to read Anarchy, State and Utopia by Nozick. You should also read Bookchin.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 17th, 2017 at 1:18 AM

Title: Re: John Oliver interviews the Dalai Lama

Content:

Joka said:

Horse milk in Mongolia?

Malcolm wrote:

They make a kind of alcoholic drink out of it called "kumis."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 17th, 2017 at 1:17 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Joka said:

That is why I support small time localism within a sort of anarchist direct democracy because as nations become too big or large corruption becomes paramount along with tyrannical mismanagement that we find only in representative democracies and similar organizations.

Democracy rests upon how educated people are? The upper echelons of society are more able to make more educated coordination of society at large? No, the wealthy and educated highly skilled professional segments of society vote with their wallet or bank account in terms of their own self interests only. This is why a representative democracy like the United States there is huge swathes of social inequality concerning the huge divide of the very wealthy and very poor.

There are plenty of highly educated corporate lobbyists running representative democracy amuck worldwide.

Malcolm wrote:

There will always be inequality. This is a result of karma.

Joka said:

Maybe so, but this inequality is only increasing with the modern world being the epitome or apex of it.

Malcolm wrote:

So, who is going to pick winners and losers?

Karma is unerring.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 17th, 2017 at 12:34 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Joka said:

The only genuine democracy that exists is direct democracy. I view representative democracy as a sham or fraudulent version of itself. One only needs to look at the present United States as example for the corruptible nature of what all representative democracies turn into.

Malcolm wrote:

Direct democracy does not scale well. It works fine at the village and town level, but that's about it. Secondly, the success of any democracy depends on the education level of its constituents. Poorly educated people tend to make poor choices.

Joka said:

That is why I support small time localism within a sort of anarchist direct democracy because as nations become too big or large corruption becomes paramount along with tyrannical mismanagement that we find only in representative democracies and similar organizations.

Democracy rests upon how educated people are? The upper echelons of society are more able to make more educated coordination of society at large? No, the wealthy and educated highly skilled professional segments of society vote with their wallet or bank account in terms of their own self interests only. This is why a representative democracy like the United States there is huge swathes of social inequality concerning the huge divide of the very wealthy and very poor.

There are plenty of highly educated corporate lobbyists running representative democracy amuck worldwide.

Malcolm wrote:

There will always be inequality. This is a result of karma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 16th, 2017 at 10:41 PM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Joka said:

Marxism and communism fails because of the inevitable corruption of the political vanguard and once the prevailing ruling class is destroyed this vanguard or organization of the proletariat becomes the new ruling class. Once more what is sad and a testament of the corruptible influences of human nature is that the proletarian vanguard once achieving power turns on all other non-inner party proletarians viciously.

pothigai said:

The theory of the necessity of an authoritarian vanguard party is not common to all strains of Marxist political thought, but is particularly associated with Marxism-Leninism. Many Marxists, on the contrary, seek to establish a social order in which the means of production, and all other institutions, are truly democratic.

Joka said:

The only genuine democracy that exists is direct democracy. I view representative democracy as a sham or fraudulent version of itself. One only needs to look at the present United States as example for the corruptible nature of what all representative democracies turn into.

Malcolm wrote:

Direct democracy does not scale well. It works fine at the village and town level, but that's about it. Secondly, the success of any democracy depends on the education level of its constituents. Poorly educated people tend to make poor choices.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 16th, 2017 at 9:19 PM

Title: Re: Eight Doorways of Spontaneous Manifestation

Content:

dawnbird said:

Hi all,

Is the following correlation correct?

Eight doors of spontaneous manifestation :: Eight dissolutions (empty, black, red, white, flame, fireflies, smoke, mirage)?

Thanks.

Malcolm wrote:

No, not at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 16th, 2017 at 9:03 PM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Joka said:

Your type of cultural or racial Marxism is nothing I'm not already acquainted with and is divisive to its core instead of bringing people of all backgrounds together.

Malcolm wrote:

Hmmm, let's see, you invoked globalists in combination with corporatism, praised nationalism, and now invoke cultural Marxism. So far this makes three alt-right themes you have repeated here. Just how are your views different than Steve Bannon's? Are you a regular reader of Breitbart? Do you haunt 4chan?

Joka said:

When you want world government over the entire globe I don't care who else uses that terminology that makes a person a globalist. I am not a political conservative and I am in no way affiliated with a conservative party or any political party for that matter.

Malcolm wrote:

You can count me as a globalist then, or at least, an internationalist. I suspect we will have a world wide gvt with the next two centuries. Let's hope it is a liberal democratic one, run out of the UN. None of us however, will live to see it. Until then, I hope we will continue to see broad cooperation between nations based on open borders and free trade. In fact, I would like to see Mexico, Canada and the US go one step further than NAFTA, and create something like the EU.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 16th, 2017 at 4:39 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Joka said:

Your type of cultural or racial Marxism is nothing I'm not already acquainted with and is divisive to its core instead of bringing people of all backgrounds together.

Malcolm wrote:

Hmmm, let's see, you invoked globalists in combination with corporatism, praised nationalism, and now invoke cultural Marxism. So far this makes three alt-right themes you have repeated here. Just how are your views different than Steve Bannon's? Are you a regular reader of Brietbart? Do you haunt 4chan?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 16th, 2017 at 12:55 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Joka said:

Oppression and tyranny are race color blind.

Malcolm wrote:

Total nonsense.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 16th, 2017 at 12:54 AM

Title: Re: Notion Of Justified War Or Violence.

Content:

Joka said:

Whole entire economic systems have become tools of exploitation, slavery, oppression, and tyranny. Economic systems are not immune to conflict.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure. South Africa, The US under slavery, etc.

Joka said:

If virtuous nations have a right to defend themselves and nations are comprised of individuals then I would think virtuous individuals have a right to defend themselves as well, no?

Malcolm wrote:

The notion of "rights" is completely divorced from the notion of karma. A king has an obligation to protect his nation, but this not an endorsement of violence.

<http://www.accesstoinsight.org/lib/authors/harris/wheel392.html#ch2>

Joka said:

Somehow I think Japanese people would disagree.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhist monks are not permitted to kill human beings. If they do so, they immediately lose their status as monks.

That being said, the so-called warrior monks is a big and complicated subject. If you wish to educate yourself about it you can read Teeth and Claws of the Buddha: Monastic Warriors and Sohei in Japanese History by Adolphson.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 16th, 2017 at 12:33 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Joka said:

If you have to ask that question I don't think any level of explanation would suit your expected response.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think you have a real reply. But if you do, now is the time to trot it out.

Joka said:

Oppressed and disenfranchised people have to provide evidence for their own oppression or disenfranchisement?

Malcolm wrote:

You need to define which people you think are oppressed and disenfranchised systematically in the US. Are you referring to black communities? Undocumented immigrants? White people living in Minnesota? Native Americans?

If you are white, you hardly qualify as a person suffering under an oppressive tyranny. In other words, you need to be more precise.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 16th, 2017 at 12:16 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Joka said:

Yes, no matter the different politics or government organizations tyranny is same and is employed with the same standard.

Malcolm wrote:

So you are suggesting the US is a "tyranny?" If so how, specifically?

Joka said:

If you have to ask that question I don't think any level of explanation would suit your expected response.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think you have a real reply. But if you do, now is the time to trot it out.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 16th, 2017 at 12:15 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Vibhūticandra says much the same thing in his commentary on the Bodhicaryāvatāra: With respect to the traces of emptiness, since śrāvakas and so on cannot bear the fact that all phenomena are empty, it is said they are liberated solely through seeing four truths of nobles. Since they obtain freedom only through the direct perception of the "truths" — suffering, the origin, the cessation, and the path— of what use to them is seeing emptiness?

sherabpa said:

This is a mistranslation. Here Vibhūti he is simply restating the shravakas objection to the Mahayana emptiness, which is 9.40ab of the Charyavatara, i.e. that emptiness is pointless because they meditate on the Four Truths instead. Vibhūti then gives the response (9.40cd), which as usual is to quote Mahayana sutras for the need to meditate on emptiness, and hence there follows a dispute about why the shravakas should accept the Mahayana sutras.

Malcolm wrote:

Which means that Śāntideva is portraying śrāvakas as not meditating on emptiness directly.

It is also somewhat foolish to assert that arhats realize the selflessness of phenomena when it has nothing at all to do with how they achieve their realization since they never even meditate the view of the emptiness of the person let alone emptiness in general.

sherabpa said:

This is contradicted by many masters, e.g. Mipham says in Beacon of Certainty, 'Our own position in that whatever types of shravakas and pratyekabuddhas appeared of yore and reached arhatship did not become liberated without realizing the emptiness of the self that is the apprehension of the aggregates; but just having that realization does not mean that they realized selflessness entirely.'

Malcolm wrote:

But they do not meditate the emptiness of the person directly. They meditate on impermanence and so on. Emptiness of the person is the result they realize, it is not the view they meditate. Your Mipham quote agrees: "...did not become liberated without realizing the emptiness of the self that is the apprehension of the aggregates."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 15th, 2017 at 11:42 PM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Joka said:

Yes, no matter the different politics or government organizations tyranny is same and is employed with the same standard.

Malcolm wrote:

So you are suggesting the US is a "tyranny?" If so how, specifically?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 15th, 2017 at 11:37 PM

Title: Re: Notion Of Justified War Or Violence.

Content:

Joka said:

To conquer it in oneself is a great thing but still there is a wide world of other people out there that do not share those convictions or ideals.

What is a Buddhist to do say in the presence of a group of people that above all else desire power and will do anything to keep that power including all spectrums of human unspeakable acts or behaviors? Does the Buddhist sit on their hands and feet sitting idle?

Malcolm wrote:

That very much depends. In most cases, I think Buddhists will flee such a situation or resist nonviolently— for example, Tibet

Joka said:

Flee to where? Where in the world does sanctuary from all of this exist?

The type of world we are living in makes nonviolent resistance either impotent for change or an impossibility.

Malcolm wrote:

You have to be kidding. Nonviolence is the only avenue for resistance against oppression unless you are prepared to destroy whole economies.

Joka said:

This leads me to believe that sometimes war or fighting is necessary and can be justified.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, Buddha stated that virtuous nations have a right to defend themselves.

Joka said:

Another reason I created this thread because in ancient past Buddhist warrior monks like the Sohei fought very passionately for what they believed in.

Malcolm wrote:

This is a Japanese corruption of Buddhadharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 15th, 2017 at 11:33 PM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Joka said:

Capitalism is in the process of collapsing the world over.

Malcolm wrote:

You are kidding yourself.

Joka said:

I think here in the west nationalism gets a horrible reputation but elsewhere in the world nationalism is appreciated.

Malcolm wrote:

Nationalism inevitably rests on creating otherness. Otherness leads to pogroms and downright oppressions. Nationalism is a political drug.

Joka said:

Not kidding myself actually as there are limits to monopoly economics and finance where eventually parasitic crony capitalism collapses on itself. This will become more apparent within the next decade. We are reaching the threshold of those very limits right now.

Nationalism can be reformed like anything else and doesn't have to be so discriminating. I believe all people have a right to autonomy and self determination.

Malcolm wrote:

People have been predicting the collapse of capitalism since Marx. They have all been wrong.

We are definitely reaching environmental sustainability limits, but that has nothing to with capitalism (apart from the fact that capitalism is destroying the planet and the only way to prevent that is a global government that sets strict environmental limitations).

Nationalism is a disease. It has no place in the modern world. Eventually, people will see this. It might take them a couple of centuries. Hopefully we will not blow up the planet before then.

People have a right to autonomy and self-determination. This does not mean that Nationalism is the way to go.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 15th, 2017 at 10:06 PM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Joka said:

Capitalism is in the process of collapsing the world over.

Malcolm wrote:

You are kidding yourself.

Joka said:

I think here in the west nationalism gets a horrible reputation but elsewhere in the world nationalism is appreciated.

Malcolm wrote:

Nationalism inevitably rests on creating otherness. Otherness leads to pogroms and downright oppressions. Nationalism is a political drug.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 15th, 2017 at 10:04 PM

Title: Re: Eastern and Western 'Mindfulness'?

Content:

Queequeg said:

<https://mobile.nytimes.com/2016/04/24/jobs/achieving-mindfulness-at-work-no-meditation-cushion-required.html>

From the article:

There are two approaches to mindfulness: Eastern and Western. The Eastern view indeed positions meditation as an essential tool to achieving a mindful state. But the Eastern view is more about quieting the mind and suspending thought. This philosophy is almost the complete opposite of the Western view of mindfulness, which centers on active thinking.

Curious what Dharma Wheelers think of this and the author's argument more generally.

Malcolm wrote:

Flawed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 15th, 2017 at 10:03 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Joka said:

I find conversations like this interesting and so my post here is going to be one from neutrality in that I'm neither for or against the propositions being discussed in this thread. So let me get this straight then, all forms of European ethnic identity are horrible border lining on taboo or blasphemous but the ethnic identity of everybody else, is alright then? I'm very confused here.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no "white" ethnicity, except in the US and the former British Empire, where it used to mean Anglo-Saxon Protestants (Poles, Germans, the Irish, Scots, Italians, Spaniards, were all excluded). Now in the US, since Germans, the Irish, Scots, Italians and so on have achieved a measure of social and economic success, they are now counted as "white."

Joka said:

I'm confused, are you saying that there is no European collective ethnicity or identity?

Malcolm wrote:

Correct. There is no collective European ethnicity or identity.

Joka said:

No German, French, Italian, English, or even Hungarian ethnicity as example?

Malcolm wrote:

There are indeed national identities within Europe, but there is no collective European ethnic identity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 15th, 2017 at 10:00 PM

Title: Re: Notion Of Justified War Or Violence.

Content:

Joka said:

The old adage that malice thrives when people do nothing at all or sit idly by I suppose is a big problem for me concerning pacifism and the non-aggression principle. I suppose that is why I created this thread.

More importantly I don't think pacifism or nonaggression is always up to the task of challenging and defeating human malice in the world.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha's approach to defeating malice was to uproot it from yourself.

Joka said:

To conquer it in oneself is a great thing but still there is a wide world of other people out there that do not share those convictions or ideals.

What is a Buddhist to do say in the presence of a group of people that above all else desire power and will do anything to keep that power including all spectrums of human unspeakable acts or behaviors? Does the Buddhist sit on their hands and feet sitting idle?

Malcolm wrote:

That very much depends. In most cases, I think Buddhists will flee such a situation or resist nonviolently— for example, Tibet

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 15th, 2017 at 9:59 PM

Title: Re: Democrats and Republicans

Content:

Joka said:

Democrats and Republicans, both owned by Wallstreet along with its subsidiaries. (Backed by military industrial complex and globalists bent on world domination.) I think that pretty much covers American politics.

Malcolm wrote:

"globalist" — use of this term paints you as part of the rightwing fringe. I suppose next you are going to start griping about the "administrative" state.

Joka said:

I use the term globalist for describing those that seek power internationally and on a global scale beyond simple state national boundaries. A global government is every tyrant's wet dream.

I know the term or word is used in conservative circles but I hold no political affiliations myself. I am not loyal to any particular political party.

Administrative state? Please explain.

Malcolm wrote:

In fact we desperately need a global government because we have a global economy. It does not obey the outmoded borders drawn up by the colonial powers in the early part of the 20th century. It is also still the case that stronger nations can easily exploit weaker nations. We will probably struggle with this for another couple of centuries, but eventually we will have a global government. One hopes it is democratic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 15th, 2017 at 9:37 PM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Joka said:

we live in a post socialist or capitalist world.

Malcolm wrote:

No, we live in a Capitalist World. Capitalism has won. However, there are people of nationalist sentiment that are unhappy that it did not also involve the continued economic ascendancy of the Europe and the US. Now we have competition, and the nationalists among us don't like it very much.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 15th, 2017 at 9:34 PM

Title: Re: Democrats and Republicans

Content:

Joka said:

Democrats and Republicans, both owned by Wallstreet along with its subsidiaries. (Backed by military industrial complex and globalists bent on world domination.) I think that pretty much covers American politics.

Malcolm wrote:

"globalist" — use of this term paints you as part of the rightwing fringe. I suppose next you are going to start griping about the "administrative" state.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 15th, 2017 at 9:32 PM

Title: Re: Notion Of Justified War Or Violence.

Content:

Joka said:

The old adage that malice thrives when people do nothing at all or sit idly by I suppose is a big problem for me concerning pacifism and the non-aggression principle. I suppose that is why I created this thread.

More importantly I don't think pacifism or nonaggression is always up to the task of challenging and defeating human malice in the world.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha's approach to defeating malice was to uproot it from yourself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 15th, 2017 at 9:15 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Sentient Light said:

But you're correct that white consciousness must also mean conscious of the privilege that it affords, because if there is no honesty about that, then how can we (the confederation of "Other" cultures) possibly interact and engage with white American culture? There's room for all of us here if we could just talk to each other and be honest with one another and, somehow, drop away the fear we have that the other's viewpoint is a threat to our own existence.

Malcolm wrote:

The problem with the normalization of a "white ethnic consciousness" is that it is not a true consciousness, it is a false consciousness, a dangerous one.

Joka said:

I find conversations like this interesting and so my post here is going to be one from neutrality in that I'm neither for or against the propositions being discussed in this thread. So let me get this straight then, all forms of European ethnic identity are horrible border lining on taboo or blasphemous but the ethnic identity of everybody else, is alright then? I'm very confused here.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no "white" ethnicity, except in the US and the former British Empire, where it used to mean Anglo-Saxon Protestants (Poles, Germans, the Irish, Scots, Italians, Spaniards, were all excluded). Now in the US, since Germans, the Irish, Scots, Italians and so on have achieved a measure of social and economic success, they are now counted as "white."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 15th, 2017 at 7:48 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Wayfarer said:

So, not actually ceased, then.

Malcolm wrote:

Right, samadhi of cessation does not mean cessation in fact.

IN response to your other question mind streams are permanent in so far as they never cease, impermanent in so far as they are constituted of moments.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 15th, 2017 at 6:00 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Wayfarer said:

So Arhats are reborn when it finishes? That can't be right. Or then cease to exist, in which case the original question I asked isn't answered.

Malcolm wrote:

They are roused from samadhi, and are set upon the bodhisattva path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 15th, 2017 at 3:00 AM

Title: Re: Notion Of Justified War Or Violence.

Content:

Joka said:

This probably has been discussed ad nauseum but I am wondering in all the many Buddhist traditions if there is ever the notion of justified war or conflict.

.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha says that kingdoms have a right to defend themselves against aggressors.

He also points out that people who kill each other in combat all go to hell. So kings and soldiers may, for the welfare of their kingdoms defend them with arms, but the sacrifice is much greater than merely losing one's life.

amanitamusc said:

This would depend if the person killing did so as a complete karma.

Malcolm wrote:

There is that, but the Buddha does not make this distinction. He assumes warriors like violence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 15th, 2017 at 2:37 AM

Title: Re: Notion Of Justified War Or Violence.

Content:

Joka said:

This probably has been discussed ad nauseum but I am wondering in all the many Buddhist traditions if there is ever the notion of justified war or conflict.

.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha says that kingdoms have a right to defend themselves against aggressors. He also points out that people who kill each other in combat all go to hell. So kings and soldiers may, for the welfare of their kingdoms defend them with arms, but the sacrifice is much greater than merely losing one's life.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 15th, 2017 at 12:55 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

zenman said:

Hallo

That is my question too.

I have received Norbu Rinpoche's DI a few times. As a member of DC am I eligible to order restricted books other than those that require tantric empowerment or lung? The books that I am referring to are "Lojong, semdzin, rushen", Shine and Lhagtong" and "Dzogchen State ad Syllabe Phat".

Thank you

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, March 15th, 2017 at 12:54 AM
Title: Re: Dzogchen Longde Tantras
Content:
florin said:
I never knew what to do with this information.

Malcolm wrote:
The phrase "pinch of salt" comes to mind.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, March 14th, 2017 at 10:26 PM
Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas
Content:
Tsongkhapafan said:
...my view accords with Buddha...

Malcolm wrote:
In your opinion, but not in fact.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, March 14th, 2017 at 8:41 PM
Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
[Arhats] have no physical existence in samsara, per se, but they continue in a samadhi of cessation.

Wayfarer said:
That is hard to reconcile with the idea that everything is impermanent, isn't it?

Malcolm wrote:
I don't think so. Why do you?

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, March 14th, 2017 at 11:19 AM
Title: Re: Dzogchen Longde Tantras
Content:
Fa Dao said:
cool man..thanks for the info...is this book connected to what you were referring to: "The Nature of Mind: The Dzogchen Instructions of Aro Yeshe Jungne" and if so is it any good?

Malcolm wrote:

I think it is by Khenpo Palden Sherab. Anything by him is good.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 14th, 2017 at 6:22 AM

Title: Re: Don't pay for Dharma Books?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In Vajrayāna, taking a Vajrayāna book for which you do not have transmission is considered stealing the Dharma.

binocular said:

Does this include books one borrows from the library while not having received transmission for them?

If I borrow a ChNN book from the library, while I have no transmission, am I stealing the Dharma?

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on the book. Some ChNN books are for everyone; some are for those with transmission. It is unlikely the latter will be in your library.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 14th, 2017 at 6:21 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Astus said:

Have you perhaps encountered this small book: Maha Boowa: The Path to Arahantship?

Malcolm wrote:

This is exactly the kind of thing Mahāyāna sūtra are criticizing:

"Since when did the earth element ever die? When they decompose and disintegrate, what do they become? All parts of the body revert to their original properties. The earth and water elements revert to their original properties, as do the wind and fire elements. Nothing is annihilated. Those elements have simply come together to form a lump in which the citta then takes up residence...The citta itself is the real culprit, not the lump of physical elements. The body is not some hostile entity whose constant fluctuations threaten our well-being. It is a separate reality that changes naturally according to its own inherent conditions.

Astus said:

The four elements—earth, water, wind and fire—they don't die.

Malcolm wrote:

The emptiness he talks about is not Mahāyāna emptiness, the absence of characteristics. The emptiness he talks about is a result of vairāga, dispassion.

This kind of statement is impossible in Mahāyāna:

Saṃkhāras arise and cease with distinct beginnings and endings, like flashes of lightning or fireflies blinking on and off.

Here is a very nice expression of the emptiness of the person:

Then, from that neutral, impassive state of the citta, the nucleus of existence—the core of the knower—suddenly separated and fell away. Having finally been reduced to anattā, brightness and dullness and everything else were suddenly torn asunder and destroyed once and for all.

But I have to say, there is nothing there which is not anticipated by Mahāyāna critiques of the limitations of the śrāvaka teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 14th, 2017 at 6:07 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Astus said:

Since there is no evidence that śrāvakas negate characteristics through a vipaśyāna analysis that allows them to see through characteristics, there is also no evidence that they are free from clinging to characteristics.

The four noble truths are what is taught to be the definitive insight one needs to gain on the śrāvaka path. And there what one needs to recognise is how there is suffering, how suffering arises, how it ceases, and how one can bring it to cessation. In short, the goal is not to have or maintain any ideas of what characterises phenomena, but to let go of them, to end one's clinging. So, what I don't see the evidence of is how there can remain anything one keeps being hooked on anything.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that arhats suffer from obscurations, and that their wisdom is insufficient to perceive the real nature of phenomena, even though they have a partial realization through which they can claim to be liberated (and liberation in Buddhadharma simply means being free of the afflictions that cause rebirth in saṃsara).

Astus said:

One assumes that ancient Mahāyānis had ample contact and debate with those who were reputed to be śrāvaka arhats.

I'm not so sure. It rather seems to me that what they tend to refute are their own interpretations of abhidharma materials.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a certainty, considering that they rubbed shoulders.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 14th, 2017 at 4:29 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is only the selflessness of persons, not phenomena, because there is no refutation of characteristics themselves. But, for example, in Mahāyāna, even the characteristics by which phenomena are apprehended are refuted. This is the main difference.

Astus said:

Yes, that is a clear difference. On the one side it's rise and fall, birth and death, while on the other it's unarisen and unceasing, unborn and undying.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that is what I have been saying all along.

Astus said:

The absence of a self in persons is only mentioned in these Mahāyāna sūtras. Did you do a search specifically for pudgala naitratmya? That (人無我) doesn't seem to be a common term in Chinese either, although using synonyms can turn up further results.

Malcolm wrote:

I specifically searched for all instances of dharmanaitratmya and pudgalanaitratmya in their various forms.

Astus said:

śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas have trained in characteristics of the aggregate, etc., that lack a self because of being impermanent and so on, rather than in emptiness. Contemplation of the three characteristics are what is said to bring about the realisation of the three gates of liberation, so there is a correlation.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a correlation in terms of liberation, but not in terms of omniscience. This is the principle distinction that the PP sūtras make.

Astus said:

It is asserted that they cling to characteristics, not that they cling to the aggregates, etc., per se.

An this is something I have difficulty to take literally on a practical level. Sure, most of the usual criticisms of arhats look valid for people obsessed with total cessation and/or systems and lists of dharmas. But I fail to see them as anything but common warnings one can find in all sorts of teachings, and that is likely the reason why Mahayana traditions kept this view of the arhat alive (at the same time, arhats in East Asia are also popular spirit/deity/bodhisattva-like beings).

Malcolm wrote:

Don't confuse the cult of the 16 arhats, who are all bodhisattva emanations, with the śrāvaka arhat that is the object of Mahāyāna criticism.

Astus said:

Although looking at the <http://www.vipassanadhura.com/sixteen.html> can give the impression that the criticism is valid, it's also possible to say that as both body and mind are let go of, there can be no hindrances left, nor even clinging to characteristics, since even those are just thoughts.

Malcolm wrote:

Personally, I think you are reading with a Mahāyāna bias, and interpolating your own view on the view of śrāvakas. Since there is no evidence that śrāvakas negate characteristics through a vipaśyāna analysis that allows them to see through characteristics, there is also no evidence that they are free from clinging to characteristics. One assumes that ancient Mahāyānis had ample contact and debate with those who were reputed to be śrāvaka arhats.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 14th, 2017 at 4:18 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Longde Tantras

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Look bro, wasnt trying to be confrontational...this is just what I read in NN's books...just wanted some clarification

Malcolm wrote:

I understand. The historical narrative of the arrival of Dzogchen teaching in Tibet was radically altered by the revelation of the Vima Nyingthig in 1118, so much so that it literally eclipsed earlier narratives. There are no traditional Tibetan teachers that question this narrative, even though it definitely is the case that prior to the VN, the lingo of the three series was never used by anyone. For example, the earliest comprehensive history of Dharma composed by Nyangral in the late 12th does not mention these terms at all.

He refers to five main systems of Dzogchen. The first one is the the one we understand as klong sde, which he simply summarizes as the lineage given to Yudra Nyingpo connected with the five tantras typically now associated with klong sde. But he does not mention Mipham Gonpo, nor 'Dzeng. It appears that he does not know about the Vajra Bridge at all.

He mentions the lineage of Aro Yeshe Jungney. He mentions the cycle of the Kun byed rgyal po. He mentions the Brahmin cyle. He also mentions the unsurpassed Dzogchen cycle of the 17 tantras. He never mentions anything about the three series anywhere. He was a generation younger than Zhangton Tashi Dorje, the tertön of the VN, so this definitely shows that in the late twelfth century, the idea of the three series was restricted to the circle around Zhangton. Thus, it is really only in post- 12th century texts outside of the VN where we begin to see the systemization of the three series applied to Dzogchen teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 14th, 2017 at 1:49 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Astus said:

The part where it is true is that the path described that way is what is found in the abhidharma works, although there can be differences. The part where it is not true is the Nikayas/Agamas and those Theravada teachers who don't follow the abhidhamma. Look at this description for instance: <http://measurelessmind.ca/anattasanna.html>.

Malcolm wrote:

Nothing here goes beyond the selflessness of persons. For example, here the Buddha is not describing the selflessness of phenomena:

Thus he abides contemplating selflessness with regard to the six internal and external sensory spheres. This, Ānanda, is called the recognition of selflessness.

This is only the selflessness of persons, not phenomena, because there is no refutation of characteristics themselves. But, for example, in Mahāyāna, even the characteristics by which phenomena are apprehended are refuted. This is the main difference.

Astus said:

Also, it is quite common in Mahayana to describe arhats by their realisation of the emptiness of self, and sometimes even by the realisation of the emptiness of phenomena.

Malcolm wrote:

The absence of a self in persons is only mentioned in these Mahāyāna sūtras:

śatasāhasrikā-prajñāpāramitā, 1 mention

ārya-daśasāhasrikā-prajñāpāramitā-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 1 mention ārya-saṃdhinirmocana-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 3 mentions ārya-laṅkāvatāra-mahāyāna-sūtra, 26 mentions ārya-ghanavyūha-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 1

ārya-mahāyāna-prasāda-prabhāvana-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 1 mention ārya-ratnamegha-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 3 mentions.
Rājadeśa-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 1 mention

Absence of a self in phenomena is mentioned in these sūtras:

śatasāhasrikā-prajñāpāramitā, 9
Pañcaviṃśatisāhasrikā-prajñāpāramitā, 2 ārya-aṣṭādaśasāhasrikā-prajñāpāramitā-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 1 ārya-prajñāpāramitā-nāma-aṣṭaśataka, 2
Giri-ānanda-sūtra, 1
ārya-niṣṭhāgata-bhagavaj-jñāna-vaipulya-sūtra-ratnānanta-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 1 ārya-sarvabuddha-viśayāvatāra-jñānālokālaṃkāra-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 1 ārya-saṃdhinirmocana-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 13 ārya-laṅkāvatāra-mahāyāna-sūtra, 47 ārya-sarvapuṇya-samuccaya-samādhi-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 1 ārya-sāgara-nāgarāja-paripṛcchā-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 1 ārya-anavatapta-nāgarāja-paripṛcchā-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 1
ārya-ghanavyūha-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 4
ārya-karuṇāpuṇḍarika-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 1 ārya-mahāyāna-prasāda-prabhāvana-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 1 ārya-sāgaramati-paripṛcchā-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 1 ārya-akṣayamati-nirdeśa-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 1 Rājadeśa-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 1 ārya-ratnamegha-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 3 ārya-samyag-cāravṛtta-gaganavarṇa-vinaya-kṣānti-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 1 ārya-dīpaṃkara-vyākaraṇa-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, 1

What we can see from the above is that the main sūtra that deals with this issue is the Lanka, the main polemical sūtra in this respect.

In general, what is discussed in the Perfection of Wisdom sūtras is the limitations upon the omniscience of arhats and pratyekabuddhas, and this is why in that body of sūtras there is an extensive discussion of how emptiness is understood with respect to arhats and pratyekabuddhas where it is primarily stated that one should avoid their result because śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas have trained in characteristics of the aggregate, etc., that lack a self because of being impermanent and so on, rather than in emptiness.

For example, the Lanka responds to your question, "to what do arhats grasp?" Further, if it is asked what is the śrāvakas to the nature of conceiving entities, it is like this, having perceived...the elements that arise without a creator, intrinsic and general characteristics, reasonings, scripture, and authority, they cling to the nature of those. Note, I am not addressing the issue of how Mahāyāna commentators deal with the absence of the two selves. That is a whole different question.

Astus said:

The issue is whether they are attached to the aggregates or not. In order to keep any form of traces, obscurations, or defilements for arhats, they necessarily have to still cling to the aggregates and the areas,

Malcolm wrote:

It is asserted that they cling to characteristics, not that they cling to the aggregates, etc., per se.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 14th, 2017 at 12:12 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Wayfarer said:

After their nirvana, arhats have no location per se, being like "logs floating on the ocean, moved by the waves."

Are they not utterly non-existent, then? That would seem to follow from the whole trajectory of 'cessation'.

Malcolm wrote:

No, arhats do not just poof out. They have no physical existence in samsara, per se, but they continue in a samadhi of cessation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 13th, 2017 at 11:05 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Longde Tantras

Content:

Fa Dao said:

good to know...please elaborate...

Malcolm wrote:

Ask ratna to post his master's thesis. Of anyone here, he knows the most about klong sde. You also have to keep in mind that so called sems sde and klong sde lineages do not self-identify as such since the idea of sems, klong, and man ngag sde come from the Vima Nyingthig and do not appear prior to its revelation in 1118.

Fa Dao said:

ok..but what about Vairocana who is said to have received and transmitted the semde and longde that he received from Shri Singha? Wasnt that before 1118? Also what about Dzin Dharmabodhi who is said to have lived at the time of Machig Labdron (1031-1139) and integrated into the longde tantric methods of transformation?

Malcolm wrote:

The terms sems sde and klong sde come from the Vima Nyinthig. You will never find these terms used prior to that time. The original name of the klong sde tradition was the Vajra Bridge (rdo rje zam pa), based on the short instruction given to Mipham Gonpo. This is the tradition that comes from Dzeng Dharmabodhi. There is another set of writings that divide the path into nine spaces. This is another Varja Bridge commentarial tradition through Se Bandhe.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 13th, 2017 at 11:57 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Like most German Jews, Marx was completely bourgeois right down to insisting that he always had a house servant and educating his girls in French and piano lessons.

Grigoris said:

I don't think you could call Marx a Jew, though he was from a Jewish family, unless you are one of those types that consider Jews a race. It seems that he did have a wealthy background, even though he lived in squalor (albeit with a housekeeper). I guess housekeepers were cheap back in the good ol' days.

Malcolm wrote:

Jews are an ethnic group, not a race. There is only one human race. Within it are many ethnic and regional identities. The point about Marx is that he was very much a person of his time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 13th, 2017 at 11:51 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Longde Tantras

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Magnus,
that is problematic but as far as I know these are the only translations of these two Tantras in English...

Malcolm wrote:

In general, you won't find anything very special in the so called "klong sde" tantras since their view and so on is virtually identical with so called "sems sde."

The unique stuff is in the various instructions which take these tantras as their basis.

Fa Dao said:

good to know...please elaborate...

Malcolm wrote:

Ask ratna to post his master's thesis. Of anyone here, he knows the most about klong sde. You also have to keep in mind that so called sems sde and klong sde lineages do not self-identify as such since the idea of sems, klong, and man ngag sde come from the Vima Nyingthig and do not appear prior to its revelation in 1118.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 13th, 2017 at 7:25 AM

Title: Re: Lifetime of Śakra

Content:

KarmaOcean said:

I was reading about Śakra, Lord of the Gods, and that the lifetime of Śakra is limited.

Do we have any indication of how long this period is ?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, The devas in the heaven of thirty-three, of which Indra is the ruler, live for 36,000,000 years.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 13th, 2017 at 7:22 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Longde Tantras

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Magnus,
that is problematic but as far as I know these are the only translations of these two Tantras in English...

Malcolm wrote:

In general, you won't find anything very special in the so called "klong sde" tantras since their view and so on is virtually identical with so called "sems sde."

The unique stuff is in the various instructions which take these tantras as their basis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 13th, 2017 at 3:44 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In Buddhadharma in general, there are only three unconditioned phenomena: space (as absence of obstruction), analytical cessation (nirvana), and nonanalytical cessation (simple absence of a cause).

Tsongkhapa said:

Are you saying that emptiness is conditioned?

Malcolm wrote:

No, I am saying that in general Buddhadharma there are only three unconditioned dharmas. Emptiness is not a separate dharma, like space or the two cessations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 13th, 2017 at 2:55 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Marx did not do math. He was not an economist. He was a petite bourgeoisie historian/journalist.

Grigoris said:

Marx was petite bourgeois??? He relied on Engels (who was a factory owner) for money. I wouldn't call him a historian though. More a political philosopher. His analysis of capitalism had a mathematical element to it as well, it was a pretty accurate prediction of the accumulative nature of capitalism though, even if it was not mathematically based.

Maybe he was off on the prediction of where this accumulation would lead regarding the politicization of the proletariat. I don't think he was aware of exactly how competitive people WITHIN a class can be, when it comes to acquiring resources for their survival.

Malcolm wrote:

Like most German Jews, Marx was completely bourgeois right down to insisting that he always had a house servant and educating his girls in French and piano lessons. He generally spent most of his life running through one inheritance after another.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 13th, 2017 at 2:29 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Piketty proved it. Marx merely suggested it.

Grigoris said:

I think you'll find that capitalism proved it, not Piketty. Marx did a little more than suggest it, unless you consider three volumes of economic analysis a "suggestion".

Have you even read Capital bro?

Malcolm wrote:

Many years ago. My favorite part is his sarcastic analysis of British Imperialism at the end.

Marx did not do math. He was not an economist. He was a petite bourgeoisie historian/journalist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 13th, 2017 at 2:20 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

The observer is empty of inherent existence because his very existence is dependent upon causes and conditions.

Wayfarer said:

This point is tangential to the argument about physics, but I'm not sure about this. You see, 'dependent on causes and conditions' applies to 'all compounded phenomena'. But there is 'that which is unmade, uncreated', which is not dependent on causes on conditions. We have to be careful not to reify the unconditioned by treating it as an object. But, is the Tathāgata dependent on causes and conditions? I know that's a difficult question but it should be considered.

Malcolm wrote:

In Buddhadharma in general, there are only three unconditioned phenomena: space (as absence of obstruction), analytical cessation (nirvana), and nonanalytical cessation (simple absence of a cause).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 13th, 2017 at 2:14 AM

Title: Re: Buddhist Anarchism

Content:

Vasana said:

Economists like Thomas Piketty have shown that the accelerated accumulation of capital by a few is built into the system.

Grigoris said:

I think Marx may have come up with idea... not Piketty.

Malcolm wrote:

Piketty proved it. Marx merely suggested it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 13th, 2017 at 1:59 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

PuerAzelis said:

He just quoted three sutras answering precisely that. What else is he supposed to do?

Astus said:

The three quotes merely state that

"Śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas have not abandoned all connection with traces"

"not completely destroyed traces"

"they are confused through the other traces of affliction"

and the questions raised are in response to that concept of remaining traces.

PuerAzelis said:

He just quoted three sutras answering precisely that. What else is he supposed to do?

Astus said:

The three quotes merely state that

"Śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas have not abandoned all connection with traces"

"not completely destroyed traces"

"they are confused through the other traces of affliction"

and the questions raised are in response to that concept of remaining traces.

Malcolm wrote:

The location of traces is in the mind stream of course. Daṃṣṭrasenam, in his commentary on the 100,000 lines Perfection of Wisdom Sūtra, notes that the result of possessing those traces mentions specifically that arhats can err, gossip, can be unattractive, are forgetful, and so on.

But the above only refers to past traces, the absence of which is how the eighteen unshared qualities of a buddha are defined. But that is not really the most important point. Below we will see too that it is claimed that arhats also do not abandon the traces of conceptuality.

The most important point is that śrāvakayanists in general do not meditate on the view of emptiness. As we will see below, they meditate in the four truths and this is how they attain their awakening. They realize the person as a momentary formation and this is what it means to say that an arhat realizes "the selflessness of persons." But they do not meditate directly on the view of emptiness in anyway. The Goenka Vipassana school is an excellent example of this principle.

Bhavaviveka II mentions in the Tarkajvala that the difference between nirvana of a buddha and an arhat is the latter's nirvana is result of totally abandoning the two obscurations, while the latter's nirvana is merely severing the continuum of their physical body in samsara. He remarks too that the traces of affliction from cultivating afflictions from beginningless time exist within arhats. He distinguishes buddhas by pointing out that they totally eliminate all afflictions along with their traces by cultivating the view of emptiness for a long while, and they eliminate the knowledge obscuration the same way. This is not how arhats attain their realization since their realization is attained not by meditating on emptiness, but rather by meditating the four noble truths in sixteen moments on the path of seeing.

Vibhūticandra says much the same thing in his commentary on the Bodhicaryāvatāra: With respect to the traces of emptiness, since śrāvakas and so on cannot bear the fact that all phenomena are empty, it is said they are liberated solely through seeing four truths of nobles. Since they obtain freedom only through the direct perception of the "truths" — suffering, the origin, the cessation, and the path— of what use to them is seeing emptiness?

Jayananda's commentary on the Madhyamakāvatāra states:

Therefore, śrāvakas and pratyekabuddha do not abandon the affliction of the traces of conceptuality, but because bodhisattvas, beginning on the eighth bhūmi, are able to exhaust the affliction of the traces of conceptuality through the power of the path of effortlessness and characteristiclessness, they are able to attain buddhahood.

Thus, it is somewhat inane to speculate about where traces reside in an arhat. It is also somewhat foolish to assert that arhats realize the selflessness of phenomena when it has nothing at all to do with how they achieve their realization since they never even meditate the view of the emptiness of the person let alone emptiness in general.

Finally, concerning the Lanka and its samadhi-intoxicated arhats, Jñānavajra states: With respect to that, the three liberations are the three awakenings which are equivalent in abandoning afflictions.

"The absence of self in phenomena," and so on means that the ultimate suchness and the pristine consciousness which realizes that is liberated from afflictions and abandons the obscuration of knowledge — this is Mahāyāna of the result.

It is taught that śrāvakas cannot realize that. "Just as..." and "They are distracted by characteristics" means they are distracted because they conceptualize particular and universal characteristics of the aggregates and so on, and thus cannot abandon the knowledge obscuration. In the same way, though they indeed abandon the active causes of the afflictive obscuration, they cannot abandon the latent ones. Through perceiving sensation and perception as flaws, they solely rely on the method of pacifying them and are intoxicated with an intoxicating samadhi that lacks the wisdom that realizes the truth. Since they abandon the manifest causes of affliction, they reside in the uncontaminated dhātu. If is asked whether that is their ultimate result, they do not reach an ultimate result apart from that. That being the case, if it is wondered whether or not they are outside of and turned away from samsara, through realizing the emptiness of the person as being a momentary formation and understanding a self is an agent of action, there is no further accumulated karma for birth in samsara and the causal condition for the active cause of craving and addiction are absent, just as a log floating on the ocean does sink to the bottom, there is no certainty of their remaining in one place. If it is wondered how long they remain in the the uncontaminated dhātu, it is said "Samadhi, etc..."

"Then I will cause them to obtain the dharmakāya..." means that as explained already, when through their own roots of virtue and the blessings of the tathāgata they awaken from uncontaminated dhātu and generate the mind for supreme awakening. Having filled their compliment of the two accumulations, they will obtain the dharmakāya." Thus we can also see there is no place where such arhats "reside" after death, no Hinayāna pure land. After their nirvana, arhats have no location per se, being like "logs floating on the ocean, moved by the waves."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 12th, 2017 at 1:38 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

White Lotus said:

Oneness. Buddha and arhat are not the same not different and yet they both see mind, as does any child or dog, but they know what they see. One vehicle/eckayana. Everything is enlightened. Mind, emptiness. Oneness.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, guess you better start writing your own sūtras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 12th, 2017 at 1:16 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Temicco said:

I have a few questions after reading Guruyoga in preparation for today's webcast. (Realized I should have done this sooner so I could spend some more time memorizing the recitations and could have caught the explanatory conference call, but oh well...)

What is a "Tun"? We're apparently supposed to know how to do them. It seems like the "Tun Book" contains a decent amount of material used in the transmission. Is it something one should buy for that sake?

Malcolm wrote:

Thun means "session" or period of time.

Temicco said:

How exactly should we visualize the thigle and white A? Like we're looking at our bodies externally and the thigle is just kind of projected on us? And eyes open or closed?

Malcolm wrote:

The A is visualized facing outward.

Temicco said:

The visualizations in general have a lot going on. Is there a precise way we're technically supposed to do them, or is it fine to just kind of try your best to do what seems right?

Malcolm wrote:

You just think about it briefly and then let it go.

Temicco said:

The introduction and p.37/38 present guruyoga ultimately as being in the state of rigpa as reflected in the teacher, but then on page 32, 36, and 44 guruyoga is presented as the key for discovering our real nature, and consisting of thigle visualization during transmission. Page 43 seemingly discusses it in both ways at once. So are there 2 main guruyogas in dzogchen, the one of being in rigpa and the one done during transmission or at other times in order to unlock rigpa?

Malcolm wrote:

Ati Guru Yoga is both a method of introduction and a means for discovering what was introduced if you did not succeed.

Temicco said:

The introduction makes it sound like the fourth chapter is about conduct and integrating guruyoga, so does that mean that all of the instructions contained therein are only for people who have had an experience of rigpa already? (I don't understand what "integration" could be being talked about otherwise, nor how one could know how to be in instant presence otherwise.)

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is for anyone who is interested to know what conduct is from a Dzogchen perspective, so one can gradually integrate it into one's life.

Temicco said:

The worldwide transmission just consists of ChNN giving oral, symbolic, and then direct transmission, right?

Malcolm wrote:

It is an Anuyoga practice which involves direct introduction.

Temicco said:

Does the melody and so on matter? I only have the Guruyoga book and it is too late this time to catch the explanatory conference call for the other details. Lacking them, I can still pay attention and do the visualizations and so on, but will transmission still occur if I'm not well prepared for the singing and recitations? (Also, I assume the visualizations and mental stuff going on at each recitation are the most important thing, so is it better not to recite if it would be distracting?)

Malcolm wrote:

Just follow along with ChNN. (I wish I had a bouncing ball gif).

Temicco said:

After being present for the transmission, what next? I'm very confused about empowerments and so on and what I am allowed to / should practise at each step (particularly given that I would practice alone, seemingly). On page 60 he says that "the root of all transmissions is Guruyoga; the same applies in the case of Rushens and Semdzins". So, are those something that should be practiced after following the instructions for the transmission?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes. You can immediately begin to apply semzins and rushans.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 12th, 2017 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

4526547 said:

This is only the "Hinayana" sutras' perspective, naturally, and Mahayana perspective may or may not differ.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct. What is being explored here, Tilt, is the Mahāyāna perspective on what it means to be an arhat.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 12th, 2017 at 12:19 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

now you think that arhats are tathāgatas.

Astus said:

The problem I'm raising here is that ascribing attachment to arhats is not supported by reason. So far there has been no substantiated argument against that. It is another issue if buddhahood is defined on the basis of the complete absence of attachment.

Malcolm wrote:

Attachment is not the issue, traces are. For example, the Prajñāpāramitā states: Subhuti, while there is no difference in the abandonment of affliction, the Tathāgata has abandoned all connection with traces. Śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas have not abandoned all connection with traces...there are aspects of bodily and verbal desire, hatred and ignorance in śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas. However, the traces of those are not harmful in the same way they are for common immature people.

Or the Ārya-bodhisattva-piṭaka-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra states:

The uncontaminated pristine consciousness (jñāna) of the śrāvakas has not completely destroyed traces.

The Ārya-laṅkāvatāra-mahāyāna-sūtra states:

Just as a log floating on the ocean is always moved by waves,

likewise confused śrāvakas are moved by the "wind" of characteristics.

Though prevented from being activated,

they are confused through the other traces of affliction,

and intoxicated by the bliss of samadhi,

they abide in the uncontaminated dhātu (nirvana).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 11th, 2017 at 11:42 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Brunelleschi said:

So this is Guru Yoga, from an Ati-Yoga perspective, which in itself contains the Direct Introduction?

ratna said:

Yes. When done at the same time as the teacher, it includes the DI.

Malcolm wrote:

And also afterwards, when one does it oneself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 11th, 2017 at 4:55 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

oldbob said:

That said, there appears to be a difference between doing translations as a Dharma activity with the motivation to make appropriate teachings as available as possible, and on the other hand, doing translations with the motivation of only selling the translations to those who can afford them.

Malcolm wrote:

If people want to wait 75 years for the copyright to expire, well....then they can upload Buddhahood as much as they like. In the meantime, it is in the interest of the continued production of good translations from Wisdom, Snow Lion/Shambhala, etc., that one should pay for the Dharma books that one wishes to own.

There is an additional benefit to the production of translations by professional Buddhist publishers — these books enter the Library of Congress. One cannot hope to see most independently published books there. They have strict rules about what books they accept and how to submit them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 11th, 2017 at 2:48 AM

Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

The mind is not emptiness because emptiness cannot cognize. Mind is the nature of emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

We have understood for a long time you are an advocate of an inert emptiness. But that is not the profound view of mantrayāna.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Emptiness is inert. Is emptiness permanent or impermanent?

It is permanent therefore it cannot function - and it certainly cannot cognize because it is not mind.

Malcolm wrote:

Thus your view is no different than that of nonbuddhist annihilationists.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 11th, 2017 at 2:35 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Freedom from attachments does not equal freedom from proliferation.

Astus said:

When no concepts grasped, how can there be proliferation?

"There's no trail in space,
no outside contemplative.

People are smitten with objectifications (papanca), but devoid of objectification (nippapanca) are the Tathagatas."

(<http://www.accesstoinight.org/tipitaka/kn/dhp/dhp.18.than.html.254>)

If it did, arhats would be omniscient. They also could not fall back from the state of arhatship, but some do.

Those are clearly problematic points, but secondary.

Malcolm wrote:

I see, so you have become a follower of Tilt Billings, and now you think that arhats are tathāgatas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 11th, 2017 at 2:34 AM

Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

... until the mind mixes with emptiness directly and the path of seeing is attained.

Grigoris said:

But the mind is emptiness anyway, so...

Tsongkhapa said:

The mind is not emptiness because emptiness cannot cognize. Mind is the nature of emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

We have understood for a long time you are an advocate of an inert emptiness. But that is not the profound view of mantrayāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 11th, 2017 at 1:23 AM

Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Unproduced space can be apprehended just as lack of inherent existence can be apprehended. Your continued insistence that non-affirming negatives cannot be apprehended contradicts both Je Tsongkhapa's teachings and my own meditative experience, therefore I reject it.

Malcolm wrote:

You are meditating on concepts about emptiness.

Āryan equipoise is the state that arises when one has eliminated all proliferation about phenomena. That freedom from proliferation is emptiness. But it cannot be taken as a conceptual object since conceptual objects are proliferation. The way to discover freedom from proliferation is exactly as Śāntideva describes it, and I paraphrase, when neither an entity nor a nonentity rests before the mind, at that moment since there is no other alternative, the mind is pacified. That is āryan equipoise.

Tsongkhapafan said:

They are not concepts about emptiness. It's true that the non-affirming negative, lack of inherent existence is initially known through the medium of a generic image appearing to a conceptual mind, but through this image we can know emptiness itself. Eventually, through continuous familiarity in meditation, the generic image of emptiness becomes fainter and fainter until the mind mixes with emptiness directly and the path of seeing is attained.

According to Tsongkhapa's teachings there is no other way to gain a direct realisation of emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

It doesn't work.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 11th, 2017 at 12:59 AM

Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:
The lack of obstructive contact is not.

Malcolm wrote:
There are two kinds of space. Area and dimension is conditioned space. That is the kind of space in which you can wave your arms. Unconditioned space is also unimpeded by solid objects. For example, you cannot wave your arms in a room full with solid rock. The former, being conditioned, can be apprehended. The latter, being unconditioned, cannot be apprehended. The latter space is a metaphor for emptiness, the former is not.

Tsongkhapa said:
Unproduced space can be apprehended just as lack of inherent existence can be apprehended. Your continued insistence that non-affirming negatives cannot be apprehended contradicts both Je Tsongkhapa's teachings and my own meditative experience, therefore I reject it.

Malcolm wrote:
You are meditating on concepts about emptiness.

Āryan equipoise is the state that arises when one has eliminated all proliferation about phenomena. That freedom from proliferation is emptiness. But it cannot be taken as a conceptual object since conceptual objects are proliferation. The way to discover freedom from proliferation is exactly as Śāntideva describes it, and I paraphrase, when neither an entity nor a nonentity rests before the mind, at that moment since there is no other alternative, the mind is pacified. That is āryan equipoise.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, March 11th, 2017 at 12:38 AM
Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
The question is not whether they are bound. The question is "what kind of realization is necessary for freedom from rebirth?" The answer is: "Not very deep."

Astus said:
How is that the question? What realisation is deeper/higher than what is free from all attachments, hence also free from conceptual proliferation?

Malcolm wrote:
Freedom from attachments does not equal freedom from proliferation. If it did, arhats would be omniscient. They also could not fall back from the state of arhatship, but some do.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, March 10th, 2017 at 11:44 PM

Title: Re: How to not intellectualize my interest in buddhism?

Content:

Rakz said:

I have this same issue with the Dharma. Read too much of it but practice is always kept to a minimum.

binocular said:

Reading (and studying) can be a part of the practice, too.

For example, you can make a point of practicing the four brahmaviharas as you read, so that your responses to what you read are within the framework of the four brahmaviharas.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, wisdom has three components, hearing (studying), reflection, and cultivation. First we hear, then we reflect on what we have heard, then we cultivate what we have heard.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 10th, 2017 at 11:31 PM

Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

Think a bit more simply - wave your arms in the air. Do you experience any obstructive contact? That's unproduced space.

Are you apprehending it now?

Malcolm wrote:

O, that is. Conditioned space.

Tsongkhapa said:

The lack of obstructive contact is not.

Malcolm wrote:

There are two kinds of space. Area and dimension is conditioned space. That is the kind of space in which you can wave your arms. Unconditioned space is also unimpeded by solid objects. For example, you cannot wave your arms in a room full of solid rock. The former, being conditioned, can be apprehended. The latter, being unconditioned, cannot be apprehended. The latter space is a metaphor for emptiness, the former is not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 10th, 2017 at 10:51 PM

Title: Re: Don't pay for Dharma Books?

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

Stealing a book maybe, but the Dharma cannot be filched.

Malcolm wrote:

In Vajrayāna, taking a Vajrayāna book for which you do not have transmission is considered stealing the Dharma.

Rakz said:

What if you have transmission and download it for free?

Malcolm wrote:

For me personally, it affects nothing. The amount of money I will make from this book is truly paltry. It would be much more lucrative for me to self-publish. However, the practice of pirating books undermines the Buddhist book industry.

Anonymous X said:

What if you bought the book, scanned it, and wanted to share it with others because you felt it was beneficial? What if you just bought the book and shared it with your immediate friends? This would not be considered stealing anything. All this gets into very sketchy territory. Sometimes people go too far in their views and attachments to all of this. Let the lawyers figure it out.

Malcolm wrote:

Loaning a book is one thing. Copying a few pages is one thing. Uploading an entire book with the intent to make it freely available to all and sundry is quite another. As I pointed out to Rakz, it undermines Buddhist book publishers. We need them. They keep editorial and production standards high because they are professionals and they know what they are doing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 10th, 2017 at 10:50 AM

Title: Re: Root Lama versus Dzogchen transmission

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

a fear. And after all these scoldings, he still followed the guru, not blindly but wholeheartedly...

Malcolm wrote:

with his blindfold well and firmly tied.

binocular said:

Where did he go wrong?

Malcolm wrote:

He continued to think the guru was his state rather than recognizing his own state based on the guru's instructions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 10th, 2017 at 7:49 AM

Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Emptiness (lack of inherent existence) or unproduced space (lack of obstructive contact).

Bakmoon said:

It is begging the question to use the example of emptiness because that's the very thing under dispute. That would constitute circular reasoning.

And I don't think actual unproduced space is apprehended either. If I were to look off into empty space I wouldn't see space, I would see blackness, and unproduced space doesn't have color of any kind. If it did have a color then everything would be obscured by that color because everywhere is pervaded by unproduced space.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Think a bit more simply - wave your arms in the air. Do you experience any obstructive contact? That's unproduced space.

Are you apprehending it now?

Malcolm wrote:

O, that is. Conditioned space.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 10th, 2017 at 7:48 AM

Title: Re: Root Lama versus Dzogchen transmission

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

a fear. And after all these scoldings, he still followed the guru, not blindly but wholeheartedly...

Malcolm wrote:

with his blindfold well and firmly tied.

dzogchungpa said:

Yes, it's too bad he didn't have a friend like you to remove it for him.

Malcolm wrote:

Not my job.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 10th, 2017 at 5:54 AM

Title: Re: Root Lama versus Dzogchen transmission

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

a fear. And after all these scoldings, he still followed the guru, not blindly but wholeheartedly...

Malcolm wrote:

with his blindfold well and firmly tied.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 9th, 2017 at 11:17 PM

Title: Re: Don't pay for Dharma Books?

Content:

Nicholas Weeks said:

Stealing a book maybe, but the Dharma cannot be filched.

Malcolm wrote:

In Vajrayāna, taking a Vajrayāna book for which you do not have transmission is considered stealing the Dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 9th, 2017 at 10:32 PM

Title: Re: How to not intellectualize my interest in buddhism?

Content:

ClearMountainWay said:

I'm an extremely analytical person. My studies were in Philosophy. I hyper-analyze, philosophize and ponder every aspect of life and anything that I've ever been interested in. I literally spend any bit of my free time immersed in books and papers and articles, for no reason other than a strong insatiable desire to understand and understand and to see and understand further and question and further question ad nauseum.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not a problem. Go with it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 9th, 2017 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

oldbob said:

This book will eventually be of great help to many. I look forward to the pdf being on the web in 20 years.

Good job Malcolm!:namaste:

Anonymous X said:
It's already on the web!

Malcolm wrote:
This just means that people are stealing the Dharma. Pity. But their karma is their own.
Hopefully the benefit of contacting the Dharma will outweigh their stinginess.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, March 9th, 2017 at 10:21 PM
Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life
Content:
zenman said:
I didn't get from whom Malcolm got this lung. Khenpo Jigme Phuntsok, Taklung Tsetrul or someone else? A nice lecture.

Malcolm wrote:
HH Taklung Tsetrul Dorjechang

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, March 9th, 2017 at 5:03 AM
Title: Re: Must you regard a refuge lama as your guru?
Content:
Boomerang said:
When I took refuge I did it with the understanding that you should respect that teacher as the person who introduced you to the three gems, but you don't have to view them as a Buddha. Today I read a book (The Heart of the Path: Seeing the Guru as a Buddha) that says your refuge lama should be viewed as a guru-Buddha even if you had no intention of forming that relationship.

Which is correct? Is it only a matter of opinion?

Malcolm wrote:
There is a difference between the Mahāyāna idea of regarding your teacher to being like a Buddha, as opposed to the Vajrayāna ideal that you should regard your guru as an actual Buddha.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, March 9th, 2017 at 5:02 AM
Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas
Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Non-thing is not a concept, it's an existent. Is a blue sky a concept? No, it's an existent, an appearance to mind that is apprehended by mind. Emptiness is not a concept either, it's an existent object to be perceived directly like a blue sky.

Malcolm wrote:

So emptiness is an existent nonthing?

Tsongkhapafan said:

Yes, of course! All non-things are existent. Even nothing is an existent.

Malcolm wrote:

So the past and future are existent?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 9th, 2017 at 4:37 AM

Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Of course emptiness is an object - anything that can appear to mind and be understood is an object. It's not a thing but it's a non-thing.

You seem to be saying that emptiness and nothingness are the same - they aren't.

conebeckham said:

Things that appear to mind include "external phenomena," and internal phenomena-- thoughts, feelings, concepts, etc.

Emptiness as a "non-thing" is a concept. Is it your assertion, therefore, that the limit of meditation on emptiness is meditation on a concept? An idea?

Tsongkhapafan said:

Non-thing is not a concept, it's an existent. Is a blue sky a concept? No, it's an existent, an appearance to mind that is apprehended by mind. Emptiness is not a concept either, it's an existent object to be perceived directly like a blue sky.

Malcolm wrote:

So emptiness is an existent nonthing?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 9th, 2017 at 3:27 AM

Title: Re: Root Lama versus Dzogchen transmission

Content:
binocular said:
I don't want to be a part of. I don't want to be that calf.

Malcolm wrote:
The very first time I went to see ChNN, he informed us that the job of a Dzogchen Guru was to make their students independent, not dependent. Your mileage may vary with gurus in the four schools of Tibetan Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, March 9th, 2017 at 1:23 AM
Title: Re: Root Lama versus Dzogchen transmission
Content:
Lhasa said:
Siddhis don't make a saint.

Garchen Rinpoche once said, "Find the Lama who loves you."

Karma Jinpa said:
Upon being asked if I could be his direct student, Rinpoche said to me:

"Whether you are my student or not is up to you. I love all beings equally."

binocular said:
It seems that finding a teacher like that is very difficult!

Malcolm wrote:
ChNN.

Karma Jinpa said:
Kyabjé Garchen Rinpoche.

Malcolm wrote:
It is interesting when people post their own teacher's name in response to my posting "ChNN" rather than merely expressing their confidence in their own teacher. It assumes that I am comparing my teacher with others.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, March 9th, 2017 at 12:45 AM
Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?
Content:
MiphamFan said:
OK, why don't you look for some sources to back up your argument

Coëmgenu said:

I should have something prepared by the weekend, when I have more time to pursue leisure work on the Internet.

My apologies, post forthcoming. Malcolm is (quite obviously) more qualified than I to speak of something as "tantric" or not tantric, so if he says tantra was not practiced at a certain time, that should probably be believed even if it appears to contradict some archaeological findings, given the esoteric nature of tantric discourse, and, I assume, the commentarial tradition of addressing the tantric tradition itself that is no doubt present within that tradition. The archaeological findings I was referring to (and am slowly working on making that post on) are some seemingly Vajrayana-influenced or at least Mahayana statuary, art, and artefacts that date from after the destruction of the Abhayagirivihāra occasionally appearing in the material records of history. Indicating, to me, that there was at least some divergent "non-Theravāda" being practiced by a minority, that at the very least appropriated Mahāyāna iconography and visual language to suit its ends. But artefacts does not necessarily a living historical tradition make I will certainly admit.

Malcolm wrote:

Vajrayāna spread into SE Asia from India, along with Hinduism. The only survival of this is brahmin families with court duties to the Kings of Thailand. But Varjayāna was eradicated along with Mahāyāna.

Vajrayāna and Mahāyāna never spread to SE Asia from Śrī Lanka.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 9th, 2017 at 12:13 AM

Title: Re: Tough times for religious studies

Content:

steveb1 said:

Christianity, like it or not, was the US's moral backbone and metaphysical bulwark since the nation's inception.

Malcolm wrote:

I completely disagree with this sentiment.

steveb1 said:

But secularism, humanism ...

Malcolm wrote:

Secularism and humanism spring directly out of the Enlightenment, the actual source for moral and philosophical underpinnings of the US. I am in complete favor of the continued secularization of our educational system. The Gvt. should not fund religious schools in anyway since it is a violation of the establishment clause.

steveb1 said:

One unfortunate effect of this is the attempt to be religious by embracing non-religious religion, such as "Death of God" Christianity and the new forms of secular forms of Buddhism which utterly reject the Transcendent and the Buddha Realms. This kind of substitute religion is, paradoxically, opposed to religion; opposed to any idea of Transcendence, whether of a divine Absolute or the reality of a non-material subjective human entity. Matter and its processes reign supreme. All else is illusion and delusion. A terribly corrosive thing for religion and spirituality.

Malcolm wrote:

From a Dzogchen point of view:

Since there is no object to attain, there is nothing other than the three realms.

steveb1 said:

These factors being in place, it is not surprising that religious education is on the wane. This is personally painful for me. Maybe there are things to be done that could revitalize religion in the public eye. But if not, the Buddhist teaching that all things are impermanent might need to be applied to this issue.

Malcolm wrote:

We do not need religion. We need direct perception.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 8th, 2017 at 11:53 PM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Arhats have the view that aggregates exist. But they do not cling to them. That is your disconnect.

Astus said:

If one has a view but does not cling to that view, does one actually have a view? For instance, an arhat has the view that a particular robe is his, still, it is not a view that binds him. Similarly, all teachings are recognised as pointing to liberation, and not something that one should remain attached to.

Malcolm wrote:

The question is not whether they are bound. The question is "what kind of realization is necessary for freedom from rebirth?" The answer is: "Not very deep."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 8th, 2017 at 11:20 PM

Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas

Content:

Bakmoon said:

Of course emptiness isn't apprehendable. If it were, then it wouldn't be a nonimplicative negation because you'd be replacing one thing with another. Do you think that on the path of seeing one perceives some sort of object called emptiness? It is abundantly clear from a cursory reading of the Prajnaparamita Sutras that this is not the case. Rather than apprehending an object called emptiness, one doesn't apprehend anything at all, and this very non-apprehension is itself what is called realizing emptiness.

To turn emptiness into an object like this is in fact the exact error of Dolpopa Sherab Gyaltzen, the great Jonangpa teacher.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Of course emptiness is an object - anything that can appear to mind and be understood is an object. It's not a thing but it's a non-thing.

You seem to be saying that emptiness and nothingness are the same - they aren't.

conebeckham said:

Things that appear to mind include "external phenomena," and internal phenomena-- thoughts, feelings, concepts, etc.

Emptiness as a "non-thing" is a concept. Is it your assertion, therefore, that the limit of meditation on emptiness is meditation on a concept? An idea?

Malcolm wrote:

Not only that, but emptiness is nowhere listed in the dharmāyatana, the domain of objects of the mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 8th, 2017 at 10:46 PM

Title: Re: Root Lama versus Dzogchen transmission

Content:

binocular said:

It seems that finding a teacher like that is very difficult!

Malcolm wrote:

ChNN.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 8th, 2017 at 10:44 PM

Title: Re: John Oliver interviews the Dalai Lama

Content:

Queequeg said:

The Trump farce is comedy I could do without.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, but since we have no choice, I suggest you gain whatever cynical enjoyment you can from it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 8th, 2017 at 2:38 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Astus said:

The four extreme views are concepts. Concepts are within the domain of the aggregates. Arhats do not cling to the aggregates, hence they cannot have the four extreme views. Where is the disconnect here?

Malcolm wrote:

Arhats have the view that aggregates exist. But they do not cling to them. That is your disconnect.

Admin_PC said:

Would Buddhaghosa's Visuddhimagga be representative of the Arhat view/stance?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, considering that atoms in that text are considered illustrative of ultimate dharmas, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 8th, 2017 at 2:17 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You have not shown this to be so. In other words, there is a disconnect between your assertion that arhats are free from clinging to their aggregates and your assertion that they realize emptiness free from the four extremes.

Astus said:

The four extreme views are concepts. Concepts are within the domain of the aggregates. Arhats do not cling to the aggregates, hence they cannot have the four extreme views. Where is the disconnect here?

Malcolm wrote:

Arhats have the view that aggregates exist. But they do not cling to them. That is your disconnect.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 8th, 2017 at 1:43 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is nevertheless incorrect, and therefore, it is not surprising in the least that Arhats have an incomplete understanding of emptiness, which is the point of this whole exchange.

Astus said:

If by emptiness you refer to a conceptual explanation, yes, there can be misunderstandings. But if you mean freedom from the four extreme views, then they are necessarily free from those.

Malcolm wrote:

You have not shown this to be so. In other words, there is a disconnect between your assertion that arhats are free from clinging to their aggregates and your assertion that they realize emptiness free from the four extremes.

The emptiness the arhats realize is the implicative emptiness described in the Cullasunatta sūtra; not the nonimplicative emptiness of the Perfection of Wisdom.

But you feel free to believe whatever warms your heart.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 8th, 2017 at 1:18 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

One may have no attachments, but this still does not preclude one from imputing substantiality to this or that dharma.

Astus said:

Even if one free from attachments would have an incorrect assumption about something, it would be an assumption not grasped at.

Malcolm wrote:

It is nevertheless incorrect, and therefore, it is not surprising in the least that Arhats have an incomplete understanding of emptiness, which is the point of this whole exchange.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 8th, 2017 at 1:13 AM

Title: Re: Root Lama versus Dzogchen transmission

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Honestly, I think it can be quite difficult to find a suitable Vajrayana teacher, i.e. one that can really benefit you. I think it's actually quite rare.

Malcolm wrote:

That's why we have ChNN.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 7th, 2017 at 10:35 PM

Title: Re: Root Lama versus Dzogchen transmission

Content:

Vasana said:

I have nothing to add on the matter of the Root Guru beyond what's already been shared but in regards to the topic of the 6 yogas of Naropa and practising Dzogchen as per ChNNR, I believe I remember hearing Rinpoche say on at least one occasion that if you want to study and apply the 6 Yogas individually then that's fine but that it should be noted that you're able to do many of the same practices just by virtue of having received Direct Introduction and any relevant auxiliary instructions.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct.

Vasana said:

The general basis for Tummo can be found within the framework of Yantra Yoga (with qualified instructors and adequate practice), the Yoga of the clear light, Milam and Bardo are all present in ChNNR's transmission too. The yoga of the illusory body can be spoken of in more gross and subtle aspects and although isn't explicitly focused on in the D.C (to my knowledge), the underlying subtle framework for it is all still there. I also don't know if Phowa is taught but if you concentrate on the available practices, you'll be practising on them for long enough to gain the experience and understanding of whether Phowa is something personally indispensable for you or not.

Malcolm wrote:

There is actually a Longsal text on illusory body. ChNN teaches phowa somewhat regularly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 7th, 2017 at 10:33 PM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Understanding that there is no ghost in the machine is not a refutation or negation of the machine's substantiality.

Astus said:

The machine is not the cause of the problems, it is the illusion of the ghost. Once there is no clinging, how could it matter what the status of something is? Even the concepts about the machine are let go of.

Malcolm wrote:

Not necessarily.

Becoming free from the clinging to the aggregates is possible merely through understanding they are impermanent. There is no need for a nondual understanding to attain arhatship, much less stream-entry.

Astus said:

Understanding impermanence is the path, abandonment of all attachments is the result. The point is that without attachment there is no basis for any view.

Malcolm wrote:

This does not necessarily follow. One may have no attachments, but this still does not preclude one from imputing substantiality to this or that dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 7th, 2017 at 10:10 PM

Title: Re: How to meditate on death?

Content:

binocular said:

I mean that I'm not sure I can do it right without the proper guidance and empowerments; harm could come, from me doing it wrongly.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no empowerment. This is sūtra.

amanitamusc said:

What about for Sutra Terma?

Malcolm wrote:

Same.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 7th, 2017 at 10:09 PM

Title: Re: Direct Introduction Always Works

Content:

Penor said:

There are cases where a fully qualified master gives direct introduction to a student and the student is not aware he has received it. This happened to a friend of mine.

Malcolm wrote:

Nevertheless, he received it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 7th, 2017 at 9:17 PM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

tiagolps said:

But to realize the emptiness of self you have to have some understanding of the emptiness of aggregates that make up the self, no?

Astus said:

The argument is that since in Hinayana the focus is on the method of recognising that there are only the aggregates but no self, they take the aggregates to be substantial. However, if we think about this a bit, this reasoning doesn't hold up, because shravakas need to realise that the aggregates are neither self nor the possessions of a self, so to say that they are regarded as substantial contradicts the teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

Non sequitur. Understanding that there is no ghost in the machine is not a refutation or negation of the machine's substantiality.

Astus said:

Similarly, as in the Lankavatara Sutra, there is the argument that shravakas do not know that there is no grasping and no grasped, but that is again refutable once we consider that without attachment to the aggregates there is no basis any more for such a duality. Hence what is called the shravakayana in Mahayana scriptures refers practitioners who misunderstood things, and not what is actually found in the Hinayana works.

Malcolm wrote:

Hahaha, this is again a very poor argument. Becoming free from the clinging to the aggregates is possible merely through understanding they are impermanent. There is no need for a nondual understanding to attain arhatship, much less stream-entry.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 7th, 2017 at 3:09 AM

Title: Re: Root Lama versus Dzogchen transmission

Content:

DJKR said:

I'm sure many of the readers of this book have received more than fifty initiations already and probably didn't even have a clue what was going on.

Malcolm wrote:

I am sure this is not the fault of the readers, but rather the fault of the teachers, like Dzongsar Khyentse. It would be nice if he owned this fact.

dzogchungpa said:

Thank you for using 'DJKR'.

Have you by any chance attended one of his empowerments?

Malcolm wrote:

No. I am sure they are entertaining, however.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 7th, 2017 at 2:18 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, a stream enterer is free from the fetter of attachment to wrong views. Such a person is not bound by the aggregates

Astus said:

A stream-enterer is still bound by the three poisons, hence attached to the aggregates. Having correct view is the beginning, not the end, and that's why there is a need for cultivation.

Malcolm wrote:

No, not all three poisons. And while there is need for the eradication of latent afflictions from strong/strong to weak/weak, there is no change in view at all. In other words, Arhats and stream entrants have identical views of selflessness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 7th, 2017 at 1:25 AM

Title: Re: Root Lama versus Dzogchen transmission

Content:

DJKR said:

I'm sure many of the readers of this book have received more than fifty initiations already and probably didn't even have a clue what was going on.

Malcolm wrote:

I am sure this is not the fault of the readers, but rather the fault of the teachers, like Dzongsar Khyentse. It would be nice if he owned this fact.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 7th, 2017 at 1:03 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Your argument is internally incoherent. According your argument, a stream entrant should be Vajradhara.

Astus said:

How so? A stream-entrant has correct view, but still very much bound by the aggregates.

Malcolm wrote:

No, a stream enterer is free from the fetter of attachment to wrong views. Such a person is not bound by the aggregates, they are subject to the effects of latent afflictions that keep them in samsara for a further 7 births. But they have no wrong views concerning the absence of persons in the aggregates at all, despite whatever other misconceptions they may hold.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 7th, 2017 at 12:49 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Since skandhas, āyatanas, and dhātus are regarded as ultimate and real, even by arhats, they do not perceive the emptiness of phenomena.

Astus said:

Once there is no attachment to the mental aggregates, there can be not grasping at views either.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure there can.

Astus said:

If no mental aggregate is clung to, in what form can there be attachment to any view? Unless concepts are beyond the aggregates, I do not see how that is possible.

Malcolm wrote:

Your argument is internally incoherent. According your argument, a stream entrant should be Vajradhara.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, March 7th, 2017 at 12:20 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

the śrāvakas maintain these dharmas — aggregates, āyatanas, and dhātus — are substantially real

Astus said:

Aside from terminology, it is agreed on by both parties that a shravaka does not assume a self and has no clinging to the aggregates. So while the abhidharma style presentation may be criticised as incomplete, not the realisation, as being without attachment toward phenomena is the goal even in Mahayana.

Malcolm wrote:

Since skandhas, āyatanas, and dhātus are regarded as ultimate and real, even by arhats, they do not perceive the emptiness of phenomena.

Astus said:

But until we come to Madhyamaka, there is no school that can escape the charge of being substantialist, including Yogacara (a form of nondual substantialism).

I have seen Madhyamaka interpreted in a similar way, where emptiness is considered some sort of ultimate substratum. Then one might argue that is the wrong interpretation, however, the same could be said about arguments put against abhidharma and yogacara as well.

Malcolm wrote:

But, in the case of emptiness, it is not substantial at all. Since everything is empty, nothing is substantial.

Astus said:

But the emptiness of inherent existence is not the profound Mahāyāna emptiness free from four extremes.

Once there is no attachment to the mental aggregates, there can be not grasping at views either.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure there can.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 6th, 2017 at 10:40 PM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Also, Candrakīrti's comments about the realization of the emptiness of phenomena with respect to arhats is only considered from the point of view of recognizing the absence of inherent existence. But the emptiness of inherent existence is not the profound Mahāyāna emptiness free from four extremes.

tiagolps said:

Because Śrāvakas focus on the extreme of "existence" and the extreme of "non existence",but not on the extremes of "both existence and nonexistence" and "neither existence nor non existence"?

Malcolm wrote:

It is because the fourfold emptiness is unknown to śrāvakas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 6th, 2017 at 10:18 PM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

tiagolps said:

But to realize the emptiness of self you have to have some understanding of the emptiness of aggregates that make up the self, no?

Astus said:

The argument is that since in Hinayana the focus is on the method of recognising that there are only the aggregates but no self, they take the aggregates to be substantial. However, if we think about this a bit, this reasoning doesn't hold up, because shravakas need to realise that the aggregates are neither self nor the possessions of a self, so to say that they are regarded as substantial contradicts the teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

No, since the śrāvakas maintain these dharmas — aggregates, āyatanas, and dhātus — are substantially real. Vasubandhu uses the example whereby a pot is a relative truth, its shards, are ultimate.

But until we come to Madhyamaka, there is no school that can escape the charge of being substantialist, including Yogacara (a form of nondual substantialism).

Also, Candrakīrti's comments about the realization of the emptiness of phenomena with respect to arhats is only considered from the point of view of recognizing the absence of inherent existence. But the emptiness of inherent existence is not the profound Mahāyāna emptiness free from four extremes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 6th, 2017 at 10:12 PM

Title: Re: Root Lama versus Dzogchen transmission

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Personally, I like the definition of "root lama" I recently read in "The Excellent Path To Enlightenment" by Dilgo Khyentse Rinpoche as "the one for whom you have the strongest natural devotion".

Malcolm wrote:

This is a very Sakya point of view, but then, Tulku Rabsel Dawa was as much a Sakyapa as he was a Nyingmapa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 6th, 2017 at 11:57 AM

Title: Re: Root Lama versus Dzogchen transmission

Content:

Stefos said:

Hi everyone,

I wanted to know what to do because I have received Direct Transmission under CNNR and

I want to learn Mahamudra as well as the 6 yogas of Naropa.

I want to combine all of them actually.

I have taken formal refuge vows under a Drikung Kagyu lama but have received Direct Transmission from CNNR.

I don't really understand at what point the lama I'm studying under "becomes" my root lama.....forgive my ignorance.

I thought a root lama is one from which one takes Bodhisattva vows under.

My quandry is twofold:

1. I wanted to move to Arizona, potentially. If I participated in the Drikung Kagyu lineage there, Would the resident lama be my root lama?

2. What constitutes the actual "root lama?"

Please help me clarify because I'm coming from a Dzogchen perspective

Thank you,
Stefos

Malcolm wrote:

The person who helps you resolve your confusion about your real nature is, from a Dzogchen point of view, your root guru.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 6th, 2017 at 5:46 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

... Jñānavajra's commentary, Ārya-laṅkāvatāra-nāma-mahāyānasūtra-vṛtti-tathāgata-hṛdayālaṅkāra-nāma...

kirtu said:

You have cited this commentary before. Does it exist in any non-Asian language anywhere?

Thanks!

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

Unfortunately, not at this time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 6th, 2017 at 3:27 AM

Title: Re: How to meditate on death?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is a sūtra. No harm will come.

binocular said:

I mean that I'm not sure I can do it right without the proper guidance and empowerments; harm could come, from me doing it wrongly.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no empowerment. This is sūtra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 6th, 2017 at 2:22 AM

Title: Re: Direct Introduction Always Works

Content:

Anonymous X said:

oldbob, I'm not going to quote your post in my reply for obvious reasons!

Just wanted to say thank you for the energy and intention you put into your reply.

Malcolm wrote:

If you wish to understand in a precise way how direct introduction works and how three transmissions in direct introduction work you should endeavor to read a copy of ChNN's Song of the Vajra commentary where the principle is explained in much detail.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 6th, 2017 at 2:21 AM

Title: Re: How to meditate on death?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You need to read the Wisdom at the Time of Death Sūtra:

binocular said:

Are you sure this sort of practice is meaningful and doesn't cause harm -- even if one doesn't have empowerments?

Malcolm wrote:

It is a sūtra. No harm will come. If this is how you think when you die, then it is very good.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, March 6th, 2017 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Both commentaries state that while in reality the Buddha taught one vehicle, he did not teach the ekayāna to everyone. He taught the three vehicle system to śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas.

Astus said:

That is what the sutra explicitly says. But the question is whether arhatship can be a final attainment as nirvana without residue or not.

Malcolm wrote:

According to the Lanka, no. Why? because even though arhats have no active or latent afflictions, they still have traces. This also applies to pratyekabuddhas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 5th, 2017 at 11:54 PM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, they are arhats. Jñānavajra's commentary

Astus said:

What does he say about the difference between the gotras then? I'm asking because since the Lankavatara was an important text for the Yogacarins, and they (Asanga, Vasubandhu, Xuanzang, etc.) did not accept the idea of a single vehicle, then that interpretation you referred to is not that obvious.

Malcolm wrote:

Both commentaries state that while in reality the Buddha taught one vehicle, he did not teach the ekayāna to everyone. He taught the three vehicle system to śrāvakas and pratyekabuddhas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 5th, 2017 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen transformed by its contact with the West?

Content:

binocular said:

Then how can you be sure that it has been transformed by its contact with the West?

Given its nature, shouldn't Dzogchen be immune to cultural influences and appropriations?

Malcolm wrote:

I was talking about Buddhisms, not Dharma. But there will be people who will create a Buddhism called "Dzogchen." They are already trying. But it is going the wrong way.

climb-up said:

Would you mind giving some examples of the wrong way?

I'm very curious about your thoughts on certain teachers, but I don't know if that's something you talk about publicly (...Lama Surya Das?). Otherwise, general trends?

I see a lot of books teaching sky gazing or something like that with no mention at all of DI or anything related. Tara Brach's book (which I like a lot) has a whole series of meditations throughout and the last is a 1.5 page guided dzogchen meditation. Are these the wrong ways you mean?

Malcolm wrote:

The wrong way means using Dzogchen teachings to advertise oneself, to promote oneself, to turn it into a business, etc. There are unfortunately some teachers today who use the word Dzogchen to lure students, who then never teach them any genuine Dzogchen teachings at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 5th, 2017 at 10:58 PM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

kirtu said:

LVI (56), verses 207-210 : http://lirs.ru/do/lanka_eng/lanka-chapter-2.htm#chap2

Astus said:

Thanks. The sravakas described there have not attained arhatship, but mistaken cessation for nirvana. So that applies to those of indeterminate family, not those fixed to the attainment of arhatship.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they are arhats. Jñānavajra's commentary, Ārya-laṅkāvatāra-nāma-mahāyānasūtra-vṛtti-tathāgata-hṛdayālaṅkāra-nāma, clearly describes them as aśaikṣa āryas, āryas who are at the end of their path, i.e., śrāvaka arhats.

Jñānaśrībhadrā states in his Vṛtti:

The way it is taught to ārya śrāvakas is that the mind in which are no appearances is nirvana for those in whom the seed of compassion is absent. As it says:

"Since they are intoxicated by the intoxication of samadhi, they abide in the dhātu free from effluents."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 5th, 2017 at 10:13 AM

Title: Re: Phurba Practices?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, I could be but dzogchungma would probably kill me.

Malcolm wrote:

Then it definitely did not work. Kurukulle is a power deity.

dzogchungpa said:

I suspect she may have been practicing it too.

Malcolm wrote:

You cancelled out each others siddhis than. Is she also a Republican?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 5th, 2017 at 6:12 AM

Title: Re: Phurba Practices?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

It worked for me.

Malcolm wrote:

If you are not with two attractive women it didn't work.

dzogchungpa said:

Well, I could be but dzogchungma would probably kill me.

Malcolm wrote:

Then it definitely did not work. Kurukulle is a power deity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 5th, 2017 at 5:59 AM

Title: Re: Direct Introduction Always Works

Content:

Anonymous X said:

These are not the 'decisive experience' that Longchenpa writes of. When I said acausal, I was referring specifically to the decisive experience he mentions. This is not the same thing as insight or any meditative result of absorption. He specifically mentions all meditation falls short in this respect. There is no concentration or effort that can cause this. The Christians would call this grace. Can you understand what I'm talking about?

Malcolm wrote:

Longchenpa, in this case, is writing about the second word of Garab Dorje, "Decide one thing." ChNN parses this as "remain without doubt." How do we remain without doubt or decide on one thing? By using different kinds of experience to discover knowledge of the our state, aka the basis.

Also, it states in chapter 5 of Realms and Transformations of Sound Tantra (sgra thal gyur) very clearly:

"The fault of not meditating is the visible appearance of samsara.

The recognition of the basis is nothing at all like grace. Dzogchen teachings require a great deal of effort until you actually do decide on on thing — then you can continue in the confidence of liberation, or as ChNN puts, "continue in that state."

However, just so we can be absolutely clear the context from which you are speaking, precisely which of Longchenpa's statements are you referring to? Which book? Which translation? Which chapter? Which page?

There is no grace in Dzogchen teachings at all. For example, when we talk of "the teaching through blessings" or the lineage of the transcendent state of the victors, what is actually meant is that the Sambhogakāya communicates the teachings through light to the buddhas of the five families and so on. But there is no concept in Dzogchen which resembles the concept of Christian grace at all, i.e., "the free and unmerited favor of God, as manifested in the salvation of sinners and the bestowal of blessings."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 5th, 2017 at 5:44 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and the Two Truths Doctrine

Content:

florin said:

I was given the impression that dra talgyur tantra has been ignored for very long time(maybe centuries?) and its transmission lost .

Malcolm wrote:

The lung survives. ChNN gave it a couple of years ago.

The sgra thal gyur was not ignored, but its commentary, as well as the commentaries for the remaining 17 tantras were lost for centuries. They were recovered only in the 1980s.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 5th, 2017 at 5:43 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and the Two Truths Doctrine

Content:

srivijaya said:

Very much so.

Malcolm wrote:

The classical notion of the two truths hinges on vidyā and āvidyā being different, the former veridical and the latter false. But in fact vidyā and avidyā are just opposite sides of one coin, or even avidyā has vidyā.

Lukeinaz said:

Ok so this sounds very much Tsongkhapa's presentation as well. That the two truths are polar opposites of the same isolate.

Malcolm wrote:

You have it backwards, the two truths are considered isolates designated upon one entity, following Candrakīrti's state that all things have two natures, one relative, one ultimate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, March 5th, 2017 at 2:17 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and the Two Truths Doctrine

Content:

amanitamusc said:

Malcolm would you say ChNNR follows the " Dra Tal Gyur, the Reverberation of Sound Tantra" more closely than any Dzogchen Master now living?

Malcolm wrote:
yup

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, March 5th, 2017 at 1:15 AM
Title: Re: Phurba Practices?
Content:
Grigoris said:
Does the realisation of the yidam lead to the siddhi of being a hot-chick magnet?

Malcolm wrote:
In the case of Kurukulla, yes.

dzogchungpa said:
It worked for me.

Malcolm wrote:
If you are not with two attractive women it didn't work.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, March 4th, 2017 at 11:56 PM
Title: Re: Phurba Practices?
Content:
Nemo said:
I think there was an online course.

Grigoris said:
Does the realisation of the yidam lead to the siddhi of being a hot-chick magnet?

Malcolm wrote:
In the case of Kurukulla, yes.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Saturday, March 4th, 2017 at 11:50 PM
Title: Re: Dzogchen and the Two Truths Doctrine
Content:
Grigoris said:
While I can understand your devotion, statements like this are a tad embarrassing and tend to point towards a form of personality (cult) worship.

Malcolm wrote:

In this case, no, not on my part. It is based on the recognition of the master who really brought Dzogchen teachings to the west (hint: it wasn't Trungpa, Dudjom, etc.).

dzogchungpa said:

I don't really understand this response. Are you saying that, e.g., Dudjom Rinpoche was not the master who really brought Dzogchen teachings to the west and therefore he was not a Vidyādhara?

Malcolm wrote:

No. That is not what I am saying. Also, he is no longer with us for some decades now.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 4th, 2017 at 10:54 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen and the Two Truths Doctrine

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

While there are many good teachers alive today, there is only one living Vidyādhara of Dzogchen teachings.

Grigoris said:

While I can understand your devotion, statements like this are a tad embarrassing and tend to point towards a form of personality (cult) worship.

Malcolm wrote:

In this case, no, not on my part. It is based on the recognition of the master who really brought Dzogchen teachings to the west (hint: it wasn't Trungpa, Dudjom, etc.).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 4th, 2017 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

They are revived by a Buddha from a samadhi of cessation.

Astus said:

Do you know where this interpretation began?

Malcolm wrote:

The Lanka.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 4th, 2017 at 10:14 PM

Title: Re: Direct Introduction Always Works

Content:

Anonymous X said:

Thanks for your reply. I was under the impression that what you mentioned are not really Dzogchen practices, per se, but come under the general Vajrayana banner and preliminary teachings involving mind training and other preparatory work. I don't see Dzogchen being a 'how to' teaching and Longchenpa makes it clear there is no meditation involved in realizing anything. It seems it is an inspired exposition of the nature of awakened mind and its metaphorical qualities such as emptiness, openness, unity, etc., which attempt to 'liken' it to experiences that the ordinary mind can somewhat conceptualize, but never really grasp. He talks about effortless being and a 'decisive experience' that instantaneously awakens mind to this all. Time and effort are not involved in this. Am I taking this too literally? There are masters from many traditions and no traditions who have reported similar occurrences.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a Dzogchen path. It involves the seven mind trainings, semzins, rushans, etc., all as means to discover what was introduced, eliminate doubt about it, and thereby obtain confidence in it.

You can't have read very much Longchenpa if you really believe what you wrote above.

Anonymous X said:

I've read and been exposed to quite a bit of his work. I understand there is a process of mind training, up to a certain point. But, I don't see this training as a springboard to this 'decisive experience' that Longchenpa mentions in his writings. For me, the training is about cultivating a life that is not neurotic and harmful. It is a kind of psychology. What Longchenpa writes about awakened mind is not the same thing as an intellectual understanding of his writings where a model is built in the mind and repeated again and again. It seems to me that what he talks about is an organic change in the whole being that is far beyond an exercise, a lack of doubt, or a gaining of confidence. This decisive experience is acausal and does not happen because of.....

Malcolm wrote:

For example, the seventh mind training is involved with gaining experience in bliss, clarity, and nonconceptuality so that one does not mistake them for one's vidyā (rig pa).

The idea that discovering knowledge (rig pa) of one's state (byang chub sems) is acausal is ludicrous since the consequence of such a statement is that no one needs direct introduction at any time ever and that discovering knowledge (rig pa) of one's state (byang chub sems) can happen at any time to anyone including animals, hell beings and pretas. In fact the point is made over and over again that the cause for discovering knowledge (rig pa) of one's state (byang chub sems) is the intimate instructions of one's guru.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 4th, 2017 at 10:12 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

They are revived by a Buddha from a samadhi of cessation. They then begin on the bodhisattva path, starting at the bottom.

kirtu said:

But they proceed very quickly because of their accumulation of wisdom. The real issue here is that they spend eons in their cessation samadhi. Thus their attainment is said to be an obstacle to full enlightenment.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 4th, 2017 at 5:05 AM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

tiagolps said:

Well true, I guess a theravadin can ask a bodhisattva to teach him hinayana.

Malcolm wrote:

Thervada has a different concept of bodhisattvas than Mahayana.

tiagolps said:

I haven't really put much study into the therevada view of bodhisattvas, in what ways do they differ?

"Very offtopic I know"

Malcolm wrote:

Bodhisattvas in their view are barred from stream entry because of their vow to attain perfect buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 4th, 2017 at 4:22 AM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

tiagolps said:

You might find Mahayana influences, like monks praying for a bodhisattva to be born.

Malcolm wrote:

No need to look to Mahāyāna for that.

tiagolps said:

Well true, I guess a theravadin can ask a bodhisattva to teach him hinayana.

Malcolm wrote:

Thervada has a different concept of bodhisattvas than Mahayana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 4th, 2017 at 3:58 AM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

I don't think there is precedent for the tradition ending just because the monks are persecuted. They were fully enracinated in their community, and I don't think there is reason to think that they had no lay supporters. The decision to destroy the monastery was likely not popular in each-and-every single corner of society. And times change. Societal tastes wax and wane. One generation may respond to the perceived "heresy" of Mahayana with force, another may not be so inclined.

The persistence of periodic anti-Mahayana reforms in Thailand and to a far lesser extent Sri Lanka attest to the fact that someone though Mahayana was still being practiced widely enough for it to be a "problem" from their POV.

Malcolm wrote:

I think you need to study a bit more of the history of Buddhism and restrain your speculations for the time being.

There is virtually no evidence for Mahāyāna in Thailand after the collapse of the Khmer empire in the 13th century. Mahāyāna, including Vajrayāna, in SE Asia collapsed with the collapse of Buddhism in India since it was dependent on Indian Buddhism.

tiagolps said:

You might find Mahayana influences, like monks praying for a bodhisattva to be born.

Malcolm wrote:

No need to look to Mahāyāna for that.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 4th, 2017 at 3:02 AM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāyāna ended in Srī Lanka when the Abhayagirivihāra was destroyed and its monks forced into lay clothing.

Coëmgenu said:

I don't think there is precedent for the tradition ending just because the monks are persecuted. They were fully enracinated in their community, and I don't think there is reason to think that they had no lay supporters. The decision to destroy the monastery was likely not popular in each-and-every single corner of society. And times change. Societal tastes wax and wane. One generation may respond to the perceived "heresy" of Mahayana with force, another may not be so inclined.

The persistence of periodic anti-Mahayana reforms in Thailand and to a far lesser extent Sri Lanka attest to the fact that someone though Mahayana was still being practiced widely enough for it to be a "problem" from their POV.

Malcolm wrote:

I think you need to study a bit more of the history of Buddhism and restrain your speculations for the time being.

There is virtually no evidence for Mahāyāna in Thailand after the collapse of the Khmer empire in the 13th century. Mahāyāna, including Vajrayāna, in SE Asia collapsed with the collapse of Buddhism in India since it was dependent on Indian Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, March 4th, 2017 at 2:40 AM

Title: Re: Direct Introduction Always Works

Content:

climb-up said:

Not speaking for Oldbob, but ChNN differentiates Dzogchen itself from Dzogchen teachings.

Of course Dzogchen is beyond all concepts and limitations, but if we are not fully manifested Buddhas yet we use Dzogchen teachings and practices like Anti guruyoga, or semdzins or whatever to realize our true nature.

I believe that is correct, and in that case of course we practice within Dzogchen.

Anonymous X said:

Thanks for your reply. I was under the impression that what you mentioned are not really Dzogchen practices, per se, but come under the general Vajrayana banner and preliminary teachings involving mind training and other preparatory work. I don't see Dzogchen being a 'how to' teaching and Longchenpa makes it clear there is no meditation involved in realizing anything. It seems it is an inspired exposition of the nature of awakened mind and its metaphorical qualities such as emptiness, openness, unity, etc., which attempt to 'liken' it to experiences that the ordinary mind can somewhat conceptualize, but never really grasp. He talks about effortless being and a 'decisive experience' that instantaneously awakens mind to this all. Time and effort are not involved in this. Am I taking this too literally? There are masters from many traditions and no traditions who have reported similar occurrences.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a Dzogchen path. It involves the seven mind trainings, semzins, rushans, etc., all as means to discover what was introduced, eliminate doubt about it, and thereby obtain confidence in it.

You can't have read very much Longchenpa if you really believe what you wrote above.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 3rd, 2017 at 11:54 PM

Title: Re: Vajrakilaya GURKHUKMA

Content:

SuryaMitra said:

Guys, thank you very much. The video you have mentioned , do you remember the title ? Anyway, I will try to find it in Vimala. I have and read Red Dark Amulet, as well as The Practice Of Vajrakilaya, but these commentaries are about different practices of V.K , not the one I am looking for. I will ask a Khenpo from Palyul, maybe he can help with it .

Malcolm wrote:

There is no commentary on this practice. You will have to find someone who has received this teaching and practiced it, or at least, been given the instruction directly from Khenpo Jigphun. I suggest you seek out Khenpo Namdrol, he is the best person to receive this from.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 3rd, 2017 at 10:02 PM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

[

The destruction of the monastery itself does not mean the end of Abhayagirivihāra discourse at large. Mahayana Buddhism is hardy.

Malcolm wrote:

I do not think you can point to a single surviving work. So it is a huge conjecture to claim that Abhayagirivihāra discourse has not defunct, completely and thoroughly.

Coëmgenu said:

I don't think there's any reason why we should assume that the Dharma dispensation undertaken at the Abhayagirivihāra would end just because their texts were destroyed. Unless all of the monks and novices were systematically executed they still had people who knew the scriptures, I daresay who may have known them for very well. Even if their orthodoxy had lost royal patronage I don't think there is reason to think they would necessarily stop their teaching and their Dharma-dispensation. Even if they had outlawed the Abhayagirivihāra teachings, Mahayana Buddhism has survived state persecution before.

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāyāna ended in Sṛī Lanka when the Abhayagirivihāra was destroyed and its monks forced into lay clothing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 3rd, 2017 at 9:49 PM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

kirtu said:

This is not very good advice, at least not as written.

If TKF's teachers are traditional, then this is very bad advice although one could in fact pose questions based on the sutra's, etc.

If one's teachers were ordinary, uneducated non-traditional teachers then one should reconsider that relationship.

In fact oral teaching from my Sakya teacher partially supports TKF's assertion although I would not have put it as he did ("Hinayana Pure Lands"). The standard Sakya view is that Arhats are indeed reborn in some kind of Pure Realm where they are intoxicated by samadhi.

Kirt

Rakz said:

You would rather follow what your teacher says even if what he/she says is completely false and contradicts what the Buddha actually said in the scriptures? That's mind boggling. I wouldn't trust any teacher who would say something like that no matter how "traditional" they appear to be. What's wrong is wrong.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Wrong according to who? What my Teacher said was not false as evidenced by Buton Rinchen Drub.

Having said that, we can't just rely on literal translations of scriptures, we also have to use our intelligence and experience of Dharma, as well as our Teacher's direct instructions.

Malcolm wrote:

It merely means that your teacher repeated something erroneous stated by Buton. Buton is very popular among Gelugpas. Not so popular in Sakya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 3rd, 2017 at 9:48 PM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The standard Sakya view is that arhats are not reborn anywhere. They remain in a samadhi of cessation (the samadhi body), similar to formless realm beings. They are indeed revived from this samadhi of cessation to continue on the bodhisattva path, starting from the beginning on the path of accumulation.

Konchog1 said:

So this is my question.

When a Arhat dies, you are saying that the Arhat rises from the clear light into the three and so forth. How does this happen without karma?

Malcolm wrote:

They are revived by a Buddha from a samadhi of cessation. They then begin on the bodhisattva path, starting at the bottom.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 3rd, 2017 at 5:39 AM

Title: Re: How to meditate on death?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You need to read the Wisdom at the Time of Death Sūtra:

In Sanskrit: Arya atajñana nama mahāyāna sutra

In Tibetan: 'Phags pa 'da' ka na ye shes she bya ba theg pa chen po'i mdo

In English: Noble Pristine Consciousness at the Time of Death Mahayana Sutra.

Homage to all the Buddhas and Bodisattvas.

At one time this was heard by me: the Bhagavan was staying in the palace of the king of the gods in Akaniṣṭha teaching Dharma to the whole retinue. After Akashagarbha made prostrations to the Bhagavan, he made this request:

“Bhagavan, how should a bodhisattva view the mind at the time of death?”

Then the Bhagavan replied:

“Akashagarbha, at the time a bodhisattva dies, he or she should meditate on the pristine consciousness at the time of death. That pristine consciousness is: since all phenomena are pure by nature, the thought of the non-existence of things is the best meditation. Since all phenomena are included in bodhicitta, the thought of great compassion is the best meditation. Since all phenomena are imperceptible and luminous, the thought which has no attachment to things at all is the best meditation. Because the mind is realized to be pristine consciousness, the thought that does not seek buddhahood elsewhere is the best meditation.”

The Bhagavan spoke these verses:

Since all phenomena are pure by nature,
meditate the thought of the non-existence of things.
With bodhicitta,
meditate the thought of great compassion.
Imperceptible by nature, luminous,
meditate without any attachment to things at all.
Mind is the cause of the arising of pristine consciousness,
do not seek buddhahood elsewhere.

Thus the Bhagavan spoke, and and retinue, the bodhisattva Akashagarbha, etc., was very pleased. and praised the Bhagavan’s words.

The Pristine Consciousness at Time of Death Mahāyāna Sūtra is complete.

Translated by Malcolm Smith

Lobsang Chojor said:

Thank you for this great translation Malcolm, can I print a copy of this off for myself? Or will you be publishing this?

Malcolm wrote:

Print away.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 3rd, 2017 at 5:39 AM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

[

The destruction of the monastery itself does not mean the end of Abhayagirivihāra discourse at large. Mahayana Buddhism is hardy.

Malcolm wrote:

I do not think you can point to a single surviving work. So it is a huge conjecture to claim that Abhayagirivihāra discourse has not defunct, completely and thoroughly.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 3rd, 2017 at 4:27 AM

Title: Re: How to meditate on death?

Content:

binocular said:

Thank you all for your replies. I'm working on devising a daily practice for meditating on death.

My key question is, "Are you ready to go?", focusing on putting my affairs in order and maintaining the house and property in a state where they will be as unburdensome to those that come after me.

Malcolm wrote:

You need to read the Wisdom at the Time of Death Sūtra:

In Sanskrit: Arya atajñana nama mahāyāna sūtra

In Tibetan: 'Phags pa 'da' ka na ye shes she bya ba theg pa chen po'i mdo

In English: Noble Pristine Consciousness at the Time of Death Mahayana Sutra.

Homage to all the Buddhas and Bodhisattvas.

At one time this was heard by me: the Bhagavan was staying in the palace of the king of the gods in Akaniṣṭha teaching Dharma to the whole retinue. After Akashagarbha made prostrations to the Bhagavan, he made this request:

“Bhagavan, how should a bodhisattva view the mind at the time of death?”

Then the Bhagavan replied:

“Akashagarbha, at the time a bodhisattva dies, he or she should meditate on the pristine consciousness at the time of death. That pristine consciousness is: since all phenomena are pure by nature, the thought of the non-existence of things is the best meditation. Since all phenomena are included in bodhicitta, the thought of great compassion is the best meditation. Since all phenomena are imperceptible and luminous, the thought which has no attachment to things at all is the best meditation. Because the mind is realized to be pristine consciousness, the thought that does not seek buddhahood elsewhere is the best meditation.”

The Bhagavan spoke these verses:

Since all phenomena are pure by nature,
meditate the thought of the non-existence of things.
With bodhicitta,
meditate the thought of great compassion.
Imperceptible by nature, luminous,
meditate without any attachment to things at all.
Mind is the cause of the arising of pristine consciousness,
do not seek buddhahood elsewhere.

Thus the Bhagavan spoke, and and retinue, the bodhisattva Akashagarbha, etc., was very pleased. and praised the Bhagavan's words.

The Pristine Consciousness at Time of Death Mahāyāna Sūtra is complete.

Translated by Malcolm Smith

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 3rd, 2017 at 4:21 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen transformed by its contact with the West?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Too soon to tell.

binocular said:

Then how can you be sure that it has been transformed by its contact with the West?

Given its nature, shouldn't Dzogchen be immune to cultural influences and appropriations?

Malcolm wrote:

I was talking about Buddhisms, not Dharma. But there will be people who will create a Buddhism called "Dzogchen." They are already trying. But it is going the wrong way.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 3rd, 2017 at 4:02 AM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāyāna and Vajrayāna in SE Asia were based on Indian Buddhism spreading to the east. Their scriptures were in Sanskrit, as is the case with Mahāyāna that spread to China and Tibet. It has never been the case that the scriptures of any branch of Theravada were based in Sanskrit.

Coëmgenu said:

These traditions venerated both Sanskrit and Pali material, and by "these traditions", I refer specifically to the Abhayagiri vihāra and Yogāvacara traditions.

Malcolm wrote:

The Abhayagiri tradition was destroyed completely in the 12th century, at least one of its monks came to study in Sakya, Tibet. It has no influence on S.E. Asia after this date. It is anachronistic to term them Theravadins as well.

With respect to the kind of Buddhism present in SE before the http://www.ahandfulofleaves.org/documents/Articles/Sects%20and%20Sectarianism_The%20Origins%20of%20Buddhist%20Schools_Sujato.pdf:

A similar situation must have obtained throughout south-east Asian Buddhism, for we know that the areas of Thailand, Burma, and Cambodia where Theravāda now flourishes were formerly dominated by Mahāyāna, or Sanskrit Śrāvaka Buddhism. We note the widespread occurrence of the cult of Upagupta throughout this region, which is totally absent from Sri Lanka, and wonder whether this gives a hint as to the kind of Buddhism prevalent before the Theravāda orthodoxy. According to I-Tsing, in the lands on the eastern boundaries of India all four major schools flourished, while in the island regions the Mūlasarvāstivāda predominated.

When these areas 'converted' to Theravāda (which mainly occurred around the 11th-12th Centuries), it is impossible that all the monks took new ordinations. Of course, the official histories will assert that when the religion was reformed that all the monks conformed to the new system. But the practicalities of this are absurd: sending city administration monks wandering through 1000s of miles of tiger-stalked, bandit-infested, ghost-haunted jungle tracks seeking out countless little villages, trying to persuade senior monks that their ordination is invalid or improper and must be done again, all on the basis of some political compromise in a far-distant capital, in a region of ever-shifting borders and allegiances. As history this is sheer fantasy, and the reality must have been that the reforms would directly affect only certain central monasteries.

The Yogāvacara tradition is a syncretic tradition with no Indian antecedents or relationship with Vajrayāna at all of the kind we find in Tibet and Japan. We might indeed call it an indigenous tradition, but to call it "Tantric" results from a misunderstanding of what Buddhist tantra is and what tantras are.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 3rd, 2017 at 3:26 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen transformed by its contact with the West?

Content:

binocular said:

In what way has Dzogchen been transformed by its contact with the West?

Malcolm wrote:

Too soon to tell.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 3rd, 2017 at 3:25 AM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

But Theravada Buddhism had no stable identity apart from Mahayana and Vajrayana

Malcolm wrote:

This is completely wrong.

Coëmgenu said:

And caveated by what I wrote later in the same post concerning the Mahavihara monastery.

Malcolm wrote:

Mahāyāna and Vajrayāna in SE Asia were based on Indian Buddhism spreading to the east. Their scriptures were in Sanskrit, as is the case with Mahāyāna that spread to China and Tibet. It has never been the case that the scriptures of any branch of Theravada were based in Sanskrit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 3rd, 2017 at 3:22 AM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

But Theravada Buddhism had no stable identity apart from Mahayana and Vajrayana

Malcolm wrote:

This is completely wrong.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, March 3rd, 2017 at 1:02 AM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

He also briefly touches on the past tantrism that used to be a mainstream feature of Theravada Buddhism

Malcolm wrote:

Vajrayāna was never a mainstream feature of Theravada. However, Vajrayāna penetrated SE Asia and Śri Lanka quite deeply.

Coëmgenu said:

Well, regardless of what we call it, in Thailand and Sri Lanka in particular, what we now call "Theravada" used to be highly syncretic with Vajrayana Buddhism, to the point where when tantric practices faced persecution, it amounted to a "reinvention" of Buddhism in the area, which was the birth of Theravada Buddhism in its modern day form. Is that fair?

Malcolm wrote:

No, since Vajrayāna belongs to Mahāyāna, and Mahāyāna in general does not belong to any of the so-called 18 schools, though it is heavily dependent on the Abhidharma perspective offered by the Sarvāstivādins.

Mahāyāna Buddhism in general was the main form of Buddhism practiced in Southeast Asia from 5th to the 13th century. Theravada was revived during the Pagan empire in the 11th century, and with the collapse of the Khmer empire in the 13th century, Mahāyāna and Vajrayāna went into decline in that region.

Coëmgenu said:

The argument being that what is now considered mainstream Theravada Buddhism is actually a product of the 1800s during Rama IV's suppression of tantric practices in Thailand. What was practiced before was a free interchange and inter-mixing of Tantrism and some proto-Theravada elements with Tantrism by-far dominating.

Do you disagree?

Malcolm wrote:

I absolutely disagree. There can be no Vajrayāna without well established Mahāyāna traditions. Calling folk magic practices "tantric" practices is just a way of discrediting Vajrayāna by associating it with popular magical practices found in Thailand etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 2nd, 2017 at 11:49 PM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Vajrayāna has an unbroken transmission from the dharmakāya.

Dharmakāya --> sambhogakāya --> nirmanakāya (Śākyamuni, Garab Dorje, Padmasambhava, etc.) --> siddhas, etc.

Justmeagain said:

I guess there's a LOT of faith involved in subscribing to that view?

Malcolm wrote:

Unlike Theravada, Tibetan Buddhism's meditative traditions were never interrupted, necessitating a revival. We can trace with certainty the entry point of every lineage into Tibet from late 8th century onward. The situation on the ground in India between is a little messier. Theravadin schools apparently cannot make this claim for continuity due to a number of the factors.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 2nd, 2017 at 11:41 PM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

binocular said:

Just to be sure: What exactly do you mean by siddhis in this context?

If you mean the kind of powers like levitating, reading minds and such -- yes, you can find Theravadins who don't think highly of them.

Boomerang said:

Yes, that stuff.

binocular said:

As far as I have come to know Theravada, that kind of siddhis are not regarded as important in the quest for making an end to suffering, nor are they regarded as a mark of high realization or attainment.

Malcolm wrote:

There are two kinds of siddhis: mundane and supreme. The former is for others' benefit; the latter, for one's own.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 2nd, 2017 at 11:38 PM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

Justmeagain said:

[

Regarding the 'unbroken tradition of the transmission of meditative praxis' I'd posit the Forest tradition of Ajahn Cha et al comes pretty close.

Malcolm wrote:

Ajahn Cha was a student of Ajahn Mun, one of the two founders of the Forest Tradition in 1900. Before that, there was no Forest Tradition.

Justmeagain said:

Yep...thats correct. But I don't see the First Turning as the start of a 'tradition'. So I gathered you meant unbroken tradition from a certain teacher or school.

Can you clarify, are you saying that Vajrayana has an unbroken tradition from Siddhartha? I'm just trying to understand what you're alluding to.

Malcolm wrote:

Vajrayāna has an unbroken transmission from the dharmakāya.

Dharmakāya --> sambhogakāya --> nirmanakāya (Śākyamuni, Garab Dorje, Padmasambhava, etc.) --> siddhas, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 2nd, 2017 at 11:33 PM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Rakz said:

TKF you are very mistaken on this. Read the actual suttas where the Buddha talks about arahats rather than going by what your teacher says. That's the best advice I can give you.

kirtu said:

This is not very good advice, at least not as written.

If TKF's teachers are traditional, then this is very bad advice although one could in fact pose questions based on the sutra's, etc.

If one's teachers were ordinary, uneducated non-traditional teachers then one should reconsider that relationship.

In fact oral teaching from my Sakya teacher partially supports TKF's assertion although I would not have put it as he did ("Hinayana Pure Lands"). The standard Sakya view is that Arhats are indeed reborn in some kind of Pure Realm where they are intoxicated by samadhi.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is not a standard Sakya view.

The standard Sakya view is that arhats are not reborn anywhere. They remain in a samadhi of cessation (the samadhi body), similar to formless realm beings. They are indeed revived from this samadhi of cessation to continue on the bodhisattva path, starting from the beginning on the path of accumulation.

Buton's views on this and that are not main stream Sakya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 2nd, 2017 at 11:06 PM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

Justmeagain said:

[

Regarding the 'unbroken tradition of the transmission of meditative praxis' I'd posit the Forest tradition of Ajahn Cha et al comes pretty close.

Malcolm wrote:

Ajahn Cha was a student of Ajahn Mun, one of the two founders of the Forest Tradition in 1900. Before that, there was no Forest Tradition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 2nd, 2017 at 10:59 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

KarmaOcean said:

If Buddhism states that the Universe itself is sentient...

Malcolm wrote:

It doesn't.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 2nd, 2017 at 10:57 PM

Title: Re: Ayahuasca vision?

Content:

4526547 said:

During an ayahuasca ceremony years ago, I had a vision that was full of the brightest solid rainbow colors. Upon this colored background appeared some text in (gold?) letters that looked like Tibetan script (it was a very angular Brahmic-looking script). Surrounding this text was an ideal golden rectangle (its sides had no thickness), which may have zoomed into and out of the text. There were also several golden arrows outside it, on its sides, that were intently pointing at the boxed text, as if earnestly and urgently telling me to read it. I looked at it and tried, but was not able to decipher it, not being familiar with the language, and also being somewhat overwhelmed by the experience. It felt like a "place" that was exceedingly pure (in a way that felt "too" transcendental) and entirely made of mind.

This happened before I became interested in Buddhism, and although the experience doesn't necessarily seem to be related to Buddhadharma, my mind connected the experience to it, and imagined it might have been some Vajrayana teaching I was clueless to.

I'm not familiar with what kind of visions people might have in Vajrayana practice, if any (I currently practice in the Theravada tradition), so was wondering if such things can occur, if any meaning is to be extracted from this experience, or if it's just a substance-induced delusion.

Grigoris said:

Looks like your practice in the Theravada tradition is not all that solid, given you are off deliberately breaking precepts.

Malcolm wrote:

Did he say that he was practicing Dharma then?

Further, at least in our tradition, one does not have to follow all five precepts. Thus, if one chooses not to follow the precept against intoxication, there is no breakage.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 2nd, 2017 at 10:55 PM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

Justmeagain said:

[

I think your understanding of Theravadin practice is rather skewed too, sorry but its really rather a sweeping statement to suggest what you are.

Malcolm wrote:

If you are referring to the practice of śamatha-bhāvana, etc., it is true that as of the late 19th century, the practice of meditation had died out completely in Śrī Lanka.

It appears that in Burma the practice of meditation in general was revived towards the end of the 19th century by Ledi Sayadaw.

The Forest Tradition in Thailand dates from 1900, founded by Ajaan Mun and Ajaan Sao Kanatasilo.

Unlike Tibetan Buddhism and Chan/Zen, I am not aware that there is a continuous, unbroken tradition of the transmission of meditative praxis in Theravada Buddhism in general.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 2nd, 2017 at 10:36 PM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

He also briefly touches on the past tantrism that used to be a mainstream feature of Theravada Buddhism

Malcolm wrote:

Vajrayāna was never a mainstream feature of Theravada. However, Vajrayāna penetrated SE Asia and Śri Lanka quite deeply.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 2nd, 2017 at 10:15 PM

Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The difference between a table and "emptiness" is that the former has apprehensible characteristics, being conditioned, while the latter does not, being unconditioned.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Are you saying that emptiness is not apprehendable at all?

Malcolm wrote:

By what would it be apprehended? What is its apprehensible characteristic?

Tsongkhapafan said:

You don't accept that absence can be an object of meditation?

Malcolm wrote:

It cannot be an object of equipoise, no, since by definition emptiness is not an object.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Yes it does. Are you saying that negative phenomena cannot appear to the mind, only positive ones? This is incorrect.

Malcolm wrote:

There are no such thing as "negative" phenomena.

Tsongkhapafan said:

If you go out to the place where you parked your car, and there's no car there, you have a very vivid experience of 'no car'. That is an absence that has a meaning. Its apprehendable characteristic is absence of what you expected to find - 'no car'.

Malcolm wrote:

This is an implicative negation, the absence of something which exists elsewhere.

Tsongkhapa said:

Similarly, the apprehendable characteristic of emptiness is 'the absence of all the phenomena we normally see or perceive' or 'lack of inherent existence'.

Malcolm wrote:

The lack of inherent existence is a nonimplicative negation— having been negated, there is no inherent existence somewhere else. Therefore, since the examples to do match, your reasoning is flawed.

Tsongkhapa said:

If what you say is correct, it would be impossible to do mahamudra meditation which is meditating on a mind that is clarity, completely lacking physical characteristics.

Malcolm wrote:

The pervasion does not apply — the mind has clarity as a characteristic, therefore it is apprehensible.

Tsongkhapa said:

A non-implicative negation has nothing by which it can be apprehended.

Of course it does. Buddhists have been meditating on emptiness since Buddha first explained how to.

Malcolm wrote:

Protestations without reasons and appeals to authority show poor reasoning.

Tsongkhapa said:

The absence of inherent existence also has no apprehensible characteristic. What is its shape? What is its size? What is its number?

An object doesn't need physical qualities in order to be ascertained. A good example is the mind, which is clarity, the absence of physical characteristics. If what you say is true, it would be impossible to do mahamudra meditation.

Malcolm wrote:

Again, you repeat the error you made above. Clarity, as we know from Dharmakīrti, etc., is the characteristic of the mind through which the mind can apprehend itself.

Emptiness has no such characteristic through which it may be apprehended. Therefore, it cannot be an object of equipoise.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 2nd, 2017 at 6:11 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Rakz said:

Does it say this anywhere in the suttas?

Malcolm wrote:

No, this idea advanced by TKF finds no scriptural basis in sūtra, tantra, vinaya, abhidharma or anywhere else.

I know because I looked.

Also, the five pure abodes are not buddhafiels/pure lands. They are perishable realms in the sense that beings are born there and pass away. They are in fact part of samsara.

Tsongkhapafan said:

There you go, grasping at samsara existing from its own side. For a being with a pure mind, samsara doesn't exist and the five pure abodes are pure lands - Hinayana pure lands though, mind you, not Buddhlands.

Malcolm wrote:

They are not pure lands. They are the top five "heavens" of the 17 form realm "heavens." Thus, they are part of samsara. You know, conventionally speaking.

For a being with a pure mind, Avici hell is no different than Akaniṣṭha Ghanavyuha, the buddhafiels of Vairocana/Vajradhara.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 2nd, 2017 at 4:43 AM

Title: Re: Is living off-grid realistic in today's technological age?

Content:

DGA said:

I don't know if living off the grid is, in all instances or even most, a better choice environmentally. has anyone studied this?

Malcolm wrote:

Not in terms of carbon usage. Wood heat is pretty bad in terms of large particulate pollution.

A few years ago, large areas of Connecticut were left without power in the winter (Hurricane Sandy), so much so, that there were severe air pollution warnings from wood burning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 2nd, 2017 at 2:47 AM

Title: Re: The attainment of the Arhats

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

I understand that they take rebirth in Hinayana Pure Lands.

Rakz said:

Does it say this anywhere in the suttas?

Malcolm wrote:

No, this idea advanced by TKF finds no scriptural basis in sūtra, tantra, vinaya, abhidharma or anywhere else.

I know because I looked.

Also, the five pure abodes are not buddhafiels/pure lands. They are perishable realms in the sense that beings are born there and pass away. They are in fact part of samsara.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 2nd, 2017 at 2:24 AM

Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Form is a manifestation of emptiness, but it is not emptiness. Emptiness appears as form but they are different.

Of course emptiness has a generic image - all experiences of emptiness on the paths of accumulation and preparation are conceptual experiences of emptiness; it's completely perceptible otherwise it could not be realised. It is impossible to go from no experience of emptiness to a direct, non-conceptual experience of emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

The "emptiness" meditated on those paths is not emptiness. It is an intellectual fabrications of the mind. It is not in anyway a generic image of emptiness, unless of course you think the word "emptiness" that appears in our mind when we think of emptiness is its generic image. Otherwise, unlike a pot, for example, which has apprehensible characteristics, emptiness has no apprehensible characteristics. It is blindly ignorant to assert that it does.

Tsongkhapafan said:

So now you're telling me that the cause of the direct realisation of emptiness on the path of seeing is a meditation on something that is not emptiness? Go figure! Do you accept that through the generic image of table we can know table? Similarly, through the generic image of emptiness we can know emptiness, initially conceptually and later non-conceptually.

Malcolm wrote:

The difference between a table and "emptiness" is that the former has apprehensible characteristics, being conditioned, while the latter does not, being unconditioned.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Emptiness is a phenomenon that is realised through the explicit negation of inherent existence.

Malcolm wrote:

"Negation of inherent existence" is a concept. It does not render emptiness something with apprehensible characteristics, like a pot or a table.

Tsongkhapafan said:

The generic image that remains after this negation is emptiness and is the object of wisdom realising emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

A non-implicative negation has nothing by which it can be apprehended. An implicative negation on the other hand, something like, "A forest is empty of a village," bears apprehensible characteristics.

Tsongkhapafan said:

The characteristic of emptiness is mere absence of inherent existence. It is ignorant to assert that emptiness has no definable characteristics - by what uncommon sign would it be known, then, and without an uncommon sign how could you distinguish emptiness from nothingness or from empty space?

Malcolm wrote:

The absence of inherent existence also has no apprehensible characteristic. What is its shape? What is its size? What is its number?

You keep on defining one inapprehensible thing by another. Space is used as a synonym for emptiness precisely because like space, emptiness has no apprehensible characteristics, since emptiness is unconditioned.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 2nd, 2017 at 1:17 AM

Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, the text says quite literally, "matter is empty, emptiness is matter." It is an identity proposition, just as Nāgārjuna famously states:

Samsara isn't the slightest bit different from nirvana;

nirvana isn't the slightest bit different from samsara;

whatever is the limit of nirvana,

that is the limit of samsara—

those two are not even slightest bit different.

BTW, emptiness has no generic image since it is not perceptible entity.

Tsongkhapa said:

Form is a manifestation of emptiness, but it is not emptiness. Emptiness appears as form but they are different.

Of course emptiness has a generic image - all experiences of emptiness on the paths of accumulation and preparation are conceptual experiences of emptiness; it's completely perceptible otherwise it could not be realised. It is impossible to go from no experience of emptiness to a direct, non-conceptual experience of emptiness.

Malcolm wrote:

The "emptiness" meditated on those paths is not emptiness. It is an intellectual fabrications of the mind. It is not in anyway a generic image of emptiness, unless of course you think the word "emptiness" that appears in our mind when we think of emptiness is its generic image. Otherwise, unlike a pot, for example, which has apprehensible characteristics, emptiness has no apprehensible characteristics. It is blindly ignorant to assert that it does.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, March 2nd, 2017 at 12:39 AM

Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

What happened to "Matter is empty, emptiness is matter, there is no matter apart from emptiness, there is no emptiness apart from matter?"

Tsongkhapa said:

It's still there - the four profundities from the Heart Sutra also has the meaning that although form and emptiness are the same entity or nature they also are nominally distinct, not identical phenomena. This is the implicit meaning of 'emptiness is not other than form, form also is not other than emptiness'.

If form and emptiness are identical, they would have the same generic image but they don't. There would be no need for two names, only one; To have a union of the two truths there needs to be two truths, not just one.

Malcolm wrote:

Actually, the text says quite literally, "matter is empty, emptiness is matter." It is an identity proposition, just as Nāgārjuna famously states:

Samsara isn't the slightest bit different from nirvana;
nirvana isn't the slightest bit different from samsara;
whatever is the limit of nirvana,
that is the limit of samsara—
those two are not even slightest bit different.
BTW, emptiness has no generic image since it is not perceptible entity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 1st, 2017 at 11:27 PM

Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is like claiming water and wetness are nominally distinct and therefore not identical.
This is an error.

Tsongkhapa said:

Water and wetness are not identical. Wetness is a characteristic of water but not water itself. Emptiness is a characteristic of the mind, not the mind itself and it is an error to think otherwise. Such subtle distinctions are important.

Malcolm wrote:

Nāgārjuna shows that distinguishing an entity from its characteristic is deluded, in fact he shows that there is no difference at all.

What happened to "Matter is empty, emptiness is matter, there is no matter apart from emptiness, there is no emptiness apart from matter?"

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 1st, 2017 at 9:49 PM

Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is because you do not consider emptiness and mind to be nondual. Therefore, you make false distinctions such as "emptiness is not aware of anything."

Tsongkhapa said:

I do consider them non-dual but that doesn't mean they are identical because they are nominally distinct.

Malcolm wrote:

This is like claiming water and wetness are nominally distinct and therefore not identical.
This is an error.

Tsongkhapa said:

I think the difference is that you do not accept conventional truths so for you, anything ultimate has to be unconditioned whereas Tsongkhapa accepted the validity of conventional truths and taught the union of the two truths; although mind and emptiness are one entity they are not identical.

Malcolm wrote:

"although mind and emptiness are one entity they are not identical"

This is incoherent.

Tsongkhapa said:

You are both talking about the same thing, ye shes/jñāna. Some people translate it as "primordial wisdom", others as "wisdom."

I don't think we are. You assert that Primordial Wisdom is permanent but because it is mind, it cannot be permanent. Emptiness is not wisdom, it is the object of wisdom. Wisdom is mind and its object is emptiness and as I said before, they are not the same.

Malcolm wrote:

You are getting attached to two English terms meant to translate the same Tibetan word, ye shes.

Tsongkhapa said:

He is talking about luminosity. When the mind is merged with its own luminosity, it becomes unconditioned. It becomes buddhahood.

Luminosity is just the conventional nature of the mind. Why would something that is impermanent (luminosity) which is the conventional nature of the mind (also impermanent) become permanent? It's impossible. A conditioned phenomenon can never become unconditioned. Furthermore an unconditioned phenomenon cannot function, so an unconditioned Buddhahood would be inert and pointless; it would lack the very ability to perform the function for which it was attained - the benefit all living beings.

Malcolm wrote:

[/quote]

Luminosity is not impermanent nor is it conditioned. Your statement contradicts the Buddha's own words from the Lalitavistara Sūtra:

The ambrosial Dharma I obtained is profound, immaculate, luminous, and unconditioned.
Even if I explain it, no one will understand.
I think I shall remain silent in the forest.
That which is free from words cannot be understood through words, likewise, the nature of phenomena is like space, totally free of the movements of mind and intellect.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 1st, 2017 at 11:02 AM

Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

Firstly, thanks for the explanation.

conebeckham said:

There are two "gotras," or "elements," or "potentials." There is the Naturally present potential, and the Developing potential. The Geluk position, stated simply, is that this naturally present potential is merely the emptiness of each sentient being's mind. In Nyingma and Kagyu presentations, the Naturally Present Potential is also emptiness, but it is the Wisdom that is the union of emptiness and primordial awareness.

Tsongkhapa said:

It doesn't make any sense to assert that naturally abiding Buddha nature is anything other than emptiness, as increasing Buddha nature is the very subtle mind and because this is mind, it is aware; emptiness is not aware of anything.

Malcolm wrote:

This is because you do not consider emptiness and mind to be nondual. Therefore, you make false distinctions such as "emptiness is not aware of anything."

Tsongkhapa said:

From the Gelugpa viewpoint there is no such thing as Primordial Wisdom, otherwise living beings would not be ignorant. Sentient beings are not cognitive errors any more than the pus and blood that appears to a hungry ghost is a cognitive error - it's a valid karmic appearance and it exists for a hungry ghost even though it is created by ignorance and karma. For Buddhas there are no sentient beings because they have completely pure minds.

Malcolm wrote:

You are both talking about the same thing, ye shes/jñāna. Some people translate it as "primordial wisdom", others as "wisdom."

Tsongkhapa said:

It seems incorrect to me to assert that Primordial Wisdom is permanent, yet it is wisdom. Wisdom is only related to mind and mind is not permanent otherwise it could not function; thus Primordial Wisdom does not exist.

Malcolm wrote:

He is talking about luminosity. When the mind is merged with its own luminosity, it becomes unconditioned. It becomes buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, March 1st, 2017 at 5:23 AM

Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

You seriously need to read the Uttaratantra or The Lankavatara section on the Dharmata Buddha. Buddhas, (and by extension Buddha Nature) don't have effort, nor "will" of the kind you describe. The final fruit of something like Bodhisattva aspiration prayers - which are a thing of effort, is a state which is beyond effort, and benefits beings without "will" or anything similar, as far as I understand it.

Minobu said:

yeah well i don;t have the time or the book today..
but i will say this...

There is a reason Lord Sakyamuni never spoke of God the Creator.

And make no mistake what i read here is a form of creationism when you refer to "THIS STATE" in the way you all so easily can...

and i now see why Malcolm and Tonskappafan has all this discourses about Lord Buddha Nagarjuna and Madyamika and the concept of emptiness from madyamika...it can't jive with this form of creationism...

and always be suspicious when someone won;t answer directly...tells you to go get a master on the subject and become their pupil or simply go read this book first....

as per the will ...go back and read the context in which i first used it...it's not about a discussion of will or the term i made up on the fly...

with Big Love d

Malcolm wrote:

"The state" is talked about also in the Lotus Sūtra, just not extensively:

Tathāgata is suchness [tathāta]. Suchness is the limit of reality. The limit of reality is the dharmadhātu. Suchness, the limit of reality, and the dharmadhātu are names for Dharma of the Saddharmapuṇḍarika.
FYI, there is no creationism in Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 26th, 2017 at 4:27 AM

Title: Re: Indigenizing Dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The inability to discern a correct path from a wrong path and a higher path from a lower path is a form of ignorance.

Rakz said:

Since all paths in Buddhism lead to enlightenment, it's a useless activity to label a path higher or lower. It benefits nobody and causes unnecessary division.

Malcolm wrote:

Some paths are more rapid than others. Some paths do not lead all the way to complete buddhahood.

Rakz said:

All Buddhist paths lead to some realization, but those realizations are surpassable until one reaches the apex of yānas.

Malcolm wrote:

There's no such thing as the "apex of yanas". This line of thinking does nothing but boost the ego which is why we often see Vajrayanists(not all) belittle other practices and think it is perfectly fine when they are just creating more bad karma for themselves.[/quote]

Of course there is an apex of yānas. For example, Śāntideva points out that the ultimate of the lower is the relative of the higher in reference to tenet systems. Thus the view of Vaibhāṣika is lower than that of Sautrantika; the view of Sautrantika is lower than that of Yogacara, the view of Yogacara is lower than that of Madhyamaka and so on.

While indeed it is incorrect to needlessly belittle anyone's path, whether Buddhist or nonBuddhist, it is much worse karma to abandon a higher path for a lower path.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 26th, 2017 at 2:13 AM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

'khor lo.

Losal Samten said:

Huh, cheers. The Indians used dhatu, just to clarify, right?

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty sure they used the term cakra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 26th, 2017 at 2:01 AM

Title: Re: Indigenizing Dharma

Content:

Rakz said:

Someone who is always knocking down "lesser" paths is a sign of low realization.

Malcolm wrote:

The inability to discern a correct path from a wrong path and a higher path from a lower path is a form of ignorance.

By your reasoning, it is also incorrect to state that nonBuddhist paths do not lead to any realization at all.

All Buddhist paths lead to some realization, but those realizations are surpassable until one reaches the apex of yānas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 26th, 2017 at 1:58 AM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

the three wheels of the emptiness

Losal Samten said:

Any reason you choose 'wheels' as the translation as opposed to the usual 'spheres'?

Malcolm wrote:

'khor lo.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 25th, 2017 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

AlexanderS said:

What is the short explanation on the difference between mundane and transcendent accumulations?

Grigoris said:

First thing that popped into my head too. I've never heard of merit being categorised in this manner.

Malcolm wrote:

Mundane merit is exhaustible. For example, this eon begins with a compliment of natural merit; but as latent afflictions become more and more prevalent in the sentient beings who inhabit it, that merit declines resulting the destruction of the billion world system aka the universe.

Transcendent merit is merit dedicated keeping in mind the three wheels of the emptiness of someone dedicating merit, someone to receive it, and the act of dedication. This merit is indestructible and ripens as the major and minor marks, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 25th, 2017 at 11:04 PM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The statement "Buddhahood in one lifetime" refers to a complete beginner with no accumulations.

Grigoris said:

Must have some pretty decent accumulations to have been born as a human with all the qualities, characteristics and endowments necessary for enlightenment.

Anyway, right now you are asking us to buy that there are beings that, during their infinite round of rebirths in samsara, have acquired no accumulations at all???

Malcolm wrote:

There are two kinds of accumulation of merit: mundane and transcendent — the accumulations I was referring to were the latter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 25th, 2017 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: Is Vajrayana really the fastest path?

Content:

smcj said:

I believe that only the vajrayana offers the possibility of Buddhahood within one lifetime. So do I.

But then I've also been taught that since i can't see karma I can't tell how many lifetimes a person has already been practicing. So maybe somebody has been at it for a long time already and is ripe to the point where any little thing might tip be what it takes for them to become enlightened. Individual karma trumps general principle.

Grigoris said:

^^^This often overlooked (especially by western Buddhists) point!^^^

Malcolm wrote:

The statement "Buddhahood in one lifetime" refers to a complete beginner with no accumulations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 25th, 2017 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: Enthronement Ceremony of the 42nd Sakya Trizin

Content:

methar said:

Once there is a new 42nd Sakya Trizin what will happen to the 41st Sakya Trizin.

Will he still have the title of the 41st or will he now have to change his name?

I look forward to the enthronement.

Malcolm wrote:

Sakya Trizin will become Sakya Trisur.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 25th, 2017 at 10:14 AM

Title: Re: Indigenizing Dharma

Content:

Tārāmitra said:

Similarly, many great Vajrayāna sages have taught Pure Land practices and accepted them as necessary elements for a complete and all-embracing Dharmic tradition in traditional Tibet.

Malcolm wrote:

The "pure land" tradition in Tibetan Buddhism is entered via empowerment. It is not a sūtrayāna tradition.

Tārāmitra said:

That is a nuance worth mentioning. I don't think it changes anything I've said regarding the relevance of inclusion of the Pure Land approach in general though. Did you read Tashi Nyima's article, and if yes, what did you think?

Malcolm wrote:

I generally dismiss cultural arguments for the usefulness of this or that teaching. Such commentaries do not speak to the reality of the situation on the ground, in my opinion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 25th, 2017 at 9:50 AM

Title: Re: Indigenizing Dharma

Content:

Tārāmitra said:

Similarly, many great Vajrayāna sages have taught Pure Land practices and accepted them as necessary elements for a complete and all-embracing Dharmic tradition in traditional Tibet.

Malcolm wrote:

The "pure land" tradition in Tibetan Buddhism is entered via empowerment. It is not a sūtrayāna tradition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 25th, 2017 at 5:01 AM

Title: Re: Is Buddha the ultimate teacher

Content:

florin said:

I wouldn't consider Buddha, an external being, as the ultimate teacher.

The ultimate teacher would have to transcend all limitations related to space, time and always be present, constantly teaching and displaying wisdom beyond any limited consideration of teacher-student relationship.

Malcolm wrote:

This corresponds to the sambhogakāyas five certainties.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 25th, 2017 at 5:00 AM

Title: Re: Indigenizing Dharma

Content:

Tārāmitra said:

As for the debate concerning the relevance of various Dharmic paths under these conditions, my own take on the matter is thus: accelerated paths like the Vajrayāna are complex and extremely elaborate and the strictly Tantric dimension is not the one suited to the largest number of people as far as the ultimate result is concerned.

Malcolm wrote:

This is not the perspective of the tantras themselves. Their perspective is quite the opposite.

Tārāmitra said:

Vajrayāna CAN lead to enlightenment in one lifetime for SOME people, and in these cases, concerning individuals of a highly yogic predisposition, Vajrayāna is certainly a more effective way.

Malcolm wrote:

Someone who received abhisheka and maintains their basic samaya, will, without any practice in this lifetime at all achieve buddhahood within at most 16 lifetimes, or so the tantras promise us.

Tārāmitra said:

But when it comes to MOST western seekers today, a more simple path like Pure Land can be just as beneficial, as in these cases rebirth in a Pure Land is present as the most realistic potential for immediate result of practice in one life.

Malcolm wrote:

It is nevertheless a slow path.

Tārāmitra said:

The vastness of Vajrayāna may simply seem overwhelming for many people and more intricate than it has to be in order to secure the best result most people can really expect in these degenerate times.

Malcolm wrote:

The essence of Vajrayāna practice is guru yoga, not practicing the Kalacakra or [insert yidam here] creation and completion stages.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 25th, 2017 at 4:52 AM

Title: Re: Indigenizing Dharma

Content:

Grigoris said:

I guess we are defining tension differently then. Tension, as a psychological term (associated with the fight or flight reaction), is also linked to alertness and vigilance. Which are also positive mental functions.

Malcolm wrote:

You are defining this from the point of maintaining an object, ala sutrayāna.

Grigoris said:

I'm defining it from a quasi behavioural science pseudo Abhidharmic position.

The fact of the matter is that saying that tension--->distraction is like saying relaxation--->dullness. It is not 100% valid. Excessive tension can lead to distraction and excessive relaxation can lead to dullness. But realistically, both are necessary (or unnecessary) to a degree.

Malcolm wrote:

What you are describing is slackness, not relaxation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 25th, 2017 at 1:41 AM

Title: Re: Integrating Dzogchen ect

Content:

Grigoris said:

WTF are you talking about? Is there any activity that does not originate from the natural state?

Miroku said:

I do realize now that it sounds horrible, however what I meant is that he doesn't have to feel stressed out about visualisations like he (at least from my understanding of the op) kinda is. Although it can be all perfectly integrated it is still better not to feel stressed out about visualisations, right?

Lukeinaz said:

Yes, a bit stressed.

About that "soup" would it be advisable to have two separate practices then?

For instance start with ati guru yoga finish then start my traditional (secondary practices) including seven limb prayers, deity practice ect?

Malcolm wrote:

If you are doing some kind of Guru Yoga already, you do not have to change anything.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 25th, 2017 at 1:37 AM

Title: Re: Indigenizing Dharma

Content:

Grigoris said:

Tension (as opposed to relaxation) is not an aspect of the nature of mind?

Malcolm wrote:

If you are tense, you are distracted.

Grigoris said:

It doesn't answer what I asked, but I'll take the bait:

If you are too tense, yes. But if you are too relaxed, also yes.

A degree of tension is also one of the ingredients of vigilance and attention.

Malcolm wrote:

No, tension interferes with mindfulness and attention.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 25th, 2017 at 1:14 AM

Title: Re: Indigenizing Dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you wish to see the nature of your mind, you are not going to do so within a state of tension.

Grigoris said:

Tension (as opposed to relaxation) is not an aspect of the nature of mind?

Malcolm wrote:

If you are tense, you are distracted.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 24th, 2017 at 10:31 PM

Title: Re: Indigenizing Dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you felt more relaxed, this is a good thing.

Grigoris said:

Taking benzodiazepenes also makes you feel more relaxed. So does good sex. So what?

Malcolm wrote:

If you wish to see the nature of your mind, you are not going to do so within a state of tension.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 23rd, 2017 at 10:27 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

climb-up said:

When I got interested in receiving DI from ChNN I looked as hard as I could for any scandals, shady behaviors or anything related.

Nothing.

As for his approach. Have you read any of his publicly available books introducing Dzogchen?

The only reason I ask is that if you are sincerely interested in receiving his teachings (and obviously you are at least sincerely interested) then reading some of his books is not too much work AND all of the answers that you've got so far are given in his books, along with the context of explaining his understanding of Dzogchen.

"Dzogchen the self perfected state" is probably my favorite. It is very clear about non-denominational, but it very clearly explains everything.

"Crystal and the way of light" is a little thicker, goes a little deeper into technical stuff and is autobiographical. Really wonderful read!

"Dzogchen teachings" is one that I found in a bookstore early on and found useful even if I didn't understand it all at the time.

I came to Dzogchen from outside of Buddhism, with no interest in it whatsoever. For me personally I have found it very useful to study more Buddhism, both to understand the culture that the dzogchen teachings come from and to help me in those times that I can't constantly rest in non-dual contemplation. So, while "Buddhism" is not the main point (although Buddhism main point is the main point, and is contained within the beautiful dzogchen teachings), you could say that my learning dzogchen brought at least one person to the dharma (and I'm sure many others).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 23rd, 2017 at 9:53 AM

Title: Re: Indigenizing Dharma

Content:

Rakz said:

i have a tough time believing dzogchen is superior above all other methods just because some texts from tibet say so...

Malcolm wrote:

You don't need to believe anything. Understanding is the point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 23rd, 2017 at 5:25 AM

Title: Re: Indigenizing Dharma

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

That is not what I mean. Direct introduction always works. Anyone who receives it can then use Dzogchen methods to either discover that they have not discovered, or reinforce what they discovered.

Rakz said:

I received transmission in november 2015. Practiced it for a little while as well. Nothing really happened except for feeling a bit calmer. Doesn't seem different from any other meditation.

Malcolm wrote:

If you felt more relaxed, this is a good thing.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 23rd, 2017 at 4:13 AM

Title: Re: Indigenizing Dharma

Content:

smcj said:

That is not what I mean. Direct introduction always works. Anyone who receives it can then use Dzogchen methods to either discover that they have not discovered, or reinforce what they discovered.

Right.

So do you include Jax in that statement?

Malcolm wrote:

I include anyone who has received introduction in that statement. He too can use the methods to discover what he has not discovered or reinforce what he has discovered. Jax's problem is that he rejected his teachers and has even rejected direct introduction. So in his case, he has impeded himself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 23rd, 2017 at 3:55 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Tārāmitra said:

I don't think there's really much more to be said in this particular debate. But to answer one direct question:

Not for Buddhists, no. For people arriving straight from the street without any Buddhist practice, I am personally of the view that a basic grounding in Sutra is the safest approach rather than going straight onto Dzogchen and Dzogchen only, but I understand and accept that there are other views on the matter.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Are you interested in whether Rincpohe's approach would fit you, or simply in trying to find fault with it through the lens of orthodoxy though? That's always an exercise you can engage in, but I don't know if it will get you anywhere.

Tārāmitra said:

Sir, if you have read all my posts in this discussion, I would be surprised if I was not able to clearly express my respectful and sincere motives. I have never questioned his orthodoxy, only trying to establish whether his approach will be compatible with the requirements of my own path. It started with my asking for testimonies as to the quality of Rinpoche's conduct, in view of the fact that we are asked to carefully scrutinise prospective masters, a need reinforced by the bad examples that occasionally surface in this regard. Then someone said he places no emphasis at all on śīla (but personally behaves respectably), leading to the discussion on that.

Malcolm wrote:

I think you would have more difficulty with DC people. Many of them have no interest in Buddhadharma apart from ChNN's own teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 23rd, 2017 at 3:52 AM

Title: Re: Indigenizing Dharma

Content:

smcj said:

Plus simply giving someone DI right off the bat only rarely works.

Malcolm wrote:

This means you do not understand that is meant in Dzogchen by direct introduction. It always works.

smcj said:

There is a perspective where all Dharma works all the time. The late Kalu Rinpoche once said that he saw all the monks as Arhats. From the ultimate perspective the vows they took also always worked and were fully accomplished upon taking them.

So yes, that type of perspective where Dharma always works is present in Vajrayana. That does not mean that the group of monks I was sitting behind were actually Arhats, but that from the ultimate perspective the simultaneous fruition of their practice could be seen--even in the lowly Pratimoksha Vows. There's no such thing as "a little bit pregnant", and on the ultimate perspective there no such thing as "a little bit enlightened". The presence of Dharma at all is the presence of "a little bit enlightened".

But effectively there is a difference.

Malcolm wrote:

That is not what I mean. Direct introduction always works. Anyone who receives it can then use Dzogchen methods to either discover that they have not discovered, or reinforce what they discovered.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 23rd, 2017 at 3:24 AM

Title: Direct Introduction Always Works

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

MOD NOTE: Split from topic "Indigenizing Dharma" in the Lounge.

-MOD QQ

smcj said:

Plus simply giving someone DI right off the bat only rarely works.

Malcolm wrote:

This means you do not understand that is meant in Dzogchen by direct introduction. It always works.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 23rd, 2017 at 3:10 AM

Title: Re: Indigenizing Dharma

Content:

Tārāmitra said:

The most suitable teaching for westerners is one that cuts through all their modernist conditioning and makes them detach from the zeitgeist dominating the modern world.

Malcolm wrote:

No, the most suitable teaching for Westerners is one that introduces them to their real nature as fast as possible.

smcj said:

Hypothetically, it is entirely possible that "cutting through modernist conditioning and the zeitgeist dominating the modern world" is the fastest route to successfully introduce them to their true nature. It depends on one's karma.

Malcolm wrote:

People do not really wish to live in a pre-modern era. If they think they do, they are kidding themselves.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 23rd, 2017 at 2:57 AM

Title: Re: Indigenizing Dharma

Content:

Tārāmitra said:

The most suitable teaching for westerners is one that cuts through all their modernist conditioning and makes them detach from the zeitgeist dominating the modern world.

Malcolm wrote:

No, the most suitable teaching for Westerners is one that introduces them to their real nature as fast as possible.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 23rd, 2017 at 2:56 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Tārāmitra said:

If one has to rely on a vow to be honest, one is not very honest.

Yes, one might say that. But the Lord Buddha nevertheless saw it as necessary, given the degenerate condition of mankind in his days. Today mankind has become even more spiritually reduced than in the Śākyamuni's time. We are not primordial men. The perfect selflessness that would make one spontaneously act with perfect purity without guidance by any formal support may be awakened through long practice, it is not natural and actual in the beginning of the spiritual journey. So that is my own understanding of the matter, anyway. I am certainly not saying everyone must believe as I do.

Johnny Dangerous said:

That is actually an argument more in favor of Tantra or Dzogchen in this age, than in favor of sutra-style viewpoints on sila.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 23rd, 2017 at 2:16 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Tārāmitra said:

I get your meaning, Malcolm. Thank you for your patient explanations.

I am not so much saying that vows as such are required. What I do think is required is clear teachings on śīla, that to be understood in principal depth and interiorised. For example, the precept against theft is more subtle in essence than what is immediately evident, perhaps. It is rather straight forward to avoid shop lifting, for example, but there are far more subtle and hard to detective ways of taking from others, for example by (often impulsively and unconsciously) playing various games of manipulation in order to suck energy from other people.

This is not covered in the precepts. The five precepts only cover physical actions.

It would obviously depend on whether he was in a position to identify the deviation and attempt to correct it.

Malcolm wrote:

When he thinks people are going a wrong way, he lets them know.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 23rd, 2017 at 1:02 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Rinpoche places no emphasis at all on śīla.

dzogchungpa said:

This is not exactly true.

Malcolm wrote:

It is entirely true.

Rinpoche includes these things because they need to be understood, not because this is how one is to practice. He states in the same book:

However, those who follow Dzogchen teachings on the basis of clear understanding of the fundamental characteristics of the kinds of conduct in the diverse paths should apply themselves until they are able to unify or integrate their essential points in the dimension of the behavior of Samantabhadra of Ati.

And, having been his student for the past 25 years, I really do know his point of view concerning vows. If someone finds being a bhikṣu helpful in their practice, then he is all for it. But it is not necessary. It is not even necessary for Dzogchen practitioners to take the five precepts or engage in a refuge ceremony. From his point of view, one begins with direct introduction first, not first taking pratimoksha vows, then bodhisattva vows, then vajrayāna vows and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 23rd, 2017 at 12:46 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Tārāmitra said:

Let me clarify that I am not seeking controversy here, or disputation for its own sake, and I hope I am not, without intention, coming across as offensive or arrogant. I certainly accept that my approach to this question is not the only valid one in all cases, but I still hold that it is the safest approach for most contemporaries interested in Dzogchen. Maybe I am mistaken, but that seems to be an open question.

My thanks to Norwegian for his elaborate reply:

Sutra is the path of Renunciation. Tantra is the path of Transformation. Dzogchen is the path of Self-Liberation. All three paths are unique and complete on their own. Malcolm just said Dzogchen is the essence of Mahayana, which seems somewhat dissonant with this view of three separate self-sufficient vehicles; but Mahayana is basically based on Sutra teachings. Of course, inasmuch as Dzogchen too aims at realising Buddhahood for the sake of all beings, they are the same in essence.

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen is the essence of Mahāyāna because it results in the anuttarasamyaksambodhi described in Mahāyāna sūtra.

Tārāmitra said:

How about pitfalls? Is it really impossible for a Dzogchen practitioner to have downfalls? Seems unrealistic to me that one is guaranteed success just by being a Dzogchen practitioner. Without any formal ethical supports the danger would seem to be greater.

Malcolm wrote:

One only needs a vow if one has a problem to curb. For example, if you are addicted to killing things, you can take a vow to stop. If you are addicted to stealing and so on, same deal. If you do not engage in taking life, taking what has not been given, lying, and so on, what possible use is a vow to refrain from those things?

A Dzogchen practitioner might observe a vow against drinking if they have a problem with alcohol that causes them to lose their mindfulness. Otherwise, there is no need for that.

Tārāmitra said:

Nobody replied to this question of mine:

To leave the question of śīla up to the disciples seems dangerous. Will not Rinpoche suffer certain consequences if some of his disciples go down wrong paths which they justify to themselves through Dzogchen, and end up in hell-states?

Malcolm wrote:

Of course not. Their misconceptions are not his.

Tārāmitra said:

I don't have any knowledge about how these dangers are viewed in Dzogchen, but I know that this danger is massively present in Tantra.

Malcolm wrote:

People have managed to turn the three vows into a kind of golden chain.

If you are a Dzogchen practitioner, you do not really need to worry about vows and so on. It is better to work with circumstances.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 23rd, 2017 at 12:10 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Tārāmitra said:

If one has to rely on a vow to be honest, one is not very honest.

Yes, one might say that. But the Lord Buddha nevertheless saw it as necessary, given the degenerate condition of mankind in his days.

Malcolm wrote:

So you think all nonbuddhists are liars?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 23rd, 2017 at 12:09 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Tārāmitra said:

Personally I am of the opinion that Dzogchen should be supported by a firm Buddhist platform and shouldn't be taught on its own to seekers not established in fundamental Dharma.

Malcolm wrote:

This is your limitation. It is not the limitation of Dzogchen. Dzogchen is an independent, self-contained vehicle that includes the meaning of all lower yānas.

Tārāmitra said:

How often did this isolation of Dzogchen actually occur in traditional Tibet, though?
How many people entered Dzogchen without first being Buddhists?

Call it a limitation, but I'm not abandoning my commitment to the Mahayana in order to practice Dzogchen on its own. Would my approach be a problem?

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen is the essence of Mahāyāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 22nd, 2017 at 11:46 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Tārāmitra said:

Personally I am of the opinion that Dzogchen should be supported by a firm Buddhist platform and shouldn't be taught on its own to seekers not established in fundamental Dharma.

Malcolm wrote:

This is your limitation. It is not the limitation of Dzogchen. Dzogchen is an independent, self-contained vehicle that includes the meaning of all lower yānas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 22nd, 2017 at 11:34 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Tārāmitra said:

Thank you for your helpful replies.

Rinpoche places no emphasis at all on śīla. He also is not a "crazy" wisdom kind of guy. Very well. But as for śīla, does this mean Rinpoche instructs Western disciples in Dzogchen without first (or at the same time) making sure they are established in basic Sutra Buddhism?

Malcolm wrote:

What do you mean by established? When he begins a retreat, he always spends an hour or so discussing the essential differences between the paths of renunciation (Hinayāna and common Mahāyāna), the paths of transformation (Vajrayāna), and the path of self-liberation (Dzogchen/Mahāmudra).

Tārāmitra said:

I think it's highly crucial that modern westerners interested in pursuing a profound esoteric path like Atiyoga first master basic śīla and the like. For example, can one who habitually lies to his fellow men ever become the Truth? Obviously not.

Malcolm wrote:

If one has to rely on a vow to be honest, one is not very honest.

Norbu Rinpoche does not require anyone to take vows, or undergo formal refuge, and so on.

You will just have to find out for yourself whether you can overcome your prejudices and find benefit from Rinpoche's teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 22nd, 2017 at 10:37 PM

Title: Re: Fears mount over scale of Buddhist sect sexual abuse

Content:

Grigoris said:

'cept that Sangharakshita was not a celibate AND there is no "natural order of things".

Malcolm wrote:

Well, what he did was argue that he had not broken any monastic vows because his original ordination was not valid.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 22nd, 2017 at 10:35 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Tārāmitra said:

So is Rinpoche's conduct consistently and in easily recognizable essence and appearance in conformity to basic Buddhist Sila, or does he engage much in the profoundly paradoxical "grey zone" of the sort of "crazy wisdom" behaviour that may or may not be actual wisdom and often turns out not to have been demonstrably skilful, as in the case of good ol' Trungpa Rinpoche (whose insights I still greatly appreciate)? What is Namkhai Norbu Rinpoche's position?

Malcolm wrote:

Rinpoche places no emphasis at all on śīla. He also is not a "crazy" wisdom kind of guy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 22nd, 2017 at 9:05 PM

Title: Re: Fears mount over scale of Buddhist sect sexual abuse

Content:

Queequeg said:

appeared to be one of the successful efforts to indigenize Buddhism in the West.

We need realized Western teachers, and a lot of them, sooner than later. IMO, our best bet is to establish the institutional support for them to appear and develop within. WBO seemed like a good start.

DGA said:

I agree 100% on the need for realized teachers everywhere, in all nations, speaking all languages.

kirtu said:

We're not going to get that.

Malcolm wrote:

Sure we are.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 22nd, 2017 at 6:27 AM

Title: Re: Quickie on the nature of "I"

Content:

Wayfarer said:

Wayfarer is wary of nihilist readings of Mahāyāna.

Malcolm wrote:

Asserting that a cessation is a nonexistent is incorrect. In Mahāyāna, a nonexistent requires an existent.

Wayfarer said:

I have heard that explanation before, and I am not convinced by it.

When it is declared unequivocally, 'there is an unborn, an unmade, an unfabricated' and that, were there not an unborn, there would be no escape from the born and the made' - I interpret that verse literally.

Malcolm wrote:

This simply means that one's cessations, and birth driven by them can cease.

Wayfarer said:

But the unborn is not something that exists, it is never an object of cognition.

Malcolm wrote:

You need to review what Buddha says about those who claim transcendent principles that are unseen and can never be objects of cognition.

Wayfarer said:

That is why the Aspiration verse says 'it is not existent, even the Victorious ones don't see it.' But it is not non-existent, it is 'the basis of all samsara and Nirvāṇa.' That is what is beyond birth and death, but it is not an object of cognition - one cannot know it apart from the dissolution of the separate self into it.

Malcolm wrote:

Huh? What are you taking about? This is talking about the nature of mind which is empty (it is not existent, even the Victorious ones don't see it) and clear (But it is not non-existent, it is 'the basis of all samsara and Nirvāṇa.').

Wayfarer said:

That is the significance of the dhyana states, that one goes beyond the sense of 'self and other' within which all phenomena arise.

Malcolm wrote:

Dude, no. This Mahāmudra aspiration has nothing to do with dhyāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 22nd, 2017 at 6:13 AM

Title: Re: Quickie on the nature of "I"

Content:

Wayfarer said:

Wayfarer is wary of nihilist readings of Mahāyāna.

Malcolm wrote:

Asserting that a cessation is a nonexistent is incorrect. In Mahāyāna, a nonexistent requires an existent. In Mahāyāna, we say regularly all phenomena do not arise, are unconditioned, are in a state of nirvana from the beginning, etc. Is this nihilistic? No. Sūtra citations, voluminous ones, can be provided.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 22nd, 2017 at 5:58 AM

Title: Re: Quickie on the nature of "I"

Content:

Wayfarer said:

But there is 'the unconditioned, the unbornd, the unmade', which doesn't arise and cease. ... the extinction of desire (rāgakkhayo) the extinction of hatred (dosakkhayo), the extinction of illusion (mohakkhayo)

Astus said:

It is the extinction of the three poisons that is called the unconditioned. It is not a new state or being, but simply the end of attachment. However, this ending, this absence is no different from other kinds of absences in being unconditioned, hence cessation without analysis (apratisaṃkhyā-nirodha) is counted among unconditioned dharmas.

Malcolm wrote:

Wayfarer keeps holding out for an positive unconditioned.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 22nd, 2017 at 5:46 AM

Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas

Content:

Jeff said:

Then how would you respond to the Avatamsaka Sutra...

.

Malcolm wrote:

The Ārya-ghanavyūha-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra is the final section of the Avatamsaka Sutra.

Jeff said:

So then would Buddhahood be like hitting the eject button? Losing the ability to differentiate like Great bodhisattvas? If so, what is the point of the Sambhogakaya?

Malcolm wrote:

To enjoy (bhoga) the Dharma together (sam) with buddhas and bodhisattvas who are his own embodied (kāya) emanations, as well as bodhisattvas who are reborn in Akaniṣṭha Ghanavyuha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 22nd, 2017 at 5:44 AM

Title: Re: Quickie on the nature of "I"

Content:

Astus said:

Is there such a thing that does not arise and cease?

Wayfarer said:

No, there is no thing which doesn't arise and cease. That's why I wrote no thing =/= nothing. But there is 'the unconditioned, the unbornd, the unmade', which doesn't arise and cease.

O bhikkhus, what is the Absolute (Asaṃkhata, Unconditioned)? It is, O bhikkhus, the extinction of desire (rāgakkhaya) the extinction of hatred (dosakkhaya), the extinction of illusion (mohakkhaya). This, O bhikkhus, is called the Absolute.

SN1

As is made clear in many other passages, it is a mistake to reify the unconditioned. But it's also a mistake to discard the ladder before it's been climbed.

Malcolm wrote:

This just means that the unconditioned is cessation of afflictions, and nothing else. Apart from this cessation, there is no other unconditioned apart from space, which is also a nonentity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 22nd, 2017 at 5:11 AM

Title: Re: The Secret Chö of the Khadro Chaphur Rinpoche

Content:

Lhasa said:

This will be live-streamed. Register on the link given, free or donation.

DGA said:

that's helpful. I clicked the link to register for the webcast but I don't know how to answer the question "Zoom?"

anyone have the decoder on that?

Malcolm wrote:
it is a video conferencing software

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, February 22nd, 2017 at 4:05 AM
Title: Re: Fears mount over scale of Buddhist sect sexual abuse
Content:

Queequeg said:
He explained to me that WBO (now Triratna) drew on all Buddhist traditions because it is not clear what path or paths will be productive for Westerners.

.

Malcolm wrote:
It has always been clear. Vajrayāna, because we like technology and methods.

Queequeg said:
Not Vajrayana because its too weird with all the demons and fornicating gods.

Malcolm wrote:
Definitely, Vajrayāna because it has fornication built right in. The demons are a bonus.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, February 22nd, 2017 at 3:57 AM
Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas
Content:

Jeff said:
Then how would you respond to the Avatamsaka Sutra...

.

Malcolm wrote:
The Ārya-ghanavyūha-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra is the final section of the Avatamsaka Sutra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 22nd, 2017 at 3:55 AM

Title: Re: Fears mount over scale of Buddhist sect sexual abuse

Content:

Queequeg said:

He explained to me that WBO (now Triratna) drew on all Buddhist traditions because it is not clear what path or paths will be productive for Westerners.

.

Malcolm wrote:

It has always been clear. Vajrayāna, because we like technology and methods.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 22nd, 2017 at 3:53 AM

Title: Re: Fears mount over scale of Buddhist sect sexual abuse

Content:

Queequeg said:

WBO seemed like a good start.

Malcolm wrote:

FWBO was deeply flawed from the start. Not only is Lingwood's understanding of Buddhadharma idiosyncratic and partial, he has been lying about himself for decades, since the 1950's.

Discomfort with him in normative Buddhist circles is the rule, rather than the exception, and has been since he returned to England from Asia.

His early career was also checkered with scandal in India as well.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 22nd, 2017 at 12:03 AM

Title: Re: Fears mount over scale of Buddhist sect sexual abuse

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, senior order members were encouraged to have sexual relations with junior members. This is one reason this organization is so off. You had one predator at the top encouraging his underlings to emulate his predatory behavior.

Grigoris said:

I said "mainly" one person. Do we know the real extent of this problem?

But, realistically speaking, encouraging gay sex between adults is hardly the same as raping little boys now, is it? No, I'm not saying that you said that, but others here seem to be trying to make this exact point.

Malcolm wrote:

Some people were underage. Then there is the power differential issue -- you know, the one that forbids you as a therapist from sleeping with your patients. It goes a lot deeper than someone once pressuring another into a relationship. It was a rather systematic problem in that organization, which you can discern by looking into it.

Grigoris said:

The saddest part is how he used Buddhism (or pseudo-Buddhist theory) merely to satisfy his lust, rather than the fact that some guys felt that maybe they were pressured into having sex.

Malcolm wrote:

The saddest part is how once again a person in a position of power used that power to harm others.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 21st, 2017 at 11:36 PM

Title: Re: Quickie on the nature of "I"

Content:

Astus said:

And where is that heartwood, where is that self, if not in the five aggregates and six sensory realms?

Wayfarer said:

I don't think the heartwood is 'a self', but it is 'that which is not subject to arising and ceasing'.

Malcolm wrote:

Which is precisely what a self is, i.e. something that is not subject to arising and ceasing.

The view of the Buddha is that "self" is just a convention used to describe the five aggregates.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 21st, 2017 at 11:35 PM

Title: Re: Quickie on the nature of "I"

Content:

Wayfarer said:

What do you think the import of 'heartwood' is? Why is it part of the analogy?

Malcolm wrote:

A person, like a plantain/banana tree, lacks a core.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 21st, 2017 at 11:29 PM

Title: Re: Fears mount over scale of Buddhist sect sexual abuse

Content:

Grigoris said:

This was (apparently) a one off incident back in the 70's, perpetrated mainly by one person.

Malcolm wrote:

Definitely not.

DGA said:

So this went on for a long while, and was perpetrated by more than one individual?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, senior order members were encouraged to have sexual relations with junior members. This is one reason this organization is so off. You had one predator at the top encouraging his underlings to emulate his predatory behavior.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 21st, 2017 at 10:23 PM

Title: Re: Fears mount over scale of Buddhist sect sexual abuse

Content:

Grigoris said:

This was (apparently) a one off incident back in the 70's, perpetrated mainly by one person.

Malcolm wrote:

Definitely not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 21st, 2017 at 2:34 AM

Title: Re: Quickie on the nature of "I"

Content:

rachmiel said:

I don't understand what "clear" means in this context, and why grasping at it would result in the feeling of a self.

Malcolm wrote:

"Clear" means that your mind is obvious. It is the bedrock of all of one's experience.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 21st, 2017 at 12:06 AM

Title: Re: Fears mount over scale of Buddhist sect sexual abuse

Content:

DGA said:

It seems as though this is a new disclosure regarding actions taken many years ago.

Problems of this kind in the FWBO/Triratna org have been documented for a long time. This story looks like another log on that fire.

Malcolm wrote:

```
if (typeof bbmedia == 'undefined') { bbmedia = true; var e = document.createElement('script'); e.async = true; e.src = 'bbmedia.js'; var s =
document.getElementsByTagName('script')[0]; s.parentNode.insertBefore(e, s); } https://phpbbex.com/ [video]
```

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 20th, 2017 at 11:41 PM

Title: Re: Fears mount over scale of Buddhist sect sexual abuse

Content:

Grigoris said:

Been there, done that...

Again?

Malcolm wrote:

Current event.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 20th, 2017 at 10:29 PM

Title: Fears mount over scale of Buddhist sect sexual abuse

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

From the <https://www.theguardian.com/world/2017/feb/19/buddhist-sexual-abuse-triratna-dennis-lingwood>:

One of the UK's largest Buddhist orders has been forced to report allegations of sexual abuse after a former follower claimed he was coerced into sex with one of its elders. In a separate development, the group's founder has apologised for having relationships with its members – some of which, he has previously acknowledged, may have been against their will.

Triratna, which has tens of thousands of followers, is battling to protect its reputation, both in the worldwide Buddhist community and among its own members who are questioning the extent to which the coercion was perpetrated and how long it continued...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 20th, 2017 at 10:10 PM

Title: Re: Origin of mankind and animals according Buddhism.

Content:

Seishin said:

I have heard some scholars say that this sutta was not meant to be taken literally, but was a rebuttal, almost taking the mickey, of the Brahman creation story. What are your thoughts on this?

Malcolm wrote:

It is clear that it was taken seriously across a broad spectrum of Buddhist schools and still is. The Aḡañña Sūta does not exist in a Tibetan recension, but the barebones of the story are preserved in Various Mahāyāna sūtras and some śāstras.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 20th, 2017 at 5:38 AM

Title: Re: Quickie on the nature of "I"

Content:

rachmiel said:

I know what you mean about grounded vs. starry-eyed. Thing is, both views speak unto me ... I find myself flip-flopping between them: I am Awareness, "I" is a mirage, I am Awareness, "I" is a mirage. Perhaps there's a way to bridge these seemingly mutually exclusive views of the I-construct ... though I'm guessing it would have to be way down at the level of tathata (and I ain't there yet!)

Malcolm wrote:

The nature of mind is clear and empty. When the clarity aspect is grasped onto, it is mistaken for a self. When the emptiness aspect is grasped onto, it is mistaken for a nonexistent.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 20th, 2017 at 3:45 AM

Title: Re: Please, do not share "secret teachings" online, with anyone.

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Sigh..

Guys, depersonalize the language if you want this to keep going. Once things go in the direction "you do this", "you are this" etc., it tends to go downhill. Not trying to monitor you for thought crime or anything, just saying..the thread will go a predictable direction if you don't step back a bit.

It's also swerved greatly off topic so..can we return to the OP or start a new thread on whatever it is you are focusing in on?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 20th, 2017 at 3:27 AM

Title: Re: Please, do not share "secret teachings" online, with anyone.

Content:

binocular said:

It's not clear why that would be the case. If how things usually are for living beings (ie. beset by aging, illness, and death, in their various forms) has any bearing on how things really, ultimately are, then a dog-eat-dog Darwinist scenario (and thus a Christian) one seems most likely

Coëmgenu said:

Darwinism and Christianity are not often thought of as synonymous. When are Christians taught that they should behave like dogs competing in the wild? I don't follow your characterization here.

“As man advances in civilization, and small tribes are united into larger communities, the simplest reason would tell each individual that he ought to extend his social instincts and sympathies to all members of the same nation, though personally unknown to him. This point being once reached, there is only an artificial barrier to prevent his sympathies extending to the men of all nations and races. [If they appear different] experience unfortunately shews us how long it is before we look at them as our fellow creatures. Sympathy beyond the confines of man, that is humanity to the lower animals, seems to be one of the latest moral acquisitions... This virtue [concern for lower animals], one of the noblest with which man is endowed, seems to arise incidentally from our sympathies becoming more tender and more widely diffused, until they extend to all sentient beings.”

Malcolm wrote:

— Descent of Man, Charles Darwin

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 20th, 2017 at 1:57 AM

Title: Re: Garchen rinpoche Yamantaka Empowerment Livestream

Content:

Miroku said:

I am not sure but I think it was about 3 hours with the lung of the sadhana. And about 1 hour or 1 hour and half with the empowerment, I think.

paël said:

Does it matter if you didn't watch whole lung?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it means you did not get the whole lung.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 20th, 2017 at 1:05 AM

Title: Re: Please, do not share "secret teachings" online, with anyone.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

None of them. The only thing that counts is one's personal intuition of how things are.

Minobu said:

thats so nice to say...and spot on ,on so many levels.

but how do we know if our intuition is spot on and being tweaked by all the right things or are we deluded.

Malcolm wrote:

Here, I am using the term intuition in its philosophical sense, i.e., direct knowledge.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 20th, 2017 at 12:20 AM

Title: Re: Garchen rinpoche Yamantaka Empowerment Livestream

Content:

Karma Jinpa said:

Once we've been given and actually received an empowerment, it is said we've been initiated into or entered into that deity's mandala. That's a traditional way of speaking about it. We've been let into the mandala of the deity and are part of the inner circle with our fellow vajra brothers and sisters, whereas the uninitiated are outside the boundaries of the mandala, and certain things shouldn't be shared with them for fear of breaking our samaya and/or being the cause of them giving rise to wrong views.

Malcolm wrote:

One can be initiated into a mandala without being given the subsequent empowerments. This is a holdover from lower tantra where indeed often disciples would only be gradually given empowerments over a number of days or months.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 20th, 2017 at 12:09 AM

Title: Re: Please, do not share "secret teachings" online, with anyone.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed, we all know that Dzogchen is the original Buddhadharma.

binocular said:

Maybe I am just too damaged from the way Catholics have treated me. Like when a tree falls over in a storm, but it is only partly uprooted, so that parts of it are still alive, but the rest is rotting, and it can never stand up straight again.

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen is not a religion. It is one's original state that can only be accessed through one's own personal intuition. There are however methods to assist one in doing so.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 19th, 2017 at 11:58 PM

Title: Re: Garchen rinpoche Yamantaka Empowerment Livestream

Content:

Lhasa said:

What does it mean to be initiated into the mandala of a deity?

Malcolm wrote:

Really?

dzogchungpa said:

Well, you said that, according to the Nyingma, a Shitro empowerment suffices for any deity while the Sarma schools do not accept this, so presumably it is not completely straightforward.

Malcolm wrote:

This statement has no relevance to the subject.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 19th, 2017 at 11:57 PM

Title: Re: Garchen rinpoche Yamantaka Empowerment Livestream

Content:

Lhasa said:

What does it mean to be initiated into the mandala of a deity?

Malcolm wrote:

Really?

Lhasa said:

Being an online-only practitioner definitely has a down side. Most online teachers teach their old-timers, not new-comers, so some important points can get skipped now and then. This is one.

Malcolm wrote:

I explained this to you a long time ago when there was some discussion of what it means to take an empowerment.

In short, the guru generates himself as the mandala of the deity, and then generates the mandala of the deity in front of himself. The latter mandala is the one from which one takes the empowerment. The teacher guides one to the doors of the mandala, and one requests admission. Then, one is allowed inside the mandala and shown all of the details of the mandala. This happens before the vase, secret, prajña's pristine consciousness and word empowerments happen. When the empowerment is over, the guru dissolves both mandalas. (This is why it is impossible to receive empowerments from recordings).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 19th, 2017 at 11:30 PM

Title: Re: Garchen rinpoche Yamantaka Empowerment Livestream

Content:

Lhasa said:

What does it mean to be initiated into the mandala of a deity?

Malcolm wrote:

Really?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 19th, 2017 at 10:58 PM

Title: Re: Please, do not share "secret teachings" online, with anyone.

Content:

binocular said:

The one question I have been consumed with for years is, "Which religion is the right one?" That has been my quest.

Malcolm wrote:

None of them. The only thing that counts is one's personal intuition of hows things are.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 19th, 2017 at 10:11 PM

Title: Re: Please, do not share "secret teachings" online, with anyone.

Content:

binocular said:

Do you experience me as "contesting everything you say"??

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. You are a secular humanist trying to find meaning in religions. You be better off reading a novel.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 19th, 2017 at 9:20 PM

Title: Re: Please, do not share "secret teachings" online, with anyone.

Content:

binocular said:

To a person searching for the truth, trying to figure out which religion is the right one, if any, this is all very confusing, and fills one with hopelessness.

How is one supposed to know which one is the right one, when they all make the claim to supremacy?

Malcolm wrote:

The Kalamas faced a similar quandary.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 19th, 2017 at 9:08 PM

Title: Re: Please, do not share "secret teachings" online, with anyone.

Content:

binocular said:

I don't contest that. The problem I see with it is that it is circular, self-referential, self-fulfilling, and that therefore, before one fully commits to that path, there is no way to even just have a hint as to whether it is worth it or not.

Malcolm wrote:

This is why Buddha said, "Come and see."

It isn't like there is a Consumer Reports for religion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 19th, 2017 at 8:33 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Marc said:

Hi Malcolm,

Pardon my asking again (I'm surprised no one else did):

Is there any update as regards to this possible Oral Transmission of Vimalamitra's Great Commentary ?

Many thanks in advance

Malcolm wrote:

It will happen in June.

PeterC said:

Thank you for the book - it's remarkable.

If there's anyway that the lung could be done online, those of us who can't be in the US for it would be eternally grateful - or at least, grateful for the remainder of this life.

Malcolm wrote:

Glad you enjoyed the book.

The lung will be given online. It will very likely take place on June 18th.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 19th, 2017 at 8:32 PM

Title: Re: primordial buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you limit yourself to the Pali Canon, you are like a person who decides they like walking with the chains on their feet when they could choose wings.

binocular said:

I haven't "decided to limit myself to the Pali Canon", the Pali Canon is just the body of scriptures I am familiar with to some extent by now and which I use as a reference point.

Malcolm wrote:

You need a better reference point.

No. Mahāyāna provides more means for discovering that, and Vajrayāna even more still. Also, bodhicitta is lacking in all the śrāvaka schools and canons. Since buddhahood is the through comprehension of how things are, one needs to develop bodhicitta to even be interested in the complete realization of how things are.

binocular said:

From where I am, this is still essentially the same as what one can hear from a Christian, only the names are different.

Malcolm wrote:

It is a question of content. The personal intuition that Buddha describes and the means to realize it are not discussed in the Pali Canon.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 19th, 2017 at 10:11 AM

Title: Re: Please, do not share "secret teachings" online, with anyone.

Content:

binocular said:

I wouldn't use "we" in your sentence above.

And I'm not sure about the patience part

<http://www.accesstoinight.org/tipitaka/an/an04/an04.111.than.html>.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no point engaging with people who are not interested in Dharma.

Tsongkhapa said:

You would because of compassion. I'm sure we have Gurus in this life because in our previous lives we were people who were not interested in Dharma but our Guru connected with us in some mundane way, and he had in his heart a wish to give us Dharma and that later ripened in our meeting him in the capacity of a spiritual teacher. There is always a point in engaging with people if we have a good heart because we can maybe benefit them now and definitely in the future. You don't become a Buddha without wanting to connect with and benefit everyone.

Malcolm wrote:

You are not getting the context of my statement — it has to do with training: people who are easy to train; and people who are difficult to train. But some people are intractable. Santideva says of such people that we must smile at them and be polite, but avoid intimacy with them because they are childish beings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 19th, 2017 at 5:12 AM

Title: Re: primordial buddhism

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Plenty of people consider the teachings of the Pāli Canon to be highly efficacious, and not comparable at all to chains that bind progress.

Malcolm wrote:

Highly efficacious at what? Liberation from afflictions? Yes. Knowledge of the way things are? No. In the latter respect, they are extremely limited.

Coëmgenu said:

Aren't they just as limited as anyone else, given that

Malcolm wrote:

"How things are" is a personal intuition. The Buddha taught us that we could discover this for ourselves.

Coëmgenu said:

?

Malcolm wrote:

No. Mahāyāna provides more means for discovering that, and Vajrayāna even more still. Also, bodhicitta is lacking in all the śrāvaka schools and canons. Since buddhahood is the through comprehension of how things are, one needs to develop bodhicitta to even be interested in the complete realization of how things are.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 19th, 2017 at 5:08 AM

Title: Re: primordial buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you limit yourself to the Pali Canon, you are like a person who decides they like walking with the chains on their feet when they could choose wings.

Coëmgenu said:

Plenty of people consider the teachings of the Pāli Canon to be highly efficacious, and not comparable at all to chains that bind progress.

Malcolm wrote:

Highly efficacious at what? Liberation from afflictions? Yes. Knowledge of the way things are? No. In the latter respect, they are extremely limited.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 19th, 2017 at 2:59 AM

Title: Re: Please, do not share "secret teachings" online, with anyone.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is not wrong to say that " Vajrayana practice continues on , or affects the mind stream in future lives" because Vajrayāna guarantees buddhadhood with 16 lifetimes at worst.

pael said:

Even if you break vows?

Malcolm wrote:

No, you need to maintain your samaya well in this lifetime.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 19th, 2017 at 12:49 AM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יהוה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

AlexanderS said:

Ok. Do you put Jesus in the same class?

Malcolm wrote:

Jesus was just a guy. Nothing special.

AlexanderS said:

Is this based on your reading of the new testament?

Malcolm wrote:

That, and history.

But as I clarified before. I was not raised in a Christian household, so I do not have any residual traces that might cause me to think that Jesus was anything special.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 19th, 2017 at 12:40 AM

Title: Re: primordial buddhism

Content:

binocular said:

The Vimalakirti Sutra is a Mahayana sutra. Do you know any references to this phenomenon in the Pali suttas?

You said: "Because how things really are is a personal intuition (in the philosophical sense) and cannot be communicated verbally to others."

I cannot imagine anyone seriously meaning that and stopping at that.

Usually, I have heard things to the effect of

"How things really are is a personal intuition (in the philosophical sense) and cannot be communicated verbally to others, but if you look into your heart and are truly honest, you will know that Jesus is your Lord and Savior."

Whenever I have heard people talk about how things really are, this was always followed by making clear their specific religious or political etc. affiliation.

I have never heard anyone actually stop at "It's deeply personal, it's not possible to talk about it."

Sometimes, there are people who seem to stop at that, but a closer look reveals they are actually referring to something that they don't want to talk about (with the person they're talking to), and that it isn't something that would be impossible to talk about.

Malcolm wrote:

"How things are" is a personal intuition. The Buddha taught us that we could discover this for ourselves.

If you limit yourself to the Pali Canon, you are like a person who decides they like walking with the chains on their feet when they could choose wings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 19th, 2017 at 12:38 AM

Title: Re: Please, do not share "secret teachings" online, with anyone.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If we were worthless idiots, the Buddha would not have taught, and would have remained silent. Since we are not worthless idiots, he taught, quite patiently, since there is in fact no difference between his state and our state, other than personal recognition.

binocular said:

I wouldn't use "we" in your sentence above.

And I'm not sure about the patience part

<http://www.accesstoinsight.org/tipitaka/an/an04/an04.111.than.html>.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no point engaging with people who are not interested in Dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 19th, 2017 at 12:01 AM

Title: Re: Please, do not share "secret teachings" online, with anyone.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

So you think he is looking down on you.

binocular said:

I don't think it's anything so personal. I really don't think I even register in his awareness.

What else would spiritually advanced people have for plebeians (such as myself), other than pity or contempt?

I mean, look at what Buddhist writings usually say about puttujanas -- that we're basically worthless idiots.

Malcolm wrote:

If we were worthless idiots, the Buddha would not have taught, and would have remained silent. Since we are not worthless idiots, he taught, quite patiently, since there is in fact no difference between his state and our state, other than personal recognition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 18th, 2017 at 11:55 PM

Title: Re: primordial buddhism

Content:

binocular said:

Neither. To the best of my knowledge, I internalized it before my cognitive apparatus has developed any critical thinking powers.

PuerAzaelis said:

What's the difference between believing something as a result of "critical thinking powers" and believing something as a result of "making up your own mind" or being "up to the individual to decide" or "choosing a political party"?

binocular said:

The difference I was talking about is between internalizing something so early in life that one has no memory of when it happened, and trying to internalize something deliberately.

This is immense.

?

Malcolm is presenting a view of Buddhism that I have never encountered before, and which, if true, has immense implications for how one approaches Buddhism.

Malcolm wrote:

well, for example, it is exemplified in Vimalakīrti's famed silence in response to Buddha questioning various members of his audience on their understanding of nonduality.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 18th, 2017 at 11:51 PM

Title: Re: Please, do not share "secret teachings" online, with anyone.

Content:

binocular said:

I think that those who are initiated into the "secret teachings" are looking down on us plebeians with, at best, pity, or otherwise, with contempt, and that this is pretty much all there is to it.

Malcolm wrote:

Really, you think HH Dalai Lama is looking down on you "plebeians" with contempt?

binocular said:

In his case, I think it's pity. I'd like to think he's merciful like that.

Malcolm wrote:

So you think he is looking down on you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 18th, 2017 at 11:18 PM

Title: Re: Please, do not share "secret teachings" online, with anyone.

Content:

binocular said:

I think that those who are initiated into the "secret teachings" are looking down on us plebeians with, at best, pity, or otherwise, with contempt, and that this is pretty much all there is to it.

Malcolm wrote:

Really, you think HH Dalai Lama is looking down on you "plebeians" with contempt?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 18th, 2017 at 11:16 PM

Title: Re: Please, do not share "secret teachings" online, with anyone.

Content:

Grigoris said:

Maybe I am missing something....

Why would something we received/practiced in a past life not (possibly) ripen in this life?

Malcolm wrote:

The Vajrayāna vows, like Pratimoksha Vows, are taken primarily on the body. They do not survive death.

As for the question of ripening — if someone has received empowerment in a past life however, it is more likely they will meet Vajrayāna teachings again.

Minobu said:

I understand that when one dies all commitments are off the table.

If one breaks those commitments, is there any residual effect?

Also is it wrong to say that all growth from Vajrayana practice continues on , or affects the mind stream in future lives.

Malcolm wrote:

Pratimokṣa and Vajrayāna vows perish at death. Bodhisattva vows on the other hand, never perish and are carried forward from life time to life time because unlike the former two, they are taken until one attains complete buddhahood.

It is not wrong to say that " Vajrayana practice continues on , or affects the mind stream in future lives" because Vajrayāna guarantees buddhadhood with 16 lifetimes at worst.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 18th, 2017 at 10:57 PM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יהוה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Abrahamic god is a preta.

/.../ But based on the sort of things old Jehovah wanted his people to do, gyalpo is a better fit.

binocular said:

What do you think Abrahamists (would) think of their God being characterized in this way?

Doesn't characterizing the Abrahamic God as a preta or gyalpo amount to "Badmouthing of other spiritual paths" according to the TOS here, which is not allowed?

Malcolm wrote:

I don't much care what Abrahamists think of their god being characterized in this way. I am not talking to them and would not discuss this with them in any case since there is no common basis for a discussion at all.

Some gyalpos are tractable, others are not. In any case, I was responding to a question.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 18th, 2017 at 10:57 PM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יהוה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

AlexanderS said:

I remember a reading a post by you many years ago where you reckoned that good old Yahweh was Indra.

Malcolm wrote:

This is what some comparative religionists think. But based on the sort of things old Jehovah wanted his people to do, gyalpo is a better fit.

AlexanderS said:

Ok. Do you put Jesus in the same class?

Malcolm wrote:

Jesus was just a guy. Nothing special.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 18th, 2017 at 10:09 PM

Title: Re: Please, do not share "secret teachings" online, with anyone.

Content:

conebeckham said:

Pretty sure "empowerment" received in previous lives don't count in this one.....

Am I missing something?

Grigoris said:

Maybe I am missing something....

Why would something we received/practiced in a past life not (possibly) ripen in this life?

Malcolm wrote:

The Vajrayāna vows, like Pratimoksha Vows, are taken primarily on the body. They do not survive death.

As for the question of ripening — if someone has received empowerment in a past life however, it is more likely they will meet Vajrayāna teachings again.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 18th, 2017 at 9:02 PM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יהוה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Abrahamic god is a preta.

AlexanderS said:

I remember a reading a post by you many years ago where you reckoned that good old Yahweh was Indra.

Malcolm wrote:

This is what some comparative religionists think. But based on the sort of things old Jehovah wanted his people to do, gyalpo is a better fit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 18th, 2017 at 4:50 AM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יהוה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

DGA said:

What, then, is the metaphysical god of Greek culture that you posited earlier?

Malcolm wrote:

The god of Aristotle,

<http://www.logicmuseum.com/ontological/aristotleontological.htm>.

DGA said:

And life also belongs to God; for the actuality of thought is life, and God is that actuality; and God's self-dependent actuality is life most good and eternal. We say therefore that God is a living being, eternal, most good, so that life and duration continuous and eternal belong to God; for this is God.

what you're describing is a concept rather than a being, then? Do Aristotle et al adhere to an abstraction, or to a spirit in your view?

Malcolm wrote:

He proposed a principle. This does not preclude gyalpo worship existing side by side in the case of those who wished add some philosophical sophistication.

Basically, most religions, with the exception of Buddhadharma, begin as some kind of spirit worship.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 18th, 2017 at 4:00 AM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יהוה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Hence, regressive.

Grigoris said:

Well... I wouldn't say that every aspect of the Roman Empire was progressive, thus I cannot judge Christianity as wholly regressive.

Malcolm wrote:

Nothing is wholly anything. Christianity was a symptom of its decline, and then carried with its all those traits which contributed to the decline of Rome in the form of the Church.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 18th, 2017 at 3:57 AM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יהוה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, I disagree. Claiming that Christianity was too disorganized to be repressive until 500 CE means that for the past 16 hundred years Christianity has been a politically and culturally regressive force.

Grigoris said:

I don't know how politically regressive it was initially, it did manage to be a contributing factor to the destruction of the Roman Empire.

Malcolm wrote:
Hence, regressive.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 18th, 2017 at 3:28 AM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (אֱלֹהִים) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think so. There is no reason to criticize Christianity etc., without cause or purpose. It is quite another thing to assert that we should respect a tradition that has been so deeply intolerant of others for millennia.

Grigoris said:

Actually, political based intolerance (ie expressed through the state) was quite a late development in for Christianity. Although many would like to believe that the link between Christianity and the state started with the Byzantine Empire, the fact of the matter is that Constantine was a Apollonian (sun worshipper) up until he converted to Christianity on his death bed.

Far from being a Christian Empire the Byzantine emperors allowed for and funded the worship of all "pagan" religions up until the reign of Theodosius I (the last emperor to rule a unified Byzantine Empire) who issued edicts against "pagan" worship in 395AD. But even with this development the basis for the legal system remained Roman civil law.

But it was Justinian I (482-565AD) that brought about the end, and began the active persecution, of "pagan" religions in the Empire. It was during his reign that "pagan" temples were destroyed and Christian churches were built on their foundations (many times using materials from the destroyed temples). Not only did Justinian persecute "pagans" but he also ran crusades against Christian "heresies" and Jews too. He was the first to use the idea of a single empire be unified under a single (Christian) faith. It was at this point in history that the pre-Christian European religions were completely wiped out (except for the bits that managed to be absorbed into the new "mainstream" and state sanctioned Christian practice).

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, I disagree. Claiming that Christianity was too disorganized to be repressive until 500 CE means that for the past 16 hundred years Christianity has been a politically and culturally regressive force.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 18th, 2017 at 2:41 AM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (אֱלֹהִים) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Yeah, ok, but "hard" Monotheism doesn't really explain the nearly pantheist and panentheist ideas that eventually found their way into Judaism.

Coëmgenu said:

Do you mean Medieval Jewish mysticism? They also, some of them, started to believe in a form of soul-transmigration around that time.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Was Mamonides considered a mystic? All I know is that there is distinct strain of Jewish thought about God being fairly non-personal for a "hard monotheism". I don't know all the scholarly stuff, but I know enough Jews to tell you this seems certainly true in practice.

Malcolm wrote:

Moses Maimonides is very, very late.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 18th, 2017 at 1:54 AM

Title: Re: primordial buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is really not the same. How things really are is not a "fact." Facts require empirical agreement. There is no way that "how things really are" can be subject to such empirical agreement. Why?

Because how things really are is a personal intuition (in the philosophical sense) and cannot be communicated verbally to others.

binocular said:

I hear this for the first time!

Could you direct me to some reading about this?

This is immense.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha stated this principle very clearly pretty much everywhere.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 18th, 2017 at 1:00 AM

Title: Re: primordial buddhism

Content:

binocular said:

It's the same pattern -- in both cases, it is proposed that there are absolute facts (especially in religious matters) which exist separately from how people cognize them.

Malcolm wrote:

It is really not the same. How things really are is not a "fact." Facts require empirical agreement. There is no way that "how things really are" can be subject to such empirical agreement. Why? Because how things really are is a personal intuition (in the philosophical sense) and cannot be communicated verbally to others. It is something that must be known for oneself. Thus the Buddha declared, "Ehipaśyika," "Come and see!"

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 18th, 2017 at 12:50 AM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יהוה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

The notion that the Greeks "monotheized" Judaism used to be big in the 60s, back when they also thought Christian Gnosticism predated the Pauline Christianity. This theory, now though, is almost never taken seriously.

Malcolm wrote:

They did it to themselves. Most Jews around the time of Christ spoke Greek. They read Greek Science, Philosophy, etc. While it is true that Zoroastrianism is frequently given a candidate for the shift in Judaism from henotheism to monotheism, the formal articulation of these ideas in philosophical language was left to hellenistic Jews living outside of Judea.

You will recall the first major translation project we know of is the Septuagint.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 18th, 2017 at 12:24 AM

Title: Re: primordial buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Not at all. You are proceeding from the idea that there are absolute facts which exist separately from how people cognize them.

binocular said:

Indeed.

Malcolm wrote:

Then you are realist who proposes that things have independent existence.

binocular said:

Buddhism actually rejects this point of view without in turn making all of reality dependent upon just one person's perceptions.

I'm not sure I understand.

What do you see as an alternative to both solipsism as well as to authoritarian cognitive externalism (to call it somehow -- "absolute facts which exist separately from how people cognize them")?

One of the alternatives to that could be a kind of epistemic universalism coupled with an unquestioning regard for every human, regardless of the state the human is in. Ie. basically granting that every human is essentially sane and can know "how things really are" without an external party posing as an epistemic authority.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhism proposes that all humans are basically deluded, but are equipped with the capacity to know "how things really are."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 18th, 2017 at 12:08 AM

Title: Re: primordial buddhism

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It's more like choosing a political party than solipsism.

binocular said:

In that case, such a chooser is trivializing the metaphysical/cosmological claims that the religion (he is choosing) makes.

I think it is cognitively and morally corrupt to demote religion to the level of a political party; although it's probably quite common, and perhaps even the only way in which one can actually choose a religion.

Malcolm wrote:

Not at all. You are proceeding from the idea that there are absolute facts which exist separately from how people cognize them. Buddhism actually rejects this point of view without in turn making all of reality dependent upon just one person's perceptions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 11:46 PM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (אֱלֹהִים) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The metaphysical god to which Christians devote themselves comes from Greek Philosophy. It is not part of the Abrahamic tradition until quite late. The legacy of Hellenistic culture was the transformation of Judaism from henotheism to the monotheism which now characterizes Christianity, Islam, and Judaism.

treehuggingoctopus said:

OK. Thank you for that post. Before it the thread had seemed to me to be yet another exercise in misrepresenting (and bashing) monotheism.

Malcolm wrote:

I was never raised a Christian, was never baptized, was never raised in a church. My father was a secular philosopher. I was raised in the tradition of Western Secular Philosophy. My roots lie in the secularism of Lucretius and Epicurus, not in the metaphysics of Platonius or Aristotle.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (אֱלֹהִים) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

DGA said:

I'm trying to probe this question of whether the author of Leviticus and the author of The Phenomenology of Spirit (to give two touchstones) were really committed to the same being, and if not, how to characterize those beings.

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.sunypress.edu/p-328-hegels-concept-of-god.aspx>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 11:37 PM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (אֱלֹהִים) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

DGA said:

What, then, is the metaphysical god of Greek culture that you posited earlier?

Malcolm wrote:

The god of Aristotle,

<http://www.logicmuseum.com/ontological/aristotleontological.htm>.

DGA said:

And life also belongs to God; for the actuality of thought is life, and God is that actuality; and God's self-dependent actuality is life most good and eternal. We say therefore that God is a living being, eternal, most good, so that life and duration continuous and eternal belong to God; for this is God.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 11:04 PM

Title: Re: Is there such a thing as beings that lack all 5 aggregates?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Are devāḥ considered, traditionally, to lack the 5 aggregates? Is there such a thing as a being with no aggregates?

Malcolm wrote:

No. Even formless realm devas have two of the four mental aggregates, formations and consciousness.

Coëmgenu said:

I am posting this question here as a general inquiry. My intent is not to "question/be skeptical" of the claim above, I seek only clarification.

In all Buddhist traditions, are devāḥ considered, universally, in the Buddhavacana, to only have 2 of the 5 "human/sentient?" aggregates?

If devāḥ lack the 5 aggregates, what are the five aggregates, are they only the aggregates of human/"human-realm" beings? Do hell-dwellers have all 5 aggregates?

Is there a level of karmic attainment where someone is not "burdened" with 5 aggregates? Does having "all 5" aggregates "help" someone realize the Buddhadharma? Is being born a "human" a "higher birth" than being born a deva, with "higher birth" meaning "a birth that is more conducive to practicing Buddhadharma"? Many Buddhist cosmologies count being "born human" as the most beneficent birth for pursuing Buddhadharma, are they wrong?

Malcolm wrote:

Most devas have five aggregates. Formless realm devas do not.

You would save yourself a lot of time if you would read the Abhidharmakośabhaṣyaṃ by Vasubandhu. It is like a map to the world of Dharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 11:01 PM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יהוה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

Since the dévas are at least partly comparable to the angelic hierarchies of the Abrahamic faiths, could māras, now in the special sense of a class of beings, possibly be considered as “fallen” dévas paralleling the “fallen angels”—dévas who become evil while retaining powers that give them a certain influence within our realm? Any opinions?

Malcolm wrote:

No, since they occupy the top rank of desire realm devas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 10:53 PM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יהוה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

DGA said:

With that said, are you positing the metaphysical god of Plotinus as, also, a preta or something else?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, no, of course not, since Plotinus denied his "One" could be sentient or a self-aware creator God, etc. His disciple Porphyry was the first person to employ systematic literary criticism of the Bible in his [long destroyed] Adversus Christianos.

DGA said:

similarly, if one or more of the gods honored in the Abrahamic faiths are gyalpos, shouldn't a powerful enough yogin be able to collaborate with Pehar to bind them by oath to Dharma?

Malcolm wrote:

Not every spirit like Pehar can be tamed. Some need to be destroyed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 10:34 PM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יהוה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

Konchog1 said:

Malcolm,

I recall you said that the Muslim god is a gyalpo, is the Jewish god a gyalpo then or a general preta? Is the Christian god the same being, or a different one?

As for devas not being interested in human affairs, what about mundane protectors like Indra, Brahma and the like? Do you mean that they answer prayers only, whereas pretas are always trying to involve themselves in human concerns?

Malcolm wrote:

Devas do not demand blood sacrifices. Pretas can and do.

The metaphysical god to which Christians devote themselves comes from Greek Philosophy. It is not part of the Abrahamic tradition until quite late. The legacy of Hellenistic culture was the transformation of Judaism from henotheism to the monotheism which now characterizes Christianity, Islam, and Judaism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 10:29 PM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יהוה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

I share your position on this. Most of us are of Western ancestry, meaning that most of our ancestors over the last millennia lived and breathed a culture in which Christianity was the definition of truth and the meaning of spirituality. For that reason we should show some basic respect for that tradition and try to understand it in some depth, even though one may have decided to follow Buddhism due to a personal affinity for that vehicle.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think so. There is no reason to criticize Christianity etc., without cause or purpose. It is quite another thing to assert that we should respect a tradition that has been so deeply intolerant of others for millennia.

Vidyavajra said:

Not to respect anything at all belonging to such a rich tradition and long history because of occurring elements that can be considered extremes of intolerance seems to me itself to be an extreme. It is not a subtle and nuanced approach at all.

Malcolm wrote:

Christianity does not encompass every aspect of Western Tradition. Indeed, in the West, Christianity has for the most part been an entirely regressive rather than progressive institution.

Fortunately, there is a rich non-Christan tradition of ethics and philosophy which the West can claim as an inheritance.

Vidyavajra said:

What is better for inter-religious peace, that Buddhists in general respect Christianity and work for mutual understanding while remaining true to their own tradition, following the eminent example of the Dalai Lama—or that Buddhists in general believe that all of Christianity is to be condemned and disrespected because of certain historical institutional actions or attitudes that are, in hindsight, blameworthy? I know which of these conforms to wisdom and compassion.

Malcolm wrote:

You clearly did not read my reply with care:

I don't think so. There is no reason to criticize Christianity etc., without cause or purpose. It is quite another thing to assert that we should respect a tradition that has been so deeply intolerant of others for millennia.

Most of that which is worth respecting in Christianity came from Greek philosophy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 10:20 PM

Title: Re: primordial buddhism

Content:

tingdzin said:

Everyone has his or her own opinion about "original Buddhism", and, not surprisingly, it's usually close to that of the school they personally prefer. If you really want a thorough answer to that question, you'll have to do a lot of research and make up your own mind.

Malcolm wrote:

That was the point of my reply. And it illustrates the second of tingzin's point, "you'll have to do a lot of research and make up your own mind."

binocular said:

And how does this differ from what is, for practical intents and purposes, solipsism?

To say that it is up to the individual to decide whether $2 + 2 = 4$ -- that's just crazy.

Leaving it up to the individual to decide (in whatever way, whether through research or through gambling) which Buddhist school is the original one, that's like leaving it up to the individual to decide whether $2 + 2 = 4$.

If everything everyone claims to be true is in fact true, then we're living in a chaotic universe in which human action is of no consequence, and suffering a constant.

Malcolm wrote:

It's more like choosing a political party than solipsism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 10:14 AM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יהוה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is no reason to criticize Christianity etc., without cause or purpose. It is quite another thing to assert that we should respect a tradition that has been so deeply intolerant of others for millennia.

Coëmgenu said:

Do you mean "a tradition that has been so deeply intolerant of others for millennia" like Buddhism has historically been?

Malcolm wrote:

Christianity has been far, far, worse in terms of its repressions and pogroms against others than even Islam.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 10:11 AM

Title: Re: The body in Dzogchen

Content:

makewhisper said:

This is a broad topic. And I'm not sure what I'm asking. But I hope some knowledgeable practitioners can discuss the place of the body and of the perception of sensation in the realization of instant presence.

I'm very new to Dzogchen, and the more I practice GY or semdzin, the more I feel limited by my own body. For example, when I notice various sensations in specific parts of my body—the vibration of the sound in my head, the "contraction" in my experience after I've come to the end of my breath etc. But it seems that in automatically noticing these sensations I'm reinforcing the dualistic sense that I have a body that is experiencing a sensation. I feel trapped by my perception of sensation, and this instant presence of which I have no knowledge, seems further and further off the edges of my experience.

How does someone with no knowledge of rigpa deal with the perception of sensation in practice? What practices are recommended?

Malcolm wrote:

One has to learn how to integrate them by not regarding them as other or distractions. If you experience any otherness your experience is automatically dualistic even though your state never is.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 10:08 AM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יהוה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

I share your position on this. Most of us are of Western ancestry, meaning that most of our ancestors over the last millennia lived and breathed a culture in which Christianity was the definition of truth and the meaning of spirituality. For that reason we should show some basic respect for that tradition and try to understand it in some depth, even though one may have decided to follow Buddhism due to a personal affinity for that vehicle.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't think so. There is no reason to criticize Christianity etc., without cause or purpose. It is quite another thing to assert that we should respect a tradition that has been so deeply intolerant of others for millennia.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 5:46 AM

Title: Re: Is Māra a deva?

Content:

Admin_PC said:

That's my understanding, yes - with the caveat that he is also identified with the 5 Skandhas.

Coëmgenu said:

Are devāḥ considered, traditionally, to lack the 5 aggregates? Is there such a thing as a being with no aggregates?

Malcolm wrote:

No. Even formless realm devas have two of the four mental aggregates, formations and consciousness.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 5:39 AM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יהוה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Papayin Māra is a Paranirmitavaśavartino deva, according to the Āryalaṅkāvatāra-nāma-mahāyānasūtravṛttitathāgatahṛdayālaṃkāra.

Coëmgenu said:

Is the Āryalaṅkāvatāra-nāma-mahāyānasūtravṛttitathāgatahṛdayālaṃkāra available in English translation? If not, what is the "Paranirmitavaśavartino deva"?

Malcolm wrote:

They are the highest class of devas in the desire realm, as you rightly mentioned earlier. No, it is not in translation.

Also, māras are frequently mentioned as a separate class of beings, along with devas, etc.

However, in general, in Tibetan Buddhist circles, we do not place much emphasis on Papayin Māra. He was there to torment the Buddha. He does not care about little people like us.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 5:34 AM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יהוה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Yes, from a contemporary perspective, but many other Buddhists of the past, whose Buddhism was equally "authentic" as modern Buddhists' Buddhisms, have believe him to be a deva.

Malcolm wrote:

Devaputra māra is not a person, nor is kelśa māra and so on.

Papayin Māra on the other hand, is the character who plays a role in many sūtras, and he is a deva.

Coëmgenu said:

So "Paparin Māra" is a deva but Māra, in general, is not? Which figure appeared to torment the Buddha? This is the Māra that was referred to before. The anthropomorphic Māra that appears in ancient sūtrāṇi. This is the Māra that we are talking about, or that I was talking about at least, and was the Māra referred to in the DhammaWheel post that inspired this one.

Malcolm wrote:

Papayin Māra is a Paranirmitavaśavartino deva, according to the Āryalaṅkāvatāra-nāma-mahāyānasūtravṛttitathāgatahṛdayālaṅkāra.

This is the character which appears in Sūtra. Māra in general refers to various kinds of obstacles on path, death, afflictions, pride, and the aggregates. These were the four māras that were conquered by the Buddha.

Papayin Māra though is a sort of divine fool, who constantly tries to make trouble for the Buddha but always fails miserably.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 5:26 AM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יהוה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Almost all of the Buddhist literature and Buddhist traditions I am familiar with consider Māra a deva, the Lord of the highst of the sense-pleasure heavens (kāmadhātavaḥ). Devaputramāra. On what grounds do you say he is not a deva?

Malcolm wrote:

Devaputra māra is not a person. It is pride. It is true that Papayin Māra is considered a deva.

Coëmgenu said:

Yes, from a contemporary perspective, but many other Buddhists of the past, whose Buddhism was equally "authentic" as modern Buddhists' Buddhisms, have believe him to be a deva.

Malcolm wrote:

Devaputra māra is not a person, nor is kelśa māra and so on.

Papayin Māra on the other hand, is the character who plays a role in many sūtras, and he is a deva.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 5:19 AM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יְהוָה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Māra is not a deva.

Devas do not interact with humans much.

Coëmgenu said:

Almost all of the Buddhist literature and Buddhist traditions I am familiar with consider Māra a deva, the Lord of the highest of the sense-pleasure heavens (kāmadhātavaḥ). Devaputamāra. On what grounds do you say he is not a deva?

Malcolm wrote:

Devaputra māra is not a person. It is pride. It is true that Papayin Māra is considered a deva.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 5:04 AM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יְהוָה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

So why do you think the Abrahamic God might belong to the rank of preta rather than deva? This post was inspired by another post over at DhammaWheel that asserted that the Abrahamic God was Mára. Mára is a deva, yes? Or is Mára also a preta?

Malcolm wrote:

Devas have no interest in human beings. To them we smell bad. Pretas on the other hands are very interested in human beings.

Coëmgenu said:

But don't devāḥ in the lowest heavens enjoy exercising power over the human world?

Aren't they worshipped by humans, to good or bad effect, and engage in relations with them, for good or ill? Is Māra a deva? In traditional Buddhist narratives, he certainly takes interest in us, regardless of how he thinks we smell.

Malcolm wrote:
Māra is not a deva.

Devas do not interact with humans much.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 4:42 AM
Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יהוה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?
Content:
Coëmgenu said:
Are preta considered that powerful?

Malcolm wrote:
Some are.

Coëmgenu said:
So why do you think the Abrahamic God might belong to the rank of preta rather than deva? This post was inspired by another post over at DhammaWheel that asserted that the Abrahamic God was Mára. Mára is a deva, yes? Or is Mára also a preta?

Malcolm wrote:
Devas have no interest in human beings. To them we smell bad. Pretas on the other hands are very interested in human beings.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 4:35 AM
Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יהוה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?
Content:
Malcolm wrote:
Abrahamic god is a preta.

Coëmgenu said:
Are preta considered that powerful?

Malcolm wrote:
Some are.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 4:28 AM

Title: Re: Where does the Abrahamic God (יהוה) "fit" in Buddhist cosmology?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Abrahamic god is a preta.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 1:27 AM

Title: Re: Garchen rinpoche Yamantaka Empowerment Livestream

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

Excuse my ignorance, but is the general consensus in Vajrayana nowadays that empowerments transmitted using the support of internet communications are fully effective? Perhaps there is a thread somewhere about this topic.

Malcolm wrote:

No, there is no consensus on this matter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 17th, 2017 at 12:11 AM

Title: Re: The doctrine of no-self - teaching device or metaphysical truth?

Content:

fckw said:

According to my personal interpretation it is metaphysical claims (or call them truths, once you accepted them as factual) that actually make up a religion.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhism is a variety of religions which adopt different metaphysical beliefs depending on school.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 16th, 2017 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This not a Tibetan idea, this is throughout Mahāyāna in Indian texts.

Zhen Li said:

Can you please point me to those?

Malcolm wrote:

It is based on statements in the Lanka such as:

There is no buddhahood in the desire realm,
it is accomplished in Akaniṣṭha.

And:

In the divine palace of Akaniṣṭha free from all misdeeds,
always free of concepts,
free of mind and mental factors, having obtained strengths and the faculties of clairvoyance, after obtain the faculty of samadhi,
the perfect Buddha attains buddhahood there,
the emanations obtain buddhahood here.

And:

In the form realm's Akaniṣṭha
free from desire, you obtained Buddhahood.
The Ārya-ghanavyūha-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra
The perfect buddhas attain awakening in the supreme place, Akaniṣṭha,
there is no buddhahood in the desire realm,
the deeds of the buddhahood are not performed there...

You can easily find in many Madhyamaka and Yogacara treatises systematically elaborating upon these ideas about the five certainties which the nirmanakāya lacks. This is also taken up systematically in Indian Vajrayāna commentaries.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 16th, 2017 at 10:05 PM

Title: Re: The doctrine of no-self - teaching device or metaphysical truth?

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Still unclear on what a "metaphysical truth" is in terms of this question.

boda said:

Is rebirth metaphysics or is it an actual process?

Malcolm wrote:

It is a metaphysical theory which some people, such as myself, think is an actual process.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 16th, 2017 at 10:00 AM

Title: Re: Role of Yidam in acquiring siddhis

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

Thanks for your reply, I concur with that.

But when Guru Rinpoche poses as a rhetoric question:

«If there is no yidam, where is the source of siddhis?»

Malcolm wrote:

In Tibetan, "yid dam" means "sublime mind." It represents a mind integrated with its own state. Therefore, siddhis are only possible if one's mind is so integrated.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 16th, 2017 at 9:58 AM

Title: Re: Role of Yidam in acquiring siddhis

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

why wouldn't it be possible to attain siddhis by the means of Atiyoga, for instance, without any reliance on deity yoga?

Malcolm wrote:

It is very possible, indeed, it is much easier. But the understanding which makes that possible is much harder to come by.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 16th, 2017 at 5:31 AM

Title: Re: Kālacakra Vajrayoga & Dzogchen comparison

Content:

smcj said:

[He] replied that members of the Rnying ma and Bka'brgyud traditions had to accept ("khas len dgos red) the gzhan stong because it was the view of Bdud 'joms Rin po che, Dil mgo mkhyen brtse Rin po che and Ka lu Rin po che.

Notice when he was speaking about Nyingma he specified Dudjom R. and Dilgo Khyentse R.'s view. Evidently their position is not universally accepted within the Nyingma.

As a footnote, the first time I ever heard about Empty of Other/Shentong was from Deshung R. who was teaching at a Kagyu center in the early 1980s. So I guess he was pretty open minded about it.

Malcolm wrote:

Dezhung understood quite well that Madhyamaka is not the point for Vajrayāna practitioners.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 16th, 2017 at 5:22 AM

Title: Re: Kālacakra Vajrayoga & Dzogchen comparison

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

I get that it was an exaggeration. But still, wouldn't the view of someone like Dilgo Khyentse count as very acceptable for a Nyingmapa?

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, but you have to understand that Dzogchen supercedes Madhyamaka of any stripe for Nyingmapas and Longchenpa's own position was a) that Madhyamaka formulation of Candrakirti represents the definitive intent of Madhyamaka and b) it corresponds with the view of Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 16th, 2017 at 5:09 AM

Title: Re: Kālacakra Vajrayoga & Dzogchen comparison

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

Cool, thanks for the recommendations, everyone.

By the way, Malcolm: What's your take on this footnote I came across in Cyrus' 'The Buddha from Dolpo'?

"In the late 1970s I once asked the late Sde gzhung Rin po che, Kun dga' bstan pa'i nyi ma, about the view of the gzhan stong teachings in the different Tibetan traditions. [He] replied that members of the Rnying ma and Bka'brgyud traditions had to accept ("khas len dgos red) the gzhan stong because it was the view of Bdud 'joms Rin po che, Dil mgo mkhyen brtse Rin po che and Ka lu Rin po che. When I asked about followers of the Sa skya tradition, [he] laughed and said they had to keep an open mind about the topic ("dag snang dgos red"). When I asked about the Dge lugs pa position, [he] exclaimed that they viewed the gzhan stong teachings as "the enemy of the Doctrine" ("bstan pa'i dgra bo red"). (P.215, •138)

(Of course, it is true that zhentong as sometimes presented in non-Jonang contexts is not identical with the Omniscient Dolpopa's.)

But anyway, was Rinpoche's claims generally true at that time? Has the situation changed since then?

Malcolm wrote:

Dezhung was exaggerating. Most Nyingmapas now and then do not accept gzhan stong as the definitive Madhyamaka view. Some may.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 16th, 2017 at 1:48 AM

Title: Re: Uposatha

Content:

paël said:

Can you take 8 precepts, if you can't abstain from eating after noon for health issues?
Do you need to abstain from watching TV during 8 precept day?

Malcolm wrote:

1) Yes.

2) Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 16th, 2017 at 12:53 AM

Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You are forgetting the five certainties of the Sambhogakāya.

Zhen Li said:

Though I have not encountered them in sūtra literature in Sanskrit or Chinese, what I have said is not exclusive of them.

Malcolm wrote:

The Sambhogakāya has five certainties: time, teaching, teacher, place, retinue. The time is always. The teaching is Mahāyāna. The teacher is Vairocana. The place is Akaniṣṭha Ghandavyuha. The retinue is buddhas and bodhisattvas.

This not a Tibetan idea, this is throughout Mahāyāna in Indian texts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 16th, 2017 at 12:31 AM

Title: Re: 5 precepts. Alcohol?

Content:

paël said:

Does all Tibetan schools agree on this? Should I take all 5 precepts? I know I will break them sooner or later.

Malcolm wrote:

There are various interpretations, but according to Kongtrul, in the end they all agree. If you have received refuge vows, you have taken the precepts. How many you follow (1-5) is up to you.

paël said:

Do you lose refuge vow if all five are broken?

Malcolm wrote:

No, since your vow of refuge is not dependent on the five precepts. The only way to lose your vow of refuge is to declare that you are no longer a disciple of the Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 15th, 2017 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: 5 precepts. Alcohol?

Content:

pael said:

Does all Tibetan schools agree on this? Should I take all 5 precepts? I know I will break them sooner or later.

Malcolm wrote:

There are various interpretations, but according to Kongtrul, in the end they all agree. If you have received refuge vows, you have taken the precepts. How many you follow (1-5) is up to you.

pael said:

Does initiation without hair cutting ceremony contain refuge vows? I'm going to hair cutting ceremony. I want to feel i'm really buddhist. I don't really feel being buddhist even though I have taken initiations. Does it mean that I already have refuge vows? I want to make it more official and get refuge name.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, all initiations have refuge as well as bodhicitta built in. The haircutting ceremony is not necessary, nor is a name. But you are free.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 15th, 2017 at 11:24 PM

Title: Re: 5 precepts. Alcohol?

Content:

pael said:

May I ask does taking alcohol at ganachakra/ganapuja/tsog break precept against alcohol?

Malcolm wrote:

No, since in this case the higher vows (Vajrayāna) modify the lower vows (pratimoksha).

pael said:

Does all Tibetan schools agree on this? Should I take all 5 precepts? I know I will break them sooner or later.

Malcolm wrote:

There are various interpretations, but according to Kongtrul, in the end they all agree. If you have received refuge vows, you have taken the precepts. How many you follow (1-5) is up to you.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 15th, 2017 at 11:18 PM

Title: Re: 5 precepts. Alcohol?

Content:

smcj said:

I took a HYT initiation from a Gelug lama a while back. He said that if you break the samaya of the initiation and end up in Vajra Hell that it was still a great blessing. So yes, there is that kind of perspective.

Maybe you shouldn't quote someone if you think what they are saying is b.s.

Malcolm wrote:

Maybe you shouldn't confuse Vajrayāna vows with pratimoksha vows, since the latter is clearly what we are discussing here.

pacl said:

May I ask does taking alcohol at ganachakra/ganapuja/tsog break precept against alcohol?

Malcolm wrote:

No, since in this case the higher vows (Vajrayāna) modify the lower vows (pratimoksha).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 15th, 2017 at 10:44 PM

Title: Re: Need help from highly realised or very perceptive practitioner

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You possibly have a provocation (spirit) related disorder. This is common with people who take ayahuasca in such situations. You should investigate so called soul-retrieval practices (bla 'gugs)

Lightseeking said:

Hi,

Sorry, this a lengthy message I hope some of you will take the time to read it, you might find it interesting. For me it is of great spiritual import so I hope you will persevere to get to the nub of the issue. Anyway, it needs some explaining and also some context to communicate a very painful experience I have had recently that has caused a lot of suffering to myself, and any advice for its treatment.

Now 46 years of age, I'm a male Buddhist that started practising back in 2002 upon reading "The Art of Happiness". Up until 9 months months ago I have been mostly very grounded, strongly intuitive man who has not suffered any mental health issues of any kind, except a few shortish periods of mild depression, not unusual. Having stated this, it should be noted that I suffered a deeper depressive period around 2009, a family breakdown and a few short but fairly extreme periods of alcoholic drinking, part of my past. Besides these periods I have always been engaged with continued spiritual practice although lost a bit of connection at times to my Buddhist roots.

Leading up to May last year I feel that I have suffered a loss of mental clarity and that the 3 Jewels were a bit distant which allowed me to make an uncharacteristically bad decision to join a "Shamanic" style retreat where participants take a psychotropic substance as part of the retreat practice. Without naming the substance I can say that it is a very powerful hallucinogen and has started to become popular with westerners not only visiting South America to attend these type of retreats but are now appearing in first world countries like mine, Australia.

During the retreat on the first night when I took the substance and it started to come on, I had a massive electric/energetic jolt that seemed to originate in my heart centre and knocked me out of my chair. At the same time I saw in my mind's eye/visualised a silver cord retreat up into a dark sky. Just prior to this I also visualised red clouds (blood?) in my mind's eye billowing and dark. After this event I continued to meditate and notice a lot of feelings and energy releases moving up through the body mostly from my Solar Plexus energy centre.

The second night we took the substance again and not long after the effect started to come on I entered a highly anxious state and felt like this whole thing was an entrapment and that the leader of the retreat was a sorcerer. Understandably this could be thought of as a paranoid episode and the continuing experience that night was the most horrific thing that had happened to me in my life up to that point. I ran from the retreat for fear of my life and had this horrifying feeling that I had been permanently cut off from the Dharma and enlightenment. I was eventually picked up by an ambulance and spent the night in a hospital under surveillance. A lot more could be said of my experience that night but this is already a long read.

The next day I was ok and returned to the retreat to say goodbye and go home as the retreat was over. I was OK for about 1 week then the horrifying thoughts and feeling returned to my mind, they did abate though after talking at length with my Buddhist teacher. The thoughts returned again a few days later for a period of hours, then went again after talking to another friend. By 3 weeks after the retreat I was dealing with constant horrifying thoughts that I had been permanently cut off from the possibility of spiritual advancement. These thoughts were strengthened as my mind kept returning to the vision of the cord retreating into the sky and a sense that my Pineal Gland may have been damaged, this is said to be the seat of consciousness and 'connection to the heavens'.

Only a week later, the thoughts in my head reached a crescendo and I went into a paranoid psychosis by definition, after arriving home from an intensely mentally stressful day I saw people chasing me and feared for my life, this began a psychotic bender over about 4 days. I say psychotic as this would be the definition, but the events I experienced were not just hallucinations and mental aberration of some type, some of the things I experienced were verifiably real.

I can share more specifics with anyone who is interested in private message/chat or even on Skype but that is enough for now.

My main aim here is to seek some advice about what my main fear is, which is this silver cord is real and it is how we receive spiritual nourishment or connect more with it, and that mine has been cut, since then I have had hellish experiences, cut off from the heavens, am I damned to some sort of hell? Is there something I can specifically do to repair/reconnect/develop/maintain the source connection. Recently I have been able to start reconnecting with some of my formal practices and can feel some light and lightness, but there are definitely differences in my mind since the event. My ability to visualise is now greatly impaired, short term memory is also impaired, my heart centre also seems to be 'offline'. Also I have lots of dark thoughts and sometimes ones that don't really feel like they are coming from me. I am aware of the obsessional and paranoid aspects, but this is alleviated somewhat by my Sangha connections and Vajrasattva practice.

Any helpful comments are welcomed.

Love.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 15th, 2017 at 10:20 PM

Title: Re: if we are Buddhas are we the 3 Kayas

Content:

smcj said:

As far as the 3 Kayas go, they are: 1.the non-manifest essential enlightenment of a Buddha (Dharmakaya), 2.the communication of a Buddha manifesting (Sambhogakaya), and 3.the physical presence of a Buddha manifesting (Nirmanakaya). So technically your "Kayas" are presently being expressed as your body, speech, and mind. Essentially they can be said to be present as Kayas. Some Tibetan authors (Dolpoba) see it that way. Effectively however that is at best a moot point. Their manifestations are limited by unawareness.

Zhen Li said:

I am not sure about the idea of a 'latent' sambhogakaya or nirmanakaya. As I understand it (coming from a non-tantric perspective), both sambhogakaya and nirmanakaya are illusory, like conditioned experience. They're devices employed by a fully awakened Buddha to help beings. The only buddhakaya that we have prior to attaining buddhahood, or the tenth bhumi as a bodhisattva, is the dharmakaya. In the end, that is the only kaya we have, but it has multiplicity from the perspective of deluded beings..

Malcolm wrote:

You are forgetting the five certainties of the Sambhogakāya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 15th, 2017 at 10:18 PM

Title: Re: 5 precepts. Alcohol?

Content:

smcj said:

Is it better to take and break them than not to take them at all?

No.

Malcolm wrote:

Nonesense, Sakya Pandita says exactly the opposite. The merit of taking them outweighs the demerit of breaking them.

smcj said:

I took a HYT initiation from a Gelug lama a while back. He said that if you break the samaya of the initiation and end up in Vajra Hell that it was still a great blessing. So yes, there is that kind of perspective.

Sakya Pandita said:

The merit of taking them outweighs the demerit of breaking them.

Malcolm wrote:

The point I am addressing, and it is a very normative view in Buddhism, is that taking vows makes our virtue more virtuous. But this is actually quite silly if you really put on your thinking cap.

smcj said:

Maybe you shouldn't quote someone if you think what they are saying is b.s.

Malcolm wrote:

Maybe you shouldn't confuse Vajrayāna vows with pratimoksha vows, since the latter is clearly what we are discussing here.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 15th, 2017 at 6:06 AM

Title: Re: 5 precepts. Alcohol?

Content:

smcj said:

Is it better to take and break them than not to take them at all

No.

Malcolm wrote:

Nonesense, Sakya Pandita says exactly the opposite. The merit of taking them outweighs the demerit of breaking them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 15th, 2017 at 4:41 AM

Title: Re: 5 precepts. Alcohol?

Content:

ChrisK said:

Okay, so in Tibetan Buddhism if I lie it does not take away from my good karma of abstaining from drugs or alcohol? Basically each Precept are individualized? Correct?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 15th, 2017 at 4:40 AM

Title: Re: Shinran Shonin: "There is no Buddha apart from the mind."

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

In Vajrayana it is not as if there is an argument made that Samantabhadra or Vajradhara has some unique components not shared by other Buddhas that make him the primordial Buddha, well, not really.

Dharma Flower said:

That which is not shared between Amida and all other Buddhas is that, according to Shinran, Amida came first. In the words of Shinran, Amida "attained Buddhahood in the infinite past."

Malcolm wrote:

So did all the other buddhas, according to standard Mahāyāna doxology.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 15th, 2017 at 12:38 AM

Title: Re: 5 precepts. Alcohol?

Content:

ChrisK said:

For me, this topic raises another question. Is the violation of one Precept equal to the violation of another. For example, is drinking alcohol equally wrong as sexual misconduct or harming living beings? Is lying just as bad as having a drink or having one too many drinks?

Malcolm wrote:

In Theravada, yes. In Tibetan Buddhism, no.

ChrisK said:

Sorry to bother but could you explain the difference. I'm sure it's a lengthy explanation but can you dumb it down for me. Thank you.

Malcolm wrote:

In Tibetan Buddhism, it is generally held that vows are kept broken one by one. Thus, if you lie, you have not broken your vows against killing, and so you do not lose all your lay vows. In Theravada however, the approach is more like a monks defeat, you break one, you lose all. The difference is that you can take them again.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 15th, 2017 at 12:23 AM

Title: Re: 5 precepts. Alcohol?

Content:

ChrisK said:

For me, this topic raises another question. Is the violation of one Precept equal to the the violation of another. For example, is drinking alcohol equally wrong as sexual misconduct or harming living beings? Is lying just as bad as having a drink or having one too many drinks?

Malcolm wrote:

In Theravada, yes. In Tibetan Buddhism, no.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 14th, 2017 at 10:18 PM

Title: Re: anything similar to Choying Dzo...

Content:

Stewart said:

...and "pixel" for Thigle!?

Malcolm wrote:

Which of course is wrong because thigles are round whereas pixels are square or rectangular. In general, in Dzogchen teachings, corners represent limitations.

Karma Dorje said:

There are many ways to represent pixels. They are only square in the case of things like LCD displays. Your limitation.

Malcolm wrote:

Geometry of color elements of various CRT and LCD displays; phosphor dots in a color CRTs display (top row) bear no relation to pixels or subpixels.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 14th, 2017 at 4:14 AM

Title: Re: anything similar to Choying Dzo...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, complete with alpha-pure as a translation of ka dag.

Josef said:

That must be where Dowman picked that one up.

Stewart said:

...and "pixel" for Thigle!?

Malcolm wrote:

Which of course is wrong because thigles are round whereas pixels are square or rectangular. In general, in Dzogchen teachings, corners represent limitations.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 14th, 2017 at 1:16 AM

Title: Re: anything similar to Choying Dzo...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, complete with alpha-pure as a translation of ka dag.

ratna said:

Indeed, unfortunately.

By the way, didn't you translate CYD back in the day? I seem to remember you quoting passages from the text on some forum (IIRC). Did you translate the whole thing?

R

Malcolm wrote:

I translated a large portion of it a long time ago. Now, I need to redo it from scratch.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 13th, 2017 at 11:47 AM

Title: Re: Engaged Buddhism comes in many political stripes

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The people who voted for the incompetent boob who presently is using up precious oxygen in the white house were idiots to do so. This is just a factual assessment, for example, like observing that it is raining outside.

anjali said:

Why do you believe that? It's certainly a matter of fact that people voted for Trump. It seems to me that it is a matter of opinion whether people are idiots because of it.

Malcolm wrote:

Have you been paying attention to the news? The saddest thing about it is that they have convinced themselves that the media is evil while they consume Donald J Trump who himself has been generated by the media for their consumption.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 13th, 2017 at 3:55 AM

Title: Re: THL is a wonderful resource but...

Content:

Lobsang Chojor said:

Malcolm, is it better to do a solid half an hour or break it into sessions totalling to half an hour?

Malcolm wrote:

one half hour without break.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 13th, 2017 at 3:24 AM

Title: Re: THL is a wonderful resource but...

Content:

florin said:

How about correct pronunciation and reading ?
Can they be learned without a teacher ?

Malcolm wrote:

There are any number of courses out there. However, in general, for most people, conversation is not the point.

florin said:

But if we want to be able to read and chant the texts of the various liturgies we would need serious work on pronunciation and that can only be done with the help of a native.

Malcolm wrote:

Which dialect? Lhasa? Amdo? Khams?

florin said:

Also if one wants to listen to advice and dharma talks in tibetan one would need to know how everything is pronounced and sounds, in which case just the written word found in books doesnt help much.

Malcolm wrote:

If you want to listen to to Dharma talks, you need much more than 1/2 hour a day. You need to be in a serious college level course for two years.

But to read a little bit and use a dictionary, etc., then my recommendation still stands.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 13th, 2017 at 3:22 AM

Title: Re: THL is a wonderful resource but...

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If you spent one half an hour a day studying Tibetan, within a year you would be able to effectively use that dictionary.

Grigoris said:

Half an hour a day? Challenge accepted! Could you please recommend a resource?

Malcolm wrote:

For home study, Manual of Colloquial Tibetan is ideal.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 13th, 2017 at 2:03 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

RikudouSennin said:

The Yoga of Prana for Clarity and Emptiness http://shangshung.org/store/index.php?main_page=product_info&products_id=751

Does this text require a transmission or is it for general prana practice?

Is yantra yoga lung and instructions sufficient?

Malcolm wrote:

It requires transmission. Write to the boss.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 13th, 2017 at 2:02 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Lukeinaz said:

Hello all,

Where may I find Rinpoche teaching about the Three Roots? I have started practising guru yoga and the words Deva and Dakini don't really mean anything to me, as I know not of what they represent.

Thank you

Malcolm wrote:

One practices the guru for blessings. The Deva is practiced for siddhis (devas are all male meditational deities). The dakini is practiced for activities (these include Simhamukha. etc.).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 13th, 2017 at 1:58 AM

Title: Re: anything similar to Choying Dzo...

Content:

Norwegian said:

I just struggle reading Richard Barron's translations of Longchenpa's Seven Treasuries (what is published so far). It's a kind of Dharma English that is a little different from what I'm used to and prefer, and that makes it harder for me.

tomamundsen said:

Is there another English translation of the commentary to Choying Dzod?

ratna said:

There's Ives Waldo's unpublished translation that was available upon request in the early 2000s on his now-defunct website.

R

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, complete with alpha-pure as a translation of ka dag.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 13th, 2017 at 12:52 AM

Title: Re: THL is a wonderful resource but...

Content:

florin said:

How about correct pronunciation and reading ?
Can they be learned without a teacher ?

Malcolm wrote:

There are any number of courses out there. However, in general, for most people, conversation is not the point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 12th, 2017 at 10:48 PM

Title: Re: THL is a wonderful resource but...

Content:

Fa Dao said:

half an hour? I could do that...although Im a little skeptical as I did Chinese language/literature/history for my undergrad and I seem to remember that it took considerably more time...but hey, youre the expert....cool thanks...what do you think of the TLI under Lama David Curtis for a learning resource?

Malcolm wrote:

It is fine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 12th, 2017 at 9:00 PM

Title: Re: Engaged Buddhism comes in many political stripes

Content:

Dharma Flower said:

Calling people idiots simply for voting differently from you doesn't convey Buddhist compassion, wisdom, or loving-kindness, especially since it ignores the serious weaknesses and shortcomings of Hillary Clinton as a candidate.

Wikileaks revealed how mainstream media outlets unethically colluded with the DNC and the Clinton campaign against Bernie Sanders:

<https://observer.com/2016/11/mainstream-media-recap-who-colluded-with-the-clinton-campaign/>

If Clinton lost the election, perhaps it's because she deserved to lose. Perhaps losing was her karma. Who knows? Nonetheless, I voted for her anyway.

Malcolm wrote:

The people who voted for the incompetent boob who presently is using up precious oxygen in the white house were idiots to do so. This is just a factual assessment, for example, like observing that it is raining outside.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 12th, 2017 at 8:58 PM

Title: Re: Engaged Buddhism comes in many political stripes

Content:

Sādhaka said:

Political debates on a Dharma forum is an cesspit (well, all political discussions are an cesspit; and Buddhist ones are certainly no exception).

Malcolm wrote:

Then why are you contributing effluents to it?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 12th, 2017 at 8:57 PM

Title: Re: THL is a wonderful resource but...

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Dont have 3+ hours a day for the next 10 years...was just looking for a little help at making some of these things more understandable to aid my practice.

Malcolm wrote:

The problem with that dictionary is that it is a collection of translations. Without learning Tibetan to some degree, it will be of little use to you.

If you spent one half an hour a day studying Tibetan, within a year you would be able to effectively use that dictionary.

Fa Dao said:

Some of us have to work full time jobs and any extra hours are used for actual practice...thanks anyways...

Malcolm wrote:

Learning a primary Dharma language is part of actual practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 12th, 2017 at 10:05 AM

Title: Re: The doctrine of no-self - teaching device or metaphysical truth?

Content:

fckw said:

What status do (Vajrayana-) Buddhists give to the open, space-like quality of mind in relation to an epistemic or ontological position?

Malcolm wrote:

It is free from all those positions.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, February 12th, 2017 at 10:02 AM
Title: Re: primordial buddhism
Content:
Minobu said:
so Malcolm what about overself guiding us

Malcolm wrote:
You have to be kidding...

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, February 12th, 2017 at 9:58 AM
Title: Re: Is Amida Buddha a real buddha?
Content:

Dharma Flower said:
Shinran understood Amida himself, above all other Buddhas, to be the Dharma-body from which all other Buddhas emanate .

<http://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=60&t=24825>

Shinan's understanding of Amida was similar to how esoteric Buddhists view Vairocana as the primordial Buddha. I am sorry if I am not explaining this very well.

Malcolm wrote:
The dharmakāya is beyond name. "Amitabha" is a name, as is Vairocana, Vajradhara, Samantabhadra, etc.

Dharma Flower said:
I recommend starting with the Essential Shinran by Alfred Bloom, which provides the essential teachings of Shinran in an easily digestible format, while providing very little of Bloom's own commentary.

Malcolm wrote:
I have read all of Shinran that has been translated into English. I like Shinran. Nevertheless, the dharmakāya is beyond any name, and any name you give to it is but a mere facet of its actuality.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, February 12th, 2017 at 6:24 AM
Title: Re: THL is a wonderful resource but...
Content:
Fa Dao said:
<http://www.thlib.org/reference/dictionaries/tibetan-dictionary/translate.php>

This is a great way to copy/paste Tibetan passages and get more than one dictionary giving a definition. The problem is that trying to put it into comprehensible English can be somewhat problematic. Any suggestions on a simple method one can use to do this so that one can have a deeper understanding of various passages and or sadhana?

Malcolm wrote:
Learn Tibetan.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, February 12th, 2017 at 6:19 AM
Title: Re: The Free Speech Wars Have Begun
Content:
kirtu said:
https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Greek_Volunteer_Guard

So again, why has this not resulted in war crimes trials at The Hague? Vitalis also claimed that Greek volunteers travelled to the conflict area with the supposed knowledge of senior Greek politicians .[18] Michas focused on inaction : "No-one tried to stop them and the Greek legal authorities made no attempt to assist the work of the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia at The Hague by pursuing inquiries about crimes the volunteers may have committed themselves or known about".[15]

One solution is to force compliance by removing them from NATO and the EU.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:
Good that you now acknowledge truth in Greg's claim. See, it wasn't so hard.

kirtu said:
It is what Hellenes have long feared: the shattering of a conspiracy of silence that has surrounded the role of Greek volunteers who proudly flew their flag at Srebrenica, after participating in Europe's worst massacre since the Second World War, when 7,000 men, women and children died.

Next week, as Greece settles into the presidency of the European Union, Milan Milutinovic, Serbia's recently retired president, will be brought before the war crimes tribunal at The Hague. Greek involvement in the atrocity, as well as other secrets Athens would prefer buried, could be revealed when the 60-year-old testifies...

A Dutch documentary investigating Greek complicity in the Serb wars was aired on local television in which a director of the semi-official Athens News Agency, Nikolas Voulelis, admitted to widespread censorship. During the wars the Greek media was fanatically pro-Serb, portraying Yugoslav Muslims as 'infidel Turks' bent on destroying their Orthodox brethren. 'Editorial interference was a given,' he said.

Malcolm wrote:

<https://www.theguardian.com/world/2003/jan/05/balkans.warcrimes>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 12th, 2017 at 6:18 AM

Title: Re: The Free Speech Wars Have Begun

Content:

kirtu said:

To allege that Andreas Papandreou played a role in the recruitment of Greek volunteers for genocide in Bosnia and Serbia is incendiary.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

Greg never once made that allegation. However, from the above Reuter's article: Greek Justice Minister Anastasios Papaligouras said in parliament on Friday Greek citizens may have taken part in the atrocity but ruled out that they were members of the country's armed forces.

kirtu said:

Greg didn't. But you did:

Secondly, Mr Vitalis admits that the recruitment of Greek volunteers for the war against the legitimate government of Bosnia took place with the implicit approval of the leading Greek politicians Andreas Papandreou and (to a lesser extent) Constantine Mitsotakis.

As he puts it:

“The whole of Greece knows that the Greek volunteers had the broad support of Greek society as a whole as well as the support of politicians, mainly belonging to PASOK, because of the warm friendship between Andreas Papandreou and Radovan Karadzic. They also enjoyed the support of New Democracy, through the friendly diplomatic initiatives of Constantine Mitsotakis.”

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

I did not make that assertion, that was the author of the book quoted above who argues that Vitalis made this claim. Further, it does not state Papandreou explicitly approved this, the author says that Vitalis claims that this recruitment took place with Papandreou's implicit approval, and then quotes in full what Vitalis said, "As he puts it: "The whole of Greece knows that the Greek volunteers had the broad support of Greek society as a whole as well as the support of politicians, mainly belonging to PASOK, because of the warm friendship between Andreas Papandreou and Radovan Karadzic. They also enjoyed the support of New Democracy, through the friendly diplomatic initiatives of Constantine Mitsotakis.””

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 12th, 2017 at 6:07 AM

Title: Re: The Free Speech Wars Have Begun

Content:

kirtu said:

To allege that Andreas Papandreou played a role in the recruitment of Greek volunteers for genocide in Bosnia and Serbia is incendiary.

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

Greg never once made that allegation. However, from the above Reuter's article: Greek Justice Minister Anastasios Papaligouras said in parliament on Friday Greek citizens may have taken part in the atrocity but ruled out that they were members of the country's armed forces.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 12th, 2017 at 6:04 AM

Title: Re: The Free Speech Wars Have Begun

Content:

kirtu said:

And where is the reliable reporting about this?

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

You yourself could have spent five minutes looking this up.

kirtu said:

It is incumbent upon the accuser to present evidence.

Malcolm wrote:

Nonsense, in this day and age, it is incumbent upon us all to fact check for ourselves. These are not normal times.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 12th, 2017 at 5:42 AM

Title: Re: The Free Speech Wars Have Begun

Content:

kirtu said:

And where is this evidence? And why are the participants not being pursued by the World Court for war crimes? Why did this not come out in the various war crimes trials in The Hague?

Kirt

Grigoris said:

Thye evidence is all over Greek Fascist and anti-Fascist sites. War crimes? Hague? International law? WTF you talkin' about?

kirtu said:

And where is the reliable reporting about this?

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

You yourself could have spent five minutes looking this up.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 12th, 2017 at 5:41 AM

Title: Re: The Free Speech Wars Have Begun

Content:

kirtu said:

What facts do you have that volunteer Greek fascist forces took part in the Yugoslavian Civil wars?

Kirt

Grigoris said:

Photo's and testimonies from the actual participants. Don't forget that these bozo's are actually proud of what they did. They consider it something positive: helping defend our Serbian Orthodox brothers against Islamic influence (and other such nonsense).

I have even seen photo's and testimonies of Greek Fascist volunteers in Syria fighting alongside Assad's forces. Again the photo's and testimonies are from the fighters themselves.

kirtu said:

And where is this evidence? And why are the participants not being pursued by the World Court for war crimes? Why did this not come out in the various war crimes trials in The Hague?

Kirt

Malcolm wrote:

Michas, Takis (2002). Unholy Alliance: Greece and Milosevic's Serbia in the Nineties. Texas A&M University Press. ISBN 1-58544-183-X.

kirtu said:

"Takis Michas' The Unholy Alliance constitutes an insightful analysis and devastating critique of Greece's reactive ethnonationalism. It should be essential reading not only for those in the West that are interested in Balkan politics but also for all those Greeks that take seriously the Socratic saying: 'Know thyself.'"--Nicos Mouzelis, London School of Economics

Greece starts probe into Srebrenica massacre

27 Jun 2005 11:09:59 GMT

Source: Reuters

By Karolos Grohmann

ATHENS, June 27 (Reuters) - An Athens prosecutor launched a preliminary investigation on Monday to determine whether Greeks took part with Bosnian Serbs in the 1995 massacre of up to 8,000 Muslims in Srebrenica.

The slaughter of the unarmed men and boys taken by the Bosnian Serb army from the U.N. protected area at Srebrenica was Europe's worst atrocity since World War Two.

Greek Justice Minister Anastasios Papaligouras said in parliament on Friday Greek citizens may have taken part in the atrocity but ruled out that they were members of the country's armed forces.

An unspecified number of Greek citizens volunteered to join fellow Orthodox Christian Serb forces fighting in the Yugoslav wars of the 1990s, saying they volunteered to support their "Orthodox brothers" in battle.

"A preliminary investigation is already under way by the prosecutor ... to determine whether there were Greek nationals involved in this," a Justice Ministry official told Reuters.

"Obviously this will not be a short investigation. It will not take just a few weeks. It will be longer than that."

The investigation, coming before the massacre's 10-year anniversary on July 11, was triggered by a Greek deputy's question to the country's justice minister to probe the matter of Greek participation in the massacre.

At the time, several of the Greek volunteers openly talked about their missions in the Greek media, but there had never been any mention of involvement in the Srebrenica massacre.

Greece, which traditionally has had better ties with Serbia and formerly with Yugoslavia than any of its other Balkan neighbours, was one of the strongest opponents of the NATO-led bombing campaign against Serbia during the 1999 Kosovo war.

While Belgrade has yet to officially acknowledge its support of Bosnian Serb forces during the Bosnian war, compelled by unrelenting Western pressure, the Bosnian Serb parliament earlier this year admitted the scale of the Srebrenica atrocity and Bosnian Serb responsibility for it.

Malcolm wrote:

And:

TAKIS MICHAS: Yes. First of all Mr. Vitalis explicitly admits that Greeks (i.e. himself) took part in the planning and execution of the Serb “re-occupation” (as he calls it) of Srebrenica. As he says in his press statement “I was present with a group of senior Serb officers in all the operations for the re-occupation of Srebrenica by the Serbs”.

Secondly, Mr Vitalis admits that the recruitment of Greek volunteers for the war against the legitimate government of Bosnia took place with the implicit approval of the leading Greek politicians Andreas Papandreu and (to a lesser extent) Constantine Mitsotakis. As he puts it:

“The whole of Greece knows that the Greek volunteers had the broad support of Greek society as a whole as well as the support of politicians, mainly belonging to PASOK, because of the warm friendship between Andreas Papandreu and Radovan Karadzic. They also enjoyed the support of New Democracy, through the friendly diplomatic initiatives of Constantine Mitsotakis.”

<http://www.bosniak.org/interview-greek-journalist-sued-for-writing-about-the-presence-of-greek-paramilitaries-in-bosnia/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 12th, 2017 at 5:06 AM

Title: Re: (carefully) Broadcasting Dzogchen through music

Content:

climb-up said:

Speaking of iffy...

...what do folks think about this?

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=hXVNT1rTTPI>

Malcolm wrote:

This guy is a student of Norbu Rinpoche's.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 12th, 2017 at 2:30 AM

Title: Re: Is Amida Buddha a real buddha?

Content:

Dharma Flower said:

Shinran understood Amida himself, above all other Buddhas, to be the Dharma-body from which all other Buddhas emanate .

<http://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=60&t=24825>

Shinran's understanding of Amida was similar to how esoteric Buddhists view Vairocana as the primordial Buddha. I am sorry if I am not explaining this very well.

Malcolm wrote:

The dharmakāya is beyond name. "Amitabha" is a name, as is Vairocana, Vajradhara, Samantabhadra, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 12th, 2017 at 1:23 AM

Title: Re: primordial buddhism

Content:

tingdzin said:

Everyone has his or her own opinion about "original Buddhism", and, not surprisingly, it's usually close to that of the school they personally prefer. If you really want a thorough answer to that question, you'll have to do a lot of research and make up your own mind.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed, we all know that Dzogchen is the original Buddhadharma.

anjali said:

Tingdzin, Malcolm's reply is a good example of your first point.

Malcolm wrote:

That was the point of my reply. And it illustrates the second of tingzin's point, "you'll have to do a lot of research and make up your own mind."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 11th, 2017 at 11:24 PM

Title: Re: Is Amida Buddha a real buddha?

Content:

DGA said:

In my opinion, that's their problem. I think you are better off relying on the guidance of authentic masters such as Shinran.

Dharma Flower said:

If one reads the writings of Shinran, one can see that he understood Amida to be more than a literal flesh and blood Buddha, but instead Dharma-body itself, the ultimate source of all Buddhahood.

Malcolm wrote:

The dharmakāya of all buddhas is single. There is only one teacher, the dharmakāya. Amitabha, Śākyamuni, etc., are all emanations that come from the dharmakāya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 11th, 2017 at 10:35 PM

Title: Re: The doctrine of no-self - teaching device or metaphysical truth?

Content:

fckw said:

Is the doctrine of "no-self" and/or "emptiness" merely meant to be merely a teaching device (i.e.: if you meditate on this you will gain certain specific insights) or is it meant to be a metaphysical truth?

Malcolm wrote:

It has both epistemic and ontological ramifications. Its epistemic ramification is that belief in a self is a false belief since there is no entity which can be taken as a self. Its ontological ramification is that questions of being and nonbeing are strictly conventional.

That being said, Buddhadharma certainly has a metaphysics, such doctrines as karma, rebirth, and so on are metaphysical in nature. Abhidharma deals with many metaphysical issues, such as the nature of time, the nature of causality, and so on. The literature of the Prajñāpāramita deals with the metaphysics of the bodhisattva path and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 11th, 2017 at 10:09 PM

Title: Re: Engaged Buddhism comes in many political stripes

Content:

boda said:

I've even started to visit Breitbart and the like, to counter whatever cognitive bias I may be clinging to. It's not so bad once you get over the initial gag response.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh please. Breitbart is a cesspit. I look at it merely to observe the pathology of the far right.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 11th, 2017 at 10:07 PM

Title: Re: Karmapa launches new multilingual Dharma-Ebooks and resources website

Content:

Vasana said:

"Today [10.2.17], the Gyalwang Karmapa launched his new website, Dharma eBooks, which will be a growing collection of texts, practices and commentaries - some of which have been difficult to find.

<http://www.dharmaebooks.org>

Dharma Ebooks is a site featuring ebook editions primarily of the Buddhist canon in Tibetan, Buddhist philosophical texts from the Tibetan traditions, and practice texts. Dharma Treasure has undertaken this project in accordance with the wishes of the Gyalwang Karmapa Ogyen Trinley Dorje.

Each text is translated into various languages and is available for download to iOS, Android, Kindle and others so that students can access Dharma books from wherever they are."

Malcolm wrote:

Too bad it is horribly slow.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 11th, 2017 at 9:59 PM

Title: Re: primordial buddhism

Content:

tingdzin said:

Everyone has his or her own opinion about "original Buddhism", and, not surprisingly, it's usually close to that of the school they personally prefer. If you really want a thorough answer to that question, you'll have to do a lot of research and make up your own mind.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed, we all know that Dzogchen is the original Buddhadharma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 11th, 2017 at 3:01 AM

Title: Re: Pedling Chökhör in France

Content:

Grigoris said:

Any idea what the cost will be?

Malcolm wrote:

<http://pelingtreasures.com/registration/>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 11th, 2017 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: lets talk The Buddha of Kuon Ganjo/Gakki view.

Content:

Queequeg said:

As far as I understand, Samantabhadra, who is the Primordial Buddha in Dzogchen, which is where Malcolm comes from, realized Buddhahood when this fundamental ignorance first arose. The rest of us, got tripped up by that fundamental ignorance and stumbled down into the muck of samsara.

I have never heard of this explanation of the first Buddha in the Lotus school.

The difference may be that Samantabhadra seems to be asserted as Dharmakaya only. I may be wrong. I don't know enough about it. I am only discussing this as way to illustrate what seems to be asserted in the Lotus schools.

Malcolm wrote:

The dharmakāya is the source of the rūpakāya. The nirmanakāya is not always manifest within time. This does not mean that there are no three kāyas. There are always three kāyas. But the nirmanakāya does not always manifest. For example, when the universe is in a pralaya state. At that point, only the sambhogakāya manifests. Specific conditions must be met for the manifestation of a supreme nirmanakāya. This is the subject of an elaborate buddhology in Dzogchen teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 11th, 2017 at 12:44 AM

Title: Re: Help! I think I'm slipping into nihilism ...

Content:

rachmiel said:

There's NOTHING, no solace, no balm, no fairy tales to get me through, no sense of ground, of wisdom. Just: a kind of all-encompassing despair.

Malcolm wrote:

When you realize there is no solace, no balm, no fairy take to get you through, no sense of ground, then you are free. Why? Because there is no solace, balm, convenient fairy tale, and no ground.

Why? Because there is no ultimate meaning. Meaning is relative.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 10th, 2017 at 11:38 PM

Title: Re: Kālacakra Vajrayoga & Dzogchen comparison

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

All right, thanks for the explanation. I'll just accept that for now as I'm not sufficiently learned anyway.

What would be the best step to take in order to enter the Dzogchen path for one based in Northern Europe, not speaking Tibetan and who is not currently in a position to travel far and wide?

Grigoris said:

<http://www.nyingma.com/ogyen-cho-khor-ling/tanzinrinpoche.htm> comes to Europe for teaching tours every summer. He teaches in Germany and the UK if you do not want to, or cannot, travel further south.

treehuggingoctopus said:

Greg, the link will not open.

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.nyingma.com/ogyen-cho-khor-ling/tanzinrinpoche.htm>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 10th, 2017 at 10:43 AM

Title: Re: Engaged Buddhism comes in many political stripes

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

Recognizing that people's politics, including our own, are hugely influenced by our demographics and not some meticulously thought out platform, I don't see the point in equating ignorance with active malevolence.

Malcolm wrote:

At this point, if people do not understand what is happening, it is in my opinion willful ignorance on their part.

boda said:

Willful ignorance is not overcome by an assumption of active malevolence. I see Monlam's point.

Malcolm wrote:

Willful ignorance is beligerant by nature.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 10th, 2017 at 10:37 AM

Title: Re: The Free Speech Wars Have Begun

Content:

Matt J said:

I agree. The left is conceding the high moral ground and choosing to mirror the tactics of the right. I'm not surprised, but I must confess I am quite disappointed at the views here. As Bodhisattvas dedicated to ending the suffering of all beings, it seems a bit inconsistent to grab immediately onto the tactics of violence and/or property destruction.

Malcolm wrote:

With respect to the environment, monkey wrenching is nothing new.

Matt J said:

If Buddhist practitioners of the Mahayana, who have profound teachings and practice for the sake of all beings are so eager to drop non-violence for violence and/or property destruction, then there is little hope for the world that has not accessed the teachings or availed themselves of the practices.

Malcolm wrote:

Ahimsa is deep, Evaluating harm to sentient beings and arriving at a rational response is not something which may be evaluated on the basis of superficial appearances. Also, it is not like we have not been here before.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 10th, 2017 at 4:53 AM

Title: Re: The Free Speech Wars Have Begun

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

Okay, you win Malcolm.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is in this time we need more direct action. Not violence against people, but I have no problem with monkey wrenching or anything else that impedes the wholesale destruction of the world.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 10th, 2017 at 4:09 AM

Title: Re: The Free Speech Wars Have Begun

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

If the only choices people see are to either yell louder or to inflict harm on our enemies, then things will only escalate, and have.

Grigoris said:

We only have one choice: to stop those that are wanting to, or are causing, harm.

Have you ever been on the receiving end of fascist violence?

Monlam Tharchin said:

Let's please not make assumptions like this. I'm not comfortable talking in more depth on my own experiences as a minority on a public forum.

Also, the rest of my post I thought was clear enough on why I personally will not condone anger in my life.

Also, MLK still spoke to compassion and working to speak to the hearts of our enemies even in the circumstances he faced.

I find that inspiring and a personal goal.

Malcolm wrote:

He also excluded property damage from his definition of violence. And in fact, so does the law. Crimes against property (destruction, theft, etc.) are all defined as nonviolent; crimes against people (assault, rape, murder, etc.) are all defined as violent.

He also said:

You deplore the demonstrations taking place in Birmingham. But your statement, I am sorry to say, fails to express a similar concern for the conditions that brought about the demonstrations. I am sure that none of you would want to rest content with the superficial kind of social analysis that deals merely with effects and does not grapple with underlying causes. It is unfortunate that demonstrations are taking place in Birmingham, but it is even more unfortunate that the city's white power structure left the Negro community with no alternative.

And:

I must make two honest confessions to you, my Christian and Jewish brothers. First, I must confess that over the past few years I have been gravely disappointed with the white moderate. I have almost reached the regrettable conclusion that the Negro's great stumbling block in his stride toward freedom is not the White Citizen's Council or the Ku Klux Klanner, but the white moderate, who is more devoted to 'order' than to justice; who prefers a negative peace which is the absence of tension to a positive peace which is the presence of justice; who constantly says: 'I agree with you in the goal you seek, but I cannot agree with your methods of direct action'; who paternalistically believes he can set the timetable for another man's freedom; who lives by a mythical concept of time and who constantly advises the Negro to wait for a 'more convenient season.' Shallow understanding from people of good will is more frustrating than absolute misunderstanding from people of ill will. Lukewarm acceptance is much more bewildering than outright rejection.

And:

We know through painful experience that freedom is never voluntarily given by the oppressor; it must be demanded by the oppressed. Frankly, I have yet to engage in a direct action campaign that was “well timed” in the view of those who have not suffered unduly from the disease of segregation. . . . We have waited more than 340 years for our constitutional and God-given rights.”

“Letter from a Birmingham Jail,” April 16, 1963

Monlam Tharchin said:

And one day we must ask the question, ‘Why are there forty million poor people in America? And when you begin to ask that question, you are raising questions about the economic system, about a broader distribution of wealth.’ When you ask that question, you begin to question the capitalistic economy. And I’m simply saying that more and more, we’ve got to begin to ask questions about the whole society.”

Malcolm wrote:

Speech to SCLC, Atlanta, Georgia, Aug. 16, 1967

Monlam Tharchin said:

The evils of capitalism are as real as the evils of militarism and evils of racism.

Malcolm wrote:

Speech to SCLC Board, March 30, 1967

It is not a time for moderation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 10th, 2017 at 3:03 AM

Title: Re: Engaged Buddhism comes in many political stripes

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

And there is a decided lack of mutual care and tact in nearly all political dialogue I've witnessed, including on DW.

Malcolm wrote:

Are you now claiming to be inside people's heads? We live in a time where the GOP, as a matter of policy, is encouraging fiscal, military, and environmental policies which are wholly irresponsible and will damage all life on the planet for centuries, if not millenia. Sorry, but I think that outweighs any concern for the feelings of the people contributing to this catastrophe. I simply do not care about their feelings. They are destroying the world.

Monlam Tharchin said:

Malcolm, this is an example of what I mean.

Accusations is a poor way to continue a conversation.

As I said in my post you quoted, I tend to end up as far left on the scale as a test can put me.

So I find any policy which harms people and the environment, often for the sake of a few extra dollars or a little more power, to be really detrimental both to society and to the people crippled by selfishness.

This to me seems to be common sense, and a basic empathy for others.

So I'm not at all arguing about the GOP or Dems but the way these things get talked about.

Malcolm wrote:

We have to talk about these things honestly. When we do, it will hurt their feelings and frighten them.

Monlam Tharchin said:

Recognizing that people's politics, including our own, are hugely influenced by our demographics and not some meticulously thought out platform, I don't see the point in equating ignorance with active malevolence.

Malcolm wrote:

At this point, if people do not understand what is happening, it is in my opinion willful ignorance on their part.

Monlam Tharchin said:

The moment we turn someone's harmful view into "bigot" or "people who actively want me to die" (as a friend said) then there is no grounds for reconciliation. Few things seem to conjure up Self and Others as quickly as politics, and suffering isn't far behind.

Malcolm wrote:

People who hold biased views against Muslims, Jews, Latinos, Blacks, etc., are bigots. There is no other word for it.

Monlam Tharchin said:

I'm not at all advocating inaction or passive martyrdom. Hatred/anger or inaction is a false dichotomy.

Malcolm wrote:

Not sure what you are advocating, other than you do not like the tone of the present political climate. Strap in, it will get worse before it gets better.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 10th, 2017 at 2:36 AM

Title: Re: The Free Speech Wars Have Begun

Content:

Matt J said:

Firebombing GOP headquarters in North Carolina?

treehuggingoctopus said:

I do not think that punching a Nazi can be compared to firebombing GOP headquarters.

Monlam Tharchin said:

Neither are excusable to begin with, are they?

Malcolm wrote:

Are you a pacifist?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 10th, 2017 at 2:17 AM

Title: Re: Engaged Buddhism comes in many political stripes

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

And there is a decided lack of mutual care and tact in nearly all political dialogue I've witnessed, including on DW.

Malcolm wrote:

Are you now claiming to be inside people's heads? We live in a time where the GOP, as a matter of policy, is encouraging fiscal, military, and environmental policies which are wholly irresponsible and will damage all life on the planet for centuries, if not millenia. Sorry, but I think that outweighs any concern for the feelings of the people contributing to this catastrophe. I simply do not care about their feelings. They are destroying the world.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 10th, 2017 at 1:44 AM

Title: Re: Engaged Buddhism comes in many political stripes

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

I think I mentioned it in another thread, but among my peers, being conservative or even not supporting X or Y position automatically makes you racist/sexist/bigoted/hateful.

Malcolm wrote:

The consequence of Republican politics is racist and sexist. This way, republicans get to support racist and sexist policies without having to individually cop to being personally racist or sexist.

Monlam Tharchin said:

I don't know, I feel the rest of my post already answered what you're saying.

Caring for all beings like a mother for her only child includes Republicans.

I find the rhetoric used on the Left (such as with my friends and sometimes here on DW) does not reflect this, and does not help the issue.

Malcolm wrote:

Caring for people does not preclude one from observing their faults.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 10th, 2017 at 1:29 AM

Title: Re: Engaged Buddhism comes in many political stripes

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

I think I mentioned it in another thread, but among my peers, being conservative or even not supporting X or Y position automatically makes you racist/sexist/bigoted/hateful.

Malcolm wrote:

The consequence of Republican politics is racist and sexist. This way, republicans get to support racist and sexist policies without having to individually cop to being personally racist or sexist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 10th, 2017 at 1:25 AM

Title: Re: The Free Speech Wars Have Begun

Content:

Matt J said:

Firebombing GOP headquarters in North Carolina?

Malcolm wrote:

We do not know who did this. No one has been arrested. No one has taken credit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 10th, 2017 at 12:30 AM

Title: Re: The Free Speech Wars Have Begun

Content:

Matt J said:

It seems to me that we may be witnessing an increased radicalization of the left, and the left deciding it may be more comfortable with the use of violence to secure political ends (in the USA anyway).

Malcolm wrote:

I don't see left wing people facing down the ATF and FBI, armed to the teeth, anywhere. But this happens on the lunatic fringe of the right with regularity. There exist no lunatics like Alex Jones on the left.

It has been two decades+ since the last left-wing terrorist attack happened in the USA.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 9th, 2017 at 11:40 PM

Title: Re: The Free Speech Wars Have Begun

Content:

Fa Dao said:

interesting commentary by Dave Rubin...

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=p_KUf_giuZo

Malcolm wrote:

The free speech wars really haven't begun.

This is just whinging from people like Sam Harris et al who want to be able to say nasty, inaccurate things about religious groups without other people complaining about their bullshit in response. In a society based on free speech, you have to expect pushback when one says controversial things.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 9th, 2017 at 11:03 PM

Title: Re: Offering Mandala

Content:

alexprice said:

A practice I'd like to do requires making an offering mandala "the size of one's forearm." What does making an offering mandala entail? In its most basic essential form.

Also, there are instructions to sprinkle it with rakta. I know what this means but am wondering what is usually used for it in actual practice?

best

alex

Malcolm wrote:

You do not sprinkle your mandala with blood, symbolic or otherwise. You sprinkle it with saffron water.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 9th, 2017 at 10:12 AM

Title: Re: Illuminating Quotes by Malcolm Namdrol-la

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Attend all webcasts of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu you can and receive transmission, work with some Dzogchen methods, decide to go somewhere and meet him when you have the chance, and then continue to learn Dzogchen from him directly. He generally spends 6 months a year in Tenerife. He is there presently. He is the most interesting master alive today, without parallel.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 9th, 2017 at 10:05 AM

Title: Re: Kālacakra Vajrayoga & Dzogchen comparison

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

All right, thanks for the explanation. I'll just accept that for now as I'm not sufficiently learned anyway.

What would be the best step to take in order to enter the Dzogchen path for one based in Northern Europe, not speaking Tibetan and who is not currently in a position to travel far and wide?

Malcolm wrote:

Attend all webcast of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu you can, receive transmission, work with some Dzogchen methods, decide to go somewhere and meet him when you have the chance, and then continue to learn Dzogchen from him directly. He generally spends 6 months a year in Tenerife. He is there presently.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 9th, 2017 at 6:06 AM

Title: Re: Kālacakra Vajrayoga & Dzogchen comparison

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

Thanks for replying, but honestly that goes a bit over my head at the moment.

Do not many Dzogchenpas sympathise with the Zhentong view at least insofar as Madhyamaka is concerned? Likewise Dzogchen is a part of the Jonang instructions, though practice of Vajrayoga is more universal within that tradition.

Malcolm wrote:

Some Dzogchenpas may, but it is nowhere near universal. Longchenpa states quite clearly that the view of Dzogchen and the view of Prasanga Madhyamaka are compatible.

Vidyavajra said:

The eminent Dzogchen masters that were also the instigators of the Rimé movement were at least highly approving of zhentong (see 'The Buddha from Dolpo' for more information on this). Jonang 'maha-madhyamaka' embraces both zhentong and rangtong as sides of the same coin anyway.

Malcolm wrote:

There is no such thing as rang stong. This is a strawman position that gzhan stong pas invented with which to contrast their view.

In the 15th century, Gorampa Sonam Senge, a major Sakya critic of gzhan stong view, pointed out that in Vajrayāna it does not matter very much what sutrayāna view one holds because the actual view one practices is based upon the experience introduced in the fourth empowerment.

Khyentse Wangpo, in light of this fact, therefore treated all version of madhyamaka equally, presenting the freedom from extremes view, the other emptiness view, and the view of Tsongkhapa side by side without making any preferential statements as to which he preferred.

Vidyavajra said:

For example, Chogyal Namkhai Norbu has, several times over the years, explained why gzhan stong view is incompatible with Dzogchen. It mainly has to do with the gzhan stong assertion that qualities are already fully formed within sentient beings, not as mere potentials which can manifest.

Just out of curiosity, have you studied any full-length works of Dolpopa yourself, or Taranatha's elaborations on the matter?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and Śākya Chogden, Kongtrul, Tsongkhapa, Kedrupje, etc., etc.

Vidyavajra said:

I respect Chogyal Namkhai Norbu, but I don't take him as a final authority on this question when clearly other views on the matter are legitimate too.

Malcolm wrote:

In terms of masters both living and present, no one is in a position to argue with Norbu Rinpoche about whether or not gzhan stong view is ultimately compatible with Dzogchen practice. Suffice it to say that the Dzogchen view of the basis holds that it is utterly empty of all extremes and is not itself something real. The qualities of the buddha are not manifest in the basis, and as such, this is rejected in the first of the six faulty argument concerning the basis, which is a standard presentation in Dzogchen Man ngag sde.

It is sufficient to take Longchenpa as the final authority on the matter. Longchenpa proclaimed that Prasangika was the definitive madhyamaka view; he also proclaimed that the tathāgatagarbha sūtras were definitive. Doesn't this make him a gzhan stong pa? No. The primary reason is that he eschewed the gzhan stong attempt to reconcile the three natures with the two truths. The latter point in fact is the where gzhan stong position goes astray.

Vidyavajra said:

The distinction you point out does not seem to be of great consequence as far as actual realization is concerned. It's mainly petty bickering about how to verbalise and conceptualise the same truth in the most precise way.

Malcolm wrote:

No, there are serious flaws in the gdzhan stong presentation of the three natures which contradict the way they are explained by Maitreyanatha, Asanga, and Vasubandhu. You should read <http://wordpress.tsadra.org/?p=1215>. He is perhaps on the world's leading expert on gzhan stong and is Indian antecedents.

We can argue the relative merits of this sūtrayāna point of view or that one, but they are all the same in so far as they are intellectual analysis and in the end do not actually lead anywhere except to endless proliferation. At a certain point, they must be dropped and abandoned so that one can enter the experiential view gained in the fourth empowerment/direct introduction/pointing out.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 9th, 2017 at 1:03 AM

Title: Re: Retroactivity of Awakening

Content:

Minobu said:

Sometimes do Dzogchen views differ from other mahayana views concerning how Buddhas exist.

Malcolm wrote:

Not really so much. They are a little more elaborate perhaps, but not really different at all. Even though Dzogchen talks about an "adibuddha" for example, it is didactic, not actual.

Minobu said:

are Dzogchen teachings on things like how Buddhas perceive time and even more importantly exist in time or not exist time vastly different from other mahayana views .

Malcolm wrote:

Not at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 8th, 2017 at 11:42 PM

Title: Re: Retroactivity of Awakening

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Basically, there are two (or more) notions: Buddhahood is without time, from the perspective of Buddhahood, there has never been delusion, because Awakening is retroactive:

Malcolm wrote:

As for obscurations, they are not real, substantial things that need to be removed, like a stain from clothes. As the famous Haribhadra points out, when one achieves buddhahood, one understands one was never deluded all along. As Maitreyanath states, "Nothing here to add, nothing here to remove."

I think what is confusing is your use of the term "retroactive."

Buddhas do not live in time. They do not perceive time. Time is a relative cognition. Buddhas have no relative cognitions. Nevertheless, conventionally, buddhas arise in time, and at one time there was a moment when every buddha was not a buddha, including Buddha Samantabhadra, the so called "adi-buddha." This is why in Dzogchen teachings we talk generically about a time when buddhahood has not been realized and there were no deluded sentient beings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 8th, 2017 at 11:23 PM

Title: Re: Retroactivity of Awakening

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Which Buddha? Śākyamuni?

Coëmgenu said:

All of them. The specific literature being dealt with specifically deals with Śākyamuni, but it doesn't not label him necessarily as a special Buddha who is significantly different than any other Buddha in regards to his Awakening/Lifespan/etc. I don't think, at least.

Malcolm wrote:

This idea then flies in the face of dependent origination. It means that aspirations for buddhahood, etc., are all meaningless.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 8th, 2017 at 11:01 PM

Title: Re: Retroactivity of Awakening

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Greetings all,

A while ago, I proposed a thought-experiment based on a surface-level, or literalist, reading of the description of the Buddha's Awakening and Buddhist Lifespan based on Chapter 16 of the Lotus Sutra, which declares one (or both) of the following readings (or neither, to cover myself if my wrongness in these speculative interpretations is irreconcilable with any mainstream Buddhology).

1) the Awakening of the Buddha is retroactive, having never occurred once it has occurred, as much of a contradiction that may seem, speaking on terms of general conventionality. It is in this way that Buddhahood is beginningless.

2) the Awakening of the Buddha is non-retroactive, thus is temporal, and is fundamentally tied to the conditions and historical reality of a certain moment in time, perhaps even a certain specific and particular experienced dharma, most likely the particular asamskrta (unconditioned) dharma of nirvana itself. Chapter 16 merely labels the experience of the asamskrta-dharma as occurring "measureless" time before because the amount of time that has passed, since the asamskrta-dharma-experience, is uncountable by anyone or anything on account of the sheer size of the number, for no other reason. Since the beginning of this Buddhahood, as a date/time, is unknowable, it falls beyond the purview of the "All" as outlined in, say, the Sabbasutta of the Pāli nikāya-literature, and thus cannot be said to exist. It is in this way that Buddhahood is beginningless.

Which one of these readings (or neither) seems more likely?

Malcolm wrote:

Which Buddha? Śākyamuni?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 8th, 2017 at 9:34 PM

Title: Re: Engaged Buddhism comes in many political stripes

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Voting for Trump is not a moral failing, frankly, if anything it's probably an intellectual one.

Malcolm wrote:

It is both.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 8th, 2017 at 9:29 PM

Title: Re: Kālacakra Vajrayoga & Dzogchen comparison

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

Thanks for replying, but honestly that goes a bit over my head at the moment.

Do not many Dzogchenpas sympathise with the Zhentong view at least insofar as Madhyamaka is concerned? Likewise Dzogchen is a part of the Jonang instructions, though practice of Vajrayoga is more universal within that tradition.

Malcolm wrote:

Some Dzogchenpas may, but it is nowhere near universal. Longchenpa states quite clearly that the view of Dzogchen and the view of Prasanga Madhyamaka are compatible.

For example, Chogyal Namkhai Norbu has, several times over the years, explained why gzhan stong view is incompatible with Dzogchen. It mainly has to do with the gzhan stong assertion that qualities are already fully formed within sentient beings, not as mere potentials which can manifest.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 8th, 2017 at 4:26 AM

Title: Re: Lower Realms and Tathagata Gharba

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

But we have strayed from the original topic, have we not?

Malcolm wrote:

Always an ever present risk on DW.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 8th, 2017 at 4:01 AM

Title: Re: Lower Realms and Tathagata Gharba

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

It is exceptionally true.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is just your opinion.

Vidyavajra said:

I don't think the view I expressed regarding Buddhahood is pessimistic. For the bodhisattva, it does not matter how long it will take to completely manifest Buddhahood, because he realizes that Samsara and Nirvana are just expressions of the same Reality. We are aware that we already live through Enlightenment, the entire long, hard quest is real only on the relative and illusory level, so we do not feel trapped in this quest or craving for immediate release. Completely manifested Buddhahood will come in its time, and meanwhile we do what we do in utter freedom.

But look, which masters alive today do actually claim to be total Buddhas? Which of these many Buddhas is the Buddha Maitreya? Perhaps this guy, who does claim to be a Buddha superior even to Shakyamuni?

Malcolm wrote:

There is no point to Vajrayāna if we take your view seriously.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 8th, 2017 at 3:40 AM

Title: Re: Lower Realms and Tathagata Gharba

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

Well, I'll have to do some deeper inquiries into this myself. It seems a strange classification to me, but I am not a master.

Malcolm wrote:

Mlpham lists Nāgas at the head of his list of animals in Sanskrit/Tibetan glossary, followed by birds, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 8th, 2017 at 3:28 AM

Title: Re: Lower Realms and Tathagata Gharba

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

Are there bodhisattvas alive today who have had high illuminating realizations? Yes, but not one single person who cannot still go much further. In other words, no Buddhas. So you see, even for humans this is an extremely difficult realization.

Malcolm wrote:

This is excessively pessimistic.

Vidyavajra said:

It is exceptionally true.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is just your opinion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 8th, 2017 at 3:25 AM

Title: Re: Lower Realms and Tathagata Gharba

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

Can the claim that animals may achieve Buddhahood be firmly established from traditional sources? I don't think so.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it can. Nāgas, mahorāgas, kinnaras, etc., are kinds of animals and they are clearly depicted in Mahāyāna sources as capable of attaining awakening. This is an old argument, settled a long time ago.

Vidyavajra said:

Here I actually have to strongly disagree. 'Animals' is a large category of beings, but not one single natural animal on our Earth is comparable to how the Nagas are traditionally described in Indian traditions ranging from Hinduism to Buddhism. Nagas have an intellect that resembles humans rather than any animal on this planet. Why then consider the Naga an animal?! Of course, moderns see humans as just another animal as well, but traditional Buddhadharma doesn't. Nagas are traditionally known for their intelligence.

Malcolm wrote:

Traditional Buddhism classifies nāgas as animals. As I said, this is an old argument, settled along ago.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 8th, 2017 at 3:12 AM

Title: Re: Lower Realms and Tathagata Gharba

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

Are there bodhisattvas alive today who have had high illuminating realizations? Yes, but not one single person who cannot still go much further. In other words, no Buddhas. So you see, even for humans this is an extremely difficult realization.

Malcolm wrote:

This is excessively pessimistic.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 8th, 2017 at 3:10 AM

Title: Re: Lower Realms and Tathagata Gharba

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

Animals can achieve buddhahood but in general not through teachings intended for other beings nor can be tamed in conventional way. First we need the capability of communicate with them effectibly, second we need the right message according to their individual condition[...etc]

Vidyavajra said:

Can the claim that animals may achieve Buddhahood be firmly established from traditional sources? I don't think so.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it can. Nāgas, mahorāgas, kinnaras, etc., are kinds of animals and they are clearly depicted in Mahāyāna sources as capable of attaining awakening. This is an old argument, settled a long time ago.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 8th, 2017 at 2:37 AM

Title: Re: Bodhisattvas and No self or others?

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

Thank goodness helping others is just a matter of projection and perception. Then I don't ever have to leave my house.

The person starving at my doorstep or my estranged family member will be equally helped as if I had heard their needs and tried to respond.

I'm bringing this up in a cantankerous way, but can someone please explain how this is a faulty interpretation?

Whenever I see "saving" or "helping" others explained as a kind of trick of perception I get very concerned and confused.

Malcolm wrote:

It is an established doctrine in several Tibetan Buddhists schools that buddhas only see buddhas, and that compassion for sentient beings is spontaneous and not intentional.

Monlam Tharchin said:

Greetings, Malcolm. How does this apply to the 99.9% of us who are not yet buddhas?

Malcolm wrote:

Compassion is an innate part of our nature. So one should feel free to let it express itself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 8th, 2017 at 12:35 AM

Title: Re: Bodhisattvas and No self or others?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Here's a passage that seems relevant, from Thinley Norbu's "Echoes": In the Nyingma tradition, saving all sentient beings from suffering is described in terms of one's own perception. This means that the field that we experience as "other" is based on the perception of a "self," and social experience is based on individual experience. This does not make individual experience or the individual himself any more important, however, and individual perception remains erroneous. But if one can recognize fundamental awareness, the basis of one's own perception, one can transform individual experience into wisdom and therefore attain realization. With the attainment of this freedom of wisdom, there is no longer any erroneous projection of an external world. Ceasing to project an erroneous external world is called "saving all sentient beings from suffering in terms of one's own perception."

Monlam Tharchin said:

Thank goodness helping others is just a matter of projection and perception. Then I don't ever have to leave my house.

The person starving at my doorstep or my estranged family member will be equally helped as if I had heard their needs and tried to respond.

I'm bringing this up in a cantankerous way, but can someone please explain how this is a faulty interpretation?

Whenever I see "saving" or "helping" others explained as a kind of trick of perception I get very concerned and confused.

Malcolm wrote:

It is an established doctrine in several Tibetan Buddhist schools that buddhas only see buddhas, and that compassion for sentient beings is spontaneous and not intentional.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 8th, 2017 at 12:25 AM

Title: Re: Engaged Buddhism comes in many political stripes

Content:

Wonderful Law-Flower said:

I didn't start this thread to promote Donald Trump. I didn't vote for the man and I find him to be distasteful, to say the least. My only point was to show tolerance and understanding for Buddhists who, for whatever reason, voted for him. For the sake of compassionate understanding, here are some testimonies of Buddhists who voted for Trump:

hardcorezen.info/buddhists-for-trump/4994

hardcorezen.info/buddhists-for-trump-part-2/5006

Malcolm wrote:

These people are idiots. They have no idea what they have done to the world.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 7th, 2017 at 11:01 PM

Title: Re: Shinnyo-en?

Content:

Karunamata said:

Both the Tibetan and the Shingon lineages are thoroughly focused on monks and nuns. At least Tibetan monks travel and teach. But when you go to a venue to receive teaching, you risk getting a cramp in your neck, looking up to the monk, seated in an elaborate throne, high above us mere mortals.

Malcolm wrote:

A completely false mischaracterization of Tibetan Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 7th, 2017 at 10:21 PM

Title: Re: Kālacakra Vajrayoga & Dzogchen comparison

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

Thank you for your reply, Malcolm.

Are there other reasons also for your opinion that Dzogchen is more profound aside from its lack of the two stages anuttarayogatantra approach?

Regarding Mahamudra, I was of the impression that it still is more closely related to Kalacakra Vajrayoga than Dzogchen since it is anuttarayogatantra?

I get what you're saying about the view, but even amongst Jonangpa practitioners an often recurring question seems to be about the exact difference in view between Dzogchen and the tradition of their own school, meaning that it is not always so obvious. See for example:

<http://www.jonangfoundation.org/blog/dzogchen-zhentong>

Malcolm wrote:

Kalacakra and other niruttara systems rely on relative nāḍīs and bindus; Dzogchen relies on ultimate nāḍīs and bindus.

Jonang errs in holding that the basis is only naturally perfect. They do not accept that the basis is intrinsically empty as well as naturally perfect. The Dzogchen view of the basis is called "great original purity," in other words, the basis is both intrinsically empty and naturally perfected.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 7th, 2017 at 10:15 PM

Title: Re: Longchenpa - custom of study and practice for 145 days

Content:

hupa3000 said:

In HHDL's Book 'Meditation on the Nature of Mind'

By Dalai Lama, Khonton Peljor Lhundrub, Jose Ignacio Cabezon and also as can be seen here

"Dalai Lama speaks on Nyingma Dzogchen (Nature of the Mind) 2009"

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=nWvY-05OA90>

HHDL mentions:

Such an approach, where a vast body of literature is taken as individual instructions for practice, is also possible, for example, in regard to the Seven Treasuries of Longchenpa. I normally recommend that those who wish to practice Dzogchen proceed by first studying Longchenpa's Treasury of Philosophical Tenets, to follow that with study of his Treasury of the Wish-Fulfilling Jewel, and then to move to his Mind at Ease, part of his so-called Trilogy on Being at Ease.

There is a custom of engaging in the study and practice of this latter text over a period of 145 days.

From that point one proceeds to Longchenpa's Treasury of the Supreme Vehicle and then to his Treasury of the Ultimate Expanse. This represents a very systematic and holistic approach to the study of Dzogchen. My more general point here is that it is very important to have an overall understanding of the basic framework of the Buddhist path. Of course, some fortunate individuals with positive karmic imprints from previous lives may be able to generate spiritual realization spontaneously by way of a tailored instruction from an experienced master. Such individuals are called "exceptional." But generally, for most practitioners, it is better to have this broad understanding of the structure of the whole Buddhist path and to engage in specific practices on the basis of that understanding.

Anyone know about this custom of study and practice for 145 days please?

I've had a quick look online and in some books but couldn't find anything specifically related

Thank you

Malcolm wrote:

There is a specific book in the Trilogy referred to above that divides the topics of meditation into 145 sessions.

Tulku Dakpa is teaching the above text in Finland, and as part of the curriculum, he is having people practice in this way.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 7th, 2017 at 10:15 AM

Title: Re: Kālacakra Vajrayoga & Dzogchen comparison

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

How much does the approach of Dzogchen/Atiyoga and the Vajrayogas of the Kalacakra completion stage (primarily held by the Jonang Zhentong tradition) differ from one another?

Malcolm wrote:

Completely. The former is not based on the two stages; the latter is based on the two stages.

Vidyavajra said:

To what degree, if any, do they bring different results? For example, can the fruition of Vajrayoga manifest the rainbow body, or is this result exclusively linked to Dzogchen realization?

Malcolm wrote:

One can achieved rainbow body with either system. Dzogchen is more direct and efficient because its view and practice is more profound.

Vidyavajra said:

Would you say that Vajrayoga is closer related to Mahamudra than Atiyoga in terms of practice-approach?

Malcolm wrote:

Kagyu Mahāmudra is very similar to Dzogchen Mind Series in view and approach.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 7th, 2017 at 10:14 AM

Title: Re: The 3 Jewels in Vajrayana practice

Content:

smcj said:

Even ChNN, who eschews most of the Vajrayana ...

dzogchungpa said:

This is going to be good.

Malcolm wrote:

Fake news.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 7th, 2017 at 1:12 AM

Title: Re: The 3 Jewels in Vajrayana practice

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The single jewel which includes all.

Coëmgenu said:

Would you characterize this as a common term in mainstream Tibetan Buddhism? Like if I said "one-jewel practice" or "single jewel practice" would people know I was talking about interpreting the 3 jewels as metaphorically subsumed within the teacher? If it is such a term, what is the Tibetan-language rendering?

Thank you for your time. I have little access to actual Vajrayāna in rural Ontario, being beholden to books and what I find on the internet.

Malcolm wrote:

Not necessarily. However, all will be acquainted with the idea that the three refuges are included in the Guru.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 7th, 2017 at 12:40 AM

Title: Re: The 3 Jewels in Vajrayana practice

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

I recently learned that "Lamaism" is a term coined by an Arian-supremacist Buddhologist, and carries all sorts of old British colonial weight to it, whereas before I had always assumed that name was employed because of the practice of interpreting the the 3 refuges as having an inner core of meaning that pertain to the role of the Guru/Lama (i.e. the mind, speech, and body of the guru).

Since Lamaism is an offensive term (and also apparently racially charged), what is the actual native Tibetan term for this interpretation of taking refuge in the three jewels?

Malcolm wrote:

The single jewel which includes all.

In fact, the Lotus Sūtra predicts that the Buddha will emanate as gurus in the future. The Lotus Sūtra is used in Tibetan Buddhism as a proof text for the practice of guru yoga.

Coëmgenu said:

Is the "single jewel" analogous to ekayāna?

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is a reference to the idea that the Guru includes the Three Jewels— his mind is the Buddha, his speech is the Dharma, and his body is the Sangha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, February 7th, 2017 at 12:25 AM

Title: Re: The 3 Jewels in Vajrayana practice

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

I recently learned that "Lamaism" is a term coined by an Arian-supremacist Buddhologist, and carries all sorts of old British colonial weight to it, whereas before I had always assumed that name was employed because of the practice of interpreting the the 3 refuges as having an inner core of meaning that pertain to the role of the Guru/Lama (i.e. the mind, speech, and body of the guru).

Since Lamaism is an offensive term (and also apparently racially charged), what is the actual native Tibetan term for this interpretation of taking refuge in the three jewels?

Malcolm wrote:

The single jewel which includes all.

In fact, the Lotus Sūtra predicts that the Buddha will emanate as gurus in the future. The Lotus Sūtra is used in Tibetan Buddhism as a proof text for the practice of guru yoga.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 6th, 2017 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: Guru Yoga & Lamaism: Speculations on Shingon and Nichiren Schools

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

No one made up "Lamaism" because they hated Tibetans.

Malcolm wrote:

False, the term was coined by Waddel, who hated Tibetans as much as he was fascinated by them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 6th, 2017 at 11:17 PM

Title: Re: Maajid Nawaz's response to SPLC's list

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Oh come, get serious. This is about as likely to happen as Trump's wall being built. This is hysteria.

michaelb said:

Whether the aims of extremists are realisable or not is not the point. The point is they wish to subvert and undermine democracy and they can then act in various ways to do that. In some constituencies during the last UK election some Jihadists were reportedly telling Muslim constituents not to vote.

<http://www.independent.co.uk/news/uk/politics/generalelection/general-election-2015-posters-seen-in-cardiff-tell-muslims-not-to-vote-10186497.html>

There are other more violent ways to subvert democracy, of course, and non-violent Islamist groups have been at the forefront in disseminating jihadist propaganda and encouraging Muslims to travel to Syria to join IS. Almost a thousand UK citizens have made that journey.

It is interesting that you view the impossibility of realising an aspiration as reason not to worry about it. So, we should not worry about Trump's wall?

Malcolm wrote:

No, there are not. Please consult this and stop spreading baseless rumors.

<http://www.independent.co.uk/voices/the-truth-about-muslims-and-sex-slavery-according-to-the-quran-rather-than-isis-or-islamophobes-a6875446.html>

michaelb said:

As the article you link to makes clear, Islamist extremists are very happy to justify their rape of non-muslims using quotes from the Quran. Abu Bakr al Baghdadi, with his PhD in Islamic Studies focusing on Sharia Law (you will have to ask him which version), certainly uses the Quran to justify his actions, such as the repeated rape and murder of "Free Tibet" activist Kayla Mueller. Luckily for Kayler, it wasn't rape because she ended up married to the Caliph, though I can't say for sure that coercion was not involved. The point is, the rape of non-muslims can be justified with the Quran. You or any other person is 'free' to disagree with this interpretation, as I'm sure Maajid Nawaz would, but that does not mean that neither IS nor muslim rape gangs do not and cannot use the Quran to justify their behaviour.

Malcolm wrote:

Baghdadi is a pervert, and has been roundly condemned in <http://www.lettertobaghdadi.com>, notably:

The re-introduction of slavery is forbidden in Islam. It was abolished by universal consensus.

It is forbidden in Islam to force people to convert.

It is forbidden in Islam to deny women their rights.

It is forbidden in Islam to deny children their rights.

Germans had to invent the Jews as an evil force, because there were so few of them in Germany. It is similar today with Israel and its conflict with Muslims. There are not that many jews in the world, but they do a lot of heavy lifting in terms of being targets. But when you look at who engaging in antisemitic acts in Europe and England, it is indeed mainly people from North Africa, Pakistan, etc. And they are not exactly the topic of the social heap.

Yes, poor Lord Ahmed. If only I had the disadvantage to be an unelected representative receiving a generous pay and expenses package. What would I do?

???

Moreover, Islamic/Jewish relations have been punctuated with far more tolerance and openness than Christian/Jewish relations. The antisemitism of the Islamic world today was invented in Europe. Muslims have just adopted the themes (Rothschild, Elders of Zion). Why? Because the Muslim world itself had to borrow antisemitism from Europe. That must be where Hamas gets its antisemitism for its charter from.

Yes, http://avalon.law.yale.edu/20th_century/hamas.asp:

For a long time, the enemies have been planning, skillfully and with precision, for the achievement of what they have attained. They took into consideration the causes affecting the current of events. They strived to amass great and substantive material wealth which they devoted to the realisation of their dream. With their money, they took control of the world media, news agencies, the press, publishing houses, broadcasting stations, and others. With their money they stirred revolutions in various parts of the world with the purpose of achieving their interests and reaping the fruit therein. They were behind the French Revolution, the Communist revolution and most of the revolutions we heard and hear about, here and there. With their money they formed secret societies, such as Freemasons, Rotary Clubs, the Lions and others in different parts of the world for the purpose of sabotaging societies and achieving Zionist interests. With their money they were able to control imperialistic countries and instigate them to colonize many countries in order to enable them to exploit their resources and spread corruption there.

Hadith from Sahih al Burkari said:

"The Day of Judgement will not come about until Muslims fight the Jews (killing the Jews), when the Jew will hide behind stones and trees. The stones and trees will say O Muslims, O Abdulla, there is a Jew behind me, come and kill him. Only the Gharkad tree, (evidently a certain kind of tree) would not do that because it is one of the trees of the Jews."

Good job the Europeans wrote the most trusted collection of Hadith. Without it where would muslims get their antisemitism from?

Malcolm wrote:

Please see the above. It is quite clear Hamas learned their antisemitism from European antisemites.

Hadith from Sahih al Burkari said:

I agree, but South Africa (and 1950s America) was something very very much worse.

Malcolm wrote:

No, I think not.

You can thank European Antisemitism for that — this is where present day anti-semitism comes from.

I think we both know that there are antisemitic verses in the quran and hadith and these verses are used to justify attacking jews by IS and other jihadist groups. I am not saying their interpretations are justified or correct but they are used by Islamic scholars who have an violent agenda to promote.

Antisemitism, as such, did not exist in the 7th century Arabia.

Quran 5.59 said:

Say: O followers of the Book! do you find fault with us (for aught) except that we believe in Allah and in what has been revealed to us and what was revealed before, and that most of you are transgressors?

[5.60] Say: Shall I inform you of (him who is) worse than this in retribution from Allah? (Worse is he) whom Allah has cursed and brought His wrath upon, and of whom He made apes and swine, and he who served the Shaitan; these are worse in place and more erring from the straight path.

[5.63] Why do not the learned men [rabbis] and the doctors of law prohibit them from their speaking of what is sinful and their eating of what is unlawfully acquired? Certainly evil is that which they work.

[5.64] And the Jews say: The hand of Allah is tied up! Their hands shall be shackled and they shall be cursed for what they say. Nay, both His hands are spread out, He expends as He pleases; and what has been revealed to you from your Lord will certainly make many of them increase in inordinacy and unbelief; and We have put enmity and hatred among them till the day of resurrection; whenever they kindle a fire for war Allah puts it out, and they strive to make mischief in the land; and Allah does not love the mischief-makers.

Malcolm wrote:

This is not antisemitic.

That all Muslims are being subjected to intolerance and hatred because of what a few people nominally referred to Muslims may have done or are planning to do is equally vile. And for this reason, we have to separate out terrorist criminals from Muslims in general, and not give them the satisfaction of giving them any religious credibility at all by allowing their acts to be tagged "Muslim."

I think this is disingenuous. Firstly, I don't think "all Muslims" are being subjected to anything.

You have your head in a canvas bag with no eye or ear holes then.

Also, I cannot agree that someone like Abu Bakr al Baghdadi is only nominally referred to as a Muslim. If he said the shahada, has been on Hajj, prays five times a day, attended Islamic university up to PhD level and heads a group many Muslims claim is the valid Caliphate how can a couple of Buddhists claim he is only nominally a Muslim? Because a large consensus of leading Islamic scholars have proclaimed that it is so. In fact they have condemned him as <http://www.christianpost.com/news/international-coalition-of-muslim-scholars-refute-isis-religious-arguments-in-open-letter-to-al-baghdadi-127032/#alofbuSoiLhg0zS.99>:

"You have misinterpreted Islam into a religion of harshness, brutality, torture and murder," the letter states. "This is a great wrong and an offense to Islam, to Muslims and to the entire world."

Of course, you can say that he doesn't interpret the Quran the way that you would like him to, or that his actions contradict the teachings of Muhammed (if so, which ones?), but he seems to have pretty much given his life over to following a particular path. Not very fair of a non-muslim who, let's face it, doesn't even have a BA in Islamic studies, to come along and say he isn't a Muslim. The best we can say is that he doesn't represent the kind of Islam that we like. And who does? I reckon someone like Maajid Nawaz is close, and as such should be encouraged rather than demonised.

You are now drawing an equivalence — legitimizing both Baghdadi and Nawaz as equal voices in Islam. This is an error.

How many Muslims have died in the past year from political violence? Now ask yourself how many Jews. Do you see any difference in numbers?

Proportionately, given that the Muslim community of the UK is six times larger than the Jewish population, there are, per capita, more attacks on Jews in UK than Muslims.

I did not ask about attacks on Jews in England. I asked about fatalities of Jews compared to Muslims.

I would say at this point, while antisemitism is disturbing, Islamophobia is a far greater threat to world security at this point and the people who even unintentionally lend to its spread need to be called out for it, people like Nawaz, Harris, Maher, as well as obvious people like Donald Trump.

World security is threatened by people not seeing where dangers lie. Those on the left seem to view the world as a lovely place were it not for US imperialism, the British empire and (shhh...) the jews.[/quote]

This is a ridiculous characterization of the left, completely false in every respect.

My suggestion would be to wake up and empower liberal muslim voices like Maajid Nawaz rather than put him on a stupid list.

My suggestion is that we start to see terrorism as a politically motivated crime, rather than a feature of a culture war. When we go down the latter road, we are just pouring kerosine on the fire.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 6th, 2017 at 10:32 PM

Title: Re: Guru Yoga & Lamanism: Speculations on Shingon and Nichiren Schools

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Oh its a dated term for certain, like "Amidism" for Pure Land, like "Mohammedan" for Muslim, etc, but I had always thought that the reason why people made up that term in the first place was in reaction to the notion that when you take refuge in the Three Jewels, in traditions that were called "Lamaist" by old Buddhologists, you also take refuge in 3 aspects of the Guru/Lama, who is treated as the Buddha. That is the root of this term is it not?

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is was meant originally as a way of delegitimizing Tibetan Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 6th, 2017 at 3:43 AM

Title: Re: Maajid Nawaz's response to SPLC's list

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Which Sharia Law? This a huge problem with these generalizations. Sharia law is a vast complicated subject with hundreds of schools, though five or six are now dominant. There is no monolithic Sharia legal code.

michaelb said:

Oh, a nice obscurantist attempt to deflect the simple charge by adding complexity. Point is, a number of Islamist groups (Hizb ut-Tahrir, etc.) seek to overturn western democracy in favour of an Islamic state in whatever mold they see fit.

Malcolm wrote:

Oh come, get serious. This is about as likely to happen as Trump's wall being built. This is hysteria.

There are no such thing as Muslim rape gangs. When you say "Muslim" rape gang you are implying that the group of men in England who engaged in these crimes did so feeling they had religious justification for their actions. But obviously this is not the case. They were men of Pakistani origin who were engaged in a human trafficking ring.

Not all the perpetrators were of Pakistani heritage but all, as far as I am aware, were muslim. They may not have had it in mind but there definitely are Quranic religious justifications for raping non-muslim girls.

No, there are not. Please consult this and stop spreading baseless rumors.

<http://www.independent.co.uk/voices/the-truth-about-muslims-and-sex-slavery-according-to-the-quran-rather-than-isis-or-islamophobes-a6875446.html>

It is not equivalent. Muslims in France, for example, are disadvantaged, alienated and heavily discriminated against in French society. You cannot make the same argument for rightwing nationalists in the 1930's. Yes, anti-semitism is today rampant in the Islamic world, but we all know why this is so —Israel.

I wouldn't say that the populations that bought into fascism during the great depression didn't also see themselves as disadvantaged, alienated and discriminated against. The antisemitic trope of jews being advantaged and in power was as alive then as it is now when you look at Islamic antisemitism. Islamic antisemitism stretches back to Khaybar, way before the modern state of Israel.

Also, looking at the lives of privilege of many Jihadists, enjoying wealth, education and opportunities that western democracies afford, I think the narrative of the poor disadvantaged Muslim killing jews because of poverty is a myth, Germans had to invent the Jews as an evil force, because there were so few of them in Germany. It is similar today with Israel and its conflict with Muslims. There are not that many jews in the world, but they do a lot of heavy lifting in terms of being targets. But when you look at who engaging in antisemitic acts in Europe and England, it is indeed mainly people from North Africa, Pakistan, etc. And they are not exactly the topic of the social heap. Here in the US, most antisemitism is carried out by whites.

Moreover, Islamic/Jewish relations have been punctuated with far more tolerance and openness than Christian/Jewish relations. The antisemitism of the Islamic world today was invented in Europe. Muslims have just adopted the themes (Rothschild, Elders of Zion). Why? Because the Muslim world itself had to borrow antisemitism from Europe.

This is not happening. There is a myth that the academic community in the US is leftist. It is entirely false.

It is happening in UK universities and UK generally with people barred entry to the country whose views are seen as extremist, just as Maajid is seen as extremist.

Extremists are also barred from entering the US.

I am totally opposed to the way Israel has conducted itself in setting up an Apartheid state.

The idea of Israel as an Apartheid state is another myth.

Israel is an Apartheid state and Palestinians living there are second class citizens at best.

I'm not saying Israel is perfect. It is not. But its existence and the status of Palestinians are commonly used by Middle East dictators as a conspicuous enemy to focus attention away from what the Arab countries are doing.

Yes, the Arab states do manipulate the Palestinians as well. They are pawns.

The very idea that I would be opposed to a race of people (all Turks because of the Turkish govt's treatment of Kurds, or all Bhutanese because of the Bhutan govt's treatment of Nepalis, or all Egyptians because of the Egypt govt's blockade of the Gaza Strip and destruction of Palestinian homes) is obscene.

You can thank European Antisemitism for that — this is where present day anti-semitism comes from.

That a person can seek to justify an armed attack on a Jewish school in Paris because of what the Israeli govt is doing is vile.

That all Muslims are being subjected to intolerance and hatred because of what a few people nominally referred to as Muslims may have done or are planning to do is equally vile. And for this reason, we have to separate out terrorist criminals from Muslims in general, and not give them the satisfaction of giving them any religious credibility at all by allowing their acts to be tagged "Muslim."

How many Muslims have died in the past year from political violence? Now ask yourself how many Jews. Do you see any difference in numbers? Let's take Israel.

<https://www.hrw.org/world-report/2016/country-chapters/israel/palestine>:

Israel continued in 2015 to enforce severe and discriminatory restrictions on Palestinians' human rights, and to build unlawful settlements in and facilitate the transfer of Israeli civilians to the occupied West Bank. Israeli authorities also arbitrarily detained peaceful Palestinian demonstrators, including children.

There was a sharp rise in killings and injuries related to Israeli-Palestinian hostilities beginning in October. Overall, Palestinians killed at least 17 Israeli civilians and 3 Israeli soldiers, and injured 87 Israeli civilians and 80 security officers in the West Bank and Israel as of November 27. Israeli security forces killed at least 120 and injured at least 11,953 Palestinian civilians in West Bank, Gaza, and Israel as of the same date, including bystanders, protesters, and suspected assailants.

...

Neither Israeli nor Hamas authorities have prosecuted anyone for alleged crimes committed during the 2014 Israel-Gaza war, which, according to the UN, killed 1,462 Palestinian civilians, including 551 children, and 6 civilians in Israel, including one child. Israel and Egypt have maintained their partial but highly damaging closure of Gaza's borders, an unlawful act of collective punishment; they impeded the rebuilding of Gaza's devastated economy by severely restricting exports from Gaza.

I would say at this point, while antisemitism is disturbing, Islamophobia is a far greater threat to world security at this point and the people who even unintentionally lend to its spread need to be called out for it, people like Nawaz, Harris, Maher, as well as obvious people like Donald Trump.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 6th, 2017 at 3:00 AM

Title: Re: Maajid Nawaz's response to SPLC's list

Content:

michaelb said:

The left has turned a blind eye to violence and intolerance...

Grigoris said:

The institutional left, not "the left".

Malcolm wrote:

Not even the institutional left.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 6th, 2017 at 1:32 AM

Title: Re: Rudraksha mala

Content:

philji said:

What kind of mantras are chanted using rudraksha mala. I have a small very beautiful rudraksha mala, can one chant Guru Rinpoche mantras on it???

Malcolm wrote:

Vajrakilaya, Dorje Drollo, that sort of mantra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 6th, 2017 at 1:17 AM

Title: Re: Hate speech is Free Speech?

Content:

Zhen Li said:

Last week you were willing to accept Grigoris' claim that killing Rohingya is done in the name of enforcing the five precepts (which is a false claim anyway)...

Malcolm wrote:

I made no such statement from which you can deduce this.

I supported his observation that nations nominally devoted to Buddhism can perpetrate horrible crimes of political violence against human beings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 6th, 2017 at 1:15 AM

Title: Re: Maajid Nawaz's response to SPLC's list

Content:

michaelb said:

Ken Livingstone

Malcolm wrote:

We can assume you are not in the Labour Party, then. So our discussion about this is merely going to reflect right/left disagreements about what is wrong with the world.

michaelb said:

I was a member of the Labour Party. I left due to the obvious antisemitism and double standards I saw both in the leadership and local members. It is deeply troubling that a party that projects itself as speaking out against racism and hate should harbour such hate and racism.

and if you are asking if I think gays should be executed and jews should be killed, as Qaradawi does, no, I don't.

Malcolm wrote:

I can't speak for the labour party, as an American I am presently registered a Green (if they would just get their shit together though, it would be nice.)

I am totally opposed to the way Israel has conducted itself in setting up an Apartheid state.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 6th, 2017 at 12:59 AM

Title: Re: Maajid Nawaz's response to SPLC's list

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, we simply disagree on the whether it is appropriate to target groups of people based upon their religious or political beliefs.

You apparently support the idea of surveilling people on the basis of what you imagine their beliefs to be. This is nothing more nor less than McCarthyism.

michaelb said:

If people's political and religious beliefs entail the overthrowing of the state, it would be idiotic for the state not to gather intelligence on these people. That's not to say that all people of one religion should be targeted, but those that have espoused Islamist views (the view that western democracy is wrong and should be replaced with an Islamic state under sharia law) obviously should be targeted.

Malcolm wrote:

Which Sharia Law? This is a huge problem with these generalizations. Sharia law is a vast complicated subject with hundreds of schools, though five or six are now dominant.

There is no monolithic Sharia legal code.

Secondly, Sharia law only applies to Muslims, and the vast majority of Muslims think this is the way it should be.

michaelb said:

I'm sure, if you look into it you will see that nobody has argued for anything more than this obvious position. In the UK though, authorities have been very slow to react to some threats, whether Muslim rape gangs, Islamists infiltrating a local education authority, or the spreading of radicalising propaganda, for fear of being branded Islamophobes.

Malcolm wrote:

There are no such thing as Muslim rape gangs. When you say "Muslim" rape gang you are implying that the group of men in England who engaged in these crimes did so feeling they had religious justification for their actions. But obviously this is not the case. They were men of Pakistani origin who were engaged in a human trafficking ring. When you call them "Muslims," the implication is that they engaged in these crimes because of the moral failings of Islam. You could have said Southasian rape gang, Pakistani rape gang, etc. But for you, the identifying feature of these men is that they are Muslims and therefore, Islam is to blame for their crimes.

The nationalist right in Europe, the UK and the US are doing to Muslims what they did to Jews in the 1930s.

The muslims of europe are doing to the jews what the nationalist right in europe did to the jews in the 1930s. Try and be jewish in Paris or Malmo right now. Proportionately, attacks on jews vastly outnumber attacks on muslims in the UK, and statistically, who are the main perpetrators? Guess.

It is not equivalent. Muslims in France, for example, are disadvantaged, alienated and heavily discriminated against in French society. You cannot make the same argument for rightwing nationalists in the 1930's. Yes, anti-semitism is today rampant in the Islamic world, but we all know why this is so —Israel.

So in France for example, we have a vicious cycle where there are French attacks against Muslims, Muslims then attack Jews, viewing them as privileged in French Society and so on. However, the Muslims are adopting fascist tropes for their <https://www.theatlantic.com/magazine/archive/2015/04/is-it-time-for-the-jews-to-leave-europe/386279/>:

Yet the new anti-Semitism flourishing in corners of the European Muslim community would be impoverished without the incorporation of European fascist tropes.

Dieudonné M'bala M'bala, a comedian of French Cameroonian descent who specializes in Holocaust revisionism and gas-chamber humor, is the inventor of the quenelle, widely understood as an inverted Nazi salute. His followers have taken to photographing themselves making the quenelle in front of synagogues, Holocaust memorials, and sites of past anti-Jewish terrorist attacks. Dieudonné has built an ideological partnership with Alain Soral, the anti-Jewish conspiracy theorist and 9/11 “truther” who was for several years a member of the National Front’s central committee. Soral was photographed not long ago making the quenelle in front of Berlin’s Holocaust memorial.

The union of Middle Eastern and European forms of anti-Semitic expression has led to bizarre moments. Dave Rich, an official of the Community Security Trust, a Jewish organization that monitors anti-Semitism in the United Kingdom, wrote recently: “Those British Muslims who verbally abuse British Jews on the street are more likely to shout ‘Heil Hitler’ than ‘Allahu akbar’ when they do so. This is despite the fact that their parents and grandparents were probably chased through the very same streets by gangs of neo-Nazi skinheads shouting similar slogans.”

The marriage of anti-Semitic narratives was consummated in January of last year, during a so-called Day of Rage march in Paris that was organized to protest the leadership of the French president, François Hollande. The rally drew roughly 17,000 people, mostly far-rightists but also many French Muslims.

As far as Malmo goes, that is the responsibility of Sweden to look after. If they do not protect their citizens, it is a fault of their government. And the situation is not helped by the fact that Mayor of Malmo was an antisemite by the name of Ilmar Reepalu until 2013. I have met Swedes who are very anti-semitic as well.

Blaming the left for pointing out that Nawaz, Sam Harrid, Bill Maher, and so on feed into the right's Islamophobia is misguided.

Blaming Nawaz for feeding into the right's islamophobia is stupid.

I don't think so.

To date, no one's right to speak in the US has been shut down, not even Milo's.

Maybe not by law but with academic institutions "no platforming" people of contrary views we are looking at something more like the '50s.

This is not happening. There is a myth that the academic community in the US is leftist. It is entirely false.

No doubt the far right are on the rise. Many people feel disenfranchised and ignored by political leaders who are supposed to represent them but are too busy hosting their friends from Hamas and Hezbollah.

Israel policies towards Palestinians created and continue to exacerbate a very unstable situation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, February 6th, 2017 at 12:05 AM

Title: Re: Maajid Nawaz's response to SPLC's list

Content:

Grigoris said:

...I have no problem disregarding and marginalizing people with these views. There is no reason at all for me to take what they say seriously. Even if they have a logical or factual basis for their view (ie the fact that Greek people are struggling against poverty) their solutions and the reasoning behind their solutions is not worth pissing on. Why? Because we have already seen where giving legitimacy to these views take us. Some of us are intelligent enough to learn from our past mistakes and sometimes we have to stop others (by force if need be) to not commit them again. Like a mother violently pulls a child away from a burning object to stop it harming itself any further.

Malcolm wrote:
Agreed.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 11:59 PM
Title: Re: Hate speech is Free Speech?
Content:
madhusudan said:
evil

treehuggingoctopus said:
Not my word. Metaphysical framing does not help.

madhusudan said:
aggressive violence is self-defense

treehuggingoctopus said:
Punching someone in their face is "aggressive violence"? How then would you describe leg-breaking, face-cutting, stabbings, GBH and murder, which is what Nazi thugs have always done in Europe -- and now are doing more openly than ever, with little fear of being caught and punished?

I hate violence. But passive resistance against boneheads will only get you into hospital (if you are not unlucky, that is). You could just as well try passive resistance on the Daesh.

Malcolm wrote:
Of course, these things are always described as "crimes" and never as politically motivated violence. This is the huge problem with identifying terrorism engaged in by people of Muslim backgrounds as Islamic Terrorism. It isn't. It is political violence through and through with nothing religious about it at all. Do people use religious themes to motivate political violence? Of course they do. But we must make a hard distinction between political violence and religions. One of the reasons why people in the Obama administration refuse to use the term Radical Islamic Terrorism is that to claim that this is our enemy violates the Constitution in a way that say identifying Communist Terrorism, etc., does not. This is why also there is such a strong push on the part of the Trump Administration and the right in general to redefine Islam as a political movement rather than a religious faith. Well, allowing the right to redefine Islam as a political movement is a very slippery slope.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 11:56 PM

Title: Re: Dorje Dudulma in Sanskrit

Content:

tingdzin said:

Why would someone assume that a Tibetan name must be based on an "original" Sanskrit? Granted, there were narrow-minded pedants in the New Translation schools who thought that everything in Tibetan Buddhism must come from Indian sources or it was not valid, but there are plenty of examples of "back translations" from Tibetan into Sanskrit which are obviously made up, and never existed in Indic languages.

Malcolm wrote:

In general, a name like rdo rje bdud 'dul ma will be based on a list of names handed out during an initiation. Apart from this though, your point is well taken.

As to your second point, it is well taken. For example, the endless confusion about the proper translation of sgra thal gyur since it was erroneously back translated as śābdaprasaṅga in the Derge Edition of the Nyingma Gyudbum.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 11:53 PM

Title: Re: what is Russia up to?

Content:

dzoki said:

Anyways Russia has huge problems, so it might collapse by itself before Putin ´s grand plan is realized. Their economy sucks hard, there is a massive depopulation due to alcoholism, drug abuse and emigration. So unless they somehow solve these problems, Russia will slowly slide onto her knees.

Malcolm wrote:

This all depends on whether Trump lifts sanctions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 11:50 PM

Title: Re: Hate speech is Free Speech?

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

there are indeed human actions and social phenomena which one must not tolerate at any cost.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is the lesson the rise of Fascism taught us in the 1930's.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 11:48 PM

Title: Re: Hate speech is Free Speech?

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

Malcolm, people with hateful views perhaps respond to shame if they can see the error of the views, but if the motivation to stop hate is also hate and anger, nothing gets done. The conversation is shut down.

Malcolm wrote:

Some conversations are not worth having. Conversations where people are allowed justify their bigotry and hatred are not worth having. In fact, people know that being racist and sexist is wrong, which is why the right spends so much time pretending that racism and sexism are old problems we do not face anymore. Then, they uses dog whistles like "crime", "fraud," and so on to enact and continue the same racist policies, like voter id laws and so on.

Monlam Tharchin said:

It's not a matter of condoning hate speech but of putting our money where our mouth is as Buddhists and responding to ignorance and hatred with compassion.

Malcolm wrote:

Sometimes you have yell at children to prevent them from playing with fire.

Monlam Tharchin said:

Our mother beings locked in hate are bound for a hellish destination unless something changes.

Malcolm wrote:

We cannot change others, we can only change ourselves. This is the unfortunate limitation we have.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 11:27 PM

Title: Re: Maajid Nawaz's response to SPLC's list

Content:

michaelb said:

Ken Livingstone

Malcolm wrote:

We can assume you are not in the Labour Party, then. So our discussion about this is merely going reflect right/left disagreements about what is wrong with the world.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 11:22 PM

Title: Re: Maajid Nawaz's response to SPLC's list

Content:

michaelb said:

Three things are feeding into a fear of Islam. The actions of Islamist Jihadist groups, the reluctance of the left and liberals to tackle the issue for fear of being branded islamophobic, and the right jumping on this reluctance as some kind of proof of a grand conspiracy.

The only thing that will defuse both fear of Islam and radicalisation of Muslims is dialogue and discussion and not shutting down a person's right to speak by labelling them as a islamophobe, extremist or bigot.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, we simply disagree on the whether it is appropriate to target groups of people based upon their religious or political beliefs.

You apparently support the idea of surveilling people on the basis of what you imagine their beliefs to be. This is nothing more nor less than McCarthyism.

The nationalist right in Europe, the UK and the US are doing to Muslims what they did to Jews in the 1930s.

Blaming the left for pointing out that Nawaz, Sam Harrid, Bill Maher, and so on feed into the right's Islamophobia is misguided.

To date, no one's right to speak in the US has been shut down, not even Milo's.

We still have a free press and libel is much harder to prove here than in the UK.

And in the UK, as in the US, far more attention needs to be paid to <http://www.newsweek.com/2016/02/12/right-wing-extremists-militants-bigger-threat-america-isis-jihadists-422743.html>. In an article for Huffpo last week, http://www.huffingtonpost.co.uk/waqar-ahmed/now-is-not-the-time-to-qu_b_14500532.html writes:

For over a decade communities have discussed and debated policies aimed at challenging the rise of international terrorism, often citing the need to win hearts and minds of impressionable young people, in the main this debate has focused on Muslim communities. Whilst such approaches have been discussed at length, terror attacks have continued and are constantly evolving in nature and methodology. Now we see far-right nationalist movements experiencing a steady but worrying increase in momentum, using the anxiety of people to spread fear and hate by attributing the rise in terrorism to ineffective domestic and foreign policies, particularly towards immigration and Muslims.

For practitioners working on policies to challenge radicalisation and extremism, these are developments that come as no surprise, The media focus, and community debate, on policies such as Prevent in the UK has focused on terrorism from a global violent jihadist perspective, but front-line workers up and down the country have always worked on all forms of extremism and have been dealing with a rise in referrals from far-right extremism, in fact in many parts of the country such referrals far outweigh those of an Islamist nature.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 9:49 PM

Title: Re: Maajid Nawaz's response to SPLC's list

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

First of all pairing Nawaz with Sam Harris hardly wins you points on the Islamopositive scale.

michaelb said:

That is exactly the type of lazy, stupid argumentation that has led to the death of the left and the rise of demagogues. It doesn't matter what someone thinks, the views they hold or the positions they put forward. The person they are talking to, who they are standing next to, who they are "sharing a platform with" tells you enough to totally disregard whatever they say, then go back to watching MSNBC or Fox News or Keith Olberman or Infowars, etc.

The article you posted was a turgid example of this kind of stupidity where the writer chose to slur as many people as possible as bigots and then extended that to anyone that ever had anything to do with them. Absolutely idiotic. Judge people's views according to logic and evidence not according to who they talk to.

If anyone had spent any time at all reading or listening to the views of Maajid Nawaz they would see that labelling him and anti-Islam extremist is totally stupid beyond belief. Utterly ignorant and worthy of derision.

Malcolm wrote:

I have both read and listened to Nawaz. You know, the guy who supported the idea of the British Gvt. spying on British Muslims back in 2009. The intolerance of the New Atheists with respect to Islam is a best troubling. I watch Bill Maher, but when it comes to Islam, he is a total jerk.

Nawaz has also used <https://www.theguardian.com/uk/2010/aug/04/quilliam-foundation-list-alleged-extremism%22> in his work. Thus it is not surprising after all this time he would wind up on a list at SPLC. The fact is that Nawaz and the Quilliam Foundation are feeding into Islamophobic hysteria.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 1:14 PM

Title: Re: Hate speech is Free Speech?

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

when one person calls another a bigot, the conversation is over between them.

Malcolm wrote:

Unfortunately, the right is demanding the privilege of being able to use hate speech with impunity.

Calling someone a bigot because they espouse bigoted views is not hate speech. Bigots generally only respond to shame, not to reason. It is the one thing that has kept them on the fringes of our society. But to give in to the right's demand for the privilege of being able to use hate speech with impunity simply goes too far. There are well established limits to free speech, and hate speech is not protected speech in this country nor should it ever be.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 12:27 PM

Title: Re: Tri Ralpachen

Content:

Losal Samten said:

On this topic Minister Gar is also said to have had relations with Princess Wengchen whilst he was delivering her to Songtsan.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it was why their journey was so long delayed. The Chinese have actually turned their side of the story into a national myth proving the Chinese claim to Tibet.

Lobsang Chojor said:

Not to go to far off topic but how have they done this?

Malcolm wrote:

State sponsored operas, movies, the whole 9 yards.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 12:25 PM

Title: Re: Maajid Nawaz's response to SPLC's list

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

For this reason, I cannot understand why anyone should be complaining about the left in the west. The left for now is in defeat.

kirtu said:

Correction: the left in the United States can be seen as in defeat (although there was not a real left in the United States since at least the 1950's - the moderate conservative establishment Democrats are not a left).

Malcolm wrote:

The American Left ceased to resemble in any way the European Left after the war. The American Left, since the 1960's has not been entrenched in class issues, it has been mainly concerned with social justice and environmental issues. It is temporarily in a state of defeat and reorganization.

kirtu said:

However in Canada and much of Western Europe it is okay, still. France? Not so much, at least not for one election cycle. Nonetheless practically no where will the social democratic state be rolled back. Except backward, conservative UK perhaps. And it IS possible that the Dutch will take a slight step back but I doubt it.

Malcolm wrote:

All of Europe is in revolt against the EU. I think it is only gives advantages to Russia.

kirtu said:

OTOH the commitment to the defense of civil liberties world wide has taken a beating because of the mishandling of the current world wide refugee crisis. Basically only Canada, Germany, Belgium, Luxembourg and Switzerland are assisting people fleeing war zones and each of those countries has their own limits and the policies are variously under some fire there too.

Malcolm wrote:

The problem is so much worse that anyone is willing to admit. There were 60 million refugees or displaced people last year. Half the Syrian population, 10,000 million, have been displaced and are refugees. This is worse than the total number of refugees during WWII. Large populations of Europeans and Americans both have voiced outright Eurocentric Xenophobia, and the US has the worst case of the disease right now. Hands down, I admit that. We are heading down to the road to full scale fascism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 12:13 PM

Title: Re: Maajid Nawaz's response to SPLC's list

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The left for now is in defeat.

tingdzin said:

And they will continue to remain so until they come up with real responses to the right's appeal, instead of just preaching to their own self-righteous choir. I despise the new fascists, but I'm also really sick of political correctness. Left-wing censorship is a reality, and to deny this only gives the fascists more ammunition.

Malcolm wrote:

Please — the media, and public opinion has been shifted to the right for decades by well -organized and efficient conservative think tanks. It was they after all who gave us Obamacare, for which now the left bears the blame. Neat trick. I at least can remember Walter Cronkite and the high quality of journalism in this country. It still exists, though under assault from by the social conservatives for decades. If people are not discriminating they will come to an irrational distrust of the press, from whom ironically they gain all their information with which they distrust the press.

Insisting that minorities be granted the simple dignity of not being subjected to racist and discriminatory words and deeds is not politically correct. It is simply correct.

People become angry about what they term "political correctness" because they feel unfairly judged for their racist and sexist instincts. Too bad.

The left may be down and out for the time being, but this is not a permanent state of affairs.

But if we permit our capitalist culture to destroy world civilization due to our own greed and jealousy, one hopes there will still be people left over to pick up the pieces and start again. If not, I hope that life on earth continues to evolve in all its beauty, even if no humans remain to enjoy it.

Finally, shouting down someone like Milo is hardly a sin. I suspect it is in fact a virtue.

P.S. Some asshole from Michigan yesterday suggested that the way to deal with the campus protests was to have another Kent State. Threatening to shoot students is really not an appropriate way to deal with political correctness on college campuses. A much more troubling phenomena than political correctness on campuses is allowing college campus deans to adjudicate rape cases to keep them out of the course system.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 9:43 AM

Title: Re: Tri Ralpachen

Content:

Karma Jinpa said:

Iso read that he wrongfully put one of his ministers to death, killing off a main ally for the Buddhist cause based one rumors of him sleeping with the queen.

tingdzin said:

The "sleeping with the queen" theme also appears in some Chospa accounts of Vairocana's life, as you are probably aware.

Losal Samten said:

On this topic Minister Gar is also said to have had relations with Princess Wengchen whilst he was delivering her to Songtsan.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, it was why their journey was so long delayed. The Chinese have actually turned their side of the story into a national myth proving the Chinese claim to Tibet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 9:40 AM

Title: Re: Maajid Nawaz's response to SPLC's list

Content:

michaelb said:

In this way the left is no longer liberal as it uses censorship every bit as much as dictatorships on the right.

Malcolm wrote:

First of all pairing Nawaz with Sam Harris hardly wins you points on the Islamopositive scale.

Second of all, Islamophobia, homophobia and so on are social diseases, and like all diseases, they should be eradicated.

I submit to you that at present the West is far more in danger of falling victim to Fascism than it is in danger of being attacked by a few deluded people raised in Muslim families who are driven by a mistaken world view.

For this reason, I cannot understand why anyone should be complaining about the left in the west. The left for now is in defeat.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 6:09 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

I don't think you've understood. That which people call Dharmakaya is the ultimate nature of a Buddha's mind. This is permanent.

Are you saying that Buddhas don't have mind? In which case they cannot be objects of refuge because they cannot emanate, cannot teach, cannot bless the minds of sentient beings because they cannot function.

Malcolm wrote:

You've just claimed that the dharmakāya is conditioned and relative. Even your terminology is strange. There are no terms in any Indian text that correspond to "Wisdom Truth Body and the Nature Truth Body." The term ye shes chos kyi sku is indeed a term found in Gelugpa exegesis. But it is not found outside your school. Therefore, you cannot expect anyone to accede to your presentation outside of your coreligionists.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Well, that's great then - we can agree to disagree. I'm not expecting anyone to accede to anything; in fact arguing about views is a bit pointless really.

Malcolm wrote:

The point is that you keep on presenting the path in your tradition as if it is somehow universal and more valid. For example, in Sakya, they do not use the terminology at all. For Sakyapas, as indeed for Nyingma and Kagyu as well, with respect to the "nature body" aka svabhākaya, in Vajrayāna practice is simply the fact that the three kāyas are an inseparable unity, while in the sūtra presentation it is generally understood to be synonym of the dharmakāya. Your presentation is an adaptation of Haribhadra's interpretation of the svabhāvakakāya to Vajrayāna, but I am not really certain it is appropriate to mix up sūtra and tantra in this way.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 5:52 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

No, because an actual true cessation is the emptiness of a mind that has attained a final cessation of any fault. It's an emptiness not a mind so it is permanent and unconditioned.

The ultimate true cessation is the emptiness of a mind that has permanently abandoned the very subtle obstructions to omniscience. This emptiness is called the Nature Truth Body. Because the two truths are the same nature, the Wisdom Truth Body and the Nature Truth Body are one entity. the Wisdom Truth Body is a functioning thing and its emptiness is the Nature Truth Body.

Malcolm wrote:

This does not escape the inevitable consequence that you are claiming the dharmakāya is conditioned and relative. This contradicts both sūtra and tantra.

Tsongkhapafan said:

I don't think you've understood. That which people call Dharmakaya is the ultimate nature of a Buddha's mind. This is permanent.

Are you saying that Buddhas don't have mind? In which case they cannot be objects of refuge because they cannot emanate, cannot teach, cannot bless the minds of sentient beings because they cannot function.

Malcolm wrote:

You've just claimed that the dharmakāya is conditioned and relative. Even your terminology is strange. There are no terms in any Indian text that correspond to "Wisdom Truth Body and the Nature Truth Body." The term ye shes chos kyi sku is indeed a term found in Gelugpa exegesis. But it is not found outside your school. Therefore, you cannot expect anyone to accede to your presentation outside of your coreligionists.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 5:08 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Yes, it's a conventional truth and when it is completely purified it becomes the Wisdom Truth Body of a Buddha.

Malcolm wrote:

Which makes dharmakāya relative and conditioned, whoops!

Tsongkhapafan said:

No, because an actual true cessation is the emptiness of a mind that has attained a final cessation of any fault. It's an emptiness not a mind so it is permanent and unconditioned.

The ultimate true cessation is the emptiness of a mind that has permanently abandoned the very subtle obstructions to omniscience. This emptiness is called the Nature Truth Body. Because the two truths are the same nature, the Wisdom Truth Body and the Nature Truth Body are one entity. the Wisdom Truth Body is a functioning thing and its emptiness is the Nature Truth Body.

Malcolm wrote:

This does not escape the inevitable consequence that you are claiming the dharmakāya is conditioned and relative. This contradicts both sūtra and tantra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 4:21 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Thanks

conebeckham said:
You're welcome.

So, is this subtle clear light mind a potential? An existent? A "conventional truth?"

Tsongkhapafan said:
Yes, it's a conventional truth and when it is completely purified it becomes the Wisdom Truth Body of a Buddha.

Malcolm wrote:
Which makes dharmakāya relative and conditioned, whoops!

Author: Malcolm
Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 3:27 AM
Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise
Content:

conebeckham said:
As Malcolm noted, Milarepa practiced Varahi and Samvara. When asked by a disciple what his yidam was, his reply was that he relied on "the little red one." That's not just a reference to Vajravarahi.

Mila's practice is hard to fathom, but he was a practitioner of the Six Yogas of Naropa, and especially of Tummo. When we Kagyupas speak of Mahamudra, we mean something different, though our Mahamudra can, and ideally should, encompass the two stages as well. My tradition includes the instructions of the Karma Kagyu, which includes Dzogchen and Mahamudra, and of the Shangpa Kagyu, which has its tradition of "Clear Light Mahamudra" that is quite different in some respects. But I don't want to talk about techniques, etc., here or in public, in general. My questions were directed at the nature of this "very subtle mind," and it's relationship to Buddha Nature, and to, perhaps, "primordial Buddha." In a sense, all practice, including the Six Yogas practices of Clear Light, which are actually "night-time" practices, and the main yogas of Tummo and Illusory Body, are means to recognize the Nature of Mind, and not merely a direct cognition of emptiness, though that is one aspect of the experience as I understand it.

Tsongkhapafan said:
Thanks

conebeckham said:
You're welcome.

So, is this subtle clear light mind a potential? An existent? A "conventional truth?"

Malcolm wrote:
It is conventional and relative. It takes ultimate clear light as its object, according to the Gelug presentation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 1:58 AM

Title: Re: Hate speech is Free Speech?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is what the right would like you to believe. They are wrong. Also, no jobs are coming back. This is a total fantasy. It's a bait and switch. Promise jobs, and when none are forthcoming, blame [x].

Queequeg said:

Infrastructure jobs are in play. It's short sighted, but it will win elections and that's what matters.

Malcolm wrote:

If you believe this, I have a bridge for sale. The point is that Trump is claiming to bring back manufacturing jobs, but the white working class (defined by absence of a college education) is not qualified for these jobs since they require college level education in STEM subjects.

Queequeg said:

Their followers are not the issue. The issue is working class who flipped for Trump. If they don't flip, Trump doesn't win.

Malcolm wrote:

This analysis is wrong. First, the working class did not "flip" for trump. Most Trump voters are in the $75,000+ salary range and white. The working class in this country is predominantly black and latino. They did not vote for Trump. Some white working class voters did, Second, Trump lost the election not just by 2.8 million votes that went to Clinton. He also lost the 6 million votes that went for Johnson and Stein.

This means that while he won the electoral college, (by barely 300,000 votes) he very badly lost the popular vote.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 1:45 AM

Title: Re: "Winds"

Content:

Karma Jinpa said:

"Winds" is a literal English translation of lüing (rlung), the Tibetan translation of Sanskrit prāṇa, which you're probably more familiar with through the equivalent Chinese term <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Qi>.

.

Malcolm wrote:

No. rlung is a translation of vāyu; srog 'dzin is a translation of prāṇa. Hence we have the prāṇavāyu or srog 'dzin rlung.

Coëmgenu said:

I hear Buddhists who I assume come from a Tibetan tradition talk about "wind/winds" a lot, generally in relation to the mind, I think.

What are "winds"?

Malcolm wrote:

Vāyu is a concept common to Ayurveda, Tibetan Medicine, and both Buddhist and Hindu yogic traditions. In Buddhist Tantra, vāyu is the material basis for the mind, its steed if you will, which carries the mind about the body. Further, various vāyus are responsible for all of the body's functions including digestion, movement, speaking, circulation, sense perception and so on. The nature of the the vāyus is the element of air.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 12:39 AM

Title: Re: Hate speech is Free Speech?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Progressives and Dems don't seem to get this, and instead they're coalescing around identity issues, rather than the stuff that is going to make a difference politically in the coming interim elections - "the economy, stupid." Jobs in flyover country is what will resonate. Not lamenting over immigration - as problematic as the recent executive orders have been. That fight is a loser and will only reinforce the disconnect between the coasts and the middle of the country.

Identity politics plays into Trump/Bannon's playbook. Its Lucy pulling the football.

Malcolm wrote:

This is what the right would like you to believe. They are wrong. Also, no jobs are coming back. This is a total fantasy. It's a bait and switch. Promise jobs, and when none are forthcoming, blame [x].

Queequeg said:

Bannon is an economic nationalist. "America First" is him. He's fighting the fight that matters. He's building a coalition in part of the underemployed workers who used to make up the middle class. These are the people who voted for Obama in the past two elections, but flipped this time because Clinton never even bothered to try and speak to them. If Trump gets the infrastructure programs going and gets these people employed, the Dems are going to lose them for a generation.

Bannon also uses a modified Southern Strategy, appealing to voters in the South and other rural areas where whites feel like they're on the defensive. What is distressing about this is that the northern blue collar guys who flipped for Trump will start internalizing the Trump minority defamation.

Malcolm wrote:

Bannon and Trump are fascists. Fascism is always more popular after a major economic downturn. Their followers are fascists also. They would like it very much if Trump suspended the constitution. They are not even pretending anymore. Just go check the comments at Brietbart.

There is only one appropriate political response to fascism and fascists — opposition, resistance, organization.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, February 5th, 2017 at 12:16 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Milarepa received his realisations through the practice of Hevajra as his Guru Marpa did.

Malcolm wrote:

No, Milarepa's main practice was Cakrasamvara/Vajrayogini.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 4th, 2017 at 10:29 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

The very subtle mind of clear light and its mounted wind that cannot be accessed by a gross mind and cannot be purified except through completion stage meditation, which depends upon generation stage meditation, which depends on the three principal aspects of the path as explained in Buddha's Sutra teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

Nice little box you have constructed for yourself.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Actually, Buddha constructed it. It's called a spiritual path.

Malcolm wrote:

The box is your dogmatism, your assertion that there is only your way or the highway and your negating the legitimacy of other paths, which you do constantly in a very uninformed manner, worthy of any fundamentalist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 4th, 2017 at 9:53 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

Just understanding that you have natural purity is no method. There has to be a basis, a path and a result.

conebeckham said:

. What's the basis, then?

Tsongkhapa said:

The very subtle mind of clear light and its mounted wind that cannot be accessed by a gross mind and cannot be purified except through completion stage meditation, which depends upon generation stage meditation, which depends on the three principal aspects of the path as explained in Buddha's Sutra teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

Nice little box you have constructed for yourself.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 4th, 2017 at 9:21 PM

Title: Re: Tri Ralpachen

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The answer is that Ralpachen did not have much of a story with Guru Rinpoche. So he was important mainly for his activities in sponsoring translations for 21 years. A large number of texts were translated and edited during this period providing the basis for the Dharma in Tibet.

Karma Jinpa said:

A salient point. It's not as exciting (especially to the Tibetan people) without the Second Buddha from Oddiyana, admittedly.

Songtsen Gampo didn't have contact with him either, but he had the acclaim of being the first Dharma King, with him seen as Tibet's patron deity Chenrezik and his two princess-brides being Tara and Bhrikuti Devi (which later became White Tara and Green Tara).

Would you agree, though, Malcolm, that Ralpachen's role was crucial in establishing the Dharma in Tibet? Perhaps it isn't as sexy as building the Jokhang or inviting Guru Rinpoche, but he sure had a lot of temples built, and got some major portions of the canon translated from Sanskrit to Tibetan.

Do we have records of who he invited to do the translations, and what they translated? That would be interesting to know, and any sources would be much appreciated.

Malcolm wrote:

Van Schaiks' book, Tibet, a History, paints a rather unfavorable picture of Ralpacan, describing him as weak, mentally unstable, and ineffective as a ruler.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 4th, 2017 at 10:27 AM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

Is it correct to say that it has not given any good results, though? How about Milarepa and countless others?

Malcolm wrote:

Milarepa did not abandon anything. He was already free. He realized that. The how doesn't matter much.

Vidyavajra said:

Milarepa's songs...

Malcolm wrote:

...are quite often not by him at all.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 4th, 2017 at 10:14 AM

Title: Re: Tri Ralpachen

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

oh you are doing research mm

Karma Jinpa said:

Not really doing serious research in the academic sense. It just struck me as odd is all, and I'm curious to find out the reasons behind it. That said, I have seen mention of the Three (or sometimes Four) Great Dharma Kings of Tibet since starting this thread.

Still puzzles me why Ralpachen doesn't get more recognition and credit, though Tingdzin may have a lead on that it seems.

Malcolm wrote:

The answer is that Ralpachan did not have much of a story with Guru Rinpoche. So he was important mainly for his activities in sponsoring translations for 21 years. A large number of texts were translated and edited during this period providing the basis for the Dharma in Tibet.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 4th, 2017 at 10:06 AM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

Is it correct to say that it has not given any good results, though? How about Milarepa and countless others?

Malcolm wrote:

Milarepa did not abandon anything. He was already free. He realized that. The how doesn't matter much.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 4th, 2017 at 9:43 AM

Title: Re: Non-Duality in Dzogchen vs Advaita Vedanta

Content:

Vidyavajra said:

I haven't read through most of this thread, so might be missing something. But have there been any noteworthy records of dialogues between masters of Dzogchen and Advaita Vedanta that might be shared? I think that would be much more interesting than reading only the views of Buddhists, some of whom do not know Vedanta in any great depth.

dzogchungpa said:

Well, I think the expression "Advaita Vedanta" gets used carelessly here sometimes, but if you are willing to accept H. W. L. Poonja, AKA Papaji, as an example of a master of Advaita Vedanta then there is a discussion between him and Chokyi Nyima Rinpoche in this book:

<http://davidgodman.org/gen2/p/books/godman.papaji-interviews.html>

I can't seem to remember if I have read it or not.

papaji said:

never advise anyone to renounce the world. This is not the way to get enlightenment. It has been tried both in the West and the East for thousands of years, but it has not given any good results. My advice is different. I simply say, 'Keep quiet. Stay wherever you are. Don't reject your worldly activities. Simply keep quiet for a single second and see what happens.'

Malcolm wrote:

This is good advice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 4th, 2017 at 4:02 AM

Title: Re: Hate speech is Free Speech?

Content:

Grigoris said:

Consider the fact that you now consider CNN liberal

Malcolm wrote:

I don't consider them liberal. They are not. They are center-right.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 4th, 2017 at 3:32 AM

Title: Re: Hate speech is Free Speech?

Content:

madhusudan said:

The link in the OP was from CNN, far from a trusted news source.

Malcolm wrote:

Hahaha, CNN is awesome merely for the fact that they pissed off the Trump administration so much that the Trump admin has declared war on them.

Queequeg said:

When that is the standard of awesomeness, we're living in some pathetic times.

Malcolm wrote:

Anything that makes Trump angry is awesome.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 4th, 2017 at 3:21 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Pema Yolo said:

Have gave the lung in sections as he went throughout the retreat, but then gave the full lung yesterday as requested by some of the webcast attendees. If you watched all of the teachings you should have the full lung I believe.

Leif said:

Is lung necessary to practice rushen or parts of it, or will having transmission suffice.

I could only attend parts of teachings on most days, and only attended the last day completely, thus I'm sure I didn't receive the lung for rushen (just all the lungs transmitted on the last day).

Malcolm wrote:

In general the requirement for practicing rushan is just direct introduction, you don't need a lung to practice rushan.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 4th, 2017 at 2:48 AM

Title: Re: Hate speech is Free Speech?

Content:

madhusudan said:

The link in the OP was from CNN, far from a trusted news source.

Malcolm wrote:

Hahaha, CNN is awesome merely for the fact that they pissed off the Trump administration so much that the Trump admin has declared war on them.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, February 4th, 2017 at 12:09 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is an mistaken point of view. Water is always pure. This is why when it is allowed to be still, any turbidity settles naturally and all that remains is limpid water. This is the meaning of the Buddha's statement, "Monks, the mind is luminous and afflictions roll in; monks, the mind is luminous and afflictions roll out." Afflictions are not part of the nature of the mind. If they were, the mind could never be pure.

Tsongkhapafan said:

It's actually mistaken to say that muddy water is pure. Of course dirt is not the nature of water because then water could never be pure - yet water with dirt in it is dirty water; how can you say it is pure?

Malcolm wrote:

When you leave muddied water alone, the mud settles, having never affected the water.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Yet the mind is contaminated by afflictions and failing to uncontaminate it will not lead to Buddhahood. Simply believing in the 'natural purity' of water will not liberate it from its muddy state. You cannot be introduced to the natural purity of something that is adventitiously impure.

Malcolm wrote:

Even the afflictions of the mind are naturally pure.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 3rd, 2017 at 3:09 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

If you have dirty water, you have water that has the potential to be pure. It's not the same thing as pure water.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is an mistaken point of view. Water is always pure. This is why when it is allowed to be still, any turbidity settles naturally and all that remains is limpid water. This is the meaning of the Buddha's statement, "Monks, the mind is luminous and afflictions roll in; monks, the mind is luminous and afflictions roll out." Afflictions are not part of the nature of the mind. If they were, the mind could never be pure.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Similarly, if you have a defiled mind, it's not the same as an undefiled mind. We cannot say that the mind before attaining Buddhahood at the mind at the time of Buddhahood are the same.

Malcolm wrote:

They are exactly the same. The only difference is context. For example, when one is in a dark room one cannot see anything, even though one has eyes which are healthy. But when light is added to that room, one can see everything automatically without needing any training at all. But nothing about one's eyes has changed at all. They are the same in both cases.

Tsongkhapafan said:

If sentient beings are Buddhas they do not need to do anything - there are no obscurations, no suffering, no need for a path and no result needed.

Malcolm wrote:

The only thing sentient beings need to do is recognize their own state. Beyond that there is nothing they need to do.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Clearly, this is incorrect; if it were true, Buddhism would be unnecessary.

Malcolm wrote:

Buddhism is necessary because sentient beings become convinced they have problems, but those problems are not real. For as long as sentient beings suffer from the delusion they are not awake, for that long they will seek paths and stages and create karma. But the solution to this is really not so complicated as lower vehicles make it out to be. Sentient beings can be introduced to their own state of buddhahood directly, even when they are under the power of afflictions. This method is called "direct introduction."

Tsongkhapafan said:

On the other hand, If sentient beings are Buddhas with obscurations, they aren't Buddhas! We can, however, say that sentient beings are potential Buddhas. They have the potential for purity just as dirty water has the potential to be pure water if the dirt is removed.

Malcolm wrote:

As above, water is already pure. It cannot be contaminated by mud. Likewise, the mind is already pure, it cannot be contaminated by afflictions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 3rd, 2017 at 2:57 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Is the Tantra of the Great Array one of the Nyingma Tantras in the Kangyur?

Malcolm wrote:

No, but the absence of a text in the bka' 'gyur is no indication of invalidity. For example, there are many protector tantras, for example, the Shasanapatti tantra, which are not in the bka' 'gyur.

Tsongkhapafan said:

I see, so what is the undisputed word of Buddha? How can it be proved?

Malcolm wrote:

It is not something that can be proven. For example, there is the famous Tara Tantra. It exists in the bka' 'gyur, yet it, along with a number of other "gsar ma" tantras of the Kriya Tantra are not accepted by Ngorchen Kunga Zangpo.

One cannot prove any text to be spoken by the Buddha. This is why, when challenged over the doctrine of the bardo, Vasubandhu simply states, "merely because you do not read it does not mean it is invalid." This is his response to the charge that this or that text is not Buddhavacana.

This is why my response to you is that merely because you do not read this or that text, does not invalidate it. Moreover, just as Nāgārjuna warned Hinayanists who criticized Mahāyāna it was better oif they merely put it aside without criticizing it, likewise too, you would be better off putting Dzogchen aside without criticizing it.

As for obscurations, they are not real, substantial things that need to removed, like a stain from clothes. As the famous Haribhadra points out, when one achieves buddhahood, one understands one was never deluded all along. As Maitreyanath states, "Nothing here to add, nothing here to remove."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 3rd, 2017 at 2:26 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Minobu said:

ok so why do you use Sakyamuni Buddha and say that he stated stuff in the Tantra of the Great Array (bkod pa chen po rgyud)

how is that possible? teach me like i am a total moron. which maybe i am...I have no sense of false pride when it come to humbling myself to learn one thing in Buddhism....

Was it Garab Dorje that first put to pen Tantra of the Great Array (bkod pa chen po rgyud)...who put it to pen.

i just want to know, how the prediction got into Buddhism .

Malcolm wrote:

The same way the Lotus Sūtra got into Buddhism, it was taught by the Buddha.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Is the Tantra of the Great Array one of the Nyingma Tantras in the Kangyur?

Malcolm wrote:

No, but the absence of a text in the bka' 'gyur is no indication of invalidity. For example, there are many protector tantras, for example, the Shasanapatti tantra, which are not in the bka' 'gyur.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 3rd, 2017 at 2:02 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Minobu said:

i want to know when this was introduced to our history

Malcolm wrote:

Śākyamuni Buddha, in the Tantra of the Great Array (bkod pa chen po rgyud), stated that Garab Dorje would appear 360 years after his parinirvana. When Garab Dorje was 32 years old, he began teaching all the Dzogchen tantras, in addition to various tantric cycles such as Yamantaka and so on. He did not just teach Dzogchen.

Minobu said:

ok so why do you use Sakyamuni Buddha and say that he stated stuff in the Tantra of the Great Array (bkod pa chen po rgyud)

how is that possible? teach me like i am a total moron. which maybe i am...I have no sense of false pride when it come to humbling myself to learn one thing in Buddhism....

Was it Garab Dorje that first put to pen Tantra of the Great Array (bkod pa chen po rgyud)...who put it to pen.

i just want to know, how the prediction got into Buddhism .

Malcolm wrote:

The same way the Lotus Sūtra got into Buddhism, it was taught by the Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, February 3rd, 2017 at 1:26 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Minobu said:

The Realms and Transformations of Sound Tantra,
i want to know when this was introduced to our history

Malcolm wrote:

Śākyamuni Buddha, in the Tantra of the Great Array (bkod pa chen po rgyud), stated that Garab Dorje would appear 360 years after his parinirvana. When Garab Dorje was 32 years old, he began teaching all the Dzogchen tantras, in addition to various tantric cycles such as Yamantaka and so on. He did not just teach Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 2nd, 2017 at 11:54 PM

Title: Re: Recognizing rigpa

Content:

cepheidvariable said:

\Would it be considered, "stealing teachings" if I were to reach out to the DC and maybe attend a webcast after already haven received lung in a different tradition?:

Malcolm wrote:

Nope. It is perfectly fine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 2nd, 2017 at 11:46 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Malcolm says that sentient beings are already Buddhas...

Malcolm wrote:

No, the Buddha said this in The Questions of Kāśyapa:

"If sentient beings are buddhas by nature, just what is the difference between buddhas and sentient beings?

‘They both differ not in nature, but differ by virtue of realization and non-realization.’

The Hevajra Tantra states:

Sentient beings are buddhas, but they are temporarily obscured by taints—

when removed, they are buddhas.

This is why sentient beings do not need a prediction for buddhahood. The anuyoga tantra, Sarvatathāgata-citta-jñāna-guhyārtha-garbha-vyūha-vajra-tantra-siddhi-yogāgama-samāja-sarvavidyāsūtra-mahāyānābhisamaya-dharmaparyāya-vivvyūha-nāma-sūtra, states:

With respect to seeing or not seeing natural, primordial buddhahood—that is not seen in inferior conditions, it is seen in superior conditions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 2nd, 2017 at 10:47 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

jlhundrup said:

Dear all, Today Rinpoche has given the transmission and a slight explanation of the chod practice of Jigme Lingpa: "The Sound of Dakini Laughter". Is enough with this lung to be able to practice it? No need any initiation? And also, there is a book translated by Tony Duff titled: "Longchen Nyingthig Chod Practice Sound of Dakini Laughter". After receiving this transmission, is it possible to read it? Thanks and forgive the questions, I'm a newbie. Thank you.

Malcolm wrote:

The lung is enough. You can find Jigme Lingpa's chod on the webcast website if you poke around in the files section.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 2nd, 2017 at 10:42 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is no contradiction at all between being a practitioner of Hevajra and being a practitioner of Dzogchen. Dzogchen is the meaning of the Hevajra Tantra, as it is of all tantras.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Um, so you say It's funny how Buddha Vajradhara didn't mention Dzogchen as being the meaning of all the Tantras.

Malcolm wrote:

Why sure he did, here are Buddha Vajradhāras precise words:

Because the lion roars, the other predators are shocked and frightened.

The nomenclature of the Great Perfection shocks all in the lower vehicles.

The meaning of Ati, the unparalleled Great Perfection, is the most distilled secret of all the buddhas, the location of the supreme Dharma, and the mind of all buddhas.

Tsongkhapafan said:

It is also clear cut that Atisha wrote a wonderful little text on Dzogchen view, meditation and conduct which is preserved today in all versions of the bstan 'gyur. You may find it inconvenient that this is so (just as you find it inconvenient that a wonderful text on Dzogchen exists in all editions of Tsongkhapa's collected works, in the first volume), but it exists.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, he didn't write it and everything you say is a matter of interpretation[/quote]

Yes, in fact Tsongkhapa wrote the text down in his own hand and preserved it among his writings. Your obstinance in resisting this fact is as entertaining as Trump's denial that he lost the popular vote.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 2nd, 2017 at 10:25 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Monlam Tharchin said:

He explains principle object of refuge for Mahāyānis is the dharmakāya.

A side question for Malcolm.

For instance when I take refuge in the Sangha, I try to visualize like a sea of teachers, bodhisattvas, and so on before me while bowing.

But the Dharmakaya isn't a specific form I thought, so what does taking refuge in it "look like" in practice?

Malcolm wrote:

When you take refuge in any buddha, you are taking refuge in the dharmakāya.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 2nd, 2017 at 10:32 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Queequeg said:

1. The prediction does matter... because its actually one of the steps to becoming a Buddha.

Malcolm wrote:

The prediction does not matter. No one predicted Buddha Samantabhadra. Buddha Samantabhadra merely recognized his own state and woke up without traveling a path or taking any steps. Sentient beings do not need a prediction for buddhahood. They're already buddhas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 2nd, 2017 at 6:33 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Queequeg said:

I have no comment about other "variegated" nirmanakayas.

Malcolm wrote:

This is standard Mahāyāna doctrine. One supreme nirmanakāya at a time, all other nirmanakāya buddhas during the dispensation of a supreme nirmanakāya are considered variegated in that they do not display all the major and minor marks, and can appear in any form at all, even as a bridge for example.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 2nd, 2017 at 6:30 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Queequeg said:

The various vows the various Buddhas extend to us here in the Saha world aside, Shakyamuni is our "original" teacher in this world.

Malcolm wrote:

This is not at all true. Śākyamūni is the fourth or seventh teacher in this world, depending on how you count it. Prior to him there was 1) Vipasyin, 2) Śikhin, 3) Viśvabhū, 4) Krakucchanda, 5) Kanakamuni, 6) Kaśyapa and then 7) Śākyamuni. After the latter, 8) Maitreya Buddha will arrive.

Apart from these seven supreme nirmanāyās, there are infinite variegated nirmanakāyas like Padmasambhava, Garab Dorje, etc.

Clinging to Śākyamuni is a mistake.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Wow, reinventing history as well? Buddha Shakyamuni is the fourth Buddha of the Fortunate Aeon and Krakucchanda is the first - where did these others come from?

Malcolm wrote:

This list of seven buddhas comes from our Vinaya, the Mulasarvastivada Vinaya. It may also be found here:

<http://www.accesstosight.org/tipitaka/dn/dn.32.0.piya.html>

http://tipitaka.wikia.com/wiki/Maha-padana_Sutta

Tsongkhapafan said:

And Buddha Shakyamuni is indeed the original Teacher of Buddhism in this world in this age and the principal object of refuge for all Buddhists. Without him, there's no Buddhism for us - no need to cling, it's a fact.

Malcolm wrote:

Śākyamuni is not the original Buddha of this world and this eon. If you count via the Bhadrakalpa Sūtra, he is the fourth of 1002.

Secondly, a nirmanakāya is never the principle object of refuge, as Maitreyanatha explains in the Uttaratantra. He explains principle object of refuge for Mahāyānis is the dharmakāya.

Tsongkhapafan, you should really learn to ask questions first, instead of issuing hotheaded statements that are easily corrected and merely show that you are not well-studied.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 2nd, 2017 at 5:37 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Queequeg said:

The various vows the various Buddhas extend to us here in the Saha world aside, Shakyamuni is our "original" teacher in this world.

Malcolm wrote:

This is not at all true. Śākyamūni is the fourth or seventh teacher in this world, depending on how you count it. Prior to him there was 1) Vipasyin, 2) Śikhin, 3) Viśvabhū, 4) Krakucchanda, 5) Kanakamuni, 6) Kaśyapa and then 7) Śākyamuni. After the latter, 8) Maitreya Buddha will arrive.

Apart from these seven supreme nirmanāyās, there are infinite variegated nirmanakāyas like Padmsambhava, Garab Dorje, etc.

Clinging to Śākyamuni is a mistake.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 2nd, 2017 at 5:32 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is very solid.

Grigoris said:

Only if you believe it...

Malcolm wrote:

Sure, that is the whole point. People make irrational claims based on books all the time.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 2nd, 2017 at 5:08 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Since when did you decide to follow text critical academic Buddhist history?

Grigoris said:

I didn't, but the textual justification is not all that solid, is it now?

Malcolm wrote:
It is very solid.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Thursday, February 2nd, 2017 at 5:06 AM
Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise
Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:
The inclusion of the Nyingma Tantras in some editions of the Kangyur has been a subject of some debate in the past but we're all free to decide what we regard as canonical. I'm still mystified as to how a teaching by Buddha Krakuchchanda could exist today.

Malcolm wrote:
By the time the bka' 'gyur was compiled by Buton Rinchen Drup, this debate had been stilled.

Tsongkhapafan said:
I'm still mystified as to how a teaching by Buddha Krakuchchanda could exist today.

Malcolm wrote:
I guess you will be surprised to learn that the teaching "Avoid negative deeds, engage in positive deeds, observe your mind — this is the teaching of the Buddha" are actually the words of Buddha Krakucchanda preserved in the Vinaya.

There is nothing mystifying about it. Since the mind of all buddhas are the same, they all have access to all Dharma that has ever been taught by any buddha anywhere at anytime.

Tsongkhapafan said:
As for Atisha, this matter is far more clear cut: he was a practitioner of Highest Yoga Tantra, in particular Hevajra Tantra.

Thanks for your reply.

Malcolm wrote:
There is no contradiction at all between being a practitioner of Hevajra and being a practitioner of Dzogchen. Dzogchen is the meaning of the Hevajra Tantra, as it is of all tantras.

It is also clear cut that Atisha wrote a wonderful little text on Dzogchen view, meditation and conduct which is preserved today in all versions of the bstan 'gyur. You may find it inconvenient that this is so (just as you find it inconvenient that a wonderful text on Dzogchen exists in all editions of Tsongkhapa's collected works, in the first volume), but it exists.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 2nd, 2017 at 3:47 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Minobu said:

Not to disparage Dzogchen in any way...but as a reference to actual predictions by Lord Buddha Sakyamuni.

Malcolm wrote:

As I said, the prediction of Śākyamuni Buddha and Garab Dorje are both in the Realms and Transformations of Sound Tantra, which was taught by the teacher Sublime Appearance (snang ba dam pa) in the first eon when life spans were measureless.

Minobu said:

If it is in some Sadhana made up by a guy and useing Lord Sakyammuni's name as the source of the prediction...if you are going to teach us this...well people wonder the whole thing...

Malcolm wrote:

It is not in a sadhana made up by some guy.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 2nd, 2017 at 3:20 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Minobu said:

I've heard this before somewhere...what text are you going by? I would really like to know this for this is really really important for me at this juncture in my practice...so please as much as you can...

Malcolm wrote:

The Realms and Transformations of Sound Tantra, which is the first Dharma to be taught by the first Buddha of this eon, lists Śākyamuni Buddha among the 12 teachers of Dzogchen. The other Buddha we know about from others sources which is included in this list is Buddha Kaśyāpa.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Can you please give a scriptural reference to a Sutra where Buddha Shakyamuni taught Dzogchen?

How could the teachings of Buddha Krakuchchanda still be existing in this world when even the teachings of Buddha Kanakamuni and Buddha Kashyapa have passed away? Is there a way to access this text?

Malcolm wrote:

I just did give a scriptural source, The Realms and Transformations of Sound Tantra. Then there is the Kulyarāja Tantra (D 828) (Sarvadharmā-mahāśānti-bodhicittakulayarāja), which is in all bka' 'gyurs. This tantra mentions Śākyamuni Buddha in chapter thirty-four in which it is explained that Kulyarāja, the teacher of all teachers, encompasses the mind of Samantabhadra, Vajrasattva, the seven buddhas including Śākyamuni, the 1002 buddhas of the Bhadrakalpa, and buddhas no matter where they are or when they are. The transcendent state of all the buddhas that has always been naturally perfected from the beginning in the dimension of the unconditioned, all-pervading dharmadhātu is equal with space. In other words, the three kāyas of all the victors are contained within the mind of perfect realization (byang chub sems, bodhicitta) which generates everything.

There is also the Sarvatathāgata-citta-jñāna-guhyārtha-garbha-vyūha-vajra-tantra-siddhi-yogāgama-samāja-sarvavidyāsūtra-mahāyānābhīśamaya-dharmaparyāya-vivūha-nāma-sūtra, Sarvatathāgata-cittaguhyajñānārthagarbha-krodhavajrakula-tantra-piṇḍārthavidyāyogasiddhi-nāma-mahāyāna-sūtra, Śrī-guhya-garbha-tattva-viniścaya, Devijāli-mahāmāyā-tantra-nāma and the Śrī-heruka-karuṇākṛīḍita-tantra-guhya-gaṃbhīra-uttama-nāma.

All of these tantras, which all exist in the bka' 'gyur, all teach Dzogchen.

Then there is the Bodhicittamahāsukhāmnāya composed by Atisha, D 1696, which is text explaining the view and meditation of Dzogchen, which supports the view of the Nyingthig tradition that Atisha attained his realization through practicing the Great Perfection.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 2nd, 2017 at 2:12 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You haven't corrected anything, no more than Vasubandhu was corrected by Theravadins who claimed there was no antarabhāva since they did not read the sūtra in which the antarabhāva is taught.

Coëmgenu said:

You made a universal claim that was not universal. You made a disputed claim. I merely called it what it is: disputed, or, more politely, "according to some".

Malcolm wrote:

The only way to dispute it is to call the text itself into question. Sure you want to go there?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 2nd, 2017 at 1:59 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

According to some. The notion that a tantra was the first Dharma taught, in this era or not, is definitely not a belief with universal mainstream consensus.

Malcolm wrote:

Not merely, according to some, according to the Buddha. You may not read The Realms and Transformations of Sound Tantra, but this does not form a sound justification for rejecting it.

These things do not depend on consensus for their validity.

Coëmgenu said:

It is according to some that it is according to the Buddha. I have not rejected anything, I have just corrected a universal claim about when a certain thing came chronologically, because such a claim was not truly universal.

Malcolm wrote:

You haven't corrected anything, no more than Vasubandhu was corrected by Theravadins who claimed there was no antarabhāva since they did not read the sūtra in which the antarabhāva is taught.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 2nd, 2017 at 1:29 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The Realms and Transformations of Sound Tantra, which is the first Dharma to be taught by the first Buddha of this eon

Coëmgenu said:

According to some. The notion that a tantra was the first Dharma taught, in this era or not, is definitely not a belief with universal mainstream consensus.

Malcolm wrote:

Not merely, according to some, according to the Buddha. You may not read The Realms and Transformations of Sound Tantra, but this does not form a sound justification for rejecting it.

These things do not depend on consensus for their validity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 2nd, 2017 at 1:27 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The Realms and Transformations of Sound Tantra, which is the first Dharma to be taught by the first Buddha of this eon, lists Śākyamuni Buddha among the 12 teachers of Dzogchen. The other Buddha we know about from others sources which is included in this list is Buddha Kaśyāpa.

Grigoris said:

Has this text been dated? And if so, how? I could write a text now that justifies current innovations in spirituality and make it look that it predicts and rubber stamps current teachers and trends.

Malcolm wrote:

Since when did you decide to follow text critical academic Buddhist history?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, February 2nd, 2017 at 1:00 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Well, an argument can be made for the superiority of Śākyamuni Buddha's teachings in one respect, he predicted both Padmasambhava and Garab Dorje.

Minobu said:

I've heard this before somewhere...what text are you going by? I would really like to know this for this is really really important for me at this juncture in my practice...so please as much as you can...

Malcolm wrote:

The Realms and Transformations of Sound Tantra, which is the first Dharma to be taught by the first Buddha of this eon, lists Śākyamuni Buddha among the 12 teachers of Dzogchen. The other Buddha we know about from others sources which is included in this list is Buddha Kaśyāpa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 1st, 2017 at 11:04 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Well, an argument can be made for the superiority of Śākyamuni Buddha's teachings in one respect, he predicted both Padmasambhava and Garab Dorje.

Queequeg said:

Its not the absolute superiority of the teaching - but a question of most appropriate for this world. Shakyamuni has a connection to this world and its beings who appear here. His teachings are for us. Notwithstanding, I don't think those predictions had reached Japan by the 13th c.

Malcolm wrote:

We all recognize this world system is dominated by the supreme nirmanakāya Śākyamuni, in this particular time in the Bhadrakalpa. But times change and to take this into account Śākyamuni Buddha either directly taught different teachings for different time periods, or predicted the teachers who would. We now live in the period of the five degenerations, and so the path of renunciation teachings are not longer very effective because the afflictions of sentient beings are too strong.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 1st, 2017 at 10:22 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

tomamundsen said:

Isn't the Youthful Vase Body "unique" in some way?

Malcolm wrote:

The youthful vase body is a description of the homeostatic nature of reality before the liberation of buddhas and the delusion of sentient beings.

Queequeg said:

Is that posited as having happened, or is it a hypothetical for the purpose of elaborating the teaching?

Malcolm wrote:

There are a couple of ways of understanding it. But in general it is a didactic device.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 1st, 2017 at 6:24 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If on the other hand you begin to claim as some do that only Śākyamuni is the real buddha, etc., then you slip into the deviation of condemning the Dharma and slandering the Buddha.

Coëmgenu said:

Perhaps you should take that up with Nichiren

He would call that statement right there Buddhadharma-slander, if my impression of him is at all correct. Which it is likely not to be.

Queequeg said:

Not quite.

When the Buddhas are viewed in terms of the unchanging equality of their enlightenment, there are no distinctions to be made among them. But when they are viewed in terms of the ever-present differences among their preaching, then one should understand that each of them has his own realm among the worlds of the ten directions, and that they distinguish between those with whom they have already had some connection, and those with whom they have no such connection.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, an argument can be made for the superiority of Śākyamuni Buddha's teachings in one respect, he predicted both Padmasambhava and Garab Dorje.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 1st, 2017 at 6:14 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

Traditional Buddhist discourse surrounding the Awakening of the Buddha is superior.

.

Malcolm wrote:

Which one, the Hinayāna one or the Mahāyāna one?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 1st, 2017 at 6:13 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

If on the other hand you begin to claim as some do that only Śākyamuni is the real buddha, etc., then you slip into the deviation of condemning the Dharma and slandering the Buddha.

Coëmgenu said:

Perhaps you should take that up with Nichiren

Malcolm wrote:

He would most certainly lose the debate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 1st, 2017 at 5:59 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is also important to understand the dharmakāya of the buddhas of the three times is single. It is the same realization. It is never a different realization. The buddhas have one transcendent state. It does not matter if you call a buddha Samantabhadra, Vajradhara, Vajrayogini, Mañjuśrī, Vairocana, Vipassī, Śākyamuni, etc. They all have the same mind. The dharmakāya is single.

tomamundsen said:

Isn't the Youthful Vase Body "unique" in some way?

Malcolm wrote:

The youthful vase body is a description of the homeostatic nature of reality before the liberation of buddhas and the delusion of sentient beings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 1st, 2017 at 5:15 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Jeff H said:

This discussion is way over my head, so pardon me for interrupting. But here's what it sounds like to me. Am I missing the point?

Shakyamuni sat down as an ordinary being but arose as a buddha. The crossing over into enlightenment occurred for Shakyamuni under the bodhi tree, but the pristine mind of the buddha who arose cannot be understood with any reference to time.

Malcolm wrote:

No, Mahāyāna doxology in general maintains that Śākyāmunī is a nirmanakāya, a manifestation of the sambhogakāya Vairocana. It is accepted in all Mahāyāna schools that Śākyamuni Buddha's 12 deeds were merely a display, a mere show to inspire sentient beings. Indeed, that his entire career explained in the Jataka tales, offering his body to the starving tigress, residing in Tuṣita Heaven as the deva Svetaketu, and even his very first moment of bodhicitta in hell was merely a dramatic display for sentient beings.

The one Indian commentary we have on the Lotus Sūtra suggests that references in the sūtra to the nirmanakāya's longevity and so on are to be understood as attributes of the sambhogakāya and dharmakāya. There are five certainties with respect to sambhogakāya: place, teacher, retinue, teaching, and time. The place is Akaniṣṭha Gandavyuha (only accessible to bodhisattvas on the pure stages). The teacher is always Vairocana. The teaching is always Mahāyāna. The retinue is always bodhisattvas on the pure stages. The time is always. The nirmanakāyas on the other hand does not possess these five certainties. However, in order to generate faith, the 15th chapter of the Lotus deliberately ascribes qualities, a lifespan, and the five certainties to the nirmanakāya normally reserved for the dharmakāya and sambhogakāya.

It is also important to understand the dharmakāya of the buddhas of the three times is single. It is the same realization. It is never a different realization. The buddhas have one transcendent state. It does not matter if you call a buddha Samantabhadra, Vajradhara, Vajrayogini, Mañjuśrī, Vairocana, Vipassī, Śākyamuni, etc. They all have the same mind. The dharmakāya is single. Therefore, there is only one Teacher, no matter how many manifestations of that teacher appear. This is the actual profound point the Lotus Sūtra is making with respect to the person of the Buddha. There is a manifestation of the Teacher's nirmanakāya beyond all limitations for each and every sentient being.

When this chapter is read with reference to the wider context of general Mahāyāna doxography, it becomes quite clear what the intent is. The intent is to make people understand that the three kāyas are inseparable. Wherever there is a nirmanakāya, that nirmanakāya possesses also the other two kāyas, and vice versa.

If on the other hand you begin to claim as some do that only Śākyamuni is the real buddha, etc., then you slip into the deviation of condemning the Dharma and slandering the Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, February 1st, 2017 at 2:25 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

That is the narrative that the text sets for itself, that it is a very very "difficult to believe" teaching that is ultimately true. I don't think it says "difficult to understand". I think it says "difficult to believe", but I will have to go check.

Malcolm wrote:

The Buddha states in the Mahāparibanna sutta that there is no actual limit to his lifespan. In that Hinayāna scripture, he demonstrates parinirvana only due to Ānanda's delinquency in asking him not to pass into nirvana. Indeed, this is why, in the seven limb prayer we ask the Buddhas not to remain in a state of nirvana. It is a common assumption in Mahāyāna in general that on attaining Buddhahood, the one attaining buddhahood now is completely free to manifest nirmanakāyas in a potentially unlimited number of worlds for as long as samsara exists.

Coëmgenu said:

The theorized original Prakrit Lotus Sutra is so far lost that I am almost sure that very few Buddhists we could easily name ever read any edition of the Lotus Sutra that was not primarily in Chinese. The Prakrit-Sanskrit originals have been completely lost as far as I know. The contemporary Sanskrit versions available are from a much later recension, as far as I know. "Primordial" however is an Englishism. "Source Buddha" or "Root Buddha" are better translations I think, but what do I know?

Malcolm wrote:

Nāgārjuna? Vasubandhu? Asanga? I can give you a list of Indian Panditas as long as your arm.

The contemporary Sanskrit edition is indeed later than the recension the Tibetan translation is based upon. But there are no serious differences between the recension the Tibetan translation is based upon and the recension that Kumarajiva used. It goes without saying that the Tibetan translation is more accurate than the Chinese translation, of any period.

[/quote] Well I don't even necessarily believe that either, but it is a valid reading of what the text literally says, and for many Buddhists, nothing around the Chapter 15-17 mark of the Lotus Sutra is at all provisional.[/quote]

The point of chapter fifteen is to explain why, among other things, the Buddha manifested nirvana when in fact he had no need to:

If it is asked why show nirvana without going to nirvana, if I was always to be seen,
the ignorant who do not understand would become lazy.

And as for the lifespan issue, Pṛthivībandhu explains:

The lifespan with which nirmanakāya of the Tathāgata is endowed is an expedient explanation so that sentient being will generate devotion to [the Tathāgata] because the qualities and lifespan of the dharmakāya and sambhogakāya is incalculable

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 7:48 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

a time when there will not exist a Buddha cannot be said to exist any amount of time in the future. The Buddha did not, in truth, according to one reading of the literature in question, achieve Awakening at Bōdh Gayā, he attained Awakening a time ago that is immeasurable and boundless. That does not necessarily mean that the Buddha was ever not Awakened.

Malcolm wrote:

Primordial Buddhahood of this kind is rejected as irrational by Indian masters. Any assertion that there can be a primordial Buddha in the sense you mention above is "heretical," outside the pale of Dharma.

It is well understood that Śākyamuni is a nirmanakāya, i.e., an emanation of the sambhogakāya Vairocana, who in turn is the emanation of the dharmakāya, sometimes referred to in Yoga tantra and so as Samantabhadra. This means that the Buddha's 12 acts were merely a play. But it does not mean that there wasn't a continuum at some point that realized the nature of reality and attained the dharmakāya level of realization, manifesting in myriad ways to benefit sentient beings according to the latter's inclinations.

However, just as there is no beginning of samsara, there was never a time when there were no buddhas guiding sentient beings.

But when we speak of buddhas living outside, in the world, etc., this is a very external view. It had nothing to do with how the three kāyas relate to ourselves and our own nature. The latter is far more important than provisional buddhological cosmologies.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 7:04 PM

Title: Re: Saddharmapuṇḍarīka & maṇipadme

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Oṃ simply means "auspicious."

Coëmgenu said:

Why do you think it means that?

Malcolm wrote:

Because that is how it is universally explained by Buddhist Panditas.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 7:02 PM

Title: Re: The Prayer of Kuntuzangpo:

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

the meaning is much more important than language here anyway:)

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 6:38 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

So the Lotus Sutra does still use the language of "attaining Buddhahood", which could be interpreted as to say that there exists a "beginning" to Buddhahood, that there existed a time when a being conventionally called Śākyamuni was not Buddha, but the wording of this sutra establishes the beginning of the Buddha's Buddhahood as without measure or limit. In short, according to the Lotus Sutra, there was never a time when the Buddha was not the Buddha, as the Buddha is established therein as beginningless. But good men, it has been immeasurable, boundless hundreds, thousands, ten thousands, millions of nayutas of kalpas since I in fact attained buddhahood.

Malcolm wrote:

Thus means the person saying this was once an ordinary being.

Coëmgenu said:

I think immeasurable and without boundary/limit is more heavy a claim than you are making it. In fact it is more or less directly stated that such a date of "when the Buddha became enlightened" is impossible to conceive of.

Malcolm wrote:

It does not matter now long ago, at one point the Buddha was an ordinary person like you and I. Once buddhahood is attained, then normal mortal limitations do not apply.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 6:25 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Coëmgenu said:

there was never a time when the Buddha was not the Buddha, as the Buddha is established therein as beginningless.

Minobu said:

so no cause then?

I don't think thats possible. You have to be a defiled human in order to become a Buddha.

unless we are talking about something else. Which starts to border on God Themes.

Coëmgenu said:

Ignorance is also causeless/beginningless, but it is not a god. "Bhikkhus, this is said: 'A first point of ignorance, bhikkhus, is not seen such that before this there was no ignorance and afterward it came into being.'

(AN 10.61)

Or, if you prefer, the āgama-parallel is more ambiguous: I have heard thus: Once, the Buddha travelled to Śrāvastī and stayed at Anāthapiṇḍada's Park in Jeta's Grove.

At that time, the World Honored One addressed the bhikṣus: "That the craving for existence is the ultimate origin for it is unknowable. Or is there no craving for existence at the origin? But, there does presently arise this craving for existence."
(MA 51)

Malcolm wrote:
Ignorance is conditioned. Is buddhahood conditioned?

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 6:15 PM
Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise
Content:

Coëmgenu said:
So the Lotus Sutra does still use the language of "attaining Buddhahood", which could be interpreted as to say that there exists a "beginning" to Buddhahood, that there existed a time when a being conventionally called Śākyamuni was not Buddha, but the wording of this sutra establishes the beginning of the Buddha's Buddhahood as without measure or limit. In short, according to the Lotus Sutra, there was never a time when the Buddha was not the Buddha, as the Buddha is established therein as beginningless. But good men, it has been immeasurable, boundless hundreds, thousands, ten thousands, millions of nayutas of kalpas since I in fact attained buddhahood.

Malcolm wrote:
Thus means the person saying this was once an ordinary being.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 5:43 AM
Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise
Content:
Grigoris said:
My "realization" came during your post...

Basically it is quite simple: if you take the Lotus Sutra as the only authoritative teaching by Shakyamuni Buddha and the commentary by Nichiren (for example) as the only authoritative commentary then you are going to arrive at a certain view.

Malcolm wrote:

A very narrow one.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 5:12 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Grigoris said:

I saw that already, but I don't see how it answers my question.

DGA said:

because there is at least one Buddhist school that upholds that there is a Primordial Buddha, and that said Buddha is Shakyamuni Buddha.

Malcolm wrote:

This of course is an extremely foolish, completely irrational, and indefensible doctrine.

DGA said:

Further, as reflected in the post above, if you disagree with this, then you are bringing an Indian Buddhist bias to bear on the improvements made upon Buddhist doctrine in East Asia.

Malcolm wrote:

The trials and tribulations of dealing with a multicultural Buddhist world...and Dzogchen practitioners in particular.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 4:56 AM

Title: Re: Saddharmapuṇḍarīka & maṇipadme

Content:

Minobu said:

I always thought that Om was supposed to be the true sound or vibration of the Universe.

Malcolm wrote:

Om simply means "auspicious."

Minobu said:

Then there is a school of thought that it is more AUM ...

Malcolm wrote:

Not in Buddhist texts.

Minobu said:

Then when I got into Nichiren Shonin's Dharma i thought they both have six syllables and they both talk of the lotus...

Malcolm wrote:

Pundarika is a white lotus; Padma is a red lotus. Different plants altogether.

Minobu said:

Thanks Malcolm.

So in Buddhist terms do the colour of the lotus blossoms have meaning

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, definitely. Padma shows that Avalokiteśvara belongs to the lotus family of buddhas and bodhisattvas. The Pundarika is a symbol of purity.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 4:31 AM

Title: Re: Saddharmapuṇḍarīka & maṇipadme

Content:

Minobu said:

I always thought that Om was supposed to be the true sound or vibration of the Universe.

Malcolm wrote:

Om simply means "auspicious."

Minobu said:

Then there is a school of thought that it is more AUM ...

Malcolm wrote:

Not in Buddhist texts.

Minobu said:

Then when I got into Nichiren Shonin's Dharma i thought they both have six syllables and they both talk of the lotus...

Malcolm wrote:

Pundarika is a white lotus; Padma is a red lotus. Different plants altogether.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 4:25 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Vasana said:

For slightly more context, I recall Rinpoche saying something loosely along the lines of,

"Belief is useless in the Dzogchen teachings, it is discovery that is the most important."

This may not have been the exact phrase but 'belief' and 'discover' were definitely paired for contrast. As in, you can't just believe or intellectualise your way to recognizing and stabilizing Rigpa since it has to be discovered in a concrete way beyond any doubts or fabrications.

Malcolm wrote:

He has made this point very often. And he does not only confine it to Dzogchen. He often says, "you can believe anything."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 4:24 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

tiagolps said:

I have not seen his teachings but now I have a question. At what stage can one say that he has no beliefs if they are useless?

Malcolm wrote:

I will give you a simple example — I believe in rebirth but I do not know if it is true, and won't be able to find out if it is true until I have the capacity to be aware at some future moment during a time of death, the bardo, and the conception of my mindstream. However, my confidence in Dzogchen teachings is not based on a belief because I have confirmed them for myself experientially. This allows me to reasonably infer other Buddhist beliefs I have may be true, but they remain unconfirmed beliefs. So, one should be very diligent in distinguishing that which one knows as opposed to that which one simply believes.

tiagolps said:

Ahh I understand. Thanks acharya! So if one has not confirmed them for oneself experientially, then do they have any value?

Malcolm wrote:

They may or they may not.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 3:41 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Lukeinaz said:

While of course there is no substitute for direct experience but cannot belief help until we get there?

For instance if we understand the benefits of practice and believe they are true we are more likely to follow the teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

One never knows whether or not a belief is true.

tiagolps said:

I have not seen his teachings but now I have a question. At what stage can one say that he has no beliefs if they are useless?

Malcolm wrote:

I will give you a simple example — I believe in rebirth but I do not know if it is true, and won't be able to find out if it is true until I have the capacity to be aware at some future moment during a time of death, the bardo, and the conception of my mindstream. However, my confidence in Dzogchen teachings is not based on a belief because I have confirmed them for myself experientially. This allows me to reasonably infer other Buddhist beliefs I have may be true, but they remain unconfirmed beliefs. So, one should be very diligent in distinguishing that which one knows as opposed to that which one simply believes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 3:21 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Belief is useless in any teaching; in general, it is useless in life.

Lukeinaz said:

While of course there is no substitute for direct experience but cannot belief help until we get there?

For instance if we understand the benefits of practice and believe they are true we are more likely to follow the teachings.

Malcolm wrote:

One never knows whether or not a belief is true.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 3:09 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

"Belief is useless in dzogchen teaching."

I believe this is closer to what was said today.

How can I find more about the vajra position? And then does one simply roll over and lay down? Rinpoche used a word here that sounded like "narwop" when we recognize mind and the nature of mind.

Wonderful!

Belief is useless in any teaching; in general, it is useless in life.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 2:43 AM

Title: Re: Documentation on Stupa building [Request]

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

Dear all,

Besides say hello, i would like to request formal documentation on stupa building. This is for a personal long-term project, as i would like to honor and thank the Buddhas of all directions through this as a public building open for all.

This is intended to exist on a major city in my country -about ten years from now- as a building where people can enter -inside-, but due that i don't know if there are specific instructions from Guru Padmasambhava or Buddha Sakyamunni or Mahasiddhas, i'm requesting such important information.

Also would like to say that this project is not intended as a lineage or school philosophy form-like stupa, in this sense original -old like- information is very appreciated.

By now this project is in prefeasibility stage, so this is why i need this information related to the dimensions, materials, and essential elements needed in general.

Best regards.

Malcolm wrote:

You should ask Chogyal Namkhai Norbu, since you are part of the DC. You might think of making a Longsal stupa.

javier.espinoza.t said:

i came to the same conclusion haha. i wonder how to make crystal material construction possible. thank you M.

Malcolm wrote:

Well, the problem of course is that you cannot have an empty stupa. But they made a Longsal stupa in Romania.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 2:15 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Queequeg said:

In Dzogchen - is Samantabhadra Adi-Buddha?

If so, then

How does Samantabhadra relate to Manjusri in terms of AdiBuddha?

Malcolm wrote:

Mañjuśrī, Samantabhadra, Vajrasattva, Vairocana, cittavajra, tathāgatagarbha, prajñāpāramitā, mind-essence, ordinary mind, luminosity, emptiness, pristine consciousness, bodhicitta, etc., are all just synonyms for the same thing: one's own unfabricated mind. As Ju Mipham states:

That luminosity of the primordial original basis, the original reality, is the ultimate dharma-tā of all phenomena. All appearances of samsara and nirvana arise from that state. As soon as they arise, [3/b] it is impossible that there is a single phenomena other than abiding in that state. Since this is the ultimate ground of liberation, this is called "the dharmakāya of ultimate reality." When the ultimate obscuration along with temporary traces are purified, the truth of cessation of the supreme vehicle is called "the svabhāvakāya that possesses the two ultimate purities." That basis in which there is neither delusion nor liberation is the totally uniform nature.

The Self-Arisen Vidyā Tantra states:

Everything is gathered into the essential state of Mañjuśrī, the pristine consciousness of all Secret Mantra,
the measure of the unerring transcendent state.

Therefore I am called the jñānasattva.

Everything is part of the family of Mañjuśrī no matter where it is, utterly pure, issuing from my state.

I am the Bhagavan victor

But as Norbu Rinpoche said again today, belief is useless because you can believe or have faith in anything. Only direct experience is useful, because then a) you will not need to believe anything and b) you will have no doubt.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 1:50 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Queequeg said:
Following up on my post.

The Primordial Buddha's enlightenment being always positioned in the remote past - the corollary is that our enlightenment is infinitely in the future.

This is the relative sense.

The Primordial Buddha being "eternal", then opens the path for immediate enlightenment, also.

Malcolm wrote:
But there is no basis in sūtra for such an idea.

Queequeg said:
After years of trying to make a $ out of 99 cents, I think I have to agree with that, unless "reading between the lines" counts.

Malcolm wrote:
No, there is no reading between the lines in this.

The term ādibuddha canonically arrived with the Mañjuśrī-jñānasattvasya-paramārthanāma-saṃgīti, where the term adibuddha is used as a name for Mañjuśrī by Śākyamuni Buddha:

The adibuddha lacks a cause.

Garab Dorje define the phrase as follows:

"The adibuddha lacks a cause" means self-originated pristine consciousness

"Self-originated" here means something discovered within oneself, not something that was shown to one from outside.

Mañjuśrimitra explains the line as follows:

[Mañjuśrī] is the adibuddha because his identity from the first is dharmatā.

Vimalamitra explains the line in a more general sense, based on the passage that precedes:

If is asked how it is free from cause and condition, since there is no beginning and end in buddhahood,
the activity of the Buddhas of the three times,
the adibuddha lacks a cause—
the single eye of pristine consciousness is untainted.

He comments:

The activity of the buddhas of the buddhas of the three times is guiding sentient beings, but since there is no source for buddhahood in the beginning, nor a place to go in the end, it has no first cause. Since the taints of dualistic grasping are absent in it, the eye of pristine consciousness is single.

Thus, in the text spoken by the Buddha, adibuddha refers not to a person, but rather to a principle.

The instance on the part of Nicherin Buddhists on Śākyamuni Buddha as "the adibuddha" misses the mark, in my opinion.

There are an 32 different writing on various aspects of this text attributed to Mañjuśrimitra alone out of a total of 79. It is probably the most commented upon tantra.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 12:58 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Queequeg said:

Following up on my post.

The Primordial Buddha's enlightenment being always positioned in the remote past - the corollary is that our enlightenment is infinitely in the future.

This is the relative sense.

The Primordial Buddha being "eternal", then opens the path for immediate enlightenment, also.

Malcolm wrote:

But there is no basis in sūtra for such an idea. The idea was obviously tossed around in India, but as noted above, Indians largely rejected it, in the pre-tantra period, including Vasubandhu.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 12:56 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

"Belief is useless."

-- Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 12:36 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No. Also in the Lotus Sutra he explains that at one point he was an ordinary person.

DGA said:

It follows from a casual reading of the Lotus Sutra that if there is such a thing as Primordial Buddhahood, it must be something that inheres in ordinary persons, can be recognized by ordinary persons when pointed out to them by Buddhas who create situations in which such recognitions are made possible (see chapters 3-4), and is not limited to one historical personage (Shakyamuni Buddha).

correct or no?

Malcolm wrote:

First one would have to establish whether this sūtra actually teaches the idea of primordial buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 12:09 AM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

Marc said:

Hi Malcolm,

Pardon my asking again (I'm surprised no one else did):

Is there any update as regards to this possible Oral Transmission of Vimalamitra's Great Commentary ?

Many thanks in advance

Malcolm wrote:

It will happen in June.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 12:09 AM

Title: Re: Documentation on Stupa building [Request]

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

Dear all,

Besides say hello, i would like to request formal documentation on stupa building. This is for a personal long-term proyect, as i would like to honor and thank the Buddhas of all directions through this as a public building open for all.

This is intended to exist on a major city in my country -about ten years from now- as a building where people can enter -inside-, but due that i don't know if there are specific instructions from Guru Padmasambhava or Buddha Sakyamunni or Mahasiddhas, i'm requesting such important information.

Also would like to say that this project is not intended as a lineage or school philosophy form-like stupa, in this sense original -old like- information is very appreciated.

By now this project is in prefeasibility stage, so this is why i need this information related to the dimensions, materials, and essential elements needed in general.

Best regards.

Malcolm wrote:

You should ask Chogyal Namkhai Norbu, since you are part of the DC. You might think of making a Longsal stupa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 31st, 2017 at 12:02 AM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The term is much misunderstood with respect to Dzogchen teachings and also Vajrayāna.

DGA said:

...and entirely distinct from the notion that when Buddha Shakyamuni claims in the Lotus Sutra that his lifetime is really, really, really long (but still finite), that he really meant to say that his lifetime is eternal and primordial, correct?

Malcolm wrote:

No. Also in the Lotus Sutra he explains that at one point he was an ordinary person.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 30th, 2017 at 11:15 PM

Title: Re: Primordial Buddha: A Reprise

Content:

DGA said:

Depending on how you count, this is the second or third attempt to discuss this topic.

<http://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?f=53&t=23832>

"Primordial Buddha" is a concept that is emphasized in different ways across Mahayana traditions. It would be useful to put this concept in the context of Mahayana thought generally, and its various permutations. It would also be useful to identify differing understandings or definitions of this concept, and instances in which this concept is not upheld at all.

Any takers?

Malcolm wrote:

Well, the term does not exist in sūtras, it is basically a tantric term.

The literal concept rejected by Mādhyamikas such as Jayananda, (11th-12th century), supported by Yogacara authors such as Ratnakaraśanti (who was also a contemporary of Naropa's at Nalanda).

The term is much misunderstood with respect to Dzogchen teachings and also Vajrayāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 30th, 2017 at 7:41 PM

Title: Re: Help! Ran into a problem with meditation

Content:

SoapBubble said:

I am now utterly convinced that the mind doesn't exist.

Malcolm wrote:

You need to observe the mind that cannot find its own nature. When you observe that, that is called "clarity."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 30th, 2017 at 12:13 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Zhen Li said:

I am not sure you really know what you are arguing for.

Malcolm wrote:

I am arguing for a universal, secular society based on humanist ethics. I think it is superior to any society based on any religious system.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 30th, 2017 at 12:04 PM

Title: Re: Mahamaya and Buddhakapala

Content:

conebeckham said:

Sakyapas have Gyepa Dorje and Naro Khachoma

Malcolm wrote:

In fact Lamdre has a collection of completion stage practices derived from the Guhyasamaja, Hevajra, and Cakrasamvara systems

Yogini in turn is based on Naropa's Kalacakra influenced presentation of Cakrasamvara completion stage practices.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 30th, 2017 at 12:01 PM

Title: Re: Mahamaya and Buddhakapala

Content:

Karma Jinpa said:

So basically this means that the yogic practices originate from those cycles of tantra, correct?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 30th, 2017 at 7:56 AM

Title: Re: Karmic retribution

Content:

Minobu said:

your quotes are very beautiful, but once you declare The Lotus Sutra as something below a slice of bread you insult The Tathagata .

What goes on inside your head and your interpretations that suit your agendas....I see that now a little more clearly. Ego can be amazingly destructive Malcolm.

The Lotus Sutra states ,"I have not yet revealed the Truth " and then went on to teach us the Truth. All Sutras are then analyzed through the lens of the Lotus Sutra, not texts Malcolm likes. .

Malcolm wrote:

Correction, you analyze everything through the Lotus Sūtra. I feel no need. I do not find your hermeneutics or those of Tien Tai, etc., even slightly compelling.

I analyze all texts through the above criteria and that set forth in the Sandhivyaākaraṇa Tantra:

The beautiful single vajra word became many different words

through the differences in the inclinations of migrating beings.

Minobu said:

Fair enough , I don't . At the end of the day The Buddha's words in the Lotus Sutra states that you too will eventually attain Buddhahood. If thats your goal, you will have it . If it is not , you will have it.

love d

Malcolm wrote:

The Ekayāna doctrine is not in doubt. Your limitation of it to one person's understanding in 13th century Japan is very much so.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 30th, 2017 at 4:09 AM

Title: Re: Nichiren on Who Went to Hell

Content:

Admin_PC said:

... yet his own corpse was burned the day after he died. Wonder why that is?

Malcolm wrote:

Poor guy. Bad move, it takes three days for consciousness to leave the body.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 30th, 2017 at 4:06 AM

Title: Re: Karmic retribution

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

So no, I do not actually base my Buddhist practice on any texts. But in terms of texts I like.

Minobu said:

your quotes are very beautiful, but once you declare The Lotus Sutra as something below a slice of bread you insult The Tathagata .

What goes on inside your head and your interpretations that suit your agendas....I see that now a little more clearly. Ego can be amazingly destructive Malcolm.

The Lotus Sutra states ,"I have not yet revealed the Truth " and then went on to teach us the Truth. All Sutras are then analyzed through the lens of the Lotus Sutra, not texts Malcolm likes. .

Malcolm wrote:

Correction, you analyze everything through the Lotus Sūtra. I feel no need. I do not find your hermeneutics or those of Tien Tai, etc., even slightly compelling.

I analyze all texts through the above criteria and that set forth in the Sandhivāyākaraṇa Tantra:

The beautiful single vajra word

became many different words
through the differences in the inclinations of migrating beings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 30th, 2017 at 3:07 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Karma_Yeshe said:

This secretarian attitude of some of ChNNs students is really annoying.

KY

Malcolm wrote:

Wanting all humans on this planet to receive Dzogchen teachings from ChNN is not sectarian. It is a very kind and generous thought.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 30th, 2017 at 3:05 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Can someone pm me about which rushens practice was being referred to in today's webcast, and if/where it might be found?

Malcolm wrote:

The text has not been translated yet. But it is very short, so I see no reason why it should not be released soon.

Anyway, these rushans are a little different than what is in the precious vase, but the latter are also perfectly fine to use.

Take good notes and you should be fine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 30th, 2017 at 2:49 AM

Title: Re: Nichiren on Who Went to Hell

Content:

Minobu said:

I'm aware that there are certain tricks people have learned to do at the point of death. I'm sure that one would have to be fairly enlightened to them to actually enact them. Not your everyday buy the initiation and voila your set to go.

Malcolm wrote:

This is per Nāgārjuna, who observes that the dominant factor in throwing karma that determines your next rebirth is your state of mind at the moment of death.

Minobu said:

could you show me where Lord Nagarjuna states this. As you know I thirst for knowledge from Lord Nagarjuna. anything more to add from this statement would be appreciated.

Malcolm wrote:

He states it very clearly in the MMK, karma chapter. He states that one's next rebirth is determined by the ripening of special karmic trace at the point of death.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 30th, 2017 at 2:45 AM

Title: Re: Karmic retribution

Content:

Minobu said:

Also like all Mahayana teachings that have power ,one should be careful in disparaging them.

Malcolm wrote:

The Lotus Sūtra is fine. I just don't think it is the best thing since sliced bread.

Minobu said:

so you don't base your Buddhist practice on the Sutras??? You ignore certain aspects They declare????

Malcolm wrote:

I base my practice on wisdom. In other words, the Buddha said:

Follow the Dharma, not the person.

Follow the meaning, not the words.

Follow the definitive meaning, not the provisional meaning.

Follow wisdom, not mind.

The definitive meaning is set forth by the Akṣayamatīrdeśa sūtra:

Any sūtrānta that explains a self, a sentient being, a living being, a human being, a person, a man, human, a creator, a feeler in so many words, which shows that which lacks a self to be a self, those sūtrāntas are called "the provisional meaning."

Any sūtrānta that explains emptiness, signlessness, wishlessness, nonformation, nonarising, nonproduction, nonexistence, nonself, no sentient being, no living being, no person, no lord, and shows the gates of liberation, those sūtrāntas are called "the definitive meaning."

So no, I do not actually base my Buddhist practice on any texts. But in terms of texts I like, I prefer the sūtras that meet the criteria listed in about.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 30th, 2017 at 2:09 AM

Title: Re: Karmic retribution

Content:

Minobu said:

Also like all Mahayana teachings that have power ,one should be careful in disparaging them.

Malcolm wrote:

The Lotus Sūtra is fine. I just don't think it is the best thing since sliced bread.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 30th, 2017 at 1:56 AM

Title: Re: Nichiren on Who Went to Hell

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

This is per Nāgārjuna, who observes that the dominant factor in throwing karma that determines your next rebirth is your state of mind at the moment of death.

Minobu said:

could you you show me where Lord Nagarjuna states this. As you know I thirst for knowledge from Lord Nagarjuna. anything more to add from this statement would be appreciated. People should be very concerned with their state of mind at the moment death. Being in a state of anger or attachment at the moment of death can ruin a life of devout practice.

From a Lotus Buddhist perspective it is more important on how you lived your life .The experience at the last moments of death would not toss it all out the window from a confused deathbed moment.

Malcolm wrote:

Yeah, actually it can. It has nothing do to with what kind if Buddhism you follow. It has to do with your state of mind at death.

Minobu said:

There can be great benefit in mummifying the bodies of great masters.
I never heard of this in Buddhism, how so ?

Malcolm wrote:

They are relics.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 30th, 2017 at 1:40 AM

Title: Re: (carefully) Broadcasting Dzogchen through music

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Well, I know I will get in trouble for mentioning this...

Malcolm wrote:

Never seems to have stopped you before...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 30th, 2017 at 1:24 AM

Title: Re: Karmic retribution

Content:

Queequeg said:

Uncompromisingly recognizing buddhahood in ourselves and all other beings and conducting ourselves accordingly is met with antagonism in this world. Enduring that antagonism, even at the cost of one's life, is the practice that immediately expiates karma. It is such a powerful practice that it overwhelms everything else, like a giant wave overwhelming ripples on the surface. This is exemplified by Sadaparibhuta (Never Disparaging). Nichiren practiced this.

Malcolm wrote:

There are much easier ways to eliminate all karma of taking rebirth in the six realms than experiencing intense austerity and suffering from antagonism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 30th, 2017 at 1:01 AM

Title: Re: Question about processes

Content:

Khenpo Brothers said:

On the absolute level, phenomena have no substantial existence whatsoever; they are dependently arisen mere appearances, like reflections in a mirror.

rachmiel said:

So:

On the conventional level, the process of the earth revolving around the sun exists.

Malcolm wrote:

If you maintained that arising and dissolution of existents are indeed seen, arising and dissolution are only seen because of delusion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 30th, 2017 at 12:59 AM

Title: Re: Mahamaya and Buddhakapala

Content:

Karma Jinpa said:

The Shangpa Kagyu lineage propagates five tantras of the Anuttara yoga class, each tantra is considered the seminal expression of a principal sadhana:

Hévajra tantra is the zenith of candali (heat) yoga

Chakrasamvara tantra is the zenith of consort yoga (karma mudra)

Guhyasamaja tantra is the zenith of illusory body and clear light yogas

Mahamaya tantra is the zenith of dream yoga

Dorje Jigdzé is the zenith of enlightened action.

Malcolm wrote:

All this means is that each practice is found in the tantric cycles connected with each of these Yidams.

Thus, the main completion stage practice of Hevajra is Tummo, and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 30th, 2017 at 12:45 AM

Title: Re: Nichiren on Who Went to Hell

Content:

Queequeg said:

Even a life of devout practice could be ruined by a moment of distress at death. .

Malcolm wrote:

This is per Nāgārjuna, who observes that the dominant factor in throwing karma that determines your next rebirth is your state of mind at the moment of death.

People should be very concerned with their state of mind at the moment death. Being in a state of anger or attachment at the moment of death can ruin a life of devout practice.

There can be great benefit in mummifying the bodies of great masters.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 29th, 2017 at 11:30 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Zhen Li said:

They'll go to hell.

The Dharma is for benefit and welfare. There's no connection to anything I have said. You're just grasping at straws.

Malcolm wrote:

In reality, greg provided counterfactual evidence to your claim that people who ostensibly live under the Dharma are more likely to be virtuous.

In reality, there is little or no connection between the ideals a government claims it promulgates and what it actually does. Case in point, the USA.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 29th, 2017 at 6:13 PM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Norwegian said:

Looks like everything just went offline...

Malcolm wrote:

it is back up

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 29th, 2017 at 5:59 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Lukeinaz said:

Earlier this morning Rinpoche was using two terms I couldn't quite pick up. From memory they are something like kudon and lungdza referring to our non-dual natural state. Can someone please tell me the actual words he was using? Thanks again!

Malcolm wrote:

Kadag, original purity, and lhundrup, self-perfection, in DC lingo.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 29th, 2017 at 5:33 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Norwegian said:

I was unable to attend today's teaching. Was transmission of any text given? Or will that begin tomorrow?

Malcolm wrote:

He discussed his dream connected with this transmission.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 29th, 2017 at 5:32 AM

Title: Re: Dorje Dudulma in Sanskrit

Content:

Karma Jinpa said:

Currently having trouble translating one of Machik's names (back) into Sanskrit. Her form in Kechara is known as Dorje Dudulma (rdo rje bdud 'dul ma), but I can't find it rendered in Sanskrit in any of the texts I have.

It should be Vajramara_____ because dorje = vajra and dud = mara, but I can't figure out what "tamer" should be. Anyone know the name, or have a decent command of Buddhist Hybrid Sanskrit and care to help me out?

Thanks.

Malcolm wrote:

Based on Mahavyutpatti. it is Varjamārajit.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 29th, 2017 at 1:51 AM

Title: Re: Thun how long

Content:

migacz said:

god evening all and everywhere

i wolud like to ask how long should last one thun?

i mean: "THE PRACTICES OF THE BASE OF SANTIMAHASANGHA (One day of practice corresponds to four thuns. If you cannot do long retreats, you can do the required number of thuns in a longer time according to your own possibilities.)" from The Precious Vase, appendix.

3 hours x 4 =12 Am i right?

i'll be gratefull for any help.

Malcolm wrote:

A thun generally should last two hours. But it can be shorter, it depends on your time — don't force.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 28th, 2017 at 11:36 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You cannot found a nation on pañcaśīla. Nor can you enforce it. Pañcaśīla is for personal development, not a set of rules for a nation. Why? Because you cannot force people to take refuge, and without refuge, they do not possess pañcaśīla.

Zhen Li said:

If a large number of people in proportion to the population support the Dharma, that is better than otherwise.

Malcolm wrote:

You were born in the wrong country.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 28th, 2017 at 11:05 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You cannot found a nation on pañcaśīla. Nor can you enforce it. Pañcaśīla is for personal development, not a set of rules for a nation. Why? Because you cannot force people to take refuge, and without refuge, they do not possess pañcaśīla.

Grigoris said:

Well, Burma seems to be a nation trying to enforce this ideal, and we can clearly see the outcome of this sort of thinking.

Malcolm wrote:

Indeed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 28th, 2017 at 6:49 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Zhen Li said:

The sila taught by the Buddha does not necessarily lead to liberation. It can simply bring benefit and welfare in the here and now. I stand by the claim that the Buddha's ethics are the best, regardless of the motivation.

Malcolm wrote:

You cannot found a nation on pañcaśīla. Nor can you enforce it. Pañcaśīla is for personal development, not a set of rules for a nation. Why? Because you cannot force people to take refuge, and without refuge, they do not possess pañcaśīla.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 28th, 2017 at 6:34 AM

Title: Re: Difference in guru yogas

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In Gelug, as in Sakya, your root guru is considered to be any person from whom you have received a major empowerment such as Kalackara, Hevajra, etc.

fckw said:

Out of curiosity: What about the Nyingmas and Kagyus?

Malcolm wrote:

The person from whom you understood the nature of the mind.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 28th, 2017 at 6:31 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen Community of Chogyal Namkhai Norbu

Content:

Lukeinaz said:

Thank you Dharma Wheel friends! I really enjoyed the teaching today so thanks for steering me over there.

He mentioned a short text by Sakya Pandita on Mahamudra. Anyone know this?

Also, I thought I heard mention that our vows are only good for this life??

Malcolm wrote:

Hinayāna and Vajrayāna vows only last a single lifetime, since they are connected with the body.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 28th, 2017 at 6:29 AM

Title: Re: Nichiren on Who Went to Hell

Content:

Admin_PC said:

But the claims made; as recorded in the article, are personal. They consist of personal attacks against a long list of masters based on claims of insider knowledge and details given that neither match up to historical biographies nor academic fact. The claims that appear in the article simply cannot be defended.

Malcolm wrote:

An early practitioner of alternative facts, perhaps?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 28th, 2017 at 6:28 AM

Title: Re: Nichiren on Who Went to Hell

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

The prevalence of the three turnings ideas in Tibetan Buddhism comes from Korea, not India.

Queequeg said:

No kidding? That is interesting. How did it get from Korea to Tibet?

Malcolm wrote:

Through the Tibetan translation of a commentary on the Samdhinirmocana Sūtra written by Yüan-tse, the Chieh-shên-mi-ching-shu.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 28th, 2017 at 5:06 AM

Title: Re: Nichiren on Who Went to Hell

Content:

Queequeg said:

This has been a feature of Mahayana since the beginning, though. The first major distinction was between Hinayana and Mahayana. But even in the Nikaya/Agama there are differences in teaching for lay people and renunciates. Later you had the Three Turnings. Etc. This sort of analysis has its start in India. It took on its own life in East Asia.

Malcolm wrote:

In India, the three turnings had almost no play. It was of no importance. Again, it was East Asian Buddhists who took this up. The prevalence of the three turnings ideas in Tibetan Buddhism comes from Korea, not India.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 28th, 2017 at 5:01 AM

Title: Re: Chinese New Year one month before Tibetan this year??

Content:

topazdreamz said:

Why is the Chinese New Year celebrated tomorrow, but Tibetan New Year next month? Aren't they usually at the same time?

Malcolm wrote:

The Tibetan calendar has an extra month this year.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 28th, 2017 at 4:10 AM

Title: Re: Difference in guru yogas

Content:

SangyeMenladharma said:

Thank you Malcolm.

I have received many empowerments - most from different lamas. (Not those you mention though). Perhaps this is why I find it difficult to know who my root guru is.

I will stop practicing the lama chopa for now.

Thanks again.

Malcolm wrote:

In general, this is a very specific Gelug practice, and you should be able with some effort to find someone who can teach you it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 28th, 2017 at 3:47 AM

Title: Re: Nichiren on Who Went to Hell

Content:

Queequeg said:

Following the East Asian Buddhist tradition of ranking sutras in terms of profundity, he put the Lotus Sutra in third place, below the Avatamsaka (2nd) and the Vairocana Sutra (iirc) first.

Admin_PC said:

Yeah but his premise of inauspicious signs on the body doesn't hold up for Kukai whatsoever.

Queequeg said:

Why? Because he's seated in eternal samadhi at Oku-no-in?

Nichiren's answer would be, "you can't believe what his followers tell you."

Malcolm wrote:

That is a blade that cuts both ways.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 28th, 2017 at 3:36 AM

Title: Re: Difference in guru yogas

Content:

SangyeMenladharma said:

Hi everyone, just registered with this forum. I've been a practicing buddhist since 2004 but am still unclear about Guru Yoga. Thanks for the info about the differences between lama chopra and lama tsongkhapa guru yoga. As an isolated practitioner I have been reciting the former at home but didn't realise it required HYT empowerment. Which I have not received by the way. Sorry for my ignorance.

Also, who are we supposed to visualise in this sadhana? Who is the root guru? Who is 'my guru'? Are they both the same eg is one HH Dalai Lama and one the main teacher of the particular group I sometimes visit? Is it Buddha Shakyamuni, an archetype, or is it both mixed with Tsongkhapa? I am really confused.

Thanks in advance.

Malcolm wrote:

In Gelug, as in Sakya, your root guru is considered to be any person from whom you have received a major empowerment such as Kalackara, Hevajra, etc.

Without these kinds of empowerments, you are not authorized really to practice Lama Chodpa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 28th, 2017 at 3:28 AM

Title: Re: Nichiren on Who Went to Hell

Content:

Queequeg said:

When talking about theory, what's not intellectual and contrived?

Malcolm wrote:

Direct perception.

Queequeg said:

Direct perception, though, is not theory, not intellectual, not contrived.

Malcolm wrote:

There is also a theory of the direct perception of buddhahood. The difference between intellectual theories about buddhahood and the theory of the direct perception of buddhahood however is that the latter can be confirmed easily and the former can never be confirmed, ever.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 28th, 2017 at 2:29 AM

Title: Re: Nichiren on Who Went to Hell

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Seems all rather intellectual and contrived.

Queequeg said:

When talking about theory, what's not intellectual and contrived?

Malcolm wrote:

Direct perception.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 28th, 2017 at 2:04 AM

Title: Re: Nichiren on Who Went to Hell

Content:

Queequeg said:

This thread complements Pork Chop's thread on Kamakura Buddhism.

Yes, those texts are considered authentic. Some survive in his own hand.

You have to understand Nichiren's teaching to understand why he said these things. And he was vocal and untiring in his assertions.

His teachings are based on the Lotus Sutra and the Tiantai-Tendai teachings.

1. Nichiren asserted that a direct connection to the Buddha's enlightenment is the only real path to Buddhahood. Everything else, all upaya, if taken as a final path, is just a painful austerity.

2. The moment you hear the Buddha's name, ie. you are introduced to the real nature of the Buddha, whether you understand it or not, you are unalterably on the path to enlightenment. As the Avatamsaka Sutra explains, entering the path is fundamentally not different than achieving the goal. In the Tiantai-Tendai-Nichiren view, the Buddha is revealed in full, without expedients, only in the Lotus Sutra. Hence, the Lotus Sutra is the profoundest teaching. Everything else in comparison is upaya and coarse/unrefined/provisional.

3. For Nichiren, the field of endeavor of the Buddhist path is the saha world. Escape from the Saha world for Nichiren is a Phantom City. This is where the endeavor for Buddhahood plays out. This is the swamp from which the Lotus sprouts. Buddhahood is attained now, in this body.

Nichiren's teaching is radically oriented to this moment. At the same time, understood through ichinen sanzen, this moment is the apex of the cosmos - the profoundest moment where enlightenment is achieved. Practice undertaken now in this moment is the awakening of enlightenment. This moment is THE crucial moment.

Any teaching that does not directly teach this immediate path is an upaya that is to be discarded in light of this teaching (its a little more refined than that - the revelation of the immediate path is said to transform expedients into the immediate path - opening the provisional to reveal the real). Teachers who obfuscate the immediacy of enlightenment lead people wrong, and are karmically culpable. Hence, the teachers he asserted fell into hell are in his view, people who knew this immediate teaching but obfuscated the immediacy of enlightenment and caused people to waste this precious human life on fruitless austerities.

Malcolm wrote:

Seems all rather intellectual and contrived.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 27th, 2017 at 9:57 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Zhen Li said:

I don't think that the Sangha should be councillors. However, the Dharma preserved and propagated by the Sangha can help us to overcome harmful emotions.

Malcolm wrote:

You have to drink the koolaid first. Not everyone is a Dharma practitioner, even in Buddhist countries. The Tibetans have a useful concept, mi chos and lha chos; mi chos, human Dharma, means secular ethics. They apply to everyone. Then there is lha chos, divine Dharma, this is the Dharma for dealing with afflictions and leads to eventual liberation.

But we have to start with mi chos.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 27th, 2017 at 10:43 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Zhen Li said:

I don't think that there are foundations of societies. But I think that Buddhism is a moral framework that, when individuals or societies live up to it, results in benefit and welfare.

Malcolm wrote:

No system at all results in benefit and welfare. But we try.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 27th, 2017 at 4:16 AM

Title: Re: The left is no longer liberal

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

It's silly to accuse me of backing up the right wing

Malcolm wrote:

What I have noticed lately is an increasing number of left wing people poaching stereotypes from the right.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 27th, 2017 at 3:43 AM

Title: Re: The left is no longer liberal

Content:

YogaDude11 said:

People stayed home because of Hillary's undeniable crookedness. It should have been Sanders vs Trump, but Hillary made sure that would never happen.

Malcolm wrote:

Hillary's crookedness is quite deniable; in fact.

Apart from that, I agree with you it should have been Sanders vs. Trump. Sanders would have won.

But I don't think the people who stayed home would have turned out for another white guy either.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 27th, 2017 at 1:17 AM

Title: Re: Bön Ngöndro Free online course

Content:

Miroku said:

Hello,

just wanted to share an event. Chaphur rinpoche will be giving teachings on bön ngöndro and it will be via webcast.

Here is the link <http://gyalshen.org/ngondro-practice-online/>

Also I would like to ask about Chapthur rinpoche, does anybody here follow his teachings? I would like to know if you would recommend him as a teacher, he seems to be quite charming and interesting teacher and I am interested in following this teachings.

Also I would like to ask on the ngöndro. Does anybody know where the text can be bought? Or could someone tell me more into detail about bön ngöndro as it seems slightly different from other ngöndros.

Malcolm wrote:

I have met Chapur Rinpoche, and he is a very nice person.

Bon ngondro is basically the same as any other ngondro. No difference at all really.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 27th, 2017 at 1:15 AM

Title: Re: The left is no longer liberal

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

That is a pretty reductionist view, I don't find that often on "the left" any more outside of classical Marxism or Communism.

How is the thread about Islam, other than the Majid Nawaaz etc. stuff?

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, because Fa Dao selected, tellingly, these two figures as a basis to complain about the SPLC.

There are a lot of white guys on the left, like Bernie, who don't get the identity thing at all (and you know I admire Bernie highly).

Johnny Dangerous said:

I don't think it's that they don't "get it", inasmuch as they are probably tired of seeing liberalism fail utterly because it cannot create a mass movement that's capable of responding to "Trumpism", precisely because liberalism is class-blind, by design. Trump successfully united White identity politics, nativism, and racism (if that ain't relevant to this thread, what is lol) with a working class message. As toxic and terrible as it is, the mainstream liberal establishment has nothing in response to this.

Malcolm wrote:

Trump won because people stayed home.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Dollars to donuts not only will you be disallowed from having a contrary opinion, but you will be shut down and called a racist for daring to believe that you can have common cause across racial lines, or that indeed you can share a struggle in common with "People of Color" without some obligatory means-testing.. This is the opposite of solidarity, which is what is needed right now, and yet, it is the kind of attitude that prevails among "liberals" and many who class themselves "progressive' even.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, but I live in one of the most liberal areas of the country, and I just do not see this stereotype as valid. In fact, it is a favorite republican stereotype and I am not sure why you think it is useful to reinforce it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 27th, 2017 at 1:07 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Zhen Li said:

I'm only speaking of ideals. But somewhere like Taiwan where Buddhism is deeply entrenched is clearly better for it.

Malcolm wrote:

Taiwan is hardly a model of a diverse society.

Zhen Li said:

You would be surprised. Besides the aborigines, of whom there are over 14 tribes, each of whom has different customs and rites, the "Chinese" population is very diverse.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, but half a million people out of 23 million does not make for a diverse culture.

Zhen Li said:

The Hakka, Hokkien, and the post WWII immigrants each have different sets of customs and languages, though there are many they share in common, like Chingming.

Malcolm wrote:

70 percent of Taiwan is made up of the so called Hoklo, the rest Hakka and Mainlanders. But in reality, they are all Han Chinese, albeit, different migrations

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 27th, 2017 at 12:38 AM

Title: Re: The left is no longer liberal

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Huh? Classical Marxists deny the need at all for identity politics, whereas most other versions of Marxism see racial struggles as necessary, but only when connected to the working class struggle thing. I have never seen a Marxist saying that it should be addressed separately, if anything that is the dominant liberal position - that there is such a thing as an exclusive racial identity to organize around, that doesn't need to be connected to socioeconomic class.

For myself, I certainly see the need for groups like BLM doing what they do, but I think this very election was proof that "liberals" in the US don't get class, because a freaking billionaire scoby do villain just won the election partially because he injected working-class messages into his campaign and sadly, modern liberals politics are -SO- blind to such messages that they ignored it.

Not sure what point you are trying to make, don't mistake me for a "racism doesn't exist" person please, i can have my own opinion without falling into the category you expect.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, that was a typo, I mean to write, "does not need to be addressed separately from the question of class."

In other words, leftists need to understand that identity issues cannot be solved by addressing class only.

Johnny Dangerous said:

That is a pretty reductionist view, I don't find that often on "the left" any more outside of classical Marxism or Communism.

How is the thread about Islam, other than the Majid Nawaaz etc. stuff?

Malcolm wrote:

Oh, because Fa Dao selected, tellingly, these two figures as a basis to complain about the SPLC.

There are a lot of white guys on the left, like Bernie, who don't get the identity thing at all (and you know I admire Bernie highly).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 27th, 2017 at 12:27 AM

Title: Re: The left is no longer liberal

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Social justice is linked with class. But it does not help anyone to pretend, as many white people on the left do (mainly Marxists), that identity, whether gender or racial, needs to be addressed separately from the question of class.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Huh? Classical Marxists deny the need at all for identity politics, whereas most other versions of Marxism see racial struggles as necessary, but only when connected to the working class struggle thing. I have never seen a Marxist saying that it should be addressed separately, if anything that is the dominant liberal position - that there is such a thing as an exclusive racial identity to organize around, that doesn't need to be connected to socioeconomic class.

For myself, I certainly see the need for groups like BLM doing what they do, but I think this very election was proof that "liberals" in the US don't get class, because a freaking billionaire scoby do villain just won the election partially because he injected working-class messages into his campaign and sadly, modern liberals politics are -SO- blind to such messages that they ignored it.

Not sure what point you are trying to make, don't mistake me for a "racism doesn't exist" person please, i can have my own opinion without falling into the category you expect.

Malcolm wrote:

Sorry, that was a typo, I mean to write, "does not need to be addressed separately from the question of class."

In other words, leftists need to understand that identity issues cannot be solved by addressing class only. And yes, identity alone can be organized around, such as civil rights, women's movement, and so on. Class struggles did not address the issues facing these identities.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 27th, 2017 at 12:26 AM

Title: Re: The left is no longer liberal

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Yes, that was an awful mistake, the SPLC is like ADL and other "anti discrimination" groups in some ways, in that they often lack any nuance to their decisions, and spend too much time "shaming" rather than actively working against racism, making good arguments etc.

Malcolm wrote:

What? Don't be silly. SPLC is excellent. Maajid Nawaz is on their list because he has a questionable history and has connections with Frank Gaffney.

<https://medium.com/insurge-intelligence/donald-trump-s-trojan-horse-in-britain-bdb40f7d1867#.8ta22tay6>, as does Hursi Ali.

I am sorry, but this thread is just seems to be a pretext for our friend Fa Dao to exercise his aversion to Islam. And you, JD, just fell for it, hook, line, and sinker.

Johnny Dangerous said:

I didn't fall for anything, I follow Maajid Nawaaz and think he occasionally says some decent stuff, and think that indeed the SPLC is a bit of a boneheaded organization from time to time, though I appreciate their work, especially in these times.

It is possible you know, to critique someone with complete condemnation, and still appreciate what they do. Islam has yet to be brought into the conversation in anything but the context of Ayaan Hirsi Ali or Nawaaz, so please do not somehow accuse me of "falling for" something simply because I'm willing to critique the SPLC.

Here's an article on the happening for anyone who is interested:

<http://www.theatlantic.com/international/archive/2016/10/maajid-nawaz-splc-anti-muslim-extremist/505685/>

Malcolm wrote:

This thread is not really about liberals or identity politics. It's about, and boringly so, Islam.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 27th, 2017 at 12:14 AM

Title: Re: The left is no longer liberal

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

A big fat straw man. I didn't say racism doesn't exist, nor that discrimination based on it is unimportant. I'm very aware of just the sort of thing you're talking about.

I said liberals generally don't talk about class, and that their politics hinge on not acknowledging it.

Malcolm wrote:

No, you've confused liberals with conservatives.

Johnny Dangerous said:

The basic idea that our society can be made into some sort of a "fairer" meritocracy with total class mobility and racial justice is a mainstream liberal position, this is the reason that somehow things like how many female CEO's we have can be equated in the minds of some with actual struggles for racial justice of oppressed people.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is just a measure of how few women CEOs there are in fact.

Johnny Dangerous said:

Whereas, someone on "the left" proper generally sees that racial justice and class are deeply linked, and that it is not possible to have the kind of racial justice that liberals want under the structures of system as they stand now. Lots of different viewpoints in that continuum, but I think that's the case.

Malcolm wrote:

Social justice is linked with class. But it does not help anyone to pretend, as many white people on the left do (mainly Marxists), that identity, whether gender or racial, needs to be addressed separately from the question of class.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 27th, 2017 at 12:09 AM

Title: Re: The left is no longer liberal

Content:

Fa Dao said:

JD,

and how about the part where he talks about Majid and Ayan Hursi Ali being put on the SPLC's list? Unbelievable, right?

Johnny Dangerous said:

Yes, that was an awful mistake, the SPLC is like ADL and other "anti discrimination" groups in some ways, in that they often lack any nuance to their decisions, and spend too much time "shaming" rather than actively working against racism, making good arguments etc.

Malcolm wrote:

What? Don't be silly. SPLC is excellent. Maajid Nawaz is on their list because he has a questionable history and has connections with Frank Gaffney.

<https://medium.com/insurge-intelligence/donald-trump-s-trojan-horse-in-britain-bdb40f7d1867#.8ta22tay6>.

So does Hursi Ali.

I am sorry, but this thread is just seems to be a pretext for our friend Fa Dao to exercise his aversion to Islam. And you, JD, just fell for it, hook, line, and sinker.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 26th, 2017 at 11:08 PM

Title: Re: Attaining Full Enlightenment During an Empowerment

Content:

naljor said:

What kind of practice is precisely Thig le rgya can? Is it Anuyoga?

Malcolm wrote:

The practice itself is an anuyoga level guru sadhana. It originally had no empowerment. Khyentse Wangpo wrote one, however.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 26th, 2017 at 10:16 PM

Title: Re: The left is no longer liberal

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

because liberalism refuses to acknowledge class, and identity politics is a fantastic way of avoiding conversations on class entirely.

Malcolm wrote:

This is nonsense. For example, you have Sanders. One reason Sanders lost was because of his inability to understand racism was not a class issue, it was an identity issue. Why? Because among the working class, certain groups have always been isolated because of their identity. For example, Italian socialists returning from the US were upset with the German domination of Socialism in the US. This actually informed the rise of Fascism in Italy. African-Americans have been historically marginalized among so called "working class people" because of their race. Indeed, during the 18th century, laws were established in many southern colonies to advantage poor whites over blacks in order to prevent them from uniting against the wealthy in those colonies.

The best way to deny someone's civil rights is to claim their identity does not matter. For example, the campaign to legally eliminate American Indian Tribes in the late 19th century.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 26th, 2017 at 10:05 PM

Title: Re: The left is no longer liberal

Content:

Fa Dao said:

JD,

and how about the part where he talks about Majid and Ayan Hursi Ali being put on the SPLC's list? Unbelievable, right?

Born Ayaan Hirsi Magam, she migrated to the Netherlands in 1992, changed her name to Hirsi Ali, and lied to Dutch authorities about her past. Contrary to the story she told the government, she arrived in the Netherlands not from war-torn Somalia, but from Kenya, where she lived in a secure environment and under the protection of the United Nations, which funded her education at a well-regarded Muslim girls' school. Though she told immigration authorities and the Dutch public she had fled from civil war in Somalia, she left that country before its war broke out. Indeed, she did not live through a war there or anywhere else. Thanks to her fabrications, Hirsi Ali received political asylum in just five weeks.

Hirsi Ali told astonished audiences on Dutch talk shows that her supposedly devout family had forced her to marry a draconian Muslim man, that she had not been present at her own wedding, and that her family had threatened to kill her for offending their religious honor. However, Zembla told a drastically different story. Hirsi Ali's brother, aunt and former husband each testified that she had indeed been present at her wedding. It turned out that Hirsi Ali's mother had sent her brother to a Christian school, not exactly an indication of Islamic fanaticism.

Malcolm wrote:

<http://www.alternet.org/media/anti-islam-author-ayaan-hirsi-alis-latest-deception>

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 26th, 2017 at 9:45 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Zhen Li said:

[

I believe the ideal country is one run in accordance with the Dharma, and where the state supports the Sangha. The secular-religious divide is a western and protestant originated one.

Malcolm wrote:

And I think that it is entirely regressive to imagine any religious system can constitute a basis for governing a diverse, multicultural country.

Zhen Li said:

I'm only speaking of ideals. But somewhere like Taiwan where Buddhism is deeply entrenched is clearly better for it.

Malcolm wrote:

Taiwan is hardly a model of a diverse society.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 26th, 2017 at 11:22 AM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama about non sectarian approach towards Buddhist study and practice.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

No, everything else, whether more or less rapid, sūtra or tantra, ends where Dzogchen begins.

Facts do not rely on consensus.

HHDL said:

The fact that both the fundamental innate mind of clear light in the new translation schools Highest Yoga Tantra, and the pristine awareness of rigpa in the Dzogchen teachings, ultimately comes down to the same meaning can be found in the writings of Longchen Rabjam, and in Jikme (sic) Lingpa's commentary to his own "Treasury of Enlightened Attributes". You can also find the same point in the writings of the 5th Dalai

Lama...

smcj said:

You are engaging in "alternative facts".

Malcolm wrote:

Not at all. I agree with HHDL. I also stand by what I said, "everything else, whether more or less rapid, sūtra or tantra, ends where Dzogchen begins."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 26th, 2017 at 10:48 AM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama about non sectarian approach towards Buddhist study and practice.

Content:

smcj said:

FWIW, to me that does make it unique, but not "better" or "higher". It still ends up at the same place.

Malcolm wrote:

No, everything else, whether more or less rapid, sūtra or tantra, ends where Dzogchen begins. That's the point. And one can begin with Dzogchen. Anyone who is interested, that is. The reason I insist upon this is to assist people with a previous disposition for Dzogchen teachings to pursue them without fear of or thinking they need to follow some gradual path. I am thinking of those people's benefit, not my own. My own benefit is quite secure.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 26th, 2017 at 10:45 AM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama about non sectarian approach towards Buddhist study and practice.

Content:

smcj said:

However there is not universal consensus...

Malcolm wrote:

Facts do not rely on consensus.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 26th, 2017 at 5:37 AM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama about non sectarian approach towards Buddhist study and practice.

Content:

Grigoris said:

Again, I must draw attention to the motivation of those opposed to the idea of non-sectarianism as espoused by His Holiness. If the motivation is merely to oppose everything said by HHDL merely on ideological grounds, rather than to do so based on logic and fact then intelligent discussion is not going to be of all that much benefit.

anjali said:

Yes, indeed. Nicely said.

Grigoris said:

The shortcomings of TSF's position have been refuted using on logic and fact and yet...

anjali said:

...as long as any member doesn't violate the terms of service (in particular, "No putting down of other traditions or elevating one above the other, except within the Forum of the tradition in which such teachings are taught." And there are others) people are free to remain, even in the face of logical defeat.

Malcolm wrote:

Just as you cannot put down nor elevate the peak of a mountain, you cannot put down nor elevate Dzogchen. All one can do is claim the peak is not there when it is obscured from view by the clouds of one's own ignorance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 26th, 2017 at 5:30 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Zhen Li said:

[

I believe the ideal country is one run in accordance with the Dharma, and where the state supports the Sangha. The secular-religious divide is a western and protestant originated one.

Malcolm wrote:

And I think that it is entirely regressive to imagine any religious system can constitute a basis for governing a diverse, multicultural country.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 26th, 2017 at 5:27 AM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama about non sectarian approach towards Buddhist study and practice.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

...

anjali said:

Since this is a thread about "non sectarian approach towards Buddhist study and practice"...

I suspect there are a number of Buddhists who do not accept the truth claims of at least some of your statements about Dzogchen. Does that make them inherently sectarian?

Malcolm wrote:
Yes.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 26th, 2017 at 3:07 AM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama about non sectarian approach towards Buddhist study and practice.

Content:
anjali said:

All, once again, a few posts have been removed which have contributed nothing to the topic. Sadly, this topic is very close to becoming permanently locked. For now, the thread will be reopened.

Staying open will require posters to focus on the quality of their arguments. Respond to the substance of a post with substance. Ignore everything else. That shouldn't be too much to ask, for moving forward. If you are unwilling to engage in constructive discussion and debate, then it's ok to agree to disagree and bow out of the discussion.

Malcolm wrote:
TKF's reliance on "alternative facts" is a legitimate point.

anjali said:
If something is stated as a fact, that fact can, and should, be subject to verification. That's part of good argumentation. If everyone keeps it at that level, no problem. Stay on topic, respond with substance.

Malcolm wrote:
It is a fact. Just review his claims and my claims. My claims are factual, his claims are not. For example, he claims that Dzogchen is not part of Tsongkhapa's oeuvre. This is false. It is.

He claims that Dzogchen is not a valid Buddhist teaching. Again, this is false, since there are at least two major tantras in the bka' 'gyur that are either Dzogchen tantras or mention Dzogchen. In addition we have many texts by Padmasambhava and so which refute this claim.

He claims that Dzogchen is not the teaching of Śākyamuni. Again false. Śākyamuni is one of the 12 Buddhas who taught Dzogchen either directly or indirectly.

It is also a fact that Dzogchen is highest teaching of the Buddha there is. Just read the Kulayarāja tantra.

TKF has promulgated a cascade of false assertions about Dzogchen, many of them for some years. He has never been challenged on the facts of these claims by anyone administering this board.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 26th, 2017 at 2:28 AM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama about non sectarian approach towards Buddhist study and practice.

Content:

anjali said:

All, once again, a few posts have been removed which have contributed nothing to the topic. Sadly, this topic is very close to becoming permanently locked. For now, the thread will be reopened.

Staying open will require posters to focus on the quality of their arguments. Respond to the substance of a post with substance. Ignore everything else. That shouldn't be too much to ask, for moving forward. If you are unwilling to engage in constructive discussion and debate, then it's ok to agree to disagree and bow out of the discussion.

Malcolm wrote:

TKF's reliance on "alternative facts" is a legitimate point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 25th, 2017 at 11:11 PM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama about non sectarian approach towards Buddhist study and practice.

Content:

Matt J said:

Why is it okay for people to be triumphalist about Dzogchen, but other traditions cannot be similarly triumphalist about their highest teachings?

Malcolm wrote:

Dzogchen isn't triumphalist.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 25th, 2017 at 10:54 PM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama about non sectarian approach towards Buddhist study and practice.

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Thank you, you make a valid point. I was simply rebuffing the view that Dzogchen is the highest...

Malcolm wrote:

Likewise, Śrāvakas rebuff the idea that Mahāyāna is higher. So what? Your rebuttal is groundless, since it based neither in scripture nor in reason, just like the Śrāvaka rebuttal of Mahāyāna.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 25th, 2017 at 10:50 PM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama about non sectarian approach towards Buddhist study and practice.

Content:

DGA said:

By the way, Lama Tsongkhapa was right to approve of Dzogchen. I notice that you've yet to show that Je Tsongkhapa disapproved of it.

Tsongkhapafan said:

There's no evidence that Je Tsongkhapa approved of Dzogchen

Malcolm wrote:

Yes there is, it is found in his collected works. For you to continuously deny this is nothing short of astonishing.

Tsongkhapafan said:

and it clearly isn't part of the teachings of Buddha Shakyamuni/Buddha Vajradhara

Malcolm wrote:

It clearly is part of the teaching of Śākyamuni/Vajradhara since Dzogchen is found in the Guhyagarbha Tantra, in addition to the fact that Kulyarāja Tantra, one of the fundamental tantras of Dzogchen, is found in all editions of the bKa' 'gyur, along with the Guhyagarbha.

Tsongkhapafan said:

- it wasn't part of the original 'revelation' of Buddhism at the time of Buddha Shakyamuni but that's beside the point; he didn't teach it because it is unnecessary in his system.

Malcolm wrote:

Śākyamuni Buddha predicted the advent of Dzogchen, therefore, it is part of the original "revelation" of Buddhism at the time of Śākyamuni. Not only this, but if it was not part of Śākyamuni's teachings, for what reason then are the two tantras mentioned above found in all editions of the Bka' 'gyur?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 25th, 2017 at 4:35 AM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama about non sectarian approach towards Buddhist study and practice.

Content:

Virgo said:

You would think that if people can accept tantras, that they would accept Dzogchen tantras as well.

Kevin

Tsongkhapafan said:

No, because Dzogchen contradicts Highest Yoga Tantra and HYT is Buddha's highest teaching and ultimate intention.

conebeckham said:

Making such assertions without being able to back them up is a textbook illustration of Sectarian attitude.

Malcolm wrote:

[Edit] After all, Atisha found the original Sanskrit copy of the Guhyagarbha Tantra at Samye. The Guhyagarbha clearly mentions Dzogchen. No one can deny this, just as no one can deny that Dzogchen comes from Oḍḍiyāna via India.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 25th, 2017 at 2:39 AM

Title: Re: Attaining Full Enlightenment During an Empowerment

Content:

DGA said:

is there not at least one major empowerment that includes, in a recognizable if not necessarily named way, direct introduction?

Malcolm wrote:

The fourth empowerment is similar to direct introduction. However, rig pa'i rtsal dbangs are generally more detailed and clear than fourth empowerments. They also do not depend on the experience of small bliss received in the third empowerment.

conebeckham said:

In the Rinchen Terdzo there is a section of Ati empowerments. However, there are also Rigpai Tselwangs in cycles not included in this section, if I recall? For example, LaDrup Tigle GyaChen?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, the rig pa'i rtsal dbang in the Thig le rgya can is fairly extensive, etc. But by contrast, the most unelaborate empowerment in the Khandro Nyinthig is pretty concise and brief.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 25th, 2017 at 2:34 AM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama about non sectarian approach towards Buddhist study and practice.

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

Shantideva didn't teach or practise Dzogchen. He practised Highest Yoga Tantra, particularly meditating on emptiness with a very subtle mind of clear light during sleep.

Malcolm wrote:

You missed the point. The principle is the same, the ultimate of the lower is the relative of the higher.

But since you don't know anything at all about Dzogchen teachings, it is very foolish for you to continually condemn it, especially since Tsongkhapa clearly accepted it.

If you say that Dzogchen contradicts Highest Yoga Tantra, there is no fault since Madhyamaka contradicts Yogacara. Just as Yogacara is lower than Madhyamaka, likewise, Highest Yoga Tantra is lower than Dzogchen. Just as Kriya tantra is lower than carya, carya is lower than yoga, and yoga tantra is lower than annutarayoga tantra, etc, likewise, in general, highest yoga tantra belongs to what is termed in Nyingma tantras as mahāyoga. But there are two more categories of tantra higher than mahāyoga (to which Guhysamaja, etc., belong), i.e. anuyoga and atiyoga (Dzogchen).

In general, all of the creation and completion practice of the Sarma schools is confined to mahāyoga. Anuyoga focuses mainly on completion stage practice. Atiyoga is beyond both.

conebeckham said:

Atiyoga is beyond both, I agree. However, it also can "include" all the vehicles, provided one has the instructions on how to approach things like creation and completion from the POV of Dzogchen. In fact, Mahamudra can also include such things. One needs to obtain and understand the instructions regarding how this is done, however. Agreed?

Malcolm wrote:

There are direct and indirect approaches to the state of Dzogchen. The two stages are part of the indirect approach. The direct approach does not require either.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 25th, 2017 at 2:02 AM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama about non sectarian approach towards Buddhist study and practice.

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

No, because Dzogchen contradicts Highest Yoga Tantra and HYT is Buddha's highest teaching and ultimate intention.

Malcolm wrote:

As Santideva says, the ultimate of the lower (in this case the two stages) is the relative of the higher (i.e. Dzogchen).

Tsongkhapa said:

Shantideva didn't teach or practise Dzogchen. He practised Highest Yoga Tantra, particularly meditating on emptiness with a very subtle mind of clear light during sleep.

Malcolm wrote:

You missed the point. The principle is the same, the ultimate of the lower is the relative of the higher.

But since you don't know anything at all about Dzogchen teachings, it is very foolish for you to continually condemn it, especially since Tsongkhapa clearly accepted it.

If you say that Dzogchen contradicts Highest Yoga Tantra, there is no fault since Madhyamaka contradicts Yogacara. Just as Yogacara is lower than Madhyamaka, likewise, Highest Yoga Tantra is lower than Dzogchen. Just as Kriya tantra is lower than carya, carya is lower than yoga, and yoga tantra is lower than annutarayoga tantra, etc, likewise, in general, highest yoga tantra belongs to what is termed in Nyingma tantras as mahāyoga. But there are two more categories of tantra higher than mahāyoga (to which Guhysamaja, etc., belong), i.e. anuyoga and atiyoga (Dzogchen).

In general, all of the creation and completion practice of the Sarma schools is confined to mahāyoga. Anuyoga focuses mainly on completion stage practice. Atiyoga is beyond both.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 25th, 2017 at 1:36 AM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama about non sectarian approach towards Buddhist study and practice.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Why does this matter? Because all the Rime Lamas and lineage holders hold Dzogchen as their main practice, including HH Dalai Lama. Why? Because Dzogchen is more profound than other teachings.

Virgo said:

You would think that if people can accept tantras, that they would accept Dzogchen tantras as well.

Kevin

Tsongkhapafan said:

No, because Dzogchen contradicts Highest Yoga Tantra and HYT is Buddha's highest teaching and ultimate intention.

Malcolm wrote:

As Santideva says, the ultimate of the lower (in this case the two stages) is the relative of the higher (i.e. Dzogchen).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 25th, 2017 at 12:50 AM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama about non sectarian approach towards Buddhist study and practice.

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Why does this matter? Because all the Rime Lamas and lineage holders hold Dzogchen as their main practice, including HH Dalai Lama. Why? Because Dzogchen is more profound than other teachings.

Virgo said:

You would think that if people can accept tantras, that they would accept Dzogchen tantras as well.

Kevin

Malcolm wrote:

I know, it is sad. For examples, Gelugpas in general reject treasures, but then get giddy over things like the Ganden Miraculous Volume, etc. Sakyas who reject treasures accept such things as Tsembupa's Pure Vision, Thangthogn Gyalpo and so on.

Even Kongtrul for a time when through a period when he rejected the treasure tradition.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 25th, 2017 at 12:05 AM

Title: Re: Hope!

Content:

tingdzin said:

Now some of the same attitude is appearing on the left.

Malcolm wrote:

Appropriately so.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 24th, 2017 at 11:51 PM

Title: Re: Attaining Full Enlightenment During an Empowerment

Content:

DGA said:

is there not at least one major empowerment that includes, in a recognizable if not necessarily named way, direct introduction?

Malcolm wrote:

The fourth empowerment is similar to direct introduction. However, rig pa'i rtsal dbangs are generally more detailed and clear than fourth empowerments. They also do not depend on the experience of small bliss received in the third empowerment.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 24th, 2017 at 11:49 PM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama about non sectarian approach towards Buddhist study and practice.

Content:

conebeckham said:

I think it's fair to say that the "Rimay Movement" as we know it...

Malcolm wrote:

was started by three Khampas who were primarily interested in Dzogchen teachings and treasure revelation.

conebeckham said:

Well, yes--as I said. But Kongtrul, in particular, was concerned that other lineages be preserved. Shije, Chod-Yul, Orgyen Nyendrup, Shangpa Kagyu, Jonang instructions, would all be far less "sturdy" without his work, and the inspiration of Jamyang Khyentse, his teacher and friend.

Malcolm wrote:

Kongtrul was actually told by Khyentse to write the five treasures. It was not his idea.

Basically, Khyentse understood that without compiling these teachings in one place, they would be lost.

Khyentse's own personal project was preserving all the major Sarma empowerment lineages as well as the the sadhana lineages which have come down through Sakya in the rgyud sde kun 'dus and the sgrub thabs kun 'dus.

But when we look at what Khyentse, Kongtrul and Choling were most interested in, they were most interested in Dzogchen teachings, treasures and their revelation.

Why does this matter? Because all the Rime Lamas and lineage holders hold Dzogchen as their main practice, including HH Dalai Lama. Why? Because Dzogchen is more profound than other teachings.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 24th, 2017 at 11:24 PM

Title: Re: Attaining Full Enlightenment During an Empowerment

Content:

Virgo said:

Through Dzogchen teachings and practice we can have the experience of rigpa. But then we can also have dualistic vision afterwards. We are not fully enlightened at that point. What I am talking about here is someone who is in a state of mahamudra 24/7 full Buddhahood.

Kevin

javier.espinoza.t said:

if mahamudra is your target, i'm tempted to say yes. but i don't know...

Virgo said:

Javier, I am talking about a person who has a human body. They are receiving an empowerment like Cakramasvara, and they are becoming Full Buddhas on the spot. How is that possible? They still have a human body with channels which cause the experience of the human realm, so how can they possibly experience rigpa 24/7 until they are Buddhas? This is what I am asking. They may be able to have an experience of enlightenment for a fingersnap at times, but not 24/7. They have a human body here and now.

Kevin

Malcolm wrote:

The process of empowerment transforms the human body through dependent origination. Sadhana is for those who do not obtain buddhahood during the empowerment.

M

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 24th, 2017 at 11:02 PM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama about non sectarian approach towards Buddhist study and practice.

Content:

michaelb said:

HH Dalai Lama mentions three Nyingma lamas: Kunkhyen Longchenpa, Kunkhyen Jigme Ling and Dodrupchen Tenpai Nyima.

Malcolm wrote:

The first master is quite impossible. Longchenpa passed away in 1364. Tsongkhapa was born in 1357.

It is true however that Jigme Lingpa's presentation of Madhyamaka is more or less copied word by word from Tsongkhapa's texts, and Dodrupchen Monastery is in a part of Amdo which is mainly Gelug.

It is also important to note that both Jigme Lingpa and Dodrupchen understood the limits of Madhyamaka, and in fact, Dodrupchen Tenpay Nyima attacks the Gelug Madhyamaka by pointing out some contradictions that emerge in Vajrayāna practice if one tries to apply Gelug Madhyamaka view.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 24th, 2017 at 10:43 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Grigoris said:

Damn those rich white people in positions of power have a hard time. I really pity them...

Zhen Li said:

We were not debating whether someone is pitiable or not, we were debating the presence of privileges and or discriminations. The issues I addressed were not taken up by anyone except Malcolm. There is no point being childish about this.

Malcolm wrote:

This has at least two false assumptions — 1) that grades are scored objectively across all school systems 2) that someone with an A is necessarily more qualified for a given position than someone who gained a lower score.

Zhen Li said:

I only know of one post-secondary school that takes into account grade inflation in certain school districts. As regards qualifications based on grades, this is typically a question of grade cut offs based on SAT scores in the US or overall averages in Canada. After that, references and writing samples are typically of most importance. So, this is a question of the cut offs, which may be quite competitive for some schools.

Malcolm wrote:

It is demonstrable that white children in the US overwhelmingly have better access to educational resources than children of color without the corollary that white children are any more intelligent than children of color. Since this is so, passing over a white child for admission to school X will demonstrably affect that child less in comparison to the advantage conferred to the child of color in question. In other words, affirmative action measures are fair as long as there is no equitable federal standards and funding for public schools across all districts.

Education is a right, not a privilege.

Agreed, on a certain level. But I said that education of my children by me would be a privilege. Not all children have the right to be educated by me. Education is a right, but education in two languages of a choice is a privilege.

Not a big fan of home schooling or charter schools.

On another level, all rights are just guarantees made by the state, or by a number of states when the right in question is based upon some decision at, for instance, the UN level. There is no underlying reason for a right to be guaranteed other than that it is viewed to be ideal. This is why, ultimately, we must depend upon something like the Dharma to give us a foundational reason for these things.

Rights are inalienable. That means they are intrinsic to persons.

The Dharma is a religious perspective. As such, it has no business in secular affairs.

Not being discriminated against is certainly a privilege,
No, it is a right.

Not so. Schools may, if they choose, be boys only or girls only schools. That is a form of discrimination. Is it necessarily a bad thing? No. It is done because many consider it beneficial to education. Similarly, there are often laws prohibiting men from using a women's lavatory. This is discrimination, but it makes sense. Freedom from discrimination is not, inherently, a right. In many cases, however, it is a privilege. You are conflating discrimination in its primary sense with discrimination in its secondary sense. Freedom from discrimination (in its primary sense) is an inalienable right. Sending boys and girls to gendered schools is not necessarily discriminatory in the primary sense— though it could be, if like my mother, as part of that education one was forced to learn how to peel peaches with white gloves on since no boys were ever expected to learn such a useless skill. That being said, all-boys and all-girls schools are denied federal funding.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 24th, 2017 at 11:22 AM

Title: Re: (carefully) Broadcasting Dzogchen through music

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

Apparently a "Dzogchen-inspired album " exists, see:

<http://www.lionsroar.com/check-out-sambhogakaya-from-the-new-dzogchen-inspired-album-by-sir-richard-bishop-and-w-david-oliphant/>

Malcolm wrote:

Sounds dreadful.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 24th, 2017 at 11:09 AM

Title: Re: (carefully) Broadcasting Dzogchen through music

Content:

RikudouSennin said:

As far as music, is it permissible to perform bhajans of traditional mahayana verses from sutras or acaryas?

For example the type of music Bodhi Bhajan Project is producing?

<https://soundcloud.com/sanghamitra-vijaya/sets/songs-based-on-shantidevs>

Malcolm wrote:

Sure.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 24th, 2017 at 11:08 AM

Title: Re: Where to Receive Wang/Lung for Medicine Tantra

Content:

tomamundsen said:

Hi all,

Does anyone know a lama who gives the wang and/or lung for the medicine tantras (http://shangshung.org/store/index.php?main_page=product_info&products_id=518)?

Thanks,

Thomas

Malcolm wrote:

There is no wang for the four tantras. There is a lung. The four tantras are used in the Yuthok Wang as a symbol. But the Yuthok Wang is not like an empowerment for the four tantras. They are however related.

The lung is mainly given to doctors.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 24th, 2017 at 11:05 AM

Title: Re: Dalai Lama about non sectarian approach towards Buddhist study and practice.

Content:

conebeckham said:

I think it's fair to say that the "Rimay Movement" as we know it...

Malcolm wrote:

was started by three Khampas who were primarily interested in Dzogchen teachings and treasure revelation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 24th, 2017 at 10:58 AM

Title: Re: Bernie gives a thumbs up to Trump

Content:

Wayfarer said:

I don't know how to assess it, but here in Oz, TPP had support from both sides of politics.

The commentary here is around the fact that the Chinese will exploit the perceived vacuum left by the US withdrawal to sign trade deals with as many Asia Pacific powers as it can.

Johnny Dangerous said:

This is always what people say about not signing trade deals that are actually about benefiting multinational corporations, that there is some boogeyman who will take advantage.

Malcolm wrote:

With respect to renegotiating trade deals and cancelling them, here are some people who always find advantage in these sorts of events, people who know how to work the arbitrage angle and make money coming and going. These people often enough try to manipulate the system to benefit themselves, and use popular opinion to mask their financial dealings. For example, the Trump Corporation's hostile take over of the United States of America.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 24th, 2017 at 4:10 AM

Title: Re: (carefully) Broadcasting Dzogchen through music

Content:

MaximRobinCossette said:

Hello Sangha,

I'm relatively new to Dzogchen so please pardon any ignorant questions on my part. I'm trying to tread as carefully and responsibly as possible here, I'm aware of the immense power.

I'm a musician who's recently received pointing out instructions, I'm interested in writing songs about my experience.

Can anyone definitely say what I should steer clear of and what is fair game in terms of writing about Dzogchen and my experience? I'm interested in different opinions.

Different but related question, as someone who meets and performs in front of crowds, exposing many people to dzogchen seems in line with the bodhisattva vows. Am I off base here? Yeah, Nay? How should I go about it if so?

Thank you,

Max,

<http://www.maximcossette.com>

Malcolm wrote:

You should not write of your experience. Nor should you write anything about Dzogchen.

There are masters alive today whose job it is to promulgate Dzogchen teachings. We can assist them. Otherwise, there is nothing we ordinary people can do other than practice Dzogchen.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 23rd, 2017 at 9:56 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Zhen Li said:

Then there's the fact that an upper class white student, who got an A average, will still be passed over for admissions to some schools by a lower or upper class racial minority, with lower grades (and hence less desert), because of affirmative action.

Malcolm wrote:

This has at least two false assumptions — 1) that grades are scored objectively across all school systems 2) that someone with an A is necessary more qualified for a given position than someone who gained a lower score.

Zhen Li said:

For instance, if I have children, I would prefer them, and them alone (with my wife if I have one), to have the privilege of living in my house, and benefiting, as much as is possible, from my guidance and teaching. Preferably, I would home school my children. This is conferring a true a privilege, and I do not think there is any negative value that one can give to it. No other person off the street is entitled to that in the same way. Owning any private property, also, is a privilege. In Canada, all citizens are entitled to be educated in either English or French, except in Quebec. This is a privilege of all citizens.

Malcolm wrote:
Education is a right, not a privilege.

Zhen Li said:
Not being discriminated against is certainly a privilege,

Malcolm wrote:
No, it is a right.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Monday, January 23rd, 2017 at 4:41 AM
Title: Re: Dalai Lama about non sectarian approach towards Buddhist study and practice.
Content:

Grigoris said:
Some time ago I came across the teaching: The Wheel of Sharp Weapons. It is a practice based on wrathful Yamantaka which is almost exclusive to the Gelugpa.

heart said:
Not exactly true. Yamantaka is for example a main practice in Drikung Kagyu and in Nyingma you can find it both as Kama (http://www.chinabuddhismencyclopedia.com/en/index.php/List_Of_Nyingma_Kama_Empowerments_Bestowed_By_Kyabje_Yangthang_Rinpoche,_Bodhgaya,_2010) and as Terma.

/magnus

Grigoris said:
I am talking about the SPECIFIC practice, not the practice of Yamantaka per se. There are Yamantaka practices in the Karma Kagyu too.

That said: [Mod note: snarky remark removed.]

Malcolm wrote:
You are referring to Vajrabhairava. It is widely practiced in Sakya and Gelug. The specific Vajrabhairava transmission to which you are referring is the one from Atisha.

It however is not the main Bhairava transmission practiced in Gelug, which comes originally from Rwa Lotsawa, supplemented by Lama Umapa's pure visions.

The Atisha lineage is preserved principally in Sakya, even so, Rwa lugs is the main transmission practiced in both Sakya and Gelug.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 20th, 2017 at 11:53 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

pael said:

Could you tell difference between Sanjaya's eel-wriggling and Nagarjuna's tetralemma?
In Samannaphala Sutta (DN 2), Sanjaya is recorded as saying:

'If you ask me if there exists another world [after death], if I thought that there exists another world, would I declare that to you? I don't think so. I don't think in that way. I don't think otherwise. I don't think not. I don't think not not. If you asked me if there isn't another world... both is and isn't... neither is nor isn't... if there are beings who transmigrate... if there aren't... both are and aren't... neither are nor aren't... if the Tathagata exists after death... doesn't... both... neither exists nor exists after death, would I declare that to you? I don't think so. I don't think in that way. I don't think otherwise. I don't think not. I don't think not not.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Sanjaya_Belatthiputta

Malcolm wrote:

Most def.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 20th, 2017 at 11:44 PM

Title: Re: The role of Samadhi in your practice

Content:

Justmeagain said:

but I thought emphasis was on analytical practices

Malcolm wrote:

You've been reading too many Gelugpa books.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 20th, 2017 at 11:42 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

OK, we are understanding the terminology differently. The ultimate truth is that the pot is empty of inherent existence because it is dependently arisen. The conventional truth refers to the "mere existence" of the conventional appearance and functionality.

Malcolm wrote:

So the ultimate truth of the pot is the nonexistence of something called inherent existence, correct?

Jeff H said:

No. Ultimate analysis asks, "how does this pot really exist?". The rational answer is, "I don't know, but it certainly isn't inherently."

Malcolm wrote:

Hahahahah, very funny Jeff. But this kind of eel-wriggling has never been allowed since the time of the Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 20th, 2017 at 11:41 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

My apologies, it was indeed Conebeckham who made that comment. In any case, both you and Conebeckham can take a look again at these two explanatory posts: One was posted on Sun Jan 15, 2017 5:45 pm, and another on Thu Jan 19, 2017 8:26 pm. If either of you disagree with them, please explain why you disagree.

Malcolm wrote:

You cited Tsongkhapa:

Even reality, the ultimate truth, has no intrinsic nature at all.

Again, this is the assertion that the ultimate is a nonexistence.

Jeff H said:

I don't think LTK is defining ultimate truth as a non-existent. He says inherent existence cannot be found when analyzed by reason. It is this irrationally imposed inherency which is non-existent. Rational analysis can only address rational objects. We can prove, rationally, that there is not, has not been, and could never be any inherently existing thing. That does not posit non-existence as the nature of ultimate truth; it simply points out that inherency is no truth at all, neither relative nor ultimate, and takes it out of the equation.

Malcolm wrote:

Is the nonexistence of the true existence of things, the emptiness which is the absence of inherent existence, ultimate truth or not?

In Tsongkhapa's system he very clearly defines the nonexistence of the true existence of things, the emptiness which is the absence of inherent existence, as ultimate truth.

How can you then claim that Tsongkhapa is not advocating this nonexistence as the ultimate?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 20th, 2017 at 11:38 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

I think we are understanding the terminology differently. The pot is empty of inherent existence because it is dependently arisen. Being dependently arisen does not mean that it is nonexistent. It just means that it exists in dependence on causes and conditions, in dependence on its parts, and in dependence on the imputation by the conventional mind.

Malcolm wrote:

What is the ultimate nature of something which, in the relative sense, arises in dependence?

Kenneth Chan said:

OK, we are understanding the terminology differently. The ultimate truth is that the pot is empty of inherent existence because it is dependently arisen. The conventional truth refers to the "mere existence" of the conventional appearance and functionality.

Malcolm wrote:

So the ultimate truth of the pot is the nonexistence of something called inherent existence, correct?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 20th, 2017 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

No, actually it does not mean that "the ultimate is a nonexistence." What it means is that the "ultimate truth" is also empty of inherent existence. "Empty of inherent existence" does not mean that it is nonexistent.

Malcolm wrote:

Defining emptiness as the absence of inherent existence is defining the ultimate as a nonexistence. For example, a pot. You claim a pot appears dependently, its relative nature; but that its ultimate nature, its emptiness, is the absence of inherent existence. This means you assert the ultimate nature of a pot is a nonexistence.

Kenneth Chan said:

I think we are understanding the terminology differently. The pot is empty of inherent existence because it is dependently arisen. Being dependently arisen does not mean that it is nonexistent. It just means that it exists in dependence on causes and conditions, in dependence on its parts, and in dependence on the imputation by the conventional mind.

Malcolm wrote:

What is the ultimate nature of something which, in the relative sense, arises in dependence?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 20th, 2017 at 11:04 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You cited Tsongkhapa:

Even reality, the ultimate truth, has no intrinsic nature at all.

Again, this is the assertion that the ultimate is a nonexistence.

Kenneth Chan said:

No, actually it does not mean that "the ultimate is a nonexistence." What it means is that the "ultimate truth" is also empty of inherent existence. "Empty of inherent existence" does not mean that it is nonexistent.

Malcolm wrote:

Defining emptiness as the absence of inherent existence is defining the ultimate as a nonexistence. For example, a pot. You claim a pot appears dependently, its relative nature; but that its ultimate nature, its emptiness, is the absence of inherent existence. This means you assert the ultimate nature of a pot is a nonexistence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 20th, 2017 at 10:45 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, I recently posted a number of very long explanations of Lama Tsongkhapa's meaning, together with extensive quotes from the Lam Rim Chen Mo, in order to show that you have misinterpreted him. You did not even respond to the content of those explanations. And now you want to question whether I understand Lama Tsongkhapa? Why did you not even attempt to refute those earlier explanations of mine if you disagreed?

Malcolm wrote:

You are responding to me, not me.

With respect to Lam rim chen mo ——— marvelous book, good translation. Cutler and his team have done a remarkable job.

With respect to certain points of LRCM, however, I have some disagreements. The essence of them we are discussing now. I do not need you to cite long passages from LRCM.

I did not question whether you understand Tsongkhapa, though your recent responses have indeed brought up the doubt about whether you understand Madhyamaka at all, let alone Tsongkhapa.

Kenneth Chan said:

My apologies, it was indeed Conebeckham who made that comment. In any case, both you and Conebeckham can take a look again at these two explanatory posts: One was posted on Sun Jan 15, 2017 5:45 pm, and another on Thu Jan 19, 2017 8:26 pm. If either of you disagree with them, please explain why you disagree.

Malcolm wrote:

You cited Tsongkhapa:

Even reality, the ultimate truth, has no intrinsic nature at all.

Again, this is the assertion that the ultimate is a nonexistence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 20th, 2017 at 10:34 PM

Title: Re: Minobu's Muse: Lord Nagarjuna, The Lotus Sutra, The Gakki

Content:

DharmaChakra said:

Namaste,

I will just add one thing to a comment that said that nagas are responsible for cancers and disease. This is such a mundane understanding. In Bhagavat Purana Prariksit Maharaja was bitten by Taxila Naga, it was a curse of a Brahmin, on the outside it was seen as though he was cursed to die within seven days, and Avadhuta Sukadeva taught Him Bhagavta Dharma, that snake bite from Taxila was a naga to open his consciousness in a higher realm to receive very high teachings. What appears for mundane scholars is only external symptoms, the disease, what appears from inside is higher teachings. All shastra has double meaning.....

Malcolm wrote:

The Bhagavat Purana has nothing to do with Buddhadharma, at all, being a Vaishnava text.

This is a site for discussing Buddhadharma alone.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 20th, 2017 at 10:19 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

conebeckham said:

If your system does not posit the Ultimate nature as the emptiness which is lack of inherent existence, what does it posit as the Ultimate nature?

Are you certain you understand TsongKhapa?

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, I recently posted a number of very long explanations of Lama Tsongkhapa's meaning, together with extensive quotes from the Lam Rim Chen Mo, in order to show that you have misinterpreted him. You did not even respond to the content of those explanations. And now you want to question whether I understand Lama Tsongkhapa? Why did you not even attempt to refute those earlier explanations of mine if you disagreed?

Malcolm wrote:

You are responding to cone, not me.

With respect to Lam rim chen mo ——— marvelous book, good translation. Cutler and his team have done a remarkable job.

With respect to to certain points of LRCM, however, I have some disagreements. The essence of them we are discussing now. I do not need you to cite long passages from LRCM.

I did not question whether you understand Tsongkhapa, though your recent responses have indeed brought up the doubt about whether you understand Madhyamaka at all, let alone Tsongkhapa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 20th, 2017 at 10:10 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I did explain it to you.

All entities have two natures, one ultimate, one relative. The ultimate nature of all entities is emptiness.

However, there is some disagreement about what emptiness means.

You assert that emptiness means the absence of inherent existence. If you define emptiness solely as the absence of inherent existence, you are defining emptiness as a nonexistence. The nonexistence of what? The nonexistence of inherent existence. This means you are defining ultimate emptiness as a nonexistence.

Kenneth Chan said:

You are still playing semantic games and putting words in my mouth. Please explain your point instead of playing around with words. For example, what exactly do you mean by "defining ultimate emptiness as a nonexistence"? What, in fact, do you mean by "ultimate emptiness"? I do not know what you are talking about.

Malcolm wrote:

Kenneth, I never play with words, ever. So stop claiming that I do. It's rude.

Ultimate truth is emptiness. You define emptiness, the ultimate nature of things, as the nonexistence of inherent existence. It is very clear in every post that you write.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 20th, 2017 at 9:52 PM

Title: Re: The role of Samadhi in your practice

Content:

Justmeagain said:

From my understanding the various Tibetan practices don't afford as much time to developing Samadhi.

.

Malcolm wrote:

Sadhana practices as themselves samadhis. This is how you develop Samadhi in Tibetan practices.

Or you can do sitting practices, or you can do a hundred things, all of which will develop samadhi.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 20th, 2017 at 9:48 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

You do assert the ultimate is a nonexistence. All entities have two natures, one relative, one ultimate. You assert the ultimate nature of all entities is the absence of inherent existence alone. This means you assert the ultimate is a nonexistence. Ergo, you are an advocate of ultimate nonexistence.

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, stop playing semantic games. And stop putting words in my mouth. I did not assert "the ultimate is a nonexistence." I did not assert "the ultimate nature of all entities is the absence of inherent existence alone." And I did not assert "the ultimate is a nonexistence." I am not even sure, actually, what you mean with your terminology, since you do not accept the terminology as used by Lama Tsongkhapa. So, until you actually explain what you mean, all this is just a play with words.

Malcolm wrote:

I did explain it to you.

All entities have two natures, one ultimate, one relative. The ultimate nature of all entities is emptiness.

However, there is some disagreement about what emptiness means.

You assert that emptiness means the absence of inherent existence. If you define emptiness solely as the absence of inherent existence, you are defining emptiness as a nonexistence. The nonexistence of what? The nonexistence of inherent existence. This means you are defining ultimate emptiness as a nonexistence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 20th, 2017 at 9:30 PM

Title: Re: 17 tantras of Dzogchen: typed in wily transliterations or Tib Unicode?

Content:

mutsuk said:

Check here in Wylie transcription :

<https://wikisource.org/w/index.php?search=rgyud&title=Special:Search&go=Go&searchToken=ekpftazsnby3j6m53abtb136m>

Careful though, this is inputed from the Adzom blocks which are usually quite famous for their precision but in the present case, they are not really good, obviously over-edited and the over-edition is often wrong... You should try to locate the Gangteng-b mss version or the inputed version made at the Virginia University.

Malcolm wrote:

A problem inherited from Derge NGB.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 20th, 2017 at 9:16 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, are you arguing over semantics yet again? This is getting tiresome. How is this being a "realist" when all phenomena are empty of inherent existence (which means empty of true existence), and when nothing exists from its own side, not even a tiny bit? You also ignored my explanation that this nature of reality that we label "mere existence" is also empty of inherent existence or true existence, because it exists in name only, since it is a label imputed by the conventional mind.

And since I specifically also said that it is important not to claim that this "mere existence of conventional appearances and functionality" is totally nonexistent, how does that make me an "advocate of nonexistence"? Please stop arguing over mere semantics. It is pointless.

Malcolm wrote:

You are an advocate of ultimate nonexistence. Why? Because you assert the ultimate is a nonexistence. This is inescapable conclusion of asserting the ultimate is only the nonexistence of inherent existence.

Kenneth Chan said:

Everything you say here is incorrect. I am not "an advocate of ultimate nonexistence." I do not "assert the ultimate is a nonexistence." Neither do I say that "the ultimate is only the nonexistence of inherent existence."

All things are empty of inherent existence because they are dependently arisen. This does not mean that they are nonexistent. There is the mere existence of conventional appearances and functionality.

Let's not argue over semantics again.

Malcolm wrote:

You do assert the ultimate is a nonexistence. All entities have two natures, one relative, one ultimate. You assert the ultimate nature of all entities is the absence of inherent existence alone. This means you assert the ultimate is a nonexistence. Ergo, you are an advocate of ultimate nonexistence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 20th, 2017 at 11:41 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

It is what remains after we have already examined phenomena with the analysis of whether or not they intrinsically exist.

Malcolm wrote:

And this is precisely the problem with the view you gave adopted. Your analysis is incomplete and leaves you a realist with respect the relative, and an advocate of nonexistence with respect to the ultimate.

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, are you arguing over semantics yet again? This is getting tiresome. How is this being a "realist" when all phenomena are empty of inherent existence (which means empty of true existence), and when nothing exists from its own side, not even a tiny bit? You also ignored my explanation that this nature of reality that we label "mere existence" is also empty of inherent existence or true existence, because it exists in name only, since it is a label imputed by the conventional mind.

And since I specifically also said that it is important not to claim that this "mere existence of conventional appearances and functionality" is totally nonexistent, how does that make me an "advocate of nonexistence"? Please stop arguing over mere semantics. It is pointless.

Malcolm wrote:

You are an advocate of ultimate nonexistence. Why? Because you assert the ultimate is a nonexistence. This is inescapable conclusion of asserting the ultimate is only the nonexistence of inherent existence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 20th, 2017 at 10:48 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

It is what remains after we have already examined phenomena with the analysis of whether or not they intrinsically exist.

Malcolm wrote:

And this is precisely the problem with the view you gave adopted. Your analysis is incomplete and leaves you a realist with respect the relative, and an advocate of nonexistence with respect to the ultimate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 10:35 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

The problem is that Gorampa doesn't actually understand Nagarjuna's intention unmistakably. Tsongkhapa's explanation is in accordance with Nagarjuna's intention so it's not surprising that Gorampa disagrees with it.

Malcolm wrote:

I see, and you have actually read Gorampa to ascertain this? Talk about blind faith.

Tsongkhapafan said:

I have read 'The Two Truths Debate' which compares and contrasts Gorampa and Tsongkhapa.

Please list these points and we can address them, but it's all a bit pointless. I still think we should just follow the views of our Spiritual Guides.

Malcolm wrote:

Thakchoe's book is hardly an objective appraisal of Gorampa's views.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 10:31 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra and Theravada practices

Content:

fckw said:

The Vipassana practice practiced by Theravadins is usually quite different...

Malcolm wrote:

There are several different approaches to it, actually.

fckw said:

Same for Therevada-Vipassana. Goenka meditation style is actually quite different to Mahasi Sayadaw meditation style.

(For any reason beyond my understanding the whole reasearch community on "mindfulness meditation" skips this essential point.)

Malcolm wrote:

I was referring to Theravada in fact.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 10:06 PM

Title: Re: Mahamudra and Theravada practices

Content:

fckw said:

The Vipassana practice practiced by Theravadins is usually quite different...

Malcolm wrote:

There are several different approaches to it, actually.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 9:51 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

In order to make any such claim, you have to first demonstrate that you actually understand Lama Tsongkhapa's meaning.

Malcolm wrote:

All that is necessary is to point out that Tsongkhapa departs in important ways from Nāgārjuna, for by example, by arguing that since the second pair in the fourfold negation are double negatives, they are redundant. Or that appearances are not to be directly analyzed, only their nature is to be analyzed, and so on.

Gorampa made a list of over 150 points where Tsongkhapa seriously departs from the meaning set forth by Nāgārjuna. They have never been adequately responded to by the Gelugpa school.

Tsongkhapa said:

The problem is that Gorampa doesn't actually understand Nagarjuna's intention unmistakably. Tsongkhapa's explanation is in accordance with Nagarjuna's intention so it's not surprising that Gorampa disagrees with it.

Malcolm wrote:

I see, and you have actually read Gorampa to ascertain this? Talk about blind faith.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 9:38 PM

Title: Re: anything similar to Choying Dzo...

Content:

Fa Dao said:

Was wondering if anyone can recommend a text, Tantra, teaching etc that is similar in content to Choying Dzo but not as long, more pithy, and more focused on practice?

Malcolm wrote:

Dorsem Namkhache...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 9:32 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

All this disagreement is the result of your misunderstanding the terminology as it is used by Lama Tsongkhapa.

Malcolm wrote:

No. All this disagreement is based on the fact that Tsongkhapa departs in important ways from the meaning intended by Nāgārjuna, etc.

Kenneth Chan said:

In order to make any such claim, you have to first demonstrate that you actually understand Lama Tsongkhapa's meaning.

Malcolm wrote:

All that is necessary is to point out that Tsongkhapa departs in important ways from Nāgārjuna, for by example, by arguing that since the second pair in the fourfold negation are double negatives, they are redundant. Or that appearances are not to be directly analyzed, only their nature is to be analyzed, and so on.

Gorampa made a list of over 150 points where Tsongkhapa seriously departs from the meaning set forth by Nāgārjuna. They have never been adequately responded to by the Gelugpa school.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 9:19 PM

Title: Re: Consciousness turns back upon itself; it does not extend beyond name-and-form

Content:

Queequeg said:

From the <http://www.accesstoinight.org/tipitaka/sn/sn12/sn12.065.than.html>, SN 12:65

This formulation of the arising of suffering has puzzled me for a long time. It differs from the more common teaching on the 12 Linked Chain in that consciousness does not have its base in "constructing activities" which in turn has its base in ignorance. Rather, consciousness and name-and-form are proposed as mutually dependent and arising. Name-and-form is a function of consciousness and consciousness is a function of name-and-form. This is not quite a materialist view, but seems closer to it than the picture given by the 12 Linked Chain.

Can someone please explain what is going on here?

Malcolm wrote:

It is only taking about the process of this life.

Aemilius said:

The thing is that Shakyamuni didn't always repeat the same teachings exactly to the letter. It all depended on the particular listeners and their understanding and their needs, runs the traditional explanation for the inconsistency found in the teachings, this is said for example in the Arthaviniscaya sutra commentary called Nibandhana.

Etienne Lamotte has pointed out that there are variations in the teaching of dependent arising in the Pitakas.

In the formulation of Nagara sutta "consciousness" stands for the first three links of the more common formulation. The first three links are consciousness.

The standard formulation of 12 links is true as it is in the explanation of one life only.

There is no need to take away ignorance and karmic formations to make it apply to this life only.

Malcolm wrote:

In serial dependent origination, the link of consciousness means conception in the womb.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 9:18 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

dreambow said:

When activism takes over then you have special interest groups. Each group thinks their plight is more urgent, more worthy of respect than the other.

Malcolm wrote:

Not at all. They just understand they have a wound that needs to be addressed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 9:17 PM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

I don't see any viable analysis of the politics of race to be made outside of it's interaction with class. The idea that people from completely different circumstances and backgrounds have something magical in common based on the notion of their racial characteristics being similar (at least to the degree we are talking here) makes no sense to me.

Malcolm wrote:

That is because you are not black, latino, native, etc., and not a member of these communities, marginalized as they have been on the basis of presumed, yet imaginary, racial differences.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 8:46 PM

Title: Re: What is Ignorance (avidya)?

Content:

Queequeg said:

Is this the subtle ignorance that is removed on the attainment of Buddhahood?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes.

Queequeg said:

What is the "first cause"? Is it the knowledge obscuration ignorance?

Malcolm wrote:

There are no first causes in dependent origination. This why in Mahāmudra and Great Perfection teaches we talk about connate ignorance rather than causal ignorance.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 8:44 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

All this disagreement is the result of your misunderstanding the terminology as it is used by Lama Tsongkhapa.

Malcolm wrote:

No. All this disagreement is based on the fact that Tsongkhapa departs in important ways from the meaning intended by Nagārjuna, etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 10:17 AM

Title: Re: what is whiteness? what is it to be "white" in the USA?

Content:

Johnny Dangerous said:

Class typically effects that sort of thing more than racial identification...

Malcolm wrote:

Spoken like a true white person...

Bernie made the same mistake...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 10:12 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

"Overcoming karmic appearances" is not achieved by negating what Lama Tsongkhapa calls the "mere existence" of conventional appearance and functionality, since negating this "mere existence" would also mean negating the fact that there is karma, cyclic existence, the Four Noble Truths, and so on.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a difference between outright negation and ascertaining the unreality of things. Still, in both cases karma, samsara, and so on are completely unreal, products of delusion, etc.

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, you are now saying basically the same thing that Lama Tsongkhapa has been saying all along, only with different terminology. Saying that there is “no outright negation” of karma, samsara, and so on, is essentially the same as saying that there is the “mere existence” of conventional appearances and functionality.

Malcolm wrote:

Not at all. In classical Madhamaka appearances are investigated directly, but not in Tsongkhapa's revisionist approach.

Kenneth Chan said:

Saying that they are “completely unreal, products of delusion, etc.” is essentially the same as saying that “nothing exists from its own side, not even a tiny bit.” You have been merely arguing over semantics all this while, and that is what I have been trying to point out all this while.

Malcolm wrote:

Again, not at all.

Kenneth Chan said:

No one is “more and more strongly reinforcing” conventional appearance and functionality. I have repeatedly made this point that there is no “affirmation of existence” (as you put it) in Lama Tsongkhapa's meaning. So please do not keep insisting on this misinterpretation. If "nothing exists from its own side, not even a tiny bit," in terms of ontology, what else is left to be negated?

Malcolm wrote:

The assertion that things exist dependently, or your "mere existence."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 8:18 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

"Overcoming karmic appearances" is not achieved by negating what Lama Tsongkhapa calls the "mere existence" of conventional appearance and functionality, since negating this "mere existence" would also mean negating the fact that there is karma, cyclic existence, the Four Noble Truths, and so on.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a difference between outright negation and ascertaining the unreality of things. Still, in both cases karma, samsara, and so on are completely unreal, products of delusion, etc.

[/quote]

Kenneth Chan said:

Is the purpose of Madhyamaka to enable us to control the elements? Note that Milarepa could conjure up hailstones even before he began his spiritual journey with Marpa.

Malcolm wrote:

Milarepa's spiritual journey did not begin with Marpa. He studied with ten different Nyingma masters before he went to Marpa. He was already quite educated in Buddhadharma prior to meeting Marpa Lotsawa.

I know this. But the question still remains: Is the purpose of Madhyamaka to enable us to control the elements? It would appear that this is not the case, because Milarepa still had to undergo a difficult spiritual journey with Marpa. In fact, Milarepa's ability to control the elements actually hindered him here, because his actions in conjuring up hailstones ended up creating negative karma. Is that not so?[/quote]

The point is that karmic appearance such as the elements are a limitation to be overcome, not a convention to be more and more strongly reinforced.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 3:19 AM

Title: Re: Chogyal Namkhai Norbu retreats this summer

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

For example, if you ask what I generally drink with dinner, I will say, "I always drink wine." But I certainly did not drink wine when I was two.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 3:15 AM

Title: Re: Pure lands/Nichiren Shonin's take

Content:

Minobu said:

I pointed out <http://dharmawheel.net/viewtopic.php?p=373374#p373374> was a prayer in a tantric practice and that did not satisfy me... for it is a prayer...

Malcolm wrote:

No, actually it was not a prayer. It was a prediction. I can provide you many such predictions from sūtra and tantra, but you won't accept them so there is no point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 1:26 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Wayfarer said:

Where this question arose was in respect of the reality, or absence thereof, of pots and other objects of normal perception. The argument was that 'upon analysis' none of these things can be 'established'.

Malcolm wrote:

When Candrakīrti was distracted, in front of a student he bumped into a pillar. When he was not distracted, in front of the same student he passed his hand right through the pillar.

There are limits to how far we should take the idea that conventional things "appear and are functional." Their appearance and functionality is dependent on a cognitively-encased delusion.

Kenneth Chan said:

Note, though, that Candrakīrti's Commentary on the "Four Hundred Stanzas" says:

"... our analysis is intent upon seeking intrinsic nature. We refute here that things exist essentially; we do not refute that eyes and such are products and are dependently arisen results of karma. Therefore they exist. Hence, when eyes and such are explained as results of karma, they do exist."

Malcolm wrote:

The purpose of Madhyamaka is not to keep us trapped in karmic appearances. The purpose of Madhyamaka is to help us overcome them.

Kenneth Chan said:

Is the purpose of Madhyamaka to enable us to control the elements? Note that Milarepa could conjure up hailstones even before he began his spiritual journey with Marpa.

Malcolm wrote:

Milarepa's spiritual journey did not begin with Marpa. He studied with ten different Nyingma masters before he went to Marpa. He was already quite educated in Buddhadharma prior to meeting Marpa Lotsawa.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 1:21 AM

Title: Re: Tara/Saraswati

Content:

DGA said:

Sorry, I didn't notice that we were in the Shingon forum. I can say that she is well represented in Japanese Buddhism generally. I learned her mantra from a Tendai master, for example.

Karma Jinpa said:

No worries, mate. Would that be a sutric mantra, or does Tendai have esoteric practices derived from tantra also? My knowledge of the Japanese schools is admittedly quite limited, as I've spent most of my time studying the Tibetan side of things.

All I really know about Tianti/Tendai is that Chan/Zen developed in part as a reaction to their scholasticism, couching the school in anti-intellectualist terms. And that was taught to me by a professor who is also a lay Chan teacher in the Dharma Drum Mountain lineage of Master Sheng Yen, so there may have been some bias there.

Malcolm wrote:

Tendai has esoteric traditions.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 12:46 AM

Title: Re: Blue stripe on monastics robes

Content:

lelopa said:

that is one reason.....

but many western physicians doubt that f.e. the helicobacter pylori comes from eating at evening....

Malcolm wrote:

I treat many people for digestive disorders, one in 10 has H. pylori. The rest have terrible eating habits.

Norwegian said:

Malcolm, you said the following: "At midday our metabolic heat is strongest because the sun is high in the sky. When we eat in the evening, it is harder for us to digest meals."

In general, how is it for those of us who live where the winters are very long, and where sunlight is more or less absent?

Malcolm wrote:

The principle still applies, eat most when the sun is strongest.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 12:38 AM

Title: Re: Blue stripe on monastics robes

Content:

Bristollad said:

For instance, one Geshe I know does not normally eat after the midday meal (this is in keeping with vinaya)

Malcolm wrote:

.....

.....

If you look at the west, millions and millions of people are on Prilosec and so on. The reason is very simple. They eat the wrong combinations of food in the wrong amounts at the wrong times.

lelopa said:

that is one reason.....

but many western physicians doubt that f.e. the helicobacter pylori comes from eating at evening....

Malcolm wrote:

I treat many people for digestive disorders, one in 10 has H. pylori. The rest have terrible eating habits.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 12:17 AM

Title: Re: Pure lands/Nichiren Shonin's take

Content:

Minobu said:

I took for granted Buddhists, even Rinpoche's were not that concerned with going to the pure land.

Malcolm wrote:

You were wrong.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 12:07 AM

Title: Re: What is Ignorance (avidya)?

Content:

Queequeg said:

In another thread about a presentation of a 10 linked chain of causation in the Tipitaka (SN 12:65 and DN 14), Malcolm raised a point about ignorance in the 12 linked chain of causation being different than ignorance as the lack of knowledge about the selflessness of dharmas. MKoll brought up the definition of ignorance in the Pali Sutta as being ignorance of the Four Noble Truths.

This brought me to a fundamental question. A very brief search of this forum did not turn up any recent discussions on the topic, so, I'm starting a new thread.

What is the technical meaning of ignorance (avidya) in Mahayana Buddhism?

Malcolm wrote:

There are two, ignorance that is a knowledge obscuration, discussed by Vasubandhu in the opening the Kośa as the nonafflictive ignorance of Arhats and Pratyekabuddhas, and the ignorance that is the first link (but not the first cause) in the twelve nidanas, which is afflictive ignorance that arises from not knowing causes and results.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Thursday, January 19th, 2017 at 12:05 AM

Title: Re: Pure lands/Nichiren Shonin's take

Content:

Minobu said:

So these are tantric verses approving themselves for themselves...

but not really from sutra?

Malcolm wrote:

Since when has sūtra been more definitive than tantra?

Minobu said:

Well I'm looking for some source that states Vajrayana is not going to be effected by the degenerative age cycle.

Malcolm wrote:

The principle is that Vajrayāna is the only effective practice in so called "last five hundred years."

Minobu said:

I might be mistaken

Malcolm wrote:

You are.

Minobu said:

so if thats it, and you want to ignore the Lotus Sutra and it's edicts, fine for you. what ever floats your boat.

Malcolm wrote:

The Lotus is fine, as Sūtras go. But like all sūtras, it offers no swift path to buddhahood.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 18th, 2017 at 11:36 PM

Title: Re: Chogyal Namkhai Norbu retreats this summer

Content:

lelopa said:

in the last years....

f.e. in 1991 in germany at kamalashila institute he taught in italian

<https://dzogchen-munich.org/de/#row-programm-de>

Malcolm wrote:

OK, but that was 25 years ago.

lelopa said:

correct, Sir - but i thought "always" include 25 years...

ok, so i was always an adult dzogchen-practitioner

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on the implied tense.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 18th, 2017 at 11:19 PM

Title: Re: Consciousness turns back upon itself; it does not extend beyond name-and-form

Content:

Queequeg said:

Ignorance is not recognizing the real nature of dharmas as impermanent. .

Malcolm wrote:

Ignorance in the 12 nidānas is not the same ignorance as the knowledge obscuration of ignorance which misapprehends a self, etc.

The former is a stand in for all the afflictions of the past life, just as formations stands for all the karma.

Aemilius said:

Alex Berzin says the opposite in his explanation of the 12 links, namely that the fundamental ignorance(unawareness), that keeps the 12 links revolving, is the ignorance of reifying "I" or "me" onto or in the aggregates.

See http://www.studybuddhism.com/web/x/nav/eb_toc.html_1253243166.html

Malcolm wrote:

Read chapter three of the Kosha. I think Vasubandhu is somewhat more authoritative than Berzin.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 18th, 2017 at 10:25 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Wayfarer said:

Where this question arose was in respect of the reality, or absence thereof, of pots and other objects of normal perception. The argument was that 'upon analysis' none of these things can be 'established'.

\]

Malcolm wrote:

When Candrakīrti was distracted, in front of a student he bumped into a pillar. When he was not distracted, in front of the same student he passed his hand right through the pillar.

There are limits to how far we should take the idea that conventional things "appear and are functional." Their appearance and functionality is dependent on a cognitively-encased delusion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 18th, 2017 at 10:13 PM

Title: Re: Buddhahood in This Life

Content:

RikudouSennin said:

Could you explain a bit more about the various modalities of an individual's consciousness.

1)Since ye shes (pristine consciousness), shes rab (wisdom) and rnam shes (consciousness) are different modalities of shes pa.

In this context what is the difference for example between ye shes and shes rab?

2) Aren't they both operative words to describe a knowledge that determines all phenomenon as being empty? (wisdom)

3) Or to the manifest state of the ground? (pristine consciousness)

I hope im not just complicating these terms.

Malcolm wrote:

Shes rab and rig pa are synonyms. Dzogchen is based on the idea found in some Sarma tantras as well, that all phenomena are included in potentiality (rtsal) of ye shes when the basis arises from the basis. When the potential of ye shes is misperceived, this is rnam shes and this in turn causes samsara. When it is correctly perceived (i.e. shes rab) as one's own state, this is the cause for nirvana.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 18th, 2017 at 10:00 PM

Title: Re: What is the Dzogchen and/or Nyingma assertion of how conventional phenomena exists?

Content:

Lukeinaz said:

If conventional phenomena have always been primordial enlightenment and conventional truth is delusion then is delusion primordial enlightenment? Now I understand all the drinking and sex. Sign me up!

Malcolm wrote:

You should read Rongzom's hook.

Lukeinaz said:

Entering the Way?

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that or the appearances as divine.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 18th, 2017 at 9:56 PM

Title: Re: Enlightenment vs. Liberation vs. Awakening

Content:

Karma Jinpa said:

Furthermore, since Buddha and bodhi are related in Sanskrit, why is there not a similar relation between the equivalent Tibetan terms, sangs rgyas and byang chub? Etymologically they seem distinct.

Malcolm wrote:

Sangs rgyas means "fully (rgyas) awake (sangs)."

Byang chub means is etymologized as purifying (byang) all obscurations to be abandoned and realizing (chub) all qualities to be realized.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 18th, 2017 at 9:52 PM

Title: Re: What is the Dzogchen and/or Nyingma assertion of how conventional phenomena exists?

Content:

bhava said:

In dzogchen and nyingma, conventional phenomena have allways been primordial enlightenment. One leaves analytical approach of "exist nor non-exist" far away, as it is the domain of conceptual mind. In the state of rigpa it your direct experience. Of course as upaya one can use any kind of analytical meditation, but real view completely transcends conceptual mind and its assertions.

Lukeinaz said:

If conventional phenomena have always been primordial enlightenment and conventional truth is delusion then is delusion primordial enlightenment? Now I understand all the drinking and sex. Sign me up!

Malcolm wrote:

You should read Rongzom's hook.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 18th, 2017 at 9:06 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Wayfarer said:

Do you mean, someone who has realised emptiness has supernatural ability, so doesn't need a pot?

Malcolm wrote:

It means they can control the elements, if they so choose.

Wayfarer said:

So, this is a reference to siddhi, supernatural powers, isn't it?

Where this question arose was in respect of the reality, or absence thereof, of pots and other objects of normal perception. The argument was that 'upon analysis' none of these things can be 'established'.

But if that analysis terminates in an insight into the nature of matter which is literally 'beyond reason', then it's not a rational argument, it relies on revelation of an insight 'beyond mere logic' as the sutras describe it.

Isn't that so?

Malcolm wrote:

Siddhis also have a rational basis, "Where emptiness is possible, everything is possible..."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 18th, 2017 at 2:38 AM

Title: Re: Consciousness turns back upon itself; it does not extend beyond name-and-form

Content:

Queequeg said:

Ignorance is not recognizing the real nature of dharmas as impermanent. .

Malcolm wrote:

Ignorance in the 12 nidānas is not the same ignorance as the knowledge obscuration of ignorance which misapprehends a self, etc.

The former is a stand in for all the afflictions of the past life, just as formations stands for all the karma.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 18th, 2017 at 2:27 AM

Title: Re: Pure lands/Nichiren Shonin's take

Content:

Minobu said:

Interesting, can you show us your source. this should be interesting for it's Malcolm...not sarcasm...always show respect to those who are more informed .. but i thnk i might win this one...

Malcolm wrote:

The Herukābhyudaya Tantra:

Having been cared for by Śrī Heruka,

there will be success in the degenerate age.

The Ḍākārṇava Tantra states:
In the kali yuga this will be taught by countless bhagavans.
The tantra taught by Śākyasimha
will carry one to the other shore of yoga.
Etc.

Minobu said:
So these are tantric verses approving themselves for themselves...

but not really from sutra?

Malcolm wrote:
Since when has sūtra been more definitive than tantra?

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, January 18th, 2017 at 2:08 AM
Title: Re: Pure lands/Nichiren Shonin's take
Content:

Minobu said:
Mappo then is when actual tantra and most meditative practice actually do not produce result.

Malcolm wrote:
No the end times is when Vajrayāna is the only effective practice.

Minobu said:
Just think for a moment..If Lord Buddha Maitreya is going to drop meditation completely , and use ethics and morals ,what does that say about the last moments of Vajrayana in the last degenerative years of Lord Sakyamuni's Dharma.Could this be why Nichiren Shonin who studied ShinGon decided to say it was of no value .

Malcolm wrote:
Nicherin was wrong, plain and simple.

Author: Malcolm
Date: Wednesday, January 18th, 2017 at 2:07 AM
Title: Re: Pure lands/Nichiren Shonin's take
Content:

Minobu said:

Mappo then is when actual tantra and most meditative practice actually do not produce result.

Malcolm wrote:

No the end times is when Vajrayāna is the only effective practice.

Minobu said:

Interesting, can you show us your source. this should be interesting for it's Malcolm...not sarcasm...always show respect to those who are more informed .. but i thnk i might win this one...

Malcolm wrote:

The Herukābhyudaya Tantra:

Having been cared for by Śrī Heruka,
there will be success in the degenerate age.

The Ḍākārṇava Tantra states:

In the kali yuga this will be taught by countless bhagavans.
The tantra taught by Śākyasimha
will carry one to the other shore of yoga.
Etc.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 18th, 2017 at 1:45 AM

Title: Re: Pure lands/Nichiren Shonin's take

Content:

Minobu said:

Mappo then is when actual tantra and most meditative practice actually do not produce result.

Malcolm wrote:

No the end times is when Vajrayāna is the only effective practice.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 18th, 2017 at 1:43 AM

Title: Re: Pure lands/Nichiren Shonin's take

Content:

Minobu said:

What ever you want to believe about Nichiren Shonin in order to blind you and make your paradigm more real...He never lost a Buddhist Debate.

.

Malcolm wrote:

Standards for Buddhist debate were never that high in Japan.

DGA said:

I don't know what kind of evidence is available to support Minobu's claim on Nichiren's history as a debater.

I can say that there is significant evidence of high standards for debate in Japanese Buddhism in more than one school, for instance in the time of Ryogen. Paul Groner documents this in his Ryogen biography.

Malcolm wrote:

The Ryogen bio actually shows that debate standards degenerated after Ryogen's time when schools like Hosso and Tendai stopped debating each other.

Compare a 1000 year continuous interschool debate history in Tibet with a three hundred year history of interschool debate history in Japan and I think you will see my point.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 18th, 2017 at 1:15 AM

Title: Re: Pure lands/Nichiren Shonin's take

Content:

Minobu said:

What ever you want to believe about Nichiren Shonin in order to blind you and make your paradigm more real...He never lost a Buddhist Debate.

.

Malcolm wrote:

Standards for Buddhist debate were never that high in Japan.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Wednesday, January 18th, 2017 at 1:07 AM

Title: Re: Chogyal Namkhai Norbu retreats this summer

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

ChNN said that the official language of the DC is english, in year 200x,

Malcolm wrote:

Correct.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 17th, 2017 at 11:51 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

I am pretty certain that the reason why Gelugpas also attain high realization is because of Vajrayāna practice, but not because the view of emptiness set forth by Tsongkhapa in various places is unmistakable or perfect.

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, how are you able to make such a claim concerning the view of emptiness set forth by Lama Tsongkhapa when you have not demonstrated that you are even interpreting his meaning correctly? Your previous attempt at summarising what Lama Tsongkhapa meant is incorrect, as I have already pointed out.

Malcolm wrote:

You think you pointed that out. According to you, you have to accept all of Tsongkhapa's definitions and ways of explaining things as correct. Only then can you be said to understand his meaning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 17th, 2017 at 11:17 PM

Title: Re: Chogyal Namkhai Norbu retreats this summer

Content:

Brev said:

Hello,

I've been looking for information about ChNN's retreats this summer in Europe and wonder if any of the Dzogchen practitioners here might know more about them or have experience with them. ChNN has three-day retreats in Munich and Vienna in July. Will all instruction be in Italian/German or is English supported at all? Also, what is the typical suggested donation for these retreats?

Thank you very much!

heart said:

Rinpoche always teaches in English.

/magnus

lelopa said:

in the last years....

f.e. in 1991 in Germany at Kamalashila Institute he taught in Italian

<https://dzogchen-munich.org/de/#row-programm-de>

Malcolm wrote:

OK, but that was 25 years ago.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 17th, 2017 at 11:04 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Jeff H said:

Is it correct to say that you believe no one has ever achieved, or ever could achieve, the union of method and wisdom by following Tsongkhapa's system of negating intrinsic existence with reason separately from, but in tandem with, negating conventionality with bodhicitta?

Malcolm wrote:

No, that is not what I am saying at all. Indeed, it completely misses the mark.

But I will say that I don't think anyone at all is going to move from the sūtra path of preparation to the path of seeing by meditating on a lopsided emptiness.

I am pretty certain that the reason why Gelugpas also attain high realization is because of Vajrayāna practice, but not because the view of emptiness set forth by Tsongkhapa in various places is unmistakable or perfect.

Why do I say this? Because even Cittamātrins like Virupa attained realization of the stages without having a completely correct understanding of emptiness because of their Vajrayāna practice (specifically in his case he attained the first bhūmi during empowerment).

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 17th, 2017 at 10:21 PM

Title: Re: Blue stripe on monastics robes

Content:

Bristollad said:

For instance, one Geshe I know does not normally eat after the midday meal (this is in keeping with vinaya)

Malcolm wrote:

In general, the instruction not to eat after noon really has nothing to do with discipline. It has to do with health. At midday our metabolic heat is strongest because the sun is high in the sky. When we eat in the evening, it is harder for us to digest meals.

The Buddha was a wise person and observed that those who ate large meals in the evening suffered from digestive problems.

If you look at the west, millions and millions of people are on Prilosec and so on. The reason is very simple. They eat the wrong combinations of food in the wrong amounts at the wrong times.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 17th, 2017 at 10:02 PM

Title: Re: Enlightenment vs. Liberation vs. Awakening

Content:

Karma Jinpa said:

Something that I haven't seen talked about on here are the terms we seem to have accepted as standard jargon for Buddhism in English.

Sanskrit bodhi (Tibetan byang chub) is most often translated as "enlightened," but does that accurately convey the meaning of the term in either of the canonical languages? I've heard it said that this is a poor translation, and that the connotation we have for enlightenment in English is absent.

Malcolm wrote:

Correct. It is an incorrect translation of bodhi, which means "to awaken."

Karma Jinpa said:

The same person (a former nun) preferred to use the term "liberation" instead (Sanskrit moksha, Tibetan thar pa), since we are freed from the shackles of karma and no longer trapped in Samsaric existence.

Malcolm wrote:

She is wrong.

Karma Jinpa said:

But how does moksha (thar pa) compare to bodhi (byang chub)? For that matter, where does the Tibetan verb sgrol ba come in? Drölma (sgrol ma) is "She who Liberates," so how does sgrol relate to thar? Are there subtle differences in subtext/connotation?

Malcolm wrote:

There is a small difference between thar pa and grol ba; the former translates mokṣa, the latter mukti, so both may be translated as liberation. Sgrol ba however translates tāraka, meaning to free or to save.

Karma Jinpa said:

Sometimes bodhi is translated to English as "awakening," which seems more in tune with the Buddha being "the Awakened One," a reference to the dream-like illusory nature of Samsara and having woken from said dream, seeing things as they actually are. Is "awakening" a superior translation that should supersede "enlightenment"? Is there another term not considered here which would more accurately portray the words in Sanskrit/Tibetan? Or should we stick to "enlightenment," and if so, why?

Malcolm wrote:

Awakening is the only accurate translation of bodhi.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 17th, 2017 at 9:46 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

“Understanding conventional truth enables the practitioner to develop the method side—compassion, concentration, and ethics—whereas understanding the ultimate truth leads to the wisdom side—emptiness. These realizations will, in turn, result in the two Buddha bodies, the truth body and the form body.”

If the realization of the rainbow body has really to do with the level of realization, involving the union of method and wisdom, this means that it is more a case of the highly advanced mind being able to influence the way conventional appearances manifest (and not the case of what you consider a difference in the “level of negation” in the understanding of emptiness) that counts.

Malcolm wrote:

The first paragraph is definitely Gelug orthodoxy.

In the second case, you cannot influence the way others see you. If you realize rainbow body in this life, called the great transference body, people will see you as ordinary if they are ordinary. But what you can do is place your mind in inanimate things, make them move and so on. There are also other things you can do.

Conventional truth is a measure of your own delusion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 17th, 2017 at 9:42 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Someone who has realized emptiness does not need a pot to boil water.

Wayfarer said:

Do you mean, someone who has realised emptiness has supernatural ability, so doesn't need a pot?

Malcolm wrote:

It means they can control the elements, if they so choose.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 17th, 2017 at 11:17 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

As long as someone thinks that the appearance of pots withstand analysis, for that long they will never even have a chance of realizing rainbow body.

Bakmoon said:

No educated Gelugpa would ever say that appearances withstand analysis. Rather, they would say that analysis refutes them in terms of their ontological status, but it doesn't refute the fact that appearances appear to us or that they function.

Malcolm wrote:

Which means that appearance withstand analysis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 17th, 2017 at 6:42 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra and Theravada practices

Content:

Justmeagain said:

Higher in what respect?

Isn't a realisation of the nature of the mind the same in both respects?

Malcolm wrote:

Higher in terms of omniscience and realization.

Justmeagain said:

But thats an assertion from Tantric practitioners yes?

Malcolm wrote:

Well you are asking in the Mahamudra section so...

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 17th, 2017 at 5:58 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra and Theravada practices

Content:

Justmeagain said:

Higher in what respect?

Isn't a realisation of the nature of the mind the same in both respects?

Malcolm wrote:

Higher in terms of omniscience and realization.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 17th, 2017 at 5:32 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Matt J said:

A smashed pot holds no water, but an analyzed pot still does. Unless we mean some thing completely different by analysis.

Malcolm wrote:

It all depends on what you analyze the pot for. If you analyze the appearance itself, it won't withstand analysis.

Wayfarer said:

But if what you want to is boil water in it, then it's lack of ultimate own-being is neither here nor there.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, and this is why refuting only inherent existence rather than all four extremes misses the mark.

Someone who has realized emptiness does not need a pot to boil water.

But the idea that inherent existence is all we need to negate makes emptiness more comfortable for modern people who at base do not wish to abandon their realism.

As long as someone thinks that the appearance of pots withstand analysis, for that long they will never even have a chance of realizing rainbow body.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 17th, 2017 at 4:35 AM

Title: Re: Mahamudra and Theravada practices

Content:

Justmeagain said:

Hi,

I am just reading Drikung Kyabgon Chetsang Rinpoche's book 'The Practice Of Mahamudra'

On page 29 he suggests that the end result is the same whether we practice Tantric or Sutra Mahamudra. The latter being Samatha and Vipassana.

Does this mean that Theravadins achieve Mahamudra too by practicing Vipassana and Samatha?

/|

Malcolm wrote:

No, there is the small matter of the view and motivation.

Also it is not certain that the result of sūtra and tantra are the same. There are many assertions in the tantra that the result of practicing Vajrayāna is higher.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 17th, 2017 at 2:56 AM

Title: Re: The 'Dharma practitioners' of the degenerate times

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

Are you including yourself?

orgyen jigmed said:

" Those lacking that authentic approach, the 'Dharma practitioners' of the degenerate times, do not engage in proper view and conduct. With no time to listen, they long to meditate. With no time to meditate, they long to explain. Not matured themselves, they long to empower others. Not free themselves, they teach experiential guidance to others. Those with no meditation do fake meditation. Those with no realization offer fake realization. Those with no freedom offer fake freedom. Those with no experience make a lot of noise about emptiness. Their outer appearance is of venerable scholars, proclaiming themselves. Doing their recitations, they portray a false image of erudition. Those with no qualities label the faults of others. What are their names? Choje, Rinpoche, Tokden, Siddha, Loppon, Khenpo, Gomchen, Yogin, Monk, Geshe, and Sangha. They are labeled with these pure names, these Dharma practitioners, dressed up in fancy red cloth and silk. Many a one has been seen here in Tibet.

" Generally, in this bad, degenerate time, the signs that evil blessings have struck will be that a charlatan is preferred to a fine individual and that a gift of a morsel of tasty food is preferred to heartfelt explanation of instructions. Without realization in subjective meditational experience, practitioners will look to assemble the conducive external conditions. Since there are so many kinds of savages and criminals, no one will be able to be a great mediator in the mountains, so in general those great meditators will have no realization. The monks will have no discipline, the realized ones no sacred pledge, and the mantra adepts no powers. Disciples of bold lamas will gather around to sell their own fame. Girls without vows will secretly sleep with the clergy. Delinquent boys will sleep in secret with nuns. The crevices in the walls of monasteries will be full of the corpses of the clergy's illegitimate infant boys and girls.

" They will say they are practising Secret Mantra but will have no quality of the path of means. They will say they have discipline but will keep no vows. The profound esoteric instructions will be sold for wealth. Diligence will all go to creating curses and adversity. Dharma language will be broadcast by lay people, and in the philosophical language of emptiness, all women will be esteemed. Keeping their teacher secret, disciples will broadcast their own greatness. Many will be those who desire Dharma, but few who desire a lama. The fortunate noble person whose karma from previous training has awakened, just the few who have not regressed before the end of their aspirations, the few who truly practice the Dharma, will be scattered outside of Tibet and few will remain."

- PADMASAMBHAVA

Excerpt from: Refined Gold: The Dialogue of Princess Pemasal and the Guru, from a Terma discovered by Pema Lingpa (1450-1521), and translated into English by Sarah Harding from: Bla ma nor bu rgya mtsho Vol: 1-2: Ka/Kha, Pad gling gter chos (Pema Lingpa's Collection of Treasures) or pp. 76-77, " The Life and Revelations of Pema Lingpa " (2003) Snow Lion Publications, Boulder, Colorado

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 17th, 2017 at 2:47 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Matt J said:

A smashed pot holds no water, but an analyzed pot still does. Unless we mean something completely different by analysis.

Malcolm wrote:

Appearances are not rejected prior to analysis. But they do not survive analysis. No more than a pot survives a hammer.

It all depends on what you analyze the pot for. If you analyze the appearance itself, it won't withstand analysis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 17th, 2017 at 1:21 AM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Minobu said:

To me what I've been reading about dogzhen according to Malcolm it's a sell.

Malcolm wrote:

If you are interested, go find a Dzogchen master. You won't hear anything difference between what they say and what I said.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 17th, 2017 at 1:19 AM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

it is possible to stop rebirth at the moment of death.

.

Minobu said:

Why would you want to?

Malcolm wrote:

He means afflicted rebirth. In other words, for those who have the proper instructions it is possible to attain full buddhahood at the moment of death or in the bardo, if one does not manage to do so in this life.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 17th, 2017 at 12:51 AM

Title: Re: Expanse of time

Content:

Grigoris said:

I would think it would be safe to say that the eyes perceive things as they are, in exactly the moment that the light rebounding off (or emitted from) the object reaches them. The speed of light is such that it would be a more or less instantaneous (unless the light was coming from an object a crazily large distance away, but still, the eyes would receive an impression of the visual object as it looks at that moment to us here and now). The process of seeing occurs after that. The mind process of seeing is pretty bloody fast too, though. But what we see (at the end of the entire process) is actually something that no longer exists. A thing of the past.

Perception also includes interpretation, and this addition to / projection onto the object is normally based on past experiences so, effectively, at the end of the entire process, perception is essentially of the past.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, this is why mind (manas) is understood to be in the past. We cannot "be here now" or "be in the present moment" no matter how much we want to unless we are resting in a state free of concepts.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 17th, 2017 at 12:26 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Matt J said:

That's what I said. However, they pointed out that 1) "inherent existence" was a mental projection, and removing this projection revealed appearances to be empty; and 2) that reasoning can only refute mental projections, and not appearances as such.

Malcolm wrote:

This is the limitation of Gelug Madhyamaka. Something other than appearances is subject to analysis, not the appearances themselves.

Appearances are not rejected prior to analysis. But they do not survive analysis. No more than a pot survives a hammer.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Tuesday, January 17th, 2017 at 12:02 AM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

it is possible to stop rebirth at the moment of death.

you know what? i once asked Namkhai Norbu -a Buddha- this question: "is the rainbowbody like reflations in a mirror?", and he said "yes, even the rainbowbody is like reflations in a mirror". what this means? it means that at last there is no limitation, we can rebirth, we can go to a pure land, we can manifest as a rigdzin, we can manifest as a bodhisattva, we can reside in a statue, we can stay in the rainbowbody, ..., we have an infinite amount of possibilities and everything will be "like reflations in a mirror" if we understand what it really means and "total realize ourselves".

people tend to think that nirvana, or the rainbowbody, and so, is like anoter thing of different nature like from another planet -don't laugh-. but nature of samsara and realization is not different for the nature of mind is exactly the same all the time.

i won't try to convince anybody, because this is a elucidation from a question and it's answer, and language can be very tricky and i could be in a wrong understanding also, only proof can confirm, but to me everything points in that direction.

Malcolm wrote:

It just means even rainbow body is something relative, not ultimate.

javier.espinoza.t said:

i feel that in reality there is no such thing as ultimate haha

Malcolm wrote:

Agreed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 16th, 2017 at 11:57 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Jeff H said:

To properly set the stage, he begins the module with this quote of HHDL from The Four Noble Truths:

Malcolm wrote:

And so conventional appearances are never discarded and are accepted as they stand. All that is rejected is that they have any nature.

So the question becomes, is there something left over at the end of ultimate analysis? If so, what?

Jeff H said:

At the end of ultimate analysis the mere appearances of conventionality are left over, causally interactive but utterly without nature.

Malcolm wrote:

This is the limitation of Gelug Madhyamaka. Something other than appearances is subject to analysis, not the appearances themselves.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 16th, 2017 at 11:15 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Jeff H said:

To properly set the stage, he begins the module with this quote of HHDL from The Four Noble Truths:

HH Dalai Lama said:

So how can we develop a personal understanding of the fundamental Buddhist doctrine of the Two Truths? By coming to know our everyday world of lived experience, we appreciate what is known as samvrti satya, the world of conventional reality, where the causal principle operates. If we accept the reality of this world as conventional, then we can accept the empty nature of this world which, according to Buddhism, is the ultimate truth, the paramartha satya. The relationship between these two aspects of reality is important. The world of appearance is used not so much as a contrast or an opposite to the world of ultimate truth, but rather as the evidence, the very basis on which the ultimate nature of reality is established.

[Emphasis added]

Malcolm wrote:

And so conventional appearances are never discarded and are accepted as they stand.

All that is rejected is that they have any nature.

So the question becomes, is there something left over at the end of ultimate analysis? If so, what?

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 16th, 2017 at 10:59 PM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

it is possible to stop rebirth at the moment of death.

you know what? i once asked Namkhai Norbu -a Buddha- this question: "is the rainbowbody like reflations in a mirror?", and he said "yes, even the rainbowbody is like reflations in a mirror". what this means? it means that at last there is no limitation, we can rebirth, we can go to a pure land, we can manifest as a rigdzin, we can manifest as a boddhisattva, we can reside in a statue, we can stay in the rainbowbody, ..., we have an infinite amount of possibilities and everything will be "like reflations in a mirror" if we understand what it really means and "total realize ourselves".

people tend to think that nirvana, or the rainbowbody, and so, is like anoter thing of different nature like from another planet -don't laugh-. but nature of samsara and realization is not different for the nature of mind is exactly the same all the time.

i won't try to convince anybody, because this is a elucidation from a question and it's answer, and language can be very tricky and i could be in a wrong understanding also, only proof can confirm, but to me everything points in that direction.

Malcolm wrote:

It just means even rainbow body is something relative, not ultimate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 16th, 2017 at 10:58 PM

Title: Re: Expanse of time

Content:

Grigoris said:

Seen by the mind or seen by the eyes?

KarmaOcean said:

"your eyes"

Grigoris said:

Present.

Malcolm wrote:

Depends on what one means by "seen." All conceptual cognition is second order, not direct perceptions.

Direct perceptions are nonconceptual so we are not aware of them per se.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 16th, 2017 at 10:46 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

When ontological anti-foundationalism presents itself together with egotism/egoism, it reveals its being contaminated with hardcore realism...

Malcolm wrote:

It will not surprise you that in the Prasannaapāda, Candrakīrti notes a certain kinship between ancient Indian materialist anti-foundationalists and Madhyamaka.

treehuggingoctopus said:

Thanks, Malcolm. Unsurprising but quite new to me.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, someone objects and says Madhyamaka are basically nastikas for claiming that there is no good or bad actions, no agent, and no result because there is no inherent existence, they are like nihilists.

Candra agrees that both nihilists and Mādhyamikas are alike in rejecting inherent existence, but they differ in that Mādhyamikas advocate dependent origination, and claim that this life and the next lack inherent existence. The second thing is that nihilists reject what they cannot see, whereas the Mādhyamika willing infers from dependent origination that there is another world after death in this one and so on.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 16th, 2017 at 10:07 PM

Title: Re: The essence of the teachings is not different...

Content:

DharmaChakra said:

We can see this as a national consequence in most Asian culture there is not really religious tension in Dharma traditions,

Malcolm wrote:

Hahah, you need to study some history, friend. Indian, Central Asian, Southeast Asian and East Asian religious history is filled with examples of competing sects going to war with each other.

DharmaChakra said:

do you think at Nalanda they were scrutinizing the texts, or was they discovering, recording, comparing with open mind, all related around Dharma, which is a living force.

Malcolm wrote:

The stakes used to be high, if you lost a debate you had to convert to the POV of your opponents, and often enough the penalty for losing debates was execution.

DharmaChakra said:

Many of these main cultural timeline powers, of Vedic, Buddhist, Brahminical all supported by different said realized teachers integrated everything, there is no tension in the hand over, usually the sadhus would charm the rulers with suttas or poems, to show their understanding, it was exchanges of beauty and poetry, they would give them power and protection and say they have found a sadhu, it was a change of religion, discoveries are mysterious and always connected in some form.

Malcolm wrote:

You apparently have read none of the accounts of the Indian Mahasiddhas and their conflicts with Indian rulers and brahmins.

Read the lifestory of Padmasambhava if you want a picture of how things really were on the ground in Ancient India between Buddhists and Hindus.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 16th, 2017 at 9:36 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

treehuggingoctopus said:

When ontological anti-foundationalism presents itself together with egotism/egoism, it reveals its being contaminated with hardcore realism...

Malcolm wrote:

It will not surprise you that in the Prasannaapāda, Candrakīrti notes a certain kinship between ancient Indian materialist anti-foundationalists and Madhyamaka.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 16th, 2017 at 9:34 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physicsx

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

In common perception, if something exists, it can be destroyed. For example, a pot or a tree. When we cut down a tree, we commonly say, "There used to be a tree there, now it no longer exists."

"There used to be a coral reef there, now it no longer exists."

This is the way common people speak, and it is not accurate.

Wayfarer said:

Nāgārjuna's arguments were with opponents that what we would call philosophers. But they weren't concerned with scientific or theoretical questions about 'how the world works' or what are the principles behind why objects fall or what radiation is. They were concerned with the question of ultimate truth. They had various doctrinal formulae about the ultimate nature of things, all of which were shown by Nāgārjuna to be self-contradictory. When it is said that 'something cannot be established' or has no 'svabhava', it is in the context of a discussion about ultimates.

There is a sense in which the 'common people' are deluded (speaking as one of them) - but the way 'common people speak' is perfectly adequate in respect of matters of mundane fact. If you were ill, you would go a common person designated and trained as a doctor for treatment, and hopefully he would diagnose the cause of the malady and proscribe the appropriate treatment. It would do you no good to have him say 'well according to Nāgārjuna neither your illness or yourself have any basis in reality'. That might be true in an ultimate, philosophical sense, but it is very much a matter of context, and in the context, appealing to Nāgārjuna would not be germane.

Malcolm wrote:

Nāgārjuna strictly defines his notions of existence and nonexistence to what common people consider existence and nonexistence. This is evident from reading chapter 15 of the MMK and a number of other sections.

Where we disagree, is over whether or not relative truth is to be left alone. It is not. It is by analyzing the things of relative truth that we arrive at the ultimate. In other words, we analyze our mistaken perceptions in hopes of coming to a veridical one.

But in the end we have to accept that neither the relative or ultimate are established as real in anyway.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 16th, 2017 at 9:59 AM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Minobu said:

They all claim Buddhahood, but only the Lotus Sutra predicts it for all, in plain words to see and read.

Malcolm wrote:

No, this is a common myth but it is not true.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 16th, 2017 at 6:31 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Jeff H said:

But, Malcolm, isn't it true that Tsongkhapa's graduated system is intended to guide one through method and wisdom into union? He makes it clear that once a practitioner has achieved a certain level, the lam rim isn't enough and it is necessary to invoke vajrayana.

Malcolm wrote:

The Gelugpa point of view, along the later Sakya POV, is that view of reality in sūtra and tantra is the same. The Gelugpas further insist that even if you are meditating Vajrayāna, your view must be strictly in accord with their understanding of Prasangika.

Jeff H said:

In the meantime, the examination of mere existence is about discerning which appearances function and how to choose between that which is helpful and that which is harmful.

Malcolm wrote:

Ascertaining that which is a wrong path and that which is a right path is not really the specific domain of Madhyamaka critique, though indeed Aryadeva does spend four of his eight chapters in clarifying correct relative truth.

Jeff H said:

Madhyamaka may indeed be as limited as you say. But I don't think it can be argued that Tsongkhapa is focusing on the point where convention means the ultimate.

Malcolm wrote:

No one made this assertion. The assertion being made is that by asserting that the ultimate is only the absence of inherent existence, the consequence of this is that the ultimate is a mere nonexistence.

Jeff H said:

He is trying to make it clear that the conventional is not about what's "real", and to begin cultivating a mere concept of emptiness to be further realized when bodhicitta has been more fully developed.

Malcolm wrote:

Nevertheless, in discussions about Madhyamaka with Gelugpas in general, one finds oneself discussing the how to make a conventional truth that won't upset the neighbors. So endless verbiage is spent trying to perfect something which is not essential and has no essence in the least.

Jeff H said:

In the conventional world suffering is real enough that it needs our attention. Tsongkhapa addresses that while telling us let go of the appearances.

Malcolm wrote:

The suffering of suffering seems real enough for those to whom it appears. For example, when I have a kidney stone, it seems pretty real in that moment, since I am just an ordinary guy. But I also have training and so I also know it is not real, it is not essential, and is principally a function of delusion and karma by which this false appearance is maintained. I also know that delusion is not solid or real, and that any tendency to give into feelings of solidity or realness reinforces that mistaken perception. So while I am writhing in agony I am also acutely aware of the fact apart from pain that has been experienced and has not been experienced, at present there is no pain — at least in my better moments.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 16th, 2017 at 4:49 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

TreeHuggingOctopus said:

Where does your definition of nihilism come from?

Wayfarer said:

The dictionary. But, accusations of nihilism were often made about Buddhism, generally, and Nāgārjuna, in particular, from time immemorial. Nāgārjuna goes to lengths to rebut those accusations, but I don't often see much mention of those rebuttals. Nihilism - the idea that nothing is real - is a very pervasive attitude in today's world - just a Nietzsche predicted it would be. It is insidious and often hard to notice - it might be as simple as a shrug and a 'whatever'.

Malcolm wrote:

Ucchedavāda, very often mistranslated as nihilism, was originally the assertion that a self which exists now perishes at death.

It was later applied to the general idea of asserting that a thing which exists now perishes and becomes nonexistent.

In common perception, if something exists, it can be destroyed. For example, a pot or a tree. When we cut down a tree, we commonly say, "There used to be a tree there, now it no longer exists."

"There used to be a coral reef there, now it no longer exists."

This is the way common people speak, and it is not accurate.

When read carefully, one comes to understand that Nāgārjuna shows that nothing in conventional truth, that which is perceived by common people, has any basis in reality whatsoever.

Things are false entities we abstract from appearances. When examining these things we find that they do not exist apart from our definition of them. Their boundaries are arbitrarily drawn and defined.

The point of Madhyamaka is not to claim there are no appearances. The point of Madhyamaka is to understand these appearances are not real. For example, a liquid entity appears in six different ways to the beings of the six different realms, an appearance conventionally valid for one is invalid for the rest. Water is real for a human but not a hell being. We cannot therefore say that appearances are real.

What cloudburst means when he says things "merely exist" is that these appearances function within our scope of perception.

But the point of Madhyamaka is to find the real nature of these appearances, whatever it is, because these appearances are not real entities. The point is Madhyamaka is not make a perfect relative truth for human beings, because no relative truth is perfect. They are all flawed perceptions. The objects of flawed perceptions are deceptive. The way they appear and the way they exist are not integrated. For a Buddha, the way things exist and the way things appear are integrated. Madhyamaka is trying to uncover the meeting point between the way things exist and the way things appear. Since conventional truth is not the way things exist but merely the way things appear to ordinary people, we say that conventional truth is unreal since it does not conform with how things exist. The Gelugpas would have one believe that merely by understand that the things that appear are devoid of inherent existence is itself the reconciliation point between the way things exist and the way they appear. They assert that the way things exist is free of inherent existence, and that solely by negating inherent existence one comes to harmony between the way things exist and the way they appear.

I personally have found yet no convincing argument that the negation of inherent existence is all there is to Mahāyāna emptiness. In this I follow a 600 year old tradition of objection to the Gelugpa point of view.

I also think Madhyamaka is a very limited tool.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 16th, 2017 at 3:41 AM

Title: Re: Non-conceptual thoughts ... ?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

I was just pointing out that it was a common translation of the term.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is not. It is someone's new age idiotic idea.

dzogchungpa said:

Well, can't it be both?

I don't want to argue about what "common" means in this context, but have a look:

<https://www.google.com/search?q=%22feeling+tone%22+vedana&num=100&tbm=bks>

Malcolm wrote:

Uhuh, so it is common to Insight Meditation society people and FWBO.

This makes it not common, but uncommon.

Just face it, there is no justification for the tone in feeling tone in vedana.

And it is not in the OED. Off with its head.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 16th, 2017 at 3:21 AM

Title: Re: Non-conceptual thoughts ... ?

Content:

dzogchungpa said:

]I was just pointing out that it was a common translation of the term.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is not. It is someone's new age idiotic idea.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 16th, 2017 at 1:57 AM

Title: Re: Non-conceptual thoughts ... ?

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It has a lot to say about thoughts and concepts. Nothing at all about feeling tones. The concept does not exist in Buddhism.

dzogchungpa said:

A fair number of people, mostly Theravadin types it seems, translate "vedana" as "feeling-tone". Just sayin'.

Malcolm wrote:

They are definitely wrong if they do so. Vedana has only five modes: pleasure, pain, happiness, unhappiness, and indifference.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 16th, 2017 at 1:23 AM

Title: Re: Non-conceptual thoughts ... ?

Content:

rachmiel said:

Thanks. So you're saying that anything I find that purports to address thought-feelings (or whatever name is used) from a Buddhist pov is in fact NOT Buddhist?

Malcolm wrote:

It is the opinion of a buddhist. Whether it actually conforms to the Dharma is another matter.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Monday, January 16th, 2017 at 12:20 AM

Title: Re: Non-conceptual thoughts ... ?

Content:

Vasana said:

Just sounds like the 'genesis' or transfiguration of a thought from a simple feeling-tone to a full concept.

rachmiel said:

I'd like to find out more about what Buddhism says about feeling-tones, thoughts, concepts, etc. Got a source to recommend?

Malcolm wrote:

It has a lot to say about thoughts and concepts. Nothing at all about feeling tones. The concept does not exist in Buddhism.

Feelings, perceptions, and thoughts are mental factors. Covered in the mental aggregates. Content is not that important when one understands that all afflicted phenomena are suffering.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 15th, 2017 at 11:42 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

This does not make sense. If you refuse to understand the terminology in the way it is being used by Lama Tsongkhapa, how can you understand his meaning correctly?

Malcolm wrote:

I understand it perfectly well. For example, when Tsongkhapa claims in Lam rim Chen mo that freedom from extremes means "not existing in the ultimate and not not existing in the relative," this terminology is incorrect. This means that the ultimate is only a negation of existence and the relative is only an affirmation of existence. This is not the intent of Nāgārjuna nor the Buddha.

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, for some reason, you are unwilling to clarify your own statements.

Malcolm wrote:

I don't have endless time to write long posts.

Read Napper. She really does an excellent job of clarifying Tsongkhapa's point of view on this as well as various objections to Tsongkhapa's "not existent in the ultimate, not nonexistent in the relative."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 15th, 2017 at 11:54 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Why?

Malcolm wrote:

Because you have some homework to do.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 15th, 2017 at 7:50 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Where exactly did this quote "not existing in the ultimate and not not existing in the relative" come from?

Malcolm wrote:

Lam Rim Chen mo. See Elizabeth Napper's book, Dependent-Arising and Emptiness, A Tibetan Buddhist Interpretation of Madhyamika Philosophy. She delves into this in detail.

Kenneth Chan said:

Also, what exactly do you mean by “affirmation of existence”? Can you elaborate?

Malcolm wrote:

Just read Napper's book.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 15th, 2017 at 7:46 AM

Title: Re: What is the Pure Land Traditions assertion of how conventional phenomena exists?

Content:

rory said:

The Tibetan school since it is esoteric, Vajrayana does have the quick 'horizontal' path to buddhahood for the elite who practice high level Vajrayana.

Malcolm wrote:

Everybody practices high level Vajrayāna in Tibetan Buddhism.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 15th, 2017 at 7:44 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen shrines?

Content:

javier.espinoza.t said:

i think there is no such standard in dzogchen, but we can look at a Gar's shrine as model, i believe that can help.

Malcolm wrote:

Norbu Rinpoche has instructed us, since I first began taking teachings from him in 1992, that we do not need to have any kind of formal shrine. But that nevertheless it is good to have a picture of the white A and thigle. He also has said many times, that if you want a shrine in your house that you can just use the picture of the white A and thigle and that this is sufficient.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 15th, 2017 at 7:41 AM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

[

I can't give scriptural authority because it's part of the Ganden Oral Lineage which is not accepted on this site.

Malcolm wrote:

Don't be ridiculous. The only that not accepted here is gyalpo practice.

The Lotus Sutra is a Mahayana Sutra whereas the view I'm explaining comes from Highest Yoga Tantra.

Tsongkhapafan said:

The place that they abide in until this happens is the five pure abodes where they remain in a state of solitary peace for a very long time.

Malcolm wrote:

They do not need to have a body to remain in this equipoise.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 15th, 2017 at 3:21 AM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

That's not the consequence at all. There are a couple of instances where one would still have the seeds of delusion but not be in samsara.

The first example is Hinayana Foe Destroyers as I have said. These Superiors take rebirth in the fourth form realm which has eight levels. The last five are Hinayana Pure Lands called Not Great, Without Pain, Excellent Appearance, Great Seeing, and None Higher. When Hinayana Foe Destroyers die they often choose to be born in one of these Lands, where they can remain at peace for as long as they wish. These Pure Lands are beyond samsara, but they are not Buddha Lands, but even though practically they are beyond samsara they would still have self-grasping at subtle and very subtle levels of mind.

Another example would be where someone takes rebirth in a Buddha's Pure Land either through their own power or through the powa prayers done by others. They would have the seeds of delusion in their minds so they would not have attained liberation strictly speaking, but they would be liberated from a practical point of view because they would be in a world where there are no true sufferings and no possibility of falling into samsara again.

In both of these cases, the beings still have work to do to attain actual liberation, and of course Buddhahood.

Bakmoon said:

Anagamins (non-returners) are reborn in the pure abodes, not Arhats. By definition, Arhats aren't reborn anywhere upon their deaths.

Tsongkhapafan said:

According to their vehicle, yes, but as we know Buddha gave provisional teachings. From the point of view of Buddha's final intention, which is Highest Yoga Tantra, they are not actually liberated but practically they are because they have passed beyond throwing karma.

Malcolm wrote:

They are liberated because they have eliminated all afflictions. They have not eliminated nonafflictive ignorance however, thus they have barriers to omniscience.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 15th, 2017 at 2:04 AM

Title: Re: Dzogchen shrines?

Content:

climb-up said:

I was going to post this in another thread about shrine crystals, but I thought it was different enough that I should maybe start a separate thread.

Is there a standard and/or ideal shrine for Dzogchen practice (DC specifically)?

I have an area set up essentially as a shrine, but it's just been set up to look nice and be useful to sit in front of for my more formal practices like thun or kumbhaka.

Is there anything essential? Any set up or procedure that should ideally be done?

Basically I have a nice cloth, some candles

Large picture of ChNN and smaller pictures of Shakyamuni, Guru Rinpoche and Avlokiteshvara

Crystal ball and crystal point bell and mala (I've never learned how to use a dorje so I don't have one)

some Ganesha statues incense and water that I offer to local spirits (not a DC practice, but the essence is similar)

What do you think?

Malcolm wrote:

All you need is this image or something like it:

When you are practicing, light a candle.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 15th, 2017 at 12:59 AM

Title: Re: What is the Pure Land Traditions assertion of how conventional phenomena exists?

Content:

rory said:

for example if you had a pet dog the best you could do for them is pray for it's human rebirth whilst East Asian Buddhists have no problems praying and conducting funeral services for their pets' birth directly to the Pure Land.

Malcolm wrote:

People do all kinds of crazy and useless things in the name of religion.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Sunday, January 15th, 2017 at 12:50 AM

Title: Re: Difference in guru yogas

Content:

Aspiring.Monk said:

Can someone please explain the differences in Lama Tsongkhapa Guru Yoga and Lama Chopa Guru Yoga?

I have been doing Lama Tsongkhapa Guru Yoga and have recently joined the FPMT where I noticed that Lama Chopa Guru Yoga is done.

I am just wanting to know the difference in these two practices.

Malcolm wrote:

Were to begin? In general the former does not require empowerment, but the latter does. That is only the beginning.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 11:59 PM

Title: Re: Praying to a saviour?

Content:

tellyontellyon said:

Can Buddhists pray to a deity, Buddha, the Noble Sangha etc. etc. for help with dealing with spiritual and psychological problems?

Sometimes I feel so weak and at the mercy of my conditioning that I despair of myself and feel I need someone to save me... is this possible?

Thanks in advance

Malcolm wrote:

This is what Tāra is for.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 11:22 PM

Title: Re: Consciousness turns back upon itself; it does not extend beyond name-and-form

Content:

Queequeg said:

Sorry, fellas, no satisfactory answers so far.

Its vague, but this seems to be an account the Buddha gave of his enlightenment.

As Malcolm suggests, this does seem to be limited to an analysis of this life. But I've never understood why there are these two versions of the arising of the mass of suffering. At what point did the Buddha realize this 10 linked chain, and at what point did he realize the 12 linked chain? Or maybe the correct question is, when did he decide to teach the 12 links, tracing suffering to ignorance?

The implications of this 10 link teaching is very different than the 12 linked chain. This suggests that consciousness and name and form are a twofold basis from which suffering arises. This seems to teach the cure to suffering is annihilation of the the consciousness/name and form complex.

I wonder if this difference is the basis on which Mahayana divides the Hinayana into the Sravakayana and Pratyekabuddhayana? In Mahayana, they say the Sravaka seeks annihilation, while the pratyekabuddha's awakening is based on the 12 linked chain.

Notwithstanding, I would like to understand why the Buddha taught this 10 linked chain.

Malcolm wrote:

The answer to your question lies in the analysis of dependent origination in the Abhidharmakośabhayaṃ, chapter three.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 10:32 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

cloudburst said:

it is not correct to state that dependent phenomena exist since they have never arisen, just as illusory elephants and so on have never arisen and yet appear.

Here we can see you trying to say that it is not correct to say that dependent phenomena exist inherently or by way of a nature or essence, and your reason is that they have never arisen, but we can see that you means things are not produced, or arisen, ultimately.

Malcolm wrote:

Things do not arise. Why? Because their causes and conditions cannot be established when investigated. This is why Buddhapalita states:

Here, with respect to your claim for an ascertained cause for the production of a result, wheat, etc., and a non-productive condition and non-condition, 'the arising of a result is not accepted' was previously explained.

If that result does not exist, where will 'these are not conditions, these are conditions' be accepted? If both of those come to be from depending on a result, also that result is does not exist. Because the result does not exist, where will there be a non-condition or a condition? If that is so, still results are not accepted, and even conditions and a non-conditions are non-existent. Because results, conditions, and non-conditions do not exist, descriptions for arising are merely conventional.

cloudburst said:

You end up using internally contradictory speech because you insist on avoid qualifying, or indicating the scope, of your statements.

Malcolm wrote:

This shows the limits of speech. In your quest for perfect sentences, you inevitably affirm a realist position where entities are not merely conventions which fall apart at a touch.

cloudburst said:

Chandrakirti and the madhyamikas lay it out so clearly, but you are forced to ignore the quotations that clearly illustrate my point.

Chandrakirti said in his Reason 60 commentary

We do not propound that an apprehension of a reflection—dependently produced and seen strictly as false—is not produced in any way.

Malcolm wrote:

As long as apprehensions of reflections are not investigated, we do not need to say they are not produced in anyway. But the point of Madhyamaka is not to leave things just as ordinary people find them prior to analysis.

cloudburst said:

We contend that dependently produced things are, like reflections, not produced intrinsically. As this is the case, how can your objection stand a chance?

Malcolm wrote:

Page. 199 verifies what I am saying above.

You just refuse to take the next step and understand that apparent phenomena which conventionally arise from causes and conditions are completely equivalent with illusions in every respect

I refuse to take that step because it is not supported by either scripture or reason. If you can't tell the difference between dependently-arisen food, which is like an illusion, and an illusion of food, you will die in short order. So either you don't know how to clearly differentiate the conventional from the ultimate, or you suffer from confusion about the meaning of the term "completely equivalent."

Dependently-originated food does not sustain us. Our addiction to things, however, does.

The simile of illusion is one of many similes Buddha used to illustrate dependent relationship, do you think he also meant that phenomena are "completely equivalent to an echo? To a city of ghosts? Would it be correct to say my car is an echo? my wife a city of smell eaters?

If you say yes, it is clear you are simply trying to avoid admitting fault, if no, then perhaps you can give a coherent account as to why the illusion simile should be separated out from the rest for special (unindicated) meaning?

Your car is an echo, your wife is a city of ghandarvas. How so? When you analyze your car, it cannot be found, just as when one searches for the source of an echo heard in a valley it cannot be found. Your wife is a city of ghandaravas whose evanescent appearance vanishes just out of reach when sought. Illusions, echos, and cities of ghandarvas refer to phenomena that clearly appear but when examined are not found to exist. All dependently originated phenomena are just like that— clearly apparent yet nonexistent. It is not necessary to add the qualifier "inherently" or "ultimately." Why?

As Śāntideva says, when neither an entity or nonentity remain before the mind, the mind is pacified. Clearly apparent nonexistents are neither entities nor nonentities.

Chandrakirti said:

Therefore, since in this Madhyamaka system to be a dependent arising is to lack autonomy, lacking autonomy is what emptiness means; emptiness does not mean that nothing exists.

Malcolm wrote:

And since nothing can be found which can act as a cause or a condition for any other thing, nothing ever arose; and so to say of the nonarising that it does not exist is incorrect since there is no existence by which its nonexistence could be known.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 9:30 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

I understand the Gelug position. I do not agree with it.

This does not make sense. If you refuse to understand the terminology in the way it is being used by Lama Tsongkhapa, how can you understand his meaning correctly?

Malcolm wrote:

I understand it perfectly well. For example, when Tsongkhapa claims in Lam rim Chen mo that freedom from extremes means "not existing in the ultimate and not not existing in the relative," this terminology is incorrect. This means that the ultimate is only a negation of existence and the relative is only an affirmation of existence. This is not the intent of Nāgārjuna nor the Buddha.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 12:47 PM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

So it all comes back to the same question: Do you acknowledge that the terminology used by Lama Tsongkhapa is as described here?:

Malcolm wrote:

I do not accept that this terminology accurately depicts Madhyamaka.

Kenneth Chan said:

That is not the question. The question is: Do you acknowledge that the terminology used by Lama Tsongkhapa is as described here?: For us, followers of Je Tsongkhapa, 'appear and function' is what is denoted by the english word 'exists,' and that which you denote with the term 'exists' is called 'inherent existence.'

If you refuse to understand the terminology in the way it is being used by Lama Tsongkhapa, it is clear that you do not understand his meaning correctly, and therefore you are merely criticising what is clearly a misrepresentation of the Gelug position.

Malcolm wrote:

I understand the Gelug position. I do not agree with it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 11:58 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

So it all comes back to the same question: Do you acknowledge that the terminology used by Lama Tsongkhapa is as described here?:

Malcolm wrote:

I do not accept that this terminology accurately depicts Madhyamaka.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 8:25 AM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

There is a distinction between the nonafflictive ignorance which is part of the knowledge obscuration, and the ignorance that is part of the afflictive obscuration. Arhats and Pratyekabuddhas possess the former and not the latter; therefore they are not omniscient but they are liberated.

Tsongkhapafan said:

I'm not talking about the obstructions to omniscience - according to Tantra, a direct realisation of emptiness with a gross mind is not an actual direct realisation and so these Hearers and Solitary Realizers are not actual Superior beings and they still have delusions at subtle and very subtle levels of mind and thus, strictly speaking, they are not liberated. Practically speaking though they have reduced their ignorance to the extent that it can never ripen throwing karma - thus they are not reborn in samsara.

Malcolm wrote:

Again, you are not properly distinguishing afflictive and knowledge obscurations.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Hinayana Foe Destroyers also take rebirth in the five pure abodes.

Malcolm wrote:

No, they don't. Nonreturners do and attain arhatship there.

Tsongkhapafan said:

Liberation, strictly speaking is the eradication of the causes of taking further rebirth in any of the three realms.

Actual liberation is the permanent eradication of the seeds of delusion. Because Hinayana Foe Destroyers have not removed delusions from all levels of mind they are not actually liberated but practically they do not take rebirth in samsara.

Malcolm wrote:

No, liberation is just freedom from afflictions that cause birth in the three realms. Arhats, etc., do not possess those.

You still have no cited anything. Your assertions, unless grounded in some sūtra or tantra are meaningless.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 8:22 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Wayfarer said:

The second mode of being and non-being is seen in the 'orders and differences of created natures' (I.444a), whereby, if one level of nature is said to exist, those orders above or below it are said not to exist:

For an affirmation concerning the lower (order) is a negation concerning the higher, and so too a negation concerning the lower (order) is an affirmation concerning the higher.

According to this mode, the affirmation of man is the negation of angel [or 'higher being'] and vice versa.

This mode illustrates Eriugena's original way of dissolving the traditional Neoplatonic hierarchy of being into a dialectic of affirmation and negation: to assert one level is to deny the others. In other words, a particular level may be affirmed to be real by those on a lower or on the same level, but the one above it is thought not to be real in the same way. If humans are thought to exist in a certain way, then angels do not exist in that way.

Malcolm wrote:

Clearly, that is not a Buddhist account, and I'm not presenting it as such. But it is much closer to the style of Buddhist arguments, than anything from modern analytical or empirical philosophy. It's also interesting because of the dialectical nature of the analysis, i.e. things that are real on one level, are unreal on another. I think that aspect is quite close in meaning to the original import of the two truths teaching.[/quote]

It is a little different. As Śāntideva points out, the ultimate of the lower is the relative of the higher. When we come to Madhyāmika, the negation of the lower is not an affirmation of its own tenets because Madhyamaka has no tenets to proclaim.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 8:19 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Wayfarer said:

Thanks for those explanations.

I think in Buddhism (as in other wisdom traditions) there is an understanding of the hierarchy of being, with the Buddha signifying the utmost or highest reality, and beings in lower realms being subject to delusion. That is why the same thing can appear differently to different levels of beings, such as is often discussed in relation to the hypothetical glass of water. That is also signified in symbolic form by the Bhavachakra, with the Buddha appearing outside the Wheel.

Malcolm wrote:

No. The Buddha has the same state as us. The only difference is whether we recognize that or not. As Nāgārjuna states in the MMK:

"Whatever is the nature of the Tathāgata, that is the nature of the world; as the Tathāgata has no nature, the world too has no nature."

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 6:13 AM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Tsongkhapafan said:

From a provisional point of view and from the point of view of their own vehicles, yes, but from the point of view of Buddha's Tantric teachings and in actuality, no.

Malcolm wrote:

Proof text please. And you are quite incorrect. The consequence of your erroneous statement is that arhats and pratyekabuddhas will take afflictive rebirth in samsara.

Tsongkhapafan said:

That's not the consequence at all. There are a couple of instances where one would still have the seeds of delusion but not be in samsara.

Malcolm wrote:

There is a distinction between the nonafflictive ignorance which is part of the knowledge obscuration, and the ignorance that is part of the afflictive obscuration. Arhats and Pratyekabuddhas possess the former and not the latter; therefore they are not omniscient but they are liberated.

Tsongkhapafan said:

The first example is Hinayana Foe Destroyers as I have said. These Superiors take rebirth in the fourth form realm which has eight levels. The last five are Hinayana Pure Lands called Not Great, Without Pain, Excellent Appearance, Great Seeing, and None Higher. When Hinayana Foe Destroyers die they often choose to be born in one of these Lands, where they can remain at peace for as long as they wish. These Pure Lands are beyond samsara, but they are not Buddha Lands, but even though practically they are beyond samsara they would still have self-grasping at subtle and very subtle levels of mind.

Malcolm wrote:

You are conflating the afflictive obscuration (kleśa -avarana) with the knowledge obscuration (jñeya-avarana). The five pure abodes are where a certain kind of never returner takes rebirth. But once they attain arhatship there, they cease taking rebirth in any of the three realms, including the five pure abodes.

Tsongkhapa said:

Another example would be where someone takes rebirth in a Buddha's Pure Land either through their own power or through the powa prayers done by others. They would have the seeds of delusion in their minds so they would not have attained liberation strictly speaking, but they would be liberated from a practical point of view because they would be in a world where there are no true sufferings and no possibility of falling into samsara again.

In both of these cases, the beings still have work to do to attain actual liberation, and of course Buddhahood.

Malcolm wrote:

Liberation, strictly speaking is the eradication of the causes of taking further rebirth in any of the three realms.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 5:26 AM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 5:06 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Wayfarer said:

I can't get my head around the idea that 'saying something has never existed is not the same as saying it has ceased to exist'.

Malcolm wrote:

It has to do with how abhāva is being defined in the MMK. In Madhyamaka, nonexistence is the nonexistence of something which has arisen. When something has not arisen, it cannot be said that there is something for which there can be a nonexistence. In other words, there can be nonexistence only for that which has come into existence.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 5:00 AM

Title: Re: Perplexity

Content:

Crazywisdom said:

Yogis don't work on figuring stuff out and needing to know everything all the time.

dzogchungpa said:

What??!!

BTW, there's a similar passage on p.95 of Dharma Publishing's "The Life And Liberation Of Padmasambhava Part 1": My father is the Knowing of Knowledge.

My mother is Samantabhadri, holy joy and transcendence of the Void.

My country: I have none, having been born on the Essence Plane with its unique caste.

I nourish myself with both clarity and perplexity.

I am here devoting myself to the destruction of suffering.

Malcolm wrote:

This is not translated from Tibetan directly. It is translated from French a long time ago and is completely wrong in many places.

It is quite likely Evans Wentz just copied this line since he himself knew no Tibetan and was editing someone else's translation.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 4:37 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

... it is not correct to state that dependent phenomena exist since they have never arisen, just as illusory elephants and so on have never arisen and yet appear.

Example, an illusory elephant arises on the basis of causes and conditions

Arising from cause and conditions is relative, not ultimate.

cloudburst said:

you are just contradicting yourself from one post to the next.

Malcolm wrote:

An illusory elephant arise from causes and conditions, but there is no elephant in that illusion.

You just refuse to take the next step and understand that apparent phenomena which conventionally arise from causes and conditions are completely equivalent with illusions in every respect Therefore, without understanding this one will never overcome one's deluded attachment to things of relative truth. The latter, after all, is the purpose of Madhyamaka. Making arguments which support ordinary people's mundane clinging to things goes against the very purpose of Madhyamaka.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 4:21 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

It is improper to say of something which has never arisen that it does not exist.

cloudburst said:

that is completely wrong.

Malcolm wrote:

No, it is completely correct. "Nonexistence" is what common people say about something which once existed and no longer does.

But to say that something which never arisen is nonexistent is completely wrong.

This is why in general we reject your claim that we advocate nonexistence since we never claim that anything exists to begin with.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 3:22 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

To say that a dependent arising is a nonexistent is not correct.

Of course it is. Example, an illusory elephant arises on the basis of causes and conditions: it appears, seems to perform all the functions of an elephant and yet does not exist and performs none of those functions at all. All conditioned phenomena are the same

cloudburst said:

it is clearly not correct for you to keep insisting that dependent arisings are nonexistents, do not exist and perform no functions.

Malcolm wrote:

They are not nonexistents from the point of ordinary people. From the point of view of ordinary people, things which arise in dependence exist. When one discusses with ordinary people how things are, the only acceptable way to talk about the things which they believe to exist is from the point of view of dependent origination, where this exists that exists, and so on. But this manner of speaking about phenomena is not definitive nor is it final. But if you prefer that I treat you as an ordinary person who has no training in tenets systems, etc., then for you I will say that this and that exists.

From the point of view of some like ourselves who have examined phenomena, it is not correct to state that dependent phenomena exist since they have never arisen, just as illusory elephants and so on have never arisen and yet appear. It is also not correct to state they do not exist since it is improper to say of something which has never arisen that it does not exist.

So we craft this term, "clearly apparent nonexistent." It is a standard term in Sakya and Nyingma Madhyamaka. You may not like it but we don't care.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 2:26 AM

Title: Re: Non-conceptual thoughts ... ?

Content:

rachmiel said:

Anyone have an idea what these wordless/imageless thoughts that present as inklings might be?

Malcolm wrote:

Concepts.

Marc said:

Hi Malcolm

Could you please develop.

I guess the confusion here rises from the fact that verbal fabrications / labeling are conflated with concepts...

However, there is some background for such confusion since Vitarka is translated both as conceptions or verbal fabrications / labeling.

Thx in advance for your explanations

Malcolm wrote:

Concepts and labeling exist together, and never separately.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 2:22 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Malcolm wrote:

but we cannot say that inherently exists, because whatever inherently exists cannot appear and function at all.

cloudburst said:

completely correct. And so we do not say this. Kenneth did in fact say "from the viewpoint of the ultimate truth, every perceptual mind arises in dependence upon causes and conditions" and in this he was in error. Malcolm's response is perfectly correct, there are no minds in ultimate truth, so there is no sense in speaking of their arising etc.

Kenneth Chan said:

Please note the context in the original post where I made the statement. When I said "from the viewpoint of the ultimate truth," I meant "when we analyse things with regards to what the ultimate truth is."

Malcolm wrote:

"When we analyse things with regards to what the ultimate truth is" there is no arising through cause and condition because arising through cause and condition is strictly relative, whether it is a mind or an atom.

You goofed. Just own it.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 2:00 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

cloudburst said:

Kenneth did in fact say "from the viewpoint of the ultimate truth, every perceptual mind arises in dependence upon causes and conditions" and in this he was in error. Malcolm's response is perfectly correct, there are no minds in ultimate truth, so there is no sense in speaking of their arising etc.

Malcolm wrote:

Yes, that was the point. His question about your statement was irrelevant.

We prefer to say that what appears and functions are "clearly apparent nonexistents" since they cannot be found on analysis.

To say that a dependent arising is a nonexistent is not correct.

Of course it is. Example, an illusory elephant arises on the basis of causes and conditions: it appears, seems to perform all the functions of an elephant and yet does not exist and performs none of those functions at all. All conditioned phenomena are the same.

Your proplem, identified by Rongzom centuries before Tsongkhapa lived, is that Mādhyamikas in his day were excessively attached to relative truth and did not comprehend fully the meaning of illusion. While the introduction of Candrakīrti abolished this problem for a time, it was reintroduced with Tsongkhapa.

This is the reason why Gelugpas have a more difficult time understanding Dzogchen, than say Kagyus or Nyingmas. Sakyas also have their own hangups with respect to attachment to the two stags that get in their way as well. If there is an obstacle for Kagyus with respect to this, it is that they are too attached to meditating. And of course, Nyingmas are too attached to sex and drinking.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 1:47 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

So it appears you cannot answer the question. Why?

Malcolm wrote:

I do not agree with cloudburst's assessment.

We can say that what appears and functions "exists" in terms of mundane convention, with the caveat that conventions are based on erroneous perceptions. but we cannot say that inherently exists, because whatever inherently exists cannot appear and function at all.

We prefer to say that what appears and functions are "clearly apparent nonexistents" since they cannot be found on analysis.

Kenneth Chan said:

Yes, I know what you prefer, in terms of semantics. The question, however, is this: Do you acknowledge that the terminology used by Lama Tsongkhapa is as described by Cloudburst?:

Malcolm wrote:

No. Also Tsongkhapa makes a distinction between conventional existence, which functional, and inherent existence, which is not.

You've also failed to address my objection to your terming "cause and condition" part of ultimate truth.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 1:33 AM

Title: Re: Trump is a Russian Puppet hahahahaha

Content:

MiphamFan said:

<http://www.zerohedge.com/news/2017-01-10/4chan-claims-have-fabricated-anti-trump-report-hoax>

Malcolm wrote:

Pretty funny, if true. We are so screwed.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 1:30 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, why can't you answer the question? It is very relevant.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not relevant to my objection.

Kenneth Chan said:

So it appears you cannot answer the question. Why?

Malcolm wrote:

I do not agree with cloudburst's assessment.

We can say that what appears and functions "exists" in terms of mundane convention, with the caveat that conventions are based on erroneous perceptions. but we cannot say that inherently exists, because whatever inherently exists cannot appear and function at all.

We prefer to say that what appears and functions are "clearly apparent nonexistents" since they cannot be found on analysis.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 1:25 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, before we go into another round of arguing over semantics, I need to pose this question to you again. This is the question I posed in the other thread "What Tsongkhapa Said" but, so far, you have not answered it. Below, I have reproduced the actual post with the question for you and Conebeckham. Can you now give a response please?

Malcolm wrote:

This question is besides the point. You stated "from the viewpoint of the ultimate truth, every perceptual mind arises in dependence upon causes and conditions."

Arising from cause and conditions is relative, not ultimate.

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, why can't you answer the question? It is very relevant.

Malcolm wrote:

It is not relevant to my objection.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 1:15 AM

Title: Re: How Madhyamika Philosophy Solves the Mystery of Quantum Physics

Content:

Kenneth Chan said:

On the other hand, if you are looking at it from the viewpoint of the ultimate truth, every perceptual mind arises in dependence upon causes and conditions, and upon the object that it perceives, and this is already discussed in my paper (<http://kenneth-chan.com/physics/direct-experiential-interpretation-of-quantum-mechanics>). For your benefit, I will reproduce that section of my paper here below:

Malcolm wrote:

No, from the standpoint of ultimate truth, minds do not arise at all since they cannot be established.

Kenneth Chan said:

Malcolm, before we go into another round of arguing over semantics, I need to pose this question to you again. This is the question I posed in the other thread "What Tsongkhapa Said" but, so far, you have not answered it. Below, I have reproduced the actual post with the question for you and Conebeckham. Can you now give a response please?

We seem to be arguing merely over semantics again. Before we continue with this semantics argument, it would be helpful if both Malcolm and Conebeckham state clearly whether or not they accept this statement by Cloudburst (which was made in response to Malcolm):

cloudburst said:

For us, followers of Je Tsongkhapa, 'appear and function' is what is denoted by the english word 'exists,' and that which you denote with the term 'exists' is called 'inherent existence.'

Kenneth Chan said:

For me, following the texts of Lama Tsongkhapa, what Cloudburst says here is evidently correct. But do you, Malcolm and Conebeckham, agree with it or not? I am asking this for the purpose of clarification.

Malcolm wrote:

This question is besides the point. You stated "from the viewpoint of the ultimate truth, every perceptual mind arises in dependence upon causes and conditions."

Arising from cause and conditions is relative, not ultimate.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Saturday, January 14th, 2017 at 12:43 AM

Title: Re: Perplexity

Content:

madhusudan said:

"My father is wisdom and my mother is voidness.

My country is the country of Dharma.

I am of no caste and no creed.

I am sustained by perplexity;

and I am here to destroy lust, anger and sloth."

~Padmasambhava

I would appreciate any comments or explanation on the line, "I am sustained by perplexity."

Is that in reference to the state of being in the Middle Way free from extremes? Or something else...

Thanks

Malcolm wrote:

It is a bad translation. Look at page 34 of the Lotus Born where you will see the same passage as translated by Eric Pema Kunsang.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 13th, 2017 at 9:52 PM

Title: Re: Surangama Sutra as an anti-Dzogchen intervention

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

The small and middling enlightenments that are described in Buddha's sutra teachings are not actual states of liberation...

Malcolm wrote:

Of course they are. What they are not are stages of omniscience.

Arhats and pratyekabuddhas do not possess afflictive obscurations at all.

Tsongkhapa said:

From a provisional point of view and from the point of view of their own vehicles, yes, but from the point of view of Buddha's Tantric teachings and in actuality, no.

Malcolm wrote:

Proof text please. And you are quite incorrect. The consequence of your erroneous statement is that arhats and pratyekabuddhas will take afflictive rebirth in samsara.

Author: Malcolm

Date: Friday, January 13th, 2017 at 9:51 PM

Title: Re: Refuge vows

Content:

Tsongkhapa said:

Abandoning intoxicants is just alcohol, tobacco and recreational drugs, don't worry about caffeine.

Malcolm wrote:

Not even tobacco is included since it is not intoxicating, since nicotine is a stimulant, like caffeine.

